OFFICIAL REPORT

Tuesday, May 29, 1934

The house met at three o'clock.

SILVER COVERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). According to reports appearing in the press, President Roosevelt has made representations to other countries to join with the United States in the restoration of silver. My question to the Prime Minister is whether any representations have been made to the Dominion of Canada.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): As I intimated the other day, the Canadian minister is keeping closely in touch with the situation. No representations have been received here.

PREVENTIVE SERVICE SEARCHES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Matthews). Did he or his department issue instructions to the preventive service to hold up and search the cars of private citizens, as they did on May 24, on the roads all over the eastern townships?

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue): I know nothing about the matter, but I will inquire into it.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LOAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) a question with regard to reports appearing in the press to the effect that the Canadian Pacific Railway are selling $12,000,000 of perpetual four per cent debentures. Is it the intention that the whole or any part of the proceeds of this sale will be used for the purpose of reducing the loan which has been guaranteed by the dominion?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): As yet the sale has not been made. If, as and when it is made it will reduce pro tanto the amount of the guarantee of the Dominion of Canada.

MONTREAL RELIEF ACCOUNTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon). In yesterday's issue of the Montreal Le Devoir there appeared a dispatch with regard to the accounts due the city of Montreal. The article is headed, "Ottawa is Responsible" and it is to the effect that if the accounts of the city of Montreal are unpaid it is because of the delay on the part of the federal government. I should like to ask the minister if such statements are true.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): When the accounts of the city of Montreal are received by us from the province of Quebec they are dealt with in exactly the same manner as the accounts from any other province are dealt with. It takes from three days to probably ten days after the accounts are received to have them checked by the officials of my department and the auditor general, before the cheque issues. Each account received from the province of Quebec with respect to the city of Montreal has been promptly dealt with by the government. At present there are very few if any accounts in the department from the province of Quebec disclosing amounts owing to the city of Montreal; any that are in the department are being looked after.

The delay which has been occasioned with respect to the Montreal accounts arises out of difficulties that the provincial auditors are having in auditing the Montreal accounts, as I understand it. It is unfortunate that this delay has occurred, but before accounts are sent by the province to the federal government it is highly desirable that proper and necessary audits be made. Just as rapidly as we receive the accounts from the province of Quebec in proper form they have been and will be paid.

REVISED EDITION

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. K. BLAIR (North Wellington): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), as to the truth of a report appearing in yesterday's Toronto Mail and Empire. This report states that Hon. Howard Ferguson has been elected chairman of the imperial economic conference, which conference is to carry on the work of economic intelligence hitherto conducted by the empire marketing board, and it is suggested that the empire marketing board may be abolished. I think perhaps that board is under the control of the government of Great Britain, but I should like to get some information from the Prime Minister in regard to this report.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): No question has been put, but presumably the hon. member has served the useful purpose of hearing himself make the statement he has made.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: There is nothing out of order in that; it is a perfectly correct statement. The hon. member did not ask a question, but if he will take the trouble to look at the report which has been laid on the table he will realize that, as a result of the conference which was held in London, England, last year, at which Doctor Skelton represented the dominion and of which conference he was chairman, the whole matter connected with the empire marketing board has been dealt with. The other statements read by the hon. gentleman have no foundation in fact, so far as I know.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the question asked by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. Blair) I understood him to refer to the imperial economic conference. If I am right in that, I think what he really meant to refer to was the imperial economic committee, and I should like to ask the Prime Minister if it is not a fact that the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson has become chairman of the imperial economic committee, which sits for the purpose of furthering economic cooperation within the empire?

Mr. BENNETT: It will be within the memory of the right hon. gentleman, who has read the report, that provision was made for the maintenance of a committee to deal with matters which had in part been dealt with by the empire marketing board. I believe the various high commissioners have been or will be chairmen of the committee, from time to time. Whether or not it is Mr. Ferguson's turn at the present time, I cannot say. I shall look into the matter, however, and make a statement. I think he was chairman, but whether or not he is at the present time, I cannot say. I shall ascertain the fact, and advise the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. LAPOINTE: God save Canada.

PRICE SPREADS AND MASS BUYING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. MICHAUD (Restigouche-Madawaska): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) if he has received a resolution passed by the board of trade of Campbellton, New Brunswick, dated May 25 of this year, urging that the Stevens committee investigate alleged unfair prices being paid for pulpwood in the province of New Brunswick. If the resolution has been received I should like to know whether it is the intention of the minister to have the matter investigated by the price spreads committee.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Naturally, I have received hundreds of communications of a character similar to that indicated. I would point out to the hon. member that as he has presented it the matter is not one which would properly come under the order of reference. However, all communications of that character are answered as promptly as time permits. From the meagre information the hon. member has supplied I could not tell him whether or not the committee would decide to deal with the matter indicated, or whether such investigation would come under the order of reference. From what he has said I am under the impression it would not.

DOMINION COMPANIES ACT

The house resumed from Monday, May 28, consideration in committee of Bill No. 64, respecting dominion companies—Mr. Cahan—Mr. Sullivan in the chair.

On section 41—When and how calls may be made.

Mr. CAHAN: We are now on section 41.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to ascertain whether or not as we proceed along with the sections, the Secretary of State will tell the house in detail what provisions, if any, have been specially embodied in this bill to prevent the watering of stock and the circulation of diluted shares which, of late, have been a source of trouble, and have meant the loss of a great amount of money to our people. I understood the Secretary of State to say that the purpose behind the bill was to try to prevent the operation known as the watering of stock, and to give the people a chance to know the real value of what they are buying, thereby preventing abuses which have existed in the past. As we proceed I should like the Secretary of State to explain in detail how the amendments he will introduce will give the desired result.

Mr. CAHAN: I believe we would do well to discuss in their turn the clauses to which the hon. member has referred. He will find, first, that the statements which companies are compelled to make to their shareholders are much more detailed and stringent than they have been under any previous act. Respecting the issue of prospectuses shares must be issued and sold under the representations made in the prospectus issued by the company or its underwriters. The provisions for disclosing information are very much more specific and stringent than in any act in any British country with which I am familiar. Therefore I think the hon. member might reserve his question, because another hon. member opposite has given notice to me that he will ask to have those provisions stand, for the present, for the purposes of further discussion.

Section agreed to.

Sections 42, 43 and 44 agreed to.

Section 45 stands.

On section 46—Executors, etc., not personally liable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In regard to this section may I suggest that for the purposes of clarification the word "any" should be inserted before the word "such" in line thirty-four. I so move.

Mr. CAHAN: I have no objection to the amendment. The words "executor, administrator, tutor" and so on are mentioned in the alternative. The matter was discussed, and we were under the impression that the expression "such capacity" referred to the particular capacity in which the person acted, namely either as executor, administrator, tutor, or any other capacity indicated in the section. However if the hon. member thinks that the word "any" clarifies the section, I have no objection. Personally I do not think it clarifies it.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 47—Mortgagee not personally liable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would ask what is the necessity for the use of the word "collateral" before the word "security" in line 44. That is a limiting phrase.

Mr. CAHAN: The word "collateral" was not introduced by me. It has been used in the Companies Act, and specific definitions have been given by the courts of the word "collateral." The term "collateral security" is thoroughly defined I think in law and in fact, and after a very lengthy consideration we decided to retain that phrase. There was one advocate who objected to the change, and I have no doubt that he has instructed my hon. friend in regard to the matter, but I cannot accept his view because collateral security is a term clearly defined and clearly understood.

Section agreed to.

Section 48 stands.

Section 49 agreed to.

On section 50—Addition to name of company of "and reduced."

Mr. BUTCHER: Why the change in subsection 2? It seems to me that subsection 62 of the present act affords greater protection for creditors than does this amended section.

Mr. CAHAN: The old subsection 2 read as follows:

(2) Where the reduction does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital, the Secretary of State may, if he thinks expedient, dispense altogether with the addition of the words "and reduced."

The words "and reduced" were formerly used for the protection of the creditors of the company but my hon. friend will notice that where there is no diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid share capital the creditor is protected, and where there is no re-payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital the creditor is protected. The company has the same assets as before, and in such cases it has always been the practice of the department not to insert the words "and reduced," because the creditors have exactly the same security for its debts and liabilities due to them as they had before the reduction of capital. But these are the only excepted cases, and we have made a short exception which certainly covers the cases in which the Secretary of State has discretion to dispense with the words "and reduced." We have in the practice of the department many regulations which are not expressed in specific terms, which it is difficult to express in a statute, but in case of every reduction of capital the Secretary of State demands from the applicant a statement of its accounts verified by an auditor and verified also by affidavit, so that it is easily seen from the documents so submitted whether the interest of the creditor is prejudiced or not, and in every case in which there is any possibility of the interest of the creditor being prejudiced we insist on having it brought to the notice of the creditor and the receipt of a waiver from the creditor over the creditor's signature before we exercise the discretion which is vested in the Secretary of State in subsection 2. I think that is about as near accuracy as we can reach.

Section agreed to.

On section 51—Objections by creditors and settlement of list of objecting creditors.

Mr. BUTCHER: I will read subsection 4:

Where a proposed reduction of capital involves either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up capital, the Secretary of State may, if having regard to any special circumstances of the case he thinks proper so to do, direct that this section shall not apply as regards any class or any classes of creditors.

What relation is there between shareholders and creditors in this subsection?

Mr. CAHAN: That has to do again with the reduction of capital. If any reduction of capital is proposed that involves a reduction of the assets of a company which would prejudice the rights and interests of the creditor, then the Secretary of State must intervene. This section as now submitted is taken from the English act. If a creditor or any class of creditors is thoroughly secured, it gives the Secretary of State a discretion in those special circumstances to direct that notice, et cetera, to creditors shall not apply. I have simply followed in this amended section the English act where the courts have found that if creditors were amply secured it was not necessary to go through the form of giving notice.

Section agreed to.

On section 52—Order confirming reduction.

Mr. CAHAN: I wish to delete the marginal note, Mr. Chairman, and substitute the words "supplementary letters patent confirming reductions," which is more accurate. As the marginal note is not subject to amendment by resolution of the house I am simply calling attention to it, and I would ask the officials of the house to change the marginal note accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. COOTE: I do not know whether this is the correct section on which to direct this question to the minister. I am not very familiar with this bill, and have not had much time to devote to it. I should like to ask the minister just what supervision does the department exercise over the capital structure of companies that are incorporated. It seems to me that that is where many investors get into trouble, putting their money into stock or securities of companies that are overcapitalized. I have received many complaints lately from the shareholders of one company. I must admit I do not know whether it is incorporated under the dominion act or not. The company in question is Burns and Company Limited. The shareholders have invested in about seven million dollars of preferred shares of this company, and they are going to lose practically all the money that they have put into those preferred shares. Would the minister be good enough to give us an idea of the supervision exercised over the capital structure of companies that are being incorporated?

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I have spent many anxious hours over the question of the capitalization of companies by the terms of the original application and the issue of letters patent whereby the capital structure is limited in the first place, and secondly with regard to increases of capital which arise under section 48. The proposed capital of the company is indicated by the applicants in the petition to the department for incorporation by letters patent. How a department can ascertain whether any restriction should be placed upon the capital asked for is one of the most difficult questions in connection with the administration of the Companies Act. A company may be undertaking a work of construction, it may be a factory, a hydro electric station or some other engineering work and I assure the hon. gentleman that it is impossible for the department to revise the estimates of construction or the estimates of the probable outlay on the engineering work so as to determine with any degree of reliability that the amount of capital asked for in the petition is greater than the work necessitates. That would make necessary having an official in the department who could enter into almost every material detail of the proposed undertaking and who is prepared to insert in the letters patent an expression of his own opinion which is contrary to the expert opinions of those engaged by the applicants to give them reliable estimates of the amount of capital required.

When increases in capital are required, under section 48—frequently the increases are so small that their necessity is obvious—we ask for the best estimates which can be given as to the application of this proposed increase in capital and the necessity for its issue. Having obtained that and the proper certificates from auditors and others, we are forced to rely largely upon the opinions and the certificates of auditors and the sworn statements of officials which are submitted to us. Beyond that we have no agency in the department which can be expected to give more reliable information than that given by the applicants on behalf of the company and that contained in the certificates of the engineers and agents which they have retained for the purpose of advising them.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to illustrate the case I am trying to put to the minister by referring to Burns and Company Limited. The securities of this company were sold for the purpose of purchasing and taking over the business of P. Burns and Company. The capital structure of the old company is shown here with $3,078,000 in first mortgage bonds and $3,943,000 in preferred stock, a total of $7,021,000. The capital structure of the new company shows $7,000,000 in first mortgage bonds and $6,900,000 in preferred stock, a total of $13,900,000. It will be apparent that the bonds were increased by 127 per cent and the preferred stock by 74 per cent. Certain extraneous assets belonging to the old company were not taken over. The increase averaged almost 100 per cent in preferred stock and bonds of the new company as compared with the old. As I say, I do not know whether this company was incorporated under the dominion act and it may be that I am taking up this matter in the wrong place. If so, the minister will correct me but, if not, I should like him at some stage of the discussion of this bill to advise the committee whether any steps are being taken in the drafting of this new bill to prevent occurrences such as those which took place in connection with this company. I might say that the preferred shareholders have had their equity almost wiped out. In the new company the management is confined to the holders of three management shares without any par value. Although there is a total capital involved of nearly $14,000,000, the preferred shareholders have no say whatever in the management of the company. I should be glad if at some stage of the bill the minister would indicate what action if any is being taken to prevent such occurrences.

Mr. CAHAN: I thank the hon. gentleman. I can make a statement on this section although there is another section which is very material and relevant. My acquaintance with the particular company to which he refers is due to the fact that the company applied recently to have its letters patent amended under an order of the judge who had presided over the meetings held to consider the reconstruction of the company. From my examination of the statements and accounts which were presented I know that there were and are probably very material grounds for the complaint made by the hon. gentleman. In order that such conditions may be prevented so far as possible, we have provided in this bill, in another section dealing with prospectuses, that any company issuing shares or purporting to issue shares for sale must issue a prospectus, which prospectus must be in the hands of every person who buys a single share of stock from the company or its underwriter and which also provides that, if there is any material misstatement in that prospectus, the company issuing it shall be responsible. In regard to the conditions under which the prospectus shall issue and the information which must be disclosed therein, we have gone the limit in compelling a company organized for the purpose of taking over a pre-existing company to give complete information with regard to the financial condition and the operating profits and losses of the pre-existing company so that every purchaser may have before him a most complete and detailed statement of the existing conditions for his own information. When we deal with prospectuses I shall be very glad to have any suggestion from the hon. gentleman or other hon. members of the committee. This bill is not a partisan bill, its object is to protect the public so far as it is within the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament so to do and at the same time to permit companies whose undertakings are above reproach and criticism to carry out such undertakings in industry and commerce for the benefit of the whole country.

Mr. NEILL: Will the minister allow me a question there? He stated that under certain circumstances of misrepresentation the issuing company would be held liable. Would that company be criminally liable? If not, they could easily evade their civil responsibility by setting up a straw company.

Mr. CAHAN: There are sections of the criminal code which make directors who issue false statements liable. However, in the matter of criminal jurisprudence I shall have to submit to the more experienced judgment of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, though I may say that if this discussion is postponed until we deal with the representations that must be made by a company issuing its shares, and the nature and extent of the information which must be disclosed, I shall be able to justify the statement which I now make to hon. gentlemen, that I know of no act in a British country in which the provisions are more stringent than those incorporated here.

Mr. COOTE: Will the prospectus to be issued under the new act, in connection with any company whose capital structure is being reorganized, require those issuing the prospectus to state the capitalization of the old company as well as the capitalization of the new? If not, will the minister consider making provision in that respect?

Mr. CAHAN: All the material facts necessary to allow an intelligent reader of a prospectus to determine the actual financial condition of the old company must be disclosed, and if on further examination of these sections the hon. gentleman has any suggestions to make I shall be most happy to consider them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was intensely interested in section 48 for the very reason given for the present discussion.

Mr. CAHAN: That section stands.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I understand that, but the minister has taken this occasion to discuss the matter with another member of the house and I want to say this to him. I wish he would reconsider some of his statements, particularly as regards the inadvisability of going to the trouble of supervising the capitalization of companies. Some authority will have to undertake this unless, as he points out, he has surrounded the organization of companies with the safeguards and penalties that will make it impossible for companies to evade the law. Eight or nine years ago I raised this very question in the House of Commons and I was told then—I do not blame the minister who at that time made the reply—that such provision could not be incorporated in the Companies Act. Well, we have reaped the whirlwind in consequence since that date, companies having been allowed excessive capitalization whereby they have exploited the public. I feel very strongly on this particular feature of the bill. Surely it is possible so to supervise the capitalization of companies obtaining charters from the dominion government so as to ensure that the sort of thing that has gone on, not only in connection with the Burns company but with half a dozen other concerns, where the public have been exploited in Canada, shall be prevented. I say this now in the hope that some provision will be made in this bill that will make that sort of thing impossible.

Mr. CAHAN: Section 48 stands. I think we have gone as far as it is possible for this parliament to go, if in the future any companies are to be incorporated under the authority of dominion legislation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The crux of the evil complained of, under the capital structure set up in the letters patent, as I apprehend it, or in the borrowing powers that may be asked for by by-law, is the writing up of assets taken over from one company by another. Unless you meet that evil and provide for supervision over that aspect of the matter you will never meet the situation which at present confronts the investing public of Canada. You can put what you like into the requirements of the prospectus, but unless there is a true valuation on the assets being exchanged by the old company for the securities of the new, or something of that character you will never prevent the crying evil which is complained of here and elsewhere. After very careful consideration, I believe I am correct in saying that this is the point to which we ought to direct attention. I will say this however, that if you do try to do that you will have a wholesale job on your hands; more than that, you will drive out of the federal jurisdiction the incorporation of practically all these companies. Unless therefore you can get uniformity as between the dominion and the provinces, I do not see any chance in the world of remedying the evil, and it is a great evil, which is complained of.

Mr. COOTE: In connection with Burns and Company Limited, the preferred shareholders, who are going to lose most of their equity, formed the preferred shareholders protective committee. That committee issued a letter to the preferred shareholders in which they asked them to subscribe to a fund to be used for the purpose of carrying out an investigation and, if necessary, of taking action against the Dominion Securities Corporation who sold the securities. They claim that the prospectus of the company did not disclose the true position of the company. This circular came to the attention of the Dominion Securities Corporation, who floated the securities. The Dominion Securities Corporation have issued a circular letter to the preferred shareholders and I wish to quote the postscript, because it refers to the suggestion made by the minister that any company that floated securities improperly, or at least in connection with which proper information had not been disclosed, might be held liable for damages. Such action is contemplated and suggested by the protective committee to which I have referred, and this is what the Dominion Securities Corporation say in a postscript to their letter to the preferred shareholders:

> We feel further that we should point out with reference to the form of power of attorney accompanying the circular of February 27, 1934, that if you give such power, and action is brought in your name and on your behalf, you may thereby incur a liability for substantial costs in addition to any funds which you contribute as suggested in the circular.

Here is the corporation that floated the securities issuing a warning to all preferred shareholders, discouraging them from getting together to take legal action if they have any ground therefor. As an hon. member suggests, it is a threat to the shareholders. I bring this to the attention of the minister so that when we come to discuss section 48 he will perhaps take it into consideration to see whether some better security or protection can be afforded shareholders who wish to take such action.

Mr. CAHAN: The clauses with regard to prospectus will stand for to-day and may be discussed further in connection with section 48 if hon. gentlemen wish to renew the discussion.

Section agreed to.

Section 53 agreed to.

On section 54—Penalty for concealment of name of creditor.

Mr. CAHAN: Hon. gentlemen will see as we go through these clauses that we are inserting penalties. For instance, in clause 54 we are inserting a penalty for misrepresentation:

> Liable to five years' imprisonment or to a penalty not exceeding $1,000, or to both such imprisonment and such penalty.

We are in this revision increasing the penalties very considerably.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): So far as I can see there is no change in this clause.

Mr. CAHAN: In this particular one the penalty may be the same, but in other clauses we are increasing the penalties very materially.

Section agreed to.

Sections 55 to 58 inclusive agreed to.

On section 59—Preference stock by bylaw.

Mr. DUPRE: I move in subsection 5 to strike out all the words after the word "part" in the 36th line.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. CAHAN: This amendment is proposed because we think the latter part of the subclause does not add anything to the force of the previous part. The subclause reads:

> (5) Holders of such preferred or deferred shares shall be shareholders within the meaning of this part, and shall in all respects possess the rights and be subject to the liabilities of shareholders within the meaning of this part.

That broad statement is regarded by the best counsel whose advice I can obtain as being clear and definite and the suggestion is made that the addition of the following words is unnecessary:

> But in respect of dividends, and in any other respect set out in the by-law as authorized by this part, they shall, as against the ordinary shareholders, be entitled to the preferences and rights given by such by-law.

Of course they are, because the other provisions of the statute confer those rights upon them provided they are given by bylaw, and the best legal advice I can obtain is that the addition of those words after the word "part" simply befogs the issue.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who was the counsel that advised that because for the information of the committee—

Mr. CAHAN: I have had the advice of many lawyers in various parts of the country who have given the very best of counsel. This has also been before the leading accountants, professional institutes and professors of colleges and their advice has been digested to the best of our ability. The matter has been under discussion now for a year and a half.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Too many cooks spoil the broth.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Although the minister states that these additional words are regarded merely as redundant and of no force or effect so far as the legislation is concerned, they have been in the statute for a long time; I do not know that there is any decision on the point and I do not think it will do any harm to leave them in.

Section stands.

Section 60 agreed to.

Section 61 stands.

On section 62—Notice of changes in capital structure to be filed.

Mr. CAHAN: This clause has been the subject of considerable discussion and I have proposed a clause in substitution therefor. Clause 62 was before this house in 1930 and some difficulty has arisen with regard to the construction of it. I have not changed its purport, but I have, I think, made it clearer. For instance, the old section 62 which was reinserted in the original bill reads:

When any class of shares is created or becomes subject to redemption or conversion into any other class—

The difficulty has arisen, I believe, in the courts as to whether "redemption" covers the words "purchase for cancellation" and so I have inserted the latter words to make the meaning abundantly clear. The clause will now read:

When any class of shares is created or becomes subject to redemption or purchase for cancellation or conversion into any other class—

Simply for purposes of clarification we have inserted the words "purchase for cancellation," which in the ordinary course was deemed to be included in "redemption."

Mr. DUPRE: I therefore move to strike out this section and to substitute therefor the following:

62. When any class of shares is created or becomes subject to redemption or purchase for cancellation or conversion into any other class, and such redemption or purchase for cancellation or conversion is effected, notice thereof, setting forth the number of shares of the class redeemed or purchased for cancellation or converted and the number of shares and the class into which conversion is made, shall be filed forthwith with the Secretary of State.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would like to ask that clauses 63, 64 and 65 relating to borrowing powers stand. This is one of the important parts of the bill. Of course if the minister wants to go on with it, I cannot help it.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Mr. CAHAN: If the hon. gentleman wishes I will certainly allow these clauses to stand. I do not think the changes made are important except for purposes of clarification.

Sections 63 to 65 inclusive stand.

On section 66—Registration of mortgages and charges.

Mr. CAHAN: In respect of this clause there is a slight amendment. Provision was not made in the old act for a special condition of affairs prevailing under the civil law of Quebec. In that province a mortgage is executed before a notary and he retains the original document. Under the law of that province a notarial copy from the records of the notary has the same force and effect as evidence as has under the English law the original mortgage which is signed by the parties.

Mr. POWER: It is an authentic document.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes; I was striving for that word. In order to make it clear that that is recognized by this bill I am proposing to insert on page 34, line 3, after the word "company" these words:

Or, in the province of Quebec, a notarial copy of such instrument.

I have been asked by the lawyers of that province to see that that defect is remedied.

Mr. DUPRE: I move in subsection (1) of section 66, on page 34, line 3, to insert after the word "company" the words "or, in the province of Quebec, a notarial copy of such instrument."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: In line 29, after the word "company" the same words should be inserted, "or in the province of Quebec a notarial copy of such instrument."

Mr. DUPRE: I move an amendment accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 67—Registration of order appointing receiver.

Mr. BUTCHER: Would the minister allow this section to stand?

Mr. CAHAN: Certainly. I am quite willing to cooperate, because I regard this as a peculiar bill on which we should have the best judgment of all members on both sides of the house to guide us. When we allow these sections to stand, however, I should be very happy indeed if hon. gentlemen who have definite opinions or suggestions to make with regard to these sections, would make such suggestions before the sections again come up for discussion, so that I may consider whether the amendments which they propose in relation to the other sections of the act, will result in a harmonious whole. I should be very glad if that could be done.

Mr. POWER: I do not think this is a debatable bill; you are quite ready to accept the point of view of the province of Quebec?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes.

Mr. POWER: There may be some discussion on section 67; why not let it stand?

Mr. CAHAN: I was only suggesting that if hon. gentlemen had in mind definite amendments they should advise me of them.

Mr. POWER: Why have any amendments? This is a good bill; it is not a political bill at all. I entirely agree with the Secretary of State; politics have nothing to do with this measure. We find that our law is not as good as we thought it was, but we want to get a good law and we are willing to do our best to amend it.

Mr. BOTHWELL: In connection with the sections that are allowed to stand I think many of us would be glad of the opportunity of discussing them with the minister altogether outside of the committee.

Mr. CAHAN: I will place myself at the disposal of hon. members at any time.

Section stands.

Sections 68 and 69 agreed to.

On section 70—Company's register of mortgages.

Mr. CAHAN: There is a slight amendment to this section. In drafting section 70 originally I overlooked the fact that a subsection of section 66 deals with similar matters. In order that the two may be in perfect harmony I am suggesting an amendment which will be read by my colleague the Solicitor General.

Mr. DUPRE: I move that in subsection (1) lines 18 to 22 inclusive be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

70 (1). Every company shall keep a register of mortgages and enter therein all mortgages and charges particulars of which are required to be delivered to the Secretary of State and of all other mortgages and charges specifically affecting property of the company not being mortgages or charges to which subsection (1) of section sixty-six does not apply, giving in each case a short—

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 71—Right to inspect copies of instruments.

Mr. CAHAN: I would like to suggest that in line 47 the word "a" be inserted after the word "to." Then it will read, "to a fine" instead of "to fine."

Mr. DUPRE: I move an amendment accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 72—Right of debenture holders to inspect register.

Mr. CAHAN: In the twenty-eighth line of this section it will be noticed that the words "who knowingly wilfully authorizes or permits" appear. It has been suggested that the word "knowingly" should be struck out, because the word "wilfully" implies not only knowledge but intent as well. Therefore it would avoid confusion if the word "knowingly" were struck out, so that the line would read, "who wilfully authorizes or permits."

Mr. DUPRE: I move an amendment accordingly.

Section 96 stands.

Sections 97, 98 and 99 agreed to.

On section 100—Power of court to order meeting to be called.

Mr. BUTCHER: Section 100 seems to be a very good one, but I should like to ask the Secretary of State the special reason for its introduction. It is a new section.

Mr. CAHAN: After careful consideration we thought this section necessary in order to enable the holding of meetings in the event of no directors or officers being available to call such meetings, and in case it is impossible to obtain the necessary signatures to enable a meeting to be held on requisition of the shareholders. We have met with difficulties in this connection in regard to a number of companies which were in extreme financial difficulties. The directors and officers would resign and leave the shareholders in the position where a meeting could not be called, under the provisions of the present act. After careful consideration of the complaints received, we deemed this new section very important, so that the court in certain cases may be authorized to call meetings.

Section 101 agreed to.

On section 102—Mortgagee may vote.

Mr. CAHAN: In connection with this section the word "mortgagee" which appears in the marginal note, should be "mortgagor." It is a misprint.

Mr. DUPRE: I move:

That the word "mortgagor" be substituted for the word "mortgagee" appearing in the marginal note.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 103—Books.

Mr. CAHAN: There is a short amendment to this section.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the nature of it?

Mr. CAHAN: In subsection (2) it is proposed to delete the words in the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth lines, "at which the principal duties of such agent in connection with the recording of such transfers are performed" and substitute therefor the words "where register of transfers is kept." The words appearing in the section constitute a phrase which has crept into our statutes when, possibly, some hon. member in committee has made the suggestion offhand, and they have caused confusion. We desire to use a simpler expression, namely, "where register of transfers is kept."

Mr. DUPRE: I move in accordance with the changes outlined by the minister.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 104—Register of transfers.

Mr. CAHAN: In the fourteenth line we are suggesting to delete the word "a" appearing before the word "company," and substituting therefor the word "the," so that the section will begin with the words "the company." Then, in the nineteenth and twentieth lines we propose to delete the words "entered the particulars of every transfer of shares in the capital of the company" and to substitute therefor the words "recorded the particulars of every transfer of shares in the capital of the company entered on such a register." This constitutes a record and the legal term "recorded" is used to avoid confusion. Then, in the twenty-sixth line we propose to strike out the word "or" after the words "branch registers" and substitute therefor the word "of." This is a misprint. Then, we propose to delete subsection (3) and to substitute the following:

(3) Entry of the transfer of any share in the capital of the company in the register of transfers or a branch register of transfers, whether kept at the head office of the company or elsewhere, shall, for all purposes of this part, be a complete and valid transfer.

We wish to make it clear that a valid transfer is effected when it is entered in a branch transfer. Then, subsection (4) would be:

(4) In each branch register of transfers shall be recorded particulars of every transfer of shares in the capital of the company entered on such branch register of transfers.

And subsection (5):

(5) A book or books shall be kept at the head office of the company or at the place within Canada where the register of transfers is kept, in which shall be recorded a copy of particulars of every transfer of shares in the capital of the company entered on every branch register of transfers.

Then we propose to renumber subsection (4), and make it subsection (6). The purpose of that is, that so far as effecting a legal transfer is concerned, the recording of the transfer in the branch register is effective. But we state that there shall be kept at the head office of the company or where the register is kept a register in which the entries in the branch registers shall also be entered, so that on going to the head office of the company for purposes of investigation one may find there a complete list of all transfers which have been made either in the head office register or in the branch registers of the company. I think that is clear, and undoubtedly required.

Mr. DUPRE: I move in accordance with the amendments outlined by the minister.

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 105—Books to be open for inspection.

Mr. CAHAN: In the third line of subsection (1) I suggest that we should insert after the word "transfers" the words "and books." It is an obvious mistake in printing and the section as amended would read: "register of transfers and branch registers of transfers and books mentioned in section 104."

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I suggest the words should be "and the books."

Mr. CAHAN: The word "the" does not help the section.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It would probably avoid confusion.

Mr. CAHAN: If the hon. member wishes to have the word "the" inserted, I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Then, the change will be to add the words "and the books."

Sections 106 and 107 agreed to.

Section 108 stands.

Section 109 agreed to.

On section 110—Report of inspectors to be evidence.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest that there be added after the word "investigated" in the third line the words "or by the seal of the Secretary of State." It would then read:

A copy of the report of any inspectors appointed under this act, authenticated by the seal of the company whose affairs they have investigated or by the seal of the Secretary of State shall be admissible in any legal proceeding as evidence—

We have found this difficulty, that when investigation is made of the affairs of a company at the request of the shareholders, the officers of the company have at times refused to authenticate the report by affixing thereto the company's seal, and we think it would be a good alternative to allow the report to be authenticated by the seal of the Secretary of State.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is there a provision for compelling the inspectors' report to be sent to the Secretary of State?

Mr. CAHAN: The inspector is appointed by the Secretary of State, and so the report is delivered to the Secretary of State, following which authenticated copies are distributed to the persons interested.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 111—Books of account. Contents.

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to have added as subsection 3 the following:

In case the operating accounts of the company are kept at some place outside Canada, there shall be kept at the head office of the company such comprehensive records as shall enable the directors to ascertain with reasonable accuracy the financial position of the company at the end of each three months' period.

We have a number of companies organized under the Companies Act which are operating outside Canada, and the directors who are bound to be cognizant of the financial operations of the company sometimes, if in a minority, are not able to inspect the operating accounts because they are held outside. In other cases the parties have complained that where an investigation was made of a company whose operations were wholly or in part conducted outside Canada the records at the head office did not disclose the material facts with regard to these operating accounts. Therefore in the interests of the shareholders and others interested I am suggesting this amendment to the effect that there shall be kept at the head office of the company comprehensive accounts from which the directors may ascertain with reasonable accuracy the financial position of the company at the end of each three months' period. It is very stringent but I think it is necessary.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 112—Duties of directors at annual meeting.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest in subsection 2, paragraph (j) that the words "the amount of shares of each class subscribed for and allotted" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

The amount of shares of each class issued and outstanding.

That is more definite and comprehensive, and I am sure it will be helpful.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 113—Amounts paid to directors to appear in statements.

Mr. CAHAN: I wish to suggest that there should be added at the end of subsection 3 the following words:

Provided that where depreciation, obsolescence and depletion are charged against manufacturing or operating costs by the company in its accounts, net operating profit may be shown after depreciation, obsolescence and depletion, if the amount charged in respect of those items for the financial period is shown as a foot note to the statement of income and expenditure.

That has been suggested by the Society of Accountants and Auditors. Some companies out of their incomes set aside the necessary amounts for depreciation, obsolescence and depletion, and if they are charged against the manufacturing or operating costs by the company in its accounts, so that the net operating profit is shown after the deduction of these amounts for depreciation, obsolescence and depletion, a footnote shall be placed at the foot by the auditor explaining that fact.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 118—Appointment of auditors.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that subsection 5 be struck out. I will present the matter as fairly as I can for the consideration of the committee. Complaint has been made to the Secretary of State that when auditors are appointed by the shareholders and do their duty without fear or favour they sometimes incur unmerited reproach and are not likely to be reelected because of their persistency in presenting the real facts to the shareholders. That is the statement that has been made to me. In order to meet this I at first suggested subsection (5) which reads:

A person other than a retiring auditor may be appointed auditor of the company at an annual meeting as hereinbefore provided, only upon a resolution passed by at least two-thirds of the votes cast by shareholders voting on such resolution.

This clause has received widespread criticism as it is claimed that it places unnecessary difficulties in the way of selecting auditors. The previous clauses provide that if an appointment of auditors is not made at an annual meeting, the Secretary of State may appoint on behalf of the shareholders. It is also provided by subsection 3 that there must be notice of intention to appoint a particular person as auditor. It is contended that if notice of intention is given to each shareholder with regard to the appointment of new auditors, a majority vote should be sufficient. After listening to the discussion on both sides, I ask the committee to delete subsection 5 and renumber the other sections accordingly.

Mr. DUPRE: I move that amendment.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 119 agreed to.

On section 120—Report.

Mr. BUTCHER: Could not subsection 3 be amplified slightly to provide that on the request of shareholders holding ten per cent of the stock or of any class of stock the auditor shall be required to attend the annual meeting?

Mr. CAHAN: We could let this section stand in the meantime.

Section stands.

Section 121 agreed to.

On section 122—Meeting of shareholders to consider compromise.

Mr. CAHAN: These are the provisions which exist in our act to-day and they are in accord with the revised provisions of the English act. It will be noticed that subsection 3 contains the words, "unless the said judge in his discretion otherwise orders." We have sought to preserve the discretion of the judge, and I think that is the only material change made.

Section agreed to.

On section 123—Meeting of shareholders.

Mr. CAHAN: There is a slight amendment in the twentieth line, to strike out the words "and voting."

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 124—Notice to dissenting shareholder.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Has this section any relationship to the act passed a year or two ago with regard to compromises between companies and creditors and tying up proceedings until a meeting is held?

Mr. CAHAN: Since the Canadian act was passed in 1927 certain amendments were made in 1929 to the English act. We followed that act in the first place and we are now endeavouring to maintain conformity in order that the English decisions may provide guidance to our legal fraternity.

Mr. JACOBS: I understand the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) was referring to the amendment to the Bankruptcy Act. I assume that these provisions do not conflict with that act.

Mr. CAHAN: These are not in conflict with the Bankruptcy Act and they are also in conformity with the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act passed a year ago.

Section agreed to.

On section 125—Books to be prima facie evidence.

Mr. CAHAN: In the fourth line the word "the" should be "be." I have another suggestion to make for a new subsection 2. Some of the legal fraternity have suggested that it might be held that this section would limit the meaning and effect of section 106, and in order to make it clear I suggest that the following be added as subsection 2:

Nothing in this section contained shall limit the meaning or effect of section 106.

Mr. DUPRE: I move those two amendments.

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 126—Proof of service by registering letter.

Mr. CAHAN: I have no suggestion to make except that the word "registering" should be deleted in the marginal note. This word is not included in the section itself.

Section agreed to.

Sections 127 to 132 inclusive agreed to.

On section 133—Time from which service reckoned.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Why should not this be by registered letter?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): That is covered by section 126.

Mr. CAHAN: This is simply the notice of meeting and we thought the ordinary mail would be sufficient. The usual procedure is for the secertary to make affidavit at the opening of the meeting that he has posted the notices and delivered them to the post office.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): That is covered by section 131, and I am satisfied.

Section agreed to.

Sections 134 to 138 inclusive agreed to.

On section 139—Application of part.

Mr. CAHAN: This section is intended to apply to all corporations incorporated under it, and to certain others, so that after the word "applies" in the first line I suggest that we should insert the words "to all corporations incorporated under it and," so as to make its meaning clear. Part of the line was dropped out in the printing.

Mr. DUPRE: I move that amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 140—Application without purpose of gain.

Mr. JACOBS: There are important amendments to section 140.

Mr. CAHAN: With regard to applications for incorporation for certain purposes, provided the company operates without pecuniary gain and for objects of a national, patriotic, religious, philanthropic, charitable, scientific character, and so on, that provision had previously been inserted by an amendment in the main provisions of the Companies Act. Difficulties arose by incorporating these provisions in the Companies Act, and therefore to obviate these difficulties and prevent confusion, part 1 deals with the incorporation of companies for commercial and industrial purposes, having share capital, and we have taken out from the old Companies Act those provisions which applied to corporations without share capital, and have inserted those provisions in part 2, which applies exclusively to corporations without share capital. That is the only change made, I think.

Mr. BUTCHER: Subsection 4 in the present act provides that

By-laws or regulations not embodied in the letters patent may be repealed or amended, but such repeal or amendment shall not be in force or acted on until the approval of the Secretary of State has been obtained.

Why was this subsection deleted?

Mr. CAHAN: In clause (c) of subsection 2 of section 141 we have provided that the application for the charter and the charter shall provide the mode of repealing or amending by-laws, with special provision that the repeal or amendment of bylaws not embodied in the letters patent shall not be enforced or acted upon until the approval of the Secretary of State has been obtained.

Section agreed to.

Sections 141 to 146 inclusive agreed to.

On section 147—Powers constructively conferred by charter.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the minister give some explanation of this?

Mr. CAHAN: Throughout the history of Canada we have been incorporating by special statutes separate and distinct companies, and we have always provided in a general act that certain general clauses should apply to those companies which are incorporated by special statute. This is simply a re-enactment of the special clauses which apply to companies incorporated by special statute, bringing those clauses, in one or two instances, into conformity with the general provisions of the Companies Act.

Section agreed to.

Sections 147 to 159 inclusive agreed to.

On section 160—Shares to be personal estate.

Mr. JACOBS: There is an amendment in this section. It is stated that the shares in the capital stock of the company shall be personal estate. Are they not now?

Mr. CAHAN: The present act speaks of capital stock and the owners of capital stock. That is confusing, and we have introduced throughout the words "shares in the capital stock," which is the proper nomenclature.

Section agreed to.

Sections 161 to 181 inclusive agreed to.

On section 182—Contracts by agents and officers.

Mr. CAHAN: I will ask that this section stand as it is one about which hon. members have asked for further consideration.

Section stands.

Sections 183 to 185 inclusive agreed to.

On section 186—Liability in case of loans by company to shareholders.

Mr. JACOBS: Anything new there?

Mr. CAHAN: The company is liable not only for the loan but for interest as well. If malfeasance of a director leads to the making of an improper loan, he should be responsible not only for the return of the principal but for the interest which has accrued thereon in the meantime.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no change in the penalty.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, there is. It will be remembered that a case arose in which it was claimed that in the event of such a loan being made the directors who made the loan were liable to the creditors of the company for all debts, and we have provided that they shall be jointly and severally liable to the amount of such loan with interest to the company and also to creditors of the company for all debts of the company then existing. In other words, it must be a then existing debt for which they are liable.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is, existing at the time of the loan?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Section 187 agreed to.

On section 188—Liability of directors for wages unpaid.

Mr. BUTCHER: A change has been made in this clause. Section 196 of the present act reads:

> The directors of the company shall be jointly and severally liable to the labourers, servants and apprentices thereof, for all debts, not exceeding one year's wages, due for services performed for the company whilst they are such directors respectively, but no director shall be liable to an action therefor, unless the company is sued therefor within one year after the debt became due, nor unless such director is sued therefor within one year from the time when he ceased to be such director, nor unless as execution against the company at the suit of such labourer, servant or apprentice is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part.

In clause 188 of the new bill I notice the period for which wages are due to employees is reduced to two months. Why is that?

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman has indicated the change. Hitherto, under the old act, directors were jointly and severally liable personally for all wages for a period of twelve months. In respect of companies employing a large amount of labour, this simply meant that a director who might be very wealthy to-day would to-morrow have everything he owned wiped out simply because of the large amount of wages which might have accrued. In reconsidering this we thought under modern conditions provision for two months' wages was satisfactory. Wages are usually paid monthly and if they are not paid for two months, then we suggest making the directors personally liable; but to make them liable for anything in excess of that would place a very heavy liability on directors and make it almost impossible to procure directors for companies which may be very large employers of labour. I am, however, in the judgment of the committee.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Why should the period not be three months instead of two?

Mr. CAHAN: I am quite willing to make it three months instead of two.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I move that in the third line of section 188 the word "two" be replaced by the word "three."

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I protest against the change and also against the amendment; they are both quite inadequate. The old legislation provided for twelve months' wages; that the directors should be liable for wages for the full twelve months. If there is anybody who should get what is coming to him it is the worker in the factory and I am still convinced that directors should direct and therefore should be held responsible afterwards for unpaid wages. This action on the part of the minister appears to me to be quite retrogressive in decreasing the liability of the directors for wages from twelve to two months; in any case the reduction is too extreme.

Mr. CASGRAIN: In the Bank Act the liability is put at three months.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am talking about this legislation. I should like the minister to state any case of extreme hardship under the operation of this section under the old act. Can he give any single case?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): An industrial company that could not pay wages for a year is one that would go into bankruptcy long before that.

Mr. CASGRAIN: In the Bank Act clause 88 limits claims in respect of wages to three months. Wages, salaries or other remuneration of persons employed shall have precedence over the claims of the bank for a period not exceeding three months.

Mr. CAHAN: I am in the judgment of the committee. Personally I would not vote to make the period a year because I think it is excessive. If employees, servants, officials of a company are not paid within a period of three months, which is the term my hon. friend suggests, they should take appropriate means to obtain a judgment and security by judgment and levy against the property of the company. I do not think it is right or just that in many cases officials such as clerks and others who are receiving large salaries should hold off for month after month and then proceed against the directors of the company. I know in one case, although I had not this in mind when this change was made—the change was made by a general recommendation—I was not compelled thereto by the court, but, recognizing the law, I paid out thousands of dollars of my own money in order to pay off clerks and other officials employed in a company when I, as a director, had no knowledge that their salaries were accumulating. They knew I was then a man of some means and could be compelled to pay, and they thought to secure judgment against me. I state that from my own experience and it happens in many cases. It is quite right that a period of two or three months should be provided, but employees ought to take proceedings before the assets of the company are completely dissipated and not rely entirely upon the responsibility of an individual director who may have no knowledge or notice of the fact that their salaries are not paid.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): We must not forget that this is a special privilege given by section 188 against individuals in connection with the salaries of workingmen. In the province of Quebec a workingman is only entitled, according to law, to the last twenty days unpaid, as a privilege.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not know if there is an amendment before the committee, but if there is no amendment I will move that it be made three months. I do not see anything wrong in that when in the Bank Act it is also made three months.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is hardly the same as the Bank Act. In that act it has to do with a claim against the assets of the company, while this is a personal claim against the directors of the company.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The directors are supposed to be responsible.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under the Bank Act it is the assets that are liable, and there is a three months' preferential claim allowable for wages. In the present act there is a personal claim against the directors of a company.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not see that there would be anything wrong in making it three months.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not see that it would be wrong to leave it in its original form. Neither the minister nor any other member of the house has yet adequately justified the proposed amendment. I do not see why the minister is now cutting down the period from a year to two months, nor do I see the point of the hon. gentleman to my right in raising it one month more. While I may be affected to some slight degree by the personal experience of the minister I do submit after all that he was in a better position than the unfortunate wage earners were at that time, and that his suffering was considerably less than theirs. In my opinion the government will not improve their position by amending this legislation in this way.

Mr. JACOBS: Does my hon. friend want to improve the position of the government?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If they can improve their position by passing good legislation that takes into consideration the well being of the masses of the people rather than of a few directors, I am in favour of their doing so.

Mr. JACOBS: Does my hon. friend know that this is an exceptional law? The indebtedness is always due by the company, but inasmuch as the workmen may or would suffer they have incorporated a special clause which says that in addition to the company proper the directors also will be responsible. That is why we want to make it as light as possible on the directors, because at common law they are not responsible; it is the company that is responsible. By special statute, however, we are saying that inasmuch as the directors might have exercised more care and prudence in seeing that the people were paid, they should be penalized by being made personally responsible in addition to the responsibility of the company.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think the directors should be allowed to escape the full onus of their responsibility if they neglect to inform themselves in connection with the affairs of the company.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They do not.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member has interrupted quite a lot, but I am not sure that he knows very much about it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I know as much as you do.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I am surprised that the hon. member is not defending the rights of the workingman rather than the rights of the directors.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am doing it in my own way.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I doubt if there has been a workingman who has had to claim wages for one year.

Mr. CAHAN: Unless you change this statute it simply means that the moment a director finds that there is a delay in the payment of the wages of the employees he will resign to escape this liability, because the moment he resigns he is free of further liability. What we desire is to have a provision in this statute by which the director will know exactly what liability he assumes personally by continuing to give his services in the direction of the affairs of the company. Rather than have wholesale resignations such as we have seen in past years to escape this personal liability I was suggesting that the period be made two months. I am perfectly willing to accept three months, or if the committee prefers four months I am quite willing to accept that. My own view in the matter is not decisive, but if we continue the section as we have it now, so that a director's liability for wages continues for one year you will find in the future, as you found in the past, that you will simply provoke the resignation of directors without protecting the workingmen.

Mr. BUTCHER: I notice that under part I of the present act directors are liable for wages for six months. That is in section 113, which reads:

> The directors of the company shall be jointly and severally liable to the clerks, labourers, servants and apprentices thereof, for all debts not exceeding six months' wages—

That is in the case of a public company. Here we have the case of a company incorporated by statute, where the period of responsibility is twelve months. I think that is excessive; I agree with the Secretary of State, and I am quite willing to support the amendment, reducing it to six months.

Mr. CAHAN: Supposing we agree on six months, which is certainly ample.

Mr. MITCHELL: I cannot agree to that. The minister said he had received representations from many sections of the country, from men skilled in this form of legislation. So far as I know he has not consulted any of the labour organizations in this connection. I do not know that any great injury was done to business under the old legislation, and I think some protection is due the men and women engaged in industry, under legislation of this description. I do not see any reason for the change.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does it occur frequently or at all that wages are in arrears for twelve months?

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is what I was going to ask.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I remember when the particular clause in the Bank Act that has been referred to first came up for consideration in this house; I recall that I had the honour of putting it in the Bank Act, and at the time it was very bitterly opposed by certain interests. Until the revision of 1913 there was no protection, and I claim to be the author of that clause, as the records will show. It was represented to me at that time that three months was ample. I brought in the clause at the instance of trade and labour organizations in Guelph, where men had suffered very serious losses through the failure of two companies, which I well remember. At that time it was represented to me that very seldom, if ever, were wages allowed to go three months in arrears. I do not know the situation to-day, but in my experience wages are not allowed to run in arrears for a year. Personally I would think that six months would be ample to protect the rights of the wage earners, though I have no very strong opinion one way or the other, except that they should be protected.

Mr. BURY: I find myself rather opposed to the suggested change, for I think a director can very well protect himself. But if it is to be changed to six months I would suggest that where a director has positive knowledge that the company is carrying on without paying its servants, that positive knowledge should make him liable for twelve months, and exonerate the directors who have no positive knowledge that the company has been carrying on so long without paying its labourers and servants, or limit their liability to six months. I think a director who is a party to carrying on the business of a company, knowing that the employees are not paid, should pay for what he knows. After all, it is easy to say that employees should take action against a company, but in most cases,—and especially with conditions as they are to-day —employees do not wish to take actions for wages, because it would mean that they would be put out of employment. They hold on to their jobs in the hope that the business of the company will improve, and that ultimately they will be paid. If an amendment could be made in such a way as to make a director who has positive knowledge that the employees and servants of the company are not being paid liable for twelve months, and the directors who do not know and who have not that knowledge for six months, I would have no objection.

Mr. RYERSON: How are you going to do that?

Mr. BURY: Let the matter be brought to the knowledge of the directors by employees of the company.

Mr. DUPUIS: On whom would the burden of proof be placed, the director or the employee, to prove that the director has knowledge of the fact that wages are not being paid?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, how could that be proved?

Mr. BURY: I think there would be no difficulty. Naturally, the burden of proof would be on the servant or the employee.

Mr. DUPUIS: That would be unjust.

Mr. BURY: It would be on the employee who is making the claim. He could give positive notice to the directors in whom he has faith, and in that way he would be in a position to prove that he called the attention of the directors to the fact that his wages had not been paid.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think the change from twelve months to two months is too radical. I agree however that twelve months is too long. I cannot accept the point of view of the hon. member who has just spoken, namely that we will be much farther ahead, or that the wage earner will be much farther ahead if he has imposed upon him the obligation of showing that a director had knowledge. As a general rule, the substantial man among the directors against whom the old section operated most harshly would not have the knowledge. Frequently, even if he did have it, it would be quite difficult if not impossible to prove it. My recollection of the law with regard to preferential liens for wages, under our own Assignments and Preferences Act, was that the period was for three months. I am speaking only from memory, but that would seem to be about the proper time. As this is a change from what we have had previously I would favour going no farther than cutting the previous time in two. I think it should be a six months limitation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): The amendment before the committee is that the word "two" be replaced by the word "six."

Mr. JACOBS: If we accept the amendment we will have to revert to section 96.

Mr. CAHAN: That applies to another class of companies.

Mr. JACOBS: But they are companies, and it makes no difference to the labourer how a company is incorporated. We cannot make fish of one and flesh of another. If we change one to six months I suggest we should change the other to six months.

Mr. CAHAN: They do not apply to the same companies.

Mr. JACOBS: I know that.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was wondering who asked for the change in the section, the representatives of the companies or the representatives of the employees.

Mr. CAHAN: I can tell the hon. gentleman at once that this does not arise from a suggestion of mine. In the last two years we have had case after case concerning small companies conducted in towns and villages by directors who have handed in their resignation because they were becoming liable for unpaid wages. Their employees have gone to them and besought them to remain in office so that the enterprise might be carried on for a longer time in the hope that some compromise might eventually lead to the reestablishment of the company. Under the old arrangement the only alternative to the director was to resign, to get out and to leave the company to await dissolution.

Mr. MacINNIS: As the government is bringing in this measure they will certainly take some responsibility for relations between employers and employees. Instead of reducing the number of months I think there could be a clause inserted in the bill whereby the onus would be placed upon a company to notify the Secretary of State that such company was no longer able to pay wages. Then it would be the function of the government to take whatever steps were necessary under those circumstances to protect the employees. But we are not going to protect them by simply reducing the number of months.

Mr. CAHAN: So far as I know this clause does not affect only the ordinary day labourer. It includes superintendents, clerks, and a whole body of well paid employees and officials. The ordinary employee has his three months' preferential right with respect to the entire assets of the company.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have lost my understanding of the English language if the interpretation given by the minister is correct.

Mr. CAHAN: I said in actual operation.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The clause does not refer to high paid officials, but refers to clerks, labourers, servants and apprentices.

Mr. CAHAN: The term "clerk" has a very broad meaning.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It evidently has, in the mind of the minister.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It really includes the whole staff.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 189 to 205 inclusive agreed to.

On section 206—Registration and transfer offices within and without Canada.

Mr. CAHAN: In order to make this clause consistent with other clauses as amended I propose an amendment to it. The amendment has been printed in the votes and proceedings, and I believe hon. members are familiar with it. There is nothing inconsistent except this, that it provides not only for the registration and transfer of shares but for the registration of bonds and other outstanding securities. The provision with regard to registry is the same as that already adopted in the previous provision, and it applies to all companies. At the present time under the Ontario Companies Act there is a provision that if there is an improper registry application may be made to the court on a summary proceeding. We did not have that provision in the Companies Act of Canada, and therefore I am providing that the court of any province in which the head office or chief place of business of the company is situate, shall have jurisdiction upon the application of any person interested, to order that any improper entry in the books for the registration and transfer of shares of the capital stock of a company may be struck out or otherwise rectified on the ground that at the date of such application the entry as it appears in any such book of registry does not accurately express or define the existing rights of the person appearing to be the registered owner of any shares of the capital stock of the company; and the court, in deciding such application, may make such order as to costs as the court may deem proper.

Then subsection 5 is new. It reads:

An application for the rectification of any entry under the next preceding subsection may be made either by filing with the proper officer of the court a petition or an originating summons or notice of motion; and the court may direct the trial of any issue arising out of such application.

It introduces a provision with respect to dominion companies whereby in case a rectification of the register and transfer book is required to prevent fraud, a summary application may be made to the court by petition as in the province of Quebec, where an originating summons does not form a part of the procedure. In other provinces the usual procedure is by an originating summons or a notice of motion, and on that the judge can hear the application and state an issue to be tried summarily. A similar provision exists in some of the provincial acts, but in respect of the dominion act it has always been necessary heretofore to commence a substantive action in the ordinary course.

Mr. DUPRE: I move the amendment accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURY: A complaint has been made that, in the case of companies which have set up subsidiary companies, the shareholders of the main company are not given the information to which they are reasonably entitled as to the operations and financial position of the subsidiaries. One company in particular which has a number of subsidiary companies was mentioned to me. The subsidiary companies have lost considerable funds, and the shareholders of the original company, as I understand it, have not been able to get information as to the financial condition or operations of the subsidiary companies. Can the Secretatry of State tell me whether there is any provision at all in this bill covering that?

Mr. CAHAN: There are provisions in the bill which require a very full disclosure with regard to subsidiary companies. Those sections now stand for further consideration. In the meantime I will bring them to the attention of the hon. gentleman in case he should wish to make any other suggestions.

Mr. JACOBS: Might I ask if the bill will be reprinted before it comes up for third reading?

Mr. CAHAN: I did not intend to reprint because every one of the suggested amendments will be found in the votes and proceedings of this morning.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 84, to amend the Inquiries Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

On section 1—Authority to confer powers upon.

Mr. CASGRAIN: May we ask the hon. minister who is in charge of this bill to give us an explanation? I see it contains only two clauses.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The explanation is very simple. We propose to add a new part, part 4, to the Inquiries Act. The purpose of it is to enable international commissions and tribunals to take the evidence of witnesses in Canada, subject to such limitations as the governor in council may impose. Part 1 of the present Inquiries Act provides for the issue of a royal commission to take evidence and conduct inquiries in Canada. It frequently happens that another nation issues a commission and desires to take the evidence of persons in Canada. There is no power at present to grant them that right, and so it is proposed by this bill that when the governor in council sees fit, and under such limitations as he may impose, this courtesy shall be extended to other nations which extend the like courtesy to Canada.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Does that mean that these commissions will examine witnesses and inquire into facts in Canada at the instance of other governments?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has the minister any case in mind which brought to his attention the necessity for such a provision? Has there been any case where we did not have but wanted such a provision?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think I could suggest them. The bill is brought in at the instance of the Department of External Affairs as a matter of courtesy to nations that grant us the same privilege.

Mr. JACOBS: Does that apply to criminal as well as civil matters?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, the Inquiries Act applies only to civil matters.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What inquiries might be instituted under subsection 2.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Inquiries in connection with estates which have been held in abeyance and things of that kind are the only requests of which I have heard.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Subsection 1 reads: "The governor in council may, whenever he deems it expedient," and so on. Is it intended that each application shall be dealt with separately?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Oh, yes, no commission will issue except on special application.

Mr. JACOBS: I suppose we have corresponding rights in other countries?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Unless we have we will not issue a commission.

Mr. JACOBS: Reciprocity.

Mr. ELLIOTT: A step in the right direction.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

Entomology, including investigations and inspections relating to destructive insects and pests, $350,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We were discussing this item last Friday and the concluding words of the minister were that last year there had been no neglect of the grasshopper work, that everything was done properly and expeditiously. I do not know personally but what it was but I pointed out that whoever was to blame, the fact was that the provincial government ran out of poison bait on more than one occasion giving the grasshoppers a free fling for quite a while. The result was that their flight was more general and scattered and they spread to pastures new as far north as the North Saskatchewan river, and likewise over the other prairie provinces, according to grasshopper maps supplied by the minister's officials. I should like to know if any of the votes under the relief act were earmarked for the control of grasshoppers last year? I know there is one this year of a million and a half dollars.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I could not say how the money was supplied. My memory is that it was in the nature of a loan to the province but I believe there was no special earmarking. One of the difficulties last year was that the organization was not as complete as it is this year. This year every energy of both governments has been devoted to this problem.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The votes and proceedings indicate that there is a large loan of a million and a half dollars for the control of grasshoppers in Saskatchewan during the month of May alone. I was just wondering how much of this was to control grasshoppers and how much was to control "Grithoppers." A vast sum has been poured into Saskatchewan; I am not critical as they will need it and a lot more to secure any political results, but I should like to direct attention to the support or lack of support given last year and that given this year. Last year there was no election and the grasshoppers had it pretty nearly their own way. I am not critical except to approve about money being spent to control grasshoppers but there is such an amazing difference between the amount going to Saskatchewan and that going to the two adjoining provinces for all purposes. As far as I can make out, the other provinces are covered with an equal density of grasshoppers, but a lesser crop acreage. The maps show that Saskatchewan is well in the red but so are Manitoba and Alberta. There are no large sums, or indeed any at all, going out to control grasshoppers in Alberta and Manitoba but there are no elections in those two provinces. I think the minister would be well advised to post himself on these things. I have been unable to get to the bottom of it but I have learned enough to know that millions are being poured into Saskatchewan and relatively much more than the adjoining provinces combined. It has not been a few thousands at a time, it was a million and a half at a time and there have been nearly $6,000,000 poured into Saskatchewan for grasshopper control, relief road work, etc., during this month of May, and it is not out yet. There may be another loan shower before the end of the month. The areas in the other provinces may not be quite as large, as Saskatchewan turns out a crop nearly equal to that of the other two provinces combined, but these other provinces have nearly as many grasshoppers.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Will the hon. gentleman explain what he means by saying that $6,000,000 have been sent this month to Saskatchewan to look after the grasshoppers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not the whole of it. There was a million and a half for grasshoppers plus the balance of the six million for relief, public works and roads. All of this is very handy in an election year.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the hon. gentleman object to this government loaning money to Saskatchewan?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, no, but you will not get their votes that way. I have the dates and amounts for ten items. There was $149,000 on the last day of April. However, this appears in the votes and proceedings on May 1 and we can follow the same procedure on June 1. On May 1 there was $1,500,000; on the same date there was another $1,500,000 for relief from drought and relief from grasshopper damage. This was not for control but for relief occasioned by the damage done by the grasshoppers. On May 3 there was $9,800; on May 8, $35,000; on May 10, $5,000; on May 16, $7,000—I am just giving the round figures—on May 17, $10,000; on May 23, $700, and on May 21, $750,000. On May 23 there was $500,000—that was the one we were discussing the other night—and on the same day, $1,500,000, making in all $5,958,569—and, to be exact, 79 cents. I do not know what that was thrown in for, I am sure, but it will not kill many hoppers. I suppose, however, it was to be exact.

Now for Manitoba, and here is the map. I have not the combined map showing all the prairie provinces consecutively; I forgot to bring it down but I have it. It shows the expansion of these grasshoppers last year owing to the neglect of the government to do anything special to cope with the evil as they admittedly are doing this year. I have looked over the entire lot of loans sent out to all three prairie provinces but I could not find any one that was sent out earmarked for grasshopper control except the $1,500,000 loan on May 23 to Saskatchewan, exactly the same as this one. This is the only one of its kind which I know of, in any year since confederation. It is to be found at page 360, being order in council No. 1051 of May 23, 1934, authorizing the loan of $1,500,000 to Saskatchewan for the purpose of meeting commitments incurred or to be incurred in extending relief to farmers in the province by way of grasshopper control, and by loans to the farmers covering seed operations for the 1934 crop season, including purchase of seed grain. So that it is not all for grasshoppers. But that is the only one I have discovered in any year in any province since grasshoppers were, well, knee high to a grasshopper. I think we are entitled to a good deal more explanation than we have had.

And what about Alberta? I am not here to plead for Alberta, but that province is as red as a fox on the map with grasshoppers over almost as large an area but doubtless not all cropped area. And here you have Manitoba in the same plight. What do they get for the month of May? The total federal loans to Alberta for all purposes in the month of May amount to $1,159,168, and for Manitoba—poor little Manitoba; she used to be called the postage stamp province but she is not that now, though she is as regards the amount she gets in this connection—$1,101,258 loan, for all purposes, but none earmarked for grasshopper control.

The bright idea just dawned on this government, the very next day after we discussed the subject a week ago last Friday, that it would be a good plan to earmark some of this for grasshoppers. The records show this; they show that it was done either on the Saturday following that Friday's discussion or on the following Monday. Of course, all this does not prove anything, but as I said before, it was a remarkable coincidence that all this money should be pouring into Saskatchewan at the time of an election, to the tune of nearly $6,000,000, while this relatively small amount—$2,260,426—is loaned to the two adjoining provinces put together.

I think the minister should make an explanation; the explanation should not come from myself, but in justice to myself, and in view of what I said the other night, I have dug these facts out of the votes and proceedings. And here are the official maps drawn by the minister's own department.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to make political capital—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh no, but I want to let the country know what my hon. friends are doing—

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Quite so.

Mr. McINTOSH: Are they trying to buy them with their own money?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:—pour into that province another five millions. I will not object to it, but I can tell my hon. friends that it will be of no avail to them politically. Nothing will save the situation for them out there—not if they put in the entire agreement amount, and I do not know what that is. Maybe my hon. friend opposite, the dean of the government, who is getting a little bit worried, will let us know to what amount they go in the agreement with Saskatchewan this year. What is the aggregate of loans to Saskatchewan provided for under the last agreement?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: As regards these loans in May, this month, they were in part a direct loan but in greater measure they were simply renewals of old loans. The province had not been able to pay, and if the hon. gentleman thinks we ought to force Saskatchewan to pay now, he will have to consult the province.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not count the old loans; that would be additional.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I beg your pardon—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not count the old loans in this. I am quite familiar with the difference between new notes and renewal notes. These are new orders. Let the ministry who have charge of it all give us the correct figures if I am wrong. Let the vote stand until we know what is going on, because we are entitled to know why all this money has been going out to Saskatchewan at this particular time and no assurance that any will be spent at all on grasshopper control. I would suggest to the members from Ontario that they check up on how much is going into that province just now. It would be just accidental of course, but it is an interesting study.

Maybe there will be enough out of the six millions loan to clear up the grasshoppers; if so it will be much better than was done last year otherwise the next flight will land the hoppers up into my hon. friend's constituency. On the west side of the province they are up to the north Saskatchewan, and they will be up through Melfort unless they are kept down this year much better than last. This six millions may do the trick, but I would suggest that they reserve a little bit for the grasshoppers and not all for the Grithoppers. The minister ought to make a statement before six o'clock. I notice that the press carried a beautiful statement from him last Saturday but that is all they did carry. Will they carry anything of this expense, I wonder. If so they will need to view it from a different angle. But I don't care a continental whether they do or not. That is for the benefit of the gallery.

The grasshoppers' eggs are deposited through Saskatchewan from the Manitoba boundary to the Alberta boundary, going up as far north in Manitoba as lake Manitoba, lake Winnipeg, east of Winnipeg and right out to the Saskatchewan frontier. If my hon. friend will consult his officers he will find that the area covered with grasshopper eggs and grasshoppers this year is four times as large—well, I will not say four times because I have not made measurements, but at least three times as large as last year. And this is due largely to the fact that the Saskatchewan government had not the poison dope to keep the hoppers down before they started their flight and were not supplied with any earmarked loan for hopper control by the federal government as has been done this year.

The statement my hon. friend made last Friday was not strictly accurate when he said it was not attributable to the neglect of the government. Whose neglect was it? It was a bankrupt province they were dealing with a year ago just as much as now, but it was not an election year, and the grasshoppers had their full swing with the result that we are faced now with an invasion three times as dangerous as we had a year ago. The minister gets out a nice statement indicating that he had an agreement or arrangement with the United States. But the United States government spent much money last year, on the fight against hoppers, and my hon. friend cannot tell me whether his own government contributed anything other than advice and supervision. It would be a relief to me to learn that he had, because that would exonerate them from some blame and the suggestion that they gave money for grasshopper control only in the year of an election. There are enough prospective grasshoppers now to eat sixty per cent of the entire crop in Saskatchewan, we are officially informed, but the minister hopes to save fourteen bushels out of every fifteen.

An hon. MEMBER: Grasshoppers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I don't mean bushels of grasshoppers. He hopes to save, out of every prospective fifteen bushels of wheat to the acre, fourteen bushels. If he can do that he should be kept on as Minister of Agriculture from now until eternity, or at least until the grasshopper plague is over. Nobody has so far been able to do it and I shall be the first to congratulate the minister and his officials if they can. There is no doubt good work was done in the preparatory operations of last fall. As was pointed out, however, by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), the government officers were out advising, supervising, telling the farmers what to do—to plough deep and bury the eggs. Hon. members know the old ditty:

Plough deep while sluggards sleep
And you shall have corn to use and to keep.

How could the farmers plough deep with their skinny horses, the bones just cutting through the hide, and the government coming along with the oats two months too late, at the tail end, always behind like a cow's tail? In the meanwhile the grasshoppers are hopping around and getting their work in. That is the situation. I shall be the first to congratulate the minister if he can show that he has had big loans earmarked by orders in council for hopper control last year. I shall still have some inquiries as to why over five times as much money is pouring into Saskatchewan in the month of May as into Manitoba. This may be just an accident; there is an election on in Saskatchewan but surely that is not the only reason.

Mr. McINTOSH: Three weeks from today will tell the tale.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The two adjoining provinces are nearly as red as ours with grasshoppers, but they are not getting as much together as Saskatchewan is getting alone nor nearly half as much, and none at all for hoppers. Will the minister kindly explain?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): To clear up one reference made by the hon. member for Melville about the saving of fourteen bushels out of fifteen bushels to the acre, may I say that that statement was made with the qualification: If the farmers would carry out the program as outlined. It was not on the basis of an estimate; it was on the basis of actual results as having taken place when thorough control methods were lived up to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that would be right. If there were enough grasshopper bait and sufficient man help to distribute it, that could be nearly done, I think.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The areas that are infested with grasshoppers are as follows:

Very Severe

Province:	Acres
Manitoba	661,000
Saskatchewan	18,123,000
Alberta	3,064,000

Total Area of Crop Land Requiring Organized Control

Province:	Acres
Manitoba	2,000,000
Saskatchewan	14,755,000
Alberta	3,500,000

Mr. McINTOSH: Just what parts of the three provinces do those figures cover? Mostly in the south and centre?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Mostly south and centre.

It is rather difficult for one coming from Saskatchewan and having been as closely in touch with conditions in that province as I have been through the portfolio I hold, to reply with any degree of restraint to what I consider the most unworthy exhibition that has ever been given in this house since I have had the honour to be in it—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hop to it as far as you like.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): —and especially because of the support the hon. member for Melville was given by the hon. member for North Battleford, also from the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. McINTOSH: Hear, hear.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): And the hon. member says "hear, hear," showing that he has no shame with reference to the remarks he has made. The method of dealing with grasshoppers, outside the supplying of poisoned bait, is that of ploughing down the grasshoppers at times when it is recommended that this operation should take place. In Saskatchewan we have 18,000,000 such acres that have to be cultivated and prepared to meet and defeat the ravages of the grasshoppers. The regrettable part is that this area is one where for years there have been successive total or very considerable partial crop failure. The result is that the farmers there are not equipped with feed to carry out these operations or with gasoline for those who use tractors. It is in this connection that the money is advanced so that they may pay for feed that is bought and for which commitments have been made or where necessary that they may buy more feed for this particular operation. For this purpose some of this feed has been already purchased and used and this year the same as other years the identical policy has been followed of meeting the demands of the various provinces when they submit a statement to us that they are in a position to deal with the abnormal demands made upon them. This is true particularly in connection with Saskatchewan that has been hit incomparably with other provinces by forces over which neither they nor any other human agency had any control. In Saskatchewan the cost of feed for live stock, including the price of the feed itself and also the freight, has been the biggest load they have had to carry. The area being so extensive necessitates a long rail haul and heavy charges in getting the feed into the districts from localities where a supply of it is available. That is why it has been necessary for us to make these large payments and I can assure the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) and the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) that I could not imagine any greater contrast than the attitude of the members of the government of Saskatchewan who have for the past four years been charged under drastic conditions with the administration of the affairs of that province and especially of looking after the farm population and that of the hon. members whom I have named. Their whole outlook toward public service or public administration or public welfare seems to be in this case in the open with guards down, purely political. In that respect one could not expect anything else; they are worthy followers of their leader who not only made the statement but repeated it at a later sitting of the house in 1930, showing that it was well thought out, that his attitude towards public funds was this, that when a province had a government that was not of the same political party as his own he would not give a five cent piece.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is a lot of rot.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): His whole attitude was political and I say that the hon. members who have spoken this afternoon have certainly given ample evidence that they are his worthy and true followers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is my hon. friend giving evidence of? He has made no answer to my statement except a lot of blather about a number of other irrelevant matters.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

THIRD READING

Bill No. 28, to incorporate Ancient Foresters' Mutual Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Bell (West Hamilton).

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay) moved the second reading of Bill No. 83, to amend the criminal code (lotteries).

[Mr. R. Weir.]

He said: As I said on a previous occasion, Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to amend section 236 of the criminal code which makes it an offence to print or conduct a lottery scheme, or to sell or buy lottery tickets. Subsection 6 of that section excepts from the operation of section 236 raffles at church bazaars, certain rewards to promote thrift, securities recallable by drawing lots, the Art Union of London and the Art Union of Ireland. The present bill seeks to add to that list of exemptions lotteries conducted for educational or public charitable purposes under the law of any province.

I might remind the house that at the last session of the Quebec legislature Bill 41, to authorize the organization of a lottery for educational and public charitable purposes, was adopted unanimously by the lower house and accepted by the legislative council of that province. That bill is to become law when it is sanctioned by the lieutenant-governor in council. Section 6 of that act provides:

> The power given to the lieutenant governor in council by section 1 shall be exercised only if a lottery of the nature of that contemplated by this act is not prohibited by a statute of the parliament of Canada.
> Moreover, such power shall not be exercised if the parliament of Canada authorize the Canadian government to organize a general lottery in the whole of Canada, for purposes similar to those contemplated by the preceding provisions.

I think the real purpose of this bill was to come to the assistance of the educational and charitable institutions in the province of Quebec. Some days ago there was a debate in this house on another bill, which had not the same purpose, which bill was defeated. During the course of the debate reference was made to the bill now under consideration. The Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) is reported as having said:

> Therefore, on that issue if the bill introduced by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay comes before this house for decision I think my position is clear. Unless I hear some very strong objection which, up to the present, I have not heard, I think I should have to except the provincial law from the operation of the criminal code, and to that end would vote for the measure. So far as any personal request of mine may have force and effect in this chamber may I state I think it most desirable that an opportunity be given by the house to the consideration of Bill No. 83.

In another place the hon. gentleman said:

> Therefore, if we are to approach the real issue it appears to me that it can be approached only by some such amendment to the criminal code as that proposed by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain).

Therefore I have introduced this bill and I would ask that hon. members give it their best possible consideration, because in the province of Quebec it has been considered necessary, in order to further the objects and aims of that province, to adopt such a lottery system which would be conducted according to the rules and regulations set out in the bill which received the unanimous support of both houses of the legislature of that province. I think this is the proper way to deal with the question; I hope hon. members will see their way clear to support this bill, since it does not force lotteries upon any province of Canada but merely allows the province of Quebec to make use of lotteries in accordance with the bill to which I have referred.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Speaking on behalf of the government in regard to this measure I have only to say that as the house expressed its opinion on the general principle involved in this bill only a week ago, with a very decisive majority, the government cannot accept this bill as an amendment to the criminal code.

Motion negatived on division.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Stirling in the chair.

Customs tariff—99e. Dates, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, 1 cent; intermediate tariff, 1¾ cents; general tariff, 2½ cents. When in packages weighing two pounds each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Mr. RALSTON: I just want to see the order in which the minister proposes to take up these resolutions. Is he dealing with the tariff first?

Mr. RHODES: I thought I would take up the tariff items first, which appear at page vii of the votes and proceedings of April 18. Before dealing with the first item which appears in the schedule, which is item 99e, in order to preserve the chronological order of the items as they appear at present in the tariff. I want to deal with items 79, 79b, 79c, 81 and 82, which have to do with nursery stock, arising out of a report of the tariff board recommending certain changes in the various items which I shall table as soon as the house resumes. For that purpose, inasmuch as it might not be desirable to proceed at the moment with the individual items, I propose to place the changes in the hands of the chairman, so that they may be shown in the votes and proceedings and will be available to hon. members the next day we are in committee.

Mr. RALSTON: Would the minister indicate the effect of the report?

Mr. RHODES: Yes. The first commodity dealt with is peonies, shown in present item 78. The rate is left precisely as it is now. The rates as proposed on hydrangeas in the recommendation of the tariff board are free, 15 per cent and 20 per cent, as against the present rates of 15 per cent, 25 per cent and 25 per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: Item 78 does not include hydrangeas.

Mr. RHODES: No, that is correct. Then, item 79 includes dwarf polyantha rose bushes, and the rates recommended by the tariff board will be free, 15 per cent and 20 per cent, as against 12½ per cent, 17½ per cent and 20 per cent. At present the tariff rates on laurel are free, free and 40 per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: What item is that?

Mr. RHODES: Item 79; I refer to the proposed item. You cannot follow them exactly, because the present item is 79b.

Mr. RALSTON: They do not correspond?

Mr. RHODES: No, it is reworded. The new rates are free, 15 per cent and 20 per cent. Then, the present rates on holly, natural, are free, free, and 40 per cent, and the new rates will be free, 15 per cent and 20 per cent. The present rates on holly, preserved, are 15 per cent, 25 per cent and 25 per cent, and the new rates will be free, 15 per cent and 20 per cent. Then, the present rates on buds and scions for grafting are free, 15 per cent and 20 per cent. Under the new rates they will be free, free and free. Peach pits at the present time are 5 per cent, 10 per cent and 15 per cent, under item 73. The new item will be 79c, and the new rates will be free, free and free. Under the present rates apple trees are listed at 2 cents, 2½ cents and 3 cents under item 81. The new item will be 81a, and the rates will be free, 6 cents and 7½ cents. Then, pear, plum, cherry, apricot and quince trees at the present time are shown at 2 cents, 2½ cents and 3 cents, whereas under the new rates they will be free, 8 cents and 9 cents

Mr. RALSTON: Under what old item?

Mr. RHODES: The old item will be the same.

Mr. RALSTON: What number?

Mr. RHODES: The new item is 81b. Then, peach trees, including June buds, are at the present time 2 cents, 2½ cents and 3 cents. The new rates are free, 5 cents and 6 cents. Under the present item 82, grape vines, gooseberry, raspberry, currant and rosebushes, are shown at 12½, 17½ and 20 per cent. The new rates on grape vines, gooseberry and currant bushes, item 82a, are free, 2 cents and 2½ cents. It will be observed that under the intermediate and general rates there has been a change from an ad valorem to a specific duty. Then 82b includes raspberry, loganberry and blackberry bushes, upon which the present rates are 12½ per cent, 17½ per cent and 20 per cent. The new rates will be free, one cent and one cent. In respect to the new item 82b, the present rates under item 711 are 15 per cent, 25 per cent and 25 per cent, and the new rates are free, one cent and one cent.

Mr. RALSTON: Does the new item apply to specific articles, or is it the same general item?

Mr. RHODES: It deals with rhubarb roots. Then 82c includes asparagus roots and strawberry plants. The present rates are 15 per cent, 25 per cent and 25 per cent and the new rates are free, one-quarter cent and one-quarter cent.

Mr. RALSTON: What is the number of the old item?

Mr. RHODES: The same as the last one, 711. Then, rosebushes, 82d, now found under item 82, are shown at 12½ per cent, 17½ per cent and 20 per cent, and the new rates are 1½ cents, 3 cents and 7 cents. On trees, shrubs and vines, commonly known as nursery stock, the present rates are 12½ per cent, 17½ per cent and 20 per cent, and the new rates are 12½ per cent, 17½ per cent and 30 per cent. That covers the complete list.

Mr. RALSTON: These changes are all proposed to be made as a result of reports by the tariff board?

Mr. RHODES: Yes; I have the report of the tariff board which I shall table as soon as we are in the house. Perhaps I had better table the resolution at the same time.

Mr. RALSTON: When was the report brought down, or made?

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. RHODES: I have had it a few days, but my hon. friend will realize it would be impossible to bring it down prior to the moving of the resolution itself.

Mr. RALSTON: The report was not down at the time of the budget?

Mr. RHODES: No; it has been in my hands only a day or two.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand the minister will not deal with these items in detail to-night.

Mr. RHODES: No, I am quite content that they should stand until the next sitting.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Shall the item carry?

Mr. RHODES: The effect of item 99e is really to lower rather than to increase, because at the present time under the wording of the item the duty is charged upon the heavy wooden box containers in which the dates are packed. Under the amended proposal the only package which will be included with the weight of the dates for duty purposes will be the cardboard cartons contained inside. The general effect is to lower.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—117. Halibut livers, fresh: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RALSTON: Can the minister tell us the amount of halibut liver oil manufactured in Canada, and what amount is consumed in Canada? In other words, do we manufacture enough for our own consumption?

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry I am not in a position to give that information because up to the present time this item has not been segregated and there has been no opportunity to give the figures for which the hon. member has asked. I am informed, however, that the use of halibut liver for purposes comparable to the uses heretofore made of cod liver is increasing at a very rapid rate, and this free entry will enable the production of halibut liver oil in Canada. It will enlarge the opportunity. I think perhaps the hon. gentleman who sits to my hon. friend's immediate left (Mr. Hanson, Skeena) will be able to give far better information in that respect than I can.

Mr. RALSTON: Will the minister allow this item to stand?

Mr. RHODES: Certainly.

Mr. RALSTON: I have written for some information in regard to it. The thing I am concerned about is whether we produce in Canada sufficient halibut liver, that is the raw material, to supply the demand in Canada. If so it seems to me that by this item we are perhaps taking a backward step so far as the fishing industry is concerned, if we permit halibut liver to come in free from the United States.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—180. Photographs, chromos, chromotypes, artotypes, oleographs, paintings, drawings, pictures, decalcomania transfers of all kinds, n.o.p., engravings or prints or proofs therefrom, and similar works of art, n.o.p.; blue-prints, building plans, maps, and charts, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 22½ per cent.

Mr. RHODES: The only change is the insertion of the letters "n.o.p." in the third line, which is made necessary by the next succeeding item. There is no change in the rates.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—180c. Decalcomania transfers, when imported for use exclusively in the manufacture of tableware of china, porcelain or semi-porcelain: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. RHODES: This is a new item to afford reduced rates under all tariffs on decalcomania transfers for use in decorating tableware and china, et cetera. Although transfers of many kinds are made in Canada none are made suitable for the production of ceramic products such as tableware. It has been represented to the minister by the Canadian industries engaged in the manufacture of chinaware that since such tableware may enter free of duty from Great Britain, provision should be made for lower rates on the decalcomania transfers used.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will the bulk come in from Great Britain?

Mr. RHODES: Transfers of this nature are available chiefly in Great Britain, Germany and the United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—187. Albumenized and other papers and films chemically prepared for photographers' use, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: The only change here is to provide for the insertion of the letters "n.o.p." This change is made necessary because of the next succeeding item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—187a. Hypersensitive or supersensitive panchromatic films, unexposed, for aerial photography: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: This is a new item to provide lower rates of duty on the thin hypersensitive or supersensitive panchromatic film which is used in aerial photography. This film is not made in Canada but can be imported from either the United States or Great Britain. The largest user in Canada is perhaps the Department of National Defence.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where have we been getting our supplies?

Mr. RHODES: From both the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. BOUCHARD: If the film is used for other purposes than for aerial photography will it be protected by the former duties?

Mr. RHODES: I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that this is a film of a special character, exceedingly thin and suitable only, and used only, for purposes of aerial photography.

Mr. RALSTON: The former item was 187?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—203b. Aniline and coal tar dyes, adapted for dyeing, in bulk, or in packages of not less than one pound weight: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent. Provided, that when such dyes are permitted entry into the United Kingdom, by licence, under section (2) of the Dye-Stuffs Act (1920) the rates of duty shall be: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: The only change in this item is the substitution of the phrase "adapted for dyeing" for the phrase "soluble in water". This is a conference item and there has arisen some difficulty in its administration. Many dyes which are imported are not soluble in water. We have accepted this wording at the suggestion of United Kingdom authorities and with the approval of the Department of National Revenue.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—207. Dried blood, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: The only change in this item is to include the letters "n.o.p.", made necessary by the next succeeding item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—207b. Dried blood, soluble: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RALSTON: What is this used for?

Mr. RHODES: This is a new item providing free entry under all tariffs for soluble dried blood, which is used as a base for glue compounds in the furniture industry.

Mr. NEILL: Is not all dried blood soluble in the final analysis?

Mr. RHODES: I am told not.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208e. Cresylic acid and compounds of cresylic acid, used in the process of concentrating ores, metals or minerals, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: The only change is the addition of the letters "n.o.p." in consequence of the succeeding item.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Some time ago representations were made to the minister by some of the mining companies in British Columbia complaining that they could not get this material except from two sources, Great Britain and the United States, and that under the existing tariff it was impossible to get it from Great Britain. I should like to ask the minister if anything was done to meet those representations. Are these the only two sources of supply?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is referring to an item that we have not yet reached. We shall reach it in a moment and then I shall be glad to give him a reply.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208g. Calcium molybdate, when imported for use exclusively in the manufacture of steel, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. RHODES: The only change in this item is to permit the importation of this commodity by importers who may in turn sell. Hitherto the importation has been limited to the actual manufacturer, and it has been a handicap in the case of the smaller manufacturer, prohibiting him from going to a warehouse, for example, and purchasing a small quantity. Otherwise he would be penalized by having to pay a higher duty.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not quite understand that explanation. This is an item which applies to a commodity imported for use exclusively in the manufacture of steel, and I understood the minister to say that this permitted the purchase of calcium molybdate from jobbers. It does not seem as if that would be the purpose of the item.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend would read the existing item he would observe the difference. The existing item says "by a manufacturer," while those words are left out of this item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208u. Xanthates and sulphothio-phosphoric (dithio-phosphoric) compounds, for use in the process of concentrating ores, metals or minerals: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: This is the item to which my hon. friend from Skeena referred.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Representations were made to the minister by the Premier Mine Company, one of the biggest in British Columbia, which is trying to operate on very low grade ore. They started up a new mine of very low grade ore and they had to have this material for their concentrates, but their representations are that under the present prohibitive duty on this material it is impossible to keep the mine open.

Mr. RHODES: This is a new item intended to restore to the free list certain cresylic acid compounds and derivatives thereof which became dutiable at rates of free, 15 per cent and 15 per cent as a result of the imperial economic conference. Under the budget of 1933 one group of these compounds, known commercially as xanthates, was restored to the free list under the tariff classification of item 208u; on the representation of mining interests whose processes have been built up upon other cresylic acid derivatives commercially known as "aero-float", "reagent 301" et cetera, these latter were added to the free list. The reagents referred to are royalty preparations made only in the United States. They have been imported from the same sources for many years and as there are no

British interests benefiting from the preference, His Majesty's government is unreservedly concurring in their return to the free list.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208v. Butyl alcohol, until October 15, 1934: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: This is a new item and it is being placed on the free list. It was previously dutiable at free, 25 and 25. This is a conference item but Great Britain has concurred in the temporary free listing because of the fact that for five or six months in the immediate future she may have difficulty in supplying the demands of Canadian and domestic consumers.

Mr. EULER: Is it made in Canada?

Mr. RHODES: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208w. Theobromine, crude, and dimethyl, sulphate: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—210d. Sodium, sulphate of, crude, or salt cake, per pound: British preferential tariff, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent; intermediate tariff, $\frac{3}{8}$ cent; general tariff $\frac{3}{8}$ cent.

Mr. RALSTON: Has some body of manufacturers or producers made representations with regard to the large number of chemical items; who initiated these changes, generally speaking?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is not referring to this item alone?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. RHODES: Representations have been received from fifteen or twenty large consumers of these commodities throughout Canada. I have not the individual names before me.

Mr. RALSTON: It was not an association of some sort?

Mr. RHODES: No, they were individuals.

Mr. BOTHWELL: What is the reason for the reduction in this particular item? Has this matter been before the tariff board?

Mr. RHODES: This change arises in consequence of a report of the tariff board which was tabled in the house some considerable time ago.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I have been asked to make a protest on this item and I shall give it to the minister in the words in which it was passed on to me. This letter was written from Moose Jaw and it has reference to the Natural Sodium Products Company at Dunkirk. The author of the letter is interested in this company and he says:

The company with which I am connected, the Natural Sodium Products, and which operates a plant near Dunkirk, south of Moose Jaw, carried on for many years and spent some hundreds of thousands of dollars before it got on a basis of profitable operation. At present the business is doing very well, and is giving employment to a lot of people in an area where employment is very much needed.

And again:

It seems to me that if there is an industry in Canada that deserves the benefit of a tariff, it is this industry. It is only just nicely getting on its feet, and the freight rate is a great handicap to it. The purchase of the commodity by the Canadian manufacturers of paper in Canada means not only business for these small industries in the west, the development of the resource, but it means business for the Canadian railways, and one would gather that the railways are in need of all the business they can get, and surely if we are to have a tariff, this industry is deserving of the benefit of that tariff. As I have said, it is possibly the only industry of any account in Saskatchewan that derives any benefit from it, and one would think under the conditions that prevail, that industry in this province would get fair treatment and not be singled out to be discriminated against in Canada's tariff policy.

And again:

I can assure you it is being carried on on a very small margin at the present time; in view of the freight rate, a very small reduction in the protection afforded to it is simply going to necessitate the closing down of these plants in Saskatchewan, or the weaker of them in any event.

I do not know whether these protests have been made to the minister, but if they have not been made to him I assume they have been made to the tariff board. I think it would be enlightening if the minister could give us the information which was given to the tariff board in connection with this item.

Mr. RHODES: The company referred to by my hon. friend was represented at the hearing before the tariff board and made very complete representations. As to his inquiry as to whether protests have been made to me, I may say that none have been received. He will bear in mind that if protests should be made, they would be made as a result of the findings of the tariff board because the proposals we now make are in exact conformity with those findings. These findings are as follows:

The Bathurst Pulp and Paper Company, the applicant, as a consequence of being located at Tidewater, can secure its salt cake requirements more economically from the United Kingdom than from Saskatchewan.

British salt cake is higher in price at the source than Canadian salt cake, and the British producers can compete in Canada against the Saskatchewan produce only at points situated at tidewater, and then only where the consumers are prepared to buy in bulk, in cargo lots.

Disregarding all customs duties, the Canadian producers are very advantageously placed to secure all the business of the Canadian users receiving their supplies in small shipments, and it is apparent that the present duty is unnecessarily high adequately to ensure to the Saskatchewan industry competitive access to its economic market in Canada.

I may say that as a matter of fact the company referred to by my hon. friend has been and is exporting large quantities of salt cake to the United States. The findings continue:

Evidence at the inquiry established that, at current prices, the protection afforded Canadian salt cake at point of production is approximately 135 per centum.

A duty under the British preferential tariff of $\frac{1}{5}$ cent per pound would be sufficient to allow the British Columbia producers, when they begin operations and if they should desire the market, full opportunity of reasonable competition, via the Panama canal, with United Kingdom producers for the business of the mills situated on the Atlantic seaboard.

It will be noticed that we do not intend to interfere with the intermediate and general tariffs; we are simply reducing the British preferential from one-half cent to one-fifth cent per pound.

Mr. EULER: The minister stated that an application was received from only one paper company, the Bathurst Pulp and Paper Company. I should like to know if they were joined by other paper manufacturers when they requested reduced duties?

Mr. RHODES: No, the only application we received was from the Bathurst company.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—210e.—Nitrate of soda or cubic nitre when imported for use as a fertilizer, for use in the curing or pickling of meats or for use in the manufacture of vitreous glazes and enamel frits, or when imported by manufacturers of explosives for use exclusively in the manufacture of explosives, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to move to item 210e. It reads:

Nitrate of soda or cubic nitre when imported for use as a fertilizer, or as a flux in the reduction of electrolytic copper slimes, or for use in the curing and pickling of meats or in the manufacture of vitreous glazes and enamel frits, or when imported by manufacturers of explosives for use exclusively in the manufacture of explosives in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

This is a conference item and it is being widened further as a result of the concurrence of the British government.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I think the minister is to be congratulated for this change which benefits the farmer and for having carried into effect the constructive suggestions from this side of the house.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—216d. Phthalic anhydride, adipic, abietic, maleic and succinic acids and ethylene glycol, when imported by manufacturers of synthetic resins, for use exclusively in the manufacture of synthetic resins, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—219. (ii) Solutions of hydrogen peroxide containing twenty-five per centum or more by weight of hydrogen peroxide: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—219e. Mixtures containing cyanides, for use in combating destructive insects and pests: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—242. Dry red lead, orange mineral and titanium oxide; zinc oxides such as zinc white and lithopone: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: This is a conference item and is being widened. I move to amend it so that the item shall read:

242. Dry red lead, orange mineral, titanium oxide and antimony oxide; zinc oxides such as zinc white and lithopone: British preferental tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

This represents a very substantial reduction. Under the British preference it was 15 per cent and is now free; under the intermediate it was 20 per cent and is now 15 per cent; and under the general it was 22½ per cent and is now 15 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does the bulk of the imports come from Britain?

Mr. RHODES: Under the item as it stood last year, and up to the present time, the total importations have been 23,733,291 pounds of a total value of $950,000 odd, of which 16,841,196 pounds came from the United Kingdom; 2,979,655 pounds came from the Netherlands, and 2,881,952 pounds came from the United States.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—246b. Stains and oxides, valued at not less than 20 cents per pound, and liquid gold, for use exclusively as colouring constituents in the manufacture of vitreous enamels and pottery glazes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 22½ per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment which is purely administrative in effect, to improve the wording. The item will read:

Stains and oxides, valued at not less than 20 cents per pound, for use exclusively as colouring constituents in the manufacture of vitreous enamels and pottery glazes; and liquid gold paint, for use exclusively in the manufacture of tableware, of china, porcelain or semi-porcelain: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 22½ per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: Under what item did this come?

Mr. RHODES: Item 246, and we have made an addition.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—254. Gums, viz.:—Arabic, Australian, copal, damar, elemi, kaurie, mastic, sandarac, Senegal, Tragacanth, gedda, and barberry; gum chicle or sappato gum, crude; lac, crude, seed, button, stick and shell; ambergris; Pontianac: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I move that this item be amended by striking out the word Arabic. We have now the concurrence of the British government in widening the item, which is a conference item.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—254a. Gum, amber: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RALSTON: Under what does gum Arabic come?

Mr. RHODES: Under 254.

Mr. RALSTON: But I understood the minister to say that arabic was struck out.

Mr. RHODES: I have a new item to move. I move that item 254a be amended to read:

Gums, viz., amber and Arabic: British preferntial tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—267b. Crude petroleum not in its natural state, ·7250 specific gravity or heavier at 60 degrees temperature, when imported by oil refiners to be refined in their own factories, per gallon: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff 1½ cents; general tariff, 1½ cents.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Do we get any considerable proportion from Britain?

Mr. RHODES: Last year our total importations under this item were 21,715,000 gallons of which we imported from Trinidad 19,262,000; from Russia, 1,958,000 and from the United States, 494,000. This makes it free under the British preferential instead of ½ cent.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the significance of the words "when imported by oil refiners to be refined in their own factories"?

Mr. RHODES: This is the item as it stands now and has stood for many years. All we are doing is to change the rate under the British preference, making it free instead of one-half cent.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What do the refineries use it for?

Mr. RHODES: It must go to the refinery; it is only a semi-crude oil, not in its natural state. It has to be still further processed.

Mr. CASGRAIN: To what use is it put?

Mr. RHODES: There has to be a certain amount of distillation.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I understand that, but into the manufacture of what products does it enter?

Mr. RHODES: It is manufactured into gasoline, kerosene and probably naphtha.

Mr. YOUNG: Who uses it, apart from the oil refiners?

Mr. RHODES: I am advised that no one but the oil refiners could use it.

Mr. YOUNG: Then why not strike out those words?

Mr. RHODES: This is a time honoured item.

Mr. YOUNG: That would not make any difference. Let us strike out the words if they are not necessary.

Mr. RHODES: I did not say that they were not necessary.

Mr. YOUNG: If nobody but a refiner wants this, then nobody but a refiner wants it. Strike out the words.

Mr. RHODES: This item was not asked for by the refiners; they knew nothing about it. It was asked for by the Island of Trinidad. I am sure we would grant this further concession to a British country.

Mr. YOUNG: I do not think Trinidad would make any objection if we struck out these words.

Mr. RALSTON: Does crude petroleum for the manufacture of gasoline come under item 267a?

Mr. RHODES: Yes. The crude item is right beside it. Of course, as my hon. friend knows, item 267 covers a really crude oil.

Mr. RALSTON: I would like to know the real item which includes the natural product from which most of our gasoline is manufactured. Is it item 267a?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG: In view of the fact that nobody but a refiner would want this and Trinidad would not object to having the scope widened, I move that all the words after the word "temperature" be struck out.

Mr. RHODES: Item 267a deals with a crude article, and it is free across the board, yet it contains these very same words:

When imported by oil refiners to be refined in their own factories.

Mr. YOUNG: We can deal with that when we come to it. In the meantime let us strike these words out of the item.

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps the hon. member does not appreciate the fact that this is purely an administrative requirement. If these words were struck out neither the country nor the situation would be helped. The fact that this requirement has been there for so many years is evidence of its necessity.

Mr. YOUNG: It seems to me that if those words are in there they are there for a purpose.

Mr. RHODES: That is the purpose.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. YOUNG: The only effect they can have is to give somebody a rate somebody else does not get. That is the reason I move that they be struck out.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—278b. Crude peanut oil, for refining for edible purposes, used as materials in Canadian manufactures: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is an increase in the intermediate and general tariffs. What is the explanation?

Mr. RHODES: The idea is to direct this commodity through British channels.

Mr. EULER: Which British possessions or territories would be benefited by the protection placed against other countries?

Mr. RHODES: Peanuts are produced on the west coast of Africa. There are crushers located on the east coast of Great Britain and on the coast of British West Africa. Peanuts can be supplied from British East Africa, British West Africa and British India.

Mr. EULER: What are the total importations from the various countries?

Mr. RHODES: Last year the total importations were 410,780 hundredweight of a total value of $1,661,000. I am leaving off the odd hundreds. They come from various sources as follows:

	Hundredweight
Germany	139,268
China	125,815
United Kingdom	55,302
Denmark	45,320
United States	25,815

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—278d. Olive oil for manufacturing soap or tobacco or for canning fish; olive oil for use in the processing of textile fibres, including the finishing of fabrics: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. NEILL: Would the minister explain the change? Previously a part of it carried a duty of 20 per cent. What part was that?

Mr. RHODES: The portion which was used in textile operations. That is now made free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—294. Gypsum, ground, not calcined: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: This is purely a question of wording.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—326c. Concave blanks of uncoloured clear glass, when imported by manufacturers to be used exclusively in the manufacture of silvered mirror reflectors for lighting systems: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to move to this item, that it be amended to read as follows:

Blanks of uncoloured clear glass, when imported by manufacturers to be used exclusively in the manufacture of silvered mirror reflectors or acid etched reflectors or refractors, for lighting systems: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is a new item.

Mr. RHODES: It was a budget item but it is now widened.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I move accordingly.

Mr. EULER: Will the minister say whether these are manufactured in this country?

Mr. RHODES: They are not.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—326d. Beads, drops or other shapes of glass, when imported by manufacturers of imitation pearls, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—334. Kryolite or cryolite: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—339a. Lead capsules for bottles: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—353. Aluminium and alloys thereof, crude or semi-fabricated, viz.: Pigs, ingots, blocks, notch bars, slabs, billets and blooms; bars, rods and wire; angles, channels, beams, tees and other rolled or drawn sections and shapes; pipes and tubes; plates, sheets and strips, including circles; leaf, n.o.p., or foil, less than ·005 inch in thickness, plain or embossed, with or without backing; wire and cable, twisted or stranded, reinforced with steel or not; aluminum powder: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: What is the change in this item?

Mr. RHODES: This change is merely to insert the letters "n.o.p." as a result of the item which follows.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—353a. Aluminum leaf, less than ·005 millimetres in thickness; aluminum scrap. Provided, that nothing shall be deemed to be aluminum scrap except waste or refuse aluminum, fit only to be remelted: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: This item as at present in the tariff covers aluminum scrap free of duty and it is proposed herewith to widen it to cover aluminum leaf which is described in the item in technical language.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—362a. Metal parts, electroplated, for loose-leaf binders: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 37½ per cent; general tariff, 45 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: This is also a tariff board item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—370. Copper rollers, and stones, used in the printing of textile fabrics or wallpaper: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—375. Ferro-alloys:
(a) Ferro-manganese, spiegeleisen and other alloys of manganese and iron containing not more than 1 per centum, by weight, of silicon —per pound, or fraction thereof on the man-ganese contained therein: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1 cent; general tariff, 1¼ cents.

(b) Silico-manganese, silico spiegel and other alloys of manganese and iron containing more than 1 per centum, by weight, of silicon—per pound, or fraction thereof, on the manganese contained therein: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents; general tariff, 1¾ cents.

(c) Ferro-silicon, being an alloy of iron and silicon containing 8 per centum or more, by weight, of silicon and less than 60 per centum —per pound, or fraction thereof, on the silicon contained therein: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents; general tariff, 1¾ cents.

(d) Ferro-silicon, being an alloy of iron and silicon containing 60 per centum or more, by weight, of silicon and less than 90 per centum —per pound, or fraction thereof, on the silicon contained therein: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 2¾ cents.

(e) Ferro-silicon, being an alloy of iron and silicon containing 90 per centum or more, by weight, of silicon—per pound, or fraction thereof, on the silicon contained therein: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 5½ cents.

(f) All alloys used in the manufacture of steel or iron, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: There is an increase here. Will the minister explain it?

Mr. RHODES: As the committee will observe, this item has been entirely rewritten. We have not disturbed the free entry under the British preferential tariff, but in some of the items there has been an increase in the intermediate and also in the general. We have an extremely valuable and important industry at Welland called the Electro Metallurgical Company of Canada, Limited, which will derive substantial benefits by this changed wording.

Mr. RALSTON: There is no part of the tem free now across the board?

Mr. RHODES: No.

Mr. REID: I wonder if the minister can explain why in the first part of the item ferro-manganese is not designated by the percentage of manganese content. In paragraph (b) you have silico-manganese and other alloys, containing more than one per cent of silicon by weight. I am just wondering why in (a) you have not designated the amount of manganese as well as the amount of silicon.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend has me in rather a technical realm here, and I am not sure that I can enlighten him as completely as I would wish. This is an alloy with a manganese content below thirty per cent. The importation is comparatively small, just two or three thousand tons a year.

Mr. RALSTON: What does the one cent per pound specific duty amount to ad valorem?

Mr. RHODES: I am advised that on a specific basis it would work out in the neighbourhood of thirty-two to thirty-four per cent.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is this ferro-manganese used for?

Mr. RHODES: As an alloy in steel operations. I may point out to the committee also that the ore used is entirely British, and the electro-metallurgical company exports fully two-thirds of its total production to the United States.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All the imports are from Great Britain?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: What were the importations last year?

Mr. RHODES: I will have to give the individual imports under the various old items. Under 375a we imported nothing. Under 375b we imported 927 hundredweight.

Mr. SANDERSON: Where from?

Mr. RHODES: We imported 465 hundredweight from the United Kingdom and 341 hundredweight from the United States. Under 375c we imported nothing. Under 375d we imported 193 hundredweight from the United States and under 375f we imported 6,471 hundredweight of which 3,643 came from the United States and 208 from the United Kingdom.

Mr. RALSTON: Then looking at the new item 375d, having to do with ferro-silicon, the British preference is free, the intermediate rate is 2½ cents and general rate 2¾ cents whereas previously it was free, 10 per cent and 10 per cent. If ferro-silicon is put on the same basis of value as ferro-manganese—I do not know if it is—according to the minister's figures the one cent rate is equal to 32 to 34 per cent, which means that with the 2½ cent rate under the general tariff we are increasing the duty against the rest of the world by over 80 per cent in order to provide this British preference.

Mr. RHODES: The values vary very greatly. For example, on ferro-silicon it would amount to from 18 to 29 per cent in one grade, while in another grade it would go up to 38 per cent, according to the purity and the character of the alloys. For instance, in connection with spiegeleisen it figures out at 14½ per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: I was speaking of item 375d.

Mr. RHODES: Of course the whole item is new.

Mr. RALSTON: I am speaking of item 375d as it appears in the ways and means resolutions.

Mr. RHODES: That is entirely new.

Mr. RALSTON: Can the minister tell us whether the commodity covered by the new item 375d was imported in any quantity from the United States?

Mr. RHODES: I am advised that the nearest we can come to a computation of the importations under the old items would be those which came in under 375c and 375d. Under 375c we imported nothing last year, and under 375d we imported a total of 193 hundredweight.

Mr. RALSTON: On that item, of which all our importations apparently were from the United States, we have now put up a tariff barrier of between 30 and 40 per cent, where it was 10 per cent before.

Mr. RHODES: But my hon. friend will realize that we anticipate securing this importation from the British Isles.

Mr. YOUNG: At what price?

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: This is a widening of the item also.

Item agreed to.

(ii) Complete parts for repairs for the coal-cutting machines, n.o.p., enumerated in tariff item 410n, when imported prior to January 1, 1935, and when for use exclusively in repairing coal-cutting machines imported into Canada prior to January 1, 1933: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—412. Machinery, being presses for use in the printing of newspapers, of not less value by retail than $1,500 each, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts thereof, not to include saws, knives and motive power: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: This is a widening of the item to include parts.

Mr. RHODES: This is a tariff board item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—494b. Corkwood or corkbark in strips, for use in the manufacture of roller covers for textile machinery: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to move to 494b. It is a rewording for administrative purpose. Under the amendment which I now propose the item would read:

Item 494b. Cork blocks, boards, planks or slabs, produced from cork waste or granulated or ground cork, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of roller coverings for textile machinery: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. YOUNG: Who asked for this change?

Mr. RHODES: It was particularly requested by one company in Montreal which manufactures these rollers, but which has to bring cork from Spain and Portugal.

Mr. YOUNG: Can it be possible that textile industries who want high protection on their products are protesting against protection on the rollers?

Mr. RHODES: I can assure my hon. friends that the textile industry made no representation, and they knew nothing about it. I move, in amendment, as I have previously indicated.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to this item. It is intended to restore the status quo ante with respect to the previous item except with respect to jute. I beg to move:

That the rates of customs duties set opposite tariff item 537, as contained in resolution No. 3 of April 18, 1934, be amended to read as follows: British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—537a. Rovings, yarns and warps, wholly or in part of vegetable fibres, including yarn twist, cords and twines generally used for packaging and other purposes, n.o.p., not to contain silk, artificial silk nor wool: British preferential tariff, 27½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 32½ per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment. I move:

That the rates of duties of customs set opposite item 537a, as contained in resolution No. 3 of April 18, 1934, be altered to read as follows:

British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have two other amendments to move, giving a reduction to Great Britain on jute. I move:

That the following item, enumeration and rates of duties be added to the list of items indicated in resolution No. 3, of April 18, 1934, as for insertion in schedule A to the customs tariff:

Item 537d. Rovings, yarns and warps wholly of jute, not more advanced than singles, n.o.p., not to contain silk, artificial silk nor wool: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: Does jute twine come under that?

Mr. RHODES: This is jute yarns.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have a complementary amendment to move on the same subject. I move:

That the following item, enumeration and rates of duties be added to the list of items indicated in resolution No. 3 of April 18, 1934, as for insertion in schedule A to the customs tariff:

Item 537e. Rovings, yarns and warps wholly of jute, including yarn twist, cords and twines generally used for packaging and other purposes, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 27½ per cent, intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 32½ per cent.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is that an increase.

Mr. YOUNG: Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: Why the increase?

Mr. RHODES: As a result of a finding by the tariff board we increased the duty upon twine, but we made a very substantial addition to the free list in that we added to that free list jute yarns.

Mr. EULER: Were there any representations made by manufacturers of twine? We may as well be definite about it: Did Doon Twines Limited of Kitchener make representations to the effect that the making of yarn free much more than offsets the protection they have? Have any representations been made in that connection?

Mr. RHODES: One company in the constituency of the hon. member appeared before the tariff board, a company manufacturing twines and yarns. It was heard, but as my hon. friend realizes, these proposals are in strict conformity with the findings of the tariff board.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is this not a case where the raw material is reduced and the finished product receives more protection?

Mr. EULER: I think the committee should understand this, that while perhaps there is a higher duty on the twine, the yarn itself is placed on the free list, which is a very serious interference with the business of the company manufacturing twine.

Mr. RHODES: I have before me the report of the tariff board. If the committee desires I shall give a summary.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to know the amount of ad valorem duty which would have resulted from an adherence to the valuation for duty purposes which was put on jute twine by the Minister of National Revenue?

Mr. RHODES: It would require some computation to get that information, although a complete disclosure was made before the tariff board. It involves consideration of varying qualities of the commodity, and different gauges. The computation would be of considerable magnitude.

Mr. RALSTON: Would the minister get that information?

Mr. RHODES: I shall be happy to get it.

Mr. EULER: May I ask the minister whether this report of the tariff board is one which followed investigations which led to a difference of opinion between the tariff board and the Department of National Revenue? Is this a new decision of the tariff board?

Mr. RHODES: This inquiry was instituted under part I of the Tariff Board Act and has no reference to the finding to which my hon. friend refers, which arose under part II of the act.

Mr. EULER: Could the minister give me the approximate date upon which this latest recommendation or report was made? Was it subsequent to the previous investigation which led to a difference between the various authorities?

Mr. RHODES: I think I can get that for my hon. friend. Does he have reference to the time it was brought to the attention of the board or when the finding of the board was brought down?

Mr. EULER: After the investigation which led to difficulties—I think the minister knows what I refer to—was there a subsequent report?

Mr. RHODES: I am advised by the tariff expert that the two were running concurrently for some considerable time. He is unable at the moment to advise me which came before the board in the first instance. We have the dates, but not here. I can get the exact dates for my hon. friend.

Mr. EULER: May I ask the minister if he is seized of the fact—I am informed that it is a fact—that the changes which have been made give with one hand and take away with the other, so that the situation of the manufacturing firm in my constituency is really worse, and very considerably so, than it was before?

Mr. RHODES: I am informed that this manufacturer was not a seller of yarn but was manufacturing yarn for his own purposes. That company will not be prejudiced to any material extent because they have the opportunity to get yarn at the same price as any other manufacturer of twine, and they have increased protection on their twine.

Mr. EULER: I think my hon. friend is mistaken when he says that they were manufacturing yarn only for their own purposes.

Mr. RHODES: The report of the board is that they were not sellers of yarn. The report covers three pages, but I can read paragraph 6 which is particularly in point:

> The board is of the opinion that the process carried on by Doon Twines Limited of spinning yarn on to bobbins as an integral part of the process of manufacturing jute twines should not be considered as commercial production of jute yarn in Canada.

Mr. EULER: It does not state that they do not manufacture for other than their own purposes. I am almost certain that they do.

Mr. RHODES: I can give my hon. friend a little more detail from the preceding paragraph of the board's report:

> If the difference in the costs of production by Doon Twines Limited and by the Dundee jute manufacturers are equalized on jute twines then the entire process of Doon Twines Limited in the manufacture of twine from raw fibres is fully protected by the duty on twine. Doon Twines Limited manufacture no jute yarn as such and indeed appear unable to sell jute yarn to Canadian twine twisters due to the fact that the differential between the cost at which Doon Twines Limited could produce such yarn and sell it has been less than one cent under the current price of twine.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is not this one of the items about which there was a disagreement between the tariff board and the officials of the National Revenue department?

Mr. RHODES: This is not one of the items. This inquiry was instituted in the ordinary course under the Tariff Board Act. The jute case to which my hon. friend refers arose under part II, and is a different thing entirely.

Mr. SANDERSON: There was some disagreement between the board and the National Revenue department—am I right in that?

Mr. RHODES: There was a difference of opinion, no doubt.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am glad the minister says that, because the Minister of National Revenue told me there was no disagreement at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The objection I take is not to the reduction, but having given the reduction on the raw material, you turn about and give an increase on the finished product. Is that a decision of the board?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is one that I shall take some pleasure in reading up.

Mr. RHODES: It is on file.

Mr. RALSTON: I think it would be well to recall just what the situation was in regard to jute twine. Importations were received from Great Britain, and the dump duty was applied. I am informed—the minister is going to give me the figures—that the dump duty would amount to something like a duty of fifty per cent ad valorem. That duty was imposed, as I understand it, and was collected, and in October an appeal was taken to the tariff board. That appeal was heard. The tariff board decided it either late in October or early in November and ordered a refund of the duty that had been paid. Instead of a refund being made, an appeal was made to the governor in council. That appeal has been heard, was heard a month or two ago, but no decision has yet been made. May I ask the minister if a refund has yet been made to the importers of the dump duty that was imposed late last fall?

Mr. RHODES: I shall have to make inquiries of the Department of National Revenue because I have no knowledge, neither has the tariff adviser who is with me.

Mr. EULER: Is not the fact that the whole matter was referred to the courts, and I suppose pending a decision of the courts the department has withheld the return of the money?

Mr. RHODES: That is what would result, I suppose, as a matter of fact.

Mr. RALSTON: The reference to the court had to do not with the question whether the tariff board had decided the case properly, but solely with the matter of the board's jurisdiction. The real appeal was the appeal from the tariff board to the governor in council, which has been heard but not decided. That is the appeal that would determine the question whether or not the importer was entitled to a refund. Can the minister give us any idea when we may expect a decision of the governor in council on that appeal?

Mr. RHODES: I should like to confer with my colleague the Minister of Justice before I make a definite reply to my hon. friend, but my impression is that I could give an answer only following the decision of the supreme court on the stated case. I may be wrong on that. I have not been in touch with the situation during the last two or three weeks, but if my hon. friend presses for an answer I shall endeavour to get it as soon as I can after consultation with the Minister of Justice.

Mr. RALSTON: When my hon. friend is in ways and means again?

Mr. RHODES: Quite so.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand that at the same time the minister will give me the information with regard to the percentages.

Amendment agreed to.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—556. Needled hair felt, imported by manufacturers of felt carpets and carpeting, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such felt carpets and carpeting, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent and 15 cents per pound; general tariff, 10 per cent and 17½ cents per pound.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to move, Mr. Chairman. It arises purely in an administrative way in order to prevent evasion. The situation has arisen since the budget was brought down. I move to amend item 556 to read as follows:

Customs tariff—556. Needled felt of hair or of hair and wool, not coloured, impregnated with rubber solution on one side, when imported by manufacturers of felt carpets and carpeting for use exclusively in the manufacture of printed felt carpets and carpeting in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent and 15 cents per pound; general tariff, 10 per cent and 17½ cents per pound.

There is no change in the rates. It is merely a change in the wording.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have a motion which I desire to propose in consequence of a report which has been received from the tariff board since the budget was brought down, with respect to reference No. 38, and which I will lay on the table when we report to the house. The motion I move is that this item be inserted:

558b. Rovings, yarns and warps wholly of artificial silk or similar synthetic fibres produced by chemical processes, not more advanced than singles, not coloured: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Provided that in no case shall the duty be less than, per pound: British preferential tariff, 20 cents; intermediate tariff, 28 cents; general tariff, 28 cents.

It will be observed that the only change is to reduce the specific duty from 28 cents per pound to 20 cents per pound. This change is made in conformity with the findings of the tariff board.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What are the imports?

Mr. RHODES: It is not possible to segregate the imports of artificial silk yarn to show the cellulose separate from the viscose yarns. The imports of yarns under tariff item 558b for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1934, amounted to 1,912,014 pounds valued at $1,158,000. The imports under item 558d for the same period amounted to 170,188 pounds valued at $165,254.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—558f. Rovings, yarns and warps wholly of spun artificial silk or similar synthetic fibres produced by chemical processes, not coloured, imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of cut-pile fabrics, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent but not less than 28 cents per pound; general tariff, 35 per cent but not less than 28 cents per pound.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I desire also to move to insert item 569. This amendment is necessary as a result of a finding of the tariff board on hats and hoods which I will table when we report to the house this evening.

Mr. RALSTON: Will the minister give us the effect of that?

Mr. RHODES: This will provide for a duty on hats, caps, hoods and bonnets, n.o.p.; hat and bonnet crowns and hat, cap and bonnet shapes, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent, with a special item covering hats, hoods and shapes to provide for a valuation of $1 per dozen. To-day under section 43 of the Customs Act there is a valuation of $1.50 per dozen.

Mr. RALSTON: There was before the act was amended.

Mr. RHODES: There is, I am informed. We will not quarrel over the present or past tense; the fact remains that this amendment will provide that there shall be a specific duty of $1 per dozen.

Mr. RALSTON: This is the same commodity which was the subject of the so-called felt hat case before the tariff board?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Would not this be in the same category as the horticultural items?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, and I am quite willing to have it stand.

Amendment stands.

Customs tariff—597b. Harps: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. JACOBS: May I ask if this includes Jew's harps?

Mr. RHODES: That is a question of administration which I would have to refer to my colleague the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. JACOBS: Why should it be assumed that he knows more than the Minister of Finance?

Mr. RHODES: Because he is the administrative minister. However, I will take a chance and say that I do not think it includes the harp to which my hon. friend refers. If he has any representations to make upon the subject, I can assure him that I will give them most careful consideration.

Mr. JACOBS: It would be too late this year at any rate. As descendants of King David of old, I suppose we of the Jewish race ought to be thankful that King David's harps are free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—616c. Liquid rubber compound, non-alcoholic, when imported by manufacturers of sealing compounds for cans and jars, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such sealing compounds, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. EULER: There are many rubber products manufacturing concerns in this country; would the minister state if liquid rubber is included in this item?

Mr. RHODES: This is not made in Canada. It is a commodity largely used in the preserving industry for the sealing of glass containers.

Mr. EULER: I was wondering whether they made liquid rubber.

Mr. RHODES: I am informed that for sealing purposes crude rubber can be imported free while artificial rubber could not. I am informed also that that is a better commodity for the purpose.

Mr. EULER: Is this not the regular rubber of commerce?

Mr. RHODES: No, it is a synthetic rubber.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—634. (ii) Materials, when imported by manufacturers of artificial feathers, fruits, grains, leaves and flowers, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such articles, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—651. Buttons of all kinds, covered or not, and button blanks other than in the rough, n.o.p.; recognition buttons and cuff or collar buttons: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent, and per gross: British preferential tariff, 5 cents; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 5 cents.

Mr. RHODES: This is a tariff board item.

Mr. EULER: What is the change?

Mr. RHODES: There have been evasions of the tariff because of the administrative interpretation of the Department of National Revenue. The importers were bringing in what were to all intents and purposes completed buttons, except that the holes were not punched. They were called blanks and therefore came in free under the next item. As a result of a finding of the tariff board the new wording appears, and it will prevent the evasion of the tariff in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Are there any changes in the old tariff item 682? Some representations were made by the fishermen on the British Columbia coast in this regard.

Mr. RHODES: There are no changes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—651a. Buttons, and button blanks other than in the rough, of vegetable ivory: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent, and, per gross: British preferential tariff, 5 cents; intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—663d. Soya beans, when imported by manufacturers of milk foods, for human consumption, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such milk foods, in their own factories, until September 30, 1934: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. GERSHAW: These beans are used for many purposes, among others the production of artificial milk. Attempts are being made to cultivate them in Canada, around Winnipeg, and particularly in the irrigated districts in Alberta. What have been the importations?

Mr. RHODES: We have no record as to either imports or exports, nor have we any in regard to production, but we know that there is production in Canada. We propose to make these beans free until the next crop comes in. There is a considerable demand for soya beans and at the moment it cannot be supplied in Canada. This enables importation to be made until the Canadian product is available.

Mr. GERSHAW: Will the item then revert to the old rates?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. BURY: Does this item cover soya beans imported for shortening purposes, to take the place of lard?

Mr. RHODES: I do not think it would.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—685. Pantagraphs and parts thereof, including diamond points, and engraving mills, for engraving copper rollers used in printing textiles and wallpapers; blankets, blanketing and lapping imported for use exclusively by textile manufacturers and wallpaper printers: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—709. Articles and other goods, the growth, produce or manufacture of Canada, returned to the exporter thereof after having been exported without having been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means; also quicksilver flasks, and other metallic receptacles for holding liquids, oyster pails, and impact registers or recorders for use in railway cars, after having been once exported from Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: The only new portion is found in the words, "and impact registers or recorders for use in railway cars." These registers are used by paper manufacturers. They are placed in each carload lot of paper shipped long distances to the United States. The object is to record the time at which any unusual impact arises which may have damaged the paper, and enables those concerned to attribute the blame to the proper railway in consequence of the recorded time. This is an expensive article which pays a duty. Under the wording of the tariff as it stands a duty must be paid every time the recorder comes in; but hereafter, once it has come in and paid duty and the fact is recorded, it may move back and forth free of duty.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—811. Ceramic insulator cores, not further manufactured than burned and glazed, printed or decorated or not, without fittings, when imported by manufacturers of spark plugs for use exclusively in the manufacture of spark plugs, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—815. Potato starch or potato flour enumerated in tariff item 39 of the customs tariff, when imported for use as material in Canadian manufactures, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty, until July 31, 1934, per pound: British preferential tariff, ½ cent; intermediate tariff, 1 cent; general tariff, 1 cent.

Mr. RALSTON: What is the change?

Mr. RHODES: By order in council we provided for free entry of potato starch, because of a shortage in Canadian production, until October 1, 1934. Representations were made to us however that because of the new crop this year a Canadian supply would be available at the earlier date and consequently we have changed the date to July 31.

Mr. RALSTON: That is done under the provisions of the Customs Act empowering the government to permit importation free of duty?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: What is the necessity for putting it in the tariff item at all?

Mr. RHODES: This shortens the period provided for in the order in council.

Mr. RALSTON: Would it not be sufficient simply to revoke the order in council making it terminate on July 31?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, except that this was done for the purpose of giving notice to the trade.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I should like to have item 1049 stand.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—1060. Plate glass enumerated in tariff item 322, on which duty was paid at the rates of duty set opposite said item. When used in the manufacture of safety or non-shatterable glass: payable as drawback 99 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I beg to move that resolution No. 4, of April 18, 1934, be amended by striking thereout in its entirety drawback item 1060; and that schedule B to the customs tariff, as amended by resolution No. 4, aforesaid, be further amended by striking thereout drawback item 1067 and by inserting the following item, enumeration and rates of drawback of customs duties, in the said schedule B:

1067. Plate glass, polished, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when used in the manufacture of safety or non-shatterable glass, laminated or otherwise, 99 per cent.

This is really a widening of the item which appeared in the budget. The glass in the budget item was glass of a larger dimension and this enables glasses of any dimensions to be imported. The committee will perhaps be interested to know that this covers a commodity which has only recently come on the market, a shatterproof glass which will be used largely in the motor car industry. Hitherto such glass has been manufactured by a laminated process which was highly expensive, and under certain conditions the lamination was not very well done, so that the glass tended to come apart. But this is just the ordinary straight sheet of plate glass which through some secret process of annealing by electricity has imparted to it shatterproof qualities which do not detract in the slightest degree from the appearance of the glass or its visibility, and which I have had demonstrated in my office with a sheet of glass four feet long, eight inches wide and the ordinary three-eighths of an inch in thickness. I placed this sheet upon two piles of books and a man over two hundred pounds in weight stood upon it. It bent down two or three inches and when he stepped off it came right back to its original position. I placed a sheet of similar glass in a frame and dropped on it a weight of something in the neighbourhood of a pound or a pound and a half from a height of six feet, and the weight merely bounced off. I had a man take a hammer and a nail and he could not make an impression on the sheet. Finally, the only way he could make any impression on the glass was to smash it with a hammer swung with his full strength. He did not go through it; he merely shattered it into a million pieces but it is still there intact and such small particles as came off had about the same appearance as oatmeal. It is really a valuable commodity.

Mr. RALSTON: Item 1067 takes the place of 1060?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Item 1067 agreed to.

5. Resolved, that schedule C to the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, be amended by adding thereto the following item:—

1217. Smoke screen apparatus, for use on motor vehicles or on water-borne craft of all kinds.

Mr. RHODES: We found already this year three motor cars brought into Canada with this smoke screen on them and for no good purpose.

Resolution agreed to.

6. Resolved, that any enactment founded upon the foregoing resolutions to amend the customs tariff or schedules thereto shall be deemed to have come into force on the nineteenth day of April, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the foregoing resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that date, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date.

Resolution agreed to.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Income War Tax Act and to provide:—

1. That income shall include rents, royalties, reservations and other like considerations which fluctuate according to the production from or the use of the property leased or sold.

Mr. RALSTON: As I understand the matter, has an attempt not already been made to enforce a provision of this kind? If I am not mistaken I think there was a case in British Columbia.

Mr. RHODES: I am advised that this amendment has no reference to the case to which my hon. friend has referred. It is merely for the purpose of clarification and to make it competent for the department, in cases where royalties are really a portion of the income and not a portion of the principal, to apply the tax.

Paragraph agreed to.

2. That companies exempt from taxation under section four, paragraph (k) of the act shall not be exempt if they fail to file, without reasonable cause therefor, within four months from the close of their fiscal period and annual return on the form prescribed, and at the same time pay a filing fee of one hundred dollars.

Mr. RALSTON: With regard to this item, has there been some difficulty about filing returns?

Mr. RHODES: Because this class of company has not been taxable, they have not been filing returns. The department feel that they should have a record of these companies and their activities. All this proposes is that there shall be a filing fee.

Mr. RALSTON: This applies to the well known "K" companies we talk about?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Is any special form referred to in this resolution or is it the regular income tax return?

Mr. RHODES: There is a special form called P-2/4K.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): What are the K companies?

Mr. RHODES: They get the name because of the section in the act which is numbered 4 (k). That has reference to Canadian corporations with their assets in Canada but their business conducted outside Canada.

Mr. RALSTON: No; their business and assets are both outside Canada.

Mr. RHODES: That is right.

Paragraph agreed to.

3. That the exemption of $1,000 heretofore afforded a trustee accumulating income in trust for the benefit of unascertained persons or of persons with contingent interests shall be abolished.

Mr. HEAPS: Perhaps on this item I might be allowed to raise a question; although it is not strictly relevant to the point brought up in this particular item I might as well take it up now and get the opinion of the minister on a matter which I raised some time ago but apparently at the wrong time. It has to do with the question of exemptions and refers particularly to the amount allowed for exemption under the ordinary income tax. I have in mind the exemption allowed for sums donated to charitable institutions, churches and so on. I have in mind further the members of several trade unions in this country, which at the present time levy assessments upon their members to maintain the unemployed members of the unions; in some instances that levy runs as high as fifteen per cent of the wages received. While a person who donates for charitable purposes may claim exemption for that amount in making his return, those persons who, of their own free will, donate up to fifteen per cent of their wages in order to maintain the unemployed, thus keeping the unemployed off government relief, are not allowed exemption for that amount. I have had representations made to me from various trade union organizations; as much as $300 and $400 per year is given by an individual to maintain the unemployed members of the union, but he is unable to secure exemption for that amount. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the act could not be amended in some way so that men making donations such as I have referred to would be allowed credit for those donations in connection with their income tax.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend probably knows that labour organizations themselves are exempt; they do not pay any income tax. The question of the exemption of charitable bequests, donations and gifts has been very carefully considered; inasmuch as it is a species of exemption subject to abuse it has had to be very carefully administered. So far as I am aware it has been administered very strictly, and has been confined to charitable organizations. However worthy labour organizations may be—and they are worthy—I do not think the ordinary dues paid to a labour organization can be construed as being charitable donations. I do not think they fall within that class of gifts at all. I do not raise the question whether they are or are not donations or whether they are even voluntary, though in some cases they are not. I do not think you could call them charitable donations. Whether the principle ought to be enlarged to the extent of including the dues to labour unions is another matter.

Mr. HEAPS: May I point out that these are not dues at all; I am not asking for any exemption with regard to the dues paid by a member to his organization. That is an entirely different question. What I do say is that in certain instances, when we have an abnormal unemployment situation as we have had for a number of years, with a large percentage of the members of an organization out of work, the members of that organization assess themselves, of their own free will, to the extent of ten or fifteen per cent of their wages for the purpose of maintaining the unemployed members of the organization, thereby keeping them off relief. I think in such cases, though these donations can be classified as you wish, where voluntary donations are made for the purpose of maintaining unemployed members, exemptions should be allowed for the amounts so donated.

Mr. RHODES: I did not quite get the full purport of what my hon. friend said in the first instance. I had in mind more particularly the ordinary dues paid to labour organizations. My hon. friend has reference to gifts which come from labour organizations during a period of depression.

Mr. HEAPS: Not from an organization; from the individual members.

Mr. RHODES: Then from the members of the organization; we will even go that far. I suppose that might be properly termed a charitable gift, and I am prepared to look into that point. I may say very frankly that it has not been brought to my attention previously, but I shall give it very careful consideration. Further than that I cannot say at the moment.

Mr. EULER: I can remember that a good many years ago repeated representations were made in the house to the effect that there should be exemptions for such gifts as the hon. member has just mentioned, including charitable and religious donations. I think it was in 1930 that the exemption list was very greatly widened, and I am rather surprised to hear the minister say now that this exemption applies only to charitable donations. I have no doubt that the commissioner has the amendments of 1930 before him, and if my memory serves me correctly they go a good deal further than charitable purposes. I should think a great deal is in the interpretation placed upon the amendments by the department, but I am quite certain that other gifts are exempt than those purely for charitable purposes. If that is not so I should like to know where I am wrong.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. RHODES: It may be possible that the matter can be dealt with administratively. I am going to ask the commissioner of income tax to advise me as to whether that cannot be dealt with as an administrative matter.

Mr. HEAPS: Do I understand that the point raised will be taken up with the commissioner to see whether gifts of that kind can be included?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Paragraph agreed to.

4. That interest, dividends, rents, royalties, annuities and other periodical payments received by executors and administrators of a deceased person shall be apportioned as if accruing from day to day and that portion accrued to the date of death shall be taxed as income of the deceased.

Paragraph agreed to.

5. That the amounts paid by an estate or trust for the upkeep, maintenance and taxes of any property which under the terms of the will or trust in question are required to be maintained for the use of life beneficiaries shall be taxable as income of such beneficiaries.

Paragraph agreed to.

6. That where any of the shares of a personal corporation are held by a non-resident shareholder, the company shall be taxable at the corporate rates of tax on such shareholder's proportionate interest in the income of the personal corporation.

Paragraph agreed to.

7. That income from assets transferred directly or indirectly by a taxpayer to minors shall continue to be taxed as the income of the taxpayer transferring the assets.

Paragraph agreed to.

8. That any enactment founded on this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1933 taxation period and to be applicable thereto and to fiscal periods ending therein, and to all subsequent periods.

Mr. RALSTON: Is this the usual provision?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: That means it dates back to when?

Mr. RHODES: It applies to the income of 1933, which is to be assessed.

Mr. RALSTON: The income for the period for which returns already have been made?

Mr. RHODES: Made on April 30.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know what the previous practice has been, but I submit that this is wrong.

Mr. RHODES: I am advised that this is done every year.

Mr. RALSTON: Then let us stop it now. I think the minister will agree that making a retroactive assessment like this is wrong. I had not picked out any particular item, but I notice paragraph 5:

That the amounts paid by an estate or trust for the upkeep, maintenance and taxes of any property which under the terms of the will or trust in question are required to be maintained for the use of life beneficiaries shall be taxable as income of such beneficiaries.

A life beneficiary gets a property, and one of the provisions of the will is that the property shall be maintained. The cost of maintaining that property is taxable as income. The taxpayer has already made his return, not assuming that he would have to pay taxes on that amount. He now has to amend his return for last year and be charged income tax. I mention that, because although I do not know an actual case in which it has occurred I can see the possibility of hardship being created in connection with it. In the same way, the exemption of $1,000 is heretofore afforded the trustee, who has already made the return. He has administered the estate, and finds that the exemption has gone, and has gone for the previous year for which he has already made the return. It is the question of retroactive legislation to which I object.

Mr. RHODES: On principle, I agree with the hon. member. Personally I have felt its effect very fully, because on one occasion I have in mind I had to go to the bank and borrow money wherewith to pay my income tax. A portion of that income tax was paid upon dividends received from a security which had become absolutely worthless, and which never will be worth a cent. These hardships arise. The retroactive feature about which my hon. friend has complained has been in the act since its inception, something like eighteen years, if my memory serves me correctly. It is bad enough for a man to have to pay income tax if he has made provision for it in the course of the year, but it is very much worse to be called upon unexpectedly to pay an enhanced income tax upon an income which has perhaps been spent. That, however, is an objection which can be lodged against our income tax in any year. Whether or not we can get a system which will enable us to get away from that is a matter open to question. If we can, it certainly will have to be done in years when we have a more buoyant treasury than we have to-day, when we are called upon to retain every dollar we can get.

Mr. RALSTON: Can the minister give any estimate as to what these resolutions will bring in for the year 1933?

Mr. RHODES: No, I am advised that we have no estimate.

Mr. RALSTON: I protested two years ago, along with other hon. members some of whom I believe sat behind the minister, against making retroactive the reduction of the minimum income which was taxable. I contended it was wrong at that time, and I say so now. I do not think the fact that we did it two years ago or five years ago makes it any sounder to-day. I protest vigorously against his practice which has grown up of amending the income tax laws or, for that matter, any other laws, and making their effect retroactive. I do not think it is good legislation, I do not think it is good policy, and I do not think it can be justified on the ground of revenue. If we are going to make a special levy, let us make it, but do not make it under the income tax act when in fact it is really the confiscation of the property of the taxpayer.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Act, being chapter sixty of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, and amendments thereto, and to provide:—

1. That the excise duty on malt be increased as follows:—

(a) On screened malt (malt from which the coomings have been removed), manufactured in Canada subject to excise regulations with respect to absorption of moisture in warehouse, from three cents per pound to seven and one-half cents per pound;

(b) On malt imported into Canada and warehoused, from three cents per pound to seven and one-half cents per pound;

(c) On malt imported into Canada, crushed or ground, from five cents per pound to nine and one-half cents per pound; thereby consolidating as a single duty of excise the duties of excise now imposed upon malt used in the brewing of beer and the gallonage tax imposed under the Special War Revenue Act at the rate of twelve and one-half cents per gallon upon the beer itself, the said gallonage tax to be repealed by an amendment to the Special War Revenue Act.

All duty-paid malt on hand in any premises subject to excise on the day this act comes into force to be subject to the difference between the rate already paid and that hereby imposed.

Mr. RHODES: I may as well deal with the whole schedule at this time, and announce the amendments by way of reductions. The committee is aware, of course, that this is a new method of taxation. Hitherto we have taxed in two ways. First, we had the tax upon malt, and then the gallonage tax. Now we propose to collect one tax upon malt, because we believe that will be the more convenient way of collecting the tax, and a method of taxation which provides less opportunity for evasion. The tax as originally proposed was 7½ cents per pound. The officials of the department were of the opinion that on the whole it was comparable to the combined two taxes which were taken under the previous form of taxation. But I do not think they made quite sufficient allowance for the wastage, which amounts to something like fifteen per cent. Furthermore, we collect the tax at once, whereas under the old method of taxation it would be deferred for months until, when the beer was consumed, the gallonage tax could be imposed. So as not to overtax the commodity it is now proposed that the tax should be reduced to six cents per pound, which is a substantial reduction. We have also in mind that so far as our taxation methods can do so we should encourage the use of lighter rather than heavier beverages. We feel that we would like to try it out for at least a year, and it is our belief that as a result of this lowering of the excise duty, which should make possible the five cent glass of beer, the increased consumption will bring about a condition whereby the revenue will not suffer. Let us hope that the people who produce this additional amount of revenue will not suffer by virtue of using the lighter rather than the heavier beverage.

Mr. GEARY: Could the minister state definitely that this reduction to six cents does effect a substantial reduction in the gross taxation to which the article was subject before?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: I should like the minister to make the paragraph plain, because naturally a great many people are interested in this matter.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. RHODES: The old tax amounted to 17·75 cents per gallon of beer. The new tax will be 14 cents, making a reduction of 3·75 cents per gallon. I therefore move:

That in paragraph (a) of resolution No. 1 the words "six cents per pound" be substituted for the words "seven and one-half cents per pound," and that in paragraph (b) the words "six cents per pound" be substituted for the words "seven and one-half cents per pound," and that in paragraph (c) the words "eight cents per pound" be substituted for the words "nine and one-half cents per pound."

Mr. JACOBS: Do I now understand we are changing the system and that we are now taxing beer by the pound instead of by the gallon?

Mr. RHODES: We are taxing malt by the pound, from which beer is made, and we are removing entirely the gallonage tax.

Mr. EULER: I quite agree with the minister that the change he has made will be a more convenient method of collecting the tax, so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned. I am afraid I cannot quite agree with him, with the information I have before me, that it will make a very substantial reduction in the price of the beer. The figures I have indicate that under the present method of taxation the tax per gallon of beer or ale works out at 19·7 cents per gallon. With the proposed tax as the minister had it at first of 7½ cents—

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend must make a reduction there to cover wastage. That is why I used the figure 17·75.

Mr. EULER: But I understand that under the present method there is no allowance made for wastage.

Mr. RHODES: There will not be under the new method.

Mr. EULER: Exactly. There was no allowance made for wastage, and that was one of the main objections made by the brewers.

Mr. RHODES: I want my hon. friend to have the record right. The two figures I gave showing a reduction of 3¾ cents per gallon took cognizance of wastage.

Mr. EULER: The point I rose to make really was this. The minister expressed the hope that this would reduce the cost of beer. I suppose the inference was that it would lead to increased consumption, and that by reason of increased consumption the revenues would be just as great as if not greater than they otherwise would be. The reduction he announces to-night as compared with that announced when the budget was brought down represents about 3½ cents a gallon, and I am very much afraid that 3½ cents a gallon will hardly make much of a difference.

Mr. RHODES: I am told that it means a five cent glass of beer.

Mr. EULER: I was merely going to express a certain amount of doubt whether a reduction of 3½ cents a gallon would be of material help in that direction.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend must bear in mind that we consume in Canada about forty million gallons, so it amounts to a very substantial reduction.

Mr. EULER: I admit that I do not know very much about it. If the man who sells the beer is going to reduce the price from ten to five cents, he is likely going to cut down the size of the glass. One would not think that 3½ cents a gallon would make much difference in the price of a glass.

There is one other point. The minister said he hoped that this would perhaps lead to the consumption of beer and drinks of that sort rather than the consumption of hard liquor. This point has been drawn to my attention, and I think it is true. Even to-day you are putting a higher tax on beer than you put on native wine. I am not sure that that should be done. Beer also is a native production, and I cannot see any good reason why this popular drink, perhaps much more popular than native wine, should be taxed higher than native wine.

Mr. MITCHELL: I understood the minister to say that the tax on malt was six cents a pound, but in another section I see it is 17 cents a pound.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is thinking of malt syrup. I have an amendment to that section.

Mr. MITCHELL: I know what I am talking about when I talk about malt syrup. A reduction in that tax is reducing the cost to the individual who wants to brew his own beer.

Paragraph agreed to.

2. (a) That the existing duty imposed on beer or any fermented beverage made in imitation thereof, brewed in whole or in part from any other substance than malt, be increased from fifteen cents per gallon to twenty-five cents per gallon, thereby maintaining the differential rate of duty between beer brewed by the use of malt and beer brewed by the use of other substances and combining with the said excise duty the gallonage tax imposed upon such liquor under the Special War Revenue Act.

(b) That an excise duty be imposed on all beer imported into Canada and taken out of bond for consumption at the rate of twelve and one-half cents per gallon, to replace the excise tax imposed at the same rate under the Special War Revenue Act.

(c) That an excise duty be levied upon all beer brewed from duty-paid malt in storage at the time of the coming into force of this act at the rate of ten cents per gallon.

Mr. RHODES: I move that paragraph 2 be amended by substituting the word "twenty-two" for "twenty-five" in line 3 of paragraph (a), and by substituting the words "seven" for the words "twelve and one-half" in paragraph (b), and by substituting the word "seven" for the word "ten" in paragraph (c).

Amendment agreed to.

Paragraph as amended agreed to.

3. That an excise duty be levied upon all unfermented wort (sweet wort) suitable for the brewing of beer, in storage and unsold at the coming into force of this act, at the rate of ten cents per gallon, thereby equalizing the duty to be levied upon such sweet wort with the duty to be levied upon the malt entering into the production of sweet wort produced after the coming into force of the increased duty on malt hereby proposed; the tax imposed upon such wort under the Special War Revenue Act to be repealed.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to this resolution, Mr. Chairman, that the word "seven" be substituted for the word "ten" in line 3. That makes it seven cents a gallon instead of ten cents, a reduction of three cents per gallon.

Amendment agreed to.

Paragraph as amended agreed to.

4. That excise duties be levied on all malt syrup suitable for the brewing of beer at the following rates:

(a) When manufactured or produced in Canada prior to the coming into force of this act, per pound twenty cents;

(b) When manufactured or produced in Canada after the coming into force of this act, per pound seventeen cents;

(c) When imported into Canada or taken out of warehouse after the coming into force of this act, per pound twenty cents;

the above duties to replace the existing tax imposed by the Special War Revenue Act at the rate of twenty cents per pound, the reduction under (b) being to compensate for the increased duty on malt which enters into the production of such syrup.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to substitute the following for paragraph (a):

On hand and unsold on the first day of July, 1934, per pound 13 cents.

And to substitute in paragraph (b) the word "ten" for the word "seventeen"; and in paragraph (c) the word "sixteen" for the word "twenty". That makes it sixteen cents per pound instead of twenty. Hon. gentlemen will see that by the amendment to paragraph (b) there is a reduction of about fifty per cent.

Mr. EULER: The minister speaks of a reduction of fifty per cent. Does he mean a reduction as compared with the tax originally proposed in this budget or as compared with the tax last year?

Mr. RHODES: The tax was 20 cents last year. The budget proposals made it 17 cents, and we are now reducing it to 10 cents.

Amendment agreed to.

Paragraph as amended agreed to.

5. That any enactment founded on this resolution shall come into force on the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four.

Mr. RALSTON: Why not make the reductions retroactive as well as the taxes?

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, retroactive on the beer we have consumed.

Paragraph agreed to.

Mr. McINTOSH: With reference to resolution No. 1 amending the Excise Act and providing that the excise duty on malt be increased, the tax as brought down was 7½ cents.

Mr. RHODES: It has been reduced to six cents.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was waiting for this resolution to come up, but unfortunately I was a little late coming in. I should like to be allowed to put on record the view of the Star Brewing Company, Limited, of North Battleford in regard to this excise tax on beer. The statement they make is as follows:

Proposed method of collecting excise tax on beer satisfactory but rate too high. Under proposed arrangement all taxes on beer are collected five to six months before beer is sold at practically the old rate. Brewers anxious to reduce beer price by passing reduction in taxation on to consumer. Five cents tax per pound on malt instead of seven and a half would make this possible. Reduced beer price would bring increased sales. Increased sales would mean increased employment, increased actual revenue on malt and in duty on hops.

That is the viewpoint of the Star Brewing Company, Limited, of North Battleford. The minister has made a change in the duty but not the change which this company desires. I wished to put on record their statement in the matter and to ask the minister if he has done all that he can with respect to meeting their viewpoint.

Mr. RHODES: Representations were made to us by the brewers' association of Ontario, and the lowest figure they suggested was five and a half cents. After conference with the officials of the department, I came to the conclusion they would not be overmodest in their request and that when we had placed the figure at six cents we had gone about as low as we could go with safety. We felt that we were meeting the wishes of the brewers as nearly as possible. What we had in mind was the desire to reduce the tax so that a man could get a five cent glass of beer and I believe that is what will happen under these taxation proposals.

Mr. McINTOSH: The same company makes the statement that the proposed change in taxation is of no value and under it practically no reduction takes place. They state that home brewing is made profitable by high taxation and that much revenue is lost; that low taxation would cut out the home brewer and assist in increasing the revenue from legally made beer.

Mr. RHODES: There is a reduction and I would be interested in getting the reaction of that company to the new proposals.

Mr. MITCHELL: I object in a humorous way to the observations just made. We should not be preventing people from making their own beer. Many who come from the older countries of Europe have their own recipes and I think they are entitled to just as much consideration as the brewers. This is why I feel more or less gratified at the reduction in the tax to those who brew their own beer.

Resolution agreed to.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

1. Resolved, that the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter thirty-nine of the acts of 1929, chapter thirteen of the acts of 1930 (first session), chapter three of the acts of 1930 (second session), chapter thirty of the acts of 1931, and chapters six and thirty-seven of the acts of 1932-33, be further amended by striking thereout paragraph (j) of subsection (1) of section 2 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:—

(j) "proof," "proof spirit" or "proof spirits," means any spirit having the strength of proof by Sikes' hydrometer, that is, spirit which at the temperature of fifty-one degrees Fahrenheit weighs exactly twelve-thirteenths of the weight of an equal measure of distilled water at the same temperature.

Mr. RHODES: This is purely an administrative change, the purpose being to provide a more precise and accurately worded definition of proof, proof spirit and proof spirits. This is in conformity with representations made by the Department of National Revenue.

Resolution agreed to.

2. Resolved, that the aforesaid customs tariff be further amended by adding to section 5 thereof the following subsection:—

(5) In computing the ad valorem rate of duty on tea purchased in bond in the United Kingdom, the value for duty shall not include the amount of the customs duty payable on tea for consumption in the United Kingdom.

Mr. RHODES: This is restoring an old section. It has the effect of lowering the duty upon tea.

Mr. RALSTON: Is it correctly worded? It states "in computing the ad valorem rate of duty," but the rate of duty does not need to be computed.

Mr. RHODES: It is to relieve the Canadian purchasers of tea from the payment of what amounts to a double duty.

Mr. RALSTON: It says, "in computing the ad valorem rate," but that rate is fixed; it should be, "in computing the ad valorem duty."

Mr. RHODES: It appeared in the tariff until 1931 at which time it was dropped because for some years there had been no customs duty on tea entering the United Kingdom. The provision had become meaningless but subsequently a duty was placed on tea by the United Kingdom and unless this amendment went through we would be placing a tax upon a tax.

Mr. RALSTON: My only point is in connection with the wording of the resolution. I do not think it carries out what you suggest.

Mr. RHODES: It is the same as the original section.

Mr. RALSTON: As I understand it, the ad valorem rate of duty is fixed.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend may be right, as I took this without scrutinizing it with any great care. I assumed that the Department of National Revenue knew its own business, but perhaps my hon. friend is right.

Mr. EULER: Should it not be, "in computing the duty"?

Mr. RALSTON: There may be a specific duty.

Mr. RHODES: I move that the words "rate of" be struck out of the first line of subsection 5.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend The Special War Revenue Act, chapter one hundred and seventy-nine of the revised statutes of 1927, and amendments thereto, and to provide as follows:—

1. That the excise tax imposed by section eighty and schedule II of the said act on the following items be repealed, namely:—

Ale, beer, porter and stout;

Unfermented wort (sweet wort) suitable for the brewing of beer (as imposed by section twenty-seven of chapter fifty of the statutes of 1932-33);

Malt syrup, or malt syrup powder, extracts of malt, fluid or not, or any other malt product suitable for the brewing of beer (as imposed by said section twenty-seven).

(To be replaced by excise duties.)

Paragraph agreed to.

2. That said schedule II, as enacted by section twenty-seven of chapter fifty of the statutes of 1932-33, be further amended by striking thereout items (i) and (ii) and substituting the following:—

(i) Materials enumerated in customs tariff items 134, 135, 135 (a), 135 (b), 139 (except glucose and grape sugar), 140 (except molasses); invert sugar and syrup, 1 cent per pound;

(ii) Glucose and grape sugar (except when for use exclusively in the manufacture of leather and artificial silk), ½ cent per pound.

Mr. RALSTON: Could the minister tell us how much was collected under item (i)?

Mr. RHODES: I am informed that the figures are not separated. The total amount received last year was something over $14,000,000.

Mr. RALSTON: That is when the rates were two cents and one cent per pound?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Could the minister give a rough estimate of what proportion was collected under the two cent rate?

Mr. RHODES: It is not segregated and I am told by the officials that they could not even make an estimate.

Mr. RALSTON: Would it not be possible for us to get an estimate of how much was collected from the householder?

Mr. RHODES: Sugar is used very largely in industry, and it is not possible to make a computation.

Mr. RALSTON: What is sugar used for under (ii)?

Mr. RHODES: Glucose and grape sugar take the place of sugar in many manufacturing industries. Confectioners use a considerable quantity.

Mr. RALSTON: There must be some assessment in the department showing the quantity on which the 2 cents was collected.

Mr. RHODES: I can get that figure.

Mr. RALSTON: That is what I want.

Mr. RHODES: I understood my hon. friend to ask whether, out of the two cent rate, we could allocate the amount used as domestic sugar and the amount used in industry.

Mr. RALSTON: Can the minister give me the information now?

Mr. RHODES: I will try to get it before we rise.

Mr. GERSHAW: In view of the fact that a great quantity of home grown sugar is used, has the minister been requested to remove the one cent duty altogther from sugar made from home grown material?

Mr. RHODES: I think it is safe to take it for granted that representations have been made with respect not only to this but to every other form of taxation. That is as regular as the rising and the setting of the sun, and I hope my hon. friend will not take that answer as levity. I have no doubt representations have been made but I have no particular ones in mind at the moment.

Paragraph agreed to.

3. That schedule III to the said act, being the list of articles exempted from the consumption or sales tax, as enacted by section twenty-eight of chapter fifty of the statutes of 1932-33, be amended as follows:

(a) by deleting the words "when produced by any one manufacturer or producer to the value of not more than three thousand dollars in any one calendar year" where they appear after the words "bakers' cake and pies" at the end of the second paragraph of said schedule and by substituting the words "not to include biscuits, cookies or other similar articles";

(b) by adding to the said schedule the following:

Sap spouts and sap buckets, evaporators and complete parts therefor, when for use exclusively in the production of maple syrup;

Milk albumen, when for use exclusively in the production of animal or poultry feeds.

Paragraph agreed to.

4. That schedule V to the said act, as enacted by section thirty of chapter fifty of the statutes of 1932-33, containing list of exemptions from special excise tax imposed by section eighty-eight of the said act, as enacted by section twelve of chapter fifty-four of the statutes of 1932, be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Articles enumerated in customs tariff item 352 (a)."

Paragraph agreed to.

5. That subsection one of section seventy of the said act, as enacted by section ten of chapter fifty of the statutes of 1932-33, be repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

70. (1) No postal note shall be issued under the provisions of the Post Office Act unless there is affixed thereto a postage stamp of the value of:

(i) one cent if the amount of money for which postal note is issued is not more than one dollar;

(ii) three cents if the amount of money for which the postal note is issued exceeds one dollar; to be paid for by the purchaser of the note.

Mr. VENIOT: Is the minister aware that no postage stamps are affixed to postal notes? The war tax is collected by the printing in the corner of words indicating that the tax is paid, but no stamp is affixed.

Mr. RHODES: I got this wording from the Post Office Department.

Mr. VENIOT: I looked up the act just now and was surprised at the discovery that no stamp is affixed at all; it is printed on the corner.

Mr. RHODES: Might not that be considered as the affixing of a stamp? My hon. friend knows more about it than I do, but I took the views of the Post Office Department. I shall be glad to look into the point.

Mr. VENIOT: It would be just as well for the minister to look into it.

Mr. RALSTON: How much will be collected under this item?

Mr. VENIOT: Last year about seven million notes were issued?

Mr. RHODES: It is not a large amount, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $150,000.

Mr. VENIOT: More than that. Last year three cents was collected on every postal note, and if I mistake not there were over seven million postal notes issued, so that it would be about $250,000. Why not make the postal note entirely exempt from the tax up to $3? It is the poor man's note, and I think it should be exempt. Let money orders pay the war tax, but I suggest that postal notes be exempt to the extent I propose.

Mr. RHODES: I shall be glad to consider the suggestion. While however the tax seems trivial it runs into a substantial sum of money. I have known of instances where, the tax on cheques not being applicable above $5, a man of considerable means was at pains to write three cheques of $5 each rather than one cheque for $15, thus saving a few cents in taxation. There is always that temptation and we think it preferable to grade the tax. After all, one cent on a postal note is not a very heavy tax and on the whole cannot be regarded as an undue burden.

Paragraph agreed to.

6. That subsection two of section seventy-seven A, as enacted by section twelve of chapter fifty of the statutes of 1932-33, be repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

77A. (2) Except as hereinafter provided, every manufacturer and every importer of cigarette paper tubes shall affix to every package of cigarette paper tubes manufactured by him or imported by him into Canada, an excise stamp of the value of three cents for each one hundred cigarette paper tubes or fraction of one hundred cigarette paper tubes contained in such package.

Paragraph agreed to.

7. That subsection one of section eighty-three of the said act be amended by repealing paragraph (b) and substituting the following:

(b) a tax of seventy-five cents per gallon on champagne and all other sparkling wines.

Mr. RALSTON: On the basis of last year's collections how much does the minister expect to lose by this reduction?

Mr. RHODES: I am not in a position to give my hon. friend amounts, but I may say that I expect to gain by this because the tax of $1.50 as it stood before was too high and the sales were negligible. It is felt now by this reduced impost we shall collect more money than we did when the rate was double the amount.

Mr. RALSTON: What was the amount collected last year?

Mr. RHODES: Last year, $13,000 gross.

Paragraph agreed to.

8. That section eighty-eight of the said act, as enacted by section twelve of chapter fifty-four of the statutes of 1932, be amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

Provided, further, that the said tax be at the rate of one and one-half per cent on all goods imported into Canada entitled to the benefit of the British preferential tariff or any lower tariff.

Mr. RALSTON: What was the total amount of three per cent excise tax as levied on these goods?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend wishes to know the total amount raised by the three per cent excise tax in its full application?

Mr. RALSTON: On British preference goods.

Mr. RHODES: The total amount collected last year on all goods was, in round figures, $14,000,000. I am speaking from memory but, I think, accurately. The amount collected on British preference goods was $3,000,000. Therefore on the basis of this computation we shall reduce the revenue by $1,500,000.

Mr. RALSTON: I think I would have left out the postal notes altogether.

Paragraph agreed to.

9. That there shall be imposed, levied and collected a tax of ten per centum on the value of gold deposited for sale at the Royal Canadian Mint, such value to be an amount calculated under regulations to be made by the governor in council on the basis of the sale price of gold in the world market converted into Canadian currency at the prevailing rates of exchange, the amount of the tax to be deducted from the value so determined before final settlement is made by the Mint with the depositor.

Mr. RHODES: In conformity with the announcement made by the Prime Minister as to amendments to be made to this tax I propose to move an amendment to resolution No. 9. Inasmuch as it is now five minutes to eleven o'clock and I should like to table the findings of the tariff board before the house adjourns, I might just give notice of this so that it will appear in the votes and proceedings together with the other amendments in order that hon. members may before the next sitting have cognizance of all the amendments. I will hand to the chairman so that they will appear in the votes and proceedings, amendments to resolutions Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14.

Mr. VENIOT: To have the record correct as to postal notes, I have the exact number issued for the year ending March 31, 1933. It is 5,963,807.

Progress reported.

TARIFF BOARD REPORTS

Mr. RHODES: While we were in committee of ways and means I gave notice of certain amendments to tariff resolutions in consequence of reports of the tariff board. With the consent of the house I desire now to lay on the table reports of the tariff board on nursery stock, hats and hoods, and cellulose acetate yarns.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 30, 1934

The house met at three o'clock.

BERSIMIS-SEPT ISLES POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. CASGRAIN:

Has the Postmaster General received any requests or petitions from citizens of the north shore of the St. Lawrence river with respect to the establishment of a bi-weekly postal service, with the use of horses, between Bersimis and Sept Isles, also with respect to the establishment of an air mail service with Matane, on the south shore, as a starting point, which would provide for the transportation of first class mail between Matane and the important communities on the north shore, from Godbout to Natashquan?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADJOURNMENT IN HONOUR OF THE KING'S BIRTHDAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the hon. member leading the government if he can advise the house as to whether or not there will be recognition of the King's birthday by this parliament? The birthday comes on Sunday, but there has been some rumour to the effect that the house might not sit on Monday. Is the hon. member in a position to advise the house?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): The Prime Minister will be in his place to-morrow, at which time he will answer the question. I have not heard a discussion of the matter.

MARKETING ACT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): It was the intention to bring on the marketing bill to-day for third reading, but last night an hon. member sitting opposite said he had not received a copy of the reprint. I have not one before me, but if there is any desire that the matter be delayed for another day or two, I have no objection.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Looking into Hansard I observe that the hon. member indicated other measures to be taken up before the marketing bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The others will not take much time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I doubt if hon. members have had an opportunity to read the revised marketing bill. I think it had better stand for a day at least.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will let it stand.

INQUIRIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. 84, to amend the Inquiries Act.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

DOMINION COMPANIES ACT

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 29, consideration in committee of Bill No. 64, respecting dominion companies—Mr. Cahan—Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

On section 12—Different classes of shares.

Mr. BUTCHER: I would ask the minister whether he does not think it would be advisable to reduce the number of securities provided for in this section. Subsection 1 reads in part as follows:

> The letters patent or supplementary letters patent of a company may provide for shares of more than one class and for any preferred, deferred or other special rights, restrictions, conditions or limitations attaching to any class of shares;

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that our securities system might be very much simplified, and I am wondering if we could not reduce the number of securities. The vast number that we now have lead only to confusion and mystification, in my opinion. We have bonds and debentures, preferred shares, common stock, class A, class B, and perhaps other classes of preferred and deferred shares, also cumulative and non-cumulative, voting and non-voting shares, and sometimes in different series, and the directors have the right to fix before the issuance of the securities the designation, the rights, the restrictions, and the limitations and conditions attaching to each series. It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that all this kind of thing must lead to confusion in the minds of investors, the majority of whom are perhaps not well versed in the exact meaning of these terms.

It also seems to me that it is the less reliable companies that desire to avail themselves of this great variety of securities, and it has occurred to me that it would be possible to reduce this number so that whatever classes of securities are offered for sale might be clearly understood by the investing public. I may be mistaken but in my view we could probably get along very well with only three or four different classes of securities, say bonds and debentures, one class of preferred stock and one class of common stock.

It also seems to me that it should be possible to have the nomenclature of securities very much simplified, and perhaps provide a definition in the act as to the exact meaning of each particular class, so that the person who buys a bond may know exactly under all circumstances what that bond covers. Perhaps it should be secured upon the real estate and other physical assets of the corporation. And the same with regard to debentures, and precisely the same with regard to preferred and common stocks. I would suggest that something of that sort might be arranged by the minister. I have no intention of moving any amendment but I should like to hear the minister's opinion of my suggestion.

Mr. CAHAN: I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. member for Last Mountain. He has also discussed his proposition with me outside of this house. I think, however, it is very difficult indeed for this house to reform the whole of the business methods of the civilized world. There is not a country I know of, especially an English-speaking or French-speaking country, in which these various classes of securities are not issued.

With regard to the issue of securities it is I think quite impossible to define by statute what specific property a bond or a debenture may cover. In the one case it may cover only real estate; in other cases it may cover real and personal property. In the one case it may be issued under certain conditions with regard to redemption, and in other cases it may have other qualifications. We are but a small part of the commercial world and therefore if our companies are to secure the funds necessary for their legitimate operations they must be in a position to issue securities in which the investing public are accustomed to deal. I doubt very much indeed whether apart from mining shares, which are dealt with on a different basis throughout the world from the shares of ordinary commercial and industrial companies, there is really any misunderstanding on the part of the investing public as to the nature of the securities which they are purchasing.

In this statute we have provided that no sale of any shares may be made by or on behalf of a company to any person in Canada or elsewhere until the prospective purchaser has received from the company or its underwriters a prospectus setting forth every particular relating to that security. But in my experience no prospectus issued in the past has been the sole basis of an application for shares. I notice in the city of Montreal, for instance, that shares to the amount of millions have been taken up within twenty-four hours when all the applicants themselves certainly did not receive a prospectus or even read a prospectus. The ordinary course in such a city is that one who desires to invest will ring up on the telephone an investment broker in whom he has confidence and will ask him. "How do you look upon this proposed issue? Do you think it a safe investment?" And on the information then given hundreds and even thousands of men make applications for securities and complete their investments. They trust to the judgment of those who study these prospectuses, and who have available in addition experts who make inquiries and thereby satisfy their principals as to the nature and value of the proposed investment.

In the case of this bill we have gone further than any other act of which I have cognizance. We have provided that no application for a company's shares can be accepted unless a prospectus has been placed in the hands of the applicant. It is then his option whether or not he reads it. Further, we have made the company which issues the prospectus liable with respect to any misrepresentation made therein, whether the misrepresentation induces an applicant to subscribe or whether he subscribes without regard to the contents of such prospectus. We have gone very far indeed.

We are in this dilemma. While the government, I think with the approval of the majority of the committee, has endeavoured by this bill to effect very radical reforms, we must proceed somewhat slowly because there are nine provincial legislatures and under the judicial decisions to date, each of those legislatures is authorized to legislate for the incorporation of companies. Each and every one of the nine provinces has an act in force to-day under which these various classes of shares are authorized. We cannot reform the whole business community by one bill such as this but we have gone as far as we now think it possible to go to attain the end which we have in view. I have my own views as to the legislative jurisdiction of the various provinces but perhaps hon. members who are lawyers will not agree with them. My own view is that this parliament might pass an act preventing a provincial company from entering into either interprovincial or international trade and business. But that is not the opinion which prevails throughout the country. Some day I trust that that issue will be decided by the highest court in the land. In the present bill we have attempted to prohibit or control those company methods which have proved more or less inimical to the public interest, and I think we might well leave it to a succeeding parliament to decide in the future whether there are the other practical evils which might be prohibited or controlled.

Since this bill has been proposed and has received publicity, I am confident that tens of applications have been made to the provinces rather than to the office of the Secretary of State for incorporation. If I did not misunderstand an hon. member, he told me to-day that his firm had placed seven applications for incorporation with the provincial governments rather than apply to the Secretary of State knowing, as he suggested, that I would not grant him all the privileges and powers which he desired and which would be granted freely under one or other of the nine provincial companies acts. I am anxious to go with the committee as far as possible as this is not a party issue, but I suggest to the hon. member for Last Mountain that his proposal to wipe out these various classes of securities would be inimical to the public interest and would not attain the end which he has in view.

I should like to speak frankly to the committee. When conducting a law business in the city of Montreal in times past, I have applied to the Department of the Secretary of State for certain powers and privileges and my application has been refused by the Under Secretary. Within twenty-four hours I have by a night cable to London secured the powers which I desired under the English companies act. I thus organized a company through a firm of solicitors in London and within a week had an office in Canada from which was conducted the very business which the Under Secretary of State refused my clients the power to do under our Companies Act. If you propose to legislate against English, French or American Companies doing business in this country under the authority of their several charters, you create at once a very difficult situation because by international comity we are bound to recognize the status of these foreign corporations. Therefore, I suggest that we remedy such evils as we can at the present time and live in reasonable expectation that the amendments and reforms incorporated in this bill will be adopted by the several legislatures of Canada and that we proceed step by step to solve the problems of company organization which now confront us and thus secure those reforms which the conditions of commercial and industrial life in this country now render reasonably necessary. I trust the hon. gentleman will not press too far the suggestion which he has made.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I find myself in great agreement with the ideals presented by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher), but like the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) I have been able to visualize the difficulties which lie ahead before we arrive at that utopia which he and I would like to see brought about in this country. There is no doubt that grave abuses have grown up through the ingenuity, the brains and the ability of great lawyers and great financial men in this country, but I think the reading of the history of joint stock companies will indicate that the greatest evolution in company law has not developed in Canada. My reading indicates that England was the home of the joint stock company and that most of the evolution has come from that jurisdiction. Perhaps as much evolution in company law has occurred in the United States of America and Canada has naturally become engulfed in this evolution.

I think the Secretary of State has gone a very substantial distance in endeavouring to take care of some of the abuses which have developed in Canada. With the present bill we are taking a distinct step forward, but until there is an amendment to the British North America Act, until there is a community of interest between provincial and federal jurisdiction and we get uniformity in the laws of the country, I do not think we can develop the idea expressed by the hon. member except step by step, leading the way. I think it was a misfortune—that may be too strong a term to use, but I think it is a distinct disadvantage at all events—that the decisions of the courts of the country have given joint jurisdiction, or rather, I should say, that there is jurisdiction both federally and provincially in relation to companies. If there is one sphere of jurisprudence that should be centralized it is that in connection with the creation and the working of joint stock companies. Unfortunately the decisions of the law courts are against that theory; and unless we can, by conference, by agreement with the provinces, arrive at uniformity in legislation I do not think there is very much more that can be done at the moment in respect of the abuses, which are really well known in Canada, in relation to the issue of securities by joint stock companies.

I think that the Secretary of State, and any government that is in power in Canada in the years that are to follow, ought to use his and its best endeavours to induce the provinces to agree on uniform company law, since not one of them is willing to give up its jurisdiction over the subject matter. If that could be attained, by conference, by agreement, by good will, the investing public of Canada might be protected against being exploited as it has been in the past.

On the whole, I think the bill before the house is a distinct step forward, though only a step. I am supporting the provisions of the bill on that ground, as being a distinct advance in protecting the public even from themselves. I should like myself to see the whole system simplified. I must say I have been puzzled many times by the ingenuity of men in evolving the schemes that have been evolved for the issue of securities in Canada; I am being educated every year into something new. The general public, the layman, the ordinary investor cannot be expected to follow all that has been evolved in the last few years, especially in the last fifteen or twenty years; and until there is centralization of jurisdiction in Canada, or until there is agreement between provincial and federal jurisdiction, I fear that the federal government can only lead the way step by step.

The question of educating the public along this line is important. The government I think is doing good work in bringing down this bill. I regret it has not been able to persuade the provinces to follow suit. But in Canada we are rather jealous of our jurisdiction and the provincial governments are especially jealous of theirs. On general principles, one cannot find fault with them for that, and we can only express regret that there has not been agreement to support a bill which would be uniform throughout the whole country, and which would simplify the procedure and the evolution of company law in Canada and at the same time render a service to the investing public. Even if we could attain that ideal, however, we must not lose sight of the fact that, as the minister has said, Canada is only a small part of the great commercial world. Nothing is easier than to go from this jurisdiction to a foreign jurisdiction to attain the powers that are being sought; and if we refuse them here that is exactly what happens. I suggest therefore that all that this parliament can do is to proceed step by step and try to do its best in an endeavour to bring the provinces into uniformity in the matter of legislation as time goes on.

Mr. RALSTON: As the Secretary of State will quite frankly admit, the weakness of this bill, from the point of view of the protection of the public, is in this, that while it imposes very serious prospectus provisions in respect of securities which are being marketed by the company itself, it does not go further and carry those provisions through when the stock of the company is being sold by a purchaser of that stock from the company.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I understood from the remarks of the Secretary of State that the bill did cover that point.

Mr. CAHAN: Only in one particular. This bill deals with the issue of shares or securities by a company or by an underwriter on behalf of the company. After such shares are issued and are owned by shareholders who purchase them, the subsequent dealings between shareholders are not provided for in this bill because the prevailing opinion of the legal profession is, I think, that this parliament, except by its criminal legislation, has no jurisdiction with respect to such resales. During the last eighteen months, while debating this matter with various officers of the government, with representatives of the provinces and with leading counsel in the dominion, I have not heard a suggestion to the contrary. But in respect of criminal legislation we have introduced in this bill a provision which if it is intra vires, if it is sound criminal legislation, prescribes and penalizes attempts to sell securities by house to house canvass. Sales by such canvassers are made a criminal offence. We shall discuss that later on.

Mr. RALSTON: I thank the Secretary of State for that very clear statement. What I have said can be taken then as quite correct, namely, that the moment shares get beyond the control of the company, either directly or through a broker—someone disposing of them on behalf of the company—then the prospectus provisions cease to apply. That seems to me to be the weakness of the bill. As the Secretary of State has properly said, that weakness is there not because of any hesitancy on his part nor, I take it, on the part of this house to go as far as we can possibly go, within the ambit of the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament, to afford protection. I had almost the temerity to suggest, notwithstanding the Secretary of State's intimation that no one had suggested it before, that it is possible—I will put it no stronger than that—that it might be incidental to dominion company law to follow through the shares of a company, which had been incorporated by this parliament or under the authority of this parliament, and attach to those shares incidence which would impose a responsibility on those dealing with them, even though they had passed out of the hands of the company. That, I know, is a long shot and of course it means a privy council decision. But when I remember that even now the provisions in this Companies Act, which impose liabilities on directors for payment of dividends that impair capital, are being attacked in the courts and have as a matter of fact been held by the Court of Appeal of Ontario to be ultra vires, I realize what a difficult course we have to pursue. With all respect to the Supreme Court of Ontario, I should have thought that that was part of dominion company legislation which might very properly be said to be within federal jurisdiction—that is to say, the imposition of certain responsibilities upon the directors of companies which are incorporated under the authority of this parliament. It would seem to me that that might well be within dominion jurisdiction. Even that, however, has been held by the Court of Appeal of Ontario to be ultra vires. That leaves us with this situation that either we put into this bill something which pretty nearly everybody agrees is at least of very doubtful legislative validity or we take what appears to be a comparatively short step, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), in the direction of trying to set an example and to indicate the objective which we all are seeking to attain.

As the Secretary of State has pointed out—and this weighs with me—if we should put into this bill something of that kind, something which would attempt to impose responsibility upon the subsequent owners of those shares right straight down the line so long as they are shares of a dominion company, then it is inevitable that the Secretary of State will not have very many applications for incorporation of companies until the provinces change their laws so as to bring them into line with our legislation. This would mean, it seems to me, that the Dominion Companies Act would be a dead letter and we have to decide really whether we will forego whatever prestige and revenue may be involved in the incorporation of dominion companies for the sake at least of setting an example and say: We do not propose to countenance this sort of thing and intend to do all we can, that is in a legislative way, to prevent it. After a good deal of thought I agree with the Secretary of State in concluding that no practical purpose would be served in attempting to go this further step, first, because certainly it is doubtful from the point of view of jurisdiction, and, second, because of the fact that in respect of the handling of shares it would have no practical effect on the protection of the public since the public would not have an opportunity to buy shares in dominion companies because the companies would be incorporated by the provinces.

That brings us to what our alternatives are: first, to amend the act and to put into it this legislation which we think is of doubtful validity. Probably we can cast aside that alternative. The second is to attempt to secure agreement with the provinces and I agree that is still a long way off because, from the reports I have had of the conferences which were held and which I presume were at least semiprivate, we are not a great distance along the road of getting uniformity in letter although we may have uniformity in spirit. The provinces are not prepared to act as rubber stamps for dominion legislation and to enact the same laws as we put into force, but I hope, in view of the fact that we have in most of the provinces a Securities Frauds Prevention Act or something similar, the provinces themselves are coming or have come to the point of view we are endeavouring to express here and we may trust to see substantial advance made along the line not perhaps of uniformity in letter but of uniformity in spirit so that the public of each province may be protected by provincial laws against those who are operating in the provinces in dealing in stock. That is the second alternative. The first is to amend the act and we all admit that is impracticable. The second is so far as possible to secure agreement with the provinces at least in respect of the spirit of this legislation and to endeavour to get the provinces to legislate accordingly if they have not already done so.

The third is along the lines the Secretary of State has mentioned. I believe we could go further than he has mentioned with regard to criminal legislation and I am not sure that is not a solution at the present stage. I am not certain whether the criminal legislation should not go further than the section which is in the act and which I understand applies only to house to house canvasing, or whether we should not seriously consider putting not necessarily into the Dominion Companies Act but into the criminal code as part of the criminal law of Canada some more stringent provisions with respect to the selling of stock in any company, whether incorporated in England, Australia, Nova Scotia or the Dominion of Canada, I care not. There is an absolutely certain dominion field of jurisdiction which this parliament has which might be explored and used to advantage in connection with what we regard, at least in some cases, as a very serious abuse of the confidence the public put in those who sell stock. I invite the Secretary of State to consider that phase of the matter not so much in connection with this bill, because with all respect I do not believe in inserting criminal provisions in every piece of legislation we pass. I would rather see criminal legislation where it belongs, that is in the criminal code, and further consideration might well be given to the matter of drafting a section in the criminal code which would deal with at any rate the more flagrant cases of which all of us have had some knowledge or have heard some reports; such legislation might substantially benefit the public in regard to this particular matter.

While I am on my feet let me add to that: There is perhaps a tendency in these modern days for us to set up too many different pieces of machinery, boards, commissions, inquiries, and to utilize the Department of Secretary of State in connection with things which really belong to the recognized and existing tribunals, namely, the courts, which have been set up and established in this country for years. Everybody knows the procedure there; access to the courts is easy and there is an attorney general in each province for the purpose of enforcing the criminal law. We might use that machinery which is there now and supplement it with the appropriate provisions in the criminal code.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) on the suggestion he has made to the minister in regard to cutting down or limiting the number of kinds or classes of shares and securities which may be offered to the public by any company. There are far too many kinds and the public are certainly much confused and very often misled. I have heard of companies that had two and, I believe, even three classes of common shares, preferred shares debenture stock, bonds, and in some cases two different classes of bonds. The ordinary man, when he buys a bond, thinks he is getting a first mortgage on the plant of the industrial corporation. That, however, does not always turn out to be the case. The highest priced lawyers in the land are paid by these corporations to devise new methods continually to baffle the investor and very often—and perhaps this is a strong term—to mislead the investing public. I think it is a great mistake to allow shares of no par value to be issued; all shares should carry a par value and the percentage of that par value which must be received by the company should be fixed in the Companies Act. That is, there should be a limit upon the amount of commission or brokerage which could be charged by those who sell the shares to the public; in other words, who float the company.

I would be willing to go and perhaps it is time to consider going even further than the hon. member for Last Mountain suggested. It would be indeed a good thing to require these companies to issue one class of securities. Let them finance themselves on one class of security; let them confine themselves to issuing par value shares of common stock so that every investor may take the same chance in the industry. Let every investor have an equal voice in the affairs of the company. Very often now two classes of common shares are issued, one class carrying all the voting power and quite often shares of the latter class are held by men who subscribed absolutely nothing for them; they got them as a gift for promoting the company. The result is that the people who put up the money take all the risk but have no voice in the management of the company. That situation should be corrected now that we are putting through a new companies act.

I noticed what the minister said about proceeding slowly, something to the effect that we cannot reform the business practices of the world by any legislation that we can pass here. That is true, and perhaps we cannot reform it entirely for Canada, but as far as this legislation is concerned I think we have tried long enough to reach some agreement with the provinces. Apparently we cannot get that by waiting. Any act we pass should be one that we consider a proper act. If those who wish to incorporate companies pass by the dominion government and go to the provinces to get their charters, the public will soon come to realize that if they want shares in a company that is properly inspected before its charter is granted they will prefer to invest in securities of companies with dominion incorporation.

Mr. BOWMAN: By that time they will have no money left.

Mr. COOTE: I remember this matter being debated in this house ten years ago, quite a lengthy debate, and from all sides great regret was expressed over the watering of stock and the swindling of the public that had gone on. In the succeeding ten years nothing has been done. We were told that we could not take any action because the companies would be incorporated by the provinces, they would do the dirty work. I thought at the time that we had better let the provinces have that dirty work if they wanted it. I think the time has come when we should pass a proper Companies Act here, and if we cannot get the provinces to come into accord let them assume the responsibility of giving charters to companies not properly organized. During the last ten years the swindling of the public has been, I suppose, three or four times as bad as it was before.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. gentleman repeat that statement?

Mr. COOTE: I say that in the last ten years I think the public was swindled by stock promoters and stock jobbers out of a greater amount of money than in the ten years previous.

Mr. CAHAN: Not with respect to dominion companies.

Mr. COOTE: I do not know whether some of these companies were incorporated under provincial charters, but that process is going on. I suppose after a while the public might get educated into refusing to buy securities at all, but that is not a situation that we want to see develop. We want to see the public ready to put money into any worthy enterprise. But I think this parliament is not doing its duty if it does not see that its Companies Act is proper, whether the provinces wish to keep step or not. I am sorry if we cannot persuade the provinces to come into line, but for my part I would like to see the dominion do its duty in any event. There are many instances that could be brought before the committee of improper financing of companies, and the issuance of too many classes of securities, but perhaps it is not worth while detailing them at this time. But in connection with this particular section which deals with that I would suggest that the minister give more consideration to the proposal advanced by the hon. member for Last Mountain. I am not sure that I heard him correctly, it is difficult to hear at this end, but it seems to me that if companies were allowed to issue one class of bonds, one class of preferred shares and one class of common stock, that should be enough. I do not see why they need to issue more than one class of common stock, or different classes of bonds. Certainly I think we should put a stop to the issuing of any class of common stock that carries all the voting power; those who put their money into the shares of these companies, whether they be class A or class B, should surely have the same voting power in regard to the management. I hope the minister will give further consideration to that suggestion, for it seems to me a very worthy one, and one that could perhaps be adopted without driving all the companies wishing incorporation to the provinces.

Mr. RALSTON: Might I give my hon. friend an example with regard to the issue of various classes of securities? I have in mind a reorganization which is now being headlined in the newspapers, that of Price Brothers in Quebec. There you have a situation in which there are outstanding first mortgage bonds; the proposal is that first mortgage bonds shall be issued again to the holders of those bonds. You have also people who are putting in new money, you have to have some class of security to represent that new money, and the proposal is that it shall be debentures. Next you have those who are creditors of the company at the present time, unsecured creditors, what are you going to do with them? You cannot give them the same class of security as any I have previously mentioned. Certificates of indebtedness are being issued to them. Next you have the preferred shareholders; to them preferred shares are being issued, and to the common shareholders common shares are being issued. So there you have five classes of securities issued to perfectly reputable classes of security holders, all of whom have interests in the company and have put in cash to the extent of millions of dollars. My hon. friend will not say that is a case in which the right to issue different classes of securities to represent appropriately money already put into the company should be denied.

Mr. CAHAN: In my experience during the last four years it is only in cases of such reorganizations, which usually are subject to approval by the court, that these many different classes of shares have been issued by the one company. They are issued for the sole purpose of recognizing and reconciling the differences of divergent interests in the undertaking.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I agree with what the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) has said as to the necessity for different classes of securities in case of reorganization of a company. As he suggests, that is a perfectly legitimate transaction. The evil is not there. The evil arises in the case of incorporation of new companies and the expansion of presently existing companies, in their efforts to finance and get new money. But the greatest evil that has arisen in this country has been the mad effort on the part of promoters and exploiters and investment banking houses to get hold of legitimate family businesses, yoke them up with other family businesses and unload them on the public, and themselves be rewarded for so doing. There is where business itself in Canada has been greatly injured. If we can do something to prevent that, either by amendment to the criminal code, making it more stringent, or by some other method within the constitutional purview of the parliament of Canada, I am all for it.

Mr. BUTCHER: I was quite aware when I made my suggestion that I would appear very unsophisticated, but at the same time I still feel that we should do something to restrict the numbers and kinds of securities that companies are permitted to offer. I am very pleased indeed with the sympathetic consideration that has been given to my suggestion by some hon. members, including the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan). I am entirely in agreement with his statement that considerable business will be lost to the dominion if my suggestions are accepted, but I believe with other hon. members that it would be better for the Dominion of Canada in its Companies Act to set a good example than to continue to get business by not doing so. I also believe that it is scarcely true that the provinces are less careful than the dominion. The provinces themselves, I believe, in many cases say quite the contrary. I remember one particular case, that of the securities offered by the O. J. Brooks companies some years ago. I remember in the province of Saskatchewan an effort was made by the local government board to prevent the sale of those securities. It was found that they could not prevent the sale because the company had dominion incorporation, and the province therefore could not restrict the sale of shares within its borders. I am very much impressed at this time by the absolute necessity of conceiving the very best Companies Act that can be conceived. There is not the slightest doubt that the corporate system is growing. A few years ago men worked individually; then they worked in partnership, then a simpler form of joint stock company was formed, and then the very loosely formed association, the corporation of to-day, came into existence.

Reading recently from the book entitled The Modern Corporation and Private Property, by Berle and Means, I was quite startled by the exceedingly rapid growth of the corporate system in the United States. I believe I would not be wasting the time of the house if I were to quote some statistics. It is not my purpose to prove that the same thing is going on in Canada, although we know that to a lesser extent it is. I am making the reference to show that if ever there was a time in the history of Canada when it was important to evolve the very best company law, this is the time. As we are meeting on common ground to-day, and in a non-partisan spirit, I believe the house will excuse me if I give expression to some further views, which may be regarded as even more unsophisticated than those I have already given.

I shall not quote from Berle and Means' book, but shall give some statistics I have culled from it. In the year 1800 there were only 335 profit seeking corporations in the United States. Of these, 219 were turnpike, bridge and canal companies; 36 were furnishing water, fire protection or dock facilities; 67 were banks or insurance companies, and only 6 were engaged in the manufacturing industry. The remaining 7 were not classified. In 1842, less than one hundred years ago, the stock of one of the largest corporations in the United States was owned by 390 people. In 1899 the United States census reported that 66·7 per cent of all manufactured products made in the United States were made by corporations. In 1919, twenty years later, 87 per cent of all manufactured products were made by corporations, and in 1933, last year, it is estimated that 94 per cent were made by corporations.

In 1899 it was estimated that 65 per cent of the wage earners were in the employ of manufacturing corporations. In 1929, it was estimated that 92 per cent were so employed. Between 1905 and 1925 it was estimated that the percentage of total wholesale sales made by corporations was increased from 30 per cent to 40 per cent, and in retail sales from 15 per cent to 30 per cent. Phenomenal strides have been taken since. We are informed that in 1929 there were 300,000 non-financial corporations in the United States, and that 200 of the largest, or less than seven-hundredths per cent of them, owned practically one-half of the combined corporate wealth. Of the 300,000 non-financial corporate institutions, 200 actually owned 42·9 per cent of the total wealth. The total assets of these 200 largest non-banking corporations amounted in 1909 to $26,000,000,000. Ten years later, in 1919, it had increased to $43,700,000,000, and ten years later, in 1929, it had increased to $81,100,000,000. I shall repeat those figures. In twenty years the total wealth of the 200 corporations had inccreased from $26,000,000,000 to $81,100,000,000.

A few moments ago I referred to one of the largest companies in the United States in the year 1800. At that time there were only 390 shareholders in that company. At this date there is a company in the United States with assets aproaching $5,000,000,000, or an amount equalling approximately twice the national debt of Canada or the total wealth of thirteen states of the union. That company employs 450,000 persons, and had 567,694 shareholders as of December 31, 1930.

At the beginning of 1930, 42 railroads, 52 public utilities corporations and 106 industrials owned total assets amounting to $81,074,000,000. These same 200 corporations —and in my opinion these are staggering figures—owned 49·2 per cent of the total corporate wealth of the United States, 38 per cent of all business wealth other than banking, and 22 per cent of the total wealth of the whole country. When one remembers the value of land, and remembers also that that is only to a very small extent owned by corporations one can see what tremendous strides have been made in the acquisition of wealth by corporations. I shall quote the following paragraph from page 41 of the book:

> The trend of the recent past indicates, however, that the great corporation, already of tremendous importance to-day, will become increasingly important in the future.
> The conclusion is still further confirmed when we examine the ways in which the growth of the large companies takes place, and compare their growth by each method with that of other companies. A given corporation can increase the wealth under its control in three major ways: By reinvesting its savings, by raising new capital through the sale of securities in the public market,—

And that is what we are particularly interested in to-day.

> —and by acquiring control of other corporations by either purchase or exchange of securities. While there are numerous other ways, these three so far outweigh other methods that they alone need to be considered.

And at another point it is stated:

Just what does this rapid growth of the big companies promise for the future? Let us project the trend of the growth of recent years. If the wealth of the large corporations and that of all corporations should each continue to increase for the next twenty years at its average annual rate for the twenty years from 1909 to 1929, 70 per cent of all corporate activity would be carried on by 200 corporations by 1950. If the more rapid rates of growth from 1924 to 1929 were maintained for the next twenty years 85 per cent of corporate wealth would be held by 200 large units. It would take only forty years at the 1909-1929 rate or only thirty years at the 1924-1929 rate for all corporate activity and practically all industrial activity to be absorbed by 200 giant companies. If the indicated growth of the large corporations and of the national wealth were to be effective from now until 1950, half of the national wealth would be under the control of big companies at the end of that period.

Later on in the book Berle and Means say that this immense wealth is controlled by 2,000 individuals, or directors, but of those 2,000 directors only a comparatively small number actually direct.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that while these conditions do not exist in Canada to-day, yet there is the growing tendency for corporations to replace individuals and partnerships, and therefore I think that one needs no justification for urging that the very best that can possibly be done should be done by the dominion in this matter. I give the Secretary of State credit for trying to do it, and I believe most hon. members at this time are trying to make helpful suggestions.

Mr. CAHAN: In reply to the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), I wish to say simply that in my experience these diversified securities are not issued by the one company, except in respect of readjustments of capital by compromises which heretofore have been under the sanction of the court and compromises which now may be made under the legislation which I introduced only a short time ago, namely the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1933.

I have exercised with very great care I think the direction of the companies branch of the department of the Secretary of State, and in only two or three cases at the utmost—I think it is only two—in four years has the matter of the fraudulent sale of company's securities which has been brought to my notice been the sale of the securities of a dominion company, yet in the readjustments which have taken place in the last four years compromises have been necessary as between companies and creditors, and in respect of those compromise arrangements which have come before me I have thought that the best interests of all the shareholders concerned would best be conserved by the secured creditors taking preferential shares, and the unsecured creditors taking another class of shares not so well secured. The creditors of the company which was in financial difficulty would thus be induced to come in and participate as owners of the stock of the company in order that the debts and liabilities outstanding, very burdensome and so very onerous as would necessarily result in financial disaster, should be removed and that there should be an increase of capital and an increased issue of stock, resulting in an increase in the net assets of the company by the discharge of the secured liabilities outstanding.

The last four years have proved to my mind conclusively that every effort should be made to induce those who are making investments in company undertakings to make their investments in one kind of stock or the other, because when liabilities in the form of bond issue after bond issue are incurred, the company in days of prosperity may be able to carry all its liabilities, but when sudden stress and strain comes there is only disaster awaiting, a disaster which in many cases could and would be avoided if instead of investors in the company being bondholders they were shareholders participating as partners in the entire enterprise.

As to the suggestion that new criminal code provisions be imposed by parliament, I have brought that to the attention of the Department of Justice, and I think it was two years ago, possibly three, that the Minister of Justice introduced an amendment to the criminal code which I think has been more or less efficacious. It is quite possible that the criminal code may be extended and applied to suppress new evils as they arise, but at the present time I think that every province except one has in operation a security act, sometimes known as the "blue sky law" which applies to the sale of shares from one individual to another. Before proceeding very much further in extending the criminal code I think we must ascertain whether these provincial laws will operate effectively or not. The provincial governments have had an interprovincial conference of their own, and recently at Toronto they had another meeting. I understand that they are proposing quite radical amendments to their laws in order to remedy the evils of which complaint is made, and we are waiting to see what may be done in that direction by provincial authorities before extending our own criminal code and creating new crimes.

We are doing the very best we can, I am confident of that, and as I said at the outset we cannot reform all the existing evils by one piece of legislation. As we have done the best we could in preparing this bill I should like to have it adopted as a consolidation and improvement of existing laws in order that we may ascertain within the next year or so just how effectively it may be applied. So far as the present government is concerned we are just as anxious to wipe out the evils of which hon. gentlemen complain as are those who make the complaints. But when dealing day by day with these companies with their difficulties and readjustments we should take a broader view. We must not make it impossible for companies to operate successfully. We must not impose such penalties upon directors as will make it impossible for any man of sane, sound business judgment to accept the position of director. Therefore I am somewhat anxious that we should not go as far as was proposed yesterday with regard to making individual directors personally liable for the accounts of the company. We have large companies operating in Canada. Think of one of our large railway companies, for instance. Suppose the man who is going to assume office as a director of that railway company is faced with the fact that he becomes personally liable for a year's wages to a large number of the employees of the company. If directors have to face these contingent liabilities how can you expect any man of sound, sane business judgment to accept a directorship and assume personally these large corporate liabilities in view of their personal obligations to their families and to others? So when hon. gentlemen are discussing the subsequent provisions of this bill I trust that they will still keep their attention upon the end to be achieved and regard this measure as simply a sincere and honest and intelligent effort to reach that end, fully realizing that the proposed act will not wipe out all the evils of which hon. gentlemen complain.

Mr. BUTCHER: I wish to move an amendment, Mr. Chairman, to subsection 3 of section 12. I know this amendment will not meet with the approval of the Secretary of State or probably of many of my hon. friends on this side, but I am going to move it because I believe it would be a good plan to delete this particular subsection.

Mr. CAHAN: So that we may not be confused, the amendment proposed by the hon. member is to subsection 3 of section 12, and that will come before the amendment I have proposed.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. BOTHWELL: May I suggest that we pass subsection 1? It has been discussed and there are no further comments to be made.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

Subsection 2 agreed to.

On subsection 3—Shares without par value.

Mr. BUTCHER: This subsection reads:

> All or any part of the authorized capital of a company, except shares having priority as to capital or being subject to redemption, may consist of shares without nominal or par value.

As I said just now, this amendment may not meet with general approval but I cannot see why shares of no par value are necessary. I know it is customary on the north American continent to issue such shares, but there are older and perhaps in some matters wiser jurisdictions under which such shares are not now issued. When Great Britain was considering the revision of its companies law in 1930 or 1931 the question was raised as to whether shares of no par value were advisable or necessary, and it was decided that they were not, I know that if we should delete this particular subsection and not permit shares of no par value to be issued in Canada we would be doing something unusual on the north American continent. But we have done other unusual things and I believe it would be wise to do an unusual thing in this instance. I have just been reading a book dealing with company law written by F. W. Wegenast, K.C. This book is well known to lawyers, and it is evident that the author does not like shares of no par value. At page 453 he refers to what he considers the inadvisability of issuing shares of no par value. He then tries to anticipate some of the reasons which may be given by the proponents of this type of share. At page 454 he states:

> It is said that a no par share instead of representing an interest measured by a money value, represents a proportional or fractional, or aliquot part of the net value of the company.
> It is claimed that the scheme is calculated to provide for the issue of the shares at their actual instead of a theoretical or fictitious value.
> It is said that the scheme by putting the company's accounts on the basis of an actual instead of a fictitious value is calculated to prevent the practice of stock watering.
> It is said that the scheme is calculated to prevent the issue of shares at a discount.

Mr. Wegenast comments upon the possible objections to the discontinuance of this class of share. He states that there is always doubt and mystification as to how much the shares are supposed to represent, in other words, what those who hold them are supposed to have paid for them or are liable to pay for them. At page 457 he states:

It would seem that the scheme of no par shares has made it, if not legally, at least practically, easier for promoters to obtain, or to retain, for themselves, the common stock of the company at the expense of inexperienced investors, for little or no substantial consideration. This is the one item with which an experienced investor concerns himself, because it almost invariably represents the voting control of the company. Inexperienced investors are likely to concern themselves less over an issue, to a promoter, of say 10,000 shares of no par value, than if the issue were 10,000 shares of $100 each, although the voting power and the right to profits represented in each case may be the same. And it was no doubt in the minds of those who propagated the scheme that the courts would probably feel less concerned about the consideration for no par stock than for ordinary stock with a par value.

I could not express myself with regard to this particular class of share in a more emphatic or more concise manner than Mr. Wegenast has in the passage I have just quoted. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I move the amendment which is now in your hands.

Mr. CAHAN: The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman would preclude the issuing of shares of no par value. This bill has gone a long way. It provides that hereafter there shall be no par value shares which are preferred as to capital. This bill provides that hereafter all shares preferred as to capital, either by way of repurchase or redemption of shares or return of capital in winding up, must have a fixed value. This is going a long way, and against protests from the business community. Since I have been Secretary of State, except in cases of reorganization where one must concern himself with the compromise of diverse and divergent interests of shareholders and creditors, I have not allowed letters patent to issue which would create shares of no par value preferred as to capital. However, I am convinced that a great deal might be said in support of ordinary shares of no par value. The hon. gentleman referred to the English act, but the English system is different from ours. For a quarter of a century we have been crying out against the issuance of shares at a discount, but in England such shares are permitted to be issued. Although their shares may have a par value of £100 or £20, there is no implication that £100 or £20 was in fact paid for the shares. It is true that shares of no par value are not issued in England, but in the committee referred to by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) which voted against that innovation, there was a very intelligent majority which took the opposite view. In England they are allowed to issue shilling shares or shares of any value they like. So that the one shilling or two shilling or five shilling share takes the place to a very large extent of the no par value share in Canada. As to no par value shares, this parliament deliberately, in 1924 I think it was—

Mr. GEARY: 1926.

Mr. CAHAN: —authorized no par value shares. It was a government measure introduced after a long study by a committee under the chairmanship, I believe, of the late Under Secretary of State, Mr. Mulvey, K.C., who published a report in relation thereto and I may say that in that report he set forth in very great detail the differences of opinion existing with regard to no par value shares, and then presented very cogent and convincing arguments in favour of the creation of such shares under the authority of the Companies Act of Canada.

I was not then a member of parliament but I was interested as a lawyer advising a number of companies, and I will suggest the argument that convinced me at the time that he was right. I had been incorporating company after company which entered upon large construction enterprises, either industrial, hydro electric or electrical enterprises, in various parts of the world. It would have been impossible to carry out a single one of those enterprises, under the system which then prevailed, by the issue of common and preferred shares. As to preferred shares, the dividends could not be paid out of capital, and as to common shares, there were no income available. The promoter—and there are promoters and promotions that are commendable—was forced in such a case to tell the investing public, "You can hope for no return upon your capital for the next three or four or five or six or seven years, according to the duration of the construction contemplated by the company."

When I was called in for advice, I advised them to make a small capital issue, which gave control of the company, it is true, but to carry on their construction by the issue of bonds secured upon all the capital assets of the company—with what result? They would make a bond issue of five or ten million dollars as the case might be and the proceeds of the sale of that issue of bonds were used to carry out the construction work. The proceeds of the bonds could lawfully, under either English law, American law or Canadian law, be used in part to pay the interest on the bonds during construction, and that interest, which was really a part of the cost of construction, was charged up as part of the expenditure for construction. But investors were induced to take the bonds, to pay for them at par, knowing that there would be no income available for that company for a term of years, knowing that for a term of years the money which they paid in to the treasury of the company would be used in part to repay to them the annual interest accruing upon the bonds which they had purchased.

One evil in connection with the carrying out of such enterprises as those I have mentioned was that they began by creating a large capital indebtedness; and with the experience I have had during the last four years in this office, after examining with care reconstruction scheme after reconstruction scheme brought in to me for approval, I am of the opinion that the real evil of our present company organization and management is the creation of large and oppressive capital indebtedness, which a company may carry in times of ordinary prosperity but which it cannot carry in the years of depression such as those we have endured since this government came into office. That was apparent years ago, and parliament then decided that no par value shares should be authorized, and that a company issuing no par value shares could receive from the shareholders a certain sum of money, say, $50 a share, for the no par value shares, and that, with the consent of the shareholders, there could be set aside a certain portion of the $50 paid in as distributable surplus to provide a certain definite income to the holders of the no par value shares during such periods of construction as those I have suggested.

One result of that measure, which was passed by a previous parliament, has been that in organizing various large enterprises that scheme has been carried out, and the proceeds of the no par value shares have in part been set aside as a distributable reserve. And those reserves, to my knowledge, have carried company after company through these four years of depression, so that to-day a number of them are again entering a period of more secure prosperity; whereas, if they had resorted to the old method of obtaining capital funds by issuing bonds or debentures, secured or otherwise, such as I have indicated, they would have created a capital indebtedness which would have crushed them down during the last four years.

After making an exhaustive study of this no par value share aspect of the matter, we thought that we would preclude the issue of no par value shares having a preference as to capital and would continue the no par value ordinary or common share.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Would it not be possible, in the case the minister cites, under by-laws of the company or under the authority of the court, to issue shares with a par value, sold at a discount? Suppose the original shares were $100; could they not say, "Now you want to sell a share, equal to the $100, to be sold at the price of $50." In order to carry the company through if they want to issue more stock, would it not be possible to do that and to let the public know what they are getting instead of issuing a no par value share but really a fifty dollar share in comparison with the hundred dollar one?

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. member has suggested the alternative, but I think if in 1926 the then government under the leadership of the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) as a government measure had introduced into this house a new companies act authorizing the sale of shares at a discount, I do not believe, even though a government measure, it would have been sustained in the house. We have to deal with the prejudice of the public which until to-day has been against issuing par value shares at a discount. When this measure was introduced into parliament, it followed a report on the matter prepared for Mr. Taft, then President of the United States, by a committee or commission presided over by Arthur T. Hadley, president of Yale university. That commission was regarded as being equipped by intelligence and experience to make a profound study of the whole question and to make a report. I am discussing this from the point of view not of throwing blame upon any previous parliament, but of considering what parliament then had before it. This is the report of that commission:

> We do not believe that the retention of the hundred-dollar mark, or any other dollar-mark, upon the face of the share of stock, is of essential importance. We are ready to recommend that the law should encourage the creation of companies whose shares have no par value, and permit existing companies to change their stock into shares without par value whenever their convenience requires it. After such conversion any new shares could be sold at such price as was deemed desirable by the board of directors, with the requirement of publicity as to the proceeds of the sale of such shares and as to the disposition thereof; giving to the old shareholders, except in some cases of reorganization or consolidation, prior rights to subscribe pro rata, if they so desired in proportion to the amount of their holdings.

As between the two alternatives of permitting the issue of stock below par, or authorizing the creation of shares without par value, the latter seems to this commission the preferable one. It is true that it will be less easy to introduce than the other, because it is less in accord with existing business habits and usages; but it has the cardinal merit of accuracy. It makes no claims that the share thus issued is anything more than a participation certificate.

The objections to the creation of shares without par value are two in number: first, that their issue will permit inflation, by making it easy to create an excessive number of shares; and, second, that it will produce a division of—

On this phase of the matter, the commission was dealing with railroads and it uses the word "roads":

—roads into two classes, those whose shares have a par value and those whose shares have not. The second of these objections does not appear to be a very serious one. There are listed on the stock exchanges to-day, side by side with one another, shares of the par value of one hundred dollars, shares of the par value of fifty dollars, shares with very much smaller par value, and a few, like the Great Northern Ore certificates, with no par value at all. The share sells in each case simply for what the public supposes it to be worth as a share.

It was that report, I think, that had a great influence upon the decision of the house at that time.

To-day there are hundreds of companies with shares of no par value outstanding. Every province authorizes the issue of shares of no par value, either preferred or common, but we in practice have precluded the issue of shares, preferred as to capital, of no par value, and I think that has had a very salutary effect. Hereafter, if a man buys a share of fixed value which is preferred as to capital and which is liable to redemption he knows that at the end of the redemption period he will receive the one hundred dollars par value of that preferred stock; or in case of winding up he will receive proportionately with other preferred shareholders dollar for dollar up to one hundred dollars per share. I think that policy should be maintained and as a step in that direction we are precluding by this measure hundreds and hundreds of companies that now have shares of no par value from making additional issues of such shares, preferred as to capital. We are doing that as an experiment with a view to ascertaining how it will likely work out, but I think that is as far as parliament should go at the present time. There seems to be a good deal of misapprehension in this respect. I notice an article in the Canadian Bar Review dealing with this very question and I might read a short extract:

As a general rule, a company cannot issue its shares for less than their par value, so that the company is supposed to have received on the issuance of its shares a sum of money equivalent to their par value.

That applies to companies generally. It does not apply to English companies under the present English Companies Act under which shares are allowed to be issued at a discount.

This is only actually true in the simple case where the shares of the company are paid for in cash. Where the shares are issued for a consideration other than cash as is most often the case, the rule holds good only in theory, for the actual value of assets acquired is usually a matter of estimation only and may be less or more than the par value of the shares issued therefor. Even where par value has any significance at the outset, it does not necessarily continue to bear any close relation to the market value of the shares, which will depend on different and variable factors, such as earnings, increase or decrease in capital assets, management and other matters affecting the company. As a share of stock, from the point of view of the shareholder, represents a proportional fractional interest in the assets and earnings and control of the company, it is considered to be more logical to state the capital stock of the company in such a way that the actual value of every share has to be ascertained without reference to any arbitrary or theoretical value assigned to shares such as is inherent in shares having par value. This is accomplished by expressing the capital of the company as a specified number of shares without any nominal or par value and having each share certificate state only the number of shares which it represents and the number of shares which the company is authorized to issue. Thus, if there are 100,000 no par shares authorized all of which have been issued, a certificate for 1,000 shares represents a one-hundredth interest in the aggregate equity for shareholders; if only 50,000 shares have been issued, a certificate for 1,000 shares would represent a one-fiftieth interest and so on.

Then it goes on to discuss the matter pro and con. I would like to say that we have gone quite a long way in the face of the opposition of a great number of companies which are financed on the basis of issuing shares, preferred and ordinary, of no par value. When this bill is passed no additional shares can be issued preferred as to capital. I suggest to hon. gentlemen that we try this experiment. We cannot wipe out all the evils associated with company promotion at once, but I think a really sincere effort has been made in this bill to go to the full extent that is possible under existing conditions, when nine other legislatures in this country are permitting the issue of no par value stock, both preferred and common.

Mr. BOTHWELL: We appreciate the explanation given by the Secretary of State in this connection. Possibly a further explanation may help solve the difficulties in the minds of some of us. However, I am anticipating what I was going to say. I think it was unfortunate that when the Companies Act was passed back in 1924 the issue of no par value shares was permitted. If I am correctly informed it was the Dominion Companies Act that led the way in Canada in permitting the issue of no par value stock, and that lead was followed later by the provinces. However, it is apparent that in this bill an effort has been made to remedy some of the evils that we believe have arisen out of that practice.

In dealing with the next subsection, I want to mention also section 45, in order to understand just what is meant by those sections. The explanation given opposite subsection 4 is:

> The new subsections are designed clearly to define what is capital in the case of a company having shares without par value. This is essential for the purposes of the balance sheet and for the purposes of a reduction of capital under sections 49 and following of the bill.

Now subsection 4, dealing with no par value stock, says:

> Where the authorized capital of a company consists, in whole or in part, of shares without nominal or par value the paid up capital of the company shall, with respect to those shares, be an amount equal to the aggregate amount of the consideration received by the company for such of those shares as are issued, exclusive ...

Then coming to section 45, dealing with the liability of shareholders, it says:

> (2) The liability of a shareholder in respect of any share held by him in the company, in respect of which he is liable as a shareholder, shall be limited:
> (a) in the case of a share with nominal or par value, to the amount unpaid thereon;
> (b) in the case of a share without nominal par value to the amount of the consideration for which the share was issued by the company which is unpaid thereon.

What I would like to know, and have been unable to find out from this bill is this. Will the minister or the Under Secretary of State, in connection with the issue of a charter to a company that is issuing shares of no par value, have knowledge of the value of the no par value shares, the price at which they are being sold to the public; and will the liability of the shareholder under that section 45 at any time be fixed? How will the public ever get any information under this act as to how much a shareholder is liable for who holds shares of no par value?

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman may not obtain information as to whether one particular individual has not paid up, except by examination of the books of the company. But by the annual return which we insist on receiving from these companies, which is kept in the Department of the Secretary of State, and of which we freely give copies to every applicant, it can be seen with respect to every company that issues no par value shares the number of shares issued, the price at which they were issued and the amount paid up thereon, the deficiency being the amount for which the shareholders are liable.

Mr. BOTHWELL: But at the time of incorporation there is no information of that kind given the department, it only comes in the annual return?

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so. The fact is that before its incorporation the company is not in a position to give that information. When the company is incorporated we know that it is empowered to issue, say, 10,000 shares of no par value. Then the company sells those shares at a certain price, and the proceeds enter into and become part of the assets of the company. Then if the subscription price is not paid up in full there must be shown on the books and in the returns the unpaid liability of the shareholders, exactly as in the case of par value shares.

Mr. BUTCHER: The minister rightly says that shares may not be sold at a discount. But is it not a fact that the same end may be achieved by the directors by resolution varying the price of shares from time to time? Does not that have precisely the same effect in certain cases as selling shares at a discount?

Mr. CAHAN: In practice I would state that all sorts of shares are sold at a discount. Supposing a company puts out one thousand shares of $100 each, making a capital of $100,000. These are shares with a fixed value. But suppose the company loses money or gets into difficulty or requires new capital; it applies to the Secretary of State to reduce its capital. It may reduce it by cancelling one share in four or five, but the usual case is to reduce the par value, say from $100 to $80, and then to issue the new shares as $80 shares, so that all will participate equally to that extent. That is the practice that has prevailed ever since we have had a Companies Act in which a fixed par value was insisted upon. Suppose no par value shares are issued at say $40, and the company has lost certain of its assets and requires new money, the company may issue further no par value shares at a price of $30, ranking in respect of dividends pari passu with the shares of the first issue sold at $40. No company can live in times of reverse and strain unless it has some such way of raising new capital. If a director uses that means in order to defraud a company or to obtain any benefit for himself, he is guilty of malfeasance and is personally liable. But if the company issues those shares in good faith for the purpose of obtaining new capital to carry on the enterprise in days of stress and strain, then it seems to me perfectly commendable.

Mr. BUTCHER: But in the first case to which the Secretary of State referred, namely that in which the par value share is to be sold at less than par value, the authority of the Secretary of State must first be obtained, whereas in the case of the no par value share the price may be varied from time to time by resolution of the directors. Is that correct?

Mr. CAHAN: I think it is usually by resolution of the directors if, in the first instance, the directors are so empowered by the shareholders by by-law or otherwise. But if a company applies to the Secretary of State to reduce its capital, what shall he do? Perhaps I may take a hypothetical case, so as to give a clear view of the matter. I ask the company to present to me a balance sheet down to the date or within a month of the date of the application. Such balance sheet must first be certified by the auditors of the company and must be sworn to as being correct by the officers of the company having control of the books and accounts. Then I examine first to ascertain if there are creditors outstanding. If I find that there are creditors outstanding I demand a further detailed statement as to those creditors, and unless a waiver from each creditor of any substantial amount is filed, I give notice to all the creditors in order that they may come in and make their complaints against any such reduction. But when once I ascertain from the statements returned to the department that there has been a loss of capital I would not hesitate in every case to grant supplementary letters patent merely to confirm that actual reduction in capital. No officer in the department can undertake to place his judgment against the judgment of a director of a company, substantiated by an auditor's return, and an appraisal duly certificated and sworn to, and in such case I have not interfered.

Mr. BUTCHER: Before closing my remarks on the amendment, with the permission of the committee I should like to quote from the manuscript I have in hand. It may be within the memory of hon. members that a few months ago a series of articles appeared in the Financial Post under the pen of Mr. F. W. Wegenast, and I wrote him asking for the dates of those articles. In reply he very kindly sent me the original manuscript from which the articles had been taken. With regard to the no par value shares he says this:

> Stock-watering means pretending in one form or another that more capital was put into a company than actually was put in. The remedy obviously is to stop the pretence—to state the facts. From this standpoint the invention of so-called no par scheme was no doubt a retrograde step; but in fairness it should be pointed out that the argument in support of the scheme was that it removed the delusion that the par value of stock really represented something. The answer of course is that perhaps the law should have made the delusion a reality rather than remove it.

I believe the Secretary of State agrees with that. Then, the manuscript continues:

> The reality at which the law aimed was that a stock certificate for one hundred dollars should mean that one hundred dollars had been originally invested. It was never supposed that in time the value might not be less or more than one hundred dollars. Under the no par scheme the shareholder is at sea, not only as to present amount but also as to the original amount of the capital represented by his certificate. True, he can go to the balance sheet, but the balance sheet is more, rather than less, confusing than it was before. The first step in prevention of stock-watering may therefore be to abolish the no par scheme—

Mr. CAHAN: Or to insist upon a proper balance sheet being presented, as I do insist.

Mr. BUTCHER: Yes, quite so—> —or perhaps, without in terms abolishing it, make provision for having the stock certificate show on its face the original amount of the capital represented by the share, or fraction, which the shareholder holds.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the hon. member allow an interruption? That very fact would lead, I believe in all sincerity, to the grossest fraud, because if you were to place upon the certificate the value of the assets represented by it at any one date, under the conditions which have prevailed in the last four years the real value, a month hence or a year thereafter would not be the value placed upon the certificate. Therefore it would lead to more misrepresentations than exist under present conditions. That is my answer to the argument.

Mr. EULER: Would that not be true of any of the securities issued by the company—the value of, say, preferred stock certificates for $100 or $1,000?

Mr. CAHAN: It is not printed as being the value of the assets on that date. I have had the point before me and have argued it for days within the last three months. The hon .gentleman is suggesting that you place upon the certificate what the value of the aliquot proportion of the assets would be at the time the certificate was issued, a different thing from saying that this share is issued with a fixed par value of $100. The very fact the par value is represented on the certificate, which my hon. friend mentions, indicates, as everybody knows, that although $100 is paid for it, yet that $100 on the certificate does not represent and does not purport to represent the aliquot portion of the assets of the company behind it.

Mr. EULER: The small investor does not always know.

Mr. CAHAN: I think that is quite true. We are now dealing with the psychological side of the matter.

Mr. BUTCHER: With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall continue the quotation.

The plan of having the directors fix the issue price of the stock could be maintained, but provision could be made for a form of certificate which would set out the amount of capital which the stock originally represented. If it should be objected that this would complicate matters if stock was afterwards issued for a different price the answer would be that that was all the more reason why the facts should be published.

Mr. CAHAN: All I can say is that when we get down to the question of annual returns if the hon. member can suggest any amendments which will give more clear and specific information to shareholders than that which we are insisting upon, I shall give very favourable consideration to his suggestions.

Amendment negatived on division.

Subsection (3) of section 12 agreed to.

Subsection (4), (5) and (6) agreed to.

On subsection (7)—Shares to be allotted at price fixed by board or letters-patent.

Mr. CAHAN: There is an amendment proposed and printed in connection with this subsection. The subsection stood, in consequence. I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow this amendment to pass on division. It has been fully discussed.

Mr. BOTHWELL: There is just one question in connection with subsection 7 and 9, with regard to the distributable surplus. It rather seems to me that unless a company sells its stock at a premium there should not be immediately upon the organization of a company a distributable surplus or a sum of money that could be set aside as a distributable surplus. I am not sufficiently conversant with the actual practice of company law to know just what the reason is for that particular distributable surplus. I could understand it if the stock was sold at a premium.

Mr. CAHAN: I tried to explain it before in the course of the previous discussion. If the shares are sold at $50, and $40 is set aside as the capital and $10 set aside as a surplus which will not be deemed capital, then if the company paid dividends or otherwise distributed that surplus of $10 the directors would not be individually liable for any illegal reduction of capital, but the $40 would appear in all the returns as being capital and the $10 would appear in the returns as being a sum which was not fixed capital but was a surplus that could be distributed in extraordinary times without reduction of capital.

Amendment agreed to, on division.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 8—Conditions precedent to issuing of letters patent to be established.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) suggested that notice should be given before the Secretary of State exercises any arbitrary authority under subsection 4 of section 8. Although the practice and regulations of the department insist that there shall be notice I accept the suggestion of the hon. member for York-Sunbury, and perhaps he will move the amendment which I drafted providing for notice.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I move, Mr. Chairman, that subsection 4 of section 8 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

The Secretary of State, after giving reasonable notice to the applicants, or to their authorized representative or agent, may give to the company a corporate name different from that proposed by the applicants in any case in which the proposed name is deemed by the Secretary of State to be objectionable.

Mr. CAHAN: I accept that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 14—Incidental and ancillary powers.

Mr. BUTCHER: I was going to ask the Secretary of State whether this whole section is not unnecessary. Is it not a fact that any company incorporated under letters patent has all the rights of a natural person except those that are withheld?

Mr. CAHAN: Except where otherwise noted these are simply a transcript of the powers which are provided by special statute at present. The sole object is this: In granting a charter now, instead of writing out all these subclauses we give them the powers mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), et cetera, and they make a selection of them according to the necessities of the undertaking for which the charter is granted. That is the present practice and has been for many years.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Paragraph (q) of section 14 says:

—and in particular to guarantee the payment of dividends, or the payment of the principal of and interest on debentures or other securities, mortgages and liabilities of any such company;

It seems to me that a great deal of fraud might creep into the handling of a company where one company is permitted to guarantee the dividends of another. I can understand that an occasion might arise when it might be necessary and advisable to do that, but in my opinion it should be done only upon application to the department of the Secretary of State, or something of the kind, rather than that the company should be granted this power upon incorporation.

Mr. CAHAN: I agree with the hon. gentleman that the view he has just expressed is the view that occurred to me when this matter was first presented to me. I am not going to insist against the opinion of the house upon the retention of the right to guarantee dividends, but I will state fairly to the house the argument which was advanced to me. Take the case of a company having relations with another company; it may be a subsidiary company or not. It may be a subsidiary enterprise constructing some part of the equipment of an automobile, a company specially organized for the construction of that particular piece of machinery, and yet a larger automobile company may wish to ensure the success of what I call this subsidiary company. The only guarantee that it can now give under the act is to guarantee the indebtedness of that subsidiary company. The subsidiary company may create an issue of bonds, and the other company then can now guarantee the principal and interest on the bonds. At present it can guarantee only the principal and/or interest on a debt and liability. It was represented to me that in view of the present financial conditions it was necessary to obviate the creation of additional indebtedness in such cases and that a subsidiary company could in many cases secure the additional funds necessary to carry the enterprise through if it could issue say preference shares and a guarantee could be given with respect to the payment of dividends on those preference shares over a term of years and thus help the subsidiary company through a temporary crisis. I indicated my clear intent by underlining that part of the subsection and I ask the committee whether this amendment may not afford a reasonably convenient way for carrying some of these subsidiary companies through their present troubles.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Would not it be much safer when the occasion arises to have application made to the Secretary of State to have such protection granted? I can quite see where in certain cases it would be advisable to give a company these ancillary powers, but it seems to me we are opening up the opportunity for fraud.

Mr. CAHAN: If the committee is of that opinion, I am not at all disposed to insist upon this subsection passing. However, when you force these companies to apply for supplementary letters patent you are putting them to additional expense and all that sort of thing.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Could not this subsection be allowed to stand in order that we might see if we could not draft a clause to meet the situation?

Mr. CAHAN: Paragraph (q) of section 14 will be allowed to stand.

Mr. BUTCHER: This particular provision is very emphatic. It reads in part:

—and in particular to guarantee the payment of dividends, or the payment of the principal of and interest on debentures or other securities, mortgages and liabilities of any such company.

The law is quite clear that no company may pay dividends out of capital, but I think this paragraph permits an evasion of the law. Imagine two companies, company A and company B. Company A may not guarantee dividends to its own shareholders but under this section it may guarantee the dividends of company B. Company B may reciprocate and guarantee the dividends of company A, and by this means the capital may be depleted. I am glad the Secretary of State is going to reconsider this particular paragraph.

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to meet the hon. gentlemen in order that I may direct their attention to a decision of the English courts dealing with similar sections, in which it is provided that if company A guarantees the dividends of company B, any payment which it makes in respect of those dividends is not a liability of company B. Therefore, the principle of protecting the capital of a company against the payment of dividends out of capital is not infringed by such a provision as this.

Paragraph (q) stands.

On section 15—Financial assistance to shareholders or directors.

Mr. CAHAN: Through a misprint, an amendment is necessary to paragraph (c) of subsection 1 of this section. In the thirty-fourth line the words "of the" are left out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BUTCHER: It is an accepted principle of law that the capital of a company is to remain inviolate except when reduced by supplementary letters patent. Does not this section seem to violate that principle? I think it provides facilities by which the capital of a company may be depleted without the formality of obtaining supplementary letters patent. Paragraph (b) provides for the making of loans to employees with a view to enabling them to purchase or erect dwelling houses. Paragraph (c) provides for the purchase by trustees of fully paid shares in the company to be held by or for the benefit of employees or salaried directors of the company. Paragraph (d) provides for the making of loans to persons in the employ of the company to enable them to purchase fully paid up shares in the capital stock, to be held by themselves by way of beneficial ownership. I may be mistaken, but it seems to me that these paragraphs afford an opportunity of reducing the capital of a company without going through the formality of obtaining supplementary letters patent.

Mr. CAHAN: These clauses were in the bill passed in the session of 1931. At that time one of the largest companies operating in Canada, the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, desired, first, to advance money to enable its workmen and employees to build houses of their own and, second, to enable their own employees to acquire a certain interest in the shares of the company which were then very low. These provisions were introduced in a bill which appears as chapter 26 of the statutes of that year. I do not think they enable a depletion of capital because the amount so advanced for the building of homes or for the purchase of shares in an indebtedness which must be repaid, and provisions are made for repayment. It is merely a temporary loan to help employees out of a difficulty. I do not know whether the hon. member was present, but the matter was thoroughly discussed at that time and it was the general opinion of the house that this was a proper exercise of powers by a company.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 16—Commission on subscriptions.

Mr. BUTCHER: In connection with paragraph (c) I would suggest that it might be advisable to fix the maximum commission payable. I am not going to move an amendment but I would suggest that it might be advisable to have this paragraph read that the amount or rate per cent of the commission paid or agreed to be paid shall not exceed, say, ten per cent or something of that kind. This might with advantage be included in the subsection.

Mr. CAHAN: At one time we had in our Canadian statutes a maximum fixed rate for commissions. I forget what it was, but the result was that each company fixed the maximum. If you allow them to fix a rate of 15 or 20 per cent, and put that in the statute, every company will fix the maximum allowed. Inasmuch as the payment of the commission must be authorized by letters patent and is in the discretion of the Secretary of State, we thought that applications might be allowed to the Secretary of State, and that before any commission was authorized by letters patent it would be the duty of the Secretary of State to inquire into all the conditions of the undertaking and to fix the commission to be allowed. Hereafter, it will be observed, the payment of the commission must be first authorized by letters patent or supplementary letters patent. I should like to try that as an experiment for a time.

Section agreed to.

On section 18—Contracts of agent binding on company.

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to have the opinion of some of the lawyers on the other side with regard to this section, particularly the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) and the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). Section 18 as at present on the statute books provides, in subsection 1:

> Every contract, agreement, engagement or bargain made, and every bill of exchange drawn, accepted or endorsed, and every promissory note and cheque made, drawn or endorsed on behalf of the company, by any agent, officer or servant of the company, in general accordance with his powers as such under the by-laws of the company, shall be binding upon the company.

Recently there was decided in the Supreme Court of Canada the case of the Bank of the United States vs Ross, 1932 Reports, page 150, which seems to place upon the one who does business with the company the burden not only of examining the letters patent of the company but of examining its bylaws, to ascertain whether the agent or officer of the company is empowered to do the thing which he purports to do.

Mr. RALSTON: He is generally empowered.

Mr. CAHAN: I have received a good many suggestions from business and commercial men throughout the country who say that in the present conditions of business one who is dealing independently with a commercial company should here, as in England, be allowed to deal with the agent who has either express or implied powers; that is to say, if the company is holding out a certain official as having authority to sign cheques, to accept bills of exchange or to make purchases for and on behalf of the company, those who are dealing with such agent at arm's length, knowing that he has that implied power and is exercising it to the knowledge of the company, should not be compelled to go to the company and demand the disclosure of the by-laws under which he is acting. The general contention is that if a company holds out one of its servants or officers as having certain powers then, in his exercise of such express or implied powers, the company should be bound, and that if the company engages officials and agents who act fraudulently, when apparently acting on behalf of the company, the company employing such agents who act fraudulently should be bound with respect to their fraudulent transactions. The company can insure its officers and agents; it can obtain indemnity against the frauds of its own agents; but the contention is that once it holds out an agent as having express or implied authority to act on its behalf, then it should be bound by all contracts entered into on its behalf by such agent.

I confess I am strongly of that opinion, but it is a matter respecting which I am in the judgment of the house. Until 1932, I think I am safe in saying, it was not necessary for one dealing at arm's length with an agent of a company to search out the contents of the company's by-laws in this regard. Apparently it is now necessary, and what I suggest by way of amendment is to strike out the words "as such under the by-laws of the company" and insert "either express or implied" so that the provision would then read:

> Every contract, agreement, engagement or bargain made, and every bill of exchange drawn, accepted or endorsed, and every promissory note and cheque made, drawn or endorsed on behalf of the company, by any agent, officer or servant of the company, in general accordance with his powers, either express or implied, shall be binding upon the company.

Mr. JACOBS: Does the Secretary of State propose to change the decision of the supreme court by act of parliament?

Mr. CAHAN: I am proposing to change the effect of it. I don't think it has ever before been decided in Canada that one dealing at arm's length with an officer of a company, held out as having certain powers, should be bound to search the by-laws of the company to ascertain what the particular powers of that particular agent were in fact.

Mr. JACOBS: Has the decision of all our courts been always against the contention?

Mr. CAHAN: I can only say that so far as I am aware it has never been held that anyone, in dealing at arm's length with an officer or agent of a company, held out as having certain powers in respect of notes, cheques and ordinary purchases made by an agent, was bound to search the by-laws of the company to ascertain what the powers of such agent were. In other words, one could depend upon the implied powers of the agent to perform on behalf of the company the particular transaction. I will let the clause stand if hon. gentlemen would like to look into it further. I appreciate assistance.

Mr. JACOBS: Before we pass this legislation would the Secretary of State not look into the question whether the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council might be invited to pass upon it?

Mr. CAHAN: We have no need to refer such matters to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as this parliament has jurisdiction. There is nothing sacred about this particular section, which is a section of Canadian law and is not usually found in any other company law. It was probably inserted in some discussion in committee such as we are having to-day when some member suggested the insertion of the word "by-law" and it was put in.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is nothing retroactive in this? There is no case pending?

Mr. CAHAN: The case is decided. This bill has no retroactive effect.

Mr. GEARY: I would like to call the attention of the minister to subclause 2. If you make the change in subclause 1 and read it in connection with subclause 2, dispensing with the seal, you have made the contract very informal. This is contrary to all the trend of practice in the old country so far. In municipalities the seal is necessary and it should be necessary in a company in the case of a contract of any importance. One can easily see in this case there is no formality whatever. As the minister says, a man held out by a company as having certain powers who is negotiating or dealing in regard to an important contract has bound the company if he enters into the contract and should not have done so. I have always been averse to dispensing with the necessity of a seal. Certainly if we are going to make the change which the minister now suggests in subclause 1, the whole thing is going to be reduced to a situation that I think is wrong.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. member makes a strong contention, but this is a reproduction verbatim et literatim of the section as it now appears in the companies act.

Mr. GEARY: I know, but we are discussing it.

Mr. CAHAN: The business of the country is carried on without the sanctity of seals.

Mr. GEARY: And lawsuits are incurred.

Mr. CAHAN: It is provided in subclause 2:

> In no case shall it be necessary to have the seal of the company affixed to any such contract, agreement, engagement, bargain, bill of exchange, promissory note or cheque, or to prove that the same was made, drawn, accepted or endorsed, as the case may be, in pursuance of any by-law or special vote or order.

The complexities of business life at the present time are such that those dealing with companies must rely upon the holding out of agents as authorized to conduct certain business such as buying, selling, drawing cheques, making notes, accepting bills, and it seems to me that we should make the company responsible for losses arising out of the frauds of its own agents. That is all I am suggesting.

Mr. GEARY: I am not of course making any observations with regard to everyday bills of exchange, notes and that sort of thing; I am directing my observations entirely to important contracts, contracts of substance, which often become the subject of litigation.

Mr. RALSTON: I discovered this section only recently and I was called upon to advise in connection with it. Fortunately in the case I had, the by-laws were such as to make the company responsible for the acts of the officer. I was surprised that there was a section of that kind in the act because I had always thought a company was bound just the same as an individual was bound by the act of an agent within the general scope of his authority. That is the usual rule or more properly within the apparent scope of his authority. Perhaps that is a more accurate way of putting the rule.

Mr. CAHAN: The apparent scope of his authority.

Mr. RALSTON: So far as I am concerned, I see no difficulty on the score raised by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. If that case is decided, it is decided and that is the end of the matter. What we are doing here is to decide what shall be the law in the future. My inclination is the same as that of the Secretary of State, that with respect to a dominion company the same law should apply as to acts of an agent of an individual or of a provincial company which is not subject to this section. I think we might dispense with subclause 1 and probably subclause 3 as well and simply insert the provision with regard to dispensing with the seal, because the company is bound by the act of its agent without that enabling subclause 1. If the Secretary of State would prefer to leave the clause as it is, then it might be well to use the words of the English common law, namely that the company is responsible for the acts of the agent within the apparent scope of the authority of such officer or agent.

Mr. JACOBS: I agree with what the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) has said except as to his statement that I am the member for Jacques Cartier. I am the member for Cartier. I want to be correct in every respect.

Mr. CAHAN: I will consent to allow this clause to stand in order to see whether with the assistance of hon. gentlemen a better draft can be made.

Section stands.

On section 38—Transfer may not be restricted.

Mr. CAHAN: We held up clause 38 in passing until we had later decided as to the terms of the clauses with regard to registration. Those have now been decided by an amendment which has been approved and I think clause 38 might now pass.

Mr. BUTCHER: Would the minister mind defining "a recognized stock exchange"? I understand there are all kinds of stock exchanges and some of them that were in existence a while ago have now gone out of existence. There are some curbs: the Montreal curb, the New York curb and so on. Will all of these be recognized exchanges?

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot define it. This has been on the statutes for many years. There are certain stock exchanges which are recognized by law, have a corporate existence and capacity, and there are others which are not so recognized. I suggest that no difficulties have arisen and I am using exactly the same term as has been used before, am I not?

Mr. JACOBS: The courts should decide upon that question.

Mr. CAHAN: The real effect of it is this, that if the shares of a company are listed on a stock exchange and those shares are not fully paid, every person who buys them has full and ample notice that he is buying them for what they represent in assets and is by such purchase assuming the liability with respect to the unpaid part of his subscription for the shares. So a distinction is made in that respect.

Mr. BUTCHER: It had occurred to me it might be a little more important to define those words because of the change in the clause. There is quite a material change between the old section 80 and the present clause. There are certain special rights belonging to shareholders under subsection 2; rights not conferred under the present act. Perhaps it would be necessary in the interest of shareholders to define what a recognized stock exchange is. I may be wrong, I am simply asking for information.

Mr. CAHAN: I have replied to the hon. gentleman as best I can. If he wishes the section to stand I shall let it stand for further consideration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Section agreed to.

On section 39—Transmission by will or intestacy.

Mr. CAHAN: This section stood, and I had proposed an amendment, which is printed, to give recognition to a transmission by notarial will in the province of Quebec, of which a copy duly certified in accordance with the laws of that province is presented. It was an oversight in the old act, and difficulty has from time to time been caused owing to the fact that the Dominion Companies Act did not recognize the transmission of an estate by what is called a notarial will. When copying this again I overlooked it for the time, but it has been brought to my notice, therefore the proposed amendment has been printed. I shall ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) to move the amendment to section 39.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I move in section 39 to——strike out the words after "testamentary" in the thirty-third line to the end of subsection (1), and substitute therefor the following words:—

"or, in the case of a transmission by notarial will in the province of Quebec, a copy thereof duly certified in accordance with the laws of said province, or the said other judicial or official instrument, or an exemplified copy thereof or extract therefrom under the seal of such court or other authority, without any proof of the authenticity of such seal or other proof whatever, shall be produced; and a copy thereof, together with a declaration in writing showing the nature of such transmission, signed and executed by such one or more of the persons claiming by virtue thereof as the company may require, or, if any such person be any other company, signed and executed by an officer of such other company, shall be deposited with an officer of the company or other person authorized by the directors of the company to receive the same."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 45—Limitation of liability of shareholders.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I do not know whether there is any liability fixed on the shareholder by this section. It seems to me that the wording means that if there is any liability on any shareholder it shall be limited, in the case of shares with nominal or par value, to the amount unpaid. I have drafted a new clause, which I had better move in order to bring it to the minister's attention.

Mr. CAHAN: I have a copy of it, but I would like to explain.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I am not pressing the change; it was only to have the matter considered. I should be glad to hear the minister on that point.

Mr. CAHAN: I would like the attention of the legal members to section 45 as drafted. It provides:

45. (1) The shareholders of the company shall not, as such, be responsible for any act, default or liability of the company, or for any engagement, claim, payment, loss, injury, transaction, matter or thing relating to or connected with the company.

That is the law at the present time.

(2) The liability of a shareholder in respect of any share held by him in the company, in respect of which he is liable as a shareholder, shall be limited:

(a) in the case of a share with nominal or par value, to the amount unpaid thereon;

That seems to me to be clear and definite. It has been the law for many years.

Mr. JACOBS: That is the law.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes; I do not think there is any confusion about it. That is, if he is the owner of fixed par value shares of say $100, and only $80 has been paid up thereon, he continues liable with respect to the unpaid balance, namely $20. That has been the law and no confusion in the interpretation of it has been brought to my notice. Then:

(b) in the case of a share without nominal or par value to the amount of the consideration for which the share was issued by the company which is unpaid thereon.

In that case he signs a subscription for a share without nominal or par value, agreeing to pay X dollars therefor. If he agreed to pay $50 and has paid up only $40, he continues liable for the balance remaining unpaid thereon. To ascertain what that balance is it is necessary to see first his subscription agreement, to know what he agreed to pay, and then to ascertain how much he has in fact paid.

[Mr. Bothwell.]

Mr. BOTHWELL: I am satisfied with that explanation, Mr. Chairman, if the committee see it in the way the minister does. I was not able to get that wording quite clearly in my mind.

Then another question in regard to that section. The old section 45 has been deleted from the act. It reads:

Every shareholder, until the whole amount of his shares has been paid up, shall be individually liable to the creditors of the company to an amount equal to that not paid up thereon; but he shall not be liable to an action therefor by any creditor until an execution at the suit of such creditor against the company has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part.

2. The amount due on such execution, not exceeding the amount unpaid on his shares, as aforesaid, shall be the amount recoverable, with costs, from such shareholder.

I understand from the explanatory note that no action has been taken on that old clause for a number of years, and the suggestion is made that a creditor of the company has other remedies than under the companies act; he can take proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act or certain provisions of the Winding-up Act. But under the Bankruptcy Act a creditor cannot take proceedings against the company unless the indebtedness to him exceeds $500. Is that correct?

Mr. CAHAN: That is my recollection.

Mr. BOTHWELL: And he cannot take proceedings under the Winding-up Act unless the indebtedness exceeds $200. Although action has not been necessary or has not been taken under old section 45, nevertheless it may have served a good purpose by being in the act. The fact that it was not used I submit is not an argument for omitting it. I believe it would have a salutary effect to leave that provision in, and would protect creditors the indebtedness to whom is under $500 or $200.

Mr. CAHAN: The reason for the omission is that I was quite convinced that creditors are well protected under the Winding-up Act and the Bankruptcy Act, and that it was perhaps inexpedient to allow one creditor of a company to select a particular asset and appropriate it to himself; that if a company reached such a stage it was better that it should come under the supervision of the court, which under either act I have mentioned will provide by order of the court for an equitable distribution of the assets. In my opinion it is better to preclude any creditor from obtaining any special preference by bringing a special action. In recent years whenever such action was attempted other creditors refusing to hold off came in and brought the company under the Winding-up Act or the Bankruptcy Act for the express purpose of securing an equitable distribution of assets.

QUESTIONS

HAVRE ST. PIERRE, QUE., WHARF

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has the government reconsidered requests already made since the year 1930, with respect to repairs to be done to the wharf at Havre St. Pierre, on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence?
2. If so, will the government comply with such requests this year?

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to this and the following question I mentioned the other day that these questions asking if the government will comply with certain requests involving the expenditure of public moneys are highly improper questions to be asked. They were stricken out when asked by other members, and I think the same rule should be followed with respect to these.

Mr. SPEAKER: Questions 3 and 4 are stricken out.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The other day the questions were answered in bulk. They asked if the government had considered the request and would later on make known their decision in the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not so in this case.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That means we will not get it, then.

BIG BEAVER, SASK., POSTMISTRESS

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. Who is the postmaster or postmistress at Big Beaver, Saskatchewan?
2. Is he or she a British subject?
3. If a British subject, is he or she such by birth or naturalization?
4. If by naturalization, when naturalized and by what process?

Mr. CAHAN: An answer to this question cannot be given before a considerable length of time. The postmistress at Big Beaver is, of course, well known, but whether she is a British subject or not depends on a number of facts which we have to elicit, such as who is her father? Where was he born? Did he become naturalized in Canada? There are many other questions to be asked and it will therefore take us some time to ascertain the facts by inquiry of the family.

Question stands.

PUBLIC WORKS—EAST ESSEX

Mr. MORAND:

What was the total amount spent by the Department of Public Works for the years January, 1922, to June, 1930, in the following towns: Windsor, Sandwich, Walkerville, East Windsor (formerly Ford City), Riverside, Tecumseh, Sandwich East, Sandwich West?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

Windsor, $129,614.94; Sandwich, $26,391.31; Walkerville, $39,853.06; East Windsor, Nil; Riverside, Nil; Tecumseh, Nil; Sandwich East, Nil; Sandwich West, Nil.

WINDSOR, ONT.—PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. MORAND:

1. What is the total cost of the new federal building in Windsor, Ontario?
2. How much rent was paid to house the Post Office Department during the construction of the new federal building and to whom was it paid?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. $759,744.50.
2. $7,001.88 paid to The Star Publishing Company of Windsor.

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last the right hon. leader of the opposition asked certain questions following a statement made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. Blair) and I promised I would ascertain what the facts were.

Mr. Ferguson as High Commissioner for Canada succeeded Sir Horace Wilson as chairman of the imperial economic committee for one year on the first of March last. I said that I was not quite sure whether he held the office for one year. The election was on the first of March. The imperial economic committee came into being in 1925, its principal purpose being the preparation of statistical information and reports with respect to the marketing of foodstuffs and raw materials principally in the United Kingdom. Last year, as the house is aware, the imperial economic committee took over in part the work that had previously been undertaken by the empire marketing board, and that work is still being carried on by the imperial economic committee, and the expenses are being paid pro rata by all the dominions, India and Great Britain. The empire marketing board's expenses were wholly borne, as perhaps the right hon. gentleman will recall, by Great Britain. The annual cost of the committee is substantially £20,000 of which Canada contributes in the vicinity of £3,200.

FIRST NARROWS BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MUNN (Vancouver North): On the ninth of May an order of the house was passed for a copy of all correspondence in connection with the First Narrows bridge, Vancouver. I would like to ask the minister in charge when we may expect this return.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): If the hon. gentleman will allow that question to stand I will look into the facts and find out what the position is.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Following up that question may I ask the Minister of Public Works in view of representations that I have received from the city of Vancouver when we may expect a determination under the Navigable Waters Protection Act in regard to the First Narrows bridge at Vancouver?

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): There are some requirements of the department as to additional information which have not yet been complied with, and until that information is received a decision cannot be made.

KING'S BIRTHDAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The right hon. leader of the opposition asked yesterday whether the house would sit on Monday or not. It is the intention to sit on Monday.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister based on a telegram I have received from the Vancouver publicity bureau as follows:

> The Vancouver publicity bureau strongly urge that you support the principle of federal tourist advertising.

I would ask the Prime Minister if the government has under consideration a grant for the purpose of encouraging tourists to come to Canada.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The house is I suppose aware, Mr. Speaker, that a report has been made by a committee of the other house of this parliament which has been considering the question of how the tourist trade of this country could be extended. Certain recommendations were made which have been submitted to the government and will receive the consideration that is usually accorded to recommendations that come from so responsible a quarter.

DOMINION COMPANIES ACT

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 30, consideration in committee of Bill No. 64, respecting dominion companies—Mr. Cahan—Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

On section 14—Incidental and ancillary powers.

Mr. CAHAN: After considering the suggestion made by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher), we have decided to strike out from paragraph (q) the words "the payment of dividends, or." This amendment will comply completely with his suggestion and I suggest that the hon. member move accordingly.

Mr. BUTCHER: I move accordingly. I should like to express my appreciation of the action of the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) in this regard.

Mr. CAHAN: The arguments of the hon. member were quite convincing, and, as he suggests, these powers may be inserted in special letters patent if they are found necessary.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: There is another amendment to be made to paragraph (f), to insert the words "government or" after the word "such" in the thirteenth line. These words were omitted in the printing.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: There is another amendment to paragraph (k), to delete the word "to" at the end of line fifty and insert a comma after the word "person" in line fifty-one.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: There is another amendment to paragraph (k). The words "to any company" in line two on page 10 should read "to any other company."

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: There is an amendment to paragraph (u), that the same be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

(u) to distribute among the shareholders of the company in kind, specie or otherwise, any property or assets of the company including any proceeds of the sale or disposal of any property of the company and in particular any shares, debentures, or other securities of or in any other company belonging to the company, or of which it may have power to dispose; provided either that such distribution is made for the purpose of enabling the company to surrender its charter under the provisions of this act, or that such distribution, apart from the provisions of this paragraph, would have been lawful if made in cash.

This is practically the same as the present law, whereby a company in surrendering its charter and making a distribution of its assets may make that distribution of assets as such or in cash.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 18—Contracts of agent binding on company.

Mr. CAHAN: I spent some time to-day examining this provision and have had the advantage of consulting with counsel. I have decided that subsection 1 of this section should be amended in accordance with the suggestion made yesterday by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). I am sending a copy of this amendment to the hon. gentleman and perhaps he will move it.

Mr. RALSTON: I move that section 18 be amended by striking out subsection 1 and inserting the following in substitution therefor:

(1) Every contract, agreement, engagement or bargain made, and every bill of exchange drawn, accepted or endorsed, and every promissory note and cheque made, drawn or endorsed on behalf of the company, by any agent, officer or servant of the company, within the apparent scope of his authority as such agent, officer or servant, shall be binding upon the company.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I notice this amendment contains the words "within the apparent scope of his authority," and for my own information I should like to know if that is the proper word to use. I understand the general custom is to use the words "general scope."

Mr. RALSTON: I used the word "general" yesterday and then corrected myself. I have not looked up the decisions but I feel quite satisfied that "apparent" is the proper word.

Mr. CAHAN: I submitted it to counsel this morning and apparently this is in accord with the English decisions.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 48—By-law for subdivision, reduction, increase, etc., of share capital.

Mr. BUTCHER: I would direct the attention of the committee to paragraph (d) which reads as follows:

(d) change all or any of its previously authorized shares with par value, issued or unissued, into the same or a different number of shares of any class or classes without par value and not having priority as to capital or being subject to redemption;

This paragraph should be read with the first part of subsection 1, which reads:

(1) Subject to confirmation by supplementary letters patent, a company may from time to time by by-law ...

(d) change all or any of its previously authorized shares with par value, issued or unissued, into the same or a different number of shares of any class or classes without par value and not having priority as to capital or being subject to redemption;

It should also be read in conjunction with subsection 2:

No such by-law shall take effect until it is sanctioned by at least two-thirds of the votes of the holders of each class of shares thereby dealt with, cast at a special general meeting of shareholders called for the purpose and confirmed by supplementary letters patent.

This I notice is an innovation; the same provision apparently is not found in the sections which this section replaces, that is to say, sections 58, 59 and 60 of the present act. I am afraid it is fraught with danger. There are features that I personally do not like and I am going to move later on that subsection (d) be struck out. My reason for asking that it be deleted may be found in the case I referred to when speaking early in February, or perhaps later, on the subject of company promotions in general. I will not refer by name to the company in regard to which I am about to speak; I will simply say that a certain company in western Canada during the past few months has made a change in its capital organization. This is the story. In the early history of the company certain shareholders bought 4,500 preferred shares at $100 par value. At the same time 3,000 shares of common stock were sold at $100 a share. The preferred stock became entitled to voting power after one year's default in the payment of dividends. In 1933, dividends were not paid and very naturally the holders of the preferred shares concluded that they had a right to step in, use their voting power and take possession of the company. What really happened was this. In the meantime the holders of the 3,000 common shares had passed a by-law to the effect that these 3,000 common shares of $100 par should be changed to 15,000 no par shares. When the petition was presented to the appropriate authority—

Mr. CAHAN: Is that a dominion company?

Mr. BUTCHER: No. I said so in my previous speech on the subject, but I see the same danger in this subsection. When these holders of the preferred shares, because their dividends were in default, assumed that by reason of their voting power they could take control of the company, they with 4,500 shares, were met by 15,000 shares of no par value. This apparently had been done perfectly legally. The petition presented to the proper authority had stated frankly that the dividends were not in arrears, and in fact they were not when the petition was presented; apparently everything was in order. But this is what really happened. Those men who had paid out their good money, no less a sum than $450,000, found that that money had no voting power and they were left without the relief which they had every right to expect when they purchased those shares.

I am afraid that under this subsection the same thing could happen again, and in the case of a company in a similar situation, the preferred shareholders having no vote until their dividends were in default, the holders of common stock having voting power might meet and pass a by-law and appeal to the Secretary of State for supplementary letters patent, and apparently there would be no reason why they should not be granted; because, so far as I can understand, it is not necessary to consult the preferred shareholders in such a case. The only shareholders whom it is necessary to consult are those who have votes with respect to the class of shares "thereby dealt with."

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. member is entirely in error in that.

Mr. BUTCHER: I shall be pleased to have the minister show me wherein I am in error.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman has referred to a company which I understand was not under the jurisdiction of the Companies Act of Canada, and I can only assure him that if such a proposition had come before the Secretary of State during the past four years it would not have received approval. This clause is designed to prevent just such action as that to which he has referred, by providing, first, that in the case of these several transactions which are now being carried out frequently in the present days of depression and reorganization, they shall not be carried out except by the sanction of at least two-thirds of the votes of each class of shares thereby dealt with. Now whether or not the preferred shareholders have votes under the by-laws of the company, under this express enactment two-thirds of the shares affected must vote in favour of the reconstruction or reorganization proposed, and the votes must be cast at a special general meeting of shareholders held for that purpose, of which they have due notice. Moreover, as a further protection, even if the by-law is passed, even if each class of shareholders affected approve and confirm the proposed reorganization by a two-thirds vote of each class, then the whole matter comes before the Secretary of State, and the proposed reconstruction cannot be carried into effect except by the grant of supplementary letters patent. I cannot conceive of any other protective measures which I could throw about such proposed reconstruction.

Mr. RALSTON: Would not the Secretary of State feel safer if the words "dealt with" were changed?

Mr. CAHAN: "Thereby affected."

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, thereby affected.

Mr. CAHAN: I am prepared to accept that.

Mr. RALSTON: That is used in section 144.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. member move that amendment?

Mr. BUTCHER: I notice that the Secretary of State used the word "affected," and if that word were here I should be satisfied. I am pleased to move therefore that the words "dealt with" be struck out and the word "affected" be substituted therefor after the word "thereby."

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I suggest that there will be some difficulty if you make that substitution. There is this difference: "shares dealt with" means the shares referred to in the subclause; "shares affected" might be other shares that might be affected. The change suggested is a dangerous one. The subclause had better be left alone.

Mr. CAHAN: I think the words "dealt with" are really more specific; in my statement I used the word "affected," but there has to be the vote of two-thirds of the shares dealt with in the reorganization. I would like to meet the hon. gentleman's wishes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It might read "of such shares," but I think the subclause is all right as it stands.

Mr. BUTCHER: In the case I mentioned, which shares would the Secretary of State say were being dealt with—the common stock or the preferred shares? I would submit in the case I mentioned the preferred shares are not dealt with but they are affected.

Mr. CAHAN: They were certainly dealt with in the reorganization of the company. The hon. member was complaining that although the preferred shares were dealt with, the preferred shareholders did not have a vote. All I say to the hon. gentleman is this, that in drafting legislation each draftsman prefers his own words as he is accustomed to use them and it is very difficult to find words which are acceptable to all parties. I think on reflection the words "dealt with" are probably well selected. I am not obstinate about this matter; I am subject to the approval of hon. members of the legal profession but their real safeguard in this is that no scheme of that kind can get through unless it is authorized by a by-law which has been confirmed by the vote of two-thirds majority of each class of shares thereby dealt with. I think "dealt with" is the proper term because there may be classes of shares which are not dealt with and the holders of which have therefor no interest in attending a special general meeting for the purpose of confirming the by-law. I prefer the words "dealt with," but I am in the judgment of the committee.

Mr. GEARY: Would the minister tell us what is the practice of his department in just such a case as has been set forth by my hon. friend opposite? If voting power is not given to the preferred shareholders until a certain contingency arises in the way of passed dividends and if before that happens an application of the common shareholders comes before the department for an increase in the number of shares or a subdivision of them, would the department consider the application of the shareholders who have the right to vote?

Mr. CAHAN: The object of this clause is this: although the by-laws of the company provide that preferred shareholders shall vote only in certain contingencies, and although this may not be one of the contingencies under which they would ordinarily vote, I wish to provide in this clause that they shall have a vote for this particular confirmation, and that if two-thirds of them do not vote for this particular purpose, then the Secretary of State would not even consider their petition, as after all that is done, they have to petition for supplementary letters patent when the whole matter must be reviewed by the Secretary of State before such supplementary letters patent are granted.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Would it meet the objection to insert the word "such" before the word "shares" so that the subclause would read:

Of each class of such shares.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think the word "such" would cover it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Perhaps the hon. member for Last Mountain will withdraw his last amendment.

Mr. BUTCHER: Just a moment. I was going to ask the Secretary of State: Can it be said that in the case I mentioned the preferred shares are being dealt with? They are affected but in my opinion they are not dealt with; the only shares that are dealt with are the common shares. Could the matter be handled in this way—"thereby dealt with or affected"?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not keep in mind the particular case referred to by the hon. gentleman and I do not think I should be asked to give an opinion as to the effect of a reconstruction under another companies act with which I am not familiar and one which has not come to my attention.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would like to make an observation. Anything that will be detrimental to the reorganization of companies now in difficulties and undergoing reorganization, short of providing against fraud and that sort of thing, ought not to be imposed in this clause. That is a sound principle. Parties engaged in reorganization of companies have to meet very difficult situations; they weigh the balance of equity as between different classes of shareholders and they make the best proposal that can be put forward having regard to all interests. If you impose too many obstacles, you just make the burden that much greater in the effort to put a company back on its feet. If the provision is for another purpose, for preventing manipulation of shares for gain, that is a horse of another colour.

Mr. BOTHWELL: It seems to me that in this clause provision is made against what happened in the case to which the hon. member for Last Mountain referred. In that particular case 3,000 shares of common stock of a par value of $100 each were changed into 15,000 shares of no par value. The original incorporation of the company called for 4,500 preferred shares of $100 each with a provision that when dividends on the preferred stock became in arrears for one year the preferred shareholders then had a vote in the management of the affairs of the company.

Mr. CAHAN: Is that preferred or common stock?

Mr. BOTHWELL: There were 4,500 shares of preferred stock and 3,000 shares of common stock of a par value of $100 each. That meant that the preferred shareholders had $450,000 and the common stockholders had $300,000 in the company. The provision was that whenever dividends on the preferred stock were in arrears for a period of one year the preferred shareholders obtained a vote in the company.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And the voting strength.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Yes. In the last year apparently the common shareholders who had the management of the company saw that they were not going to be able to pay dividends on the prefered stock and they then passed a by-law changing their 3,000 shares of common stock of a par value of $100 each into 15,000 shares of no par value. When the preferred shareholders stepped in and expected to take over the management of the company they found that they had only 4,500 votes as against 15,000.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. CAHAN: But that is exactly what this clause is intended to preclude and prevent. We are saying by statute enacted by this parliament that that thing cannot be done except with the consent of two-thirds majority of the holders of the 4,500 preference shares.

Mr. BOTHWELL: The way this clause stands now, the only shares dealt with were the common shares. The preferred shareholders' dividends were not in arrears at the time this was done, so they had no say, their shares were not dealt with in any way, but they were most seriously affected.

Mr. BURY: They were affected in respect of voting power.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would it not meet the hon. gentleman's difficulty if both terms were used, "dealt with, or affected"? In one case you are dealing with shares actually changed, and the other shares would be affected. "Dealt with or prejudicially affected."

Mr. CAHAN: I am in the hands of the committee, but I do not agree with the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) in his construction. Although the common shareholders may have had their votes increased I do not yet see how that prejudices the rights of the preferred shareholders who had not the right to vote. Under the by-law they were given the right to vote in certain contingencies, but those contingencies had not arisen. I may be very stupid about it but I do not see how those preferred shareholders were affected, prejudicially or otherwise.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) made his point very plain. Three thousand common shares, par value $100, were by virtue of a by-law passed in the ordinary way changed into 15,000 shares each having a vote. They multiplied the voting power of the common shareholders by five. I think it was a pretty sharp device to keep control of the company and prevent it falling into the hands of the preferred shareholders, so depriving the preferred shareholders of the rights contemplated when the fully paid preferred shares were set up and sold to the public.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not going to discuss the thing at length, but if the preferred shareholders took their stock on the clear understanding that they had no vote, I fail to see how, it matters to them, not having a vote, whether there were 15,000 votes in the common shareholders or 3,000. But I am willing to accept any suggestion in order to make progress.

Mr. RALSTON: I know my hon. friend is an excellent draftsman, and would like to use the same terms all through. Section 123 uses the word "affecting." Should not that word be used in both places?

Mr. CAHAN: I am quite willing to accept that. Section 123 does not use the words "dealt with."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): The amendment moved by Mr. Butcher is that subsection (d) of section 48 be struck out.

Mr. CAHAN: That is withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): What is the next amendment?

Mr. BOTHWELL: "Dealt with or affected."

Mr. CAHAN: No, the next amendment is to subsection 2, in the third line, which is the 39th line of the page. I accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) that we strike out the words "dealt with" and in lieu thereof insert the word "affected."

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am opposed to that. I think we should keep both in, if we want to meet the situation visualized by the hon. member for Swift Current.

Mr. BOTHWELL: If this would be satisfactory to the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) I would move:

That the words "or affected" be added after the word "with" in the third line of that subsection.

Mr. CAHAN: I am perfectly willing to accept that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I ask the hon. member for Swift Current whether he thinks that for the case he outlined he would find a remedy in the section as he proposes to have it? Were the preferred shareholders at that moment affected by the change? Not at all that I can see.

Mr. CAHAN: They had no voting power at all.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They might be potentially affected, but they were not actually at the moment.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I think they were. At the time they bought the stock they knew what the situation was. They said: If this company is not able to make its way, if it defaults in dividends for twelve months we are going to be able to take charge. They knew they were putting up most of the money; I do not know all the details but part of this common stock went to the promoters. The preferred shareholders believed that when necessary they would get control of the company.

Mr. CAHAN: And they were not prevented by anything the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. BOTHWELL: They were absolutely prevented.

Mr. CAHAN: How?

Mr. BOTHWELL: Because they had only 4,500 votes as against 15,000.

Mr. CAHAN: But I state that in every provision of that kind, where it is provided, as frequently it is, that in default of payment of dividends on the preferred stock the preferred shareholders shall have an exclusive right to vote, that exclusive right was preserved in that case, whether the common shareholders had 4,500 votes or 15,000.

Mr. BOTHWELL: This was not a case of exclusive right, they were simply entitled to a vote.

Mr. GEARY: Let me assure the hon. member for Swift Current that I entirely approve of the position he desires to get into, I only question the means he adopts. I do not believe that adding the word "affected" will achieve the result he desires. I think the best proof of that is that the present occupant of the office says that it will not. If you had that kind of proposition advanced to the present occupant of the office the case would not be taken care of by having the words "dealt with" or "affected." I think you must make it stronger.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Is there an amendment?

Mr. CAHAN: The motion before the committee, I understand, is that the words "or affected" should be added after "dealt with" in the 39th line of page 25. I am prepared to accept that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If there is any doubt, as suggested by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) I suggest that the clause be amended to read as follows:

No such by-law shall take effect until it is sanctioned by at least two-thirds of the votes of the holders of each class of shares thereby dealt with or which are or may be prejudicially affected. . . .

That would surely cover it.

Mr. GEARY: I think it is the same thing.

Mr. CAHAN: What the hon. gentlemen are doing, I tell them at once, is this. This subsection 2 relates to each and every of the preceding provisions. That is it affects (g), increase of the capital stock of the company, and so on. By this you are clearly tying up the necessary operations of a company very materially. All that is provided so far in this section as drafted is that the by-law dealing with any class of shares must first have the approval of at least a majority of all the shareholders. This clause then provides that the class of shares dealt with must, at this general meeting, also vote as a class, and by a two-thirds majority approve of the contemplated action. After that the Secretary of State must thoroughly investigate the matter before he issues supplementary letters patent. I think those provisions are sufficient; on reflection I quite agree with the hon. member for York-Sunbury that the words "or affected" may cause a very great deal of trouble in the case of an increase or reduction of capital. I prefer to leave it as it is.

Mr. GEARY: May I add one further word? I think the minister has settled the whole question. I think up to the moment it has escaped our attention that in the ordinary course this by-law must receive the approval of all classes of shareholders.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GEARY: The minister says that is the intention, but that the special class dealt with shall be represented by two-thirds of its number, so that you have the majority of all the shareholders—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is nothing in the legislation which says that all shareholders must approve.

Mr. RALSTON: It is the shares thereby dealt with.

Mr. CAHAN: The by-law must first be passed.

Mr. RALSTON: The by-law is passed in the ordinary course.

Mr. CAHAN: And after the by-law is passed it must be sanctioned by two-thirds of each class dealt with.

Mr. RALSTON: It has been suggested that we are perhaps restricting and tying up the operations of a company. Hon. members will recall that in practically all the provisions with regard to preferred shares there is an express provision that the rights of the preferred shareholders are not to be modified, altered, changed, amended, revised—every word a lawyer can think of is used—without a vote, generally, of three-quarters of the preferred shareholders. So it seems to me that it is not unreasonable here to ask for a two-thirds majority of those who, as I say, are "affected" or, as the hon. member for York-Sunbury says, are "prejudicially affected," which is perhaps a better expression. I certainly agree with the hon. member for York-Sunbury; I prefer his amendment to what has been suggested from this side.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): It has been moved by Mr. Bothwell that subsection (2) be amended by adding the words "or affected" after the words "dealt with" in line 39.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I was suggesting—I have not gone through the formality of moving it—that instead of those words we add after the word "with" in line 39 the words "or which are or may be prejudicially affected." The reason I interpolate the words "or may be" is to cover the case brought up by the hon. member for Swift Current. There was no actual default in that case, and the voting power was not actually vested when this move was made. But that action was anticipated, and that was a pretty sharp trick, in anticipation of what was going to happen. While strictly speaking the shares might not have been prejudicially affected at the moment, undoubtedly there was a potential affection. I know it is impossible to provide for every case, but this may help.

Mr. BOTHWELL: So far as I am concerned I am quite agreeable to the suggestion made by the hon. member for York-Sunbury, and I will withdraw my amendment in favour of his.

Mr. CAHAN: Then you simply throw upon the Secretary of State the duty of investigating to see whether any other class of shares is prejudicially affected. That may be an impossible investigation in many cases, I should think.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): It will not change your position.

Mr. CAHAN: In regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, the by-law must first be passed in the ordinary course, as he will admit, by a majority of the shareholders who have the right to vote.

Then, after having been passed, the by-law must be sanctioned by a vote of two-thirds of the majority of the holders of that class of share specially dealt with. All I can say to the hon. gentleman is that you cannot preclude all possibilities. If the proposition which he has suggested came before this present department of the Secretary of State it would have no chance at all—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAHAN: I would prefer to have it as it has been drafted, following consideration of nearly every aspect of the question, retaining the words "dealt with." If the committee is not favourable to that suggestion I would agree to "dealt with or affected." Then one can probably ascertain whether the other shares are affected at all, but the extent to which they are prejudicially affected is another matter.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Then do I understand that all amendments are withdrawn?

Mr. BOTHWELL: Under the circumstances I would urge the amendment I have suggested. It seems to me that with those words in the act, when a by-law is brought before the minister he will say to the applicants, "I think these shares are going to be affected, and you had better have that by-law approved by those shareholders." It will strengthen the hands of the minister, so it seems to me advisable to include those words.

Mr. CAHAN: While it may strengthen the hands of the minister at the same time it might enable a minority holding one class of shares, which shares are not dealt with, to disrupt the company in a time of crisis, if they saw fit to do so, by refusing to alow an increase of capital by the issue of new shares. That is the difficulty. In my experience, and I say it emphatically, I have seen more misdemeanors committed in company affairs by minorities than by majorities. That is the effect of it. If the shares that are to be dealt with support the by-law by a two-thirds majority, and if after that the Secretary of State exercises his discretion, having all the facts before him, I think that is sufficient. Having said that, the committee may take whatever alternative it wishes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have to go to the banking committee, so I cannot remain longer, but I will say that no class of junior security holders ought to be put in a position where they can affect the rights of senior security holders. That is a very sound principle. If you once embark on a contrary policy you invite all kinds of trouble. The rights of senior security holders, who have put up their money in good faith on the strength of a by-law passed, ratified and sanctioned as contemplated in the act, should be respected unless and until the time arrives when they, by a large majority, voluntarily relinquish their rights, and no junior security holders such as common share holders should be put in a position where, by their own motion, they can over-ride the rights of senior security holders.

Mr. CAHAN: I quite agree, but I do not think that statement applies to the hypothetical case mentioned by hon. gentlemen opposite. In that case the preferred shareholder had no vote and having no vote, no right was taken from him by the proceedings. But if the suggestion of the hon. member for Swift Current is accepted it would mean that if there were common or ordinary shareholders of capital stock to the extent of $100,000, they could not issue another $100,000 of stock to increase the assets of the company even though thereby they placed the preferred shareholders in substantially and materially a better position. You have to look at it both ways, and from my experience I think it would be far better to leave it to the discretion and careful oversight of the department of the Secretary of State than to accept a suggestion which may preclude companies in these times of crisis from securing additional capital by the issue of ordinary common shares at their proper value.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Does the hon. member for Swift Current insist on his amendment?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Is the minister going to accept the words "or affected"?

Mr. CAHAN: I am going to object. I am convinced that that proposal was wrong, and I have withdrawn my suggestion in that regard.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Will the minister accept the insertion of the word "such" before "shares" in line 39?

Mr. CAHAN: I would be willing to accept it but I do not think it clarifies the clause.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): It is moved by Mr. Bothwell that subsection 2 of section 48 be amended by inserting the words "or affected" in line 39 after the words "dealt with."

Amendment negatived, on division.

Section agreed to.

On section 59—Preference stock by by-law.

Mr. CAHAN: There is a motion already before the committee, Mr. Chairman, to strike out all the words after the word "Part" in the thirty-sixth line. I think the full meaning and effect is given to the section although these words be stricken out, as the rights of the preferred shareholders and others in respect of the ordinary shares are clearly provided for in other sections of the bill.

Mr. RALSTON: And the words to be stricken out just underline it?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, and they might cause confusion.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BOTHWELL: There is one question I would ask the minister in regard to subsection 2 of this section dealing with the preferred or deferred shares. The proviso in subsection 2 reads:

Provided, however, that any term or provision of such by-laws, whereby the rights of holders of such preferred or deferred shares are limited or restricted, shall be fully set out in the certificates of such shares.

I was just curious to know the reason why all the restrictions are to be set out in the case of the preferred shares while nothing is said in that regard as to the common shares. Would it not be reasonable to have the restrictions also set out on the common shares? That does not affect this section alone.

Mr. CAHAN: There has been a practice by some of these companies of providing by their by-laws that the preferred shareholders shall not have the right to vote, and the holder of a preferred share who receives a certificate in the ordinary course knows nothing of that. He has not been informed as to that particular by-law. We have therefore deemed it advisable to insert that if the rights of these preferred shareholders have been restricted, in such a case as the hon. member himself mentioned this afternoon, it must be clearly set out on the certificate so that the holder will have knowledge of it from the time he obtains the certificate.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 61—When redemption or purchase not a reduction of capital.

Mr. CAHAN: I suppose hon. gentlemen have before them the amendment to strike out paragraph (b) on page 31 of the bill and substitute the following:

[The Chairman.]

(b) if such redemption or purchase for cancellation of such fully paid shares is made without impairment of the company's capital by payments out of the ascertained net profits of the company which have been set aside by the directors for the purposes of such redemption or of such purchase for cancellation, and if such net profits are then available for such application as liquid assets of the company, as shown by the last balance sheet of the company, certified by the company's auditors, and being made up to a date not more than ninety days prior to such redemption or purchase for cancellation, and after giving effect to such redemption or purchase for cancellation;

This is a clearer expression, I think, of the purport of the section than was found in the original print. I do not understand that there is any objection to it.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 63 to 65 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that sections 63 to 65 inclusive were held at the request of the hon. member for York-Sunbury. He is not here at the moment.

Mr. CAHAN: I understand that he has no amendment to move in connection with these sections. These sections were held for further reflection, I think.

On section 67—Registration of order appointing receiver.

Mr. BUTCHER: I notice that the word "wilfully" has been introduced into subsection 2. Would not the Secretary of State admit that the introduction of the word "wilfully" will make it exceedingly difficult to secure a conviction?

Mr. CAHAN: I think the hon. gentleman is right. I have a motion in the votes and proceedings striking out the words "knowingly and" in the first line of subsection 2.

Mr. DUPRE: I move the amendment accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 73—Definition. "Prospectus."

Mr. CAHAN: I have an amendment in connection with lines forty and forty-one on page 37, to strike out the words "any shares, debentures or obligations—herein sometimes collectively referred to as 'securities'"—and substituting therefor the words "any securities." These words are defined elsewhere and the insertion of a definition at this point would simply obscure the meaning.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand securities are covered by the definition section.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes. I am going to place it clearly in the definition section.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: There is another amendment to lines eighteen, nineteen and twenty on page 38, to strike out the words "securities of the company or its securities means securities of a company issued or to be issued by the company" and insert the words "'securities of a company' or 'its securities' means shares, debentures or obligations of a company issued or to be issued by the company." This definition will cover all cases.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 67—Registration of order appointing receiver.

Mr. CAHAN: Subsection 1 reads:

If any person obtains an order for the appointment of a receiver or manager—

And so on. I intend to insert the words "receiver and" after the word "or" in line forty-four, and also after the word "or" in line forty-five.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

Mr. RALSTON: Would it not be better to use separate phrases such as receiver or manager or receiver and manager? I am afraid you are cutting off the receiver from the manager.

Mr. CAHAN: I was instructed that there are only two alternatives; the courts may appoint a receiver but they do not appoint a manager alone except as receiver and manager.

Mr. RALSTON: That is so; at least I have never known it to be otherwise.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 74 agreed to.

On section 75—Applications not to be accepted before certain conditions fulfilled.

Mr. BUTCHER: I should like to speak upon all the prospectus sections at this time.

Mr. CAHAN: Certainly.

Mr. BUTCHER: I shall not be referring to each section individually. I have considered these sections very carefully and I must admit that they are very comprehensive. They are probably more comprehensive than any other prospectus sections which I have read, but I think one must admit that they will not cure probably the greatest evil which we have to-day in the matter of company promotions. So far as I can see, they do not touch the underwriter.

Mr. CAHAN: They touch completely the underwriter who underwrites and who is in any sense an agent of the company. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) touched upon this point yesterday and made it clear that after the shares are beyond the control of the company and the company's underwriter, there is then no restriction imposed, but, until that event happens, all these sections apply.

Mr. BUTCHER: I am not familiar with the facts, but I have been informed that quite often an underwriter has purchased shares.

Mr. CAHAN: Then he is a purchaser.

Mr. BUTCHER: But in many cases he is really acting as the broker or agent.

Mr. CAHAN: Then in that case there is absolutely no doubt that he is covered by all the prohibitions and restrictions here provided. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. BUTCHER: Will the Secretary of State point out to me any particular section by which he is affected?

Mr. CAHAN: It is made clear in several sections. I would refer the hon. member to the definition of underwriter, beginning at line 29 on page 38:

"underwriter" includes (a) any person who, to the knowledge of the company, proposes to subscribe for securities of the company with a view to the resale to the public of those securities or a part thereof, and (b) any person to whom a commission is proposed or intended to be paid by the company in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, whether absolutely or conditionally, or in consideration of his procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, whether absolute or conditional, for any securities of the company to be offered to the public for subscription.

Mr. BUTCHER: That does reach the underwriter who is not a purchaser of shares—

Mr. CAHAN: But he is not an underwriter when he becomes a purchaser. When he becomes a purchaser, when he has purchased, it is improper to refer to him as an underwriter; he is then a purchaser of shares and owns them completely.

Mr. BUTCHER: Is not an individual who purchases a large block of the shares of a corporation described in many cases as an underwriter?

Mr. CAHAN: He may be in certain parlance, and the fact is that in many cases where a colourable purchase is put through he certainly remains an underwriter; and this very elaborate definition on page 38 is given for the express purpose of catching the man who attempts a colourable proceeding of that kind.

Mr. BUTCHER: And the minister is quite satisfied that we cannot reach the person who actually buys shares and then proceeds to sell them again?

Mr. CAHAN: My best advice is this. Under the guise of dealing with companies, even with dominion companies, when we attempt to deal with transactions between individual stockholders or individual bondholders—the sale by one person of his bonds to another, or the sale by one person of his shares to another—these are matters relating to ordinary transactions with respect to property and civil rights which are under provincial jurisdiction, and we might endanger the act if we attempted to proceed otherwise than under the criminal law. I am clearly convinced of that.

Mr. BUTCHER: Recently I have been reading a book, Shareholders' Money, by Horace B. Samuel, in which this writer suggests that all persons who allow their names to appear on the prospectus, even bankers, brokers, trustees for debenture holders, auditors or solicitors of the company offering shares for sale, should be deemed to have authorized the issue of the prospectus, as much as in the case of directors. There is no doubt whatsoever that many sales are induced because of the prestige of the persons whose names appear on the prospectus. Has the Secretary of State considered the advisability of making a provision of that kind?

Mr. CAHAN: My own impression is that by this bill now before the house we may impose upon directors and auditors such severe restrictions that when the act takes effect it will be very difficult to procure directors to act or auditors to subject themselves to such penal provisions as there proposed. I think we have gone to the extreme.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. BUTCHER: I think some effort should be made to place upon the company the burden of proof that the shares have actually been sold to the so-called underwriter. To this end I move the following amendment, as subsection 6 of section 75:

When shares of a company are offered to the public for subscription by any person, firm or corporation who has directly or indirectly procured the disposition of such shares by the company, such shares shall be deemed to have been so offered by the company or on its behalf within the meaning of subsection (1) hereof, unless the company shall previously to such offer have filed with the Secretary of State a statutory declaration made by the president or vice-president or the secretary or treasurer verifying the number of shares so disposed of and stating that the company has no financial interest in any offer to the public for subscription which may be made by such person, firm or corporation of shares to the number specified.

My reason for the amendment is found in the fact that practically every one of the prospectus provisions, as the Secretary of State knows, contains the words "issued by or on behalf of." You will find those words on page 38, line 40; page 39, line 4; page 41, line 1; page 44, line 35. I quite understand that these words are very naturally there, but I am rather anxious to place the onus of proof on the company that their shares have been actually sold.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the hon. member comprehend the effect of what he suggests?

Mr. BUTCHER: I think so.

Mr. CAHAN: Shares of the Canadian Pacific Railway were no doubt sold fifty years ago—is it not fifty years since the Canadian Pacific was organized? Yet, is the Canadian Pacific Railway to have the onus of filing an affidavit now, when a thousand shares of its stock are sold, to the effect that it is no longer interested in those shares? It must simply mean that the company would have to follow every share. You cannot impose that burden upon a company, and I cannot accept the suggestion.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) spoke to me about the amendment just before three o'clock and I went over it with him. The amendment is an endeavour to meet the point raised by the Secretary of State. The amendment is intended to cover only an offer of shares to the public made by someone who had directly or indirectly procured the disposition of the shares from the company; or in other words, the first purchaser. That is what makes the difference. The words "directly or indirectly" are used but they are used there in order that the broker or underwriter might not be able to say: Well I did not get them directly from the company; it was my clerk or partner. Or it might be somebody else close to him but not the actual person who was offering the shares to the public. The amendment tries to make that clear. If it is not clear, of course I know my hon. friend will be only too glad to have it made clear. But as I apprehend the effect of my hon. friend's amendment, it does just one thing. It says to the company: When you dispose of shares, go and tell the Secretary of State if you have disposed of them for good and all, and if you do not do that it will be presumed that the person selling them to the public is offering them on your behalf and the prospectus provisions will apply. All a company has to do when it has actually disposed of shares, that is, has sold them, is to file a statement with, the Secretary of State that so many shares have been disposed of to So-and-so and then any disposition made by that person of those shares is not on behalf of the company. It is a good deal easier for the company to do that than for the public to attempt to prove that the sale was by or on behalf of the company. The amendment does not impose a very serious burden on the officers of the company and it will help very considerably to accomplish the object we are trying to attain here, namely, tightening up at least a bit these provisions with regard to prospectuses.

Mr. CAHAN: I admit the good intention of the hon. member for Last Mountain supported by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth in regard to the purpose of the amendment, but I suggest that as drawn it would mean that a company in respect of the sale of its shares would be compelled not only to return to the Secretary of State, as it does now, the number of shares which it has sold, because that is included in returns of capital, but also to indicate the persons to whom the shares were sold. I fail to see how you can distinguish between the purchaser of one share and the purchaser of one thousand shares, although the sale of one thousand shares may be made to a so-called investment banker who intends to resell them. I do not think we should go that far and make more complex regulations with regard to the sale of shares by an ordinary vendor to an ordinary vendee. We are now in this position with respect to dominion companies: we have imposed the most serious restrictions upon the company, upon the company's underwriters, upon any person who acts directly or indirectly as an agent of the company in putting out those shares to the public. When we have done that we have done all that is within the legislative competence of this parliament, and, moreover, of the nine provinces excepting one, each has imposed pains and penalties under the so-called securities acts upon those dealing with the subsequent sale of those shares. That is one thing that is necessarily beyond our jurisdiction, and I think the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth would agree with me that to every practising lawyer, it would be of very great assistance if those provinces could agree upon enacting their securities acts in the same terms so that everyone would be fully informed as to the restrictions imposed with respect to subsequent sales of shares. That is about as far as we can now go, because to impose this duty as it is stated in the amendment would keep a company making affidavits and filing them with the Secretary of State week by week and month by month so long as the company might remain in existence. I hope the hon. member for Last Mountain will leave something to be amended or restricted in years to come because I trust he will long remain a member of parliament with ample opportunities in that regard.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to make it abundantly clear to the committee what the effect of the amendment is. In a word, it is the intention to have the company make it clear that such and such a person is not its agent. The person purveying the shares of the company who has dealt directly with the company in procuring those shares is presumed to be its agent unless the company files an affidavit saying that he is not. That is all there is in the amendment and I do not think that is imposing very much of a burden. When the Secretary of State spoke I thought perhaps that was a compromise he might accept.

Mr. CAHAN: At the time a public sale is being made the presumption is that the stockbroker or investment banker so-called is really acting as an underwriter within the terms of this clause, and in case the company sought to escape liability the burden of proof would be upon it to show that such and such a person was not its agent in placing those shares before the public. Let us look at the more comprehensive features of the clause, far more comprehensive than under any English Companies Act. Clause 76 which we have passed provides that:

Sections 74, 75, and sections 77 to 82 inclusive—

Which are the prospectus clauses.

—shall not apply in respect of an offer by a company of its securities—

(a) to existing holders of its securities exclusively, for subscription to or in exchange for the securities held by them, where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly to others in connection with such transaction;

(b) to existing holders of its securities or to other creditors pursuant to an arrangement or compromise or reorganization—

Which is usually sanctioned by the courts. Those are excepted, but except for those exceptions every sale made by a company directly or indirectly by its underwriters or agents comes within these prospectus clauses. I think they are so extensive and stringent that it will be quite impossible for investment brokers who are actually underwriters or agents of the company to becloud or colour the issue by insisting that they are purchasers. In fact, the prospectus has to be sent out by the company. If the underwriter sends out a prospectus he is bound to make an affidavit that before he accepts an application for a single share the applicant has had the prospectus in his hands. This bill goes much further than that, it gives the purchaser a certain time in which he may renounce his contract if there is a single misstatement or misrepresentation in the terms of that prospectus. I hesitate to go much further at the present time.

Mr. RALSTON: The Secretary of State will notice that this amendment is only an amendment to section 75, which deals with just what he has spoken of, namely the obligation of the company to see that any applicant for shares has received a copy of the prospectus. If the idea were accepted a somewhat similar provision should appear in the other prospectus sections. To illustrate in a word what the section means; if Jones & Company are offering shares for sale, the company is liable under the prospectus section to see that a prospectus has been delivered to John Smith who applies to the company for shares, having been solicited to do so by Jones & Company. The company can easily get rid of that liability by filing with the Secretary of State at the time they make their arrangement with Jones & Company an affidavit stating that they have no interest in the sale by Jones & Company to Smith. We just come back to the old question: Is that throwing too much of a burden on the company? I submit that it is doing something in a very limited way to increase the protection to the public and to ensure to purchasers the benefit of these sections, which I admit are most liberal in their scope, in so far as they apply. The purpose is to place the burden of proof on the company rather than to make Smith prove that Jones & Company were acting for or on behalf of the company. That is the effect of the amendment. When my hon. friend thinks it over I believe he will agree with me that there is not one case in a hundred where the company offers its shares either by itself or on behalf of itself to the public, and he will realize therefore how very little practical use these prospectus sections are unless we have something that was suggested yesterday, either an amendment to the criminal code, uniform provincial legislation, or some more effective and valid provision in the companies act itself. I submit that this amendment is only going one very short step further in the hope of making these prospectus sections available to some who would not otherwise be able to take advantage of them because they would not be able to prove agency between the person who disposes of the shares and the company.

Mr. CAHAN: All I can say to the hon. gentleman is that perhaps in recent years my experience has not been so active, but in all these large issues made in Montreal in which I was counsel, sold by underwriters and agents, I prepared the prospectus of the company and had it published in the papers and sent out—

Mr. RALSTON: By the company itself?

Mr. CAHAN: The company itself, because I found that where a company was liable if it received applications directly or indirectly, that was the only way in which it could really absolve itself. I know my hon. friend has a large practice of the same kind, perhaps a large part of my former practice. My experience leads me to think that this bill pretty well covers the difficulty, and I do not like to enter upon ground here of which I cannot foresee the prejudicial result. As long as a company is completely responsible for itself and its officers and its underwriters or agents, then I think that is going about as far as we should go at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): The amendment is withdrawn.

On section 76—Provisions not applicable in certain cases.

Mr. CAHAN: Hon. gentlemen will note that the word "to" in the second line of paragraph (a) should be deleted. It is simply a clerical error.

Mr. DUPRE: I move the amendment.

On section 77—Specific requirements as to particulars of prospectus.

Mr. CAHAN: Since section 77 was held over I have given it careful study. In the votes and proceedings of May 16, a certain number of the proposed amendments are already printed. In paragraph (p), line 16, the words used are "in excess of." Attention has been called to the fact that the words "more than" would be more effective. Therefore at the suggestion of some hon. member, I do not remember who, I propose to substitute the words "more than" for the words "in excess of"; and for correctness to strike out the comma after the word "property" in line 17.

Mr. DUPRE: I move that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: In view of our discussion yesterday and the suggestion made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), I think, and also, I think, endorsed by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher), further consideration has been given to the matter of the balance sheet which the auditors must certify. I now suggest that on page 44, in subsection (3), clause (a) (i) after the word "company" in the 39th line we insert the words "or if the company has any subsidiaries a consolidated balance sheet of the company and all its subsidiaries."

I think I gave the impression that in case of companies having subsidiaries I would insist that this should be done, and I think that this amendment would be helpful.

Then I have to suggest a similar amendment in the 51st line on page 44 by inserting after the word "company" the same words, "or if the company has any subsidiaries a consolidated balance sheet of the company and all its subsidiaries."

Then the same amendment in the 19th line of page 45.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Which line?

Mr. CAHAN: Line 19, page 45; the amendment is to add the words "and if the company has any subsidiaries such report shall be made with respect to the profits or losses of the company and all its subsidiaries." After careful consideration I suggest to hon. gentlemen that I have fully carried out the promise I made to review these clauses and make them more distinct than they were before.

Mr. DUPRE: I move these three amendments accordingly.

Mr. BURY: May I ask if this consolidated balance sheet of all the subsidiary companies involves particulars in respect of each or merely a summary of the financial standing of all the subsidiaries?

Mr. CAHAN: If the subsidiary companies are under this statute, under the other provisions they must make a full statement, but if one company is responsible for subsidiary companies it must present its own statement and in connection with that statement it must present a consolidated balance sheet in which all the material facts with respect to the profits and losses of its subsidiary companies shall appear. I think that is as far as I can go. I should like the approbation of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth in this, but I think that is as far as it is now possible to go.

Mr. RALSTON: It is a matter of accounting; I do not know very much about it. I should have thought the question of the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) very pertinent and the answer of the Secretary of State entirely correct, namely that you only require returns respecting companies which are under this act. I think what the committee wanted to be sure of was whether or not the company could by any chance mix up in the returns under this act the assets and liabilities of subsidiaries which are under other acts. It seems to me that it ought to be abundantly clear that under this act the company should present its own separate statement and, in addition certain particulars with regard to its subsidiaries.

Mr. CAHAN: I think that is true, that it has to make a consolidated statement showing in addition the profits or losses of its subsidiaries, and all material facts in relation thereto. I have consulted accountants; they think the amendment is going to an extreme, and that it will involve a great deal of additional labour. My reply has been that if the companies are wealthy enough to have subsidiaries they can pay the extra cost.

Mr. RALSTON: Some of the taxing authorities require companies to break down their balance statements and show all their subsidiaries in separate balance sheets.

Mr. BURY: As I understand it the information given will not enable a shareholder of the parent company to see exactly where or in what particulars the losses or profits of subsidiary companies are being made. He will have simply the general result of the operations of a number of subsidiary companies, and as between them he will not know which company is making money and which is not.

Mr. CAHAN: If the company has any subsidiaries a consolidated balance sheet of the company and all its subsidiaries is required under several of the clauses. Finally, if the company has any subsidiaries, such report shall be made with respect to profits and losses of the company and of all its subsidiaries. In other words, there should be a distinction between the profits and losses of the parent company and the profits and losses of the subsidiaries. That would allow any shareholder to ascertain the situation from the auditor at the general meeting.

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: I have one other suggestion to make in subsection (3), paragraph (c), at line 29 of page 45. The suggestion is that the words "and the nature and source thereof" be inserted after the word "business."

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly.

On section 82—Unlawful to call at any house.

Mr. BOTHWELL: There is an amendment to this section in the votes and proceedings.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so. It was drawn to my attention that although this canvass could not take place where the occupant resides permanently or temporarily, he might be called out to the side of the road for the purpose of being canvassed. I suggest that in subsection 2 of section 82 after the word "temporarily" in the eleventh line there be inserted the words "and any premises appurtenant thereto."

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

On section 96—Liability of directors for wages unsatisfied.

Mr. BUTCHER: Has the minister considered the advisability of changing the word "two" in line 18 to the word "six" to make it correspond with a similar section in part 3?

Mr. CAHAN: I assume we ought to have the same term in the both cases, if the hon. gentleman will move it.

Mr. BUTCHER: I move, Mr. Chairman, to substitute the word "six" for the word "two" in line 18 of section 96.

Mr. RALSTON: I never could understand why a director should be personally liable for wages.

Mr. CAHAN: The provision was inserted many years ago when directors were the whole company and each was made liable for the employee's wages. I do not think it was ever intended to apply to companies which have many thousands of employees and in respect to whom a director would unwillingly become liable for such large arrears of wages, but as we have made a similar amendment in another part we are consistent in accepting this amendment.

On section 120—Report.

Mr. BUTCHER: I move, Mr. Chairman, to amend subsection 2 by inserting between the words "entitled" and "to" in the twenty-ninth line of page 71 the words "or on the request of shareholders holding ten per cent of the stock or ten per cent of any class of stock shall be required to."

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman gave me notice of this amendment, and I made some inquiry in regard to it. I am informed that it is part of the domestic discipline in the regulations of auditors in all their auditors' associations that they attend upon the request of any shareholders who are interested inasmuch as they represent the shareholders. It is therefore their present practice to attend but this amendment which suggests that they should attend on the request of shareholders holding ten per cent of any class of stock, would not prove very effective. It would seem to impose upon them no duty to attend unless some shareholders undertook the task of seeking out individual shareholders and asking them to sign a request of this kind. The amendment is not objectionable to me but I am told that such is the practice of the auditors, and perhaps the amendment would impose the difficult task of securing the written request of ten per cent of any class of shareholders, thereby making it more difficult than it is now.

Mr. BUTCHER: I withdraw the amendment after what the Secretary of State has said.

Amendment (Mr. Butcher) withdrawn.

Mr. CAHAN: I think we might amend this as we did section 18.

Mr. DUPRE: I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out subsection 1 and to substitute the following therefor:

Every contract, agreement, engagement or bargain made, and every bill of exchange drawn, accepted or endorsed, and every promissory note and cheque made, drawn or endorsed on behalf of the company, by any agent, officer or servant of the company, within the apparent scope of his authority as such agent, officer or servant, shall be binding upon the company.

SUPPLY

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The house in committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

Salaries, including amounts required to pay allowances to office appliance operators, grade 2, operating mechanical audit card punching machines in accordance with the terms of order in council P.C. 280/383, dated February 17, 1930; and to pay allowances to typists, grade 1, employed cutting stencils in accordance with regulations approved by order in council; and to provide for continuance in office of G. C. Anderson, as superintendent of mail contracts from April 1, 1934, to March 31, 1935, $1,145,124; contingencies, $174,840.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Can the minister furnish the house with details?

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General) (Translation): Quite easily. I am informed that the amount requested covers statutory expenditure. There is no new feature. The amount has been voted each year because it is required for the good administration of the department.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): It is for the employees?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The employees in the various branches?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, inside service.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Can the hon. minister state how many typists grade 1 there are, or must we read the English version of the estimates "and to pay allowances to typists grade 1 employed in cutting stencils." How many typists are in the department?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member will admit that it is rather difficult to state off hand how many typists there are. I wonder whether there are any.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): At page 9 of the estimates one finds: "Salaries, including amounts required to pay allowances to office appliance operators—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): They are not typists, they are operators in charge of punching machines.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): —and to pay allowances to typists grade 1, employed cutting stencils—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): There are twelve.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): Will the hon. minister inform the house as to how many translators there are in his department, how many hours they work per day and how it is possible for them to work for other departments? I think they do some translation for the tariff commission.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation: We have six translators. I am not aware that they work for the tariff commission. However, it is possible, under certain circumstances.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): May I inquire of the hon. minister whether a decision has been taken in connection with the position of Deputy Postmaster General? Does the official who was the assistant of the Deputy Minister act at present as Deputy Minister or has he been appointed to the position?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The Deputy Postmaster General who retired has not yet been replaced.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Has the government the intention of replacing him in the near future?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I think so, in fact, I feel certain.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Could the Postmaster General state whether Mr. Boutet is employed by his department and what are his duties.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I think that a reply has already been given to this question. Yes, he is secretary to the executive.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): Would the hon. Postmaster General accept a suggestion from the opposition as regards the appointment of the future Deputy Postmaster General?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The Postmaster General is willing to consider any suggestion made to him and accept the most suitable.

Mr. REID: I should like to make another appeal to the minister on behalf of fifty-four householders in the city of New Westminster who are desirous of obtaining a house to house delivery of mail. I wrote to the minister on February 9 while he was away and received a reply from his deputy that he did not think the department could carry out this improvement this year. I think the circumstances are such that the minister should hear the case. This is not a case of fifty-four residents living outside the city or in a far off section, they live within the city of New Westminster and they are desirous of having their mail delivered at their doors. I would direct the attention of the minister to the fact that people who live around this particular area in which these people live receive house to house deliveries. It causes a good deal of inconvenience because they have to go eight or nine blocks and boxes have to be erected. These boxes are very often interfered with. In view of the fact that they are living in a well populated district, I am appealing to the minister to reconsider the case of these fifty-four householders and see whether it is not possible to provide a house to house delivery. With some rearrangement this could be accomplished.

Mr. SAUVE: I thank the hon. member for his representations. The matter is under consideration.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): At the end of the item under consideration I find: "And to provide for continuance in office of G. C. Anderson, as superintendent of mail contracts from April 1, 1934, to March 31, 1935." Am I to understand that this item will be voted from year to year or is it anticipated that this official will retire from the service.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It is to be anticipated.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): What is the age of this official?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I think he is over 70 years of age.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): At what age, generally, does the Civil Service Act oblige employees to retire ?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): At sixty-five years. In the present case, the Postmaster General had to revert to precedents which seemed to him well founded.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Moreover, a man is as old as he feels.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): Not always.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): If he is an efficient employee, keep him.

Mr VENIOT (Translation): It is worth an order in council to keep him at work.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I am pleased to note that the hon. Postmaster General has returned from his trip. I would like to inquire of him as to how many postmasters have been dismissed, for political partisanship since August, 1930.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) whose return, after a few days of absence, I am pleased to note, will allow me to point out to him that the question rather concerns the outside service. Will he accept my suggestion and put the question when we take up the estimates of the outside service?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Shall we take up the outside service afterwards?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I regret to note, in the item under consideration, that the Postmaster General is keeping, in the service of the Post Office Department, Mr. Anderson who has passed, long ago, the age limit. The minister is well aware that the person who is doing all the work is Mr. Saint-Germain, a very humble and competent official who is entitled to promotion. Mr. Anderson simply smokes his pipe, says he is a friend of every member and makes the other do the work. I think it would be proper for the Postmaster General, who is in the habit of displaying his patriotism, to grant this promotion to Mr. Saint-Germain, who is as worthy as he is humble, and to alter this item so as to give Mr. Anderson the pension to which he is entitled.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Before the Postmaster General replies I wish to add a few words to what the hon. member for Témiscouata has just said. I am well acquainted with Mr. Anderson and I hold nothing against him. He is an official who has had much experience and has rendered great services to the Post Office Department, however, as the hon. member for Témiscouata stated, when an employee has been in the service of the state for many years after attaining the age fixed by the act for retirement, he prevents the promotion of all other employees of a lower rank. These employees receive no encouragement because they are aware that they cannot be promoted as long as this old official is not retired. Mr. Saint-Germain is as competent as any other employee in the department. I was acquainted with him at the university. He was a law student at the university of Montreal, in my time. I am aware that he has successfully passed his examinations and, to-day, occupies a high post without receiving the salary to which he is entitled. I cannot believe that Mr. Anderson, in the opinion of those who administer the department to-day is absolutely indispensable. Mr. Anderson acquired his efficiency since he is in the department. I think it most unfair to keep in the service employees who have passed the retiring age, because they are an obstacle, during numerous years, to the promotion of employees having the required qualification to give excellent service to the state. Moreover, this is of a nature to discourage personal initiative of employees. They have not the same interest to work because there is no promotion ahead owing to employees, who should be retired, clinging indefinitely to their position. Were the latter to retire, they would still have their pension. I am not referring to Mr. Anderson, but simply to the principle involved. It is unfair to deprive of promotion those who have worked and possess the required qualifications to fill higher posts, simply because persons who, at present, fill those positions are not retired although according to the Civil Service Act they should be.

If it were a matter of great emergency, for instance, in a time of war, when a deputy minister owing to his special and considerable experience at the head of his department or to the wide knowledge and indispensable information he has, I could understand that it would be difficult to replace him, and under the circumstances, an exception could be made, but the present case in not so. I wish it to be well understood that my remarks are not directed against Mr. Anderson personally—I highly esteem and respect him—however, it is a question of principle and administration.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): How long ago should he have been retired?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): He is seventy-six years old.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): What?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): In what year should he have been retired?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): According to the letter of the law, before I took office.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Then, he was kept on.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that Mr. Anderson was kept on previous to the hon. Postmaster General taking office, when he had already reached the age of 70, and if I am not mistaken, there was an order in council passed in this respect. The intention was then to continue the services of Mr. Anderson until a reorganization of the staff of the department could be carried out. I really believe, especially, in these times when economy must be practised, that it is unnecessary to have a superintendent of mail contracts and that the reorganization of that departmental branch would permit saving the salary of this official who receives about $4,000 per year, while the results obtained would be the same, if not better. I am not opposed to having Mr. Anderson remain in the department while awaiting the reorganization of the branch; however, I think there is cause to criticize the department for not having carried out, in these days of depression, this reorganization. I wish to point out to the hon. Postmaster General the fact that a reorganization of this branch of the administration would save money to the country.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I wish to thank the hon. member, the ex-Postmaster General, for his suggestions. Apparently, he is aware that we have already begun a fusion and that we intend to continue the work of reorganizing.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): To what fusion does the hon. Postmaster General refer?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The staffs of the publicity bureau and the secretary's office.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Who is the secretary of the department?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Hormisdas Beaulieu.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The hon. member for Gloucester must recall that when he was Postmaster General, I had occasion to complain about Mr. Anderson, and I still insist that Mr. Anderson should be retired, which would permit him to live honourably. I do not agree with the views of the hon. member for Gloucester. with reference to abolishing that position. When an employee in a department carries out his duties, he is entitled to a promotion, and it is not because salaries have been reduced 10 per cent at present that we should abolish an important post to which employees may aspire. I now wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to another official. I want to ask him whether Mr. Edgar Boutet is paid out of this item.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Is the Postmaster General aware that this person is secretary to the executive? That is the first part of my question. The second is: what are the duties of the executive of a department? I should like to be furnished with information in this respect.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): To the first question, I reply yes. To the second, the executive of the Post Office department is similar to that of other departments.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Who are the persons that form part of the executive?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The Postmaster General, the Deputy Postmaster General, the Assistant Deputy, the Secretary of the department, the private secretary of the minister and the secretary of Postmaster General's office. Mr. Boutet is secretary of the latter.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): According to the hon. Postmaster General's statement, I understand that it is a kind of departmental council and, therefore, the duties of Mr. Boutet are those of a civil servant.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): What is the difference between the private secretary and the secretary to the executive.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The Postmaster General like all other ministers is entitled to a certain number of employees.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): How many?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Five.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): What are the names of the employees to whom he has a right?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Their names are of no importance, he is entitled to five. Mr. Boutet carries out the duties that another person performed before I took office. Formerly it was Mr. Lalonde and before him Miss Thériault, if I am not mistaken. Mr. Boutet replaced Mr. Lalonde.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): I am amazed to hear the hon. Postmaster General state that the secretary to the executive in a department is not a civil servant. It is true that by virtue of an agreement with the Civil Service Commission, a minister is entitled to appoint certain employees such as a secretary to the executive, a stenographer, a confidential messenger, also his private secretary; however, these employees are civil servants.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): The only difference is that it is not necessary that they should be appointed by the Civil Service Commission. Their salaries appear in the budget of the civil service of each department. The position they occupy is included in the estimates and they are absolutely governed by the same rules as other civil servants. To state that these employees may take an active part in politics is absolutely contrary to all recognized principles.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I did not say active politics.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Looking at things in this light, all ministers could appoint four or five partisans who could meddle in politics and take an active part in electoral controversies. It was never done—and my hon. friend can take my word for it—before he laid down this principle as the only one which should prevail. I am aware that the private secretary has to look after the political correspondence of his minister, however, I shall not go as far as to state that a private secretary, paid by the state, may also take an active part in electoral controversies. At least, he would be more entitled to do so than the secretary to the executive who, personally, works for the department like the stenographers and other employees who, under an agreement with the Civil Service Commission, are exempted from passing tests and from certain other provisions of the act. However, the provision of the act which prohibits civil servants taking an active part in politics, certainly applies to those employees. I do not know what Mr. Boutet's work is, I did not even know that he was employed in the Post Office Department, but frankly, if he is now an election organizer, the minister should not tolerate such conduct.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Boutet is certainly not an organizer in the present election.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): I do not know.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Louder!

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Boutet is certainly not an organizer in any election at present. As secretary to the executive Mr. Boutet is not a permanent employee.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): No, but he is a civil servant.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): He is there for a definite period but not permanently.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What are his working hours?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I am not ashamed to state what are the working hours of Mr. Boutet, because he does not simply tie himself down to the regulation hours, but he is at his office from 8 a.m. There is no one who is more methodical in departmental work.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): Did Mr. Boutet pass any examination before entering the service of the department?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It was unnecessary. The ex-Postmaster General can supply the information. I simply followed his example. I took in the same number of employees as he did. That is all.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): The Postmaster General has just stated that he followed my example. Not in everything.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): With reference to the subject under discussion.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): The hon. Postmaster General followed my example as regards the way that this employee was chosen; he was not amenable to the Civil Service Act, that is true, but may I say to the hon. Postmaster General that while I had the honour of being at the head of the Post Office Department, I did not allow my private secretary or the secretary clerk—I did not allow either one or the other to meddle in politics and even my political correspondence did not pass through their hands. I attended to this work personally, as all ministers should do, and I requested these two officials to simply attend to the official correspondence.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): May I inquire of the Postmaster General whether he is aware that this person is, if not one of the organizers at least one of those who prepare the campaign literature for the Conservative party in connection with the provincial election in Ontario, and especially for the counties of Prescott and Russell?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Not to my knowledge. I wish to state that since Mr. Boutet has been employed by the Post Office Department he has received no instruction either directly or indirectly from the Postmaster General to take an active part in politics.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What is his salary?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Did he receive instructions from the Postmaster General not to take an active part?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): His instructions from the Postmaster General were to carry out his duties, all his duties, in the department.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Nothing with reference to politics?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I expressed the wish that he should attend to his department and I do not think that, since my return, he has publicly meddled in any way in politics—I do not think so.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): The hon. Postmaster General gave him no orders?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What is his salary?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): $2,100.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Did the Postmaster General instruct him not to meddle in politics ?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): It is not a wish, then?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): To avoid any criticism on the part of those who might find fault with his conduct, I wish to add that Mr. Boutet is an intelligent man; he has rendered services in the past—

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): To the Conservative party.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I would request the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Raymond) not to be so narrow-minded on this subject. We cannot restrict Mr. Boutet's activities to the Conservative party; he is so kindly disposed that he can render services to the hon. member for Beauharnois, should he request him to do so.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): It is not a matter of narrow-mindedness, it is a question of knowing the facts.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Boutet is a very intelligent person. He may, in the past, have written for various newspapers; however, since he has been on the departmental staff, I do not think that he has written for these newspapers. At least, so far as I am aware—especially since my return —I do not think that he has written for any newspapers.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Can the Postmaster General state why his salary was reduced from $2,200 to $2,100, following an order in council?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It was to regularize his position.

Mr. POULIOT: (Translation): How, regularize? He was first appointed at $2,200; a few days later, an order in council reduced his salary to $2,100. Why was his salary reduced $100? Was it to give him a warning or teach him a lesson?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Not at all.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): At the time, the hon. Postmaster General was absent in Europe, we found out that the salary we had granted to Mr. Boutet—I do not recall what was the amount, $3,000, I think, the amount matters little—was not the regular salary to which he was entitled. To correct this irregularity, we passed a second order in council granting him the salary to which he was entitled, according to his position.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I regret to note that the memory of the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) is at fault. The two orders in council were passed in November and December, previous to the departure of the hon. Postmaster General in January. Therefore, the hon. Postmaster General was here when these two orders in council were passed. Perhaps he was not present at this cabinet meeting, however, he was in Canada.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): I do not wish to contradict the hon. member. I think he is right when he states that the first order in council was passed when the hon. Postmaster General was present. However, if I remember right—I speak from memory—we discovered later on that he was not entitled to the salary we had granted him. That was the only reason why we subsequently put things right by order in council.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Did he not receive any payment on account on the salary to which he was not entitled?

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): No, none.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Then, there is no reimbursement to be made?

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): No. Not only this, in order to set matters right, he received no salary during a month he was in the Post Office Department, because we thought it was not regular and Mr. Boutet owing to this lost nearly a month's salary.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): What the hon. minister has just stated would have astonished me less had it come from the lips of one of his colleagues. The Postmaster General has dismissed hundreds of postmasters, wrongfully charged of taking an active part in politics. I quoted numerous cases of flagrant injustice, cases where poor chaps who had never meddled in politics were dismissed on the charge, without any evidence of persons who coveted their position. In such cases the commissioner making the inquiry, wishing to please his party expressed the opinion that the postmaster had meddled in politics and should be dismissed, and, almost invariably the position was given to the person who had made the charge. To-day, the Postmaster General protects a person who is only qualified to alter texts, the correspondent of a newspaper which misquotes the speeches of Liberals, a person who has no moral conscience. I am amazed that the Postmaster General and the Solicitor General plead in his favour. Surely there are among their supporters many persons more worthy than this individual.

In the absence of the Postmaster General, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) stated that he recognized the right of the secretary to the executive to meddle in politics. I do not see how an employee has the right to take an active part in politics while postmasters are dismissed even when they keep out of politics, simply because they are charged with political partisanship by people who wish to step into their position.

I ask the hon. Postmaster General whether he would be willing to hold an inquiry on the dealings of Boutet, during his absence and to ascertain whether he is, if not the organizer, at least one of the editors of the conservative campaign literature for the provincial election, in the French speaking counties located along the Ottawa river?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The answer of the hon. Postmaster General is satisfactory to me, providing he can communicate the findings of the inquiry before the end of the session. The hon. Postmaster General nods affirmatively and I wish to thank him.

Now, sir, I wish to inquire of the Postmaster General whether this item includes his travelling expenses to Europe and Asia?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No, I do not think so.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): He went around the world three times!

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I did not quite catch the question of the hon. member.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I cannot imagine how the Postmaster General who saw so many attractive things at the outset of the session, has forgotten them so soon; he does not remember visiting the bewailing walls of Jerusalem, having seen king Fuad, in Egypt, having met Mr. Mussolini, in Italy, the President of the French Republic, in Paris and His Majesty King George V of Great Britain. I think he holds a record, for no other Canadian minister has been so privileged during a session of parliament, to meet so many distinguished persons.

During the absence of the hon. Postmaster General, I had occasion to ask a few questions. I would request him to kindly reply to some others; however, before putting them I wish to lay down the preliminaries. I find no fault with the Postmaster General's trip to attend the postal congress at Cairo. It was quite the thing, and quite in order, however, what amazed me were his numerous travels abroad while we were lonesome for him and were deprived in the house of his pleasant smile. Those were the reasons why we so much insisted that he should return to this country. We were unhappy, there was a void in the house which no one could fill. It is true that the hon. Solicitor General did his best—

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): He could not fill that void.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): —however, it was not the same and we missed the presence of the hon. Postmaster General.

I had occasion to obtain copies of a few orders in council from which I gathered that the Postmaster General's mission, at the congress at Cairo, was to watch over the deliberations. I wondered whether he simply was satisfied with giving his instructions to the distinguished persons who met there and whether, afterwards, he trusted their sense of duty and allowed them to carry on their work while he was fulfilling another mission.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): While he himself acted in a "caire-less" way.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I wish to inquire of the Postmaster General whether there was an order in council entrusting him with another mission than that of attending to the Postal Congress at Cairo and taking part in the deliberations.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): There was no other order in council than the one authorizing the Postmaster General to take part in the Postal Congress, at Cairo. It was not possible for the Postmaster General to go there by a direct route, he had to make certain stops. He served his country the best he could at that congress. I do not contend that the hon. member for Témiscouata might have served it better—I shall not gainsay that—however, wherever the Postmaster General went he endeavoured to represent his country the best he could.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As far as expenses go I think the Post Office Department saved sufficiently last year, on the travelling expenses of employees to cover those of this delegation.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): You practised thrift so that you might travel, that is economy!

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member for St. Henri has a particular way to jump at conclusions and give any interpretation but the right one to certain questions. As to the bewailing walls, I made no stop there, I simply passed by so as to see whether they resembled the one we have in Canada.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): There are walls which speak. However, what I regret very much is that the Canadian government did not think proper to confide a diplomatic mission to the hon. Postmaster General. I feel sure that he would have well performed such a task.

He now states that he was to take part in the postal congress at Cairo. I wish to inquire of him as to how long this congress lasted and at how many sittings he was present.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon) (Translation): I am absolutely at the disposal of the committee; however, I wish to point out that the question under discussion is not relevant to this item.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have no objection.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): It will expedite matters.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Will the hon. member repeat his question?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): How long did the congress at Cairo last and at how many sittings was the Postmaster General present?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The congress lasted seven weeks.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): At how many sittings was the Postmaster General present?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I was present at all sittings during my two weeks' stay in Cairo.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): In other words the hon. Postmaster General missed the sittings of the congress for five weeks, he was present at two-sevenths of the sittings. However, this does not tell us at how many sittings he was present. He states that he was present during fifteen days, that is all right, however, I greatly regret that the Postmaster General was not present at all the sittings. May I inquire of the Postmaster General as to what were the questions discussed while he was present and during his absence.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The report has not yet been prepared; it will be submitted to the house next session. I am sure that the hon. member for Témiscouata will approve of it; he will find all the information he desires in this report which will be attached to the one of the Postmaster General.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Who will present it next session?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The one designated by providence.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): How many nations were represented at the postal congress held in Cairo.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Eighty-six nations were represented at that congress.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): What were the names of the members of the Canadian delegation?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What had King Fuad to do with this congress?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member for St. Henri will admit that my mission was not to inquire about King Fuad's actions.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Was he entitled to attend the sittings of the congress? Did he make any suggestions? Kings are not of a daily occurrence, because crowned heads are few.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation) The secretariat of this congress was perfectly aware that it was not proper to invite the king to attend the sittings and, therefore, did not invite him.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Was he in your company when you visited the pyramids and the sphinx?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Will the hon. member for St. Henri kindly put his question intelligently so that I may reply.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): On the other hand, the pyramids twenty centuries old passed in review before the Postmaster General.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Forty centuries.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): More than that.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Does this item include the publication of the album presented to the delegates?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Does it include the travelling expenses of the delegates to British Columbia, last year?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great deal of this album of the Post Office Department which created such a sensation in parliament, among the public and in the press of this country, and which apparently was responsible for the former Deputy Postmaster General, Mr. Gaboury, being suspended. Will the hon. Postmaster General narrate, briefly, the famous history, or legend of this postal album?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I am not aware of any legend on the subject.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Then all that was said is true?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I beg your pardon? Will the hon. member complete his question?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): I wish to know all about the publication of this postal album distributed in Cairo and which was the cause of the dismissal of the former deputy minister of your department, during your absence.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It was not during my absence. It is difficult to reply to the questions of the hon. member for St. Henri, because they somewhat are at variance with the facts, they should be more to the point. First, there is no postal album. Then the deputy minister was neither suspended nor dismissed in connection with the album.

In March 1933, Mr. Webster, the secretary of the department had planned to publish a souvenir-album on the occasion of the meeting of the executive committee which was to be held in the course of the summer, at Ottawa. A representative of the printing office of the Gazette had put in a tender. Thinking that this album would be too expensive, I instructed Mr. Webster, in the presence of Mr. Gaboury to drop the matter, for reasons of economy.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): I think that the hon. Postmaster General was giving us the history of the postal album.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The history is a short one. I was stating that the department had planned to publish an album. Tenders were requested but the Postmaster General thought that, under the circumstances, the cost was too high—since we practise, in the department, a policy of strict economy—and decided that no album would be published. Mr. Webster, the secretary of the department received instruction not to take any further steps in respect to this album. Later on I heard that an album had been prepared. I was assured, however, that such was not the case. After certain inquiries or investigation, I discovered that an album had been prepared and the secretary of the department informed me then—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Mr. Webster?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, Mr. Webster.

—that there was an album but that the cost had been defrayed by the Pacific company.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What was the cost?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall state it.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Paid by whom?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Paid by the Pacific company, according to Mr. Webster. One day I received an album to be forwarded to His Majesty the King with the compliments of the Postmaster General. I replied: if the Pacific company is paying the cost of this album, they are the ones who should forward it to His Majesty; and I refused to sign. Later on, after a further inquiry, we found out that the album had been paid out of the funds of the department.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What amount was paid?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): $21 per copy.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): How many copies were there?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 200 copies.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): $4,000.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The answer was given in the course of the session: $4,000.

If I may be allowed, as I have been asked to give the history of this album, I shall complete it. It was then that Mr. Webster was suspended, and he later confessed, in a written statement, that he had been guilty of insubordination, of having disobeyed the instructions of the Minister. After a number of days, he was reinstated.

Of course, a number of these copies were turned over to the department and we forwarded one to all the delegates to the Congress. The surplus was distributed among very respectable people.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): I did not receive one.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I regret it very much, had I distributed them to all who would have liked to have a copy, after examining them, it would have cost some $20,000.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What was the amount paid for these albums?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): $4,000.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What firm printed them.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The Gazette Printing Co.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): The Gazette Printing Co?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, the Gazette Printing Company.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Of Montreal?

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): You state that you forwarded them to respectable people. Who made out the list of these respectable people?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): There was no list properly speaking. As the opportunity presented itself, we sent a copy.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): At the request of some one?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, sometimes. At other times, it was left to the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): How many were thus distributed?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I do not know the exact number. What remained.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Are there any more at the department?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I do not think so. Perhaps, one or two copies.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Has the government the intention of having others printed for members?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No, because I always was opposed to the printing of this album. I wish to be rational.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): How many employees are there at present, in the inside service?—the total only.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 830.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): How many were there when you took over the department?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): A few more, about a hundred more.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Am I to conclude that there has not been, to your knowledge, any examination held by the Civil Service Commission, since 1930 for positions in the Post Office Department?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No, none.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Can you state how many employees have been placed on the retired list since two years?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I cannot state the exact figures however, I think it is about forty—forty or fifty.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether my question has reference to the item under discussion. When the hon. Postmaster General figures out the revenue of his department, how does he proceed to separate the postage stamps which have been used on letters and those used on cheques which should be credited rather to the National Revenue Department? Has he any method of doing so? For instance, if I forward a cheque, or if I receive one from the hon. Postmaster General, with a three cents stamp, it may be a postage stamp or again it may be a national revenue stamp. In drawing up his balance sheet and determining the revenue of the Post Office Department; how can he tell whether a certain amount should be exclusively attributed to his department or what portion should be attributed to the national revenue.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It is not an easy task to reply to the question of the hon. member for Kamouraska. I have not the details with me, however, I am aware that if we had to constantly separate the returns on both stamps it would be very costly to the department.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): I am not criticizing the policy followed by the department in this respect. Only, when later, and perhaps in the near future—I hope it will be as soon as possible—the public will be informed that the Post Office Department shows a considerable surplus, that the department was so well managed that surpluses were obtained which did not exist under the regime of the predecessor of the present Postmaster General, the minister could then be in a position to suggest the reply which his opponents might make to this assertion?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): When the event happens, it is probable that there will be a way to explain it to the people.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Meantime, you will explain this item: contingencies, $178,840. Will you kindly state why this expenditure? I note that it is the same amount as last year.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I did not quite understand the hon. member's question.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): I find in item 21: Contingencies, $174,840. Would you be kind enough to give us the details of that expenditure?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Does the hon. member require all the details?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): I want the details of that expenditure. What is that amount for?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): There are the ordinary expenses and the expenses—the hon. member will get the explanation in the report of the Post Office Department.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): It is not the report that I want. You have that information in your file. I want to know the details of that amount of $174,840.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): There are the temporary employees; then the printing costs—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): How much?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Temporary employees, $77,840; printing costs, $70,000; sundries, $12,000; travelling expenses, $15,000, making a total of $174,840.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): To whom are these travelling expenses allowed in the course of the year?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): To those who travel.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Last year, you have had some travelling expenses yourself?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, and also the year before.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Who are those in the department who travel and are supposed to have their expenses paid out of that amount of $15,000?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Employees of the department. Frequently the department's secretary or other officials have to go to Montreal, Toronto or elsewhere, in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What is the amount for temporary employees?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The first item which I mentioned, namely, $77,840.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): How many temporary employees had you last year?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): In 1933-34, $77,840; it is the same thing. The hon. member can make the deduction.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): Will the hon. minister allow me a suggestion? At page 88, I see the details of this item 21. There is a sum of $10,000 for the deputy minister of the Post Office Department, the same as last year. At present there is no deputy minister in the Post Office Department; there has not been any for several months, and two months of the present fiscal year have already gone by. Would it not be more regular to reduce this item of $10,000? I understand that a deputy minister will be appointed in a few days or in a few months, but he will not draw his full salary.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member, at the next session, will notice, if he cares to do so, that the months during which there has not been any deputy minister are not included, and that the balance has been paid back to the treasury.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): This amount will not be used; however, if it were not voted, it would reduce the total expenditure of the department, and you could take the balance out of the contingencies, for you have a contingent account in the department.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): Is it the minister's policy to keep on opening new rural routes?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As far as possible and inasmuch as revenues will permit.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Are the expenses incurred in connection with the investigations that lead to the dismissal of some of the employees included in the contingencies?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No; they appear in the expenses of the outside service.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): Would not the "post office special investigator" appear in this item, at page 88?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Oh, no, it is not the same.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Last year somebody brought up the question of mail boxes which had been bought for the rural routes and of which you had a large stock. How many are left this year?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Of course, we have a certain number in stock, as usual.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): You always have letter boxes on hand for those who require them. How many had you in stock, last year?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): For the whole of Canada, we had a total of 23,228 on April 30, 1934; and in Calgary, 3,140.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): And in other localities?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): London, 1,097; Moncton, 30; Montreal, 4; Ottawa, 1,200; Toronto, 3,977.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): When you say: "Montreal, 4" do you mean 4,000 or 4,000,000?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Four letter boxes, that is all. It is as easy to understand the word 4 as 4,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): May I inquire of the hon. Postmaster General how the Montreal postal employees are appointed? I do not know whether I am in order in discussing this question; however, I think it is important to know how the extra clerks are appointed, those who are employed during Yuletide and at other times when required, and to whom must we apply, also what are the necessary recommendations to be so employed?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Generally, people apply to the Postmaster General but often, first, to members, even to those of the opposition. The Civil Service Commission appoint a certain number; war veterans are also chosen and the Postmaster General appoints a certain number, and he endeavours to distribute them in the fairest possible way, as required.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): About how many has the hon. Postmaster General himself appointed, this year?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I cannot recall.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): The hon. Postmaster General cannot recall those whom he has made happy?

[Mr. Jean.]

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member is quite aware how these appointments are made.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I am in order; however, I have a case to submit to the hon. Postmaster General in connection with a mail contract in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, which I have the privilege of representing in the house. If I am not in order, I shall bide another opportunity.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): We are discussing the inside service.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Then I shall wait.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): I have a few questions to put to the Postmaster General; however, I shall do so in English, because I have before me the report in English and it will therefore be more convenient.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to get some information from the minister. I believe this would come under civil government as I understand the preparation of the report of the department is done by the staff. In the report of the Postmaster General for the year ended March 31, 1932, I find that the deductions from total revenue made in order to get the net include salaries, box rent and money order commissions, night allowances, forwarding allowances—I am not giving the figures—postal note commissions and other items in which I am not interested. In the report of the Post Office Department for the year ended March 31, 1933, the last year for which we have a report, I find that forwarding allowances are left out; that is to say, the commissions on postal notes and money orders are not indicated but seem to be bulked together under some other heading, and I should like to know the reason for the change in accounting. I do not want to impute any motives but it seems very strange that the itemized statement as it appeared in 1932 is not given in 1933 in the same way. I do not wish to say that the object is to conceal the method of carrying on the work of the department, but it would be interesting to have these itemized statements in every report of the department just as they had been given up to 1932 inclusive. In 1933 they were left out, bulked together in some other item which I cannot discover. What is the reason for the change?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have no objection to meet the wishes of the hon. ex-

Postmaster General. The revenue, less deductions for last year, amounts to $30,825,851.81. I have the detail sheets.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Why?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member for Gloucester does not seem to have understood me. I say that I shall take under consideration the representations he made in connection with details.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Are you going to omit these details as you did in 1933?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I repeat that the hon. member did not understand me, when I said that I had no objection to agree to his suggestions.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Thank you.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): In future, the details will be inserted in the report. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Would the hon. minister give me this information? In St. John, last year, some farmers did not get their mail, because it was said that their boxes did not conform to the requirements of the law. Is it on account of the law or of the instructions of the minister, that these farmers, who have no government standard box, cannot get their mail?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The rule was established long before I came in, that you must get a box from the department, if you want your mail to be delivered at your home.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Would the hon. minister tell me the price of that box?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Four dollars.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henry) (Translation): Then whoever has no department box cannot get his mail?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): You must not say that he does not get his mail. He can go to the village post office to get it. We do not hold the mail simply because a farmer has no box coming from the department. I may add that three farmers can use the same box.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Recently I had the privilege to visit the county of Two Mountains and I noticed that many farmers who had not the kind of box required by the law were getting their mail. I went to Brome-Missisquoi, last Saturday, and there they get their mail, although they have not the boxes required by the law. I know that in my own county the farmers must conform to the law, or else they do not get their mail. Those who have not the means of paying their taxes thought it would be better to keep the few dollars which they have to buy food and grain seed. The department refused to leave their mail in the boxes they had made themselves and which somewhat resemble those that are sold by the department. So long as a farmer is satisfied with his mail box and undertakes not to sue nor claim any damages from the government, should his mail or parcels be damaged by rain, I find it strange that a rule is applied in St. John and not in Laval-Two Mountains, nor in Brome-Missisquoi, nor in Chambly-Verchères, which I visited.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member has brought up two points. There is the question of administration. The rule existed long before I came, and I did not make it. It makes for order and good government. The rule says that, in order to get your mail delivered at home, you must pay to the department the price of a box.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henry) (Translation): Four dollars.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): And that box must be procured from the department. It is a matter of uniformity which is somewhat important.

As regards the privileges mentioned by the hon. member for St. Johns'-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume), I would very much like to see the list of the favored ones in Laval-Two Mountains. I know that I encountered some difficulties there, and I have dealt with the county of Laval-Two Mountains as I did with other counties. It happened once or twice that we were lenient for some time, but in each case, notice was given to conform to the law. The hon. member, I am sure, will not find any other cases.

As regards the county of Brome-Missisquoi, I have not the slightest knowledge of the fact —if it is a fact—mentioned by the hon. member. I hope he will be kind enough to give me the list of the owners of these boxes and I promise to give him satisfaction.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): I do not complain, but I know that in our part of the country this was allowed for some years. I am not jealous because the same thing is being done in Brome-Missisquoi. I was there last Saturday and I know that in some places, farmers have boxes that they made themselves. I believe that at the present time there are many farmers who are unable to buy these boxes.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall note the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): The hon. minister asked me to give him some names. I am not going to make an inspection of the counties of Brome-Missisquoi and Chambly-Verchères.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Can the hon. member say how many there are?

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): I saw about ten last Saturday.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): In Brome-Missisquoi?

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): In Brome-Missisquoi. During a time of crisis and distress when farmers cannot even provide food for their family, the Post Office Department should make some allowance as it was done during a few years.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall look into the matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): May I inquire of the hon. Postmaster General whether he is acquainted with a Mr. Hector Warren of Pointe-au-Pic?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Not personally.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I intend to make the comments which a moment ago I stated I would do. It is in connection with a mail contract between the post office of "l'Isle-aux-Coudres" and a section known as "La Baleine" in the county of Charlevoix. I made a motion for the production of a document relating to the correspondence and all details in connection with this mail contract. The following is what I find on the first page:

Ottawa, le 30 janvier 1934.

Monsieur Hector Warren,
Pointe-au-Pic, P.Q.

Cher monsieur,

Sujet: Isle aux Coudres et La Baleine

Le contrat pour la transport des correspondances mentionné ci-dessus expirera le 30 juin 1934. L'entrepreneur est M. Elzéar Desgagnés et le prix $166.67 par année.

Le ministère considère le prix payé comme raisonnable et il est disposé à renouveler le contrat.

Je vous saurai gré de bien vouloir me dire s'il serait dans l'intérêt public de retenir les services du même entrepreneur dont le nom est mentionné ci-dessus ou si vous êtes d'avis qu'il serait plus avantageux pour le ministère de demander des soumissions en vue de faire une nouvelle adjudication.

Une prompte réponse obligerait.

Votre tout dévoué,

(Signé) G. C. Anderson,
Surintendant.

Mr. CASGRAIN: If the committee will bear with me, I should like to translate this letter into English because it is of great importance not only to the county I have the honour to represent but to the country at large.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Properly translated.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think I shall be able to translate it properly; if my hon. friend will bear with me, I think he will give me credit for that. The letter reads:

Ottawa, January 30, 1934.

Mr. Hector Warren,
Pointe au Pic, P.Q.

Dear Sir:

Subject: Isle aux Coudres and La Baleine

The contract for the transport of mail above-mentioned expires June 30, 1934. The contractor is Mr. Elzear Desgagnes and the price is $166.67 per annum.

The department considers that the price paid is reasonable and it is disposed to renew the contract.

I would like you to let me know if it would be in the public interest to retain the services of the same contractor, whose name is above mentioned, or if you are of opinion that it would be more advantageous for the department to call for tenders in order that a new adjudication may be made.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is a stock letter.

Mr. CASGRAIN (reading):

A prompt reply will oblige.

Yours truly,

G. C. Anderson,
Superintendent.

This letter is addressed by the superintendent of mail of the Post Office Department to Mr. Hector Warren at Pointe au Pic in the county of Charlevoix. The subject matter is a mail contract at another place, Ile aux Coudres, in another district. Thus the department under the signature of one of its officials states that the price paid for the contract is correct and is of the opinion that it should be renewed, but it says: If on the other hand you have any reason to believe that in the public interest the contract should not be renewed, please let us know and we will call for new tenders.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. member's interpretation is wrong.

Mr. CASGRAIN: No, my interpretation is not wrong. I will repeat what I said for the benefit of my hon. friend.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Don't do that; we are losing time.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation):

I would like you to let me know if it would be in the public interest to retain the services of the same contractor, whose name is above mentioned, or if you are of the opinion that it would be more advantageous for the department to call for tenders in order that a new adjudication may be made.

Mr. HACKETT (Translation): It is a printed form.

Mr. CASGRAIN: In this letter dated January 30, the department says to Mr. Warren: We would like to know if you are of opinion that the contract should be renewed, but in case it is in the public interest that it should not be renewed, please let us know and we will call for new tenders.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why Mr. Warren?

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is why I put the first question to the Postmaster General. I asked him if he knew Mr. Warren. I would like to know why and how Mr. Anderson, superintendent of mail, wrote to Mr. Warren at Pointe au Pic for information in connection with a contract for the carriage of mail at Ile aux Coudres when Mr. Warren does not reside there. Why did Mr. Anderson not write to Mr. Bergeron or Mr. Seymour or Mr. Harvey or Mr. Gagnon or any other person rather than to Mr. Warren?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Because there was not any Mr. Seymour or Mr. Harvey.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Why did Mr. Anderson write to Mr. Warren rather than to these gentlemen? How did he know to write to Mr. Warren first rather than to another gentleman?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): A great mystery.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I represent the people of Charlevoix-Saguenay and I would like to know. Mr. Warren may be the mayor of the place. I do not say anything about him. I know him personally and he is a nice, amiable gentleman. Of course he happens to be a man of prominence; he is an engineer in the county. He had the good fortune to be a candidate once in 1925; he was nominated in the interests of the Conservative party, but a few days after he was nominated he withdrew because he could not get a good following and thought it was not worth while to run. There was another Conservative candidate at the same time and this gentleman was defeated by me.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What a great man I am!

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have had a good record in this house. I have had the honour to defeat all Conservative candidates who have run in my constituency ever since I have been a candidate there. I would like to ask the Postmaster General why Mr. Anderson wrote to Mr. Warren.

Mr. GEARY: And not to the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes, because after all, what the hon. member for South Toronto has said is right and he knows it. I appreciate his kindness and courtesy. He is the representative of his county; I have the honour to be the representative of Charlevoix-Saguenay, and I think when anything is being done in a district like that, it ought to be brought to the attention of the member for the constituency.

Mr. DUPRE: Was that what hon. gentlemen opposite did from 1921 to 1930?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Whether the member concerned sits on the government or the opposition side, if he is not asked to give his opinion I think it is a wrong policy. If the government of the day do not see fit to ask the opinion of an hon. member on the opposite side, they should at least ask the responsible people in the parish in which the contract is to be let.

Mr. DUPRE: Is that what hon. gentlemen opposite did during the nine years they were in power? Did they ever consult Conservatives?

Mr. CASGRAIN: When we were in power we administered matters not too badly, so that when my hon. friends opposite go out at the next election the people will not look for them any more.

Mr. DUPRE: This is the second time the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay has made such a hint. I am willing to take it and if anybody is going to fall by the wayside at the next election, the hon. member himself will be one of the first.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I accept the challenge. Let the hon. member come and run against me if he likes. He came one time and tried to get the nomination but he did not receive it.

Mr. DUPRE: Let the hon. member accept the challenge.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I will not cross over the river from Quebec to try to be elected in Levis. If the hon. member wants to come into my district where he knows Mr. Warren, I will give him the same medicine as my opponent got at the last election.

Mr. DUPRE: The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) and the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) seem to be having a great deal of fun to-night. The only fun they have is when they boast about what they have done or are going to do, but there is a great difference between the boasting and the real facts.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The people will judge at the next election, and from the results of the last by-elections I think I am safe in saying that the good sound people of this country, to whatever race or creed they belong, can distinguish the good from the bad.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Will the hon. member pardon me? I somewhat lost the trend of his inquiry.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I wish to inquire why Mr. Anderson wrote to Mr. Warren of Pointe-au-Pic, rather than to the member of the county or the mayor of the locality or to some one in the section where the contract was to be awarded, or, again, to the curé. I wish to know, sir, who gave instructions to Mr. Anderson to communicate with Mr. Hector Warren, at Pointe-au-Pic in order to obtain information in connection with this contract. The Postmaster General states that he is very little acquainted with that gentleman.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): He is not acquainted with him personally.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Is there in the files of the Post Office Department instructions or a letter which contains instructions to officers of the department to communicate with Mr. Warren.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): There are so many briefs!

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I should like to have an answer from the hon. Postmaster General.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I am not acquainted personally with Mr. Warren, although I have heard of him at various times. He was chosen as candidate, however, I do not contend that he withdrew his name to accept the new post which the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay endows him with.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): It was in 1925 that he was a candidate.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As to why he was consulted, it was probably because the department was advised to communicate with him so as to obtain certain information. I do not know all the details in this matter, as this took place during my absence.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I wish to be fair, sir, towards the hon. Postmaster General; perhaps he did not give such instructions. If Mr. Anderson wrote to Mr. Hector Warren, he certainly must have had a reason to do so.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Does Mr. Warren reside in the county?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Yes, but not in the locality where the contract was to be awarded; he resides several miles away.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): He resides in the county?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Yes, but not in that locality. Pointe-au-Pic forms part of Bay St. Paul, while l'Isle-aux-Coudres is not in the same section. I wonder why Mr. Anderson wrote to Mr. Warren at Pointe-au-Pic to get information in connection with a contract to be awarded in a different part of the county, on an island, where he knew practically nothing of the existing conditions. I also wish to know—and the Postmaster General should be in a position to furnish the information—whether instructions were given or steps taken or orders issued to communicate with Mr. Warren, and who issued such orders?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have not, at present, all the information requested by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay. The geographical particulars given to the house have greatly interested me.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): There are beautiful landscapes in that part of the country!

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have heard that it was a rule under the regime of my hon. friends to refer such questions to the defeated candidate of the county, and it is a matter which seems to be of great import to our predecessors.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): You know nothing about it.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It is a rule—

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): It is an exception because there were very few defeated.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member requests certain information. I have not all the details. It is perhaps the candidate who crossed swords with my hon. friend who suggested to apply to Mr. Warren for whatever information we required.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): That is, sir, just the point where I want to get at. The hon. Postmaster General stated that in the past he thought that one generally applied to the defeated candidate to obtain certain information in connection with patronage or the administration of public affairs in the county. In this instance, Mr. Warren is not a defeated candidate. Mr. Warren was so frightened in 1925 that he did not stick to the end. Two days after the nomination day, he withdrew.

Now, sir, the opponent with whom I crossed swords, the Conservative candidate who was defeated, was Mr. Thomas Maher, and we put up a great fight at the time. I have no personal ill-feeling against him, only Mr. Maher should not have been consulted in this matter. In 1934, my opponent already occupied, since a year, a public post in the Canadian Broadcasting Commission. I do not think that, occupying an official position in such an important public department, he wished to issue instruction as regards patronage in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, so that he suggested that Mr. Warren should be consulted. On January 30, 1934, an official of the department under his signature, wrote to Mr. Hector Warren, who was not the defeated candidate at the last election and who was neither the defeated candidate at the previous election in 1925, because he did not proceed to the polls, he wrote, as I said, to request information as regards a contract, not in his section but in another, in order to find out whether it would be in the public interest, or whether he was of the opinion that it would be more advantageous for the department to call for tenders in order that a new award might be made.

I strongly protest, sir, against such action on the part of the government. I protest against the fact that Mr. Anderson, the head of the mail contract branch, thought fit to communicate with Mr. Hector Warren, who does not reside in the locality. It is an insult to the local citizen, to the mayor, councillors and the parish priest, who are in a position to advise the government if the government thinks proper to do so and does not care to apply to your humble servant because I was fortunate enough to be elected against the government's forces. If the government do not wish to apply to me, let them apply to some local citizen, but not to a person who does not reside there, who has no knowledge of the requirements of the village, and does not know what should be done. I strongly protest, on my behalf and that of my constituents, on behalf of the people of the district of La Baleine and l'Isle-aux-Coudres, in the county of Charlevoix.

Mr. Anderson requested Mr. Warren to kindly inform him whether, in the public interest the services of the same contractor should be retained, at the same price or whether it would be more advantageous to call for tenders. The following is the reply of Mr. Warren, dated March 7, 1934.

M. G. C. Anderson, surintendant,
Ministère des Postes,
Ottawa, Ont.

Cher M. Anderson,

J'ai votre lettre du 30 janvier dernier relativement au contrat pour le transport des correspondances entre l'Isle-aux-Coudres et La Baleine comté Charlevoix qui expirera le 30 juin 1934.

Je vous recommande M. Edmond Bouchard de l'Isle-aux-Coudres, comme entrepreneur pour ce dit contrat en remplacement de M. Elzéar Desgagnés, au prix de $166.67 par année.

Exactement le même montant que son prédécesseur.

Veuillez me croire, M. Anderson,
Votre tout dévoué,
(signé) Hector Warren.

Now, sir, I wish to read in English the reply that Mr. Hector Warren addressed to Mr. Anderson.

If you remember, Mr. Chairman, when I translated the letter which I had read in French I was saying that Mr. Anderson was asking Mr. Warren if he would be kind enough to let him know if it was in the public interest to retain the services of the same mail contractor at the same price, or if he was of the opinion that it would be more advantageous in the interest of the public service to call for tenders and to have a new adjudication upon the mail contract. Mr. Warren said—I shall translate the letter as best I can:

March 7, 1934.

G. C. Anderson, Superintendent,
Post Office Department,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Anderson:

I have your letter of 30th January, 1934, regarding the contract for the transport of mail between Isle aux Coudres and La Baleine which will expire on the 30th June, 1934. I recommend to you Mr. Edmond Bouchard of Isle aux Coudres as mail contractor for the said contract to replace Mr. Elzear Desgagnes for the price of $166.67 per annum.

Please believe me, Mr. Anderson,
Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) Hector Warren.

Mr. Warren did not comply with the request of Mr. Anderson to say whether or not it was in the public interest to retain the service at the same price. Apparently there was no complaint against the former contractor, and doubtless if the work had not been done satisfactorily there would have been complaints. So there was no reason to call for new tenders. Mr. Warren simply said, "Take the contract away from Mr. Desgagnes and give it to Mr. Edmond Bouchard" for the same price, with no tenders called for. There seems to be a curious development here; from the correspondence it would appear that this man might be a Liberal, but in any case in the letter of January 30 the department stated that the price was reasonable, and that they were disposed to renew the contract for another year. Then the department, through its officials, simply asked whether in the public interest new tenders should be called for.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that in the parish of La Baleine only about sixty votes were cast for the government candidate in the last election; nearly all the people voted in support of your humble servant. I had a majority of 248, the largest since voting was introduced there. They are very intelligent people, and they are discussing this question to-day. It is a very important matter to them, and I think it is important from the point of view of the rights of the representatives of the people in the House of Commons. I believe the department was wrongly advised in asking the opinion of this gentleman, who was not the defeated candidate but who was simply a political henchman.

I think I have said enough to point out the danger the government must face when they try to please all the people who have political ambitions, because I think Mr. Warren has political ambitions. I do not know if he will run in the next election; I know that he worked very hard during the last campaign, though without result. The people of that district have written the minister, giving reasons in support of their contention that an injustice was done in not renewing the contract with the man who had it previously.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Did you supply the reasons?

Mr. CASGRAIN: No, I did not. I may tell my good friend that this matter came to my notice in April after everything had been done. I did not know anything about it, and you can take my word for that. In March Mr. Warren was notified that a contract had been given his protege; later a letter was sent the postmaster of La Baleine containing a questionnaire as to the qualifications of the man to whom the contract had been given. What occurred? The postmaster replied to the Postmaster General under date of March 15, 1934, and said:

1. Do you consider Mr. Edmond Bouchard competent and qualified to carry His Majesty's mail four times a week between l'Isle-aux-Coudres and La Baleine by virtue of a contract for ... years.

We found out later on that the contract was for one year only.

Reply: Mr. Edmond Bouchard is not competent or qualified.

The postmaster in that district must know something about the people there; however, they applied to him only after hearing that the contract had been awarded in March. Then having felt some remorse, they wrote to Mr. Joseph Tremblay, and in a letter dated March 19, 1934, the postmaster, Mr. Tremblay, of l'Isle-aux-Coudres, stated:

I must inform you that the two bondsmen are mortgagors and should you require any other information, I could supply it, seeing that Mr. Edmond Bouchard is not qualified for this service.

In spite of this, the contract was awarded to Mr. Bouchard at the same price awarded to his predecessor Mr. Elzéar Desgagnés, who had carried the mail for 25 years from the central postoffice to La Baleine, and as stated in the correspondence, and as I am pertinently aware.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): (Translation): Were securities required?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): What was the amount of the contract?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): $166.67. As I stated, they live almost like brothers in that parish, they are all liberals and there are no conservatives. It would have been just as well to award the contract to the person who had it previously. The only reason that a change was made is, perhaps, because Mr. Warren wishes to display some importance and endeavours to have the people believe that he has influence at Ottawa, and can obtain contracts for his Conservative friends in the county of Charlevoix.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): If there are no Conservatives the contract was awarded to another Liberal; therefore, everybody is happy.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): That is not the question. The principle involved is the liberty—

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): I understand that my hon. friend is speaking in favour of the principle—the Magna Charta and the fundamental laws!

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The principle involved is that a person who is not even a defeated candidate, who is not a member or does not reside in the locality, has no right to meddle in the affairs of a parish and tell the department: You intend letting the contract to so and so, simply because I, who live so many miles away, tell you to let it to that particular man. The very idea that any one who has absolutely nothing in common with the management of a parish should interfere and impose his will is in violation of the authority given to members and contrary to the principle of responsible government. The issue, Mr. Chairman, is a most important one, and I think that in this present case, such action as was taken was wrong. As they would say in the constituency of Charlevoix: We have not been dealt with fairly and our government is not efficient.

Mr. Chairman, may I read the petition submitted to the honourable Postmaster General by the interested parties in La Baleine range:

The undersigned petitioners of l'Isle-aux-Coudres respectfully submit:

That Mr. Elzéar Desgagnés should be maintained in the position he occupies at the present time in connection with the carrying of the mail between the central post office of St. Louis de l'Isle-aux-Coudres and the post office at La Baleine.

Wherefore your petitioners urge upon Your Honour to recommend Mr. Elzéar Desgagnés, who always performed his duties in a satisfactory manner.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

(Sgd.) Joseph Gagnon,
Mayor.

And that petition contains fifty-five names. I could mention each of them; but I do not wish to take up the time of the house. Fifty-five citizens of that district—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Of La Baleine.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): —in the La Baleine range signed the petition in favour of Mr. Desgagnés. That very fact shows that the position taken by the member for the constituency in this house was fully warranted and that the reasons I gave against the change made in the contract are not altogether without grounds.

The file contains a letter, under date of the 28th March, 1934, written by Mr. Tremblay, postmaster, to Mr. Tanner Green. It reads:

With reference to the qualifications of said Edmond Boucher, I may state the facts as they are.

That is signed by him.

The said gentleman having been elected as church warden took up subscriptions for the poor and he collected the sum of $130 from the parishioners. Instead of handing in that amount, he remitted $20 and a promissory note signed with another man's name. I leave it to you, sir, to decide as to how steps could be taken against him when the owner has a mere footing on his land.

A generous gentleman hired his son; after having insisted repeatedly, he got $5. He can swear that he was told that the balance would never be paid to him. Is that a man whose honesty and qualifications would justify entrusting him with such valuable property as the mail bags? Could he be trusted, in all security, with the valuable papers of a parish? Certainly not.

Should the recital of the facts that I have just mentioned not suffice, you can secure the same information from our parish priest, the Rev. Edmond Jean, who has all the papers in that connection, as well as from the local bank manager who refused the forged cheque.

You may depend, sir, that in signing this letter I am not actuated by any personal motive, but by a desire to safeguard the welfare and security of the public.

(Sgd.) Joseph Tremblay, Postmaster.

Apparently, upon receiving these letters, in May and April, the department was impressed and Mr. Tanner Green wrote as follows to the Rev. Edmond Jean, parish priest of l'Isle-aux-Coudres:

The department would be prepared to let the contract to Mr. Edmond Boucher for the above mentioned service, as from the 1st July next, but, according to the postmaster of your locality, he is more or less qualified on account of his questionable honesty.

This is from Mr. Tanner Green, and the same Mr. Tanner Green is post office superintendent in Quebec. I find fault with the department for not having obtained their information at first hand, and not having enquired from the parish priest or the mayor of the locality,—since it was not deemed advisable to enquire from your humble servant because he is in the opposition,—as to the situation, instead of going to Mr. Hector Warren, a man who lives fifteen or twenty miles away from the place, who has no connection whatever with the district, knows nothing about the locality, and who, nevertheless, in spite of representations made by the mayor and fifty-five citizens of the parish, recommended the appointment of a man who, as stated in the letter, was unable to give a bond.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have said enough to drive home the seriousness of the case. Although the amount involved is not very important, this being a contract for $166.67 only, the principle remains the same. When the government refuse to confer with certain members because they happen to be on the opposition side, although they hold their mandates from those who elected them to this house, one may expect things of that sort. When information is sought from a man who has no connection with a district, who is unfamiliar with public affairs, it follows that one deals with people bound to play politics.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): How did our Liberal friends act in former days?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): We have never done anything of the kind.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I agree with the statement made by the Solicitor general. Under the former regime, there may have been similar cases, but that is no reason why the same practices should be carried on. Two wrongs do not make a right. If, in the past, one acted improperly, it does not follow that one should do so at the present time. The hon. gentlemen who sit at your right, Mr. Chairman, got themselves into power through promising the people in this country that they would give them full measure of justice. The conservative candidates made much of the evil practices of the previous government and stated that in the event of their party being successful at the polls, conditions would improve and that they would see to it that a better management of public affairs would result. I can safely say that the present government is being blamed for having acted in a manner unheard of in the past under the former government.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): It would not have been so bad, would you have been the ones to do it.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): This is how our friends on the right side of the house view the matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): When comparing what has been done by the present government during the last four years with the work done, in the course of nine years, by the previous government, one finds the former did a great deal more reprehensible work than the latter could be blamed for.

Mr. DUPRE (Translation): Mere words!

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): These are not mere words.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon) (Translation): The hon. member has spoken nearly an hour.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I shall resume my remarks at some later time during the debate.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay has just made a very interesting address; he managed to find in "the whale" (La Baleine) quite an important principle on which he discoursed for more than forty minutes.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): It was worth while.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I note his statement and he may be sure that, at the first opportunity, I intend to go over everything he said in connection with the $166.67 contract and then he will be satisfied that I shall have really looked into the matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I thank you.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Would the minister be kind enough to tell us what policy he follows when he has to deal with the appointment of a postmaster outside the purview of the civil service commission? Does he consider the domicile and efficiency of the candidate; does he consider the desire of the community concerned? Those are questions that I am interested in, would the minister oblige me with an answer to them.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I consider all things concerning the case.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Are all these facts taken into consideration?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Depending on the circumstances.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): It being so, I wish to draw the minister's attention to a particular case. In the parish of St. Louis de Gonzague, in the constituency of Beauharnois, a Mr. Roch Montpetit has been appointed postmaster. I moved for a copy of the correspondence exchanged in this connection and this is what I find. The postmaster had just died and his widow had been appointed temporarily in his stead, she having acted as postmistress for the four or five preceding years. A petition was signed by 225 people and was sent to the hon. Postmaster General. The petition reads as follows:

> The undersigned, request that Mrs. Amanda Guérin, widow, who for the last five years acted as assistant at the post office of St. Louis de Gonzague, be appointed postmistress. She is fully qualified to fill efficiently the position.
> Mrs. Guérin owns the premises where the post office is located at the present time.

Thus, Miss Germaine Lafrance, her helper, who is a member of a large family would retain her post.

You may rest assured that in complying with our request, you would make an appointment that will meet with the approval of all the ratepayers in this parish.

Mrs. Guérin, it is obvious, was a resident of the parish for five years since she acted as assistant during that length of time. The petition was signed by 225 persons.. At about the same time, another petition was sent to the minister, signed by nine persons, in favor of Mr. Roch Montpetit, the appointee, and the petition in this case reads as follows:

We the undersigned, are submitting and supporting the choice of Mr. Roch Montpetit as a fit candidate to the postmastership of St. Louis de Gonzague.

Seeing, hon. minister, that the position is at the present time filled by Liberals, it is our desire that the new appointee should be a Conservative.

Mr. Roch Montpetit is the son of Mr. Magloire Montpetit, farmer, of St. Louis de Gonzague; he is an honest man who always devoted himself to the Conservative cause and for that reason, it seems to us that in fairness he should be granted that favour. We hope for a favourable decision and pray that one of our own party be appointed postmaster, and we have signed:

Nine people signed this petition. I asked the minister to tell me where the appointee, Mr. Roch Montpetit, was living at the time of his appointment. And the minister answered: "No information." As a matter of fact, Mr. Montpetit was not a resident of Saint-Louis-de-Gonzague. If we refer to the Civil Service Act, as amended—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): What is the date of that letter?

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): August 26, 1932—we find the following provision:

3. Except as to appointments to positions in the headquarters of the several departments and other portions of the civil service at Ottawa, the appointees to any local positions in any province shall, so far as practicable, be made from persons having resided in such locality for a period of at least one year immediately preceding the date last fixed for receiving applications for such local positions.

The minister told me a few moments ago that all those conditions are respected, that is to say: the conditions respecting qualifications, domicile, and the wish of the local people.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): And also the condition respecting the returned soldiers.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): This was not the application of a returned soldier.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No, but generally.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): In this case, Montpetit had no experience. Mrs. Guerin, who had also made an application, had five years' experience and had been temporarily appointed after her husband's decease. The wish of the population of Saint-Louis-de-Gonzague was evident since her application had the support of 225 people, whilst the other applicant had the support of only nine people. Mrs. Guerin was a resident of Saint-Louis-de-Gonzague, while Montpetit was not. However, the minister decided to appoint Mr. Roch Montpetit contrary to the wishes of the population.

I am informed that since Mr. Montpetit's appointment, numerous complaints have been received at the minister's office about the way the post office is managed. We are asked to-day to vote new supply to the Postmaster General, and it is our duty to show that the money voted last year was not spent in the public interest. When it is thought advisable to instruct the Civil Service Commission to appoint local people, it seems to me that the minister should put in practice the advice he gives to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall look into that case. I have no knowledge of any complaints against Mr. Montpetit for at least one or two years. His appointment was made in 1932. The hon. member should realize that it is hard for the minister to have in mind all the details of thousands of cases.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): That is so.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I would like to find out if there were really that many complaints.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): I would like to know what inspired the minister when he appointed Mr. Montpetit rather than Mrs. Guerin.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have no doubt that I was moved by the representations made to me—

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): That he was a Conservative.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I would not have objected to his being a Conservative.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): That was his main qualification.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): At least, apparently.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I would not go so far as to consider as a qualification the fact of being a Conservative or a Liberal. It is a respectable opinion. The fact of being a Liberal is a question of opinion.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): It is a disqualification.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The same thing applies to a Conservative. A man may have plenty of good qualities although he is a Liberal, and the same for a Conservative.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Unfortunately!

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): As the hon. minister seems to be in good spirits, I shall remind him of the Iberville case. I have in my hand the Hansard of last year and I shall quote three answers that the minister gave me on the 12th of May, 1933.

Mr. Sauvé (Translation): The matter is not entirely under my jurisdiction. The revenue of the post office at Iberville is more than $3,000. It is true that my approval must be sought finally.

Page 4964 of the Hansard of May 12, I find the minister's answer of April 20, 1933, to my letter of the 19th of April:

In reply, I wish to state that my department is awaiting the inspector's report to settle the appointment permanently.

Further, the minister answered to one of my questions:

I think the hon. member will be satisfied when the case is definitely settled.

I would like the honourable minister to tell me if he finally received the inspector's report which he was awaiting to settle the appointment permanently, and the reason why the appointment has not been made.

In the absence of the minister, I placed a few questions on Hansard and I received the answers on March 14, 1934:

Mr. Rhéaume:
1. What is the name of the postmaster at Iberville, Quebec?
2. What is his age?
3. Is he in receipt of a salary or is he paid out of the revenue, etc. . .

I received the following answers from the Solicitor General: The name was Pierre Ernest Thuot, temporarily in charge of the post office. Age, 60 years. Paid out of revenue according to regular scale. Permanent appointment rests with commission.

About the permanent appointment, my ninth question was:

What person was recommended?
Answer: Wilfrid Denicourt, O.A.S.

The minister said a few minutes ago that he has much sympathy for the returned soldiers. The president of the Legion at St. John's a good conservative and a returned soldier, urged the minister to appoint Mr. Denicourt. I met him last Monday at a banquet of the Board of Trade of St. John's. He asked me if I could give him any news about the appointment of the postmaster at Iberville. I told him I could not. I added: "I am waiting for the discussion of the estimates of the Post Office department and I shall ask the Postmaster General about it because last year he promised that everybody would be satisfied with the appointment." He asked me if I thought he should come to Ottawa about it. I answered that as his recommendation had produced no result it would be useless for him to come, unless he had money and time to lose; in that case I should like to see him, because he is a good fellow, although a conservative. Will the minister tell me if he has received the inspector's report—he has been awaiting it for a whole year—and why he does not appoint Mr. Denicourt? Mr. Ernest Thuot, a sixty year old man, is kept on the job, while good employees are let out after forty years of service, because they have attained the age of sixty-five. I have seen a testimonial signed by the minister in acknowledgment of the good service of an employee, although he was sixty-five years old, but he was dismissed like many others, because he was a good liberal. Why does not the minister appoint Mr. Denicourt? That appointment would be well received by the people of Iberville and the St. John's district.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have no objection to give that information to the hon. member for St. John's-Iberville. It is a fact that Mr. Ernest Thuot is temporarily in charge of the post office at Iberville.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Since when?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Quite a long time—1932. But that is not the reason of the delay in making the permanent appointment. Mr. Thuot has not been appointed. That position is sought by two returned soldiers: Mr. Denicourt and Mr. Debeaujour. When I gave that answer last year to the hon. member for St.-John's-Iberville, I was sincere, and I was telling the truth. At the time, I thought that the appointment was soon to be made, but later the department received strong representations on behalf of Mr. Debeaujour, and there was a legal dispute. Lawyers do not place the same interpretation on the Civil Service Act in the case of returned soldiers. That point has not yet been settled.

The hon. member for St. John's-Iberville says that I have a faible for returned soldiers. I have no faible but much sympathy, and it is for that reason that I still hesitate to appoint Mr. Denicourt, on account of the representations received. Here are the facts: Two returned soldiers have made application for the position of postmaster at Iberville. Mr. Denicourt went to the front because he was conscripted; Mr. Debeaujour enlisted voluntarily. His father also enlisted. His brother was killed at the front. In such circumstances, according to the interpretation of lawyers well known to the hon. member, Mr. Debeaujour should have preference over Mr. Denicourt. Such is the situation, at the present time.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Two years ago the house wasted a lot of time revising the Civil Service Act. You have either to follow a definite procedure or you have not. I do not know Denicourt, but his application was made in time. It is not the case with Debeaujour. Last year—and I have the Hansard here—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): His application has been accepted by the commission.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): If the minister goes to the commission, he will see that Debeaujour could not be a candidate as he sent his application too late, that is, after the date fixed by the Civil Service Commission. When they came to Iberville for the examination, they allowed Mr. Debeaujour to be a candidate. The Civil Service Commission ought to act according to regulations. If they admitted Mr. Debeaujour to the examination, it is because there was an agreement between Mr. Thuot and Mr. Debeaujour—I cannot say whether he is a returned soldier or not, as I do not know him. However, Mr. Debeaujour had a job, working at the locks in Saint Johns. There was an agreement between Mr. Thuot and Mr. Debeaujour; I think they are relatives. It was understood that, in case Mr. Debeaujour got the position—because he boasted at that time of having enough influence to be appointed postmaster—he would have kept his job as lock-keeper, Mr. Thuot would have acted as postmaster and the two salaries would have been divided between the two of them.

I happen to know that the minister received the visit of the chairman of the Veterans' Legion, Saint John's branch. The veterans supported Mr. Denicourt and made representations on his behalf. If there is a dispute with a conservative group and the minister is anxious to avoid the responsibility as far as returned soldiers are concerned—he has so much sympathy for them!—he might settle the problem by appointing Mr. Denicourt who has the support of the Veterans' association. Mr. Denicourt is the father of five children he has been a public charge these last three years. I do not know him anymore than Mr. Debeaujour, but the last named gentleman is receiving a pension and is a lock-keeper. Mr. Debeaujour comes at the end of the eligible list, whereas Mr. Denicourt is the first on the list. As far as legal difficulties are concerned, the more lawyers you put on the case, the more confused will the problem be. If you want to settle the case, the only thing to do is to appoint Denicourt. I had an interview with the Legion chairman, a good conservative—I will not give the details as the talk was of a private nature and I would not like to give the reasons. I know the minister is ready to appoint Denicourt, but he is opposed by a group and a notary well known to the minister and not as good a conservative as my hon. friend might think.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): The hon. member for St. John's-Iberville has just said that the more lawyers you put on a case the more entangled it will be. As a colleague of the hon. member, I want to say that I believe Mr. Denicourt a much better candidate than Mr. Debeaujour, considering Debeaujour has already a job as lock-keeper. If he occupies that position in St. Johns since 1930, he got it on account of the returned soldiers' preference. As for Mr. Denicourt, who has been successful in the civil service examinations, who is so well recommended and who only needs the approval of the department for his appointment, I think he ought to be appointed at once. The case has been pending for the last two years; I cannot see why it takes such a long time to reach a decision. If a judge was so slow in giving judgment we would impeach him before the house.

I think Mr. Denicourt is entitled to the appointment. The hon. member says that lawyers are there to confuse issues. He will admit, in the present case, that a lawyer was there to give him a friendly help.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): I wish to thank the hon. member for St. Henri for his remarks. I have before me the ratings given after the examinations I was asking for, a year ago. According to the report, Mr. Denicourt was first on the list, with 84 per cent; Mr. Debeaujour, fifth on a list of six candidates, with 71 per cent. I hope the minister will accept the commission's verdict. In its notice, the commission said that applications had to be sent before February 17, 1932. According to the report I have here, five candidates out of six acted accordingly; the only one who did not was Mr. Debeaujour, as he sent his application on March 10, 1933, I cannot see why you would hesitate in appointing Mr. Denicourt who is a returned soldier, the father of five children and has been without any work for over a year, whereas Mr. Debeaujour has been working as a lock-keeper for the last three years in St. Johns. He receives from $450 to $500 in the summer months and he is in receipt of a government pension amounting to $175.

The Postmaster General said a moment ago that Denicourt was conscripted. I heard that Denicourt enrolled in the 22nd Regiment and I do not think that conscription had been passed when the 22nd left for overseas. Here we have a returned soldier who was a member of the 22nd regiment; a man who is the father of five children, who has been a public charge for the last three years and who is strongly recommended by his old war comrades. Veterans have made representations upon representations on his behalf, they have come many times to see the Postmaster General on his account, Mr. Chairman, I consider that, under these circumstances, there is one thing to be done, and one only; that is for the Postmaster General to appoint Mr. Denicourt as soon as possible and in this way he will be giving justice to a number of veterans from the 22nd. I am not prepared to say that Debeaujour was conscripted, all I can say is that Denicourt enrolled in the 22nd.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member said he did not know Denicourt nor Debeaujour.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): I do not know either of them. I have never talked with either of them.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Will the hon. member certify that Mr. Denicourt enlisted in the 22nd when the war broke out?

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): If the minister will accept my word, that is my information, and I think it is reliable.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I am informed that Mr. Denicourt enrolled at the end of the war, that he was just in time to go to France and that he never fought. That is my information. I do not know him, personally.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): If the hon. minister will permit me, not later than Monday, I will send him an affidavit to that effect.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): I understood the hon. member for St. Johns Iberville to say, a few moments ago, that he met Mr. Denicourt at a banquet of the Chamber of Commerce, on Monday last, and now he says that he does not know either of them. Am I correct?

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): The hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Laflèche) did not catch my words. I know there is an awful noise in the House. I said that I met the chairman of the Veterans' Legion in St. Johns, on Monday last, and he was in the war with Denicourt. He talked to me about him.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): And he is a good tory.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Yes, a good tory, editor of the conservative paper in St. Johns and a most genial chap. Mr. Denicourt went to the battlefields with the 22nd, and I will have an affidavit to that effect.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I would be very glad to have it.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I beg to call the minister's attention to this fact: Even if Denicourt was conscripted, if he saw active service on the battlefields, that would qualify him under the law for the soldiers' preference. Even if he was conscripted, as long as he went to the battlefields, he has the same preference as any other soldier.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Two different legal interpretations are given on this point.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): If I send the minister a sworn statement to the effect that Mr. Denicourt enlisted in the 22nd, would the minister appoint him?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As I told the hon. member, I have been informed that Mr. Denicourt only enlisted near the end of the war. I will take the sworn statement into consideration in arriving at a decision.

Mr. RAYMOND: I would like to call the minister's attention to another discrimination in the electoral district of Beauharnois. After an inquiry, the department has dismissed the postmaster at Beauharnois. According to the investigator's report, during the elections of 1930, the postmaster had placed a bet on the result of the poll.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): When was he dismissed?

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): During the fall 1932, but he was not replaced until July, 1933.

As I have said, the report contains the proof that the postmaster, Duquette, had placed a bet on the result of the poll, in 1930. When I asked why he had been dismissed, the minister told me: Guilty of active political partisanship.

I would very much like to know what the Postmaster General means by "political activities." what constitutes, in his opinion, the fact of taking an active part in politics. Is the sole fact of making a wager sufficient to prove that a person took an active part in politics ?

Before he replies, I wish to draw his attention to the following words of the Civil Service Act:

No employee shall engage in partisan work.

But a wager does not constitute the work of a partisan. How was the Postmaster General, according to the report made to him by the commissioner holding the inquiry, able to arrive at the conclusion that Mr. Duquette was guilty of political interference during the last election.

It is the reason invoked by the Postmaster General, when he requested the governor in council to dismiss Mr. Duquette. Will the Postmaster General be kind enough to inform me what he means by "political activities"?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): By "political activities," I mean the acts of a person who displays his politics.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): I am sure that the Postmaster General was not elected through such political activities in 1930.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): There are various kinds of political activities. I am certain that the political activities of the hon. member for Beauharnois is much greater than that of Mr. Duquette, the former postmaster of Beauharnois. With all due respect to the hon. member, I wish to point out to him that the fact of expressing his views on the eve of the election, is not the only score against him. However, it counts. The hon. member has had experience, he is fully aware that when a person of Beauharnois speaks in his favour, that does not mean that he is siding against him but with him. If he speaks before fifteen or twenty persons, it is a public act of political interference.

Moreover, in August, 1931, Mr. Duquette criticized at a public meeting in Beauharnois, the government. He was, perhaps, in a position where he could not entirely realize the bearing of his utterances.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Will the hon. Postmaster General allow me?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I wish to continue my explanation, and, afterwards, you may reply.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): That was not the reason urged to request his dismissal. I have here a letter dated September 29, 1932, addressed to the governor general in council, and the only reason alleged in urging his dismissal is that he was guilty of "political partisanship" in the course of the last dominion election—nothing else.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): If the hon. member had put to me other questions, I would have replied to them. The postmaster of Beauharnois was dismissed following an inquiry ordered when a complaint duly worded by persons from county or town of Beauharnois was received. Therefore, according to the rule established not by the present Postmaster General, but even existing during the regime of my predecessor, a commissioner was sent to Beauharnois to hold an inquiry and the latter forwarded a report stating that the postmaster was guilty of "political partisanship;" first of all, the postmaster had made a wager on the results of the dominion election in 1930, favouring the Liberals, when he was in a public place—in a hotel—on the eve of the dominion election, in a manner such as to influence those present who were also discussing politics. He himself taking part in the discussion.

Moreover, on August 23, 1932, he uttered, at a public meeting in Beauharnois, words which showed his absolute lack of confidence in the present government.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): He was right.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): As a result they dismissed him.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): If he was right, we gave him the opportunity, the liberty of preaching according to his political convictions.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): It was because he was right that you found fault with him.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No. It was because he was accomplishing the act referred to, that we concluded: Here is a good partisan who will be free, when relieved from the position of postmaster, to preach the Liberal gospel.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): So as to preach to the Tories (bleus).

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I understand that the hon. member for Beauharnois requested a reply to his questions?

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Yes, I requested a reply.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have given my reply.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Such are the activities of which the Postmaster General makes a subject of reproach against this postmaster. On the other hand, I rely on the evidence submitted. Among the documents filed, we find a letter from the Postmaster General addressed to the Governor General in Council, invoking as the sole reason for this dismissal the fact that he had been guilty of political "partisanship" in the course of the last Dominion election. Now, according to the commissioner who held the inquiry, the only act with which he is reproached, in the course of the 1930 Dominion election, is having made a wager. I wish to inquire of the Postmaster General whether that constitutes within the meaning of the Civil Service Act, a deed sufficient to justify the dismissal of a postmaster? Section 55 of the Civil Service Act reads as follows:

No employee shall engage in partisan work.

Does the Postmaster General consider that the fact of having made a wager constitutes the work of a partisan?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The Postmaster General accepted the report of the commissioner who held the inquiry, according to the rule established since 1921. The report of the commissioner is a judgment that the Postmaster General is not called upon to discuss. If the commissioner acted contrary to the facts and committed an injustice, it is to the public and the victim to take proceedings against him. It is the established rule of all departments and not only of the Post Office Department.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): May I point out to the Postmaster General that it is very bad politics and a poor excuse to take refuge behind an employee to whom was entrusted the mandate of holding inquiries in connection with "partisanship." Mr. Pariseault, the commissioner who held the inquiry, so as to retain his position, was obliged to render a decision stating that the person complained of had been guilty of an act of political "partisanship." And the Postmaster General cannot excuse himself before the house by simply stating that Mr. Pariseault arrived at such a conclusion and thus evade his responsibility. The Postmaster General had but to read the report of the inquiry and he would have found that the conclusion of Mr. Pariseault was not justified. The proof is there. There was no other act to reproach him with, when addressing your letter to the Governor General in Council, than the one of being guilty of political "partisanship" and the only fact which justifies this statement is that of a wager. in the course of the 1930 election. This is certainly not pursuant to the provisions of the Civil Service Act. To be dismissed, according to the act, one must engage in partisan work. Is making a wager considered working? Let us be honest.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It is committing an act.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have another case to submit to the hon. Postmaster General in connection with a mail contract between Murray Bay and the "Grand Fonds" in the county of Charlevoix.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): "The whale (La Baleine) is now at the bottom (fond)."

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I received in May the following letter:

I have had the mail contract of the "Grand Fonds" for eight years. I have always carried out my duties and have never heard of complaints, at least that I know of. To-day, they are depriving me of the mail at the expiration of my contract, in order to give it to another under the same agreement as I held. At present, the contract was awarded to another person without calling for tenders. There are many in this section of "Grand Fonds" that are dissatisfied and want the mail contract awarded by tender. They are entitled to this and demand it. To that purpose, I am forwarding to your address a petition that they have signed requesting that the mail cantract be awarded by tender.

Hoping that you will work on our behalf, I thank you and sign.

Ludger Gérard,
Grand Fonds,
Murray Bay,
Charlevoix.

The petition reads as follows:

Petition of property owners of "Grand Fonds," Murray Bay, in order to award the mail contract by tender.

René Dufour, Anis Dufour, Paul Dufour, Joseph Dufour, Henri Harvey, Edgar Maltais, Mérilde Maltais, Ludoric Bouchard, Francois Dufour, Paul Dufour, Joseph Turcotte, Ludger Gireard, Henri Maltais, Louis Philippe Tur-cotte. I forwarded this letter to the hon. Postmaster General and he acknowledged receipt stating that the mail contract had been awarded.

I wish to state that the contract for this service has been duly signed by Mr. Johnny Harvey, Jr., and it is now too late to alter the decision taken.

This letter was signed by the assistant deputy minister. I wish to inquire of the Postmaster General, through you Mr. Chairman, whether this contract was altered at the request forwarded by the superintendent of mail contracts, Mr. Anderson, to Mr. Warren, in the county of Charlevoix, or whether other persons requested the Postmaster General or the superintendent of mail contracts to change the contract. I should like to ask if these facts are similar to the cases I just referred to a few minutes ago, and if the hon. minister will kindly give the matter the same consideration.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, certainly.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I believe it is nearly the same thing. If I ask for this information, Mr. Chairman, it is for the reasons I gave a moment ago, and which, to my mind, seem justified by the facts.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): To return to the question of investigations, I should like to correct an error regarding what the minister said was the practice of the department in the past. I understand that to-day, the evidence received by the inquiry commissioner is not submitted in its entirety to the department, but that he submits only a report of the opinion he has formed after hearing the evidence. We did not proceed in that way in my time. When I was Postmaster General, I would send for the evidence, as far as possible, and review it myself to be sure that the commissioner had arrived at a proper decision, one in accordance with the evidence received.

For instance: the postmaster of Lameque, county of Gloucester, was dismissed after an investigation. I went to the department to get the correspondence and the report of the investigator. In his report, the commissioner stated that the postmaster at Lameque had admitted having taken part or having been present at a political meeting, but he did not quote the evidence heard and which would justify that conclusion.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Is Lameque in Egypt?

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): No. I took a copy of this report and sent it to my friend. He was my friend, a good Liberal, and everybody knew that before his appointment to the postmastership he had taken active part in politics, but after his appointment, he no longer did, and kept very quiet. I sent him a copy of the investigator's report and received from the late postmaster a sworn statement in which he declared under oath he had never admitted anything of the sort. I forwarded this affidavit to the department, where it may be found on file to-day. I asked for another investigation. After making further inquiries, I discovered that this postmaster had been present at a public meeting, not at a political one. When your humble servant was appointed Postmaster General, he went to his constituency to get ready for the bye-election, for things were different then from what they are to-day. I went to Lameque, and the people of the district, headed by the parish priest, decided to give a reception to the first French-Acadian to be honoured by such a federal appointment. The president of the "Assomption nationale", an Acadian organization, who was at that time the chief conservative organizer for the parish, was chairman of the reception committee, and he it was who greeted me and tendered the congratulations of the crowd. The local postmaster was present at this meeting, like any other citizen of the place. Because of his presence, he was accused of taking part in a political meeting, and lost his position. I quote this incident to show the minister that it is imperative to watch closely all the reports of the investigating commissioners, so that the minister himself may satisfy himself that the commissioner's judgment is not unfair. That is my only reason for telling of the incident.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. gentleman must admit that in the case of Lameque, I took a long time to consider the facts, and had to implement the report of the commissioner.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Certainly, but you had not before you the evidence heard at the time of the investigation.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I had other evidence.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): You had only the report of the investigating commissioner, in which he stated such and such admissions had been made in the course of the evidence, while the accused produced a sworn statement saying: "I never admitted anything of the sort in my evidence."

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As for myself, I followed the rule established by my predecessors. I never took it upon myself to dismiss a postmaster when the investigator reported that there were no grounds for doing so. In that respect, I did not follow certain precedents; I held strictly to the rule that the investigator's report must be implemented.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Not always. In certain cases, the commissioner's report was not implemented when it was desired to dismiss the postmaster.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I beg the committee's leave to speak a little further on a rural mail contract. Not long ago, I received a letter from Mr. Germain Gagnon, of Cap St. Fidèle, county of Charlevoix, telling me that his contract for carrying the mail will expire on the 1st of October of this year, and asking that I should fevour renewal in his behalf. I replied that tenders would very likely be called for and that he might send one in, but considering the two incidents of which I told the committee this evening, I should like to call the minister's attention to this case. I earnestly hope that the precedent established in those two cases will not be followed again; that Mr. Anderson will not write letters stating that the department is ready to renew the contract, and asking if the man who receives the letter considers that it would be to the advantage of the department to ask for tenders, and then giving the contract to some one else without tender.

Mr. SAUVE (Translations): Is the contract for more than $200?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I do not know the amount of the contract. I understand that in cases where the amount is not more than $200, no tenders are called for. In the case of the contract for La Baleine, to which I referred a moment ago, I complained of the fact that Mr. Anderson called on Mr. Warren to tell him if tenders were necessary, or if it would be better to renew the old contract. Mr. Anderson must have decided that tenders might be called for in case the contract might be more than $166.67. And the letter was signed by Mr. Anderson himself. He said that the government was ready to renew the contract at the same price for another year, adding: Even if you believe that in the public interest it is better to ask for tenders, please notify us and we shall call for them.

I should not like the same thing to happen again in the case of the contract for Cap St. Fidèle. Let tenders be called for; if the amount is too small to justify calling for tenders, consult local people—if you do not wish to consult me—the mayor, the parish priest, or other prominent citizens.

To show I was telling the truth, and that my observations in the case of La Baleine and Le Grand Fonds were justified, I shall read a letter from Mr. Léonidas Tremblay, of St. Fidèle, who says this:

> After receiving information from the Conservative dispenser of political favours, Mr. Hector Warren, states it is your fault if the mail did not run.

Mr. Chairman, I showed to the committee this evening that, as far as La Baleine is concerned, the member is not to blame if things did not run, or if they ran too well. Mr. Warren is the one to blame. In this case, a respectable citizen of St. Fidèle states under date of January the 17th, 1934:

> After receiving information from the Conservative dispenser of political favours, Mr. Hector Warren states it is your fault if things do not run well.

And the committee learned to-day that the member for Charlevoix is not the one to handle patronage in his constituency, that he is not consulted when a change of contractor is contemplated, or when something is to be done in the Post Office Department; Mr. Warren is consulted then, and if he fails to give everything to his own friends, he says: It's your member's fault if things do not run well.

I hope I said enough regarding the cases of La Baleine and Le Grand Fonds to show that if the mail service is badly organized in the county, the member cannot be blamed for it; the one to blame is the man who claimed for himself the member's privileges and the man—I do not know him and do not wish to make any charge—who recommended him to the Postmaster General as the best man to handle the patronage which was turned over to him.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. minister be kind enough to tell me if the meeting of the Executive Universal Postal Union in Ottawa was meant to plan for the postal congress in Cairo?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): That was the amount voted for the postal congress at Ottawa?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): $62,000.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): $62,400?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Why were these amounts divided up, and why was a special grant of $25,000 voted, as well as appropriations of $37,400, to the Post Office department?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The amounts were voted the preceding year.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Was the whole amount spent for the preliminary convention held in Ottawa? Was the whole amount spent last year and in the solar year 1933?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The expenditure out of the amount voted in 1932-33 for this meeting of the executive committee amounted to $10,052.56; the expenditure out of the estimates of 1933-34 passed to cover the costs of this meeting of the executive committee amounted to $11,007.47; the expenditure out of the estimates of 1933-34 to allow the delegates of the executive committee to make a trip and inspect the Canadian Mails service amounted to $18,000.44; total, $39,060.47.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): What was the difference between the amount of $62,400 and the amount spent?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Amount voted in 1932-33 for the ends of the executive committee, $25,000; 1933-34, expenditure entailed by the meeting of the executive committee, $12,400; 1933-34, trip made by the delegates of the said committee to inspect the Canadian Mails service, $25,000; total, $62,400.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): That is not what I want to know from the minister. I am asking the minister what amount out of these $62,400 has been spent actually.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I told you: $39,060.47.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Has the hon. minister returned any of these amounts to the treasury?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Certainly; the balance.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): What is the balance?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The difference between $62,000 and $39,000.

M. POULIOT (Translation): $25,000?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It can be figured up.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Now how many delegates took part to the preliminary postal convention in Ottawa?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The foreign delegates?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Members of this Executive Postal Union Committee were in Ottawa, last year.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Do you mean the number of the countries represented?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I mean the total number of delegates: ten, twenty or thirty persons.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): There were forty-two.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Did these forty-two persons take in the excursion to the West?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, but not the minister himself.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): How many officials of the department of the Postmaster General accompanied these people to the West?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Ten or eleven, I think. Note should be taken of one thing, however, I mean it was not merely a pleasure trip, but the committee continued to sit on the train. The executive committee held meetings during the trip and consequently a certain number of officials had to be on hand. Rather than to sit here at Ottawa the congress continued its meetings while travelling and we thought it was good policy, as the delegates attended to their work and saw at the same time the wealth and scenery of our country.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Very sound.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): What was the cost of the trip, first for the officials of the department and then for the delegates?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have not here all the details. About $400 each. I don't think I am much mistaken in that.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): If the minister hasn't the details he should have the total, and I would like to ask him first whether the Canadian government have paid the travelling expenses of the foreign delegates to Victoria.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): What was the cost of the trip, including the transportation of these delegates and of the officials of the department of the Postmaster General, the meals on the train and at the hotels, the tips and all? I do not want any details; I ask the minister to give me the total amount.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): About $400 each.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): So, this was a meeting of the executive committee in view of the postal congress at Cairo?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): What was the cost of the trip of the Canadian delegation who attended the postal congress at Cairo?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): About $12,300 or $12,400. Maybe certain small details are still to be added—I am told it is $12,716.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): So, if we take the meeting of the executive committee at Ottawa which has cost $62,000 and the cost of the trip to Cairo, $12,000, the postal congress of Cairo, in its preliminary stage—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The congress did not cost $62,000 since there has been a remittal.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): It did cost $39,000 and the trip to Cairo, $12,000, $51,000 in all, and besides $20,000 for a trip to the west.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The cost is high enough without that.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): How many albums have been published? 200?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Would the hon. minister have any objection to give some to the members?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The minister would not object if parliament voted an amount to print more. I think I still have two or three copies and will readily hand one to the hon. member for Témiscouata, if he wants one.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Where are the others? There were 42 delegates accompanied by 11 employees, a total of 53 persons. Out of the 200 albums published at the price of $24 each the members did not get one. Where did they go to? Have they been eaten up by moths and mice?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I think I have given all the necessary explanations this afternoon and to-night, at the beginning of the sitting.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The hon. minister said he had handed some to the respectable folk; there are many respectable folk in Canada.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I said to "respectable people." I did not say "to the respectable people," for they are too numerous.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): The hon. member for Témiscouata could have been handed a copy?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Certainly. Had I not feared to offend him—he could have interpreted my gesture as unfortunate—I would have been happy to send him one. But since he can't be without one, I will try and get one for him, to show him the value of the work.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I thank the minister very much.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): If there is a spare one, I would like to have it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Have you one also for me?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Let all those who wish one stand up—

(Many members get up.)

—I will ask for a vote for this purpose.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Oh, no, if it does not cost anything, if some are left.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have not enough to satisfy all demands.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): I will hand you mine.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): We thought we should distribute the copies on hand. The fact is that these albums were not authorized by the authorities of the department. On the contrary, I had even instructed Mr. Webster not to print any, because they were too costly. I have given explanations on this matter which seem to be accepted by the opposition. The copies left after the distribution to the members of the congress were given away.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Why did my hon. friend forget me in the course of this distribution?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Does the ex-Minister of Justice believe that I have forgotten him so?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Yes, I did not get any.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): We shall see.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I did not get any either, although I am a good friend of the Postmaster General.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I must say I am privileged, for I got a copy.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Postmaster General if in the district called township Latour a mail distribution service will be established this coming summer, from Portneuf? I have already written to the Postmaster General about it. There is a distance of approximately twenty-five miles between these two places. Townships Royal and Latour are two small colonization townships extending from Portneuf to Bersimis, and the people are asking for a mail service three times a week. I have not yet received a satisfactory answer from the department on this subject. In times like these when we are trying to get people settled on the land and when we are doing our utmost to improve the lot of the farming class and make farming attractive to them, it seems to me that this mail service is necessary.

I wish to put another question concerning another contract, from Rivière-Portneuf to Bersimis. The same contract might serve, if a stop were made at these two places. These people want this service which would be very important for them.

I ask the Postmaster General to answer this further question. One of my constituents sent me a letter recently stating that certain documents, similar to those I hold in my hand—and I beg the hon. minister's attention at this point—had been distributed by the postmaster at a certain place. This document appears to be a circular advertising certain machines, stoves, etc., for which somebody in the district has the agency. It seems that the postmaster distributes these circulars, with the mail, to those who go to the post office. Am I to understand that this practice is allowed?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): At what place?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I would rather not say where.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I would like to know the name of the place.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): It is in Charlevoix county, at Cap-à-l'Aigle.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Does the hon. member wish to lodge a complaint against the postmaster there?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I would like to know if this practice is allowed or not.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): We have not had occasion to allow any postmaster to distribute circulars of this description.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Apparently the postmaster gives these circulars out at the same time as the mail.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): That is contrary to the rules.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): If the hon. member wishes to make a complaint against the postmaster in his county, we will consider it.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I'll think it over. I would not like to lay a charge. I was simply requested to ascertain if such a practice were permitted.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Now there is something else that I wish to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General. Last year a certain request was made to me concerning Anticosti Island: what was wanted was a service around the island, in the interest of citizens living far from Port Menier. In answer to a letter I wrote on this subject on May 31, 1933, I received a reply dated June 1, 1933. I would like to know if the same contract has been let for another year. The continuance of the contract is necessary to ensure that the service be more satisfactory than it was previously.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): That has already been done, I believe.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to avoid any misunderstanding. A moment ago the minister said that he had no intention of annoying me by sending me a copy of the album. I am absolutely opposed to any further expenditure under this head. If there remain any spare copies of the album, I will not be annoyed if the minister will send me one.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): May I add one condition?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Yes.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The condition is that the hon. member for Témiscouata grant us the pleasure of sending to the Postmaster General a copy of his new book which we will be glad to keep.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Certainly. An exchange of courtesies. That suits me very well.

Now, I wish to put a few questions to the Postmaster General, and I hope he can answer them right away. First of all, how many postmasters have been dismissed for partisanship since 1930?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): About 800.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): How many post offices have been closed?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 513.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): 513?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Number of post offices closed from August 7, 1930, to April 30, 1934, 513, because of reduced revenue, or uselessness. Number of post offices closed on account of the establishing of the rural mail service, 193. Number of post offices in receipt of $25 or less, 876. Number of post offices in receipt of $100 or less, 3,835.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Were those closed?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Then only 193 were closed.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 513.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): You mentioned the figure 193. What was that for?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 513.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Closed?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Closed, yes.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): In the case of how many post offices was there a change of premises?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Change of premises, 112.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Since August, 1930?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Since August 7, 1930.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): In the case of these changed premises was the postmaster dismissed?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Most of them.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Does "a change of premises" imply "a change of site"?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Sometimes.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): A change of premises does not involve the closing of the post office.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): A change of premises is effected: the post office is moved from one site to another.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The number 800 represents the postmasters dismissed for reasons of partisanship, is that right?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 842?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): 842?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No, no: financial irregularities, change of premises, unsatisfactory management, etc.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Out of these 842 how many were dismissed for reasons of political partisanship?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 137, on complaint of a member of parliament; 390 as a result of investigations; guilt admitted by postmaster, 18.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): How many appointments has the postmaster general made since August, 1930?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The postmaster general?

Mr POULIOT (Translation): Yes.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The appointments to all the post offices under his jurisdiction.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The minister's jurisdiction was considerably extended by the law, recently enacted, granting him powers which heretofore belonged to the Civil Service Commission.

Since the minister has not yet answered that question I shall ask him another: How many new post offices have been opened since 1930?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have not the figures here.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The minister will have no objection to furnishing us with them?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall give them to you to-morrow.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): 842 postmasters have been dismissed, and 513 post offices were closed, which means that as many more postmasters are out of a job; 112 cases of changed premises, with dismissals in most cases. That makes a total of 1,467 who have lost their positions. Is that correct?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): There were 842 dismissals, 513 post offices were closed and in 112 cases the premises were changed. These are the figures you gave a moment ago. I find, accordingly, that a total of 1,467 postmasters have been dismissed throughout the country from 1930 up till now.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Would the hon. member please put that question again?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Going over the figures you quoted just now—you may correct any inaccuracies—I find that there were 842 dismissals—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): And changes.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): 513 post offices were closed.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, closed.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): There are no postmasters?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No. there are no longer any post office.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): There are 112 changes of premises and mostly all dismissals?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes, but this figure is included in the 842.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): You did not mention that just now.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): How many postmasters were appointed temporarily or permanently by the Postmaster General, since August, 1930?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall furnish that information at the same time as the other.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): On the total of dismissals you have just mentioned, how many were there in Quebec, in the way of change of premises, post offices closed or dismissals for political "partisanship"?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 295.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): How many were there in the other provinces? How many in Ontario?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall furnish this information a little later. Meanwhile, you may put other questions.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): I shall put another question. Will the Postmaster General be kind enough to inform me as to the age of Mr. Tanner Green, superintendent of postal services, at Quebec, to whom reference was made just now, in the course of the remarks of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I think he is over 70 years of age.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Could the Postmaster General be more precise?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I would not care to go as far back as his baptism.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): No, but after his baptism.

Mr. SAUVE: (Translation): I think he is 70 years old.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): I am informed that he is over 75 years old.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Then, he is older?

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Could the Postmaster General make certain of his information?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Well! Will the hon. member complete his question?

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Complete my question?

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): Might we not agree on 73 years of age?

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): What is the age limit in the service?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Sixty-five years.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Could the hon. Postmaster General state why, this gentleman, being over 70 years old, is still in the service?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have no objection, the hon. member for Gloucester is perfectly aware—

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): I would prefer to obtain the information from the present Postmaster General.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member for Beauharnois will allow me, I trust, to credit his friend, the ex-Postmaster General with some experience and efficiency. Mr. Tanner Green is an efficient official—

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): In age!

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): When the hon. member reaches his age, he will be very glad of being shown some regard.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): I shall die before I reach that age.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Tanner Green is an efficient official and, if the hon. member is not aware of it, the hon. members from the district of Quebec are aware that we have a new postmaster in that city, that we are carrying out a reorganization and we require for some time more the experience and efficiency of Mr. Green and it is on such representations that I consented to keep him for some time in the service

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Could the hon. Postmaster General explain in what consists his efficiency. In political "partisanship"?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): If he were a political partisan, I would be at a loss to understand what is a partisan—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Were he to die?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I beg your pardon—because the Conservatives told me, when I became Postmaster General, that he was a downright grit.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): And what did you find out since you are there?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I found out that he was a perfect civil employee.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): And a good tory?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): He never mixed into politics to my knowledge. I really do not know his political allegiance.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): You could perhaps investigate on that?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Is the hon. member serious?

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Yes, because I know that such investigations were held.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Then we shall have one.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Were he to die, what would you do about reorganization?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, following the remarks made by the hon. member for Beauharnois about Mr. Tanner Green, I could repeat what I said this afternoon. I know him personally and all I said about Mr. Anderson can apply to him. I agree with the minister that he is very competent. Now, the same principle applies; all these high officials, however competent they are and while you must bow to their knowledge and authority, should retire from the service when they have reached the age fixed by the law. There always stands the question of justice towards the lower grade civil servants who spend the better part of their life trying to make good for their family and to get a better job. They are unable to get a promotion because the gentlemen who occupy the high positions do not retire when they have reached the age limit. Could the minister explain one thing about this matter? How is it that, in this item No. 21, it has been found necessary to add a last special paragraph about Mr. G. C. Anderson:

> ... and to provide for the continuance in office of G. C. Anderson as superintendent of mail contracts, from April 1, 1934, to March 31, 1935.

—and that the same thing was omitted about Mr. Tanner Green, whose situation is the same and who has reached the age limit? Where can we find his salary mentioned? Since you have, in the case of Mr. Anderson, to mention his salary specifically, how is it that the same thing does not apply in Mr. Tanner Green's case? I would like to have this information.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It is very simple; it is because Mr. Anderson is over seventy-five years old and that consequently, according to an order—

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): He is required also for reorganization, is he not?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Does the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay accept the explanation given by the hon. member for St. Henri?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I prefer to get explanations from the hon. minister, although I have the greatest regard for my hon. friend from St. Henri.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The reason is that Mr. Anderson is over seventy-five years of age.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Shall I understand that it is necessary to mention in the estimates the salary of a civil servant who is over seventy-five years old, but that this is not necessary in the case of an official who has exceeded by only five years the age of retirement?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): An order in council is sufficient in that case.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): I asked a moment ago if the Postmaster General could tell me how many postmasters have been dismissed in each province. I notice that the two excellent officials who sit near the minister have made the necessary calculations. The minister should be able to give us those figures now.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): To satisfy the hon. member for St. Henri.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Not only to satisfy me, but to satisfy the people of Canada.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): This is not a satisfaction.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): You had the satisfaction of dismissing them.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Will the hon. member for St. Henri allow me to answer his question?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): I was interrupted by the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): You were not more serious before that.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): This is rather serious.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Prince Edward Island, 10; Nova Scotia, 173; New Brunswick, 86; Ontario, 10; Saskatchewan, 28; Alberta, 22; British Columbia, 7.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Quebec?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The figure is the same as it was a moment ago.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): What figure was given a moment ago?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 295.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The province of Quebec, your province, heads the list?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As always, just as was the case when the hon. member was lauding the government which he supported.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): How many were there under the previous government?

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): There were many. I was one of them.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): You do not know, because you were not here.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe himself was dismissed.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Will the hon. minister tell us how many postmasters were appointed by him, both temporarily and permanently, since August, 1930?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have not these figures here; I will be able to-morrow to give them to the hon. member.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Will the minister allow me to ask him some questions now, so that he may answer to-morrow. I know that he cannot give us that information to-night. I want to know what was for the year ending March 31, 1934 the revenue from first-class matter; also the amount received for the transportation of newspapers; the tax collected on postal notes and money orders. Then what are the gross receipts and net receipts of this last year? What was the amount spent during the year ended March 31, 1934?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Adding another question, I want the hon. minister to tell us what was the supplementary revenue accrued to the federal treasury from the additional cent charged for letter stamp since this tax was put into effect.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I will get that.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I have a last question to put to the minister. Is it not a fact that he has appointed from 4,500 to 5,000 postmasters since he is Postmaster General?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No, I swear it is not so.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, we are discussing to-night the item on civil government.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The discussion has gone beyond the limit of this item.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): The general estimates remain to be voted, and on these three items we shall be able to discuss all matters concerning the administration of the Postmaster General's department. Could I suggest that we carry to-night the item that we are discussing now? We could continue the discussion on the general estimates. I suggest that the item on civil government be adopted to-night.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The discussion has somewhat exceeded the limit of this item No. 21. Both items were discussed. The practice is to adopt item 21 without discussion.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): There was a general discussion.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Both items were discussed to-day.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): When the other item comes up for discussion, there will be that much saved (sauvé).

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): We can proceed until eleven o'clock.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): We shall continue on item 21 since you insist: the contingencies.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I understand that item 21 is adopted.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): No, not yet. Would the minister give us the particulars about the contingencies?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I have not these particulars here; I will give them to-morrow.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): Could the hon. Postmaster General inform the house whether, in the total of item No. 21 the ten per cent deducted from employees, during the year is taken into account?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): Then, I gather that the ten per cent is deducted from this item of $1,145,000?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): At page 88 of the budget's appropriations, we find the detail of salaries of item 21 and the ten per cent has not been deducted. The addition is made and it amounts to $1,145,000, the same amount as at page 9. It is the same question that was raised the other day in connection with another department; we actually vote the entire amount of the salaries?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): No.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): Such salaries are subject to the deductions of ten per cent?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): The grand total, here, at page 89, is $1,145,000, exactly the same amount as the item we are discussing. We vote $1,145,000 without taking into account the ten per cent deduction. Could the hon. Postmaster General furnish this information to-day?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall furnish it to-morrow.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): On the occasion of your trip to Europe, you stated, in France, at a large banquet, and rightly, that the French people should taste our maple syrup and also utilize it as much as possible, especially by mixing it with French tobacco so as to give it a better aroma. Did the Minister of Agriculture avail himself of the services of the Post Office Department to send maple syrup samples to France? I was informed at the department that hundreds of gallons of maple syrup were shipped to France and that these shipments brought in a considerable revenue to the Post Office Department.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I would request the hon. member to verify his information because I am unaware of the fact.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Did you state that more maple syrup should be mixed with French tobacco?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It was simply a casual remark. I did not make any speech in this connection. Some one remarked that maple syrup was used with tobacco. I simply added that they should use more. The press gave this incident great importance, the same thing happens even for the speeches of the hon. member for St. Henri.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): If they thought it so important, it is because the Postmaster General is a connoisseur in tobacco.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Coming back to a question put by the hon. member for Maisonneuve, relating to the ten per cent cut, if the postmaster will look up page 89, he will note that the ten per cent has been deducted; $127,236 was deducted from $1,145,000, just as it appears in item No. 21, in which the ten per cent is not included. The Postmaster General will have no need to search any longer in order to give a reply to-morrow; it is here.

Mr. TOTZKE: I have not been able to follow the discussion and I do not know what item we are on, but before the minister takes his estimates out of committee I should like to ask him to see that a report that I asked for, passed by the house on April 16, with reference to the dismissal of the postmaster at Hoey, Saskatchewan, is brought down.

Mr. SAUVE: The return asked for will be tabled to-morrow or on Monday next.

Mr. TOTZKE: I should like it to be done before this estimate is taken out of the committee.

Mr. VENIOT: I want to ask a couple more questions. I do not expect the minister to answer them to-night, because he may not have expected them and may have to look up the records.

Has there been any deficit in the air mail service between Montreal and Albany?

Mr. SAUVE: We shall give the answer to-morrow.

Mr. VENIOT: What is the name of the contractor for the air mail service between Pembina, Winnipeg and the United States border?

Mr. SAUVE: It is Canadian Airways.

Mr. VENIOT: I know it is Canadian Airways, but there is another question connected with that. What is the price per mile, or per pound if it is on a poundage basis, for carrying the mail; and does this company, Canadian Airways Limited, carry the mail over Canadian territory to the American border? I ask the question because my information is that while Canadian Airways have the contract from Winnipeg to the border they are not to-day carrying the mail by their own planes but have entered into an agreement with an American company to carry it through to Winnipeg over Canadian territory. I want to know if that information is correct.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Has Mr. Joseph Arthur Morin, returned soldier, been appointed postmaster at St. Joseph d'Alma?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The case is still pending.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The Postmaster General is aware of the fact that he has been appointed by the Civil Service Commission, but that his appointment has not been ratified by the department?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): When will the hon. Postmaster General be in a position to give a definite answer to Mr. Morin, in this respect?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As soon as possible.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): What does "as soon as possible" mean? That may be the week where there are three Thursdays, that may mean next week or to-morrow.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Perhaps to-morrow, perhaps next week.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Will it be the week after next week?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As to a reply?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): As to a definite reply.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I am waiting for certain information and certain supporting documents.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I am not asking the Postmaster General what will be his decision, I am inquiring at what date he will be in a position to give a definite reply. Between now and the end of June?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Before the end of the session?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I cannot tell when the session will end.

Mr. VENIOT: Preparatory to the minister coming to the committee again—we cannot get the estimate through to-night; it is now ten minutes to eleven—may I ask if he will have ready for the next sitting a report touching the situation in the city of Saint John in regard to the superintendent of postal service for New Brunswick, and let the committee know when we may expect the nomination.

Mr. SAUVE: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mr. VENIOT: May I suggest, in view of the fact that we may have some discussion on the three items that remain, that we move out of committee?

Mr. BENNETT: We are going to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Friday, June 1, 1934

.The house met at three o'clock.

FIRST NARROWS BRIDGE

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I beg to table parliamentary return number 185. This is the return which the hon. member for North Vancouver (Mr. Munn) was asking about yesterday, I do not think there has been any delay in its preparation as it is very comprehensive and was asked for only in the second week of May.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 89, to amend and consolidate the Excise Act.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Explain.

Mr. MATTHEWS: This bill is to amend and consolidate the Excise Act. This act was consolidated in 1927 at the time of the general revision of the statutes, but the last actual revision took place in 1883. A departmental committee consisting of the commissioner of excise, the law clerk of the House of Commons, the departmental solicitor and the former chief inspector of excise has been engaged on this work for the past six months. This bill should not be contentious because in the main it consists of the consolidation of the act to include the various amendments passed since 1927. There is some rearrangement and reduction of sections as well as a simplification of language without essential change in meaning, and it is intended to facilitate the general administrative work of the department.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Are there no new sections?

Mr. MATTHEWS: There are no new sections of any great moment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suppose the house can count on the minister letting it know as to anything it contains in the way of new legislation?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Oh, yes, that will be shown in the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. THOMAS G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 90, respecting the Caughnawaga Indian reserve and to amend the Indian Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MURPHY: Under the terms of an order in council, P.C. 466, of March 5, 1889, the provisions of the Indian Advancement Act, chapter 44, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, were applied to the Iroquois Indians of Caughnawaga, in the province of Quebec, and for the purpose of giving effect to the application of the act, the reserve at Caughnawaga was designated "Caughnawaga Indian reserve" and divided into six sections.

On July 12, 1906, an order in council, P.C. 1419, in the purported exercise of the powers conferred by section 4 of the Indian Advancement Act, it was provided that the division of the Caughnawaga Indian reserve into sections be done away with, and that the said reserve be comprised in one section.

It now appears there was no provision of the Indian Act, or of any statute, authorizing the making of the last mentioned order in council.

It is provided under the terms of this bill that all acts committed pursuant to the provisions of the order in council of July 12, 1906, P.C. 1419, be made valid and effective, and provision is also made for again dividing the reserve into six sections.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is this legislation being brought down at the request of the people living on the reserve?

Mr. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It is to validate invalid legislation by order in council.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READING—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 86, for the relief of Blanche Marjorie Short Hanson—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 87, for the relief of Fenwick William Smith—Mr. Heaps.

COURTS OF ADMIRALTY

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. 88, respecting Courts of Admiralty.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is a bill to amend and consolidate the law in respect of courts of admiralty and to bring it under the jurisdiction of Canada, more particularly having regard to the statute of Westminster. The bill has been passed by the Senate.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask the Minister of Marine when he expects to introduce the Canada Shipping Act Amendment bill and whether it is intended to refer it to a special committee of the house.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I hope to move the first reading of the bill on Monday. I do not think it will have to go to a special committee; it will go before the committee of the whole house.

DOMINION COMPANIES ACT

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved the third reading of Bill No. 64, respecting dominion companies.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

CONDITIONS GOVERNING TEN YEAR EXTENSION OF BANK CHARTERS

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 18, respecting banks and banking.

On section 56—Inspector general of banks to be appointed.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to move to this clause. I move:

That subsection 11 of section 56 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

Whenever the inspector is satisfied that a bank is insolvent he shall report fully on the bank's condition to the minister, and the minister may, without waiting for the bank to suspend payment in specie or dominion or Bank of Canada notes, of any of its liabilities as they accrue, forthwith appoint in writing a curator to supervise the affairs of such bank, and such appointment shall have the same effect as if the bank had suspended payment in specie or dominion or Bank of Canada notes of any of its liabilities as they accrued.

This amendment is to bring the subclause into conformity with clauses 117 and 118 which were amended in similar fashion in the committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It gives the minister instead of the association power directly to appoint.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, it substitutes the minister for the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 57—Quarterly or half-yearly dividends.

Mr. COOTE: Stand.

Section stands.

Section 58 agreed to.

On section 59—Cash reserves in dominion notes.

On section 67—Refund of deposit if bank is wound up.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I ask how far the powers of the treasury board will be limited or circumscribed as a result of the new legislation?

Mr. RHODES: There will be no change in the position except that my hon. friend will recall that under the provisions as now outlined the circulation of the banks will disappear stage by stage, and this section will be required until the circulation of the banks entirely disappears.

Section agreed to.

Sections 68 to 74 inclusive agreed to.

On section 75—Business and powers of bank.

Mr. COOTE: Stand.

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps I had better give notice of an amendment which I propose to move, so that it will be before the committee, although of course the section will stand. The amendment is designed to permit the bank's name to appear on prospectuses or advertisements in respect of certain types of securities which are peculiar to the province of Quebec. The proposed amendment is:

That paragraph (g) of subsection (2) of section 75 be amended by inserting the words "or related school board or parish trustees" after the word "municipality" in line 6 of the said paragraph, and by inserting the words "or unless provision is made for the payment thereof and the interest thereon by a province pursuant to its statutes" at the end of the paragraph.

Section stands.

Sections 76 and 77 agreed to.

On section 78—Acquisition of real estate.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What was the section dealing with investment bankers, which it was arranged in the committee should stand for discussion in the house?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Stand.

Section stands.

Sections 92 to 95 inclusive agreed to.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

On section 96—Bank not bound to see to trust in deposits.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to propose:

That subsection (2) of section 96 be amended by inserting after the words "such persons" in the fifth line of the said subsection the words "or of such of them as under the document creating the trust may be entitled to receive such deposit."

The purpose of this amendment is obvious of course. It is to permit the withdrawal of deposits subject to trusts of which the bank has notice to be made in accordance with the terms of the document creating the trust where such document does not require the signature of all parties to the trust.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 97 to 111 inclusive agreed to.

On section 112—Monthly returns.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Stand.

Section stands.

Section 113 agreed to.

On section 114—Annual returns of unpaid dividends and balances.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment:

That subsection (12) of section 114 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

The returns referred to in subsections (1) to (9) inclusive of this section and a compilation for all banks of the respective items of information contained in the returns required by subsections (10) and (11) of this section shall be laid before parliament by the minister at the next session thereof.

By way of explanation it is submitted that the new returns required under subsections (10) and (11) of this section possibly should not, as in the case of lists of shareholders and returns of unclaimed balances, be tabled in parliament so as to show the information for individual banks. The proposed amendment accordingly provides that a summary for all banks of the information contained in these new returns shall be tabled, rather than the individual returns themselves. The committee will see the object of the amendment; it is intended that information with respect to individual banks shall not be disclosed, but that the total position shall be made known.

I have another amendment to subsection (11). It is that the subsection be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

The bank shall once in each year transmit or deliver to the minister a return in respect of all deposits by the public held by the bank in Canada at a date to be specified by the treasury board, showing as to deposits payable on demand and also as to deposits payable after notice, the number and aggregate amount of such deposits in each of the following classes:

1. Deposits under $1,000.
2. Deposits over $1,000 to $5,000.
3. Deposits over $5,000 to $25,000.
4. Deposits over $25,000 to $100,000.
5. Deposits in excess of $100,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the alteration from the existing subsection?

Mr. RHODES: It is merely a change in wording which is thought to be more precise than the subsection as passed by the committee, which was prepared somewhat hurriedly.

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 115 and 116 agreed to.

On section 117—Association to appoint curator.

Mr. RHODES: I do not know that it is material, but perhaps the side note ought to be changed from "association to appoint curator" to "minister to appoint curator." However, I am advised that in the ordinary course it is the duty of the law clerk to make such alterations.

Section agreed to.

Sections 118 to 123 inclusive agreed to.

Sections 124 and 125 stand.

Sections 126 to 137 inclusive agreed to.

Section 138 stands.

Sections 139 to 150 inclusive agreed to.

Section 151 stands.

Sections 152 to 165 inclusive agreed to.

Section 166 stands.

Sections 167 to 170 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. COOTE: We have gone over the act rather hurriedly, and I wonder if there would be any objection to letting section 99 stand. I did not hear that section called.

Mr. RHODES: Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Section 99 will stand.

Schedules A to J inclusive agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: Is it the wish of the committee that we should revert to the sections that stood or should we leave them for another day?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Some of the members who are absent have expressed the desire that some of the sections mentioned should be left over for further discussion at a later date.

Mr. RHODES: Then I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. NEILL: Would the minister be good enough to allow that section to stand which deals with the charge on cheques? Is it section 91?

Mr. COOTE: I think it is section 91, and it stood.

Mr. RHODES: Section 91 stands. Does that cover what my hon. friend has in mind?

Mr. COOTE: Subsection 4 of section 91 I think was wanted to stand.

Mr. RHODES: At all events it can be understood that if this particular section does not cover all the matters my hon. friend has in mind there will be no objection to his reopening a section that has passed.

Mr. McINTOSH: Is further discussion precluded on the clauses that have been announced as carried?

Mr. RHODES: Of course, it would be desirable to have orderly procedure.

Mr. McINTOSH: There might be special circumstances under which a member might wish to discuss a certain clause that has carried.

Mr. RHODES: As far as I am concerned I should make no objection.

Progress reported.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

Salaries and allowances, $15,219,219.

Mail services, including mail service by air, $13,402,450.

Miscellaneous, including $5,000 to provide for payment of compassionate allowances to employees injured while in the performance of their duties or to other persons injured while performing duties in any way connected with the postal service or in protecting His Majesty's mails, or to the dependents of such employees or other persons who may be killed while so engaged, payments to be made only on the specific authority of the governor in council, $1,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS: I would ask the Postmaster General if any action has been taken or consideration given to the position of the revenue postmasters who have had their remuneration greatly reduced by the fall in revenue and also by the ten per cent deduction. These postmasters are placed in a much different position from the average civil servant on a fixed salary, less the ten per cent deduction, for their remuneration is based on the revenue of their post office, and that revenue has been greatly reduced in recent years, automatically reducing their remuneration, and on top of that they have had the ten per cent deduction. So they are in a very unfavourable position as compared with the average civil servant. Is the Postmaster General doing anything for these postmasters?

Mr. SAUVE: As I said last night, the matter is under consideration. The revenues are increasing.

Mr. LUCAS: I would say to the Postmaster General that these revenue postmasters have been in this position for two years now, and I think it is time that some action was taken instead of further consideration. Can the Postmaster General not say that something will be done for them in a reasonable time?

Mr. SAUVE: As I have said, we expect so.

Mr. VENIOT: When the budget was introduced I took this matter up in the house with the Minister of Finance. I called his attention to what I considered to be the injustice which has been referred to by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lucas), and the Minister of Finance promised he would go fully into the matter and that if such an injustice existed as I pointed out, it would be rectified. Might I suggest that the Postmaster General and the Minister of Finance get together on this question after interviewing the representatives of the postmasters concerned, that is, the officials of their association? The officials of the department may be able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion without going to the trouble of interviewing representatives of the postmasters' association, but I think it would be more satisfactory if some of the officials of that association, say the president and the secretary, were called into consultation with the Postmaster General and the Minister of Finance. In that way I think an agreement could be more readily reached.

Mr. HEAPS: When a vacancy occurs in one of these positions how is it filled, may I ask?

Mr. SAUVE: Over $3,000, it is a matter for the civil service commission.

Mr. HEAPS: What about under $3,000?

Mr. SAUVE: Then it is the Post Office Department.

[Mr. Lucas.]

Mr. HEAPS: How does the Post Office Department appoint these postmasters?

Mr. SAUVE: It depends.

Mr. HEAPS: What is the consideration? I should like to know what qualifications a man has to have.

Mr. SAUVE: Returned soldiers have the preference.

Mr. HEAPS: How many returned soldiers were appointed in the past few years?

Mr. SAUVE: I have not the figures.

Mr. HEAPS: Does the Postmaster General say that only returned soldiers have been appointed to these vacancies?

Mr. SAUVE: The great majority.

Mr. HEAPS: Perhaps the Postmaster General is familiar with the case which I have in mind. Some time ago a vacancy occurred in my own constituency. I am not complaining because this vacancy was created by the person who had been appointed being dismissed but I have serious complaint to make as to the way in which the vacancy was filled. I realize that to the victor belongs the spoils and I have no objection to a Conservative being appointed to a position when there is a vacancy.

Mr. McINTOSH: If he is efficient.

Mr. HEAPS: That is one consideration. However, I do think that when these appointments are made some regard should be had for the kind of people appointed. As I said, a vacancy occurred in the district which I have the honour to represent in this house. When it became known who was to be appointed, protests were made by many individuals in Winnipeg. I protested against the appointment, I wrote to the Postmaster General but I got as much satisfaction from the department as I would have got if I had written to this desk. This man was not a returned man and I objected to his being appointed because he had a fairly long criminal record. However, he was appointed to handle His Majesty's mail and when I protested and kept on protesting, I got no satisfaction. A short time after this man was appointed his son came out of the penitentiary and he helped his father to handle the registered mail in the post office. I protested again and finally the post office was transferred from the father to the daughter as a means of evading the issue. Is this all the satisfaction a member of parliament can get from the department? I got in touch with the department on a question of policy but I could get no satisfaction. I actually went down to see the minister in his office, I made an appointment but I was unable to see him. I think it is a rather sad state of affairs when a man of this type is appointed to a position of this kind for purely political considerations. This man has been appointed to handle the mails and other valuables which go through the post office of a thickly populated district. To my own personal knowledge I know that many people in the district refuse to take their mail to this post office because of the record of the individual who has been appointed by the Postmaster General.

Mr. SAUVE: I regret very much that the hon. member could not see me at my office because every hon. member is welcome in my office when I am there.

Mr. HEAPS: Is that all the answer the Postmaster General is going to make to my complaint?

Mr. SAUVE: Oh, no, I shall take the matter under consideration.

Mr. HEAPS: I complained in writing even before the appointment was made. I took it up with the officials who were there and all that I have said can be confirmed. Yet I was unable to get anything in the way of satisfaction. It may be true that I am welcome in the office of the Postmaster General but I sat there for three-quarters of an hour and watched others going in and coming out while I was still waiting. I had given my name and stated that I wanted to see the Postmaster General on this particular question. This matter is a couple of years old now but this is the first chance I have had to raise it. I made an appointment with the Postmaster General for a certain time but I could not wait longer than three-quarters of an hour. Although this is in my own constituency I have no personal axe to grind. Possibly I may lose more than I may gain through creating antagonism in some of the individuals concerned. I think the main consideration in filling these vacancies should be efficiency and good character. I do not think the recommendation of a member of parliament should be taken into consideration. I would rather see the permanent officials of the government make these appointments. These appointments should be made purely on the basis of efficiency. At present they are just political footballs. When the Conservatives come into power they dismiss a large number of Liberals and a large number of Conservatives take their places; when the Liberals come into power I have no doubt that they will replace a large number of Conservatives with a large number of Liberals.

Mr. RALSTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEAPS: That may be anticipation. I do not think any hon. member viewing this matter apart from ordinary party prejudice would say that that is good for the public service. I think it is detrimental to the public service and I think it would be a good thing for the department and for hon. members if hon. members had nothing whatsoever to do with the nomination of men to fill vacancies. I am pointing out this case as an example of the vicious system of party patronage. I know how the appointment was made as I saw some of the files subsequently. It was made on the recommendation of the defeated Conservative candidate. I do not know why any candidate or any member of parliament should want to interfere in these appointments. I believe that by doing so he makes more enemies than friends, because when the appointment is to be made by patronage he may receive as many as ten requests for the position and he can satisfy only one. I should like to get an undertaking from the Postmaster General—I hope hon. members on both sides will support me in this—that these appointments to vacancies will be made without any flavour of partisanship and be based purely on merit. If I had anything to do with the administration of this department I would not fire a single postmaster unless he were inefficient and unable to perform his duties. So long as he was doing his task efficiently he would have the opportunity of staying in his position. There may be a change in government in twelve months or so and if that happens a number of these postmasters will know that, metaphorically speaking, their heads are going to be chopped off. The efficiency of the public service is impaired by such action. Could I have some understanding from the Postmaster General that he will consider my suggestion? I do not want him just to say that he will take it into consideration, as that statement is becoming too much of a byword. I should like to have from both sides of the house something in the way of a definite understanding that in future political patronage will not play such a large part in the filling of these vacancies.

Mr. SAUVE: This postmaster was removed and replaced by his daughter. There is no complaint against the new postmistress. I shall be pleased to make an appointment with the hon. member and discuss the matter with him if he will let me know when he wishes to see me.

Mr. HEAPS: I shall be only too pleased to see the Postmaster General at any time. In this particular case I felt that an injustice was being done and I went so far as to get in touch with the chief of police in Winnipeg from whom I got the whole record of the father and son. I had it all ready to submit to the Postmaster General and I am still prepared to show it to him. It seems to me that when men of this character are appointed parliament iteslf is bound to suffer.

Mr. BROWN: The question raised by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) is one of the most serious we have had brought before this house, especially from the point of view of the particular instance he cites. However, I was going to ask for some general information. When two years ago we removed from the control of the civil service commission post offices with a revenue of less than $3,000 some of us expressed the opinion that in the actual working out of the new system the soldier preference would not be observed. We felt that in all probability the tendency would be to discard it since the department would be under no obligation by law to observe that preference as the civil service commission is. In regard to the filling of vacancies that have occurred since that time, we should like to know to what extent if any the preference to returned soldiers has been observed. Has it been taken into account in the filling of these positions?

Mr. SAUVE: It has been observed; the department is still under obligation by law in that regard.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I fail to see the difference between a criminal given a post office job under Conservative regime and a criminal given a similar job under Liberal regime, unless it is that under Conservatives the criminal filches things conservatively and under Liberal regime he takes things liberally. I would ask the Postmaster General who advises him in regard to filling the vacancies in these small post offices. As far as I have been able to learn, the province of Quebec and the eastern provinces are more agitated over these vacancies than are the people in the west. I know a case in my own district where a man who had been the right hand man of an opponent in the election received the preference for a post office in Alberta, notwithstanding that he had participated in the election and that an absolutely new political regime had come into power since then. I have never been bothered with small post offices; indeed, we in the west regard these matters as too picayune to be worried about. There is however a post office in my district that needs consideration. In fact, it should have had consideration away back in 1927 when the aforementioned postmaster was appointed to that position. Are these men dismissed because of political activites or for other reasons? If it is because of their political activities, who gives the Postmaster General information in this regard?

Mr. SAUVE: When it is under $400 the department intervenes; where an amount in excess of that is involved a commissioner is appointed and an investigation held. We receive our information from members of parliament or from the defeated candidate.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: But suppose he happens to be an independent member in this group, for instance; is that taken into consideration?

Mr. SAUVE: Surely.

Mr. COOTE: Can the minister give us the figures showing the extent of the rural mail service in each of the last four years?

Mr. SAUVE: Three and a quarter million dollars a year.

Mr. COOTE: What amount was spent in each of the years from 1930 to 1932 inclusive?

Mr. SAUVE: That information appears in the auditor general's report.

Mr. COOTE: Perhaps the minister will give us the information showing the amount spent in the mail service branch. Anything I might get out of the auditor general's report would be two years old, too ancient to suit my purpose. Will the minister give me the figures for that branch?

Mr. SAUVE: Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was going to ask the minister what he would do in a case of this kind. Let us leave out of the question a politically appointed postmaster. Supposing the question of an appointment were to arise, for instance in a rural district, to a small post office; the postmaster in that district had served the public for five or ten or perhaps three or four years, had no enemies in the section, had been a splendid public servant, had done everything possible in fact to serve the public efficiently and yet a political clique in the district desired the appointment of maybe an outside man.

Mr. HEAPS: What is a political clique?

Mr. McINTOSH: The hon. member ought to know that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The C.C.F.

Mr. McINTOSH: And a petition is signed, for instance, by those in the district to the extent of eighty or ninety per cent asking that the services of the man should be retained in his position simply because they know he is honest, a first class public servant and one who has done his best by the district. What will the minister do in a case of that kind?

Mr. SAUVE: In what case?

Mr. McINTOSH: Where a patronage demand is made to have that man supplanted by someone else.

Mr. SAUVE: Can the hon. member give me a specific case?

Mr. McINTOSH: I could mention one but I think I had better give it to the minister privately. In the North Battleford riding there is a case where that was done; that is the case to which I refer and I can give the minister, whenever he wishes, the name of the post office. It is in a district where the man who was postmaster was also a retail merchant; he was looking after the post office for another man. The other man died and the position was declared vacant. This man who had been serving the public as a postmaster had to leave the office after eighty or ninety per cent of the people in the district had signed a petition asking that he be retained. Practically a political appointment was made.

Mr. SAUVE: The hon. member will be welcome to discuss that case with me when he can give me the name.

Mr. McINTOSH: Could the minister define his position in parliament with regard to a case of that kind? It is very important and I am satisfied that it is not the departmental officials who are back of such a move.

Mr. SAUVE: I do not understand the question of the hon. member. We are not here to suppose a case; we are here to discuss concrete cases. We have to discuss the affairs of the department but not in a hypothetical manner.

Mr. McINTOSH: The minister cannot put anything like that over me although he may do it with some people.

Mr. DUPRE: Will the hon. gentleman allow me?

Mr. McINTOSH: What is bothering the hon. gentleman? I am speaking to the question before the chair.

Mr. DUPRE: Let the hon. member continue and I will reply.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am speaking if the hon. member will give me time.

Mr. DUPRE: Take your time.

Mr. McINTOSH: I will take my time; do not bother about that. So far as the problem I am talking about is concerned, I may tell the minister there is no question that as a minister he is taking the advice of the patronage committees in the different ridings of western Canada and in particular the advice of the Conservative patronage committee in the riding of North Battleford. That is the cause of cases like the one I have mentioned. Even when ninety per cent of the people want a postmaster to remain, the minister listens to a small patronage committee and has a competent man dismissed or removed. I claim that is not fair and I stand for a public service that is efficient and has the unqualified support of the people concerned.

Mr. VENIOT: Yesterday I submitted to the minister several questions to which I understand he will be able to give the answers to-day. To these questions I would like to have the answers now if he can give them. For instance, I wanted to know the revenue received for the year ended March 31, 1934, from the sale of stamps, from newspaper postage, from the tax on postal notes and from the tax on money orders. By that I mean the war tax. Later on I wish to make some extended remarks in connection with the administration of the department and I shall require that information before I make those observations.

Mr. SAUVE: I have the information in writing. I shall hand it to the hon. member.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Do I understand the minister to say that the preference for ex-service men is still maintained by his department?

Mr. SAUVE: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I want to bring to the minister's attention a case of glaring injustice to an ex-service man in connection with a mail contract at Armstrong, British Columbia. I want to read an extract from a complaint I received from the Canadian Legion which is the ex-service men's organization in that district. It reads:

Re: Mail Contract, R.R. No. 3, Armstrong, B.C.

I have received a complaint from our Armstrong branch concerning the awarding of the above-mentioned contract by the Post Office Department. It appears that this contract has been held for some time by a veteran, Wellington J. Smith, a good clean-living chap and one who has been an excellent worker for the legion and the community in Armstrong. He is pensioned for a leg wound.

We are further informed there have been no complaints concerning Mr. Smith but that when the contract was awarded recently it was given to a man called G. H. Game, who is not a returned man but is president of the local Conservative association. A member from our Armstrong branch has suggested your taking this up with the Postmaster General on the floor of the house.

Can the minister give me now the reasons for this change being made, why a disabled ex-service man who was apparently rendering satisfaction to the community was deprived of the contract which he had and the president of the local association was, obviously for political reasons, given the appointment.

Mr. SAUVE: There is a difference between postmasters and rural mail contractors. There is no preference for returned soldiers in connection with contracts for mail carriers. The matter depends on the tenders.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the minister assuring me that in this case the man who got the contract was the lowest tenderer? He was not. It was taken away from the ex-service man and given to the president of the local Conservative association.

Mr. SAUVE: I have not the details before me.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the minister assuring me that this man was the lowest tenderer for this mail contract at Armstrong?

Mr. SAUVE: I suppose so, but I have not the details in hand.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I would be glad if the minister would look into the matter and before his estimates go through, give me the actual details of the various tenders. My information may not be correct; I do not know the facts.

Mr. SAUVE: I have no objection to giving the details.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I have every desire to obtain them because if my information is incorrect, I would be glad to withdraw my question. My information is that the contract was not given to the lowest tenderer; that a disabled ex-service man who had given satisfaction to the community for some time was deprived of the contract and it was given for political reasons to the president of the local Conservative association. I cannot vouch for the correctness of my information, but if that is the case I think it reflects great discredit on someone in the department.

[Mr. I. Mackenzie.]

Mr. SAUVE: Did the hon. member ask information from my department about this case?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes, indeed, I brought it to the attention of the department. It was during the session; I think the minister was away at the time.

Mr. HEAPS: Can the Postmaster General inform the committee how many changes have been made in postmasters under the jurisdiction of the department since he has been Postmaster General?

Mr. SAUVE: I will get the information.

Mr. HEAPS: Is the information not available now?

Mr. SAUVE: No.

Mr. HEAPS: I would like that information, and I would like to have as well the reasons for the changes that have taken place. I know some may have been for good reasons, but a great many I doubt.

Mr. MACKENZIZE (Vancouver): Do I understand that the minister is going to give me that information later on?

Mr. SAUVE: Yes.

Mr. HOWDEN: I would like to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General a matter which ought to appeal to himself. St. Boniface, which I have the honour to represent, is essentially a French-Canadian city. It was described at one time by the Duke of Connaught as the birthplace of Roman Catholicism in western Canada. Some little time ago there was occasion to appoint a janitor or caretaker for the post office there. It must have been well known to the various departments of this government that it was desirable that any appointee in St. Boniface should be bilingual. However, on this occasion, when the appointment was advertised by the civil service commission they failed to specify the bilingual qualification.

Mr. SAUVE: If the hon. member will permit me to interrupt, that appointment comes under the public works department.

Mr. HOWDEN: Quite so, I understood that, but we failed to obtain any satisfaction in appealing to the Public Works department, and I thought this was a good opportunity to mention it. At all events, they failed to get their bilingual servant as they wished, and there is a great deal of dissatisfaction and indignation in St. Boniface over the appointment.

Mr. VENIOT: Having obtained the information that I asked for in regard to the sale of stamps and the revenue from newspaper postage, I wish now to deal with the service in a general way, under this item of salaries and allowances, or if you will under the next item, mail services. May I preface my remarks by saying that a review, as close as I can make it, of the business of the Post Office Department during the last two or three years has convinced me that the economy practiced has been very unwise. It is all right to practise economy, but when the service of the country is crippled it becomes a very serious matter. In the remarks I am about to make on that point I shall endeavour to show how the post office service of the country, which in 1930 and prior years was one of the best in the world as far as mail distribution is concerned, has been injured. With considerable pride I say that it had attained that position, and I am not saying that having reference only to the time that I had the honour of occupying the position of Postmaster General. I wish to give credit to the Postmasters General who preceded me under both parties. Especially I wish to give credit to the executive staff of the department. The energy displayed by them, the technical knowledge and the putting into execution of that knowledge have attracted the attention of many European countries and of the United States. It may be worth noting, and I think it is proper that I should place it on record, that in 1928 France looked into our distribution methods and was pleased to copy from them the system of distribution even for the city of Paris. I say this also to the credit of the officials of the department, that the United States copied from Canada, while the system was still in its infancy, a great deal of what they established in the way of air mail services. The United States started in the air mail business under the poundage system, and then found that they had made a great mistake. The assistant Postmaster General, I think his name was White, came to this country in 1928 or 1929 and took lessons from the officials of our Post Office Department who were in charge of air mail distribution.

Having thus indicated that the Canadian Post Office Department was on that sound basis, I wish to protest against the action taken by the government. I am not going to blame the minister, because as I look over the matter I find it is the policy adopted by the government, and I can readily understand how the minister would have to carry out that policy, a policy of retrenchment, of economy in every shape and form carried to such an extent that it has reached the very marrow in the bones of the constitution of the post office. That department has been crippled from one end to the other. I am going to give some figures to show how that has been brought about.

The cut in the expenditure for the mail service for the year ended March 31, 1933, amounted to $4,281,154.94. That was made up as follows:

Reduction of salaries..	$2,455,258
Cut in conveyance of mails by rail, water, air and land.. ..	1,583,469
	$4,038,727

The balance of the reduction is made up of smaller items. As I said before, Mr. Chairman, this reduction was made to the detriment of the public service. Let me point out a policy and principle which has been accepted by both sides of the house. In 1928, when I was in the position occupied by my friend opposite, it was pointed out that in the Post Office Department that year there was rather a heavy deficit. I undertook to justify that deficit by pointing out the necessity for the extension of the service, especially the air mail service; the need for new post offices and for the establishment of new public routes, and the fact that there were far flung sections of Canada that could not be reached except by air mail. At that time the expression of opinion on both sides of the house was to the effect that the Post Office Department was a department of public service. It was agreed that the department should give the best possible service to the people of Canada, that the better service given in the distribution of mail would add to the prosperity of the country. Deficits were not to be considered as serious. Of course it was understood that the minister and his officials would do the best they could to balance revenue and expenditure, but when the extension of service throughout the country conflicted with the expenditure of public money the minister was not to be condemned for a deficit. That policy was accepted by the house. It was something of a pleasure to me to feel that I had the absolute support not only of the party to which I belonged, the government of the day, but of the 245 members of the house.

That policy has not been carried out. I understand as well as anyone does the need for economy, but I believe economy can be practised without crippling the service. When that economy results in a decreased service to the country, especially in the postal service, I say it is poorly judged and badly applied, and is not real economy. Let me point out that if you follow the record for the last three years you will discover that whenever there has been a cut in the public service there has been a corresponding cut in the revenues of the department, and for that reason I say that economy of this kind is not to be encouraged. I am sure the public would approve of the government, even in the face of deficits, keeping up the service rendered by the post office in years gone by.

Now let me take another example; I refer to the transportation of mail by rail. In the year ending March 31, 1931, I find that the service by rail covered 42,543,511 miles. In 1932-33 the mileage was cut down to 35,584,087, showing a falling off of practically 7,000,000 miles of rail haul in the delivery of mail throughout this country. Will anyone be bold enough to undertake to say that this was rendering efficient service to the people of Canada? Not at all; it shows that the service has been crippled. Oh, I know I will be met with the argument that the department had to conform to the reduced service given by the railways, but that does not account for this whole decrease. The reduced railway service may have accounted for some part of that falling off, but when I look at the service by land and water I find a corresponding decrease. It is impossible for me to state the extent of that decrease, because I have not all the details, but the department have neglected to take any steps to make up for the lessening of railway service brought about by the railway companies themselves.

Let me go further and take the salaries of the men in the service. There was a cut of over $70,000 last year in salaries alone. In 1930-31 fixed salaries amounted to $1,289,524. In 1932-33 they amounted to only something over $960,000, showing a decrease in salaries alone of $324,864. Could any stronger evidence be produced to prove that the service has been crippled than the figures I have just quoted? In looking over the report for the year ending March 31, 1933, however, I find that the Post Office Department claims a surplus of something over $600,000. In that report I find the following:

> This surplus is particularly encouraging in view of the fact that the post office operates primarily for the purpose of serving the public, and is not expected to provide a surplus.

It is supposed to serve the public. It cuts down the service by millions of dollars and declares a surplus, which it says is encouraging. Then, adding insult to injury, it states that the Post Office Department is not a surplus-producing branch of the government, but is supposed to give service. With that surplus of $600,000 or more in 1932, however, no improvement was made in 1933; the department continued cutting down and cutting out services. Last night the minister told us that some 500 post offices had been closed during his regime, from the fall of 1930 to the present time. I think in justice to himself at the same time the minister should have stated how many new post offices had been opened, though I do not think the number of new post offices would compare at all with the number of offices closed. Had the minister given that information last night I think it would have been of interest to the committee.

I now wish to deal with the surplus for a moment or two. The minister last night was asked by one of the hon. members on this side of the house if he could distinguish the revenue received by the Post Office Department from the war tax on postal notes and money orders, and on cheques and receipts generally which carry postage stamps. The minister could not give that information, and I am not blaming him for not being able to do it. One can only estimate the amount of money that would be collected through the Post Office Department through the sale of postage stamps, for use on receipts, and promissory notes. But there is a method, and a sure method, of calculating the war tax revenue collected on postal notes and money orders, and that information could have been given to the committee. In the budget that was brought down last year by the Minister of Finance a resolution was accepted by the house imposing a tax of three cents on all postal notes and money orders. A postal note of even five or ten cents had to pay a tax of three cents, and money orders had to pay the same amount of tax up a certain figure. Between postal notes and money orders there were some 18,000,000 issued in Canada for the year ending March 31, 1932, and if I am to take that as a basis of calculation and attempt to compute the amount that would be received in 1933, which I would be safe in doing—I have the calculation here, Mr. Chairman, which I shall give to the committee before I get through—it will be found roughly speaking, that on postal notes and money orders alone over $550,000 or an amount in that vicinity was received if the tax applied throughout the whole year. I think I am quite safe in adding another $300,000 received by the Post Office Department from the sale of stamps that were bought to be affixed on notes, cheques, receipts and other documents requiring excise stamps.

I pointed out when that law was being passed that there should be a distinction made, that that was a tax that did not belong to the Post Office Department and that the revenue from it should go where it belongs, that it should be credited to the Department of National Revenue. Why? Because I did not want the people to be hoodwinked. I wanted no camouflage collection of that taxation. I wanted that tax which was collected for war taxation purposes to go into the Department of National Revenue where the people could find the details and know exactly how much direct taxation the government was imposing upon them. I was told at that time that the revenue accruing from this source went into the consolidated revenue. That was quite true. That was no information to me. My experience in government matters had taught me quite clearly that that revenue would find its way into the consolidated revenue of the country, but it would not find its way into the consolidated revenue in such a way that Tom Jones, or Bill Smith or anybody else could distinguish how much taxation the public had been called upon to pay in the form of excise stamps upon notes, and so forth.

Now is it any wonder that the Post Office Department can declare a surplus of over $600,000 in its operations in 1933, when it has a revenue to-day such as it never had before? If this revenue was directed to the proper channels, Mr. Chairman, the Post Office Department last year would have had a deficit of somewhere around four or five hundred thousand dollars, instead of the surplus they claim.

In connection with this surplus which is claimed by the Postmaster General, I have a report which was handed to me this afternoon by the minister in answer to some questions I placed before the house last night, and in which he states that the surplus in the department for the year ending March 31, 1934, is $1,164,734.97. I wish to draw to the attention of the committee the contradiction there is between that reported surplus and a statement that was made by the Minister of Finance when delivering his budget speech in this house a few weeks ago. I quote from Hansard of April 18, 1934, at page 2275, where the Minister of Finance says:

> The Post Office Department cost $30,800,000, being $300,000 in excess of revenues.

That was for last year, according to the Minister of Finance, and here I have in my hand and upon the records of this house the statement of the Postmaster General that there was a surplus of $1,164,000 in round figures. I am not going to inquire who is right or who is wrong; I am going to leave the fight between the Minister of Finance and the Postmaster General.

Oh, it may be said by the Post Office Department, we received that money but the Department of National Revenue is now claiming it from us; the amount that we received as war tax revenue is being taken from us, and of course we shall not have the surplus that the Postmaster General stated in this report which he handed to me this afternoon.

If that is being done, Mr. Chairman, I feel somewhat proud of the position I took in 1933 when I claimed that that revenue, instead of going to the credit of the Post Office Department, should be placed to the credit of the Department of National Revenue in order that we might know exactly the burden of taxation that this government was placing upon the people of this country. If that practice is carried out then no longer will the public be deceived. I do hope that my remarks to-day will be brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance and that he will further consider the matter, if he has not already reached the decision to place that revenue where I claimed two years ago it should be placed, to the credit of the National Revenue Department.

I have pointed out, Mr. Chairman, that the service has been crippled. I have pointed out that last year the Post Office Department claimed a surplus of $600,000 and that this year they come in with a surplus of practically $1,125,000, and yet they continue the cutting down of the public service in the face of surpluses in two years which they claim amounted to around $1,800,000 or $1,900,000, or practically $2,000,000. In the face of a claimed surplus for the last two years they still continue to cripple the public service.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the hon. gentleman tell me where he obtains his figures?

Mr. VENIOT: I obtained my figures from the reports of the Postmaster General, going back from 1933. The revenue of the Post Office Department has decreased by millions of dollars. The greatest revenue which the department ever had was in 1930 when the net revenue after making all deductions amounted to a little over $32,000,000. I know the argument will be used that in spite of that revenue there was a deficit at that time. There was a deficit but how was that brought about? There was no cutting down of the services even in the face of a deficit and there was no crippling of the service. In 1928-29 the Post Office Department increased the salaries of rural postmasters to the extent of practically $1,000,000 The statutory increases were in effect at that time and these amounted to $200,000 or $300,000. We were establishing an air mail service which was costing the country $1,255,000.

Mr. McINTOSH: Which has been since scrapped.

Mr. VENIOT: As my hon. friend says, this has been scrapped since to a large extent. If that air mail service had been kept up on the basis on which it was established and on which it was operated in 1928, 1929 and 1930, Canada to-day would stand in the foremost ranks as far as air mail service is concerned. Although the service had been established for only two years, in 1930 Canada held a record for the whole world for the fast distribution of mail by air. The speed of 258 miles per hour obtained in some districts is a record that has never been equalled so far as the distribution of air mail for short distances is concerned. But, to use a vulgar expression, to-day this service is going to the dogs.

We need a commercial air service for the development of this country but such a service cannot be established and carried on to success unless there is an air mail service as a nucleus. In 1927 and 1928 when the government of that day established the air mail service, there was hardly any commercial enterprise along those lines in this country. It was well known that unless a commercial air service had the backing up of air mail contracts it could not be continued. Both sides of the house accepted the principle that it was necessary to have air mail development and upon that air mail development has been developed the commercial air service of this country, a service which helped to develop our mineral resources in 1932 and 1933. The service which was established in 1930 has helped to open up different sections of the Dominion of Canada. This service has been flung right into Aklavik, three hundred miles inside the Arctic circle. In 1930 mail was delivered twice a month during the winter time, where before there had been only one delivery during the winter season. The commercial air service has meant a great deal to the Arctic and this service has been brought about because of the expenditures on the air mail service. It was this expenditure and the increase in salaries to our rural postmasters which brought about the deficit in the Post Office Department in 1929 when it was under your humble servant. However, by 1930 things began to improve. The service was more efficient and the revenues increased to such an extent that the deficit was practically $300,000 less than the deficit of 1929.

We now find that we have to have an air mail service from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Practically the whole service will have to be reorganized. We will have to try to induce our businessmen to help in this development and we will have to encourage the young men on the prairies, in the foothills of the Rockies and on the Pacific coast to come into the service. This is what was done in 1929 and 1930 and it will have to be done again if this service is to be an extensive one and one which will redound to the credit of Canada.

Notwithstanding the decrease in the salaries of postmasters, notwithstanding an increase of thirty-three and one-third per cent in letter postage, notwithstanding the increase in the postage rate on newspapers, last year the revenues of the department fell behind practically $2,500,000. When the increase in newspaper postage rates was suggested in 1932 I pointed out to the government that while it was true the newspapers were not paying sufficient postage to meet the expenditures of the department, if the rate was increased, the revenue from this class of mail would decrease considerably. That statement has been proved to be correct. The revenue this year from the carriage of newspapers is $500,000 less than it was in 1932 before the increase came into effect. Why is that? This increase was put into effect in such a way that the newspapers figured that if it was paid they would have to throw the burden on the people and make the people pay an indirect tax through an increased price for their newspapers. Prior to that there was a special rate by express companies for the delivery of papers within certain distances—a limit of 300 miles—and they took advantage of that better rate by express to have their newspaper bundles delivered to news stands in the large cities, with the result that the Post Office Department lost that revenue. Further than that, within zones of twenty, thirty, or forty miles—someone says seventy-five miles—they delivered their bundles to various news stands in the small districts surrounding Montreal, Toronto, Kingston, Winnipeg and other places. These they delivered by motor truck.

When the letter rate was increased from one cent to three cents I pointed out that the government would lose revenue because there would be a diminution in business. People who could afford to mail six or seven letters a week at two cents would not write as often when they had to pay the higher rate, nor would there be as frequent communication in business as in the past. My statement in that regard has proved true, for since the establishment of the three cent rate the revenue has fallen to an enormous extent. In 1926 the government reduced the postage rate from three cents to two cents an ounce, and apparently at one fell swoop they prevented the department from earning between five and six million dollars. We felt then however that reduction in postage on first class matter would result in a greater volume of business, and we were right. In eighteen months or two years the department had caught up to that lost revenue, and from 1928 to 1930 the postal revenue from the sale of stamps for first class matter increased by leaps and bounds. To-day the government has reverted to the three cent rate, and the revenue from postage stamps is accordingly diminishing steadily.

I may be told that in these times of depression people are not writing as much as they did in the past. I want to be fair in my argument and therefore I admit that this is one reason for the decrease; but it is not the main cause. The business man has recognized, especially within the last eighteen months, that he must advertise and advertise and advertise again. We had in the Post Office Department a system whereby the business houses of the country could advertise at a very cheap rate; more than that, it paid them to correspond by mail under the method we had of efficient delivery. But to-day, with the service of that department crippled as I have pointed out, the business men of Canada no longer rely on the mail service for communication. They are following other methods, and that is one of the reasons why the revenue has fallen.

I believe my time is nearly up, but there are other items coming up under which I wish to make some remarks, and for the present I resume my seat.

Mr. SAUVE: As regards money orders and postal notes, I can only repeat what I have already said; and the ex-Postmaster General will admit that, as I said yesterday, it is very difficult to segregate the value of the stamps used on cheques because it would be costly to do so. I think he will admit that. As regards the tax on postal notes and money orders, I can give the exact figures. The tax on money orders amounted to—

Mr. VENIOT: What year?

Mr. SAUVE: Last year. It amounted to $361,818.09, and the tax on postal notes amounted to $143,712.67, making a total of $505,530.76.

Mr. VENIOT: Does that include the full year of operation?

Mr. SAUVE: Yes. In regard to deficits, I was very much surprised to hear what the hon. member had to say. As he must remember, he was himself at one time Postmaster General.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not forget it.

Mr. SAUVE: With reference to his statement regarding post office revenues and expenditures, the figures could not very well show a surplus in view of the information given the house by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. My hon. friend remarked that in the budget speech this year the Minister of Finance added the estimated cost of civil government, Ottawa, to the expenditure for the outside service, and he was inclined to blame the method followed by the new Postmaster General, forgetting that it is absolutely the same method as was followed by himself.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not speak of civil government.

Mr. SAUVE: If this method is to be applied to the year just closed, it should apply equally to the fiscal year 1929-30, when my hon. friend was in charge of the Post Office Department, with the result that the deficit, instead of being $2,067,336.59 as shown in the Postmaster General's report, would be $3,562,092.75. It should also apply to the fiscal year 1930-31, thereby increasing the deficit in that year from $5,876,496.66 to $7,446,166.23. In the case of civil government there can be no revenue to offset the expenditure. Therefore all my predecessors in office have adopted the fairer method of comparing the cost of actual service, such as post offices, mail services, letter carriers, et cetera, with the revenue collected by that service. That method has been followed since 1868.

As regards the aviation situation, the hon. member for Gloucester will admit that Canada occupies a strategic position among the great land masses of the world. In the meantime Canada's position is being properly safeguarded. As regards the east the government sent two representatives to a conference at St. John's, Newfoundland, to discuss with the Newfoundland government, representatives of the British Air Ministry and of the Pan-American Airways, the question of a trans-Atlantic air service. The result of this conference was the full protection of Canadian interests. A contract was entered into between the Newfoundland government and the Imperial Airways of Great Britain, granting to the latter company exclusive rights for a period of years into and out of Newfoundland with particular reference to trans-Atlantic operations.

As regards the west, American interests are anxious to develop regular air communication through Alaska between the North American continent and Asia. At the present stage of aeronautical development this would necessitate flying over Canadian territory with one or more landings en route. Canada's attitude has been to retain aerial operations in Canadian territory for Canadian operators. Consequently, when such an intercontinental service is inaugurated there will be active participation to no small extent by Canadian interests. In the meantime data is being accumulated which will be of use when finances permit.

Mr. VENIOT: There are one or two more items which I wish to touch on before these estimates go through and then I hope they will go through with a rush. Let me reply to the minister with respect to some of his remarks. He said that he was very much surprised to hear me give the statement made by the Minister of Finance to the house in regard to post office revenue. Then he added that in my time as Postmaster General the same system of accounting was adopted as is in vogue to-day and that that system had been inaugurated as far back as 1868. As to those dates the minister is quite correct; a system was inaugurated in 1866 and improved upon until to-day I think we have one of the best accounting systems of any industrial concern in the dominion. But it is also true, as the Postmaster General said, that the same system is being applied now as was in operation when I held the portfolio. I find no fault with that. I did not attempt to show that there was a different system adopted by the present Postmaster General from that which was adopted during my regime. If he thinks that, he has misunderstood me. I simply quoted the Minister of Finance; I do not know where he got his figures and I do not care where he got them; I quoted his statement and he made it plain in the house that last year in the Post Office Department there was a deficit between expenditures and revenues of more than $300,000. I leave the matter there. If the Postmaster General's report at the end of the fiscal year 1934-35 resembles the report he handed to me to-day, he will have to take the Minister of Finance to task. I believe he is quite able to do so; he requires no help on my part to fight his own battles with the Minister of Finance and I leave the battle between the two of them.

It was not my intention from the very introduction of the Post Office estimates to go into any carping criticism of the department. It was not my intention to deal with my hon. friend as I was dealt with when I was Postmaster General and when I was taken along pretty rough roads in connection with the dismissal of postmasters and other matters which had a political aspect. I could if I wished place before this committee numerous instances where the Postmaster General of to-day is guilty of the very same things as those of which I was accused when I was Postmaster General. I do not blame him for catering to his friends if he will do it in a spirit of justice and fair play. I say to the present Postmaster General that when I occupied that position I catered to my friends and I was willing to take the responsibility, and if by the fortunes of war or of politics the Liberal party comes back into power within a short time and I am once more done the honour of being called into the cabinet as Postmaster General I shall play the same game as I played before.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is frank.

Mr. VENIOT: It is frank. Why should I criticize the Postmaster General to-day for the dismissal of eight or nine hundred postmasters, when if I become Postmaster General and my friends ask me to be as generous to them as the Postmaster General has been to his friends I could not do it after criticizing him. Therefore I do not criticize him; I congratulate him. He has set a pace for me if I ever get there again, and I will follow that pace.

Now, sir, having said that, and having been honest in my confession—they say open confession is good for the soul—

Mr. McINTOSH: It is a dark outlook for a lot of Conservatives.

Mr. VENIOT: —having said that much I wish to come now to a transaction of the department which I feel it my duty to condemn, and condemn very severely. I condemn this not because I want to put the blame on the minister, I am not attacking him personally, I am attacking what I consider or fear may be a policy adopted by that department with the consent and approval of the government, a policy that I would spurn and that I think will work to the detriment of the post office. It is the policy of giving out contracts without calling for public tender. I want to be fair; there are certain supplies required by the department for which there is no need to call for tenders. I can give instances; there is the stamp cancellation machine. The machine that the department is using in large part to-day is manufactured in Canada, the concern manufacturing it is the only concern that manufactures instruments of that kind in Canada. In the past we had to depend upon American machines, and we never could buy them outright, we had to take them under what is known as a lease contract, paying so much a year for the use, and in the end the sum became enormous. An effort was made to get a Canadian machine to replace them, and, in 1929, I think, such a machine was produced, and improvements have since been made so that to-day we have a Canadian cancellation machine that I think excels in speed, if not in absolute perfection, any American machine. That is to the credit of the inventive genius of our men in Canada. For a machine like that no tender can be asked, it is a matter of negotiation for the best price from the only concern that manufactures them.

Again there is no need to ask for tenders for typewriting machines of the standard in use to-day in the public offices of this country, because all makers of such machines have a standard price; no matter what company they are bought from the price is the same. Therefore the only thing that matters is to see that you give the order to the best man politically-speaking among the companies in that business. There is a certain lock for mail bags, there is no need of calling for tenders for that special style because it is sold at a standard price. And I could give other instances. I point out these in order to do full justice to the department. But I do condemn the idea and the practice of giving contracts for the manufacture of rural mail boxes without calling for tenders. It leaves in my mind the suspicion that there has been something behind the scenes in connection with the awarding of such contracts. In 1927, when I had the honour of being Postmaster General, we required a great many rural mail boxes. At that time the government accepted the policy that the department had recommended of extending as far as possible our rural mail routes, and in order to do so, having laid down a regular program which would take four or five years to carry out, we required a sufficient number of rural mail boxes to cover the period. I did not give nor sanction the giving of that contract without calling for tenders. We asked for tenders and received 47. We asked for designs, and we received over 80 designs. These designs were all considered, as were the tenders, by a special departmental committee of experts in the work of mail delivery, presided over by myself. The minister himself did not decide who should get the contract. We proceeded by a system of elimination. The department itself had designed a rural mail box. We wished to do away with the old style boxes, at the request of the ministers of public works of many of the provinces, who pointed out to us that in view of the increasing automobile traffic on the highways the old boxes were dangerous because of the arms extending when the box was shoved out. We undertook to design a box that would be placed on top of the post with a swivel, so that in no position would it extend more than 7 or 8 inches beyond the post. We kept that design to ourselves. It was an invention of the department. At the same time word was given to those wishing to tender that we would prefer to do away with the arm style box, and asking them to submit something along the line of a swivel box or other improvement. They did so. By a process of elimination, after considering the matter for a couple of weeks, this committee brought it down to four designs, and four of the lowest tenderers, for swivel design boxes. Those designs were compared with our own and two out of the four came pretty close to the design invented by the expert in the department; and the contract was finally awarded on the swivel style basis. Some 35,000 or 40,000 boxes were ordered and we started in with the development of our large program for extended rural mail service. When I retired from the Post Office Department in August, 1930, there were 25,552 boxes on hand out of the large quantity we had ordered. But I find that as early as December, 1930, a contract was let for 10,000 rural mail boxes without calling for tenders. Further—and this is the part of the proceeding that I wish to condemn with all the force that I have—the information given on the floor of this house by the minister shows that these 10,000 boxes arranged for under that contract without calling for tenders are covered by a patent right. No box of that kind, accepted by the Post Office Department, has any right to a patent. The right lies in the government in the box we put into use in 1928, and the fact that the department has accepted the principle that the box shall be protected by a patent means that in the future that box alone shall be used in the rural service, and a monopoly is immediately created. That is the result of this system of giving out contracts without calling for tenders.

Now let me proceed. I have notes here containing a great many figures, and I am going to follow my notes rather closely as I go along. I have stated that when the present government came into power they had 25,555 rural boxes still on hand. From August, 1930, to March 1, 1933, according to a statement submitted to parliament on March 8, 1933, only 5,546 boxes had been put into use, which would leave 20,000 of the 25,000 boxes still on hand, after a period of two and a half years.

Mr. HEAPS: How long would that supply last?

Mr. VENIOT: It would not last very long if the service I started had been maintained.

Mr. HEAPS: As they had been given out previously, how long would that balance on hand last?

Mr. VENIOT: I am coming to that; I will develop it as I go along. In another statement made by the minister in March, 1933, we find him saying that on December 22, 1931—about the time the order for ten thousand boxes was given—there were on hand 18,294 boxes. This would indicate that between September, 1930, and December, 1931, some 7,000 boxes had been used, but the former statement which I have quoted shows that only 5,546 boxes were put into use in the period from August, 1930, to March, 1933. I do not know where the discrepancy comes in, but that is the information that was given in this house. I ask the minister how he can reconcile these different figures. If the latter figure is correct the minister led the house astray—unwittingly, perhaps—when, on March 8, he stated that only 5,546 boxes had been put into use up to March, 1933. Therefore we had 25,555 boxes on hand in September, 1930, and an additional 10,000 boxes ordered in December, 1931, making a total of 35,555 boxes on hand or on order during the period between September, 1930, and December, 1931. The record shows that up to March 1, 1933, only 5,546 boxes were put into use. This would leave some 30,000 boxes still on hand. Even if no extra boxes had been purchased, using only 5,546 boxes up to March 1, 1933, it will be seen that 20,000 of the first lot of boxes would have been on hand as of that date.

In the light of these facts what becomes of the statement made by the minister, in an attempt to explain this order for 10,000 boxes, that the stock on hand was so low that an additional purchase had to be made? I do not wish to impute motives to the minister, but in the light of these facts I think I have the right to ask whether the purchase was made to meet the demands of some hungry supporter, for it must be remembered that no tenders were called for and that the person who was given the contract was not a regular manufacturer but a retired commercial traveller who, I am informed, farmed out the work, on which he made a handsome profit.

The minister made several statements to the house in 1933, and some statements were made also by the acting minister in 1934. Let me refer to a third statement made in 1933. The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) asked how many boxes were on hand as of January 1, 1931, 1932 and 1933 and also as of July 1, 1931 and 1932 and March 1, 1933. In reply the minister said that in January, 1931, there were 25,000 boxes on hand; in July, 1931, there were 20,088; in January, 1932, there were 18,294 boxes and in July, 1932, there were 25,760 boxes. Evidently some of the new boxes had been received. In January, 1933, there were 25,638 boxes, and in March, 1933, there were 25,412 boxes on hand. Now let me analyse this statement. I find that from January 1 to July 1, 1931, there were 2,912 boxes used. From July 1, 1931, to January 1, 1932, there were 1,794 boxes used. From January, 1932, to July 1, 1932, you will note that the number of boxes on hand increased to 25,760; it must have been about this time that the order for 10,000 boxes was being filled. Then from July, 1932, to January, 1933, only 122 boxes were used.

I am making this analysis to show that there was no need to buy the additional 10,000 boxes, especially when they were bought without tenders being called for. From January, 1933, to March, 1933, 226 boxes were used. In other words, according to this statement, from January 1, 1931, to March 1, 1933, a period of more than two years, 5,094 boxes were used. I am giving these three statements, which vary in each case. The committee will note that even in this statement the minister admits that there were 25,412 boxes on hand in March, 1933. According to one statement a calculation would show that there were 30,000 boxes on hand in March, 1933. I am not going to use that calculation; I will confine myself to the positive statement submitted by the minister in which it appears that 25,412 boxes were on hand at the end of March, 1933. Accepting that figure as correct, for the sake of argument—and I have reason to doubt it, when I consider the previous statements referred to—I find that after placing 5,546 boxes in use from September, 1930, to March, 1933, more than 10,000 of the boxes on hand in September, 1930, would still remain. Again I ask what was the necessity for the purchase of 10,000 boxes?

Then I go on to develop the second feature of this contract which gives a patent right on these boxes to the person in whose name the contract was given. I shall not mention his name.

Mr. SAUVE: He is dead.

Mr. VENIOT: I understood that that poor gentleman was dead. I can hardly blame him for dying under such conditions, I want to be fair. I do not wish to refer to the gentleman who got this contract or to give his name because, as the minister says, in the past few months he passed on to a better world. But I wish to condemn, and I do condemn with all the force at my command, the practice of awarding contracts for rural mail boxes without first calling for tenders. I ask the minister now to do away with the practice that has been established under his regime. If anybody has a regular, legal contract with the Post Office Department, for the manufacture of a box along the line that we designed in 1927—and I understand there is very little difference between that design and the patent design, although I have not seen it—the holder of the patent right can step in to-day and enter action for damages for infringement of patent against such contractor. That is what I fear. I fear that the carrying out of a practice of that kind will establish a monopoly, and once a monopoly is established the Lord knows where it will end. It is time to put a stop to it, and I ask the minister now if it is not possible to do away with that patent right.

Mr. SAUVE: No boxes have been purchased since December, 1931.

Mr. VENIOT: I know but—

Mr. SAUVE: The question was discussed at the last session.

Mr. VENIOT: But I was not here. I almost took the same journey as the gentleman that made the boxes, to the next world, and I was not in a condition to discuss the question at that time, but I am in a position to do so now, and that is the reason I am bringing it to the attention of the minister. I hope the minister will take what I have said in the spirit in which I have offered it. It is not a personal attack at all but a criticism of a practice that I fear is growing up in the department and which should not be tolerated. I think the minister has sufficient backbone and determination, when he sees that it might grow into an abuse to put his foot down and to say that in future things will be done in a more regular way.

Mr. SAUVE: Certainly, if someone suggests something irregular to me.

Item agreed to.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I ask how many rural mail routes have been established in Saskatchewan in the last four years?

Mr. SAUVE: I will give that information to-morrow.

Mr. McINTOSH: Not to-morrow. I presume the minister means Monday.

Mr. SAUVE: Perhaps to-night.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is better, and will the minister at the same time give the number of mail routes established in the other provinces in Canada?

Mr. SAUVE: With great pleasure.

Mr. HEAPS: The former Postmaster General has said that the surplus last year was approximately $1,125,000. I have been looking up the report of the Post Office Department and I find that the surplus is given as $657,000. I am wondering which is correct.

Mr. VENIOT: The figure of $657,000 is the surplus for the year ending March 31, 1933, but the minister submitted to me this afternoon a statement in answer to a question I asked him last night as to what was the revenue and expenditure for the year ending March 31, 1934, in which he showed that the total expenditure was $29,202,730.12, and the revenue $30,367,465.09, showing a surplus of $1,164,734.97 according to those figures.

Mr. HEAPS: Are the figures the former Postmaster General quoted for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1934?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, those figures.

Mr. HEAPS: There are one or two more questions which I should like to ask. Would the Postmaster General state the amount of revenue received from the sale of excise stamps? I ask that question because there has been a change made so that now an ordinary postage stamp can be used on cheques where formerly an excise stamp was necessary. If we had the actual facts it might show the revenue of the post office in a somewhat different light. Can the minister give to the committee the last available figures for the year prior to the change that was made allowing the ordinary postage stamp to be used on cheques? What was the amount of excise stamps sold in the last year prior to that change being made, and the amount of excise stamps sold since?

Mr. SAUVE: The tax on money orders for the year 1933-34 amounted to $361,818.09, and the tax on postal notes $143,712.67.

Mr. HEAPS: That is hardly giving the information I requested. Perhaps I may be given the information after the recess.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house again in committee of supply, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

Entomology, including investigations, and inspections relating to destructive insects and pests, $350,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Friday nights seem to be popular for grasshopper estimates, as I believe this is the third Friday night they have been discussed. We should try to make this the last night. I recall that when discussing this vote last Friday the minister seemed to get huffed about something when asked a certain question. Well, we are not going to take scoldings from him to-night for replies, nor are we going to follow his example if we can avoid doing so. I want to ask him a question and I hope he will not try to imitate a fishwife in replying to me. I am referring to the grasshopper vote, or rather the grasshopper loan, and I want to state the situation as simply as possible to-night so that we or the minister shall not go off at a tangent. This particular loan is to be found at the top of page 360 of the votes and proceedings of May 23:

Order in council, P.C. 1051, dated 23rd May, 1934: authorizing loan of $1,500,000 to the province of Saskatchewan for the purpose of meeting commitments incurred or to be incurred in extending relief to farmers in the province by way of grasshopper control and by loans to the said farmers covering the seeding operations for the 1934 crop season, including the purchase of seed grain.

I emphasize particularly those words "grasshopper control." Now that is the only earmarked loan for grasshopper control I have been able to find. I do not think that I should be expected to have to hunt up all the orders in council to find all these loans made during the past four years to the prairie provinces. After a great deal of search this is the only one that I have been able to find which was made for the purpose of controlling grasshoppers and seed grain grants, in pursuance of the energetic campaign which I believe is still in progress there. In fact, I know that that campaign started last fall is still being waged. What I want to point out, however, is that the time to take weather precautions is not when the storm is on you; that is not the time to get your sails in shape, though I admit that it is better then than never. The time to have got ready was last year in the pre-hopper flight period. Vast flights of these pests darkened the sun at times, and with nothing to eat where they were, except just enough to enable them to grow into the stage where they could fly, they immediately sought pastures new in other parts of the province and affected large areas not previously affected. I congratulate the minister upon the fact that this year something is being done in a federal way. Both officers in front of him and especially the dominion entomologist, know that all that the dominion has ever done in the past until this year—there may have been something last year and I will therefore qualify the statement to that extent till the minister replies—has been to give expert advice and to oversee the campaign. There are a good many first class men in Saskatchewan and in the west generally doing that work but since there has been an entomological branch that has been the extent of their activities until this year. As I say, if the minister can assure us that there was some last year as well, that will go to qualify the general statement I make.

Now, does the minister know of any vote in any year, either during this administration or in any previous ones, or anything that has been earmarked like this loan for the purpose of grasshopper control? I do not think that I am flouting or taunting the government in asking that question; I do not think it is an offensive question. The question is a straight one and I should like to have it answered. I wish to know whether there are any other loans of this kind. If there are then they should be capable of being indicated without the discussion being diverted to something else about which I am not inquiring. I think I will give the minister an opportunity now to reply to that question because he may have an alibi; he may have another hopper control loan like this. These loans have been running for three or four years, and though I have not examined them all I examined them pretty well last year. If he will give us some information on this question that will throw some light upon it I shall be the first to congratulate him if it turns out that he did as the Americans did not only this year but last year, when they came to the relief of states affected and actually voted money for grasshopper control.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): There is no difference in principle between what we have done this year and what has been done during the past two or three years. Last year at any rate money was advanced to Saskatchewan to enable them to carry on in the same way as to the other provinces that presented the facts to us to show that they themselves could not finance their responsibilities as provincial governments. Last year money was sent, the same as this year, to assist in seeding operations, farm relief and other matters of that sort. The hon. member has himself been so long a member of governments that I am sure he will agree with me in this, that when a request is made for sums of money or for assistance the order in council is usually drafted using the phraseology of the request.

Last year we were asked by different provincial governments for assistance and money was loaned to the provincial governments; and because it was loaned to them it was their money to use. They used the money we loaned them last year in purchasing poisoned bait for grasshoppers and in the carrying out of their campaign to combat the grasshopper menace. This year they were also assured, as they had previously been, that if they could not adequately finance the carrying out of what were their essential responsibilities they would similarly be given consideration and assistance.

As regards this money just being advanced, it has in no way affected the preparation for the campaign. Bran and bran substitutes have been bought as well as sawdust, poison and everything necessary in the way of equipment. Large commitments have been made, and this money so advanced has been used to meet these commitments. There has however arisen a difficulty as compared with last year, and it has been particularly aggravated during the past week or two, namely, the shortage of seed where the grasshopper menace is worst. This makes it impossible for the farmers to carry out a part of their campaign—the cultivation of land at the right time and in the right way in order to have as destructive an effect as possible on the grasshoppers.

The campaign this year has been organized much more thoroughly because of the greater menace over the three prairie provinces than a year ago. Reports were received from officials in charge of the campaign and also from those cooperating with them to the effect that the danger is all that had been forecast, even greater in some instances than could be imagined; and that has been made still worse by the fact that the conditions this year have been ideal for the grasshoppers to multiply to the greatest extent and, if not fought, to do the greatest possible damage. More than one thousand committees have been set up in Saskatchewan alone and the machinery with which they are working is and has been for some time going twenty-four hours a day, turning out this grasshopper bait. According to our latest report there is no lack of supplies or assistance, although it seems that more is needed than was estimated, because, as I have said, conditions have been so ideal for the grasshoppers to multiply. This year the young grasshoppers appeared from one to three weeks earlier than they did a year ago, and that has shown the necessity of the very careful planning that was done so that the whole machinery was ready to set in motion at any time. There are places where the stubble land was ploughed in the spring and not packed, where the grasshoppers are doing a lot of damage and destroying the crop to such an extent that the farmers feel there is little use in trying to save it and they are using those fields to distribute poison bait to keep the grasshoppers from the summer fallowed fields which so far have escaped any damage.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I hope I am not too hard to satisfy in this matter. The minister has given us a very nice dissertation on the grasshopper situation in the west. He ought to know the conditions pretty well by this time because he has outlined them at least twice and he has done it well. I suppose practice will make him still better and the next time he outlines the situation he will do it the best of all. He has not, however, answered my question as to whether he can point to another earmarked vote like this in the history of Canada. His answer to this, if it were an answer, was that other loans were made and no doubt some of them might be and were used for grasshopper bait and so on. In that case the provinces did not observe the earmarkings; there was none. Does the minister mean to say that the Saskatchewan and other western governments get these loans and do what they like with them?

Let me indicate some other earmarked votes. I would ask the minister whether he thinks the provinces could divert this to fighting grasshoppers or any purpose than that indicated:

Order in council P.C. 1046, dated 21st May, 1934: authorizing loans to be made from time to time to the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Alberta, not to exceed the sum of $750.000 to each province, for the purpose of assisting the said provinces to construct and maintain highways other than the trans-Canada highway.

That is an earmarked vote for a specific purpose just as this other hopper one is Does the minister really say that the provincial governments could divert that to hoppers or anything else? If they did that, they are very disobedient representatives.

I have another order in council:

Order in council P.C. 1022, dated 17th May, 1934: authorizing payment to the province of Saskatchewan of the sum of $10,324.54 for relief settlement.

When relief is required, surely they would not devote that relief, which I presume is for humans or perhaps animals, to feed grasshoppers even with poison. That explanation puts the provincial governments in the position of being very disobedient wards of this state. I recognize the fact that the federal government has been acting very generously to the provinces and the least they could do would be to observe the terms of the loan. Therefore the minister's excuse involves disobedience on the part of the provinces and surely he does not want to put his friends, right at election time too, in that position. The minister will have to get up a better alibi than that, one that will not put his friends in wrong quite so far. The more I listen to the minister's excuses and pleas the more I am convinced of the correctness of the ground I took two weeks ago that this was the first and only vote earmarked for grasshopper control ever given by any government.

Mr. BOWMAN: Is the hon. member objecting to it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Surely to goodness if I am wrong, some of the members of the government should set me right when I am making these statements repeatedly and getting no answer. I can imagine what the minister said may have some accuracy in it; perhaps they did do that. In that case what is the position of the government? That they keep on giving, giving and giving indefinitely and then have no control over the money; the provinces can divert it to any purpose they like and in that case how much of it is diverted to election purposes?

Mr. BOWMAN: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will remind my hon. friend who is a lawyer that I am not in the witness box, but I will allow a question.

Mr. BOWMAN: What proof has the hon. member that a single dollar of the money to which he is referring has been spent for election purposes?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not any proof at all; I was merely trying to show that if the government winked at disobedience on the part of the Anderson or any other western government and allowed them to divert a vote earmarked for one purpose to something else, there was no reason why they could not do the same thing for election purposes; they might start up a campaign against grasshoppers and have the country flooded with alleged grasshopper hunters. I am not drawing on my imagination; it is for the ministerial benches, including my hon. friend, to get some other excuses on behalf of the western governments. To state that there was any other vote than this one devoted to the destruction of grasshoppers is only proving disobedience that was not so marked on the part of the Saskatchewan government.

I am going to ask the question again, and I will include my good friend the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Bowman) who is a very capable lawyer and an affable gentleman, although he is not called upon to answer; it is to the minister I am addressing my remarks because he has his officers in front of him, one of them being the chief entomologist. I do not know how long he has held that position, but it was long before my time. He is one of the most competent officers in the employ of the government. There is nothing he does not know about grasshoppers and all other pests of that nature. If the minister will just cuddle up to him a little bit, I am sure my hon. friend can get the information from him as to whether any other loan than this was given and earmarked for grasshopper control. Two weeks ago to-night the matter was brought up in the house by the opposition including myself. Either the day after, which would be Saturday, or Monday, I cannot tell which, the thought struck the government it would be a good idea to earmark this million and a half loan for grasshopper control.

By the way, when the minister speaks again I wish he would tell me who made this recommendation to council. I do not think that is asking for any secret. The recommendation would naturally come from him, and from remarks made last Friday night by the minister and, I think, the Prime Minister, it was the Minister of Finance who recommended this loan to council. Well, it may be that that is right; the Minister of Finance having to do with loans and supervising the treasury—and I think he is doing it very acceptably—naturally it would be on his recommendation. But surely the minister would have the signature also of someone who knows something about the thing. The Minister of Finance will not mind my making that remark. He would expect to be advised by his colleagues the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Labour who has the administration of the Relief Act. It is quite a usual practice to have joint names on a recommendation of council; it may not be with this government, I do not know, but I know I had that experience many times in cases where two ministers were interested. May I ask the Minister of Agriculture if he was a joint signer with the Minister of Finance of the recommendation to council on which this order was based? If he can answer any of the questions at the same time that I have touched on, let him do so.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Mr. Chairman, I think I answered fully the point under discussion. When the different provincial governments cannot finance their obligations and when they show just reason why they should receive assistance in meeting responsibilities that cannot be evaded, this government has loaned them money. A year ago loans were made to the governments for seed, for farm relief and matters of that kind, after submissions to us by the different provincial governments showing why they needed the money, and satisfying this government that their claims were just. There is no doubt that some of that money was used for this purpose, and properly used. It was not a case of our not checking up on it; we checked up and satisfied ourselves that it was necessary for them to have it before the money was loaned to them, but when it was loaned it was their money, and it was used for the purposes for which they asked it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But they did not ask for that, did they?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was understood that that was one of the things they required money for. This year also requests were received, and assurances given earlier in the season that there would be assistance as far as necessary to enable them to carry out their responsibilities. It happens that in this case it was earmarked for grasshoppers, but as I told the committee the other evening the greater part of this money had already been spent. Commitments had been made, and our information at that time was that sufficient money had been advanced.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, I have made no progress yet in getting an answer. We have heard part of it three times now. The minister answered neither one question nor the other. He did not say who sent the recommendation to council and he did not tell me if any other such loan was ever made by any government in Canada since confederation—I shall make it as wide as that—specifically for grasshopper control; the hon. gentleman cannot mention one case. The only thing he can say is that he believes the government out there did use it for other purposes. Then I ask him, where is the limit? I cannot get any reply, and I am not going to ask for it a third time. But I will ask for a second time, and a third time if necessary, who signed the recommendation to council. If the Prime Minister thinks that is a violation of the secrecy of council—well I think possibly it may be a little doubtful; I do not think I should ask that question. Recommendations to council are not usually looked upon as public property as far as I know. Orders in council are. I do not think recommendations to council are secret, you know, but I do not think they are usually made public; I do not recall their ever being asked for. I do not want to put the responsibility all on the Minister of Finance when I say that; I shall not put any responsibility on him except that it was his duty to look after the issuance of the loan and see that it was for a proper purpose. That was his duty and he did it and I will not press the matter further. But I do not think much of the ministry for passing the buck to the Minister of Finance, and none of the rest of them acknowledging having anything to do in the way of signing it. I have often been a joint signer myself and often a triple one.

So much for this particular loan. The committee will be interested to know that there have been quite a number of loans sent out west since the last day this was discussed a week ago to-night. Most of them are relatively small—no million and a half dollar ones. And apparently this is going to be kept up, at least until the nineteenth, and may be longer. In looking over this I see the government is sending relief loans to nearly all the provinces, they are not confined to Saskatchewan. The only extraordinary feature about it is the large amount being sent to Saskatchewan. I do not want to tell any secrets, but if the Ontario members will look over the orders in council and loans to Ontario they will find that they are increasing with alarming rapidity. I did not count them; it took me all my time to count the prairie provinces loans. These moneys are spent in advance, and I do not think that that can be avoided. There will be a good old bunch of them being spent right now, and these orders will be coming in and coming in and coming in, indefinitely or at least until after the 19th of June. They come down in showers, eight or ten of them being put through council at a time, as you can see by the dates. I think they will need it all too, because things are mighty hard there. But what I want to know is, how do we know how much of this big vote goes for grasshopper control and how much for other kinds of aid? There is nothing here to show. If they can disobey in one case they can in another. Remember, it is not all for grasshoppers, it includes "grasshopper control and loans to the said farmers covering seeding operations and the purchase of seed grain." My hon. friends have been pluming themselves, but from the way that order is drafted, with nothing to indicate how much is for grasshoppers and how much for seed grain, there may not be a thousand dollars spent for grasshoppers; it all may go for seed grain, or vice versa. That indicates the looseness with which these loans are made. I am sure the committee will realize now, having regard to this particular incident, just how important it is for parliament to keep control of these public moneys, as my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) has been pleading for the last four years that it should. This is a complete vindication of the position taken by the leader of the opposition's policy in this respect. And I might argue the other way if I liked; it is a complete vindication of the policy of the Prime Minister, because there is such an enormous number and variety of claims for help. If I wished I could make quite a case. But in all seriousness I think that a good deal more could be done to specify what these votes and loans are to be used for, making it possible for an auditor to keep track fully and exercise at least some parliamentary control.

I realize that I am not going to get much more information out of my good friend to-night. Since we were discussing this matter last Friday, it is almost incredible but eight new loans have been made to the three western provinces, since this day week. None of them is very big; they do not aggregate a million dollars each. The aggregates were: for Alberta, $844,633; for Saskatchewan, $46,-233, and for Manitoba, $700,442. That equalizes things up a little bit as compared with a week ago, but there are more showers of blessings of this nature coming down. There have been showers, and there are more on the way; it just happens when they have a full council meeting, and then away they go. Naturally at this time a good deal is called for. There are other things as well; for instance, $750,000 for road work. I wonder if the road work will be in the north and the grasshopper bait in the south, thereby covering the entire province with electoral allurements at this critical time.

I am going to ask the minister now if he has any idea as to the possible limit of these loans for Saskatchewan for any purpose at all in Saskatchewan, or I will limit it to grasshoppers; that is what we are talking about. Has he any idea of the orders in council that have been signed even since May 31? Some might have been signed this afternoon. What is the limit to the loans to Saskatchewan, or the western provinces generally, during the next nineteen days? Will that depend upon how frequently they make requests, or what will it depend upon? I will ask this further question: will the limit be the extent to which the provinces can get advance credit at the bank? Apparently that is the way it has to be done. They get a line of credit at the bank, and when they are told that their line of credit cannot be extended they turn in their vouchers to the federal treasury and are recouped. That is a pretty nice way of doing it, but I do not see that it can be done in any other way. I am not complaining at all; that is the usual way, but it shows the tremendous possibilities when they are allowed to spend their money in advance by borrowing it from a bank and then cashing in from Ottawa. I hope the Minister of Finance has some check on these borrowings; if he has not they will borrow to the limit for the leafy and election month of June. Then when the banks begin to get a little doubtful about letting them have any more money without further security, they will turn in their vouchers here. Really, the Conservatives should win in Saskatchewan but they wont as Saskatchewan is not on a bargain counter. I do not think I have ever heard of such preelection generosity. It is about the slickest position in which I ever saw a province placed. I felt a great deal of sympathy for the Prime Minister, and felt like patting him on the back, when he made that statement at the Pacific coast, "Do you think I am going to be a wet nurse for every derelict in Canada?" Of course that was injudicious, but he said a bibful, I can tell you, because he realized that this is exactly what almost all the provinces are trying to make of him.

This has been just a little digression while the minister was making up his mind; I saw him in profitable—I hope—conversation with his officials in front of him, so I should like to ask him the possible maximum that may be asked by the governments for grasshoppers or anything else, between now and say July 1. We are talking of months; we have discussed last month, so now let us discuss the present month of June. I think that is specific enough. What is the possible maximum amount of these loans for this month?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If the hon. member is in touch with conditions in Saskatchewan I am sure he will realize the futility of any attempt to answer that question. For example, three weeks ago in the three prairie provinces there was every hope of a break in the series of drought years from which they have suffered. There was much more subsoil moisture than there had been for years, but during the last three weeks, and particularly during the last ten days, our reports indicate that conditions are worse than they ever have been. If three weeks ago we had asked any province what amount they would require to carry on relief work for farmers and others, though they had given the matter their best judgment they could not have foreseen what was to happen, as a result of conditions over which no human agency has any control. Within the last week I had a letter from a friend of mine who drove through the south of Saskatchewan. He was forced to make detour after detour from the main highway because soil had drifted across the highway to a depth of from two to four feet. There are thousands and millions of acres with nothing growing on them. Live stock are starving for want of feed where they seemed to have good prospects for feed two or three weeks ago. Plans are being made already to shift the live stock to the north where there is feed; they realize that if this is not done immediately or if very heavy rains do not fall, they will lose all they have been hanging on to in the way of their homes into which they have put so much work.

Therefore I think the hon. member, coming as he does from Saskatchewan, at least will be fair enough to admit that no matter how accurate an estimate might have been made with the knowledge that was at hand three weeks ago, it would have been far astray as to what will be required now in view of what has taken place. I would also remind the hon. gentleman that in Saskatchewan we have a relief commission with a record perhaps unequalled by any other relief commission in Canada. Its accounts have been closely scrutinized by those in opposition and by auditors of the federal government, and so far as I know there has been no blame or criticism as a result. No one can point a finger at any public funds that have been misspent. For two or three years, without remuneration, men have given their full time day after day in order to carry on the work of that commission.

Mr. DONNELLY: What about the hay that was burned in the fall?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The hon. member for Willow Bunch says something about hay. I do not know what he means.

Mr. DONNELLY: Hay was bought to be used in the south. It was burned up while cattle were starving in the south.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do know that in the legislature of Saskatchewan there are those who are just as anxious as the hon. member may be to obtain any possible information as to the misappropriation of funds, and my information is that although they have gone into the matter with every care, the relief commission still stands absolutely clear with reference to the money it has spent. I may be wrong in that, but certainly every effort has been made to find anything that might be wrong. I wish I could give the committee the picture of the situation as I see it and as I have seen it for some time. Time has been limited; difficulties have seemed insurmountable. Attempts have been made to supply feed, and all the time they have been hoping that there would be rain, that feed could be grown, that the winter might be open and so on. I do not think we have had anything in Canada to compare with this situation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that was rather clever of the minister, but the fault was mine for leaving the opening for such a wandering answer. I should have nailed him down to something more specific. He evaded my question well, and I take my hat off to him for that. I will be more specific now. There is an agreement between this federal government and the Saskatchewan government—I will restrict it to Saskatchewan for simplicity. What is the maximum loan which can be given to Saskatchewan under that agreement for 1934?

Mr. DONNELLY: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend from Willow Bunch will permit me a moment, I should like to have my question answered first by the elusive minister.

Mr. BOWMAN: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) kindly took his seat to allow the minister to answer my question and he should have the floor if the minister is not going to answer. I have the minister with his back to the wall and I want an answer.

Mr. BOWMAN: I was raising a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is this: No agreement between the province of Saskatchewan and the federal authorities has anything to do with the item before the committee, and I submit therefore that the hon. member for Melville is out of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That will suit me. I don't give a dash whether the discussion is choked off or not.

Mr. DONNELLY: I just wished to refer to one thing about which I interjected a remark when the minister was speaking. It is a well known fact—it was brought out in the Saskatchewan legislature last winter—that some hundreds of tons of hay were bought and were never shipped. They were burned in the fall.

There is another pest that we have in Saskatchewan and which I brought to the minister's attention last year. Information was sent out from his department about this pest, and I say that the information that was sent out was entirely wrong and caused our farmers the loss of hundreds of dollars last year. I saw many farms myself where the farmers lost hundreds of dollars through following the information sent out by the federal Department of Agriculture in reference to the cut worm.

The instructions given by the Department of Agriculture were that the farmers should not summer fallow until after the fifteenth of August, that if they did not touch their land until after the fifteenth of August a crust would form which would make it impossible for the moth to lay its eggs on the summer fallow, and that therefore there would be no cut worms the following year. I want to tell the minister that the farmers who followed those instructions, and I saw many who did, lost their seed, practically one hundred per cent of them, while those who did not follow those instructions but cultivated their summer fallow as in the past had no cut worms at all. Parts of a farm which had weeds were cultivated and those parts that were cultivated had no cut worms, while the parts that were not cultivated, following the instructions, had cut worms all over and the seed never came up.

The contention of the entomologists is that wherever the land is not touched until after the fifteenth of August a crust will form and the moth will not be able to lay its eggs. But the result actually is this: if a crust does form, when it dries up, cracks appear in it and the moth lays its eggs in these cracks, and the cut worm is just as plentiful there as anywhere else. I know of farmers having quarter sections side by side. Those who followed the instructions of the department lost their seed, while those who did not follow the instructions but cultivated their land all the year had no cut worms at all. I draw this to the attention of the minister once more so that he may have his entomologists look into the matter, because the present instructions are costing many farmers all their seed, and they have to sow their seed all over again. That is true not only of one or two but of many, and they are generally our best farmers because it is our best farmers who take these pamphlets and try to follow the advice of the experts.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I remember the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) referring to this matter on a previous occasion. We have also received communications from many farmers in the west, particularly in the vicinity of Indian Head, and their statements were to the same effect as mentioned by the hon. member for Willow Bunch.

The date is not August 15, but from August 1 to September 15, because it is during that time that these moths lay their eggs. The reasons for giving these instructions are these: The summer fallow should be well worked and kept black, and no weeds allowed to grow in it, because if the weeds do grow in it, then with the wind blowing, the soil will be loosened somewhat and will make an ideal place for the moths to lay their eggs, and that is the case where the summer fallow is not well worked. But if the land is not ploughed from August 1 to September 15, a crust will form and as a result the moths will not have the same chance to lay their eggs there because of the lack of loose soil, and they will lay them elsewhere in suitable places where they find loose soil.

We received complaints two years ago and we made a close investigation to ascertain if there was any weakness in the advice given by the officials of the department or if we had received a complete statement from those who made the complaints, and we proved we think beyond a doubt that it was not the fault of the instructions which had been sent out, but that with the soil drifting as it did, and carrying not only the soil but the eggs that were deposited in it over the summer fallow that had been worked during that period, the eggs were in that way deposited.

The habits of these moths are well known; it is not a matter of opinion at all. They do look for loose soil in which to lay their eggs, and soil that is free from vegetation as far as possible. Experiments have been carried out not only in this country but others that show that where the summer fallow was left as we instructed it to be left the results were according to the information that was given out. But if you have two or three horses running over it they break the soil, making conditions ideal for the depositing of the eggs and for the development of the cutworms the next season. You can trace where the cutworms are by the damage that has been done to the soil. Every attention is paid to the information which is sent in by expert farmers and their statements are investigated and followed up, because there is no one more anxious than the entomologists themselves to get absolutely accurate information and to give correct instructions.

Mr. DONNELLY: I may have been wrong as to the date at which it was advised that the farmers should stop cultivating the land, because I was speaking from memory. Perhaps I should have said August 1. Last summer I had the experience myself of going over three quarter sections in the same district where the land had been under summer fallow in each quarter section. One man had certain low spots, draws where weeds got in, and he went into these draws and cultivated the land there in order to keep the weeds down. There were no weeds in the rest of his land, which he did not cultivate. Wherever he had cultivated in these draws he had no cutworms at all the next year, but in the rest of his land where he had followed the instructions not to cultivate, he had to re-seed it all. The seed was all eaten up with cutworms. All through that district I saw quarter sections that were cultivated and others that were not, and almost invariably those that were cultivated had no cutworms whatever while those that were cultivated according to instructions invariably had all their seed eaten up and the farmers had to re-seed. I could give the minister the names of some of these people who had their seed eaten up in this way by cutworms.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We would appreciate very much having any information from the hon. member for Willow Bunch as to the names of the farmers so that we can follow up the information he has given us by investigation and be in a position to give the farmers any assistance we can.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member for Dauphin raised a point of order and I want you to rule in his favour, Mr. Chairman, if I may express that wish.

Mr. BOWMAN: Thank you.

Mr. McINTOSH: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) referred to the Saskatchewan relief commission and intimated that there had been no criticism in the province of Saskatchewan of that body.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There has been no criticism as far as the honest expenditure of money was concerned.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is fairly hard to find the dividing line between that and other kindred questions which might arise. My statement was with regard to the Saskatchewan relief commission as a medium of distribution of relief. I represent a riding in the northern part of the province and I have had considerable correspondence with the commission. In many cases I have had very good satisfaction but I want to say that the Saskatchewan relief commission is the subject of criticism during the provincial election which is to be held on the nineteenth. The minister knows that that is so. The provincial Liberal party is taking the stand that there was no need for the establishment of this commission as up to date it has cost a million or more dollars. They claim that the work could have been more efficiently and economically done by the municipal councils and that the money spent in establishing the commission and running it up to date —could have been better spent for relief. It would have meant hundreds of thousands of dollars additional for relief purposes. I do not want to be too critical of the relief commission but I must say that the field men of the commission in the northern part of the province are politically inclined. I do not think the minister will contradict that statement. They are Conservatives.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are political organizers, and well trained.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, there is no doubt about that. I know what is going on in my own riding as I think I am as intimately in touch with my constituency as any hon. member. I must say that any case I brought before the commission was acted on, perhaps after a great deal of correspondence and a good deal of work. I am not going to say the action taken was entirely satisfactory but I believe the commission did make an attempt. After it obtained the information desired through investigations, it tried to meet the situation as well as it could. But the fact remains that some families were in dire need of relief—and the process of what is known as passing the buck was frequently resorted to. The commission would say that such and such a family was the care of the municipality, and the municipality concerned would claim the opposite, that it was not responsible. This would go on from week to week and from month to month, and families with seven, eight and nine children were suffering for lack of shoes, clothing and the necessities of life—a deplorable thing. The reason for this may have been the desire of the commission to know its ground thoroughly before spending any public money, but these things would not have occurred had this money been spent through the municipal councils, rural and urban. Under such a procedure the situation could have been sized up quickly, and action taken without delay. This is all I want to say with regard to this particular point, and perhaps the minister will want to reply.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think the best reply that could be made to the hon. member's criticism of the relief commission is to refer him to the speeches made by two hon. members of this house, in whom perhaps he has more confidence than in myself. The first speech to which I would refer him was that made last year by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher). That speech was one of the finest eulogies which could be paid to the excellent work of the Saskatchewan relief commission and I am sure his remarks were appreciated by the members of that body, many of whom are serving without remuneration. The second speech to which I would refer him was that of his right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), who has stated over and over again that the ideal way in which to handle relief is by a commission. Not only that, but the government of Manitoba, which is not of the same party as the government in power in the dominion, were so much impressed with the work of the Saskatchewan relief commission that they asked that some of their municipalities be handled by that body.

The hon. member has stated that assistance was not granted to some families in dire need. The municipalities are responsible for their own people and they should advise the Minister of Municipal Affairs as to the condition of any individuals living within the municipalities. I am sure that where that has been done every possible haste has been made to grant assistance.

I can scarcely credit the statements made by the hon. member in connection with the political activities of the field men. I know that there are bound to be many rumours to this effect before an election but I think the best answer is the fact that the commission itself is not made up of members of one party. I know it was, and I believe it is still, made up of members of three parties.

Mr. McINTOSH: In answer to the statement of the minister, let me say that the electors of the province will register their political opinion on the nineteenth, and this will be one of the subjects upon which an opinion will be registered. I will leave the answering of the statement made to-night by the minister to the electors of the province.

An hon. MEMBER: You will be apologizing after the nineteenth.

Mr. McINTOSH: You will be the one that will be apologizing, and you will not only be apologizing; you will be hiding.

There is another point upon which I would like to touch. When the minister was discussing this grasshopper question on May 29 I think, he lost control of himself. I not only think that, but I feel sure he did. In any discussion in committee I think it behooves an hon. member to pay attention to three things. First, he should try to hold his head in the discussion. I do not think the minister held his head very well; I think I can prove a little later that he lost his head completely. Second, it is not well for an hon. member to let his passions rise too high when he is in discussion. He will not get very far by adopting that method of discussing public business. I think the minister made a slip there and took a few somersaults. Lastly, a member should know his subject. I think this is the reason why there is often so much acrimonious discussion. The minister did not seem to know his subject although he at times knows it very well. Answers were not forthcoming and it is very important that parliamentarians should have a thorough discussion of every item of public expenditure—the basis of control of the public purse. If hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side they would see to that, and they would be quite right in doing so. All that we are trying to do is to get as much information as we can, to get it as quickly as possible and to allow the item to pass, because we do not wish to hold up public business too long. Now, I hardly know why the minister was so hasty the other night. I thought that possibly he wanted to get on record some material for political consumption in Saskatchewan, but that is not necessary because I can tell hon. gentlemen opposite that their party will be in third place in the race two weeks from Tuesday next.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): That is your idea.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is the electors' idea, as you will see when the time comes. Putting two and two together—

Mr. BOWMAN: What has that to do with entomology?

Mr. McINTOSH: Wait and see. If that was not the reason, then I thought that perhaps the minister wanted to be critical with regard to the effort made on this side to get information touching public business; and if that is so, then I submit that his criticism cannot very well be justified. As regards what was said on the former occasion, namely, May 29, the hon. member for Melville was discussing the grasshopper item and, coming in late, I asked at one point of the discussion this question: "Are they trying to buy them with their own money?" That was a perfectly legitimate question, to which no answer was given. At another stage of the proceedings I stated that three weeks from that day, that is last Tuesday, the voting would tell the tale as to what is and has been taking place in the province with respect to the federal end of public business.

Those were my two statements and the minister became quite angry about the support that I was giving the hon. member for Melville. I was not giving any special support to the member for Melville; I simply wanted to get certain information which I thought ought to be given to the house. And in a minute or so I will give one reason why I asked the minister the question I did. Of course, he pooh poohed the idea immediately; I fancy he took the stand that it was a question that should not be answered. To show him what is going on in the province, by way of discussion may I refer to one or two editorials that have been appearing in the Regina Leader and, indeed, in the way of comment in many other newspapers. The item before the house is a matter of public discussion and consequently a matter of importance to the people. There is therefore nothing wrong in bringing it up in parliament.

I refer in the first place to an editorial that appeared in the Regina Leader of Friday, May 25. The following points are raised in this editorial. In the first part this newspaper is wondering why there is all this sudden financial interest on the part of the federal government in Saskatchewan. The question has become public property and thousands of people are reading these editorials every day; and the moment a matter becomes of editorial importance it becomes also of parliamentary importance, and vice versa. Next, the Leader wonders why the national government is showing so much belated interest in the welfare of Saskatchewan, with an election coming off in that province in the near future. Then it states the amount of money voted for the purpose of destroying grasshoppers and building highways in the province. Secondly, this editorial discusses the fact that these moneys will be helpful to the province. Well, as far as I am concerned, I am not arguing against the dominion government giving any money it wishes to Saskatchewan; it may give Saskatchewan ten times what it is giving and I will find no fault with that. But what we do want to know is how that money will be spent, how it is earmarked and who will be spending it and when. The idea put forward here is that the money will be helpful but, at the same time, that it will presumably be reserved for the election campaign. Lastly, in this editorial, the view is expressed that all this is not without a suggestion; that is, that all this money pouring into the province at the time of an election suggests something, and this paper makes plain what that suggestion is. It states plainly that the suggestion is that the people of Saskatchewan can be bought. That was why I asked the question: "Are we trying to buy them with their own money?" Later, it uses the word "bribe." It admits that this is an ugly word but asks whether what is transpiring can be described otherwise. I hope these remarks will enable hon. gentlemen to see the bearing of the question I asked the other night.

In another editorial, published on Saturday, May 26, the first thought put forward is that the Canadian government seems to have the idea that production should be restricted, that acreage should be cut down; and since the restriction of production is the very thing which the grasshoppers are attending to, this editorial wonders why the government is resorting to such an expensive method, voting millions to put down grasshoppers, when they are restricting production, doing the very thing in which the government believes. The second thought in the editorial of Saturday, May 26, is this. Here we have the spectacle in London and Rome of highly paid officials planning to restrict production—

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I hesitate to interrupt, but this is far afield from the item under discussion. I think we have been over generous in listening not only to the remarks made but especially to the quoting of editorials, which I believe is out of order. I have no hesitation in answering any question that may be asked with regard to the subject under discussion, but I would call the attention of the chair to the fact that the quotation from editorials is entirely out of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Can we have a second point of order before the first one is decided? We ought to have a ruling on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Dauphin.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): That has been disposed of.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to say a word on the point of order. There is a well established rule that editorials are not to be read—

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. McINTOSH: The editorial is not being read at all.

Mr. BENNETT: —for the reason that you cannot introduce another member into parliament. There are 245 members of parliament, and debate assumes that members make arguments for the purpose of trying to induce their colleagues to get their point of view. You cannot introduce another member into the house, and that is what is done when you introduce a newspaper's editorial for the purpose. I suggest that possibly, if the hon. gentleman's attention is directed to the fact, he will realize the desirability of ceasing to follow that course. The reason for it is so obvious that it is difficult to understand why the rule should be transgressed.

Mr. McINTOSH: Speaking to the point of order, may I say that I was not reading the editorial; and if it comes down to ruling me out of order because I am quoting from an editorial, I can throw the paper away and talk in the same way. It would make no difference to me.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My point of order is that the whole subject matter is out of order.

Mr. McINTOSH: In your opinion. It was not out of order when you were the first to put forward your partisan point of view the other night.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In reply to statements made on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I had better give my ruling.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is not necessary if I am not going to refer to the editorial; you might as well save your time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I think the point of order is well taken according to paragraph 306 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms which reads thus:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

In my opinion the discussion is out of order.

Mr. McINTOSH: Your opinion does not, in my estimation, amount to a row of pins.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw!

Mr. McINTOSH: But I accept it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I am quoting paragraph 306.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am accepting what you said, but that is my opinion.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the common sense of the hon. member and his respect for the rules and amenities of parliament will induce him to want to do the right thing.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am willing to do the right thing, but I am not doing what you stated; I am not reading the editorial.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): The hon. member has insulted the chair.

Mr. McINTOSH: You have done the same thing yourself once in a while.

Mr. BENNETT: One afternoon I happened to be sitting at a table discussing some matters and a question arose in the House of Commons. The Prime Minister left the room, went out and made the necessary motion that a member be relieved from further attendance in the house for a given number of days. The motion was carried and the Prime Minister went back to his work. If members are to defy the chair as has been done by the hon. member and bring into contempt the institutions of the house in the way in which this has been done, there remains nothing to be done but what was done on that occasion. I would suggest that when a chairman has discharged his duty, read the rule upon which he based his ruling that reading the editorial as well as referring to it was out of order, and any hon. member who has regard for the institutions of parliament should treat the chairman with that measure of respect which his office demands, leaving the occupant out of the question for the moment as we must do in dealing with matters of this kind, because this is purely an impersonal matter. In view of the hon. member's observations that in most places would be characterized in very severe terms, I suggest that he make a proper withdrawal and so place himself in a correct position in this house.

Mr. McINTOSH: I think I respected the chair; I had no idea of not respecting it and I withdrew what I said, but I coupled with that the idea I was not actually reading from the editorial. I also stated that I did not need to quote any further from the editorial because it was simply a question of memory. I do not need to continue the debate on that.

Mr. BENNETT: I refer to the insulting remark addressed to the chair; that is all I am referring to. I have certain obligations and responsibilities which are sometimes not the pleasantest to perform. But if a member of the house insists on insulting the chair, the chair being occupied by a fellow member, he places in a very difficult position whoever happens to have responsibility for the conduct of the house. I suggest that the hon. member should withdraw the insulting observations he made to the chair after the chairman had given his ruling on the point of order.

Mr. McINTOSH: I withdraw the reference mentioned. That is twice I have made that statement. May I go on to a statement made by the Minister of Agriculture with reference to my honoured leader. In the last part of his remarks that night the minister stated that the whole outlook of my honoured leader was purely political and that the hon. member for Melville and the hon. member for North Battleford also made use of remarks that were entirely political. I am absolutely loyal to my leader and I know the hon. member for Melville is also; we are not only loyal but devoted to him and our desire is to cooperate wholly with him. I presume hon. members on the opposite side desire to do the same thing with regard to their leader, but when the question is one of loyalty and devotion to leadership I think my hon. friend ought to be the last man to introduce into the house a discussion on that point. If he knew history and read of "the nest of traitors," he would not accuse me of being loyal to my leader. That is an extraneous matter and should not have been brought into any discussion in the house. I will leave it at that.

Further, when the minister made the statement that those on this side of the house who wanted information were politically inclined, he was absolutely out of order, and was doing something he should not have done, because if we go back to his history everyone knows he ran as an independent member in Melfort and was elected absolutely as an independent member.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Independent Conservative.

Mr. McINTOSH: The hon. member was elected as an Independent.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. McINTOSH: I know men who voted for the hon. member in his riding and they confirm my statement. I will, however, take his word for it. The minister says that he ran as an Independent Conservative.

Mr. QUINN: What is the item under discussion?

Mr. McINTOSH: I am referring to what the minister stated a few days ago with regard to my leader. The minister was elected as an Independent Conservative. I do not know which was the larger portion, the Conservative or the Independent element.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It would be Independent Liberal Conservative.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): This seems to me to be altogether out of order.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is not out of order. I am referring to remarks made by the minister with regard to my honoured leader.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): A discussion of the election of the hon. member for Melfort is out of order.

Mr. McINTOSH: They all bear on the remarks he made with regard to those who supported my honoured leader. I am just saying how the minister was elected and how he came to Ottawa and was made minister in a Conservative government. The minister should not say that those who seek information are politically minded; he is the last man in the house who should do that. I just wanted to clean up that phase of the question. It is unnecessary to say anything further about it, but I would like to repeat that what he said about my right hon. leader not wanting to spend a five cent piece with regard to unemployment was in my estimation absolutely untrue and out of order. My right hon. leader said so far as money was concerned if he thought it would be spent purely politically he would not spend a five cent piece but he was willing to give any amount of money to ease unemployment, and to do this in an honourable and upright way. The minister should not have referred to that matter either and I take this occasion to put on Hansard my viewpoint with regard to the question. It is not necessary to say anything more.

I wanted to deal with just two or three phases of the remarks made by the minister a few days ago. I do not think I have been unfair in the remarks made; I have merely clarified his statements in the interests not only of parliament but of Canada.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): I want to register as strong a protest as I can against the insulting remarks made by the hon. member for North Battleford in connection with the Saskatchewan relief commission. I am a member for Saskatchewan right in the heart of the stricken area and if anybody knows I ought to know how that relief is operating. It is not operated as a political machine.

Mr. McINTOSH: If the hon. member will permit me, I did not say it was operated as a political machine.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): If my hon. friend will keep quiet a little he will find there are more C.C.F.'s in his riding than in any other part of Saskatchewan. Now the Saskatchewan relief commission has been operating for years, and there has not been one single charge made against it. Not only that; I have been dealing all the time with municipalities within my area and not one single municipality has sent me a protest against the manner in which its operations have been carried on. I have had a number of people write in saying they were not receiving fair treatment, and I at once communicated with the secretary of the commission, Mr. Oliver Dean, and he had the matter straightened out. But when the hon. member makes the statement that the commission is a political machine, or infers that it is, I tell him he does not know what he is talking about. I wish it was; I am Tory enough to wish it was.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is all the proof we need.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): If my hon. friend will keep quiet a while, he will have plenty to do to get back to this house.

Mr. McINTOSH: You look after yourself.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): I can do that easily.

Mr. McINTOSH: You will have to do it.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): There is not a single municipality that has made any protest against the manner in which the relief commission is operating, and if the municipalities who have to look after the relief do not, who should? The government are doing the best they can. If they had ten or fifteen million dollars a year more to spend, perhaps the people of Saskatchewan might be better satisfied, but we have not the money and cannot get it. Some people, like my hon. friend, seem to think that the whole country is just rolling in money to hand out to them to spend as they please. Well, we are not doing that, and the Saskatchewan relief commission is not doing that. They are spending their money honestly and fairly in the interests of Liberals and Conservatives alike; there is not a Liberal suffering any more than a Conservative in the stricken area of Saskatchewan. My hon. friend should remember that the area that is suffering is not in Canada alone, it is a northern extension from the American desert. It is the pioneers who have suffered. I want this committee to understand that we have just got a part of what the western states are getting, and we are getting it yet. I wish it were over. And then the Saskatchewan relief commission could close up their books, and when they do I venture to say that it will be found that not a dollar has been misappropriated. There may be a few mistakes, but as a commission they have done their duty and done it well. Why this sudden interest on the part of hon. members opposite in the commission and in the finances of Saskatchewan? Does the hon. gentleman not know that this government has been voting millions of dollars for relief there in the last three years? Has he been asleep?

Mr. McINTOSH: Do not judge others by yourself.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): He regards us as being beneath him in dignity; he will not reply to us ordinary members of parliament. I do not care whether he does or not, but the fact remains that under this government Saskatchewan has been mighty well treated. I want to register that statement.

Mr. McINTOSH: The remarks of the hon. member have proven exactly the statements I made; first, that the Saskatchewan relief commission is a costly proposition, and secondly that in my own riding the field men were inclined to be Conservative politcally. Beyond that I made no other statement. I did say that the relief commission has done a lot of good work, but I point out that it is a subject of political discussion in Saskatchewan for these two reasons, and we shall wait for the answer on the nineteenth.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Perhaps it is unnecessary to make any observation except in answer to some of the last remarks of the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), that I objected to giving information, and his accusation that I was politically minded. I did not object to giving information—

Mr. McINTOSH: I said you appeared to.

Mr. BROWN: The minister does not want to carry his own estimates.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The objection I did strenuously take was to the statement that this money was at this time being sent into Saskatchewan for political purposes. The hon. member for North Battleford, speaking on the point, touched on this editorial from the Leader Post, and if I followed him aright contended that this paper also had the idea that this money was now being dumped into Saskatchewan for political purposes. This paper is published almost in the centre of the dried-out area. That conclusion is negatived by the fact that in the neighbourhood of $18,000,000 was advanced in previous years when there was no election. This winter has been one of our hardest winters; we have additional burdens to carry there this spring. I stated very clearly on a previous occasion that the greater part of the money advanced has already been spent for the purposes of relief, seed grain, feed, and the high cost of obtaining feed. In the fiscal year 1932-33 the sum advanced was over $14,000,000. Coming from Saskatchewan, as does the hon. member himself, and knowing that the drought extended north even into his own constituency to a considerable extent last year, it was only with great effort and restraint I could keep my seat while these statements were being made. Anyone in touch with Saskatchewan and comparing conditions there this year with previous years knows that there has not been more money sent in this year than in previous years for the work that is to be done in the way of relief and assistance. Perhaps I was to blame in this respect, that I did think the hon. member, coming from Saskatchewan, would be sufficiently interested in the welfare of that province to know the comparison between what was required this year and previous years, and gave him credit for an intelligence of which I am afraid he is not giving evidence—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Oh, get your estimates through.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is about his size.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): —if he claims this money has been used for anything but relief. It was on that account, and that account only that I took objection to the statements he made.

Mr. McINTOSH: Mr. Chairman, I have heard the somewhat abusive remarks of the Minister of Agriculture, they are in line with his usual exibitions before this house.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): What about yourself?

Mr. McINTOSH: Well, you come in that class too, about as well as any person I know of.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Glad of it.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was going to say that when it comes to the question of intelligence the Minister of Agriculture has made three of the worst exhibitions before parliament in the last twelve months, of any man who ever entered parliament. The remarks he made here a week ago constitute exhibition No. 1. He lost his head, he became angry and said things that a minister of the crown should not say, and got away with it. Then in connection with the marketing bill we had exhibition No. 2, the most pitiful exhibition on the part of a minister that has ever taken place in parliament. The bill from first to last was a practical impossibility, and if he had anything to do with the drafting of it or cooperated in putting the bill into shape, it simply signified imbecility.

Then let me refer to another exhibition on the part of the minister—to-night he has seen fit to digress, may I do the same. Last year when the redistribution debate was on the minister made one of the most pitiful exhibitions that any minister could make. What did the minister say in this house last year with regard to the riding of Prince Albert? He said that the last redistribution made it impossible for "the people" in the federal constituency of Prince Albert to express their will. I have here the electoral return for the district of Prince Albert, and I have here also the electoral return for the constituency of Melfort. In the latter constituency there were 160 polls.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: There were 160 polls through which the people could express their opinions, and there were 17,000 votes polled—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: —out of 22,000 votes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): The hon. member is going back to the same question which was ruled out of order, and I ask him—

Mr. McINTOSH: No, I did not touch on this question before. You must be dreaming.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I am suggesting that the hon. member speak to the item under discussion.

Mr. McINTOSH: I did not touch this matter at all to-night. The minister is not objecting, and I will finish it in a moment or two.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): This is out of order, and I so rule.

Mr. McINTOSH: In what way is it out of order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): It is absolutely out of order; it has nothing to do with the item.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The same rules of order should apply to both sides.

Mr. VENIOT: If the minister is allowed to refer to the intelligence or want of intelligence of a member on this side of the house, surely the hon. member on this side has the privilege of replying in kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister chooses a peculiar way of putting through his estimates, indulging in personal attacks on members on this side of the house. I suggest that the member has every right to reply.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I did not make a personal attack on the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh); I complimented the hon. member on his intelligence.

Some hon. MEMBERS: You did not.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Most decidedly I did.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): The point of order was not raised against the minister.

Mr. VENIOT: It was not raised against the hon. member for North Battleford; you raised it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): The hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan) raised it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He never rose to his feet and raised a point of order.

Mr. McINTOSH: I think it is only right that when a member is attacked, especially by a minister of the crown in the House of Commons, the member should have the right to reply. I merely want to show how partisan the minister is, that this is the cause of the exhibition he has made of himself in this house on more than one occasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: I think that is very plain language. This was the argument put up by the minister, that the people of Prince Albert were disfranchised, and I was merely saying—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: —that in the constituency of Melfort—

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): What has that to do with this item?

Mr. McINTOSH: —out of 22,000 votes 17,000 were polled, or 77 per cent. That was in the riding of which the minister is the representative. What do we find in Prince Albert? We find 161 polls through which the people could express their convictions on election day, and that of 20,000 votes in the constituency 17,000 or 85 per cent were polled. So 77 per cent of "the people" voted in Melfort while 85 per cent of the people voted in the riding of Prince Albert. Therefore in the riding of Prince Albert "the people" made their will known more completely than in the constituency of Melfort.

Then I should like to show another case in which the minister was very partisan, just following up what he has been doing for the last year or two. I am one of the members in the house from western Canada who have given the minister very little opposition; I have complimented him and have been fair with him, but he is not going to get away with this stuff with regard to me or with regard to Saskatchewan members. I want him to know that. He went ahead and attacked my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) the other night, and I am defending my leader now. The minister said the only way the right hon. gentleman was elected was by the Liberals, in a former redistribution, having the votes of the German people, the Mennonites, in the southern part of the riding so that they had no chance to name a representative of their own, so that they were practically disfranchised. The minister made the further statement that all the polls in the northern part of the riding of Prince Albert voted against my right hon. leader. I say now that this statement is not correct. I have a list here which shows poll after poll that voted strongly Liberal in that election. Henribourg voted Liberal; so did Albertville, Marcelin, Leask, Debden and Big River. These are all in the northern part of the province. Last year the minister contended that the Anglo-Saxons were the only people in the north; he suggested that the Mennonites, the French, the Belgians, the Scotch and the Welsh and others were not people, but merely political cattle.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is not stating the position I took on the occasion to which he has referred.

Mr. McINTOSH: You give me time and I will state it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is not discussing anything in relation to item 46, which is before the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He is discussing entomology absolutely.

Mr. NICHOLSON: He is discussing the election of 1930.

Mr. McINTOSH: I know the hon. member, and I think he is fair enough to agree that when an attack is made upon my leader by a minister of the crown I have a perfect right to answer with regard to my province and my riding.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There has been no attack made on my hon. friend's leader in this committee to-night.

Mr. McINTOSH: I would ask the hon. member to read Hansard for May 29, and he will see what was said then. Further may I say this—

Mr. NICHOLSON: I ask for your ruling, Mr. Chairman, as to whether the hon. member is in order under this item.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am almost through; let me complete my statement or it will look much worse for your party than it will for mine.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): You are discussing pests.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes—a very appropriate subject.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I am asked to give an opinion on the point of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The hon. member is discussing pests.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Does the hon. member for Vancouver Centre suggest that when the hon. member for North Battleford is discussing his leader he is discussing pests?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): My decision is that certainly this is out of order, but this discussion has been out of order about half the time this afternoon and to-night, in my opinion.

Mr. McINTOSH: That may be quite true, but the minister commenced it. It ought to be concluded, and I am simply concluding it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am just about through. May I say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: —to prove that the minister meant that only Anglo-Saxons were "the people" in the constituency of Prince Albert, and that the French and others were not people—

Mr. NICHOLSON: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. McINTOSH: His remarks in the first place were changed in Hansard, and he qualified it by adding "French speaking" in the unrevised and revised edition.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not carried, Mr. Chairman. You did not rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Yes, I did.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Which way?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I ruled the hon. member out of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Excellent.

Experimental farms, including investigations concerning plant diseases, $1,815,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From now until eleven o'clock I am going to try to assist the minister to get his estimates through and I will make my remarks as brief as possible. I have been somewhat anxious about the ultimate fate of the experimental farm at Rosthern. It looks to me as if it is being starved to death. I can understand that. I recall when the Liberals came into power in the early days we did not seem to have enough money to keep all these farms going properly and, Rosthern, Nappan, and Windermere were among those we thought we could not keep going. I reported to my colleagues that either these three farms had to get more money or they would have to be closed. I half suspect that that is the position the minister is in with regard to some of these farms, and I have some sympathy for him if that is the situation. I pointed out to the Minister of Finance of that day that it was a question of either getting more money to keep all these farms going or some of them, and Rosthern was one, would have to be closed. Well, we decided to keep them all going and going strong, and not to start any more until we had more money in sight. That was our policy. The minister should be candid with us and tell us if that is the situation with himself and his colleagues now. If that is the situation the only thing for him to do is to tell his colleagues that there must be some more money supplied for experimental farms or they cannot all be kept going properly. It is better in my opinion to keep eighteen going properly than to keep twenty-two half starved. My good friend knows there was a lot of very fine experimental fruit work being done on that farm at Rosthern. It was coming along nicely, largely under the supervision of the Morden superintendent, Mr. Leslie, since Mr. Munro left, and I believe in some measure it is under his supervision yet. Mr. Hutton took Mr. Munro's place as superintendent of the Rosthern farm, after the latter was let out. I should very much like to know if that farm is going to be allowed to die or live, and not hang it up betwixt and between. It would be a relief to me and I am sure it would be to the minister himself. Rumours have gone abroad that the farm is up for sale. I have no reason for thinking there is anything authentic in that rumour, but I am just passing it along to the minister so that he will not keep the people interested in the work of this farm any longer in suspense. It is a terrible thing to have the people in a community who have become accustomed to an institution like the Rosthern farm wondering what is going to be its ultimate fate. Judging from what I know personally through going past the farm, and judging by the diminishing size of these votes, and knowing what it costs to keep these farms going properly I am a little anxious. Perhaps the minister will tell us what was set aside for this farm last year as compared with say four years ago. If he would do that, and it was a reasonable amount, I would not have much to say about it, because I went through the whole thing myself and finally decided to go ahead full steam with the Rosthern farm, so that I know the minister's position.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In the first place the Rosthern farm has not been offered for sale, but I knew there were certain rumours to that effect and I assured the gentleman who wrote me that it had not been offered and that neither it nor any other farm would be offered for sale without tenders being called for. We do feel that Rosthern is doing a very valuable work. They are not carrying out so many small projects; none of the farms is except those where we have decided to specialize along certain lines like the farm at Swift Current, specializing in dry farming and so on. We are carrying out at Rosthern practical experiments chiefly with reference to dairying and the suitability of forage crops for that area north from Saskatoon that has been approved by our own dominion agrostologist. The horticultural work is being directed, as the hon. member said, from Morden. It is very difficult to get men qualified to do this work in sufficient numbers for each of the experimental farms even if it was thought advisable. But Rosthern has been doing particularly good work along these lines, and also in connection with poultry and advanced registry in pigs. The experiments and the work done there is of a very practical nature, as near as we can get to the actual lines followed by the farmer himself.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I ask the minister for a list of all experimental farms in Canada and the relative cost of each last year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister did not give the appropriation for Rosthern last year as compared with four years ago.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The list of farms and expenditures is as follows:

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would the minister give the experimental farms in British Columbia separately, and the expenditure?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They are as follows: Windermere, $14,000; Summerland, $43,000; Kelowna substation, $6,500; Agassiz, $39,000; Saanichton, $30,000; substations, $12,000.

Mr. REID: Is a record kept of the visitors to the experimental farms?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Of individual visitors, yes, but not of visitors at picnics.

Mr. REID: I have long held to the opinion that one of the great advantages of experimental farms is their accessibility to the neighbouring farmers so that they can visit them. I have also long held the opinion that the farm at Agassiz was established at the wrong place having regard to the whole Fraser valley. I think it would have been of more benefit to the district if it had been established in a place like Chilliwack, which is the centre of a richer and better farming district. Agassiz stands at the head of the valley so to speak, and it is out of the way for motor traffic to find its way down to the farm. The most of the traffic is on the south side of the river, and I think the minister would be well advised to look into the desirability of changing the location of the farm so that it would be more accessible to the whole Fraser valley, and thereby be of more benefit to those for whose benefit experimental farms are conducted.

Mr. HOWDEN: Is it the policy of the department to have a bilingual employee at the farm at Morden? Roughly one-third of the population of Manitoba is French speaking, and when a position was vacant some time ago they expressed the strongest desire to have a bilingual employee on the premises. I mentioned this to the minister at the time, and I should like to know if the department now maintains such an employee.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I agree with the hon. member and this matter will be considered should a vacancy occur.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Following up the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), is it the policy to have farms such as the one at Agassiz cooperate with the research departments of the universities?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): All the dominion officials cooperate with the provincial officials and with the colleges in any research work. They meet together and lay out a general program. Everyone unites in the carrying out of that program and at the end of the experiments there is a further meeting at which results are noted. If necessary, new plans are laid out.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): There is no unnecessary overlapping?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I would say at the present time it is at the minimum.

Mr. VENIOT: Has the minister had any correspondence with the government of New Brunswick in connection with the establishment of an agricultural college at the experimental farm at Fredericton?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): For some time past there has been considerable work done at a number of the experimental farms by way of short classes.

Mr. VENIOT: I understand that, but I was referring to work beyond that.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This work is carried on especially in the winter and is much appreciated by the people in the community. Fredericton has done especially good work in this regard, one of the reasons being Mr. Bailey who has been superintendent for a number of years. In order to carry on this work in an ideal manner it is necessary that there should be a dormitory large enough to hold a small number of pupils who could stay for a short period to receive instruction on practical problems. Every consideration is being given to this matter in connection with Fredericton and other experimental farms.

Mr. VENIOT: I might add my appreciation of the work which has been done. The short courses have been excellent and I have personal knowledge of the work. However, my question referred to the establishment of a regular agricultural college where yearly courses could be taken.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There has been no communication in that connection.

Mr. REID: Could the minister give us any information regarding the policy in connection with veterinary private practitioners?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This is one subject to which we have given a great deal of consideration. In order to meet the demands of certain policies like the tuberculosis testing, it has been found necessary to draw men from private practice to headquarters. The result has been that there are large areas without any private practitioner. In the areas where there are private practitioners our policy has been to provide free service through federal officials. In this connection it has been felt very important that as far as possible this work should be given to private practitioners who can give evidence through written examinations that they are qualified to do the work and that the farmers would be taking no chances in using their services. We held an examination last summer for practitioners who wished to avail themselves of this opportunity, and we have been able to give work to some thirty or forty who passed the examinations. I am informed that it is the intention to take on more in the near future. I do not think there is anything more important in connection with the health of animals and live stock than to give every assistance to private practitioners who are qualified to do the work.

Mr. BOTHWELL: When speaking a few moments ago the minister referred to some special experimental work which was being carried on at the Swift Current experimental station. Can he give any information in this regard?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I stated that there were certain farms which had special problems to deal with. There have been no new developments at the Swift Current station. The nature of the work carried on there, such as the studying of soil moisture, soil drifting and climatic conditions, due to the slight rainfall, makes it necessary to maintain a staff of highly trained specialists. The overhead expenses at that farm are more than those at Rosthern, which operates under more normal conditions.

Mr. BOTHWELL: How do the appropriations for Swift Current and Rosthern compare?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The appropriation for Swift Current is $42,250; for Rosthern, $15,000; for La Ferme, $12,000, and for Indian Head, $32,000.

Mr. BROWN: What is the figure for Morden?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Morden is $41,000. The same conditions obtain there as obtain at Swift Current. We have a higher paid staff because of the specialized work in horticulture and the amount of labour necessary in dealing with the research work.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Rosthern is down pretty low. I wonder what it was four years ago? I think it used to be between $40,000 and $50,000.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I would say $44,000 to $46,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It will soon be a cripple if it has been reduced from $44,000 to $15,000. Would it not be better to close it than to have it going around like a rickle of bones? That is the shape it will soon be in. I do not feel like being cross about it but the minister should go to the Prime Minister and tell him that these farms will have to close if they do not get more money. I had to do that; I got more money when I was able to make a good case, and they were put in good shape. What is the appropriation for Nappan?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Nappan is $43,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am glad of that, as there was some justification for complaining that it was so close to Truro. However, there seems to be work for both places. I regret the minister's attitude towards Rosthern. That was a special place for the development of fruit. This everlasting idea of growing wheat is not so popular as it used to be. The tendency to-day is more to the development of homes. This chasing of the almighty dollar by means of wheat fields is not so popular or profitable; it is now more popular to plant trees, including fruit and carry on horticulture generally where farmers can afford to do so. Now surely the minister, with all his opportunities, a university man, a man in the scholastic world, is not going to be the one to discourage this tendency. Look at the late Doctor William Saunders, a great London horticulturist and experimentalist. He came to Canada and did the opposite; he built up the home and aesthetic side of agriculture as well as the practical side. He was a man without any practical experience in agriculture but he had a vision of what the line in which he was interested would do for Canada. And look what was done by the late Doctor Macoun, through his apple breeding alone. But here is the minister taking the opposite course. I am sure that if he makes up his mind to do it he can get Rosthern back on its feet, because that was one farm in the west which was doing special work along the line of fruit. I appeal to the minister, in the presence of the Prime Minister, and ask him not to allow Rosthern to languish and die, having regard to that side of the cultural life of Saskatchewan which that farm was developing. I say that in all sincerity and earnestness.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): With reference to horticultural work in Rosthern, because of the difficulty of getting highly trained specialists, the policy is to work out from a central organization, and I believe that as much work is being done in the way of experiments to find out the suitability of fruit trees for that northern area at the present time as there has been in the past. It is supervised directly from Morden. We find trees that are hardy enough to do well at Morden and they are sent north and planted and watched in Rosthern, and that will be extended to include farms like Scott and other experimental farms. The same is true with regard to grain and grasses; instead of having so many projects in each farm, that work is done more intensively at headquarters and the farms are used rather for practical experiments in the use of these grains and grasses. As regards Rosthern, we feel it is doing a very definite work with these changes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a nice reply and is most ingenious; it has all the appearance of being on the up and up. But is it? Did the minister not let out a first-class horticulturist in the person of Mr. Munro? Has that gentleman been replaced anywhere? We never had to go from Rosthern to Morden for supervision when Mr. Munro was there; but the minister lets out Mr. Munro and assures us that he will replace him at the first opportunity. Now he contends that he does not need to have anyone there because the work will be supervised from Morden. And it will be well supervised; but that does not justify the situation at all. We had a first-class superintendent in Mr. Munro, who had brought the horticultural side of that farm to its highest state of efficiency, and he could have continued it on that level. But he has been let out. What is the answer to that?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All right; I will let it go, as there is no answer.

Item agreed to.

Live stock, including assistance to fairs and exhibitions, $1,518,302.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What are the grants to New Westminster and Vancouver respectively?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is no grant to New Westminster; the buildings that were destroyed have not been replaced. The grant that was given to the three fairs, New Westminster, Vancouver and Victoria, was divided into two parts.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Was there any grant to the winter fair in Vancouver?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Not last year. We were prepared to give $3,000 but they did not think that sufficient.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): They did not get any.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No; they did not have a fair

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I see by the votes and proceedings of May 18 that item 45 was carried.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): That, I believe, was on the understanding that we might discuss anything relating to health of animals. The matter I want to take up is the examinations held last summer in Saskatoon for veterinary surgeons. There was an examination for part time service, but owing to economic conditions and the financial position of veterinary surgeons generally, some of them found it difficult to take the examinations; they could not stand the expense. I have received a letter from one of these gentlemen and also a letter from the registrar of the veterinary surgeons' association, informing me that the men who passed these examinations have not been able to get work.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We have taken between thirty and forty of the men who did pass, and where there is work anywhere near we are taking on more veterinaries. I was discussing the matter with the veterinary director general—because I have a special interest in it—and he is of the opinion that we shall be able to give work to practically all these men who have passed the examination, provided the work is within reasonable distance of their own practice. When it is decided to go ahead with the new testing areas in Saskatchewan these men will be given work in connection with that.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): There are a number of our veterinary surgeons, fully qualified and registered, who think that it is unnecessary for them to be put to the expense of taking an examination for part time work. Do the veterinary director general and the veterinary department generally feel that the regularly qualified men who have passed examinations and are registered in their own province are unfit to do tuberculosis testing work?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The men employed in the health of animals branch, except some taken on at a very early date, have themselves to pass an examination before they can act as officials in the health of animals branch. The hon. member for Assiniboia knows that many veterinary surgeons came to western Canada and engaged in farming or ranching or other work of that kind and naturally would become rusty in their veterinary science, and it was felt to be only fair as a protection to farmers that these men should be asked to pass an examination. In Saskatchewan they were particularly fortunate, especially those who could afford to take the course, which was provided at very low cost, because Doctor Fulton, of Saskatchewan university, put on a short intensive brushing up course; and that will be offered again before the next examination is held. We are of the opinion that by holding these examinations once a year or once every two years a great boon is provided the practitioners themselves. The hon. member asks whether it is thought that these men are not qualified. With that question in mind, when the examination papers were prepared we had in members, and men recommended by members, of the veterinary colleges, because they might be of the same opinion, namely, that these men having once passed, it was a slur on the college that they should be asked to write again. They came in and sat at the reading of the papers which were gone into very carefully and I think these men would be the first now to acknowledge that these examinations are very necessary not only as a check but to have the veterinaries themselves brush up on their work.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Did the result of the examination prove what the minister said, namely that many of them are getting rather rusty?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I can believe that myself because I was a graduate of a veterinary college about thirty years ago and I do not know that I would care to re-register. But the thing that seems to annoy these veterinary surgeons is the fact that under present economic conditions they cannot afford to go to the expense of taking this short course. So far as tuberculosis work is concerned I do not think there is anything particular about it requiring any special examination, and I imagine that is the greater part of the work. Probably the minister has a copy of the memorandum that was passed at a meeting of the council of the Veterinary Association of Saskatchewan in February last. From the letter accompanying it I believe a copy was sent to practically every local member of the house as well as to the minister himself, but in case the minister has overlooked it I will just put it on Hansard so that we can see what is the feeling of the veterinary association. The memorandum reads:

1. To draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the men who passed the part-time examinations held last summer have as yet received no work from the health of animals branch, in spite of the fact that a list of available men is in the hands of the civil service commission. Also to urge the minister to see that work is given to these men, when it is available, in their own districts, as soon as possible.

2. To suggest to the minister that the examinations for part-time veterinary surgeons held in future be partly oral if possible.

3. To ask the minister that tuberculosis testing be given to accredited veterinarians in their own districts whether they passed the part-time examinations or not as these men have already passed a special examination held by the health of animals branch in tuberculosis and tuberculosis eradication work, and are quite capable of doing the work.

4. To assure the minister of their continued support in his efforts to try out a system of state veterinary medicine and to ask him to put it into force along the lines suggested two or three years ago, as early as possible.

5. The council of the Veterinary Association of Saskatchewan hopes that the minister will call the meeting as soon as possible looking towards the formation of a Dominion-wide veterinary association. If necessary, Saskatchewan would finance its own delegate.

6. The economic condition of the veterinary surgeons in Saskatchewan is at a low ebb, many of them being unable to make calls any longer from inability to collect fees, which means that sick animals are often dying for the want of veterinary service; this is literally true. The council of the Veterinary Association of Saskatchewan considers that the above measures would materially help to remedy the situation.

The veterinary surgeons in my own district with whom I am well acquainted are finding it very hard under present conditions to make ends meet, and although this examination is probably being held for a quite laudable purpose, it seems to me that the test for tuberculosis, and probably other matters but particularly this test, could be carried on almost entirely by the local man. If it is found that he has become rusty, as the minister imagines, he probably would not be given any of the work, but at the same time, in order to keep these men in their particular districts, I would urge the minister to give them all the work it is possible to give them without the necessity of their taking these examinations.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I believe in Saskatchewan some seven out of the ten who passed the examination have been given work. No person, veterinary or anybody else, can give me any more enthusiasm than I have as regards the necessity of assisting private veterinaries, especially in western Canada, and every effort is being made to give them assistance and work because I feel that the veterinarian work has been one side of our live stock industry that has been receiving less care than it should because of the circumstances of which I have spoken before.

As regards the conference and our agreeing to pay the expenses of one, some two years ago I got in touch with the veterinary associations to discuss those problems with them and asked if we could have a dominion conference, but for some reason or another each of them named the same man as a delegate and it was a matter of practically this one man meeting with me. He could not speak with the authority of the veterinaries of each province nor on the problems I especially wished to discuss, that is from the practical veterinary point of view, because he had been a specialist and always engaged in research work institutions.

Mr. BROWN: I should like to speak in support of what has been said by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie). We all know veterinary surgeons have been having a difficult time; indeed, the price of live stock and horses has been so low it hardly pays to employ a veterinary surgeon, even if the man could pay him. One case was brought to my notice of a man who had for some years been employed by the department to test for tuberculosis. He was employed first at a port of entry in connection with stock coming in from the United States. Although he has the certificate which he had received at that time, of late he has not been permitted to practise. I know it is quite true, as the minister says, men may get rusty in regard to their early training.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Would the hon. member mind giving me the man's name?

Mr. BROWN: Not at the moment. I shall speak again. All of us who have passed examinations in the past realize we would hardly like to be called upon to pass them to-day. A story is told of a professor who said that he had had a horrible dream; it was that he had to pass a freshman's examination. While it is quite possible that men may get rusty on their work it is also possible that the newcomers, smart young men, may set examination papers with which the men who have been in practice for a long time may hardly be familiar. I know when I began to write on examinations my teacher warned me that the worst examiner was a clever young man, and in the course of my experience I found that out to be true. There is just a possibility that examinations may be set on subjects that are rather new and not entirely necessary for the practical work that is required of veterinary surgeons, especially in establishing these tuberculosis areas. I would not for a moment like to interfere with the efficiency of the work or to ask that inefficients be requested to do it, but I would urge that as much consideration as possible be given to men who passed their examinations some years ago and who have been in continuous practice ever since.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I notice this item includes fairs and exhibitions. I understand fairs are divided into class A and class B. Is the department still continuing the grants to class B fairs, and how many of them are still in existence?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The grant is being continued although we call them regional fairs just to distinguish them. There are, I believe, thirty so-called B class fairs.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Is that more than there were before?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The same number, I am given to understand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Some reference was made earlier in the session to an outbreak of glanders in Quebec. That is a very serious disease but in the past it has been well kept down throughout Canada. I was wondering whether the staff had discovered the source of that outbreak. Was it from the Maine lumber woods, where Quebec farmers sometimes go for winter occupation and might bring the glanders back with them?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No; the first outbreak was in the eastern townships. For the hon. member's information I might refer him to my answer to the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) who wrote me asking that this information be put on record because of the misunderstanding in reference to it. On May 18 I put on Hansard a very full statement. In the first place glanders was discovered in a mild form in the eastern townships of Quebec. Three light horses had been shipped in by truck from the United States, and it was felt that they might have been the source of the disease. The veterinaries went to the place from which these horses came, and after thorough inquiry found no trace of the disease. It was then concluded that the disease had existed in a mild form in the eastern townships, but difficulty was experienced in checking all the contacts because of the stables through which the horses had passed. That entailed a great deal of work. However, the outbreak is now well under control. The record I put on Hansard indicated that out of quite a large number of horses checked up to May 12, only three reacted. One of the reactors came from a place in Alberta, near Beiseker, so that we had to go to Alberta and check contacts there as well. As a further measure of protection to the people of the eastern townships all horses going through the horse yards in Montreal are being thoroughly checked, and we believe the disease is now well under control.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Would the minister let us know whether this work was in charge of regular officers of his department, or were they part time men?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am glad the hon. member asked that question, because every care was taken to have men who understood the work thoroughly and had had practice in it, and if we had to use any who did not have that experience they were first thoroughly schooled. Colonel Tamblyn, of the permanent force, who has had a lot of experience, came from Kingston and performed some post mortems for the benefit of these people. In addition to that we brought men from the west who had had experience in dealing with glanders in Alberta.

Item agreed to.

Salaries, $684,144; contingencies, $90,600.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Why was this item held over?

Mr. BENNETT: We said we would let it stand the other evening.

Item agreed to.

External Affairs—

Canada's contribution to the expenses of the League of Nations for 1934, including secretariat, international labour organization and permanent court of international justice, $205,569.42.

Mr. BENNETT: We allowed this item to stand because it is a League of Nations item, but in view of the discussion that took place at the recent annual meeting, and what has been said, probably there is no need of its standing longer.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I think there was an understanding that one item, penitentiaries, should stand. On one item of pensions and national health the minister was to get some information for the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. Blair). There is item No. 185, unemployment relief, and there is one in miscellaneous, child welfare, No. 239.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No. 185 is pensions?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, unemployment relief. An item of trade and commerce was allowed to stand until a report is made by the committee that is considering garnet wheat. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

The house having reverted to the order for motions:

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the estimates respecting the Canadian National Steamships and the Maritime Freight Rates Act, presented to the house on the 27th April, be referred to the select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, and that the order referring the same to the committee of supply be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.42 p.m.

Monday, June 4, 1934

The house met at three o'clock.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed the following bill to which the concurrence of this house is desired:

Bill No. 91 (letter E of the Senate) intituled: "An Act Respecting Shipping."

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, you have just read a message from the Senate indicating that Bill Letter E of the Senate relating to shipping has been passed by the Senate. We were unable to complete the printing of it by Friday night, and as the bill is now transmitted to the house I would move, with the permission of the house, that standing order 22, which provides that bills originating in the Senate and sent to this house for concurrence shall be placed for first reading on the order paper under the heading "routine proceedings," immediately after "introduction of bills," be suspended for this sitting and that the bill be placed on the order paper so that it may be read the first time this afternoon. I will write the motion presently. I have just heard the message read from the Senate and I was not sure until a few minutes ago that it would come to us this afternoon.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is purely to expedite the proceedings of the house?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 91 respecting shipping.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will the minister explain the bill?

Mr. DURANLEAU: On this reading I do not intend to go further than to say that this measure is a complete revision of our Canadian laws respecting shipping. It has been framed in the light of the statute of Westminster and of the agreement with the other dominions as to uniformity in shipping laws, and also in the light of our Canadian laws, so as to give Canada a full power over all Canadian ships no matter where they might be and over other British or foreign ships within Canadian territory. I intend to make a complete statement on the second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No. 85, for the relief of Mary Mabel Taylor Johnson.—Mr. Lawson.

The postmistress states that she is the daughter of Edwin Wood. The records of the Department of the Secretary of State disclose that Edwin Wood, formerly of Britton, South Dakota, was naturalized at Weyburn, Saskatchewan, on 15th January, 1917, under the Naturalization Act, R.S.C. 1906, chapter 77. By the provisions of that act, all his minor children who were residing with him in Canada are deemed to be naturalized British subjects.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I rise to a point of order which perhaps is on a very wide basis. I suggest that it is not in the public interest that the names and addresses of these old age pensioners should be published.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman sent me a note indicating that he thought names and addresses might be omitted. As a matter of fact, with respect to another return the matter was looked into last year and it will be recalled that a return was ordered containing the names of all those receiving pensions under the military pensions act, so that from the standpoint of the right to receive the information if it is sought, I am afraid there is no question as to its being quite competent and proper for the house to pass the order if it so desires.

Motion agreed to.

BEACON HILL, SPIRITWOOD AND MEDSTEAD, SASK., POST OFFICES

On the notices of motions:

Mr. McINTOSH:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters and other documents exchanged between any person in Beacon Hill, Beacon Hill district or elsewhere, and the department of the Postmaster General, regarding the management of the post office at Beacon Hill, Saskatchewan, during the past year; also a copy of any report made by an inspector of the Post Office Department who made a special investigation in connection with the management of said post office any time between June 1, 1933, and June 1, 1934.

Mr. McINTOSH:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters and telegrams exchanged between any person in Spiritwood, the Spiritwood district or elsewhere, and the department of the Postmaster General, regarding the management of the post office at Spiritwood, Saskatchewan, since September, 1930, to April 1, 1934; also a copy of the report of the inspector of the department who made a special investigation in connection with the management of the said post office during the month of February or March or any other month during the year from June 1, 1933, and June 1, 1934.

Mr. McINTOSH:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters and telegrams exchanged between any person in Medstead, Medstead district or elsewhere, and the department of the Postmaster General, regarding the management of the post office at Medstead, Saskatchewan, during the past year; also a copy of any report made by an inspector of the department who made a special investigation in connection with the management of said post office any time between June 1, 1933, and June 1, 1934.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of the terms of these notices of motion, three in number, standing in the name of the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), I should like them to stand because they are asking for letters from unnamed persons, and one can easily realize how difficult it will be to prepare such a return when you have not the names of all the persons in the particular district who have communicated with the department. In the closing lines of these notices another question is raised to which I should like to speak when the hon. member is in his place. At present I would ask that the notices of motion stand.

Notices of motions stand.

PRIVILEGE—MR. WEIR (MELFORT)

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In this connection I regret that the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) is not in his seat but I feel I cannot delay the matter. It is reported on page 3613 of Hansard of Friday, June 1, 1934, that the hon. member for North Battleford stated as follows:

> Last year the minister contended that the Anglo-Saxons were the only people in the north; he suggested that the Mennonites, the French, the Belgians, the Scotch and the Welsh and others were not people, but merely political cattle.

I was listening very closely to the hon. member for North Battleford and I did not hear him use the words "but merely political cattle." I asked some of my colleagues if they had heard these words used and they stated definitely that they had not.

On checking up the typewritten copy of Hansard I found that the words "but merely political cattle" had been written in with a red pencil, and that there had been a period after the word "people." Upon inquiring of the staff of Hansard I was informed that these words were not in the reporter's notes and the reason they were inserted was that the hon. member for North Battleford instructed Mr. Young, associate editor of debates, that he had used these words and insisted that they be inserted.

The hon. member for North Battleford was referring to a statement that I had made in the house, as set out in revised Hansard at page 5280 of May 22, 1933, wherein referring to the Mennonites I stated as follows:

> I had the privilege and pleasure of working throughout that whole district for years as a school inspector. I know many of these people personally and they take second place to none.

On the same date in the same debate, with reference to the French, I stated as reported on page 5290 of Hansard:

> There is no hon. member in this house or out of it with a higher estimation of the fine qualities of our French-Canadians and of the French in the old land than I have.

On the same page in referring to these people I referred to "French, Ukrainian, Scandinavian and other people who live in harmony, and are doing everything they can to make that one of the best sections in Canada."

In view of my opinion so expressed, therefore, the words allegedly inserted are so insulting that had I heard them used I would have insisted at the time that they be withdrawn. Having checked up unrevised Hansard and having consulted my colleagues present in the house, who state definitely they did not hear the words used, I would ask that the four words "but merely political cattle" be stricken from the record.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the hon. member for North Battleford I think the matter had better stand. In any event it is not one in which the Speaker can give a ruling. I suggest that it ought to be referred to the select standing committee on the official report of debates.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter goes much further than that. In my opinion it should be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: I think possibly it would be well to hear the hon. member in the first instance.

Mr. BENNETT: I quite agree that the matter should not be dealt with now in the absence of the hon. member.

PREVENTIVE SERVICE SEARCHES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue): A few days ago the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) asked me a question. He wanted information as to whether the Department of National Revenue or the minister had issued instructions to the preventive service to hold up and search cars of private citizens on the 24th of May on the roads all over the eastern townships.

In reply I may say that no such instructions were issued by the department or the minister.

PRIVILEGE—MR. HEAPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with I wish to refer to the proceedings of Friday afternoon when the estimates of the Post Office Department were before the committee. I observe on page 3885 of Hansard it is stated that the item was agreed to, and I presume that refers to the last item in the estimates of the department. I was under the impression that when the chairman of the committee stated that the item was carried several members on this side of the house rose in their places, I being one, and said "No." Now the proceedings record that item as carried, but it will be observed that the discussion proceeded after that, I along with others being under the impression that the item had not carried. It will also be observed that subsequent to that report in Hansard and the chairman making that notation on the records of the house, the Postmaster General himself stated that he was to give the same evening information in connection with the estimates, all of us being under the impression that the item was still before the committee.

If that is the last item in the estimates it means that we shall have no further opportunity of discussing the question, owing to a mistake in the records of the house. I do not know what can be done to change it, but I hope that the Postmaster General will have no objection to allowing the matter to be reopened at a subsequent date.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman will have the most ample opportunity for further discussion when the bill founded on the resolutions is in committee of the whole and in committee of ways and means. He will have the most ample opportunity to discuss any item in the estimates that he may desire.

Mr. HEAPS: That is not the point. What I am trying to point out is that the chairman of the committee, perhaps through some misunderstanding, claimed and put on the records of the house that this item had carried when in fact it had not carried, and the discussion proceeded just as though the item had not carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: As pointed out by the Prime Minister, the hon. member will have ample opportunity later to address himself further to the item. The item was carried on June 1, and is properly so entered in the proceedings as taken down by the clerk. And the Hansard report verifies the record kept by the clerk.

Mr. HEAPS: But on a point of order may I point out—

Mr. SPEAKER: It is out of order to speak further on the subject. The hon. member will have ample opportunity to discuss the matter before the committee. Meantime the records of the house will stand as they are.

Mr. HEAPS: But what I want to point out, if I may—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HEAPS: On a point of order, is it not possible that in noting the proceedings of the committee the chairman of the committee himself may have made a mistake?

Mr. SPEAKER: In this case he is correct.

Mr. HEAPS: If it is correct can you inform me why the discussion continued after the item was carried?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. VENIOT: If I may be permitted a word regarding that question, I think it was wrong to say that the item was carried.

Hansard reports the item carried, that is item 21, which we were dealing with at that time, and we went on afterwards to items in the general estimates. That was civil government. In the general estimates item 256 is divided into three parts. We were dealing with the three items separately, and when six o'clock was reached the hon. member who has raised the question of privilege was on his feet. I remember quite distinctly that when the chairman left the chair at six o'clock I felt sure the item had not been carried, that is 256 including all three items. We were discussing salaries and allowances, and mail services and so forth, mixing up the two. I crossed the house and said to the Potmaster General, "Your estimates will go through hurriedly after six o'clock, perhaps within half an hour." I was anxious myself to have the estimates go through, and with that in mind I crossed the floor to the Postmaster General, but he informed me that the items were all through, the chairman had said, "Carried." The Postmaster General was under the impression that his estimates had been carried.

Mr. SAUVE: Yes, exactly.

Mr. VENIOT: I then went to the chairman before he left the chamber and asked him whether these items were carried, and he said yes. The clerk assistant looked at the record and informed me that on the table record, the scroll, it was marked "Carried." I had my doubts whether it was carried. Then the matter came up afterwards in discussion with the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and I told the hon. member that it was marked "Carried" on the scroll, but the item carried is not the item in dispute at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no point in elaborating the question any further, but if the hon. member will turn to page 3871 of Hansard, he will find that the whole item is reported, and that the whole item was under discussion according to the record. In any event, the chairman of the committee called it carried, the clerk who was taking the record put it down as carried and it has been carried.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I think, Mr. Speaker, that in this case the liberties of the house are perhaps challenged, and I would ask Your Honour whether the chairman of the committee can declare an item carried while members are discussing that very item. Is that the position the house is being placed in by the happening of Friday afternoon? The Speaker of the house is charged with looking after the liberties of the house and seeing that they are not infringed upon. I think the member who was acting as chairman of the committee simply made an error in calling the item carried. We do not wish to set up a precedent here that will enable a chairman at any time to declare an item carried and so prevent discussion.

Mr. BENNETT: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the only method by which a matter of this kind can be dealt with is by formal proceeding. As far as the records of this house are concerned they show that the item was carried. They show further that the report of the committee was adopted. That being so, formal proceedings would have to be taken to vary the records. Assuming there may have been some confusion at the moment, after hearing the hon. member for North Winnipeg I have just indicated to him that no prejudice could possibly follow for he would be afforded opportunity to discuss the item which he says was prematurely passed or recorded as passed when it should not have been. I think where no prejudice has been done there is no necessity to resort to any formal proceedings, but if anyone were prejudiced by the action that has been taken there are means that can be resorted to, although they are somewhat formal in their character, for the purpose of seeing that the prejudice is removed from any hon. member of the house. I bear out what the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) has stated; I was not in the house in the afternoon, but just as the house rose he informed me that the post office estimates would be disposed of the next day, because he was going to make just a brief review of the situation. As I see it from the records, that is what did transpire and the report of the committee was made. For that reason I do not think the rights of the house have been affected; no prejudice has been done, and the hon. member will be afforded an opportunity to discuss the item when the house is in committee on the bill founded on the resolutions.

COURTS OF ADMIRALTY

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of bill No. 88, respecting courts of admiralty.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be well if I offered a word of explanation in regard to the object and scope of the proposed measure. There is a very useful and full explanatory note on the reverse side of page 1 of the bill.

Admiralty jurisdiction, as established in the Dominion of Canada, will be found at the present time in chapter 33 of the revised statutes of Canada, and that jurisdiction is founded upon the limitations imposed or the permission granted to what in the early days were colonies and are now dominions to pass acts in conformity with certain acts passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom in regard to the subject of admiralty law and the jurisdiction of the courts of admiralty throughout the empire. The acts of the United Kingdom upon which this jurisdiction was originally founded were those passed by the parliament of Great Britain in 1840, again in 1861 and again in 1890, as well as the most recent consolidation of the various courts of admiralty acts in the act known as the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, passed in 1925.

The admiralty jurisdiction established in this country under chapter 33 of the revised statutes of Canada was so established in the year 1890, and it has continued in force for the last forty-four years with very slight amendments. However, it will be remembered that at the imperial conference held in 1927 a review was made not only of the admiralty and merchant shipping acts but also of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, and at that conference it was agreed that a special committee should be set up to consider the operation of these acts in regard to the various dominions constituting the British Empire. A new constitutional status was established as between the United Kingdom and the various dominions of the British Empire at the conference of 1927, and the report of that conference was subsequently carried into effect at the conference which met in London in 1930. In the interval the special committee which had been set up in 1927 went exhaustively into the question of shipping and also into the question of administration of the admiralty law throughout the British Empire. My hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) was a member of that special committee which sat in London in 1929, and the report of the committee was formally adopted at the imperial conference in 1930.

At the Imperial Conference of 1930 it was also decided to adopt a new constitutional act to be known as the statute of Westminster for the purpose of confirming the conclusions which had been reached at the conferences of 1927 and 1930. In 1931 the statute of Westminster was passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom, and in the following year a similar statute was passed by this parliament. The effect of the adoption of that statute both in Great Britain and in Canada has been to extend the jurisdiction of the Dominion of Canada, to make it practically co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the parliament of the United Kingdom in respect to admiralty laws and the establishment of courts of admiralty throughout the British Empire. It is to be noted that in the report made by the special committee in 1929 it was emphasized that so far as possible there should be uniform jurisdiction and procedure in all admiralty courts throughout the British commonwealth, subject, however, to such variations as might be required in matters of purely local and domestic interest. In the drafting of their bill it has been sought to make the admiralty law of Canada conformable to the admiralty court legislation of Great Britain as set out in the act passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom in 1925, which is the latest enactment of Great Britain on the subject; and it has also been the object of the draftsmen of the present measure to make such special provision as may be necessary in regard to matters of purely local and domestic interest in regard to the administration of admiralty law in the Dominion of Canada.

I may say that this bill has been prepared by the law officers of the Department of Justice, and great care has been exercised in its preparation. It was introduced originally in the Senate of Canada, where it was given very grave and careful consideration. The Senate made an exhaustive examination of the various clauses of the bill, passed the measure and sent it to this chamber for consideration. I am aware, of course, that a great many hon. members of this chamber are not very familiar with admiralty law or admiralty courts; those of us who live in the inland parts of Canada have little experience either with admiralty law or with admiralty courts, but having given the bill the best attention I am able to bestow upon it, and having obtained advice from men well qualified to offer opinions in regard to such matters, I am satisfied that the present measure very comprehensively embodies the admiralty laws of Great Britain and provides for their application to the Dominion of Canada with such alterations and variations as may be necessary to ensure that all local and special interests pertaining to the Dominion of Canada have been safeguarded.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. HANBURY: I should like to know whether there will be any change in our Canadian judiciary as a result of the carrying out of this legislation?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, there are some changes. For instance, at the present time the Exchequer Court is empowered to administer the admiralty law in the Dominion of Canada. Both judges of that court, there being a chief and puisne judge, have jurisdiction. At the present time, in the case of an appeal such appeal may be heard by either one of the judges of the Exchequer court. Under the present bill the two judges will have to hear appeals. In the case of the absence or the inability of one judge to be present power is given for the appointment of an ad hoc judge to be called in for that purpose, in order to make a court of two judges. There are some changes of that kind, although there are not many, and they are not important.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On section 11—Governor in council may constitute admiralty districts.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): In regard to section 11, may I ask the minister whether the admiralty districts already established by order in council are interfered with by this act, and whether they will have to be reestablished?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is precisely the same allocation of admiralty districts as appears in the present act in the revised statutes. There has been no change.

Sections 12 to 38 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule A agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. THOMAS G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill No. 90, respecting the Caughnawaga Indian reserve and to amend the Indian Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 1—Acts and proceedings validated.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would the minister explain the object of this bill?

Mr. BENNETT: It is to validate an illegal order in council.

Mr. MURPHY: If the ex-Minister of the Interior will turn to my remarks as reported in Hansard when the bill was introduced on June 1 he will find there a full explanation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Two or three words would settle the whole matter. The Caughnawaga band of Indians has been particularly difficult to deal with. I do not ask for a long explanation.

Mr. MURPHY: On March 5, 1889, the Caughnawaga band was brought under part 2 of the Indian Act by order in council. The order provided for six sections or divisions of the reserve under the provisions of the act, section 167, which provides for the division of the reserve into sections not exceeding six, containing as nearly as possible an equal number of voters, or if the Indians so desire, only one section may be constituted. Subsequently on July 12, 1906, at the request of the Indians a further order in council changed the six sections to one. Since that year elections for councillors have been conducted annually under the latter order in council. That is to say, the councillors for that reserve have been elected at large rather than for the six sections. It now transpires that that second order in council was illegal and the legislation now before the house is merely for the purpose of validating the acts which have been done since that time down to the present, and to amend the section so that the superintendent general may have the elections in that reserve carried on either for the six divisions or for the reserve as one division, as may be wished.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading of Bill No. 89, to amend and consolidate the Excise Act.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I do not wish to oppose the second reading of this bill and I rise only to ask the minister if he would draw the attention of the house to such of its provisions as may be in the nature of amendments to existing acts. Most of the measure is a consolidation, and if there is anything substantial in the way of additions I should be glad if the minister would indicate what there is. The hon. member for North Waterloo the ex-Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) is not in the house to-day. While I do not wish that circumstance in any way to delay the proceedings, and I am sure he would not, if when we are in committee we come to clauses to which exception is likely to be taken I would be glad if the minister would allow them to be held over until the ex-minister is in his seat.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Mr. Speaker, that will be quite agreeable to me. I might say to the right hon. gentleman what I intended to say if I had made an extended explanation, that there are three rather radical changes in the bill. My right hon. friend asked me on the first reading if there were any new sections, and I intimated to him that there were none of any great moment, having in mind that the principal changes have already been made known to the house by the Minister of Finance when his budget proposals were under discussion.

The three principal changes are as follows. First, the gallonage tax on beer imposed by the Special War Revenue Act is being repealed, and the existing duty on malt is being increased.

The second change is that the tax imposed by the Special War Revenue Act on malt syrup suitable for the brewing of beer is being repealed and converted into a duty of excise.

The third change is the setting up of a schedule or tariff of excise duties which will be very convenient for purposes of reference. That appears on the last pages of the bill.

For the convenience of the house the existing act with all the consolidated amendments is printed in extenso on the right hand pages of this bill, and as far as possible the corresponding sections of the amending bill will be found directly opposite to the old sections. I shall be glad, Mr. Speaker, to discuss these changes and others of a minor nature when the relevant clauses are before the committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Sections 1 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

On section 9—Minister may refuse or suspend licence.

Mr. HANBURY: Is there any change in the licensing of breweries or distilleries?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Section 172 deals with that. There is no essential change.

Section agreed to.

Sections 10 to 69 inclusive agreed to.

On section 70—Forfeited goods.

Mr. HANBURY: It has come to my knowledge that many automobiles have been seized in the past and that in many cases when they have been advertised for sale there has not been sufficient publicity so that many people in the area are unaware of the sale, with the result that many automobiles have been sold at ridiculously low values. Some provision could be made by the department to ensure that the general public have greater knowledge of these sales and it would also be in the interest of the public that a valuation should be placed on these automobiles and that they be not sold as I have heard they have been in the past not of necessity to political friends but to friends of seizing officers who probably insert the notice in some little country newspaper and then tell some of their particular friends that if they would be present at the sale they would not be likely to have much competition.

Mr. HACKETT: Does that not come under the Customs Act and not under this one?

Mr. HANBURY: I leave that to my hon. friend. I am just making my representation to the minister. I think that is a condition that should be corrected.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am advised that in case of a seized automobile two or three weeks' notice is given by advertising in the local or city papers in Toronto or Montreal, and invariably the highest tender is accepted. If my hon. friend knows of any irregularity I would be very glad if he would report it to me.

Mr. HANBURY: I am not suggesting to the minister there has been irregularity, but my understanding of the matter is that these seizing officers sometimes when they come on a very valuable car do not give to the sale the publicity that they otherwise would. Further than that, I think in order to meet that situation it would be advisable to place an upset price on such a car. I realize that is not always an easy matter, but there is no question some of these officers have been taking advantage of their knowledge and position to see that their friends, and in some cases their own relatives, get an automobile at much less than the department would desire.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Can the hon. member give me a case?

Mr. HANBURY: I have no particular case in mind but I understand this is a more or less general practice.

Mr. BOUCHARD: In support of what the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has said, it was rumoured in my district—I have no particular case in mind; I have not had time to look into the matter and it is always difficult to get the facts of a case like that—that in one instance some people closely connected with the customs officers were given a chance to buy cars at a very low price. I do not mean there is anything irregular but there is at least a carelessness that should be remedied as soon as possible.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): As regards the advertisement of the date of sale of a car by the department, could there be a notice posted up on public buildings in Montreal so that every body might see it?

Mr. MATTHEWS: The date of sale is invariably posted and in large cities we get a valuation on the car before it is sold.

Mr. HACKETT: Just the other day I received a complaint that automobiles seized, I think it was under the Customs Act, had been destroyed because the upset price was too high. This suggestion was that the government should take a lesser price rather than destroy the automobiles and receive nothing for them. I have never heard of any complaint under the Excise Act but I have heard of complaints under the Customs Act of the kind I have just related to the committee.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Where is the auction of such cars held in Montreal?

Mr. MATTHEWS: The cars are seized and sold in Montreal.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What about the date of sale?

Mr. MATTHEWS: The date and place of sale are posted; they are well known.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): When did the last sale take place, and where? I am asking this just for information; I have no grievance.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am sorry to have to say that we are selling cars every week.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): In the department in Montreal?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 71 to 118 inclusive agreed to.

On section 119—Minimum penalty.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): This section says that the courts shall have no power to suspend sentence. Is that a new provision?

Mr. MATTHEWS: No, that is not new.

Section agreed to.

Sections 120 to 123 inclusive agreed to.

On section 124—penalties belong to crown.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would the minister explain the significance of that section?

Mr. MATTHEWS: This section, which corresponds to section 133 of the existing act, has been rewritten, to bring the Excise Act in line with the practice long ago adopted under the Customs Act of paying for information received, if such information results in conviction and the imposition of penalties; even if for various reasons the net proceeds may be a loss, that is if the fine is not paid and the convicted person prefers to serve time, or the expenses exceed the amount realized.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is it the intention to pay an officer of your own department as well as an informant?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): It is in the discretion of the minister.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes, both officers and informants.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is, you are going to pay an official of the department who is under salary for getting information that will lead to conviction, in other words for carrying out his duty?

Mr. HACKETT: That is the rule that has obtained under the Customs Act.

Mr. HANBURY: That does not make it right.

Mr. MATTHEWS: This system has obtained under the Customs Act since confederation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know it has but I do not like it. I am strongly opposed to it. If you are paying a man to do a job he ought to do it; his remuneration should not depend upon his success in getting convictions.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Just a few days ago the papers carried a report of a case in British Columbia in which the magistrate commented on this question of moiety. It seems that some plainclothes men or stool pigeons or whatever they are called planted or sold certain liquor to perhaps a restaurant keeper, and then gave information to the police that this particular storekeeper or whatever he was had this liquor in his possession. A policeman found it there and the man was charged with having spirits illegally on his premises. According to the statement of the magistrate in that case this was done simply for the purpose of getting a share of the fine, getting this moiety. I believe the section which permits things of that kind being done should be seriously considered before it is re-enacted.

Mr. MATTHEWS: The power given under this section is discretionary. I shall be glad to let it stand, and give it further consideration.

Section stands.

Section 125 agreed to.

On section 126—Regulations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is an important departure here, if I read this section aright. It says that:

> The minister may make such regulations as to him seem necessary or expedient for giving effect to any of the provisions of this act.

Formerly, I understand, the governor in council made the regulations. Apparently the power is now being given to the minister. I know that a time does come when some power has to be delegated, but it seems to me that this matter of the delegation of power to a minister should be considered very carefully, because the public generally will be affected by regulations which the minister makes. Other departments of the government will also be interested in and affected by them. It seems to me that it is a mistake to take this power of making regulations out of the hands of the governor in council and give it solely to the minister. I wish the minister would tell us why he has found it necessary to seek to change the act in that particular.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Section 126 corresponds to section 135 of the existing act. It has been rewritten to confer upon the minister the general power of making administrative regulations. The existing section confers that power upon the governor in council, in addition to the powers proposed to be conferred upon the minister by the bill to declare the true intent of any of the provisions of this act. This bill omits this, and also omits as redundant, in view of the general power to make regulations, the specific power to make regulations for warehousing and so on. Throughout the bill the draftsmen have proceeded on the basis that administrative regulations can be made departmentally, that is by the minister, more conveniently than by the governor in council. Such regulations must of course, be confined strictly to matters of administration—

Mr. HANBURY: It does not say so.

Mr. MATTHEWS: —the powers of the minister to regulate being confined to giving effect to the provisions of the act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What the minister says only confirms what I said as to the intent of the change; it is to take away from the governor in council and give to the minister himself the power of making the regulations that may be necessary under this act. From confederation up to the present time that is a power which has rested with the governor in council and has not been delegated solely to the minister. In connection with section 126 one must, I think, read section 128:

In other words, under this compilation, which is in part a revision of and in part an addition to existing acts, we are being asked to give to a single minister of the crown the power to make regulations which involve penalties in the nature of fine and imprisonment. That is the very thing that we have been protesting against so strongly all through this session, with respect to the marketing bill and other legislation, that power is being taken first of all from parliament and given to the governor in council and then where formerly entrusted to the governor in council is taken from the governor in council and entrusted to a minister.

I have made reference at different times to a report of the royal commission appointed in Great Britain, about five years ago I think, to consider this whole question of the delegation of power to ministers of the crown. That commission went very fully into the kind of matters which we are being called upon to deal with here. I recall that one of the comments of the commissioners was that officials like to get into their own hands the power to make regulations, and the report uses words similar to those the minister himself has used, that this is so because it is more convenient for officials to have the making of regulations in the hands of their own ministers, than to be obliged to have the minister obtain the approval of the governor in council. But the matter of excise deals with taxation, and with respect to taxation I submit that the power of complete control should not be removed from the House of Commons to any further degree than is absolutely necessary. There is a certain safeguard to the ministry itself in having these regulations come before the governor in council for approval. I know that time and again during the period when the late Liberal administration was in office regulations which were recommended by the Department of National Revenue came before the council for consideration. On many occasions very strong reasons were pointed out as to why the proposed regulations should not be made, either for example by the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Trade and Commerce or as was most frequently the case the Minister of Finance. I do think that in these matters that are certain to some extent to affect taxation the governor in council ought to have supervision over the regulations. I believe they should be approved by the governor in council and should not be left to the minister. I would ask that this section be allowed to stand.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is only a very slight change in the law as it has been for many years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is the change of a word, but in principle it is a tremendous change.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no change in principle at all that I can see.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The previous act required that these regulations should be passed by the governor in council. Now it is proposed to allow the minister to make the regulations instead of the governor in council. Any regulations made by the minister himself are to become part of the law of the land. It is hard enough to-day to keep track of what the law is as respects matters relating to the Department of National Revenue without leaving it in the power of the minister to make the law from day to day. The governor in council will be some check on regulations; if it is left to the Minister of National Revenue himself no one will know what the law is from hour to hour.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would direct my right hon. friend to section 137 of the present act:

> All regulations made under this act, whether made by the governor in council or departmental—

The department could make regulations, and a breach of those regulations would render the person liable to a penalty.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Quite so, but my hon. friend knows perfectly well that all regulations were subject to the scrutiny of the treasury board, and that later they were passed as a general order in council.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have a very vivid recollection of it. Look at section 127, where drawbacks are involved. Here you are passing to the minister the power to carry on under his own supervision, without reference to anyone, the passing of regulations and the carrying out of those regulations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would add in further reply to the Minister of Justice that one has only to take the explanation given by the Minister of National Revenue as to what is being done by this section. In reply to my question the minister said the section was designed to take away from the governor in council and put in the hands of the minister the making of these regulations. That is what he said. I submit that this power should not be given to the minister, that it is not in the public interest to do so. I am sure if the minister has a chance to consider the matter more carefully with his colleagues, this power will not be taken away from the governor in council.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am quite prepared to let this section stand.

Section stands.

Sections 127 and 128 stand.

Sections 129 to 139 inclusive agreed to.

On section 140—Excise duties on spirits.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Are these some new duties?

Mr. MATTHEWS: No.

Section agreed to.

Sections 141 to 154 inclusive agreed to.

On section 155—All spirits to be warehoused.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I notice that from here on there seem to be a number of instances where power apparently is again being taken away from the governor in council and given to the minister. Looking at section 155 it would seem to me that as respects the class of matters there referred to there might be justification for allowing the minister or the department to make the necessary regulations they seem to relate only to the business of the bonding of warehouses. Undoubtedly that is the sort of thing with which the governor in council should not be troubled, beyond approving the general course to be followed. On the other hand, in other sections of the act power is taken away from the governor in council and given to the minister and his officials to make regulations which may affect the revenues of the country. There I think great care should be taken to see whether this transfer of power is justified in the first instance. What I should like the minister to do if he will on these sections that transfer from the governor in council to the minister power to make regulations is just to direct the attention of the committee to those sections and give his reasons as to why it has been thought advisable to take power into his own hands instead of leaving it with the governor in council, as it has been in the past.

Mr. HACKETT: Under this section subsection 6 is the only clause granting that power.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not taking exception to section 155, but in regard to this section I should like the minister to indicate why he has taken power in the matter of making regulations for vatting, blending and so forth.

Mr. MATTHEWS: That is purely administrative and in my opinion the power should be given the minister to make these regulations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister used the word "administrative" as though everything administrative should be in the hands of the minister. Administration is part of the duty of the governor in council as well as of individual ministers. The point I wish to make is that in the public interest it is wholly desirable that in most matters of administration all members of the cabinet should at least have knowledge of regulations that are being made, especially where they are likely to affect the public interest or several departments of government. That is particularly so with regard to matters which relate to revenue, duties, abatements of duty, and so forth, as well as to matters that may have a vital bearing upon policies, the tariff policy and the like. In every instance where the power to make regulations has been removed from the governor in council and given to the minister, the minister should justify the change which places this power in his own hands. We might let this section stand.

Section 156 stands.

On section 159—Bottling spirits in bond.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Stands.

Mr. HACKETT: Is not that section so much like subsection 6 of section 155 that it could be carried?

Mr. HANBURY: It was not carried.

Mr. HACKETT: Subsection 6 has been carried?

Mr. HANBURY: No.

Section 159 stands.

Section 160 agreed to.

Section 161 stands.

Sections 162 to 168 inclusive agreed to.

On section 169—Penalties of sale of spirits unlawfully manufactured.

Mr. MATTHEWS: An amendment will be proposed to section 169, and is made on the recommendation of the Deputy Minister of Justice, to make it clear, in case of any question arising, that a vehicle in or upon which is found illicit spirits or spirits illicitly removed from premises, subject to excise, is forfeited without regard to the circumstances of the removal or transportation in which the vehicle is engaged.

Mr. RHODES: At the request of my colleague I beg to move:

That section 169 of the bill to amend and consolidate the Excise Act be amended by striking therefrom the words "removing the same" in lines 43 and 44, and substituting therefor the following words "transporting the spirits so manufactured, imported or removed, or in or upon which the same are found."

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I think there is another amendment to the section. I notice that in line 23 of section 169 the word "one" is underlined.

Mr. HACKETT: It used to be "two."

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes, that is a reduction of the penalty from $200 to $100.

Amendment agreed to.

Sections 170 and 171 agreed to.

On section 172—Amount of bond.

Mr. HANBURY: On two previous occasions the minister was asked as to the conditions of bonds. I wish he would place on record what changes there have been.

Mr. MATTHEWS: This section corresponds with section 194 of the existing act. The clause "in such sum as the minister may determine but in no case shall such sum be less than $2,000" is substituted for the words, "in the sum of two thousand dollars." as the basis for fixing the amount of security to be given by licensed brewers. In small breweries $2,000 is probably adequate but as the duty upon malt has been increased it is felt that perhaps in some cases larger bonds may be advisable, to secure the full amount of duty at stake.

On section 178—Beer brewed for private use.

Mr. VENIOT: This seems to be a new section.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it is.

Mr. HACKETT: Arising out of the budget.

Mr. VENIOT: I understand that section 178 is entirely new.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Section 178 takes the place of section 195 in the existing act. It has been rewritten in the interest of clarity and to remove any possible doubt as to the fact that home brewing is a privilege which may be refused, suspended or revoked for cause.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Let us suppose that someone would like to brew some wine at his own home,—dandelion wine, for instance—would that come under the same provision? I am referring to wheat or bee wine.

Mr. MATTHEWS: This takes away no right of home brewing, but has to do only with the brewing of beer.

Mr. VENIOT: The home brewer, no matter what he brews, must have the consent of the collector; is that correct? The position ought to be made clear. For instance, if I wish to brew blueberry or dandelion wine or sarsaparilla, some very healthful preparations, have I to obtain consent?

Mr. MATTHEWS: There is nothing in the Excise Act providing for that.

Mr. VENIOT: But it is being enforced. People in my county are being imprisoned for making sarsaparilla. I know of an old lady of 78 years who was sent to prison for three months for such offence. The mounted police made the seizure, and there was alleged to be a violation of one of the federal acts; whether it was this one or some other, I do not know. Let me outline a case with which I am familiar, having to do with a woman who was making beer for the household.

Mr. HACKETT: Is that not under provincial legislation?

Mr. VENIOT: No, dominion. The mounted police came in and seized it. The young man of the house took the responsibility for the violation and was sent to prison for three months. I must say that I do not know whether the charge was laid under a federal or provincial statute; I must be fair in that regard. The reason a charge was laid was that no permission was given.

Mr. MATTHEWS: This section deals with beer. Anyone who wants to make home brew can give notice and receive a letter of consent from the collector.

Mr. VENIOT: That is what I want made clear. Once the notice is given, they are all right? Is the minister aware that the provincial authorities of New Brunswick, the liquor control board, will not recognize that permit?

Mr. MATTHEWS: I have no information on that.

Mr. VENIOT: Suppose the New Brunswick liquor board refuses to recognize that permit and prosecutes?

Mr. HACKETT: It is a case for the courts.

Mr. VENIOT: A provincial act cannot go contrary to the federal act.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Just on that last point, the provinces do say they do not recognize any permit given under this act for making beer at home. I understand that in some of the provinces instructions have been given by the attorney general not to prosecute in cases where the permit or consent was given. Nevertheless they state that they are not bound by that consent.

I have another question to ask. The minister says that there is nothing in this act to prevent people making choke cherry wine or rhubarb wine or any of the ordinary home made wines in their homes, but a complaint has been made to me that a particular individual served time for having some choke cherry wine that he made at home. He was prosecuted under this Excise Act and sentenced and served his time. I cannot vouch for all the facts, but my informant is reliable and I have no doubt that those are the facts.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I have no information on that particular case. I do not know the name or the address or anything except the facts as given by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOTHWELL: May I ask if it is the intention of this act to stop that?

Mr. MATTHEWS: I shall be very glad to look into any case that is reported to me. So far as making choke cherry or dandelion wine is concerned, this act does not deal with that at all.

Mr. VENIOT: Is it allowed under this act?

Mr. MATTHEWS: This act does not touch it at all.

Mr. VENIOT: That is not the point. Is it allowed under this act? Suppose I do such a thing, am I liable to prosecution under this clause?

Mr. MATTHEWS: No, there is no prohibition whatever in this act of what the hon. gentleman has outlined.

Mr. GANONG: I think what happens is that a good many people get their permit in good faith, and after manufacturing the home brew or home made wine the provincial authorities step in and will not allow them to have it in their possession. A good many people have been fined in consequence. They think that the dominion permit gives them permission to have this wine.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend has stated the case in a very concise way. That is just what is happening. I should like to have this matter straightened out. What is the use of a federal permit permitting the manufacture of home made wine if it is completely ignored by the provincial authorities? If a federal permit is given, the provincial authorities have no jurisdiction, but a good many people have got into trouble just the same.

Mr. HOWDEN: If the minister is not going to reply I should like to say a word about this matter. I happen to be a medical man; I have occasion to be in a great many homes in the district from which I come, and I know it is quite a general practice in the summertime to make choke cherry wine, rhubarb wine and many other wines. Now if that is an infraction of the criminal code, this is a very good place for us to learn about it. I think we should have an understanding here and now just where the responsibility rests in this matter, and whether it is an infraction of the federal law or an infraction of the provincial law or an infraction of any law at all to have this home made wine in your home. I should be very grateful if someone can give me some information on that point.

Mr. MATTHEWS: It certainly is not an infraction of this act. It may be an infraction of some provincial statute of which I have no knowledge.

Mr. VENIOT: A provincial statute cannot supersede the legislation of this parliament. The province can make laws governing the disposition, but not the manufacture.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am not responsible, of course, for acts that are passed by the provinces, and I cannot accept that responsibility. All I say is that we are not imposing any restrictions whatever on the making of wines such as have been described.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The provincial officer comes along and seizes that rhubarb or choke cherry wine that has been made at home. The person who desires to make this home made brew applies to the nearest collector, giving notice in writing of his intention to brew, and receives from the collector a letter of consent. But the provincial officer comes along and the provincial law supersedes that permit given by the collector. The making of wine for family use should be put on the same footing in this act as home brew. I contend that the man who is brewing beer for his private use has a special privilege in this country under section 178, and the man who is making home made wine for family use should have the same privilege. He should not be condemned under the law and have to go to gaol.

Mr. HOWDEN: Is it necessary to get a permit from the federal authority in order to make home made choke cherry wine?

Mr. BURY: Has this section anything to do with choke cherry wine?

Mr. HOWDEN: What we want to know about are these wines that are made at home.

Mr. BURY: This section has to do with brewing beer. Where in the section does the hon. member find any reference at all to wine?

Mr. HOWDEN: The hon. member does not find any reference to wine in the section, but we are discussing wine because this is the proper time and place to get a statement from the minister on that question.

Mr. MATTHEWS: The only statement I can make is that we place no prohibition whatever on the manufacture of home made wine.

Mr. HOWDEN: That is all right.

Mr. COOTE: What constitutes beer under this act? Is there a definition in the act?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes, in section 4 on page 4.

Mr. COOTE: Is there a definition of wine?

Mr. MATTHEWS: This bill does not refer to wine and contains no definition of wine.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the significance of this section?

Mr. MATTHEWS: This section corresponds to sections 216 and 217 of the existing act. The provisions of the existing sections for 48 hours' notice of intention to steep in malthouses not within a city or town are omitted as unnecessary under modern malthouse practice.

On section 195—Duties on malt.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Are these new duties?

Mr. MATTHEWS: This corresponds to section 219 of the existing act. The rate as set out in the schedule is 6 cents per pound instead of 3 cents, the object of the increase being to absorb in the excise duty upon malt a gallonage tax on beer imposed by the Special War Revenue Act which, as previously stated, is to be repealed.

On section 200—Any other process of malting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The commissioner is mentioned here. Who formerly performed the function? This provision seems to proceed on the theory that where the old act speaks of departmental regulations the new act specifies either an officer or the minister. Also it would appear that where the old act required regulations to be made by the governor in council this revision turns that power over to the minister. There may be exceptions, but broadly speaking that appears to be the principle.

Mr. MATTHEWS: The regulation—making power is vested in the minister as responsible head of the department and the commissioner, as administrative head, is responsible for the promulgation of the regulations.

On section 236—Generally.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to call attention to 236 and then ask that it shall stand. It goes a step further than anything has gone hitherto in that it allows the minister to restrict the sale of goods. It seems as though the government had a policy not only of limiting production but of restricting sale in as many directions as possible, at all events of putting that power into the hands of the governor in council and ministers of the crown. This bill in that regard is in keeping with some other measures we have had before us this session. For the first time in a bill respecting excise there is being taken away from parliament and placed in the hands of the minister of National Revenue the expressed power of restricting trade by restricting the sale of goods. This is a new feature, allowing the minister of his own discretion to restrict the sale of some goods. I do not care to how small a number or category of goods it may relate, the fact is that it gives the minister power to restrict sales and I object strongly to that power being placed in the hands of any minister or department.

Sections 237 to 241 inclusive agreed to.

On section 242—Duties of excise on manufactured tobacco.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is there something new there?

Mr. MATTHEWS: There is no change there. The underlining relates to the duties having been put into the schedule rather than into the body of the bill.

Section agreed to.

Section 243 agreed to.

On section 244—Boxes of cigars to be marked.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is something new there again, probably the inclusion of the words:

As is prescribed by departmental regulations.

That term is being used now in this provision for the first time. Perhaps in addition to what I said before, I should have gone on to say that where in existing legislation matters were general, they are now being made more specific. Formerly under some of the sections there have been departmental regulations, the matter being expressed simply as left to the department. It is now specified as being prescribed by departmental regulations.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I might point out to the leader of the opposition that the words underlined—

As is prescribed by departmental regulations.

—take the place of these words:

In such manner as is determined by the department.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That bears out what I have just said. Under the old act certain matters were regulated by the department; such regulations were looked upon as departmental regulations. In this revision they are now referred to as regulations prescribed by the department. I think there is an improvement there.

Section agreed to.

Sections 245 to 252 inclusive agreed to.

On section 253—Re-working tobacco and cigars.

Mr. COOTE: Is clause 253 new or is there an old section dealing with that?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Clauses 253 and 254 correspond with sections 287 and 288 of the existing act. The only difference is that the wording has been slightly changed.

Section agreed to.

Sections 254 to 261 inclusive agreed to.

On section 262—Regulations—by minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This I think is the proper way of setting forth the powers of a minister to make regulations. Parliament itself defines the class of regulations which the minister should make. I do not think we should give power to a minister to make regulations which do not fall under one or another of the headings which definitely set forth the limits within which the minister's powers shall be exercised.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Clause 262 replaces section 304 which reads:

The governor in council may, subject to the provisions of this act, make such regulations—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Under the old act it was the governor in council.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes, the word "minister" should be underlined.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes; but what I said a minute ago still applies. If the minister is to be given any powers at all, they ought to be included under a similar clause as regulations specified in it; in addition to powers which parliament has given, he should not be given the right later on to make any regulations he pleases.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Stand.

Section stands.

Sections 263 to 283 inclusive agreed to.

On section 284—Licence for stemmers.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Is this a new clause?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Clauses 284, 285 and 286 correspond with section 329 of the existing act. It has been rewritten to conform to the other licensing sections of the act and to make it clear that the business of a stemmer includes "casing" which is a term well understood in the trade and is defined in clause 7, paragraph (a) of the bill.

Section agreed to.

Sections 285 to 303 inclusive agreed to.

On section 304—Unlawfully having or selling manufactured tobacco or cigars.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Is subclause 4 new?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes. If loose tobacco or cigarettes are distributed there is no means of determining whether the packages from which they are taken for distribution have been properly stamped.

Mr. VENIOT: What do you mean by "distribute" in subsection 4?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Given away.

Section agreed to.

Sections 305 to 320 inclusive agreed to.

On section 321—Commencement of act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the minister in a position to give a guarantee that parliament will be prorogued by the first day of July? I shall be glad to have this section carry if he is perfectly sure that will be carried out.

Mr. MATTHEWS: The answer is no, I am not able to give a guarantee; but I am able to express the wish, in which I hope the right hon. gentleman concurs.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps the Prime Minister can give the guarantee, as he is just coming in.

We have before us, Mr. Prime Minister, a section which is to the effect that:

> This act shall come into force on the first day of July, 1934.

I was asking the Minister of National Revenue if he can give a guarantee that parliament will be prorogued by that date.

Mr. BENNETT: I think, Mr. Chairman, I can readily give a guarantee that the Royal assent will be given to the bill by that date. But with respect to whether or not we have risen, that is another thing altogether. Perhaps the leader of the opposition would give a guarantee in that regard. It always rests with the opposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will guarantee to work with the Prime Minister to end the session speedily, if he will do so.

Section agreed to.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not want to delay the business, but before the bill carries, might I ask the minister with respect to section 304, subsection 4:

> It shall be deemed an offence under the last preceding subsection for anyone to distribute gratis tobacco or cigarettes for advertising purposes otherwise than in packages stamped as herein provided.

So that there may be no misunderstanding, will the minister say under what conditions that may be done?

Mr. MATTHEWS: If loose tobacco or cigarettes are distributed there is no means of determining whether the packages from which they have been taken have been properly stamped.

Mr. BENNETT: My colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) has intimated to me that objection has been taken to some clauses that vest in the minister the power of making regulations, the breach of which involves imprisonment. That must be done by the governor in council. The objection taken will be met and amendments made accordingly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then we shall understand that the next time the bill comes up the minister will have amendments to his own act to carry that out?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Substituting "the governor in council" in all those sections where "the minister" now appears.

Progress reported.

FARM INDEBTEDNESS

MEASURE TO FACILITATE COMPROMISES BETWEEN FARMERS AND CREDITORS—OFFICIAL RECEIVERS—BOARDS OF REVIEW

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

> That it is expedient to bring in a measure to facilitate compromises and arrangements between farmers and their creditors, to provide for the appointment of official receivers, and for the establishment of provincial boards of review and their remuneration.

He said: I shall accommodate myself to the wishes of the party opposite as to whether or not I make a detailed explanation of this measure now or when the house has gone into committee. Presumably it would be done better in committee, where questions can be asked and answers given.

The purpose of the bill and the complementary bill which is dealt with in the succeeding resolution is to meet a situation which is one of very grave import to the welfare of the country as a whole. The farming population has experienced great difficulties in meeting the obligations which they themselves have created. The purchasing power of the dollar having fallen to the extent to which it has, the difficulty of providing one dollar by the sale of commodities that have been reduced in value to say sixty cents, instead of the dollar that prevailed at the time the obligations were created has made the burden exceedingly onerous, as has been found in practically all countries of the world. I shall deal later with the extent of the mortgage indebtedness on the farms of Canada. It is sufficient for my present purpose to say that as far as we can ascertain from the census of 1931, together with other information available, it is estimated at about $726,000,000, that is in all the nine provinces. Especially in western Canada there has been difficulty in meeting the obligations for interest on the mortgages. I need hardly point out, what is in the knowledge of every member of this chamber, that loans have been made upon farms largely by (a) loan companies whose business is to deal in mortgages; (b) life insurance and other insurance corporations and companies; and (c) private individuals. Obviously the life insurance companies, having to reserve at a rate of interest that is less than four per cent, have perhaps not experienced the same difficulties by reason of the inability of farmers to pay the seven and eight per cent provided for by their mortgages if they could pay anything at all. With respect to the mortgage companies they have not loaned their own capital, but largely funds which they have borrowed. It is of course well known to all that the capital of the loan companies would not go very far in mortgage loans, and that they all obtain funds by the sale of debentures bearing various rates of interest, as I shall presently indicate, which funds they loan in various parts of the country. During the war when higher rates of interest prevailed—that is when it was more difficult to obtain money on debentures—loan companies issued debentures at a higher rate of interest than had theretofore prevailed. More recently, that is since the war, they issued debentures still bearing rather high rates of interest. It is a matter of knowledge to those who have read the annual reports of loan companies that many of them have issued debentures bearing a rate of five per cent per annum, and that they loan this money at rates of 6½ per cent to 8 per cent and more, it being estimated that owing to the losses that have been experienced by reason of climatic conditions the loans that average less than 7 per cent represent, shall we say, no profit to the loan companies.

Private individuals, of course, are able to make their own arrangements with respect to compromises and extensions of time under mortgages they have taken. Life insurance companies, for the reasons I have mentioned, having to deal with present and prospective profits payable by way of dividends to policy holders, are not in quite the same position; they have experienced great difficulties. Loan companies that themselves have interest to meet on the debentures they have issued also have a difficult position to face. Under these circumstances we called together representatives of the insurance companies and loan companies and discussed with them the problem in its many bearings to ascertain if something might be done by which we could afford some relief to those who had imposed upon themselves the burdens and obligations incident to mortgages. It was finally concluded that the suggestions made by the government, from the information which had been obtained, were sound.

The first suggestion was that we should endeavour to secure a cheap and speedy method by which a farmer in difficulty could provide some arrangement or composition with his creditors. It is a well known fact to members of the house engaged in business that under the common law no compromise could be made with a man by his creditors to pay less than one hundred cents on the dollar unless all creditors agreed. Hence it was that before any laws dealing with compositions or assignments were passed, either by provincial legislature or federal parliament, every creditor had to agree to what was called the deed of composition. Later the government of Sir Oliver Mowat, I think it was, in the province of Ontario passed an assignments act, the validity of which was challenged and ultimately determined by the privy council. The provisions of that act contemplated the realization of the assets of the debtor and the distribution of such assets, ratably and proportionately, amongst his creditors, be they many or few. But in upholding the validity of that statute the privy council also indicated that if the dominion occupied that field at any time under the exclusive jurisdiction conferred upon this parliament to deal with bankruptcy and insolvency, thereupon the jurisdiction of the provinces would be ousted. Parliament has exercised its jurisdiction and has enacted a bankruptcy act. It therefore follows that the matter dealt with by the provincial legislatures is no longer within the legislative competence of the provincial legislatures and that the bankruptcy and insolvency act which we placed upon our statute books is the statute to which we must look in dealing with the problem of bankruptcy.

Bankruptcy proceedings have been regarded with some suspicion not only by the farmers themselves but also by those with whom the farmers deal, and the question of whether or not the general provisions of the Bankruptcy Act should apply is, of course, an open one. We do not propose, therefore, that the ordinary provisions of the Bankruptcy Act should apply but that for the present—hoping that it will not be for any long period—there should be appointed a special receiver rather than an official receiver such as we now have, whose duty it will be to assist in arriving at a composition, adjustment or settlement of the outstanding difficulties that confront the farmer. To do that we must keep in mind two things, first, that contracts that have arisen under a mortgage are matters within the jurisdiction, for contractual purposes, of the provinces under property and civil rights; secondly, that the exclusive jurisdiction of this parliament to deal with interest is conceded by all. We therefore propose that an earnest effort should be made to bring about a composition, arrangement or agreement between the creditors of the farmer and the farmer debtor. The result of that would be, having regard to his present assets, his capability to earn, the productivity of his farm and its location, that he could reasonably contemplate the possibility of commencing again if he knew how his debts were to be paid and the period of time over which he would make the payments.

The object, of course, is to keep the farmer on the farm; if possible to keep him cultivating the land upon which he has lived. In making the arrangement we contemplate, through the assistance of those who have loaned him money, it follows of course that we can go only a certain distance in determining how his security can be dealt with. Therefore in dealing with the problem of bankruptcy which thus arises for settlement, we propose that the secured creditor shall value his security and, if he determines that his security is worth eighty per cent of its face value, that he shall not assert a claim to recover a sum representing the difference between the value he has placed upon his security and the face value of such security. That we believe we have legislative power to do.

There then arises the case of the other creditors and when the other creditors have filed their claims—all of which is to be done in a simple and, shall I say, expeditious, informal and inexpensive way—then the settlement is open for final determination. If it is approved by the creditors and by the representative of the creditors in the person of the one who takes the place of the official receiver or assignee, it is confirmed by the court and the farmer begins once more to undertake to build his home, his fortune and his future. If, however, a deed of composition or adjustment appears impossible; if the parties are unable to determine whether or not the farmer may be able to meet his present obligations by payment of sixty or seventy cents on the dollar, or whatever the figure may be, we then propose to set up in each province a court of revision consisting of a judge of the court having jurisdiction over bankruptcy—in the western provinces a judge of the supreme court, in the province of Quebec a judge of the superior court and a judge of the supreme court in Ontario—and he, with the representative of the creditors and of the debtor—that is, one who always represents the debtors as well as the creditors—will consider the whole situation of each specific case, the conditions, the circumstances, the capability of the man to pay having regard to the location of his farm, the size of his family, their aptitude for farming operations, their general attitude towards cultivation of the soil and so on. Having considered all these problems the board of review make a proposal and, after due consideration, that proposal becomes the composition arrangement under which the farmer begins again the struggle for the future.

That, we believe—simple, inexpensive and informal—will bring about, we will say, renewed hope in the minds of those who, for reasons that need not be discussed now, have looked forward to the future with almost hopeless concern. But we have also jurisdiction to deal with another phase of it, as I mentioned a moment ago, namely questions arising out of interest. And so, as the result of experience in the past, we propose that where a mortgage is not repayable, that is where a mortgagor is not permitted to pay off by the terms of the mortgage, nevertheless he may be able by tendering the amount of the principal, together with interest to the date of payment, and three months interest—if you desire to use that word—to obtain a discharge of his obligation. I can say from my own personal observations and experience that in many long term mortgages which were negotiated at high rates in days long since past, the inability of the mortgagor to pay his debt has been one of the most fruitful sources of present disaster; for in days when he was receiving large prices for his products he was certainly willing to pay off, but inasmuch as he could not pay unless by paying very great bonuses—and in most instances not at all—he did not bother to do so. But now, where he thinks he will be able to secure cheaper money we propose that he shall be able to pay off his mortgage if it bears a rate higher than seven per cent, and that on tendering the sum representing the principal with interest, as I have said, to a given date, and three months' bonus, the mortgagee shall be compelled to accept that money to discharge the mortgage, and if he does not do so, thereafter the rate will be only five per cent.

That is perhaps as far as we can go, because there is some grave constitutional doubt as to the right of a federal parliament to interfere with contracts solely within the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures, under the head of property and civil rights. But as I have indicated we believe we have power to legislate. Now, supplementary to the legislation which I have mentioned there is provided a Farm Loan Act, that is an amendment to the existing legislation which, while it has not been accepted by all the provinces, is in force in many of them. We propose to make some necessary administrative amendments which our experience has taught should be made, and further to authorize the loan of a somewhat larger sum than that provided for by the act, the limit being $7,500, and instead of fixing the amount of the mortgage at fifty per cent to provide for a lesser margin of safety and increase the amount of the mortgage to sixty per cent.

In addition to that it will be observed by many of those hon. members now listening to me that after we have done all these things it is quite obvious that the unfortunate insolvent might not then be in any position to go forward, because he would have no money with which to undertake his work. We therefore propose that the Farm Loan Board shall be authorized, by way of what would amount to a second mortgage, to advance a limited sum, which is mentioned in the act—and a matter which may be considered in committee—to enable a person to provide himself with seed, implements or whatever may be necessary to enable him once more to engage successfully in his vocation. And he may make a charge on his personal property, also, as additional security, if so desired.

Roughly, therefore, with the amendments proposed to the Farm Loan Act supplementing the provisions of the legislation which we suggest, we believe that we shall have provided at least some measure of relief to those who are the mainstay and the backbone of any country such as ours. We believe that this legislation, conceived as it is in a desire to assist those who from year to year in days gone by have produced new wealth amounting in all the provinces not to millions but to billions of dollars, will be a step towards keeping them upon the land, which is the first object we have in mind. We are trying to make conditions tolerable for those people who find themselves in financial difficulties, so that they may obtain a new start and remain upon their farms, rather than lose them through foreclosure proceedings, or become mere tenants of mortgagees who have foreclosed and taken possession. That is the principal object we have in mind, and we believe that the bill which will be founded on the resolution represents the exercise of our legislative jurisdiction so far as we may constitutionally exercise it, and that with the legislation which has been passed by the provinces and that which some expressed the desire hereafter to enact, we shall be able to do something to meet the difficulties of the agrarian, and make more tolerable his existence under present depressed conditions.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the opposition): Mr. Speaker, I believe I can say that undoubtedly the purpose behind the legislation as outlined by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) will meet with general approval. No one who has the slightest knowledge of conditions in farming communities can do other than appreciate the fact that large numbers of farmers have incurred liabilities in times quite different from the present, and under the prevailing conditions of the past three or four years have found it increasingly difficult to attempt to meet those liabilities. The result has been that the very hearts have been taken out of many men who have struggled to maintain themselves on the land, men who are among the main producers of our country. Any legislation coming within the competence of parliament which seeks to preserve the rights of all parties, and aims by reasonable methods of compromise to meet a situation which in some particulars has become intolerable will, I believe, speaking generally, commend itself to parliament.

I should say, however,—and I base this comment in part on what the Prime Minister himself has said—that I hope the legislation introduced will not be of a character to raise false expectations in the minds of those whose interests it is intended to serve. I am afraid there may be obstacles as to jurisdiction; in fact, the Prime Minister has himself hinted at that. Those obstacles may be formidable. It would be unfortunate indeed if by virtue of a measure now to be introduced farmers receive the impression that they are likely to obtain substantial relief, only to discover a little later on that, for reasons over which this parliament has no control, hopes have been raised which are false and can not ultimately be realized. If there is any criticism of the measure on that score I hope the government, and particularly those in whose interests the measure is being introduced, will not feel that such criticism is directed against the objects of the measure but rather that it is in the nature of an effort to avert any disappointment which might serve to make the last state worse than the first and which might be prevented if matters are gone into carefully at the present time.

I believe a measure of the scope indicated by the Prime Minister is almost certain to be involved and intricate, and I doubt if it would be wise to attempt to discuss it at length until we have the bill before us. I rise therefore only to say that I believe the general purpose of helping by legitimate means to relieve the financial embarrassment of farming communities will commend itself cordially to all parties in the house.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad indeed that the government has at last seen fit to bring down some legislation to deal with this very difficult problem. It is a problem that has been facing us for two or three years, and the government I think would be the first to admit that the problem has been brought to the attention of this parliament on a great many occasions. I would not care to discuss the matter fully at this stage because I think the right time would be when we are in committee, and it may be that the major part of the discussion will have to be left until the bill is introduced.

It does seem to me that in view of the conditions existing in agriculture and the low prices which the farmers have received for their products for the last several years, the legislation proposed, so far as we can gather from the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) does not go far enough to meet the existing situation. Might I point out to the house that the index number of prices for farm products generally, as published by the bureau of statistics stood around 100 in 1926, 1927, 1928 and 1929, and fell to 82 in 1930, to 56·3 in 1931, and in 1932 it seems to have averaged all the way from 52 down to as low as 42·7, at which point it stood in December, 1932. The last month which is quoted in the return I have here is May, 1933, when it had risen to 51·2. But that does not tell the worst part of the story; for a large number of our farmers are producing principally field crops and the index number for field crops fell in 1927 to 99, in 1928 to 92; in 1929 it was 93, and in 1930 it fell to 70; in 1931 it fell to 43 and in 1932 it fell as low as 33·6. The farmer was therefore in the position of attempting to carry on with a drop of 65 per cent in the price of his product. He was in a somewhat similar position to that of a man who had been receiving $1,000 a year and had his income cut to $336 per year. These conditions are responsible for the terrific burden of debt which is resting on our farmers. In many cases farm mortgages bearing interest at eight per cent are now in arrears for as much as four year's interest, and a great many of them for three years' interest. I know of some cases where the interest and taxes have been paid up to the end of 1932. I have one case here in which the interest and taxes have been paid in full up to the end of 1932, but the interest was not paid in 1933 principally because of a crop failure. There was a frost which froze the wheat in July of that year and there was very little grain to thresh on that farm. The company which has the mortgage, a life insurance company by the way, is insisting on the execution of a crop share lease by the owner of the farm which would give to the company one-half the crop delivered free of all expense to the company to apply on their claim for interest. That is an impossible condition for the owner to live up to, and yet I have letters here from the company to the owner in question insisting that this should be done.

That brings me to one point in respect to which I suggest to the Prime Minister that something should be done in connection with this legislation. Perhaps some change in the bill or some extension of it might be made providing for a reduction of interest rates on existing mortgages. The Prime Minister suggested that it was not clear that this parliament had the power to do that, but we have been told repeatedly by the provincial authorities that they have not the power, that it rests here. The power must rest either in one parliament or in the other, and I think in view of the years of low prices which the farmers have endured it would be only fair for this parliament to include such a provision in the bill which is to be introduced.

It may be said that the loan companies are not responsible for the low price levels for farm products. That may be, but the farmers are not responsible either. They are the innocent victims. They have no way of protecting themselves against those low price levels. It is true that the provincial governments in many cases have passed legislation protecting the farmers against the loss of their homes through mortgage foreclosures. Sometimes that is called paternal legislation, legislation which has been objected to by banks and by loan companies, but what would be the condition if we had not had this protective legislation? If the protective legislation is to be lifted or withdrawn as a result of the legislation we are passing here, I think that this legislation should cover the cases I have referred to where the interest rates on farm mortgages are as high as eight per cent. It is going to be impossible in many cases for these people to get the amount of the mortgage to tender to the mortgage company so as to get a lower interest rate. I do not think they can get relief in that way. I do not see how it can be done, and therefore while we are attempting to deal with this debt problem we should deal with these cases. Some of these people have kept the interest paid up to date, but it has only been by the hardest kind of struggle, by enduring great privation, by lowering the standard of living of their own family and by doing without hired help and working very long hours. Are we going to leave them in a position where they will have to continue to do that, where they will be, I think it is only fair to say, at the mercy of the company, the loan company or the life insurance company that holds the mortgage? In view of those circumstances I think that before this legislation is passed some extension of it should be made to deal with that particular situation.

I would also like to point out one other matter to the Prime Minister.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. COOTE: When the house rose at six o'clock I was about to direct the attention of the government to the difference in the position of the farmer and the ordinary business man in connection with bankruptcy proceedings. This is the difference. For most business people, bankruptcy proceedings do not affect their homes; as a rule the business man's home is separate from his business property; whereas, in the case of the farmer, in almost every instance the mortgage covers his home as well as his farm land. I suggest therefore that any provision we make for extending to farmers the advantages of bankruptcy proceedings must take that fact into account.

A little pamphlet issued by the Department of Agriculture contains this statement:

> Canadian agriculture is essentially made up of farm homes. The common form of tenure is ownership, although this state is decreasing slightly at the expense of tenancy and part tenancy. Still in June, 1931, 586,299 farms or 84.4 per cent of the 728,664 farms in Canada were owned by their operators. Another 67,942 farmers (9.3 per cent) were part owners and part tenants. As a charge on the owned farms in June, 1931, stood mortgages to the amount of $677,564,100. The total farm mortgage debt of Canada at that time is estimated at about $726,000,000. This is not an excessive burden in normal times, but there is evident need for liquidation when farm revenues are so low and when farm products have such a small fraction of their usual purchasing power.

I quote now from a recent work published in the United States by Mead and Ostrolenk, dealing with the plight of American agriculture, and I quote this because it is applicable to Canada as well:

> Agriculture has continued its downward course until its products, still flooding in undiminished volume into saturated markets, are selling at the lowest prices in recorded history; until bankruptcy is an almost universal phenomenon; until farm wages have fallen to pre-Civil war levels; until the largest of American industries is prostrate.

Speaking generally, practically the same thing is true of Canadian agriculture. This is very well illustrated by figures I put on Hansard about six weeks ago, in which I showed that in Canada the net farm income was estimated by the bureau of statistics as about $600 per farm, and out of this there must be met interest charges, which we were discussing this afternoon, taxes and all other cash expenditures. That is really at the root of the farm problem.

One of our great farm problems is that of prices of farm commodities. I do not wish to delay the house at this stage because most of what we have to say can be better said when we are in committee; but I would point out in connection with the figures I gave this afternoon in regard to the index number of agricultural products, that for nine out of the last thirteen years farm products have sold at a decided disadvantage in relation to the things which farmers have to buy. In December, 1932 the index number of farm products was 42·7 and the index number of field products, 33·6. The figure for retail prices and the cost of services which the farmer has to buy stood, on the other hand, at 80. Interest charge in most instances had not fallen at all but remained fixed, and in many cases it took three times as many products to pay the interest as it did in 1926. The farmer can pay interest and taxes only with his farm products and he has no way of monetizing those products at what he considers a proper level; he can only sell at prevailing prices. The discrepancy in the drop in these different items which I have specified explains the need for legislation such as this, and I can only say in conclusion that we shall have to wait until the bill is brought down to determine whether it is adequate to meet the situation. If it is not I trust that the government will be willing to consider suggestions for widening the scope of the proposed legislation.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I listened carefully to the explanation of this resolution, and while I know that the resolution speaks for itself, I think the Prime Minister must be aware that the position of farmers in the province of Quebec is perhaps a little different from elsewhere. Most of them have invested money in the large cities. They have saved money and through their agents have loaned it on property in the cities, up to one, two, three or four thousand dollars, sometimes on second mortgage. The property has depreciated, and in most instances the second mortgage has been wiped out. The farmers in that province also own immovable property in the city, and you will find the real estate owner on a small scale with property valued at five or six thousand dollars. He cannot make both ends meet; he cannot pay his taxes, and receives practically none of his rent, even though this has been guaranteed by the city of Montreal and the provincial and federal governments.

This resolution is intended to help the agrarian. Is it not possible to provide in the bill when it comes down for some assistance to people in the cities, not only in Montreal but in the cities throughout Canada, who are trying to save their property? I am not speaking from any political motives when I say that in Montreal, just as in western Canada, the people to-day are being strangled by debts and taxation, and even those who have invested money in tenements in which they occupy one flat and rent the others, hoping to pay their taxes and improve their property, in addition to saving a little for themselves out of rent, find themselves on relief because they are obliged to wait for their cheques from the city. Those cheques have to be contributed to by the provincial and federal authorities, and the money which these people get from this source is fully needed to pay their taxes. Most of them have been obliged to ask the Montreal civic authorities for permission to pay their taxes in monthly instalments, $30, $40 a month and thus escape the sheriff's sale, and the civic authorities being in need of money are inclined to accept this. Industry and farming are the cornerstones of the nation, and while we are glad that the farmers will be helped by this legislation, the government should come to the assistance of those who own real estate in cities such as Montreal and help them to save their property which otherwise will surely go to ruin.

Mr. BENNETT: The circumstances to which the hon. gentleman alludes are not unknown to the government. The fact is that the small home owner in the cities of Canada has been very hardly hit. In his endeavour to make for himself a home he usually has acquired a lot and then built upon it a house, this being made possible by a mortgage to either a building society or a loan company. Now, with conditions as they are in the cities and with taxes increasing instead of decreasing, he has been unable to find profitable employment to enable him to pay the taxes or the interest on his obligation. The provinces, speaking through their legislatures, have taken steps to deal with one phase of this matter; in most provinces they have provided for a moratorium and no proceedings can be taken to enforce by way of foreclosure claims arising under the mortgages. That is not so in all the provinces, but it is practically true in them all. Over that we have no jurisdiction; that is solely a matter within the competence of the provincial legislature. They have the making of the statutes and limitations; they have the control of the courts; they have the right to determine whether the courts may be used for the purpose of foreclosure or otherwise, and in the exercise of that undoubted power practically all the provinces have gone a very long distance.

On the question of taxes there is nothing that I can usefully say beyond what the hon.

gentleman has just said. The only way in which the federal power could assist would be to advance the money to enable the taxes to be paid by the small home owner or to enable him to pay the interest. The control of the matter from a legislative standpoint rests entirely with the provincial legislatures. I should say that the difference between the agrarian and the urban dweller lies in the fact that we are endeavouring to maintain the agrarian upon his farm because he is adding new wealth to the nation. The conditions to which the hon. gentleman refers would not meet that test. On the other hand, in the United States where they had ample means, they did deal in part with this question; they have not dealt with it to the extent which some people would like. We have carefully considered the matter from many angles; we could not make it a part of this bill, but I really do not know any method by which, short of having the ability to produce money and make it available for that purpose, we could deal with the situation. That is the real fact about the matter as it stands at the moment. But the provinces have gone as far as they could to meet the difficulty to which the hon. gentleman has referred.

In view of the fact that the bill to be founded upon this resolution must be the subject matter of discussion, because as the resolution stands it would be very difficult to ask questions and obtain satisfactory answers to them, if the committee is of the will that I think it may be, we can pass the resolution, give first reading to the bill and distribute it so that between now and to-morrow ample opportunity may be afforded for consideration of its provisions. Of course I am ready to answer any questions that in the meantime may be asked on the resolution; but if hon. members refer to the subject matter of the bill, I believe we will accomplish more than by having a vague and general discussion about matters with which in some instances we cannot successfully deal. I am, however, entirely in the hands of the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I agree with the Prime Minister as to the desirability of seeing the bill before we attempt a discussion of what may or may not be contained in its provisions. I question, however, whether we would be ready to go on with the bill to-morrow.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Without knowing what is in the bill to be founded on the resolution, I imagine it will prove to be more complex and involved than appears on the surface. There is one question I should like to ask the Prime Minister before the measure passes the resolutions stage. The latter part of the resolution reads:

> For the establishment of provincial boards of review and their remuneration.

Does that mean that the federal government intends to establish boards of provincial-wide scope and jurisdiction and to remunerate the officers of each board allowing the province to confer certain powers on the board, or will the boards get all their powers from the dominion?

Mr. BENNETT: We confer the powers. The board of review to be established is, as I said this afternoon, one composed of three persons: the representatives of the creditors and the debtor and a judge of the court having jurisdiction under the Bankruptcy Act. The powers conferred will be those conferred by this parliament. The jurisdiction of the board will be limited by the terms of the statute. The compensation which we will pay we hope will not be very heavy in view of the fact that one of the members of the board is a judge and the character of the work will not be too onerous, we think, if the measures taken to effect compromises and adjustments by the interested parties succeed as we believe they will, having regard to the expressed attitude of the representatives of those who have loaned their money and who in reality are nearly as greatly interested as the farmers themselves in seeing that the latter remain upon and cultivate their properties and thus continue in the communities in which they are living. The right hon. gentleman will probably be satisfied with the provisions in that regard. There is to be a board for each of the provinces but it may be necessary to have more than one board in a very large province, and if circumstances warrant this, there is provision for the creation of more than one board.

Mr. VENIOT: Many people built their houses under the federal housing act and under present depressed conditions they are not in a position to keep up their homes, pay taxes and so on. Of course I understand the act is administered through the provincial government and through it by the towns. The money is loaned by the federal government. I brought this question up a couple of years ago. The province of New Brunswick gave a two year extension, but that does not seem to meet the situation. I know cases where houses have been built under the federal housing act and the parties have since lost them through not being in a position to comply with the conditions under which they received the loan. After having paid say $2,000 on a house worth $4,000 or $5,000, they find themselves ousted from it and the house sold to others for the difference between the amount paid and the cost, so that they are out $2,000. Could anything be done in such a matter?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Gloucester will agree that is a matter solely within the jurisdiction of the province and in regard to which we cannot exercise any jurisdiction.

Mr. VENIOT: The federal government could make representations.

Mr. BENNETT: When the provinces have made representations that they desire to grant more generous terms to their borrowers, the dominion has extended equally generous terms to them. That is my memory of what has been done so far.

Mr. VENIOT: I agree with that.

Mr. POULIOT: We have heard a lot about the national debt of Canada, federal, provincial and municipal, amounting to so many billions of dollars. The debt has been considered as a liability. But if it is a liability with regard to the debtor it is an asset for the creditor. During last summer I communicated with the provincial treasurers and secretaries of each province of Canada, and I received astounding answers, indicating that in seven provinces out of the nine it was impossible to get any idea of the total amount of mortgage debt within the province. The only actual answer I received was from the province of Ontario; I got a report from the superintendent of insurance which was far from complete, and I got a letter from the provincial secretary of Quebec saying that in 1929 the total amount of registered mortgages was nearly one billion dollars, for the one year only. Therefore the reports that are given by the bureau of statistics for the whole country are far from complete and must be wrong. It seems to me that before studying a matter of such importance the government should see to it that the house is supplied with all available information concerning the total amount of mortgages in each province, in order that those mortgages might become productive of national revenue to a certain extent—if not the mortgage itself at least a part of the interest thereon. I wonder if the government has any objection to seeing that that information is made available to the house.

Mr. BENNETT: At the last census an effort was made for the first time to ascertain the mortgage indebtedness of rural Canada. The total as returned and estimated as I shall presently indicate was $726,000,000. The direct returns indicated a total indebtedness of $671,776,000 on the owned farm lands of Canada, which represent $566,016,900 on 208,460 farms out of a total of 586,299 fully owned farms, and $105,759,600 or 34,390 out of 67,942 partly owned. I shall presently indicate what the difference is between owned and partly owned in the census figures. The final figure of total farm mortgage indebtedness was arrived at by adding to this figure that I have just given an estimate of the mortgage indebtedness on the rented portion of 67,942 partly owned farms and on 74,382 rented farms operated by tenants.

Three distinct classes were considered; (a) fully owned farms; (b) partly owned farms, that is in which the element of tenancy enters with respect to the property in question; and (c)—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask the Prime Minister if the definition of the first class, (a); means operated by the owner?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the whole property was owned by the operator. Lastly (c), farms operated by tenants.

The method by which the estimate was made with respect to those matters not covered by exact information is given by the bureau as follows:

> The census returns provide indebtedness figures for about 77 per cent of all Canadian farm land. The estimate of indebtedness on the remaining 23 per cent is arrived at by considering first the 36,000,000 acres in the partly owned, partly rented group, of which about 18½ million acres are owned and 17½ million rented.

That is the second class to which I alluded a moment ago.

> The census figures cover 107,000,000 acres of fully owned land, and the 18½ million acres of owned land in the partly owned, partly rented group, a total of 126,000,000 acres. It is therefore necessary to make an estimate for the 20,000,000 acres of fully rented land and the 17½ million acres of rented land in the partly owned, partly rented group, a total of 37½ million acres. From this figure of 37½ million acres it is necessary first to deduct approximately over 7,000,000 acres held under grazing leases in the western provinces which cannot be mortgaged directly, leaving 30,000,000 acres for which estimates of indebtedness must be made.

Farm tenants, by definition, have no land, and usually their collateral and assets are so limited that borrowings are seldom large, but it is necessary to take into consideration that there are few outright cash sales of land, and the usual arrangement for a deferred payment whereby the owner retains title until a certain percentage, say half of the full amount, has been paid. The unpaid portion of the sale price is often treated as a private mortgage. It is known also that the mortgage indebtedness of farms in early years of ownership is high, and it is therefore assumed that it is high on tenant farms where the renter is working towards ownership.

On the basis of the foregoing it is estimated that the average indebtedness of rented land is one-third as high as that on owned land, since, therefore, the owned land has an average indebtedness of $5.343 an acre then the per acre indebtedness on 30,443,061 acres is $1.782 or $54,250,000, which added to the census figures of $671,776,600 makes a total of $726,026,500.

I mention that because it is the method by which the bureau arrived at the sum total of indebtedness on farm lands in Canada. Indicating as I have that 77 per cent of the information is derived from exact answers to questions contained in the census questionnaire, and that the other 23 per cent represents estimates arrived at by deducting the grazing land as not coming within the classification of farm lands for that purpose, and then using for the partly owned and partly tenanted lands the same basis as the 77 per cent figures give, you have a total of 30,443,061 acres with an indebtedness of $54,250,000 making as I say the total of $726,000,000. That is the method by which this conclusion is arrived at. I desire the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Pouliot) and the other members of this committee to realize that with respect to the 23 per cent it is an estimate and not derived from answers to questions contained in the census questionnaire.

It may be of interest to the committee, since the hon. gentleman has intimated that the committee might like to have this knowledge, and I can give it to them as readily now as at any other time, that the mortgage indebtedness per farm on the fully owned farms amounts to $965, and the per acre indebtedness to $5.28. Considering only the fully owned farms which have mortgage debts, that is 208,460 farms containing 44,702,898 acres, the mortgage indebtedness per farm is $2,715 and per acre $12.66. The mortgage indebtedness per farm on the owned portion of the partly owned, partly rented farms is $3,075. The higher figure per farm is due to greater acreage in these farms—530.3 compared with 182.8 in the case of owned farms.

I should like to say here something which possibly has escaped some of us, that is that the mortgage indebtedness in this country is moderate. The $726,000,000 that I have mentioned as farm indebtedness in this country is a much lower figure than was expected. The farms free from mortgages are more numerous than I think most of us had any idea, but there is a point which the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) has just raised, as to the number of farms that are owned by those who have taken appropriate proceedings, by foreclosure or otherwise, to secure title, which are now in the possession of tenants; that is, insurance companies, loan companies and mortgage companies have taken possession of properties upon which they have foreclosed the mortgages, and therefore the properties, so far as the census return goes, stand as properties free from mortgages. That, of course, is a factor to be considered but, so far as the information of the bureau goes, it is not as large a factor as some people thought.

I have some figures which perhaps the committee would like to hear. At the end of March, 1931, there were 7,130,000 acres under grazing leases in the four western provinces. Without giving the odd numbers there were 101,400 acres in Manitoba, 3,355,440 in Saskatchewan, 3,208,300 in Alberta and 463,000 in British Columbia. This acreage has increased, and so far as our information goes at the end of March of last year it totalled almost 8,000,000 acres.

The highest mortgage farm debt in the country, of course, is in the province of Ontario; it is not only the highest absolutely but, by the usual tests applied, it is relatively the highest as well. Absolutely Prince Edward Island is lowest; relatively Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are lowest.

I do not know whether it would be the wish of the committee that I should give the information as to the acreage of owned lands in Canada, but as it has been suggested that it might be useful I will take time to do so.

Mr. HANBURY: Could the Prime Minister give it by provinces?

Mr. BENNETT: I am just about to do that:

	Fully owned (acres)	Partly owned and partly rented (acres)	Total (acreage owned)
Prince Edward Island	1,108,258	43,128	1,151,386
Nova Scotia	4,061,333	102,837	4,164,170
New Brunswick	3,849,881	129,527	3,979,408
Quebec	16,134,602	477,987	16,612,589
Ontario	18,554,741	1,328,028	19,882,769
Manitoba	9,272,776	1,644,350	10,917,126
Saskatchewan	30,289,620	8,936,852	39,226,472
Alberta	21,423,004	5,497,499	26,920,603
British Columbia	2,489,933	339,314	2,829,247
	107,184,148	18,499,622	125,683,770

There is a further division of the rented and owned lands. I do not know whether or not the committee would like that information, but I take it that in part the rented lands in the western provinces are those lands that have been foreclosed, and on which the former owner is a tenant. That is so in part, but not wholly, because those who come from western Canada realize that there are quite substantial quantities of land held by tenants on share payments, apart altogether from those areas in which the mortgages have been foreclosed and the farms taken over by the mortgagee and rented to the original mortgagor, sometimes under an agreement for sale or sometimes under an ordinary lease that provides that he may have the option of purchase with crop payments. If the committee is interested I will give the figures which we have had prepared as from the census. The total acreage of farm lands, according to the census classification, was 163,254,959 acres. The total acreage owned was 125,683,770 acres, and the total acreage rented was 37,571,189 acres. That is divided up into the farm areas, and then subdivided into the owned and rented totals. I have that by provinces, but presumably it is unnecessary to read it unless the committee desires to have that information.

Mr. HANBURY: I would suggest that if the Prime Minister has the information with regard to the mortgage indebtedness by provinces it would be very interesting.

Mr. BENNETT: These figures do not cover that.

Mr. SPENCER: Could we have those figures put on Hansard?

Mr. BENNETT: With the permission of the committee the table giving the subdivision by provinces may be placed on Hansard. The next table is the percentage of farm land owned and rented in Canada, by provinces. That partly answers the question suggested by one of the hon. members the other day, in dealing with another matter. In Prince Edward Island 96·7 per cent of all the lands are owned and only 3·3 per cent are rented. In Nova Scotia 96·8 per cent of the farm lands designated as such in the census are owned and 3·2 per cent rented. In New Brunswick 95·9 per cent of lands designated as farm lands are owned and 4·1 per cent are rented. In Quebec 95·2 per cent of lands thus designated are owned and 4·8 per cent are rented. In Ontario 87 per cent of lands thus designated are owned and 13 per cent are rented. In Manitoba, of the farm lands discovered as such $72\frac{1}{10}$ per cent are owned, and $27\frac{9}{10}$ per cent rented. In Saskatchewan $70\frac{5}{10}$ per cent are owned, and $29\frac{5}{10}$ per cent rented. In Alberta $69\frac{1}{10}$ per cent are owned, and $30\frac{9}{10}$ per cent rented. In British Columbia $79\frac{9}{10}$ per cent are owned, and $20\frac{1}{10}$ per cent rented, giving an average in Canada of 77 per cent owned and 23 per cent rented.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) has raised the question of relating the mortgage debt on the owned land farms to the total farm acreage, and expressing the result in farm indebtedness per acre. Ontario is far the highest with the figure of $8.75 per acre; Quebec is second with $5.53; British Columbia third with $4.29; Prince Edward Island fourth with $4.09. The older and more intensive agriculture of these provinces is typified by economy in the use of land. The low figures for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are largely attributable to the low absolute figures of farm indebtedness. There is a great deal of part time farming in these provinces, the farms in many fishing, lumbering and mining districts being regarded as homes rather than income earning establishments, the future returns of which can be mortgaged. That is one difficulty in classifying farm lands. In the provinces down by the sea the owner or occupant of lands may carry on lumbering in the winter and fishing in the summer. The farm may be of small acreage; it is his home, he grows all his vegetables and sows a few acres in oats or barley so that he may feed his horses, cattle and pigs. He is classified for this purpose as a farmer, because he is essentially a farmer in the sense in which that term has been used for census purposes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Do the figures relating to average farms owned mean the average number of actual farms or the average percentage of the acreage of all farm land?

Mr. BENNETT: I tried to explain that the figures I gave showed the percentage of farm lands as such rather than the number of farms. The census return shows the percentage of farm lands owned and rented in Canada, by provinces. Obviously it would not give the numbers of farms, because you would arrive at an entirely different percentage, especially in western Canada.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The Prime Minister has stated that the farms throughout Canada are mortgaged to the extent of about $726,000,000. Has he in his memorandum a figure showing the total valuation of Canadian farms?

Mr. BENNETT: I can give that information to the hon. member for St. Henri (Mr. Mercier) before I conclude. Perhaps, properly speaking, this subject may have some reference to the next resolution, but if the house will permit I will give the information now. The hon. member for St. Henri has asked what, according to the census return—which I desire the chamber to keep in mind covers 77 per cent of the land, the other 23 per cent being rented—the mortgage debt on all the owned farms in Canada amounts to. In Prince Edward Island it amounted to $4,866,700; in Nova Scotia it was $6,570,000; in New Brunswick, $6,485,400; in Quebec, $96,409,400; in Ontario, $199,755,100, in Manitoba, $59,223,400; in Saskatchewan, $175,770,300; in Alberta, $107,519,000; and in British Columbia, $15,177,200, making a total of $671,776,500 covering a total farm acreage which, as I said a moment ago, amounted to 163,254,959, or an indebtedness per acre of $4.11.

To many of the members of this committee these figures are familiar owing to what transpired in the special economic committee which sat last year. It may be tiresome to them—at least to some of them—and unless the house desires I shall try not to burden the record too much by going into detail. I have before me another table, giving the history of the indebtedness per acre of the total owned land in the country. Table 4 may be placed on Hansard. The average is $5.34.

Mortgage Indebtedness per Acre of the Total Owned Land
(Census, 1931)

Prince Edward Island	$ 4,866,700	$ 1,151,386	$ 4 24
Nova Scotia	6,570,000	4,164,170	1 58
New Brunswick	6,485,400	3,979,408	1 63
Quebec	96,409,400	16,612,589	5 80
Ontario	199,755,100	19,882,769	10 05
Manitoba	59,223,400	10,917,126	5 42
Saskatchewan	175,770,300	39,226,472	4 48
Alberta	107,519,000	26,920,603	3 09
British Columbia	15,177,200	2,829,247	5 36
Canada	$671,776,500	$125,683,770	$ 5 34

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Has the Prime Minister any information regarding mortgages on chattels?

Mr. BENNETT: No, I have not at the moment. I said a moment ago that that information is exceedingly difficult to obtain, and in answer to a question asked me a minute ago I should say that in the province of Quebec the figures were very large. It must be remembered that in the appropriate registry offices there are deposited trust deeds of corporations. Heavy mortgages, trust mortgages, covering issues of securities have been lodged, and when the figures were given by my hon. friend I could not but think that they included the trust mortgages of the various corporations, because otherwise they are at variance with the statement issued by the census enumerators.

Here is a table which I believe may interest the committee. It is a table to show the ratio of the mortgage debt to the total value of the farm property, and is given according to census figures of 1931. In the aggregate the total value of farm property in Canada in 1931 was $5,247,753,468, and the mortgage debt on the owned farms, as I have said, was $671,776,500. The mortgage debt on the owned farms as a percentage of the total value of farm property was only 12·80 per cent. So if hon. members compare those figures with the figures of any other agrarian country I think there is not the same cause for complaint as some of our friends, not in this chamber, but elsewhere, would indicate. For instance, the highest figure is in Manitoba where 15¼ per cent is the value of mortgages with respect to the value of farm land, and the lowest level is in Nova Scotia, where it is 6 21/100 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Based on the 1930 figures?

Mr. BENNETT: The 1931 figures. I am not unmindful of the fact that the shrinkage in value since 1931 has been very considerable. Nevertheless, assuming that the diminution in value of farm property would render, it worth only half what it was in 1931, we have a ratio of mortgages to farm values still at only 25 per cent which, having regard to the circumstances of this being a new country, is far more favourable than most people had expected the return would show.

While the returns, as I desire again to reiterate, do not deal with 100 per cent of the farms of the country, nevertheless with respect to 77 per cent the information was given in answer to inquiries. There are some interesting figures in table 6 which we have had prepared, showing the ratio of the mortgage debt to the value of the land, by provinces. The custom of loan companies has been to lend substantially 50 per cent of the trust value by way of first mortgage. In some instances the mortgage has been increased to 60 per cent. On the value of the farm lands, for instance, of Prince Edward Island, we have the total mortgage debt as a percentage of the value stated as 20·95, while in British Columbia the level is only 15 43/100. With the total value of farm lands in Canada standing at $2,710,358,000, there is a mortgage debt of $671,776,500, or a ratio of 24·79 between mortgage debt and value.

Mr. COOTE: What is the 1931 figure?

Mr. BENNETT: I have said that those are census figures. There is an element of doubt, resolved in this instance by an estimate based upon known factors and applying accepted principles to those factors, and on that principle we have arrived at a statement of the total indebtedness that I have indicated of $726,026,500. In deference to what has been suggested I shall place upon Hansard table No. 7, which gives the details by provinces.

Estimated Total Farm Mortgage Debt of Canada, by Provinces

Province	Indebtedness On Owned Farms (Census figures)	Estimated Indebtedness on Rented Farms	Total Farm Mortgage Indebtedness
Prince Edward Island	4,866,700	59,700	4,926,400
Nova Scotia	6,570,000	78,100	6,648,100
New Brunswick	6,485,400	99,300	6,584,700
Quebec	96,409,400	1,712,100	98,121,500
Ontario	199,755,100	10,560,800	210,315,900
Manitoba	59,223,400	7,934,100	67,157,500
Saskatchewan	175,770,300	20,788,000	196,558,300
Alberta	107,519,000	12,542,100	120,061,100
British Columbia	15,177,200	475,800	15,653,000
Canada	671,776,500	54,250,000	726,026,500

The next table deals only with the total farm acreage and farm indebtedness per acre. Throughout the country, assuming the total indebtedness to be $726,026,500, and the total farm acreage to include, as I have said, partly rented and partly owned land, the average farm indebtedness per acre is only $4.45. The table follows:

Estimated Total Mortgage Indebtedness, Total Farm Acreage, and Farm Debt per Acre, by Provinces

Province	Estimated Total Mortgage Indebtedness	Total Farm Acreage	Farm Indebtedness per acre
Prince Edward Island	4,926,400	1,191,202	4 14
Nova Scotia	6,648,100	4,302,031	1 55
New Brunswick	6,584,700	4,151,598	1 59
Quebec	98,121,500	17,445,089	5 62
Ontario	210,315,900	22,840,898	9 21

Mr. DUFF: Is the Prime Minister including free land as well as mortgaged land?

Mr. BENNETT: I am dealing in that instance with the lands designated as farm lands, which include lands wholly owned by the occupying farmer and lands partly owned and partly rented, and the total indebtedness of farm lands so designated—it will be remembered that we designated lands as farm lands in the maritime provinces that possibly were very small in the way of farms, being in some cases only a few acres of clearing—averaged only $4.45 per acre. I shall see that these tables are placed on Hansard.

Mr. HOWDEN: Does that include wild lands?

Mr. BENNETT: No, I tried to make clear that grazing lands were segregated from other lands. There might be on some of a farmer's lands a certain area which was pasture land, or as the hon. member has suggested, possibly wild lands, but the designation for census purposes was the curtilage of the farm,—I think that is the word in the books. That is lands that were comprised in the farm that was spoken of as the man's farm. Sometimes it might be many thousands of acres, sometimes a few acres only. But that designation in the census figures of 1931 was taken, with the result I have just indicated.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Might I add to the remarks I previously made that there is considerable anxiety in the city of Montreal and elsewhere in the province of Quebec at the report appearing in yesterday's papers that after June 15 federal relief will be cut off? If that is the case, may I ask if the real estate owner will be secured for his land? I know that the matter is very complicated, but will something be done?

Mr. BENNETT: I am dealing with the farm lands situation. I can only say that the matter has been brought frequently to the attention of the government. It is a matter of the greatest difficulty in the western cities as well as in the city of Montreal, and if there is any remedy that can be discovered for the situation we shall be very glad indeed to adopt it.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There was one point touched upon by the Prime Minister in his preliminary remarks when the resolution was before the house, and that was in respect to the application of the present Bankruptcy Act to farmers under the proposed legislation. I think the Prime Minister intimated that the full provisions of the Bankruptcy Act would not prevail for the present at least because of the long standing objection on the part of farmers to coming under its full terms. I did not understand, however, to what exent the farmer would continue to be exempt from the compulsory features of the Bankruptcy Act; that is those provisions under which the creditor may force the debtor against his will into bankruptcy. As the Prime Minister and no doubt the house know, under the present Bankruptcy Act a farmer cannot be forced into bankruptcy by a creditor but he may go into bankruptcy voluntarily. This question was discussed to a very great extent in the committee which dealt with amendments to the Bankruptcy Act in a previous session, and at that time many representations were made by the farmers in support of maintaining their present position. I trust that in the forthcoming legislation the farmers will maintain that position of freedom from the compulsory features of the Bankruptcy Act.

I may point out something which again the Prime Minister is no doubt very familiar with, and that is that the various debt adjustment acts and other protective acts of the western provinces have been based upon the fact that the creditor cannot force the farmer into liquidation. Were that protection removed and did the farmer come under the full provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, it would at once nullify all of those debt adjustment acts and various other protective measures which have been passed by the several provinces. Personally I cannot see that it is necessary that they should come under the Bankruptcy Act, and I trust that when this legislation is before the committee, that fact will be made abundantly clear.

Mr. BENNETT: Obviously the terms of the proposed legislation are not subject to discussion, but I gather entirely the point which the hon. gentleman has made. I suppose he knows that the legal advisers of all the western provinces are aware of the doubtful validity of what are called the debt adjustment acts, but that of course does not touch in any sense the validity of the statutes that provide for the cessation of court proceedings, moratoria, and so forth. It does not touch those because their validity is admitted. But the matter of which the hon. gentleman speaks is dealt with in the bill, and I quite appreciate his point.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I merely raised the point in order that the Prime Minister would have it in mind when the legislation is brought down. I also appreciate the fact that there has always been a question as to the validity of the debt adjustment acts under provincial jurisdiction in relation to the powers of the federal parliament with respect to the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to ask two questions, and if the Prime Minister has already answered one before six o'clock I am sorry. I refer for a moment to the buildings that were erected under the Housing Act. These undertakings took place right after the war when prices were at their very highest both as regards the inflated value of lands and houses and of the material with which to build houses. They were concurrent, so to speak, with the same conditions that obtained under the Soldier Settlement Act when soldiers bought land and stock at inflated prices. The government in their wisdom years afterwards saw fit to have a revaluation of those lands whereby the settlers obtained very substantial reductions running as high as fifty per cent in some cases. The interest was also rebated from time to time. A very large rebate was made to the soldier settlers, and those who came under the Housing Act felt that they had been unfairly treated inasmuch as the claims for consideration were met by the government only as regards farm lands and not as to houses for homes. The house owners got no rebate whatever because they were told that the money was loaned by the dominion to the provinces, and by the provinces to the municipalities, and that there was no responsibility on the dominion. As far as I know that is the position to-day. But I understood the Prime Minister to say that there had been, not adjustments perhaps, but consideration given in cases where the provinces had extended generosity—I think that was the word used—

Mr. BENNETT: Generous treatment.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, that in such cases the dominion had done the same by the provinces. I would like to ask in that connection, was it in regard merely to the extension of the ultimate debt, which would still remain a debt, or was there any rebate made of principal or interest as was done in the case of ths soldier settlers?

Mr. BENNETT: In reply to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) I can only say that thus far, so far as my memory goes, there has been no rebate (a) of principal, or (b) of interest. All that has been done is to extend the time of payment to the same extent as the time for payment has been extended by the borrowing province to the borrowing builder.

Mr. NEILL: The only other question I wanted to ask is this: What is the minimum qualification, so to speak, to qualify as a farmer under this legislation? We generally think of farms as being 160 or 320 acres. But what about the little man with five or ten acres, a few cows, some poultry and garden produce? Will he qualify?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has raised a question to which I propose to ask the committee to give its best judgment. At the moment in the bill the definition adopted is the definition that appears in the Bankruptcy Act, namely, one solely engaged in the tillage of the soil. Obviously that definition is not sufficiently comprehensive to meet cases that must be dealt with under this act, and the committee will perhaps be able to suggest a more comprehensive definition of "farmer." We propose at any rate to make it more comprehensive than it appears in the bill, but I adopted the language of the Bankruptcy Act for the purpose of discussion in the first instance.

Mr. SPENCER: May I refer for a moment to legislation passed about a year ago with regard to helping companies out of their difficulties. I understand that the legislation then passed enabled companies, if sixty per cent of their creditors agreed to take a certain rebate, to settle their liabilities and start over again without going through bankruptcy proceedings. Will the same system be followed in this legislation in relation to farmers?

Mr. BENNETT: This legislation has been delayed because the decision of the supreme court as to the validity of the legislation passed last year has not yet been handed down, but I thought that rather than delay it any longer I would introduce this bill, and it may be modified to some extent by the decision when it is given. I should think the court will hand down its decision to-morrow or the next day; that is my understanding. This bill does contemplate the application of somewhat the same principle, although there is the variation that there is an official whose business it is to assist the farmer with his creditors in arriving at an adjustment of his difficulties; and if there has been failure, as I indicated this afternoon, there will be, through the board set up in each province in the manner I have already indicated, a further opportunity to prepare a scheme of arrangement and compromise which it is believed will be acceptable to all parties concerned.

Mr. SPENCER: Which court is considering the question?

Mr. BENNETT: The Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. COOTE: Might I ask the Prime Minister, in regard to the question I raised before six o'clock about the reduction of interest rates on existing mortgages, whether consideration was given to that question by the government in preparing this legislation, and whether it is not a fact that the committee which last year was inquiring into the question of debts and interest rates received advice from the attorneys general throughout Canada that the dominion government did have jurisdiction in connection with that matter.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is as familiar as I am with the terms of the advice given to the committee. There are still differences of opinion with respect to that matter. The government naturally has given much consideration to it, and in a section of the bill that will be based on the resolution there is provision for dealing with mortgages that carry a higher rate than seven per cent, and the method by which that rate may, if certain conditions are not observed, be reduced to five per cent. But to pass a retroactive confiscatory bill with respect to mortgages would, we thought, be more hurtful than beneficial to this country, and I think that on reflection the hon. gentleman will agree, when he sees the legislation, that we have gone as far as we can without placing ourselves in that position.

Mr. COOTE: Perhaps when we see the bill we shall find in it something which it is not possible to see at the moment, but there are a great many farmers now with mortgages at eight per cent. They are managing to keep that paid up by hook or by crook; I mean, they are in the last extremity to keep that eight per cent paid up. It is one of their ambitions to meet their obligations in the terms in which they were undertaken, and because of the increase in the purchasing power of money it would be, I submit, only just to these people who are paying interest at that rate, and it would not be working an injustice on the recipients of the interest, if the rate of interest were by law, from the date of the passing of the act, reduced to a lower level. The Prime Minister, I know, is familiar with the action taken in Australia where by law, rates of interest on mortgages were reduced by a certain percentage of the existing rate or down to five per cent, whichever was the greater. I do not see why we could not adopt the same principle here; there is such necessity for it. Many a farmer is in a difficult position, carrying a mortgage that may be considered the maximum which his farm will bear, and on which he has so far paid eight per cent and must continue to pay that rate unless he can make some arrangement under the new bill. He is competing perhaps with a neighbour who has bought a farm from a mortgage or loan company or from some private person who has obtained it under foreclosure or abandonment by a former owner, and he may have secured it at a price which is no higher than the mortgage the other man is carrying; and in many instances he is paying only five per cent on the agreement of sale. The man who is endeavouring to maintain his old farm, keeping his mortgage in good standing, is at a disadvantage in competition with the other farmer who has bought an abandoned farm or one which has been secured under foreclosure. There is a very difficult situation there and it cannot be met except by legislation reducing the rate of interest. I am not going to press the point any further to-night, but I hope the government will give consideration to the question, unless it appears, when the bill comes down, that provision has been made to meet it. I trust the government will even be prepared to go so far as to amend the Interest Act to provide for a reduction in the rate of interest on existing obligations of that sort.

Mr. BENNETT: The legal question, neatly put, is this. The exclusive legislative power is vested in this parliament to deal with interest; the exclusive power to deal with property and civil rights is vested in each provincial legislature. This parliament therefore has the right to determine what constitutes the legal rate of interest, and may declare in proper terms that no greater rate than a named rate shall be recovered from any person. But the Interest Act as it stands has left it open for any person in this country to exercise his own free will and make any contract he pleases to pay any rate of interest he agrees to pay to his lender. That is the law at the moment. Should no provision be made as to the rate, then if any rate applies it is five per cent under our act.

Now the hon. member for Macleod must realize that once a contract has been made, and under an existing rate of interest which was legal within the statute passed by this parliament, the extent to which this parliament can interfere then with a contract involving property and civil rights is an altogether different matter. As I understand the hon. gentleman, he suggests that this parliament, in the exercise of its plenary powers, should pass a retroactive statute declaring that notwithstanding contracts that have been made, all interest shall be reduced under such contracts to a given rate per annum.

Mr. NEILL: In future.

Mr. BENNETT: No, he said, as I understand, that notwithstanding what the contract contained it should thereby be modified and it be declared that the rate instead of being the one fixed by the contract, should be a rate fixed by parliament.

Mr. NEILL: To be paid in future.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; he said also: In respect to accumulated arrears of interest, but that was only secondary to the main part of his argument.

Mr. COOTE: I think I suggested only after the date of the passing of any act of this parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: That is, notwithstanding any contract that had been entered into heretofore providing for a rate of interest, after a given date the rate should be one fixed by this parliament. I see no reason why I should not tell the committee exactly what has taken place. I asked representatives of the loan companies, the insurance companies and the mortgage companies to come to Ottawa, and they very kindly did so. We discussed this situation at very great length and I will put their predicament to the committee in a single line. If we did that, they would be faced with bankruptcy. The reason is this: they have borrowed money on debentures for which they are paying the high rate of five per cent. As that money was borrowed largely from Scotland and the contract is there, if we reduced the rate to five per cent there would be a loss; if we reduced it to six per cent there would be a loss, for the average recovery of, I think, one of the largest insurance companies lending in western Canada was 4·83 per cent. I mention that because I approached this problem with an absolutely open mind and determined if I could to secure a concession from the companies that were lenders, indicating to them, in the words of Gladstone, that the forces of civilization were not yet exhausted against its enemies. But after I heard that one company had borrowed in Scotland $30,000,000 on debentures on which they were paying five per cent interest, and another had borrowed $29,000,000 on which they were paying five per cent, I confess I felt the provisions which we have inserted in the bill are about as far as we can go without deliberately putting into insolvency the institutions that are lending the money. One of the insurance companies produced its documents and I was amazed when I was shown that the average rate of recovery of interest, mark you, as the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) would say, was over a term of years only 4·83 per cent. That in itself was to me rather surprising.

Mr. HANBURY: Although they are paying five per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: No, this was one of the insurance companies. I am putting the case exactly as it was put to me, and I think the hon. member for Macleod, if he were sitting in my place, would hesitate to submit to parliament legislation that, retroactive in its character, would abrogate contracts and substitute for the will of the parties the supreme will of parliament as expressed by a majority in the house, with the result that institutions that had borrowed and given promises to pay in other lands, would be made insolvent.

Mr. COOTE: Of course the Prime Minister has some advantage over us in this connection in that he has discussed this matter with the companies that have lent the money, but unless there is a greater advance in the price of farm products than we can see at the moment, some of those companies are bound to take losses. That is inevitable; it simply cannot be avoided. What I am suggesting is not, I think, unreasonable; it is something many of the companies might have done voluntarily before this. I know companies that I am sure have not sold a debenture outside Canada, are still insisting on the eight per cent to the very letter of the law. I say again that what I am suggesting was done in Australia by law.

Mr. BENNETT: The situation there, as the hon. gentleman knows, is entirely different from that here.

Mr. COOTE: Australia, of course, may or may not be the proper example for us to follow. To come to the question which the Prime Minister raised as to where the jurisdiction lies, it must lie either in the province or in the dominion or jointly in the two to do this thing which seems to me to be so necessary. I am not, however, going to press the point further to-night. We will examine the legislation when it comes down, but if there is not some provision in it for dealing with eight per cent mortgages we shall simply have to urge the matter again upon the government. I suppose that is all we can do.

Mr. HANBURY: My understanding of the explanation given by the Prime Minister is that the very situation that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) is bringing to the attention of the committee has been taken care of by the requirement that will force the mortgagee to accept the lower valuation, not only on his principal but also on the interest that has not been paid to date. If that is the condition, I think the legislation has already been made retroactive.

Mr. COOTE: That is only in connection with those who are actually insolvent to-day. There are still some farmers who are solvent; I mean they have kept the interest paid, but I do not see how they are going to pay it much longer, and for their sake, rather than have them drift into insolvency through a rate of eight per cent, parliament and the mortgage companies themselves would be well advised to consider the passing of legislation which would reduce that rate of interest. There are some companies which are willing to take action to-day, but they say, and very properly, that they cannot be expected to do so if their competitors will not. They say: We are in the life insurance business; we want to show as good a return as the other companies; we want to pay as good dividends to our policyholders; if our competitors are charging eight per cent, we must follow the same policy. I shall not labour the point any more; I believe the Prime Minister knows the situation and we will see what the legislation provides in respect to the matter. Unless it provides more than I understood from the Prime Minister's observations this afternoon, we shall have to urge at a later date that some action be taken to deal with the matter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I quite appreciate the situation the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) has brought to the attention of the committee, but having had some experience with soldier settlers on the land where a considerable number of them paid out in full I know there is no doubt there was discrimination against those individuals. Personally I prefer to wait until I see the bill before entering into a discussion of the matter, but if the bill provides machinery for the adjustment of present difficulties it will, I think, have met a want and will be appreciated.

I was going to say that the tables presented by the Prime Minister are intensely interesting, but of course they cover only farm mortgages, and I note from the wording of the resolution that the board to be set up will have authority to deal not only with the mortgage situation, the actual farm mortgages, but with other indebtedness of the farmer as well; therefore it is broader in its aspect than merely dealing with the mortgage situation.

Mr. BENNETT: That is so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is it possible from statistics to have some tables prepared, even if they are merely estimates, of the indebtedness of this character, chattel mortgages and indebtedness of every sort? Because I take it that even agreements for sale that are in existence will hardly come under the category of the estimate the Prime Minister has presented in the table. There is a very large indebtedness which I suppose in the ordinary sense of the word we would call floating indebtedness that would be taken into consideration by the board. I presume it is impossible to obtain figures of these, but if they could be procured I should like to have them.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) especially, will recall that last year a very determined effort was made to secure figures covering the indebtedness to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) has referred. The difficulty of course is apparent at once; the amount owing to the grocer varies from time to time; the amount owing to the implement dealer varies. When this scheme of arrangement, this compromise plan, is being considered all these debts will be dealt with. But to form even an estimate of the indebtedness of the farm population of this country from time to time under all heads is something that I know from the results of the effort made last year is impossible. Is it not fair to say that no satisfactory estimate was arrived at of the total indebtedness of the farm population of the country? Is that not a fair way to put it?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I think the Prime Minister has expressed it correctly. The committee explored every avenue in an endeavour to get even a fair estimate of the total debt outside of mortgages and chattel mortgages, of the multitude of debts owing to implement companies, lumber companies, oil companies and wholesale houses, to say nothing of retail stores. We found ourselves unable to arrive at anything more than a very loose estimate, nothing that we ventured to place on our record because it was based on so little actual information.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Bennett thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 92, to facilitate compromises and arrangements between farmers and their creditors.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. BENNETT: It is understood that we shall endeavour to afford the widest opportunity for considering the contents of the bill on second reading. The bill is printed in English and in French, and will be available for distribution to-night.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

PROVISION TO FACILITATE AND INCREASE EXTENSION OF CREDIT TO FARMERS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act (R.S.C., c. 66) to facilitate and increase the extension of credit to farmers, to authorize the Minister of Finance to purchase additional bonds issued by the board, and guaranteed by the government, and to provide for supplementary advances by the board.

Mr. HANBURY: Explain.

Mr. BENNETT: I endeavoured to indicate to the house this afternoon in a broad and general way that this bill is complementary to the bill dealing with the adjustment of farm indebtedness. In view of the fact that the bill deals with a number of amendments that have to be made in consequence of administrative experience, perhaps it is desirable now only to refer to the fact that the bill to be based upon the resolution contemplates the sale by the board of debentures to enable the business of the board to be carried on, so that it may meet the conditions to which reference has been made, namely the inability of those who pay off their long term mortgages to secure reasonably cheap money. The extent to which the debentures may be purchased by the government will purposely be left blank. That matter the house will deal with at the proper time.

I also indicated that the measure founded upon the resolution contemplates that additional advances to those already provided for in the provisions of the Canadian Farm Loan Act may be made, to enable a scheme of composition or arrangement to be carried into effect; and lastly that additional advances may be secured in provinces where there are chattel mortgages by a charge upon personal property, in order that the farmer who has entered into a scheme or arrangement with his creditors may have some small additional capital with which to commence the struggle back to prosperity.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Has this resolution particular reference to the bill known as the farm loan act?

Mr. BENNETT: The Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that western Canada particularly hoped for great benefit from the coming into operation of that act. I think I would be supported by those who know anything about the matter in saying that never has a piece of legislation passed by this house been a greater disappointment. It was put through at a time when it could have done tremendous good if it had been well administered, because it would have made money available on mortgages running for a long term of years. But when it began to operate it was found that the regulations were more strict than those imposed by any banking institution or ordinary mortgage corporation, and the amount of loans made under it was infinitesimal compared with the original demands. In the various provinces a certain amount of money was advanced, but very little compared with the original demands. When the hard times came on it was found that the administrators acted in the carrying out of this particular legislation more harshly than any debt collectors we know in this dominion. I suppose I have had more correspondence with regard to the hardships incurred through borrowing under this act than in regard to any other matter. I mention this because if we are to have an act that will work there will have to be a great many alterations.

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose): I should like to endorse what the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) has said. I have had a great deal of trouble in connection with borrowers under the farm loan act, and from my experience I must say that if I had to advise a farmer about getting a loan I would advise him to take it from a loan company rather than under the Canadian Farm Loan Act. Many of these borrowers have been put to a great deal of expense, and when they have complained to me or to other members it is difficult to get any satisfaction. I remember once going into the office at Edmonton in a very amiable mood and when I attempted to discuss the matter in a friendly way I was told that I had no business to interfere with it all. If the bill now being brought in contemplates larger loans I suggest to the Prime Minister that regulations be laid down to ensure that there shall be better administration of this act in the future.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has the figures as to the overdue interest on existing farm loans.

Mr. BENNETT: No; I thought we would deal with that in committee. I have no right to speak again except at the close of the debate, so I shall defer such observations as I propose to make on the moving of this resolution until other members have signified their intention to speak.

Mr. NEILL: I assume that the Prime Minister is going to deal with the remarks of the last speaker?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. May I say that this afternoon the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) put his finger upon one of the difficulties that arise in connection with the introduction of any legislation of this character. When the farm loan act was introduced in this parliament the then Minister of Finance, who was a very cautious Scotsman, was extremely careful to provide for almost every contingency that would indicate the possibility of the loans not being repaid. The provinces assumed a large responsibility under that legislation, and when I have had occasion to complain—as I have, like other hon. members—I have been told that this is a matter solely within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Then when I endeavoured to secure some explanation from that quarter I was told that this is a matter entirely removed from politics, which must be dealt with solely upon its merits. The result is that it is one of the most convincing arguments that I have found in a long time as to the difficulty of creating a board, surrounded by the conditions that surround the Canadian farm loan board legislation.

Nevertheless the Dominion of Canada has advanced substantially $8,000,000 to this enterprise, and the loans have been made under appraisements controlled and directed by the provincial authorities under regulations enacted by the federal board. Each borrower has been compelled to invest a certain sum in the stock of the board, and the rate of interest at which he has borrowed has not been so very low as to induce him to believe that it is worth the effort he has made to invest in this very praiseworthy enterprise. The result is that he is very hesitant before he undertakes to invest his money in a certain amount of stock of the enterprise, because he pays six per cent for his money and he thinks possibly he would just as soon be a free man and pay seven per cent somewhere else.

There is one other point in that respect. The act provides, as will be remembered, for loans to an amount not exceeding fifty per cent of the valuation, at a rate of six per cent. Obviously when interest rates are high the incongruity of the situation arises. What the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) says is perfectly true; in the changing conditions of this country there are discriminations that arise by reason of the lapse of time of a single year. The man who pays all his debts as they come due sometimes finds himself very much worse off than the one who waits and waits and waits, and then has greater facilities and more opportunities to pay his obligations than he would otherwise.

In that regard I recall a story; I am not a good story teller, but this story is very apt. A distinguished gentleman who had a quarrel with another because of the interest he was paying wound up by shaking his fist very vigorously and saying, "You can say nothing to me; I always pay one hundred cents on the dollar." "Ah," the other replied, "that is where I have the better of you. I pay ninety per cent and take the benefit of the discount." Perhaps that illustrates the difficulties of the situation to which hon. gentlemen have referred. That was an actual happening that came under my observation when I was a very young man, and I then realized the value of discounts in business.

Be that as it may, however, I should like the house to realize that this resolution does not contemplate a change in the structure of the farm loan board, nor does it contemplate any substantial change in the method of administration. But if, during the progress of the discussion, it becomes apparent that it is the wish of hon. members that something of that sort should be done, we will endeavour, in the hot days of June, to meet their wishes to the best of our ability.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. At what rate will the farm loan board be able to make loans?

Mr. BENNETT: There has been no change in that regard. I suppose the hon. member followed me a moment ago—

Mr. COOTE: I happened to be out of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: —when I said the present rate was six per cent, plus the purchase of stock.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should like to ask if there will be any change in the regulations under which loans are made. I have had a great deal of experience under this act, and my experience has been similar to that of other hon. members. At the present time an appraisement is made by an appraiser appointed by the provincial board. They lend up to fifty per cent on a conservative valuation of the land and twenty per cent on the improvements. My experience has been that it takes about six months to put through a loan, and by that time the farmer has lost all hope; he cannot wait. The valuation is so conservative; the appraisements are so reduced and the amount allowed for improvements is so small that I think it would have been far better if the legislation had never been passed.

I remember the circumstances under which this legislation was set up. The minister was a canny Scotsman. He did not want to enact this legislation; he held off as long as possible, and when he did put it through I think the experience of all hon. members proves that it was of little or no benefit to those whom it was intended to help. I think we might as well wipe it off our statute books.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There is just one other point, which might be clarified if not in the law at least in the administration. I think my experience has been the same as that of other hon. members; when a situation was brought to our attention which appeared to us to savour of injustice, we took it up with the provincial board. We were informed that the act had been perpetrated under federal authority, over which the province and the provincial board had no control. Then, when we took it up with the federal board, we were informed that it came entirely under provincial administration, and I have seldom seen a more successful exhibition of passing the buck than has been exhibited by those two branches of the administration of this act. I trust that this may be clarified, if not in the act itself then in the regulations or in the method of administration, so that we will know whom we are to hit.

Mr. BENNETT: When the bill based upon this resolution is before the house I shall supply the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) with the details of interest arrears and produce copies of the regulations. We will carefully consider the bill in committee of the whole house, and if hon. members have amendments to suggest which will improve the situation, if they will bring them forward when the bill is in committee we can take some time to consider whether or not they can be incorporated in the measure in order to make it more effective; for I do fully appreciate the difficulties to which hon. gentlemen have referred, having experienced them myself.

Mr. NEILL: If no one else will come to the rescue of the memory of the canny Scot I think I should like to say a word in support of this much abused measure. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) was correct when he said they lend up to fifty per cent of the valuation, but he did not go far enough. The trouble is that usually they do not lend up to fifty per cent. That is their limit. If they always lent up to fifty per cent it would be easier. But to say that the act has been a total failure is hardly borne out by the very large sum that the Prime Minister has mentioned as having been lent. The fact that they were not after all too cheese-paring in their policy is indicated in the fact that he talks about arrears of interest still being overdue.

Mr. BENNETT: Very substantially.

Mr. NEILL: Substantial arrears, he says. I have myself complained of their being too narrow, and not lending enough, but it would appear that conditions somewhat justified that act. The original rate is six per cent, or whatever may be the sum at which they sell the bonds.

Mr. BENNETT: It has a relation to the sale of the bond issue.

Mr. NEILL: And then there is another charge of two or two and one-half per cent for amortization. I know of more than one case where farmers borrowed money from private sources at 8 per cent, and after having it five or ten years the whole amount would be demanded back, and if times were bad they were lucky if they could get it renewed. At any rate, at the end of twenty-five years they still owed the whole of the money and would be paying eight per cent, but under this plan they paid eight and one-half per cent and at the end of twenty-five years they did not owe anything. It was a substantial advantage to the farmer. I never knew anyone who was fortunate enough to get a loan who had any complaint about the way he was treated. I know of specific cases where the change was from eight per cent under private hands to eight and one-half per cent under the government, with this difference, that in the case of the private man the mortgagor still owed the amount at the end of the period, but in the case of the government it was in the course of twenty-five or thirty years wiped out. I hope the government has no intention of doing away with it, and while it has been unpopular because they have been so particular in carrying it out, yet I believe it has done substantial and good work.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think a word should be said with respect to the farm loan act, because it was one which for a long time was under consideration by the previous government. It was not only the then Minister of Finance who was careful; another official of the government was quite as careful as the then Minister of Finance. The deliberations ran over a considerable period of time, and that is why I am intensely interested to know, after the criticisms I have heard, how the interest payments are standing up. The experience of governments generally—and I know something about the matter of loans—is that it is the easiest thing in the world to lend money, but it is the most difficult thing in the world to get it back. That has been the experience of the province of Alberta for the past twenty-five years. Times were much better in the days when this act was put upon the statute book than they are to-day. I shall be much interested to know how interest payments are coming in under the loan act now being criticized because of its rather onerous provisions. If interest is paid it is evidence, of course, that it might be loosened up, but if interest is not paid I do not know what I shall have to say about it.

Mr. COOTE: I think if the books of any loan company were examined it would be found that a great deal of interest on farm mortgages is in arrears. It cannot help being that way. Conditions are such that the farmers as a class cannot keep their interest paid up. While I am on my feet I should like to say that, as a whole, the farm loan board has certainly never over-extended itself, because the amount of money it has lent in Canada is only a trifle over one per cent of the amount outstanding in Canada on farm mortgages. It would seem, therefore, that the farm loan board has been careful, if nothing else.

Mr. SPENCER: When we examine the costs of administration of the act we will find them pretty high. Needless to say, it is easy to understand that costs mount up because of inspection carried on before making loans.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is all paid by the borrower. He has to put up a ten dollar bill before they will look at it.

Mr. SPENCER: But even the ten dollars does not pay all the expenses incurred by inspectors. I am told by one of the best inspectors that if he had been absolutely accurate in having forms filled out he could never have recommended a loan, so extreme were they in their demands. As we have lent very little under the act and the administration has been going on, it stands to reason that on a per capita basis the expense has been very high.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Bennett thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 93, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. BENNETT: Next sitting. The bill is printed and will be distributed at once. Ample opportunity will be afforded for consideration of its provisions.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I suggest that we should have at least two days on both these bills?

THE KING'S BIRTHDAY

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): This, Mr. Speaker, is the sixty-ninth anniversary of the birth of His Majesty the King. We are sitting, because it has been the practice of parliaments from time immemorial to discharge public business on all days in which it is necessary so to sit. But in view of the amount of business disposed of to-day I propose shortly to move that the house do now adjourn. In doing so I am sure I express the wish of every hon. member in the chamber that His Gracious Majesty may long be spared under Providence to rule over an united empire, and that his realm may be the home of a happy, prosperous and contented people. I am sure that is the heartful sentiment and prayer of all those who constitute this Commons House of the Canadian parliament.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 9.50 p.m.

Tuesday, June 5, 1934

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

First report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government. —Mr. Chaplin.

OIL REFINING INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have received several communications from cooperative associations in my constituency and also one from a municipal council, all having to do with an alleged monopoly in the oil refining industry. Is it the intention of the price spread and mass buying committee to inquire into this alleged monopoly with the undue profits and prices arising therefrom?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I believe it is impossible for me to give a complete answer to my hon. friend. I can merely say that the committee at the moment is simply overwhelmed with matters already in hand and the anticipated early ending of the session may make it impossible for us to complete our studies of several subjects which are of considerable importance and in which great public interest has been taken. All I can say is that I have received a number of communications similar to that indicated and the whole matter is under consideration, but there are physical limitations to what the committee can do.

AUSTRALIAN WHEAT AND FLOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I have a question I desire to ask of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the importation of Australian wheat and flour. I understand some shipments of Australian flour have already arrived in eastern Canada and further orders have been placed for future shipments. I am not so sure that any wheat has come in yet but my question takes in both wheat and flour. I have had several communications from certain people in my constituency in regard to the flour and I am told that if the Ontario millers have to meet the competition of the Australian flour, something rather disastrous will happen to the farmers of Ontario. The millers are now paying from ninety-five cents to one dollar a bushel. My information is that if the millers have to meet the competition of the Australian flour they will not be able to pay—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SANDERSON: I want to say that I gave notice to the minister of my question and I am putting it so that he can answer it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Having given notice, the hon. member can make his question a little more brief. He is making a speech.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not think the minister has any objection to the way in which I am putting my question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SANDERSON: With all due deference to Your Honour, it appears to me that you should keep order on the other side of the house when I am asking a question.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is out of order now, and I would ask him to confine himself to the rules.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have always complied with the rules. My question to the minister is this: In regard to Australian flour coming in at its present price and the competition it will give to the Ontario millers, is he conversant with what is taking place, what action will he take and has he the matter under consideration?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The whole subject to which the hon. member has referred is quite familiar to me, the department, and I may say, the government. Quite adequate and I think satisfactory steps are being taken to meet the situation. I feel it would be inadvisable at the moment to enter into any detailed reply.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

REPORTED INTENTION TO END RELIEF ON JUNE 15

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): In certain Ottawa papers there is a news dispatch of June 1 stating that the federal government intends to end relief on June 15. I would like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) whether he is prepared to give the house a definite statement in connection with the matter in view of the very serious conditions still existing in many communities throughout the dominion. For instance, in my own city we still have around 7,000 families on relief, and they are quite concerned about the telegraphic dispatch from the minister in connection with the matter.

[Mr. Sanderson.]

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the agreement under which contributions were made by the federal government to the provinces of Canada to assist them in providing direct relief and other employment came to an end according to its terms on the 31st day of March last. This government advised the various provinces at that time that we would continue to make contributions for direct relief where it seemed that the provinces had an acute situation, that the need was great, and the provinces concerned, with their municipalities, were unable to cope with it. We said we would continue it until the end of May; expressing the hope, of course, that with improved conditions direct relief could soon be abandoned. There are many places in Canada, I am sure hon. members will be pleased to know, where assistance by direct relief has now been found not to be necessary.

Following up the first message to the provinces a further extension of dominion contribution was intimated, to carry forward to the 15th of this month. Perhaps there will be places in Canada where, by reason of exceptional circumstances, special consideration will have to be given by way of assistance, but at the same time there is no doubt that the pressure with respect to contributions to direct relief is diminishing in a very satisfactory manner. The intimation given to the provinces as to its discontinuance was founded upon information supplied to the Department of Labour, and on a review of the position of the various provinces with respect to their ability to take care of what direct relief was necessary during the coming summer.

I do not know that I can add anything further to what I have said, but I feel quite hopeful that during the summer months at least we shall find that in the majority of places throughout the dominion direct relief can be abandoned in view of the revival of activity in the building and other trades. However, the situation will be constantly under review by myself and the government, and if it appears that assistance is necessary it will be given very serious consideration.

CONTRIBUTION TO QUEBEC ROAD FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. BARIBEAU (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon). In Le Canada of Montreal in its edition of the 21st of May, it is reported that the hon. Mr. Arcand, Minister of Labour of the provincial government of Quebec, speaking at Grand'-Mère on the 20th of May declared as follows:

(Translation)

Our province does not receive from the Dominion government what it is entitled to. Thus Ontario was granted $10,000,000 to build highways, while Quebec has only received $350,000. If it were fair to help the neighbouring province—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BARIBEAU:

—our province also should have been granted, on that occasion, $8,000,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. If the hon. member has a question to address to the government or a member of the government he should do so.

Mr. BARIBEAU: My question is: Is the above statement made by Mr. Arcand in accordance with the facts?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, probably the question would not be difficult to answer, but in order that there may be no doubt about it I would like it to stand until to-morrow.

FOREST FIRE SUFFERERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. MICHAUD (Restigouche-Madawaska): I wish to call the attention of the government to the fact that in the county of Restigouche, province of New Brunswick, the village of Oliver has been destroyed by the recent forest fire, and at the present time there are over three hundred persons living in the open without shelter. At the present time they are supported by the provincial and municipal authorities exclusively. My question is whether it is possible for this government to come to the relief of these people under the Relief Act, because everything they had in the world has been destroyed. They have nothing. They were new settlers, on ungranted land, and have lost all they had. I think they would be proper subjects for relief under the Relief Act.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): The situation described by the hon. member is known to the Department of Labour. The provincial government of New Brunswick have taken steps and are making adequate arrangements to take care of the people who have suffered by reason of the incident referred to. The premier of New Brunswick is in the city to-day and had a conference with myself and probably other members of this government. There should be little difficulty in taking care of the people who have suffered by reason of these fires.

PRIVILEGE—MR. McINTOSH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege and explanation. I find on page 3623 of Hansard of yesterday, June 4, the following statement by the hon. member for Melfort, the Minister of Agriculture:

Hon. Robert Weir (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In this connection I regret that the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) is not in his seat but I feel I cannot delay the matter. It is reported on page 3900 of unrevised Hansard of Friday, June 1, 1934, that the hon. member for North Battleford stated as follows:

Last year the minister contended that the Anglo-Saxons were the only people in the north; he suggested that the Mennonites, the French, the Belgians, the Scotch and the Welsh and others were not people, but merely political cattle.

I was listening very closely to the hon. member for North Battleford and I did not hear him use the words "but merely political cattle." I asked some of my colleagues if they had heard these words used and they stated definitely that they had not.

On checking up the typewritten copy of Hansard I found that the words "but merely political cattle" had been written in with red pencil, and that there had been a period after the word "people." Upon inquiring of the staff of Hansard I was informed that the words were not in the reporter's notes and the reason they were inserted was that the hon. member for North Battleford instructed Mr. Young, associate editor of debates, that he had used these words and insisted that they be inserted.

That is the first question of privilege to which I should like to refer, and I should like to take the matter step by step. Yesterday the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Weir) regretted that I was not in my seat. I am very pleased to be in my seat to-day; in fact I am delighted to be here to answer the minister. In the second place the hon. member for Melfort takes the words "but merely political cattle" and says that though he was listening closely he did not hear me use those words. That is no proof that I did not use them. Further he says that his colleagues were listening closely and they did not hear the words, but that is no proof either. Actually that makes it worse than ever, because the disorder and the din in the house were of such a nature that words really could not be heard.

Then may I go a little further. The minister went on to say that I insisted to Mr. Young, the associate editor, that those words should be put in Hansard. I did not do any insisting; I merely requested to have the words I used put in Hansard, because I concluded that if a member uses certain words while speaking in a national assembly and those words are not reported, on his honour he should state that they were used and, by having them inserted in Hansard, have the speech as a whole given to parliament and the country. I used those words; that is why they are in Hansard. I did not insist upon Mr. Young making any change; I simply requested him to make the change, saying that I used the words and I would back them up.

Now I come to the next point. I notice that Your Honour made an intimation or statement to the house suggesting that the matter should be brought before the standing committee on the official report of debates. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) also became very much concerned about the matter and added to your suggestion by making the statement that perhaps it might be wise to have the committee on privileges and elections consider the matter. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to go before any standing committee of the House of Commons and back up the words I used in this assembly, but I want to say something further. If that is done I want the hon. member for Melfort brought before the same committee; I want him examined and reported upon with regard to the words he put into Hansard last year, which he did not use. We can prove it on this side of the house.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: Let me finish my statement. This is a question of privilege. Kindly restrain yourself for a little while.

Mr. SPEAKER: During the remarks of the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) raises a point of order, which he has a right to do.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I must insist that the hon. member withdraw his statement, that I inserted words in Hansard that I did not say. I take objection; I ask that the hon. member withdraw that statement.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is the charge the minister makes against me—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. McINTOSH: —and it is not true, but the charge I am making against him can be proved to be true.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not make the statement that the hon. member for North Battleford did not say the words that appeared in Hansard, "but merely political cattle." What I did say was that I did not hear him say those words, and that if I had heard him I would have asked that they be withdrawn immediately. Having satisfied myself that it was through no fault of mine that I did not hear him, because of the insulting nature of the words I simply requested that they be deleted from Hansard. I did not state that the hon. member had not used the words. I must insist that the hon. member for North Battleford withdraw the statement he has made.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am not through yet.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for North Battleford accuses the Minister of Agriculture of having altered the report of his remarks in Hansard last session. The Minister of Agriculture denies that this took place. I submit that the hon. member for North Battleford should withdraw that statement.

Mr. McINTOSH: If the hon. member makes the statement that he did not—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. McINTOSH: Mr. Speaker, the statement I make is that the words were inserted in Hansard not that they were changed or altered. If the minister says he did not do it some other person did it, and he knows who it was.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER: In order to carry on the business of this house in a dignified way the hon. member knows that is not a withdrawal. The minister says he did not alter his remarks in Hansard. Having made that statement—

Mr. McINTOSH: I am quite pleased, Mr. Speaker, if the minister says he did not make the alterations himself to withdraw that statement, but that does not alter the fact that the words were changed.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the privileges of this house do not permit a member, rising on a question of privilege, to make a charge against a fellow member. The hon. gentleman has risen to a question of privilege. The observations he has made as to the conduct of the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Weir) cannot possibly be proper remarks to make on a question of privilege. The hon. member is dealing with a matter raised yesterday, with which he has every right to deal, and we will listen to him with very great interest if he continues to deal with it.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yesterday, when I was not in the house, the charge was made against me that I had changed my remarks in Hansard. On a question of privilege I am merely making an explanation of the matter, and I want to finish my last statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am not going to withdraw any more. You had better withdraw yourselves.

Mr. SPEAKER: Did I understand the hon. member for North Battleford to withdraw his statement?

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, about five minutes ago.

Mr. SPEAKER: Very well.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was referring to the statement made by the hon. member for Melfort that the words I used should be stricken from the record. Well, they are good Anglo-Saxon words. Then later on Your Honour suggested that the matter should be referred to one of the committees of the house, and the Prime Minister also stated that this might be done. I made the statement that I would be quite willing to have that done providing the words that were altered in the speech of the hon. member on May 22 of last year in connection with redistribution were also brought before that committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. If any action is taken by the house concerning a matter which occurred yesterday or during this session it will be done by the house as it sees fit, not with any proviso that may be made by the hon. member for North Battleford.

Mr. McINTOSH: Well, I shall feel fine about any action that may be taken. I am through.

RELIEF CLOTHING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, on the orders of the day I should like to direct a question to the government based upon a dispatch appearing in the Toronto Mail and Empire of June 1. The dispatch states that a contract has been let to the Needlecraft Mills Limited of St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, for the purchase of fifteen thousand pairs of trousers for distribution among men employed on relief projects, at a cost of $1.76 per pair. The cloth required will be issued by the department and charged against the price, and I understand that, after everything is considered including freight, trimmings and so on, the labour cost of these trousers will be eighteen cents per pair. The cheapest that it can be done in the city of Toronto is forty-five cents a pair. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether the fair wages policy of the government will be enforced in connection with that contract towards the end of preventing sweated labour conditions existing under government contract.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I believe the remarks of the hon. member have reference to goods purchased through the Department of National Defence. If the question stands it may be looked into and answered to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am most concerned about the labour conditions under which the contract will be undertaken; I am not particularly interested in the goods in question, but in the conditions affecting the working people employed in the industry.

MARKETING ACT

ORGANIZATION TO IMPROVE METHODS AND PRACTICES IN MARKETING NATURAL PRODUCTS

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture) moved the third reading of Bill No. 51, to improve the methods and practices of marketing of natural products in Canada and in export trade, and to make further provisions in connection therewith.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before the third reading passes I should like to make a very few observations in connection with the bill. I believe all hon. members who have given any concern or thought during the past few years to the marketing of the primary products of the dominion, whether they be producers, those engaged in the marketing of the products or those who consume the products, agree that there has been felt a need for some legislation or action which would tend to reduce to a minimum the wastage which now exists in our more or less haphazard method of marketing, and also that steps should be taken as far as possible to stabilize the prices of products of the primary producers.

In endeavouring to give effect to this desire or much felt need, we set out to prepare a bill which for some weeks has been under discussion both in the house and in committee of the whole house. In the preparation of it we gave careful study, first, to other marketing bills which have been passed and have been in force in various countries. However, after careful examination of these bills and the boards set up by such legislation we felt that the conditions with which they were formed to deal were so different from those confronting us in connection with the marketing and regulation of marketing of the primary products of Canada, that they could be of little use to us, certainly could not be adopted as a model, and could be used only as a guide here and there in the preparation of our bill.

It was therefore decided that we must first have clearly before us the conditions we wished to remedy in order to prepare a bill peculiarly suitable and adaptable to the conditions in Canada with which it had to deal. In the preparation of the bill we had numerous discussions with cooperative associations, private individuals engaged in primary production, and with the trade. In the first draft of the bill we had made it much more definite, dealing to a greater extent with specific commodities. But as other problems were presented it was felt that the very definiteness of it, limiting it to particular problems, made it inapplicable to the marketing of other products. Therefore the bill underwent a gradual change, becoming more comprehensive and, as one hon. member stated in discussion, became more in the nature of a skeleton of a bill which could be filled in and could better meet the varying conditions. This was also necessary so that every possibility of full cooperation between the provinces and the dominion could be brought about.

The fundamental principles of the bill as submitted to the house are briefly these: First, as far as was possible and as far as was indicated by organizations of primary producers to place in their own hands the marketing of their own products. Secondly, in case of emergency or in dealing with a primary product concerning which, due to geographical and other reasons it was difficult for the producers to organize, where it was felt by the government that some assistance or organization should be arranged, power is given the government to deal with such emergency or condition on its merits.

Then, in the third place, power is given in the bill to investigate spreads, or the cost of marketing, thereby giving an assurance to the producers that they will not be exploited in the marketing of their product, an assurance which applies similarly to the purchaser of such products. Then, power was given in the bill to deal with the importation and exportation of natural or primary products into and out of the dominion, so that under the different conditions in which we find ourselves we would have the machinery to enable us to take our place among the trading nations of the world.

Then, lastly, provision is made in the bill to enable complete cooperation between the provincial bodies to be set up and the federal bodies which may be set up. I give this brief review for this reason: It was no surprise when the bill was up for discussion that many hon. members should have traversed the very paths which we pursued in the preparation of the bill. They had in mind some specific commodities with which they wanted the bill to deal. However, although realizing that if the measure were so defined it would become ineffective as regards other commodities, yet as the amendments proposed did not in any way affect what we felt we had already set out in the bill and for which we had made definite provision and to set at rest the doubts of some persons, we accepted amendments to the bill based on the requests and desires of hon. members as evidenced in the discussion.

I believe therefore that it would be of interest to the house if I were to put on record a short analysis of the effect of the amendments to the bill as first brought down, to bear out the statement I have made as to why the amendments were introduced and accepted.

1. Principle

The fundamental principle embodied in this bill is that of governmental sanction and support of regulated marketing by producers and other persons engaged in such activity, supplemented by direct governmental action when unusual conditions warrant such procedure. The amendments have in no way altered this principle.

2. Purpose

To regulate rather than to disrupt trade is the purpose of this bill. Improvement of conditions by the control or direction of marketing as to time, place, quantity, quality and manner of distribution was sought in the original bill. Regulation, with a minimum of interference with trade practices, is the keynote of this legislation. The amendments have in no way altered these objectives.

3. Machinery of regulation

The machinery provided for in the bill consists of a central board appointed by the government and local boards created by persons engaged in production and/or marketing to which power to regulate the marketing of the natural product may be given. No change has been made in this connection by the amendments.

4. Powers

The powers to be conferred upon the dominion board and by delegation upon local boards, namely, to regulate marketing, to raise funds, to compensate for loss under stated conditions, to require information, to cooperate with provincial boards, to register and license producers and persons engaged in marketing, remain almost exactly as they were in the bill as introduced. Clarifications having to do with pooling and collection of funds have been made and an extension of powers under clause (e), subsection (1), section 4, to include "processing" was made.

5. Federal and provincial jurisdiction

Certain changes to clarify the intention and make more certain the division of authority between the dominion and provincial bodies has been made but the purpose in this respect has in no way been changed.

6. Regulation of import and export

This section of the original bill was redrafted and the provision re imposition of penalties, which in a measure conflicted with other similar provisions of the act, was deleted. However, the purpose of the section, namely, control of import and export trade in natural products within certain limitations remains as it was.

7. Spreads

A number of changes have been made in the second part of the bill and several sections have been added. These are, for the most part, designed to establish more definitely the legal procedure in the case of prosecutions. There is no change in the principle or purpose of this part of the act.

8. Summary of changes

There are ninety-two numbered or lettered sections, subsections, clauses or other divisions in the original bill. Of these thirty-three were altered in some respect by amendments but thirteen of these changes were of one or two words. The introduction of the word "natural" in the second part involved changes in eight sections or subsections.

9. The introduction of provisions designed to clarify several sections involving such matters as "pooling" and the provision and use of "funds" by local boards each required changes in several other sections. In each of such instances it is believed the power to do the thing desired was conveyed in the original draft but to satisfy some who held doubts on the subject, amendments were agreed to.

The principal changes made are those affecting the definition of natural product, section 2 (e); limiting the demands upon the consolidated revenue fund, section 3 (9); removing uncertainty as to the use of funds collected, section 4 (4); defining the powers under section 9; improving the section having to do with import and export restrictions.

In moving the third reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I frankly requested constructive criticism of the bill as introduced, and I regret that the discussion so repeatedly went very far afield from the subject matter of the bill itself. I feel, however, that that may be due perhaps to the bill covering a new field. I regret that we have not had more constructive criticism but I sincerely wish to express my appreciation to those who have contributed to bringing the bill into the form in which it is at the present time.

Mr. DUFF: Does the minister wish to name those who have made constructive criticism?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there will be unanimous agreement on all sides of this house that this bill is a forward step in an endeavour so to improve the efficiency of marketing in the not distant future that some of the costly weaknesses that are in our present practices may be eliminated.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I can imagine hearing some of the hon. members weary of this heat remarking, "Could we not cut out this talkfest and have a vote and be through with it," but the minister himself evidently did not think that was the way to proceed, and I am only following his example in making a few remarks.

This is the government's first marketing baby, and like all events of that nature they have had great anguish over delivering the baby, so much so that they might very well have resorted to that ameliorating practice known as twilight sleep. But that might have injured the baby, and we do not want to do that. I certainly do not want to do that, and I am glad that the ministry staggered through with it the way they did eventually and got on to their feet somehow. But, Mr. Speaker, it was a most distressing spectacle. However, the baby has arrived, and with a good deal of the Tory plumage all gone, but there are some objectionable features the size of one's fist still sticking out all over it. But there is just enough for identification purposes, just enough to show its semi-Tory origin, or its foster parentage, because the government was not the real parent of the bill at all. This bill was born of the farmers and producers, of western Canada particularly, and especially of the Pacific coast. That is where it came from, and the statement that the government is thrusting this upon the people is not right. It is the growers that are thrusting this marketing bill down the throats of an unwilling government, except the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir, Melfort) who was ready for it for some time past. That is the real position.

My analysis of this bill is quite different from the minister's. He regretted that there were not more constructive criticisms. Why, Mr. Speaker, so constructive have our criticisms been that this is almost a new bill entirely. According to my count there have been twenty-nine amendments, and I could make it a little more if I desired to stretch it. I could bring it to thirty-three, or thirty-five or even forty, but I have not counted those small amendments to which the minister referred. In order to leave no doubt about it I am going to take the necessary time out of my precious forty minutes to outline the changes that have been made in this bill and, Mr. Speaker, I hope you will give me three minutes' notice of the expiry of my forty minutes because I do not even know what time it was when I started.

I have classified the changes into three divisions, "very important" changes, "less important" changes, and "unimportant" changes. I shall not have time to go over them all, but I shall refer to them.

First, section 2, paragraph (e) extends the definition of natural product to include lumber and food and drink derived from products of forest, lake, sea and river. I think this new list of natural products is much better than the original definition, perhaps because it is almost identical with what I suggested myself if hon. gentlemen will recall my remarks on the second reading of the bill.

The next amendment deals with section 3, subsection 9, and provides that instead of permitting the costs of the board to be paid from consolidated revenue fund, they shall be appropriated by parliament. My right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) urged that amendment very strongly.

The next deals with section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (a) and provides for the setting up of a single selling agency which may be designated. Without this there is no centralized selling possible. That amendment was insisted upon by the producers. It was put in once by the ministry but they could hardly find it and they had to put it in the second time.

The fourth amendment deals with section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (c) and provides for the pooling of proceeds received from the sale of a product. No such provision existed in the original act. The minister tried to persuade us that it was there but nobody could find it, not even himself. There again, they had to insert it twice before it was really there.

Amendment number 5 deals with section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (e) and enables grants or loans to be made for the assistance of processing farm products. I do not want to plume myself too much, but that was my suggestion. I should like to refer for a moment to what this means as I believe it has a significance far beyond the conception of most hon. members. I gave an illustration of what "processing" could mean by referring to experimental or demonstration abattoirs which could be set up under these grants or loans. It is only by this means that we can have a satisfactory solution of the question of abattoirs and live stock marketing generally. This matter has been in my mind for years and I have always advocated it. The time has now come to close in on it. It provides also for the establishment of cheese and butter factories such as they have in other countries with which we have to compete. They have them in Denmark, in the United States, in Australia and in New Zealand. Fine large plants are established in those countries to which the producer can take his milk and be paid immediately on the basis of the butter fat content. This provides for the assistance to the processing of the fifteen or twenty dairy commodities that are made out of milk. It provides also for the processing of fruits, vegetables, wool, maple products, of wheat into flour, of oats into meal and many other forms of processing. All these activities are covered by the single word "processing." I have not the time to dwell at length upon the scope of this amendment or to show how far embracing it is.

The sixth amendment deals with section 4, subsection 2, and limits the powers which the dominion board may delegate to a local board to those contained in section 4. This prevents a local board from getting money from parliament to pay the costs of operation or to enable them to compensate for loss. It also prevents the dominion board from delegating to a local board the right given to it under section 9 actually to sell commodities. I remember quite distinctly that my right hon. leader spoke very strongly against what was embodied in the original bill and this has been amended.

Amendment 7 deals with section 4, subsections 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8. These are all entirely new and they provide for obtaining funds from producers instead of from parliament, which funds are to be used to pay any loss, compensation to producers, equalized payments, that is, pool receipts and building up reserves. According to the original bill, these expenses were to be borne by the state, but this amendment was finally inserted at the request of the growers.

Amendment number 8 deals with section 5, subsection 3 and enables the minister to demand a poll before a scheme is approved. The original bill made no provision for a poll. I am sure the government included this amendment because of the discussion which took place. The minister was good enough to invite suggestions.

Amendment number 9 deals with section 7, subsection 4, and provides that if a poll is taken and a scheme adopted, it cannot be revoked without a further poll being taken of the growers. The original bill contained no provision for a poll before revocation.

Amendment number 10 deals with section 9. This gives the dominion board power to set up a scheme itself and, as amended, it makes it clear that the scheme so set up may permit the board either to regulate marketing or actually to sell a commodity. The local boards are not allowed to do this. It also makes it clear that in setting up such schemes they can only relate to interprovincial and export trade. This very important amendment was suggested by the Liberal opposition.

Amendment number 11 deals with section 15. This is an entirely new section and provides that the dominion board must make an annual report to the minister which report must be laid before parliament within a stated period of time. I have a very vivid recollection of my right hon. leader suggesting this amendment.

Amendment number 12 deals with section 16, paragraph (b), and extends the scope of the investigations to include investigations in natural products as well as in regulated products. I am not quite sure as to who suggested this amendment but I think it was someone on this side. If it were not, it was the producers themselves.

Amendment number 13 deals with section 20 and makes the committee's findings merely a report to the minister rather than a determination for which penalties could be imposed.

These are the thirteen amendments which I consider to be "very important." That may be considered an unlucky number but as one amendment takes in seven subsections, the total is really more than thirteen, really seventeen.

We come now to the "less important" amendments. Amendment number 14 deals with section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (c) and provides that no compensation can be given for loss if the grade is unsuitable for market or is incurred as a result of agreements with foreign countries. Had this amendment not been included the government would have been exploited in all directions. Had the bill as originally drafted been passed this marketing act would never have got started. It would have been like the British act of 1931, simply a negation on the statute books. That was what happened with the British act until it was amended once and again two years later.

Amendment 15 deals with section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (i). This paragraph originally gave the local board the power to hold real property but it has since been deleted.

Amendment number 16 deals with section 12 and makes it necessary that the governor in council rather than the minister license importers and exporters. The clause by which the governor in council could provide penalties for any breach in connection with this section has been deleted.

Amendment number 17 deals with section 23. This is an entirely new section and provides for the transmitting of reports of investigating committees to the provincial attorneys general for such action as is deemed necessary. The next amendment, number 18, deals with section 24. This is a new section and provides that the accused in any action as above may demand trial by jury. Amendment number 19 deals with section 25 and provides that the minister must file annually with parliament a report of all proceedings taken under the investigating sections. This is entirely new. Amendment number 20 deals with section 26. This is a new section which declares that if any section of the act is found to be beyond the powers of parliament, it shall not affect the remaining provisions thereof. This is one of the very few amendments proposed by the government itself.

With the "less important" and "unimportant" amendments, there are 29 in all. I think it should be noted that not one single amendment has been suggested by what we know as the C.C.F'ers. They were in favour of the bill just as it was brought down. I do not include the United Farmers of Alberta when I refer to the C.C.F'ers because they, the former, have renounced them. This is an example of the delightful harmony we find between the different portions of the far C.C.F. corner. They can dispense hot air by the barrel full but when it comes to helping the government to improve this bill, of which they said they approved, the results have been nil. Perhaps I should exempt the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman). That hon. gentleman says he is not a member of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and he has made a valuable suggestion in connection with this bill, but I do not know whether he made it before I did or not.

There are one or two other members who made suggestions with regard to organization grants. The government of which I was a member made the first valuable contribution by way of an organization grant to the Cooperative Live Stock Marketing Association. The first year in 1928 this grant was $5,000; the second year, it was $10,000, and the third year it was $20,000. This splendid live stock cooperation agency went along fine until 1931, when the present government deliberately killed that institution by withholding the grant when Great Britain went off the gold standard. With the loss on the pound sterling and with no grant this great institution was simply stricken amidships and went down under the blow. If some hon. member referred to this question of organization grants before your humble servant did, the fact remains that the government of which I had the honour to be a member, was the first to act upon this policy away back in 1928.

As much as I would like to follow all these amendments up to the last I have not the time, so I will mention the twenty-ninth and if nobody objects I would like to give the intervening ones to Hansard.

21. Section 5, subsection 5 (b), provides that when scheme submitted it must say if a poll is desired.

22. Section 6, subsection 2, deleted the words "body politic" before the word "corporate."

23. Section 10 does away with the right of the dominion board to authorize a marketing board set up under provincial legislation to collect charges or tolls because such right is included in new section 4, subsections 6 and 7.

24. Section 11 allows dominion board to confer upon a local board any power given it by a provincial act. This is necessary because new section 4 limits the powers the dominion board may delegate to those contained in that section.

25. Section 17, by inserting the words "or regulated" merely makes that section conform to section 16.

26, 27, 28. Sections 18, 19 and 22 are amended to make them conform to the wording of 16 and 17 with reference to natural and regulated products.

29. Section 21 is amended to make it necessary to publish within thirty days after the minister has received the same the report of the investigating committee. The original act did not state within what time such report must be published.

I think my right hon. leader had something to do with that too. It may surprise some hon. members if this marketing act should not be and indeed was preceded by another act, a very necessary prerequisite to this marketing bill. I will not ask the house to accept my statement on that; I will refer to Major Elliot, Minister of Agriculture for Great Britain. I have no doubt my good friend the minister expects some day when this bill goes through to be the minister of agriculture in Canada representing the same position that Major Elliot represents in Great Britain namely, that he is the pioneer in Canada of the idea of quotas, turning on the tap for larger or smaller quotas according to the requirements of the occasion. I do not, however, know about that; I do not want to see anybody play the DeValera for Canada in our relationship to Great Britain, and that is what I am afraid will be the result. Let me read what Major Elliot says about the prerequisites to a marketing act:

> Agriculture, at home and abroad, is recognizing the urgent need for an improved marketing technique and is setting out in diverse ways to obtain it.

In two main directions is reform being pursued—in the direction of standardization and in that of organization, the latter in order not merely to implement the former but to enable producers, by a combination of their man-power and, if they so desire, of their produce-power and their money-power, to control effectively the marketing end of their business and enjoy equal opportunity with other highly organized groups in the industrial community.

Major Elliot divides this into two distinct subdivisions: standardization of product and then the marketing thereof. Surely it is within the memory of almost every hon. member that for eight and a half years the Liberal government, headed by my right hon. leader, spent a great deal of their time in standardization of farm products from one end of Canada to the other. That is the great prerequisite to a marketing proposal. During that period where were hon. gentlemen opposite? Their most effective harpooner, the then leader of the opposition, was looking for my short ribs half of the time. Where were the birds to my left who are presumed to represent agriculture? They were in the same category for the first four years; after that they came to the conclusion that maybe this was all right and many of them so signified. But some of my best measures were left on the order paper to die there because I could not get the support of those who were then in opposition either official or unofficial, or a sufficient number on any side. One of those measures was the Hay and Straw Act which in 1929 fell thus by the wayside, which some two years ago I had the pleasure of assisting my hon. friend to put through.

Major Elliot continues:

Standardization is a fundamental principle of our modern commercial system.

So this foundation upon which this marketing bill is built, was laid by the former Liberal government. I am taking, not my definition but that of Major Elliot of the close relationship between standardization and marketing. Let me read another paragraph of what he says:

The commercial advantages of standardization are well known and need not be repeated here. In this country, as elsewhere, legislation has proved to be necessary to put the standardization of farm produce on a national basis. Here, it has taken the form of the Agricultural Produce (Grading and Marketing) Acts, 1928 and 1931.

We were almost through with our grading and standardizing policy under the preceding Liberal government by the time Great Britain started; we were a lap ahead of even the mother country in the standardization of farm products, as over there they are only now at some of that work.

Now comes the marketing bill. Because my hon. friends opposite through this bill build upon our Liberal foundation, am I going to refuse to accept it in accordance with the stand I took on the second reading? I am not going to proclaim exactly at this stage how I am going to vote on the third reading division, if I can avoid doing so. But I will try to present the facts. The measure was such a Tory distortion of Liberal principles and so contrary to what the farmers asked for that one could easily take one side or the other and yet justify one's position. Major Elliot continues:

So the time has come to develop further the policy to which successive governments have already contributed and prepare to rebuild the whole organizational structure of our agricultural marketing.

He points out that the first prerequisite was to get standardization. I will leave it to the house and to the country whether the Liberal government have not done that. Consequently, with all these amendments made to this measure largely at the instance of the Liberal opposition and the producers, we have given to the country the first prerequisite of a marketing act. I can and I do claim that the first principle of this bill as now amended, defaced as it is by some Tory distortions that have been thrown in, is now, built upon Liberal foundations already cited, and is really Liberal if such few distortions were eliminated. That is what it is, even after these amendments have been made, but some of the distortions, the Tory excrescences that I abominate, are still there. What shall I do in an emergency of that nature? Heaven help me that I may make the right choice, because it is not an easy one. This report to the Minister of Agriculture which I hold in my hand, and which I will read will confirm my statement. One is on pretty strong grounds when one reads something from official reports as I have been doing and propose to do. This is the report of Doctor J. F. Booth, commissioner of farm economics, to his minister, the Minister of Agriculture. On page 222 thereof, I find under the subhead of "Farmers' Business Organizations" the following. I hope the house will bear with me because this is very important and if it means anything, it means—well, that it is favourable to this bill. But coming as it does from this intermediary Tory source, one can come to another conclusion if one wants to. It reads:

Records and statistics properly tabulated and summarized form the basis for investigation and comparative analysis in economic research. From a national standpoint Canada is without this ground work for a study of farmers' business organizations. It is true that considerable work has been accomplished by provincial and federal bodies in collecting and presenting facts on cooperative organizations in Canada. The information available, however, does not present us with a complete picture of business organization among farmers throughout the dominion or permit of research and analysis which it is generally agreed should be undertaken. At the time the branch was instituted—

That was about 1928.

—it was understood that cooperative marketing would receive consideration. With this in view plans were made to obtain the basic information necessary to a comprehensive program of research and service.

Next comes a paragraph that I would rather skip, but I can read it if anybody thinks I am garbling the report. He goes on:

With the assistance of provincial registrars and from various other sources a list of farmers' business organizations in Canada has been prepared. On this list there is a total of 1,759 associations. In response to a first request for information 737 or 42 per cent of the solicited organizations replied. This has been followed up by a second request in some provinces and where necessary the associations will be circularized a third time.

In the study of farmers' business organizations special attention will be given to financial analysis. If such organizations are going to develop and endure they must withstand scrutiny of the same nature as private business. Certain tests well known in business practice are applied. Other problems to which the branch is giving attention are uniformity in financial statements, type and method of organization, raising of funds, credit operations. A central bureau of records of this kind will permit a study of business practices which include financing, price and sales policies and advertising. The scope of this work naturally extends to the operations of marketing agencies and distribution costs. Legal phases, membership and contractual relations present problems, all of which have a bearing on the development of farmers' business organizations, local or national in character. Continuity of work over a period of years and especially covering this period of economic stress should be significant and of considerable historical value.

In addition to the survey of farmers' business organizations the branch is endeavouring to obtain a complete and up-to-date record of all other agricultural organizations. A listing of this nature will include the non-commercial organizations such as fruit growers and live stock improvement associations. The index compiled at the present time contains over 400 societies with names of officers, membership affiliations and other information. When the records for the dominion as a whole are completed and the bureau becomes fully established the branch will provide a directory and may be in position to act as a consulting agency for farmers' organizations and those interested in their development.

That is what the Liberal government of that day had in mind in establishing the economic branch, so that it would be a centre, a directory, a registration and advisory retreat to which all such organizations as this could rally from one end of Canada to the other. It is said that Doctor Booth is slated to be one of the central board. If that be so, then he will act in a double capacity, he will be head of the economic branch and a member of the board, and will have a double opportunity of tying up voluntarily this great organization from one end of Canada to the other in one centre. I can imagine the valuable advice that such a board or directory could have given in years past when great farm movements, economic and educational, were wrecked one after another by going into politics. We saw the old Grangers, that came from the United States in the early 70's, twenty years afterwards totally wrecked on the rocks of commerce mixed with politics. Look at the same movement of which I had the honour to be the first president in 1901, that started out as an educational body, non-political and non-commercial; it stayed that way for five years, and then in 1919 gravitated into politics. The itch for power, the thirst for this kind of adventure was strong, and after certain years of successful service they wanted to get into politics, against which, of course, there is no law. Politics and commerce, however, do not seem to work together, they never have. I wish I had time to read some of the platform of the old Grange movement that started out so nobly and ended so disastrously in the form of the Patrons of Industry twenty years afterwards. I can count more than one movement of the same kind. In the case of the one I know so well, the old Grain Growers' Association, as long as your humble servant was president and Hon. R. S. Lake vice-president both politics and commerce of a purchasing nature were kept out. But the day came when some arose "who knew not Joseph," and that great farmers' organization drifted into the same evil that had wrecked the Patrons of Industry, nearly thirty years previously. Of course, they have the right to do it if they want to, but we cannot keep up our commercial end successfully if we are jumping into the political end at the same time. We are in danger of that at this very minute. If that is the desirable thing, why should the C.C.F. support this bill, as it is neither state socialism, or production for use and not for profit? We have therefore a rallying centre in the capital; we the former Liberal government established it ourselves in the economic branch to make it a source of advice for all who would seek it on any phase whatever of their activities. If we had had access to the central board or the economic branch through all the past years do you think that such racketeers as Aaron Shapiro could have paralyzed and bedevilled the cooperative agricultural activities of this country and this continent as he did? He could not. But farmers in their difficulties and distress will sometimes listen to the wiles of the devil himself.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear. They are!

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They do in Melville!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When people are in trouble and anyone throws them any kind of life-line they grab at it. Shapiro was the quintessence of hypocrisy, delusion and racketeering. Who was going to advise these newly organized units as long as they were spread abroad on the face of the earth with no centre to converge on? They had such a centre under our Liberal government in the economic branch as I have just referred to. That is one of the reasons why I take the ground that I have taken with respect to this bill. It may be asked, Why did we not start a marketing board? We were fighting a sister dominion—Australia—because they were shooting the objectionable phases of a marketing board onto Canada under the "Patterson" plan. We did not believe in passing on those objectionable phases to the mother country, at that time at all events. We gave evidence of our desire to promote marketing proposals by starting up the Cooperative Live Stock Producers in the manner I have described, a first class commission organization at first and then an equally first class export organization until the casualty that occurred to it because of the gross neglect of this government.

Now I might say more. I think I have ten minutes yet. I should like to devote a little of that time to my hon. friends on my left, the C.C.F'ers. It is a strange thing that on the second reading of this bill I found myself in company with these birds over here. Well, you cannot always choose your associates. If I think a thing is right I have to stand by it; I am not going to run away because someone else also thinks it is right. I was thinking of the ghastly company that I was in, a most excruciating experience from both directions. But, Mr. Speaker, I have recently been looking over the history of reforms, and this is a reform bill but in bad company. It is in the hands of foster parents, I admit, and they naturally make a mess of it. But what was the history of reform bills in the early part of last century, who finally had to espouse them, after opposing them to the uttermost at the beginning? What about Tory Peel? What about Tory Disraeli? They stayed Tories but they took up the Liberal program embodied in the reform bills and free trade. Was it not so with Gladstone also, only he remained Liberal. Bright and Cobden undoubtedly were the authors of free trade, but the previous Tory, Gladstone came over and supported it, because it grew so popular. The last straw that turned the tide was the potato famine in Ireland, a small thing in a way but terrible in Ireland, but it helped to concentrate and crystallize public sentiment and bring about free trade. So here we have our friends on the other side performing the same stunt as Peel and Disraeli, just walking off with the other fellow's clothes. They still fit me in some particulars. I want some of the distortions taken out, some more of the Tory plumage taken off if possible. But my C.C.F. hon. friends over here are full of an abundance of hot air and heifer dust; that is about all they deal in, not having contributed one iota for the benefit of this bill, and their leader is parading around the country asking the people to flock to his standard. We have the Coldwells in Saskatchewan, the Philpotts and the whatnots in Ontario. What are they doing? Just shooting hot air with not one practical idea behind it. Here in amending this bill, they were given an opportunity to display some of their knowledge and ability, to do something but talk, but they failed utterly.

I seem to have covered quite a bit of ground, but there is one thing more. On the second reading unfortunately I had to vote differently from nearly all of my party, but I do not consider that there was anything contradictory as between my attitude and that of my leader. The duty of a leader is to have a much wider vision than that of a humble follower. The duty of a leader as I see it is not only to represent one great occupation but to represent all occupations in Canada, producers and consumers. There is absolutely no recognition of consumers in this bill. The duty of a leader is not only to represent all Canada and all businesses and occupations in Canada but to recognize the rights and interests of all the units of the British commonwealth and the relationships of Canada, especially commercial, with the rest of the world. That is the attitude that must be taken by the great leader of a great party, and I would not have my right hon. leader take any other position. On the other hand the scope of my duty as I see it, is relatively circumscribed. I represent a rural constituency. I do not say that I always consult them; I have to assume that they expect me to do my duty as I see it and explain to them later. When you are two thousand miles away you cannot rush to your constituency for this, that or the other thing; it takes us all our time to understand what we are discussing here, without trying to impart it to others at every stage of development. By virtue of my position in the preceding government, however, I am compelled to consider the producers and farmers generally, the growers as we call them on the Pacific, if there is any preference to be given to anyone. I gladly do that, though I hope I am broad enough to recognize the principle that you cannot do full justice to the producers without giving fair consideration to the consumers as well, and that has been my position. There is nothing contradictory or incompatible in a leader expressing a different position from that of a humble follower. Those positions are entirely different, as I have stated. I make these remarks in reference to the second reading of this bill, in reply to one or two letters I have received expressing regret that I could not maintain the entity of the party and vote against the second reading of the bill.

I think this is a sufficiently important occasion to speak for my full forty minutes, but just to show that I am not unnecessarily taking up time I will conclude by saying that I do not intend to make any pronouncement as to the way I will vote either on any possible amendment or on the third reading of the bill. I do not know whether in my desire not to do so or in my anxiety to show my interest in the whole matter I may have crossed my wires and already revealed how I am going to vote, but if I have done so you will understand the reason. I have decided to reserve my decision until the actual vote is taken, whether it be on an amendment or otherwise. I only decided that at the very last moment; my few notes were based upon another assumption to be revealed later.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, after the storms in committee and the various discords passed away I had the feeling that the third reading might be an occasion of harmony and amity, on which the whole house might get together to advise the farmers of this country to make the best of an act which affords them some opportunity.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Because of that feeling I shall not traverse at any length the ground covered by the last speaker, the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), nor shall I enter into a discussion of the relative attitudes of those in this corner of the house and those whom he represents in relation to this bill. As to the attitude of those in this corner, including myself, I think I shall leave it to Hansard, to this house and to the farmers of this country to decide as to whether we do not occupy a reasonably fair position in respect to our attitude, in the contributions we may have made, in our understanding of the problems and of the bill itself, as compared with my hon. friends to my right. I sympathized with the ex-Minister of Agriculture when he was reluctantly forced to associate himself with us for once in supporting a measure brought in by a Conservative government. I think perhaps if any argument were required, that is the last and final argument in favour of this bill. It shows that even he, driven between two contrary winds and tides, was forced by his own knowledge of the situation and his own inherent sympathy for the farmer to support that which, as he said, he felt was a move in the right direction, even though in doing so he had to associate with those whom I have mentioned.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not say that; I said the C.C.F., and my hon. friend is not one of those.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The organization to which I belong has associated itself with the C.C.F.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I took particular pains to single out my hon. friend in my remarks.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I merely point out that the association to which I belong, which the minister was so careful to mention, has joined the other association to which he has referred. I, of course, was elected as a United Farmers of Alberta member, and I am subject to the action taken by that association. However, that is mostly by the way. I had no intention of entering into any competition, nor indeed had I any intention of referring to hot air, though in passing I might remark that a perusal of the pages of Hansard might induce some people, even those who have not had the pleasure of sitting in this house during part of the debate, to believe that all the hot air that came from this side of the house was not confined to the southeast corner.

This bill has been described and may be looked upon as a radical departure from customary methods. In some respects that is so, but I agree with the ex-Minister of Agriculture that it follows in logical sequence the actions taken in prior years and by former ministers, and may I say in particular by the ex-Minister of Agriculture for whom, in spite of some of his strictures, I entertain the highest regard as having been one of the best ministers of agriculture this country has seen. To my mind there were three definite stages through which to pass, three definite steps to be taken in sequence, and to have taken a step like this before the other two steps had been taken, before the foundation had been laid, would have been impossible. The first step, of course, was the work carried on by the different departments of agriculture and by various farm bodies through experimental farms, through research, through education and so on, to improve the quality and kind of the various farm products. Obviously it is useless to establish a marketing act unles you have a suitable type of product to market. Then followed that long sequence of inspection and grading acts which have not only graded, divided and regulated the products themselves but have accustomed the farmers to inspection, regulation, grading and control, and have disabused their minds of that impression perhaps formerly held, that any individual can of his own volition and without regard to marketing conditions and to his fellowmen produce just exactly that class and kind of stuff which he himself would like to produce. They have learned that they must, for their own good and for the common good, defer to law and as I say, subject themselves, to regulation, inspection and control of all kinds. Had it not been for that they would not now be ready to accept the bill before the house. I say at this point that while this is a new step and a most important step, it would be impossible were it not for the work done in former years by former ministers. It is a combination of that work,—the most important, but unable to stand by itself.

Now, as we come to the bill itself as amended may I express my pleasure and gratification concerning certain of the amendments which have been made. I believe I have studied the bill as carefully as any other private member, and I am unable to see that in essence the main principles of the bill have been affected. What has been done is to clarify many points suggested, but suggested in so vague a manner as to be capable of complete misapprehension and complete misinterpretation. I refer to such matters as the ability and right of the producers organizations to carry on pooling projects. I think that would have been embraced in the presentation of a scheme, but for their satisfaction and to place the matter beyond doubt I believe it was necessary that the conditions should be placed clearly and specifically in the bill. Then, I might mention others,—the ability of the board to designate the agency through which the marketing might be carried on. This again is made clear beyond doubt, that if the producers have formed their pools and wish to operate through such pools as their agencies, such agencies may be designated as the agencies through which marketing shall be carried on. And so it leaves the way clearly open for each producers' organization to organize so as to market and to handle its own affairs in the way it deems best and which experience has taught it to be wisest.

The bill itself is, of course, stringent—and to my mind it must be so. In my view one of the most fatal mistakes in a bill of this kind would have been to endow the board in the first instance with too narrow powers, and to restrict it in its operations. We are entering a new field, a field where new problems will be encountered, some of which are unforeseen at the present time. It is a field which will be subject to the changing conditions not only in this but in other countries, and to my mind it is essential for the success of the bill, the success of the board and the success of the whole program that from the commencement the board shall be endowed with sufficient powers, wide and strong, to meet those eventualities as they may arise. I am glad to see that this has been done, and that the legislation does and will include within its scope almost any essential action which must be taken to relieve the situation now existing among the producers of Canada.

There are points in the bill to which, under ordinary circumstances and had we been living in a world as it was in former years, I should have taken strong exception. For instance, I should have taken exception to the powers to control exports and imports. But as I look around the world to-day and as we all look around the world to-day and note the actual conditions which exist and which apparently will exist for years to come I find I cannot take that exception, because once the nations of the world have launched themselves upon that course of attempted self-sufficiency, no matter how unsuitable the climate or conditions—once they have launched themselves upon that course it will take years before they can possibly retrace their steps. In the world in which we must live, a world which has been described to us by a man of great experience as one in which Great Britain remains the one country offering reasonable opportunity for the sale of our farm products in a world where tariffs have become the least part of restriction, and where absolute prohibition, licensing of imports and the most strict application of the quota system is applied in almost every one of the great European countries which at one time had relatively open markets—in this world we must realize forcibly that through this board we must have the power to regulate and absolutely to control the export of goods in order that we may meet existing conditions.

The condition as regards imports may not be as obvious, but may I point this out to hon. gentlemen. Assuming that the bill does all that we hope it will do; assuming that we succeed in the coming years in raising prices to a reasonable level—I am not speaking about exorbitant prices, but I am referring to stabilizing prices and freeing them from those seasonal and most calamitous price fluctuations and thereby establishing the farmer upon a reasonable and suitable basis—what will be the result? The result will be that during times when the outside world market is at a lower level than our own market we will be subjected to a flooding into this country of those similar goods from other countries seeking markets, countries the goods of which had been debarred from other markets and who see in Canada the Eldorado of their dreams. Having taken these steps and having undergone such sacrifice in arranging our own price level, would it be possible for us to leave our market completely open to be shattered and brought to naught at any time by the importations from other countries? To my mind it is essential, if eventually we are to succeed, that there must be some provision whereby we may stop those importations at times when they would demoralize and break our own markets.

It is not for the good of the consumer that the producer of this country should be put out of business. That is one point I should like to impress upon those hon. gentlemen whose chief concern—and laudable concern—is for the consumers. They speak of restriction; they speak of the possibility of having scarcity instead of plenty. I say there is nothing which will more easily bring about potential and actual scarcity than to continue as we are, expecting the producers to bring forward their crops produced at a loss. They cannot and they will not continue in that way. It would be far better for the consumers to have a steady flow of products at reasonable prices and at prices which can be depended upon to be maintained from one year's end to another than to be subject to this overwhelming probability that some time or some day under conditions as they are, unless remedied, the producers may simply cease to produce. Under such conditions where would the consumer be? Then he would see soaring prices, and he would see real scarcity. To my mind in protecting the producers who, alone, constitute almost fifty per cent of the consumers, and in enabling them to organize, to stabilize, to regulate and to place their own business upon a sane and satisfactory basis, we are affording the best guarantee for the future prosperity and future welfare of the rest of Canada.

Because of these things, Mr. Speaker, I welcomed the bill at its inception. Along with others, I had visions of such a bill years ago; I know that the Minister of Agriculture had, and certainly many of us had. I regret that it took so long to work out the measure, to meet conditions and to introduce the bill. I should liked to have seen it working now. I realize that the bill cannot be perfect. As I said before, and as has been stated by many hon. members, we are venturing into that which for this country is a new field and a new venture. There is nothing in this world, save experience alone, which will teach us just where the rocks and quicksands may lie, which will teach us exactly what difficulties we may have to encounter, or which will teach us exactly what measures may have to be taken in order to meet those difficulties. So I do not expect this to be a perfect bill any more than I would expect a new-born child to go out and do a day's work in the hayfields. That requires development; the child must grow up. But I do say this, that in my opinion, and I am giving it for what it is worth, and in the opinion of almost every farmer in my province who has communicated with me upon the subject, this bill does afford a hope. It does provide the initial machinery. It does make it possible for us to go forward and improve in the doing. Because of these things I give this bill the same support on the third reading that I gave it on the second, that I gave it in committee and that I have given it at all times.

May I suggest this to the house? There are two essentials upon which the work to be done under this bill will absolutely depend for its success. First is the cooperation among the producers, the working together by the producers under the terms of this bill. I suggest to the house that if this bill affords some opportunity to the producers to do this thing, it is the duty of this house to encourage them to do so. That is one reason, Mr. Speaker, why I have always spoken and argued in its favour. I realize some of its weaknesses, but I realize too that unless we can give to the farmers who are to benefit from this measure some feeling of encouragement, some hope that the bill is worth while, some feeling that it affords them an opportunity, we could not expect it to succeed nor could it succeed. I would like to see the united opinion of this house behind this bill, but that seems impossible. I sincerely hope to see a reasonably united opinion among the farmers that they will make the best use possible of this measure which is here provided and of acts to a similar effect which have been or will be passed in the various provinces.

There is just one other thought, and with that I shall conclude. The success of this bill again will depend, as is the case with all other bills of this nature, upon its administration. You can have a good bill badly administered and it will come to nothing. You can have a bill that affords opportunities for good or ill, such as this bill does, and if it is properly administered by men with the right viewpoint it will succeed. So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the two essentials are an understanding cooperation on the part of the farmers and a sympathetic and efficient administration by the boards. With those two essentials present, I believe that this bill will start us in the proper way and enable us to say that something has been done, that an advancement has been made towards raising the lot of the producer to that level where we should like to see it.

No one imagines that this bill by itself is a cure-all. No one would be so foolish. Personally I agree with those who feel that before we can have conditions as they should be we must deal radically—no matter who may not like that word—with the whole financial question and with the application of finance to our daily vocation. May I suggest this also, that supposing we have a financial system equal to the wildest dreams of the most extreme visionary, even then if you are to have parity between one class and another, if you are to have a system that will work fairly smoothly, you must have an organization of those classes that work. You must have organization of producers in an organized world, and action along the lines of this bill would be essential no matter under what system we worked. Because of these things, Mr. Speaker, I can only hope that the bill will be a success, that its objects will be achieved.

I express further the hope that every farmers' organization and every producer in the country will come together to do what they can do under the terms of this bill, no matter what weaknesses they may find in it, in order to improve their own lot.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I ask the hon. member a question? Having in mind that fifty per cent of the people of Canada are primary producers, as the hon. member himself has admitted, does he think this bill will bring about the result which he hopes for, namely, to raise the price level of the product, say, of the wheat farmer?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I expressed myself in committee and on former occasions—

Mr. VALLANCE: I asked a question.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: And I was going to answer it, but perhaps the hon. gentleman will permit me to answer it in my own way. I have already expressed the opinion that wheat differed in its problems from any other product. I expressed the opinion that wheat would be better dealt with under a federal wheat board constituted to deal solely with that product, but I expressed the further opinion that so long as that was not done, wheat should come within the purview of this bill in order that the producers of wheat might do what they could under its provisions. I say quite frankly to the hon. member that so long as world conditions remain as they are, so long as we have an overhanging surplus of wheat, I doubt very much whether any action taken by this country alone can raise the price of wheat very materially above what would be world prices.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) has expressed the wish that this bill should find the united support of this house. I am sorry indeed to have to say to him that his wish cannot be met either in this house or, still less, in the country.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) has complained that he did not receive constructive criticism from most of the members of the house while this bill was being discussed in committee. Yet although he states he did not receive constructive criticism, he has himself seen the need of amending the bill in thirty-three instances, which shows the great need there was for changes.

For my part, and this is the first time I have spoken on this measure, I have been opposed to this bill ever since it was introduced. I have been waiting. I was absolutely sure that it was impossible to improve it in a way that could have made it acceptable at least to myself. I am opposed to the whole measure, to its principle, to the new changes which it involves, to the directions towards which it tends. I think that in normal times some of the members of this house who are supporting this bill would view it with great repugnance, would perhaps repel it with horror. Even my friend from Red Deer said in one part of his remarks that in normal times he would be strongly opposed to some of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In times which formerly were apparently normal times.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, what is the difference? Of course the economic depression has made people suffer in such a tremendous way that many have become despondent and their normal resistance to measures which are arbitrary and authoritarian seems to have weakened. But let me tell my hon. friend that this bill is not merely for an emergency situation. Let me say to the members of the house generally that this bill is going to be the law of Canada for all time to come unless and until it is repealed by parliament. It is not there at all as an emergency. We are making a leap in the dark. During this discussion many hon. members have described this measure as an experiment. Why make the experiment at the expense of the primary producer or the farmer? The great danger in bad times is to force the acceptance of poor remedies. Sometimes these remedies instead of curing the disease, make it worse. During the course of his remarks, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) referred to the dislocation which had taken place in agriculture and our economic life. If that dislocation is not helped by this measure, will he advocate more drastic remedies? Many of us think that it cannot be a success but is he sure that these restrictions will not hamper the producer instead of helping him? After all, this bill will bring about restrictions which will hamper the freedom of action of the producer.

Planned marketing is a theory, but farmers do not live on theories. I represent a constituency which is made up mostly of consumers, but although there is nothing in this bill to protect the consumer, I do not want to discuss it from a class viewpoint. I was raised and brought up in a farming community and it is the point of view of that class which I want to lay before the house. The depression has hit the farmer in a most terrible way. He has seen the prices of his products go down while his cost of production did not decrease proportionately. We must admit that our whole fiscal system bears heavily against the farmer. He must bear the greater burden than he ought to be made to bear. His operations are determined by the seasons and the weather conditions. His is a risky work; his goods are perishable and he must dispose of them within a certain period of time. But after all, I think he is the best judge of when and how to dispose of them, a much better judge than any board, whether federal, provincial or local.

Agriculture is a highly individualized occupation. It is an industry which is conducted on a smaller scale than any other. It is diversified and must take into account such conditions as I referred to a moment ago. I submit that a complicated system of prohibitions, of limitations and of interferences will not help the plight of the farmer. We are all in favour of anything which will assist the farmer and educate him. The world has entered into what seems to be an era of cooperation but except in a few countries, to which I shall allude in a moment, this cooperation is voluntary and respects the personal will and liberty of the farmer. Reference has been made to the work of the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and he has been praised by hon. gentlemen on the other side. A minute ago the hon. member for Red Deer praised his work but the whole basis of cooperation in connection with that work was voluntary and not compulsion.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Might I—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would be obliged to my hon. friend if he would allow me to proceed. I admit that I am not enamoured with the phrase "compulsory cooperation" which I have heard used by so many hon. members during this debate. It is a contradiction of terms.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): One of its advocates sits immediately beside the hon. member, the former Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not agree with my hon. friend; does my hon. friend refer to the former Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am afraid so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I must differ from the former Minister of Agriculture on this. I repeat that compulsory cooperation is a contradiction of terms. It is something like virtuous vice; it is something like benevolent tyranny; it is something like diabolic sanctity; it is more like Liberal Conservatism.

An hon. MEMBER: Liberal Progressives.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: These hyphenated names always get into trouble.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I believe that governments are not the best qualified bodies to handle merchandizing or marketing. These things should be left to private initiative. The experience of the past shows that there has always been failure when this had been tried, whether in cotton, in wheat, in coffee or anything else. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has referred to the old shibboleths —many people like to use this term—of supply and demand. The free encounter of seller and buyer, competitive prices, the decision as to markets and as to the raising or lowering of prices have always proved to be and I believe always will prove to be in the future a better regulator of human energy than any board, whether national or provincial. I do not believe in price control, in heavy restrictions and in artificial scarcity. I believe in freedom even if it brings me the sneering comments of some of my hon. friends to my extreme left. Many arbitrary and undemocratic measures have been enacted not only in this country but in the world. We are starting now under the disguise of planning. That word "planning" seems now to cover everything. Everybody becomes a planner; even the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) has become a planner and after having asked me the whole summer of last year whether I was going to the right or to the left, I wonder whither he is going now?

Mr. HANBURY: He is up in the air.

Mr. McINTOSH: He is in the air.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He was the lay reader for the bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Where, after all, did this wonderful planning start? It started in Russia, extended to Italy and finally Germany caught the infection.

Mr. MacINNIS: And British Columbia.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will deal with my hon. friend in a minute.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Under a Liberal government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I see it is my hon. friends to my left who do not like my remarks. I am surprised at that. I will ask them to use their patience for a little while.

Of course the Russian communists went further than most of the planners in other countries. They abolished all private capitalism. They took charge of all imports and exports, hours of work, all conditions, everything exactly like conditions governing soldiers and sailors elsewhere. They organized a big planning unit in Russia, the head being at Moscow and extending to every remote part of the territory. They called it the All Union Planning Commission. They had a national planning commission at Moscow, a planning commission in every one of the seven what they call constitutive republics of the soviet, and also one in every one of the thirty so-called autonomous republics of the union. Then there was one in every little section and territory but all welded into a big whole, working under the direction of the state. Under this system Russia has become a trading unit, and if the system is a success, Russia will be the greatest trading corporation in the world. Of course it shoots any peasants or old-fashioned people who do not believe in being planned in that way. Our own bill is a mere kindergarten compared with the planning of Russia. Here they satisfy themselves with misrepresenting those who oppose the bill.

In Italy a different method was adopted. There they did not do away altogether with private ownership, but they organized the state into many corporations, guilds, also all under a commission of their own and welded into a unit, the result being that at least part of the individual freedom of the subject is taken away.

In Germany the system is still in an immature state and cannot be fully appreciated and criticised. It is still subject to variation according to the whims of the restless chancellor. But one thing certain is that there is always an armed policeman pretty near representing the chancellor and there to see that the planning is well done and observed by everybody. Sir Norman Angell, speaking of those various dictatorships, said that they represent the psychology of the lynching party. Whatever my friends to my left may think about my views these are things that I cannot swallow and that as a Liberal I shall never digest.

Last year it was my privilege to be invited to a debate held at Hart House by the debating society of the university of Toronto. It was being conducted under parliamentary rules; there was the government on one side and the opposition on the other. I was defending Liberalism along with two of the students of the university against three opponents. The debate was a very interesting one of course until I spoke, but one thing which I remember and which I thought was rather bold when it was stated at the time but which seems to me now rather reasonable, was this: of course in the university there is a strong element of those who do not recognize either the Liberal or the Conservative party as their affiliation; they are Fabians, Marxists, communists, C.C.F.'s and many other denominations. We did not know which way they would vote and the Conservative debaters made an appeal to them, telling them that after all Tory policy and communist policy are both based upon the same theory, both based upon the interference of the state in the private business of the citizen. They offered along those lines a strong argument which I had some difficulty to repel successfully. We, however, won the day.

Mr. MANION: You should have won it after an argument like that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I see. That is why in this house certain associations on this bill may not be so queer as they look when we first see them. Heaven forbid that I say about my friends to my extreme left what their new associates were saying about them last year and for the last two years in my province. They were wrong when they were saying that, but I know my hon. friends will not say I am unfair when I state that they are more to the left than we are. They represent a more extreme left than we do. We are witnessing a union of the extreme right and the extreme left on this bill. It was noticeable during the speech of the hon. member for South Vancouver (Mr. MacInnis); he was pleased to quote the words, many of them, of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) and he said: That is our doctrine; that is exactly what we promulgated at our conference in Regina last year. I admit I was surprised to find these two gentlemen standing side by side.

Mr. DORION: Not exactly.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, it will be for my hon. friend to try to extricate himself from this embrace. But coming back to the hon. member for South Vancouver, he said something to which I wish to allude. He said: "Hon. gentlemen to my right are speaking all the time of liberty and freedom, and it gives me a pain in the neck." Well, sir, I must tell my hon. friend that I am a Liberal, and I still believe in liberty and freedom, freedom of association, freedom of speech and freedom of exchange, even if it gives him a pain anywhere in his anatomy.

I want to refer to the stand taken by the Labour opposition in Great Britain as to the marketing act of last year. Of course the word "planning" was borrowed by Mr. Elliot from Mr. Cole. They approved of the principle of the bill, and I am not surprised at that. But they moved an amendment that all lands should be nationalized, because they said that it is the logical conclusion.

Mr. HANBURY: So it is.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is only piecemeal planning that you are doing; their stand was for the nationalization of the land. I shall quote from an article of the Right Hon. Doctor C. Addison, M.P., one of the leaders of the Labour party, stating what their aims are with regard to that marketing act. He says:

> The powers that would require to be taken would be these:
> (1) Power to conduct purchases and control supply and distribution on national account, as far as necessary.
> (2) Power to control the prices and the charges of distribution.
> (3) Power to ascertain costs and to fix fair prices.

And for the long term policy the powers that would be required are:

> (1) Power to plan land development.
> (2) Power to give effect to the plan by possessing.
> (a) Power to make the best and wisest use of the land;
> (b) Power over prices, including marketing, distribution and costs right down to the consumer; and
> (c) Ability to create the machinery for securing the progressive development of the plan.

Mr. Cole, who is a Labour authority in the matter, in an article entitled Planning International Trade, does not like the planned economy under capitalist conditions. He says:

> What is doubtful is whether a planned economy introduced under capitalist conditions can possibly so establish itself in face of the powerful vested interests with which it will have to deal as to exercise the degree of control over the use of national resources necessary to afford a sure foundation for a system of internally planned production and trade.

And further:

> Under such conditions national planning will lead, not to the regime of plenty which is now well within the world's grasp in view of its greatly expanded productive power, but to a perpetuation of scarcity, and to the shutting up of each developed country more and more behind a wall of economic nationalism, save to the extent to which the stronger countries are able by the methods of economic imperialism to force their way into the markets of the weaker and reduce the smaller countries to the position of satellites.

I should like to read more of Mr. Cole's article, but time does not permit.

Of course the socialist opposition there accepted with great cheerfulness all the new methods of dealing with the constitution, orders in council, minister, officials and boards being substituted for the authority of parliament. On May 29, 1932, in the report stage of the agricultural marketing bill, Sir Herbert Samuel moved an amendment to omit a clause providing that:

—the making of an order in pursuance of this section shall be conclusive evidence that the requirements of this act have been complied with.

The Labour party did not vote against it; they were delighted with the provision. What did Sir Stafford Cripps say? I quote:

This is an excellent precedent, which will be followed widely in the future, and seems to us in every way to be desired. We shall be delighted when on future occasions (as ministers) we have to draw the attention of hon. members opposite to the excellence of the precedent.

Again, on July 5, 1933, when an order made under the Import Duties Act was being discussed, Sir Stafford Cripps on behalf of the Labour party said:

We desire to put it upon record decisively that this is a mode of procedure which, if we get the opportunity, we shall adopt in an increasing measure. ... We hope we shall be able to utilize it for just such measures as the transference of the national wealth from one lot of people to another.

Nothing can better serve the purposes of those who desire to break away from the constitution and not be hampered by its provisions than this bill. I do not mean to suggest that all who favour the bill would favour the implications which I suggest. They certainly would protest against anything which would operate exclusively along the lines I have mentioned, but we are entering on the road which leads in that direction.

The most perfectly planned society is an army. All the fascist and communist countries have organized their planned economy on a military basis and along military lines—l'état major, the staff which does the planning, captains and officers, then the officers who deal more directly with the rank and file, and then the rank and file which has to accept and submit to everything, as it is done in an army.

Mr. ST-PERE: Sometimes shoot them.

Mr. LAPOINTE: These planners have, of course, great confidence in the power of men to govern other men they think they are best suited to decide what is best for the individual farmer or the individual industrialist. That is the state of mind necessary for the success of national planning. I quite admit it. But those who do not like this way of dealing with the people of a country cannot accept this. The rational method of dealing with the difficulties of the farmers at the present time I submit would be to try to increase the purchasing power of the consumers, to try to enact tariff and other economic legislation in such a way that people in the cities, towns and villages would be able to buy the products of the farmers and other producers instead of being forced to live on bread, potatoes and things of that kind, as thousands to-day are forced to do. In my view, to be at all effective a system like this must be universal and must be applied to all kinds of products. If, by reason of these regulations, the prices of some articles go higher while other prices stay where they are or go lower, all the farmers will try to produce the articles selling at the higher prices, and there will be a glut on the market. That is unavoidable. You cannot force the consumer to buy where prices are higher; he will buy where prices are lower, and he will buy from the unregulated producer if he can get better prices there.

We are entering lightheartedly on the very difficult task of controlling thousands of small, unregulated farmers. As I said before, agriculture is a long range industry, in which you have to plan for years in advance. It is subject to changes and modifications of which the individual farmer is a better judge than any board sitting in Ottawa, Quebec or elsewhere. The economic planner, whether in Russia, Italy, Germany or elsewhere, seems to forget the human mind. There is a difference of mentality as between peoples and as between individuals. Russia can have its economic planning; Italy and Germany can have their plans, but I do not believe Canada will ever submit to any system which will make the state the master of the individual. I know the Quebec farmer, and I think the other farmers of Canada are much the same. The Quebec farmer will never submit to this system; he will never agree that his judgment should be subordinated to the judgment of any board however it may be organized. When the depression ends—and it will end—I submit that those planners will disappear like the night birds that are chased away by the sunshine. The Canadian farmers will remove this restriction on their liberty, and they will never accept what may be quite acceptable in a socialized state. Great institutions are rooted in the life and the habits of a nation and should not be subjected to sudden changes. We cannot tear ourselves loose from our history and adopt unfamiliar and exotic arrangements which may be quite good in other countries and for other people. Historical, geographical and racial conditions in Canada will make those changes not serviceable to all the producers of our country in the same way. Paternalism is not what has made Canada what it is to-day. Regimentation is not what has made Canada a great success. Neither paternalism nor regimentation will make Canadians the great people they are destined to be. This bill represents an organization of bureaucracy, and if I have time I should like to quote a sentence or two from the May edition of a review entitled Canadian Business, which is not a political paper. Dealing with this bill this review states:

> The oft repeated term "governor in council" in the bill leaves an indelible inference in the reader's mind and in making the act effective the government should remember that the control of commerce by such means tends to make trading uncertain and traders reluctant to make forward contracts.

The writer continues to declare against the element of compulsion. If I had time I should like to read a resolution adopted by the farmers of France protesting against a plan of this kind which they said was against French mentality and was conducive to chaos and fallacy.

I am told that I am at the end of my time, Mr. Speaker; perhaps the house does not regret it but I do, because I have something else to say. In conclusion, however, may I merely direct the attention of the house to the topsy-turvy policies of the government. In this bill they are trying to control nationally what is private business. In the Bank of Canada Act they control privately what is national and public business. Here we have absolutely two different standards, and in order to be logical I think the government should reverse the policies embodied in those two pieces of legislation.

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I did not know that my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) would address the house, but perhaps I may be forgiven if very humbly I try to answer some of his remarks. I think my hon. friend has drawn a rather dark picture of the bill under discussion. It is not as bad as he says. He calls it a leap in the dark. May I say that the right appellation is a leap forward. He calls it also a sort of regimentation, while on our side—and I think this is the right interpretation—we call it a measure to create cooperation and bring about mutual help among the classes. This is the difference we see in the interpretation of this measure.

After having listened with great care to what I may call the charge of the ex-Minister of Justice against the bill I have come to the conclusion that he has not given a real argument against it. We must be satisfied with his "ipse dixit." Of course, the high personality of my hon. friend may carry a certain weight, but I would have preferred precise arguments against the bill, based on the provisions of the bill, to the ipse dixit of my hon. friend.

My hon. friend stated that this bill will not help the producers, and that the farmer is the best judge of his own requirements and necessities. With the last point I agree; there is no doubt that the farmer is the best judge of his requirements and necessities. But it is for the farmer to say whether or not he will profit by this measure; it is for him to say whether or not he will use the machinery provided by it. There is no compulsion on the farmer to accept and to use the provisions of the bill, and there is no regimentation.

My hon. friend referred to the stand I took last summer during the course of a campaign in the province of Quebec. He was referring to the question I put to him wherein I asked him whether he was going to the right or to the left. The hon. member did not give this House of Commons the answer he gave me. He told me he was not going either to the right or to the left, but that he was going forward.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Straight ahead.

Mr. DUPRE: Surely my hon. friend should be satisfied because in this measure we are going forward. The reason why I asked my question was obvious. The electors of Canada at that time did not know exactly where the Liberal party stood. They listened to my hon. friend in the counties of Bellechasse and Lotbiniere when he stated that his party was going forward, and not to the left. Only a few days before that we had listened to the declaration made in the western provinces by his right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the effect that at least three-quarters of the third party platform could be accepted by the Liberal party. Only a few minutes before or after the truly remarkable speech of the ex-Minister of Justice at St.

Flavien in the county of Lotbiniere, on the same platform we could hear the Hon. Mr. Taschereau, premier of Quebec, summoning the ex-Minister of Justice to oppose any bill establishing a central bank.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He did not succeed.

Mr. DUPRE: Therefore we may be forgiven if at that time we did not know where the Liberal party stood. We remembered the fact that we had listened to speeches delivered in this house by my hon. friends opposite—I mean the Liberal opposition—

Mr. HANBURY: Not your new friends.

Mr. DUPRE: —against section 98 of the criminal code, and we knew that at that time the same Mr. Taschereau, premier of Quebec, was in favour of section 98 being inserted in the criminal code.

Mr. BROWN: Taschereau is a Tory.

Mr. DUPRE: Therefore we had before us all these contradictions; and I have not mentioned the declaration of the Liberal party which, before the last election, stated it was in favour of the St. Lawrence waterway scheme, despite the fact that their Mr. Taschereau had called the waterway scheme a national crime. We did not know where they stood, and we were asking the question of the ex-Minister of Justice.

In a few words, what is this measure which has been denounced by the ex-Minister of Justice? It is a measure designed to secure for the Canadian farmers a more orderly marketing system.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Would my hon. friend excuse me? I have to go to the banking committee.

Mr. JACOBS: He is going there to support the central bank.

Mr. DUPRE: This measure is to promote a more orderly marketing system than that which at present prevails, one which without unfairness either to distributors or to consumers will operate to their financial advantage.

Mr. HANBURY: Where in the bill is there reference to the consumer?

Mr. DUPRE: The bill is designed—and I hope this will be understood—to prevent manipulation and exploitation. I do not think that the Canadian farmers would be opposed to any measure which in our estimation would prevent manipulation and exploitation. The bill provides machinery for regulating the movement of products in such a way as to tend to stabilize prices. It has been ofter said by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) that the bill does not provide for price fixing or the restricting of production. That is one point which seems to be forgotten when the bill is under discussion. Referring to the measure I find that it is designed to establish a dominion marketing board to regulate the marketing of natural products, which board will cooperate with local boards and any marketing board or agency established under the law of any province to regulate the marketing of any natural product.

Before we proceed to the second part of the bill we find in part I the procedure whereby the bill may be made workable. It gives the government power to limit or to restrict the importation of a product which is competing with a product subject to regulation by a board. I do not understand—and the fact that I do not understand may be proof that I am wrong—how farmers can be opposed to a bill which will impose some restrictions upon products competing in a nasty way against their own products. The bill gives the power, further, to restrict the export of products from Canada when it is in the interests of producers to impose such restrictions. But the producers themselves are the people who will say whether they want restrictions of imports or exports.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Where do you see that?

Mr. DUPRE: The second part of the bill provides for the determination of investigations, and so on. Representations were made first by farmers' organizations in western Canada, and then by organizations in central and eastern Canada stressing the necessity of the dominion government's enacting such legislation. I submit that this is a democratic measure, and I do not see why as such it should not be enacted by a Conservative government or a Conservative party.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would the minister allow a question? I did not wish to interrupt him in the course of his remarks. A moment ago he said it would be for the producers themselves to say when there were to be restrictions of imports or exports. Where does he find that in the bill?

Mr. DUPRE: That will be done by local boards and the federal board. The local boards and the federal board are controlled by the people who take part in these activities, and those people are the producers or the farmers. That is my contention. They will speak for themselves, and decide what attitude they should take, namely as to whether they would be in favour of or against restriction.

Mr. Speaker, these are the few remarks I wanted to submit in answer to my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). He has tried to be witty and has spoken of the new policy of the Conservative party. There is no harm in that. So far as I can see we shall continue to move forward and to initiate, and if we are to believe what my hon. friend from Quebec East says, the old Liberal party of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, thanks to the new leadership, instead of being a progressive party, will become retrogressive and reactionary.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before the minister concludes, may I say that he did not answer my question? I asked him where he found in the act a provision which allows the producer to say when imports or exports are to be restricted.

Mr. DUPRE: My right hon. friend remembers perfectly well the discussion that we had of that point in committee and the statements that were made by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture. I have not the act before me at the moment, but my right hon. friend knows that the boards will decide what policies they are going to follow, and if they decide in favour of restriction they will make regulations accordingly. That is the procedure that will be followed, and it is for the board, not for the government or any party, to decide.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am afraid the minister has forgotten a part of the bill, because what he says applies only to its early provisions. The part relating to restriction of exports and imports appears by itself under a distinctive heading. It is a paragraph by itself, section 12. It says the governor in council may restrict, and it is only the governor in council. There is no clause anywhere in the act which gives the producers the power to tell the governor in council what to do.

Mr. DUPRE: The governor in council will pass orders in council after having received suggestions from the local board, and regulations will be made accordingly.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. HEENAN

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. On Friday, May 25, the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott) quoted from a statement which I had made at page 3349 of Hansard in which I corrected a statement which he made with respect to my expenses as Minister of Labour. After he had quoted what I had said he went on to say:

> I have no desire to do an injustice to any hon. member. If that statement is not true, I wish the hon. member had given the correct figures,—

That is, if his statement was not true, I should have given the figures. Then, Mr. Speaker, you permitted him to make a further statement as follows:

> —because his total personal expenses for 1929, exclusive of his sessional indemnity and ministerial salary, were $9,291.

Let me say, standing here in this House of Commons, that that statement is not true. He then proceeded:

> His total personal expenses from 1926 to the end of his term in office were $16,691.

Again let me say, standing here in this House of Commons, that that statement is not true either. I should like to be given an opportunity at the proper time to compare my expenses with those of any member of previous Conservative governments or of this government.

MARKETING ACT

ORGANIZATION TO IMPROVE METHODS AND PRACTICES IN MARKETING NATURAL PRODUCTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Weir (Melfort) for the third reading of Bill No. 51, to improve the methods and practices of marketing of natural products in Canada and in export trade, and to make further provisions in connection therewith.

Mr. W. H. MOORE (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) upon having carried out an extremely arduous task. At times we have disagreed; at times I have felt that he was not giving to the committee and to the house the full information which he possessed, but at least he kept his good humour.

As the minister said to-day, this bill is designed to deal with the very serious gap which exists between the producer and the consumer of natural products. This is not a new matter; it is an old one and one which this house and the legislatures of this country have had under consideration for many years. We have dealt with it in a political way and our way affords a good illustration of political industry or government intervention in industry. It seems to me that the most sensible thing to have done would have been to analyze the causes of and the items which go to make up this gap. May I illustrate what I mean? There is the long haul, the short haul, the matter of cost of delivery; there is waste, insurance, conversion costs and, above all, the risks of the market. We have not entered into those matters. I followed the work of the committee fairly closely. To-day the minister complained—quite properly so, as far as I am concerned—that he had had no constructive criticism. But he will remember that at the commencement I said I was opposed to the compulsory features of the bill. I could not see how I could make a compulsory act of service to the country, and frankly I did not try. I felt that the government should take the responsibility.

At the closing hour of the house this afternoon, the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) referred to this bill as a forward movement. He referred also, as did other speakers, to the price spread features in the second portion of the bill. That is not a forward movement. The Solicitor General is a student and I fancy that he can find many quotations in Piers Plowman which will illustrate the argument which has been offered against price spreads. He is a lawyer and well versed in the history of the law and I have no doubt he will remember a case which we were told was rather famous, that of Rusby who was tried in 1800 for having made an excessive price spread advantage in the wheat market. He was fined and reprimanded by the court. Those who are familiar with the matter will remember that there were riots and the populace visited the home of Rusby and sought his life. Merchants were denounced as extortionists, particularly those in the wheat trade, but what happened? The merchants abstained from the market and the results were just the reverse of what was expected by the court and by the legislature.

I am very fond of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens)—I hope he does not mind. I followed with a great deal of interest what he said in the budget debate because it bore upon this matter. He will recall that as reported on page 2641 of Hansard he referred to the revolution that, mind you, had taken place in the economic life of the country. He referred to this over and over again during his speech, and as reported on page 2653 of Hansard he used these words:

> I have endeavoured to make clear to the house that new and momentous changes have taken place in the economic structure of the world, changes which forever bar us from a return to the old methods.

That is pretty strong language. Reading that, I had a very pessimistic outlook upon the future of this country, but the minister buoyed me up this morning when I received a bulletin from the bureau of statistics over which he presides, and without the advent of this legislation, without destroying individualism, without subjecting the individual producer to the action of the mass, I find the Minister of Trade and Commerce saying:

> The index of economic conditions, maintained by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, showed a gain of more than 20 per cent in the week ended May 26 over the same week of last year. The standing for last week was 94.0 compared with 79.3 in the week ended May 27, 1933, the index being expressed as a percentage of the average for the base year of 1926.

I have no desire to tell the minister what he should do as a member of this government, but if I were a member of the government I should be inclined to take some credit for having brought about improved conditions, although of course I should realize that the improvement had come about, as the minister appreciates, through the energy and the activity of individual Canadians in their ordinary vocations of life.

The Minister of Agriculture to-day, as did the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), referred to the haphazard manner in which we have been marketing our natural products. I wonder if that statement is quite accurate. The minister referred to the object of this legislation as orderly marketing, as stabilization, and I was given the impression that we lacked those things because of excessive individualism. I wonder if that is quite accurate. The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) told us that he had prepared the way for this bill; that he had taken steps which led to the first stage. Well, we know that throughout the world since the war there has been a tightening of control of production, not only of natural but of all products. That came about naturally through the war and it was only gradually released. The control was not quite so strong for a few years and since then it has been growing stronger and stronger. Then we had collapse. Can anyone say that that collapse came because we had had too much freedom of trade internally or externally, or are we to say that it is because we have had too much control? If we have had too much control and then collapse, are we to get out of collapse by further control? I have in my hand the monthly summary of February, 1934, of the League of Nations. I cannot say that I always agree but they have given this as a very definite statement. After showing, I am glad to say, that Great Britain and Canada are leading the way in recovery, they have this to say, speaking of the recovery:

> For how long will the process of recovery and development on the national markets be maintained unless there is a corresponding return to freedom and confidence on the international market?

I say that that applies also to the domestic market. I would say that we are making our recovery as against the nations of the world because we have better maintained our freedom. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) to-day ventured into economics; he spoke of the shibboleth of the law of demand and supply. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, I think, used the phrase and rather offended me because I have always believed that even governments have to take that into consideration. If I remember aright, when the minister made his speech he must even then have been considering the demand from his own province for assistance from the supply of the federal government.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is another kind of commodity.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): So far as natural products are concerned there is a peculiarity; we know that. The Minister of Agriculture will recognize that the demand is comparatively inelastic; in good times and bad people must be fed, but the supply is variable because of the climate. That gives rise to a peculiar condition, and I would have the minister and particularly the Minister of Trade and Commerce just remember the nature of effects of demand and supply in connection with natural products. There is no shibboleth. Some years ago, in 1928, the leading economists of Australia contributed to a volume called The Economic Record, a marketing supplement, and Professor Copland, whom the Minister of Trade and Commerce will recall for the work he has done for the League of Nations, quoted this statement from Macklin:

> It is a common thing to hear farmers say that "the wicked law of supply and demand" is to be destroyed by the machinery which organization brings into operation.

I believe that is the so-called object of this bill.

> These, however, are mere suppositions on the part of people whose supply of facts is too limited to enable them correctly to judge the objects and accomplishments of efficient competitive marketing. In California, where almost every kind of farm product is being marketed by highly integrated marketing systems, the idea of organizing to overrule the law of supply and demand was discarded long ago.

By reason of the variable changes in production of natural products quick judgment is required in their marketing. A man must make snap judgments as to buying and selling; therefore you have exchanges where goods are bought and sold. You have men on one side buying or selling because they own and are ready to take risks. I would have the Minister of Agriculture consider whether the pools have not been at a disadvantage because by reason of their size and the position they occupy they have sometimes hesitated to exercise quick judgment. On that matter I should like again to make a quotation. Before I do so may I say that the minister somewhat resented my citing authorities; he said, giving me more credit than I deserve, that I might cite an authority to prove anything. But I shall give statements of a number of professors of political economy and later of a pool manager from Australia as to the result of legislation almost precisely similar to that which we are now about to enact.

Professor Wood of Melbourne university makes this statement—and this bears upon the effectiveness of marketing by the individual in contrast with a pool. He says:

> It is notable, however, that cooperatives have rarely entered into the actual merchanting, which is generally in the hands of private traders and specialized firms. Further it may be remarked that there are very few big shareholding companies engaged in the actual shipping of grain, and the significant reason seems to be that the individual merchant specialized in grain trading has proved too alert, well informed and capable as a competitor for cooperative and public companies, which, by contrast, are too slow to function in a strongly competitive business of this character. Rapid decisions and shrewd judgment are the indispensable qualifications for trading in a commodity which is liable to such rapid fluctuations in price.

I do not know that I could put the matter more strongly. I would have the minister bear in mind that that is not the offhand view of a theorist but the opinion of a professor of economics in Australia who has carefully studied the results of this sort of legislation. The point is the centralization of judgment. On the exchange, when members on the other side of the house buy and members on this side sell, some of us make mistakes, but one mistake washes out the other. When someone acts—and it must be someone of just ordinary judgment—for all the producers and makes a mistake then you have a big mistake, and all the producers suffer. If things go well—and things do go well and do go badly alternately—you have the varied results.

I have heard much during the debate about orderly marketing and letting supplies go on the market in an orderly way as required. That means holding back supplies when someone thinks they are not required. I am not going to quote an opinion on that matter but I would refer the minister to the fourth report of the Imperial economic council at page 79, where the opinion of the council is given that that sort of action has led to disaster. I will go further and say that that sort of action throughout the world has largely contributed to the crisis, industrial and otherwise. We have had big pools formed, and when the market was unfavourable they built up the stop logs of their dams higher and higher and higher; then came the break, and we had that strange thing called poverty amidst plenty. Those pools have not succeeded; there is nothing plainer than that in the world. When they failed the pool managers said: "It is not our fault; it is not the fault of the pool; it is because we have not had a monopoly." Thus they have worked from one stage to another, from contract penalties and moral coercion until when those things failed they said, as is being said here now: "Call in the police." Well, I object to coercion in economic matters. I was taken to task for my objection the other day by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth)—I am sorry he is not here. In his absence I shall only say that we differ as to the objects of coercion. He holds strongly against coercion when it comes to section 98 of the criminal code; I hold with coercion in that particular. He would coerce a man from selling potatoes or cabbages; I would not, so frankly we have a difference of opinion. But I will say this, that if any institution, be it private or public, cannot compete, then it is not competent. If the pools could not give service to the producers to compete with other services, then the producers will not get service when they have a monopoly. I will go further; the pools will give an even less efficient service. Again I will give authority; I go back to the marketing supplement prepared by the economists and the pool managers, and I shall give a quotation from J. Thompson who was manager of the Westralian Farmers Limited, which is a central organization of the co-operative movement in Western Australia. Mr. Thompson ought to be an authority, because he is manager of a big pool. He makes this statement:

> Nothing is more disastrous than to find cooperative concerns advocating compulsion merely because they are unsuccessful in fighting proprietary concerns. After it has been properly established, a cooperative society should not demand support from a sense of loyalty from its members when it is unable to deserve that support by its efficiency.

May I go a step further—because I have said I am going to quote authority, and I can think of none better than Mr. Thompson—and say that under the scheme that is now advocated the producers will not get efficient service. He says:

> Another phase of cooperation which is frequently to the fore is that of compulsion either by control boards, by pools or by regulation. It is our experience that compulsion leaves wide the door for inefficiency in administration.

If it is inefficient we know that it is going to be ineffectual. We in Ontario know that. You cannot enforce monopolies of that sort. The government of Ontario have tried for years to enforce a liquor monopoly. Now they have thrown up their hands; in spite of what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, they maintain that they could not find enough policemen and informers to enforce the monopoly. If they cannot do that, how can they find enough people to enforce all the fruit, vegetable and other monopolies contemplated by this bill?

I do not want to dwell unduly on these matters. When I spoke first I really thought I was warning the government that it had made a mistake and was going down the wrong road. I thought it was misguided by the signboard on which it had seen "Marketing Bill" and that it was hurrying down to the left without noting the direction. I thought it my duty to warn the government, because I will frankly admit what hon. members of this house know, that I have not always opposed the measures that have been brought in by this government. I have had a great deal of confidence in it. When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) said in the house that Queensland was the pioneer state of this sort of legislation, I knew it all the time but frankly I was disappointed that the minister knew it because, as I pointed out, Queensland was the home of socialism. It is not a state from which we can well take any object lesson; it has only about thirty thousand farmers. I understand that since 1915 there have been no grants of freeholds; they have adopted the socialist policy of granting leases. I will tell the minister that if he studies the agricultural growth of that pioneer state he will be shocked, because it has had no growth. It is part of a sister dominion, and I do not want to say anything about its credit, but I should like the Minister of Finance to pay some attention to the credit of the states that have adopted this sort of legislation.

It is very hard for me to believe that the good old Conservative party are travelling down the left road. I am satisfied, and I believe it my duty to say so, that if they do not have a collision with other people that are on the road—to my left—they will surely ditch their car. I really thought I had developed something new when I was warning this government, but the Minister of Agriculture rather shocked me when he made this statement:

> The whole principle of our democratic institutions is that the majority be given power to effect what they think is the best interests of the community.

And mind you, Mr. Speaker, he was speaking with regard to compulsory legislation and economic effort. Surely that involves a mandate, not from producers alone but from consumers as well, if that principle is to be carried into effect, and I doubt very much whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) will approve of that principle. You know we have had these elections before as to economic effort. When I was speaking on this bill previously—and I do not intend to repeat anything I then said—I directed the attention of the minister to the move of William Lane when he took his colony to Paraguay and there established the first communist settlement, which failed utterly. They had there a system by which the producers worked together in groups. When they disagreed they rang a bell, which brought them together. They kept ringing the bell so frequently that they got very little work done. Surely the provision that is being made under these acts for elections is simply a repetition of the ringing of the bell. They have done that in Australia because they have not been successful, and every time they have been unsuccessful they have rung the bell for more money from the treasury or from the people. In this book—and I should like the government to have access to it; I managed to borrow it—Professor Giblin has a chapter on Some Costs of Marketing Control. I want to give just a few of them. At page 151, speaking of butter, he says:

> Whatever the cause, the excess Australian price during these four months adds very considerably to the cost of protection; but as it may be considered under the circumstances as mainly a cost of protecting the home market (with which I am not here concerned), rather than as a cost of protecting exports, I need not pursue it further beyond deducing that the total cost of protecting the industry, both home consumption and exports, against New Zealand, appears to be about 4d. per pound on butter consumed, or £3,000,000 per annum.

At page 152 he gives the costs of sugar:

> The excess cost in Australia is therefore over £4,000,000, which may be taken as the total cost of protection per annum, exclusive of the cost of protecting the refineries which is included in both Australian and New Zealand prices.

In connection with dried fruits he says the cost to the country is 120,000 Australian pounds per annum. In Australia they also have a wine export association, which is not a compulsory pool. I wonder if I may just trouble the minister with a quotation in that regard. Windett in Australia as Producer and Trader at page 128 says:

> In the seven years 1924-5 to 1930-1 the sum of £1,475,812 was paid as bounty on wine exports on a trade which aggregated over the period £3,945,000. The aggregate bounties paid thus amounted to 37 per cent of the value of the wine exported.

Now taking our own position, we can recall that every time we buy two bottles of Australian wine someone touches the bell and says, "Have one on Australia." How long shall we permit that? How long will our wine producers permit that? How long can the country of production stand the cost? It means debt. Only a few weeks ago the Australian parliament considered a wheat bonus, and I understand they have decided that a part of it shall be thrown on the cost of bread and part shall come out of the public purse. As the result of ringing the bell, by processing taxes we are following the path of competitive subsidies. Speaking on the budget debate the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a similar reference when he spoke of the difficulty of shutting out subsidized products. I should like to give this little bit of advice, whether it is accepted or not, that when our representatives go to Geneva they could do nothing better than to initiate a movement for the prevention of subsidized exports. We are all going to be ruined; we are going into bankruptcy if we are to have general competitive subsidies of exports. So far as Canada is concerned I think we should enact the sternest customs legislation against the admission of subsidized products. I do not know whether I can carry the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) with me in that regard, but I would try very hard to do so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Or the ex-Minister of Justice.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): I would try also with the ex-Minister of Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You may try your luck.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): This government has a very serious problem. I know of no government that has been burdened with more problems than has this government during the past two or three years. The problem in western Canada is most serious. Irrespective of politics I would say that the position in western Canada had been brought about largely by government intervention. I believe that this government should face the situation. When anyone has been running fast in one direction he cannot turn around and run fast in the other.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): I have no desire to trespass upon the time of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Proceed.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): Is it understood that I may go on for a few moments?

Mr. VENIOT: No objection has been raised.

Mr. F. H. PICKEL (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to prolong the debate, but there are a few observations I should like to make on the third reading of the bill, and especially after listening to the comments by hon. members opposite. I should think the house would agree with me when I state it is my impression that the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) left the farm when he was very young. He is not in favour of price fixing. He wants to get cheap butter. I wonder if he is just as liberal towards price fixing in connection with legal fees, judges' fees, superannuation, doctors' fees, notaries' fees, and fees for other professional men. In the present measure we are not asking for price fixing; we are not asking that the price to the consumer be increased. All we are asking is that the farmer should get his just share of what is paid by the consumer for his products. That is what we are after.

I should like to refer to only a few commodities which affect all the farmers in Ontario and Quebec and in the maritime provinces. I cannot see how the present measure will affect the price of wheat to any great extent, nor can I see how it could greatly affect the price of beef, except to the extent that poor quality beef might be kept off the market. The principal products of farmers in Ontario and Quebec are butter, eggs, pork and milk. To-day we hear nothing said about the price of pork, because thanks to the imperial preferences we are receiving three times as much as are the producers on the other side of the boundary line. One may note that in the spring of the year the price of these products is depressed arbitrarily by the middleman; it is fixed by him. I think it was the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr Motherwell) who said that we were stirred up simply because of the depression, but I say to him that this condition has existed for years. The middleman says, "We will pay so much this week," and through the summer as long as the farmer is producing the price is kept down to that level. Eggs bought to-day in the west at seven or eight cents a dozen are being placed in cold storage, and this fall and winter we shall have to pay forty cents or fifty cents a dozen for them. Is that right?—not much. They are doing the same thing with butter. This fall the storage houses will be filled with butter; they will have the whole season's make right there in one large quantity. We talk about supply and demand; six months' supply of butter will be right there in storage. Then those middlemen send the price up to thirty or thirty-five cents per pound. The farmer does not get any of that; it is no satisfaction to him to know that butter is thirty-five cents a pound or eggs fifty cents a dozen when he has none to sell. In fact at such times a good many of the farmers have to buy.

I believe that through the marketing bill we will receive some redress, and if we do not I do not know what we shall do. I understand that this afternoon a bill was introduced to effect farm relief, to put the farmer on his feet, I contend that if he is given a just share of the selling price of his goods he will put himself on his feet; give him a chance, because that is all we want. Everybody else in the country is protected, but the farmer is the man who is down under. He has lost his morale. In the cities they are robbing him right and left.

The price of butter to-day is not as low as it was last year, and the same statement applies to the price of eggs. They see the handwriting on the wall; they expect they are going to be pulled up, and they deserve it. Talk about cooperation! Several members have mentioned that they are in favour of cooperation and I say that this whole scheme of production right from the soil to the consumer would be all right if there were cooperation right through, but you cannot get the middleman to cooperate. The farmers will cooperate but still they have to sell their produce at a depreciated price, with the middleman exploiting them. There is no such thing as cooperation between the producer and the middleman. The middleman is robbing the farmer all the time.

So far as compulsion is concerned, I see nothing in this bill of a compulsory nature except that when a sufficient body of producers ask that a certain product be regulated there are means of compulsion. If the butter producers, the egg producers, the strawberry producers or the producers of any other natural product are perfectly satisfied with the present marketing conditions they will not ask for anything else and there is no compulsion, but if they do ask for a change there is power under the bill to deal with the situation and give them what they want. This is not a question at all of trying to create monopolies as the hon. member who has just sat down (Mr. Moore) has said. He gave us a great many academic quotations from different authorities dating back to the time of "corn in Egypt" and coming right down to the present, but that has nothing to do with the situation in Canada. We are in a unique position in this country. We consume in Canada ninety-eight per cent of all our farm products with the exception of cheese and wheat. It is right here on our own doorstep that we are being robbed; it is our own people who are robbing us, and I say that we should have means to prevent that. Give the farmer a just share of what he has produced and sells on the market and endeavour to make his returns more uniform throughout the year. Butter should never drop below twenty-five cents a pound or eggs below twenty-five cents a dozen. This idea of eggs at eight and ten cents a dozen in the spring and summer when the distributors are accumulating their stocks is all wrong, and I do not see how even the consumer derives any benefit from it; next winter he will have to pay four times as much because prices will be four or five hundred per cent higher. On every box of butter that is put into cold storage the farmer is robbed of from five to ten dollars by the packing houses. If this bill rectifies that situation, and I think it will, it certainly will be of great benefit. I know that a great many members opposite do not pretend to know much about farming, and there are a great many others opposite who have expressed themselves and think they know something about farming but who do not know very much. I have been farming all my life and I know what I am talking about. I come in close contact with the Montreal market, and the Toronto market conditions are just the same, and I know what the middlemen are doing. They are making their millions every winter at the expense of the farmer. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will be given the support it deserves.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, before the bill is given third reading I desire to reply to some of the statements that have been made in the house this afternoon. It does appear to me that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore) have overlooked one very important factor in our present economic system which they cannot afford to ignore. The member for Ontario referred to the inefficiency of monopolies of the character of the pools and claimed that the pools had failed and blamed failure on the minority that was not in the pools. The fact is that the pools and cooperative organizations of all kinds do not come into existence simply for the fun of running a pool or cooperative organization. They have come into existence just as this bill is now forced to come into existence, because of the extravagance and waste and mad inefficiency of the present competitive system. Let hon. members beware of this fact, particularly the hon. member for Ontario, that so long as you have a commercial system governed entirely in its distributive end by a regulated and restricted monetary system it is absolutely necessary that you have a regulated and controlled producing system. If not, you have chaotic conditions continuing interminably.

In an intelligently organized state one would not have to worry at all about so-called surpluses, certainly not for many years, but in a type of society such as we have now there must be some regulation, some direction, until the time comes when we get sufficient sense to determine and evolve a method of distribution under which we can permit the freest production and consumption of all things.

I am quite satisfied that the government is not willingly introducing this measure, any more than farmers cooperate willingly, any more than business men willingly form cartels. They are compelled to do so because of the inherent waste of the individualistic competitive system, because of the debt-causing character of that system.

The ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) referred to this bill in most uncomplimentary terms this afternoon. With some of his references I do not entirely disagree, but when he asks rhetorically, "Why experiment with the farmers?" I answer: because the farmers want to be experimented with in this particular direction. They have been asking for it for years. My own farmers have been seeking power to force upon a selfish and indifferent minority a recognition of their obligations to the majority. I am quite in agreement with the hon. member for Ontario that the creation of a monopoly in itself does not necessarily mean that you improve conditions, because you have to take into consideration factors outside of it as well; but the creation of monopolies is indicated as a definite trend in present conditions. The time may come when you will have complete decentralization, but I cannot see it coming under the present system.

The illustration given by the hon. member for Ontario of the Conservative party rushing to reach a certain place along a certain road and his suggestion that they would get there if they did not collide with members in this section of the house struck me as rather apt except that he did not get the whole picture. The fact is that on the road, and a little distance ahead, there has been a group indicating the course that should have been followed for some years. The bulk of the producers have been trailing along the road in between. The Conservative party sees what is happening, jumps in the car, and tries to catch up. The Liberal party standing to one side in the bog of mid-Victorian economics refuses to participate in the twentieth century method of dealing with economic facts. That is what they are suffering from.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Truth is eternal.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Truth is not eternal; it is a matter of adjustments, but that is a metaphysical subject that I might discuss with the hon. member with more profit to himself than myself at some future date. Of course certain truths, certain elemental facts, are eternal, but when he attempts to apply the term "eternal" to economic conditions or "truth" to the governing factors in an economic system he is talking nonsense.

I am supporting this measure not because it is a particularly good one—there are many weaknesses in it and there will continue to be many weaknesses because of the very nature of events and men—but because it purports to extend to producers the opportunity to organize. To the extent that it encourages them to do that, I am for the bill; to the extent that it enables them, after organization, to function more thoroughly as a group, I am in favour of the bill, but I still object to certain bureaucratic features which are embodied in section 9. I think the minister would have been wise if he had avoided the anomaly of reserving to himself and to the central board the right and power to give to a local board created by the minister or the governor in council the power to act as a selling agency whereas in the case of the organization established by the producers he denies that local board the right to become a selling agency. It is true he gives them the power to designate another body as the instrument through which sales may take place, but this is to me one of the most objectionable features of the bill and one which will necessitate a multiplicity of organization on the part of the producers. It will be wasteful and will likely lead to a good deal of confusion and conflict later on.

I am in favour of other parts of the bill because I am in favour of the cooperative principle. I like the idea because it is not, as hon. friends to my right have said, an experiment or a theory; it is something which has proven itself through the years. It has proven that it can function and be efficient even under an utterly inefficient and chaotic system. I wonder if hon. members have taken the trouble to study what has been happening in connection with cooperation. In the first place, cooperation never made a millionaire, but it never made a pauper. That is a record which cannot be credited to the capitalist system, or the present competitive commercial system, if you prefer the term. In the very industries which we have been discussing under this measure, such as the packing industry, we find millionaires and multimillionaires like Mr. Stanley Maclean, Sir Joseph Flavelle, Mr. William Davies, Mr. Pat Burns and Messrs. Matthews and Blackwell. In the milling business we find men like Jim

Stewart, James Richardson and so on. Surely the time has come when the producers must be given an opportunity to check the exploitation of their efforts by men of this stamp who by financial reorganization of their companies and by utterly unfair and unethical methods are able to rob the producer of what is properly his. Senator Brookhart, of the United States, when studying this question stated that ninety-two per cent of business ventures end in failure. How does the hon. member for Ontario like that? Ninety-two per cent of business enterprises end in failure under the genius of the capitalist competitive system. On the other hand, cooperative failures are comparatively few. Senator Brookhart pointed out also that out of $30,000,000,000 paid by the consumers for the products of the farm, the farmer received in the neighbourhood of $9,000,000,000. The farmer receives $9,000,000,000 and the consumer pays $30,000,000,000. If this bill will enable the setting up of producer boards to act in between the producer and the consumer, getting for the consumer and the producers better prices, then it is good. If it fails to do that, of course it is bad. But as I have said twice in earlier speeches the highest effectiveness of this bill can come only when the government of the day, whether it be this one or some other, decides to reorganize the monetary system of the country and see that the purchasing power of the people is kept in consonance with our productive ability.

If hon. members will turn to Great Britain they will find a growth in cooperative movement, a movement which is both consumer and producer, which is one of the great attributes of the British system of cooperation. The total membership of that movement is 6,760,432, while the total share loan capital is $944,000,000. The total retail sales of the cooperatives in Great Britain during 1932 were in the neighbourhood of one billion dollars. More than half of the families in Great Britain belong to cooperative societies. I pause here to say to the minister that I would have welcomed the introduction of a section into this measure having for its object the encouraging of the setting up of consumer societies in order that the consumer's end of the system might be organized for his own protection and to facilitate the interchange and the interrelationship between producer and consumer.

Mr. BENNETT: We have the consumers' league.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): During the days of the depression the cooperatives in Great Britain increased their business. They increased the number of workers as well as the average wage paid. According to the year book of the cooperatives, at pages 14 and 15, the Cooperative Wholesale Society increased the number of employees from 41,205 in 1930 to 41,958 in 1932. The wages and salaries paid were increased from £5,545,000 to £5,793,000. The same results are borne out by the figures of the Scottish Wholesale Society, the English and Scotch Joint Cooperative Wholesale Society and the cooperative retail societies. In every case the wages and the number of people employed were increased, both in the producing and in the consuming end. In the three good years from 1927 to 1929 the surplus of the cooperatives was $29,000,000, but in the three depression years, from 1930 to 1932, the surplus was $42,500,000. This was not a surplus which was to go to a few private shareholders and directors; it was one to be distributed in benefits to the entire membership of the association, which means half of the families of Great Britain. The number of employees in production is 121,177; in distribution, 144,688, a total of 265,865. It may interest hon. members to know that the activities of the cooperatives in Great Britain embrace such matters as banking, insurance, farming, tea plantations, shipping, printing and publishing, factories and mills and a newspaper. There are also guilds of both men and women and an electricity grid scheme is now carrying electricity to almost every portion of the country.

My purpose in referring to this at some little length is due to the remarks of one or two hon. members in the group to my right, made this afternoon and last year. During the debate on the cooperative commonwealth resolution the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) said:

> The cooperative movement, again, is an individualistic movement,—

I do not know what in heaven he means by that. If there is any movement on earth which is antagonistic to individualism, it is the cooperative movement. In no sense can it be called an individualistic movement. In an effort to drive a wedge between the cooperative movement and the movement to which we in this section of the house have the honour to belong, he continued:

> —not a socialist movement. The cooperative movement in the different countries has developed as it has done under the order of society as it exists at the present time.

He endeavoured to leave the impression with the house that the cooperative system was a part of the competitive system, when, as a matter of fact, it is created for the purpose of removing as completely as possible the present competitive system. To demonstrate the wildness of the attitude taken I now quote a part of the report of the directors of the British Cooperative Union, 1932, May 16 to 18:

> Capitalist apologists cannot explain in terms which do not condemn their theory the disconcerting fact that, at the apex of productive capacity, world consumption and exchange of commodities are dwindling. Systematic destruction of valuable goods alleged to have been over-produced, the collapse of credit systems sanctified by banking tradition, and reversions to crude barter reveal even to the man in the street the lamentable failure of competitive industry and the flimsiness of its foundations. In such a world of unreality the simple verities of the cooperative ideal stand out as basic common sense.

That official statement of the board of directors does not give any colour to the implication in the words used by the right hon. leader of the opposition.

Again to-day we were treated to a dissertation similar to the one of last year, that economic planning is something that is abhorrent and unintelligent and would lead to the wildest kinds of bureaucracy and injustice. I do wish, with all due respect, my good friends to the right, for whom I have high personal regard and affection, would try to keep their records or their opinions straight. At the very time that the leader of the opposition in western Canada was smashing at the idea of a planned state of society, proclaiming against it in the most bitter and denunciatory terms, the president of the Liberal Federation was making speeches in eastern Canada the very contrary of those expressed by the leader of the opposition. I suggest to the ex-Minister of Justice, who to-day also waxed eloquent on the subject of the evils of planning, that he go back this year to the summer school of the Liberal group and take new lessons in economics from Mr. Massey. I regard Mr. Vincent Massey as an intellectual realist. I am afraid I look upon the leader of the opposition and the ex-Minister of Justice as mid-Victorian constitutionalists. That would be about the fair comparison at this stage as demonstrated by their attitude on this and other measures. If they could only recognize the inevitability of these things under the system, I could have some patience with them, but they will not even recognize that much.

To return, however, to Mr. Massey; he had just indicated that national planning could not be regarded as an end in itself but rather as a prelude to world cooperation. I agree thoroughly with him. It is a long distance to look ahead, but it is quite intelligible. He continues:

> The new state, as I see it, will be subject in an increasing degree to comprehensive planning.

Of course it will be; and if this bill is part —and I regard it as such—of the national planning of the productive and distributive effort of Canada, then of course Mr. Massey, if he were in the house, would support this measure. He continues further:

> The primary conflict is not, therefore, isolation versus internationalism—

As we have been led to believe in this debate.

> —but planning versus improvisation and in this struggle planning will, I believe, be victorious.

I submit that that very reference, "isolation versus internationalism," if taken with the meaning he appeared to have read into it, would definitely demolish the whole thesis of traditional Canadian liberalism. He goes further and says:

> There is no reason why the new nationalism, frankly recognized, should be provocative either in motive or in effect. It can be based on the reasonable idea that a national unit can make the best contribution to the world by tidying up its own affairs. It can be purged of the nature which has so degraded the international world in past years.

He continues:

> How then are we to adjust ourselves to this situation?

That is, of general national control of imports. He answers himself by saying:

> In the first place we must plan our own economic life in an orderly and comprehensive way and to the limits of our capacity so to do.

At the very moment or almost at the moment he was saying this, the right hon. leader of the opposition was declaring in Winnipeg that state control of industry and finance inevitably meant that the individual must accept the decisions of those in power as to where he will work, what he will do and how and where he will do it.

Of course that at best is a wild exaggeration, but Mr. Massey would answer my right hon. friend as he did, or at least it might have been an answer to him, by saying:

> As governments play an increasing part in the control of international trade, many of the matters which in the nineteenth century were left to the action of markets and private individuals, will be arranged through representatives of the state. This is a situation we shall have to accept.

With everything Mr. Massey says in that document I agree. I go further and would point out to the leader of the opposition and to hon. gentlemen to my right that there is nothing incompatible in the fact that as a cooperator I am associating myself, as my organization is doing, with a group of persons who have been called by others socialists. It seemed to astonish the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. MacMillan) who does not happen to be in the chamber at the moment, and one or two others when I made the statement on the second reading of the bill that I was not a socialist; nor am I one, but I am a cooperator. In many respects the methods and objective of the two philosophies appear to be exactly the same.

I have given the membership of the British cooperative at about 6,760,000, which of course includes many women. I now ask hon. members to refer to the British cooperative political movement, the most powerful movement in Great Britain at this moment in point of membership, having a present subscribing membership of 4,000,000 people. This is the highest membership of any political party in Great Britain and is a definite sign of the times. In common with similar movements in many other countries the British cooperative movement and cooperative society have suffered at the hands of capitalistic governments. For instance, in the effort to establish a cooperative bank in that country they were enormously hampered by a definite refusal to allow them clearing house privileges. During the session, a year ago, of the British parliament, the income of the cooperative societies was taxed. They succeeded in passing the law to do so and the immediate effect of that harsh, unjustifiable legislation was to give an immense stimulus to the cooperative movement and particularly to the political side of it. If hon. members will bear in mind the terms of the resolution moved from this side of the house last year in a debate on this question of a cooperative commonwealth they will find a striking similarity between the terms used by us and those used by the British cooperative party. In the resolution which has been carried by their association and which may be found at page 26 of the People's Year Book for 1934, the official publication of the cooperative board, it will be found that the policy of the cooperative party in regard to the cooperative commonwealth was expressed in these terms:

> That the object of the Cooperative party is the establishment of the cooperative commonwealth wherein the means of production, distribution, and exchange shall be collectively owned, and wherein the cooperative movement shall function as the medium for the provision of the personal and domestic requirements of the community.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

That is as close to the proposal that we have been making for many years as anything I can imagine; indeed, I see no difference, nor need there be one. The ideal state when properly developed—possibly this legislation may be the first step toward it; properly administered and sympathetically handled, it will be—would be a state in which the natural monopolies, the great public utilities would be state owned and state controlled in the interests of the people. But the producing functions of the state can be well handled by cooperative producing groups. In the ideal state that will come eventually, when you have a conjunction of the two principles, state socialism handling the industries and institutions of monopolistic character, and the people carrying on by cooperative functional groups the business of production. In the international field the success of the movement has been just as marked as in the purely national field. I submit that in every sense members of this group are justified in supporting this measure as a first step towards a planned and ordered state of society. Certainly I do not think that it will achieve very great success, tempered as it will be by the factors, monetary and otherwise, to which I have referred; but as far as it goes I give it my cooperation and support in helping to improve the conditions of my people. But I warn the government definitely that they would have been better advised to turn their entire attention to the question of stimulating the capacity of the producer to organize himself and to create his own schemes and his own boards. I do not believe that any government can save producers in the long run, but the producers can save themselves and can be helped to do so by government.

There is one other feature of the bill to which I object; the provisions granting assistance for processing, warehousing et cetera of primary products should have been limited to cooperative enterprises. That assistance should not have been granted to private enterprises functioning for profit. If it were granted to the producers I could see the merit of the scheme; as it is there is a grave weakness in that regard. This afternoon the ex-Minister of Justice referred to the attitude of the cooperative movement in Great Britain. I was not able to catch all that he said. But for fear he may have suggested that that movement was opposed to such marketing legislation—he shakes his head; then this is further support of my position, for the British cooperative movement not only has not condemned the British marketing scheme, which is somewhat similar to this, but passed this resolution:

> The conference requests the national cooperative authority to press upon the government that producers' boards shall not be established under the Agricultural Marketing Acts until statutory powers have been secured for the establishment of complementary boards representing distributors' and consumers' interests.

As I said earlier in my remarks, I believe that should have been done here and a provision placed in the bill to enable the creation of boards representative of consumers' interests. But we have to take what we can get under existing conditions; a slice of bread is better than no bread. For what merit it may have I am willing to accept the bill and shall vote for the third reading.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): I shall not detain the house very long, but wish to express some opinions on this bill. I was extremely interested in what the last speaker (Mr. Garland, Bow River) had to say about cooperation; he seems to be under a misapprehension with respect to the success of the Scottish and British cooperative societies. The fact is they did grow up in a highly competitive system. We have known of that for years. Their great success was in cooperation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There was no place else they could grow.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend suggested that my leader was making a mistake in making that statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, the hon. gentleman is not correct; he must not misrepresent me. What I said was that the leader of the opposition definitely conveyed the implication in his speech, as have others, that the cooperative movement was a part of the competitive system and functioned in and under it as a part of it. It is the very antithesis of that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot see why that statement would be incorrect either; it did do so, and the hon. gentleman did not deny it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In spite of the competitive system.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, its great success was achieved in direct competition with the retail trade of Scotland and England. They made a success of it, and they are to be commended for so doing. And the same thing may be done in Canada. I for one am ready to support any such institution in Canada. Farmers of this country have a perfect right to be permitted to organize on a cooperative basis in their own interest to sell their own produce, and be given the facilities to carry it to the consumer if necessary.

I agree absolutely with the statement of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel); there is too wide a spread between the prices received by the producer and the prices paid by the consumer. I can agree with him also that the consumer will not be called upon to pay any more than he is paying under existing conditions. And I am entirely in favour of the action of this government so far as it seeks to remove the difficulty heretofore in evidence between the provinces and the federal government with respect to the sales of natural products. But what I am not in sympathy with, and what I know my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) is not in sympathy with are the compulsory features of this bill. I ask him here and now if anyone was ever compelled to go into the cooperative movement in England or Scotland against his will. It was a purely voluntary system from start to finish.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We are all in favour of that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We stand entirely for that system. Have the wheat pools of western Canada ever sought to coerce people to go into them? I know a few of them tried to, but they did not succeed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And they have been asking for a government wheat board.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes that may all be in line, quite in line, asking to have a sales board of their own. True, it did not prove entirely successful, but I agree with the hon. member for Bow River that in the inception of such a movement as this there is bound to be difficulty. You cannot make a hundred per cent success of any given movement; where groups of people are banded together for certain purposes they are bound to make mistakes, and I for one am not going to say that on account of those mistakes the movement is an entire failure.

But what I object to in this bill more than anything else are sections 9 and 12. I am not going to detain the house at any length, but I object to the government of this country taking the arbitrary powers that they do take with respect to imports. I object to it most strenuously. If we are to have a tariff, then for heaven's sake let this parliament decide what that tariff shall be, in order that the business interests of the country may know what it is and be able to carry on their business under the provisions of the schedules laid down by parliament. When you depart from that you immediately interfere with the free business exchange that should go on in any country. And when it comes to the point as enunciated by the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré), that the boards will recommend to the minister and the governor in council when imports should be allowed to come in and when they should be prohibited, particularly natural products, that is just adding to the difficulties that we have to-day. Ever since I entered the House of Commons, indeed all my life, I have been opposed to excessive tariffs. I have always believed that they would react against the interests of the producers of natural products of the country in the long run. To-day we have evidence as to how they are reacting against the producers of natural products, as we are operating under a very high system of tariffs protecting secondary industry to the detriment of the producers of natural products. It is bound to do so. Day by day we see the loss of our foreign markets. It has been remarked that ninety-eight per cent of our production is consumed in Canada. I admit that a very large proportion is consumed in Canada. I will admit also that the United States consume quite as large if not a little larger proportion of their production, yet they cannot control the price of their natural products, nor can we in Canada. So long as we export a bushel of wheat, a pound of butter or a quart of cream it will have a regulating influence on the price we receive at home, I do not care how many marketing boards you establish or how many cooperative commonwealth institutions you put in operation throughout the country. World prices will prevail. This is so well set out under the British agreements that we need not argue the point. Great Britain said, "Yes, we will put a duty against imports of foreign natural products, but we will not pay you one cent more than the world prices for the products that come in from Canada." Again world prices prevail, and world prices have a regulating influence upon domestic prices.

My hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) made something of the point that owing to the agreement with Great Britain we are getting a higher price for pork than they are getting in the United States. But we are getting the world price for pork. The United States, not having the privilege of that market, is not getting as high a price, but world prices prevail for us and less than world prices prevail in the United States. Who suffers? No one but the producers of pork or other natural products in that country.

So it has been ever since I have been interested in public affairs. Ultimately the producer of natural products has to pay for the protection that is given the secondary industries, and I question very much whether all the protection that has been given the secondary industries in Canada has done them very much good. I have no disagreement with my hon. friends in the corner with regard to the monetary question, but I have a very considerable disagreement with them over their change of front with respect to tariffs. I do disagree absolutely with the statement made here and there that tariffs have little or nothing to do with the economic condition in which we find ourselves to-day. They have a great deal to do with it. I will agree that the monetary situation plays an important part, and I have a good deal of sympathy with the stand of my hon. friends in that regard. I disagree, however, with the extreme nationalism that is assumed both by the Conservative party and by my friends in the corner, that this is going to be a permanent thing in which there will be no change, and that we must so readjust our whole fiscal and economic system—this is what it means ultimately—that we shall not produce anything that we cannot consume within the boundaries of our own country. That is what it gets down to. If that doctrine is to be accepted we may as well make up our minds at once that we must go under cartels, that we must have that planned production which my hon. friends speak about so glibly, and that we must work within the confines of that system for the next decade or two at all events. I do not agree with that in any particular; I cannot accept that as the ultimate destiny of the people of this country. If it is our destiny we are going to have a pretty difficult country to live in for the next thirty or forty years.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Neither do I accept that as our ultimate destiny; I never have done so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then all I can say to my hon. friend is that to one listening to his argument it means that or nothing. I should be glad to discuss it with the hon. gentleman; I am sorry if I am making a mistake in that regard, but that is the conclusion to which I have come after listening carefully to the statements made by hon. gentlemen in that corner to the effect that extreme nationalism is here to stay, that exchange between countries, if carried on at all, is going to be extremely difficult and that therefore we must plan our monetary system and our economic system, as well as our production, to meet that contingency. If I am wrong in those deductions I shall be glad to be put right. I say that I do not agree with that statement, because even to-day, despite the extreme nationalism of the various trading countries of the world, what are they doing? They are getting together for the purpose of exchanging surplus goods one with the other. When we look abroad to-day we find that the surplus wheat production in most of the competitive countries that are doing business in Great Britain along with Canada has been wiped out, while our surplus remains. I am very glad to believe that day by day our surplus is going down; I am glad to know also that, through fear of drought and a short crop this year, the price of wheat is going up and there is a fair prospect of our getting out of at least a great part of our difficulty in that regard.

I do not want to enter into a discussion of that kind to-night; I simply want to say that if there is one decent thing about this bill it is the attempt that is made—I think it is an honest attempt—to remove so far as it is possible to do so the difficulties heretofore experienced as between provincial and federal jurisdiction. Beyond that, however, I cannot see anything in the bill to recommend it at all. I cannot and will not support section 9 of this bill, which puts extreme power in the hands of the minister and the governor in council. I have been consistently fighting the attitude of this government in regard to trade restrictions; not satisfied with extreme tariffs they have been using every means in their power to prevent imports into this country. If as farmers we have one grievance more than another it is that we are forced to pay for the protection of the secondary industries. The automobile industry is one; the textiles industry is another. It is needless to go into a discussion, but in both cases we are forced to pay extreme prices which would not prevail if more moderate duties were in effect against goods entering Canada. Farm machinery is another article that is protected, but I want to be fair; I have said that I do not believe it makes very much difference what duty is placed against farm machinery while it is controlled in the circle in which it is operating to-day.

I do say, Mr. Speaker, that the spread in Canada to-day between primary and secondary products is far too wide, and that is the result of the policies of this government. Now when they come with this bill asking for wider powers in that direction I assume at once—and I think I am right in the assumption—that it is going to reflect upon me as a producer. Ultimately it will do so. Why, I remember the terrible castigation administered to the Liberal party by hon. gentlemen opposite not only in this house but throughout the country in 1930 with respect to the price of butter, about which my hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi speaks so frequently. It was said that it was a crime to allow New Zealand butter into Canada in competition with our own buttter. I for one believed that I could not conscientiously ask for protection for myself if I fought protection when I thought it was going to do me an injury, and I for one believed that the Canadian farmer could produce butter as cheaply as the Australian or New Zealander.

An hon. MEMBER: He cannot.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He cannot? I think he can, particularly since he is so far removed from the scene of operations. At all events that is my conviction. I do know that when that protection is given it is simply a weapon used against me when I want to beat down the protection given the secondary industries, which I think is so injurious to me. If I could conceive a reason for the restrictive measures contained in this bill it would be that in order, in a sense, to placate the farmer they are going to hold out to him the bait that he is going to get something out of this, so that he may not so seriously attack these excessive duties which give protection to the secondary industries. The right hon. leader of the government promised the farmers of this country that he would secure markets for them.

Mr. BENNETT: So he has.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, I have not the time to-night to enter into an argument of that sort. But if this measure is an attempt to implement that promise, then I have some understanding as to how hon. gentlemen in the corner are meeting with the government on common ground in that respect. I, for one, cannot support the bill in its present form. I must say that I am rather agreeably pleased with most of the provisions in the two bills introduced yesterday for the purpose of assisting agricultural communities. But, with sections 9 and 12 remaining in the present bill, and the absolute refusal of the government either materially to amend them or to strike them out, I must vote against the third reading of the bill.

Mr. F. W. TURNBULL (Regina): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few observations on the third reading of the bill, and shall make them as brief as is reasonably possible. I believe I may sum up the speech of the hon. member who has just sat down (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) by these words, that he loves the farmers, he loves them very exceedingly, but he does not want to lift a finger to help them because the Conservative government has brought in a bill which, because it is brought in by a Conservative government, he must oppose. He sees a deep dyed plot behind the measure to drag the farmers into accepting high tariffs simply by giving them a marketing bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is a fair statement.

Mr. TURNBULL: The hon. member says that that is a fair statement of his position. Of course he rings the death knell of protection when he is not in office, but the bells are singularly silent when his party is sitting to the right of Mr. Speaker.

I was glad to hear the speech made this evening by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore). Theoretically I do not know of any two hon. members in the House of Commons who agree with each other better than the hon. member for Ontario and myself, except on the question of protection where he is a very much higher protectionist than I am. But on theory he is pretty good, and when you want a sort of diagnosis of the law of supply and demand the hon. member for Ontario is unexcelled. He has talked about the free meeting of sellers and buyers. Well, if we had a free meeting of sellers and buyers conditions might be different, but we have not that free meeting. How much freedom have we when we try to sell a bushel of wheat in France, which is our market? We meet with a duty of 85 cents per bushel, and a 97 per cent milling quota. Try to sell a bushel of wheat in Italy, and you are up against the same thing. Try to sell a bushel of wheat in Germany, and you are up against the same thing.

Mr. CASGRAIN: This bill will not correct that condition.

Mr. TURNBULL: So I say that so far as the export market is concerned you are not in the position of having a free meeting of buyers and sellers. While the argument of the hon. member for Ontario might be perfectly proper if the conditions he described existed, yet my hon. friend must be the first to recognize that so far as the world is concerned those conditions do not exist. He must further agree that there is no possibility of our producing those conditions throughout the world, and the result is that we must direct our attention to the conditions which exist and not the conditions which we hope may exist. The trouble with my hon. friends opposite is that they have not recognized the condition, and they are still dealing in theories. I hope that when the hon. member for Ontario took that long digression into the early history of England he was not suggesting that the Liberal party in Canada today are the mental contemporaries of Piers Plowman because they certainly have not advanced far along the road.

Let us see what the conditions are. There is no question in the world that there must be difficulty in getting markets. There is no question that a free and open market so far as our exports are concerned does not exist anywhere except in Great Britain. And when my hon. friends opposite say that that is due to something which this party has done, I really think they know that that is not in accordance with the facts. But repeating it often enough they make themselves believe it, because unless they can believe it they cannot believe anything, and their position would be hopeless.

The Hon. Charles A. Dunning, a former minister of finance was a pretty close student of our markets, and particularly our wheat market. When the hon. member for Ontario suggests that government intervention has been the cause of our trouble in Saskatchewan there are other points I should like to call to his attention. I am suggesting that drought and the grasshoppers had something to do with southern Saskatchewan. I know, however, that the hon. member was referring to the fact that the government stepped into the wheat market. If he was not referring to the government's action in connection with its intervention with respect to wheat in western Canada—

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): I did not refer to the intervention of this government, particularly.

Mr. TURNBULL: Was it the intervention of the provincial government?

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): Of governments.

Mr. TURNBULL: I do not know what the intervention of governments was in western Canada—

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): And extending over a period of years.

Mr. TURNBULL: —unless it was the action taken in 1929 by the provincial governments to assist the wheat pools when the world markets were closed to our wheat, during the regime of hon. members opposite. But that was not the action of this government. Let us clear up any doubt as to the fact that the world markets were closed, and let us clear up any doubt as to what the real trouble in western Canada was. In this connection I shall quote the words of the Hon. Charles A. Dunning. Speaking at Broadview on June 13, 1930, while he was still minister of finance, and while the present right hon. leader of the opposition was prime minister, he said:

> The importance of western wheat to Canada has never been so evident as in the last two years.

The last two years.

> When we have plenty of it and can sell it, the men on the railways are busy moving it, the men in the offices are busy keeping track of it; the men in the factories are busy making those things which you producers need. If we only have a half crop and do not sell it the prosperity of the whole dominion is affected.

That is what happened in western Canada. We had half a crop, yet we could not sell even that. Let me repeat that that occurred during a time my hon. friends opposite had control of the reins of government, and during a time when across the country they were preaching the doctrines of wider markets, and were allowing the markets to be constantly restricted. We lost all our markets between 1922 and 1930, with the exception of the market in Great Britain. I do not ask hon. members to take my word for that, either, because in this connection I shall quote Mr. Dunning again. Speaking at Melfort he is reported in the Leader Post of June 21, 1930, as follows:

> Mr. Dunning at Melfort, gave reasons for men who are jobless as being due wholly to the half grain crop of western Canada last year not being successful in selling.

And remember, these are the gentlemen who say we caused unemployment. Yet their minister of finance was aware of the fact that there were jobless in 1930 before we took office. He went on to say:

> The only market left at the present time for wheat is Great Britain, which has a free market, but the mother country has recently lessened their demand for Canadian wheat.

Then, speaking again, and reported in the Leader Post of June 25, 1930, Mr. Dunning explained that the present depression, that of 1930, which my hon. friends opposite are continually declaring was caused by the Conservative government, was due to world wide overproduction of basic commodities, and until this surplus was used up the government could do very little to assist in unemployment. Laissez-faire again; let it take care of itself. In all the world there was no market, except in Great Britain, and the only thing to do was to stimulate trade with her. That was the condition which existed in 1930.

What solution have hon. gentlemen opposite presented? We had that condition in 1931; we had it in 1932, aggravated by the return of Russia to competition with the wheat exporting countries. That country said to Great Britain the other day, "If you will lend us money we will quit selling wheat, but we have to sell wheat in order to get money to buy the things we need. If you will lend us money we will quit selling it, and begin to buy it." That was Russia's condition in 1932, and that is her condition to-day. Then 1933 came along, and these gentlemen opposite who preach wider markets had a summer school at Port Hope, and at that Port Hope summer school according to press reports the right hon. leader of the opposition attended every session. The report of one session of the Liberal summer school that appeared in the Leader Post of September 26, 1933, said this:

> What immediate action could be adopted to increase Canada's exports, particularly of wheat, was canvassed at Tuesday's session of the round table on tariffs at the Liberal summer conference here.

You would have thought that they would have produced this plan for wider markets at that stage, because the leader of the opposition had told us that it was the policy of his party to get wider markets. But then he came to Kelvington in the constituency of Mackenzie, just fresh from the summer school where this conference had taken place, and he told the people of Mackenzie, not how he was going to get wider markets, but of the beauties of wider markets, and then he came here and boasted of how he had won that election on that basis. What did the summer conference say?

> At the end of the discussion, however, when everything from reciprocity to free trade had been discussed, no suggested solution was forthcoming.

That is the Liberal position with regard to getting wider markets. They have no solution; on the fifth day of June, 1934, they still have no solution. They have not presented one single suggestion for wider markets for any line of produce in this country. And when we come here with a bill which we hope will assist us to meet conditions that exist throughout the world, the only thing we get is weeks and weeks of opposition and diatribes on liberty and things of that kind.

I believe in liberty; I believe in the constitution; I believe in a man's liberty to do what he likes so long as he does not unduly interfere with anybody else; but there is one thing the primary producer in this country is demanding and is entitled to get if governments can give it to him, and that is the liberty to live, the liberty to get for his products a fair price and a fair method of marketing. He is entitled to any assistance we can give him in order that he may have the liberty to live. That is what we are trying to do, and we are accused of restricting production. There is nothing in the bill about that. We are accused of restricting imports. There is something in the bill about that. If my hearing was not so bad this afternoon I heard some hon. member opposite ask what was being done about the importation of flour from Australia. I think it was the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) who was very much alarmed at what might happen the primary producers of Ontario and what might happen to the price of wheat in Ontario if we allowed flour to come in from Australia. If he was not urging the restriction of the importation of that flour from Australia, I do not know what he was urging.

There is the situation, and if this bill passes we shall have some system of dealing with a situation of that kind whether the importation is from Australia or from any other country.

The results of government action in this session of the house are beginning to be apparent already. I think it was the hon. member for Ontario, who talked about this bill being a method of transferring natural wealth from the pockets of one class to the pockets of another class. He says it was not he; at all events some hon. member opposite discussed it. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the things that has been going on here for years. Ask the tobacco producers of southern Ontario who got such low prices for their tobacco while dividends were being paid if wealth was not being transferred unduly from the pockets of one class to the pockets of another class. Ask them now that they are getting ten and fifteen cents a pound more for their tobacco this year than last year. Ask the tomato growers who are being paid under contract ten and fifteen cents a bushel more for their tomatoes this year than last whether they do not think that wealth has been unduly transferred from the pockets of one class to the pockets of another class and whether it is not good business on the part of the government, not to transfer wealth but to see that the producer class get a fair proportion of the monetary returns from the goods they produce.

An attempt has been made to stir up a little feeling between consumers and producers. There is no division between the people of this country as between producers and consumers. There cannot possibly be. The producer of wheat is a consumer of lumber; the producer of lumber is a consumer of metallic products, and of those things that are produced on the farm. Every producer is a consumer, and in the main every consumer is also a producer, not perhaps a direct producer. The railwayman, for instance, is not a producer of wheat, but he assists the producer of wheat to obtain the return from the production of that form of wealth. There is no arbitrary distinction between producers and consumers. To say that if you help the producer you are going to hurt the consumer or that if you help the consumer you are going to hurt the producer is really, to my mind, to befog the real issue.

I agree with my hon. friend from West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) that there is too wide a spread between the price of primary products and the price of secondary products, and this is not the first time I have said it in this house. But this bill is aimed at helping the producer of primary products to get a better return for his primary products by orderly marketing, and if it succeeds in that regard it will to that extent have reduced the spread between the price of primary products and the price of secondary products.

Our imperial conference treaties were aimed at the same thing, and we got some results from them. We had, for example, my hon. friend from West Edmonton saying that the reason why we are getting a higher price for bacon in the world market is because of those treaties, but it was not because of his vote on those treaties. It was in spite of the fact that he tried to see that we did not get those treaties, and in spite of the fact that the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) went around the country telling the farmers not to produce bacon hogs because there was nothing in the treaties for them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Come off, now.

Mr. TURNBULL: And that is part of the reason why we were able to sell only 70,000,000 pounds instead of 280,000,000 pounds.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will straighten you out the next time.

Mr. TURNBULL: What is the matter with this particular bill? Here is the ex-Minister of Agriculture, who has surely had the interests of the farmers at heart, or if he has not he ought to have had. It is true that he said we would have to have a new basis for agriculture, but we will take it that he was always struggling to get something better though he was not very successful in doing so. The best part of his acts died on the order paper, he said. Was one of them the attempt to permit the importation of renovated butter from the United States in 1923?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You should keep quiet about butter.

Mr. TURNBULL: Wouldn't you like me to? My hon. friend from Melville says: I laid the foundation for this bill. He says. I passed grading acts, apple grading acts, fruit grading acts, vegetable grading acts, and they were all the foundation of this bill. Each one of those acts was the foundation stone upon which this bill should be built. Well, having got the foundation well laid with the assistance of his fellow members around him, and the assistance of the leader of the opposition, I wonder if he told his leader when he was laying that foundation that the superstructure was going to look like this bill, and I wonder if the leader of the opposition did not read him a homily on the liberty of the subject when he got around to that. Surely the hon. member for Melville did not deceive his leader and lay the foundation without telling him what kind of building he was going to erect on that foundation, without telling him that all these grading acts were to be the basis of some sort of marketing act that was to have come later if the people had not got tired of them so soon.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You evidently did not hear what I said this afternoon.

Mr. TURNBULL: Here we are with the foundation all laid by a responsible minister of the Liberal party, and then he is faced with the opposition of his colleagues beside him. They refuse to help him erect the superstructure on the foundation. They all say: No, we have got this far, we will not go any further; this marketing bill cannot be put through. The only reason advanced so far for this stand is their rugged individualism. You could hear them applaud when the hon. member for Ontario said that we should not interfere with individual liberty. That is a very worthy subject for applause as no one wants to interfere with it any more than is necessary. But we do want to interfere with the individual liberty of a small minority in order that a substantial majority may get the best they can out of their products. While I do not believe in interfering with liberty, to that extent I think the bill should be supported.

There is a good deal to be said against controlled planning, that the individual should be allowed to plan for himself, but that is not what is done in the civilized world. We are not selling our goods in Canada where there is a free market for buyer and seller; we are selling our surplus goods on the world markets where there is no longer a free market. During the war there was centralized buying of agricultural products by the allies. We had to meet that in this country by centralized selling and we established a wheat board. It is quite true that hon. gentlemen in the Liberal party were not very much enamoured of the wheat board when it was first started; it is quite true that the United Farmers of Alberta were very loud in their lamentations when the wheat board was first started. We had the same thing from the grain growers in Saskatchewan, but when the benefits of the board were discovered they were equally loud in their lamentations when it came to an end. As soon as centralized buying ceased, centralized selling had to cease and the wheat board came to an end. The War Measures Act was not sufficient to continue it any longer.

For a few years, from 1923 to 1925, we got along with the free flow of buying and selling, but in 1925 a new item began to enter into things, free buying and selling and the free meeting of buyer and seller ceased. The people in Europe who bought our goods decided that they did not want to buy any more from us. European countries began to organize their own trade in order that they might get along without wheat from Canada, the Argentine, Australia or anywhere else. Hon. gentlemen opposite were very glad to go through the country stating that this was because of Bennett's tariffs. They are doing the same thing to-day from one end to the other of Ontario. There must have been a great deal of prescience in Italy in 1925 when Mr. Mussolini began to prepare Italy for tariffs which were to be put into force in 1930. This thing started in Italy in 1925, in Germany in 1927, and in France in the same year, all during the regime of the Liberal party. It started in the United States in 1922 and it got its cap sheaf in the spring of 1930. At that time the former Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) declared that he was not interested in marketing wheat; he thought he could do the greatest service for this country if he increased the sale of our industrial production. The right hon. leader of the opposition declared that he was afraid either to increase his tariffs against the United States or to increase the British preference lest he might provoke the people of that country. This was the attitude of the leader of the opposition in 1930, and then we got the Hawley-Smoot tariff which completed the disaster as far as the contemplated sale of farm products on the American market was concerned. That was the condition with which we were faced. There was no longer a free meeting between buyer and seller. There was a planned economy in existence in Italy, in France and in Germany, a determination to make those three countries self-supporting as far as their production of wheat was concerned. And they succeeded. Because of this action, taken long before we came into office and upon which our entry into office had no bearing, we lost our European sale of wheat. Because we lost our European sale of wheat that commodity piled up in this country and remained unsold. Because the western farmer could not sell his wheat for a price, because the eastern farmer could not dispose of his dairy products, there was a lack of consuming power on the part of the agricultural population. This led to a lack of ability to sell on the part of the industrial population, which resulted in unemployment.

It is apparent that these countries intend to pursue the path they have trodden so far. This being apparent it becomes necessary for us, no matter how much we may love rugged individualism or individual liberty, to take steps to preserve our liberty in competition with the goods of other countries so that Canada shall not become an economic subject but rather shall be an economic equal among the nations of the world. This is necessary to preserve our Canadian liberty and our Canadian markets. It is necessary to regulate the flow of goods not into markets which are wide open but into markets which are very restricted. This restriction did not occur in 1933 or 1934; it occurred in the period between 1922 and 1930.

However, we got down to the point where the former Minister of Agriculture had the whole structure ready for the keystone. The arch was all built because of the efforts he had made during the nine years he was in office. We are now ready to put the keystone in the arch and the former Minister of Agriculture is ready to help us to the best of his ability. But he is hampered by all his friends on the other side. They say: Do not put it in; it may be socialism. Let me assure my hon. friends that this bill is not socialism. As far as I can see, it contains not one element of socialism.

Mr. MITCHELL: What is socialism?

Mr. TURNBULL: The hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) has been in Russia and he should be better advised than I on that. I am quite sure he is not so fond of the exemplifications of socialism which he saw there. This bill is not communism. There is no difference between communism and socialism. There may be a slight difference between the methods used. This bill is not socialism. Socialism in this country and in Great Britain embodies the state ownership of industry. That is state socialism, but there is no element of state ownership in this bill. The government is not going to own the products of the farm, of the forest, of the field, of the mines or of the sea. There is no state ownership or state socialism about it. There is no colour of that thing called socialism, of that thing which is advocated by those who sometimes say they are socialists and sometimes say they are not, but yet lead the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in this country. This afternoon the hon. member for Bow River declared that he was not a socialist, but I have a newspaper report in my office which reports him as saying that he is. I am glad he has seen the light and is turning from the error of his ways. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) declares he is one, as does the leader of his party in Saskatchewan. This bill has nothing to do with socialism, and it contains no element of state socialism or state ownership. It contains only the element of control and regulation of marketing. It does not contain the element of the Liberal doctrine which has been pursued in this house, the doctrine of leaving well enough alone and letting the law of supply and demand work things out when there is no free market.

As the hon. member for Ontario says, we are doing very well. He says that the volume of business as disclosed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce shows an increase in business and that the country is progressing. The hon. member says: Let it progress; do not interfere with it. The most cheerful thing I have heard this session was the Liberal benches applauding the hon. member for Ontario when he said this country was progressing. This is a wonderful change from the miserable wail of woe which has been coming up from that side of the house from 1930 down to the present. I am glad they are getting on the band wagon and admitting that under Conservative policies the country has turned the corner as far as depression is concerned. In their day it was only a financial recess, but to-day it is a depression. But we have turned the corner; our markets are not restricted; they are as a matter of fact increasing in both Great Britain and other countries and we hope by this bill which we are presenting to the house to assist in the increase of those markets and to help farmers and other primary producers to find a place in which to sell their goods. If in April, 1934, they sold fifty per cent more than they did in 1933, that is good; but if by this bill we can help them to sell sixty or seventy per cent more, I say that we ought to do so. That applies not only to the farmer but to the lumberman.

It is true that in nearly every line of primary products except wheat and cheese we are increasing our markets, but as we do so we are moving into markets that are more and more restricted, and the time has arrived when we should take the necessary measures to place in the hands of our people the means of meeting the methods that other countries are using with regard to their products. We must do this, not because we want to do it, not because we desire to have anything to do with restricting markets, not that we would not have the individual flow of trade continue, but because we are met with markets where the individual flow of trade is not continuing and with markets where, if we go into them unarmed, without any control, with a group of individual traders trying to sell in a rigidly controlled market, we are putting them at a disadvantage in such a market. The purpose of this bill is to give them the means of placing themselves in some degree in a position of equality with those with whom they have to trade.

I think the ex-Minister of Agriculture is correct when he says that the grading acts form a certain foundation upon which this marketing legislation should be built. He is quite correct when he says that this marketing bill is the keystone of the arch, and although with almost every word he has uttered since this measure has come into the house he has declared his condemnation of the legislation, I am glad that in spite of that he supported the bill on the second reading. I am afraid he is now lacking courage to tell us what he will do on the third reading; he seems to be wobbling a little. He spoke for a long time this afternoon but he would not say whether he would vote for the third reading or not, and he spent most of his time in trying to settle some differences between himself and his leader.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member will see what I will do when the matter comes to a vote.

Mr. TURNBULL: I only hope my hon. friend's example will be followed even at the twelfth hour by some of those who sit around him. There is still time for the sinners to repent.

An hon. MEMBER: They won't do it.

Mr. TURNBULL: I am afraid not. My hon. friend knows them better than I do. There has been no repentence from the benches opposite, but in any event it would be pretty difficult for them to repent now. I thought they were going to try to hang their hats on those amendments that were made in committee, but they found the hook was not strong enough even for that. They voted against the second reading; they voted against, not only against having a bill that might be approved in committee, but against having a bill at all. Then they have attempted to create the impression that they have made this bill in committee. If they have made the bill in committee, why do they not vote for it? If they did not make it in committee, why do they say they did? Why do hon. gentlemen not get off the fence and sit on one side or the other? Let them say either they are for this or they are against it; let them say that it is good or that it is bad, but let the country know where they stand and know it in certain terms so that hon. gentlemen cannot go around the back townships during election time and try to lead the people to believe that they stood on both sides.

They said that there were thirty-three amendments to the bill, but before the second reading hon. gentlemen were told that amendments were coming, and the bulk of the thirty-three amendments, all the important ones except possibly one, came from this side of the house, Moreover, eight of the thirty-three amendments were consequential ones; a change was made in one section in connection with natural or related products and the same change was made in eight others. They hoped to be able to hang their hats on those amendments as an excuse for saying it might be to their political interest to support the bill, but there is not a single amendment that has in any way changed the principle of the legislation. If every one of those amendments had been inserted in the bill when it came down for the second reading, that would not have served as an excuse for any hon. gentleman on either side to vote any differently from the way he did, because the principle was exactly the same after the insertion of the amendments as before. There may have been some changes with regard to the consequences of the price spreads investigation, as to what should happen in connection with the report when it was made, but there was nothing at all that changed in the slightest degree the principle of the bill, which was the provision by the government of machinery, not whereby the government should market goods, but whereby the primary producers themselves, not forced into it by the government but on their own initiative—because aside from the exceptional circumstances under section 9 the initiative comes in every case from the producer—may organize themselves, take advantage of the machinery provided and try at least to get a better share of the consumer's dollar whether it be in this or some other country. I say again that except for exceptional circumstances provided for in the one section there is in the bill nothing whereby the government forces its views on anybody, but there are in it provisions for which the producers may carry out the work themselves. Nevertheless we heard hon. gentlemen day after day declaring only one thing, that the producers shall not have the opportunity to organize themselves to meet marketing conditions that prevail not only in Canada but outside.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They did not say that.

Mr. TURNBULL: There is no other deduction, inference or meaning that is possible from the day to day opposition we have had to this bill, with the exception of the second part which has to do not with marketing but with the investigation of spreads and prices. So far as the marketing feature is concerned, I repeat that since the day this bill was first introduced in the house all that the opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite has meant is that they have declared that so far as they are concerned—and I am excepting the hon. member for Melville and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid)—the primary producer shall not through the medium of this bill have the privilege of initiating a movement to allow him to have greater control in the marketing of his own product with the object that he will market it better and obtain a higher price for it. But because this government, possibly for the first time in the history of Canada, has really attempted through federal legislation in conjunction with provincial legislation to give the primary producers a chance to organize to meet the great organizations with which they have to deal, I am supporting the third reading of this bill.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there are at least three results apparent from the lengthy discussion which took place on this measure in committee of the whole. The first is that the bill as introduced was very much in need of amendment. Opinions may differ as to the value of the amendments that have been made, but I assume that the government has attached importance to them, otherwise they certainly would not have been added to the bill. I do not believe that the value of the amendments can be estimated by their number, or by the particular amount of space that they occupy in the bill. I think they are to be valued only by the extent to which they bring the bill into conformity with customary constitutional procedure and practice, and into conformity with legislation which ensures to the representatives of the people the opportunity of legislating in the interests not of any one class, but of all classes in the community.

The second apparent result is that there are provisions of the bill with which pretty nearly all members of the house are in agreement. There are large portions of this measure with respect to which there has been practical unanimity. I might draw the attention of the house to the fact that the bill is divided into two parts, the second part dealing with investigations. I think I am right when I say that the second part of the bill encountered no opposition at all, once the government had made a very important change with respect to one or two of its clauses, the limitations of which were pointed out in the early part of the discussion. The scope of this portion of the bill was as a matter of fact vastly enlarged by an amendment proposed by the opposition which extended its provisions from regulated to all natural products.

The third apparent result is that with respect to certain provisions there is a diversity of opinion between members of the official opposition and hon. gentlemen opposite which is very wide indeed, and which I fear from what has been said thus far by members of the administration may prove to be irreconcilable.

However, I am rising at the moment not for the purpose of opposing the bill on its third reading, but rather in order to propose at the close of my remarks that the bill be referred back to the committee of the whole with the request that the committee reconsider certain of its objectionable provisions with a view to seeing if those provisions cannot be so modified as to make the bill acceptable to the house as a whole. I hope I have made it clear that as far as the purpose of the bill is concerned, as far as the necessity for the introduction of legislation for the regulation of marketing is concerned, we on this side are in agreement with hon. gentlemen opposite. To certain of the provisions of this particular measure, however, there is a very decided opposition on the part of some, in fact of all of us on this side. The question then naturally arises as to whether the provisions to which we take exception are so all-important in their significance as to render it advisable and necessary to oppose the bill on the third reading in the event of the government not agreeing to refer it back for further consideration to the committee of the whole, or the committee of the whole upon reconsidering it not making certain of the changes, or whether it should be supported on third reading simply for what there may be of possible good in some of its provisions, notwithstanding the possibilities and probability of great harm that, if adopted, it may have as a whole.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You cannot improve it as far as I am concerned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As to the amendments which have been introduced may I say that certain of them have been, I think, distinctly beneficial, and in the right direction. I am not desirous of claiming for any particular part of the house the credit for these amendments, although I think if it were desired to do so it could be shown that the more important amendments have been the result of suggestions from this side of the house. Among amendments which I think are in the right direction are amendments which have restored in a very real way the control of this House of Commons over certain phases of the subjects dealt with in the legislation itself. The first amendment I refer to is the one which provides that the expenditures in connection with the bill shall be made out of moneys appropriated by parliament. That I think is an all-important amendment. The original bill provided that these moneys were to be taken by the board out of the consolidated revenue fund. There was no requirement as to their being appropriated in the first instance by parliament. In other words, parliament was simply abandoning its control over expenditure. I pointed out as forcibly as I could at the outset that that was certainly ignoring the fundamental principle of control over expenditure and taxation by the House of Commons. I am glad that the members of the ministry have thought it well to amend the bill in that particular and to get rid of that obnoxious feature.

Another amendment is that the ministry shall report to parliament within a certain time, within fifteen days of the reassembling of parliament, all action which has been taken and expenditures incurred under this measure. It has been stated over and over again that this is experimental legislation, and great power is given under it to local boards to initiate schemes which are to be approved by the governor in council, but of which this parliament has no information at all, and with respect to which it would have no information had the bill not rendered it obligatory that a report should be made to parliament within a stated time. That report at least gives some opportunity to this House of Commons to review the various schemes which may be brought forward. So I regard that as an important amendment.

There was a provision in part II of the bill which had to do with the powers of investigating committees. That provision gave power to the committees to designate what were to be offences punishable by fine or imprisonment. It was pointed out from this side of the house that there again the function of parliament was being wholly abrogated through its function and power being given to boards unnamed and unknown, and still to be constituted, to create offences which would be so punishable. The bill as it now stands sets forth, as part of the statute, what constitutes offences as well as the penalties. Parliament itself has named what the offences are to be. To that extent the bill has been brought into conformity with constitutional procedure and practice.

Then there has also been an amendment with respect to the powers of these local boards which brings their actions and regulations very much more under the control, if not of parliament, at least of the ministry. In the bill as originally introduced powers were given to local boards to make regulations which would, if violated, be punishable by fine and imprisonment. These unknown and unnamed boards were to have authority to make regulations, and parliament's part in the procedure consisted in setting out in advance the penalty which was to attach to the offences to be named by the local boards. The government have seen fit to alter that provision of the bill and to require that all these schemes of local boards shall in the first instance meet with the approval of the governor in council, and the governor in council being responsible in an immediate way to parliament there is at least an approach to the restoration of the authority of parliament over a great deal that is set forth in the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are important amendments, and all of them are in accordance with the fundamental principle which safeguards the sovereignty of parliament. That is the basic principle underlying the amendments that have been made. What I wish to suggest to hon. gentlemen opposite is that they continue to apply that principle to all the provisions of the bill; and where the bill as it stands at present is deficient in that it takes away from this House of Commons powers and authority which the house should not part with, but which it should keep in matters of legislation, that such power should be restored by the committee of the whole after the bill is referred back to it for that purpose. If it be a sound procedure and practice with respect to control by this House of Commons over expenditure and taxation, with respect to the legislation of this House of Commons as to regulations and offences and with respect to other phases of control by parliament so to amend the measure as to ensure the safeguarding of a fundamental right of parliament, a right by which alone the liberties and the rights of citizens can be maintained, surely it is equally important that the bill in all particulars should be made to conform to that great fundamental principle.

That brings me for a moment, to the consideration of what is responsible for the taking away from parliament of these powers that some of us feel should be retained by parliament, and having them given to other bodies. It is due to a certain theory of delegation of powers. This theory of delegation of power has come to the fore rather rapidly and very recently. It has within limits been found necessary at Westminster with respect to some legislation there, but I would point out that the condition at Westminster, a parliament that deals with matters corresponding to federal, provincial and in many cases municipal matters in this country, is very different from the condition with which this parliament is faced. I think we should be particularly careful to see where a tendency of that kind if too largely indulged in is likely to lead us.

If it is absolutely necessary and the tendency is safeguarded to a sufficient degree then I would have no exception to take to it, but if it is simply adopting an innovation in constitutional procedure, particularly at a time when innovations are coming from other quarters that we all know threaten the very existence of parliamentary institutions, then I say the innovation should be considered with the greatest care before it is permitted to go very far. While the policy of delegating power has gained certain headway at Westminster I would point out to hon. gentlemen opposite that where it has done so it has been always with the exercise of the greatest caution on the part of the government. In fact the government at Westminster has been most careful to see that any powers of delegation should be so granted as not to deprive parliament of the complete supervision which it should have in the interests of all classes in the community, particularly with regard to measures relating specifically and especially to the interests of one particular class. There is one principle which governs in matters of delegation; it is the essentially subordinate character of delegated legislation; it is that the power of the body which is receiving the delegated power always must be subordinate to the power of the body which confers delegated power. The power to legislate, when delegated by parliament, differs from parliaments own power to legislate. In other words parliament itself is supreme in the matter, particularly in legislation, and parliament should not give to another body power to legislate on any subject to a greater extent than parliament itself is prepared to legislate with respect to the matter under consideration. Any power delegated by parliament is necessarily a subordinate power because it is, and must be limited by the terms of the enactment whereby it is delegated.

That seems so obvious as to be hardly necessary to assert it, yet when one considers the provisions of this measure one finds that parliament is giving to local bodies, as yet unnamed and unknown, power to draft legislation, and later to the governor in council power to enact these drafts into legislation and enact other legislation infinitely more considerable in extent and in importance than that which parliament is retaining to itself as governing the situation in hand. Surely that procedure is not right. During the course of this discussion many reasons have been advanced as to why these powers have to be delegated. It has been stated that they deal with matters of detail, that parliament has not time to consider these things, and that the executive ought to be in a position to govern in these matters. But may I point out that government consists of three distinctive branches. There is the legislative branch, the executive branch and the judicial branch. If it had been intended that the executive was to become the legislative body, the constitution of the country would have made that clear, but so long as the function of legislation resides in parliament it should be kept in parliament and not transferred to the executive much less to other and inferior bodies.

I am going to seek to avoid much in the way of quotation this evening; indeed I intend to make my remarks as brief as possible, but I should like to quote in particular one page from a volume to which I have referred previously and to which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) was fond of referring when he was in the position which I now occupy. It is so pertinent to this entire legislation and so clearly and concisely expressed that I think it will give hon. members in a moment the complete picture I should like to present to their minds. The volume is entitled The New Despotism, and is by the Right Hon. Lord Hewart of Bury, Lord Chief Justice of England. This is what Chief Justice Hewart says, at page 76 in describing how this system of delegating power works:

> The excuses which are offered even by the most able of the apologists of the new despotism are sometimes rather entertaining. It is said that parliament simply has not time to do otherwise than delegate legislative power; that parliament, even if it had the time, has not the requisite aptitude for the work; and that, after all, it is not the task of parliament, but the task of the executive, to govern the country. The last of these three propositions is said to constitute the "greatest justification for delegated legislation." Now, to some onlookers it may occur that, if this threefold defence is really to be regarded as a fair and considered statement of the frame of mind which exhibits itself in the new despotism, nothing could well be more grave. For what does it mean? Let it be granted, for the sake of the argument, that there are matters of detail which can hardly be debated at length across the floor of the House of Commons. Let it be granted, again, for the sake of argument, that from time to time an act of parliament may involve technical matters which require careful and protracted consideration at the hands of experts and specialists. Neither of these circumstances, nor the pair of them in combination, can be said to afford the smallest reason why the work which is done should be done behind the back of parliament, nor without its knowledge and real assent. Nor do these or any other circumstances afford a reason why the order which is made, or the decision which is given, should be so contrived as to be beyond review in a court of law. As for the third of the propositions, if it contemplates anything over and above what in a particular emergency may be rendered necessary by "sudden causes and occasions" or "promptitude to meet the exigency of the case," it is not easy to imagine anything more mischievous or more subversive.

I ask hon. members to listen particularly to these words:

> True, it is indeed the task of the executive to govern the country. But it is the task of parliament to make the laws, and the real business of the executive is to govern the country in accordance with the laws which parliament has made. Is it not precisely because it is the task of the executive to govern the country that it is so dangerous to hand over to the executive the power of making laws as well, and of making them in ways which, while a kind of formal homage is paid to the sovereignty of parliament, have the effect of employing the sovereignty of parliament to oust the jurisdiction of the courts.

That is exactly what this legislation does. So far as regulations and offences go, it simply hands over to the executive, which we all admit exists for the work of government and administration, the making of practically all the laws which are to be an outcome of the provisions of this particular enactment.

Hon. members have said that these laws are intended to help the producers. But how is this help provided? The bill allows a group of producers to initiate a scheme, and to present such scheme to the executive. If it is approved by the executive, it becomes the law of the land, although parliament has not had any say in the matter at all. It is done behind the doors of parliament; it is done outside the walls of parliament, and yet it all becomes part of the law of the land. That is not preserving the sovereignty of parliament; that is not preserving the principle of sound constitutional government. That is one of the features of the bill to which hon. members on this side take such strong exception.

Is it necessary, in order to frame a marketing bill which will be of service to the farmers throughout the country, to sabotage a great constitutional principle of government upon which the security of the rights of all depend? Is not such a consequence too great a price to pay? That is the point I should like to make in criticism of the measure. I submit that in seeking to serve one end, the government is taking a step which either deliberately or inadvertently is destroying fundamental principles of constitutional government. Surely such a course is not necessary to achieve a legitimate end. I believe one of the reasons parliament has been countenancing such legislation is that, under the stress of emergency, we have become accustomed to granting great powers to the executive in matters of relief. These powers having been asked, always with the statement from the Prime Minister that they would be carefully safeguarded, and session after session we have become more or less accustomed to consenting to give them to the executive. But there is another reason, and it is this. Throughout the world there have been great changes in matters of government in many countries. Some of the effects of those changes are making themselves felt in our own country. I am afraid a good many of our own people, instead of holding to what has been the bulwark of liberty and freedom throughout past centuries, namely, the British constitution and all it stands for in the working of British parliamentary institutions have, under conditions which, however, prevail to-day, been prepared to accept a lot of the new ideas and new doctrines offered as a means of salvation in countries which have yet to learn the meaning of freedom. The influence of doctrines of the kind is, I believe, much more subtle than most of us have had reason to assume.

This afternoon my hon. colleague and very dear friend, the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) made a statement as to his view of the position a member of parliament holds in relation to his leader. He pointed out that a leader had certain responsibilities in matters of legislation which possibly a private member did not have. He said that a leader of a party has to regard himself as representing not any one class but all classes, and not only one constituency but the country as a whole. It was his view that a leader has to have regard not only for the problems of his own country but must also have regard for international relations, and the like. He believed that a member of parliament, a humble follower coming from an agricultural constituency, for example, and particularly an hon. member representing mostly people interested in a particular industry or occupation, would be in quite a different position. I believe I am stating the hon. member's position correctly.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And he agrees with me. With all respect to my hon. friend, and he is a much older parliamentarian than I am, may I say that if he puts forward a doctrine of that kind he would cause it to appear that years were beginning to get the better of his judgment.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is what the Prime Minister has tried to tell me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the old theory of delegation which at different times has been put forward as the one which should govern representatives in parliament. I say that the delegation theory in the matter of representation is not the one under the British parliamentary system by which members have been assumed to carry out their duties in parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: Since the time of Burke.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Since the time of Burke, the Prime Minister has said and I wish the Prime Minister also would take the lesson to heart, because he too in many things is getting away from the true theory. The Prime Minister has well reminded us that when Edmund Burke was addressing his constituents in Bristol he told them that they were entitled to have not only his vote in parliament, but that they were entitled to have as well, his judgment and intelligence and his powers of reasoning, in regard to all questions which came before parliament, I cannot understand how any person could question at this time the fact that, once an elected member takes the oath and takes his seat in this house he must regard himself no longer as the representative of a class, a sect or of a group in the community from which he comes but as one of the representatives of all the people, of all classes and of all parts of the country.

I was surprised this afternoon to hear the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) indicate that he was here at the instance and under the direction of some local unit of the United Farmers of Alberta, not to do the bidding of his own judgment, and not to take an independent stand as a member of parliament representative of all classes, but to do the bidding of a particular group in the community which sent him here.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am sure the right hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent what I said. I stated in answer to a question as to whether or not I belong to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation that I was nominated by an organization which associated itself with that body. I did not say my judgment would be limited by it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I believe when my hon. friend reads Hansard he will find that he said there had been a local body which had sent him here, and that he was here subject to the direction of a particular group. I do not remember the word he used when referring to the unit of the United Farmers of Alberta. Certainly that was the impression I gathered, and I find other hon. members gathered the same impression. However, I am quite prepared to accept my hon. friend's statement about his own position. I do know, however, that there are hon. members who take the stand that they are being sent to parliament by certain groups, and that in parliament they are bound before all else to represent the views and interests of those groups. I say that that theory of representation is all wrong. I believe it does not matter how great or how humble the followers or the leader of a party may be, they all have the same responsibility to the people as a whole, and to the country as a whole. Once they enter parliament in the capacity of representatives, they cease to represent any individual class; they are bound to forget their personal interests; they are bound to have regard for the interests of all classes in all parts of the country and are the representatives of all. It is for that reason and upon that basis that many of us of the opposition have taken our stand in opposition to certain clauses of this measure.

I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if I am not right when I state that the bill is founded on the theory that there will be an occupational group which will draft a scheme to be submitted to the governor in council and the governor in council must approve or disapprove of such scheme? If he approves that then the scheme becomes law? I believe that is a correct statement of what is provided in the first part of the bill. In connection with each scheme, regulations are made and offences created. I say that that is legislation based not on any theory of representation by population, but on a theory of representation by occupation. I submit that, once we begin legislating not on a basis of population, but on that of occupation, we are beginning to undermine the British parliamentary system of government, and if we continue it will not be long before we get the kind of thing which the hon. member for East Hamilton witnessed in Russia where, as he knows quite well, occupational groups determine what the law is to be. When such determination receives the approval of the supreme command it becomes enforcible over the country as a whole.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to point out that the occupational groups do not have any say in Russia.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Occupational groups or those who speak for occupational groups, present the scheme to the government, or to the superior council,—whatever its particular designation may be. The arrangement is then made binding upon all. It is a system of planning from beginning to close. At least my hon. friend will agree in this, that in Russia they have no parliament the members of which are representative of the people as a whole, but they have this council which has authority to make laws for the entire population in a manner which they believe will serve occupational interests. What, may I ask, is the difference between that and what is in this bill? This is exactly the same thing, only it is done under the guise of parliamentary forms; but parliament is a mere facade so far as being any real part of the structure once parliament has prorogued and the real work of legislating is begun. I presented the matter I think fairly to the minister when I said that these occupational groups prepare the scheme, the governor in council assents to it, and as I have said, until the bill was amended, this parliament had not even a say as to the amount of money to be spent. This board and the governor in council were to have power to dip into the revenues of the country and take what was needed for their purpose, and there was no obligation even of reporting to parliament on the matter.

References have been made to the British legislation. Let me point out the difference between the two, because it is very marked. So far as Great Britain is concerned, they have in their marketing act provision for the working out of certain schemes and having those schemes approved by the minister; but, before any scheme can become effective in Great Britain, it has to be laid before the House of Commons and the House of Lords, and a resolution approving of the scheme has to be passed by both houses of parliament. Why have we not that or some such similar provision in this bill? Why cannot we have it? If the minister will put a provision to that effect in this bill, it will remove three-quarters of the objections that we have to it. Give to members of parliament who represent the interests of all classes the right to have a say as to whether a particular scheme is to become law or not. If, after a scheme of the kind is presented and it is found to be full of compulsory or other features, it will before becoming the law of the land be open to parliament at least to debate the merits of the scheme. As this measure is drawn up, however, parliament is not given even the opportunity to debate the question, or the issues that may be involved.

The whole matter is settled apart from parliament altogether. Surely we do not wish to begin with that class of legislation in this House of Commons. If we start to-day doing so nominally for one group of producers, I suppose that to-morrow we shall be asked to do the same thing nominally for groups in some other trades or occupations, and then be asked to do the same thing for industry and the like, permitting the manufacturers, for example, to frame their own scheme and give the governor in council power to approve their scheme, which, once it is approved, shall become a part of the law of the land.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I believe, and this is a phase to which I wish to draw attention before I conclude, that the whole purpose of certain provisions of this legislation is to lead up to just where that kind of thing will be possible, where the governor in council will be able, with respect to the whole production of the country, and the whole industrial life of the country, to have the say as to the directions along which the production and the trade of the country are to proceed.

May I point out another feature that relates immediately to what I have just been saying, namely that it is the duty of every member of parliament to have regard for the interests, not of one class only but of all classes. Surely with respect to any legislation that affects prices, any legislation that has to do with the supply of articles of consumption, legislation that touches all the natural products of the country with the exception of those of the mines, there is every reason why the interests of consumers should be considered by this House of Commons in any legislation that is enacted. Where will you find from the beginning to the end of this bill a single clause that safeguards the interests of consumers? There is not one mention of the word "consumer" that I have been able to discover in this whole bill anywhere, nor any provision which safeguards the consumer. How different in that particular is the British legislation! I have in my hand a copy of the British enactment, the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1931. Several pages of that act are taken up in seeing that the interests of consumers are specially cared for in any legislation that has to do with marketing. Let me read only one section, section 9 of the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1931, being chapter 42, 21 and 22 George 5:

> The minister shall appoint two committees (hereinafter in this act referred to as "a consumers' committee" and "a committee of investigation") for Great Britain, England and Scotland respectively.
> [Mr. Mackenzie King.]
>
> 2. A consumers' committee shall—
>
> (a) consist of a chairman and of not less than six other members, who shall be such persons as appear to the minister, after consultation with the board of trade, and, as to one member, with the Cooperative Union, to represent the interests of the consumers of all the products the marketing of which is for the time being regulated by schemes approved by the minister; and
> (b) be charged with the duty of considering and reporting to the minister on—
>
> (i) the effect of any scheme approved by the minister, which is for the time being in force, on consumers of the regulated product; and
> (ii) any complaints made to the committee as to the effect of any such scheme on consumers of the regulated product.

It sets forth the powers of the committee of investigation and provides that:

> If a committee of investigation reports to the minister that any provision of a scheme or any act or omission of a board administering a scheme is contrary to the interest of consumers of the regulated product, or is contrary to the interest of any persons affected by the scheme and is not in the public interest, the minister, if he thinks fit so to do after considering the report and consulting the board of trade—
> (a) may by order make such amendments in the scheme as he considers necessary or expedient for the purpose of rectifying the matter;
>
> (b) may by order revoke the scheme.

Et cetera, et cetera.

There are numerous other provisions scattered throughout the act all of which are to safeguard the interests of consumers. But here we are in this parliament representative of all classes of the community, representative of the consumers of Canada as a whole, and we are being asked by the government in this legislation to allow all matters relating to the regulating of marketing and questions that affect the prices and supply of commodities and the like to be dealt with by these interested occupational groups, and without a single safeguard being provided to protect the interests of the consumers. I say, Mr. Speaker, that that is a feature of this legislation that I do not think will commend itself to anyone in the country. The producers in any particular occupation are not so shortsighted as to fail to see that, if a particular group of producers are to get rights only on condition that the interests of consumers generally shall not be considered, it will not be very long before they themselves are going to be vitally affected as consumers of the products of other groups of producers. In theory and practice alike this bill leaves out of account the responsibility of members of parliament to all classes in the country, and I say, Mr. Speaker, that in presenting it in this form the government has been neglectful or forgetful of the first obligation of a member of parliament.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that it is eleven o'clock. I know the house is anxious to take a vote, and, if it is agreeable, I might conclude if there are not other speakers.

Mr. BENNETT: We cannot take the vote to-night, because there are other members to speak.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, June 6, 1934

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Sixth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury).

Second and third reports of the select standing committee on railways and shipping, owned, operated and controlled by the government.—Mr. Chaplin.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 94, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Please explain.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to effect an amendment to the Soldier Settlement Act by rendering the lands now vested as to the legal title in the director of soldier settlement, liable for municipal taxes. The lands are now vested in the soldier settlement director as a corporation sole holding the lands as agent of the crown in the right of the dominion. The bill proposes that these lands, in so far as making them liable for municipal taxes is concerned, be held by the director as a corporation sole but not as agent for the dominion. The bill further contemplates that where proceedings are taken in the usual course by the municipality concerned and a sale is made for taxes the soldier shall have the right to redeem. That is the substance of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 95, to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The object of this bill is to place the constables of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force on the same status as commissioned officers of the force in regard to pensions and injuries. It is a bill that will not involve the treasury of Canada in any expense, the pensions fund will be self-supporting.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

WINDSOR, ONT., POST OFFICE

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Post Office Department, between the years 1930 and 1934, rent a building in Windsor, Ontario, the property of one B. J. Fox, as a postal station or sub-station?
2. If so, for how long and what was the total amount paid in rental for this building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1 and 2. The Department of Public Works leased for postal purposes from Fox Brothers & Company, Limited, of Windsor, Ont., the building at 310 Sandwich street, from November 12, 1929, to March 12, 1934. Total rental paid during that period amounted to $42,046.48.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

BEACON HILL, SASK., POST OFFICE

Mr. McINTOSH:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters and other documents exchanged between any person in Beacon Hill, Beacon Hill district or elsewhere, and the Department of the Postmaster General, regarding the management of the post office at Beacon Hill, Saskatchewan, during the past year; also a copy of any report made by an inspector of the Post Office Department who made a special investigation in connection with the management of said post office any time between June 1, 1933, and June 1, 1934.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, as I intimated the other day when the hon. gentleman was not in his place, it may be difficult to comply with the first part of the order, covering all the correspondence between any persons, but there is no reason the order should not pass because of its indefinite character or inability to meet it. As to the last part of the question, motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 contemplate making public the reports made to the Post Office Department by its own confidential agents. The extent to which such reports may be produced depends entirely upon their character; the government reserves the right to produce such as may be thought to be in the public interest, and not otherwise.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the reservation as stated shall the resolution carry?

Mr. McINTOSH: That will be quite satisfactory, and I thank the Prime Minister.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the resolution carry, with the reservation already made?

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM, FRANCHISE ACT AND FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister if it might not be arranged to proceed rather soon in committee of the whole with the resolution dealing with the government's program of public works construction? I think it would be advisable to have that program before members of the house in order that we might have some opportunity to consider it before being obliged to discuss it in detail. I should like to make a similar inquiry with regard to the franchise bill, as to whether we might not expect shortly to have that measure before the house for consideration. I suggest this because I feel we are drawing near to the end of the session, and if we could have these measures before us for some little time before we come to discuss them I believe in the end time will be saved.

There is just one further question I might ask. I assume that all the legislation, other than that arising out of the reports of committees, is on the order paper at the present time. If further legislation is contemplated would the Prime Minister kindly indicate it?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): With respect to the last question asked by the right hon. gentleman, he will recall that in the statement I made as to prospective legislation I indicated that we would have to reserve from that statement any enactments founded upon the reports that might be made by committees. One was the radio committee, another was the civil service committee and a third the banking and commerce committee. Both the heavier bills, the one dealing with banks and the other with the central bank, now are before the house, but arising out of the enactment of the legislation with respect to the central bank there will be the legislation I mentioned at that time, concerning the Currency Act and the Dominion Notes Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Also the criminal code I think.

Mr. BENNETT: The various members make representations to the Minister of Justice as to the amendments they think reasonably might be made, and that is usually delayed until as late as possible in the session. There will be only those amendments to the criminal code that experience has taught to be desirable. I do not believe there is anything exceptional in those, so far as I know.

With respect to the second question asked by the right hon. gentleman, I think the franchise bill might be brought down almost at any date. A rough draft that had not been considered by the cabinet was prepared covering all the points that might be thought to be desirable, and it was suggested that the draftsman, Mr. O'Connor, might have points in his mind arising out of the consideration of the act. He prepared a manuscript which was printed, but which has not been considered by the cabinet, a copy of which I tried to make available to the right hon. gentleman. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), who has charge of the bill, has gone over the printed copy for the purpose of trying to prepare a bill, which I think it will be possible to submit to the house within the next few days at any rate; I would not say this week positively. The Elections Act amendment will be merely putting into proper form the sections of that act that are left after taking out those sections dealing with the franchise, and enacting them as a separate measure. There will be no essential structural change so far as the conduct of elections is concerned; that will be left entirely as it is now, but when the franchise bill is adopted it will be a separate act so there may be no confusion between the two.

The first question of the right hon. gentleman is one that is not as free from difficulty as the asking of it would indicate. It has been represented to us that much criticism would follow the submission of legislation of that kind especially at this time, under present electoral conditions in two of the provinces; it has been suggested that this should not be done, because someone has said that it is an endeavour to bribe the people with their own money. The schedule has been prepared and we have been considering, without arriving at any definite conclusion, the best time to submit it to the house without making it the subject matter of too adverse criticism.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is some wisdom in the delay.

Mr. BENNETT: The ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is always more suspicious than the office he once held would warrant him in being. If he holds the same attitude of mind on all problems that he has adopted on this I hardly think he will arrive at a fair measure of understanding of the legislation, because there is no such intention on the part of the government. The difficulty lies in endeavouring to escape such unfair criticism and to enable the chamber to consider the proposals fairly and upon their merits. They are made for the sole purpose and intention of providing employment for as large a number of people as possible in the construction industry. If, after further consideration on Saturday, it is possible to do so I assure the right hon. gentleman that we shall endeavour to meet his views in that regard.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I do not desire to add to the difficulties of which the Prime Minister speaks, but I should like to ask him or the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) whether we are likely to have any legislation as a result of the work of the price spreads committee.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It is impossible for me to answer that question at the moment.

Mr. BENNETT: I would say that in connection with the Elections Act my colleague informs me that discussions are taking place between the draftsmen of the bill and the chief electoral officer, and there might be some changes in the bill which would modify the present provisions of the statute. I correct the statement I made, because I stated previously that I did not think there would be any, and it is just possible that there may be some as a result of the discussions which have taken place. I do not wish to leave a false impression with respect to the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I noticed that when the Prime Minister was speaking he mentioned the possibility of reenacting the Elections Act. Did he mean that a new measure would be introduced, or simply that the old measure would remain with such clauses altered as might be necessitated by the Franchise Act?

Mr. BENNETT: What I endeavoured to indicate was that rather than have a patchwork statute with one section operative and another that dealt with the franchise not operative, if the Franchise Act is settled then the sections of the Elections Act would be consolidated into a separate act which would mean the reenactment of the sections. And there might be—and that is the reason I am now rising—some changes with respect to some of them which might be of a substantial character, arising out of the discussions with the chief electoral officer. My first statement might leave the impression that it would be a reenactment of the sections as they stood, and I desire to correct that.

AUSTRALIAN WHEAT AND FLOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) a question with regard to the Australian wheat and flour that have been imported into Canada recently. Are the wheat and flour subsidized by the Australian government and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I wonder if my hon. friend would permit me to make an observation in that regard?

Mr. SANDERSON: Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS: The way in which he has asked his question makes it somewhat difficult to answer. I think there have been no recent importations; I believe one comparatively small shipment is en route. I think it would be a most unhappy thing if this became a subject of controversy between the two countries. I can assure my hon. friend that the matter is very satisfactorily in hand, and I do not think there will be any hardship, difficulty or injustice of any kind done to those in eastern Canada whose welfare no doubt the hon. member has in mind. I should deprecate, however, erecting it into a subject for discussion in the house which could do no good to anyone, and at the same time I can give him the assurance that the matter is being attended to very, very satisfactorily.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister did not answer my question. Are these importations subsidized by the Australian government?

Mr. STEVENS: No, not to my knowledge. Without looking into the matter I cannot answer that question, because the Australian system in regard to many products is very complicated, and I cannot answer it offhand. So far as I know, however, the answer would be in the negative.

[Mr. Bennett.]

SALES OF WHEAT IN THE ORIENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I draw to the attention of the government, and particularly to that of the Prime Minister, by way of a question of privilege rather than by a simple inquiry, the very long time which has elapsed since an order was passed asking for all the correspondence and reports which might have passed between the Hon. Mr. Marler, our Canadian representative in Tokyo, and any member of this government. I have privately spoken to other ministers and I do not wish to harry them too much during these times of stress. I have spoken to the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) who always desires to accommodate, but obviously he cannot table a report if such report is not put into his hands. That fact is quite apparent.

His last reply would seem to indicate that the Minister of Trade and Commerce might have it lingering around his department. I got such decent treatment over there that two of his officers went to see if they could not get the return reduced. We came to an agreement. There were two reports in existence from Mr. Marler with regard to this important question of marketing grain and selling flour in China. Certainly that would seem to be a very important question at this time. I repeat that I got nothing but kindness; but I did not get the blooming report.

Not quite a year ago I had occasion to appeal to Caesar, and Caesar on his own behalf or on behalf of someone else replied very promptly. I am going to appeal to Caesar again to-day and see if he cannot put a tracer on this return. I have been waiting four months, and hon. members will realize that that is a long time for one who sometimes feels a little bit impatient about the way things are going on. I have waited four months, and I may need it any time. What would be the use of it next year? There may be no next session, so far as this parliament is concerned, and I want it this session. In my most pleading tone which I can use in addressing the Prime Minister I would ask: Will Caesar come to my relief again?

Mr. BENNETT: Et tu, Brute! Mr. Speaker, I suspect that what the hon. gentleman intended to say was, "I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him." At any rate, leaving that for the moment, I desire to point out to the hon. member that he has raised a question of very great difficulty. Reports which are sent by ministers abroad to the Department of External Affairs have not, as a matter of course, been brought down to parliament. But those which were made to the Minister of Trade and Commerce touching commercial matters have been made available, and the minister has indicated that that report would be brought down by the Secretary of State. I am of the opinion that there is nothing in the reports made by the minister to Japan to the Department of External Affairs which should be included in the return. That is my present view, and the return will be tabled with the copies only of the documents to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I thank him for his kindly reference to one who has long since departed this life.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

MONTREAL RELIEF ACCOUNTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon). Yesterday the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) inquired from the Minister of Labour as to whether he could confirm a news dispatch appearing in the press concerning the discontinuance of direct relief by the federal government after June 15. The minister confirmed the report, but stated that special consideration might be given under exceptional circumstances. I should like to ask the minister to-day if special representations have been made on behalf of the city of Montreal concerning the continuance of relief after June 15, and if so would he be in a position to make a declaration, if not to-day at least as soon as possible, to alleviate the great disquietude of mind of the population of Montreal in regard to this matter.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the situation in which the city of Montreal finds itself is not unknown to me. It is a question of financing, and perhaps one of the most serious difficulties confronting the city is its apparent inability to convince the provincial auditors of the province of Quebec that they have disbursed funds and created obligations in the manner and within the scope of the agreement which was entered into between the province of Quebec and the federal government. Beginning in last year, the situation has become acute, and has reached the point where at times—and even at the present time—accounts coming through for the dominion's share payable to the province for relief in the city of Montreal have been from six to eight months behind. That situation is I believe being given very serious attention by the city officials. If the situation can be cleared up, and the accounts received by the dominion from the province of Quebec for the moneys which the dominion has agreed to contribute to the province of Quebec in order to assist the city of Montreal with regard to direct relief, then it will at least place the financial position of the city in a very much more favourable state. The city of Montreal have made many representations to the dominion government with respect to their position. I think they realize that the difficulty that confronts them is as I have stated. Their accounts for last year are not in order. The provincial auditors are apparently having great difficulty in completing an audit that will make it possible for the officials of the Quebec government to render an account to the dominion that we can entertain and pay. I expect that the whole situation concerning the city of Montreal will come under review very shortly as to whether or not it is necessary for the dominion with respect to that city to contribute towards the province to assist it in discharging its constitutional responsibilities. At the present time no representations have been made that are sufficient to found any judgment upon with respect to the dominion government, but as I say I expect that the matter will be under review in the course of a very short time. I do not think I can add anything further to my answer.

CONTRIBUTION TO QUEBEC ROAD FUNDS

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a question that was asked yesterday by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Baribeau), which will be found at page 3661 of Hansard regarding a statement that is alleged to have been made by Mr. Arcand, Minister of Labour for the province of Quebec and reported in Le Canada in its edition of May 21st last. The statement alleged to have been made by Mr. Arcand is as follows:

Our government—

Meaning the government of the province of Quebec:

—does not receive from the central government—

Apparently referring to the dominion government:

—that to which it is entitled. Thus Ottawa has given $10,000,000 to the province of Ontario for the construction of highways whilst the province of Quebec has received only $350,000. If it is so just to help the neighbouring province—

Mr. Arcand does not deny that:

—Ottawa should also give at the same time $8,000,000 to the province of Quebec.

The question asked was: Is the above statement made by Mr. Arcand in accordance with the facts?

I am not at all sure that Mr. Arcand made this statement. In fact, from some reports that have come to me, I am inclined to the view that he did not. At any rate the matter should be cleared up, and I think I can do it in a moment. The statement as it appears would be substantially correct if the amount said to have been paid to the province of Ontario were reduced substantially by fifty per cent, and if the amount said to have been paid to the province of Quebec were increased substantially by fifty per cent.

Mr. RINFRET: Even then may I ask the minister what the figures would be according to his own admission?

Mr. GORDON: I will come to that very shortly. The figures, this is for roads alone, would be for Ontario for the four years commencing 1930 down to date approximately $6,500,000; and for the province of Quebec approximately $750,000, or perhaps slightly under that.

Mr. RINFRET: So the figures are not much better!

Mr. GORDON: When I get finished perhaps the hon. member will be more content than he is at the moment.

The province of Ontario and the province of Quebec, with respect to contributions from the dominion government to highways and roads, are operating under exactly similar agreements, the dominion contributing sixty cents per man-day to work upon what is known as the trans-Canada highway, and fifty cents per man-day to work upon other provincial roads. The province of Quebec with respect to roads apparently did not think it wise or necessary, and I have no reason to quarrel with their judgment, to project roads under the agreement to the same extent that the province of Ontario thought it wise and necessary. Had the province of Quebec held a different opinion and considered that the better way to relieve unemployment and to furnish work for its citizens was to spend more upon highways, then under the terms of the agreement the dominion government would not have hesitated to make the advances that would have been necessary to cover any additional work. Ontario, on the other hand, did believe that that was the proper and businesslike way to create work and take care of unemployment. Quebec in other directions has gone further than Ontario, using their judgment and having regard to the particular circumstances of the situation that they as a province have to meet.

It is utter folly in my view to try to compare what one province got in a particular direction for a particular purpose with what another province got for the same purpose, and then come to the conclusion that one province is being discriminated against having regard to what another province may have got. That is no test whatever. The principle, if a principle be said to underlie this whole problem, is one of need and necessity, and the inability of the province or the municipality, or both, to discharge their constitutional functions, and it is not a proper adjudication of the position of a province or of this government with respect to contributions to say that one province got a lot of money and the other did not, and that therefore this government or the provincial government concerned should be condemned on that account.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): I would ask the Minister of Labour if it is the intention of the government to introduce any legislation this session amending the Old Age Pensions Act?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Amendments to the Old Age Pensions Act have been under consideration by the officers of the Department of Labour with the various officials of the provinces who administer the act, but there is not a unanimity of opinion amongst the provinces as to the amendments that might properly be made. It is my hope that something may be done this session that will permit of legislation at least being advanced to the stage where it can be introduced at the next session of the house, but I am not hopeful that it can be prepared in time for enactment at this session of parliament having regard to the views of the various provinces.

FRUIT AND HONEY ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). Under the amendment to the Fruit and Honey Act passed this session certain regulations have been put into effect. These regulations do not appear to meet with the views of dealers in general and I should like to inquire of the minister if he has received a request that these regulations be held up until they are looked into further. I should like to know also if it is correct that a licence fee of $50 will be charged each dealer and that dealers will be compelled to put up a government or provincial bond before they can operate to the extent of $5,000 or over.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I would ask the hon. member to allow his question to stand until I have looked into the matter.

SWEEPSTAKES INFORMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) if it is the intention of the government to introduce an amendment to the criminal code to delete or modify the section concerning informers of sweepstakes winnings.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I expect that a bill to amend a number of the sections of the criminal code will be introduced probably next week, and this is one of the sections being considered.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I hope that amendment will be brought down.

PASSAMAQUODDY AND COBSCOOK BAYS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I should like to know the cause of the delay in the delivery of the report of the Passamaquoddy bay international commission report?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): This report was sent to the printing bureau to be printed. As a consequence of what the hon. gentleman said the other day, I inquired whether it had been translated and I was informed that it had not. I instructed that it should be translated. There is a great deal of translation necessary to be done in connection with parliament and there have been many delays. It is possible the English copy is available now and I shall see that the hon. member gets one.

MARKETING ACT

ORGANIZATION TO IMPROVE METHODS AND PRACTICES IN MARKETING NATURAL PRODUCTS

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Weir (Melfort) for the third reading of Bill No. 51, to improve the methods and practices of marketing of natural products in Canada and in export trade, and to make further provisions in connection therewith.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks of last night I pointed out that the long discussion of this marketing bill in committee of the whole had made apparent, first, that the bill was greatly in need of amendment; second, that there were many provisions in it with respect to which there was little if any difference of opinion between the members of the house and, third, that there were certain provisions with respect to which hon. members of the two sides of the house differed very materially, and possibly to an irreconcilable degree. I stated that my purpose in rising was to move, before I concluded what I had to say, that the bill be referred back to the committee of the whole in order that, in the light of what might be said on the third reading, those few sections upon which there was a difference of opinion might be reconsidered with a view to seeing whether under the application of that principle which has met with favour with respect to the other provisions which have been amended they could not be brought into comformity with the general procedure and practice of this house in matters of legislation, and thereby made acceptable to the house as a whole. Before the conclusion of my remarks I shall move the amendment but, I wish to say immediately that the exception which we are taking to the provisions to which I have referred is an exception which we would take to any legislation which might be presented to this house and which proceeded along similar lines. It is not exception to the introduction of a marketing bill, it is not exception to regulations with respect to marketing, nor to regulations that may be proposed, it is essentially exception to delegating the powers of parliament with respect to legislation and with respect to judicial and quasi-judicial decisions to the governor in council, on the one hand, and to local boards, on the other, thereby subordinating parliament to inferior bodies instead of maintaining, as this House of Commons always should, the subordination of inferior bodies to parliament itself, whether they be local boards or the governor in council. In other words, our sole aim is to maintain the sovereignty of parliament in all things. That is a great fundamental constitutional principle and we feel that to depart from that principle is to open the door to the invasion of the rights of all classes in this country, consumers and producers alike, in a manner which in the long run is certain to prove injurious to their interests and liberties. The little good which the bill if enacted in its present form might serve will be more than offset by the evil which may conceivably and which I believe will inevitably take place as a consequence of the powers which are being given to these local boards and to the governor in council to legislate and to perform judicial and quasi-judicial functions without any supervision on the part of parliament and without any restraint on the part of the courts. These are farreaching objections as they go to the root of liberty itself and I believe this parliament cannot consider too carefully all provisions which are as subversive of its authority and of the authority of the courts in protecting the rights and liberties of the people as are the provisions which I have indicated.

I drew attention to the fact that this bill omitted all reference to the consumer, that it contains no provisions intended for the protection of the consumer, notwithstanding the fact that it is a measure which is intended to affect prices and the supply of commodities, both of which matters are of vital concern to the consumer. There is nothing in this legislation which protects the rights of the consumer. Parliament represents all classes of the community, and I maintain that this House of Commons should not permit the enactment of any measure, whether it relates to the regulation of the marketing of produce or any other subject, which is going to affect the rights of the consumer without having the measure contain some provision which will effectively safeguard the consumer in his rights. That is an illustration of the attitude which I am taking in criticizing this bill. As I say, it is criticism which would be directed against any other measure which would go the length which this one does either in failing to secure the rights of citizens generally, or in failing to maintain the adequate control which parliament should have over all legislation.

I pointed out that the bill as presented is in two parts. So far as the second part, which relates to investigations, is concerned, there was after its amendment practically no difference of opinion between the members of the house. I pointed out, and perhaps I should have emphasized this more than I did, that, so far as the second part is concerned, if it is going to be of any value at all, it will be of value in consequence of the amendments which were introduced as the result of suggestions and emphasis from this side of the house. The bill as originally drafted confined all investigation to investigation of such natural products as might be classed as regulated products which might mean few or none. The amendment expanded the provisions of the section so as to permit of investigation into any natural product or the derivatives of natural products. May I say that in that particular I think the measure would be of even greater advantage to producers if we further extended the classes of subjects which may be investigated, and of the matters which may be investigated. As the bill now stands it relates solely to natural products. Now, if it is desirable to investigate primary industries having to do with natural products, in order to discover the cause of price spreads, excessive profits and the like, I see no reason why it should not be equally advantageous to have power to investigate manufacturing industries to see what in the case of these industries also accounts for the spread of prices, excessive profits and particularly for the difference between the prices which manufacturers receive for their products and the prices which the great producing classes of the country receive for their commodities. Unless before this session is over there is introduced legislation, which will serve to broaden the scope of investigation into manufacturing as well as all other branches of industry, we shall certainly be left under the impression that, so far at least as investigation is concerned, the producers are getting the small end of it; I should add that unless power is given to enable the investigation of all industrial concerns where there is reason to believe that the price spread is too considerable that profits are excessive, or that the tariff, for example, is enabling monopolies to be formed and too much in the way of profits to be secured at the expense of the consumer on the one hand, in the prices he has to pay, and at the expense of labour on the other hand, in the wages which labour is receiving, then later on, should a Liberal administration come into office any existing legislation of the kind will certainly be expanded so as to ensure that the manufacturing branches of industry are also made a subject with respect to which the provisions relating to investigation will apply.

Now, not only is the bill divided into two parts, but the first part of the bill, which is the part to which I shall refer exclusively from now on, appears to be in reality two bills compressed into one. As I read the legislation, it seems to me that one bill has been superimposed as it were upon the other; that there has been drafted an original bill which would make palatable to producers the idea of registration, of licensing, of restricting sales, of limiting production, and of compulsion. These features have been made palatable to producers by having it appear that these particular powers are being given to occupational groups who, as has so often been said in the course of this debate, will themselves control the question as to when they are to be put into operation and the extent to which they are to apply. Having once given that power in that way to local boards of producers, ostensibly solely to serve their own immediate ends, and having to that extent and in that way got the producers committed to the principle, then the bill goes on to indicate that similar powers shall be given to the governor in council with respect not only to those classes of commodities in which particular groups of producers may be interested, but with respect to virtually the whole production and trade of the country, so as to enable the governor in council, by a similar system of registration, of licensing, and of restrictions as well as by total prohibitions, to regulate by order in council the trade and commerce and production of the country.

It is not going to be possible to get over the fact that that power is there by doing what the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) sought yesterday to do, and in fact did do, namely, by telling the house and through the house leading producers to believe that the governor in council will be governed by what the producers themselves tell him. There is nothing in the bill which compels the governor in council to seek the advice or to abide by the will of the producers in this matter. Power is there given to the governor in council and given for a very specific purpose, on which I shall enlarge in the course of my remarks.

I wish now to quote the sections of the bill—and they are very few—which contain the features to which I have referred, and which I think are the sections that should be specially considered if this bill is referred back to the committee. They cover the sections referred to in what I shall say in the amendment with regard to reference back to the committee. They are sections which in my opinion in the light of what is now being said, if for no other reason should be referred back for the purpose of being further considered. The first section to which I refer is section 4, subsection (1), paragraphs (a) and (f), which deal with the power of the board in relation to local boards:

> 4. (1) The board shall, subject to the provisions of this act, have power
> (a) to regulate the time and place at which, and to designate the agency through which the regulated product shall be marketed, to determine the manner of distribution, the quantity and quality, grade or class of the regulated product that shall be marketed by any person at any time, and to prohibit the marketing of any of the regulated product of any grade, quality or class; ...
> (f) to require any or all persons engaged in the production or marketing of the regulated product to register their names, addresses and occupations with the board, or to obtain a licence from the board, and such licence shall be subject to cancellation by the board for violation of any provision of this act or regulation made thereunder;

When we take these provisions along with what hon. members of the government have said in reference to them, it is easy to understand why they might appeal strongly to producers. They allow the producers in particular localities, with respect to commodities which they themselves are producing, to create a local board which will draw up a scheme, which scheme is submitted to the governor in council and, if approved by the governor in council, becomes the law of the land. The scheme may go the length of requiring every producer to register and to have a licence, creating new sets of offences for the violation of regulations which may be made—and any regulations may be made—and bringing all producers in the particular industry under the control of such regulations, which will be made not by parliament as representative of all classes in the community but by an interested occupational group. Seemingly, all that may make this very palatable to the interested producers; but as we go further along in the measure we shall find that quite apart from this, there is another part of the bill which gives all these powers to the governor in council, altogether independently of what any producer or group of producers may do or say, and apart entirely from what may be the interest of any class of producers. It gives to the governor in council, in relation to practically all production and all trade, power to make compulsory regulations of this very kind.

That is the point which I hope will be clear not only to members of this house but also to those to whom the bill is being presented as being greatly in their interest. The next clause—and this is an interesting one—is section 6, subsection (2)—perhaps I had better read the whole section:

6. (1) When a scheme has been approved by the governor in council, the minister shall give public notice thereof in the Canada Gazette.

(2) The provisions of the scheme as approved shall have the force of law, and the local board shall, from the date of the publication of the said notice of approval, be a body corporate.

I stop here to make it perfectly clear that this section, combined with the others, gives all power of legislating with respect to the regulations that are to govern, all the power of legislating with respect to such matters as licensing, sale, or offering for sale and the conditions that shall control the granting or the revocation of licences, to local boards and to the governor in council exclusively, bodies that are inferior to and ought to be subordinate to parliament. It reverses the whole constitutional procedure and practice of parliament in making as respects the legislation which is to govern parliament subordinate to these bodies instead of keeping these bodies subordinate to parliament. Should it become necessary to compel producers to register, to take out licences to produce this or that commodity, and trade and the like, I see no reason why that should not be done. But if it is to be done it should be done by this House of Commons which will represent the interests of all producers and all consumers. This measure is not even fair to all producers. May I point out—and this is essential—that there is no clause in this act which requires all producers to be a party to or consulted in reference to its enactment, or even to have a voice in selecting the group that is to lay the scheme before the governor in council. There is nothing corresponding to what there is in our Elections Act, whereby all persons having a certain qualification may vote for the representative who is to have a say in the making of the laws. This measure leaves it open to any particular group to prepare a scheme, to put it before the governor in council, and for the governor in council, behind closed doors, and without the approval of parliament, to make the scheme thus presented the law of the land. I submit that that is going entirely too far, and is also depriving producers themselves of rights and liberties which they now enjoy and should be permitted to continue to enjoy.

May I go a step further? While there are in the British act some provisions with respect to allowing under certain conditions the licensing of producers, the granting of licences on certain conditions and the like, there are also in the British act many clauses which safeguard the interests of all producers and require that they shall have at least some redress if any one of the number feels that he is injured and is found to have suffered loss. In this legislation there is nothing which guarantees redress to an individual producer who feels that he has not been dealt with rightly and fairly. We were told by a member of the ministry that there would always be the right of appeal to the privy council. What chance has a farmer in western Canada or in any other part of this dominion, who feels that a right of producing certain commodities has been taken away from him, to appeal to the governor in council for redress? What guarantee is there that he will be heard? What guarantee is there that the decision will be fair? The law to be enacted simply prevents his getting his case before any court for fair adjudication. The British act provides for arbitrators to whom appeal may be made by producers who think they are not fairly dealt with. It has other provisions which specifically set forth the form of redress. I submit that in delegating these judicial and quasi-judicial functions to these local boards the governor in council is taking away from the individual the rights of redress in the courts of the land, which he should have for anything that affects his liberty and his property.

I referred yesterday to The New Despotism, a book by the Right Hon. Lord Hewart, Lord Chief Justice of England. Lord Hewart points out that this matter of licensing, where it is not accompanied by express provisions which will give to producers who may be affected thereby a right of appeal to some arbitrator or court for justice, is taking away the right of the subject to have at all times the protection of the courts with respect to his liberties. He says that the determination of licensing, where left by parliament to a minister or a board is the delegation of a quasi-judicial function. And the Lord Chief Justice of England says that where the courts are closed to redress, it is an indefensible delegation. Such is the case here. I am not going to take time to quote from this book, I shall just refer hon. members to its pages, The New Despotism, pages 66, 67 and 68, where they will find instances of the delegation of certain judicial or quasi-judicial functions in a manner very similar to those in this bill, and which the Lord Chief Justice himself declares to be wholly indefensible. Oddly enough Lord Hewart concludes one chapter with reference to a provision found in some British statutes which is similar to the provision I read a moment ago from the bill before this house, the one which says that the provisions of the scheme as approved shall have the force of law, and that the local board shall from the date of publication of such notice of approval to be a body corporate. A section similar to this is known in Great Britain as "the conclusive evidence" section of acts which deal with such matters. With respect to conclusive evidence sections, sections that are put in to make it perfectly clear that parliament has to all appearances made anything that these local boards may do part of the law of the land and therefore no longer subject to appeal or redress in the courts, Lord Chief Justice Hewart says:

> Another provision, which is frequently inserted, presumably because it is intended to deprive the court of jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of a rule or order after it is once made, is that the rule or order shall take effect "as if enacted in this act."
> This provision is apparently thought to give the rule or order the status of an act of parliament, the validity of which cannot, in any circumstances, be questioned.

I submit that it is going pretty far for this parliament hastily to enact legislation which may deprive producers themselves of any redress with respect to what may be effected under the licensing provisions except such redress as they may be able to secure at the will of the governor in council. And may I point out that this provision appears, as I have already said, in the early sections of the act which deal with the powers of these local boards. The producer in reading this will undoubtedly say to himself: This relates only to some matter that I am vitally concerned in myself, and which it is going to be to my self-interest to control, therefore I will leave that section in the act. But a little further on the same power is given to the governor in council in reference to or apart altogether from the thing the producer may be specially interested in. Power is given to the governor in council to act in a purely arbitrary manner in the granting of licences and imposing obligations with respect to registration and the like.

The British marketing act in seeking to protect producers against arbitrary action goes even further than I have thus far indicated. It contains provisions whereby if a producer is deprived of a licence under the provisions of the act he may be compensated for loss that he has sustained because of not being granted a licence. In this bill there is no provision for compensation of producers in that way. The government may one day have a policy to restrict the production of wheat, or the sale of wheat, which soon comes to mean its production, another day a policy of restricting the production of fruit, or the sale of fruit, which will restrict production. Under the British act, if the government attempted to carry out a policy of that kind the man who did not get a licence, or who found he was as a consequence obliged to reduce his production, would at least have the opportunity of getting some compensation on making out a case for it. But under this bill there is no such power given to the producers in our country. Let me read the sections of the British Agricultural Marketing Act, 1933, which relate to the matters to which I have just referred:

> Every development scheme shall provide for the following matters, that is to say:—
>
> (a) for securing that, in such class of cases as may be specified in the scheme or determined by the development board, compensation shall be payable by the board to any applicant for a producers' licence who is aggrieved by the refusal of the board to grant the licence or by any conditions attached thereto, as the case may be;
> (b) for securing that where any person producing, or desirous of producing, the secondary product in the area to which a related marketing scheme for regulating the marketing of that product applies, is aggrieved by any act or omission of the development board, he may refer the matter to one or more arbitrators appointed in accordance with the development scheme, and for the manner in which any such reference is to be heard and determined;
> (d) for exempting from all or any of the provisions of the scheme producers of such classes or descriptions as may be specified in the scheme or determined by the development board, or the production of any such description of the secondary product as may be so specified or determined.

Those are only sample provisions, there are others which still further protect the rights of producers. This bill, which is being put forth ostensibly in the interests of producers, may become a weapon to be used against producers to such a degree that their interests will suffer beyond anything which at the amount they can conceive. Unless this act is amended before it finally passes, so as to include some provision which will safeguard the rights of producers with respect to licences and so forth in the manner I have indicated, then I think that in the interest of the producers themselves it would be infinitely better that the measure should not be permitted to carry at all.

So much for what I would call the first act, the act introduced in the interests of producers, which makes a very strong appeal to producers and is embodied pretty largely in the first few provisions of this bill. But now comes what I would call the second act, which is superimposed as it were on the first, its sections interlarded with the other provisions, and which I think should be read quite separately from these provisions, because it does not relate to anything a local board of producers may do, or to anything that any committee of producers may ask, but wholly and solely to what the government of the day may wish to do with respect to the trade and commerce and production of the country. There are just two sections dealing with that, and I should like now to read those sections. The first is section 9:

9. Notwithstanding any other provision of this act the minister may, if he is satisfied that the trade and commerce in a natural product is injuriously affected by marketing conditions through the lack of a local board, at any time propose a scheme for the marketing or the regulation of the marketing pursuant to section four of this act of such product in interprovincial and/or export trade, and the governor in council may approve of such scheme and authorize the board to administer such scheme directly or in cooperation with local boards, or through any agency which it may establish. Such scheme shall continue in force until terminated by the governor in council.

There parliament is giving a perfectly free hand to the governor in council to draw up any scheme it pleases and make that scheme the law of the land. That is planning by the executive of the day not by parliament or with the approval of parliament. When hon. gentlemen in the far corner talk about planning they think of planning by the C.C.F.; they do not think of planning by the Tory party of Canada, but this section combined with the other

I shall read gives the Tory party power to make whatever plans they please with respect to the production and trade of this country, not only the local trade but interprovincial and export trade as well. It is true this section is so worded in its reference to injurious conditions as to pave the way for the next, but are hon. members going to be indifferent in the matter of allowing that section to remain? I propose to move an amendment asking that the bill be referred back in order to have that and the other section further considered, and I hope the motion will receive the support of those who see their significance. Once producers become alive to this situation, the tone of some will be very different from what it is at the moment.

Now I come to the other section to which I have referred; these are the sections to which I am taking such strong exception. I refer now to section 12, which relates to the restriction of imports and exports. I ask hon. members to listen to this section, which might very well be read as a separate act. I ask this house whether, if this particular provision were introduced in the form of a separate bill, this House of Commons would countenance it for a moment. I venture to say that for very good and sufficient reasons the house would not do so. Let me read this section which, as I say, constitutes an act of parliament in itself:

12. The governor in council may by order or regulation, notice whereof shall be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette,—

(a) regulate or restrict the importation into Canada of any natural product which enters Canada in competition with a regulated product;

(b) regulate or restrict the exportation from Canada of any natural product;

(c) provide for the licensing of persons by whom any such natural product may be imported or exported;

(d) prescribe the forms of such licences and the terms and conditions upon which the same may be issued, renewed, suspended or revoked by the governor in council.

I wonder if those who are supporting this measure will appear on the public platform and read that section to the producers of this country. I wonder if they will come forward and say they supported a section of this kind, which gives the governor in council exclusive power to compel the taking out of licences with respect to the importation or exportation of any commodity coming within the definitions of this act, for which the governor in council may wish to require that a licence be taken out. The reference to a regulated product in subsection (a) is in no way restricting as the governor in council may have any product regulated if he so desire. And may I direct the attention of the house to this further fact? With respect to this power which will be used by the governor in council there is no redress on the part of the producers who may feel themselves aggrieved. There is no provision for appeal of any kind, to any source. I wish to repeat that the government cannot get over the force of what I am saying by seeking to do what the Solicitor General, who is a member of the administration, did yesterday; that is, to have it appear that this clause is not to be read in any way other than that it will be exercised only at the instance of interested producers. The Solicitor General spoke as a member of the ministry, and indeed the Minister of Agriculture in speaking at different times in committee, said much the same thing. I have no doubt that both these hon. gentlemen mean that if they continue—

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not wish to interrupt the right hon. gentleman, but I do wish he would be more definite in statements with reference to myself. He said, "much the same thing." That is much too vague an expression. I certainly did not give the committee the impression he is trying to suggest.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am very sorry; I thought I was doing the minister a kindness when I said that. I was saying that the Minister of Agriculture had conveyed the impression that he would be a minister of the government, that he would be the Minister of Agriculture and that he would have a say as to how this particular section should be put into operation, and being in that position he would see that it would be exercised only in the interests of the producers. What is there to take exception to in that? I was about to say that I thought the minister was thoroughly sincere in making that statement.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The statement of the right hon. gentleman, as I understood it, was that this action would be taken only at the request of local boards.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I was not discussing local boards at all; in fact if my hon. friend had been following me he would have seen that my point was that this section had nothing to do with local boards. This is the power given to the governor in council alone to do as he pleases, and I was saying that the only excuse or defence put up by the ministry for taking to themselves a power of the kind is that they are going to see to it that it is only exercised at the instance of the producers themselves. I say they cannot give that guarantee. The express terms of the legislation is there. There are no qualifications or limitations. What guarantee have we that any member of the present ministry is going to continue in office indefinitely? What guarantee have we that the government itself is going to continue in office? This legislation is here for all time.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: For all time, until parliament repeals it. In the meantime the governor in council may do as it pleases with respect to the powers given to it in this section, and there is nothing in this act which restricts those powers.

Mr. ERNST: It is nice of you to concede that the present governor in council is there for all time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I want to make perfectly clear that should occasions arise such as the minister himself has pointed out, when it might be desirable to prevent certain shipments of inferior stock being made, power to deal with diseased animals or anything of the kind, that such power should be given to the ministry. But if that power is to be given it should be given by this parliament in language expressed in the statute itself, and it should be exercised in virtue of the statute and subject to the limitations imposed by parliament. There should not be given a broad, blanket authority, such as we have here, to legislate as the governor in council pleases with respect to exports and imports.

I come now to what I was about to say a moment ago: The only excuse or explanation which the ministry has been able to give is the one to which I have referred. The words of the Solicitor General appear at page 3681 of yesterday's Hansard as follows:

> The bill gives the power, further, to restrict the export of products from Canada when it is in the interests of producers to impose such restrictions. But the producers themselves are the people who will say whether they want restrictions of imports or exports.

Remember it is a minister of the crown who is speaking. Then the report continues:

> Mr. Mackenzie King: Where do you see that?
> Mr. Dupré: The second part of the bill provides for the determination of investigations, and so on.

The Solicitor General did not answer my question, but went on to discuss another matter. Then I brought the subject to his attention again in the following manner:

Mr. Mackenzie King: Would the minister allow a question? I did not wish to interrupt him in the course of his remarks. A moment ago he said it would be for the producers themselves to say when there were to be restrictions of imports or exports. Where does he find that in the bill?

Mr. Dupré: That will be done by local boards and the federal board. The local boards and the federal board are controlled by the people who take part in these activities, and those people are the producers or the farmers. That is my contention. They will speak for themselves, and decide what attitude they should take, namely as to whether they would be in favour of or against restriction.

There follows another paragraph, which does not relate to this matter. Then I addressed the Solicitor General in these words:

Mr. Mackenzie King: Before the minister concludes, may I say that he did not answer my question? I asked him where he found in the act a provision which allows the producer to say when imports or exports are to be restricted.

Mr. Dupré: My right hon. friend remembers perfectly well the discussion that we had of that point in committee and the statements that were made by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture. I have not the act before me at the moment, but my right hon. friend knows that the boards will decide what policies they are going to follow, and if they decide in favour of restriction they will make regulations accordingly. That is the procedure that will be followed, and it is for the board, not for the government or any party, to decide.

Just a moment ago when the Minister of Agriculture interrupted me that was what he said. He stated in his interruption that the matter related to the board. I went on to say to him that it had nothing to do with the board. The section I was discussing was the one which gave absolute and complete authority to the governor in council. I continued my remarks yesterday as follows:

Mr. Mackenzie King: I am afraid the minister has forgotten a part of the bill, because what he says applies only to its early provisions. The part relating to restriction of exports and imports appears by itself under a distinctive heading. It is a paragraph by itself, section 12. It says the governor in council may restrict, and it is only the governor in council. There is no clause anywhere in the act which gives the producers the power to tell the governor in council what to do.

Mr. Dupré: The governor in council will pass orders in council after having received suggestions from the local board, and regulations will be made accordingly.

That is all the ministry can say with respect to that section, and I say to the Solicitor General, and to members of the government generally they know perfectly well that while each one individually and all collectively may make certain professions and have certain intentions, the language in that section goes beyond anything which up to the present time they have either professed or expressed the intention of carrying out.

The section is not there by chance; it is there to give the ministry absolute authority, when it wishes to exercise it. If what the government states is true, namely that they do not intend that it shall be exercised in the way I have indicated, then I say to them let them take the bill back into committee of the whole and amend it by adding a clause which in precise language will state on what occasions, under what conditions and subject to what limitations this power may be exercised by the governor in council. If that is done satisfactorily, then our opposition to the measure in that regard ends. But if that is not done, and if the government refuses to recommit the bill with a view to stating precisely what the limitations are under which the power shall be exercised, and what the conditions may be which will govern in the matter, I think there can be only one explanation of its attitude, and that is that the government wants such power ready to use with respect to policies which it may have in mind, but which do not appear on the face of the bill.

That brings me to what I wish to say with regard to the power for which the governor in council is asking with respect to restrictions. I am going to be very outspoken and frank in this matter. I say that the purpose for which the government wishes that particular section is to enable it to work out its policies of economic nationalism and economic imperialism as circumstances of the moment may render possible and advisable. I do not think that the Prime Minister will deny, can deny or would wish to deny that the policy of this government since coming into office has been one of economic nationalism. He has deplored it; different members of the ministry have deplored the fact that such a policy has been necessary. They have all said, "Other countries are doing it. Every nation is going in for a policy of economic nationalism, and we have got to go in for the same thing." In other words, there must be economic warfare, and as the Prime Minister said in his campaign speech, we must make tariffs fight. This is part of the policy of making tariffs fight. It is to give the Prime Minister power which he wishes to have in order to make tariffs fight, when he wants to prohibit the importation of certain commodities or goods into this country or to prohibit the exportation of certain commodities or goods out of the country to work his will. He wants to be able to do that without having to ask parliament for authority. That is why the provision is in the bill. I say to the Prime Minister that I do not think he will deny the power is there. He may say he does not wish to exercise it. He may say that I am seeking to alarm others as to what may take place. I say that following his public utterances—and not only his public utterances but his actions in this parliament —it is fair to say there is every reason not merely to believe but to feel perfectly certain that this section of the bill is going to be used for the purposes I have indicated.

For the moment I shall not speak further on the policy of economic nationalism, but shall say a word or two with respect to the policy of economic imperialism. Here may I say to the Prime Minister and to those hon. members who think as he thinks in these matters—or as I believe he thinks—that I believe a policy of economic imperialism from certain points of view is capable of being defended. I do not see why he should not come out in the open and avow that such is his policy, and that he, along with certain other public men in different parts of the empire, is doing what he can, in his own way, and in his sphere of action, to further imperial policies all along the line. He made his appeal to the people on a Canada-first policy, and there was a great deal of talk about a national policy. I felt at the time, I believe I so stated, and subsequent events have proved it to be true, that this talk about economic nationalism was simply a first step into the wider field of economic imperialism. I said that it was merely an effort to get the public mind accustomed to regulating trade by tariffs, and to power being given to regulate trade and make tariffs by order of the governor in council, so that this wider scheme of economic imperialism might be developed.

There is nothing new in the scheme of economic imperialism. I have here in my hand a volume entitled, "The Empire In The New Era" by the Right Hon. L. S. Amery. This book contains a series of addresses that the Right Hon. Mr. Amery made in different parts of the empire as he went around the world delivering addresses on imperial policies, among the number an address which he delivered in these parliament buildings while a guest of the Canadian Branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association. Mr. Amery has never concealed the fact that he believes in a policy of economic imperialism. He says that it is the policy which should be adopted for the British empire, and as an Englishman and a great public man at the heart of empire he feels that such a policy is the one which would be most congenial to Englishmen, and the one which from their point of view would best serve the interests of the empire.

Recently we were honoured by a visit from another great public man of the British Empire, the Right Hon. Stanley Bruce who, for some time, was Prime Minister of Australia and is now High Commissioner for Australia in Great Britain. Mr. Bruce does not seek to conceal the fact that he believes in economic imperialism as a right policy for the British Empire. Coming from Australia, and speaking assumedly as an Australian he believes that a policy of economic imperialism is the one which to his mind would best serve the interests of Australia on the one hand and those of Great Britain on the other. He believes it will best serve the interests of the empire as a whole. He frankly makes his statement as to what should be done with a view to giving effect to these policies. When Mr. Bruce was here recently, he gave two addresses, one at the Canadian Club, and one as the guest of the Prime Minister in these houses of parliament. I had the pleasure of listening to both addresses which I thought were admirable. I found nothing to take exception to in what Mr. Bruce said. In his survey of world conditions, he led up to, but he very carefully avoided going beyond the point where controversy begins. He brought to the attention of his hearers certain facts as he sees them in the world to-day, and if he had been speaking his own mind and been free to do so with respect to how that situation might best be met, as an imperialist of the latter day school of Joseph Chamberlain imperialists, he would have gone on to say, not here but elsewhere where it would have been quite proper for him to do so, that he believed the logical way to work out a solution of the situation was by a system of imperial tariffs, by an imperial tariff policy or imperial trade policy, with licences, greater trade restrictions, prohibitions, and all the rest of it. He would have said further, as he has said elsewhere, that to work out that imperial trade policy he believed it necessary to have a plan which would ensure that trade and production were made complementary in different parts of the empire, that the trade of the empire and the production of the empire should be so arranged that one part of the empire would devote its time to certain classes of production and trade, and other parts to other classes of production and trade. In other words the whole idea being to arrange for complementary production and trade. That is a reasonable position for anyone to take. It is, however, a debatable position. It is the position, I believe, which the Prime Minister of this country holds to-day. I will say this for the Prime Minister. While he has never come out openly and said that he himself is an advocate of a policy of economic imperialism he has never denied the fact, and he will not deny it now. I say if you study the acts of some of the other self-governing parts of the British Empire and some of the recent measures that have been introduced in Great Britain, you will find sections of enactments very similar to the one we are discussing have been placed there in the last few years, and placed there as a part of this very imperial trade policy.

May I say that after Mr. Bruce had been in Australia he visited New Zealand and spoke there. While in Australia he spoke quite frankly and openly. He was a former Prime Minister going back to confer with the Prime Minister of the day, and he had a conference with the Prime Minister of the day and with the premiers of the different provinces of Australia in which he suggested if correctly reported that it might be desirable for Australia to limit production in certain directions with a view to raising the prices of these commodities in order that Britain might be placed in a more favourable relationship to Australia as a consequence of the changed price level in Australia, and that if this were done, then a year or two hence probably Australia would gain by some further concession on Britain's part.

That was the point of view which was put forward by Mr. Bruce in Australia. But did that point of view appeal even to the Australians? I will give the words of another which set out Mr. Bruce's point of view in order that it may not be said I was putting my own construction upon what he said:

> He was a propagandist for certain views of his own which are also the views of a group in Great Britain which can best be identified by associating it with the name of its leading member, Mr. Amery. These views favour the consolidation of the commonwealth into some kind of a closed economic unit, trade between the various nations being forced into inter-imperial channels with a progressive insulation of the British countries from the outside world.

That is the imperial trade policy in a nutshell—economic imperialism.

Mr. BENNETT: Whose statement was that, might I inquire?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am reading this from the Winnipeg Free Press of May 31, 1934.

Mr. BENNETT: But whose statement is it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a statement I presume of the paper itself.

Mr. BENNETT: By the editor?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. I do not think the Prime Minister will say that the statement is not accurate. I ask him if he thinks it is an inaccurate statement.

Mr. BENNETT: I was trying to make it clear that it was not Mr. Bruce's statement. That is all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was trying to make it perfectly clear that I was not putting my own interpretation on Mr. Bruce's words but was taking the interpretation of a leading journal the authenticity of whose views has not been denied in any way. I say I believe that it accurately expresses Mr. Bruce's views, and I believe our Prime Minister thinks it correctly expresses Mr. Bruce's views. But so far as Australia is concerned the present Prime Minister of Australia, Mr. Lyons, in an address delivered at Adelaide on May 8 took occasion to say that Australia would not take the initiative in restricting and controlling exports as Mr. Bruce had recommended. Australia must now, he said, aim at expansion of foreign trade, and the state premiers took exactly the same stand. Australians now realize that they must seek foreign markets for the increased production which is still in sight. And that I say should be the attitude also of Canadians. World markets, including British markets, and with a British preference, should be our objective; not British markets at the expense of world markets.

But may I come a step nearer home and refer to my right hon. friend opposite? I would ask hon. members to consider for a moment the course of his legislation since he took office. He came into office ostensibly on the assurance that he was going to end unemployment, and he called a special session of parliament for that purpose. But that special session of parliament was devoted not to finding ways and means of solving the unemployment problem beyond getting an appropriation from parliament of $20,000,000. The session was taken up with increasing tariffs against other countries, including tariffs against Great Britain.

What was the next step? In the fall of 1930, the Prime Minister went to Great Britain and at the imperial economic conference, when there was a chance for Canada to have secured that market for our wheat and possibly other products to a very considerable extent if he had gone the right way about it, he told the British government that if they wanted to get preferences, so far as Canada was concerned, they would have to change their fiscal policy and cease to be a free trade country and become a protectionist country. That was another step in this policy of economic imperialism, asking that the home government should also become protectionist because our Prime Minister took the view, and it was the view some others have taken in the past, that hereafter if preferences were to be given in the empire they would not be given by means of reducing tariffs within the empire but rather by raising tariffs against other countries. I need not go into what was said at that time because it is all on record and is well known.

What took place after that? At the next session of parliament we had the Prime Minister again raising the tariffs of this country very considerably, always getting Canada into the position where, so far as the outside world was concerned, it was more and more being cut off from Canada in the matter of trade, and so arranging matters that by a reduction of the tariff, if he wished to make any, it would be a reduction largely within the British Empire itself but not to a point that would very materially affect the privileged position of any industry that the government might wish to see was adequately protected so far as this country was concerned.

Let me go a step further. What took place at the imperial conference which met in Ottawa 1932? The former Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Stanley Baldwin, and others who were with him, speaking in this very chamber, said that they hoped that those who were gathered together would see their way clear to the lowering of tariffs and of making trade within the empire a greater certainty by that method rather than that of raising tariffs still higher against foreign countries. The head of the British delegation sought to cement the bonds of empire in a way which was initiated by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he was Prime Minister of this country, and which up to 1930 had been followed by all his successors. That was the position the British ministers took, but what was the position at the end of the conference? At the end of the conference tariffs were higher than ever against foreign countries and there had been very little in the way of increased preference within the empire itself. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) was very insistent upon one thing at that conference, although he did not get his way to the extent he desired. He was very insistent that any agreements arrived at should be for a term of years. He wanted ten years.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think so.

Mr. BENNETT: Just look at the record and see.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know the Prime Minister spoke of a ten year period.

Mr. BENNETT: What I said was a five or ten year period.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Five or ten year period. In his own heart the Prime Minister wished to get a ten year period, but he did not get it.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry, that is not right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I remember this —I think the Prime Minister will say I am right—that he said he believed a longer term agreement would be more likely to serve the end he had in view. I think he has made it perfectly clear that he is in favour of these rigid agreements which will run for a series of years. In addition, the agreements which were made at the imperial economic conference of 1932 were so drafted as to make more difficult than ever, if not altogether impossible, the negotiation of agreements with other countries.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, yes. Look at the terms of the agreements and you will see that they have removed the opportunity for bargaining formerly afforded by the difference between the general and the intermediate tariffs. The best answer to my hon. friends opposite and their government is the fact that they have not been able to make any agreements worthy of the name with any country since they have been in office.

An hon. MEMBER: How about France and Germany?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Those are all evidences,—and I have not referred to the embargo on Russian goods and other enactments—of the efforts being made under one guise or another to gain for the governor in council the power to restrict importations into this country, if he so desires. All that was done with respect to placing an embargo on Russian commodities and goods could be done with respect to the goods of any other country in the world under this clause which this parliament is being asked to enact at the present time and much more, through the power to restrict exports and, therefore, production as well. Are we going to turn over to this administration that power in the interests of the producers of this country in whose name this legislation is ostensibly being brought forward?

This brings me back to what I have said as to the possibility of evil, and the possibilities of harm and injury, which may occur because of the provisions of this measure. The powers given to the governor in council under this section are so comprehensive that I for one, unless the government can see its way clear to amend this legislation in the particulars suggested, will feel obliged to vote against the bill itself.

As I have said, these are all indications of the Prime Minister's desire to further imperial trade policies. I do not think that he will deny that such is the view he holds. Why then does the ministry not come out frankly and openly say that such is their policy? Why do they not debate its merits on the floor of this house, or let the country pronounce upon it? They should not try to put in force a policy of economic imperialism under the guise of a marketing bill. They should not tell the farmers of this country that they are going to help them to market their products when what in reality they are seeking to do is to get the power to restrict trade and limit production, both as regards imports and exports in furtherance of a policy of economic imperialism. At the very time this legislation was being discussed in committee in this house, the right hon. the Prime Minister delivered an address in Montreal. This address was delivered upon an interesting occasion, the annual banquet of the Royal Empire Society. I quote from a Canadian Press dispatch, dated Montreal, May 23, which appeared in all the papers, as follows:

> Speaking of the loyalty of empire peoples to the crown and the ties that bind the family of nations within the commonwealth, Mr. Bennett urged the necessity of evolving a common foreign trade policy which would seal and perpetuate the unity.

There is a straight declaration of imperial policy in the matter of trade. If that is the government's policy, let them come out and say so, but do not let us settle it under the heading of a marketing bill. Let us discuss it under the broad question of the rights of this parliament, not the governor in council, to control all matters of trade, and what the policies of this country are to be with respect to trade. The question of empire trade policy is debatable. Whether you can further the unity of the empire by any such means as tariff measures framed and enacted as ours have been in the last four years, and by powers given to the governor in council to license producers and to license the export and import trade of this country is questionable indeed. I am perfectly sure that if this country realized that this was the real issue we were discussing here, and was given a chance to pronounce upon it, the government would wish they had never so much as suggested anything of the kind.

This is not a new question. It dates from the days of the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, over thirty years ago. In one way or another the tariff reformers of Great Britain and other parts of the empire have been seeking ever since to bring about this very thing. I will give the Prime Minister credit for one thing, he has gone, I believe, in the last four years, further than anyone else in any part of the empire towards so shaping matters as to please the hearts of those who believe that the empire can be held together by tariff bonds and trade restrictions. But I will say to him that I believe that when you try to unite the empire by an imperial trade policy, an imperial fiscal policy, by an imperial finance policy, by an imperial shipping policy, an imperial defence policy, and other classes of imperial policies, you are only helping to create conditions which will inevitably disunite and disrupt the empire. You are taking the very steps which will destroy the whole unity of the British Empire.

As I see it, the difference between those who hold to the view which I do and those who hold an opposite view might well be made the subject of debate as to the most effective means of furthering economic co-operation within the empire; economic co-operation secured through imperial policies, or through autonomous fiscal policies of the several parts of the empire. Mention was made the other day of the empire marketing board, that board was regarded as a possible means of economic planning which would give expression to imperial trade policies. At the last conference, however, the empire marketing board did not receive the reception which many hoped it would. There remains the Imperial Economic Committee. Possibly it is a very good thing, and possibly it is not. Much will depend upon what it attempts and how it goes about it. The present chairman of the Imperial Economic Committee is Canada's High Commissioner in London, a gentleman who is of the same mind as the Prime Minister with regard to imperial trade policy. I could go on and mention other ways in which this idea of furthering imperial trade policies is being worked out. They are mostly only too obvious. What I want at the moment to make clear is the difference of method in effecting economic cooperation under the opposing policies within the British Empire. Economic cooperation to the mind of the tory imperialist is best effected by imperial policies in trade and finance, the one policy for the empire as a whole; the imperial policy advocates hope to work out their policies through control exercised by the executives as contrasted with the parliaments of the empire, except in so far as delegated powers give to governors in council, to restrict trade and regulate tariffs may be said to be at the instance of parliament.

Speaking for the Liberal party, as being opposed to that method, I wish to say that while we believe in economic cooperation within the empire, we believe in that cooperation being based on autonomous fiscal policies, national policies for each self governing part of the empire which will leave all free to deal with their own tariffs and make their own fiscal policies in their own way, and in the making of such arrangements as in the opinion of their respective parliaments will best serve for each to advance the trade and commerce of the country. It is cooperation brought about, not at the instance of governors in council who have been given power to legislate behind the doors and beyond the walls of parliament; it is cooperation effected by the parliament of Canada and other parliaments of the empire legislating in the open with regard to what so far as their respective countries are concerned in the case of each is regarded as most in the interests of the people. Whatever best serves to build up the respective parts of the empire, we believe, will make for the greater strength and unit of the whole.

I will now submit the amendment and ask for it the careful consideration of the house. It is moved by Mr. Mackenzie King and seconded by Mr. Casgrain:

That the bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend it by

1. Adding to it provisions which will ensure consideration of the interests of consumers;

2. Eliminating from it such provisions as give to any board or to the governor in council arbitrary power to provide for the registering or licensing of persons engaged in the producing or marketing of natural products; and

3. Eliminating from it such provisions as give to the governor in council arbitrary power to prohibit or restrict trade as regards both imports and exports, save in so far as parliament may have made express provision, for the circumstances and conditions under which, and the limits within which any such power may be exercised.

I hope that hon. members will consider this amendment very carefully. If it is carried and the bill is recommitted, and if the government is prepared to make such changes as will insure the sovereignty of parliament in the matters to which I have referred, then I think we can all agree on the bill. But if the government refuses to accept the amendment and to recommit the bill, then I submit that the reasons I have given to this house as to why the measure should not be permitted to pass in its present form are all-sufficient, and should cause those who have at heart the true interests of Canada's production and trade to oppose the third reading.

Where will the producers of this country be if, after this measure in its present form goes through, they find that every one of them is thereafter subject to registration in the carrying on of his production; that everyone may be subject to licensing in order to be permitted to carry on trade; that their production as a consequence may be limited by law that not one will have appeal in any direction against what he may believe to be an injustice with respect to the granting or the withholding of a licence; that there is to be no compensation for those denied a licence or for those whose production is curtailed? There are possibilities of all these under the provisions of this measure, and I say that without many safeguards, such provision should not be enacted by this parliament.

In conclusion, may I refer to one matter that from time to time has been touched upon by hon. gentlemen opposite and to some extent by hon. members in the far corner. Throughout the discussion of this measure, hon. members on the other side have said that some of us on this side, and more particularly myself, did not seem to realize that conditions to-day are different from those that have existed at any time in the past, that we are not prepared to recognize the changed world in which we live—that we are not prepared to recognize that conditions being very different, different classes of remedies are needed at the present time from anything that may have been applicable in the past. Yesterday the house was told by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) that my colleague the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr.

Lapointe) and I myself belonged to the school of mid-Victorian constitutionalists; and that was held out as a reproach. To those who so assert, may I say that I for one am very proud of being classed of the school of mid-Victorian constitutionalists. To those who throw taunts, I would say that it was the school of mid-Victorian constitutionalists who, standing by the rights of parliament and the powers of parliament, adopted the policies with respect to trade and interimperial and foreign relations that brought Britain to the position of greatness and supremacy which she attained by and after the middle of the last century.

When hon. gentlemen opposite talk about our not understanding conditions as they exist to-day, I venture to say to them that they are the ones who do not appreciate conditions, who fail to see conditions in their true perspective. What they do not understand, when they talk to us about new conditions, is that, metaphorically speaking, there is nothing new under the sun. If their knowledge of history were a little wider than it is, they would find that there is not a single aspect of the world situation to-day which has not had its parallel time and again in the history of the world. There is nothing new under the sun in that sense. With regard to the very policies which the government is introducing, may I point out that there is nothing essentially new in what they propose. Talk about the mid-Victorian attitude! Why, this whole business of the restriction of trade is only the old mercantilist theory and the policies based upon it. It is the policy not of the mid-Victorian era but of the middle ages, the policy that was put into force as Europe was emerging from that dark period of its history. The old idea was that trade must be restricted; that if any one country prospered some other country must suffer; that there must always be a favourable balance of trade; that gold was the source of all wealth. What was Adam Smith seeking to do when he wrote the Wealth of Nations? To those who were thinking precisely in the way that hon. gentlemen think now, he said that the wealth of a nation did not consist in the quantity of gold it had stored up, but that it lay in what Providence had given man in a country's resources and in the labour that might be applied thereto, in the production and trade that might result therefrom. He preached the doctrine of greater freedom in the matter of trade, not the restriction of trade. His whole idea was to get away from the business of restriction, the principle which this government seeks to impose in this measure. Hon. members know quite well that it was not until the medieval restrictions, in their innumerable forms, were broken down that Britain began to secure that prosperity which she subsequently enjoyed.

Let me come more closely to the parallel. I venture to say that if hon. members will turn to the period which began with the accession of George IV to the throne of England and compare that period, a hundred years ago, with the present day they will find, in every essential feature, a parallel with present conditions. I have not time to run over the various points of comparison, but I wish to touch upon the important aspects.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is my hon. friend interrupting me for?

Mr. MYERS: The farmers of Canada are more interested in finding markets for their products than in listening to the right hon. gentleman talking about George IV.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am trying to point out that the farmers of Canada will obtain markets and the country an opportunity to prosper when they get an opportunity to trade, but they will get no markets under a policy of high tariffs, and by restricting imports and exports by order of the governor in council. Now, if my hon. friend will be good enough to listen to me for a moment I will show him that what I am saying has an important direct bearing on the position of the farmers to-day.

Speaking broadly and generally, what was the position of Britain a century ago? The difference I see, as compared with the present time, is this. The situation that exists to-day exists on a world scale; the situation as it existed a century ago was on a continental scale, though it had its world aspects as well. England had been involved in a great war with France and with America, a war that extended over a number of years, and after the war exactly the same phenomena developed as we find in different parts of the world to-day, and particularly within the British Empire. While the war was in progress, production was speeded up very greatly, there was stimulation of industry for the time being, there was a great increase in production, prices rose to phenomenal heights, a false prosperity prevailed generally with inflation of prices of farm products: et cetera, et cetera. When the war was over there was a vast increase of public debt, followed soon thereafter by a period of depression, increased taxation, and soon also stagnation of trade, exactly as we have had it at the present time. What also occurred? You had at that same period just what you have happening at this moment, a series of new inventions greatly increasing production. The industrial revolution in England was then well under way. Industrial innovation began on a large scale, due to the application of power to industry. Everywhere new inventions were being applied to industry, harnessing the forces of nature to take the place of the limited energy of the human frame in the production of goods. With what result? Overproduction. There came soon to be a surplus, a glut of manufactured and other goods in the factories throughout Great Britain. The development of industry ran ahead of the world's demands. Men in large numbers were then thrown out of employment. There was exactly what you have to-day, privation and starvation in the midst of plenty. An era of scarcity and poverty, side by side with more possibilities for the increase of wealth. The masses of the people were starving although the factories and warehouses were filled as they never had been before. In addition you had the specially favoured classes, the land-owning classes who had profited so much by the war, doing what they could, by means of legislation, to retain their special privileges, exactly as is being done at the present time; the situation being different only in this respect that where in Britain one hundred years ago it was the British agriculturists, to-day in Canada it is the specially favoured manufacturing interests and others who are seeking to preserve monopolies. You had your agriculturists controlling parliament in large part and seeing to it that duties were imposed to prevent the importation of corn and grain into Great Britain. You had the adoption of the corn laws, corresponding to our high tariffs in other directions, with consequent agitation a little later against this imposition of high tariffs for the protection of special interests and also against the introduction of these new inventions. Reading the history of that period what do we find as far as the industrial classes are concerned? The Luddite riots were essentially an exemplification of hatred of the machine, which was looked upon as the enemy of man instead of his friend. All over England an effort was made to destroy these new inventions which at the moment appeared to be taking away the livelihood of hundreds of thousands of men and women, but which when subjected to proper control and regulation helped to bring about an increase of production which has made possible the diminution of the hours of labour and increase in wages, and improved conditions and indeed should lead to further diminution of the hours of labour and increase of comfort, not for the few only but for the whole mass of the people.

Then what was the nature of the agitation to which these changed conditions gave rise? You find that at that very period, one hundred years ago, you had exactly what we have been having in this parliament this session, a demand for the regulation of industry, and a controversy over the merits of laissez faire and the merits of state control, and attempts to raise prices by prohibitions of imports. There were those who maintained that the laissez faire attitude should perhaps be still further maintained in the interest of production. There were those who took the view—and they were the Liberals of the day—that regulation of industries was what was needed; and you find as a consequence the factory acts and laws introduced in the form of regulation by Ashley and Huskisson and others whose names are familiar. With more in the way of regulation in industry, and of the abolition of restrictions in trade, conditions soon began to improve and an era of prosperity followed an era of depression. It will be the same here, when to similar ends like means are applied.

There were radical movements too, but the reformers and radicals of that day did not find it necessary to create soviets, they did not find it necessary to adopt the Fascist method of dealing with the problems of the day. They looked to more adequate representation in parliament to improve conditions, and to parliament itself to meet their demands. What was the Chartist movement other than a demand for more in the way of opportunity to be given to the working classes to enjoy all the power and authority which they believed parliament could give them? Were they right, or were they wrong, in that attitude of looking to, not away from parliament? Take the charter and look at its various provisions. What did its promoters ask for? They asked for the secret ballot. What for? As protection to labour and the common people in the matter of securing their rights and proper representation in parliament. Was that a good or a bad thing? If it was good, why should we throw away that particular method in securing freedom and rights when we come to deal with legislation? In this marketing bill there is no secret ballot provided for in the choice of those who are to have the making of the regulations and the laws. That power is to be given to special groups I might run on down the list and refer to the other clauses of the charter, every one of which illustrates how the working men of that day looked to constitutional methods of procedure to get the redress which they needed.

Now may I say that I welcome, with all my heart, this unrest of the present time, which I believe is bred of a well-founded sense of injustice and wrong. But I believe that the place to seek redress is in this parliament, in accordance with constitutional principles of British parliamentary practice and procedure. I do not think it is to be found in following the methods that have been adopted either in Russia, or in Italy, Germany or Austria at the present time. These countries have never known what freedom is in the true sense of the word. We have gone a long way to enlarge our liberties and secure greater freedom. Let us hold what in those particulars we have. Do not let us be quick to part with these great securities to life and property, but let us use them in a way which will help to bring to a larger number of mankind that "greatest good for the greatest number" which was the aim of political action as defined by Bentham and which also was a part of the intellectual outcome of discussion, and the foremost movement in politics, in the period of unrest one hundred years ago.

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): On the second reading of this bill on May 1, at page 2704 of Hansard I put on record some figures from the annual reports of the Department of National Revenue for the years from 1930 to 1933 inclusive. They show beyond any doubt, first that in 1933 the total external trade of Canada was about one-third of what it was in 1930; second, that in 1933 our imports were $841,889,838 less than in 1930, and our exports $664,216,273 less than in 1930; third, that in 1933 our trade with the United States was one-quarter and with Germany, Japan and Italy one-third of what it was in 1930, and with France $4,000,000 less, with Belgium $7,000,000 less, with China $9,000,000 less; and with the Argentine our trade was less than one-seventh of what it was in 1930; fourth, that in the year ended March 31, 1934, for each month there has been a terrific and formidable decrease in exports and imports as well, as compared with the same months in the fiscal year 1929-30. From August 31, 1930, to April 30, 1934, the decrease in Canadian exports is as follows: In the first year, from August 31, 1930, to March 31, 1931, thanks to the repeal of the Dunning budget, the abolition of the tariff board, the special session high tariff and the fiasco of the first London conference, there was a decrease in exports of $189,000,000. In the second year, from April 1, 1931, to March 31, 1932, thanks to the 1931 session with its new, inconsiderate and uncalled for increase in the tariff, there was a decrease of $412,373,365. In the third year, from April 1, 1932, to March 31, 1933, thanks to the fiasco of the Ottawa agreements, there was another decrease of $514,917,712. In the fourth year, from April 1, 1933, to April 30, 1934, thanks to the fiasco of the London world conference, there was another export decrease of $481,804,363. The total decrease in exports from August 31, 1930, to April 30, 1934, was $1,598,095,440.

It has been said that last April was better with regard to imports and exports. I should like to give the exports and imports for the month of April for the last four years:

	Imports	Exports
1930..	$71,401,839	$50,744,159
1931..	51,189,376	33,935,075
1932..	29,794,296	26,975,756
1933..	20,457,294	20,011,652
1934..	34,814,998	31,581,881

I should like to compare these months with April of 1930, and I make that comparison because during the last campaign the leader of the Conservative party said that things were bad in this country because of the bad management of the business of the country by the King government. That must be a good comparison, therefore, to see if matters have improved since this government took office. In April of 1931, as compared with April of 1930, our exports were $16,809,064 less. In April of 1932 as compared with April of 1930, they were $23,768,383 less. In April of 1933 as compared with April of 1930, they were $30,732,487 less, and in April of 1934, the good month, as compared with April of 1930 they were $19,162,258 less. So there has been a loss in exports during April, from 1931 to 1934, of $90,472,192. I must express my thanks to the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) who has supplied me with complete copies of the trade summaries of the Department of National Revenue since August, 1930.

Now I should like to say a word about the Ottawa agreements, which we heard so much about during the debate on the address and during the whole session. It has been said that the Ottawa agreements have been a great boon to Canada. In 1933, the year following the Ottawa agreements, Canada's exports to the United Kingdom were nearly $98,000,000 less and to the British empire $158,000,000 less than in 1930. The figures are as follows:

	Decrease
United Kingdom	$ 97,965,127
Australia	9,015,770
New Zealand	15,576,607
South Africa	6,913,338
Irish Free State	463,174
Rhodesia	1,297,820
British India	6,699,641
Newfoundland	6,798,689
Other British countries	13,896,218
	$158,617,384

This is the wonderful result accomplished by the Ottawa agreements, which have been praised so much during this session. Those figures appear in Hansard for May 1, 1934, at page 2702. During the campaign in South Oxford the London Advertiser said the Ottawa agreements were the issues in that by-election. The Liberal candidate in that riding won the election on those issues by the greatest majority ever given any candidate in that constituency. What is the use of the Ottawa agreements if our trade with Great Britain has decreased by $98,000,000 and our trade with the whole British empire by $158,000,000? It is absurd to say that the agreements are worth anything, and the reason they are still mentioned is the fiasco of the world conference in London last year. While we were discussing this bill the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) said, in reply to some questions I put to him:

> I am sure every hon. member realizes that the Prime Minister has too much work to do to be concerned about such matters as that.

That was not an answer; that was an explanation as to why I did not receive an answer. Those words appear in Hansard for May 21, 1934, at page 3271. Now I should like to put on Hansard the exports of twelve farm products in 1933, as compared with 1930:

	Decrease
Dressed beef	$ 672,534
Concentrated milk	851,039
Cheese	5,130,401
Potatoes	5,504,758
Peas	3,819
Wheat	63,373,340
Wheat flour	18,523,737
	$94,259,628

There was a slight increase on the other five items in 1933 as compared with 1930, as follows:

	Increase
Apples	$2,050,494
Honey	111,363
Eggs	352,507
Oats	635,552
Barley	225,488
	$3,375,404

So we had a decrease of $94,259,628 and an increase of $3,375,404, or a total net decrease of $90,884,224. These figures appear in Hansard for May 8, 1934, at page 2892.

Now let us come to our internal trade, and see the effect on that trade of the formidable decrease in external trade. Let us see first the decrease in home consumption of the same twelve farm products. The quantities can be found in Hansard for March 26 of this year, at pages 1811 and 1812; the values appear in Hansard for May 8, 1934, at page 2889. That was the day on which I put three questions to the Minister of Agriculture. The twelve farm products which are mentioned are apples, honey, eggs, dressed beef, concentrated milk, cheese, potatoes, peas, oats, barley, wheat and wheat flour. The figured value of the decrease in home consumption in 1933 as compared with 1930 is to be found at page 2889 of Hansard and is as follows:

Apples	$ 3,920,186
Honey	858,212
Eggs	12,409,136
Dressed beef	13,978,438
Concentrated milk	5,731,923
Cheese	1,243,959
Potatoes	1,290,893
Peas	817,837
Oats	2,058,211
Barley	10,699,963
Wheat	24,760,730
Wheat flour	8,428,110
	$86,197,598

After I had quoted those figures I put the following three questions to the Minister of Agriculture: First, can we still say that we have our local market so far as those commodities are concerned in view of the enormous decrease in their consumption? Secondly, for what reason was there such a decrease, in one year, 1932-33, and third, what is the proper remedy to be applied to such a situation? Those questions were put first at page 2889 of Hansard. Then on the same day the Minister of Agriculture answered me in the following words:

> Mr. Weir (Melfort): My understanding was that with these statistics on record in Hansard an answer would be submitted to the hon. member for Témiscouata.
> Mr. Pouliot: I thank you.

Then, the same question was put on May 9, the following day, and I received no answer. It was put a third time on May 16, upon which occasion the minister answered as follows:

> Mr. Weir (Melfort): The officials of the department have been working since May 8 to gather the information requested by the hon. member for Témiscouata. I have inquired as to the matter on a number of occasions, the last time this morning, but the work is not yet completed. We hope to have the information in the very near future. There has been a very great deal of work in this connection.

Mr. Pouliot: Would the minister be kind enough to tell me if it will be completed before the bill is reported by the committee?

Mr. Weir (Melfort): I believe it will be completed this week.

On May 17 the same question was put a fourth time, and the minister's answer appears at page 3121 of Hansard:

Mr. Weir (Melfort): I regret that the information asked for has not yet been completed. I am sure the hon. member will realize when the answer is brought down that there was perhaps more work entailed in getting the information than he had in mind when he asked for it, but I hope it will be in shape to be brought down at the beginning of next week, if not to-morrow.

Mr. Pouliot: I thank the hon. gentleman, and if I can be of any assistance to the officers of his department in cooperating with them I shall be very glad to do so.

That was on May 17, and to-day is June 6. Then, the point arises again for the fifth time on May 18, and at page 3174 of Hansard we find the following:

Mr. Weir (Melfort): Although a great deal of this is out of order, I assure the hon. gentleman that there has been no intentional delay. Every effort has been made to prepare for him the most accurate statement possible. I have thought it would be ready for to-day, but as soon as it is it will be submitted at once.

Mr. Pouliot: I thank the hon. gentleman and take his word for that.

I said in plain English that I took his word for it; yet it is now June 6, and I have received nothing. Is it because as the Minister of Agriculture said—

I am sure every hon. member realizes that the Prime Minister has too much work to do to be concerned about such matters as that.

The farmers are losing $86,197,598 on account of the decrease in the home consumption of the twelve primary products I have named. But the Prime Minister does not pay any attention to that, according to the Minister of Agriculture who is at the right hand of the Prime Minister. I was not discouraged, and on May 21, I asked the minister for an answer. His answer is reported at page 3271 of Hansard as follows:

I am sure, if he appreciates the amount of work entailed by the questions he has put on Hansard and also the work the staff has to do apart from that, he will believe we have made every effort to bring down this information. By the middle of last week I thought we should have had it by last Friday but there were still some points it was difficult to clear up.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Our whole desire has been to submit to him the best statement in answer to the questions he has put. So far as withholding the information until this bill is passed, is concerned, the information has, so far as I can see, no bearing on the bill because this legislation has to deal with the regulation of marketing. It is not necessary for me to refer to his suggestion, which I think was almost entirely out of order, that the Prime Minister had suggested we should withhold the information from him.

And then the minister said, as I have already indicated:

I am sure every hon. member realizes that the Prime Minister has too much work to do to be concerned about such matters as that.

On May 28, a few days later, the answer of the minister is reported at page 3433 as follows:

I regret that this report is not yet completed.

I asked seven times for that report. What was the answer made by the minister? It was:

I am sure every hon. member realizes that the Prime Minister has too much work to do to be concerned about such matters as that.

The farmers are losing over $86,000,000 on account of the fact that there has been a terrific decrease in the home consumption of farm products. I quoted the questions and answers to an English and French speaking audience in Russell county in the province of Ontario, and I said to those good farmers, "Either the minister is telling the truth, or he is not. If he is telling the truth and if he is not paying any attention to the loss suffered by farmers in that connection it is—"

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The hon. member is giving the wrong interpretation. What I said was that the Prime Minister had too much work to do to check up the submitting of these answers or reports. Every effort has been made to get the information. As a matter of fact, I thought it had been sent forward. It is out of order in this discussion, but I want to clear the hon. member's mind in that one connection, namely that my reference to the Prime Minister was that he was too busy to prepare answers to questions like that.

Mr. POULIOT: What is he busy about? He is busy checking the typewritten copy of speeches made by Jean-François Pouliot. He is busy converting Trebisch Lincoln, a Hungarian Jew who has been banned from England. He could spend a whole afternoon with him. He has time enough to waste his time with him. He has time enough to waste his time looking at the typewritten copy of Hansard showing the speeches of a back bencher, but he has not time enough to see to it that the figures asked for by members of this house which indicate the great misery suffered by the farmers of this country are given out.

I am not discussing what the minister says, or the interpretation he places upon the words appearing in Hansard. But to the farmers in Russell county, in the good old province of Ontario, I said, "The minister is either right or wrong. If he is telling the truth he must force the Prime Minister to resign and if he is not telling the truth the Prime Minister must force him to resign at once." That is what I said.

Let us now continue with our discussion of internal trade. We have heard a great deal about price spreads and the profits made by the middleman. What about it? What about the price spreads between the years 1933 and 1930? During the election campaign of 1930 the cry of the Conservative party throughout the country was that things were bad, that the farmers were not prosperous and that they were suffering. Let us draw a comparison between the bad year of 1930 and those good years which have followed since this government came into power. What has been the price spread between the value of the following farm products in 1932-33 as compared with 1930? We have heard ministers from the province of Quebec and others saying that the government were working under a handicap, that all the pacts had been cancelled when the former government was in power. Therefore trade must have improved since we have had a change of government in this country. Let us see what has happened.

At page 2888 of Hansard of this year the total production of several commodities is given by years, and that total production should be multiplied by the price prevailing that year in order to find the actual price spread between 1933 and 1930. According to that, I find that the loss to the farmer in the sale of pork meats in 1932-33 was $68,030,000.

We heard during the last campaign that butter was to be changed into gold. We heard that everywhere. We were told that the price of butter was to be raised to fifty and sixty and seventy cents a pound, but actually what has been the loss to the farmer on butter during 1932-33 as compared with 1930? That loss has been $30,200,000. In the following commodities the loss to the farmer in 1932-33 as compared with 1930 has been as follows:

Apples	$ 5,081,210
Honey	548,000
Eggs	59,720,000
Beef	71,461,400
Concentrated milk	6,695,700
Cheese	6,549,950
Potatoes	10,493,200
Peas	1,253,000
Oats	64,764,625
Barley	17,125,000

What was the loss in wheat? I hope hon. gentlemen will listen to this. The loss to the farmer in the sale of his wheat during 1932-33 as compared with 1930 was $70,880,000, and on wheat flour there was a loss of $27,797,140. The total loss on those fourteen items I have just given was $440,599,225, and the decrease in exports amounted to $90,884,278, or a total loss to the farmer in these few primary products of $531,483,503.

I am sure every hon. member realizes that the Prime Minister has too much work to do to be concerned about such matters as that. It is surprising, and again it is not. It is so hot, although I must admit that the temperature in the house is rather cool just now, just as cool as my speech.

But that is not all. The yearly decrease in the value of primary products sold in 1932 as compared with 1930 was as follows:

Yearly Decrease in Value of Primary Products
(1932 compared with 1930)

Products of the land:
(14 farm products)	$ 440,599,225
Products of the forest:
(Unmanufactured wood, pulp and paper)*	290,694,000
Products of the mines:
(Minerals, mineral products and chemicals)*	584,795,205
Products of the sea:
(Fish products)*	21,847,107
	$1,337,935,537

* Hansard, February 13 and 15, 1934, pp. 560 and 634.
* Hansard, March 5, 1934, p. 1186.
* Hansard, March 13, 1934, p. 1431.

That shows a total loss in the value of the production of these primary products of the farm, of the forests, of the mines and of the sea, in the year 1932 as compared with 1930, of $1,337,935,537. I am sure every hon. member realizes that the Prime Minister has too much work to do to be concerned about such matters as that.

As the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) has not thought fit to answer my very relevant questions which I put on Hansard on May 8 of this year for the first time, and have repeated frequently since, I shall answer them myself for the benefit of the house. My first question was this:

First, can we still say that we have our local market so far as those commodities are concerned in view of the enormous decrease in their consumption?

The answer to that is no, and if as the Prime Minister said last year and has repeated very often since, we still have our local market, that was simply one more proof that he is not well informed and that he should not waste his time in gossip but should rather take every opportunity to make himself familiar with the bluebooks and other official publications of the various departments of which he is the leader.

My next question was this:

Secondly, for what reason was there such a decrease in one year, 1932-33?

The answer is very simple. It was because of the enormous number of people engaged in trade and business and who suffered a loss of their purchasing power by reason of the decrease in our external trade of one and a half billion dollars and over. They had lost their purchasing power and that was the main reason why the farmers were unable to sell to them the same quantity of farm products, and that in spite of the fact that the number of people in Canada is greater now than it was in 1930, and the prices of those commodities are even cheaper.

The farmers are suffering now because of the high barriers to trade which the Prime Minister has erected around this country and which have cut off our trade with the other countries of the world. That is the reason why our farmers have no money. They cannot sell their products because their customers have lost their purchasing power.

My third question was:

What is the proper remedy to be applied to such a situation?

I might ask that question in a different way. I might ask: What remedy has been applied by this government to that situation? The answer is very simple. It is that the government has not applied a single remedy to that situation that has not made the situation worse, because every time the government's remedy was to raise the tariff and thereby cut off our trade with the other countries of the world. The government were probably acting in good faith when they entered into the empire agreements, but they forgot that purely British trade is only nine one-hundredths of the total world trade, and they were sacrificing ninety-one one-hundredths of our opportunities for world trade in order to secure nine one-hundredths with Great Britain and the empire. The bluebooks published by the Department of National Revenue show that our trade, not only with England but with the other dominions, has decreased. The representatives of those dominions came to Ottawa to sign these pacts and agreements. We heard a lot of drumbeating and it was very noisy at the Chateau Laurier when Mr. Baldwin was asked to stay one day longer to sign these agreements. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) had shed tears and said that he would not like to see him go away like that without giving him a scrap of paper of some kind. Mr. Baldwin and the other delegates put their names to these agreements which have proved to be so futile and against the best interests of this country. If we had got all of the British trade and Australia and New Zealand had got nothing, the Prime Minister might be able to boast about his accomplishments, but the trade of Australia and New Zealand with Great Britain is much better than ours while we have lost our trade with the United States and other foreign countries. This is the result of the whole thing.

I do not believe in expedients; I believe in a sane and sound policy. As the policy of this government is insane and unsound I am strongly against it. I am also strongly against the expedients they have brought to us. This marketing bill is just an anaesthetic to make the farmers sleep during the next election. This is absurd legislation; it is soviet legislation which has the support of hon. gentlemen in the far corner. The ministers of Quebec gave the cold shoulder to those hon. gentlemen last summer, and they blame the Liberals. The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation have taken over some of the principles of the Liberal party, but we cannot complain as we have no copyright. However, they have given them a wrong interpretation. We have nothing in common with the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and the Liberals have nothing in common with socialism.

Mr. MOORE (Chateauguay): I wonder if the hon. member is having a spasm of insanity?

Mr. POULIOT: Get up and I will answer you. I hear the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Moore) speaking. I am sure that he does not know that our trade with England and with the other British countries has decreased since the last imperial conference. If he does not know that, he should look up the bluebooks and get instruction on these questions. He has never spoken so he must have time to read. He should get familiar with these things so that he can give information to his electors. If he gives them full information, then there is only one thing he can do. The next time he meets the electors of Chateauguay he will have to say to them: My dear electors, I have tried to be faithful to you during the four years I have been a member in Ottawa, but I have learned nothing, I hope that I shall never represent you in Ottawa and that you will have a better man to represent you in the House of Commons when you elect a Liberal.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I feel almost like apologizing for continuing the debate on this somewhat threadbare although important subject. However, there were a number of loose threads left lying around yesterday and I want to tidy up before I cast a vote either on the amendment or the main motion. I listened to the stirring appeal of my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), an appeal which would move a heart of stone. Apparently my own heart has turned to stone because I did not feel any palpitating response to that appeal except admiration. Then I brightened up with the thought that perhaps my judgment is yet ruling instead of my sympathies. I am not going to go into this matter very fully as there are a number of hon. members yet to speak, but I think I should state at this stage that all day yesterday and far into the night I sought every available means of information which would justify my voting with my leader on this amendment, but I found it not.

I was brought up in a school of politics in the west which taught me that a vote like this meant a vote to kill the government. While that might be very desirable if it could be done, I am afraid that a vote to kill the government would be a vote to kill the bill. I may have been brought up in the wrong school of politics and that may not be the right interpretation which should be put upon such a vote, but I am going to take no chances because I do not want to kill the bill. Therefore, I am going to do just what I intended to do on the amendment to the motion for second reading had it not been declared out of order; I am not going to vote at all, I am going to exercise my right to refrain from voting on the amendment but I am going to vote for the third reading of this bill. I can do nothing else.

I should have liked to have seen a few more of the blemishes taken out of it, but can one get a perfect bill even on and by his own side? I have had to put through bills which were badly mutilated in the process, but I have been glad to have them put through at all. If I could not get my bills the way I wanted them on my own side of the house and when I was sponsoring them, how can I expect to have a bill according to my conception of things when my opponents are sponsoring the bills?

I did not deal yesterday with the methods of reformers. This is a reform bill and the foundations of it are Liberal. We in turn built upon the foundations of my predecessor, the Hon. Doctor Tolmie. He just nibbled at grading and standardization, but he started the thing and I give him credit for laying some of the foundation. He worked hard at the embargo on cattle and had just started on the hog regulations, but we the Liberal government put them into effect. We went on with the standardization until the time we went out of office. We had practically every exportable article standardized and ready for the next government when through the will of the people and by the turn of political fortune hon. members opposite came into power. They started where we left off. We started on Doctor Tolmie's tiny bit of foundation while hon. friends opposite started on the complete Liberal foundation of standardization. And now this government is building up the superstructure in the form of a marketing act. I went all over this yesterday and the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) must have been out of the chamber or he would not have made the astonishing remarks he did in connection with this matter. However, that is my point of view. I am always in too much of a hurry when I am dealing with my hon. friend and I generally let him off. But the clock is going; we will have to break into another day and possibly I shall be able to pay a little attention to him to-morrow.

What is the right way to seek and promote reforms? This reform has been erected on the foundations we laid as Liberals and we should give it a boost forward. That is the way we make progress in this world. For fear that I might be getting mulish and stubborn in this matter, I looked up the history written by Trevelyan, the historian. Anyone who has read Trevelyan is delighted with the style of his writing and the accuracy of his information. I will not quote from him to-night; I merely refer to him as my authority. During the time of Peel and Disraeli,

Lord John Russell and Cobden and Bright, in all those wonderful days of reform, reform did not all come from one side of the house; for we see men like Peel, a Tory of the Tories, swinging towards the reform bills and free trade, and later on Disraeli, who had hammered the life out of Peel for swinging first on free trade, finally swung himself. What did Bright and Cobden do? They welcomed every advance from every source, consolidated it and then pressed on until the final consummation was attained.

I would not for a moment mention these names at all except to show that the very highest among the reformers took that stand, and I, a humble member of this house, cannot be very far wrong if I follow the same course—here a little and there a little. It will be our privilege to come into power in time, because no government remains in power forever, and then we can possibly in some capacity make such further reforms as may be necessary to make a complete Liberal bill of it. In the meantime, do members of this government think they will be there long enough to do very much harm, even if there are some bad Tory features in the bill? Now that is the practical way in which I look at it. There are many parts of this bill which I do not like, just as there were lesser parts in my own bills that I did not like when we were in power; I abominate some of these in this bill just as strongly as my right hon. leader does. But you have to have two sides. The Tory side has been Tory and the Liberal side has been Liberal for hundreds of years and no doubt will continue so. Of course, we have an additional side over here, if you call it a full side; it is a party anyhow, and even if there were only two there it would be an important party were the house evenly balanced, as it has been sometimes and was in 1925-26.

I am persuaded that the right way to bring about reforms is to take them when you get them, and from whatever source they come and then press on to higher heights. Hang on to them until the next opportunity presents itself, and then seize the next and press on again. And I have given you my authority in the past, Cobden and Bright, for that attitude. I think I am absolutely on solid ground when I take that attitude, and I take it with a great deal of regret because I feel it leaves a quite unnecessary seeming difference between myself and other members of my party, including my right hon. leader.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

But I think we make too much fuss altogether over this. Looking to the same source of authority, I find that all through the years the only thing that made the party system workable at all was the fact that always there was one here and there who would stand out and say, "I cannot follow that party any further in that direction." If every body were tied up to his party, which he loved best, and had reason to love best, and had a right to love best, tied up irrevocably for all time and eternity, would not that be a system of tyranny? Would not that be a system you could not entertain for a moment? The very salvation of the party system is the fact that there is sufficient independence within each party for men to stand out for their own convictions when circumstances seem to warrant, and that is why I am a party man. And I take pride in being a party man, but not of the irrevocable kind that altereth not on any occasion, especially when we are in opposition. Surely when we have the liberty of being to some extent free lances we can exercise it for a while. I have been twenty-one years in government, twenty-one long years swallowing sufficient sometimes to take down an ox. My larynx extended so that I could swallow almost anything. Why not give that distended organ an opportunity to relax a little, when we are in opposition, and assume its normal tone?—because, peradventure, we shall come into power some day and then the swallowing will again be resumed for some. I do not know whether my electors want me back here again or not; but that is another matter. I am growing with the years—

Mr. MANION: This will probably elect you.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: —and I may not even be back here. As I say, that will depend on the electors. I might be on the other side of Jordan, though I don't feel a blamed bit like it; make no mistake about that. But I was nearly there once in 1929, and I always feel, with further years, that that great adventure of the beyond is getting nearer and nearer, and this may be my last chance to promote the cause of cooperative marketing. Little as I have done, I have done my best; and my best in this instance would be not to allow this chance to slip and not to turn my fellow farmers back home empty-handed. Whatever I may do I will not do that, though it were my last vote in this world.

With these few observations, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you allow me to call it six o'clock and I will adjourn the debate.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am appealing to Mr. Speaker, but I can keep on the other two or three minutes.

Mr. MANION: Six o'clock.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, June 7, 1934

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Fourth report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.—Mr. Senn.

Seventh report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury).

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln) presented the fourth report of the special committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, and moved that the third and fourth reports be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PASSAMAQUODDY AND COBSCOOK BAYS REPORT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I beg to lay on the table three copies of the report of the international commission appointed to investigate the probable effects of the damming of Passamaquoddy and Cobscook bays on the fisheries of that region. The three copies are in English; the French copy will be completed probably by Monday.

I deferred laying this report on the table until the French copy was ready, but in view of the observations made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot), I table this report to-day, of which I am sending him a copy.

ST. CLAIR TRANSIT COMPANY

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton) moved:

That the petition of St. Clair Transit Company, presented on June 6, praying for the passing of an act to extend the time for construction and completion of a bridge, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the select standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing orders 92, 93 (3) (a) and (c), and 95 in relation thereto, and of standing order 93 (1) as regards the penalty charge incurred for late filing of the bill.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

*CALGARY, ALTA., BONDED INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Is the government aware that the corporation of the city of Calgary has repudiated payments of the exchange upon its bonded indebtedness payable in New York?
2. Has the federal government made good the difference on the exchange?
3. If so, what amount has the government paid on such account?

Mr. RHODES: The answer to question No. 1 is no information. The answer to question No. 2 is no, and No. 3 is answered by No. 2.

TAX FREE BONDS

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. What is the amount of dominion tax free bonds outstanding: (a) registered; (b) bearer?
2. How many persons are holders of bonds of $1,000 and less?
3. What number of persons are holding such bonds of $1,000 and up to $5,000?
4. How many persons are holding such bonds over $5,000 and under $10,000?
5. What number of persons are holding such bonds to the value of $10,000 and over?

Mr. RHODES:

1. (a) $115,887,200; (b) $211,073,700.

2, 3, 4 and 5.—Not of record.

(Note.—The Department of Finance has no information as to the distribution of bearer bonds among individual holders. Assuming that parts 2, 3, 4 and 5 refer to holders of tax-free bonds and not all dominion bonds, a compilation could be made as to the distribution of bonds that are registered, but this would be only a partial answer and it would involve considerable clerical work, approximately 12 clerks for four or five days. If the inquiry relates to all bonds, the work involved would be almost twenty times as great.)

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—WINDSOR, ONT. AREA

Mr. MORAND:

2. What was the total amount spent from the grade crossing fund in those municipalities?

Mr. CAHAN: Return tabled herewith.

QUEBEC HARBOUR SHEDS

2. If so, on what date, through what advertising media, and what were the stipulations?
3. What persons tendered and what was the amount of each such persons's tender?
4. Was any such tender accepted, and if so, what tender and what was the amount?
5. If not, why?
6. Have any representations been made to the government or the Department of Marine with respect to the expediency and necessity of such works?
7. Will the Department of Marine call for new tenders or, in this case, accept the lowest tender submitted?
8. Have the rights and powers of the Quebec harbour commission to grant contracts covering works of the description mentioned in question (1) been questioned?

PRIVILEGE—MR. WEIR (MELFORT)

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. It is reported in Hansard of June 1, 1934, at page 3613, that the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), referring to a speech of mine delivered on May 22, 1933, stated:

> Last year the minister contended that the Anglo-Saxons were the only people in the north; he suggested that the Mennonites, the French, the Belgians, the Scotch and the Welsh and others were not people, but merely political cattle.

[Mr. Rhodes]

This statement is absolutely untrue, and I ask that it be stricken from the records of Hansard.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege. I have heard the statement made by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Weir), the Minister of Agriculture, with regard to a statement by myself growing out of the debate we had in this house last Friday night. I desire to make answer to it. I think the hon. member has been badly advised to bring this question before the House of Commons again.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is speaking to a question of privilege, and he should proceed. This is not the time for debate.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am not debating; I am making a statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: The fact as to whether or not the hon. member for Melfort has been correctly advised is not a matter to be brought up here.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is a question of privilege, as far as I am concerned, and I am entitled to make it. Now, the hon. gentleman had a question of privilege before the house on June 4, last Monday. He was very anxious to have that question of privilege put before the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the hon. member's question of privilege which he is now raising?

Mr. McINTOSH: If you will give me a little time I will soon come to it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. McINTOSH: I think I am entitled to make a statement.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes,—but make it.

Mr. DUPUIS: You are afraid of the truth, that is all.

Mr. McINTOSH: When I replied to him on Tuesday, June 5, I thought the matter had been settled. I noticed the hon. member was quite restive.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: And I administered the medicine I thought necessary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should speak to the question of privilege. But, as I said before, this is not the proper time for speeches of that kind.

Mr. McINTOSH: If I had a drop or two of hemlock in it I did not mean to make the medicine too strong. I wanted to be fair about it. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the further discussion of this matter in the House of Commons. I am willing to meet the Minister of Agriculture anywhere he likes to discuss this question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I just refer—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is not in order in making the remarks he is now making. The Minister of Agriculture has called attention to certain words which were used which he says were untrue, and he has asked to have them expunged from Hansard. I think the hon. member for Battleford is not addressing himself to that.

Mr. McINTOSH: You mean North Battleford.

Mr. SPEAKER: And the matter is not a subject for discussion. If it is the wish of the house, I shall order that these words be struck out of Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. McINTOSH: I wish to explain the reason why—I wish to explain my position to the house in making the statement, and then I am quite prepared to accept the minister's statement, if it is necessary. May I say now to my hon. friend—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member—

Mr. McINTOSH: If you are not going to let me make a statement of fact it is a nice state of affairs.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. McINTOSH: Then I will move the adjournment of the house to have this matter settled.

Mr. BENNETT: That cannot be done.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may move the adjournment of the house, if he chooses, but it is not a motion upon which any debate can take place.

Mr. McINTOSH: All right, I will move the adjournment of the house, then, to have the matter discussed and brought to a point. It is a matter of national importance, this question. If you desire me to make a statement on a matter of—

An hon. MEMBER: No, we don't.

Mr. McINTOSH: —on a matter of national importance of recent occurrence, let me make it. On page 5280 of Hansard for May 22—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman persists. He has not raised a question of privilege. His privilege is not being encroached upon, nor are the privileges of the house.

Mr. McINTOSH: I have said that I desired to move the adjournment of the house with regard to this matter. I wish the house to decide upon it, if you will not allow me to make a statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: I ask the hon. member to resume his seat. We will proceed with the business of the house.

Mr. McINTOSH: I wish to continue the discussion and put my statement on Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member is determined to force the hand of the Speaker I shall have no alternative but to name him, and ask the house to take proper action, which I have no desire whatever to do.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am not a bit alarmed by words of that kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: I just wish fair play in the house; that is all I require.

Mr. SPEAKER: Nothing but fair play has been meted out to the hon. gentleman so far.

Mr. McINTOSH: Will Your Honour allow me to make my statement?

Mr. SPEAKER: The Minister of Agriculture has referred to certain words and has asked to have them struck out of Hansard. I say if it is the desire of the house that they be struck out, I shall give that order. There the matter ends.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. With great respect, I must say that I understand the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) is going to quote from a previous debate, and I think he is quite right in raising a question of privilege in his own defence, in regard to the previous record.

Mr. SPEAKER: He quoted nothing and made no attempt to quote anything.

Mr. McINTOSH: I made an attempt to quote it, but you would not allow me.

Mr. CAHAN: I wish to raise a point of order. Standing order No. 31 in Beauchesne's parliamentary rules and forms is as follows:

31. (1) Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house (when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance) must be asked after the ordinary daily routine of business has been concluded and before notices of motions or orders of the day are entered upon.

(2) The member desiring to make such a motion rises in his place, asks leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, and states the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He has not yet been allowed to do that.

Mr. CAHAN: It continues:

(3) He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order, and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house. If objection is taken, Mr. Speaker, requests those members who support the motion to rise in their places and, if more than twenty members rise accordingly, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who has asked for leave.

And so on.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I think there has been a misunderstanding. I think the hon. member for North Battleford was speaking to a question of privilege and I do still submit, with all respect, that permission should be granted to him, on the question of privilege, to make the quotation which he desires to make to substantiate his statement. I do not think the question of the adjournment of the house arises until Your Honour decides it is not a question of privilege.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the motion to adjourn was not seconded and the steps taken were not for the purpose of having the adjournment of the house. The question was a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman has a right to speak to the question of privilege. He was not doing so when the Speaker asked him to desist from making the observations he was making. He was attributing motives and other designs to the member who had raised the question, the member for Melfort (Mr. Weir).

Mr. McINTOSH: I had just come to my main statement when I was stopped.

Mr. BENNETT: There should have been no preliminary; that was the difficulty. The position at the moment is this. Under our rules a member is bound to accept the statement of another member, and the member for Melfort has stated that he did not hear a portion of the statement of the hon. gentleman, that had he heard it he would have at once objected to it as being incorrect. He says, " I desire to state that that statement attributed to me is untrue, that I did not make the statement in question." Our rules provide that when an hon. member of the house makes a statement of that kind it shall be accepted by the house, and we have heretofore followed that course. If, however, the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) challenges the accuracy of that statement, I am not certain but I think he would have the right to have the matter disposed of by a committee, either a standing or special committee of this house; but it is obvious that for the conduct of business in this house we are bound to accept the denial of those to whom we have attributed statements which they say are incorrect, and we have followed that practice. If a statement is made by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) and I disagree with it, I can say to him that he has attributed to me a statement I did not make, or which is incorrect, and he then is bound for the purposes of debate to accept my statement. That is the position of the hon. member for Melfort and of the hon. member for North Battleford, as I read the rules.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I thoroughly agree with most that the Prime Minister has said, but the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) went further, and asked that a certain statement be expunged from the records of Hansard. That does affect the privileges of the hon. member for North Battleford. I agree with everything the Prime Minister has said so far, but as to what the Minister of Agriculture asked in regard to expunging the words in question from the official record of this house, that is a matter of privilege affecting the hon. member for North Battleford, and he has a right to explain why that statement was made in his address.

Mr. BENNETT: Speaking for only a moment more to the question of order, I think it is quite correct as Your Honour intimated a moment ago that to expunge the remarks in question from Hansard can only be done as Your Honour said with the approval of the house, and it would require a motion to that effect, which motion the hon. member for Melfort was proceeding, as I understood him, to make.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The Speaker was so treating it; that is a fair way to put it. Under the circumstances I suggest that the hon. member for Melfort give notice that he will move to have the words expunged from the record. That will be a debatable motion.

Mr. CASGRAIN: He will have to give notice.

Mr. BENNETT: He will give notice.

AUSTRALIAN WHEAT AND FLOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Yesterday I asked him in regard to the importation of Australian wheat and flour into Canada. I asked if those shipments of wheat and flour were subsidized. I quote from the Hansard of yesterday what the minister said in regard to the subsidy:

> Mr. Stevens: No, not to my knowledge. Without looking into the matter I cannot answer that question, because the Australian system in regard to many products is very complicated, and I cannot answer it offhand. So far as I know, however, the answer would be in the negative.

I take from that Mr. Speaker, that the minister said that these shipments were not subsidized. With all due respect to the minister I want to say that he is wrong, that these shipments of flour to Canada have been subsidized.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. gentleman is not quite in order in making an observation of that kind under the guise of a question. I told him yesterday what I think any reasonable person would have recognized, that I could not possibly be expected to have under my hand the exact data to answer a question of that kind asked without notice. I did say that in my opinion the shipments were not subsidized. I have just had handed to me by my deputy who has been working on the matter a definite statement in regard to it.

I might say before giving an answer to the latter part of the question that the importations of flour for the year ending March 31, 1933, were £28,000, and for the year ending March 31, 1934, £73,000, and all of these came in on the Pacific coast where there is some soft wheat flour imported either from the United States or from Australia.

Regarding the question of subsidy my officials who have gone into the matter with care commensurate with the time at their disposal, state as follows:

> An Australian Wheat Bounty Act of 1931 which provided a bounty of 4½d. per bushel to growers of wheat sold or delivered for sale between October 1, 1931, and October 31, 1932, expired on the latter date. The bounties paid under this law totalled £3,429,271.
>
> A Commonwealth Financial Relief Act, passed on December 5, 1932, granted £2,000,000 to commonwealth states for distribution among wheat farmers, presumably for the next year, not as a bounty on production, but as an aid to farmers in necessitous circumstances.
> A measure of a somewhat similar nature to the foregoing, known as the wheat growers relief bill, was introduced into the Australian parliament on December 1, 1933. It provided £3,000,000 for distribution on an acreage basis among the various states of the commonwealth, to be applied to the reduction of producing costs of wheat, including transport and marketing, also to provide assistance for necessitous wheat growers as before. The assistance is not to be based directly or indirectly on the quantity of wheat produced by individual growers and state governments are required to restrict the financial assistance to growers who did not receive taxable incomes during the year ended 1933. The £3,000,000 required under the bill of December 1, 1933, was to be raised by new taxation including a sales tax of £4. 5s. per ton on flour, but exempting flour for export. The records to hand do not confirm whether the bill introduced December 1, 1933, was enacted into law but confirmation has been asked by cablegram.

The point I would draw to my hon. friend's attention is that the taxation of flour is limited to the flour used for home consumption and is not applicable to export flour; but that should not be considered a bounty or a bonus on exports. As near as we can get the facts they are as indicated here, and the hon. member will note that the application of this aid is chiefly a matter of the relief of distress among the wheat growers and to minimize the cost of the movement of wheat. It cannot be considered a bounty on exports. I also drew to his attention the fact that such imports as have come in have not arrived on the Atlantic seaboard, but on the Pacific. Our information is that there have been no recent imports through the Atlantic seaports.

Mr. SANDERSON: Do I understand that the minister states that the recent shipments of flour from Australia and those which are now en route are not subsidized by the Australian government?

Mr. STEVENS: As far as I know and as far as my officials can ascertain, they are not.

Mr. SANDERSON: With all due respect to the minister, I think he is wrong.

FIRST NARROWS BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MUNN (North Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the government in connection with the First Narrows bridge at Vancouver. The contractors are ready to start work, financial arrangements have been made and all that is necessary now is the consent of the federal government. I should like to know if the government has arrived at a decision or is likely to arrive at one in the near future in connection with this matter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on more than one occasion since this session began I have answered questions with respect to the so-called First Narrows bridge. The fairway or entrance to the harbour of Vancouver is very narrow and the effect of placing a bridge over that entrance is a matter of grave public concern. The fact that the city of Vancouver desires that money should be expended to construct the bridge, the fact that private interests are willing to provide capital and the fact that certain points will become more closely connected are all matters of private and semi-public concern. The government has been asked to express approval of the construction of a bridge and the considerations which the government will have to have in mind when arriving at a conclusion are not those affecting private interests, they are those affecting public interests solely. With so narrow a fairway, with water so shoal, with some ships having only eighteen inches of water under their keels when going to sea, the house will readily understand that there are matters of grave public concern that must be considered when determining the particular type of bridge that should be constructed. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) is primarily responsible and I can only say that he has not yet submitted any recommendation to council with respect to the matter. Many questions are involved in this matter, not the least of which is the effect of a single bomb dropped by an aeroplane upon the structure and blocking up the harbour of Vancouver and the results which might follow in certain eventualities with respect to our obligations of neutrality or other obligations which may rest upon the state. The government must consider all these problems and the minister who is charged with responsibility is submitting the matter to council at an early date. In the meantime, I cannot express any opinion as to what action may or will be taken. All I can say is that every consideration which affects the public interest from the standpoint of the Dominion of Canada as distinct from private interests will be considered.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the right hon. gentleman aware that the eminent authority, Sir Alexander Gibb, has endorsed this bridge from an engineering point of view?

Mr. BENNETT: His report has been sent to the Minister of Public Works. He deals with the structure as such, its size and character and so on, but he does not undertake to deal with certain other problems with which the government necessarily has to deal.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): The press dispatches from Washington make reference to the powers recently given by congress to the President of the United States either to increase or decrease duties to the extent of fifty per cent. They mention that it is understood that different countries have made overtures to the government of the United States with respect to the negotiation of reciprocal treaties under this power. They state further that it is understood that Canada is among the countries which have made overtures. I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if it is a fact that the government has made overtures to the president in connection with the negotiations of a reciprocal treaty under the powers granted to the president and, if not, is it the intention of the government to do so immediately?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It will be perhaps within the memory of most hon. members of this house that some few weeks ago I read the joint statement which had been given out by the President of the United States and myself after I had visited Washington. The sense of that statement was that we would continue to explore the possibilities of being able to arrive at a trade agreement. The difficulties which the president experienced in securing the passing of the legislation to which reference has just been made have disappeared, the legislation having been enacted. During the interim since I last spoke and up to to-day we have been exploring the possibilities of being able to arrive at some agreement with respect to trade matters. We will continue to do so and if such an agreement can be arrived at, of course we shall submit it to this house.

MARKETING ACT

ORGANIZATION TO IMPROVE METHODS AND PRACTICES IN MARKETING NATURAL PRODUCTS

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Weir (Melfort) for the third reading of Bill No. 51, to improve the methods and practices of marketing of natural products in Canada and in export trade, and to make further provisions in connection therewith.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking last evening before six o'clock I indicated that I thought I would be able to spend a short time in dealing with one of the statements made by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull). I intended to do this not because it was any different from any other statement but because he seemed to have fallen into the error into which most hon. members have fallen, that is, he believed there was no outstanding relationship between the standardization of farm products and the marketing thereof. This is a very common error. I do not suppose half of the hon. members knew there was such a close relationship between standardization and marketing. At the risk of repeating what a very good authority has said on this subject, I should like to read again the quotations I gave the other day from Major Elliot, the Minister of Agriculture for Great Britain. He said:

> Standardization is a fundamental principle of our modern commercial system.

And again:

> The commercial advantages of standardization are well known and need not be repeated here. In this country, as elsewhere, legislation has proved to be necessary to put the standardization of farm produce on a national basis. Here, it has taken the form of the Agricultural Produce (Grading and Marketing) Acts, 1928 and 1931.

I pointed out that when the Liberal government went out of power we were almost through with the process of standardization and grading of those commodities which were exported. Here is Major Elliot's last statement:

> So the time has come to develop further the policy to which successive governments have already contributed and prepare to rebuild the whole organizational structure of our agricultural marketing.

That makes it quite plain, even to a doubting Thomas, that there is a very close relationship indeed. I dealt with this question in my remarks of Tuesday, and I shall not weary the house by repeating. I want to state that the establishment of this central marketing board plus the standardization of farm products which had taken place up to 1929 is one of the most important features of this marketing bill. Over one thousand cooperatives and other farmer organizations were in existence in this dominion and I should like to show the house what might have been the final different results of these organizations and activities had we had such a body as the central board to collect information and to supply counsel and advice to such farm bodies. If there had been such a body I am sure the disappointing results of many of our farm organizations would have been quite different and much more successful. I referred to the great work done in the early days of the inception of the grange movement. I should like to quote from A History of Farmers' Movements in Canada, by Mr. Wood. If any hon. gentleman would like to extend his knowledge on these matters he could not do better than read this book. He says:

> The things for which the grange movement has stood in Canada were set forth in what was entitled its "declaration of principles." This document was a compound from two main sources. Its introductory clauses or preamble was taken from a general preamble explaining the objects of the Patrons of Husbandry, adopted at the sixth annual convention of the National Grange held at Washington, D.C., in January, 1873. The bulk of the document, however, was formed of selections made from the declaration of purposes of the National Grange, accepted at its St. Louis sessions, February 4-12, 1874, and of which J. W. A. Wright, a California granger, was the leading author.
> The preamble to the declaration of principles states that instruction in the art and science of husbandry is to be above all the aim of the Grange in Canada. "The products of the earth," it asserts, "are subject to the influence of natural laws, invariable and indisputable; the amount produced will consequently be in proportion to the intelligence of the producer, and success will depend upon his knowledge of the action of these laws and the proper application of their principles. Hence knowledge is the foundation of happiness." Membership in the grange gives the farmer an opportunity to combine in order to attain his ends. "Unity of action," continues the preamble, "cannot be acquired without discipline and discipline cannot be enforced without significant organization; hence we have a ceremony of initiation which binds us in mutual fraternity as with a band of iron; but, although its influence is so powerful, its application is as gentle as that of the silken threads that bind a wreath of flowers."

Heading the declaration proper is found the motto of the order, to wit: "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity." Canadian grangers' ideas on the economics of agriculture are therewith outlined in pithy language. They plan to give added attention to the diversification of crops, and in general to make their farm lands more self-sustaining. With the object of reducing the weight of their exports, grangers will adopt the policy of selling "less in the bushel, and more on hoof and fleece." Knowing too the value of foresight in their industry, they intend to "calculate intelligently on probabilities."

That expression to-day would be "economic planning" under the new order.

And to avoid the influences that have militated against the success of agriculture in the past, the order will "discountenance the credit system, the mortgage system, the fashion system, and every other system tending to prodigality and bankruptcy."

If we had had a central board with the status and importance of government supervision during these intervening years, I wonder how many of all these sound principles would have been preserved to this day. I think there would have been a whole lot of them. But with no guiding hand over them, these bodies scattered all over the face of Canada, exploited by every adventurer who chose to make use of them for his own political and other ends, languished and died on the political reefs and rocks as they have done on other occasions since, as I pointed out on Tuesday last. A great many of the business and social virtues indicated here have been lost sight of not only in Canada but in many other countries, though they might have been retained if we had had a central board such as that established under this bill. Let me repeat this sentence:

And to avoid the influences that have militated against the success of agriculture in the past, the order will "discountenance the credit system, the mortgage system, the fashion system, and every other system tending to prodigality and bankruptcy."

The disregard of these prime virtues pointed out in this grange platform has largely been responsible for the economic condition in which the world finds itself to-day.

My right hon. leader reminded us yesterday that the present world situation is nothing new but possibly more world wide. After every great war business depression has existed in great intensity, possibly not on such a large scale as at the present time; but we have always had these depressions after great tragedies like war. Here is an organization which has as the basis of its declaration of principles what I have just read, and I want to read a little more from this fine work:

Upon the question of the business relations of Canadian grangers, the declaration is very explicit. The order holds no enmity to capital; legitimate business must obtain; transportation companies are necessary to agricultural development. On the other hand the grange in Canada is firmly determined to bring producer and consumer more closely together. "We must dispense with a surplus of middlemen,"—

This will be interesting to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the mass buying and price spreads investigation now going on.

—contends the document, "not that we are unfriendly to them, but we do not need them—their exactions diminish our profits." Any "tyranny of monopolies" would be distasteful to the granger just as he would be "opposed to excessive salaries, high rates of interest, and exorbitant per cent profits in trade."

No hesitancy is shown in repudiating the idea that the grange in Canada has in any sense been established for political purposes.

Every farmers' organization I know of, of a special character like this, for the last sixty years has had in the forefront of its platform the declaration that it had no intention whatever of going into politics, and I believe that at the outset no organization of the kind has had any such intention. In the course of a number of successful years however they begin to feel their oats, if I may say so; they begin to realize their power, having had access as advisers to governments and their advice having been taken and well taken. And there is no objection to political action if it did not put their commercial activities invariably on the hummer. But finally such organizations plunge into politics, possibly led by only one or two clever platform performers, and that is the beginning of the end. I dealt with that the other day and I will not repeat now what I said then. I would point out however that we have now one most hopeful-looking young people's organization, one of whose slogans is, "Save Canada —save agriculture;" and they would be horrified if anyone suggested to them that they were laying the foundation of another political party. They have no idea of such a thing now. But the fact is that farm organizations nearly always start out like that and end in political action. I am satisfied that all these well-meaning organizations would be most helpful to governments in an advisory way if they had some central rendezvous or friendly place of concourse in this capital to which they could ask for sound advice. If such organizations had had a retreat of that kind to advise them they would have been saved many a tragedy and disaster. Let me quote still further:

"No grange, if true to its obligations," is the emphatic statement, "can discuss partisan or sectarian questions." It might not call political conventions, nominate candidates, or permit of the discussion of questions on which its members stood divided on party lines. At the same time, the granger must perforce take a deep interest in political issues. It must be his business to do everything in his power to put down "bribery, corruption and trickery" in connection with public affairs. The principles of the order, it was thought, should be of great value in the realm of government, because those principles "underlie all true politics, all true statesmanship."

The declaration states quite candidly that the grange movement in Canada is meant exclusively for the farming population. A barrier must be imposed to the admission of the non-agriculturist, since he has "not a sufficient direct interest in tilling the soil, or may have some interest in conflict with our purposes." But sex distinctions are wholly eliminated within the order; more than that its aim is "to inculcate a proper appreciation of the abilities and sphere of women." While an advocacy of better agricultural education is considered a watchword among Canadian grangers, they desire to obtain better facilities for education all round. "We shall advance the cause of education," is emphatically promised, "among ourselves, and for our children, by all just means within our power."

In the west, in the old Grain Growers' Association, we had an organization almost identically the same as this, and for years the government of Saskatchewan were advised by them on many public issues of the day and took that advice and enacted it into law. But once any such organization goes into politics it becomes a political party like the others after which governments and parties will not be so much disposed to take their advice because they do not know whether such advice is merely political or quite disinterested as formerly. Let me now turn to another phase of the question.

The central board provided for in this bill plus the farm economics branch established by the previous government is from my standpoint the most important part of this whole legislation. It will supply a continuity, a rendezvous, a clearinghouse, a registration bureau, if you like, of all these bodies from the Atlantic to the Pacific and protect them from the ravages of the two-legged wolves that, as I previously indicated, tear them asunder on occasions by beguiling them into politics.

I come now to a more recent date than back in 1872. It will be noticed that in the bill wheat is specifically provided for, and I think the government should make it quite clear that under present international wheat conditions and agreements this measure cannot very well apply to local boards in regard to wheat. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) closes the debate, as I understand he will, he should give a frank expression of opinion on that if he looks upon it from that standpoint. I feel those representing the wheat pools in the west are quite well aware of that, but on the other hand many in the west are under the impression that this legislation will work a miracle so far as our wheat is concerned, that there is going to be a sudden transformation, something springing up like the old wheat board of 1919, that will give them continually rising prices. It would be in the interest of the bill, the government and the farmers to disillusionize them on that point because it is generally understood that under present economic conditions and international wheat agreements the government must keep close control of the marketing of that product. I express the wish that the Prime Minister, if I am wrong, will make it quite clear what the bill intends in that respect.

A year ago last February I put on the order paper a resolution which I am about to read. Before I did that, the same subject had been dealt with by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). I gave him some support and when this resolution of mine was put on the order paper he gave it some support. In February, 1933, I made the following motion:

Whereas, unemployment, scanty clothing and hunger throughout the land continue to be all too prevalent, and

Whereas, this persistent economic depression not only adds to the growing relief requirements in many centres, but also substracts from the number of voluntary contributors, many of whom are now feeling these social efforts growing more and more beyond their capacity to carry,

Therefore, be it resolved—That, in the opinion of this parliament the government of Canada should place a sufficient quantity of our surplus wheat stocks, at the disposal of the Red Cross, welfare bureaus and other similar organizations, to supplement and more fully take care of the food requirements of the unemployed, the poor and the hungry throughout Canada.

And be it further resolved—

This is the more important part of the resolution:

That the government of Canada take such steps as are necessary and expedient to explore the possibility and practicability of selling on long term credits a substantial quantity of our embarrassing wheat carry-over to China, or any other available country where poverty, hunger and misery prevail.

This government for some strange reason seems to have taken it for granted because we are being gradually squeezed out of Great Britain and the European continent by one cause and another, the policy of self-sufficiency on their part being the principal cause,—and the others I do not care to mention now—there was no other market elsewhere. The Prime Minister on the occasion of discussing this resolution made some very nice and I might also say complimentary remarks to the author of it, but he indicated—and possibly this was a fortunate way out—that China was now at war with Japan and under those conditions we could not play favourites. But when the resolution was put on the order paper my recollection is that they were not at war and besides the resolution applies not to China alone but to all the oriental countries where poverty prevails. Then the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) made a brief reply; at that time he did not think it was necessary to fuss up about this thing; there was not any market there anyway; it was filled; it was described quite graphically how what are usually called commission houses would gobble it all up if we tried to do anything along the lines of barter trading, and anyhow the whole cloud was going to lift soon and things would resume their normal swing in the wheat and other markets of the world. But conditions have been and are getting worse as to wheat carryovers. Has any hon. member during the interim heard anything of this government seeking markets anywhere? They are simply sitting there apathetically and putting the brakes on production instead of doing anything in the nature of trying to merchandise production. I do not want to be too harsh at this time; I have tried to carry through the debate on this bill in a moderate tone of voice and moderately as to substance so as not unnecessarily to ruffle anybody's feelings, and I intend to continue that course. But if I were in the other humour to-day as I sometimes am, I could pound the stuffing out of the government with respect to their ghastly apathy in the matter of possible oriental markets. I remember in the year 1909 or 1910 when the late Sir William White packed his kit and went off to Japan to see what could be done there to develop our wheat and flour trade, and later on the late Sir George Foster did the same thing. Japan has since become a great wheat flour eating country; and with those millions of people in China who are gradually learning to eat more wheat, instead of selling more we have lost our trade almost altogether with that country. I would like to hear anybody contradict that statement because I was rather hoping they would as I would then have an opportunity of giving the information gently to them. I will put my best ear to my hon. friends to see if they cannot dissent from my statement.

Mr. HACKETT: Tell us about it just the same.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, I will tell my hon. friends about it and I think we should all take cognizance of it. For fear, however, I forget this when I finish my present remarks —and I shall not be very much longer—I would be glad if the Prime Minister would consider the advisability of discussing with the house the international wheat agreement, that is set a day apart, or at least if he would tell us why he did not ask our concurrence in it. When a comparatively unimportant matter like silver, because important as it is it is relatively unimportant in comparison with wheat, was discussed and concurred in at the tail end of a resolution, tacked rather adroitly on to the motion of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), surely a farreaching proposal like this international wheat agreement should have had the concurrence and support of the house before it was put into operation. I just mention this now for fear I might forget it, this being my last chance on this bill to discuss the China situation from the point of view of a wheat importing country.

Unfortunately I shall have to read, again. This is a review of China's wheat trade in 1933 by B. A. Macdonald, assistant trade commissioner. I think it would be nice if somebody would ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to come into the chamber because he may not have seen this.

Mr. BENNETT: He is in committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, officials sometimes put out some funny stuff that their ministers may know nothing about.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the hon. member reading from?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From the Commercial Intelligence Journal of May 5, 1934. It would be well for all of us to get copies of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: By whom is it issued?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Issued every Saturday by the Department of Trade and Commerce: Minister H. H. Stevens, M.P.; Deputy Minister; James T. Parmelee. I will read it without comments because it may be capable of explanation; there may be an alibi.

Shanghai, March 16, 1934.—China's imports of wheat in 1933 amounted to 1,181,000 short tons or 39,367,000 bushels valued at roughly Canadian $23,500,000. This is the largest import for any year since the trade first began in 1921, with the exception of the record year 1931 when 1,518,000 tons were brought in. As a result wheat has become the third greatest single import, ranking after rice and raw cotton, and it now represents 6·47 per cent of all imports as compared with 4·87 per cent in 1932 and 6·11 per cent in 1931. The 1933 percentage is the highest yet recorded. Since the London wheat conference estimated world import requirements for the 1933-34 crop year to be 560,000,000 bushels and since China took 39,000,000 bushels in the calendar year 1933, it would appear that this country is now absorbing somewhere between 5 and 10 per cent of world imports, and must constitute therefore one of the foremost of the wheat markets.

The principal features of the year's trade were briefly as follows:

(1) Australia's continued and increased dominance.

(2) Argentina's notable participation.

(3) New Zealand's participation for the first time.

(4) The complete absence of American and Russian wheat.

(5) Canada's decreased participation due to the low prices and depreciated exchange of Australian and Argentine supplies.

(6) The imposition of a duty on wheat and flour for the first time.

(7) The wheat credit arrangement effected between the United States and China.

And we disappeared off the map, although we had both good wheat and low grade wheat, whichever they desired. Now I should like to read a further brief reference:

The fact that Canada's position declined so greatly in the past three years, just when China's imports increased so greatly, has perhaps partly obscured the potential importance of this market. It is worth noting that if Canada had in this latter period maintained the average share which she held from 1922 to 1930 inclusive—

Mark that period, 1922 to 1930 inclusive.

—namely, about fifty per cent—she would have sold to China 750,000 tons or 25,000,000 bushels in 1931, 500,000 tons or 15,000,000 bushels in 1932, and 590,000 tons or 20,000,000 bushels in 1933; and in each of those years China would have been the dominion's second or third greatest wheat market.

That is very significant. Where have all the ministers disappeared to? There must be something important in that return that was brought down to-day. It was represented to us by the government that we could not get a look into that market at all, but I am afraid we have been humbugged by this government on this question, though I do not know why. Were they so busy at home looking after price spreads, mass buying and what not, the natural by-products of high tariffs, that they could not attend to the maintenance of the Chinese wheat market? They did not need much of a periscope to see that we were losing rapidly this oriental market. What we wanted was new wheat markets abroad, but apparently the government were entirely oblivious to the fact that this market was disappearing from under their noses. I continue reading:

As it was, China was Canada's sixth largest wheat market in fiscal year ended March 31, 1933 (the last year for which statistics are available here), being exceeded by the United Kingdom, Belgium, the Netherlands, France and Germany. The figures for fiscal year 1934—

Listen to this.

—will, of course, show a reduced importance, reflecting the fact that Australian and Argentine wheat almost shut out Canada from the market during that period.

And here they are sitting complacently as though everything was well and there were no more markets to be sought or obtained; as though the only thing to do was to reduce exports, which automatically means a reduction in production. And, if the production should keep up, their only resort in addition to these restricted exports under the wheat agreement is to keep the surplus production at home in the granaries. What a wonderful solution for a number of supposedly sane gentlemen familiar with the requirements of the country. That is what has been done. These wheat agreements have been entered into by the three western provinces, and this government has not seen fit to bring them before this house for concurrence. I am satisfied that the Prime Minister is not strongly behind them; I am sure his knowledge of business and of the hunger throughout the world makes this program of lessened exports abhorrent to him. It is a strange thing that the government cannot do better than that, though after much tribulation they were able to work out a marketing bill, the first we have had. In spite of their blundering they have brought about an advance by providing marketing facilities for local requirements, though in my opinion there is going to be great disappointment in this marketing bill unless the government elucidate a little more as to how it is going to affect our wheat sales. It is not going to do very much for wheat under present international agreements. It will help our cattle, I think, but it has its limitations even there unless export markets are secured.

We want access to these markets, any markets, wherever we can make the best bargains in order to dispose of our surplus products. From the government's own figures, if the percentage of total wheat sales to China that existed between 1922 and 1930 had been maintained we would have sold nearly 50,000,000 bushels of wheat more than we did sell. That would have made a big hole in our carry-over. Then, if we had bartered or had sold on long term credits as the United States did we could have sold another fifty million bushels easily, if I know anything about conditions in that country. That would have meant a total of 100,000,000 bushels, practically our entire above normal carry-over by next August.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You have been very indulgent, Mr. Speaker, so perhaps you will allow me to say just a word or two in conclusion. Just watch how this act will glide into operation in respect to those commodities and those growers that are ready for it. First there will be the dairy products of the Fraser valley and elsewhere, already organized for years; then the fruit of the Okanagan valley, and then the cattle of the prairies, also organized. With those three well under way the act will be well launched. My only regret is that all hon. members could not have seen it in the same way and so reduced to a minimum the friction that always extends into the highways and byways of the country when a government and an opposition engage in deadly combat over the merits or demerits of such agricultural legislation. Such controversy unfortunately always hampers very much the general acceptance and subsequent administration of the act.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, to some extent I find myself in the same position as the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell). At any rate, on second reading we both started from scratch. We both proclaimed our intention to vote for the second reading, because we believed a principle was involved in the bill, and we hoped that the measure might be amended in committee. I believe both of us took the stand that if it were not amended in the direction we each desired—and we were not a unit on what we wanted—we would feel justified in voting against it on third reading. The hon. member for Melville has since announced his intention of voting for the third reading. I find that two days ago he described the bill, as reported at page 3669 of Hansard, as a "Tory distortion of Liberal principles and contrary to what the farmers asked for" and so on. So I assume that he thinks there have been substantial amendments introduced which would justify his intention of voting for it. With that, of course, I have no complaint, because I have no responsibility for his actions. So far as I am concerned, however, this question arises: Has the bill been changed in any material degree which would require any change of view on my part? In moving the third reading, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) went to considerable trouble and into some detail to point out that the changes were immaterial, and entirely a matter of detail. I do not propose to be guided wholly by his advice or by—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think I advised anybody.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He is speaking about the minister.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, I beg the hon. member's pardon.

Mr. NEILL: I do not intend to follow the advice of the Minister of Agriculture or the somewhat involved reasoning of the hon. member for Melville through which he has arrived at his conclusion. I propose to examine for myself the bill as amended, and to ascertain whether or not the conditions I wished have been obtained.

More than once the Minister of Agriculture asked for cooperation in the handling of this measure. The bill had not been long in committee before he accused hon. members on this side of the house of deliberately obstructing, an action on his part which I think was a mistake. Possibly he may have thought we were obstructing, but I am of the opinion that much of what he thought was obstruction was really a genuine and desperate attempt to find out what the bill actually meant. There were a great many hon. members on this side of the house—and I was one of them—who had the greatest difficulty in trying to find out what the bill really meant. After having served some considerable time in this House of Commons I must say that I do not think I have ever seen a bill so comparatively short which has been so involved in meaning and reaction, and which appeared to be so difficult of explanation or defence by the hon. gentleman in charge of it.

I believe some justification for the criticism offered by hon. members on this side of the house is to be found in the unusually large number of amendments which were somewhat reluctantly introduced by the minister in charge. Certainly he did not exhibit any disposition to meet the opposition, unless it was a case of absolute necessity. And, with regard to obstruction, I think that if any members or any body of members in this house had been really opposed to the ultimate success of the bill they could not have done better than to let it go through in the form in which it was originally introduced, because, had they done so and simply thrown the responsibility on the government and said, "There is your baby; carry it to its ultimate destination," it would have been the shortest way to effect the death of that unhappy infant. It certainly would not have proved a monument but would be an epitaph on the gravestone of their reputation. However, the fact remains that the opposition did suggest changes, a number of which the minister accepted.

Moving the third reading the minister said he regretted the fact that he could not follow the precedent laid down in Great Britain and in one or two other British countries where somewhat similar legislation has been adopted. Again and again he used the argument, the argument which he used so often in committee—in fact it was an answer to almost every inquiry—that it was necessary to have the bill flexible. If a man is going to climb a mountain as fast as he would like, he does not choose a flexible staff to aid his faltering footsteps, and I am afraid that when the minister comes to defend the bill in the courts of law—as undoubtedly he will have to do, and perhaps before the privy council, because his pride will not allow him to accept defeat in a lower court—I am afraid he will find that his desire to have flexibility in the bill will be but a weak reed upon which to rest.

He has said he cannot support the principles involved in the British legislation. Nobody has asked him to follow the British bill, in detail. But there are certain main principles which apply just as much in one country as in another. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) told us yesterday that truth is not eternal. I differ from him, and I say that there are some main principles of common sense which are equally applicable whether they apply to the British Empire, to the United Kingdom or to Canada. I am not talking about the details involved in the different conditions existing as to size and area. But there are certain main principles of what I might term common sense which, I suggest, could most certainly be applied.

Of the changes introduced by the minister, I take it that the principal one is in regard to pooling. The hon. member for Yale in British Columbia (Mr. Stirling), a strong supporter of the bill, speaking in the early stages of the debate, in fact he was one of the first to speak, said that he saw—and he must have seen it with the eye of faith—that there was some provision in the bill for pooling. Certain words he indicated he thought would provide for pooling. But he could not find, nor could I find any lawyer who would undertake to risk his reputation by saying that that was what was really meant, nor could it be inferred. I protested and my protest is indicated at page 2257 of Hansard. Later on an amendment was brought in, but it consisted only of the introduction of one word, "pooling," in the middle of a long and obscure paragraph—so obscure in fact, that it did not appear to be good English, and was hardly intelligible. I pointed out that fact, as did other hon. members, and as a result the minister withdrew the amendment, and now subsection 6 of section 4 gives power to conduct a pool, and that only.

The minister refused to listen to suggestions made by me that he accept, at least in some part, the provisions made in the British legislation, whereby pooled money should be earmarked, how it should be paid out; that certain expenses should be paid, reasonable advances made, and finally that the balance should be paid to those who had supplied the product. He refused to do anything of that kind, an improvement which I think would have made the bill noticeably better.

I come now to some of the features which he refused to correct. I find that in subsection (b) of section 4 provision is made to exempt from any determination or order—and it should not be "determination," because that is simply superfluous—to exempt from any determination or order any person or class of persons engaged in the production or marketing of the regulated product or any class, variety or grade of such product. I protested strongly against that—and I protest again—that it is absolutely wrong for us to take such action. This is an instance where we could have followed Great Britain. What did Great Britain do? They have said that in their scheme, as it stands, certain small producers would be exempt not from orders to be issued day by day, but from the whole scheme. They do not have to sit up day and night because of their two cows or eight hens, to see if they come under the shadow of the law. They know they are exempt from the scheme, and I suggest that that is the way exemption should be made in this bill. Instead of that the minister insisted—and the minister alone knows why—upon leaving the exemption to be placed on each individual order. Under these schemes orders may be issued once a week or once a day; every man has to sit up nights and wonder whether he is exempt from this order or that order, and the body issuing the order has to exempt him each time. That is an absurd situation. Relief should have been given by exempting him from the whole scheme, thereby avoiding trouble and confusion. There is the suggestion—and I do not charge the minister with it, but subsequent ministers may be charged—that favouritism may be shown, because it would be so fatally easy just to happen to forget to exempt some political exporter friend from one of these orders, and it might mean a small fortune to him. This cannot be done under the British style.

We now come to section 4 (c) which deals with compensation for loss. I do not think that section was improved by the amendment introduced later on. This is one of the features dangled before the poor man in the street who says, "I think this bill is a step in the right direction." He is told, "You see, here it states that if you wish to ship stuff to a market and you are forbidden to ship it, you may be compensated." But the amendment kills it. Of course those people are not told about the amendment which provides that under ordinary circumstances they could not get any compensation at all. If it goes to a country where a quota has been put on and there is reason for the prohibition of export he gets no compensation. There is another clause the wording of which might be used to prevent him being given compensation under any circumstances whatever.

There was no provision made for what I might call the odd producer with a grievance and a proper grievance, because in a scheme like this there are always bound to be injustices, and the British people very properly provided for a board of arbiters to which an individual producer who felt he had been wronged or suffered an injustice could appeal and get satisfaction. There is no reason in the world why we should not have a system like that here. And the same with regard to the protection of the consumer. Britain has two boards; we have none. Does the difference in the shape or area of Britain compared to Canada make it undesirable to protect the consumer here and highly desirable to protect the consumer in Britain?

The same thing about contracts. Business lives by contracts made far ahead, but the minister would not listen to me when I suggested that as in the British act there should be a clause in this bill protecting contracts legally entered into in good faith before the scheme comes into effect. The minister would not even allow the word "forthwith" to be inserted. As the bill now reads, when these schemes are formulated, they must be published in the Gazette. I suggested that they should be published "forthwith" in the Gazette because I know of cases and I could cite them here, but they are known to members of the house, where a nefarious order in council was put through and not published for weeks afterwards. The minister agreed that it would not do any harm, and I got the support of the Minister of Justice to word the amendment correctly, and then the minister used his majority to vote it down. But these are smaller matters.

There are three special features which I consider of major importance, and on which I shall base my decision to vote or not for the third reading They are these: Section 5 subsection 1, says:

> A representative number of persons engaged in the production and marketing or the production or marketing of a natural product—

That is entirely contrary to the British system. The British act does not say anything about marketers. In their scheme it must be the producers. This subsection is open to the widest abuses. The right hon. leader of the opposition yesterday dwelt very fully on that phase of it. He said it was putting into the hands of an occupational group too much arbitrary power to control. He might have gone further and pointed out that under this section not only might that arbitrary power be used possibly unfairly by the occupational group, but it might be so used by the people who are engaged in the marketing end only of that group. I was willing when the bill was in committee to have the words inserted "production and marketing" to take them both in, but no, the minister insisted upon putting this clause in. It says, and that is what it means, that the control of an industry may be put in the hands of a mere handful of middlemen, wholesalers, brokers, and men of that type who, by a little judicious manipulating of an order, or under section 9, simply with the consent of the minister in charge of the bill, may get complete control of an industry in the hands of half a dozen men who have no more interest in it than that of money-making by handling its produce. You can hunt the British act far and near before you will find authority for anything of that kind.

Next with regard to the taking of a poll, which is provided for in section 5, subsection 3. The minister, after considerable pressure, allowed the introduction of permissive polling, but the British act from beginning to end is full of safeguards and insists that a poll "shall" be taken. It is not left to half a dozen middlemen, nor to the minister to decide under section 9, but it is very fully safeguarded in the British act, so much so that the polling is surrounded with all the safeguards and solemnities, I was going to say, at all events all the formalities that attach to taking a vote at a general election. Just the same care and attention is to be taken in taking a poll of all the people interested in any scheme under the British act. While the minister has recognized the need for the principle by conceding that there "may" be a poll, he leaves it entirely open to the will of the man who happens to be at the head of the department at the moment.

Then we come to section 9. To put it in a sentence, section 9 takes all the powers of all the other sections of this bill together and combines them into one, and gives the whole power to the minister. It means that, and it means nothing less. It even gives the governor in council or the board appointed by the government power, as I brought out by a query in the committee, to buy and sell. They can go into wholesale marketing, and there is no polling about that. The poll is only held out as a little window dressing in these other sections, but is a poll compulsory under section 9? No. Would the spirit of the British people tolerate anything like that for a moment, I wonder?

Those, Mr. Speaker, are three of the worst features of the bill. If they had been amended I would have gone a long way to vote for the bill in spite of other minor objections, but these three are fundamental objections to my mind, and the bill has not been changed, and will not be changed, in these respects.

The minister in introducing the bill said that there were three fundamental principles urgent and necessary for the success of this act, that it should be simple, sound and practical. Simple? Anyone who has tried to wade through this act will know whether it is simple or not. The only sense in which the word simple could be applied to it is that in which my Scotch fellow-members know it is used in Scotland when they say charitably of a poor fellow whose mental progress has been arrested, "Oh well, the poor fellow is simple." In that sense this bill may be called simple.

Sound? It is not sound. Practical? Time will show whether it is practical or not.

I voted for the second reading of the bill with the fond and foolish hope that it would be improved in committee. I did not turn my ears to my friends to my right who were attacking it possibly because they were prejudiced, but rather inclined my ears to my friends to my left and opposite who were supporting it. I was going to listen to them and hear the arguments they advanced. I did listen to them attentively. I have heard or read very carefully practically every one of their speeches, and with possibly one exception, through them all ran the thread of damning and double-damning the bill with the very faintest of praise. Here is a sentence that you find in almost all of them: Well, anyhow it is a step in the right direction. A step in the right direction, and perhaps two in the wrong direction. Is all this trouble and turmoil worth while if we are only going to take one step in the right direction? Anyway, let us take a chance on it, they say. Well, lots of people have got into trouble by taking a chance, and if we are only taking one step in the right direction; if we are going to take a chance anyway, let us fill up the gaps and minimize the risks.

I would like to quote my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) speaking at page 3968 of Hansard. The hon. gentleman is known to be one of the best speakers in the party to which he belongs, and I always listen with interest to his speeches. They are always carefully prepared and couched in the most appropriate language to make his meaning very clear. I think I can say without any disrespect—I do not think he will object —that he is also known to be a very loyal and strong supporter of any measure the government brings down. I listened to his remarks very carefully, feeling sure I would get support for the step I was inclined to take. One of his remarks was that it was a step in the right direction, and I have already alluded to that. Then later on he states that the amendments cleared up many points introduced in so vague a manner as to be capable of complete misapprehension and complete misinterpretation. That does not agree with the minister who says that the changes have been immaterial. Then we find the hon. member saying that he does not expect this bill to be a perfect bill. That is quite all right, as none of them are.

He then draws a parallel between the bill and the results which he expects from it and a new born child as compared with a man able to go out and do a day's work in the hayfield. He said that it requires development, the child must grow up. I want it understood that that is his illustration, not mine, but perhaps I may follow it up. Perhaps we might inquire into the origin of this baby. Possibly some beautiful daughter of Pharaoh, disguised as the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir)—I do not know a more complete disguise which she could assume—wandered down and found this marketing Moses in the bullrushes of Winnipeg North Centre. At least that is a charitable suggestion. If you do not accept that, then I am afraid that I must submit that this is an offspring of illicit relations between, shall we say, high reactionary influences, on the one hand, and thinly disguised communism, on the other. This is a hybrid offspring and those who have studied biology say that where the parents of an offspring are members of races entirely divergent, the offspring seldom makes a desirable citizen. He is apt to have the vices of both races and the virtues of neither. I should like to know who is going to assume responsibility for the suckling of this legislative foundling. Shall we have to wait until it grows up and see what is going to happen then? I suggest that the offspring had better be put in a lethal chamber and the parents sterilized to prevent any more such unfortunate accidents.

The hon. gentleman then states that in his opinion this bill offers some hope. He is a gentleman of ability with the facility of expressing himself. He was determined to find good in this bill but the best he can say of it is that it provides a hope. Have hon. members ever seen a man who has tried to live on hope? I did once and I must say that he was a sorry looking spectacle, he looked like a clothesline in an advanced stage of disintegration. I do not think I would like to live on hope and I should like to see this bill offer something more immediately profitable than hope.

I shall come back to the remarks of my hon. friend later on, but I would like to turn for a moment to the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), which appear on page 3689 of Hansard. I say with absolute sincerity that he is one of the finest speakers in his party. He is a man of almost nation-wide reputation and possesses the facility of expressing himself and making the best out of any situation. I shall quote only a remark here and there as I have not time to do more. He says:

> I am supporting this measure not because it is a particularly good one—there are many weakneses in it—

And again he says:

> I am in favour of the bill, but I still object to certain bureaucratic features which are embodied in section 9.

I thank him for those good words because they show that he realizes along with myself some of the obligations of section 9.

Then again:

> It will be wasteful and will likely lead to a good deal of confusion and conflict later on.

Confusion and conflict in these matters means litigation, and while these things are being threshed out in the courts, the people who are trying to sell tomatoes will be waiting for a decision. Then in his closing remarks he says:

> But we have to take what we can get under existing conditions; a slice of bread is better than no bread.

I suppose under some conditions that is true but if you have paid a high price for a loaf of bread, if the people have been told they are going to get a loaf of bread, is it not our duty, we who are informed, to point out that the public is not going to get the loaf of bread which has been dangled before them but is going to get only a slice? In the opinion of the hon. member for Bow River, a slice of bread is all that we are going to get. I hope we do get a slice but I have my doubts about that. If these were the remarks of some ordinary backbencher they might be considered as mere figures of speech, but it is a different thing when they are said by someone of the ability of the hon. member. He then concludes by saying:

> For what merit it may have I am willing to accept the bill and shall vote for the third reading.

For what merit it "may" have, notice—may have—he will vote for the bill. Is that the best this bill offers us? I am not a bridge expert but I seem to remember having heard of a partner apologizing for what seemed like a dumb lead by saying, "I am sorry, partner, but I was leading out of weakness."

I should like to return to the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), which appear on page 3675 of Hansard. He was asked by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) whether he thought this bill would bring about the result he hoped for, namely, to raise the price level of the product, say, of the wheat farmer. He replied that he thought it would not, that he doubted whether any action taken by this country could raise the price of wheat very materially above what would be world prices. We find him saying however on the previous page that:

> Assuming that the bill does all that we hope it will do; assuming that we succeed in the coming years in raising prices to a reasonable level—

Mr. VALLANCE: It was that statement which prompted my question.

Mr. NEILL: He does not think it will make any difference. He then said that it would be better to leave wheat out of the control of this board, that he thought it should be dealt with by a separate bill or board. He was speaking as a farmer and for a large body of farmers on the prairies. When we think of farmers in connection with wheat our thoughts swing to the prairies. The expressed opinion of the hon. member was that it would have been better if wheat had been left out of this bill and handled by a separate board or separate bill.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am sure the hon. member does not wish to misrepresent what I said. I said that while I believed that wheat should be handled under a separate federal board, so long as we could not have that I thought it wise to have it remain in this bill and under this board.

Mr. NEILL: That is exactly what I said. The hon. member is willing to take the slice of bread which his hon. friend talks about, but he thinks it would have been better to have wheat under a separate board.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Hear, hear.

Mr. NEILL: He agrees with me. I ask any body of farmers, or any individual member from the prairies who speaks solely from the point of view of the wheat grower and who believes it would be better if wheat were left out of this bill, this question: Have you any right to come to British Columbia and insist that the people in the fish business, the people in the lumber business, the people in the sawmill business, in the shingle business, in reduction plants, in the dairying business, in paper manufacturing and so on, all of whom did not want to be brought under this bill, should be brought under the provisions of the bill? Have they the right to come to British Columbia or to any portion of the dominion and ask that? Is that not logical and is that not a fair question? Should they seek to force someone to take something for which they have not asked and which they do not want when they themselves are not willing to submit to it except as a last resort?

We have heard a good deal about the support which should be given to this bill, but I have not received any letters asking me to vote for the measure. I think much of this so-called support for the bill is due to ignorance of what it really means. Unfortunately we have got into the habit of believing in shibboleths, slogans and headlines. I suppose it is the present unrest and discontent that make us grasp at anything that comes along. We merely look at headlines, taking no time to read what is printed underneath, and so very often we do not know just what is contained under such headlines; we fail to get the meaning. I saw an article the other day in regard to a certain bill—I will not mention the bill; it was not this one at any rate. But under a large headline there was a statement something like this, "Commend Bennett" on a certain measure, and the article went on to say that that legislation had been warmly received by the Saskatchewan and Alberta premiers; that information appeared in smaller headlines. Now what does the man in the street say when he comes across something like that in the newspapers, when he sees that Premier Brownlee is reported as being in favour of certain legislation? That particular piece of legislation, I may say in passing, is all right; but the point is that all such large headlines, like the one to which I am referring—"Commend Bennett", and so on,—do not convey the precise facts. In this particular instance there appears this statement at the bottom of the article, giving the views of Mr. Brownlee:

So far as I can judge from the press report, I am pleased with the legislation. Until I have had an opportunity of studying its actual working it will be impossible for me to pass a final opinion.

But what do the headlines say? "Glory to God in the highest; we are all for the bill; that is what we want." The man in the street says, in connection with the bill now before us, "I am in favour of this measure; I am all for it." Of course; everybody wants it. But let us first see just what it means. The Minister of National Health has before the house a bill to prevent people from peddling cure-alls for certain fatal diseases like tuberculosis and cancer, without a doctor's prescription, because such a practice is said to be unfair; and a year or two ago he passed a bill to compel anyone selling quack remedies, or even genuine remedies, to put the formula on the bottle so that the purchaser would know, or would be able to have someone tell him, just what the contents were. Well, I wish the government would introduce something like that in connection with legislation, forbidding bills being described as cure-alls, making it compulsory to put the formula on the bottle, so to speak, so that people might know precisely what any particular measure meant, instead of having it dangled before their eyes as a cure-all, and being told that everybody is in favour of it.

I have here a letter from a friend to whom I sent a copy of this bill with a request for his opinion, and the pertinent part of the reply is this:

I have not had time to follow all the changes in the bill but it seems to me to be a step in the right direction. I would have liked to have seen it modelled closely on the British act.

I am afraid he will wait a long time to see it modelled on that act, because he does not realize what the bill really means. When he does—and I will make it my business to inform him—I doubt whether he will go even as far as he does in this letter.

As regards the amendment, I am glad to see it although I do not agree entirely with some of its conditions; but I should certainly like to see the bill referred back to the committee, and there is no reason why the government should not accept that suggestion, because it would not mean their defeat. If the bill were referred back to the committee it is possible that some of the amendments I have suggested would be considered.

As to how I shall vote, I am not ashamed of the vote I cast on the second reading, and I hope not to be ashamed of my attitude towards the third reading. I believe in marketing control; we need it badly, first, for regulating quality of production going overseas, and secondly for regulating quantity. And if the minister had begun as the Minister of Justice suggested quite properly with respect to one of the proposed amendments, there would be no difficulty now. The Minister of Justice suggested in regard to that particular amendment that we should walk before we run, but here we are galloping. If we had begun with exports only there would have been no trouble in relation to jurisdiction to hamper us, and time would have shown us how the scheme worked out. It worked well in New Zealand and probably it would work well with us. But the control should be democratic. If you look at the introduction to the British act, 1931, you will find the statement that the bill is founded on the principle of democratic control. Does anyone suggest that that principle is found here? This bill allows control to pass into the hands of possibly a few marketers or people appointed by politicians, or by government-appointed boards. The scheme will be under the control of men not elected by the producers, not elected by anyone.

I refuse to be cowed by the threat that the people whom I represent want this bill and that I shall therefore find myself in disrepute if I vote against the third reading of it, as I will. Some of the people may have been stampeded with the idea of a cure-all as a marketing bill, but I have studied the measure day and night very carefully and have compared it with both the New Zealand bill and the British act, and surely there is not much wrong or unpatriotic or undemocratic in following the British and the New Zealand way. I cannot see that there is sufficient resemblance between those measures and the bill now before us to justify my voting for the third reading. I may be taking my political future in my hands in making this statement, but that is my duty, what I am sent for, what I am paid for. But, after studying the bill carefully, I am of the opinion that in the long run this bill will prove prejudicial to the producers of the country.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): On the second reading I stated positively that unless the bill were amended substantially I would vote against the third reading. I have read carefully the amendments that have been proposed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) and most of the speeches made in committee, and I have no hesitation in concluding, as my deskmate has done, that I must vote against the third reading of this bill.

On the second reading I dwelt only upon two features of this piece of legislation: the constitution of the federal board and the basic principle upon which the local boards were to be established. I adhere to the idea that, whether we like it or not, we must establish some machinery to control the exchange of trade between Canada and foreign countries. In this respect I cannot follow my good old friend from Ontario (Mr. Moore), though I enjoyed immensely the speech he made the other day to the tune of Old Liberalism. A policy of control is imposed upon us by circumstances as they exist the world over, and for that reason I voted for the second reading of the bill. The establishment of a federal board calling for the expenditure of public money could not be introduced in this house except as a government measure. Therefore, in common with other members of the house, I had no choice but to vote for or against the second reading of the bill. But I then expressed my strong opposition to the manner in which it was proposed to constitute the local boards.

Amendments have been brought forward and accepted, the main one being the amendment which enables the government—not forces upon the government but enables the government—to call for a poll, that is, for a vote of the people concerned in each locality where such a local board will be proposed. I have already expressed the view, which I now repeat, that I am not a strong believer in the supreme wisdom of majorities any more than in that of minorities. My opposition to the composition of local boards is not based on the fact that they are either majority or minority boards. I am strongly convinced that, given the conditions that exist in this country, geographical, ethnical and social, if we permit the creation of these small local units in every centre of each province of the dominion, we shall have chaos in matters of production and marketing and in all matters which are supposed to be adjusted by this legislation.

I have compared those local boards with the collective farms in Russia, the Kolkoczi. The more I have studied this legislation and compared it with the establishment of those organizations in Russia, the more I feel I am justified in calling this portion of the bill the sovietic part of it. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), to whom I always listen with pleasure because he has the rare faculty of expressing his thoughts clearly and concisely, said that there was nothing socialistic in this legislation. In a sense that is true because there is nothing so antagonistic to modern socialism, as it is understood and practised in England or in Germany, as communism in Russia. As a matter of fact, after the communists in Russia did away with the old monarchical system, the first obstacle which they removed was that of the moderate socialists. I do not think there can be any doubt that the basic principle of this second part of the bill is that upon which those local bodies have been recognized in Russia. It is the acknowledgment, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) has said, that the basis of social and economic conditions is no longer that of population or of community interest but of certain occupations. Tomato growers, poultry raisers, dairy producers form a small combine in a locality; they put up a scheme and they get approval in Ottawa. They immediately become masters of the production, indirectly if you like. I will admit that production is not mentioned here; but the minute they control the manner in which the product will be raised and put on the market, they really control production. What is the use of a man growing tomatoes if he is not allowed to sell them unless he puts himself under the iron-set regulations of the local board approved by the central board? Therefore the board indirectly controls production; it controls marketing and the disposition of the goods that will be produced in each locality controlled by a board. For that reason alone I am staunchly opposed to the bill as it stands. No amendment has been proposed and adopted by the committee to remove that obnoxious feature of the legislation. So much for that.

But the point I want to stress now is one which I left aside altogether on the second reading of this bill; I mean, the last portion of the legislation, clause 12. At least I call it the last portion because it comes before the investigation which is another piece of legislation in itself. As a matter of fact this is a combination of three bills in one. I refer to that clause upon which the leader of the opposition dwelt concerning restriction of imports and exports. I was rather surprised, not to hear because I was not present, but to read the observation made by my excellent young friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) with regard to this part of the bill. He said that those extraordinary powers which we are asked to grant to the governor in council enabling it to restrict at its will imports and exports of all the natural products as defined in this legislation—and the scope of natural products involved is very large—cannot be exercised unless upon recommendation by some local board or the federal board. It may appear pretentious on my part to contradict the Solicitor General, who is a distinguished lawyer while I am not; the only title I have is that I am the dean of law students in Canada. I entered the study of law some forty years ago and I quitted it because, as old Paul Playdell said in one of Sir Walter Scott's novels, of the less honourable parts of the profession. Therefore I did not take my degree. But during my twenty-five years of parliamentary life I have acquired some habit of studying statutes. I remember a minister of justice who used to send me bills with this rather queer kind of compliment: "Bourassa, you are no lawyer; you know nothing about the law, but I have some reliance on your common sense and especially your aptitude to tell me what you think. Therefore I will consult you rather than any of my legal advisers." I thereby acquired the habit of construing statutes.

The first thing which strikes one with any experience of legislation is that clause 12 stands by itself without any connection whatever with the rest of the legislation. It reminds one of certain pieces of legislation introduced in the English parliament at a time the House of Lords still exercised its powers. When the Commons wanted the Lords to swallow a piece of legislation they did not like, they tacked it on to a money bill; and the House of Lords, not having power to amend money bills, were obliged to either swallow the whole thing or to reject it wholesale. This looks very much as if the government wanted to get from the house powers similar to those which President Roosevelt secured from congress, and they are trying to get them in this way instead of asking the house for the granting of those powers, a discussable, debatable question. I am not now so much enamoured—perhaps because I am older and the power of love may have decreased in me—as the leader of the opposition is of the goddess of parliamentary liberty. That goddess has been so unfaithful to her worshippers and lovers in the last twenty-five years that in my opinion we must show a little independence toward her; but at the same time I do not believe in deceit; I do not believe in roundabout ways. I may have admiration for a man like Mussolini taking his opponents by the throat, throwing them out of parliament and telling them: "I do not want any opposition, because an opposition is an impediment to efficient government." That is his principle and, I repeat, it is a debatable one. In times of crises there is not the slightest doubt that a good autocrat is preferable to any debating house such as we are; and that many things such as the present Prime Minister has in mind would be better executed if he had no cabinet around him and no house of commons to discuss his views. But I repeat what I said three or four years ago: so long as we have a parliament and form part of it, we must at least have a certain degree of apparent respect for what we are supposed to represent. Being a member of this house I refuse to be stampeded into accepting, under the guise of legislation to regulate the marketing of products, a law which, without any reference to marketing, without any reference to the rights of the producers and consumers or to their interests, individual or collective, grants to the governor in council the power, in any manner, way, shape or form, to restrict the import or export of any natural product, such as it is defined by this legislation. It means a great deal—the foodstuffs derived from natural products, the products of the forests, the products of the fisheries, and so forth. Once this legislation is passed, the governor in council, with or without the advice of its central board, or of any local board, may decide one morning to close the door to the importation of Russian coal as it did, for what purpose I do not know, but the result was the commencement of the most damnable monopoly which now exists in the Dominion of Canada. It may order to-morrow the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) or the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lacroix) or anyone concerned in the lumbering trade, that he has no right to ship lumber to the United States; that in order to favour imperial policies he must sell it in London at whatever price he can get. All that can be done by order in council under clause 12 without any reference to the opinion of any local board or of the central board. How could my good friend the Solicitor General say that those powers cannot be exercised unless upon the advice of a board? Clause 12 is quite clear; it states:

> The governor in council may by order or regulation, notice whereof shall be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette—
> (a) regulate or restrict the importation into Canada of any natural product which enters Canada in competition with a regulated product;
> (b) regulate or restrict the exportation from Canada of any natural product;

And so on. I refer only to those two subclauses. What is the title of this bill?

An act to improve the methods and practices of marketing of natural products in Canada and in export trade, and to make further provision in connection therewith.

That does not contain the slightest indication that there will be any restriction on imports and exports. In all the clauses dealing with the composition of the federal and local boards and the powers assigned to them there is not the slightest indication with regard to imports. Then, under one single clause which stands by itself, granting extraordinary powers to the governor in council without relation to the rest of the law, to the powers of the central board or the requests of the local boards, the governor in council is authorized to do whatever it likes in matters of import and export. It may establish new tariffs. It may suppress certain commodities. It may establish quotas. To-morrow it may tell the apple growers of Nova Scotia: "This year you will not send a barrel of apples to England, because we want to favour British Columbia." It may tell the cheesemakers of Quebec that Ontario must have a chance, and that no Quebec cheese may be sent to England until Ontario has disposed of its product. I do not say it will do that sort of thing, but I say this legislation authorizes the governor in council to do anything it pleases, either by way of tariffs or by most arbitrary restrictions with regard to imports and exports. It may upset the whole trade of the country without any indication of the will of parliament or the desire or interest of the people for whose benefit this legislation is supposed to be adopted.

Mr. RALSTON: And the producers may be fined or imprisoned if they do not obey the regulations.

Mr. BOURASSA: I leave that aside. I want to impress those who take the trouble to read my few remarks with the bearing of this one clause.

Now connect this with the extraordinary powers we have granted the government under the guise of peace, order and good government. Take those two laws together, and if thereby and thereunder you have not the amplest form of fascism that can exist, I want to know where it can be found.

In this bill you have this extraordinary feature of a moderate form of state socialism in the first part, which I think is a necessity. You have a disguised form of sovietism in the second part, and you have a most striking form of fascism in the third part. That is too much for me to swallow at once. I can stand a good deal. I have been taken to task by some virtuous people in my province for having expressed myself as prepared to stand a good deal of socialism, not as a doctrine but as a necessity. For example, I stand the extremely socialist law enacted by the Quebec government in the matter of sale of liquor. That is state socialism, pure and simple. I have submitted under protest to the so-called assistance law of the Quebec government, which is socialized charity. I do not approve of that, but we have it. I am amused when my good liberal friends stand so strongly against socialism here, though they go through the rural districts of Quebec praising Mr. Taschereau and his government for their kindness to the poor since they adopted the most socialistic law with regard to the sustenance of charitable institutions. So, as I say, I am prepared to stand a good deal but I am not prepared to stand sovietism in any shape or form. That is what I denounced on the second reading; that is what I still denounce. No remedy has been proposed; nothing has been done to correct it. I denounce it not only because of the obnoxious principle at the base of that portion of the law; I denounce it in the interests of the small people, the small producers and especially the consumers.

In that regard I agree entirely with the right hon. leader of the opposition, and I support his amendment which states that nothing has been done and something should be done to protect the consumer. I am also concerned about the fate of the numerous producers who will be dominated by these local boards whether, as I repeat for the third or fourth time, they are majority or minority boards; that does not concern me for the present. I am concerned about the liberty of action of the producers in the cultivation of their land for the production of whatever they think it can produce, which they know far better than any board in Ottawa or even any local board can know. I object to any group of individuals engaged in raising poultry or in producing tomatoes or potatoes imposing their manner of cultivation and their system of production upon people who may have good reason for producing something else in a different way

My reason for supporting the second reading of this bill was my feeling that a body should be created to direct the economic activities of our farmers, to make them understand that if they produce too much of one commodity the price will fall, and that they should produce something else or some other quality of fruit, of vegetables or of live stock. But I object to a local board more than I object to a federal board imposing its ways upon its neighbours or upon any minority in any locality. We must tell the whole truth. In this country there is less social spirit and public spirit than in the old countries, where traditions have been established, where for years people have been forced, so to speak, to be considerate of each other. In all new countries, but especially in the United States and Canada, the prevailing law of economics is the law of selfishness, the law of getting all the money you can by any means you can. The moment you permit small groups of individuals all through the land to impose their views, to protect their selfish interests, they will impose them in such a way that not only will they antagonize the minority; not only will they impose upon the public sacrifices which they find hard enough to make to-day in being forced to pay twice as much as they should for what they buy; at the same time this will upset the economic life of this country under the pretence of organizing it.

The Minister of Agriculture is a right thinking man; I believe he wants to do the right thing, but I am afraid he has listened to too much advice of various kinds. In times of trouble and crisis all sorts of quack doctors rise up, in universities, in farm districts and in labour organizations. Each has his own remedy, and they come to the government. When governments give way and take a little of the medicine of each they are apt to compound a mixture that will poison the whole body, politic and social. It would have been better to start humbly; but unfortunately, as one great French writer has said, we have lost the sense of the great political virtue of humility. Every one imagines he is bound to be a big man, to produce big things all of a sudden, with a big piece of law which will cure all. I am afraid that is the wrong way. For a number of years we have been going down hill. For at least twenty-five years back we have gone crazy,—and in that statement I do not except myself, because, as an old friend of mine, a specialist in mental diseases, once said to me, "You know, we have certain theories; we put a certain number of people in asylums because we believe they are suffering from this or that kind of mental disease, but, to be perfectly truthful I believe everyone is crazy; it is only a question of degree and manner. I know that every day in business and social circles I meet people who are far more crazy than those people in the asylum of which I am superintendent."

[Mr. Bourassa.]

I am afraid that for the last twenty-five years, and especially in economic methods, we have all gone crazy. We have built up everything on credit, indebtedness, extravagance, legislation,—laws, laws, laws, laws—without reflection before they have been passed, without seriousness when they are applied, and without any moral sanction to get the people to agree to their application. What is the use of passing laws which are inapplicable? I am sure the Minister of Agriculture, and I am still more sure—because I know him better—the Prime Minister knows that this law cannot be applied as it is. He knows that if it were applied as it is, or rather if in its application there was an endeavour to meet all the requirements and exigencies of the people who have asked for it, it would simply upset the whole economic life of this country. It would raise community against community, class against class, country against city, and advance the progress of social or economic revolution far more than the extremest revolutionary party could do; they would do it by bad legislation and by improper administration.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I vote heartily for the amendment moved by the right hon. leader of the opposition, and still more heartily against the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that the debate upon this measure should have taken a very considerable length of time is not surprising. That it should have generated some heat without much light is somewhat amazing, and that it should have wandered over many fields of discussion is not strange for the motion now before the house is for the third reading of the so called marketing bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: So called!

Mr. BENNETT: It is somewhat interesting to realize that it was so called by the hon. gentlemen opposite yesterday. Their recognition of its real value is something that should not pass without comment.

I think perhaps the most interesting thing that has developed during the debate of yesterday and to-day and the day before is the difference of opinion between those who united unsuccessfully to vote for the amendment that has just been negatived.

The veteran former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) has expressed himself in that firm and determined manner that has characterized his life's conduct in matters political. He has always had strong convictions and expressed them with a fervour and determination worthy of his race. I have heard him cheered and cheered and cheered by hon. gentlemen opposite, but there was a rare silence yesterday when he was concluding his observations. Whether or not that marked his colleagues' disapproval of his observations I cannot say.

Then there was the member for Quebec East, the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). When you compare his attitude towards this bill with that of many other members who have spoken from his side, you have a very great cleavage of opinion. Then when you compare the speech of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore) with that of some of those who have spoken you begin to realize that after all there still remains in this house some vestige of the opinion that was held during the early Victorian days.

The laissez faire doctrines have not disappeared entirely. There are those who believe that the only way in which progress can be made is to watch the procession pass by but there are also those who believe that changed times and changed conditions must be met with new policies. Fortunately, the Conservative party belongs to the latter class.

An hon. MEMBER: That is new.

Mr. BENNETT: I should judge that in the mind of the hon. gentleman anything would be new. The fact is that we still believe in the truth of that statement made by Tennyson:

> That man's the true Conservative
> Who lops the moulder'd branch away.

We offer no apology for standing where we do with respect to a matter of this kind. I was somewhat amazed in following the very excellent historical review made yesterday by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), when he was dealing with certain phases of economic history, that he should not have observed that we have here in these days—I remind the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore)—a situation not unlike that which prevailed in England in the early days of Queen Victoria's reign, in fact up until the middle of the nineteenth century. The laissez faire doctrine developed to a point never before reached. It was declared that contracts were sacred and that governments must not interfere with business, that the father could rent the services of his child at the age of six and that he should work until he was twelve. We find factories where girls and boys of five, six, seven, eight and nine years of age were working.

If those who are interested will take the trouble to look up the Register for 1847 they will find the history of that bill which was introduced in the English House of Commons by Mr. Fielden and supported by Lord Ashley, afterwards Lord Shaftesbury. They will then realize the extent to which under the development of that doctrine business could not be touched by legislation. They will see the extent to which child labour was exploited, that contracts must be maintained and there should be no interference or regulation of the business world. If hon. members of this house are interested they can look this up as I shall not take the time this afternoon to read the rather interesting developments of that doctrine. One must not change the hours of labour from the twelve hours contracted for alike by father and child. They will find how the suggestion that these hours should be reduced to eleven hours per day met with disapproval. They will find how the suggestion that they should be reduced to ten hours met with strong opposition on the ground that it would reduce the productive power of the factories by twenty-five per cent. These things are matters of history.

There were those who felt that the laissez faire doctrine had been carried to extremes in the early part of the nineteenth century. Mr. Fielden from Lancashire compared the death rate of children between one and ten years in Manchester with those in London. Just why there has been interference with that doctrine was admirably presented yesterday by the hon. member for Ontario. We can realize that interference by legislatures and by parliaments has been in the interests of the state itself, its people, its population and the lives of the people. Interference has been against child labour, against long hours of labour. The endeavour has been to secure conditions for those who labour which will enable them to have at least a little leisure. Within my memory there stood in this house an hon. gentleman who came from the old county of Northumberland in England and who recalled the times of the election of John Morley in Newcastle.

Morley declared that any interference with the hours of labour was contrary to the doctrine of his party, that laissez faire meant that there should be no interference by the state with respect to contractual obligations entered into by citizens. That is the doctrine which is preached to-day in this house. It is the doctrine which was preached yesterday by the hon. member for Ontario but neither he nor the leader of the opposition dared say in this house that he did not believe the state should interfere in the regulation of business with respect to hours of labour, with respect to factory conditions, with respect to child labour and with respect to health and sanitation. Certainly, business must be interfered with and regulated, there must be interference by the state on behalf of those who unless they can speak collectively cannot care for themselves.

We now have the application to agriculture of that same principle which they dare not disapprove and those who are unable to organize themselves even as the trade unions have organized in Great Britain. When such legislation is presented, we are told that it is despotic and that it means tyrannical interference with the rights of the people of this country to do as they please. There is a time in the history of every country when voices have arisen. Let me remind this house of the circumstances under which the state in Great Britain regulated the hours of labour and so on. It will be recalled that Mr. Fielden, a distinguished manufacturer from Lancashire, and Lord Ashley found it difficult to interest the great masses of the people who had been brought up on the doctrine of laissez faire to take any action with respect to these matters. Year in and year out Samuel Plimsoll demanded that the load mark should be placed upon ships but he met with powerful opposition from the shipowners. But he was persistent and insistent and in the end every ship that leaves an English port must bear upon her side the Plimsoll mark, an eternal memorial to the persistency of one man for his cause. Because of the impotency of individuals and their inability to bring about the reforms they desired, we finally had the creation of the great trade unions in Great Britain. Who were their opponents? The exponents of laissez-faire. Their opponents said: We will not tolerate this, these institutions must not be permitted to say how contracts shall be made, what the hours of labour shall be and what shall be the conditions under which men and women work. But the trade unions triumphed. Why? Because the rights of humanity prevailed over the rights of dividends. In the ultimate analysis that will be found to be the real reason and nothing else.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Can agriculture organize? Yesterday and to-day the veteran former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) gave the long story of the efforts of agriculture towards organization. He told the story of the granges and the patrons of industry, he told of the struggles for organization on the part of agriculture and of the failures brought about by certain circumstances. I realize that their position is not that of the trade unionists. They have not the voice which the trade unions have to make themselves effective in the constituencies in order that laissez faire may not prevail against them. The time has come when the natural products of this country shall be marketed under conditions which will ensure to those who produce them some measure of return for their efforts, a measure of return relative to that which the trade unions have been able to secure by organization for those whom they represent.

There you have the analogy. If any of you desire to take the trouble to read carefully the economic history of the period to which I have referred you will find the continued opposition that was made against this combination of effort, this desire to organize for the purpose I have mentioned. If any of you are interested, I suggest that you take the trouble to secure in yonder library one of these volumes and read it. To-day you have the parallel in this house. All those who have consistently followed the doctrine of laissez faire, as the right hon. gentleman opposite, the hon. member for Ontario, and others do, are banded together against this legislation. Just as in the days of the trade union effort all those who held that property rights and the rights of contract must be supreme over every other consideration in the world, were banded together for that purpose, so to-day, to the left of the Speaker, with one or two exceptions we find banded together those who say, "Let well enough alone. Let there be no interference with business or with the right of contract; let there be no interference to improve the conditions under which the farmer shall market his products; let there be no interference by the state, by legislation, to ensure for him a larger part of the consumer's dollar; let us blind the issue by talking about the rights of consumers, about the constitutional history of the past; let us call up Magna Charta so that we may remember what John did at Runnymede; let us concern ourselves with all these things, but let us ensure that the end sought here shall not be attained."

That is the story. It is just as it was in the middle of the nineteenth century—the sacred rights of contract and of property, the sacred rights of those who must be permitted to maintain the foreign trade of England. I was reading the other day one of the speeches of this sort insisting upon the maintenance of that condition at any cost. Was it to cut down the hours of labour? No, but to maintain foreign trade. To improve the condition of the agrarian, to assist him in marketing his products, to provide for a co-operative effort on the part of local communities, created by themselves, and assisted by the state? No; that must not be. Let us maintain the doctrines of the past—that is the attitude. Let us remember the sacred name of Morley, nor let us forget Hume; so that by and by, if we are long enough at it, we shall drift back to the days of the barons at Runnymede.

Now I do challenge one observation among others made by the right hon. gentleman yesterday. He asserted that the world is the same to-day as it was in days gone by; that there is nothing new under the sun; that the great conflict of the ages has made no great structural change; but that, if you look at the end of the reign of George IV, you will find a fitting similarity to the conditions that exist to-day.

I have too much respect for the intellectual powers of the right hon. gentleman to believe for a single moment that he had given any thought to that statement before he made it. Just think of the conditions through which the world has passed. Why is it that the world will never again be as it was before 1914? Not the youngest man in this house, not the youngest page here will ever see a return to the conditions that existed before 1914. Why? It is so obvious that it is hardly necessary to state the reason. First of all, not merely thousands and hundreds of thousands but millions of the finest lives in all the world have gone out for the cause of war, not in one part of the world but practically in every part. Secondly, on the purely material side, the debts that have been incurred on so vast a scale were incurred not for the construction of productive and useful undertakings but in the destruction of the very things which were bought with the money that paid for them. In cotton, in powder, in explosives, in everything that goes to the maintenance of war, millions and hundreds of millions, nay, thousands of millions were destroyed, and as a result there was no productive return for the money thus expended. But it did not end there. At the close of the war there was this condition —and I commend the thought to this house.

The figures produced by the Secretary of Agriculture for the United States indicate that at the end of the war the combatant nations had reduced by fifty million acres the land which they had had under cultivation —fifty million acres. Why? Because, unlike the Napoleonic wars, unlike the wars in which the armies of Wellington and of Marlborough participated, the belligerents did not look to the communities through which they passed to provide them with food. The food came from overseas, from remote parts of the world. Transports were carrying food, meat, flour, grain, from the remotest parts of the world during the war, and what happened? Fifty million acres of land, in the warring countries, went out of cultivation. In the United States alone, forty million acres were put under cultivation during the war—forty million acres that had not previously been cultivated—to meet the wants of those who were warring, and who had abandoned fifty million acres of farm land. And what was the position in Canada? Between the outbreak of the war and the end there were put under cultivation in this country over twenty million more acres. The result was that there were over sixty million additional acres under cultivation in Canada and the United States between the outbreak of hostilities and the end and shortly thereafter, to provide food, to provide the various requirements of the people who had abandoned lands because compulsory service had made it necessary for them to fight.

With peace, what happened? With peace there was an effort to bring back a return of pre-war conditions. Those who survived went back to their farms and endeavoured to till the soil and to produce. In this country we did not at once abandon the increased acreage but continued to maintain it, as they did in the United States, and in the end there occurred what was inevitable. To the extent to which those who had abandoned their farms to engage in the conflict went back and brought those farms once more into production, to that extent they were supplying wants that had been supplied by Canada and the United States, and this rendered it impossible for those engaged in similar occupations in Canada and the United States to find a market for their products.

Does anyone suggest that such a situation has ever existed in the world before? What brought it about? Compare the end of George's reign with what happened at the close of the last war. At the end of George's reign steam as a motive power was unknown; electricity was not heard of for commercial purposes; the internal combustion engine was yet a dream in the mind of an inventor not yet born. That is the position. All these changes came into being, and you can no more compare the conditions that existed at the end of George's reign with the conditions that existed at the close of the last war than you can compare the conditions, of which we have any record at all, that existed in the glacial age with present conditions.

Under these circumstances, what is the duty and function of government?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: It may be a joke to some hon. gentlemen but there are agriculturists who do not think it a joke. It well might be that the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson), who is so agitated by the loss of a market by importation of flour from abroad, will treat it as a joke. But the people concerned do not so regard it.

Let us see what the position was. I have indicated in a few sentences the effect so far as agriculture is concerned. With respect to industry, what is the situation? The hon. member for Ontario yesterday briefly touched upon it. There was an abandonment also of all industrial activities except those that were related to war. Coal was produced so that T.N.T. might be supplied; cotton was produced so that there might be high explosives and so on right down, and the factories, the industrial life of the communities that were at war, were engaged in the manner I have indicated, the industries being developed to the highest point of production for war purposes, for instance, chemical gases and commodities of that sort.

At the end of the war the readjustment period began. As I have dealt with this once in the house I shall not repeat. The readjustment period with respect to industry we passed through, but as regards agriculture the condition was far different; there is no condition comparable with it. Here were men upon the farms that they had created for the purpose of supplying the deficits in food in the warring countries, and the warring countries were now supplying their own food by the toil of the men who had left the colours for the purpose of going back to their farms; that was the situation. Under those circumstances, what have governments done? The other day I pointed out in the house that France had taken immediate action for two reasons: she did not desire to pay $3 or $2.50 for wheat; she did not desire to be held up, as she regarded it, to ransom as long as she could cultivate her soil and supply her cereal wants. In addition to that she was not prepared to take the risk, if once more engaged in war, of the destruction of wheat transports by submarines and other methods such as torpedoes and mines. What did she do? Someone has referred to her policy as one of intense nationalism. What she did was to declare that she proposed to the extent of the ability of her people to make herself in food self-sustaining. In Italy, Germany and other European countries similar conditions prevailed and to the exent that they prevailed, there was a lessening of the markets which had been created for us by reason of the war in those countries during the war.

Faced with that condition here we have Canada in which about half the population is engaged in tilling the soil, and there again the right hon. gentleman and I would disagree. At the end of the reign of George IV you had the agricultural population, the yeoman of England, the country squires, the parliament that was one of landed interests only and you had in addition a certain measure of, shall I say, cooperative harmony in Great Britain between those who tilled the soil and those who owned it. In this country the major part of the population for many years after confederation was on the soil; it tilled the soil; but the great mechanization of the world that took place through the inventive genius of man affecting the whole attitude of mankind toward production in agriculture, sent into the cities and towns great masses of the people and left on the countryside smaller and smaller numbers of them. In a most interesting book written recently, Mr. A. G. Street, who came out to western Canada and lived in Manitoba, points out the great differences that have arisen in England in connection with that matter during the last fifty years. The countryside was once dotted with thriving farms. Now you have black chimneys and factories everywhere. That condition to a similar extent exists in Canada. For the first time the last census indicates that in this country more than one-half of the population is in the cities and towns, leaving less than one-half of the population inhabiting the farms and working and tilling the soil.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I had concluded pointing out some of the reasons why, in my opinion, the extraordinary change of conditions which had been brought about by the great war necessitated legislative action being taken at least to afford to the agriculturists the same opportunity that was afforded to those who, in some ways, had been perhaps more fortunate in their association with industry.

I was much taken with the provisions made by various countries when they came to deal with the marketing of products, with the surplus of agricultural production as well as of industrial production. Each community and nation endeavoured to supply itself with its material wants, and most of them enacted some form of legislation providing for the marketing of their products in an orderly and planned manner. Perhaps among the nations that dealt last with the problem was Japan, and I was much taken with the English translation of a few words in the Japanese act:

A law concerning the adjustment of trade and the safeguarding of commerce.

It was promulgated on April 7 and became effective as from May 1, 1934, and these words are worthy of consideration by this parliament. The spokesman of the foreign office said:

Promulgation of this law has been made necessary because there is a growing tendency in other countries to ignore the fundamental economic principle of ministering to one another's wants and promoting through their cooperative efforts the progress and prosperity of mankind—all of which are being reflected in their attempts to suppress importation of foreign goods by means of high tariffs, restriction of imports, etc., and particularly because there seems to be an increasing number of countries which are setting up barriers against Japan's export trade.

He concludes with these words:

Of course, Japan has no intention to take any step that is likely to increase the present difficulties of the world. Rather, she hopes there will be no occasion requiring an actual operation of this law.

The empire of Japan, in dealing with the problems incident to the conditions to which I have referred, enacted the law I have just mentioned. We in this country, finding ourselves confronted with like conditions, world conditions over which we had no control and which were not within our jurisdiction to control, had to take some action to avoid the possibility of absolute destruction. It is not as though this were a new principle so far as the provinces are concerned. I do not think there are many provinces in this confederation—there may be a few—in which an effort has not been made, aided by the legislature, to enable the agriculturist to market his products under more satisfactory terms and conditions than are involved in merely sending them to market without regard to conditions. British Columbia has had a marketing act for many years.

I saw the wheat pool founded in Alberta, when Mr. Aaron Sapiro came to Calgary and, after meeting with those interested in the production of grain, finally induced them to believe that this would be a useful thing to do. They drew up an agreement, which was subsequently ratified by the legislature, and in my professional capacity I was asked to advise upon it, so I saw the foundation of the movement. I still think that no wheat pool has been operated more reasonably and more beneficially with regard to the people concerned than the pool in Alberta. Pools were formed also in Saskatchewan and in Manitoba. It well may be that when, without adequate experience, they endeavoured to project their idea into the world market without, as I say, having a full understanding of what was involved, they met with a measure of disaster, but that does not in any sense militate against the soundness of what they were endeavouring to do. They were opposed by the great interests; they were opposed by many others, but they maintained their position, and I heard the foremost banker of that time in Canada say that it had done more to enable the western farmer to care for his obligations and deal with his economic life in an orderly manner than any other single thing to which reference could be made.

The ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) has referred to the efforts that were made in the eastern provinces. For constitutional reasons, at every turn and in every instance there was, of course, a limitation imposed upon their powers. No province could create a pool or make provision for cooperative marketing that gave jurisdiction or power beyond the territorial limits of the province in question. Questions of contracts and sales and matters of that kind were dealt with as property and civil rights, but when you went beyond the boundaries of the province and had to deal with communities beyond those boundaries, whether interprovincially or internationally, of course you were subject to the play of forces which were not under the control of provincial legislatures.

Hence it was that they sought and, in some instances, by arrangement between themselves, exercised jurisdiction and power which otherwise they could not have obtained except by agreement with the dominion.

With that set of facts before us; with the economic conditions prevailing that I have mentioned; with the efforts and experiments in British Columbia with respect to fruit, apples, milk, potatoes and so on, what were we to do? I noticed in the press to-day that they allege that $300,000 has been lost to the growers of potatoes because this act could not be put in force in the province of British Columbia by reason of the delays that have occurred. In British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and some of the eastern provinces, within the limits imposed by the constitution, pools, or, if you like, associations or organizations having for their purpose the grouping together of individuals for the purpose of selling their products, have been in operation for years. But when the economic conditions that now prevail in this world are faced and you have to consider how you can best serve the interests of at least one-half of our population, and far more than half if you consider the production of new wealth from year to year, how is it to be dealt with?

I have been vastly amused and interested to observe the operation of the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. First there was complete and absolute opposition to a marketing bill. Then followed a long, protracted struggle in which some of the less prominent supporters asserted that their suggestions had been accepted as amendments and that the bill offered for third reading was not the bill offered for second reading. But alas and alack; think of what has happened. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) has deprived his followers of the opportunity of saying that they have made a new bill, for he has now pronounced his opposition to the bill which emerged from the committee with the amendments attached. So the principle of the marketing bill, opposed as it was on the second reading, is now to be opposed, we are told, on the third reading. In view of my knowledge of the political history of this country in 1925 and 1926 I never expected to hear any ex-minister, who was so dependent at that time on the support of those who sat to the left, refer to those hon. members as "those birds". But I suspect that in using that term the hon. gentleman had regard to the fact that they have flown; I suspect that this was the real reason for that remark. And if of course they have flown, as in fact they have, the reasons for so doing—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Migratory birds.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman says, to his sorrow, that they were migratory birds. They may have been in fact just that. But at any rate I think it was not quite the just deserts due to those who sit to the left that those who for many years had sat in high places with all the emoluments of power and honours of office, who enacted legislation for standardizing hay, straw and potatoes and several matters of that kind, but left dead upon the order paper many standardizing measures which would have been passed had the birds not flown, should thus refer to them in this debate.

This government, when confronted with the circumstances to which I have referred, had no doubts in the world that the only measure which could possibly be enacted by this parliament was one which would give force, validity and life to the efforts made by organizations within the provinces and created under their authority to function beyond the immediate boundaries of those provinces. Could anything else be more simple than that? That is the basis of it.

One hon. gentleman has said that this is socialism. If it is, he has been a party to it for a long time. If it is socialism, then I plead guilty to having been a supporter of it for many long years. I cannot think that there is anything offensive in calling it socialism, if you like, if you mean that the force and power of the parliament of Canada is to be utilized to enable those who live within provincial boundaries and have organized themselves into units to promote their material efforts, and to get something for the toil they give. You may call it anything you like, but at least it is sound legislation which promotes it.

You thus have the local units organized and functioning. Then, you have your federal unit not for a rendezvous, as the ex-Minister of Agriculture has said, but as a great clearing house centre for the purposes of enabling those who by reason of limitations imposed upon them constitutionally are not familiar with international conditions to be able to deal in the light of the knowledge that is given them of the whole international situation. That is the central board. It is not only to be a disseminator of information; it supplies the local units with such information as will enable them to determine how best to dispose of their products.

Why are you opposed to that? Why are those to the left of you, Mr. Speaker, rising in their places to-night and voting against a bill which provides for that? Have they given, in this long debate, any substitute for that which has been offered here? Have they offered a substitute? Has there been a single word of constructive criticism with respect to this measure? True, they did suggest some amendments—the crossing of a "t" and the dotting of an "i." They did suggest some amendments of that sort. Rightly it may be stated that they did suggest two or three. Every member has a duty to perform; he owes a duty to a measure before the house and if his suggestion is accepted by the government of the day, so much the better for the bill. Every hon. member must play a constructive part in it, to improve it, to make it better.

I do say that this legislation which was offered on the second reading of the bill which has now passed the committee and is submitted to the house for third reading—I say that this legislation embodies the idea that the central authority is to be utilized, with all its authority and with all its strength, with all its life and vitality, to enable the agrarian in the provinces, with the aid of his organizations, to have that knowledge which will enable him to deal with his calling, and to receive the best return for his effort. That is what we are endeavouring to do.

Mr. BOUCHARD: And to deprive the minority of their right.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has said that it is to deprive the minority of their right. His seat in this house deprives the minority of their rights. That is the basis of this type of government, if the hon. gentleman has any appreciation at all of what democratic representative institutions mean. They mean this, that the majority governs. How do we pass measures in this building? How do we do it? By the will of the majority. How do we do anything else? By the will of the majority. Representative institutions, involving the majority selecting their representatives, deprives minorities of their rights. That is the theory of our government, and as I said every hon. member who occupies a seat in this house is here, despite the opposition of a minority. And when that minority is converted into a majority, usually much to the chagrin of the person affected, then the will of that majority must prevail. That is the position.

We speak of liberty. "Oh liberty, what crimes have been committed in thy name!" No wonder that a great annotator referred to liberty in that way. Liberty—yes, there is no liberty that does not involve curtailment of rights.

Mr. BOUCHARD: In terms of farming, independence is the greatest gift.

Mr. BENNETT: I suspect the independence that is sought is independence materially, financially and otherwise. There is no man in the world who perhaps is as independent as the farmer, if he can farm profitably, and there is no man in the world so badly off if he has to toil from sunrise to sundown, only to find himself in debt at the end of the year. When you talk about liberty, is there an hon. member in this house who does not realize that liberty means restraint, that liberty means discipline, that liberty means loss of unrestricted freedom? Why is it that you have by-laws in this city? Why do you make laws in the legislatures? Why do we pass laws in the dominion parliament? Why have we a criminal code? Why have we any of these provisions which say to the individual, "You may not exercise all your liberties"? Why? Because the enjoyment of any liberty, any constitutional liberty, means sacrifice by each individual of some of his natural liberties. And when a legislature takes from this class or that class, from this individual or that individual, some of his natural liberties, it speaks in the name of society and in the name of the state, in order that there may be an enjoyment of liberty by everyone within the realm. That is the whole theory of liberty.

Mr. BOUCHARD: When has selling a hog without a licence been a crime, in the past?

Mr. BENNETT: I am just going to deal with that, for this reason: There are some hon. members in this house who have complained against this legislation because they say that what we are doing is delegating to a body certain powers which should be exercised by parliament. Well, Mr. Speaker, I confess that when I heard the right hon. gentleman say to this house yesterday that this was a new theory developed in recent years, and when he referred to Lord Hewart's book from which he erroneously stated that I sometimes quoted—I often referred to it, but I never quoted from it—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will realize what I meant. There is no point in it.

An hon. MEMBER: In days gone by.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, in days gone by, but I commend the hon. gentleman to a consideration of this fact, that this is not a new doctrine. Fifty-one years ago a statute was passed by a celebrated Liberal government in Ontario of that day, the government of Sir Oliver Mowat. They passed a liquor licence act, and the question as to its validity went to the privy council. That was in 1883, just fifty-one years ago, and fifty-one years ago the argument made here now by the right hon. leader of the opposition and so heartily applauded by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) as soon as he saw how others were applauding, was made in that case. I wonder if this chamber has any realization of just how far the courts went with respect to that. The court held that:

"The Liquor License Act of 1877, c. 181, revised statutes of Ontario," which in respect of sections 4 and 5, makes regulations in the nature of police or municipal regulations of a merely local character for the good government of taverns, et cetera, does not in respect of those sections interfere with "the general regulation of trade or commerce," but comes within Nos. 8, 15 and 16 of section 92 of the act of 1867, and is within the powers of the provincial legislature.

Held, further, that the local legislature had power by the said act of 1867 to entrust to a board of commissioners authority to enact regulations of the above character, and thereby to create offences and annex penalties thereto.

"Imprisonment" in No. 15 of section 92 of the act of 1867 means imprisonment with or without hard labour.

That case is Hodge and the Queen. In that case the privy council laid down the rule that it was competent for the legislature of Ontario to create a body and give that body the power to licence, and to create criminal offences and fix punishments for those violating the law. That was not the legislature, but the licensing body that was set up by the legislature, and the argument made in this house the other day, with all the startling assertions I heard yesterday as to this being a modern doctrine, was made in the privy council when the case was heard by that body in 1883. Here are the words of the court in giving judgment with respect to that matter, and it does seem to me that they are very pertinent. The case was argued at great length. Mr. Kerr, Q.C., and Mr. Jeune, afterwards president of the probate division in England and afterwards Lord St. Hillier, argued the case for the appellant, and after the case had been heard at great length finally the court laid down this rule, a rule which I commend to the consideration of this house because it does appear to me that there has been an entire misapprehension as to the true construction to be placed on both the powers of parliament and the powers of the legislatures. Here are the words of the court in giving judgment:

Their lordships consider that the powers intended to be conferred by the act in question, when properly understood, are to make regulations in the nature of police or municipal regulations of a merely local character for the good government of taverns, et cetera, licensed for the sale of liquors by retail, and such as are calculated to preserve, in the municipality, peace and public decency, and repress drunkenness and disorderly and riotous conduct. As such they cannot be said to interfere with the general regulation of trade and commerce which belongs to the dominion parliament, and do not conflict with the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act, which does not appear to have as yet been locally adopted.

Then they proceeded:

Assuming that the local legislature had power to legislate to the full extent of the resolutions passed by the licence commissioners, and to have enforced the observance of their enactments by penalties and imprisonment with or without hard labour, it was further contended that the imperial parliament had conferred no authority on the local legislature to delegate those powers to the licence commissioners, or any other persons. In other words, that the power conferred by the imperial parliament on the local legislature should be exercised in full by that body, and by that body alone.

We have heard that for the last ten days. The judgment continued:

It appears to their lordships, however, that the objection thus raised by the appellants is founded on an entire misconception of the true character and position of the provincial legislatures. They are in no sense delegates of or acting under any mandate from the imperial parliament. When the British North America Act enacted that there should be a legislature for Ontario, and that its legislative assembly should have exclusive authority to make laws for the province and for provincial purposes in relation to the matters enumerated in section 92, it conferred powers not in any sense to be exercised by delegation from or as agents of the imperial parliament, but authority as plenary and as ample within the limits prescribed by section 92 as the imperial parliament in the plenitude of its power possessed and could bestow. Within these limits of subjects and area the local legislature is supreme, and has the same authority as the imperial parliament, or the parliament of the dominion would have had under like circumstances to confide to a municipal institution or body of its own creation authority to make by-laws or resolutions as to subjects specified in the enactment, and with the object of carrying the enactment into operation and effect.

It is obvious—

And I commend these words to this chamber:

—that such an authority is ancillary to legislation and without it an attempt to provide for varying details and machinery to carry them out might become oppressive, or absolutely fail.

I heard the right hon. gentleman yesterday ask: Why is not the scheme before parliament? Why are not the details of the scheme here for us to pass upon? Well, the scheme will be arranged and promulgated after parliament has risen. Next year when parliament has met, it would deal with it. But what would be its value? What would be its value, I ask? The delegation of power, as I shall presently point out, is the basis of all constitutional legislation. Their lordships in delivering their judgment said:

An attempt to provide for varying details and machinery to carry them out might become oppressive, or absolutely fail.

The very full and very elaborate judgment of the court of appeal contains abundance of precedents for this legislation, entrusting a limited discretionary authority to others, and has many illustrations of its necessity and convenience. It was argued at the bar that a legislature committing important regulations to agents or delegates effaces itself.

Has this chamber ever heard that argument?

Mr. BOUCHARD: Drunkenness is a social evil.

Mr. BENNETT (reading):

That is not so.

I am quoting now from the judgment:

It retains its powers intact, and can, whenever it pleases, destroy the agency it has created and set up another, or take the matter directly into its own hands.

There is the answer.

How far it shall seek the aid of subordinate agencies, and how long it shall continue them, are matters for each legislature, and not for courts of law, to decide.

Fifty-one years ago the court of last resort in this empire made that statement of the law. It has been acted on ever since, and, as I shall presently indicate, by no one more than the right hon. gentleman himself. The judgment continues:

Their lordships do not think it necessary to pursue this subject further, save to add that, if by-laws or resolutions are warranted, power to enforce them seems necessary and equally lawful. Their lordships have now disposed of the real questions in the cause.

There was a later case from Australia which touched on parliament exercising jurisdiction in the same sense as this, the case of Powell against Apollo Candle Company. In that case discretion was given to a collector of customs to determine what the tariff should be if there was no tariff on a particular commodity. If he thought it approximated in quality to some other commodity he might apply the duty on the commodity in question as he thought desirable. The statute is set out at length, and the case was decided in 1885, a little later than the case to which I have just referred. Even though it takes a few minutes to do it, in order that there may be no misunderstanding with respect to this fundamental principle, I am going to quote from the section which the privy council had to deal with:

Whenever any article of merchandise—

This was in the Customs Act:

—then unknown to the collector is imported, which, in the opinion of the collector or the commissioners, is apparently a substitute for any known dutiable article, or is apparently designed to evade duty, but possesses properties in the whole or in part which can be used or were intended to be applied for a similar purpose as such dutiable article, it shall be lawful for the governor to direct that a duty be levied on such article at a rate to be fixed in proportion to the degree in which such unknown article approximates in its qualities or uses to such dutiable article; and such rate thus fixed shall be published in a treasury order in the Gazette, and one other newspaper published in Sydney, and exhibited in the long room or other public place in the custom house, and a copy of all such treasury orders shall, without unnecessary delay, be laid before both houses of parliament.

That is a case in which, where no duty was fixed by statute, power was given by the legislature to the governor in council on the recommendation of the minister to fix a rate that bore some relation to the rate on the commodity to which it approximated in qualities or kind.

It was argued then, as it has been argued to-day, that the local legislature is in the nature of an agent or delegate, and, on the principle delegatus non potest delegare, the local legislature must exercise all its functions itself, and can delegate or intrust none of them to other persons or parties. But the judgment, after reciting that such had been the contention, goes on to say,

There is then a quotation from the judgment, and the court makes the clear statement that the tax in question had been imposed by the government and not by the legislature. The argument I heard yesterday in this chamber was that the scheme was a scheme prepared by individuals and not by this parliament. His lordship concludes:

It is argued that the tax in question has been imposed by the governor, and not by the legislature, who alone had power to impose it.

That is the argument here, that this parliament has the power and no one else. But the court dealt with it in these words:

> But the duties levied under the order in council are really levied by the authority of the act under which the order is issued. The legislature has not parted with its perfect control over the governor, and has the power, of course, at any moment, of withdrawing or altering the power which they have entrusted to him. Under these circumstances their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the Supreme Court was wrong in declaring section 133 of the Customs Regulation Act of 1879 to be beyond the power of the legislature.

I merely mention these two cases because half a century has elapsed since the argument which has been advanced in this chamber so seriously and solemnly, and said to be of recent growth and development, was scotched by a judgment of the court in two cases. So far as the objection to this legislation on the ground that it is depriving parliament of its authority is concerned, we are met by two conclusive decisions which establish that that is not so. The right hon. gentleman realized his weakness in this regard yesterday when he stated that this was not for an emergency, it was forever. When I shook my head, he said: Well, until parliament repeals or amends it. That is the basis of all legislation, and that is what the court has said in both these cases. The power of parliament has not been taken away from it; you have not substituted for the power of parliament some other body or authority; you have merely vested that power. Parliament has delegated for the present its powers to the board which it names, and until parliament withdraws that authority, the board may exercise that authority in the manner and to the extent indicated by the statute. So the first argument against this measure disappears. It disappears in the light of reason and of authority. Could anything be more monstrous than that this parliament could not delegate its powers to any body which it sees fit to set up?

During the nine years he was in power, the right hon. gentleman, with the help of "the birds" to his left, part of the time, and later with the help of the others, was dealing with this matter in various ways. First of all, there was the Canadian wheat board in 1922. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) dealt with that matter at length. In that case complete power was given by this parliament to a body to impose conditions on the export of wheat from the provinces. That board had power to make such regulations as it desired. Yesterday the right hon. gentleman referred to Russia, and referred to the nefarious institution called the government which sat opposite. He stated that there had never been granted by this parliament any power to the governor in council to impose embargoes. All one has to do is look at chapter 46 of the statutes of 1923. The right hon. gentleman enacted an amendment to the then Export Act to enable the governor in council to place an embargo against the export of pulpwood produced in this country. That is all.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And never had the sand to use it.

Mr. BENNETT: That is beside the question. The question is: Has the right hon. gentleman exercised the powers, never mind the extent to which they have been used? Has he enacted them in his own favour?

Then we pass to the Inland Water Freight Rates Act. I shall not go into the details of this legislation except to say that the board might prescribe the maximum rate. I shall pass on to 1925. I wonder how many hon. members of this house realize that a man cannot erect a building upon the right of way of the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian National railways and undertake to store grain therein without a licence. That was passed in the house in 1925. To what board did they delegate authority to deal with the complex details of the grain trade, the largest single trade in this country? That power was delegated to the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada. Who gave them the power? This parliament. Who conferred it upon them? The government led by the right hon. gentleman and supported by the former Minister of Agriculture. As my colleague suggests, does parliament ever hear of what they are doing?

What about that great commission created to deal with freight rates, the board of railway commissioners? What about its delegated powers? What about the powers that this parliament conferred upon it to deal with freight rates? Do you first submit freight rates to this house and then tell the board afterwards, or has the board complete jurisdiction to deal with them? That board has as full and plenary powers as could be conferred upon it by parliament. It is true the right hon. gentleman's government did not pass the Railway Act. That was passed by one of his predecessors in office and subsequently consolidated under the government of Sir Robert Borden. The Canadian Farm Loan Act is another instance of delegated powers. Then there is the Domestic Fuel Act and the Vehicular Traffic Act. I take them one after another, year after year. There is not one year that the right hon. gentleman was in office in this country that he did not ask this parliament to delegate some power and some authority to some body created by this parliament. That is the story that is written upon the statutes.

What do you mean by saying that this bill shall fail and is bad because parliament is delegating its powers to a body to be set up? It is true that that body may have its birth with the provincial authorities, but the central body which is to be set up is a body set up on the authority of this parliament. In order that constitutional difficulties may be overcome and that there may be an interrelationship between the functions and powers conferred by the provinces upon the local boards and the functions and powers to be exercised by the dominion board, adequate provisions have been made to meet just that situation.

Only last session we passed two statutes, one looking towards compositions under the authority of the Bankruptcy Act and the other dealing with the general powers of this parliament under section 91 of the British North America Act. Yesterday the supreme court sustained their validity by a unanimous judgment. There again you have an instance of the exercise of powers by this parliament to accomplish the purpose it has in mind.

I say to this house that if any hon. member is voting against this bill because he thinks that this parliament has no power to delegate its authority to any body which it sets up or which may otherwise be set up, he is voting contrary to the considered judgment of the court of last resort in the empire. But more, he is voting against something which was done by the government led by the right hon. gentleman opposite during every year of the nine years he held office.

One word more. It has been alleged that this legislation should fail—I really confess that I find it difficult to understand this—first, because it is socialistic; second, because it savours of sovietism, and third, because it savours of fascism. Those are the three grounds put forward why it should be rejected. I have dealt with the question of socialism and the socialistic tendencies of this legislation. As I read the history of the human race for the last twenty-five years, or even for the last fifteen years, I see more and more the tendency that the combined effort of all should assist the effort of one. This is so, whether or not we like it. I am no prophet, but I stand here to-night and say this, that you cannot read the history of our times without realizing that more and more man is coming to a recognition of his obligations to his fellows, by banding himself together with his fellows for the purpose of promoting the welfare of each and all. That is the tendency of the times. You may stand out against it, as the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) did; you may object that it goes contrary to the doctrines of past centuries, as the hon. member for Ontario did; but we are dealing with conditions and not with theories, with actualities and with nothing else. We are dealing with conditions that have been forced upon the world in the hard school of experience, with conditions that have arisen in the light of the experience through which mankind has passed; and in the light of those conditions, and with that experience, there is not an hon. member of this house who reads, who observes, who takes the trouble to analyze, who does not realize that tendency, and a right tendency too. In these conditions that exist to-day, where you have such marked distinctions, such marked differences in fortunes, as old as the time of Aristotle, where you have changed conditions, the tendency is that the combined effort, by parliament or the legislature, as the case may be, by the majority, which means combination, shall be exercised for the welfare and good of each and all. That is the theory on which the world is now moving and is being governed.

I come next to the question of sovietism. Why, for the last twenty-five years in every province of this dominion there have been set up local boards, whether municipal councils or school districts, or a small combination of a few people for the purpose of taking goods to market by common understanding or on the authority of a statute. In the old province of Quebec it has been so—you have little local banks, savings institutions, the power to lend money one to another; and you had that long before the war.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Not compulsory.

Mr. BENNETT: Who has said this is compulsory? I am talking about something that is not compulsory; I am talking about free organization within the province of such units as I have indicated. I shall deal with the question of compulsion in a moment. Thus we have a clear understanding that there is nothing new in that respect, and to denounce as sovietism, because it sounds well, that which has been in existence for a third of a century at least in the older of the provinces, is to do violence to one's own understanding and intelligence.

Then we come to the third ground. Section 9 of the act confers upon the government power to erect and create boards within districts and areas to be indicated. Now, this act is intended to be of use; it is not ornamental like the inland freight bill. It is intended to be of some use to the country; it is intended to serve a purpose, and I am going to put this to the house to-night: There is a rule of our jurisprudence, one of the most important that we have—So use your own as not to injure your neighbour's. That is the rule; and if you bring upon your property anything that causes injury to your neighbour, though it be surrounded by all the skill and care that engineering judgment would suggest, nevertheless if injury accrues by reason of your having brought any such thing on your property you are liable for damages.

Now transfer that broad principle to our economic life. Shall farmers who are looking to governments for light and leading, for assistance in the marketing of their products, be told that in a surfeited market, under the conditions to which I have alluded, by reason of the war—are they to be told that any man can ship any product he likes into a market already surfeited and so destroy the price of all products? Is that just? Is that right? Every member of this house who votes against the bill wants to declare that that is right, that it is right for one man, the minority as the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Bouchard) says, notwithstanding that there may be ninety-nine out of one hundred who think otherwise, by shipping his product to such a market, to destroy the price and the market and leave his neighbour ruthlessly ruined, without caring for the consequences.

Well, that is not the law of the country, and this statute is passed for the purpose of seeing that it shall not be the law with respect to associations. That is the purpose of the measure. When one heard the argument adduced yesterday, that the effect of this bill would be to enable the government, ruthlessly and autocratically, to do as it pleased with respect to these matters, one had only to put this to oneself. The central board, acting in association with the other boards, the local boards, for the purpose of securing to them the maximum return for their products, may be confronted with a situation in which a small, or even a larger area may take no action, doing nothing for the common good; and parliament has said that under those circumstances its will shall prevail. That is all. And why should it not? What about your county councils, your legislatures and parliaments? The will of the majority prevails; but it is suggested here that the government will ruthlessly and arrogantly do something that will be at variance with the good of the whole community. Governments sometimes commit suicide, so the opposition say. But be that as it may, is it likely that they will consciously do so? When we are dealing with legislation of this character, as the privy council has so often said, we must adopt one cardinal rule, and that is, that it must be assumed that the legislators were acting for the common good in passing legislation, and not for destruction, not ruthlessly to destroy and ruin but to promote and upbuild and further the welfare of all. And that power in this bill is intended to prevent that reluctant minority, to whom the hon. member for Kamouraska refers, from destroying the efficiency and effectiveness of this measure.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Is the Prime Minister aware that in the country where agriculture has been most intensively developed no such measure has been passed—Denmark?

Mr. BENNETT: I have not suggested that there was. What I am suggesting is this. Apparently the opposition have one object in mind. It makes no difference what legislation is introduced by this government, they oppose it, no matter what it is. There are exceptions to that rule. I wonder how many hon. gentlemen realized, as I did the mental agony of the ex-Minister of Agriculture—and I say that in no scoffing sense, for I have been through it. I voted in 1913 against my party, I spoke against it, in connection with the acquisition of railways; and I know how one feels if he has been a minister, and has worried and thought and then concluded, that he must serve his country and not his party.

Will any hon. gentleman in this house show that the attitude of the opposition has not been one of consistent and persistent opposition since this depression began? What measures have we offered to this house which they have not, by every means in their power, endeavoured to frustrate and destroy? And here is one of the reasons why, I suggest, this legislation is being so fought—and I use the word advisedly. What is there in this bill that justifies the long debates that have taken place over it? What is there in the bill to justify hearing the same speech three times? What is there in it to justify listening to talk about the trade and commerce of the country before the depression and afterwards, and a comparison of the two? What have been the relevancy of the observations and the character of the opposition? Why has there been such opposition? Why? Because in this bill there is a provision that, if it were not there, might render the bill futile and useless; because we have inserted in it a provision that makes it no longer possible for the vociferous and vocal minority to destroy the efficiency and effectiveness of the legislation, we are met with cries that this is in derogation of the rights of parliament, a frustration of the power of the will of the people through their chosen representatives. We are told further that this is an effort at fascism on the one hand and sovietism on the other.

One word more. The right hon. gentleman yesterday denounced this bill and clause 12 has been denounced in this chamber as having behind it a hidden purpose. He says that there is behind it a vast scheme of economic imperialism. I ask any thoughtful member of the house whether he thinks that is a worthy criticism with respect to legislation of this character. All hon. members know that in all parts of the country the word "imperialism" by reason of the thought in the minds of many connotes military power and despotism as in the days of Rome, Babylon and Assyria. That word will promote prejudices, create animosities and antipathies in certain sections of the country. When every other argument fails and is forgotten my right hon. friend cries aloud: This is imperialism! Only a few short months ago in the city of Quebec the right hon. gentleman made this observation; listen to these words:

> This is an issue of vast import and significance and the resurrection of an old issue, most of us thought dead and buried long ago. Whether the British commonwealth of nations shall be permitted to remain what it has become, and what it is now—a community of free nations owing allegiance to a common sovereign—and to continue to expand on these lines, or whether it is to lose its identity and the individuality of its component self-governing parts and be made to model the Babylonian, Assyrian, Macedonian, Turkish, Roman and the German empires.

There you have the leader of the opposition at his best and his worst. There is the demagogue on the one hand appealing to the prejudices and passions of those whose antipathy to military empires is well known, and on the other seeking the opportunity to get a few votes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to know from the Prime Minister whether the word "demagogue" is a correct word to use. I leave it to himself.

Mr. BENNETT: If the right hon. gentleman thinks the word "demagogue" may be too strong a term, I will say "agitator," because I think that is more parliamentary.

An hon. MEMBER: No, it is worse.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is a proper parliamentary term; you might agitate for the right, for the good, and you might agitate for evil.

But at any rate let me go a step further. This legislation is legislation for Canada; it is made for Canadians; it is intended for Canadians. I have no apology to offer for the agreements of 1932. When I heard the hon. member for Ontario, who after all is a student, make the observation that the League of Nations had declared that Great Britain and Canada were leading the van toward prosperity, I realized what every man in this country knows, that but for the Ottawa agreements this country barely could survive. Go and look at your exports; go and look at the prices of bacon, of pork—

Mr. SANDERSON: Butter.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, butter. Look at the prices of the various products we have to sell. Why is it the hon. member for Ontario paid us the compliment of saying that the reason this country had maintained the position it has was that it had sound economic laws? So we have and so we propose to have. The soundest economic law that can be found is the one that uses the power and force of parliament to provide that all the resources of the state shall assist those who require aid in the development of the resources of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is the mechanical majority at work.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is even without a mechanical majority, and still he manages to make more noise than if he had one.

But let me proceed further for a moment. Imperialism! Mr. Bruce did not in either address he made in this country use the word "imperialism" so far as I can recall or find out in the short time at my disposal.

Mr. BOUCHARD: He was too wise to do so.

Mr. BENNETT: Just so, but my hon. friend's leader is not. That is the point exactly. Have I been talking imperialism with respect to these agreements? I have said in every country, I have said in Great Britain itself, that whatever we did with respect to Britain and other portions of the empire, our first duty was to Canada. I said that everywhere; I said it in London; I say it in Canada and I say that when the members of the family desire to get together and promote their common fortunes, it ill becomes any man to scoff, by talking about imperialism, at the successful results of their efforts.

Let me go a step further; it does not stop just there. During the last election I was charged with having been too pro-Canadian. If the newspaper reports are correct as to what the right hon. gentleman said at Barrie, he said that he was for Great Britain, and wherever the word "British" appeared either in the original of his public address or in the press of the province in which it was made, you always found that note, but you find it no more. He thinks that because this country has made trade agreements with Australia, New Zealand, Great Britain, the Irish Free State, India and South Africa, because of the agreements we have made within our own empire, we are thus to be branded with "imperialism". Mr. Bruce pointed out—and no one has denied this,—and the right hon. gentleman said that with what Mr. Bruce said he was in accord—that there is left but one country in which in the main the products of the rest of the empire might find a market. That is what he said, and it is because we have that market and a preference in it; it is because the dream of Sir Wilfrid Laurier as approved by his own people and himself in the conference of 1897 and because the dream of Sir Lomer Gouin, Mr. Graham and the right hon. gentleman himself in 1923 failed of realization and is now come true, they must oppose that which they formerly advocated.

I said in this chamber, standing in the place where my right hon. friend now is, that the greatest service Canada could make to the British Empire was to develop that part of the empire called Canada. I said that a woollen mill in Canada was as valuable an asset to the British Empire as a woollen mill in Yorkshire. I said that in my speech delivered on the budget in 1930, the year of the election. I said it when other nations were closing their doors to us, and let it be remembered that in the nine years that elapsed during which the right hon. gentleman and his followers were in power every one of those markets, one after another, was closed to us. Then they said: What about your trade treaties? We made a trade treaty with Great Britain. When we came into power a trade treaty with New Zealand was terminated, and we made a new one. We made treaties with Australia, South Africa, the Irish Free State and Germany. During the nine years hon. gentlemen opposite were in power efforts to make a treaty with Germany on somewhat similar terms failed; we succeeded. A treaty was made with Austria. We are now about to negotiate a treaty with Poland. During all these months since 1930 we have been carrying on continuously, within the ambit of our powers and under the conditions that existed, negotiations with the great republic to the south. We completed a new treaty, through the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan), with the republic of France, and all this in spite of the fact that we had to face a condition we did not create but which was inherited, with the markets of these countries closed against us through the actions taken while hon. gentlemen opposite were in office.

Will any hon. gentlemen rise in their places and say that is not so? Can they stand in their places over there and say that from the time they came into office in the fall of 1921 or the spring of 1922 until 1930, when they went out of office, during all that time the nations of the world did not consistently raise their tariffs against Canada? Although we turned the other cheek twice, as Senator Dandurand said at the League of Nations in Geneva; although the leader of our government coaxed us not to say anything that might provoke our great neighbour to the south, we were shut out of those markets by the highest tariffs we have ever had to face in that country, and all the nations of the world refused to accept our commerce. Then we turned, as the great chief of the Liberal party saw we would, to that greatest of all consuming markets to which all producing people look, and we secured there a preference that is now condemned and denounced in this house as imperialism. Go and tell the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley), who voted for those preferences, that what he has been voting for is crude material and economic imperialism.

Go and tell those who have reaped benefits to the extent of $11,000,000 or $12,000,000, as against their position if duties had to be paid, that this is not to their benefit or for their welfare. Why this should be brought into this debate is hard to understand; there can be but one excuse and one reason, an effort to draw a red herring across the trail, to consolidate a broken party, to keep together men of differing views, some thinking one way and some the other; to get them all together to vote against the bill, to hold them at any cost so that the world may not know the dissensions that have characterized their deliberations with regard to this matter.

Let them vote to-night. In a few minutes we will give them the opportunity to vote, and after they have done so let them remember that they have voted against, according to the agrarians and producers of primary products, that measure of assistance that is not denied to the other leg of the great movement that will make for the prosperity of the world. Secretary Wallace said the other day that Labour was the one leg and agriculture the other; as they march forward sometimes one and then the other is in advance, but if they march together there comes prosperity. So now are we to deny the one and accede to the other; grant to the one and deny the other? Hon. gentlemen opposite do not desire that there should be placed upon the statute books of this country a measure giving the primary producer an opportunity to receive that measure of assistance, that measure of parliamentary aid, that should come to him as the producer of the natural wealth of the country, that this country may recover and ultimately prosper as it did in days gone by.

Sir, I have trespassed somewhat longer upon the time of the house than I had intended. There are other matters that might be dealt with, but I trust that I have said sufficient to indicate the shallowness of the arguments that have been made against this measure. I have quoted the authorities of the courts of last resort to show that arguments of that kind are not valid, and I commend this bill to this house. I do so because the bill affords a practical illustration of the efforts that have been made by a party not bound by the shibboleths of the past, but accepting only the history of the past for the purpose of guiding them aright in the pathways they hew out for the future. I commend the bill also because we believe that the true measure of faith of the Conservative party is shown by our ability and willingness to accept, in the light of experience and knowledge, those principles which we know are sound and which involve, as they do, the lopping off of much that has gone before in order that the world may progress and civilization prevail.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the house for the very kindly ovation they have rendered me. We have travelled from the days of Samuel Plimsoll down through the legislation with regard to child labour and Lord Shaftesbury's brilliant contribution to the charitable works of the last century. We have heard a good deal about Hodge and the Queen and the decisions of the privy council. We have heard some references to the New Despotism, which the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) says he never quotes from but only refers to; we have heard a discussion with regard to every point in connection with this bill except the point which has been dealt with all through this debate, namely the compulsory feature, to which my right hon. friend has omitted to refer. He promised us all the way through that he was coming to that, but he has not arrived there yet.

Now let me say to my right hon. friend, who has spoken of the doctrine of laissez-faire, upon which he laid considerable emphasis, that I have a quotation from my right hon. friend which indicates the sort of dynamic policy which he believes in. This is my right hon. friend speaking in this house in 1927; this is the right hon. gentleman who chides the party on this side of the house for its policy of laissez-faire. I quote from page 409:

> We must decide whether from choice we will permit our resources to be diverted into foreign channels or whether, with courage and fortitude, we will continue to plough our furrow and go our appointed way, building slowly but surely, knowing—aye, knowing—that the day is not far distant when the very people whose high tariffs and offensive legislation have kept us out of their markets will have to come to us for the raw materials on which to subsist. That is one great vision before the Canadian people.

Wait until these people come to us. This is the gentleman who now complains that when he came into power in this country the markets were all shut. He is the one who had a policy which was going to solve the difficulties,—by sitting down and waiting. Well, he did adopt a policy; he adopted the policy of high protection. He says, I suppose, that that is not laissez-faire. The policy of high protection resulted as he was told it would result, namely in the reduction of the exports of this country from $1,185,000,000 in 1930 to $554,000,000 in 1934. That is the way my right hon. friend has built up the country.

Now we come to the crowning piece of dynamic legislation, the so-called marketing bill, as he so aptly phrased it—the "so-called" marketing bill—section 12 of which provides that the doctrine of laissez-faire shall still exist, and that what we will do now in order to forward the trade of this country is to "regulate or restrict the exportation from Canada of any natural products." That is the policy which my right hon. friend is advocating, when he comes to deal with trade —and he is the right hon. gentleman who complains of laissez-faire.

He has said the Liberal party have opposed the legislation which he has brought down. Will he tell us one piece of constructive legislation which he has brought down in the past four years until now when he tries to make up for lost time by concentrating all this so-called social legislation at the end of the fourth session of parliament, when he brings in a bill to make bankruptcy easy, when he brings in a bill in regard to farm loans, when he suddenly forms a price spreads committee in the dying days of a parliament, and when he brings down this marketing bill? All my right hon. friend has been doing up to this time has been to ask this parliament to vote money and to give him power, still more power, money and still more money. But I think the people of this country will search in vain in our statute books to find any piece of constructive legislation which has been opposed by this opposition. Why? Because there is not any; because my right hon. friend has not originated any; because he has been marking time in the same old policy of laissez-faire, and with the same old party shibboleths of high protection. That is the thing which was going to bring Canada out of the slough of despond in which he has put it.

I say to my right hon. friend that in his discussion of the marketing bill to-night he has gone far afield. I do not purpose following him along all the devious paths into which he has wandered. There are one or two points however, to which I should like to refer. He has cited one or two privy council cases in connection with constitutional points. May I say to him right now that we are not concerned with the question as to what the privy council has decided with regard to the legality of legislation. The question in which the opposition and the people of this country are interested is the policy of the legislation, and as to whether it is proper for this parliament to hand over to an unnamed board the right to regulate the whole trade of this dominion in natural products. I say to him that he cannot quote any case from the number of cases he has cited which approaches the vastness and enormity of the amount of power given here.

What has he quoted? He has quoted the well known cases which have existed ever since confederation, the cases in which parliament from time to time delegates to the governor in council or some board the power to make regulations with regard to some particular feature—to fix a freight rate, for example, as he said himself, or to fix a rate of customs duty, or to make regulations which could not ordinarily come within the ambit of parliament. But in every case you will find, Mr. Speaker, that there has been laid down clearly and consistently the limitation within which that power is to be exercised, the conditions under which the control is to be administered, and the objects which are to be attained in connection with whatever regulations are made.

I am not going to go over every one of these acts to which my right hon. friend has referred. But every one of them is a power vested in the governor in council to make regulations with regard to matters clearly and definitely defined, and concerning which the object and intention of parliament is clearly laid down in the statute itself.

My right hon. friend waxed eloquent and got, if I may use the term, rather heated up about the word "imperialism." Has my right hon. friend denied what my right hon. leader said yesterday with regard to the object of this legislation?

Mr. BENNETT: He certainly did.

Mr. RALSTON: The right hon. gentleman skated around it in every way he could. He has been talking about the markets being closed—oh yes, the markets have been closed. I ask him if he has not closed the markets himself. He talks about having only one market. What could work more towards that than to have my right hon. friend pegging the duty on one hundred and thirty-nine articles in the tariff schedule? He has made it impossible to make trade agreements with other countries because he has agreed with Great Britain that the duties should remain fixed for five years. I say to my right hon. friend all he has to do to find out whether or not the market was closed when he came into power is to study the returns of exports and imports to countries other than Great Britain, and compare them with to-day's returns. If he would do that he would find out who has closed the market.

But has he dealt with the feature that I felt and I believe all of us felt was the most important in connection with this legislation? He has dealt with the constitutional aspect of the matter. He has laid down a new principle. I saw some of his supporters gasp when he suggested that in this country a man is violating the law of Canada when he sells his goods lower than his neighbour does. That is not to be done after this. My right hon. friend says that that is the law of Canada, and that all we are doing is to put it into this legislation. Well, some of my friends who are dealing in coal, lumber, steel, or gasoline may approach my right hon. friend after this session and say to him, "Say, look here, is this true, or were you just spoofing?" I say to my right hon. friend he knows perfectly well that he went a bit too far when he laid down the principle involved in the old case of Rylands and Fletcher, which instances the bringing of a wild beast on your own property and being responsible for keeping it there and liable for any damage which it does if it escapes. I ask the right hon. gentleman if that case could possibly have anything to do with the question whether or not a farmer has the right to sell his potatoes for twenty or thirty cents a bushel, despite the fact that his neighbour may wish to get forty or fifty cents. That is a new doctrine which is laid down by the right hon. gentleman; certainly it is a new doctrine in this country. It is a new doctrine laid down by a man who is a good constitutional and commercial lawyer. But I submit he goes a bit too far when he lays that down as the law of this country. Now he says, "After all, we must see to it that one man is not going to damage the other in connection with the sale of his goods, and we are bringing in a marketing bill for that purpose."

The right hon. gentleman does not quite correctly reflect the views which have been expressed from this side of the house when he says that there is opposition to this bill per se. The opposition to the bill was laid down in the amendment moved yesterday afternoon by my right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). The opposition to the bill is against giving arbitrary power to an unnamed board to make laws without reference to parliament. Further than that, there is given to the same board, or to the governor in council, the power to regulate the whole export and import trade of the Dominion of Canada. That is something with which he did not deal; and we say also that there is no protection for consumers. The right hon. gentleman has gone all over the case of Hodge and the Queen, and the Apollo Candle case from Australia has been the subject of a great part of his speech. He talked a lot about imperialism, endeavouring to deny, and denying rather faintly, that he had the object in mind with which my right hon. leader charged him. But he said nothing whatever with regard to the fundamental objections to this bill which are dealt with in the amendment. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister strangely enough did not even speak on the amendment. He never said a word on it by way of answering the objections which had been raised by my right hon. leader. No; he reserved his speech for the third reading because he felt that if he spoke on the amendment he would have to meet those very points. It was a good deal easier to talk about Hodge and the Queen, about the Apollo Candle case, about the Grain Act and the Elevator Act, and the Inland Water Freight Rates Act, and things of that sort than to deal with the essentials. Oh yes, and he paid a wonderful tribute to Samuel Plimsoll, of the dear old loadline, to the memory of that fine old Englishman and what he did. One would have thought we had not had in this country either under Conservative or Liberal administration any of the social legislation which has been put on the statute books of this country, and which has been there for twenty or thirty or forty years—the Workmen's Compensation Act, the Combines Act, the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, the Old Age Pensions Act. These are all on the statute books at the present time and have been for years—all liberal measures too. But my right hon. friend has forgotten all about these things. He thinks that we are still in those black days before the time of Shaftesbury.

I say to my right hon. friend, let us get down to what this bill is really about. Let us get down to the essentials with which my right hon. friend has not dealt. My right hon. friend says that individualism is gone in this country and that an individual cannot exercise his individual liberty, but that for the first time a group of men who are in business have a right to exercise their majority control just as majority control is exercised under the British North America Act and under the acts of the parliament of Canada whereby a majority of voters may send members to parliament. There is no comparison between the two, and my right hon. friend knows it. He knows that the right of majority representation in the House of Commons, as in the parliaments of other countries, has been sacred with us for many years, and he knows also that side by side with that the individual has the right of an individual to carry on his occupation lawfully and properly and to enjoy the fruits of that occupation—that that right is just as sacred as the right of the franchise.

What we are endeavouring to do—let us get down to fundamentals—is to reconcile the two major factors in human activities. One, individualism; not selfish greed, but the right of a man to have the joy of achieving and the exhilaration of accomplishment in connection with his daily occupation. That right carries with it not only the joy of achievement but the right to earn something for his work, to get remuneration for his labour. Generally I think it is true that three-fourths of the people of this world do not ask for profits for their own individual selves, but rather that they may support their families and look after those for whom they have responsibility in life, and make some provision for their old age so that they will be independent of charity and the poor house. That is individualism. Is there anything wrong about it? We have heard to-night for the first time that a man has no right to dispose of his goods or services or to do anything which may cut under the price which his neighbour wants to get for his goods or services. That is on the one side.

What is on the other? The other factor is cooperation, namely, that a man living in society has to have in mind another consideration. He must be fair to the other fellow. We are in society with that in mind, whether we admit it or not. It has been very properly said that the laws that are passed from time to time are restraints on human liberty, but up to the time my right hon. friend spoke a man had a right to do what he liked with his property, to do what he liked so long as he did not injure his neighbour; but my right hon. friend has laid down a new doctrine to-night.

Cooperation, then, is the other thing. As to what my right hon. friend is aiming at in this bill and what we on this side express in the amendment moved by my right hon. leader, we are perfectly willing to follow him in the matter of cooperation and in endeavouring to help individuals get together and express their collective will, subject to the provisos that I shall mention in a moment.

But what do we find in this bill? Where is individualism in this bill? Section 5 lays down that a group of men get together and form a scheme, as they call it, for the purpose of marketing their product. So far so good The individual is represented. He has to consent to that scheme. They get together, they lay down the scheme. What should come next in the ordinary course of things if the principle which the Prime Minister lays down is correct? They should publish that scheme and there should be a hearing on it, in order that they may see to it that their neighbours who are not in the scheme are not going to be injured by it. Is that done in this bill? It is not. But that would be cooperation. Is that done in Britain, whose legislation we are supposed to be following in this measure. It is provided in the British act that when the producers get together and lay down their scheme and submit it to the minister, he goes over it and advertises a public hearing so that those who may be affected by it, not only those in the particular industry concerned but those outside, may be heard in connection with it.

What else? In addition to that there is a consumer as well as a producer, and in the British act provision is made for the appointment of a committee representing the consumer. Is there any provision in this bill for that? None at all. My right hon. friend at one time was particularly strong on this question of the consumer. He pointed out that the consumer should be looked after, and that any legislation which was for the benefit of the producer and against the consumer was not right. This is what he said, speaking at Moncton on July 11, 1930, in that celebrated election campaign when my right hon. friend said a good many things that I think he now wishes he had not said:

> For it should never be forgotten that the solution of the particular problems of one community which does not directly or indirectly benefit all other communities, is not a solution worth having. The prosperity of one section of Canada at the expense of another cannot be enduring. The betterment of one class with loss to any other, cannot be permitted. So, when a government, to meet the insistent demands of any section, or class or business, enacts legislation which is harmful to any other, that is bad government.

And listen to this:

> If, to help the industrialist, the agriculturist is injured, that is bad government. If to benefit the producer the consumer is made to suffer, that is bad government. For the consumer must not suffer and cannot suffer without injury to the producer.

Does my hon. friend adopt that policy in this bill?

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. RALSTON: Has he proposed anywhere in this bill that the consumer is to be protected? Is the consumer mentioned from beginning to end of this bill? Are any of the safeguards which are contained in the British act for the appointment of a consumers' committee as a sort of king's proctor to represent the consumers found in this bill? They are absolutely wanting in this piece of legislation. That is section 5.

The scheme goes to the minister. The minister decides whether those who present the scheme are sufficiently representative of the industry. If he decides that they are sufficiently representative of the industry then the scheme is approved and a poll is taken as provided in the act, and that is the end of it. The scheme is in force. As my right hon. leader pointed out yesterday, the law is made there and then. It is not merely a matter of regulation. The law is passed which decides whether John Smith shall export his fish, it may be, under a quota, allowing so many thousand pounds to be exported from some particular locality or to some particular market at a certain time, or whether some other man may export and sell his potatoes in another province under certain regulations which will permit perhaps only one-tenth or one-fifth or one-twentieth of his whole supply to be sold. Or perhaps provision is made whereby the local board can say to any producer in that particular area: You hold your fish, you hold your potatoes or you hold the natural product in which you are dealing, we are going to allow somebody else to sell his product while your products shall wait. That becomes the law and not just a regulation. For the first time in the history of this country we are interfering directly and definitely with the rights of the producers of these goods. Has my right hon. friend realized that in this bill he is making a law which is directly contrary to the provisions of the combines act? Is there any provision in this bill which repeals the combines act? That act says that any man who makes an agreement or enters into an arrangement—

Mr. HACKETT: Which is harmful.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend can keep on if he wants to,—which is detrimental to the consumer or to the producer or to anyone else, is guilty of an offence under the act. This scheme may be detrimental to the consumers, but is there any provision to take care of that? It is directly contrary to the combines act. Section 498 of the criminal code makes it a crime to combine in connection with the production, the marketing or the handling of goods in order to enhance the price or unduly to restrict production or marketing. I am not quoting the exact words; I have them here but I shall not take the time to read them. This bill is in a directly opposite direction, and my right hon. friend makes no provision whatever to take care of the anomalous situation.

Let that pass: we have a scheme approved and we have a law in force. The minister has approved the scheme and we are away. As the hon. members for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) pointed out this afternoon, there may be a certain proportion of the producers who would not consent to the scheme but nevertheless they are bound by it. I say exactly what he said about that. Without the safeguards which are contained in the British act, there may be a time when a small majority shall be forced to do certain things. We should have those safeguards and not simply have a scheme presented by a group of producers, carried to the minister without any hearing of any kind, and made the law of the land.

Mr. NEILL: My principal objection was that it might be possible to have a scheme proposed and accepted by only those concerned in marketing and not the producers.

Mr. RALSTON: As has been pointed out, the British act goes further and provides that before a marketing scheme can be effective it must be laid before parliament and approved by parliament. There is nothing of that kind here. My right hon. friend skated over it and cited Hodge vs. the Queen. He said: Any way we have the power to do it. We are not talking about the power to do it; we are talking about the policy and whether it is right to do it. My right hon. friend cannot seem to get that into his mind, or, if he does, he omits to notice it in any way. In England parliament passes on the scheme; after a resolution has been passed not only by the House of Commons but by the House of Lords, the scheme becomes law.

Let me pause here to emphasize the fact that that act was passed in England in 1931; it was not a deathbed act, like this one, passed in 1934. That act was amended in 1933, when it was practically reenacted, but not a section with regard to the safeguards to which I have referred was changed. They have been kept in the British act and they are all there to-day. With that example before him, my right hon. friend still says that this bill should be put into effect. In England you have the majority rule my right hon. friend speaks about, but here you have no hearing, no publicity, no approval by parliament and no protection of the consumer as you have in England.

There is another thing which I do not think has been quite realized and it certainly has not been dealt with by my right hon. friend. I refer to what I call the compulsory features of this act. My right hon. friend skated over the powers of the dominion board. He stated that those powers were given only for the purpose of being used on occasions of emergency or in connection with international matters. I want my right hon. friend to look at the bill and see the powers conferred on the dominion board under section 4. Under that section the dominion board requires no approval of any kind for a scheme. All that is required is that a product must have become a regulated product, that is, that there has been a scheme approved by the producers or that the minister has approved a scheme. Then the dominion board has jurisdiction. The dominion board may grant to the local board the power to regulate the marketing of a certain product, but at the same time the dominion board may exercise the power to prohibit entirely the marketing of that very product. A producer goes into a scheme because under section 5 (c) he is able to designate the powers which should be given to his local board; so that the producer consenting to the scheme knows just exactly what powers the local board will have. Under subsections (g) and (h) the scheme states the number of persons who shall comprise the local board and the basis of their selection, the name and number of the local board, the place and address of the head office, the chief executive officers, the quorum required to approve any order or resolution, and how vacancies are to be filled. In other words, the producers are entitled to select their own board and to say what powers that board shall have. A scheme having those particulars once being approved, a regulated product comes into being. Then what happens? As I said a minute ago, the dominion board may exercise any powers it likes of those mentioned in section 4 without any reference whatever to the producer. A man may go into a scheme thinking that John Smith, Bill Jones and Harry Thomas, who are his neighbours, are to be on the local board and are to have the power to regulate the marketing of his product. He may then wake up and find that the dominion board has stepped in and Nickerson, McLelland and McDonald up in Ottawa are suddenly handling his product and exercising powers which he never thought would be exercised in connection with his product. Subsection 2 of section 4 provides that the dominion board may withdraw from the local board every power which has been given to it. A regulated product having once been brought into being, the dominion board may step in and say: We think it is best in the interests of this industry that we should take charge. The man who goes into a little scheme with his local board with its limited powers, suddenly finds those powers withdrawn and the dominion board in control.

This is why my right hon. friend did not say anything about compulsion. This is why he dealt at such length with Samuel Plimsoll —it was safer. My right hon. friend talks about the international powers of this dominion board, but this board has the power to exercise all the powers set out in section 4, either by way of substitution or concurrently with the local board itself. So I say to my right hon. friend that there is a power of compulsion in this measure, a fact around which he discreetly skated. I say to my hon. friends who spoke so eloquently this afternoon with regard to the power of compulsion and the rights of the minority that not only the minority but the majority may be put under compulsion by reason of the fact that the dominion board may substitute for the local board and exercise powers which they never dreamed would be exercised.

Mr. VENIOT: That is the minority controlling the majority.

Mr. RALSTON: As the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) says, that is the minority controlling the majority. I do not care who says it is sovietism, I do not care who says it is socialism, I say it is naked fascism. The governor in council gives those tremendous powers to their own appointees without any reference of any kind or description to the producers in that particular industry.

Only one word more with regard to section 12, which has been dealt with very eloquently and effectively by the hon. members for Labelle and Comox-Alberni. I do not think there is anything I can add except to say that anyone who violates the powers given with respect to tariff matters and the other matters in this bill, is liable under section 14 which reads:

> Every person who fails to comply with any order of the board or of a local board or any regulation of the governor in council—

This may be a regulation restrictng the export of a natural product.

> —shall be guilty of an offence and punishable on summary conviction with a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars and not more than five hundred dollars, or to imprisonment not exceeding three months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

That is the gentle little act that has no compulsion in it, one of the voluntary measures that we ought to pass because we are all boys together. That is the kind of act that is being put on the statute book for the purpose of assisting producers.

What I believe this parliament should do, within the ambit of its legislative jurisdiction, is to encourage cooperative marketing by following the logical course, namely, employing men who know something about cooperation and sending them among the producers, having them meet the producers for the purpose of assisting them in connection with organizing associations. In his speech my hon. friend spent a good deal of time on British Columbia Cooperatives and the wheat pools, but all of these were voluntary. Then, if the producers need discipline within their ranks, let them come to this parliament or to the local legislature and obtain such power, provided it is safeguarded by the provisions contained in the British act. By so doing we should begin at the beginning, working from the bottom up rather than from the top down. But this act is conceived wrongly when it begins with the minister, the governor in council and the dominion board itself.

So that there may be no doubt about it, what we on this side say is this. We are for cooperation, but we say that sections 4 and 9 should be cut out, and section 12 as well. Section 12 I regard as an intrusion; it does not belong to the act because it has nothing to do with marketing. The price spreads provision should be placed where it belongs, in connection with any legislation brought in as a result of the report of the price spreads committee. But let us have a marketing act and not an act which combines the creation of new crimes, the provision for tariff regulation and arbitrary compulsion with what is essentially marketing. On this side we believe in proper and genuine marketing legislation to enable the producers to help themselves, giving them the power of discipline, provided first that the plan emanates from the producers and is always under their control; provided that the board and its powers cannot be changed at the will of an autocratic dominion board; provided that full provision is made for a hearing, so that those affected, both in the industry and outside, can be heard; provided there is approval of the scheme by parliament; and provided further that the consumer receives consideration. Even then you would be going to some extent in the direction of compelling the minority, whatever that minority might be—and I do not think it should be too large. But this bill authorizes a board which is irresponsible either to parliament or to the producers to paralyze, to misdirect and to divert the whole trade of the dominion in natural products, regardless of the opinions of the responsible representatives of the people of this country, and regardless of the policies of those who are engaged in industry and who know best how to carry it on. Some gentleman from Ottawa, knowing nothing about an industry, may go to fishermen or potato growers or those producing apples and tell a man who has had the experience of a lifetime when he is going to ship, what quantity he is to ship, and so on, withholding his goods and allowing someone else's to be shipped, or refusing him a licence altogether.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that these three features, the autocratic and compulsory feature of the marketing act itself, the tariff feature which does not belong to the bill, and the price spread feature without proper definitions, are all inimical to the welfare not only of the producers but of the people of Canada generally. And when I look at the act and realize that the Prime Minister has completely failed to justify these vital and all important features, which have been pointed out over and over again in this debate, I am reminded that whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. I say to my right hon. friend in all seriousness that if he passes this act and attempts to enforce it in the dominion he will find that his destruction will be certain and sure.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

CONDITIONS GOVERNING TEN YEAR EXTENSION OF BANK CHARTERS

The house resumed, from Friday, June 1, consideration in committee of Bill No. 18, respecting banks and banking.—Mr. Rhodes —Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Mr. RHODES: The first clause which stands is clause 5.

On section 5—Bank charters continued to July 1, 1944, as to some particulars.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): On this clause I want to move an amendment which I moved in the committee on banking and commerce. I move in section 5 in lines four and fourteen where the words "forty-four" occur, to delete the same and substitute therefor the words "thirty-nine."

Mr. RHODES: The effect of this amendment is of course obvious, namely, to extend the charters of the banks for a period of five rather than ten years, which latter extension has been the practice during the last half century. I do not allege that because this has been the practice during the last half century, therefore necessarily it must be followed for all time, but I suggest that we can gain something by the experience in this respect of past years. The argument which I used when this amendment was submitted in the committee on banking and commerce was that it is too short a period and introduces an unnecessary element of uncertainty not only among the shareholders of the banks but as to the stability and permanent characteristics of our banking institutions themselves. While my hon. friend has not done more than support the position that he took in the committee, I must point out that I do not see that any good object would be accomplished by shortening the period during which the tenure of charters is to be extended, for the reason that while it is true under the provisions of the bill we extend the charters for a period of ten years we do not necessarily thereby debar ourselves from reviewing from time to time banking legislation. The question of the charter and its length is one thing; the question of the character of the legislation is another, and I have in that connection only to point out that after the last decennial revision, although the charters were at that time extended for a period of ten years, at the very next succeeding session of parliament the Bank Act was brought into the house and amended in a very important particular in providing for a system of bank inspection and the appointment of an inspector general of banks. Under those circumstances I feel no good purpose can be served by the amendment; in succeeding sessions revisions may be made, and in the public interest I must submit that this amendment cannot be accepted.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I fully appreciate the argument adduced by the Minister of Finance. It is exactly the same as he presented in the committee on banking and commerce. The main reason I submit this amendment at the present time is that during the present session we are going to pass a new bill, the Bank of Canada Act, which will absolutely change the entire financial system and structure of Canada and will set up a new system of interrelation between chartered member banks and the central bank of Canada. I think it will be a matter of profound importance not only to this parliament and the financial community but to the general community as well to witness how the interrelated functions of these institutions are going to be carried out in the next few years. I quite agree with the Minister of Finance that we can amend the Bank Act from year to year if we desire to do so. In the case he mentioned, however, I think it was done because of the Home bank incident. I quite agree that we could do the same thing next year or the year after, but I do think it should be a function of this parliament, especially since this bill has been passed practically without material or important alteration of any nature whatever, to take every possible precaution to see that we are in a position to review these charters at the end of five years not at the instance of any government that may be in control but as a matter of statutory right, as passed by this parliament.

I may express my own personal disappointment in the fact that this legislation has come before us practically as it was sent to the committee on banking and commerce, though I must commend that committee for its tremendous diligence and the hard and patient work it has done in considering the various sections of the bill. However, I am profoundly disappointed with the legislation now before parliament, and I do think I am interpreting the feelings of the Canadian community when I say that as a matter of statutory right we should have an opportunity to review this legislation again not in ten years but in five years.

Mr. HANBURY: I rise to support the remarks just made by my colleague from Vancouver Centre. The Minister of Finance referred to the reviews that have taken place in years past. We did not have a central bank in Canada in years past, so the precedent to which the minister refers is hardly a good precedent in this connection. I only regret that my colleague from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) did not make his amendment two years, because I believe that after the central bank has been functioning for a year we will find it necessary to do much in the way of amending the Bank Act. So I suggest to the minister in all sincerity that he would do well to accept the amendment of my hon. friend, because I really think it is in the interests of the people of Canada, of the banks themselves and of the better administration of the central bank that the banks should know that within a shorter period than they might expect otherwise they will come before a committee of parliament which will review the manner in which they have adapted themselves to the developments under the central bank act. Therefore I suggest to the minister that he reconsider his decision in connection with this matter and give consideration to the amendment submitted by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre.

Mr. RHODES: I have only one word to add; it is that my argument submitted immediately after the amendment was moved by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre holds equally good with respect to what has been just said as to the Bank of Canada. The length of time for which the charters are extended is one thing, but the character of the sections of the Bank Act and their amendment is another thing. There is nothing to preclude—nay, on the contrary I would say there would be an obligation on parliament to do so—a review of the Bank Act in one, two, three or four years if the experience of the new combination of the Bank of Canada in its relation to the general banking structure and our chartered banks should call for it. In these circumstances I adhere to the view I expressed previously, that we cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. HANBURY: I submit to the minister that there is a distinction between the right of parliament to review this legislation in one, two, three, four or five years as the case may be, and the duty of parliament to bring the chartered banks of Canada before a committee of this house, where their acts and the acts of the central bank may be reviewed in order to bring them to that degree of conformity which will best serve the interests of the people of Canada. One is a question of right while the other should be, I think, at this particular time, a matter of duty, to see that the chartered banks of Canada so conduct themselves during the coming two, three or four years that they will best meet the wishes and desires of the people of Canada. Again I suggest to the minister that he reconsider the acceptance of the amendment submitted to him.

Mr. CASGRAIN: There is another point also. It has been said that the Bank Act was amended after its revision in 1923, following the incident of the Home bank. Possibly if the Bank Act had been revised at an earlier date conditions would have been disclosed that would have made the House of Commons and the committee reviewing the act aware that something was wrong, and the failure of the Home bank might have been avoided. Distressed circumstances and depression have prevailed for the last few years. Perhaps if the revision of the Bank Act had been carried out some years ago, instead of being left until this year, we might have been able to ascertain the condition of the banks, the credits they were extending, the new enterprises they were promoting, and so on. We might have been able to prevent the inflation, the aggrandizement of business and the speculation which brought about the depression we are facing to-day. So I think the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is well advised and brought forward at the proper time. I do not think it would work any harm if we accepted the amendment. Then it would be the duty of parliament to revise the Bank Act and look over the internal management of the banks in order to see how they are operating and whether the activities they are developing and fostering are in the best interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. SPENCER: I wish to support the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) for the reasons that have been put forward and which I am not going to repeat, except to say that while the Minister of Finance admits that we can change this act from year to year, if we do so we change only specific sections of the act. On the other hand if the charters are reconsidered we go through the whole act very thoroughly indeed. There is no comparison between the work we do when we amend a section or two of the act and the work we do when we review the act every ten years. The principal officials of the banks have been before us for some weeks; they have been cross-examined thoroughly and have given us some very valuable information. We would like to see them oftener than once in ten years.

I might remind the minister also, when he says the act can be changed any year we wish to do so, that in 1931 I submitted an amendment to section 91. The argument put forward at that time was that it was no time to change the Bank Act. I submitted the same amendment the following year, and the argument put forward then was that the act would come up for revision in 1933, and therefore there was no need to change it then. We came to 1933, and the Bank Act was amended to extend the charters for one year. Then the revision did come along, and the government saw fit to enact exactly the amendment I suggested three years previously. This amendment to section 91 has been clamoured for by the people of Canada for some years, and I am quite sure that if the whole Bank Act had been before us some years earlier there would have been such strong public opinion behind the members of this house that this amendment would have been made several years ago. As the hon. members who have just spoken have said, the parliament of Canada is setting up the Bank of Canada, and there is not the slightest doubt that some very important amendments probably will be suggested, which may have the effect of materially changing the Bank Act. I do feel, with the other hon. members who have spoken, that due to the changes taking place from year to year, and to the experiences we have had in the past, it would be the course of wisdom to have these charters extend for a five year instead of a ten year period.

Mr. RHODES: May I say a word in reply to the hon. members for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) and Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) in addition to what I have already stated. We have gone a long way in giving charters for a limited period, and we have done it because it is recognized that periodic revisions should occur as necessity arises. But I submit if we shorten the period to less than that length of time which has been found reasonable in this country we are introducing an element of instability into a permanency which we should like to see surrounding our banking institutions. We must bear in mind the fact that it is always open to parliament to cure any defects which may be found, in the light of experience, to creep into existing banking legislation.

Mr. COOTE: I agree with the minister that parliament has authority to change the Bank Act at any time it wishes, but in my experience in parliament during the last fifteen years the fact that the charters expire every ten years is used by governments as a reason for refusing to make changes in the act when sometimes the public feel that changes are necessary. For that reason I agree with the amendment which has been moved. For the last four or five years the credit situation in Canada has not been satisfactory to the general public, and the public did expect some changes to be made in the Bank Act. As we have the act now before us, reported from the committee with practically no fundamental changes—although I must say the committee put in several weeks of very faithful work—I think the case has been well put by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre and the hon. members who followed him. I think there is good reason for making the change. This is one of the important sections in the Bank Act. Perhaps we are the only country in the world which issues limited charters. We are always told that Canada has the best banking system in the world. Perhaps we could make it a little better by renewing charters for only five years; therefore I hope the committee will support the amendment.

Mr. HANBURY: I wish to say one word arising out of the remarks of the minister. He has said it is always open to us at any session of parliament to revise bank charters. May I say that we might have the same privilege at any session of cancelling bank charters. I am not particularly concerned with having revisions of the Bank Act at shorter periods. I am firmly convinced that under ordinary circumstances the ten year period is short enough. But my point at the present time is that I believe the government would have been well advised to defer the revision of the Bank Act until next year, and until the central bank has been in operation for a year. Had the central bank been in operation for a year or longer I would agree with the minister that a ten year period is not too long. But in view of the central bank legislation I suggest to him that we should leave the obligation upon parliament and upon the commercial banks of Canada to see that the Bank Act is reviewed shortly after the establishment and operation of the central bank. I am going to suggest to the minister once more that this particular section should be allowed to stand for the time being in order to give the government an opportunity further to consider whether it would not be in the general interest to have the five year term. I am suggesting that in view of the establishment of the central bank it should be a two year term.

Mr. RHODES: I can assure my hon. friend that the government has given the matter the most careful consideration, and I express the considered view of the government when I take the position I have taken to-night with respect to the proposed amendment.

Mr. HANBURY: I am satisfied with the assurance that after giving this matter full consideration the government has decided that the banks shall continue in operation ten years after the establishment of the central bank, which is now an institution in Canada, regardless of what action may be necessary in that regard.

On section 20—Qualification of directors.

Mr. SPENCER: I have an amendment to move as follows:

That there be inserted after subsection 3 of section 20, the following subsection:
(4) No minister of the crown in the dominion government shall be elected or continue to be a director of a bank.

This matter has come before the House of Commons on several previous occasions. It was discussed in 1921, and the suggestion was supported by nearly half the hon. members sitting here at that time. It was brought up again in 1922, upon which occasion it was supported by a very large number of members. My aim is not a criticism of members generally being directors of banks; my objection is to ministers acting as directors, because of the fact that the ministry has direct connection with the banks which they are supposed to control. I believe a minister is placed in a false position if, when acting as a minister of the crown, he is allowed as well to be a director of a bank.

Amendment (Mr. Spencer) negatived on division.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 21—Election of directors.

Mr. RHODES: I believe this section stood because No. 20 was allowed to stand.

Section agreed to on division.

Sections 28 and 29 agreed to on division.

Sections 32, 53 and 55 agreed to.

On section 57—Quarterly or half-yearly dividends.

Mr. COOTE: I move, Mr. Chairman, that subsection 1 of section 57 be amended by adding thereto the following words:

But such dividend and bonus, if any, shall not exceed the rate of six per cent per annum on the paid up capital and reserve fund.

I should like to say in support of this amendment that the banks are, as has been stated in the committee, quasi-public institutions, and their business should not be primarily that of making money. If they are allowed to declare dividends to the extent of six per cent per annum on the paid up capital and reserve fund, I think that is making ample provision for the shareholders.

Mr. ERNST: What happens to anything over?

Mr. COOTE: Anything that was over would be added to the rest account of the bank.

Mr. HANBURY: Then they could pay dividends on that.

Mr. COOTE: The purpose of this amendment is to discourage the banks from trying to make too large profits for their shareholders. It would be a good thing for the banks themselves because every bank is interested in the market price of its stock. If it is known to the public that they are not to pay more than this rate of dividend the public will not run the stock up to too high a price on the stock market, and there will be less fluctuation in the price of that stock on the market. I think in the interests of the public and of the banks themselves the committee would be well advised to add this amendment to section 57.

Mr. HANBURY: I regret that I cannot support the amendment of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). I assume that his theory is that he is going to assist the borrowers of money, in western Canada particularly, and I suggest to him that if he is going to limit the dividends which the banks are paying, all of the money in the bank, or most of it, will remain in eastern Canada where the banks will have greater security, and so the producers in western Canada whose security is perhaps not as high as the security in eastern Canada will not be able to borrow money from the banks.

The hon. gentleman refers to the market value of bank stocks. I fail to see where the market value of bank stocks has anything to do with the general business of banking. One is a stock exchange proposition, and the other is strictly a banking business. I suggest that in the interests of producers in western Canada who find it necessary from time to time to come to the bank and pay perhaps a higher rate of interest than the hon. member and I would like to see them have to pay, but which is necessary under the circumstances if they are to borrow money at all, we must not restrict the banks but must enable them to make that extra money so that they will serve that portion of the community in western Canada as well as other parts of Canada where the security is perhaps not as great as the banks might receive if they were lending their money at a lower rate of interest, on which they would pay perhaps the lower rate of dividend that my hon. friend suggests. Therefore I cannot support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Macleod.

Mr. COOTE: I do not wish to delay the committee, but in reply to my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) I would say that some people are foolish enough to judge the soundness of a bank by the market price of its shares, and for that reason the management of a bank as a rule is a little anxious about the market value of its shares. There is no question about that. When the market price of its shares is falling I am sure the management of a bank is concerned, because the public, not knowing any better I suppose, very often take that as a sign of weakness in that bank. That is not the fact, but if the public are of that opinion it is highly desirable that the market price of bank shares should not be fluctuating outside of very reasonable limits.

Amendment (Mr. Coote) negatived on division.

Section agreed to.

On section 59—Cash reserves in dominion notes.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to submit to this section in consequence of an amendment which was made to the Bank of Canada bill. It is as follows:

That the first clause of subsection 4 of section 59 of Bill No. 18 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:—

(4) The next three preceding subsections of this section shall be repealed on and from the date on which the Bank of Canada is authorized to commence business and on and after that date the bank shall maintain a reserve which shall, subject to the provisions of the Bank of Canada Act, be not less than five per centum of its deposit liabilities within Canada and which shall consist of a deposit with the Bank of Canada, and of notes of the Bank of Canada held by the bank;

Mr. MATTHEWS: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am entirely opposed to this amendment. In the very dying hours of the committee on banking and commerce, without any previous notification to the members of the committee, an amendment was introduced to the Bank of Canada bill in regard to the five per cent deposit of the chartered banks with the Bank of Canada. The result of that amendment was a tremendous and almost immeasurable concession to the chartered member banks of Canada, and I object to this amendment passing without its having appeared in the votes and proceedings and the committee having been given full and ample opportunity of studying its significance. My own opinion is this. The first conception of the Bank of Canada bill of a five per cent deposit from the chartered banks has been absolutely destroyed by an eleventh hour amendment without any previous notice to the committee, and without the committee having seen that amendment in print. I know the Minister of Finance is absolutely sincere but I do not like to support the passing of a conjoint amendment to this Bank Act dealing with the same deposit without having ample opportunity of seeing the amendment in print and studying its possible implications.

Mr. RHODES: Without wishing to enter into an argument as to the merits of the position taken by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) may I point out that if his argument has merit—I do not intend to attempt to deal with the merit—it arises in connection with the Bank of Canada bill. It is necessary that this section must be in conformity with the provisions of that bill. Shall we put it in this way? If, when the Bank of Canada bill is dealt with, in the judgment of the house it is done so in a manner which is inconsistent with this amendment, we will have this bill amended either here or in the Senate if necessary.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I know the minister will give us ample opportunity, but it is quite possible that this bill might be past its third reading before Bill 19 is brought down for consideration. To my mind the change which was made with regard to the five per cent deposit is the most vital change which could be made in either bill number 18 or bill number 19. The chairman knows that in the committee on banking and commerce I suggested, and I suggest now, that the amendment would change very radically and comprehensively the features of both bills. I am not criticizing the fact that the minister failed to introduce this amendment, because this bill had already left the committee before the amendment was made to bill 19 which makes the present amendment necessary. I quite realize that, but I think I am within my rights in asking that this particular amendment should stand. We can deal very quickly with the other sections of this bill, but to my mind this is a very important and far-reaching amendment. It is a tremendous eleventh hour concession thrown in without any consideration whatsoever by the banking and commerce committee. I do not think the banking and commerce committee had a proper opportunity of studying the implications of this last minute change. I am not criticizing you, Mr. Chairman, the committee or myself. We had two and one-half months of hard labour to get these bills before this house and committee for consideration. Personally, I should like to give more study to the implications and consequences of the changed structures of both bills due to the eleventh hour amendment which takes away the five per cent deposit which the chartered banks of Canada were compelled or supposed to leave with the Bank of Canada when the legislation was submitted to this house and to the committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. RALSTON: Subsection 4 also deals with the reserves against external liabilities and as I understand the amendment which the minister has just read, it leaves out that provision. It is a provision which should be in this bill, because it is possible that these reserves will not be with the Bank of Canada. The latter part of this subsection reads as follows:

—and the bank shall also maintain with the Bank of Canada or elsewhere adequate reserves against liabilities elsewhere than in Canada, and furnish such information as may be required by the minister from time to time to satisfy him that such reserves against external liabilities are so maintained.

As I understand the amendment of the minister, no reference is made to reserves against external liability.

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps the fault is mine in not having read the amendment more slowly. My amendment referred only to the first clause of subsection 4. Perhaps it is not properly worded. Perhaps the amendment and the section should stand. I would point out that it must be amended in conformity with the corresponding section in the Bank of Canada bill, and if, when we come to that bill, it is found that that section is altered out of conformity with this amendment, I will undertake to see that a corresponding amendment is made in this bill.

Section 60 agreed to.

On section 75—Business and powers of bank.

Mr. RHODES: When we were last in committee I suggested an amendment to paragraph (g) of subsection 2, which will be found on page 3582 of Hansard. This amendment is designed to permit a bank's name to appear on prospectuses or advertisements in respect of certain types of securities which are peculiar to the province of Quebec. The word "related" in line three should be deleted, the words "corporation or" should be added after the word "school" and the word "board" should be deleted. The amendment would then read:

That paragraph (g) of subsection 2 of section 75 be amended by inserting the words "or school corporation or parish trustees" after the word "municipality" in line six of the said paragraph, and by inserting the words "or unless provision is made for the payment thereof and the interest thereon by a province pursuant to its statutes" at the end of the paragraph.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 88—Loans to certain wholesale dealers.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think it is my duty to move again the amendment I proposed in the committee for the purpose of protecting the unpaid vendor. I move:

That subsection 7 of section 88 be amended by adding after the word "months" in the seventeenth line thereof, the following words, "and any claim by an unpaid vendor of or in respect to such products, wares, goods and merchandise to the amounts remaining unpaid" and by adding after the word "remuneration" in the twentieth line thereof the words "and such claim of an unpaid vendor."

Mr. RHODES: I am sure my hon. friend will not consider me as lacking in courtesy if I do not go over the ground we covered when the amendment was considered in committee. He will recall that the principal argument used against it there was that it had the effect of nullifying the intent and purpose of the whole section, and it was the judgment of the committee that for that reason among others it should not be accepted. For the same reasons I would ask this committee to reject it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Those were the reasons given by the banking institutions this year before the committee, and the same reasons were advanced in 1923. I know, as a matter of fact, that a good many members of the committee at that time wanted to be present when the amendment was being brought forward before the committee. Apparently, at that time, there was only a slight attendance in the committee, but the matter was considered at some length; it took two hours to discuss it. In my opinion it is worthy of consideration because there are many cases where apparently people who want to borrow money from the bank, under section 88, have to become bankrupt themselves and assign everything they have before they can get a penny, with the result that the unpaid vendor goes away without a chance of being paid. If it is a case of insolvency the bank takes it all. We know of instances where the claims of widows and orphans have been left unpaid because, the trustees stated, there was hardly any money to meet the bankruptcy proceedings, and the bank, under section 88, came and took all the rest. The banks have always had advantages under the act and we do not want to curtail their privileges. But they should be very careful to find out, when they receive a document signed by certain persons who want to borrow and offer certain security, that the goods upon which they give guarantees are all paid for and are their property. It is up to the bank to find out that this is so. The amendment should be considered further, because there are other members who wish to speak on it.

Mr. RHODES: It is obvious that we cannot make further progress to-night and I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, will you be good enough to revert to motions in order that I may make a formal motion.

I move that the estimates respecting Canadian National Steamships and Maritime Freight Rates Act, reported on by the select standing committee on railways and shipping, be referred to the committee of supply.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

MONTREAL RELIEF ACCOUNTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. P. LAURIN (Jacques-Cartier): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to put this question to the Minister of Labour: Has anything been done to help the city of Montreal in matters of relief, pending the checking up of the accounts of the city by the provincial officials?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the position of the city of Montreal has upon a number of occasions been the subject of some interrogations in this house. I have tried to make it clear that with respect to direct relief and other matters the province of Quebec is functioning under an agreement couched in the same terms as the agreement which prevails with the province of Ontario. During the past year, and particularly in the year 1933, great difficulty seems to have been encountered by the province of Quebec in rendering account to the dominion in order that the share of the dominion under the agreement could be promptly transmitted to the province of Quebec for payment to the city of Montreal. Just what the difficulties are I am not fully prepared to state, but the fact is that the dominion has not been receiving accounts from the province of Quebec.

Undoubtedly one of the difficulties is that the city of Montreal and the auditors of the province of Quebec have not been able to settle upon the proper amounts that are payable to the city of Montreal. The question has become acute, and for some time past this government has had under consideration some method which might be adopted in order to assist the city out of its present troubles. The province of Quebec as late as November last was urged to try to have its accounts submitted to Ottawa without the undue delay which had been experienced for many months prior to that date. But very little headway seems to have been made. The government, therefore, acting through myself, has to-day caused a message to be dispatched to the premier of the province of Quebec, reading as follows:

By reason of the prolonged delay which has occurred in respect of the completion by your provincial officials of the audit of the city of Montreal's relief accounts, and the acute financial difficulties which that city is experiencing by reason of the consequent non-payment of the dominion and provincial proportions of the same, the dominion on the assumption that there will be approximately $3,000,000 payable by the dominion and an equal amount by the province, under the terms of the agreement, is prepared to make an accountable advance to the province of Quebec of $3,000,000 which with an equal amount from the province in respect of its share would provide the city of Montreal with $6,000,000, and greatly improve its present financial position. The proposed advance by the dominion would be made on the same terms as similar advances have been made to other provinces for similar purposes. At the same time I would again stress the importance of the provincial audit of Montreal's accounts being carried out with all possible expedition in order that a financial adjustment of the dominion's accountable advance above referred to can be made with the least possible delay.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

CONDITIONS GOVERNING TEN YEAR EXTENSION OF BANK CHARTERS

The house resumed from Thursday, June 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 18, respecting banks and banking.—Mr. Rhodes—Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 88—Loans to certain wholesale dealers.

Mr. CASGRAIN: There was an amendment before the committee when it rose last night along the line of the amendment which I proposed in the committee on banking and commerce, and which I reintroduced in committee of the whole last night. The amendment was left over at the request of the minister for consideration and discussion. My purpose in moving the amendment is to protect the unpaid vendor as against the claim of the bank. The object is to put the unpaid vendor on the same basis as all the other persons mentioned in this clause, which has in view the protection of the wages, salaries or other remuneration of persons employed by any wholesaler, purchaser, shipper or dealer. I submit the amendment for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing that I feel I can usefully add to what I said in the committee last night. For the reasons then given and given also when the bill was under consideration in the committee on banking and commerce this amendment cannot be accepted.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Last night's reasons still hold.

Amendment negatived on division.

Section agreed to.

On section 89—Goods manufactured from articles pledged.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Again, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to propose which I also proposed in the committee on banking and commerce, and which is also for the purpose of protecting the unpaid vendor. It will be noted that this section gives the bank a claim prior to that of the unpaid vendor. That is the evil I want to cure, and which I tried to cure with respect to the previous clause, but without success. Although this amendment may meet with the same fate it is my duty to propose it. I therefore move that subsection 2 of section 89 be amended by striking out all the words commencing with the word "who" in the fourteenth line thereof down to the end of this subsection and substituting therefor the words "of or in respect of such products, goods, wares and merchandise to the amount remaining unpaid." This amendment goes with the other.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It certainly will.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have done my duty, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Mr. Chairman, I would like to take up a few minutes—

Mr. CASGRAIN: He may have more success than I had. He is on the right side.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): I am very fearful of it. I want to bring to the attention of the committee a matter that did not receive that full consideration that was intended in the committee on banking and commerce. If hon. gentlemen will turn to volume No. 11 of the proceedings of the committee on banking and commerce they will find the following minute on page xi:

> Mr. Fraser (Cariboo) proposed that subsection (19) of section eighty-eight be amended by making it possible that the notice of intention provided for by this section shall be registered not in the office of the assistant receiver but at some appointed county office.
> It was agreed that the subcommittee should consider the advisability of amending those subsections of section eighty-eight which deal with the registration and cancellation of the notice of intention. The matter of the subrogation of the rights of a guarantor to be considered at the same time.

May I say that the first part of this minute was attended to by the committee but for some reason which I have not had explained the last part of it "the matter of the subrogation of the rights of the guarantor to be considered at the same time," was not dealt with and no report was made by the subcommittee to the committee on banking and commerce. I therefore move the following amendment:

> That section eighty-nine of Bill 18 be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:—
> (4) Where payment of a loan made by a bank under the provisions of section eighty-six or section eighty-eight of this act is guaranteed by a third person and such loan is paid by the guarantor, such guarantor shall be subrogated in and to all of the powers, rights and authority of the bank under the security which the bank holds in respect of the said loan under the provisions of the said sections eighty-six and eighty-eight.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, I have consulted the Department of Justice with respect to this proposed amendment which was moved by my hon. friend in the committee on banking and commerce, and while I have not a final opinion from them they raise the question as to whether it is really competent in a matter having to do with banking to go beyond the bank and attempt to provide by way of legislation with respect to other creditors, having in mind the fact that the question has a bearing upon property and civil rights, which is a matter under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. For that reason alone I feel that it would be unwise to place an amendment in the act which might prove of no avail.

I might point out further that the difficulty which my hon. friend has in mind in moving his amendment has not arisen in practice to any appreciable extent. The section in question has been in force for some fifty years. There was some question bearing upon this point which arose in the decision af the case of the Victor Varnish Company, in re Clare's claim, reported in 16 Ontario law reports, 1908, but that is some twenty-six years ago. Notwithstanding that decision there has not been any demand made upon the department nor any suggestion offered, except that made by the hon. member for Cariboo, that the section should be amended. Under all the circumstances I feel that the amendment should not be entertained.

Mr. RALSTON: Has the minister any objection to the spirit of the amendment on its merits?

Mr. RHODES: I might say that I have none.

Mr. RALSTON: I sympathize entirely with the spirit of the amendment. It seems to me that there is no good reason why a man who guarantees a note to the bank should not be placed in the same position as the bank with regard to security when he pays that note. Of course, we must bow to the opinion of the Department of Justice with regard to the constitutionality of such a provision but I think there is a great deal of room for argument that it is part of a genuine banking bill to provide that guarantors of obligations to banks, which are incidental to banking business, should have certain rights with respect to the security which the bank holds. It seems to me that this is a distinct improvement in our banking legislation and will facilitate banking. It will make a man a little more ready to assist his neighbour or his partner in connection with obligations if he knows that he will be subrogated to the rights of the bank in connection with the securities which the bank holds. I wonder if the minister feels that he should not go further with this matter and pursue his inquiry as to the constitutionality of the section, especially when he has no objection to the amendment on its merits.

Mr. RHODES: There is no objection to it on its merits. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it would appear that the object which the hon. member for Cariboo has in mind is desirable. I would suggest two courses. The first is that the committee should accept the amendment on the understanding that if an adverse opinion is received from the Department of Justice, the amendment can be dealt with in the Senate. Secondly, we might pass the section without the amendment and if in the meantime a favourable opinion is secured from the Department of Justice, an amendment could be made in the Senate. Either of these courses would be quite acceptable to me.

Mr. HACKETT: I believe it is already the law in some provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I think the first course would be the better one, to have the committee accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser).

Mr. MacLEAN: I think there is a great deal to be said in favour of the amendment. I think in amending the Bank Act, further consideration should be given to the position in which a guarantor is placed in connection with a bank. Once a guarantor or an endorser has placed his name on a note, the bank does not worry very much about the man who gets the money, they simply look to the endorser in every case. I have known of cases where the bank would not even cross the street to attend a creditors' meeting. They claim they have a certain man on the note and that they look to him for payment. They will not even put themselves out to send a second notice to the man who really got the money but they will go after the endorser who has no recourse but to pay. Quite often the bank will not even take action against the man who really got the money. They will take a joint action against the two, but they will not take single action against the man who got the money and walked away with it. I think that is very poor protection for a man who endeavours to accommodate or assist another and I think the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser) should receive consideration. I feel that it should go much further.

Mr. RHODES: I do not profess to be competent to pass an opinion upon the legal phase of this question, which is the sole point I raise. I raised that point by indicating that the officers of the Department of Justice had grave doubts as to whether or not the constitutional question might be involved. It seems to me that we could meet the situation in one of the two ways I have suggested. If the committee desires to take responsibility and have this section amended, I have no objection. On the other hand, I would endeavour to expedite the receipt of an opinion from the Department of Justice and if it were favourable, an amendment could be made in the Senate. Either course is acceptable to me.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It seems to me that an act which permits a guarantee to be paid should be able to provide for the guarantor being protected if he has to pay the guarantee. While I would not for one moment express an opinion in opposition to the Department of Justice, I feel satisfied that the department will say that if power is given to guarantee the bank the guarantor can be protected, either by the guarantee providing that upon payment he shall receive whatever securities the bank holds or in some other way. I suggest that the amendment be passed subject to the understanding that if the Department of Justice says it is not constitutional or that it cannot be so varied as to be made constitutional, it can be changed later on.

Mr. RHODES: I have already indicated that that course would be quite acceptable to me if it is the wish of the committee.

Mr. RALSTON: I suppose this will not apply to members of parliament.

An hon. MEMBER: They would not accept one as a guarantor.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): I am quite satisfied that this amendment should be incorporated in the bill with the understanding that the Senate may delete it if it feels so inclined.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Do not make any suggestions to them.

Amendment (Mr. Fraser, Cariboo) agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 91—Interest exceeding 7 per cent shall not be charged.

Mr. NEILL: I thought there were to be some amendments to this section. I have been asked by a board of trade to bring up a matter in connection with subsection 4, the one which deals with the charge for keeping accounts. There is a general feeling that this is unfair. Of course, as regards private people, the contract would be between two parties and if one did not like it, he could go somewhere else. But the banks have practically a monopoly and there is no opportunity to go somewhere else. It is felt that the bank should give this service although it may not be exactly profitable in the case of some individuals. I think this matter was brought up in the committee but apparently nothing was done about it and I should like to hear from the minister.

Mr. RHODES: I think the practice of making what is called a service charge is entirely fair and proper. It is only made in the case of those accounts where without a charge being made the bank would be doing business at a loss. Inasmuch as the section protects the indivdual by providing that there can be no charge made except the individual affected agrees, it seems that no injustice is done. For these reasons I think there can be no objection to the subsection as it stands.

Mr. NEILL: That would be all right if there was any choice of banks, but very often there is not. Even if there are two banks in a community, they have practically a monopoly. The subsection states that there shall be no charge unless by express agreement between the bank and the customer but I understand the banks take the position that they are entitled to make such a charge when a man signs for his cheques at the end of the month and certifies that the account is correct. They contend that that is an acceptance of this agreement. I understand that in the case of stores placing on their accounts the words "interest charged on overdue accounts" it is held not to be a valid agreement even although the man who gets the bill makes payments from time to time. It is held that an express written agreement is required before a storekeeper can charge interest on overdue accounts. Has there ever been a ruling as to whether it is considered sufficient for the bank merely to make a charge, and because the customer accepts his account as correct, as stated, whether that binds him without an express agreement? Do the words express agreement require any obligation in writing?

Mr. RHODES: With all deference, there is in my judgment nothing in the point that the individual has no alternative inasmuch as there may be only one bank in the community and therefore no opportunity for him to go elsewhere, having in mind the fact that the charge itself might and probably would be a reasonable charge, or rather that the principle of charging would be reasonable. This matter was inquired into by the Royal Commission on Banking and Currency and is referred to in paragraph 257 at page 74 of their report. They state:

> The reasonableness of the banks making by agreement charges for services rendered in administering active accounts, when the customer offers no collateral or compensating advantage to the bank, has been recognized by the Bank Act, and rightly so. Any other mode of procedure would result in the shifting of the costs of performing certain services from one class of customers to another class.

I have only to add, with respect to the further query of my hon. friend, my belief that in practice the customer always signs a printed document which constitutes the agreement.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): With regard to these service charges I have only one or two observations to make after listening to what the bankers themselves have had to say in this respect. These charges, in practice, are not nearly so innocent as they look when you are discussing the matter in the way we are. I only want to bring to the attention of the committee a case that came to my notice when I was travelling around the country and coming in contact with men whom I scarcely knew. I could cite a dozen instances, but the most striking example I submit now to show what is the actual practice in connection with these charges. This man lived in an outlying community and he told me he had been in the habit of carrying balances for months before the time of the occurrence—balances anywhere from $3,000 to $5,000. He was a general merchant in an outlying community. On a certain day he knew he had a number of obligations coming due and cheques that would be presented—it was a mail day—and he was very busy in his store. He overlooked making the deposit until after three o'clock. He went to the bank after three o'clock with a sufficient deposit to more than take care of the obligations he had, but the bank was closed, and the next day when he went to clear up the deposit the manager charged him fifty cents for taking care of an overdraft of seventy cents during that time. I submit that as an actual occurrence, and I am satisfied that this man was telling the truth.

I have no objection to a service charge that is reasonable, but I want the general managers of banks to understand the situation. In actual practice the conditions which, impliedly, they lay down to their branch managers, are not carried out; their instructions are adhered to altogether too strictly. I think it would be well therefore for the banks to take up this matter to see whether they cannot loosen up on their instructions or have managers who will not follow those instructions as definitely and consistently as they do.

Mr. RHODES: Assuming the facts—and I do not call them in question—to be exactly as stated by my hon. friend from Cariboo, it seems to me that the only inference to be drawn from them is, to put it mildly, that that bank is unfortunate in having a manager with bad judgment.

Mr. DUFF: And the customer was easy.

Mr. RHODES: That is as far as I go. However, the fact that he has brought forward this rather exceptional case; the fact that the matter was discussed in the committee on banking and commerce; and the further fact that the attitude of mind with respect to instances of that character has been brought home to the management of the banks, leave every reason to hope that these instances will be few and far between. They do not arise of necessity out of the statute, because they represent merely the abuse and not the proper use of the statute.

Mr. COOTE: One great difficulty in connection with this matter of charges by banks is that there does not seem to be very much uniformity in the practice carried out in different sections of Canada, and sometimes not very much uniformity within certain sections. The complaints are many and varied. Of course, we anticipate some complaints, but I do not think there is much use discussing the matter at any great length in this committee; we discussed it at some length in the banking committee. It is a very difficult matter to legislate upon, but in some instances charges have been quite exceptional, running to as high as $2.50 a month for a comparatively small account. One case was brought to my attention where the charges amounted to $4.50 for one month, in the case, too, of a man who was discounting a great many notes. As I say, it is a matter which it is very difficult to legislate upon and I am rather of the opinion that the only way to deal with it satisfactorily is to set up some sort of tribunal to whom aggrieved persons may appeal if they think they are unfairly dealt with by the banks in regard to service charges. Many of these people live in communities where there is only one bank, and the banks are becoming more and more in the nature of public service institutions, so that before very long, in my opinion, some method will have to be devised of regulating service charges.

Section agreed to.

Sections 99, 112, 124 and 125 agreed to.

On section 138—Unauthorized issue of notes for circulation.

Mr. COOTE: Section 138, if carefully examined, will be admitted by many members to be very objectionable indeed. The effect of this section is that only banks can issue money or substitutes for money; more than that, it is only banks which are chartered by this act. This gives these banks the absolute monopoly of the issue of the medium of exchange. If people have goods and services to exchange and have no money and can get none from the banks, why fine them $400 if they can invent a substitute for money? That is something I cannot understand. Is not this section putting people in so far as the issue of money is concerned at the mercy of the banks? Clause 138 reads:

> Every person, except a bank to which this act applies, who issues or reissues, makes, draws or endorses any bill, bond, note, cheque or other instrument, intended to circulate as money, or to be used as a substitute for money, for any amount whatsoever, shall incur a penalty of $400.

It seems to me that a cheque is either money or a substitute for money. Which is it? Any person other than a bank that issues a cheque is liable to a fine of $400. It is true that there is perhaps an exception under subclause 4 if the cheque is for less than $20 but even in such a case it is only when the cheque is payable directly to the creditor of the immediate issuer that it is not considered a substitute for money. If that cheque passes through the hands of a third or fourth person, then under the terms of subsection 4 it becomes a substitute for money and the issuer is liable to a fine of $400. If the cheque is for more than $20, according to this section it is a substitute for money, it would be a contravention of the clause itself. It is money or a substitute and it is a contravention of this clause because it is not issued by the banks. The whole clause appears to me to be very objectionable and bad law.

I would also address this question to the minister: What about a cheque issued on a trust or loan company? There are thousands of these cheques issued every week. Are they money or substitutes for money? As I understand the matter, they must be either one or the other. Under this section there seems to be the possibility of endless litigation. It is bad legislation, apparently designed to give the banks the monopoly of the issuing of our medium of exchange.

Subclause 3 which provides for a moiety of the penalty to the informer is bad law and should have no place in this bill. It is a disgrace to parliament to pass subclause 3 which provides that a moiety of the penalty goes to any person who becomes an informer. That is bad enough when it is incorporated in the Customs or the Excise Act, but to put it into such a respectable measure as the Bank Act is beyond my imagination, and as I said before, it is a disgrace to parliament if we pass it.

Subclause 4 reads:

> The intention to pass the same as money shall be presumed.

I would invite hon. gentlemen just to take a few minutes to study this subclause which reads:

> If any such instrument is made for the payment of a less sum than $20, and is payable either in form or in fact to the bearer thereof, or at sight, or on demand, or at less than thirty days thereafter, or is overdue, or is in any way calculated or designed for circulation, or as a substitute for money, the intention to pass the same as money shall be presumed.

Surely that is bad law. It is contrary to the old English maxim that a man is innocent till he is found guilty. It says:

> The intention to pass the same as money shall be presumed—

Then it goes on to say:

> —unless such instrument is a cheque on some chartered bank paid by the maker directly to his immediate creditor.

Again I raise the point: What about this cheque when it goes into the hands of a third or fourth party? What if it is drawn on a loan or trust company? What if it is for more than $20? I think clause 138 should be deleted from this measure—and I hope I shall have the support of many hon. members in the committee—because there are certain features which are so objectionable and I cannot see any necessity for their being in the Bank Act. If there is necessity for placing anywhere in the statutes of Canada the provision that no one but the banks should issue money, it should be in some other act than the Bank Act, which applies only to banks, and anything of this kind having to do with organizations other than banks should be stated in the criminal code or in the Currency or the Dominion Notes Act which deal with the particular business of issuing money. I appeal to the minister to allow the deletion of clause 138 from the bill.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will appreciate the fact that there must be some protection for a country's currency. It may be arguable whether it is good policy even from a national viewpoint that the privilege of issuing currency should be delegated to banks. I need not enter into that question for the very obvious reason that the Bank of Canada Act provides that ultimately the whole of the currency shall be issued by a quasi-national institution, the Bank of Canada. Therefore in very large measure, whatever force there may be in the hon. member's argument, it falls to the ground for the reason it is in the interests of the state itself that it should preserve its currency inviolate.

As regards his reference to the provision with respect to cheques, he must bear in mind that the statute itself provides that it is only in those cases where such cheques are used as a substitute for money with the object of defeating the note circulation privilege that any of the penalties would apply.

I do not propose to enter into an argument with him as to the question of the provisions of subclause 3 of this clause. I may say to him very frankly it is a provision of the law that I do not like, but that is only my personal view. It does not follow that because that provision has been in the law for years and years it must therefore remain, but I may point out to the committee that the same provision is found in numerous other acts touching various services of government and if we are to be consistent we should not make fish of one and flesh of another. If parliament in its wisdom—and I would not quarrel with it—were to decide that that principle should be abandoned and disappear entirely from our legislation, I would be quite in accord but I do not know that we should centre our objections to it upon the Bank Act in particular. I have only this to say, that my information is that in the light of experience this subclause has not lent itself to abuse and so far as I am aware no harm has been done to the public by reason of that provision having been in the Bank Act for a period of years.

There is, I know, in some quarters the opinion that there should be the right on the part of municipalities to issue scrip. There are no doubt instances where that privilege might be exercised with benefit to the particular community and with no detriment to the banking situation in the country, but if that policy were recognized as a general thing it would have a tremendously disturbing effect upon the country's currency and credit which, I say, should be entirely under the control of the central authority.

Mr. COOTE: I am glad the minister holds subclause 3 rather in, I suppose I might say, disrepute. As we are considering this whole section, I will suggest two amendments here which I would like to have considered separately. The first one deals with subsection (2). I move:

That section 138 be amended by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:—

Such penalty shall be recoverable with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction by the Attorney General of Canada.

The section now reads:

(2) Such penalty shall be recoverable with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction by any person who sues for the same.

It seems to me that if anyone is going to sue for this it should be the attorney general.

Mr. RHODES: I wish only to say that the proposed amendment should be considered in the light of the fact that there still remains in the section subsection (3). It would appear to me that my hon. friend should at least advise the committee that he proposes to move an amendment in connection with it.

Mr. COOTE: If I may interrupt I will state the amendment which I propose to move to subsection 3. The section now declares that:

A moiety of such penalty shall belong to the person suing for the same, and the other moiety to His Majesty for the public uses of Canada.

My objection to that section is the moiety belonging to the person who sues for the same. Under subsection 2 as it now stands there is of course an encouragement for someone to come and sue simply to get the moiety. I move:

That section 138 be amended by striking out subsection 3 and substituting the following:—

Such penalty shall belong to His Majesty for the public uses of Canada.

These two amendments when read together would provide that the penalty should be recoverable in any court of competent jurisdiction by the Attorney General of Canada, and that the penalty should belong to His Majesty for the public uses of Canada. It deletes the provision for a moiety, and would do away with that encouragement to any person to institute action to get a moiety of the fine. I think the two amendments as proposed are very reasonable and I hope will meet with approval.

Mr. RHODES: As far as the object my hon. friend has in mind is concerned I am in accord with it, but perhaps the amendments might be revised a little and incorporated in one subsection. There seems to me to be no object in having two subsections dealing with the one thing. If it is the sense of the committee, perhaps we could by redrafting incorporate the two subsections in one. I would not feel competent to express myself upon the legal effect, but with the object my hon. friend has in mind I am in agreement.

Mr. COOTE: I am very pleased at the attitude the minister has taken in this regard, and shall be very glad to leave the matter of drafting to the department. Perhaps the item might stand for the officials to draft something satisfactory to the minister.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am not sure of the meaning of this proposed amendment. I understood the term proposed was, the Attorney General of Canada. Does that mean that one official in the dominion will take action in any province, or does it mean the attorney general of any province? As a matter of fact I believe the term is solicitor general rather than attorney general, is it not?

Mr. HACKETT: There is in all legislation which affects the crown—and currency is now to become almost the exclusive prerogative of the Central Bank, which will be very closely associated with the government—a sanction for infringing on any of its rights. Theft of a piece of rope from the Marine department, theft of a postage stamp from the post office, and similar shortcomings of relative insignificance are visited with very heavy penalties. Defacing money or fabricating money has been classified with misdemeanours of this type. The issue of money or the attempt to issue something that has the appearance of money has always since the very first days of the Bank Act been considered very reprehensible, and severe penalties have been provided to preserve from encroachment this right of issuing money. I do not know that there have been many people who have suffered under this provision, because there are sections in the criminal code which deal with similar offences. If we strike out subsection (3), do away with the moiety system, I do not suppose any great harm will result, but we are breaking in on the moiety system, which has been introduced, as the minister stated, and maintained in all legislation in which the property of the crown is involved and an attempt made to protect it. I think this much at least can be said against any change in the section.

Mr. RHODES: Will my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) direct his attention to section 168? I am inclined to the view that if it should be the sense of the committee that the moiety system should be departed from in this act, our object would be accomplished by striking out subsections (2) and (3), because section 168 provides procedure which I think covers the case in point, and would make it unnecessary to have any provision whatsoever with respect to procedure in this section. If that is correct I think our object would be accomplished by merely striking out the two subsections, assuming that it is the will of the committee that that should be done, for I am quite content that the judgment of the committee should prevail.

Mr. RALSTON: It looks as if that is the effect of section 168, if the word "imposed" means the same thing as the word "incur" in section 138. Section 138 says that every person—shall incur a penalty—, and section 168 says that the amount of the penalty imposed shall be recoverable at the suit of his Majesty instituted by the Attorney General of Canada. I do not know whether the word "incur" is used all the way through the bill. If it is, it is intended that the word "imposed" shall cover all those sections. To make it clear, and sure, I would amend section 168 subsection (1) to read, "The amount of all penalties imposed upon or incurred by" and so on. In this way we would make the proper provision.

Mr. RHODES: I differ from the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth in his construction of the section, although it would occur to me that if a penalty were imposed upon an individual—

Mr. RALSTON: If it were incurred by him it would be imposed upon him.

Mr. RHODES: But the point I make is that it could not be imposed unless it had been incurred. It would seem to me that the word "imposed" is more comprehensive, and would include the lesser term. However, I do not wish to argue with my hon. friend because I am prepared to accept his judgment as to construction.

Mr. RALSTON: Other sections include the word "incurred."

Mr. RHODES: Hon. members may take the sense of the committee on the wisdom or otherwise of deleting subsections (2) and (3). Then, if it is thought necessary, at a later period we could deal with section 168, so as to make it clear.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): I think we had better deal with each subsection. Shall subsection (1) of section 138 carry?

Mr. IRVINE: If the committee is going to deal with the section by subsections I should like to say something on subsection (1). Could we not deal with subsections (2) and (3), as to whether or not they should be deleted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Subsection (1) stands.

Mr. RHODES: Well, why not go on with it.

Mr. COOTE: If the chairman would accept an amendment, I would be prepared to move that subsections (2) and (3) be deleted. Probably that would serve the purpose of testing the committee.

Mr. RHODES: I cannot see any object in allowing subsection (1) to stand, and proceed to deal with (2) and (3). It seems to me we had better proceed with them in their proper order.

Mr. IRVINE: We have been passing the whole sections, without going into details, except in cases where there were amendments. I had intended to raise some objections to the whole clause, and I thought it would be better to do so after the amendment now before the committee had been disposed of. That was my intention, because the objections I wish to raise are more fundamental than even the objections which have been taken to subsections (2) and (3). This is the clause which grants a complete monopoly to the banks of Canada on not only the currency, as was pointed out by the minister, but on the credit of the country, something which is very much more important than currency, so far as volume and use are concerned. I agree with the minister that we must have protection for the country's currency. I presume he means there must be protection for the notes of the Bank of Canada which will be issued when that institution functions, and the bank notes now being issued by the chartered banks.

In connection with this section however we are more interested in retaining a little power from the banks for other institutions such as municipalities, and so on, so as to use credits which the banks may not be willing to grant them under banking policy. I presume it is within the knowledge of every hon. member of the committee that there are cases when as a matter of banking policy a municipality may not be allowed to borrow. Nevertheless, that municipality by the issuing of certain credit instruments, if it were not prevented by this section, could not only carry on successfully its public services, but could succeed in collecting a great percentage of the taxes which otherwise would not be collected. We have instances in the province of Alberta where municipalities, despite this act, have actually issued what they call scrip, have issued it with success and have been able to carry on. But they did that only when they were refused credit by the banks, under ordinary banking policy. While it may be necessary to grant certain powers to the banks, under subsection (1) and while it is necessary to protect the currency of the country, I say it is also necessary that the municipalities of Canada should have the right to use their own credit under circumstances when, owing to banking policy, credit is not available to them. I suggest there should be an amendment to the principal section making such provision.

Mr. LUCAS: I should like to endorse what the hon. member for Wetaskiwin has said, and should like to have some information on another matter. Section 138 provides a penalty for anyone other than a bank issuing money. If I may be permitted to refer to the preceding section, namely, 137, which I believe has been passed, and which provides a penalty for banks issuing an excess of notes, I would say that on September 30, the banks had a total note issue of $141,000,000; there was current gold and subsidiary coin amounting to $48,886,963, and dominion notes amounting to $127,214,267. On top of that the banks had issued credit to the amount of $1,427,723,609. The information I should like to get is as to where in this Bank Act authority is given to the banks to create this credit which serves the country just the same as money. Dominion notes are issued under the Dominion Notes Act, currency is issued under the Currency Act, and banks are prevented by section 137 from an excess issue of notes, but when it comes to issuing credit, upon which 90 per cent of the business of the country is done, there is apparently no limit as to what the banks may do. As a matter of fact dominion notes, bank notes and subsidiary coin are, in other words, just chicken feed or what may be termed the small change of the country, while 90 per cent of business is done by cheques. Those cheques are issued on credit created by the banks. We find that in 1929 the banks had total loans of $2,358,544,498 extended on $188,740,522 composed of current gold and subsidiary coin and dominion notes. But in 1933 the total loans were reduced to $1,427,793,609, or a reduction of $930,000,000 in four years. I should like to know by what authority or where in the Bank Act is authority given to the banks to create credit to the extent of carrying on 90 per cent of the business of the country, when a penalty is imposed by a section in the Bank Act on any other person issuing anything which will pass as money, and when the banks themselves are limited in the issuing of notes.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, the question raised by my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin and also by my hon. friend from Camrose are large questions of general policy which, even if I felt myself competent to discuss them at length with them, are not ones which properly arise in dealing with the carpenter work of the construction of this section in committee of the whole. I hope that my hon. friends will not expect me to reply in rebuttal of his observations with respect to the general question of credit and of the use of cheques as currency, and so forth. That issue does not arise in considering this section at all. I hope that he will not consider me discourteous if I do not attempt to cover again the ground which has been so frequently covered not only in committee but on the second reading of the bill.

Mr. LUCAS: Mr. Chairman, I was not a member of the committee and I do not know what discussion took place there, but I am sure that if any answer was given or decision arrived at in the committee it would be very easy for the minister to say what that was. We know what the penalty is to-day for anyone who is termed a counterfeiter or produces money in any way outside the terms laid down in the statute. He will soon find himself behind the bars. This section is exercising the minds of a great many people in Canada to-day, and I think it is generally recognized that ninety per cent or even more of the business of the country is done on credit created by the banks, and I think we should have something more definite than what the minister has said in regard to the authority given to the banks to create this form of money.

Mr. COOTE: If my memory serves me right, Mr. Chairman, we had great difficulty in the committee getting a definition from certain bankers of the term money. On one occasion I suggested that bank deposits were money, and the majority of the committee disagreed with me and said no. I think a very interesting point has been raised by the member for Camrose. It seems to me it is this: Does the difference which he mentions between the total deposits in the banks and the amount of actual currency involved consist of a substitute for money? Is it a substitute for money? If it is, why should we impose a penalty of $400 on anyone outside the bank who issues a substitute for say $20 of money even though there might be plenty of assets behind it? Since the discussion has taken place on this section I am wondering if that is not the real purpose of this section to give the banks in an indirect way the right to issue a substitute for money and to withhold it from everyone else. Perhaps the minister would like to inform us on that point.

Mr. RHODES: All I can say to my hon. friend is that if with all his wide knowledge and his astuteness he was unable to get an answer from those who make the practice of handling money and currency their life work, surely he must spare such a humble individual as the Minister of Finance by not pressing the matter further.

Mr. IRVINE: The point is that the minister and this committee are considering subsection 1 of section 138, and we ought to know what powers we are conferring on the banks by that subsection. The question is whether or not their right to handle cheques and other instruments is a right to the banks to issue a substitute for money. If it is why should we penalize, say, a municipality which might on equally good collateral issue a substitute for money?

Subsection agreed to on division.

Mr. IRVINE: And only under protest.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): I have two amendments here to subsections 2 and 3, by the hon. member for Macleod. Are these withdrawn and another one substituted in their place?

Mr. COOTE: If I have the consent of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I would withdraw those amendments and move that subsections 2 and 3 be dropped.

Mr. RHODES: Strictly speaking, that is not a proper form of motion because it is a direct negative. I think my hon. friend would accomplish his purpose if he would move that section 138 be amended by deleting subsections 2 and 3. I think that that would be an amendment.

Mr. COOTE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BROWN: I do not presume to enter very deeply into a discussion of the Bank Act, but I must say that I am heartily in sympathy with what has been said in opposition to these subsections. They are just as offensive as that clause in the criminal code which provides that a man may sue for a prize that has been won in a lottery. I think that is objectionable to most people, and I think these clauses are also. I do not think a private individual should be allowed to benefit by a penalty that has been imposed by the courts, and I would be heartily in sympathy with striking out these two clauses. It is altogether likely that the matter is sufficiently covered, as the Minister of Finance has pointed out, by section 168.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: On first hearing the objections to subsections 2 and 3 of section 138 I agreed with the viewpoint that was put forward. I asked the question as to whether it was the attorney general in one person that was meant, and without having got any answer I believe that that is the intention of section 168, that the Attorney General of Canada is the only individual who would likely be qualified to take action in the case of any violation as outlined in subsection 1 of section 138. I would point out that subsection 1 outlines that any person who issues a cheque wrongly will not have any penalty imposed upon him or any action taken against him except upon some person or persons knowing the facts of the case submitting them to the Attorney General of Canada who resides in Ottawa. That means that the procedure would be very slow and very cumbersome. I recall that just last fall someone in my own community issued a cheque for I think $20 in the name of a certain prominent farmer in the community, cashed the cheque by buying some dry goods, and took the balance of the money and got away. He was detected within a day or so, but under this proposed amendment the only action that could be taken against that individual would be by the farmer notifying Ottawa, and Ottawa instituting an investigation and getting the facts of the case. Then action might be taken. It seems that while we are moving along a line that sounds good and looks good we are making it so slow of operation that we shall have such cases multiply throughout the dominion and have a very, very ineffective means of checking them.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. IRVINE: I think some of the lawyers should answer that.

Mr. BURY: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to what my hon. friend from Kindersley has said, but surely that would not be a case of issuing a cheque for the purpose of its circulating as money. It would, of course, come under the clauses of the criminal code, but I do not see how you could treat the cheque as a document which had been issued for the purpose of circulating as money. It had been issued to obtain either cash or goods for the individual, but it seems to me that that is a totally different thing. This section is not intended to cover such a case as that mentioned by my hon. friend.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

On subsection 4—Intention presumed.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to ask for a little information on this subsection. The subsection states that if any such instrument is made for the payment of a less sum than twenty dollars, and is payable either in form or in fact to the bearer thereof, and so on. I should like to know why the sum of twenty dollars is used. Exception (a) states:

A cheque on some chartered bank paid by the maker directly to his immediate creditor.

Does that mean that where a cheque is payable to bearer and is less than $20 and goes through three or four hands it can be presumed that it is a substitute for money?

Mr. RHODES: I must say that I am unable to get from the officials of the department a clear explanation as to why this is limited to $20. They advise me that this thing is likely to occur in the smaller denominations and it seems to me that that is the only explanation I can give to my hon. friend.

Mr. COOTE: A person making a cheque for $25 would be in a different category if he wanted to substitute it.

Mr. HACKETT: There are no $25 bills.

Mr. COOTE: Is this the meaning of this paragraph (a): If a cheque was drawn on a trust company instead of a chartered bank is it presumed that there is an intention to pass it as money, and would the issuer be liable to a fine of $400?

Mr. RHODES: This section is confined entirely to banks and has no reference to cheques drawn upon trust companies.

Mr. COOTE: I am trying to get the meaning of this paragraph (a). Surely it is not the intention to differentiate between a cheque drawn on a chartered bank and one drawn on a trust company, or a loan company or on any organization which is permitted to take deposits. I have had no training in the law and perhaps I am handicapped in discussing these acts.

Mr. RHODES: There are many things which I would like to understand. I may say that I asked the inspector general of banks why this distinction is made and he tells me that he has never before heard the point raised.

Mr. COOTE: I have never heard such an explanation given in connection with any other bill and this seems to put the Bank Act in a class by itself. I think section 138 proves this. As members of this committee we are charged with the responsibility of looking over these sections and trying to understand them before they become law. This is why I asked the minister for an explanation and I assure him it is not done to embarrass him in any way. I have often wondered about this matter. I think I asked for an explanation in committee but I may not have pressed the point to the extent I am pressing it to-day. If the officials or the minister have an explanation to make I should be very glad to have it, but I will not delay the committee unduly.

Mr. RHODES: I have given my hon. friend the only information I can give him on the point. That is the best information I can get from the inspector general of banks. However, I shall make further inquiry apart altogether from the committee and if I can secure some additional information I shall be delighted to pass it on to my hon. friend.

Mr. IRVINE: Supposing the minister gave me a cheque for $25 and I owed the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) the same amount; if I endorsed that cheque over to the hon. member, would I be violating this section?

Mr. HACKETT: No.

Mr. IRVINE: How do you know that such an instrument is not designed to circulate as money? How do we know when an instrument is circulating as money and how do we know when it is not?

Mr. RHODES: I would say that that is a question for the court.

Mr. IRVINE: It is the question which is before us at the moment.

Mr. RHODES: In the case referred to by my hon. friend it would be quite proper for him to endorse the cheque over in settlement of the amount. That would not be a case where a cheque was intended to circulate as money.

Mr. IRVINE: Would that be a case where it was not circulating as money?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. IRVINE: When does a cheque circulate as money?

Mr. RHODES: That is a question upon which I would not be able to give a conclusive opinion.

Mr. IRVINE: It seems to me that it would be circulating as money in the instance I gave.

Mr. COOTE: There is another question I should like to ask in connection with lines 35 and 36 of the section, which contain the phrase "the intention to pass the same as money shall be presumed." I should like to know if it is necessary to use those words as they seem to me to incorporate something into the law which is hardly fair, particularly in connection with a law such as the Bank Act. This presumes that a person is guilty of circulating something as money without the necessity of the prosecution having to prove that it is so.

Mr. BURY: In the instance mentioned by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine). if he passed the cheque on to the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), the hon. member for Macleod would find it very difficult to pass it on to someone else without his endorsation. In other words, a cheque cannot pass from hand to hand without the endorsation of the prior holder, but this is not so of money. Money passes from hand to hand without endorsation; in other words, it carries its value within itself, so to speak. It appears to me that that is what is meant by saying that a man is trying to pass an instrument as currency and circulating it as money. In order to use a cheque it would have to be endorsed by every person who passed it. If that went on it would be circulating as currency before it was cashed, but there would be a limit to the number of endorsements which could be made upon the back.

Mr. IRVINE: There would be a limit but if you violated the act once I suppose it would be just as bad as if you violated it ten times. While the point raised by the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) is a worthy one, I doubt whether he will find the definition of money which he gives. I imagine that anything that satisfies a $25 debt is money, so far as we understand the functions of that instrument. In other words, anything that does what money does is money, whether it be a cheque or anything else.

Mr. BURY: I cannot follow my hon. friend in that. I could produce the same effect by driving a steer to his farm. The steer would not be money. We are talking of money as currency. Each time a cheque is endorsed it is not being used as currency, it is being used purely as a negotiable instrument requiring the endorsation of the present holder. As long as it goes on being endorsed, the custom and practice of business treats it as merely a negotiable instrument transferable in that way. But if you try to pass it on from hand to hand without endorsation, without an assignment by endorsation, you are then treating it as something that is per se currency, which requires no such formal act of assignment and carries with it no liability and no guarantee of its value from its prior holder. If you sign a cheque and I endorse it and somebody else takes it from me and endorses it again, each of us is liable, having put his signature on the back of it to give it validity and value. But you do not do that with a dollar bill or coin currency, because it is currency. As I look at it, as long as you treat a cheque as a cheque, requiring endorsation for assignment—endorsation and delivery—and the assumption by the prior holder of liability in case it is not cashed, it is not being treated as currency properly speaking.

Mr. RHODES: In the endeavour if possible to get a little more light in view of the interesting queries of my hon. friend from Macleod, I have looked up Falconbridge and I find in the edition of 1929 the following:

> This section dates from 1890, and was divided into its present subsections in 1906, ... the joint effect of this section and of the Dominion Notes Act, is to reserve to the chartered banks and to the government of Canada, the exclusive privilege of issuing notes intended to circulate as money.

The interesting point about this authority is that not a single case has arisen out of the act, which is somewhat exceptional. So that my hon. friend will not wonder that when I put the query to the inspector general of banks he was unable to give me any more light than I was able to pass on to the committee and to the hon. gentleman. The section has never even occasioned a suit so far as we know.

Mr. COOTE: I believe a suit was entered against at least one municipality and one school district in Alberta, although I do not know how it was decided. I think it was some time in 1933. A lawyer friend of mine gave me the following memorandum in regard to section 138:

> This section dates from 1890, and was divided into its present subsections in revised statutes, 1906, chapter 29, section 136. It relates to the unauthorized issue of notes for circulation, and its primary purpose is to prevent the issue of notes by anyone except the banks; that is to say, the joint effect of this section and section 60 of the existing Bank Act, together with the Dominion Notes Act, is to reserve to the chartered banks and to the government of Canada, the exclusive privilege of issuing notes intended to circulate as money.

That may be the intention, but it seems to me that the effect goes further and indirectly confers upon the banks the power to issue a substitute for money. That may not be the intention of the act but it may be the practical effect of it. Does the minister think that it is necessary to say, in line 35:

> ... the intention to pass the same as money shall be presumed ...

Is not that putting the onus of proof in the wrong place? Anyone issuing something that might possibly be regarded as a substitute for money is to have the onus of proving that it is not, instead of having that onus placed on the prosecution, to prove that it is a substitute for money.

Mr. RHODES: It is in a sense putting the onus upon the individual who passes something intended to be used as money, but it is only in the case of those documents or what not which obviously upon their face are intended to be used as money, and it especially exempts cheques, promissory notes, bills of exchange, bonds or other undertakings, so that in such cases the presumption does not follow.

Mr. COOTE: Take the case of the municipality that has been sued under this provision. It seems to me that the effect of these words, so far as the municipality is concerned, is to place the onus on it of going into court and proving that certain instruments are not intended to circulate as money. It does seem to me that this is something a bit unfair to put in the act. The onus ought to be on the prosecution to prove its case to the satisfaction of the court, rather than on the person sued to prove that it is not intended to circulate as money.

Mr. IRVINE: I think that among the definitions we should have a definition of money, since it is a very important part of the act. If the interpretation that has been given by the hon. member is a correct one, I would not have so much objection. If the municipality issued an instrument that was acceptable to a man who had built a highway or a road, and acceptable to the grocer for goods, and paid back in taxes, and if that were not money, then I am satisfied. But I should like to be assured that the courts will not hold a municipality doing such a thing as having violated this section of the act by circulating an instrument intended as money.

Mr. COOTE: I wish to bring this matter to some finality, because there is a good deal of information that some of us would like to have in regard to the section and which it seems difficult for us to obtain—perhaps we are going too far in asking for all these explanations. I would move therefore that section 138 be amended by deleting therefrom subsection 4. It seems to me that all that section 138 is designed to do is covered in subsection 1. I do not think that subsection 4 is necessary, and it is so ambiguous that I do not see how anyone can know what it all means.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. COOTE: I move that section 138 be amended by adding as subsection 5 the following:

The provisions of this section shall not apply to warrants, certificates or like orders issued by and redeemable by a municipality.

Mr. RHODES: That amendment cannot be accepted. The dominion government is endeavouring to centralize its undoubted sovereign power to issue money and while hitherto that authority under the Bank Act, has been delegated to the banks, under the provisions of the Bank of Canada Act the proposal is to withdraw that right gradually until the whole issue rests with the Bank of Canada. As I pointed out in the citation which I gave before, the object is to preserve for the dominion government the exclusive privilege of issuing notes intended to circulate as money. If we had a thousand agencies or as many municipalities as there are in the dominion issuing money we would have chaos and the obvious objection to the amendment appears on its face.

Mr. COOTE: It is not my intention to give the municipalities power to issue money, but I stated to the committee this afternoon that in at least one municipality in Alberta, a school district had suit entered against it because it was issuing certain forms, I do not know what name to give them—

Mr. HANBURY: Scrip.

Mr. COOTE: I do not know whether it is really proper to call them scrip because I do not think there is any good definition of scrip and certainly the act itself contains no definition of scrip. They might be called something in the nature of tax warrants. I do not think I would be moving this amendment if clause 138 as it stands were not so ambiguous that it might be considered that any order or warrant of this nature a municipality might issue would render them liable for suit. It is perhaps unfortunate we do not know whether that case has been finally decided, and, if so, what has been the outcome. But we know in some other countries municipalities that have made very good use of the issuing of what is termed scrip have been prevented by the action of banks in their own country from carrying on the practice. The same thing may prevent municipalities in Canada from issuing anything at all in the nature of orders or warrants which would enable them to put some of their idle people to work and to carry out local improvements through the labour of those men. Anyone who reads clause 138 and particularly subclause 4 must admit it is very difficult for a municipality to decide whether anything it may issue of that nature will not be a contravention of the section. Seeing that we cannot have subclause 4 stricken out, it seems to me that there is nothing left to do but to move the amendment which I have. I must admit we have had some difficulty in deciding upon the proper wording so as not to make the amendment sound unreasonable or unacceptable or offensive to the government. It asks simply that the provisions of this clause shall not apply to warrants, certificates or like orders issued by and redeemable by a municipality. I take it for granted a municipality should have the right to issue something of that nature. Clause 138 gives to the banks an absolute monopoly of issuing anything that is money or even a substitute for money. Some of these municipalities have plenty of goods and services to exchange but they have no money and can get none and if by issuing certain orders of their own they can have unemployed people put to work, collect back taxes and have local improvements done, I do not want to be a party to putting into this legislation something that will prevent them from doing so.

I do not wish to delay the committee but I would like to draw attention to what has been accomplished in certain municipalities. The best example I can give at the moment is one the story of which is contained in a book by Professor Irving Fisher entitled Stamp Scrip. It relates to the experience of the Austrian town of Woergl where in 1931-32, 1,500 people had lost their jobs because a number of factories had closed their doors. The taxes, therefore, were in arrears, and the town itself was almost as down and out as these 1,500 of its inhabitants. The mayor of this town, I think a very shrewd man, adopted the idea of issuing stamp scrip. He had watched with very much interest a similar experiment in a smaller town and he arranged for the issue of a small amount of this stamp scrip. I am going to read only a paragraph or two at the end of the article. It says:

According to plan, on August 1, 1932, 32,000 schillings worth of the scrip (equivalent to about $4,500) was issued, in denominations of one, five and ten schillings.

This would amount to about one dollar per head of population.

This amount was later found to be in excess of the actual need, and instead of following an "inflationary policy," only about one-third of the issue or less was kept in circulation through reissues, the rest remained with the city.

These are the results. It says:

Soon everybody accepted it—

That is the scrip.

—without hesitation, because everybody else accepted it. The only cases of permanent refusal to receive the scrip are the post office and the railroad, both of which are government institutions with interests primarily outside of the vicinity where the scrip is supposed to circulate.

The attitude of the Austrian government has not been hostile.

As to the rate of turnover, the mayor reports that the amount of the first wages paid has returned to the city twenty times a month.

The other facts are contained in a report which the mayor of Woergl made to the Tyrol state government, January 1, 1933.

[Mr. Coote.]

I would like to draw the attention of the committee to these, I think, wonderful results:

Taxes had been in arrears from 1926 to 1931 as follows (year by year):

21,000 schillings.
26,000 schillings.
28,000 schillings.
31,000 schillings.
61,000 schillings.
118,000 schillings.

But after the scrip was issued, not only were current taxes paid (as well as other debts owing the town), but many arrears of taxes were also collected. During the first month alone, 4,542 schillings were thus received on the arrears. Accordingly, the city not only met its own obligations but, in the second half of 1932, executed new public works to the value of 100,000 schillings. Seven streets aggregating four miles were rebuilt and asphalted; twelve roads were improved; the sewer system was extended over two more streets; trees were planted and forests improved, and permanent jobs were given to from thirty to fifty of the 1,500 unemployed; but probably a powerful influence has been exerted to prevent any increase of unemployment, by keeping business active.

In this book there is related the experience of certain cities in the United States which made excellent use of the issue of scrip. I will not delay the committee any longer but I would repeat that if people in municipalities have goods and services they wish to exchange and they have no money, why should parliament say that they cannot issue anything in the nature of municipal orders or warrants which will enable them to exchange their goods and services, collect their back taxes and put their unemployed people to work? I do not think such action on their part should be considered a violation of clause 138; it is certainly not violating the purpose which clause 138 is intended to serve.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: This proposed amendment does sound quite unorthodox, and therefore I presume there are many in this chamber to whom it does not appeal. But I would like to remind the committee that conditions now, especially in our western country, are quite different from what they were until some four or five years ago. In times past rural municipalities could have their road work performed, and through a line of credit given them by a bank could issue a cheque in payment for it, the person performing the work could negotiate that cheque and with the proceeds buy his groceries and carry on. For the past three or four years that condition has not prevailed, especially in rural municipalities in western Canada. The road work is still to do and there are still people to do it, but many of our municipalities are not able to get a line of credit at the bank. The road work should be done perhaps in the months of May and June, and the taxes for the payment of same are not available until perhaps September or October. There is a gap of three or four months in which the municipality has no money to pay the men who do the work. Those men have to buy their groceries, they have to have money to carry on current expenses. Under this proposal, as I understand it, it would be lawful for a municipality to issue a warrant, call it a day labour pay sheet or any other name you choose. They could give that instrument to the man who did the work in May or June, he could take it to his hardware store or his grocer and pay his account. The hardware man or grocer would hold the instrument until the fall and then turn it in to the municipality and secure the cash. As I understand that is what the amendment makes provision for. If that is so I think it is an amendment that this committee should consider. It will help a situation in western Canada which at the present time is bad and in need of redress.

Mr. RHODES: In practice, if a municipality finds it necessary to resort to certain expedients to meet a situation, it has been found that the situation can be met without difficulty arising from the Bank Act. Section 138 is only intended to apply to those cases where there is an attempt to issue documents which are to pass as money. The moment we attempt to open the door, giving authority to hundreds and thousands of municipalities in this country to issue money to circulate alongside of and perhaps displace the currency of the country as a whole, that moment we invite disaster. For that reason we cannot recognize any impairment of the exclusive right of the central authority, the Dominion of Canada, to provide for the control and issuance of that which passes as money. We cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. IRVINE: I think most of us will agree with the minister as to the necessity of centralized control of our monetary system, and that it would never do to let either individuals or corporations or municipalities issue currency and so forth. I think we all agree on that principle. But may I remind the minister that in our centralization we have confined the entire credit resources of this country to certain private institutions; first, our chartered banks, and second the Bank of Canada, which is also to be a private institution; that the basis upon which all these institutions operate is the wealth of the country or the credit of the people of the country; that these institutions will operate under a certain well accepted monetary policy,—that is well accepted by them—which monetary policy frequently does not operate advantageously to many of the people of this country. I would remind him further that there are times when it almost ceases to operate at all. But when those times come the people must still live, they must still build their sidewalks and finance their public institutions and collect their taxes, whether the banks say so or not. When such circumstances arise it is only reasonable that a municipality should have authority to use whatever resources may be available to enable it adequately to perform the public services. Now according to the best definition which this committee has obtained of money, which was given this afternoon by the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury), these warrants asked for by the amendment would not be regarded as money. Moreover they would only circulate within the confines of the municipality that issued them. It does seem to me that it is not wise for this committee to prevent a municipality from using its own resources in the interests of its own community, by the use of any instrument that it may devise for the performance of these services, and to prevent them doing that in the interests of private bankers or private banking institutions. I hope the committee will consider the amendment favourably in this respect and permit municipalities to use their credit to carry on their public services, especially at times when banks pursuant to their policy cannot extend credit in the usual way, and by whatever name they choose to call the instrument by which they do it.

Amendment (Mr. Coote) negatived: yeas, 6; nays, 20.

Subsection agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to on division.

Section 151 agreed to.

On section 166—Unauthorized use of the title "bank" etc.

Mr. WILLIS: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment. The present section 166 forbids the use of the expressions "savings bank" "banking company" "banking house" "banking association" or "banking institution." The purpose of the amendment is to make the section consistent and to include in it the word "banker." The amended section would read as follows:

166 (1) Every person using the word "bank" "banker" or "banking" either alone or in combination with other words, or any word or words of import equivalent to any of the foregoing in any foreign language, in a sign or in an advertisement, or to describe his business or any part of his business, without being authorized so to do by this act or by some other act of the parliament of Canada is guilty of an offence against this act.

The whole purpose of the amendment is to include the word "banker" as the other words namely, "bank" and "banking" are now included. That is to say, it appears to me to be entirely inconsistent that the present section should forbid the use of the expression "savings bank" but not "savings bankers." It forbids the use of the expression "banking company" but not "bankers company." It forbids the use of the expression "banking house" but not "bankers house." The same applies for "banking association" and "banking institution." These are forbidden, but the section does not forbid the use of the words "bankers association" or "bankers institution." Those are the present limitations.

It seems to me, first of all, that we must be consistent, and that therefore we must include the word "banker" as well as the words "bank" and "banking." We should, I contend, be fair to those different institutions in Canada, including provincial savings offices. We forbid them to use the word "bank"; we forbid them to use the expression "savings bank" or to use the word "banking"; yet we allow brokers, without any control over them at all, to use the word "bankers." That is to say, in my view the use of the word "banker" implies the existence of a bank. To a degree, then, to use the word—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What about subsection (2) of section 166? Does that not refer to a "banker"? I have looked at the subsection only casually.

Mr. WILLIS: I have not looked at subsection (2), but subsection (1) is very clear in its use. It refers to a foreign language, and in so far as the private banker is concerned hon. members will notice that the amendment provides such banker must be authorized by some act of the parliament of Canada. That is to say, if there is an authorization, or if the parliament of Canada desires to authorize, then there may be the use of the word "banker." It seems to me that to use the word "banker" or the expression "investment banker" gives a sense of security which is not present. We should in my view carry out the spirit of the act. At the present time we debar them from the use of these various combinations of words, but we apparently overlooked the word "banker", or it was left in order to accommodate those who at that time had private banks and were private bankers.

We come directly, then, to the question of investment bankers, and the Investment Bankers' Association of Canada. Mr. Ward Pitfield appeared before the committee, the gentleman who is president of the Investment Bankers' Association of Canada. May I say that I have viewed the reports of that association, and I find that they include many of the outstanding bond dealers of this country. May I say, further, that I examined the association's report for the year 1929, and I found that among its membership were included some who later went into the institutions of this country.

Mr. HANBURY: On government relief.

Mr. WILLIS: Government institutions.

Mr. GARDINER: Sane, or otherwise?

Mr. WILLIS: Sane institutions. That is to say, the Investment Bankers' Association of Canada is a very estimable body of men, but it does not control its members. As Mr. Pitfield said, it is a voluntary association. It has no control over its members as indicated by the fact that some of them have gone elsewhere.

Lest I might be mistaken, and because I have nothing against the Investment Bankers' Association, I took the trouble to get some information from Lieutenant Colonel George A. Drew, commissioner of the Ontario Securities Commission, in regard to this very question. I must say that Colonel Drew agrees entirely with the proposal I now make. With the permission of the committee I should like to read two or three paragraphs from his communication because it seems to me that from my own personal information he is one of the experts in Canada on investment securities and in regard to brokers. In his letter of May 25, addressed to me I find the following:

> It seems inconsistent to me to prohibit the use of the word "bank" "banking" etc., and not forbid the use of the word "banker." If a man may properly be described as an "investment banker," then surely the business he operates must be an investment "bank." If it is not proper for other organizations than chartered banks to use the word "bank," it does not seem to me that a descriptive name should be used which suggests the operation of a bank.
> The Investment Bankers' Association is made up of leading brokers interested in the sale of securities for investment purposes, as distinguished from ordinary exchange operations. I am satisfied they are making every effort to develop better practice in this type of brokerage business, but even if the term

"investment banker" were unobjectionable in so far as it related to members of the Investment Bankers' Association, it must be pointed out that there is no limitation on the use of the words "investment banker" to members of this association, nor would it seem that there can be any justification for making such a limitation, unless some test of qualification were imposed other than mere membership in the association.

At present, many brokers not members of the Investment Bankers' Association are using the term "investment banker," and there is no provision either under the Bank Act or the Securities Acts of the different provinces to prohibit the use of this term.

My personal opinion is that the word "banker" should be placed under the same prohibition as the words "bank" or "banking."

Then, following a letter I had addressed to Colonel Drew in which I asked his permission to quote him, I received a reply giving the permission, together with the following paragraph:

I would only amplify what I have said by the following comment. The Investment Bankers' Association have a precedent for the use of their name in the fact that there is an Investment Bankers' Association of America. It is possible, however, that many of the members of the Investment Bankers' Association of America were in fact bankers, within the definition of the word "bank," as well as brokers. Most of them, of course, were not. But even with this precedent, I must say that I do not find any definition of the word "bank" in the Oxford dictionary which would seem to indicate that the word "banker" may properly be used to describe a broker.

I noticed that a casual question was asked Mr. Gundy one of the leading men in this country interested in investment securities, in reply to which he said that he called himself a bond dealer, and apparently did not favour the use of the expression "investment banker."

Another point comes to my mind arising from a discussion in committee. Mr. Pitfield was asked why he did not incorporate the Investment Bankers' Association of Canada, and he was at some difficulty to answer. The opinion was advanced by some hon. members of the committee that under our law it might be impossible for them to become incorporated in this country. That may or may not be true, but the fact remains that that was the opinion expressed at that time. For the reason that they use the word "bankers" it seems to me they should first incorporate, if they are to be given that permission. If they cannot incorporate, then, of course permission should not be given. It seems to me that they could perform all their functions—and no doubt they perform very useful functions—by the use of the expression "Investment Securities Association." We all admit that their business is to deal in investment securities, and it seems to me that they should be so designated.

The formal amendment which I now propose is not precisely the same amendment which I suggested to the committee. The amendment at that time was dropped to be brought up again in the house. The amendment which I suggested to the committee would have forbidden the use of the words "bank," "banker" or "banking," but would also include the use of the words "banking house," "banking association," "banking institution," "investment banker," "savings bank," or "banking company." Whether that be necessary or not I leave to the draftsman, but it seems to me that it is unnecessary that these words should be included because the words now used include any combination of words wherein the word "banker" is used. The form of the amendment is not a matter of material consequence to me but I think it is a matter of consequence to the people of this country that we should not allow the use of the term "investment banker" without any control whatever. The word "brokers" or "bond dealers" would be all right. We should be consistent. We should be fair to those whom we have permitted to use the words "bank" and "banking." I think, Mr. Chairman, that in order to bring the act up to date this amendment should be accepted. It will do away with the use of the word "banker" just as now we forbid the use of the words "bank" and "banking." We do that simply because over the use of the word "banker" we have no control but over the use of the word "bank" or "banking" we have control under an act of parliament of this country.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, with the object that my hon. friend from Souris has in mind I am in entire sympathy. I do not think there is any question, if we were starting out with the Bank Act, with a clear field from the beginning, that such provisions as he has included in his amendment would be passed without hesitation. I think the reason why the section was not wider in its scope in the earlier years was that when the Bank Act first came into being there was a number of small, individual private bankers, and the name was not included at that time I believe in order to protect them in their businesses which they had acquired long before the Bank Act came into existence. They have now very largely, if not entirely, disappeared, and for that reason the inclusion of the word "banker" does not have the same force as it had at the inception. My understanding is that when this section was dealt with in the banking and commerce commitee during my absence it was the sense of the committee at that time that the advisability of adopting this amendment was a question which ought properly to be left to the committee of the whole house rather than be decided in the banking and commerce committee.

I have only one observation to make. If the so-called Investment Bankers Association is a body corporate it is a question in my mind whether the rights which they hold have anything like the same force as in the case of the old banker who was in business before the Bank Act came into existence. I think we should surround the Bank Act with every conceivable safeguard to protect the public from those who might use names which would have the effect of leading an individual to believe that he was dealing with a chartered bank. I do not know that the rights of the Investment Bankers Association would be prejudiced if this amendment were to pass. It seems to me they ought to be able to conduct their business under a corporate name, such, for instance, as the Canadian bond dealers association, or some similar name. At all events, so far as I am concerned, I would like the committee to deal with the amendment of my hon. friend from Souris on its merits.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I agree with practically every word the minister has said, but we must realize that the permissions of subsections 1 and 2 of this section were inserted for a very definite purpose. In subsection 2 the word "banker" is specifically used, and from subsection 1 it is deliberately excluded. That has been the case for a great number of years, as the minister said, and it was done to protect certain vested interests. It is a question now whether by passing this amendment we are doing injury, without notice, to any interests. I quite agree that our main duty is to protect the public interest. I would suggest—I do not know if it is possible—that we might have some time limit, give them say, a year's notice or two, and that after that the word "banker" could not be used. I think it is somewhat unfair by an amendment moved in committee of the whole to abolish immediately the use of the word from the corporate title, and so Mr. Chairman, I am in the strange position of agreeing with the mover and with the Minister of Finance, and still suggesting that there may be some possibility of injury being done by passing the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Souris.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. WILLIS: If there is no further discussion, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word in reply to what my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre has said in regard to injury without notice. I think it is sufficient for our purpose that the amendment was moved in committee, that at that time we consulted and obtained evidence from the Investment Bankers Association of Canada, and that since then the matter has been before the public through the press for that entire length of time. It seems to me therefore that if there was going to be any real injury done it would have been made apparent either at that time or since by the president of that association or by others including such men as Colonel Drew, in charge of the Ontario Securities Commission, or the matter would have been brought to the attention of the mover of this motion. I moved this amendment in the banking and commerce committee, and I again move it here. So I think that the fear of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre is largely removed and that the benefits that will accrue from accepting this amendment are much greater than any fears that have been expressed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: Since the committee has adopted the amendment of my hon. friend from Souris I submit that perhaps we should drop subsection 2.

Mr. HANBURY: I should think so.

Mr. WILLIS: I move, Mr. Chairman, that subsection 2 of section 166 be deleted.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 59—Cash reserves in dominion notes.

Mr. RHODES: When the committee was considering this section last night my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) pointed out that an amendment I had submitted at that time was defective in wording, and I agreed with him. I have had redrafted an amendment which I think fully covers the case and does away with the objection raised by my hon. friend at that time.

It is as follows; and I now move, Mr. Chairman:

That subsection four of section fifty-nine of Bill 18 be amended by striking out all the words down to and including "Canada" in the seventh line of the said subsection and substituting therefor the following:—

(4) The next three preceding subsections of this section shall be repealed on and from the date on which the Bank of Canada is authorized to commence business and on and after that date the bank shall maintain a reserve which shall, subject to the provisions of the Bank of Canada Act, be not less than five per centum of its deposit liabilities within Canada and which shall consist of a deposit with the Bank of Canada, and of notes of the Bank of Canada held by the bank;

If there is any question as to procedure, I will ask my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Matthews) to move the amendment.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I move accordingly.

Mr. RHODES: I might say that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) made some observations with respect to this section when we were previously in committee. May I suggest to him that if he desires to press these observations, it would be better to do so on the Bank of Canada bill. If, as a result of the consideration of that bill, this amendment would be out of line with that bill, an amendment could be made in ample time, either here or in the Senate.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am not withdrawing my objection to the amendment and I shall reserve my rights to object.

Amendment agreed to on division.

Section as amended agreed to on division.

Mr. IRVINE: I understood that there would be no objection to the reconsideration of any clauses which an hon. member might ask should be reconsidered. I am sorry I was not in the committee last evening when section 29 was passed and I should like to request permission to reopen that matter for a few minutes.

Mr. RHODES: Certainly.

On section 29—Appointment of officers; salaries; security.

Mr. IRVINE: I desire to point out that the employees of banks are not perhaps as well paid as they might be, regardless of the fact that the bankers think they are getting a very good salary. These employees are required to take out bonds to protect the banks before they are allowed to operate. They are also required to contribute to a pension fund over which they have no control and which is sometimes handled in a way not pleasing to the employees. They have no organization to speak for them. I took up this matter in the committee and suggested that they should be permitted to organize like any other group of labour.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to move an amendment to section 29, subsection 2 of the bill:

That section 29, subsection 2 be amended by adding thereto the following words, "such officers, clerks and servants may have the right to organize for the purpose of protecting their interests with regard to such matters as wages, salaries, hours of labour and general working conditions."

One can hardly understand why such a section as this should be found in the statutes of a modern civilized state. This subsection states:

Such officers, clerks and servants may be paid such salaries and allowances as the directors or such officer, in the case of appointments made by him, consider necessary.

During the last century we have come a long way from that position. This year in Great Britain they are celebrating the martyrdom of the Tolpuddle martyrs. These men are recognized throughout the civilized world as the fathers of the modern trade union movement. Because of a reduction in the very small wages paid at that time, these men formed what was to be a friendly society. They were tried, convicted and sentenced to transportation to Australia for seven years. Because of the agitation and the arousing of public opinion in Great Britain they were eventually pardoned and to-day five out of the seven now lie in churchyards around London, Ontario. This government adhered to the treaty of Versailles which contains certain labour sections which were drawn up under the guidance of a former Prime Minister of this country, Sir Robert Borden. At the present moment a committee is sitting in Geneva drawing up conventions for the guidance of the governments which are members of the League of Nations. Only yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) pointed out the contribution which the trade unions had made to the life of Canada and Great Britain. He referred to the forces which were arrayed against the working men and women in their efforts to establish what they considered to be civilized and social working conditions. In these late days we now have a section of a bill being passed by this parliament which gives to the bankers of this country complete control over the daily lives of the men and women engaged by them. I do not think any argument can be made against the right of these employees to organize if they so desire. This bill gives enormous rights to the institutions in question and I think it is only fair that some right should be given to the employees. They should be permitted to organize if they so desire to bring about what they consider to be fair conditions of employment. They should be permitted to negotiate around a common table with their employers in order to establish conditions which they think are fair and equitable. It gives me great pleasure to move this amendment and I hope hon. members of the committee will realize its justness and soundness. In my opinion it is in conformity with present day thought and with the opinion expressed yesterday by the Prime Minister.

I am not going to go into details of the low wages paid by the banks to their employees as they are already on record. These wages are a disgrace to any civilized institution. They ask men from eighteen to twenty-three years of age to work for as low as $300 a year. Ledger-keepers from the ages of nineteen to forty-six years work for as low as $400 per year. Tellers from the ages of twenty-one to fifty-five years, receive $500 per year. Accountants from the ages of twenty-one to forty-nine years receive $700 a year. Managers of the ages from twenty-seven to sixty-four years receive $1,200. Women clerks and stenographers from seventeen to fifty years of age receive $300. I ask that this committee consider this amendment on its merits. I might point out in conclusion that the principle of allowing these employees to organize has been endorsed by the Trade and Labour Congress, the recognized mouthpiece of organized labour in this country, at many successive conventions.

Mr. RHODES: Although the section has been passed I am quite content to have it reopened so that my hon. friend may move his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment?

Mr. RHODES: This amendment or one very similar was moved when the act was under review ten years ago. It was moved by the present member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and it was pointed out to him by my predecessor, Mr. Fielding, that it was entirely unnecessary to have such an amendment in the act for the reason that the employees of banks already possess all the rights sought by this proposal. Notwithstanding that fact, and the want of logic in asking for such an amendment, seeing that these individuals already possess all these rights, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proceeded to move his motion in committee of the whole house when the bill was here. We are met with precisely the same situation this time. My hon. friend from Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) moved this same amendment, in the same terms, before the banking committee, in face of the experience and the logic of ten years ago, and he is here to-day in advocacy of it again.

Let me say to my hon. friend from East Hamilton that I am just as much concerned about the welfare of labour as he is, and he may be rather surprised to know that I am an advocate and always have been of labour organization and unionism. But the question of the rights of labour a century ago, resisted by statute, is quite another matter, because to-day those rights are recognized, and the privileges which my hon. friend seeks to give the employees of banks are enjoyed by them to-day, and have been for years. So that we are wasting the time of the house in playing on words when it is suggested that we are conferring a benefit on bank employees by adopting an amendment of this kind. The hon. gentleman speaks of the justice and soundness of this amendment. Well, any justice he seeks is already enjoyed by the employees of the banks; and so far as soundness is concerned, I submit with all deference and respect to the hon. gentleman that it is absolutely unsound to move an amendment to grant the employees of the banks something they already possess and which has never been denied them. In these circumstances I think it would be the part of wisdom to reject the amendment.

Mr. IRVINE: I anticipated that the minister or someone else would raise that argument. I am quite aware, and I am sure the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment was aware, that any group of people in this country have a right to organize. But that is not the whole story. It is just because of my experience of ten years ago and since that I am still interested in pressing that this amendment go into the Bank Act. We have passed in this act 170 clauses which protect the bankers, but we have not put in one single clause that protects the people who work for them. I know, as I am sure the minister knows, that while it is legal for any group of employees to organize, there are very effective means of preventing them from organizing, and those means have been put into operation in this country. I know of several instances where bank employees have endeavoured to organize into groups. But what happens? It is a simple matter to prevent them, since it is part of the bankers' policy to change their employees from one community to another, and so if in a city there is an organization of bank employees, a change is soon made and those who belong to such an organization are moved and scattered all over Canada. And this is done just as often as they try to organize.

I know that the bankers do not wish their employees to organize; they frankly say so and use all the pressure that is in their hands to prevent it. This section is after all only a pious wish; it does not compel anything. But if it were included in the act it would at least encourage the employees to organize and it would reveal to the bankers that the parliamentarians of the country would like to see their employees organize to protect their own interests.

I submit that since we have granted such great privileges to these banking institutions and protected and safeguarded them in 170 clauses in this act, it is not asking too much that at least we express in one section the willingness to permit the employees of the banks to organize in order to protect themselves. Surely we all agree that it is not a fair wage for a young man to work for a year for $300. We have seen statements by judges—and not long ago—in pronouncing judgment on some bank employee charged with perjury, that the wages paid in the circumstances were such as practically to compel the man charged to do what he did. In view of these circumstances, and others which I do not wish to discuss now in detail, there can be no doubt that there is need for organization on the part of the bank employees.

I do not doubt that the minister is as anxious to assist labour as I or anyone else; I do not question that. But it is a matter of one's point of view in this particular, and I know from experience with working men that it is easy to prevent the organization of bank employees.

Mr. VALLANCE: If the amendment is adopted, does the hon. gentleman suggest that it will prevent a bank from moving its staff around in order to prevent them from organizing?

Mr. IRVINE: No, but it would encourage all bank employees throughout Canada to organize, so that no matter where they were moved to they could immediately affiliate themselves with an organization.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Why not make it compulsory?

Mr. IRVINE: I would rather make it compulsory, but I want to make the adoption of the amendment a little easier. If it were passed as merely a pious wish it would not be as effective as if it were compulsory, but if my hon. friend will move an amendment to the amendment to make it compulsory—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): You believe in compulsion; I don't.

Mr. IRVINE: —I should be glad to support it. In order to get my hon. friend's support I left out the compulsory feature.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It means nothing as it is now.

Mr. RHODES: I do not wish to add anything further to what I have already said, except to express surprise that my hon. friend should ask parliament solemnly to take time to incorporate in a statute the expression of a pious wish. I do wish, however, specifically to take objection to his very sweeping statement that we have passed 170 sections for the benefit of the banks. The hon. gentleman was going very far afield when he made that statement. Let me say to him that the great majority of these sections are placed in the act for the protection of the people of Canada, and of the banking institutions themselves, for the people's protection. There are not one, two, three but dozens of penalty clauses and restrictions of a very serious nature upon the banks, and the tendency during each decennial revision has been to tighten up the Bank Act. It is true that certain privileges have been granted to the banks; they certainly must have some or they will not be able to do a banking business. I do not propose to enter into a discussion of that question, but it is very unfair and unjust that the impression should go abroad that we have spent our time for months past in the banking and commerce committee in preparing legislation which is designed to be of benefit to one section of the community, because that is not the case.

Mr. IRVINE: I also do not wish to be misunderstood. I quite agree that nominally a banking institution does and should give great service to the public, and I am not objecting to that phase of the matter. Nevertheless I still insist that the major portion of this legislation is in the interests of that institution, safeguarding it in every possible manner, and I feel there should be at least one clause which would favour the employees of the institution.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have no brief for the bankers. I might say in passing that I do not take second place even to the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) or the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), in regard to knowledge of labour organizations. If they can show me that the adoption of this amendment will make it easier or possible for bank employees to become organized, then I am all for the amendment. But as I see the matter—and I see it as the Minister of Finance has just stated—there is nothing now to prevent them from doing the very thing my hon. friend suggests they should have the right to do.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am not going to brag about my knowledge of labour organizations; it is not necesasry for me to do so to prove my point, but I do not see why this subclause 2 is required in this measure. It manifestly gives the bankers power to say that the wages they shall pay have the driving force of parliament behind them and the employees have no say in the matter. Subclause 2 reads:

> Such officers, clerks and servants may be paid such salaries and allowances as the directors or such officer, in the case of appointments made by him, consider necessary.

I think the fairer kind of clause that should have been inserted there would have been a provision upholding a fair wage policy based on living standards as enunciated in the Labour Gazette of Canada.

Mr. VALLANCE: If the hon. member makes such an amendment, I will support it.

Mr. MITCHELL: I disagree with the hon. member for Wetaskiwin. I do not want to restrict this simply to trade unions; I want to make it cover any form of labour organization.

Mr. HANBURY: The hon. member is not looking for compulsion.

Mr. MITCHELL: I know what I am talking about. What I want is the same rights given to the employees to organize; they should have in the legislation of this country just as many rights expressed as those the employer has. I believe the subclause is unnecessary; it smacks of chattel slavery. Where parliament provides what I might call the right of the employer by law to pay his employees whatever wages he deems necessary, that is a kind of dictatorship and not democracy. Frankly I think the amendment would at least give leadership to those employes, telling them they have in this legislation the same rights in connection with their working conditions as their employer has in connection with subclause 2 of this particular clause. This takes preference over the minimum wages laws in the provinces so far as such laws exist.

Mr. HANBURY: It cannot.

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 85, for the relief of Mary Mabel Taylor Johnson.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine) for Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 86, for the relief of Blanche Marjorie Short Hanson.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 87, for the relief of Fenwick William Smith.—Mr. Heaps.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) moved the second reading of Bill No. 91, intituled an act respecting shipping.

He said: In rising to say a few words on the second reading of this bill I think it is proper to give a brief history of the merchant shipping laws as they affect Canada.

When confederation was formed in 1867 Canadian shipping was governed almost entirely by the merchant shipping laws or acts of the United Kingdom, because they were expressed to apply throughout the whole empire. It is true that the English laws contained provisions giving authority to the legislature of any British possession or any part of the empire to enact legislation repealing or modifying any provision of the British law relating to ships registered in Canada, and to regulate the coasting laws of those possessions. But it was provided that these enactments should not come into operation until approved and confirmed by Her Majesty, and that all British ships should receive the same treatment.

Shortly after confederation Canada commenced to enact merchant shipping legislation of her own under the authority granted by the British North America Act, section 91, subsection 10, Navigation and Shipping. I should like to refer to some of these earlier acts:

1. Registration and classification of ships.
2. Masters' and mates' certificates.
3. Steamboat inspection, including engineers' certificates.
4. Shipping of seamen.
5. Shipping of seamen on inland water.
6. Wrecks, casualties and salvage, etc.

When the revision of the Canadian statutes took place in 1906 the commissioners who were entrusted with that revision had to gather all these separate acts and put them into one act which they called the Canada Shipping Act; and from them the Canada Shipping Act was amended from time to time and now is chapter 186 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927; our present legislation.

The British merchant shipping act, as I said a moment ago, required that when the laws enacted by Canada or any other dominion were different from those contained in the imperial act, they had to be reserved until they were confirmed and approved by His Majesty the King. This situation remained until 1926 when at the imperial conference of that year representations were made as to the limitations contained in the British law, and it was resolved at that conference that an expert committee and subconference be set up to "study, to consider and report on the principles which should govern, in the general interest, the practice and legislation relating to merchant shipping, in the various parts of the empire having regard to the changes in constitutional status and general legislation which have occurred since existing laws were enacted." This conference on the shipping laws met in London in 1929, and its recommendations were to the effect that the limiting provisions of the imperial statutes should be entirely wiped out. I am glad to say that this recommendation was given effect to in the statute of Westminster in 1931. Thus to-day, Mr. Speaker, for the first time Canada is entirely free to enact any legislation with regard to her shipping matters, and when necessary to give her legislation an extraterritorial effect without any reference to or without limitation by the imperial statutes. While the British merchant shipping acts were in effect in all dominions the result was, of course, a very great measure of uniformity. The different parts of the empire have thought it would be very wise to maintain as long as possible that uniformity. In 1931 the different parts of the empire came to an agreement which laid down the main lines along which legislation should be enacted in the different dominions. This convention is known as The British Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement, and covers briefly: (1) common statutes in ownership, registration, etc., of British ships; (2) standards of safety; (3) extraterritorial operation of laws; (4) equal treatment; (5) ships articles, internal discipline, and engagement and discharge of seamen; (6) certificates of officers; (7) shipping inquiries; (8) relief and repatriation of seamen; wages and effects of deceased seamen; (9) offences on board ship, and (10) general provisions.

It was in the light of the statute of Westminster and the shipping agreement to which I referred a moment ago that the Department of Marine undertook in 1932 and in the first part of 1933 to formulate a shipping code which when enacted would give Canada full power over Canadian ships wherever they might be, and over all other British and foreign ships when they were within our territory. In the new code of shipping which was drafted were incorporated the provisions of certain international conventions which were adopted in 1929 and 1930. I will refer particularly to two of those conventions to which almost all the nations of the world subscribed. I refer to the international convention for the safety of life at sea, which was adopted in 1929, and the international load line convention, which was adopted in 1930.

After engaging eminent counsel to assist them, the officers of the Department of Marine drafted a full revision of the Canada Shipping Act, following which a bill was presented to the Senate in 1933 by the Right Hon. Mr.

Meighen which was known as bill J. This bill was referred by the Senate to its standing committee on banking and commerce where a study of the subject was begun. That committee called before it all those parties interested in shipping, namely the grain merchants, the ship owners, the shipbuilders, the pilots, the engineers, in addition to all those associations interested in shipping. When that discussion was in progress a point of law was raised and strong representations were made against certain provisions of the bill which purported to impose upon British consuls and other officials in other countries certain duties when, in fact, Canada has no jurisdiction over those officials. After a careful study of the point we came to the conclusion it had been well taken, and owing to the proximity of the end of the session in 1933 Bill J had to be withdrawn. It is interesting to note that when the bill J was under discussion in the Senate, copies of its text were circulated not only to the shipping interests in Canada but also to the chamber of shipping in London, England, and to the mercantile marine department of the Board of Trade, London; and we invited comments and representations from all those bodies both in Canada and abroad. Then, at the end of the year 1933 and in the early stages of this year, the officials of the Department of Marine, after having received all those representations, redrafted the bill under the direction of the Department of Justice, and it was reintroduced into the Senate. The bill was presented, on March 7 as Bill E, and was again sponsored by the right hon. leader of that body. It was referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce which in turn set up a subcommittee. The subcommittee, with the help of Mr. W. F. O'Connor, K.C., acting for the Senate, and Mr. P. M. Anderson from the Department of Justice, made a careful study of the bill. May I add that this subcommittee sat throughout the Easter holidays and for some time following, during which time they made a very careful study of the legislation. The bill was amended in many respects in connection with important points, and as a result of the many changes made, it had to be reprinted for purposes of reporting to the full committee on banking and commerce. When that report was made the full committee heard again all the interested parties, the shipping associations, the ship owners, the shipbuilders, the labour associations and all those who wished to be heard. Following those hearings some further amendments were made, at the conclusion of which the bill was reported to the Senate and was adopted.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

I am pleased to state that after two months' study and discussion in the Senate the measure has been reported to this house in as complete form as possible. It comprises sixteen parts dealing with such varied matters as recording, registering and licensing; certificates of officers, masters and seamen, relief and repatriation of distressed seamen, sick mariners and marine hospitals, pilotage, safety, wrecks, salvage and investigation, lighthouses, buoys and beacons, harbours, harbour masters, port wardens, navigation, collisions, limitation of liability, coasting trade, delivery of goods, legal proceedings and so on.

This house will remember that when during the session of 1933, Bill J was withdrawn in the Senate a small bill was introduced in this house providing for certain amendments to the Canada Shipping Act respecting our coasting trade. That bill became law, and stood as chapter 52 of the statutes for 1932-33. May I add that the provisions of chapter 52 have been incorporated in the present bill.

I do not wish to close my remarks, Mr. Speaker, without paying tribute to the right hon. leader of the Senate, Mr. Meighen, and to the members of the Senate, and especially to the members of its standing committee on banking and commerce and the subcommitee for the tremendous work they have done in studying this measure. They had to spend weeks upon weeks in studying it, and so complete has their work been that they have rendered comparatively easy the task of this house in studying the measure. I am not an expert in maritime matters but I have perused and studied this bill with my officials and I can say that this measure is surely one of the most complete pieces of legislation ever presented to this house.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, at this particular time I am not going to raise any objection to the motion that this bill, letter E of the Senate, be now read a second time, but in the course of my remarks I shall give reasons why in my opinion it is impossible for the House of Commons at this late stage of the session to deal with this most important measure in a proper manner. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to say very much more on that point because the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) in the very instructive and able address which he gave in explaining this bill told us quite plainly that it is one of the most important bills that has ever been brought before this house.

The minister in the course of his remarks went into the history of the various shipping acts in this country and the British Isles since confederation, and I was very glad indeed to hear him admit that Canada has authority to regulate her own shipping. That is one further reason why at this particular time we should not hurriedly go over this bill and pass most important clauses without knowing exactly what we are doing. It would be much more in the interests of Canada and in the interests of business and shipping, I submit, if we deferred consideration of this measure to a later date.

As I said a moment ago, I have no particular objection to the bill now being read the second time, nor, if it is the wish of the ministry, do I object to the bill being moved into committee after its second reading. But I do respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that in the interests of Canadian shipping after the bill has been moved into committee we should not endeavour to consider in detail this very important measure at this stage of the session, a measure about which most of us know so very little; but rather the minister should move that the committee rise and report progress, and at a later date, if not this session perhaps at another, we shall be in a position to deal intelligently with the bill.

I was very glad to hear the minister say that he and his officials had gone over this very important bill. That is more, sir, than I have been able to do.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): More than any of us.

Mr. DUFF: I was just going to add that. I think I am voicing the sentiments of every member of this chamber when I say that perhaps outside of the minister himself no member of this House of Commons has had a proper opportunity, not to look into the bill thoroughly, not to consider it clause by clause and try to arrive at some conclusion as to whether the clauses are proper and right, but even to read the bill. And why? I am not blaming anybody, because, as the minister admitted, this bill has been in the Senate for two years. After the bill had been given to learned counsel for drafting in 1932 it was introduced in another place in this parliament, as the minister stated, in 1933, and the very fact that the Senate, which we will all admit, without attempting to be critical at all, has a little more time on its hands than we have in this chamber, took not only the whole of 1933 but practically the whole session of 1934 in an endeavour to study and amend this bill—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that references such as he is making to the Senate are not in order.

Mr. DUFF: I called it another place, Mr. Speaker, and the minister called it the Senate, so I think perhaps I should be allowed a little latitude. But of course I should know better, and perhaps that is the reason, sir, why you are calling me to order. But surely I am not out of order in discussing a bill which has come from the Senate to this house. If I am not allowed to do that there is nothing more for me to do but to sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: There was no such suggestion on my part.

Mr. DUFF: I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, that we understand each other. I was saying that in another place this bill has been considered by a committee in two sessions, and this session that committee spent almost five months in considering it, with the result that it was only on Wednesday of this week that the members of the commons were able to get a copy of it. Again I am not complaining, because if you will look at this voluminous document you will see that the printers must have had quite a job to get it ready after it had been passed by the Senate. The fact remains that this bulky document was put into the hands of members of parliament only on Wednesday morning last. Taking the advice of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), tendered to me a few days ago, instead of going to the moving pictures on Wednesday night I spent from six o'clock until twelve, and the intervening time since then when I was not attending to my other duties, in reading some of the sections of the bill.

The house will see that this important document contains 497 pages, and not only are there 497 pages, but there are 113 definitions and 719 sections.

This afternoon we dealt with a very important measure in connection with banking and commerce, and if I remember aright that bill contained about 170 sections. It took the members of the banking and commerce committee some two and a half months to study that bill and report upon it to the house. Surely then, Mr. Speaker, it is only fair for me to say that it would not be right or proper that a bill to which the minister himself attaches so much importance should proceed after its second reading on the eighth day of June, after being only two days in the hands of members of the House of Commons, to be considered in detail at this stage of the session.

In addition to the 497 pages, 113 definitions, and 719 sections, there are schedules in the bill extending from page 273 to 497; in other words, there are 224 pages of schedules alone. In order to make a thorough study of the bill it is necessary to compare each clause with the definition at the front of the bill. Then we must turn to the schedule pages to see exactly what effect the particular section will have on the schedules or the schedules upon the section. We are being asked to move into committee and endeavour to deal with this bill in a hurried manner. This bill is of vital importance to the shipping and business interests of this country .

The Minister of Marine stated that when this bill was before the Senate committee, both this year and last year, all interests connected with shipping had an opportunity to appear before that body. It is quite true that anyone who read the newspapers and saw that the bill was before that committee could come to this city and appear, but I think my hon. friend will agree that no one came to Ottawa to appear before the committee who was interested either in the building or the owning of wooden ships. I was here during both years and no one paid me the courtesy of asking me to give my limited knowledge and state what I thought about this bill. While the minister was right up to a certain point in stating that everyone had a chance to be heard—

Mr. DURANLEAU: I said everyone who wanted to be heard. I am sure that if my hon. friend had applied to the Senate he would have been heard.

Mr. DUFF: I think I made it clear that the minister had said that anyone who wanted to be heard could be heard. I said that there were a number of people who did not appear to be heard. One reason why they did not was that they did not know that the bill was up for second reading. The ordinary wooden shipbuilder and the owners of wooden ships could not afford to come here to appear before that committee.

This House of Commons has a duty to this country in connection with this particular bill. We owe a duty not only to the country but to the shipping interests. The members of this parliament representing constituencies from the Atlantic to the Pacific should be given ample opportunity to study the bill. They should not be asked to go over it hurriedly. No interests will suffer if this bill stands over until next year. My hon. friend dealt with the statute of Westminster. I am more interested in the Westminster confession of faith than I am in the statute of Westminster. Three or four years ago no one seemed to be in a hurry after the statute of Westminster was passed, and another six months or a year is not going to affect the shipping interests of this country. I think the minister will agree that there is no crying demand that this bill should be passed by parliament at this session. I am sure that when the shipping interests see the bill they will realize that a number of its clauses should be amended in the interests of Canadian shippers and Canadian ship owners.

The minister has said that this bill is an amalgamation of the Merchant Shipping Act of Great Britain and our own statute. Sections from both acts have been put into this bill, and every care should be taken to see that the sections taken from the British act do not injure the interests of our ship owners, our shipbuilders, our seamen, our pilots or anyone else who does business in Canada. We should be very careful how we treat this very important matter. It is impossible for us to go into committee on this bill as we would with an ordinary bill. Yesterday we voted on the third reading of the so-called marketing bill. Although it contained only twenty-two sections, it took from six weeks to two months for this house to give it proper consideration and be ready to vote. As a matter of arithmetic, if it took six weeks to deal with the marketing bill how long will it take to deal with this bill, which contains 497 pages made up of 716 sections, 113 definitions and 224 pages of schedules and appendices?

The minister has stated that there are sixteen important chapters dealing with the lives of seamen, with the property of merchants, with the property of ship owners, with pilots, and with the health of those who go down to the sea in ships. I was born in a seaport and have lived all my life among seamen. I am interested in a small way in shipping, and perhaps I may be allowed to say that in my opinion this is the most important bill which has come before parliament in several years. I ask the minister and the government not to ask parliament to pass this bill at the present session. Nothing will be lost by the delay, as the shipping interests are quite satisfied to wait another year so that parliament can deal properly with the matter. I have no particular objection to the second reading of the bill or its being moved into committee, but I respectfully suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), who is leading the house, and to the Minister of Marine, that the bill be allowed to stand over. This is June 8, and while hon. members are here to do their duty and pass any necessary legislation, in view of the fact that there is no crying need that the bill be passed at this particular time, I suggest that it be allowed to stand over. In the interests of every one concerned, I hope and trust that the minister will agree with what I have tried to place before the house.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) bears a distinguished title which has been given to him unanimously by his fellow members, and by virtue of that very title I think he can speak perhaps with greater authority on a measure of this kind than any other hon. member. He has indicated very clearly that he favours the principle of this bill, which is that Canada shall have a merchant shipping act of its own. Under these circumstances, may I submit that without tying ourselves to any one of the sections or any one of the numerous schedules to which my hon. friend has referred, it might be wise to give second reading to the bill on the distinct understanding that when we go into committee we will merely pass a section which is noncontroversial and then rise. The question as to whether it is or is not wise to attempt to pass the bill in toto at this session could be a matter for subsequent determination.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) make the suggestion he has. I have no doubt it will meet with the approval of my hon. friend, the admiral of the fishing fleet of North America. I know it will meet with mine because I am taking a very deep interest in the passage of this bill. I should like to see its adoption deferred until next session, so that we might go very closely into all its provisions.

The Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) has told us that very great care was taken in the preparation of the bill, but I would point out to him that that care which in my opinion should have been taken has not been exercised. The greater shipping interest may have been attended to; but there are other interests in the shipping line which have not been considered at all in this bill. For instance, no regard has been had to the conditions of the fishing fleet on the Atlantic coast, and there are several reasons why particular attention should be given to that fleet in this bill. I do not wish to discuss any section of the bill; I am pointing this out simply to support the argument put forward by my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) that the bill should go over for one year so that we might be in a position to go into it more thoroughly. To support that contention, let me point out that if this bill goes through as it stands there are certain sections of it which will cripple the fishing fleet of the Atlantic, and the coastal fleet especially.

There is in the bill a clause which defines steamers and steamships. Steamers and steamships include vessels propelled by auxiliary machinery. There are hundreds of fishing vessels equipped with auxiliary machinery and they will come under that provision, so that the coastal and fishing services will be affected. The result will be that every man who for the last ten, fifteen, twenty or thirty years has been able to command a vessel of that kind will be debarred from doing so. He must obtain a master's certificate; he must have qualifications tantamount to the qualifications required to ensure the safety of ships carrying passengers. If that provision goes through as it stands, then you are crippling the fishing fleet on the Atlantic coast, and I do not know that you are not doing the same thing as regards the Pacific coast. I speak of the Atlantic coast because I am better acquainted with it and know the conditions that prevail there.

We should like to have an opportunity of consulting our people engaged in that industry before we as their representatives agree to the passage of this bill as it stands, and I think the bill would make greater progress if the minister would carry out the suggestion made by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough and defer its adoption. Let us have the second reading; I am not opposed to that, and I will not oppose the principle of the bill. But I am opposed and very strongly opposed to certain sections of it which in my opinion should be amended. But in trying to amend them I am not in a position to give to the house the information necessary to provide proper protection for the fishing fleet; I cannot give that information without having had an opportunity to consult those more directly interested in the fishing industry.

I will point out another fault I find with this bill as I go through it hurriedly. I find that, in respect to the registration system, it conflicts with the regulations of the Fisheries department. In this regard I hold that the interests of the fishermen and of the fishing industry have not been looked into with sufficient care in the preparation of the bill, so as to have the regulations of the Department of Fisheries conform with the bill, or to meet conditions, unavoidable in the past, which exist to-day and whereby fishermen entitled to bounties, owners of vessels, can be debarred from the enjoyment of those bounties owing to the fact that proper registration or proper transfer from one owner to another, in a great many instances, apparently has not been carried out.

Some provision should be made in this bill by which those entitled to bounty, those who find themselves in the position of having obtained the ownership of vessels under certain circumstances, shall have their interests safeguarded—for example, in cases of bankruptcy where, the liquidator not knowing the laws of Canada, liquidation has taken place through liquidators residing in England, representing companies established there one hundred years ago, with branches in Canada. These people established themselves in Canada along the Atlantic coast and, failing year by year, finally went into bankruptcy; but proper transfers were never made, so that the owners to-day do not know whether they legally own their vessels or not. They cannot obtain proper transfers from the liquidators, and there are hundreds of such cases.

If this bill had been as carefully looked into as it should have been, if the effect of registration had been compared with the regulations of the Fisheries department governing the payment of bounties, I am sure that some action would have been taken by the minister to meet the difficulty that exists to-day. It is an injustice to these fishermen; they are suffering more through the fault of the liquidators. If this aspect of the matter had been carefully investigated, I am sure that there would be in this bill some provision that would protect these people and entitle them to their regular bounties as if they were the original owners or held the original registration.

For these reasons I plead, with the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, on behalf of the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast, that the adoption of this bill be deferred for a year in order to give to those interested in it an opportunity of studying the measure more carefully, so that we may be in a position to tell the house exactly what is necessary to protect the people engaged in this very hazardous industry.

[Mr. Venoit.]

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): As briefly and cogently as possible, I wish to identify myself with the suggestion made by the two hon. members who have preceded me. The Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) gave a very excellent introduction to the second reading of this measure. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) and the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) have spoken in the interests of the industry on the Atlantic coast, and I wish to inform the minister that I have definite and specific representations from the shipping interests of the Pacific coast in opposition to many of the clauses of this bill. I do not think I will worry the house at the present time going into these representations in detail; I will reserve that for a future occasion. In a word or two however I wish to support the representations made by my two colleagues in impressing upon the minister the absolute necessity of deferring discussion in committee of the whole of this peculiar Anthony Adverse of legislative effort with which he has presented us at the eleventh hour of the session. This bill touches every shipping interest in the dominion on both the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. If ever a measure came into the house deserving the earnest and sincere study of everyone who desires to advance the shipping industry of this country, we have it in this bulky legislation given to us only two days ago. If ever a special committee were required to study every single clause, phrase and paragraph, and ever possible implication and consequence of the various features of this measure, one is needed in regard to the legislation we have before us now. With all due respect, after a very strenuous session so far when we have given much consideration to minor pieces of legislation, it is unfair on the part of the government to ask the house in committee of the whole to discuss this measure just because it has received some study by a committee of another house. My information is that this bill after receiving such consideration was passed by another house practically in bulk without any study being given to the various clauses. In justice to constituents of mine who have important shipping interests in Vancouver, British Columbia, I suggest it is not fair to ask us to deal in committee of the whole with this measure at the present time practically at the eleventh hour of the session and we should, as the minister says, pass the second reading, thus showing that we favour the principle of the bill, then pass one clause and at the next session of parliament appoint a committee on shipping to go into every single phrase, paragraph and clause of this bill so that a measure may be produced that will be a monument to whatever parliament is in existence at that time.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) whether it is the intention to have this bill proclaimed this present year, or will it be subject to proclamation by the government later?

Mr. RHODES: I am not in a position to answer that question, because obviously the answer lies with parliament itself as to what it may determine to do.

Mr. CANTLEY: I presume the government has some policy so far as that is concerned. I understood the object of introducing this bill this year was to provide a measure that might be discussed by the various dominions of the empire, with the purpose eventually of producing legislation which would apply equally to all the dominions; this to be simply the nucleus of an act which the representatives of Canada could discuss with representatives of the other dominions.

Mr. VENIOT: And thus have uniformity of legislation.

Mr. CANTLEY: Whether that be so or not, I do not know, but I hope that is the situation. I agree with the two hon. members from the maritimes who have spoken in regard to some of the provisions of the bill. For instance, there is the matter of licensing masters of coasters. Fifty or sixty years ago, indeed, before and I think after confederation, a man who had served as mate and afterwards as captain for a series of years was given a certificate of servitude which enabled him to command our vessels on the high seas in any quarter of the globe. Some similar provision should be applied now so far as coasting and fishing vessels are concerned, whither sail or power propelled, of say less than three or four hundred tons. That, to my mind, is absolutely essential. I know men, and my two hon. friends opposite know more, who have commanded vessels for ten, fifteen or twenty years, men of forty or fifty years of age who have had splendid records. If they are asked to pass an examination in regard to eyesight, a placard is put up fifteen or twenty feet away and they are requested to tell what the lettering on it is. They cannot without the aid of glasses do that, but they can see a ship half a mile or a mile and a half away at sea and say what flag she carries. Those are practical difficulties that ought to be taken into consideration in any legislation of this kind, because they are vital to the whole purpose of the bill.

If I understood the minister aright when he introduced the bill, he stated that it was the intention of the government to provide legislation which would control the shipping of Canada in all the ports of the world, or words to that effect. Might I remind the minister that before that can be effected it will be necessary for Canada to have consuls in all the great ports of the world. Those we have not got. We may talk as much as we please and as long as we like about being a nation, but until we have consuls in all or at least the principal ports of the world we are not able to exercise that sovereignty to which he referred. For instance, a Nova Scotia ship goes down to South America. She arrives at say the port of Rio de Janeiro. She has, we will say, three seamen in irons who have refused duty. What is she going to do with them? The captain wants them dealt with. He cannot on his own account put them into gaol in Rio de Janeiro. He has to apply to the British consul or to the British minister in that port. It is idle to talk about our being a sovereign nation when we are in that position. Until we are in the position of a sovereign nation with our own consular officers in foreign ports he will not be able, nor will this government nor parliament be able, to do what the minister suggests, that is control, as he has suggested, our shipping in foreign waters. Those are matters which are vital and should be properly dealt with by this bill.

I have read a good many of the clauses. Some are all right; others objectionable, and, I have no doubt, will be amended or deleted before the bill passes the house. But, Mr. Speaker, I have not been very much exercised over this legislation by reason of the fact to which I have already referred, namely, that I presumed it was only a basis for discussion with the other component parts of the empire, and that as a result of that discussion a new measure would later be brought down to the house. If that view is correct I have nothing further to say in regard to the bill.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks regarding this bill and join with the other speakers who have suggested that it had better be delayed for another year. I must first of all, like the others, compliment the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) on his presentation of this legislation. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) suggest that perhaps it might be well to allow the bill to go into committee and then consider the advisability of postponing it for another year.

I might point out to the house that since the bill has been under discussion in the Senate I have received representations from many, including a captain who is also a port warden and who has given this matter a great deal of consideration. So serious does he deem one of the clauses in this bill that he believes—and I agree with him—the measure should go to a committee of the house for discussion of this one clause alone, because he maintains that if clause 100 in the shape in which it has come from the Senate passes the house, it will add fifty per cent to the freight dues on all ships taking lumber from Vancouver or Prince Rupert or New Westminster or any other port in British Columbia. He says that it will also affect those ships in going through the Panama canal to Great Britain. Surely, if the information given to me is correct—I hold the brief in my hand; every phase of the matter has been gone into—that alone should make the government hesitate before attempting to have this bill pass through the house in committee of the whole.

Then questions are dealt with affecting seamen—seamen stranded on foreign shores, seamen in hospital, sick mariners' fund, the hiring and firing of seamen. I am in doubt as to whether the representatives of the seamen have been heard in these matters. When one looks over the various clauses affecting them and considers that the house is being asked to pass this bill in committee of the whole, I cannot but rise and protest. It would be wiser to have the bill referred to the committee of the whole house, perhaps at some other session.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): It would be presumptuous for one like myself, who has lived most of his life half way between the Atlantic and the Pacific, to enter into a detailed discussion of this bill. There is however one section which affects those living on the prairies. The minister has referred to the fact that last year when the whole bill was withdrawn, a short bill was introduced, dealing with the protection of labour and with the coasting trade on the great lakes. That bill was passed, but my understanding was that it had never been proclaimed. The minister has stated that that bill is now the law of the land.

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. DURANLEAU: I said that the law, chapter 52 of the statutes of 1933, was incorporated in this bill.

Mr. BROWN: Yes, but I understood the minister to say the bill we passed last year was now the law of the land.

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. BROWN: Then I was right in my understanding that the bill has never been actually brought into force. It was really to find that out definitely that I rose.

Section 663 is the one that we prairie people are particularly interested in, and if we give time to the bill in proportion to that given to some other legislation, as the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) suggested, I do not suppose we should reach that section until about the end of August. However, if it comes before the committee we shall be prepared to make recommendations.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr Speaker, I rise only to endorse briefly in general and very heartily the requests and suggestions of delay that have been made from this side of the house, especially the remarks of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff), although I do not agree with him that it should be put into committee even at the present time, for reasons I shall give in a moment.

Turning aside for an instant to the remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot), he said there would be trouble in granting the bonus to the fishermen in the maritime provinces on account of the regulations in this bill in respect to registration. I hardly anticipate that would be as serious as he suggests, because if my recollection is right, and I am fairly certain it is, the act of 1882 providing for that bounty said that the money should be allocated according to regulations established by the Minister of Marine. Therefore if the existing regulations do not coincide with some registration features of this bill it would be easy to remake the regulations. That naturally suggests that the opportunity is overripe, when those regulations are being made, to undo a wrong that has been done to British Columbia for many years and make provision for our fishermen on the Pacific coast to share in that bounty the same as the Atlantic men. They are absolutely entitled to it by the law of the land, and they have been unjustly deprived by the malformation, so to speak, of these regulations. I shall not detain the house longer on that matter, because it is too obvious and the necessity for it too crying to require elaboration.

I do not think we should pass the second reading of this bill unless we have the positive assurance that it will go no further this year. I accept the ever present cordiality of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and we recognize his integrity, but he did not make a definite promise. If he had I would have been satisfied, but I recall that some weeks ago we thought we had reason to believe—perhaps we were deceiving ourselves—that we would succeed in the agitation we were making to have the marketing bill sent to a select committee. But there was a little noise and confusion one day and we found a motion was put to go into committee and when we were in committee of the whole and began to protest we were told plainly that we had lost our opportunity, the bill was in committee and was going to stay there; and stay there it did, with an enormous waste of time that we would be very sorry to see duplicated in respect of this bill.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) said that he had received many objections from the Pacific coast. I think objections would be much more numerous if people concerned really knew what the bill means, but as no one knows what it means, of course it is impossible for them to make very urgent objections. Among others I am only going to quote one, just to give an idea of the futility of men even as well informed as we are supposed to be, dealing with this matter in committee of the whole and not being able to have technical advisers, as we could in select committee. Here is one request I have received. These people say:

> We request that the present method of computing the nominal horse power of propelling engines be discontinued, and brake or shaft horse power be substituted for all turbine and internal combustion engines, and indicated horse power for all reciprocating steam engines.

How many men are there in this house who really know what that means, let alone are able to pass an intelligent opinion as to how it should be brought about? Certainly I am not.

Another aspect of the matter is this: are we to pass this legislation or is it to be passed in a place that I must leave nameless? After all I think the House of Commons is responsible for passing legislation. The minister says it is very complete, that they have studied it for years. But we remember a former bill that was studied at great length in another place, and no doubt they gave it much care and attention—the bill connected with the amalgamation of railways. When it was brought here the same eulogistic remarks were made, that we did not need to do much more than sign our names because it had been so thoroughly considered by these able elder statesmen, but when the bill finally passed this house its own mother would not have known it, so different was it from when it left the other chamber. So we must not take it for granted that because it has been seriously and earnestly considered in another place it is going to receive unanimous support in this house. It is all very well to pass divorce bills and matters of that kind; we can afford to take a chance on that, but these are serious things.

Then the minister says that it was open to any of us who were interested to go to the other place. Well, that sounds reasonable, but it is not so reasonable as it sounds. In the first place we have about enough to do attending committees of this house; are we to undertake the duty of attending senate committees? Another thing, we have not facilities for knowing when those committees meet. And I do not know that we would be particularly welcome if we went there and butted into their deliberations, as the expression is. If we wished to give evidence we would be graciously received, but as far as taking part in the committee is concerned, I would not ask it for one thing; it is their committee and it would not be for us to go there and express opinions and take part in the voting.

Then again we are told that there have been important changes made by the committee and subcommittee in another house. What were those changes? No one is able to tell us I sent to another chamber this afternoon and asked for the copy of the committee proceedings, where all the serious consideration had been given, in order that I might inform myself. I wanted to know who these various people are that we are told about, from everywhere except British Columbia apparently, who gave such voluminous evidence. The answer I received was that the evidence taken before the Senate committee, that committee of another place, had not been printed and therefore was not accessible to me. I do not know what took place. I do not know what arguments were used; they may have been good or they may have been bad. They may have been ex parte arguments. The witnesses are gone—I do not know where. I have no means of getting that information. I simply have to take the minister's word that a number of worthy people gave evidence, but we do not know any more than does the man in the moon what evidence they gave. We can only guess as to what happened by looking at the bill now before us and comparing it with what was introduced in the Senate. Is that a desirable condition, and are we to be guided simply by that? I know that every man who rises in his place in this committee and finds fault with a section will be told that it was carefully considered in another place, a place where they had all the advantages of hearing witnesses, and that we must be satisfied. I will not accept that doctrine as a guide in the consideration of this bill. I want to know at least something about what we are doing. Hon. members who have spoken have indicated the time it would take to carry this bill through committee of the whole this session if it is given anything like proper consideration. It is impossible at this time in the session to have the bill placed before the committee on marine and fisheries; it is too late to get witnesses. Let it pass second reading, if we must. Then let us take the bill home, where people will be able to give us advice. Then early next session let us send it to the marine and fisheries committee, instead of trying to do anything more with it at this time.

I have a note before me which indicates that some people living at remote distances sent written recommendations to the committee which sat in another place. We have not those communications, and will not be able to have them on the floor of the house. If we had the services of technical men before the marine committee we could handle the bill very much more quickly, but it is far too late to do that now, and if that procedure is not followed a gross injustice will be perpetrated. I am merely duplicating the remarks which have been better expressed by other hon. members, but I could sum up what I have said by stating simply that any further procedure at this time would amount to a serious injustice. There are features in this bill the meaning of which is not clear; we may find out after it is too late, and there would be a howl go up which would bring us into disgrace.

The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) asked if the bill was going to be brought into effect this year. There is a section of the bill—and I happened to glance at it when I was browsing through it— stipulating that the government may bring the whole bill into effect when and if they like, or they may bring any part of it into effect. Well now, a reaction which would be extremely undesirable may arise in that connection. One part may be brought in which would conflict with something else. As the hon. member for Pictou has indicated, a steamer may reach South America and then find that a particular section under which it is operating has been brought into effect, and some other section of equal moment has not been brought into effect. I decline absolutely to accept the approval of any other body, nor am I willing to take any responsibility for the passing of this bill, if in the present session it is jammed through this House of Commons.

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, before the minister replies I should like to take only one moment to add my support to the respresentations made by the various members who have suggested that this legislation should be held over until next year. While it is true, or at least altogether likely, that much consideration has been given to the drafting of the bill, and that it has been very carefully studied by the committee in another place, still I think it is unfair for the government at this time to expect hon. members to accept legislation of this type and magnitude, really a whole library of legislation, without taking time to give it consideration. The government should tell the house that it wants hon. members to go through this measure clause by clause, to give it the consideration which the people of Canada expect hon. members to give to legislation handed down from another place, and to ascertain whether it is properly or improperly drafted. I make a very strong representation to the government in support of hon. members who have already said that in fairness to this House of Commons and in fairness to our sense of responsibility to our constituents and to the people of Canada as a whole we should not be asked to attach our names to this measure in the present session, if we hope to get home before Christmas.

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with the former speakers, and state that this legislation is too bulky and brought down too late in the session to receive action from this chamber. I have received several representations from fishermen and shipping interests on the Pacific coast saying that they would like to have copies of the bill so that they may study it and make themselves available to give information affecting the Pacific coast. I understand that the present measure is based on British legislation passed a number of years ago, in days when there were different marine methods, and before the development of diesel and gas engines. Developments in late years have been so great it is quite possible that this measure based on legislation passed years ago would not suit present day needs.

I strongly urge that this matter be referred to a committee to sit at the next session, so that they may be in a position to obtain the necessary information applying to modern shipping.

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, from this corner of the house I wish to say exactly the same as other hon. members have been saying. This is not a bill, it is an encyclopaedia, and if we give proportionately as much time to its consideration as we did to consideration of the marketing bill we will be here until next session, and probably the session after that. And if a constitutional problem should happen to crop up in the present measure we may be still longer. I think sound advice has been given to the government. I have received a number of representations from organizations on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts concerning features in this bill to which certain interests are strenuously opposed. Then, there are other sections in the bill which vitally affect the welfare of the people on the prairies who ship via the great lakes. Certainly the government would be well advised if they accepted the advice of hon. members on this side of the house and committed the bill to a committee to sit next session—of course assuming that the government will be here next year.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): It will be.

Mr. MITCHELL: I think so myself; however, I shall not discuss that point.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): You and I know, anyway.

Mr. MITCHELL: If the matter were placed before a committee those who understand shipping and its technical ramifications could appear and give advice concerning the bill.

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I understand the bill now before the house has not been submitted to the provinces for their consideration. Bearing in mind the fact that the province of Quebec has full charge of its fisheries, and the further fact that the pilot services for the lower St. Lawrence as well as the upper St. Lawrence are materially affected in this new bill, I wish to the best of my ability to support the representations which have been made by hon. members who have preceded me in this debate. I believe it would be quite unfair to consider this bill at the present session, first because the province of Quebec has not had a chance to peruse it and, secondly, because hon. members of this house have not had a chance to study it clause by clause.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, may I say that the same difficulty arose in another house. When the bill was reported and before it had been read by hon. members the same objections were made. But after two days had elapsed and hon. members had read the bill they came to the conclusion it was not so complicated, and with perhaps slight amendment could be adopted, and it was. I am prepared to accept the suggestion made by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), because every hon. member accepts the principle of the bill. I am willing to proceed to committee of the whole and have the first clause adopted, and then move that the committee rise.

Mr. VENIOT: That is all right.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I refer to the title, The Canada Shipping Act, 1934.

Mr. NEILL: And what then?

Mr. DURANLEAU: If no hon. member has any objection to the title, we may pass that clause and then I would move that the committee rise. But in the meantime I would invite my hon. friends to take this volume home with them—

Mr. FAFARD: It is a library.

Mr. DURANLEAU: —and to pass their week-end studying it. It is not so complicated after all.

Mr. VENIOT: Have mercy upon us, Mr. Minister.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are perhaps not more than twenty-five clauses on which discussion would take place in committee of the whole. There are, for instance, some clauses about pilotage, some about the size and measurement of ships, decks, and so on, but surely there will be no objection to eighty per cent of the clauses of the bill, which is in part a reproduction of the merchant shipping acts which are the result of centuries of experience in England and the British Empire. The provisions that were adopted by various international conferences, the load line convention and the convention for safety of life at sea, have been reproduced in this bill, and those provisions are very voluminous. These conventions were adhered to by Canada and practically all the countries of the world, and we had to embody them in this bill. I am sure that when my hon. friends have devoted a few hours to a study of the bill—

Mr. FAFARD: It will take a week.

Mr. DURANLEAU: No. I held the same view when the bill came to me, but if my hon. friend from Rimouski will take the trouble to spend a few hours on the bill I think he will come to the conclusion that it should be considered in committee of the whole house and be adopted at this session.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It will take a week to read it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As was stated a few moments ago by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley), if we pass the bill this session it will be an inducement to all the other parts of the empire to adopt similar legislation. When I hear some hon. gentlemen say that this bill is not an urgent one, I desire to recall that ever since I became Minister of Marine in 1930 I have had queries from the other side of the house at every session, even at the first short session in September 1930, asking when a full revision of the Canada Shipping Act was to be brought down. Those queries were repeated at every session, and I gathered from that, that everybody was anxious that this law should be enacted in the interests of Canada. I invite my hon. friends to peruse the bill over the week-end, and then I am sure they will come back next week with an entirely different opinion. I assure my hon. friends that if we go on with the bill this session every opportunity will be given to every member to discuss every clause of the bill if that is desired, but I do not think it will be necessary.

Mr. VENIOT: If the minister wants us to read this bill over the week-end what shall we do on Sunday without church?

Mr. DURANLEAU: You can go to mass in the morning and then start reading.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. REID: I know it is not the desire of the committee to raise any controversy tonight, but there is one question which I think the minister might well answer. In the bill of last year, letter J of the Senate, there were 821 sections, and in this new bill there are 719 sections, or 102 sections fewer. Would the minister be good enough to explain just what happened? Was there an amalgamation of some sections?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think that a great number of the sections of the bill J of last year have been embodied in other sections of this bill as subsections. My hon. friend will notice that a great number of the sections cover one or two pages, and contain five or six or seven subsections. That is the reason for the sections being fewer in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Mr. NEILL: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that if we let this section through we are sunk; we are committed to putting the whole bill through. The minister was very pleasant in his manner of explaining things, but the real iron hand beneath the silken glove was evident. He does intend to go on with this bill, and he told the Scotchmen to read it on the sabbath day, more shame to him! He said he would adopt the suggestion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) but the Minister of Finance did not go any further than to suggest adjourning the discussion and then considering the situation. If he is going to consider it, why not do the considering now? We all know that this section is the only one on which we can have any general discussion. Once we pass this, we can be held by the rules to a definite and particular section, and we cannot go beyond the scope of that particular section. In that way we shall be compelled to go right through the bill. The minister has not made any promise that he will do anything else. I think we would be ill advised, considering the experience we have had with other matters, if we passed even this first section unless we can get a clear understanding along the lines suggested. If the minister is not able to say anything definite before consulting with his colleagues, let us adjourn now. It is quite sufficient to go into committee and then report progress. That keeps the procedure proper, and then the minister can discuss the situation with his colleagues and announce his intention when the bill comes before us again. But we should not pass this first section, which would preclude us from any general discussion, without knowing where we get off at.

Mr. DUFF: There is something in what my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) says. I would suggest that clause 1 stand, and that we take up clause 2, and pass the first subsection of it. I mention that because of the closeness of the definition to my own title. Subsection 1 reads:

"The Admiralty" means the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom for the time being, or the commissioners for the time being for executing the office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom.

We can pass that.

Mr. RHODES: The suggestion of the lord high admiral of the opposition is entirely acceptable. I can assure my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni that there was no idea in the mind of the government to take any advantage, either technical or otherwise, in calling the first section of the bill. I submit that the rights of the house and the committee are preserved in precisely the same manner whether the section is passed or not passed, but I accept without question the suggestion of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister stated that there had been a demand for this legislation, and he based his statement upon the many inquiries he had received from the members of the house during the past three or four years as to when this bill was to be brought down.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This legislation has been demanded not only in this house, but has been requested by shipping interests all over the country.

Mr. HANBURY: I would suggest to the minister that a request did not come from the members of the house that a bill of this size should be brought down at this stage of the session, what we all hope will be the dying hours of the session. I again suggest to the minister that if the bill is to be given the consideration it deserves the government should very seriously consider withdrawing it for this session.

Section stands.

On section 2—Definitions.

The CHAIRMAN: We are on subsection 1 of section 2. Shall the subsection carry?

Subsection agreed to.

Progress reported.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Monday, June 4, consideration in committee of Bill No. 89, to amend and consolidate the Excise Act—Mr. Matthews—Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

On section 124—Penalties belong to crown.

Mr. MATTHEWS: When this bill was in committee a few days ago all the sections were passed with the exception of some in which it was suggested that the governor in council should be substituted for the minister. I think this suggestion was made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and in conformity with it I have prepared amendments covering sections 124, 126, 127, 155, 156, 159, 161, 180, 216, 235, 236 and 262. I shall ask my colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) to move the amendment in connection with this section.

Mr. MANION: I move:

That subsection 1 of section 124 of the bill to amend and consolidate the Excise Act be struck out and the following substituted therefor:—

124 (1). All penalties and forfeitures under this act shall belong to His Majesty for the public uses of Canada.

Provided that—

(a) the proceeds of any such penalties and forfeitures may, under such regulations as the governor in council may from time to time prescribe in that behalf, be distributed in whole or in part and may be divided between and paid to any officer and any person giving information or otherwise aiding in effecting a seizure resulting in any such penalty or forfeiture;

(b) the governor in council may by such regulations prescribe the manner in which the proceeds of penalties and forfeitures shall be distributed and may provide for payment of awards forthwith after seizure of goods or the preferring of charges where goods are not seized, based upon the value of the goods seized, the amount of excise duty evaded, the penalties imposable upon any person guilty of any violation of this act, as the case may be, and not dependent upon forfeiture or the proceeds of forfeiture.

Mr. EULER: I should like to ask the minister how this change compares with the law as it is now.

Mr. MATTHEWS: This section corresponds to section 133 of the existing act which has been rewritten to bring the excise act into line with the practice long ago adopted under the Customs Act of paying for information received if such information results in conviction and the imposition of penalties even though the net proceeds may be a loss. That is, the fine is not paid; the convicted person may prefer to serve time, or the necessary expenses may exceed the amount realized.

Mr. VENIOT: Do I understand from the minister that this is to make this section the same as the section in the Customs Act?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes, it makes it conform to the section in that act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I realize that this provision is in the statutes, but it seems to me to be a vicious principle to give a portion of the fine to an official under salary and permanently employed for the purpose of detecting evasions of the customs or excise acts. I can understand that an outside informer who assists in obtaining a conviction might be entitled to some portion of the fine, but I cannot understand why an individual who is paid for that job—

Mr. VENIOT: Not always.

Mr .STEWART (Edmonton): Not always. As it now stands a permanent salaried officer will be entitled to a portion of the fine if he secures a conviction. I am just asking the minister if he is considering this matter.

Mr. MATTHEWS: That matter has received very careful consideration. Ever since 1867 the Customs Act has contained a similar clause in connection with moieties, and it is now being placed in this bill. It will be noted that the section as it now reads confers the power on the governor in council—

Mr .STEWART (Edmonton): That is not the point; my point is the principle of paying a portion of the fine to a paid official of the department.

Mr. MATTHEWS: It must be remembered that the governor in council can decide at any time whether a moiety shall be paid. At the present time I think it would be better to pass this clause in order to have it in conformity with the Customs Act which has been in force so long. If I may say so, I believe this whole question of moiety payments may receive consideration before the Customs Act is amended and consolidated, which may happen within a measurable time.

Mr. VENIOT: In my time I have been an officer in the customs and excise, and when it is said that an officer receiving salary on full time should not receive any consideration in the matter of seizures, I think that is going a little too far. An officer on full time in the customs and excise, during the time I was in the service, received his salary and his hours were defined—nine o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon. Those were the hours for which he was paid. Very frequently in those days seizures were made at all hours during the twenty-four, and they were made principally at night. I served for eleven years in the customs and excise, and in those days a customs officer had to do inland revenue service—excise service—without pay. He received pay for his service as collector of customs and then if he did work after hours for the excise and inland he received a certain small commission that hardly compensated him for the time he put in. Having had considerable experience in matters of seizure, I say this to the committee. You are doing right when you provide that an officer who is zealous in carrying out his duties should receive a part of the fine. When I was in the service, an officer who made any seizure did not undertake a task as hazardous as the task that is now involved. Many times in the last few years, in the last eight or ten years, an officer to carry out what he deemed to be his duty had to risk his life, and he is to-day doing so. Perhaps members of the committee have no idea of what a seizing officer who wishes to be zealous in the discharge of his duty is up against when he comes across smugglers and hi-jackers. Those who have had experience in that line as I have had will feel it an injustice, I am sure, to cut off the extra remuneration, because, to-day more than at any time in my experience, the officer is risking his llfe every twenty-four hours he is after smugglers.

Mr. EULER: With regard to the moiety system I must admit that I was never particularly convinced of the propriety of it, although it has its qualifications as outlined by the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot). I should think that the minister might very well reconsider the whole question, and possibly it might be arranged on a somewhat different basis, though I have no particular suggestion to offer at the moment. I think he is right when he desires to put the administration of the act, so far as moieties are concerned, on the same basis as the Customs Act. I think also that it is time the Customs Act was revised, and when that is done the two acts, the excise act and the act that is being revised now, should be brought entirely into conformity.

With regard to the moiety system I want to ask the minister this question. I believe that in the customs preventive service, now in the hands of the mounted police, the system of distributing moieties has been changed; instead of the individual receiving the moiety, I understand that the amount is paid into a central fund and then distributed among the various officers of the force whether or not they had any part in the particular seizure. Can the minister explain more in detail just how that is working out, and whether it makes for better service and satisfaction among the members of the force?

Another question. In my recollection, which is none too good, cases would come up where an officer would make a seizure of what would ordinarily be a very valuable cargo of alcohol or whisky or some other liquor, and under the regulations of the department this valuable commodity would be destroyed, and there would be nothing on which to base the value of the moiety. Is there any change in that regard? I always felt at that time that, when a person had made the seizure—it might not have been the officer at all but a layman assisting in making the seizure—and a valuable cargo of liquor had been destroyed under the regulations of the department, there being in consequence no value on which to base the moiety, there should be some means of compensating the man who had made the seizure for the work he had done.

Mr. MATTHEWS: As to the first question, there is a central fund and the amount at the end of the year is distributed among the officers. As regards the second question, where there is no real value in the goods seized, authority is given to make an allowance up to $500.

Mr. EULER: This new arrangement of distribution applies to both excise and customs?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes.

Mr. REID: Now that the question of moieties has been brought up, I think it would be well to consider the position of municipalities in this connection. In the municipality I reside in, very often it is the municipal police who make both seizure and charge, and I think it is a little unfair that no part of the fine should go to the municipality. Instead, part of it goes to the informer and part to the dominion government, and where there is imprisonment for a term of less than two years the province and the municipality have to pay for the prisoner's upkeep in gaol. Of course, if it is over two years, he goes to the penitentiary under federal jurisdiction. I think it would be well to consider the position of municipalities, such as there are in British Columbia, whose officers make and have made seizures, but the fines in connection with which go to the federal government, while the cost of policing is borne entirely by the municipality. Rather than have the whole of the moiety go to the officer, I think part of it should go to the municipality that is responsible for policing and seizure.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not remember whether there is any provision in the Customs Act whereby the department has paid for the upkeep of a prisoner during the period of his incarceration.

Mr. MATTHEWS: There is no such provision.

Mr. VENIOT: Well, the federal government does not go as far as provincial governments do in carrying out provincial liquor acts. Where a person is convicted for violating the provincial liquor law and confined to the county gaol, they make arrangements with the municipality to pay the board, so to speak, of the individual so incarcerated. I have often thought lately whether it was fair for the dominion government to make an arrest for a violation of the customs or the excise act, to confine the person convicted to prison for a period running, say from three to fifteen months, and to allow the municipality to pay the expenses of the upkeep of that individual in gaol. In order to relieve the municipalities to a certain extent, especially during these hard times, we ought to make some provision whereby in the case of a person convicted under this or the customs act and imprisoned, the department concerned of the federal government should at least look after the expense of that individual to the county while he is in the county gaol. Will the minister take that into consideration?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Certainly.

Mr. MacLEAN: I think this question of paying a moiety to the informer is really embodying a very vicious system in this measure that is being put through. Of course the provision has always been there, but it is absolutely unfair for the government to be a party to paying a moiety of a fine to an informer who possibly just out of ill will to his neighbour informs on him in respect of some minor offence. The man is put in gaol and his family left, as has been stated, to the mercy of the community to be taken care of. That is really encouraging a system which to my mind should not be tolerated, especially when an officer is paid a handsome salary for doing his duty. If under such conditions he cannot conscientiously give time to his position without being a partaker of the fine which the poor chap has to pay, such an officer is not worthy of being an official.

An hon. MEMBER: Poor chap?

Mr. MacLEAN: I am not so much concerned with those who make this a matter of business as with the maker of home brew, who is usually a poor man. These people do this because very often they have no other way of getting a few cents together; frequently they are not able to pay their fine unless somebody comes to their assistance; They are put in gaol and their families left to be taken care of, in Prince Edward Island, by the province, because we have no municipal councils or districts. The minister should give us a statement of the amount of money distributed yearly in moieties.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am informed that last year the distribution to officers was about $4,900 for the whole of Canada.

Mr. VENIOT: Does that include all the moieties to the officers and informers? The officer making the seizure under information given by an informer is not allowed to give the name of the informer to the department, the department does not exact it from him.

Mr. MATTHEWS: That is the amount paid to the officers.

Mr. RHODES: I so move.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps I should know this, but I do not. I would like to inquire whether in these amendments there is discrimination as against the Minister of National Revenue as compared with other ministers? Are some of the ministers of other departments not permitted to make regulations without appealing to the governor in council? I am rather in sympathy with my hon. friend.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am sorry the ex-Minister of National Revenue was not here a few days ago—

Mr. EULER: So am I.

Mr. MATTHEWS: —but where the change had previously been made to "minister", these amendments are made on the strong representation of my hon. friend's right hon. leader.

That section 262 of the bill be amended by striking out the word "minister" in the first line thereof and substituting therefor the words "governor in council."

Mr. RHODES: I so move.

Mr. EULER: Just to vary the proceedings I should like to ask the minister whether the inclusion of the word "minister" in these clauses was done for the purpose of expediting and making more convenient the work of the department. There must have been a reason for it.

Mr. MATTHEWS: That really was the reason for it. The minister was given certain powers, to which strong exception was taken. In conformity with our usual good humour and consideration we have changed it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think it is quite in order. The minister makes the recommendation and submits it to the governor in council over his signature, as it should be if you are going to preserve any control.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 128—Legal effect of regulations.

Mr. MATTHEWS: The last section to be referred to is 128. That was allowed to stand. The section reads:

All regulations made under this act shall have the force of law, and the person guilty of any violation of any regulation shall be subject to such penalty or forfeiture as by this act is provided.

This section needs no amendment. I should like to point out that the powers sought are definitely less than those given in the existing section. All you have to do is to compare the language. Section 137 of the act says:

... any violation of any such regulations shall subject (the person) to such penalty or forfeiture as is, by the said regulations, imposed for such violation.

It also speaks of departmental regulations as well as regulations made by the governor in council. So that to-day the minister could, without consulting his colleagues, make a regulation under which a man might be imprisoned for six months, and it would have the force of a statute. No such extreme delegation of parliamentary power is sought in the bill. The bill reads "such penalty as by this act is provided." Parliament itself is to fix the penalties.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Compare that with the marketing bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think the change of 126 and 127 of the bill obviates the necessity of touching 128.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Yes, quite so.

Section agreed to.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are over 200 sections in this bill. I have not had opportunity to look at it—

Mr. MATTHEWS: They were all passed.

Bill reported; amendments read the first and second time and concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RHODES: To-morrow night occurs an annual event of very great importance to which those who are privileged to attend always look forward with very great eagerness and expectation. That it has been an unqualified success in past years has been due to the fact that it had the devoted and assiduous attention of the representatives of the fourth estate who are associated with us in parliament, and so that it may have the same success to-morrow night as in previous years I hope that the representatives of the fourth estate will have the opportunity through an early adjournment to-night of addressing themselves solely to its well being. In fact this event is of such importance as to transcend all other considerations not excepting the business of the high court of parliament itself. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that the house do now adjourn.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Before we adjourn I suggest to the minister that it would be a happy thought to allow us to adjourn so that members of the house may rest as well.

Mr. HANBURY: Before the question is put I would like to take this opportunity of directing the attention of the Minister of Finance and the government to the fact that some of us come from places many hundreds and indeed thousands of miles away. We have been here now for four and a half months, and we are hoping to get home. I trust the government will take into consideration Wednesday evening sittings or morning sittings as soon as possible. When time may be taken to encourage the members of the fourth estate and to celebrate Empire day and things of that sort, I hope we shall be given some consideration by the session being brought to a close so that hon. members may be permitted to get back to their homes and business.

Mr. RHODES: I can assure my hon. friend that his remarks strike a responsive chord as far as I am concerned. I shall be very happy to pass them on sympathetically and commend them to the favourable consideration of the Prime Minister and my colleagues.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

Monday, June 11, 1934

The house met at three o'clock.

WHEAT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): I would like to draw to the attention of the government a dispatch from London, England, appearing in this morning's press entitled "Alarm caused by Argentine wheat stand," and to quote a statement made therein by the Canadian High Commissioner upon which I wish to base my question to the government. The statement is as follows:

"We have reported the situation to Ottawa, which is our usual practice with wheat," the Canadian Press was told to-night by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Canadian High Commissioner.

Declining to comment on statements that a "wheat war" was in the offing, with Canada likely bearing the brunt, Mr. Ferguson added that what will happen with regard to the Argentine quota is a question of policy which can only be decided, so far as the Canadian government is concerned, at Ottawa.

I would ask if the government are in a position to state what their policy is with regard to this matter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The government's policy, Mr. Speaker, has been made known to this house, and the discussions with respect to the agreement are still proceeding. The article to which reference has been made was drawn to my attention. It is perhaps a somewhat stronger statement of the situation than the facts warrant. Nevertheless the fact is that the Argentine, having had a very much larger crop than was anticipated, contends that the quota accorded to her in the agreement is not sufficiently large to meet her export requirements.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the reply of the Prime Minister might I ask if he does not think that the time has come when this house should have a day set apart to discuss this international wheat agreement? I cannot debate the matter upon the orders of the day, but if I had a right to do so I would ask it as a question of privilege. If we can afford to take a day to discuss sweepstakes surely we can afford to take a day to discuss this international agreement which has not yet been concurred in by this house, and which is a very much more important matter than many sweepstakes.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, the matter has been discussed so frequently and at great length that it is not the intention of the government to set aside a day for the purpose.

[Mr. Veniot.]

ONTARIO ELECTORAL ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): I wish to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State. There is a clause in the amended Ontario Electoral Act which I believe interferes with federal rights. Under that clause a woman who became a British subject through marriage or through the naturalization of a parent when she was a minor is compelled to go through various court processes before she can vote. I would ask the hon. Secretary of State if this does not conflict with the federal law.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario legislature has complete jurisdiction with respect to its own electoral act. It may allow all British subjects to vote or it may preclude certain classes of British subjects from voting, and therefore I think its electoral act is probably within its legislative jurisdiction, although that is a matter upon which the Minister of Justice could give a more authoritative opinion than I.

WHEAT SALES IN THE ORIENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I do not like to refer again to the return that I have asked for with respect to the Hon. Mr. Marler and his report to the government on the possibilities of extending our trade with the orient in wheat and flour. If I had the right under a question of privilege to discuss it a little bit I would do so, Mr. Speaker, because the return placed in my hands is about as hollow as a drum and as informative as the dodo. An order has been passed by this house instructing the government to make a return giving the correspondence and cablegrams of the Hon. Mr. Marler and any other documents, not merely fiddle-dee-dee letters such as were tabled and which I have here in my hand. I want the report of the Hon. Mr. Marler and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) has it. If I know anything about this thing, he is the sinner. I should like to hear from him. I have tried to be very generous because of the action of his officers the other day when they came to my room and told me that there were so many documents to copy, and we agreed as to what should be returned.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member is not satisfied with the return, he may ask for a further return but this is not the occasion to make a speech.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All right, but I want the Minister of Trade and Commerce to ante up with the real return or there will be trouble around here.

EXPORT PRICE OF NICKEL

On the orders of the day.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): Some three weeks ago I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) a question with regard to the export price of nickel. I wonder if he is able to give me an answer in that regard.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. gentleman is a very difficult one to discuss or answer in the way which he has in mind. The bureau of statistics, under the Statistics Act, a statute of this country which definitely and absolutely controls its activities, secures information from various sources which is strictly confidential. It is provided by that act—I think the same thing applies to other information under other statutes—that where the information is from one firm and the publication of that information would be a disclosure of the firm's private affairs, it is not competent for an official to give out the information. As far as he has been able to do so the dominion statistician has complied with the request. Personally, I think it is unfair to discuss the affairs of an industry which is in fact a single company industry under, shall I say—I do not blame my hon. friend in this respect—the guise of public statistics. I am sorry it has not been possible to give publicly the answer which the hon. gentleman desires but I think he will agree that I have done everything which could be reasonably expected to be done to meet his wishes. I should be very glad to discuss this further with him but the fact remains that there is a statute which controls the officials of the government. If the hon. gentleman would intimate to me privately any further information he desires, I will have an investigation made within the ambit of the statute and see if we cannot meet his wishes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will wait until to-morrow.

Mr. STEVENS: I was speaking to the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) on another question altogether.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You were looking squarely at me.

Mr. STEVENS: I was looking over my hon. friend's head.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I thought the hon. gentleman must be talking Dutch if he were answering my question.

Mr. STEVENS: I was talking to the hon. gentleman behind you.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am on the same line of vision.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

Motion agreed to on division, and bill read the third time and passed.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue) moved the third reading of Bill No. 89, to amend and consolidate the Excise Act.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 33, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. McDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved the second reading of Bill No. 94, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

On section 1—Director to be a corporation sole and agent of crown in right of Canada.

Mr. NEILL: I wonder if the minister would give us some information in regard to this matter. There does not seem to be a section with respect to the title on which we could discuss the general principles of the bill, but perhaps he will allow me to ask him some questions under this section. In moving the first reading of the bill the minister indicated that it was to be done at the request of various municipalities—rural municipalities—and inferentially we gathered that it was going to help the settler. I would ask him however wherein this act would do the one or the other. The municipality is not going to be put in the position, as we thought it was, of getting taxes from the government, but merely the land, which it does not want. Possibly the minister will reassure us by intimating that it is the intention of the government to pay the taxes, although it does not state so here.

The other point on which I should like some information is this. Under the third section, on the municipality instituting proceedings, which is rather an indefinite way of expressing it, the settler's contract of sale with the soldier settlement board is automatically rescinded. Is not that going to work a serious hardship on the soldier settler? The government have the right to-day to rescind the agreement upon non-payment; but they have recognized from time to time, and quite properly, that when times are very bad and farmers who own their land, free of any debt or mortgage, cannot make a living on it, then the settler certainly cannot make annual payments, and the government have made reasonable allowance in cases of that kind. They do not rescind so long as there is any reasonable hope of the man being able eventually to make good. Under section 3 however it is automatic; there is no preference. The very minute the municipality finds that its taxes are not paid, and takes legal proceedings—advertising and so forth—then it is automatically rescinded and the government cannot help themselves even if they wish to. I submit therefore that it is certainly going to work an increased hardship on the soldier settler. I do not think that the statement made on the first reading and sent out to the settlers concerned conveyed the true impression. I do not believe that the settlers gathered the impression that the moment their taxes were not paid they would lose their whole equity in the land. The government may have an equity of a couple of thousand dollars and the soldier an equity of a thousand dollars. I do not know whether the government will drop their $2,000; it is optional. They may pay the taxes, although it is not so stated here; but will not this automatically lead to the rescinding of a lot of agreements which to-day are behind but which the department, owing to economic conditions, are not enforcing?

Mr. GORDON: There will be no rescission of contracts upon the passing of this legislation. If one refers to section 2 of the bill it will be seen that it goes into operation from and after the first day of January, 1933, and the dominion government is taking care of unpaid taxes up to the end of 1932, the 1933 taxes of course not having come in yet.

With respect to the hon. member's other point, this bill places the soldier settler in exactly the same position as other settlers throughout the country. It will be remembered that this legislation has been in force now for some fifteen years and the position to-day is that there are settlers who have not paid their taxes, the same as any other settler, and in some instances it has cast a considerable burden upon the municipalities concerned.

The soldier settler, I am informed by the municipalities throughout the country, have perhaps done as well, as a municipal tax-paying body, as any other class of settlers in the dominion. For instance, in British Columbia the soldier settler has paid 40 per cent of his taxes for last year, as of May 15, 1934; in Alberta, 38·3 per cent; in Saskatchewan, 59·5 per cent; in Manitoba, 57·3 per cent; in Ontario, 70 per cent; in Quebec, 30·4 per cent; and in the maritimes 65·5 per cent, the average for the dominion being 51·6 per cent.

The representations are that there are municipalities which, by reason of the purchase of these lands by the crown, in the working out of the Soldier Settlement Act, and the automatic withdrawal from municipal taxation of such lands standing in the name of the crown as to legal title, only the interest of the settler being capable of assessment, have suffered considerably owing to the fact that they have not been able to assess the lands and to have recourse to them for municipal purposes. The intention of this legislation is to render those crown lands, in so far as recourse to the same for municipal purposes is concerned, liable to ordinary municipal taxation. The following section gives the settler some protection in cases where the lands are liable to be sold for taxes, and in fact are sold; the settler has then the right to redeem those lands within the period set out in the section. That is substantially what this legislation seeks to have prevail.

In cases where the municipal authorities take proceedings to sell the lands for arrears of taxes, this does not take away from the director the right to redeem those lands and if he considers the case a proper one, to make a new agreement with the settler. Of course that discretion has always been in the board and is not being taken away from the director by this legislation; but it places those lands, so far as taxes are concerned, in the same category as lands of any other settler. That is the effect of this legislation.

Mr. NEILL: I am grateful to the minister for allowing this discussion on the principle of the bill. He says that this puts the soldier settlers into the same position as other settlers in Canada. That is partly my argument; that it is going to do them an injury because at present they are not in the same position as any other settlers. He says that this will ease the burden upon the municipalities, which burden has been considerable. I do not see how letting them take the land is going to lessen the burden on them as they inevitably will have to take the land for the reason that the soldier settlers will not be able to pay the taxes.

Mr. GORDON: Not all of them.

Mr. NEILL: If the government were to announce—and I think this is what the settlers desire in such cases—that it would pay the taxes and charge them up to the settlers, then the status quo would be maintained; that is to say, the municipalities would be relieved; the government equity would be preserved, because after all the taxes have to be paid, and the settler would not have his agreement automatically rescinded. It is the automatic feature of rescindment to which I object. The minister said that the proportion of taxes paid by soldier settlers varied from thirty to forty per cent, but the general payment all over Canada was 51·6 per cent. That shows the soldier settlers are not able to pay up in the same proportion as are the other people.

Mr. GORDON: I said that the average payment over the dominion was 51·6 per cent.

Mr. NEILL: For the soldiers?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: The minister did not tell us that it was only for the soldiers generally; it is very small if it dropped down to 30 per cent.

He told us that in the succeeding clauses some protection was given to the soldiers, but there is no more protection than we all have already. If we are able to pay up the back taxes, we get the land back.

The minister said that the government might redeem the lands and in that case they would make a new agreement. They cannot do that because it would be only a reversion to the existing agreement. The government can at any time rescind and I give them credit that they have not enforced their rights unduly.

This is the situation I am trying to set forth. Let us take the average farmer—and heaven knows we have heard this time after time in the house—a man with a thoroughly equipped farm, improvements, stock and everything else, who does not owe any debt on the land, and who to-day cannot pay his debts, his taxes. There are members in the house who have said they cannot pay their taxes. The soldier settler is in a different position; he has a heavy mortgage due to the government hanging around his neck. That must be so because he would not be a soldier settler if he had paid up in full. All these soldier settlers have mortgages varying from $1,000 to $5,000 with amortization and interest charges due every year and they will be very much less able to pay their taxes than will the ordinary settler. Most of them having started more or less recently are not so well equipped as the ordinary settler. The government has recognized that fact and very properly so. I heard the minister say in the house last year that during the depression they would not unduly squeeze a man who was trying to make any kind of effort to make good. If he was not going on relief and was trying to do what he could to make good, they would not worry him about his payments in arrears, and I suppose during the depression these men have been carried along. Anyone who reads the provisions of clause 3 of this bill knows that the very moment the municipalities begin to put into force the law with regard to unpaid taxes, the agreement is automatically rescinded. The government has not any option; the agreement is rescinded forthwith, with all that it involves. It does not matter if the man has been carried along during these years; Now, either the municipality or the government takes possession and puts him out. In that way I maintain that conditions will be worse under this bill than they were before for the soldier settlers. After all, the main object is the benefit of the returned man and keeping him on the land. We have kept him on it now for five or six years of depression; another year might put him on his feet again, but under this bill the agreement will automatically be rescinded.

Mr. REID: I think the situation is a little more difficult than the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has made out.

Under our tax sale laws in British Columbia the ordinary settler who is notified that his property will be sold for taxes can, prior to June 1, upon paying one year's taxes keep that property off the tax sale. My information is that many of the soldier settlers are one, two, three, four, five and six years behind with their taxes. Immediately this bill goes through, they have no recourse; they cannot go to the municipality and by offering one year's taxes keep the property off the tax sale.

Mr. GORDON: If I might interrupt the hon. member so that he may have the correct situation; he has been misinformed. All the back taxes of the soldier settler were paid up to the end of 1931 and they will be taken care of up to the end of 1932.

Mr. NEILL: By the government?

Mr. GORDON: Certainly.

Mr. REID: That alters the situation and makes it much easier, but my information from some of the municipalities was to the effect that many of these soldier settlers were away behind with their taxes.

Mr. GORDON: The municipalities were wrong.

Mr. REID: Last year in British Columbia only 40 per cent paid their taxes in spite of the fact that the government offered dollar for dollar, and that shows that many of the soldier settlers must be in bad shape indeed. My first point, however, is still correct, that they will not be able this year by paying the municipality one year's taxes to keep their property out of the tax sale; that is, they are two years behind. But this point has been discussed for a long time in British Columbia. Seeing that the Prime Minister is in his seat, I would like to put this question to him, because it arises out of this bill. By this legislation land which was originally looked upon as crown land is now being taken out of that status and being placed under a different category

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. REID: Clause 2 so states:

> To have been held by the said director of soldier settlement as such corporation sole and not as an agent of the crown in the right of the Dominion of Canada.

In reading that I would be inclined to think this will make soldier settler land in future subject to tax sale and not the property of the crown. I was just wondering whether that could be done also with land under the harbour commissioners.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, as usual the hon. gentleman is wrong.

Mr. REID: Not as usual.

Mr. BENNETT: I have always noticed the hon. gentleman's desire to make some political capital warps his judgment. If he had really taken the trouble to read this he would have found that the situation was entirely different. The property, all of it, has passed from the crown. It is not subject to taxation at all unless it does. Once having passed from the crown either to some third person who owned it, or to the soldier settlement board as a corporation sole, it is subject to taxation if we do not provide that it holds it as agent for the crown; if the corporation holds as agent for the crown it is believed that it is not taxable. The harbour board does not hold the Vancouver property, it belongs to the crown, and as such under the British North America Act it is not taxable and cannot be taxed by this parliament or any legislature or municipality.

I think I should make a few observations with respect to this matter generally, because the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) seems also to misunderstand the situation. There are members of this house who will recall that when the Soldier Settlement Act was originally passed it was stated by the government of that day that as a result of the soldier settlement board holding the land as trustee for the crown the municipalities were not to suffer. So the crown has paid taxes; the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) as Minister of the Interior will recall that under his direction a bill was passed to make provision in certain directions. Valuations have been reduced by direction of this parliament, but last year, the year before, and in fact for the last seven or eight years I was going to say, the municipalities of western Canada have been pointing out to the government that they had no recourse against the land and in some cases were being very badly exploited under conditions to which they objected very strenuously. They said to the government, as they had said before: We ask you by appropriate legislation to place these lands in exactly the same position as the lands of other settlers in the community; so that while we always had the right to sell the interest of the settler in the land for his taxes, as long as you held the title in the form I have indicated there was no power of sale of the land as such. For many years it was contended that the municipality could not sell the interest of a settler for taxes if the land were owned by the crown or through the instrumentality of the crown. Finally, however, in a case that went to the privy council from Saskatchewan, and a like case that went from one of the other provinces,—the Three Hills case will be remembered by some hon. members from Saskatchewan—the privy council held that the interest of a settler could be sold for taxes, that he had a property in it that enabled the taxes to be realized if possible from the sale of his interest.

We, that is the crown, have paid the taxes. Last year again the municipalities pointed out that by reason of the existing legislation the payment of their taxes was retarded; except such as they got from the crown; and if the crown did not pay, the machinery for the sale for taxes of the settler's interest was very complicated and difficult. They thereupon said to us: We are entitled to have you decide one of two things; first whether your interest is sufficiently important to warrant your paying the taxes yourselves, or secondly, whether you are willing to abandon your interest and leave it between the settler and the municipality. The officers of the municipality being settlers in the same community as the soldier settler, knowing him and understanding his conditions, would be able to deal with him from local knowledge on the spot in a much better manner than the government if they abandoned their interest as I have indicated, selecting the second alternative mentioned.

The question was, what form of legislation should be enacted and when it should become effective. We have undertaken, and in the supplementary estimates propose to make provision to pay the taxes on such areas as we believe taxes should be paid upon up to the first of January, 1933. Then we leave it to the municipality and the settler.

Mr. NEILL: They have not been paid to date?

Mr. BENNETT: We have paid to January 1, 1933. Last year's arrears do not render the property liable to be sold for taxes, that is only one year back.

Now I can answer the point that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has made in a very simple way, by pointing out to him that when the matter is left between the municipality and the settler it rests with the municipality to take the action. If the municipality takes the action suggested then of course there is no longer any contract between the crown and the settler. But the Department of Justice, in order that there may be no likelihood of anyone being misled, have added the words that the hon. gentleman has directed attention to, so that it is quite clear and beyond peradventure that the effect of action by the municipality taking proceedings to sell the property will be, as we believe the soldier settlers are anxious it should be, that we are eliminated from the transaction and the matter then is between them and the municipality.

Mr. NEILL: Does it not also eliminate the leniency of the crown?

Mr. BENNETT: But it substitutes the leniency of the municipality where the man lives.

Mr. NEILL: They have not any, they have to hold tax sales.

Mr. BENNETT: But in the first instance it rests with them how they shall be made, what payment shall be made on account and so on. As a matter of fact they all exercise discretion, whether rightly or not I do not know; small payments have been held to be sufficient to take it out of the compulsory phase of the law and substitute the purely discretionary phase. The effect is, I point out again, that the crown must exercise its discretion as to whether or not, having regard to the extent of its interest in the property, it will pay the taxes. This is simple and clear, is it not? In arriving at the conclusion of course the crown takes the report of its inspectors as to the value of the property, whether it is occupied or not and all those factors that usually determine the judgment of men in matters of that kind. The crown has put $38,000,000 by rebates and reductions under the statute into these properties. We still shall pay this year $654,000 for taxes to the first of January, 1933.

The second alternative is this. If the crown determines that the property, for reasons I have suggested, is not such as to warrant the payment of taxes, it abandons its interest, that is the effect of it, and the settler settles with the municipality. That is the position. The effect in law of course is that when the municipalty does take proceedngs, if owing to the paramount right of the crown there might be some question as to the validity and legality of them, the Department of Justice makes it clear that the effect is to eliminate the crown from the transaction and leave it between the settler and the municipality.

Mr. BROWN: Do we understand that the crown will deal with individual cases on their merits, or that the same policy will apply to all lands?

Mr. BENNETT: The general policy, as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) knows, has been to leave to the crown discretion with respect to the payment of taxes always. That is if the land is not worth paying taxes on, has been abandoned or anything of that sort, the crown can either let the property go or pay the taxes. There has always been a discretion exercised by the crown in connection with all these properties. Values could never be made for instance on the basis of a rule that endeavoured to deduct a certain percentage. The committee will perhaps recall that we appointed the registrar of the supreme court to act as a judge of the exchequer court for the purpose of making a final determination in respect of some of these matters.

Mr. REID: I do not mind the Prime Minister taking me to task and telling me I am wrong, but I think his statement as to a political point of view was uncalled for. It was purely on behalf of the settler, and as one who was at one time president—

Mr. BENNETT: I was not talking about the settlers, I was talking about Vancouver.

Mr. REID: Well the point that arose in my mind was not political. As one time president of the union of municipalities we had this case in hand and were told year after year that crown lands could not be taxed.

Mr. BENNETT: That is true yet.

Mr. REID: In reading the bill I thought crown lands were being made liable to taxation and so subject to sale. Interpreting the bill in that way I was wondering if the same thing could not be done in connection with land held by harbour commissions. I am quite aware that leaseholds can be taxed, including leaseholds of harbour property, but the fight between the municipalities and the government has been as to the right of the government to set aside harbour lands and lands under the soldier settlement board and evade the payment of taxes simply by saying that crown lands cannot be taxed under the British North America Act.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry to correct the hon. gentleman again. It is perfectly clear that it is open to the city of Vancouver, and always has been open since the determination of the privy council in the Three Hills case, to tax the leasehold interest of every person occupying harbour commission lands on the water front of Vancouver. But by their legislation they endeavoured to treat them as fee simple lands, which was a contravention of section 125 of the British North America Act. The distinction is clear. The interest that another has in crown property is taxable. The property which is held by the crown is not taxable, and until the British North America Act is amended at Westminster neither this parliament nor the province nor the municipality can change that condition.

Mr. REID: So that I may have it clear I wonder if the Prime Minister would tell me if I am correct in this: Will not this statute make it possible for crown lands to be sold by a municipality, and the municipality to become owner of those lands?

Mr. BENNETT: No, not crown lands. Lands held by the director of soldier settlement as a corporation sole, just as lands held by John Jones, would be liable.

Mr. HANBURY: Or by the farm loan board.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. The distinction, which I trust the hon. gentleman will have clear in his mind even though it is a legal distinction, is this: If the property is held by the director as an instrumentality of the crown, that is as an agent of the crown, it is crown property and therefore not taxable. If it is held by him as a corporation sole—and we have made him a corporation sole by our legislation—in that capacity he has no immunity from taxation.

Mr. NEILL: Will the Prime Minister not agree with what I started to say, that possibly a soldier settler will be in an even worse condition? I do not know the laws in the east, but in British Columbia the municipal laws require that municipalities shall hold a tax sale every year, and they will sell these men out at the end of this year for taxes incurred in 1933. That is the law. Under the old system the government did have power to carry these settlers along without rescinding their agreement, and they have done that for four or five years. Now they are going automatically to rescind the agreement. Would the Prime Minister say whether that is not so?

Mr. BENNETT: That is covered by the third principle which I should have mentioned. My colleague was going to deal with that, but he suggests that since I have taken part in the discussion I had better deal with this point as well. The right of redemption is still in the crown as well as in the settler.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That will be governed by the provinces?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is entirely under provincial laws, but by this statute the right of redemption may be exercised by the crown as well as by the settler.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I appreciate the sympathy that is being shown to soldier settlers by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I may say that I have always availed myself of every opportunity to assist this class of returned men. At the same time I must say that I have always been at a loss to understand why, because a man goes on the land, he should be entitled to all sorts of consideration. What about the returned solder who went into town and took a job in a sawmill or on the railway or some place else, who bought a lot and built a little home? He gets no consideration at all. To my mind this legislation has been discriminatory from the very start. I recall a case in my own home town. Two brothers came home from the war. One had some training on the land, and was able to go down south and get a loan from the soldier settlement board with which to buy a farm, stock, implements, seed and everything else. He got a fairly good start in life; he has done well, and I believe he owns his farm clear. The other fellow did not happen to have any training in agriculture; he was a fisherman. When he went to the war of course he sacrificed his outfit worth many hundreds of dollars. When he came back there was no provision for helping him to get a start. Nobody bought him any nets or provided him with gear to go to work.

The same thing applied to trappers, who required several hundred dollars to get themselves established, and to prospectors and others, and just as long as this discrimination exists I am going to be in something of a dizzy spin to appreciate just why these soldier settlers should be entitled to special consideration. If you are going to give returned soldiers consideration give it to all of them or do not give it to any. The man on the land is not entitled to any more consideration than the poor soldier in town, who is fighting just as hard as the other fellow is. I know of a good many cases of abuse by soldier settlers; I heard of returned soldier settlers who have been driving around in cars all summer and not paying their taxes; they said the government would pay them. That has been the case right along, and I think the time has arrived for a showdown; there should be a line drawn some place. The municipalities have had a very hard time to get by with the taxes they have been able to collect. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) stated that this legislation compels the municipalities to hold tax sales. He must know as well as I know that hundreds of municipalities in Canada have not held tax sales for several years, and do not intend to hold sales this year. I could name several municipalities which have not held tax sales for the last few years. I find that the municipalities are very reasonable, and all in all I think the government have gone quite a long way in looking after this class of returned soldiers. I commend them for having done so, but I do not think any great hardship will be worked if this legislation is passed.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: If I understand the provisions of the bill aright there can be only one main result from it; that is that through the director of soldier settlement the state will be obliged to pay the bulk of these taxes as action is taken by the municipalities. As I understand it all lands, the title of which is vested in the director of soldier settlement, whether they be abandoned lands, wheat lands, rented lands or lands held under agreement for sale, will be in the same position as lands held by private corporations, and sold or handled by those corporations. The title of those lands, of course, is still with the director. It seems to me that the natural result will be that wherever the equity of the state is sufficient the state itself will be obliged to pay those taxes, for if a sale should result the entire equity of the crown would be wiped out, and the land would come into the hands of the municipalities who would sell it as ordinary land. Under such circumstances, of course, the contract with the soldier settler would be wiped out automatically, because it would cease to be the property of the director and would be put in the position of any other land. As I see the situation, in the majority of cases the equity of the crown in the land is still such that in the final analysis the crown will be obliged to step in and protect that equity by paying the taxes. Certainly that would benefit the municipalities but I doubt whether, in the majority of cases and under such circumstances, the settler himself would be the final sufferer.

As for making a new contract with the settler, would it amount to this? That when proceedings have been taken and the settler has been declared in default, the state owning the land would be in a position to renew the contract with the settler or to make any other disposition of the lands that it saw fit?

Mr. GORDON: There is nothing to stop that being done.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: So, as a matter of fact, the discretion would still lie with the director to practically the same degree as at present, and there would be the same power of protecting the settler and the same power of perpetuating the contract. It would simply be that the same discretion existed but under somewhat different conditions.

Mr. GORDON: I would say so.

Mr. BROWN: Some of those very same difficulties have been passing through my mind. It may be difficult for those of us who are not lawyers to grasp all these fine points. The Prime Minister has said that the right of redemption would still remain with the crown as well as with the settler. I presume that that right of redemption would only be exercised in case the crown felt that its equity in the particular piece of land was worth preserving. It would seem to follow that in some cases the equity would not be considered worth preserving, as I believe it would not be in some cases. I think it would also follow, as the hon. member for New Westminster said, that land sold for taxes might come into the hands of the municipality. These are some of the things that seem to me likely to happen.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There is just one point in that respect that is in my mind. As the state has paid taxes up to January, 1932, and purposes paying them for another year, there would be no tax arrears to speak of, and the equity of the state would have to be balanced, not against a large amount of tax arrears, but against what practically amounts to current taxation or, at most, two years'. In most cases, so far as I know, the equity of the state is still greater than the amount of one or two years' taxes.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I believe the statement was made by the hon. member for Nelson that the returned soldier was getting a special preference under this legislation. I fail to see that such is the case.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): As against a returned soldier living in the village.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I believe he has been getting a preference in the past but under this legislation it seems to me that he is not going to be in as preferred a position as he was prior to the passing of this legislation, and for this reason. If I got the explanation correctly, all taxes in arrears were paid by the federal government up to the end of 1931, and it is their intention to pay one more year's taxes, bringing the payments up to the end of 1932. Then, starting in January, 1933, the soldier settler is left to deal with the municipality. That means, so far as Saskatchewan is concerned, that the municipalities will have to collect the taxes for 1933, and if the soldier settler is unable to pay the taxes, the land will be sold by the municipality and further penalties placed against the land. That is the position the settler is in under this legislation, but prior to this legislation the dominion government would come along and pay the tax arrears.

I realize that the Union of Municipalities in Saskatchewan is very anxious to have this legislation passed, but I fail to see where it is going to help the municipalities, and to my mind it is going to put the soldier in an unpreferred position. It is going to leave him with the possibility of having his land sold and taken over for unpaid taxes. There is one other possibility. I believe the municipality will be given the right to distrain for taxes. They may come in and distrain grain or other chattels that the settler would have over and above what is exempt. So that in general as I see the legislation, it is going to put the soldier settler in a worse position than he has been in in the past.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): One does not like to surmise what may be the intention of the government in regard to amendments but it does seem to me that this simplifies the method of cancellation of agreements. Heretofore when arrears took place the minister informs us that the government were in the habit of paying the taxes and satisfying the municipality, but under this legislation, the moment the municipality takes action against the settler, automatically the agreement is cancelled, and then it is in the discretion of the director whether he shall redeem by payment of taxes or allow cancellation to take place. If cancellation does take place the municipality will come into possession of the land, and the government ceases to be interested. All I can see in it is that it simplifies the method of cancellation of agreement, and perhaps makes it a little easier for municipalities to clear up arrears or have current taxes paid. It is rather a novel method, may I say to the minister? I have every sympathy with the director and with the department in handling this situation. I know something about it. I must admit that this certainly does simplify the procedure of cleaning up with the settler, and it enables the government to get rid of the lands that they do not care to hold. Those are two things that appeal to me in the legislation.

Mr. GORDON: There is something in what the hon. member for West Edmonton says. The position is this: I believe that the municipalities are in a better position perhaps than anyone else to determine on the spot the man's ability to pay taxes. One hon. member has said that the result of this legislation will be to place the settler in a less preferred position. It does not in my view. It places the soldier settler very much in the same position as his neighbour who is not a soldier settler, with this qualification, that there is still the discretion in the director, in the event of the soldier himself not redeeming, to redeem the lands if the settler is a desirable man trying to make his way but has met perhaps with some misadventure. The director then has discretion to enter into a new agreement with him if he wishes. But it must be borne in mind that when these lands were withdrawn from the municipalities as they were from the passing of the original act in 1919 down until the spring of 1930, it unquestionably placed the municipality, if the taxes were not paid by the soldier settler, because of the setting up of the barrier that they were crown lands, in a difficult position. It is quite true that from year to year a certain amount of taxes was paid by the director of soldier settlement in individual cases. That occurred in each year up until the year 1930. In March of that year the government of the day concluded, and I have no doubt they had very good reasons for arriving at their conclusion, they would pay the arrears of taxes in the prairie provinces, and the agreement that was entered into was so worded that it might continue for an indefinite period subject to cancellation by notice. That did not refer to any taxes in Quebec, the maritime provinces, British Columbia or Ontario; it was just Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. BOWMAN: Was that all arrears?

Mr. GORDON: Yes. I am not going to question the soundness of what was done at that time, but the sum total of the result was that having once cast the die with respect to taxes, up to date the government will have paid—this includes the $604,000 which will be in the supplementary estimates—just over $5,500,000 in taxes. As I have indicated already, the director of soldier settlement in the last few years, on the advice of his officers and because of his own knowledge of the condition of each applicant who has had difficulties, has endeavoured to adopt the course which is best calculated to help the settlers stay upon the land rather than to discourage them. The substance of the present bill is to place in the hands of the municipalities the power to have recourse to the land for taxes, the same as they would have recourse to the lands of any other settler. I think hon. members can be assured that in administering this law no municipality will pick out a soldier settler and impose upon him something which is not imposed generally upon all settlers. If what some hon. members have suggested is true, that no settler can pay anything, I do not think it will make much difference to the municipality, the settler or anybody else. However, in the light of the facts which discloses that the soldier settler as a class is probably the best taxpayer, I do not entertain those views. As I have said, there are municipalities which have had very severe burdens placed upon their treasuries because of the withdrawal of lands for tax purposes. Roads have been extended, schoolhouses built and services rendered by municipalities which in a large measure have been built up by reason of these municipalities. I think the municipality should have the right of recourse to lands held by the director. The municipality is in a better position to determine whether or not proceedings by way of tax sale should be enforced strictly, particularly when the director still reserves to himself the right which he has always had when a settler does not redeem. Under the provincial statutes he may step in and redeem the land and, if it is a proper case, make a new agreement with the settler. The essence of this legislation is an endeavour on the part of the government to relieve the municipalities of the situation which I have indicated and to make the lands held by the director as a corporation available to be placed on the assessment rolls of the municipalities and be subject to taxation, whether or not there is a soldier settler upon them. I do not think hon. members need have much fear that a settler who is trying to pay for his land will find himself in a less favourable position than he is to-day. Under the legislation of last year a large number of soldier settlers paid their taxes and have become entitled to the bonus provided by that legislation.

Mr. BOWMAN: What distinction has been made by the board in recent years in connection with the payment of taxes; that is, when have they paid taxes and when have they not paid taxes?

Mr. GORDON: I am told that all taxes were paid without any distinction, except the taxes upon dominion lands in which the settler is not interested.

Mr. NEILL: There is no doubt the minister is correct when he says that the essence of this bill is to relieve the municipality but I think the effect, so far as the settler is concerned, will be that he will be worse off than he was. Before, the crown had power to rescind the contract any time it was in default. That power was exercised with discretion and leniency but it will be now compulsory to have the contracts confiscated or rescinded automatically.

As the minister referred to the legislation of last year I suppose I am entitled to ask a question. Under that legislation the dominion paid dollar for dollar with the settler for taxes, and the minister stated that a large proportion of the taxes had been paid. I wonder if he could amplify that and tell us the amounts which have been paid. My information is that only a small portion has been paid, even though the sum involved may be considerable. It is only natural that what taxes were paid, were paid by those in position to pay. The struggling settler with a heavy mortgage on his shoulders could not take advantage of what on paper looked like a very favourable offer on the part of the dominion. Some of us predicted that that legislation would not help the small man who was not able to pay. While it looked like a big thing that a settler would get dollar for dollar, if he did not have the first dollar the offer of the second dollar was of no use to him. While I do not intend to introduce them into this debate, I have resolutions before me from settler bodies on the prairies and endorsed by some British Columbia societies asking that all interest be cut out from the date of the last settlement in 1930. I do not suppose this will receive the sympathetic attention of the minister, as he has already rejected the idea. I should like to know if he can give us a definite figure as to the proportion of the outstanding taxes which were paid last year under this dollar for dollar agreement?

Mr. GORDON: I am afraid I have not all the figures which the hon. member has asked for but I can state that under the legislation of last year it would appear that in the Vancouver district forty-two per cent of the soldier settlers took advantage of this offer.

Mr. NEILL: Forty-two per cent of what?

Mr. GORDON: That is the percentage of settlers who took advantage of the legislation of last year. In the Edmonton district the percentage was 37·1; in the Calgary district, 37; in the Saskatoon district, 59; in the Winnipeg district, 53; in the Toronto district, 63; in the Sherbrooke district, 32; in the St. John district, 51. The total amount of the bonuses, in so far as returns have been received up to date—they may be and likely will be considerably larger—is $1,134,172.86.

Mr. NEILL: Payment of taxes?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: This last year? Surely not.

Mr. GORDON: This is payment on account of the land to which the settler would be entitled to the credit of $1.

Mr. REID: I take it that it is the intention of this act that the municipalities shall have recourse to the land and that the settler shall also be protected.

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. REID: The question that arises in my mind is this. Is it the intention of the government to redeem all properties that go in tax sales? If a property went in tax sale and the tax sale proceedings were carried through, then in the month of October, when the tax sale was held, or after the proper time had elapsed the municipality would by law become the owner of that property and could deal in whatever way they liked with the settler who originally owned it. This is a very pertinent question. Is it the intention of the government to redeem all properties or only some properties?

Mr. GORDON: The practice that has been pursued by governments in the past and up to the present time would largely prevail. Discretion would have to be exercised as to what properties would be redeemed and what would not. I think I can very fairly state that all properties would not be redeemed; they never have been. But the director, acting upon the best advice available to him, would have to exercise a discretion in the matter, and if mistakes are made or are about to be made, then I think, as the hon. member for West Edmonton will agree, the director will hear about it long before any damage is done.

Mr. McINTOSH: Have the soldier settlers requested the legislation which is before the house?

Mr. GORDON: For many years there have been discussions as to what course should be adopted by the dominion government to render these lands available for municipal taxation. It has been a subject of some controversy, but generally speaking the municipalities have urged throughout the years that they should not be placed in a less favourable position by reason of lands within their municipal boundaries having been purchased and the title thereto vested in the crown, thus removing them from any possibility of the municipalities turning towards those lands to collect taxes for the carrying on of their usual functions and the services of municipal government. I am not at the moment in a position to say that any recognized body of returned soldiers have taken either one side or the other in the matter. Certainly individual soldiers have expressed themselves on both sides. For instance, I have had many requests—I do not know whether there is substance in these representations or not—from returned soldiers asking the dominion government not to pay their taxes. That may strike hon. members as being rather grotesque almost, but it is nevertheless a fact. When these requests came in I was curious to ascertain the reason; I wanted to know what underlay them. On investigation I found in some instances—my memory does not serve me as to how many or in what provinces, but I think I may fairly state that it was in some of the western provinces—the returned soldier said, "Don't pay my taxes, because if you do I won't get any road work from the municipality." That, I know, arose in quite a number of cases. In fact, my official just tells me that in part of one of the western districts there were 416 such cases. It can be seen therefore that there is a considerable degree of opinion both probably for and against this legislation. I believe, however, that in the main the municipalities are for it; and of course, many of the returned soldiers in the municipalities, having a keen interest in the upkeep of their schools and roads and other municipal services, are not that class of person who is not as anxious as any other taxpayer to bear his share of the burden of carrying on with the municipality the municipal government and services that go with it.

I can only reiterate what I have said before, that this act does not divest the director, in so far as I understand it, of any discretion he has heretofore exercised in an effort, if it seems to be desirable, to protect any settler who in his judgment, based upon what information he can secure, is entitled to receive further protection by payment of taxes or otherwise.

Mr. McINTOSH: I take it for granted then that the request for this measure did not come from the soldier settlers' union. That is a union, a soldier settlement association, organized in western Canada.

Mr. GORDON: I tried to identify the soldier settlers' union as such last session. I have had representations from various locals —I think they are called locals. My recollection is that they were representative of the soldier settlers, although at the time the hon. member for North Battleford rather took exception to my acknowledging that they were a representative body. I have forgotten at the moment who was at the head of it. At any rate, at this time I am not able to state, whether the body to which he makes reference known as the Soldier Settlers' Union have as such made representations one way or the other, for or against.

Mr. McINTOSH: I thank the minister but I think if he reads the past debates that have taken place in the house with regard to soldier settler matters, he will come to just the opposite conclusion with regard to the representative nature of that body. If I remember correctly I took the stand that they were representative; that they were endeavouring to become more representative and the minister and his department rather challenged my statement. That, however, is neither here nor there. The Soldier Settlers' Union started out to become thoroughly organized and naturally they could not become a very large body in a very short period of time, but in 1933 the body was so representative that the head of the board met representatives of the union and the Canadian Legion in Saskatoon and discussed questions of policy and of legislation with that body. Therefore that was an out and out recognition that that body was a fairly representative one.

Mr. GORDON: I may say that the director at the time not only met the union to which the hon. member makes reference but was present at other meetings of settlers who were not in any union.

Mr. McINTOSH: If the minister had noticed I mentioned that among the soldier settlers members of the Canadian Legion were also present, and that was my idea.

What I want to open up at this time is perhaps a larger question. At that gathering in Saskatoon it would appear that a rather different and new line of policy was taken. It was worked out on the understanding that a policy of accord could be satisfactorily adhered to by both parties, that is the soldier settlers and the department, if certain legislation were brought down. That legislation was brought down last year; it was put through the house and it has been in existence during the past year. Apparently from the reports I have at hand the good effects of that legislation are somewhat in danger. Seemingly the collection policy of the department is under serious consideration by the settlers and it should receive some discussion in the house. The minister and the department will no doubt take the stand that they are doing their best to collect the money for the state and that is always a duty with regard to those who are collecting taxes from men who are in the position in which we find the soldier settlers. But some of the soldier settlers on the other hand take the stand that the policy is ruthless, harsh and that if it is persisted in they will lose their farms and will be driven off the land. To put the matter in a nutshell, may I read a letter addressed to me by H. S. Packman, general secretary of the Soldier Settlers' Union, dated at Lloydminster, February 4, 1934. This opens up practically the whole question of policy between the soldier settlers throughout the dominion and the department. The letter reads as follows:

Whereas, we, the delegates—

It is really a resolution.

—representing the locals of the Soldier Settlers' Union, present at the convention held at Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, October 25 and 26, 1933, have decided that, we have not and are not, deviating in any way from our main objective, and that, we were quite willing to accept the temporary legislation for the period stated providing, the promise made by the director of soldier settlement at the Saskatoon conference in 1933, concerning the collection policy of the department was kept.

It is regretted that in many instances this promise has been violated, and therefore we feel that we are not held to our promise given, to refrain from asking the government for any further concessions during the period of the temporary legislation.

That is, during the next three or four years.

Therefore, be it resolved that:—

We, the soldier settlers, in conference do not consider the recent legislation passed by parliament as being the solution to our permanent establishment, and we consider that the following will prove to be more effective.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Then follows the climax of their resolution:

That our total debt to date be as it stood at the completion of the 30 per cent reduction in 1930 and henceforth be a non-interest bearing debt.

That opens up, as I said, the question of the collection policy of the government and I shall cite some instances showing rather harsh collection methods. Before I put one or two of them on record and ask the minister about them, perhaps he might have something to say in reply to this resolution from the Soldier Settlers' Union, the headquarters of which is at Lloydminster, Saskatchewan. If not, I shall give him some instances with regard to what the soldier settlers term very harsh examples of government collection policy.

Mr. GORDON: It distresses me considerably to hear the hon. member for North Battleford say that the department has been ruthless in its collections.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is the information given to me in a number of cases. I am not making the indictment. I am asking the minister to make a reply.

Mr. GORDON: Well, in order that the record may disclose what the situation is in the Saskatoon district which includes Lloydminster, I may say that the number of settlers under the soldier settler department is 4,941, and last year there was what is known as a seizure in only thirty-one cases. A seizure does not mean that a man is dispossessed of his land: it means that he has entered into an agreement or understanding that he will pay to the director of soldier settlement such proportion of his crop as it would appear he is able to pay.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The same as any other farmer?

Mr. GORDON: Exactly. And in no instance did the director of soldier settlement ever ask more than the province would ask from its settlers. I think I am not overstating the situation when I say that in all cases greater latitude was given to the soldier settler by the department and the director than was given by any mortgage company, loan company, provincial government or any other agency that was invoking the payment of taxes. When you see in the Saskatoon district, which includes, I believe, the riding of North Battleford and Lloydminster, that out of all those thousands of settlers, in only thirty-one cases did the department have to insist upon the settler concerned paying to the department the proportion of his crop that he agreed to pay, I feel certain the hon. member for North Battleford will not judge that the department has set in motion a ruthless policy of collection.

Mr. McINTOSH: I will take the word of the minister that there has been no ruthless policy of collection inaugurated or followed during last year. I appreciate the fact that only thirty-one cases of seizure have taken place during the past year. Now I ask the minister, how many soldier settlers have been evicted from their lands in the western provinces during the past twelve months?

Mr. GORDON: No soldier settler has been evicted during the past twelve months. That applies not only to the province of Saskatchewan but to all Canada.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am glad to have that information. Now I ask the minister to explain one or two cases that I shall bring to his attention. He has stated that the policy of the government is a fair one in regard to collection. The only way we can come to a conclusion as to whether that is the case is to examine individual instances. I have one case here from Paddockwood, Saskatchewan, that is out from Prince Albert, if I am not mistaken, in the Saskatoon collection area. It is rather a peculiar case, one that challenges public attention.

Mr. GORDON: What is the settler's name?

Mr. McINTOSH: John Broderick. I shall read the synopsis of the case given to me:

Copy of resolution passed unanimously at mass meeting of residents of Forest Gate and district on May 31st.

Just a few days ago.

Whereas John Broderick of this district bought a parcel of land, the NE. ¼ 34-53-25-2, from the land settlement board for $1,200, making an initial payment of approximately $140 and subsequent payments in 1932 and 1933 of $35, and

Whereas this quarter had but twenty acres of cultivated land and no buildings, and

Whereas the purchaser has since built a house and barn, and done various other improvements in clearing and fencing, and

Whereas the debt adjustment board, early in the year, promised to protect this man, and on that understanding he put the land in crop, and

Whereas in the opinion of this mass meeting of residents of Forest Gate and district this man Broderick has done all that any man could, under our present conditions, in making the payments he has, and in the meantime providing a living for his family through the cutting and sale of cordwood;

Be it resolved that the residents of this community protest most strongly against the eviction of this man, and we call on the land settlement board to immediately withdraw their dispossession proceeding.

Campbell McIntyre,
Secretary of Meeting,
Paddockwood, Sask.

Now the minister just told me there have been no evictions in Canada. This resolution plainly states that there has been one, and a mass meeting has been called over it. That being the case I should like to have an explanation of this from the minister as representing the government of the day.

Mr. GORDON: A perusal of the list for the Saskatoon district does not reveal that name at all. The debt adjustment board mentioned I assume is the debt adjustment board set up by the province.

Mr. McINTOSH: That would be what they refer to, yes. But the land was bought from the land settlement board. It does not give the date.

Mr. GORDON: There does not seem to be in the record any settler of that name. That is sufficient explanation of it not having come to my attention. Of course I shall immediately look into the matter, but as far as my officer knows no representations have been made to the department about it. It does seem strange that if the events happened that are detailed in the letter, those who were so concerned with Broderick—and probably rightly so—sent no representations to the department. At any rate I shall look into it at once and see to what extent if any the matter has come before the department and whether in fact they are department lands and he a soldier settler.

Mr. McINTOSH: I would appreciate it if the minister will do that. Of course, I would not know whether the department had any information about the case or not, I am merely acting as a representative of the people in bringing this to the attention of the government, and when that is done my duty is completed.

Here is another angle of the soldier settlement problem. This letter is from Saskatoon, it is not signed by the person writing it, but there are two points in it which I think of fair importance. This man states he is unemployed—

An hon. MEMBER: Who is the man?

Mr. McINTOSH: I just said his name is not signed, but that does not destroy the effect of the letter.

Mr. HACKETT: Does it not destroy it entirely?

Mr. McINTOSH: I do not think it does.

Mr. HACKETT: How do you know it was not written in Ottawa or Kamouraska?

Mr. McINTOSH: No, the postmark shows it was not written in Ottawa or in your riding.

Mr. HACKETT: No, people there sign their names.

Mr. McINTOSH: That statement is just about as sensible as your previous question.

Mr. GORDON: I do not want to restrict representations that may be made by the hon. member, but I think it is pretty well accepted by men carrying on affairs of their own or public business that when a letter is unsigned, and apparently unsigned for cause—

Mr. McINTOSH: I shall tell you the cause in a minute.

Mr. GORDON: I would say that as to almost one hundred per cent of the unsigned letters I get the cause is that the person is too cowardly to sign his name, and such letters are promptly consigned to the waste-paper basket. Does the hon. member intend to base an argument before this committee on statements contained in an unsigned memorandum? I do not think he will.

Mr. McINTOSH: The reason the letter was unsigned, as far as I can find out, is that the man is a returned soldier, and he is afraid that if his name were known to the soldier settlement board in Saskatoon he might be prematurely crucified.

Mr. GORDON: He does not know there has been a change in the government in the last four years.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes he does. He only makes two points here; he is a returned soldier and is out of employment, and one of his grievances is that the men who are causing him to be out of employment are men who have soldier settlement lands and who have had money forwarded to them by the government, who have received concession after concession throughout the years and who are to-day off their lands and working for the soldier settlement board in Saskatoon. The point he makes is, that if these men were back on their lands trying to farm them he might have a chance at some of these positions which are filled by returned men in Saskatoon for the board. I think that is a legitimate point of view. Another point he makes is that some of the men in Saskatoon who are going around the district telling other people how to farm are men who lost their own farms, and he wonders how such men can fill such positions successfully. If they cannot farm themselves he asks how they can teach others to farm.

I will leave that matter now, but here is a case that is rather startling. I do not know whether or not the minister has any information on file with regard to Mr. H. Salter. Apparently this man was not afraid; he signed his letter, which is dated February 6, 1934. I should like to read part of that letter:

> Permit me to explain.
>
> On the morning of Thanksgiving Day, fall 1933, careless shooters from Saskatoon destroyed my entire crop by fire (presumed to be wads from low grade shells in the stacks) then in bin, with threshing just completed. Bin stood between two stacks of straw —one oat, the other wheat, as the bin had been divided and oats threshed in one end and wheat in the other. The matter was reported to mounted police, who investigated, and also to S.S.B. and the Star, who reported upon it. However, no one was apprehended, and the loss was most complete, so much so that I was unable to meet my threshing expenses, and the winter has been the most hard I have ever experienced.
> This bin was built by me in 1922, from my own funds and to receive the crop from a 100 acre parcel of land in which I was then interested to the east, and skidded on 6″ x 6″ skids—its cost being around $150. Releasing this 100 acre parcel around 1926, the bin was then hauled home for general use, and has since received crops from other fields.
> It carried an insurance of $75, covered by joint policy in favour of S.S.B. and self, and in signing proof of loss I was able to get the full amount on account of the good construction of the bin—signing an agreement for company to draft cheque in name of S.S.B. believing I could immediately get a reimbursement and reconstruct the bin.

Now comes the climax of his letter:

> Everything was explained to the superintendent of the S.S.B.—loss of all fodder and straw, bin, and all grain that might be used for seed or other than pig feed, and that I had no cover for this grain as this was my only bin for grain storage, and the grain lay in the open. He replied he would take it up at once with headquarters, but two months elapsed before he replied to me and then by reason of pressure brought to bear by letter from myself. I enclose this final letter.
>
> Its contents are self explanatory. They are retaining the $75 on the grounds that because of my account they cannot reimburse me. No mention of the legal rights of the case or to whom this $75 really belongs, and I am assured that it is mine by two lawyers in Saskatoon.
> How do I stand upon this matter, and can the union give me any help.

He was writing the Soldier Settlers' Union.

Personally I doubt the statement that this is a ruling of headquarters unless the new director at headquarters is oversharp.

There is not much more:

Its unfairness is obvious—the treatment accorded me without reason or good judgment. I have three children to support, and till now have managed to keep off relief in any way or form. But taxes and payments to the S.S.B. have of course been absolutely impossible, on account of droughted crops through 1932, and total loss through 1933.

This is the one question I am writing you of that I think can be improved by your handling. There is another—the matter of reinstatement, that I will write you of at later date.

I understand, however, that the department has refused to reinstate this man, and has practically told him that perhaps the wisest thing he could do would be to leave the land.

In the letter from the secretary of the Soldier Settlers' Union, Major Packman, I find the following:

It demonstrates very clearly the attitude of the department in refusing to understand the difficulties which settlers are faced with under the conditions existing to-day.

This letter is typical of many that we are receiving and it would seem that despite the recent legislation, unless the whole soldier settler situation is reviewed and a collection policy put into effect which does take into consideration the present day difficulties, a great deal of discouragement will continue leading ultimately to large numbers of settlers gradually being squeezed off their farms.

In a postscript to his letter Major Packman makes this statement:

The letter from the district superintendent dated January 19, 1934, is rather a remarkable one. I think it would be applicable to 90 per cent of the settlers and would therefore indicate that our chances of ultimate ownership are very remote.

That is the viewpoint of the secretary of the Soldier Settlers' Union, based upon the complaint with which I have dealt, as well as others.

Mr. GORDON: I can only repeat what I said before, that there have been no evictions in Canada during the past year or for perhaps three years past, by the soldier settlement board. I will of course inquire into the two instances to which reference has been made. These names do not appear upon the list of those in the Saskatoon area in connection with whom agreements had to be enforced with respect to sharing the crop. As I said before, only thirty-one out of 4,900 odd had to be dealt with in that way. So far as Mr. Packman is concerned, if he is the author of the statement that there is a ruthlessness about collecting from soldier settlers then certainly he is not acquainted with the facts, because I know of my own knowledge that this is not the practice pursued. I know of my own knowledge that only a small percentage of the settlers could make that statement, because they know it is not according to the facts.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am pleased to hear the minister say that the collection policy of the department is not ruthless; I accept that statement, and I hope that such complaints as I have read will be fewer in another year than they have been this year.

Mr. GORDON: That is scarcely fair. We have not received those complaints in the department; they are not before us.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was just going to say that the minister must have the latter complaint in the department, or if he has not he is not in touch with the branch office as he ought to be. Here is the letter from Mr. E. M. Johnston, district superintendent at Saskatoon, dated January 19, 1934, only four or five months ago. Here is what Mr. Johnston says in answer to Mr. Salter's letter:

I duly referred to head office your request for reinstatement and now have their decision. Head office ruling is that, on account of your account, they will not approve the redisbursement of the $75 collected as a result of the fire loss. Further, they do not grant your request for reinstatement, on the ground that, with your present debt and even taking into account the bonus amendments you could not succeed in paying for this property.

The director further expressed the opinion that at this time, when prices are low, you would be well advised to look about and see if you could not acquire a property that would be suitable for you at a price that you could handle. You no doubt have practically a full line of stock and equipment of your own and it is therefore in your interest that you should devote your energies to a property which you have a prospect of paying for, rather than to your present proposition.

Will you please advise your intentions in this matter.

May I ask the minister if Mr. Salter has advised the department as to his intentions? You practically told him to get off the land. Is he on the land or is he not? If he is not on it he has been evicted; if he is on it you are giving him another chance, as you should.

Mr. GORDON: Surely there could be no complaint as to that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton South): Shall the section carry?

Mr. McINTOSH: I want an answer; I want to know if the minister can tell me what that man is doing at the present time.

Mr. GORDON: No, I cannot.

Mr. McINTOSH: He is in your Saskatoon area, and I would like the minister to trace up his history and let me have it.

Mr. GORDON: Oh, yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FARMERS'-CREDITORS' ACT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 92, to facilitate compromises and arrangements between farmers and their creditors.

Mr. NEILL: Explain.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to this house the purpose of this legislation. I can add nothing to what I have said when the resolution was introduced upon which this bill is founded. I indicated that naturally it is a question of the details of the legislation giving effect to the principle, the principle being first of all that an opportunity should be given for the utilization of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act without putting the farmer into bankruptcy, and secondly that a board of review should be appointed, if necessary, for the purpose of dealing with a matter upon which an agreement could not otherwise be reached, and in the last section we are exercising our powers of legislation to deal with the question of interest.

Obviously merely to state the principle does not assist the house on the second reading unless it is opposed to the principle, but I gather from what the house has said that members are very desirous of assisting in giving effect to the principle, and the question is a question of the details of the legislation and the extent to which they may be thought by the committee to effectuate the purpose for which the bill is provided.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, so far as I have been able to study the details of the bill I do not see anything particular to object to, although there are one or two suggestions that I should like to make in committee. The bill seems to me to meet the situation very acceptably.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

[Mr. Gordon.]

On section 1—short title.

Mr. COOTE: Might I ask the Prime Minister whether any legislation is being considered to deal with the case of urban debtors?

Mr. BENNETT: I explained the other day that the government had given a great deal of consideration to that matter but that it involved consideration and implications which had thus far seemed insurmountable. We may be able to meet the matter further, but at the present moment that is all I can say.

Mr. REID: Will the Prime Miinster tell us whether farmers who are under the soldier settlement board and who are in arrears to the board will be able to take advantage of this legislation? Under the act of last year the soldier settlers were able, if they had or could procure the money, to receive dollar for dollar, but sixty per cent in British Columbia could not. Would those soldier settlers in default come under this legislation?

Mr. BENNETT: I should think it would be extremely doubtful as the law now stands whether they would or not, but I should be glad to consider whether or not it might be desirable to add a special clause. Normally they should not for reasons that are purely legal. The crown's claim has priority in bankruptcy as well as in other proceedings, and therefore would not be subjected to the compromise that the act provides for. I will look into the matter.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Interpretation.

Mr. BENNETT: I propose, Mr. Chairman, if we can take this section line by line, to make some suggestions to the committee as we go along. If the committee will look at the definition of the word "farmer" in paragraph (f) of subsection 1 of section 2, they will see that it means "a person engaged solely in farming or the tillage of the soil." It has been suggested that that definition is hardly sufficient, and one of our friends has indicated that he thought a better definition would be:

> "Farmer" means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming or the tillage of the soil.

Hon. gentlemen will recall that the hon. member for Gloucester the other day mentioned that substantial numbers of men should be designated as farmers although they cultivate only small areas and are engaged also in fishing and hunting and matters of that sort. I think perhaps in view of what has been said, it would be better to use a more comprehensive definition.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would that definition cover a man who is not living on his farm but renting it on a crop-share basis?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly not. He must be in occupation. This only deals with cases of men who are in occupation, the effort being to keep men on the farm, to assist and induce those who are on the land to stay there. It does not deal with cases of the kind my hon. friend mentions at all.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I assume that it would cover the case of those men who are on the farm but occupy a portion of their time in working elsewhere? I had in mind that the first definition might not cover them but that the second would.

Mr. BENNETT: It is for that reason that the change is proposed, and I submit to the committee that this is possibly a little more comprehensive, but if the committee have any better terms to suggest I shall be glad to accept them. The suggestion is that the definition should read:

"Farmer" means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming or the tillage of the soil.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That would not include a man with five or ten acres whose principal occupation was not that of farming.

Mr. BENNETT: He would not get relief.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am afraid it is going to be very difficult to define the principal occupation exactly. Has the Prime Minister explored the possibilities of putting it on an acreage basis?

Mr. BENNETT: No, that would seem to be impossible having regard to the intensive cultivation carried on by some farmers near to urban centres. The definition that is now suggested is in conformity—I speak subject to correction—with the definition used by the income tax department for the purpose of differentiating between farmers and others, and I think that is about the nearest we can get.

Mr. REID: In British Columbia we have poultry farms of two acres and an investment of $60,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. This would cover that. I will hand this amendment to the chairman.

We propose to add a definition for "mortgage" as paragraph (g). They have a special provision in Quebec and the ordinary meaning of mortgage must be expanded so as to include a hypothec and also a deed of sale with a right of redemption under the civil law.

Mr. NEILL: What about the case of a man who has an agreement of sale?

Mr. BENNETT: That is dealt with by the statute.

Mr. NEILL: Does the Prime Minister mean that it is dealt with by this bill?

Mr. BENNETT: We believe that case is covered by the provisions with respect to compromises. If it is not sufficiently clear, we will make it so.

Mr. STIRLING: Who will decide this knotty point as to whether a man's principal occupation is farming?

Mr. BENNETT: If it becomes necessary, it will be done by the court of review, made up of a judge and two others. Where the benefit of the doubt must always be given to the applicant, we do not believe that there will be much difficulty about it.

Mr. COOTE: I wonder if the Prime Minister would consider an even wider provision that that which he has just proposed? I have in mind a number of elderly people who have been living solely from the incomes from their farms which are rented. They still own those farms and have equities in them, if they have not been lost.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) must realize that the whole point is occupancy of the property. I am afraid we cannot meet the case he mentions. We are trying to make possible for those who are engaged in tilling the soil and who occupy their properties to continue to do so. The definition used in the Bankruptcy Act is "whose sole occupation is farming." It will be observed that the present definition was taken from that act but we are trying to make it more broad and comprehensive. This is really the definition used by the income tax department.

Mr. REID: In British Columbia there are many people who fish but whose principal occupation is farming. Would the word "sole" take care of those people?

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid the hon. member has not been following me. I have already indicated that we intend to strike out the word "sole" and substitute the word "principal."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DUPRE: I move that section 2 be amended by inserting the following paragraph immediately after paragraph (f) of such section:

(g) "mortgage" includes a hypothec and also a deed of sale with a right of redemption.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DUPRE: I move that section 2 be amended by relettering paragraphs (g), (h), and (i) as (h), (i), and (j).

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. COOTE: Would the Prime Minister explain what a petition in bankruptcy against a farmer really means?

Mr. BENNETT: Without entering into a long discussion as to the circumstances which must combine to bring about the adjudication that any person is bankrupt, I can only say that an insolvent man is one who is unable to meet his debts as they mature. That is the general broad definition of the term. The Bankruptcy Act provides that under certain contingencies where a person is not able to meet his obligations as they mature, application may be made to have him adjudged a bankrupt. When he is so adjudged certain results follow which are provided for by the statute. That does not apply to a farmer except in a limited way, as will be seen in the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act itself. What is proposed now is the adoption of the general principle of the Bankruptcy Act. A farmer who is unable to meet his liabilities as they become due may make a proposal for a composition, an extension of time or a scheme or arrangement, either before or after assignment has been made. That is a voluntary assignment as distinct from a compulsory assignment. If I am unable to meet my obligations and a petition is filed that I be adjudged a bankrupt, that would be one class of assignment. The second class is where I, realizing that fact, may be an assignment. There are innumerable cases such as this and we see them in the Gazette every week. A man "assigns for the benefit of his creditors" was the term used before we had the Bankruptcy Act, that was the term used in the provisions of the statute relating to assignments for the benefit of creditors. That assignment act had its origin in the legislature of Ontario and was held by the courts to be valid until such time as this parliament determined that it would exercise its jurisdiction over the whole country. Since the passing of the Bankruptcy Act it is no longer an assignment for the benefit of creditors, it is an assignment in bankruptcy. The statute itself provides for the method by which property is to be distributed among the creditors, their order of priority and matters of that kind. This proposal is to take care of the farmer who is not in a position to meet his obligations. Instead of assigning or taking the benefits of the Bankruptcy Act, if its provisions were extended to him, he suggests to his creditors that if he is given an extension of time he may be able to work out his liabilities.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Or he may go through the courts.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will the exemptions provided in the provincial statutes remain in existence to the man assigning in bankruptcy?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not know the second reading of this bill was coming up to-day. What would happen to the farmer who has no equity in his land and who wants to make an assignment? Who will pay the costs of the assignment? Perhaps this is too simple a question.

Mr. BENNETT: We have endeavoured to provide for that by section 16. We regard the question asked by the hon. gentleman as having great importance because it is no use to set up machinery which will be so expensive that it cannot be of any benefit to the farmer. Although this looks a bit cumbersome, frankly it is the only method which I think can be devised to deal with the matter in a simple manner and not put the farmer to expense. I fear some hon. gentleman may take exception to section 16, but this reads:

The Minister of Finance shall be charged with the administration of this act, and the expenses necessary for such administration shall be payable out of any unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund.

I propose that the country shall pay the expenses.

Mr. HANBURY: I suppose the word "administration" will include up to the time when an arrangement has been concluded. I assume that after that time the creditor will have to pay certain charges.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not intended. Let us say that farmer A has certain debts and desires and proposes to make an agreement with his creditors under which, if given time, he may be able to pay 70 or 80 cents, as the case may be. If the steps provided for here are taken it is proposed that should that proposal be accepted, as it probably will be, and effect is given to it by an appropriate agreement or writing, the farmer then comes forward, without expense up to that point, to work out the liabilities in the manner provided for in the agreement. The expenses are not to be placed upon him up to that point.

Mr. HANBURY: That was the problem I put to the Prime Minister—up to that point.

Mr. BENNETT: And there are no expenses afterwards.

Mr. HANBURY: But the expenses of distribution?

Mr. BENNETT: That is the official receiver's job.

Mr. HANBURY: Any expenses the official receiver has will be charged, I understand, against the creditor's property.

Mr. BENNETT: No, they are paid for.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under the old law the official receiver would not put himself into gear unless someone put up some money.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the reason it is provided, to use the language of the hon. gentleman, to put the machinery into gear without his having to pay.

Mr. NEILL: Who initiates the proceedings?

Mr. BENNETT: The farmer.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In paragraph (h) "petition" means a petition in bankruptcy against a farmer. As I understand it, a petition in bankruptcy means the taking of action to bring a debtor into compulsory bankruptcy. I am aware that this is not provided for in the Bankruptcy Act so far as a farmer is concerned, and in view of this fact, may I ask whether the new act alters the status of the farmer in any respect. The Prime Minister will remember that I brought up the same point on the second reading and I believe he intended to explain the matter in committee.

Mr. BENNETT: Which section is the hon. gentleman dealing with?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In paragraph (h) of subsection 1 of section 2 petition means a petition in bankruptcy against a farmer.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. Perhaps the language might be improved upon in that respect. It means a petition under the act against the farmer, as provided for here. Default of certain action by the farmer, after the agreement has been arrived at, constitutes an act of insolvency under the act. That paragraph might stand until later in the day. I will look into it in the dinner hour, to make sure there is no difficulty.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It is paragraph (h) in the bill as it stands, but it becomes (i) now.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not clear as to what action is to be taken by the creditor. It is quite clear what the farmer must do, but as to what action shall be taken by the creditor, that seems to be rather obscure.

Mr. BENNETT: We had in mind that no farmer would desire to avail himself of the provisions of this act unless his creditors were pressing him. The action of the creditor is taken usually in an endeavour to get his money, and when such action is taken this act provides for the farmer taking the steps I have indicated, commencing at section 6.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What was puzzling me was whether the creditor would take action under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HACKETT: If the hon. member will look at subsection 3 of section 2 he will see that part I of the Bankruptcy Act is brought into effect. The hon. member for Red Deer did point out that under Part I of the Bankruptcy Act a farmer may not be put into bankruptcy, but under the second part of the act he may make an assignment; in subsection 3 of section 2 of the bill it is stated that part I of the Bankruptcy Act, notwithstanding anything found in section 7 of the Bankruptcy Act, shall have its application. I think that means that a farmer who does not carry out a proposal, may be put into bankruptcy by his creditors.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I could not just see what was aimed at in view of the intervention of the Bankruptcy Act. The farmer may or may not avail himself of the opportunity of assigning and taking advantage of the act. Does the provision contained in the act force him to take that action?

Mr. BENNETT: No, it does not.

Mr. BURY: But does not the provision of subsection 3 of section 2 only make part I of the Bankruptcy Act apply to a farmer after a proposal has been made and accepted and he has defaulted in respect of that proposal?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. BURY: Therefore it would not be true to say that part I of the Bankruptcy Act is made generally applicable to farmers.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose this committee does not desire me to enter into a long legal discussion—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not at all.

Mr. BENNETT: I know the hon. gentleman would like to escape it, although the history of this legislation is quite interesting. Part II of the Bankruptcy Act deals with assignments and compositions by ordinary debtors. My hon. friend from Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Michaud) understands the matter; he is a lawyer and has to deal with it. Let me quote the provision in the Bankruptcy Act:

> Any insolvent debtor whose liabilities to creditors, provable as debts under this act, exceed five hundred dollars, may, at any time prior to the making of a receiving order against him—

That is what I mentioned a moment ago.

> —make an assignment of all his property for the general benefit of his creditors.

That is the general law. For that reason we have substituted this provision, which is to be made effective at the expense of the state—I will put it that way frankly.

Mr. MICHAUD: That is the object.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is the object. When he is being pressed by his creditors to pay his debts and cannot do so, they say, "We will issue a writ against you and get execution"; and this provides for the machinery that will enable him without expense, as provided in the Bankruptcy Act, to deal with the disposition of his property as though it were under the Bankruptcy Act, though it is not, without having the expense that has heretofore impaired the operation of the Bankruptcy Act in a country such as this.

Mr. SPENCER: When he goes through that process he will not be forced to leave his home.

Mr. BENNETT: No. He can only be displaced from his home by appropriate proceedings in the court. He goes to the official receiver—and the official receiver does not mean official receiver under the Bankruptcy Act but one under this act—and then of course his property is in the custody of a custodian appointed by law to protect him.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: After this composition has been effected and the farmer has been given a fresh start under the new terms, and then fails to meet in any respect all the conditions of these new terms, he may then be subject to part I of the Bankruptcy Act and the creditors may bring a petition against him and put him into compulsory bankruptcy?

Mr. BENNETT: That undoubtedly is so, because at the end of subsection 3 of section 2 you will observe these words:

> And failure on the part of such farmer to carry out any of the terms of the proposal shall be deemed to be an act of bankruptcy.

I think that will have a salutary effect in preventing him from undertaking more onerous obligations than he might be able to discharge or creditors from being unduly pressing in seeking larger compositions than they might be able to expect. You have to relate this in some way to give jurisdiction to the parliament of Canada, it being a matter of property and civil rights. It must be observed that this has to be brought within the provisions of section 91 to give us jurisdiction to deal with it rather than the provinces which have only a limited jurisdiction.

Mr. COOTE: I think I see a very great difficulty in connection with subclause 3 of section 2. A farmer might honestly attempt to carry out his acceptance of the terms of the composition but a crop failure the very next year might make it impossible for him to meet those obligations. Then any one of his creditors could place him under bankruptcy. That is the way in which I understand the subclause, and I should like to know from the Prime Minister whether my interpretation is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact, since I have been sitting here this afternoon listening to the discussion it has occurred to me possibly it might be well to add a few words at the end of that clause to confer jurisdiction on a judge so as to prevent the operation of the drastic results which might follow from default. I have been thinking over that since the discussion has been precipitated. I am entirely in the hands of the committee; this is not party legislation in that sense, and any suggestions that may be made that will be useful I shall be very glad to adopt.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The farmer has gone through the hands of the official receiver and several other persons who ought to be in a position to advise him; his action is not altogether of his own volition.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I agree that perhaps some safeguard should be afforded because farming is such a hazardous occupation that a crop failure for two or three years will wipe out a man who has the best intentions in the world of meeting his obligations. To make a drastic provision for putting him into bankruptcy, thus cleaning him up although he may have a very considerable equity, does not seem quite fair. It must, however, be borne in mind that he is under the official receiver so long as he has any money.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am glad the Prime Minister made the suggestion and intimated that he was willing to consider amending that clause to provide for certain protection, because I have in mind a good many compositions that were thought to be quite satisfactory—the amount of concessions made in soldier land settlers' affairs is, for example, a striking illustration of that. We thought, all being well, the man was placed on a sound basis, but climatic, economic conditions, conditions over which no one and certainly not the farmer had any control, made it impossible for him to meet the terms to which he had assented in the first instance. It is very well to have some protection of that sort.

Mr. BENNETT: After all, the occasion for anxiety is not so great as it would appear. Hon. members will realize that in the first instance this is an act of bankruptcy. An act of bankruptcy has to be followed by something else, namely, a receiving order by a court, and I think a few words added at the end would put the matter right, so that the farmer shall have all the rights to appear and oppose the granting of an order, as provided for by the act. It does not follow because I have committed an act of bankruptcy, that the court will adjudicate me bankrupt. I want to make that clear. Perhaps this covers the difficulty the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) had in mind:

> The court may, if no custodian has been appointed and if it is shown to be necessary for the protection of the estate, at any time after the presentation of a bankruptcy order, and before a receiving order is made, appoint a licensed trustee as interim receiver.

That is an ordinary provision of our law with respect to an ordinary insolvent. This provision is, as will be observed, to the effect that he has by failure created an act of bankruptcy, but the court, as the statute now stands, must issue the order. I think I can add a few words that will make it quite clear that there is a discretion to the court.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would that apply to the first provision where there is a mere adjustment of the indebtedness?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) has not quite followed me. The composition, adjustment and arrangement having been arrived at, then failure on the part of the farmer to observe and perform his obligations under the adjustment or agreement constitutes an act of bankruptcy. That is, his default enables his creditors to apply to the court to have him adjudicated a bankrupt. The point that is raised by the hon. member for Macleod and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) is whether it is abundantly clear there is any discretion in anybody to prevent his being adjudicated a bankrupt. As the statute now stands, for general purposes it does not follow that an act of bankruptcy involves the adjudication of bankruptcy; that is, the mere act may be waived; it may be overcome in a hundred ways, for instance, by the payment of the debt if it had been paid prior to the adjudication. I think I can add a few words at the end of the clause that will make it quite clear the court will exercise a discretion, having regard to all the circumstances, before making such an adjudication. That, I understand, is what the hon. gentleman has in mind.

Mr. NEILL: The farmer would do that under the Bankruptcy Act anyhow.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. COOTE: Perhaps it is a little difficult for us, not being familiar with the terms of part I of the act, to get the full significance of this. In the case of any person who comes under part I of the Bankruptcy Act, who fails to meet his obligation, one of his creditors can file a petition against him. Is that not correct?

Mr. BENNETT: Broadly, yes.

Mr. COOTE: Would any farmer who has paid his debts as arranged under the provisions of this legislation, after that arrangement had been made, be in the position that any one of his creditors at any time the farmer failed to meet an obligation, could enter a petition against him to have him adjudicated a bankrupt? For how long would that apply? Would that not apply to the farmer all the rest of the time he was engaged in farming? It might follow him for a good many years.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Michaud) will explain that to the hon. member.

Mr. COOTE: Suppose in a matter of ten years this farmer was able to discharge the liabilities under which he was labouring at the time of the composition of his debts; then a few years after that another very difficult time comes along and he gets into trouble and is unable to meet his obligations. Would he not then be in the position of any person other than a farmer so far as part I of the Bankruptcy Act was concerned?

Mr. HACKETT: If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I think he has pretty well stated the case, but surely he does not consider that an act is to be passed which will exempt for all time an element of the community from paying its debts.

Mr. COOTE: That was not the purpose of the Bankruptcy Act in exempting farmers to prevent them from paying their debts for all time.

Mr. HACKETT: If the hon. member will read section 6 and following sections he will see that provision is made for compositions and for those compositions to be entered into with the utmost care. He will see that if either party is not satisfied with the terms of the composition, finds them either too onerous or inadequate, an appeal may be had to a provincial board of review. It does seem that any composition arrived at by persons who will have the experience and will exercise the care that it is anticipated will be exercised under this statute will preclude the probability of failure on the part of the farmer. But I presume there will be some farmers who will be unable to carry out all the terms of the composition; then the provision which has been referred to merely puts them in the position of other classes of the community who do not pay their debts. The Prime Minister has stated that he may be able to add a few words to subsection 3 of section 2. I cannot anticipate what those words will be, but if he were to qualify or define the breach of the composition, so that a man might not be thrown into bankruptcy unless he owed, say, $500 or some definite amount, I cannot imagine that anyone could complain of the section as it would then stand, because it would give the farming community the chance of escape from the plight in which it now finds itself due to the low prices of the commodities which they produce.

Mr. MICHAUD: What would be the effect if subsection 3 of section 2 were not in this bill?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. HACKETT: There would be no sanction.

Mr. MICHAUD: Tied up forever.

Mr. HANBURY: Not being of the legal profession I am perhaps wrong, but it appears to me that section 6 would have some bearing on the point, because I note here that a farmer can make a composition either before or after an assignment has been made. I do not know whether that is the same thing as being adjudged a bankrupt, but if the words "after he has been adjudged a bankrupt" were added it would probably meet the situation.

Mr. BENNETT: To reply to these difficulties seriatim: First, I think we can meet the difficulty mentioned by the hon. members for Macleod (Mr. Coote) and Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) if we add the words "if in the opinion of a judge or court such order should be made." The second point, raised in the earlier part of the discussion, is as to whether or not the exemption clause still applies. Of course under the Bankruptcy Act it does, and the reason I said I wanted to look at it was to satisfy myself that the language was clear enough. I think that is so, but if there is any difficulty about it we shall make it abundantly clear that the provisions of the exemption clause that have to do with ordinary bankruptcy proceedings shall still remain inviolate; otherwise the plight of the farmer would be worse instead of better by reason of the composition. I think that is clear, but I do not want to be too certain, in view of the question having been asked.

The third suggestion is that section 6 contemplates the matter being dealt with in a particular way. But there is a distinction between an act of bankruptcy and an assignment. An assignment is the voluntary act of the debtor whereby he places his property in the hands of a trustee for distribution rateably amongst his creditors as provided by law. An act of bankruptcy is the happening of an event that renders the debtor liable to be adjudicated a bankrupt by an order being made against him. And following the order of course you have a custodian and finally a trustee. We are endeavouring to cut all that out as far as the machinery here is concerned. When a farmer is in a difficult position it is contemplated that he and this official receiver shall get together, and they will call the creditors together and determine in a simple way in view of all the circumstances what the man should be able to pay. In other words he himself with the assistance of the receiver and his creditors will determine what he can do. Then when the document is executed it has the effect of law, if all the parties agree to it. But if some do not agree it may be confirmed in the manner provided for by the act. If notwithstanding all this the farmer still thinks he really cannot do as much as has been suggested by his creditors, but still being honest in intent thinks he can do something rather than abandon his home, the court of review is set up as a simple and informal tribunal to determine whether or not what the farmer suggests he may be able to do to meet the claims of his creditors is a fair composition and adjustment.

Mr. HANBURY: Then it will follow as a logical step that the provision you are to make would follow the first act of bankruptcy?

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, and if there is default in the carrying out of the terms and conditions of the composition adjustment or agreement, which as the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Michaud) said a moment ago is the sanction for failure to comply with the arrangement he has made, I still will protect that by a further word saying that if in the opinion of the judge or court such order should be made he may have the adjudication go against him. I think that protects him to the extent that he should be protected or would wish to be.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I take it the judge will have discretionary power to adjudicate on individual cases. I am wondering what are the major factors upon which he will base his adjudication as to whether a man is bankrupt or not. I am willing to sit at the feet of any legal Gamaliel to learn of these matters. I know nothing about the legal terms, but I want to understand whether this down-and-outer can get really free to start over again, go up in the north country and start over again with nothing but his health and his axe and I hope a wife and not too many children, three or four will do to start with. Then he can start farming over again provided he is eligible for some assistance or loan under the other bill 93. I am not jesting; he can start over again if he feels that he is free from these distressing incumbrances that have overwhelmed him, perhaps through no fault of his own. If he can be free he will say "God bless the government that gave me my freedom."

Mr. BENNETT: It is not the government that does that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He may not vote for the government but he will say that just the same. That is the great opportunity he will have of starting over again if a little help is forthcoming as already indicated.

Mr. SPENCER: I take it the main object of this legislation is to keep the farmer on his farm.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. SPENCER: And although some who are situated on bad farms and want to move out should be able to do so, the main object is that where the farm is good land but owing to conditions beyond his control the farmer has got into debt so heavily that he cannot liquidate his liabilities, then this legislation will enable him to get free of debt and carry on where he is now living.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the hon. members for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) and Melville (Mr. Motherwell) will understand me when I say that part of this is somewhat intricate and technical, all bankruptcy laws have been found so to be. The theory of a bankruptcy law is that the property of a person who is in debt shall be rateably distributed amongst his creditors, and thereupon he, having been honest and free from any suggestion of wrongdoing, shall receive what we call technically a discharge in bankruptcy, the result being that he becomes a free man, to use the language of the hon. gentlemen. In this section we are not approaching it from that angle at all, because the farmer has not sought the benefits of the bankruptcy laws of the country in the first instance; in fact in the province of Quebec it is provided that those laws shall not apply to farmers at all, as this committee knows.

I think I can explain it more clearly, perhaps, if I start at the beginning. Here is a farmer in southern Alberta; I will take that as an illustration though New Brunswick would do equally well. He has a mortgage against his property. He has suffered crop failures, but now he begins to see some signs of returning prosperity; there is more moisture in the ground, and so on. He says, "If I had a chance I could pay my creditors, either in full or at least in a certain proportion. I do not desire to have my property cleaned up and sold; I desire to stay here with my implements and my accumulations and work my property. I ask the law to restrain my creditors from coming in and closing me out with an execution in the courts of the province," because this overcomes that difficulty as well. "I ask that to be stopped, and I say I should be given a chance." Thereupon the official receiver under this act discusses his problem with him. The creditors are called together, and the farmer says, "I am not trying to get out of paying my debts; I want to pay them if you will give me time in which to do it." Thereupon, without any thought other than that in view, the farmer decides what he can do and that is embodied in an agreement.

That must be an agreement with which everyone is satisfied, because if one creditor is not satisfied he might cause difficulty and trouble, the farmer not yet having assigned but still retaining his property. We have taken steps to protect him up to that point, and that agreement is confirmed. But supposing there are some creditors who say no. Then we have set up the machinery in each province whereby, willy-nilly, whether they like it or not, they can be compelled to accept the proposals which the informal court believes to be satisfactory from the standpoint of the capacity, the capability and the potential strength of the farmer to retrieve his situation.

Mr. SPENCER: Just there I should like to ask what percentage of the creditors would have to be in agreement.

Mr. BENNETT: Unfortunately our law always has been framed upon the assumption that all must agree to a composition of debt.

Mr. HANBURY: That is in the past.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, in the absence of a statute. If I might make it clear, there is what might be called the written law and the unwritten law. The unwritten law, the common law, provides that a settlement between creditors and debtors cannot be made unless all the creditors agree, for my debt cannot be disposed of by anyone else in the world but myself. That is a striking tribute to that individuality of purpose which has been referred to in this house from time to time. In the early days in Great Britain, as in other countries, it was found that it was desirable for the honest man—and I use that term very emphatically—to be able to get a fresh start by making a full disclosure of everything he owned and handing it over to a trustee, who was usually a statutory trustee, who sold it, took out his expenses and distributed the proceeds rateably among the creditors. But that did not make him a free man; he then had to make application to the judge in bankruptcy for the purpose of receiving his discharge. In England to-day, if you are interested and will pick up the newspapers day after day, you will find that applications are made for discharge which are opposed on the ground that the man had not given all his property to the trustee, that he had gone on and earned money after making the assignment which had not been made available for his creditors. So there he is, faced with the certainty that he cannot sit in parliament if he is an adjudicated bankrupt, and that he may not hold many offices that are mentioned in statutes and that have grown up under common law. He is still branded as an undischarged bankrupt.

This act seeks to secure for the farmer the benefits of that principle, set up by machinery that will run easily and without expense to the farmer. But if he makes what I might call a too optimistic adjustment and fails to carry it out then, under this statute, he becomes liable to be adjudicated a bankrupt, because that is to constitute an act of bankruptcy. On the other hand I think I shall adopt the suggestion that has been made and add the words, "if the judge or a court so determine." In other words it does not follow automatically, which is the fear of the hon. member. There may be, and I think there is, something in that. On the other hand if the farmer makes his composition and meets it, when the composition is met his creditors are paid, either at fifty or sixty cents on the dollar or, over a long period of time, one hundred cents on the dollar or whatever it may be. That is a matter in which the voice of the creditors is not going to be final under this statute. This is the difficulty that any legal gentleman in the house will agree we have had to meet, and if I do say it myself—authors are always proud of their products—I think it has been not unfairly met by this legislation. We have provided that the farmers are to get a chance to stay on their land, utilizing the assets they have and working out their destinies, paying their debts not necessarily at one hundred cents on the dollar but to the extent which may be agreed upon between the creditors and the debtor or, failing that, by the action of the review board for the province.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think I can see the reason for that. One of the factors would be whether the man or applicant was an Ananias or a Sapphira, in which case neither should get a discharge and be eligible to be free.

Mr. BENNETT: Presumably he would not be a Sapphira.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, since six o'clock I have been moralizing on this question of the adjudication of debts both on the part of the farmer who is down and out and on the part of those who are not down and out but are capable of taking care of their debts over a period of time if given an opportunity. There are those two classes, and one is quite distinct from the other.

With regard to the down-and-outer, I was appealing to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if there was not some way of letting that man feel that he was free, free without any strings whatsoever, because after all these matters are to be determined by a judge and the law can be administered in a strange way sometimes. I have great faith in the judiciary of Canada, yet nevertheless there is the humane judge who will administer the law humanly, and there is the other judge who takes the attitude: "I want the law carried out in its entirety." He will make the man come up to the scratch; let the chips fall where they may, he will insist upon compliance with the law. There are not many of the latter kind, I am glad to say, but there are some. I would appeal to the Prime Minister to use his great talents to devise some scheme that will permit the applicant who is honestly eligible to complete discharge from all his present mortgage obligations, who has not played the part of either an Ananias or a Sapphira, who has not been making wrong returns—I have no use for him, but there have been at least the two beforementioned historic examples and there have been others since—to have a chance to start over again as free men and women. I am speaking for the man who has made his returns properly, who has not been trying to humbug anybody, who has not been trying to put something over the government or anybody else, that he be given the opportunity to start over again feeling that if he complies with the conditions he can go free.

Let me illustrate. When Abraham Lincoln set the slaves of the south free, I do not know how many strings were on those slaves, but there were some strings, I recall about runaway slaves and all that sort of thing. Speaking generally, however, those slaves were set free although sometimes they had become so much attached to their masters that they did not want to leave. Now if the right hon. leader of the government could meet the situation I have spoken of in some way, and I think it could be done, he would be looked upon as the great emancipator of the white slaves of Canada—I am speaking very seriously, Mr. Chairman—just as Abraham Lincoln was the emancipator of the dark slaves of the south. Why not put in a proviso that the law shall be administered thus and so, and with the understanding that it is the government's desire to free all men who are honestly worthy of being made free? That should not be impossible. I think I could make a stab at something like that myself in the way of rough draftsmanship, and I am confident that the Prime Minister, who I feel sure understands me, could draft something to meet that situation. Look at another incidental advantage such a policy would be, Mr. Chairman. Most of the people in this house are capitalists; that is, they believe in the capitalist system as such, even though imperfect. All farmers are capitalists. What is the use of talking nonsense about socialism or communism as long as we own land? Now if the Prime Minister would do as I suggest, look what a tribute it would be to a reformed capitalism, harnessed up, if you like, adjusted to suit the requirements of to-day. It would stop the mouths of these men who are talking socialism and nihilism and communism and all these other isms, and decrying the capitalist system because it is defective. Of course, it is defective. All laws and all institutions will be defective as long as we as individuals who comprise the community are defective ourselves. You cannot have anything perfect that depends upon imperfect men, but let us strive as much as possible towards perfection, and let us make the capitalist system of to-day a reformed one so that we can talk honestly and with truth of emancipating the white slaves, the down-and-out honest mortgage slaves of Canada.

I am not referring now, Mr. Chairman, to those who are capable of looking after their own affairs, and have some considerable equity in their homes, and most of such can, if they are given a long term amortized chance. I am speaking more particularly of the down-and-out men and women who have not a chance in a million of ever getting on their feet and who are without hope. What kind of a try-out are farmers going to make unless they have the consciousness that, if not themselves, their children at least are going to be able once more to make the grade?

I do not know if I have made myself plain or not, but I do urge the Prime Minister to put his great talents to working out a solution of this important question instead of merely confining such talents, as he sometimes does, to keeping the opposition from getting information about this, that or the other thing to which they think they are entitled. Anybody can do that, but it is not everybody who can emancipate the white farmer slaves of this country. The right hon. gentleman is now in harness, but he does not know any more than I do how long he will be in harness or how long I shall be in harness, and I appeal to him to do something to contribute to this great end while it is yet day.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the invitation of the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) to become an emancipator is very appealing, but unfortunately there is a constitution in this country that imposes even upon me limitations and restrictions. I say it very regretfully, of course, but it is a fact. The power to discharge a debtor from his debt to his creditor I am afraid does not lie with us when you deal with questions of contract. For instance it is not competent in my judgment—I have not given it any thought—for this parliament to say that a man who owes his grocer one hundred dollars shall after the passing of an act owe him nothing, and that is what the hon. gentleman suggests. But we have jurisdiction with respect to bankruptcy and with respect to interest, and the bill which is now before the committee represents a great deal of hard work—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know. I can believe that, but we referred to nothing except mortgage indebtedness.

Mr. BENNETT: —in an effort within our jurisdiction to secure for the unfortunate debtor who is tilling the soil an opportunity so far as we can grant it to begin again. But I do not think we have the power to do what the hon. gentleman suggests, and I think perhaps on reconsideration he would doubt the wisdom of it himself.

The discussion so far has raised several questions, and I think we have disposed of most of them except that which arises under subsection 3 of section 2. The section as it reads places upon the farmer as a punishment for default the possibility of an application being made to have him adjudicated a bankrupt, it being declared to be an act of insolvency. The hon. member for Melville asked a very proper question as to what constitutes an act of insolvency. That is covered by section 3 of the Bankruptcy Act, and without reading it at length—perhaps the hon. gentleman will excuse me from reading too much—I shall just give the purport of it as I proceed.

First of all, if in Canada or elsewhere a debtor makes an assignment of his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors generally, whether it is an assignment authorized by the Bankruptcy Act or not, that constitutes an act of insolvency. Or if he makes a fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or transfer of his property, the words "fraudulent conveyance" having a meaning attributed to them by the courts, that is an act of insolvency. Or if he makes a conveyance or transfer of his property which in itself would be void as a fraudulent preference if he were adjudged bankrupt—that is a technical matter —that is an act of insolvency. Or if he endeavours to defeat or delay his creditors, that also is an act of insolvency.

Next is the one which is the most common. Or if he permits any execution or other process issued against him under which any of his goods are seized, levied upon or taken in execution to remain unsatisfied until within four days from the time fixed by the sheriff for the sale thereof, and so on, that is the customary and ordinary case in which bankruptcy is determined, or at least I put it that way. The next paragraph reads:

> If he exhibits to any meeting of his creditors any statement of his assets and liabilities which shows that he is insolvent, or presents or causes to be presented to any such meeting a written admission of his inability to pay his debts;

The next paragraph deals with the removal of his property so that it is not available for the settlement of his debts. Then there is the Bulk Sales Act provision, that is, if he makes a bulk sale of his property. The next reads:

> If he gives notice to any of his creditors that he has suspended or that he is about to suspend payment of his debts;

My attention has been directed to that since this discussion began. The next reads:

> If he ceases to meet his liabilities generally as they become due.

That was the original statute. As I said this afternoon, insolvency results from a man's inability to pay his debts as they become due, but in a country such as this, where the difficulties of making a living are so great under distress circumstances and where crops and climatic conditions have so much to do with a man's ability to meet his obligations, it was thought desirable to add the word "general", so that a single specific instance of inability to pay as the obligation matures should not then in itself constitute an act of bankruptcy. Those are at least the acts which if committed by a debtor are acts of bankruptcy under our statute. As the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) said to-day, this subsection proposes to make the default in keeping his obligations under the compromise an act of insolvency. We have in various parts of this country such untoward conditions and circumstances with respect to crops and possibly we would be serving the ends of justice and fairness if we added the words "if so determined by a judge." That would leave it to the judge to say whether under all the circumstances it is an act of bankruptcy. I dare say the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), who is a lawyer, would say that it would have to mean that within the terms of the section to which I have just referred, being section 3 of the act. As I said this afternoon, I would prefer to take a few minutes when the house is not sitting to look into the matter with a little more care, so I would like subsection 3 to stand.

Mr. HANBURY: A question arises in my mind in connection with the carrying on of the operations of the farm during the period it is under this administration. I refer particularly to purchases for living requirements and repairs to buildings or machinery. I assume the administrator would be able to authorize expenditures for those purposes?

Mr. BENNETT: That does not arise at the moment because the exemptions still obtain under this bill as in the former act. So far as the rest of it is concerned, the whole question is that of an adjustment between his creditors and himself. The amendment to the Canadian Farm Loan Act, which is complementary to this bill and which it is proposed to take up next, contemplates our being able to provide him with a little means with which to start again. I quite agree with the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) that this is highly desirable, because it is idle to arrange a compromise and it is futile to execute an extension agreement unless there is some probability that the man who receives the extension and makes the compromise is able to discharge the fresh obligation—it is the old one in fact—which he has undertaken. In the next bill we will endeavour to make it possible for him to discharge the new obligation thus created.

Mr. HANBURY: I understand from the Prime Minister that that is a matter that would be discussed with the creditors and the administrator.

Mr. BENNETT: Not administrator; he is the receiver.

Mr. HANBURY: In order to give him authority to do that. That would be a matter of arrangement. There is one other matter which is not just clear to me with reference to the priority of the secured creditor. Is it the intention to maintain his priority as against an unsecured creditor?

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. gentleman let that stand? The matter is dealt with in later sections.

Mr. HANBURY: I have looked at the bill but I have not succeeded in finding that. Will this apply to the farmer who is operating a rented farm as well as to the farmer who owns his property?

Mr. BENNETT: The farmer who is living on a rented farm would not be able to offer any security by way of readjustment unless he had a very long term lease. Occupancy and occupation are the first factors, but occupancy and occupation involve something further. They involve something by way of assets to enable him to deal with a compromise or adjustment. If he had a six months' or a year's lease he would not be able to get very far.

Mr. YOUNG: I was not in the house this afternoon and have not been following the discussion, but do I understand the Prime Minister to say that any farmer who does any of these things which he read, who generally neglects to meet his creditors and so on, could be forced into bankruptcy?

Mr. BENNETT: No. I am sure the hon. gentleman would not expect me to repeat all that I have been going over for the last two hours. I regret his absence, but I think it is hardly fair to ask me to go over this matter for another hour. I would put it broadly in this way. The bill contemplates a compromise being effected and an adjustment being made for the purpose of enabling a man who is in insolvent circumstances to secure from his creditors an extension of time under an agreement which would be agreed to by all his creditors, this being purely a matter between his creditors and himself. Upon failing to reach an agreement, a court of review is set up. This is an informal court consisting of a judge and representatives of the creditors and the debtor. That court either approves or disapproves the scheme which has been projected. If they do not think it a reasonable scheme, they have the power to propound a fresh one for the purpose of meeting the situation. However, after an agreement has been drawn up and executed, if a farmer should neglect to discharge his obligations under it, that would be an act of bankruptcy. It was pointed out this afternoon that that might involve a penalty for default where climatic conditions might bring about a crop failure and that there should be some discretion to determine whether or not such a consequence should follow from an act over which the debtor might possibly have no control. Therefore I was proposing to make a slight amendment to subsection 3 of section 2, and I have asked that that subsection stand in order that that might be accomplished. The other sections to section 6 deals with the setting up of the machinery, while section 6 provides for the contemplated agreement being entered into and a compromise made. I might say to the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) that that compromise might contemplate any settlement; I say to the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) that it might mean only ten or fifteen cents on the dollar.

Mr. HANBURY: Or one cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, or it might mean seventy-five or eighty cents. That would be an interference with the copyright of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) which should not be interfered with. Leaving it at that it will be seen—the hon. member for Melville was speaking about this at six o'clock—that the question to be considered is the future of the farmer. That is the end dealt with in this bill, but the next bill which I propose to take up, the farm loan bill, contemplates expanding the discretion vested in the board appointed by this parliament in order to enable small additional fresh capital to be provided so that the cultivator may be able to earn the wherewithal to discharge what may be described as the new obligation which has been set up in lieu of that which was existent with his creditors when he made the settlement and compromise to which I have referred.

Mr. HACKETT: Subsection 2 of section 2 indicates that the Bankruptcy Act and the bankruptcy rules shall, except as in this act otherwise provided, apply. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has asked about priorities. Section 16 of the Bankruptcy Act, subsection 5, is in the following terms:

> No composition, extension or scheme shall be approved by the court which does not provide for the payment in priority to other debts of all debts directed to be so paid in the distribution of the property of a bankrupt or authorized assignor.

Mr. HANBURY: That is the point I had in mind in asking the question. Naturally I came to the conclusion that if the reduced value of the mortgage on a property were $4,000 and the entire composition did not amount to more than $4,000, then the unsecured creditors would have no equity in the composition. I want to know whether I am correct in that assumption.

Mr. HACKETT: The Prime Minister pointed out this afternoon that there is in this bill a provision which makes the capacity of the debtor to pay and the capacity of his land to produce, criteria of value. Taking those criteria into consideration I cannot see how the unsecured creditors can be affected.

Mr. HANBURY: I cannot see how they can have any security according to my interpretation of the bill.

Mr. HACKETT: The secured creditors have to value their security.

Mr. LUCAS: In my opinion this bill is one of the most important pieces of legislation we have had before us this year. There are thousands of farmers throughout the west particularly and in other parts of Canada who to-day, through no fault of their own, find themselves in the position where they have lost practically all hope, and if through the practical application of a bill of this kind that situation can be remedied and they can be given fresh hope to carry on, I think it will mean a great deal not only to the farmers but to other sections of the community. There are one or two points on which I wish to be clear. First, has the farmer to agree to an agreement that may be arrived at by the official receiver and the creditors? I understand that the official receiver is the person who will adjudicate on these debts. If the official receiver and the creditors should agree that the farmer ought to pay a certain amount is he compelled to accept that agreement?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is no.

Mr. LUCAS: The other point is in regard to the creditors. Must a certain percentage of creditors agree?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have been flitting about all over the subsections and these alphabetical designations here. Have we passed paragraph (f)?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are down to subsection 3.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Have we passed paragraph (f) of subsection 1?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: For the hon. gentleman's information I may say that "farmer" under paragraph (f) means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming or the tillage of the soil. That is as broad as we think we can make it under the circumstances, as I explained before the hon. gentleman came into the chamber.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does it cover orchardists?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I should think so.

Subsections 1 and 2 agreed to.

Subsection 3 stands.

On section 3—Official receiver.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I understand that any official, provincial or federal, may be appointed as receiver, and I assume that will include the present debt adjustment officers in the various provinces who are familiar with the work.

Mr. BENNETT: At one time it was suggested by some of the provinces that a sheriff might be a suitable person to be designated, but it was thought, in view of his office, that this might be highly undesirable. The section as drawn contemplates debt adjustment officers or other provincial officers who have had to do with these matters being appointed.

Section agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5—Jurisdiction.

Mr. BENNETT: This is quite a departure, owing to the hope we have that the local judge, district or county, having knowledge of local conditions, will be far more conversant with general conditions surrounding the farmer's efforts than anyone else would be.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—If farmer unable to meet his liabilities.

Mr. HANBURY: I notice in subsection 1 the words "before or after an assignment has been made." I should like to have an explanation of that.

Mr. BENNETT: There are cases now outstanding in the country where assignments have been made, and if it were not for such a provision as this, this act would not thus be available, for those who had made assignments would be subject to all the cumbrous provisions of the Bankruptcy Act which was intended originally, as the hon. gentleman knows, for traders and mercantile people. This meets that condition.

Mr. HANBURY: The question arises as to whether a date should be set; otherwise they might go back ten years.

Mr. BENNETT: The Bankruptcy Act in its present form has not been in force that long, so far as farmers are concerned. I do not think there is much difficulty about that, having regard to the statute of limitations in the various provinces and the effect which that would have. I should not be disposed to be too careful when he took advantage of it. The act contemplates that the estate will be wound up with some rapidity, and those who come from Saskatchewan will realize that there was a discussion in the legislature of that province, with respect to one particular case, which has caused a good deal of widespread publicity and some criticism of the act itself.

Mr. HACKETT: I ask the Prime Minister if section 6 may not have to be slightly modified because of section 9 of the Bankruptcy Act. I suppose this statute would have right of way over the general act.

Mr. BENNETT: It so declares.

Mr. HACKETT: Is there any reason to insert here that section 6 shall be effective notwithstanding section 9 of the Bankruptcy Act?

Mr. BENNETT: I am not expressing any opinion—the Minister of Justice is not here—but I think the provisions of subsection 2 of section 2 are sufficient:

> Unless it is otherwise provided or the context otherwise requires, expressions contained in this act shall have the same meaning as in the Bankruptcy Act, and this act shall be read and construed as one with the Bankruptcy Act, but shall have full force and effect notwithstanding anything contained in the Bankruptcy Act. ...

This is to enable the provisions of this act to prevail over the Bankruptcy Act. Section 9 of the Bankruptcy Act contains provisions as to what constitute acts of bankruptcy, as I indicated to the hon. member for Melville. What are acts of bankruptcy are contained in section 3 as it now reads, amended, and I do not think there is any danger. If there is we can make the matter abundantly clear.

Mr. RALSTON: Does not section 7 of the Bankruptcy Act expressly say that it does not apply to farmers? Therefore the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) will not have any difficulty in connection with the Bankruptcy Act, unless by the terms of this legislation it is expressly made to apply.

Mr. HACKETT: Part II of the Bankruptcy Act applies to farmers, except those of Quebec.

Mr. RALSTON: I was speaking about part I.

Mr. BOWMAN: Clause 6 might be amended by inserting after the word "they" where it appears in the second line the word "generally." Then it would read:

A farmer who is unable to meet his liabilities as they generally become due.

As the clause stands at the present time a farmer simply unable to meet his liabilities would under the provisions of this legislation be able to make a composition with his creditors, but if it followed the definition in the Bankruptcy Act by the insertion of the word "generally" there, it would give the idea that he was one who was generally unable to meet his liabilities. Probably that would cover the case a little better.

Mr. BENNETT: We gave some thought to that and the reason the word "generally" is not inserted is this: this act is an act of the farmer under clause 6 and he will found jurisdiction to attempt a composition if he is unable to meet his liabilities as they become due. The word "generally" need not have any application. If he finds he is unable to meet a liability maturing to-day, he may say to-morrow: I am not able to meet this liability and I know others are coming; I must ask my creditors to make a composition. Under paragraph (j) of section 3 of the Bankruptcy Act, if he is unable to meet his liabilities as they generally become due, that constitutes an act of bankruptcy. But Part I has no reference to the farmer who is affected only by part II which deals with assignments. If, however, it is found that the insertion of that word makes the clause any better I shall not for a single moment oppose its being added. This section is for the farmer; it is permissive; it is to enable him, if he is unable to meet his debts as they become due, to have a scheme drawn up for the composition of his liabilities. The absence of the word "generally" is in the interest of the farmer and not against him.

Mr. HANBURY: That is the whole principle of the bill.

Mr. MICHAUD: In view of the fact that the definition of the word "farmer" has been slightly amended, would it not be well to amend clause 6 so as to cover cases of persons not solely engaged in farming against whom a petition in bankruptcy has already been filed? There are people who are carrying on other occupations than farming but who sometimes get credit on the security of their farm lands. The clause might be subject to some ambiguity and difficulty. Might it not be better to add these words after the last word of subclause 1:

Or against whom a petition has been filed.

So that it would apply to a farmer as defined by the bill. The subclause would then read:

A farmer who is unable to meet his liabilities as they become due may make a proposal for a composition, extension of time or scheme of arrangement either before or after an assignment has been made or against whom a petition has been filed.

In view of the amendment to the definition of "farmer" I am afraid there are some cases where such a change would become necessary.

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska did not quite follow what I said before. The Bankruptcy Act does not apply in part I to farmers; part II, dealing with assignments, applies to farmers but neither consideration need have any weight with us at the moment. We are indicating the condition under which the farmer may apply to use this legislation; that is all. All he has to do is to be in a position where he is unable to meet his liabilities either before or after an assignment has been made. If he has made an assignment he is not able to meet his debts as they mature. If a petition is filed against him he is in the same position. He does not come under part I of the Bankruptcy Act. Therefore, so far as we are concerned there is only one question to ask: Is he unable to meet his liabilities as they become due? If so, he may use the provisions of this measure. Have I made myself clear to my hon. friend? I am afraid I have not.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. member is referring to the case of a man who has two occupations, who is not only a farmer.

Mr. BENNETT: We have adopted the definition practically of the Income Tax Act rather than of the Bankruptcy Act, because the Bankruptcy Act refers to a person engaged solely in farming or the tillage of the soil. In order to meet the view that was expressed we have changed that to mean one whose principal occupation consists of farming.

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid my hon. friend meant a man who was not disqualified by the provisions of part I of the Bankruptcy Act. He might have a petition presented against him and he might want to take advantage of the provisions relating to farmers, but could not do so. I thought the Prime Minister's answer was quite clear, namely, that no matter what happened to put the man into bankruptcy court he was unable to meet his liabilities when they became due and therefore was qualified under this legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7—In case of a debt owing to a secured creditor.

Mr. BENNETT: This clause, owing to some slight difference in Quebec and other parts of Canada, has been amended to meet that situation and the Solicitor General will move an amendment accordingly.

Mr. DUPRE: In clause 2 we have added these words:

"mortgage" includes a hypothec and also a deed of sale with a right of redemption.

Therefore we have to amend clause 7 accordingly. I move:

That section 7 be deleted and that the following be substituted therefor:

"7. A proposal may provide for a compromise or an extension of time or a scheme of arrangement in relation to a debt owing to a secured creditor or in relation to a debt owing to a person who has acquired movable or immovable property subject to a right of redemption, but in that event the concurrence of the secured creditor or such person shall be required, except in the case of a proposal formulated and confirmed by the board of review as hereinafter provided."

Mr. RALSTON: Does the exception to clause 7 as amended refer particularly to clause 12, subclause 6, where a scheme is compulsorily put through, that is to say, made compulsory by the board of review on both the debtor and the creditor?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) will appreciate the fact that we have not undertaken to confiscate securities but we have endeavoured to make it possible for the compromise to extend to the secured creditor. At the conference to which I referred the other day the attitude of those representing the security holders was that they were most anxious to assist in bringing about any arrangement that would ensure the farmer remaining on the property. That was the basis of all their anxiety. They have already given earnest of their willingness to make arrangements of that kind, hence it is in this statute. Many of them have forgiven as much as three years' interest; they have reduced interest to seven per cent where it was higher then seven per cent, and in some cases to less. This contemplates their being a party to the general scheme of arrangement without confiscation of their security, as to which there is doubt as to our having power in the premises, and starting the scheme on the basis of the secured creditors and the unsecured creditors participating all together for the advantage of the debtor.

Mr. RALSTON: The Prime Minister will understand that I am finding no fault; I am much interested in the experiment we are trying, and in connection with which we went some distance in the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act—

Mr. BENNETT: That did not apply to farmers.

Mr. RALSTON: —to interfere with secured creditors. As far as I am concerned I think it is a good idea to have this jurisdiction here if possible. I understand that the government are now going one step further and by this act are saying that the compromise or composition which the debtor proposes shall not be effective unless it is concurred in by the secured creditor except in the case of a compromise which has been expressly approved or formulated by the board of review. So that this parliament does assert the right to affect the right of the secured creditor if that is considered necessary in the interest of the debtor.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is wholly right in part, and not quite, I think, in all. It will be recalled that last session we passed an act in which we endeavoured successfully to provide for compromise with unsecured creditors and then with secured creditors. Section 4 of chapter 36 of last session reads:

Where a compromise or arrangement is proposed between a debtor company and its secured creditors or any class of them, the court may, on the application in a summary way of the company or of any such creditor or of the trustee in bankruptcy or liquidator of the company, order a meeting of such creditors or class of creditors, and, if the court so determines, of the shareholders of such company, to be summoned in such manner as the court directs.

We then went further and provided that the compromise be sanctioned by the court.

Section 6 provided that directions might be given by the court. The limitation of the act was found in section 7, which provided that:

> The provisions of this act shall be in extension and not in limitation of the provisions of any instrument now or hereafter existing governing the rights of creditors or any class of them and shall have full force and effect notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any such instrument.

As I intimated the other day, the supreme court last Thursday sustained the validity of this statute. Now the hon. gentleman says that under the board of review section of this bill we propose possibly to go a step further. I think when he reads it he will see that while we have jurisdiction conferred, owing to the constitution of the body, namely the representative of the secured creditors and of the debtor and of the judge who has jurisdiction in bankruptcy, it is probable—

Mr. RALSTON: It is not going any further than that.

Mr. BENNETT: Not very much, I think.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): That brings up the point that has been in my mind, and it is this. The board of review will be composed of a superior court judge, a representative of the creditor and a representative of the debtor. That will mean that there will not be any interference with contracts. If this parliament proposes to interfere with the rights of secured creditors, occasions will arise when those rights ought to be interfered with. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) has said that it is doubtful whether this parliament has the power to interfere with the rights of secured creditors. Have we not the power to interfere as far as interest rates are concerned? If we have that power, ought we not to state specifically in the powers given to the board of review that they shall exercise that power in proper cases? It seems to me that there is very little use in passing this section as it is, if the administration of the act is to rest in the hands of a superior court judge and the representative of the creditors as against one representative of the debtor. It seems to me that there will be many instances where if a secured creditor, for instance a mortgagee, is paid in accordance with the terms of his mortgage there will be no equity at all left for any other creditor, and no hope whatsoever held out to the farmer to encourage him to remain on the land. I suggest that the wording of the bill be extended to state specifically what powers the board of review will have, especially if it is going to be composed as suggested. Could we not have an amendment to give the board of review power to cut interest in proper cases?

Mr. BOWMAN: Surely that is already provided. There cannot be any question that the boards set up under this act will have the right to cut both interest and principal.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): That is not what the last speaker said.

Mr. RALSTON: And they have the right to do away with the security.

Mr. BOWMAN: There is no question about that, the way the bill is drawn. Moreover under subsection 8 of section 12 the board is given specific instructions as to the basis upon which its decisions are to be arrived at:

> The board shall base its proposal upon the present and prospective capability of the debtor to perform the obligations prescribed and the productive value of the farm.

Surely that covers the point. As I read the bill there is no question that the board of review have the right to cut both principal and interest to any extent that they deem advisable and to cut down the security.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): I do not think that is an answer to my question, because if it is correct, as the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth stated, that this parliament has not the power to confer upon the board the power to interfere with the rights of secured creditors, and if, as the Prime Minister indicated, boards composed of the personnel designated, will not be likely to interfere, then why not put it in black and white that we have the power? What is the use of enacting provisions that are ultra vires?

Mr. BENNETT: If we thought they were, we would not enact them; that is the answer.

Mr. RALSTON: Did I understand my hon. friend to say that I had said this is ultra vires of this parliament?

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): I believe the hon. member stated that it was very doubtful whether this parliament could interfere with the rights of secured creditors.

Mr. RALSTON: What I think I said was that it was very doubtful until the supreme court spoke last Thursday. Now the supreme court has decided, as I understand, that this parliament can interfere with secured creditors. As far as I am concerned I am happy to bow to their decision. I think there is some practical benefit in having it that way, in view of the fact that we are dealing with bankruptcy and insolvency. I should be a little afraid in view of the fact that what was submitted to the supreme court was the usual hypothetical question which, as every one knows, cannot be relied on too much when you come to a practical case. But we have done the best we can and have the decision of the supreme court. I was going to ask the Prime Minister before he got through whether if he thought it would be worth while to submit a question in regard to this legislation as well.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that upon consideration the hon. gentleman will see that if the decision and the reasons for it are accepted as valid, in these sections we are within those reasons. The other day I intimated to the house my unwillingness to press this bill until I saw the decision of the supreme court, but if my hon. friend and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stitt) will be good enough to look at sections 7 and 8 they will see that those sections must be read together. Perhaps it is a question as to whether section 8 might not have been placed before section 7. Section 8 provides:

> Whenever a proposal relates to the rights of a secured creditor, such creditor may value his security and shall be entitled to vote only in respect of the balance of his claim after deducting the amount of his valuation; provided, however, that no proposal shall be approved by the court which provides for the payment to such secured creditor on account of such security of any amount in excess of his valuation, or for granting to him any new security for an amount in excess of his valuation.

That, I think, brings it within the bankruptcy sections as interpreted by the supreme court in the case last Thursday. I think it is broad enough and at the same time narrow enough to conform to the provisions of the sections of our constitution that determine our federal jurisdiction. I say frankly to this committee that I have grave doubt as to the constitutional power of the parliament of Canada to confiscate security. I have said that quite frequently, and I say it again now.

Mr. FACTOR: Subsection 6 of section 12 provides for that.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but I am going to mention something else before I come to that. The proposals that the supreme court declared to be within the competence of this parliament last session certainly warrant these two sections; I think the committee can go that far. It will be within the memory of some of the members of this committee that the privy council stated that the judgment or the opinion of the supreme court, or even of the privy council itself, as to the answer to a hypothetical question respecting the constitutional validity of any statute, is no better than the opinion of the law officers of the crown. In other words, when the court gives an opinion in a case of that kind it is not settling the law as in connection with a case; it is not binding as a precedent. It is an expression of the opinion of the court, which one of the members of the privy council said is no higher than the opinion of the law officers of the crown.

Thus far we have the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada, which unanimously declared that the sections of the companies adjustment act of last session are within the competence of this parliament. I think most hon. members who compare the two will agree that these sections are valid if the sections of last year are valid. They do propose, subject to the limitations imposed by section 12 to which reference will be made presently, that the court shall have jurisdiction to consider the position of secured creditors. But I do direct the attention of the hon. member for Selkirk to the fact that this jurisdiction is limited within itself, because subsection 8 of section 12 declares that the decision of the board shall be based upon the present and prospective capability of the debtor to perform the obligations prescribed, and the productive value of the farm. Then follows the provision that was referred to this afternoon by one hon. gentleman; that is, there are cases where it would be unfair to the farmer himself to approve of a scheme, because it may be quite apparent that he has reached the point where there is no hope that, through such a scheme, he may emerge from the morass in which he is engulfed. That is provided for by subsection 9 which states:

> The board may decline to formulate a proposal in any case where it does not consider that it can do so in fairness and justice to the debtor or the creditors.

I say frankly to the lawyers of the committee that sections 7 and 8 are drafted with the idea of affording to these tribunals power to deal in a limited way with secured and unsecured creditors. The limitation imposed by section 12 upon the exercise of that power is the capability of the debtor. I am bound to say that those responsible for the act found great difficulty in finding a word that would adequately express the meaning we had in mind. If the committee has a better word to suggest than "capability" it will be gladly accepted.

Mr. HACKETT: I think the fears of the hon. member for Selkirk would disappear if he would read section 8 carefully. The preferred creditor has no voice at all in a proposal for a composition unless and until he value his security at less than its face value.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Supposing he values it at 99 per cent?

Mr. HACKETT: Then if the liability be $100 he has the status of an ordinary creditor to whom $1 is owing. But I think we are unduly worried by one side of the question; we are inclined to think only of the debtor. I am not sure that in many instances the creditor is not as much disturbed over the present situation as the debtor may be. This legislation gives to the creditor a chance to have his assets properly defined and protected against the intrusion of other and possibly more wolfish people than himself. I believe the creditors as a body will hail any legislation, which in its essence is fair, as a great relief from their anxieties; I am confident that most creditors will be very glad of a measure which will revive and thaw out assets which have been frozen and almost without value for some years.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I notice that the words "secured creditor" are used in both sections 7 and 8. I was wondering if that includes any person except a mortgagee. Are others included in that definition, or what is the interpretation?

Mr. BENNETT: Whoever under the law of the province would be a secured creditor would be a secured creditor here.

Mr. BOWMAN: There is one point I should like to have cleared up, and perhaps the Prime Minister would be good enough to do it for me. Under section 8 reference is made to the valuation of securities by the secured creditors, but I take it that under the provisions of subsection 6 of section 12 there is no necessity for the secured creditor to value his security, since the board has full right to find some solution, some compromise or settlement which is deemed fair to both debtor and creditor, without the creditor being called upon to value his security at all. They can take matters into their own hands, and they need pay no attention to section 8 which calls for the valuation of securities. Perhaps the Prime Minister would be good enough to clear up that point.

Mr. BENNETT: Subsection 6 of section 12 contemplates that there must be a proposal. In every instance the legislation is predicated upon the assumption of a proposal. The board may confirm it as formulated or may amend it, and if the proposal is one affecting the rights of the secured creditor, under section 8 he must value his security. It is perfectly clear, and in the whole you are subject to the provisions of subsection 8 of section 12 in any event.

Mr. BOWMAN: But having valued the security, under subsection 6 of section 12 it is not necessary for the board of review to accept that valuation. They may make a settlement on the basis of an amount less than the valuation placed by the secured creditor.

Mr. BENNETT: Subject to approval by the court.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I notice that the Prime Minister said he had grave doubts as to the constitutional right of parliament to confiscate security. I should like to know about a security that is partly confiscated. Suppose this matter is referred to the court and the court decides that the security can be partly confiscated; what then?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not follow the question.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: The Prime Minister made the statement that he doubted very much whether the security could be confiscated. Suppose this matter of debt is referred to the court, and the court decides that at least in part the security can be confiscated. Would that be constitutional or legal?

Mr. BENNETT: The reduction of the value of a security is not confiscation. I was dealing with confiscation in whole, and not a partial reduction of the value.

Mr. COOTE: It is a little difficult for us to understand the full significance of some of these sections before we have gone over more of the bill. For the purpose of enlightening those who may want to get some idea of the measure from reading Hansard the Prime Minister might perhaps explain in more detail the position of the preferred creditor, in the case of a man whose debts are being arranged under a scheme such as is suggested here. There are two preferred creditors, we will say, one holding a claim upon the land through a mortgage, and the other having a claim through a chattel mortgage, and then there are some unsecured creditors. Is it contemplated that the board which arranges the composition in the first place will arrange the position of all claims, or would the secured creditor get a greater share of his claim than the unsecured creditor?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: I did not think the bill made that clear.

Mr. BENNETT: The positions of a secured creditor and of an unsecured creditor are not the same. That is number one. The position of a secured creditor is defined by section 8 and in part by section 12. I repeat, the scheme of this bill is that one who is unable to pay his debts has a right conferred upon him, which in all probability is a right that he possesses as a citizen of this country, to approach his creditors for the purpose of endeavouring to arrive at a compromise of his liabilities and an extension of the time within which to meet his obligations. If his creditors are obdurate, he then has a right to present his claim to a board of review, and a plan or scheme is formulated looking towards the settlement of his obligation in accordance with that plan. If there are secured creditors either in the first instance or in the second, the security is to be valued, and when it reaches the court of review it will be observed from subsection 8 of section 12 that the primary factor in determining whether the scheme shall be adversely or favourably dealt with is the present and prospective capability of the debtor to perform the obligations prescribed and the productive value of the farm. That, I think it will be admitted, is a sound basis on which to approach a problem of that kind in a country where climatic conditions play so large a part in determining the ability of a farmer to meet his debts.

Then, as has been pointed out, there is another clause, subsection 6 of section 12, providing that if the creditors or the debtor decline to approve the proposal so formulated, the board may nevertheless confirm the proposal, although it may not be acceptable to both the creditors and the debtor. Despite the fact that the plan has not been agreed upon between the debtor and the creditors, it may be approved by the board. That is, the proposal is confirmed either in the form in which it was formulated or as amended by the board itself, in which case it shall be approved by the court and shall be binding upon all the creditors and the debtor as in the case of a proposal duly accepted by the creditors and approved by the court. That is a jurisdiction conferred upon the board in terms as broad possibly as we should go even in the light of the decision of the supreme court last Thursday.

Mr. RALSTON: Could you really go any further?

Mr. BENNETT: I really think there is no method by which we could, short of confiscation.

Mr. HANBURY: Confiscation absolutely.

Mr. HACKETT: I wonder if one is justified in saying this is confiscation. It seems to me it is not, and it seems to me it is very clear that it is not. I am putting aside for a moment the question of the unsecured creditor and am considering only the secured creditor. I refuse to accede to the suggestion that the difference between confiscation and what is in this bill is a subtlety, because as the Prime Minister has said, the secured creditor must value his security. Now what the board of review does is to pass upon the accuracy of the valuation, and it passes upon that accuracy by a very definite criterion. That criterion is given to us in subsection 8 of section 12:

> The board shall base its proposal upon the present and prospective capability of the debtor to perform the obligations prescribed and the productive value of the farm.

A has a mortgage, we will say, of $1,000 on a farm. He is asked to value his mortgage. He says, when he values it that it is worth $1,000. The board of review, comprised of a judge and of two others, one representing the debtor and the other the creditors, investigates whether, considering the earning capacity of the debtor and the productive capacity of his farm, the security is actually worth $1,000. It seems to me that is a long way from confiscation.

Mr. FACTOR: Suppose the board finds that according to the basis laid down in subsection 8 the mortgage is worth only $500.

Mr. HACKETT: They may, but that is not confiscation.

Mr. HANBURY: Revaluation.

Mr. HACKETT: A revaluation, if you will. But it does not affect one iota the rights of the holder of that security. It merely says that the security which he holds is worth, not $1,000 but $500.

Mr. HANBURY: It is a proper valuation.

Mr. HACKETT: It is a proper valuation. I suggest that that is a long way from confiscation; it is merely declaratory of a reality.

There is one more point to which I should like to refer and which was not raised by the last question. In the province of Quebec at least a great many of these hypothecary creditors are farmers. Money is lent by a large class of successful farmers to those who need money, to their sons, to their relations and to other farmers. In that regard I do not think this legislation is class legislation. I can only make a guess, but I would not hesitate to express the opinion that one-half of the farm mortgages in Quebec are held by farmers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If you based the value on the possibilities of the land to produce, I could understand it, but you have two classes of farmer, the good and the bad. How can you base the value of a security on the ability of an individual to make good on the land?

Mr. HACKETT: That is all the creditor has as his security.

Mr. BENNETT: The productive value of the land is there.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But the particular individual may not have the ability to produce the value.

Mr. HACKETT: That is the reason for the dual criterion. I think it is rather clever; it gives to the creditor who values his security the criterion of the intrinsic value of the soil itself plus the capacity of the debtor to work it.

Mr. NEILL: Suppose a secured creditor is not satisfied with the assessment of $500; could he then go on and possess the land or sell it under the original mortgage?

Mr. HACKETT: You are taking us pretty far afield. As I understand the section it is not incumbent upon the board of review to pronounce judgment, although it may. If a case came before the board which they felt it was beyond their powers to adjudicate upon—I suppose that would be a very exceptional case—then the ordinary rules of law which determine the relationship between debtor and creditor would come into play and this exceptional case would be determined in the ordinary way.

Mr. NEILL: That is hardly an answer. I think the Prime Minister could explain.

Mr. HACKETT: Much better than I.

Mr. BENNETT: Answering the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart), when I met the representatives of the farm loan associations they made it perfectly clear that what they feared was that the lands upon which they held mortgages would be abandoned by those who found it difficult to continue. It was not that they were endeavouring to find some way to secure their pound of flesh; on the contrary they were willing to consider any proposal which could be formulated in law and which would not have the effect of confiscation, which they greatly feared as a precedent, but would enable them to make such concessions as would ensure the property being valued, shall I say, at what it would be valued if they foreclosed. I will put this to the committee. A property is mortgaged for $1,000 and foreclosure proceedings are pending. Under the law of most provinces it becomes essential to put in an upset bid when a property is being sold under foreclosure proceedings. The appraiser says the property is worth $500 and it follows that unless a bid for more than $500 is received, the property falls back to the mortgagee. This contemplates something of that general spirit being carried into the legislation. When the plan is formulated, there will be a valuation by the security holder of his security. I say quite frankly to this committee that I think it will find that in most cases they will place a very low estimate upon their securities, where it is at all possible to secure something instead of nothing and to secure a continuance upon the property which otherwise would be abandoned to them. I think I can say that with some degree of frankness, because they seemed to be most desirous that that end should be attained. Under those circumstances what we have endeavoured to do is to give effect to that general principle. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) says: Suppose they valued the security at $500. Well, if that represents the then value of it on foreclosure, for instance, it would be a fair valuation. What will have happened is that the loan company or the secured creditor has lost $1,200 or $1,500 as the case may be. That is not confiscation; that is what has been lost by reason of the decrease in value, the difference between its value and the value put upon it.

Mr. FACTOR: He loses anyhow.

Mr. BENNETT: They would lose it anyhow, while this might save as a productive asset to the country what might otherwise be lost entirely in the long run.

Mr. BROWN: I think the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) used an expression which puts the situation quite clearly when he referred to the actuality which exists.

Mr. FACTOR: Does the Prime Minister think that provincial legislation will be necessary to give effect to this proviso so far as secured creditors are concerned?

Mr. BENNETT: So far as it is bankruptcy, that is solely and exclusively within our jurisdiction; so far as it is property and civil rights, that is solely within the jurisdiction of the legislatures. Most of them have passed statutes which have undertaken to deal with it, so far as they think they have power—there has been no judicial determination upon it—under property and civil rights. However, from what I know of the anxiety of the provinces to have certainty where there may be uncertainty, I think they will support rather than oppose this legislation for the purpose of rendering clear that about which they have had considerable doubt and determining the extent to which, in the light of the decision of Thursday last, parliament may exercise its powers for the purpose of dealing with secured creditors in bankruptcy proceedings.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am of the opinion that unless the board has very wide powers it will find that there are a great many cases with which it will be unable to deal, particularly in connection with preferred creditors. I know of any number of cases in my locality where the mortgage is not the serious proposition, the indebtedness to the bank, to the machinery company and to the storekeepers constituting by far the major portion of the indebtedness. If the mortgage company feel that their security is safe they are going to hesitate to reduce even the interest rate of seven per cent to which they have agreed. There is no doubt that in many of these cases the property would be worth something more than the amount contained in the mortgage. Unless the board has wide powers it will be very difficult in these cases to secure an adjustment for the farmer. The company being a secured creditor, it will not be willing to give away its security to another class of creditor which is not in that happy position. I rather welcome the wide powers of the board even if it is somewhat questionable in dealing with cases of that kind.

Mr. MacLEAN: In the event of a creditor not being satisfied and the board forcing him to consent to the arrangement or settlement that is made, I understood the Prime Minister to say that it would be better for him to agree to accept something rather than to get nothing. Is it the intention of the government in such cases to provide, through the farm loan board, the money to take up those mortgages where an agreement cannot be arranged between the creditor and the debtor?

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that the hon. gentleman wait until we reach that section, because answers with respect to the question as he has put it might not be intelligible in view of the succeeding sections.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Valuation of security of secured creditor.

Mr. BENNETT: This will have to be amended to conform to the change made, to meet the peculiar condition with respect to hypothecs in Quebec.

Mr. DUPRE: I move that section 8 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Whenever a proposal relates to the rights of a secured creditor or of a person who has acquired movable or immovable property subject to a right of redemption, such creditor or person may value his security and shall be entitled to vote only in respect of the balance of his claim after deducting the amount of his valuation; provided, however, that no proposal shall be approved by the court which provides for the payment to such secured creditor or person on account of such security of any amount in excess of his valuation, or for granting to him any new security for an amount in excess of his valuation.

Mr. BENNETT: There are no changes except with respect to the matter dealing with the peculiar conditions in Quebec; and the changes, as will be seen in the sections, are merely adding words in accordance with the definition given to the word "mortgage."

Mr. RALSTON: Does the Prime Minister think that the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act itself supplement and fill out this provision with regard to the valuing of security? The only term used is that the creditor shall value his security, whereas a number of sections of the Bankruptcy Act contain elaborate provisions as to just what valuing security means. Is it intended that these sections shall apply so as to supplement what is in this bill?

Mr. BENNETT: No one knows better than the hon. gentleman, who has had experience in the courts under the Bankruptcy Act, that the interpretation of those sections has involved litigation which in one instance went to the privy council. It is to avoid any question of that kind that we say he has to value his security. It is a short and simple way of doing it.

Mr. RALSTON: But what I am wondering is as to what it means after he has valued it.

Mr. BENNETT: The sections that follow make it clear just what that means. The value of the security is fixed by him and he is statutorily barred by this act from setting up any further claim.

Mr. RALSTON: All it says is that he shall not be entitled to any dividend greater than the amount of that value, and he is only entitled to vote for the difference.

Mr. BENNETT: He shall not get any further sum of money than that fixed for the value.

Mr. RALSTON: It seems to me that section 12 went the whole length of permitting the board of review to say to a debtor, "Your property, on which there was a mortgage, is now for division among all your creditors." He would give the secured creditor fifty per cent and the so-called common creditors ten per cent. I cannot see anything to offset that except this provision in regard to valuing security. There is nothing in the provision which indicates what will happen after the valuation has taken place; there is nothing to indicate that you still preserve the right of the secured creditor to his claim. I am not saying that it should be preserved; I am simply trying to figure out what the bill means, and I realize that there is a difficult problem when you attempt to fit this into the Bankruptcy Act. I know that the best that can be done is being done. But have you provided for maintaining the title of the secured creditor, whatever the claim may be, to the extent of what is called the valuation of security? Is it not possible that the board of review may pool the property of the debtor, whether covered by mortgage or otherwise, and may as they think best give a larger proportion of that property to the man who once was secured by it and a smaller proportion to the so-called ordinary debtor? I cannot see yet what there is in section 8 which prevents that, and I can see in section 12 that apparently carte blanche is given for the board of review to do exactly as they like with regard to the property of the debtor.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman, I think, realizes as well as any member of this house does that what we are endeavouring to do is not to impinge upon the exclusive power of the provincial legislatures in dealing with property and civil rights and that, for instance, with respect to a real estate mortgage properly registered we have no jurisdiction to make an order that the registration shall disappear. But we conceive it to be possible, under the authority of the decision of Thursday last, to declare that a tribunal set up by this parliament has power under bankruptcy to declare that for the purposes of ranking against the estate, his security shall be valued at a fixed sum and that beyond that he shall not share in the distribution of the estate. The hon. gentleman referred to the provisions as to secured creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, which provide that if he realizes his security he may prove for the balance due to him. That is, he can foreclose the mortgage, realizing $1,500, when his mortgage was $2,500, and rank against the estate for the other $1,000. That cannot happen here. Secondly, if the secured creditor surrenders the security to the trustee for the general benefit of the creditors he may approve for his whole debt. If he wanted to get the benefit of the whole of his security, plus his share of what he did not have security upon, what he did was to surrender the security to the trustee, the trustee realizing upon it, and then he filed a claim for the whole of his debt with interest, and took usually the major part of the estate. We are endeavouring not to raise that issue between property and civil rights and contract with respect to security, which the province has authorized the creation of within its laws, which is registered under the authority of its jurisdiction, and at the same time maintain what we conceive to be our powers with respect to bankruptcy, dealing with it in that way. If we amplified it and undertook to deal with it as 7, 8, 9 and 10 do, we believe we might find a difficulty. To the extent to which these clauses have application, we have not repealed them; but I have given the committee the reason why we have avoided any endeavour to precipitate a conflict between the legislature on the one hand and parliament on the other, one dealing exclusively with property and civil rights in contracts and the other dealing exclusively with bankruptcy and interest.

Mr. BURY: Section 8 as it now stands says that "such creditor may value." Is there any change in that? Will that carry a compulsory valuation with it?

Mr. BENNETT: It says he may value his security and shall be entitled to vote only in respect of the balance of his claim after deducting the amount of his valuation, provided however that no proposal shall be approved by the court which provides for the payment to such secured creditor or person on account of such security of any amount in excess of his valuation, or for granting to him any new security for an amount in excess of his valuation.

Mr. FACTOR: Why give him a vote on the balance of the claim?

Mr. BENNETT: We do not.

Mr. BURY: Might not the subsequent part of the clause be interpreted as being contingent on the value of the security? There is a first part that leaves the matter optional, and while it is true there are very great disadvantages set out in the remaining part of the clause, is it not possible that the interpretation will be put on the remainder of the clause that it was contingent on the first?

Mr. RALSTON: In answer to the Prime Minister I felt what had been done in this legislation was to leave it so wide open that there was an invitation to the provinces which have jurisdiction over property and civil rights to say that this measure is ultra vires. Sections 107 to 111 of the Bankruptcy Act clearly protect and preserve to a reasonable extent the rights of secured creditors, but I was afraid that clause 12, subclause 6, which provides that the board of review may make a proposal, will give the board power to make one so wide that it might affect the property rights of secured creditors and therefore make the legislation subject to attack. That was the point I was endeavouring to make. I do not see in clause 8 anything which preserves the right of the secured creditor in his security. It says that he may value his security. Suppose I value my security at $500; there is nothing that says the trustee may redeem it at that price as is stated in the Bankruptcy Act. There is nothing that says that the secured creditor may keep it and be credited with the value. All it says is that he may value it, and there is a provision that he shall never get more than the amount of that valuation; that he shall not get an additional dividend. The Prime Minister might consider whether this clause should not be a little more circumscribed in case there is a possibility of ambiguity since this gives the board of review the right to cut out a secured creditor completely. That may be done by some boards. They may say: You, Mr. Creditor, hold a mortgage on this piece of property. Part of the proposition is that your rights under that mortgage shall cease and you will get, say forty per cent of the debtor's estate, while the ordinary creditors will get ten per cent, but the thing that will pay for it is that property on which you have the mortgage. That may be sound; it may be all right, but I question whether it is not going further than the Prime Minister felt he was going when he brought down the legislation. The secured creditor will say that that is confiscation. I am not, however, afraid of the word "confiscation." The minute you give power under the Bankruptcy Act or under this legislation to say that a man's claims shall be, say twenty cents on the dollar, that is confiscation without the word having any invidious meaning at all. I do not want to repeat, but I think this legislation is broader than the Prime Minister intended to make it, and as I believe the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stitt) said, we ought to make this measure what it is claimed to be, one in the interest of those for whose benefit we are passing it.

Mr. BENNETT: I must answer the questions raised by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. Clause 8, if he will look at it, is a very simple statement of fact: First, whenever a proposal relates to the rights of a secured creditor, such creditor may value his security; second he shall be entitled to vote only in respect of the balance of his claim after deducting the amount of his valuation; third, no proposal shall be approved by the court which provides for the payment to such secured creditor on account of such security of any amount in excess of his valuation, and, fourth, for granting to him any new security for an amount in excess of his valuation. There is no invitation about anything in that.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not see any provision there which prevents subclause 6 of clause 12 from operating and somebody cutting out the secured creditor's rights under his security.

Mr. BENNETT: But clause 12 must be read as a whole. When we come to that I shall deal with it, but the Bankruptcy Act, as I pointed out a moment ago, deals with the proof by secured creditors. I mentioned the two cases. One was where he realized his security and claimed for the balance; the other was where he surrendered his security and claimed for the whole debt. The act provides further:

> If a secured creditor does not either realize or surrender his security he may if he wishes to rank for dividend and he shall within thirty days after demand made upon him by the trustee, or within such further time as may be allowed by the inspectors or the court, file with the trustee a statutory declaration stating therein full particulars of his security, or securities, the date when each security was given and the value at which he assesses each thereof.

2. A creditor shall be entitled to receive a dividend in respect only of the balance due to him after deducting the assessed value of his security.

3. Where a security is so valued the trustee may at any time redeem it on payment to the creditor of the assessed value.

The reason this legislation differentiates from the general provision is because we are dealing with an extraordinary case in which we know quite well that a trustee as defined by the Bankruptcy Act is not to function, where a special official is appointed to deal with the indebtedness and problems of one who lives nearby and who has the assistance of the district or county court judge in handling his problem. My view is that if we endeavoured to deal with this as has been suggested, we would then run the risk to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I do not quite follow him when he said that this bill was drawn broadly so as to invite the provinces to contest its validity.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not say it was drawn for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: All of the provinces are more interested in our being able to sustain this legislation than otherwise. All of the provinces with which we have been in communication are anxious that should be done because they concede the difficulty of their tying on to a debt adjustment or problems that affect, shall I say, bankruptcy as it has been construed by the courts and interest, both falling within the exclusive jurisdiction of the dominion. We believe if we undertook narrowly to analyze the problem and state it in a statute we would run the risk of the statute being invalid for infringing upon the rights of the provinces. I think I can say this to the committee generally, some of whom only are lawyers, that if the swing of judicial opinion as indicated by the judgments of the privy council during the first twenty-five years of the twentieth century were to prevail, the rights of the provinces against the dominion would certainly prevail, but if, on the other hand, the swing that is indicated by more recent decisions in favour of federal powers were to prevail perhaps the federal powers would be sustained. Lord Watson was the great exponent of what one might call provincial rights in interpretation of the statutes, and Lord Haldane followed Lord Watson whom he regarded as the greatest jurist of his time. I think the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth will agree with me it would be very unsound to narrow the problem as between property and civil rights on the one hand and bankruptcy and interest on the other if we are to run the risk of inviting a conflict at once upon that issue. I shall deal with clause 12 when we come to it. If it is desired that clause 8 should stand until we deal with clause 12, all well and good, but I think it will be found we have gone as far as we can to assert our jurisdiction without in any respect encroaching unduly upon the jurisdiction of the provinces, because I am bearing in mind what I fancy the hon. gentleman will remind me of, that if there is a conflict under certain circumstances our legislation would prevail. Under those circumstances I do not desire to limit this too narrowly and run the risk of its being declared invalid.

Mr. HACKETT: There is a definite statement in subsection 2 of section 2 which makes the Bankruptcy Act and bankruptcy rules apply. Section 8 reads as follows:

Whenever a proposal relates to the rights of a secured creditor, such creditor may value his security. . . .

—section 112 of the Bankruptcy Act says:

If a secured creditor does not comply with sections one hundred and six to one hundred and eleven, inclusive, he shall be excluded from all share in any dividend.

May we not conclude that if a secured creditor does not value his security he shall not be entitled to share in any of the benefits of a secured creditor? If that be so, the problem disappears.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend say that he thinks section 112 applies?

Mr. HACKETT: Yes, that is the suggestion.

Mr. BOWMAN: Surely section 112 of the Bankruptcy Act cannot overrule subsection 6 of section 12? As I read it, the board of review has the right under the provisions of that subsection to cut down the amount of the principal under the mortgage, despite any of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. HACKETT: But we were dealing with the case in which the creditor would not value his security.

Mr. RALSTON: I have no desire to delay the committee by discussing the legal effect of the statute. My right hon. friend has the benefit of far greater authorities than I can ever hope to be. I only pointed that out.

Mr. BENNETT: I appreciate it, too.

Mr. RALSTON: It seems to me it is quite possible that the secured creditor might not value his security; then what happens?

Mr. HACKETT: Section 112 of the Bankruptcy Act applies.

Mr. RALSTON: Which means that you can confiscate the secured creditor's security, to use the word of my hon. friend, by dividing it up. I am not objecting to that, but it is not going to be the provinces that will object; it is going to be some of the secured creditors who will attack the validity of this act on the ground that it goes too far. I suggest to the Prime Minister that section 8 be left and discussed with section 12.

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to suggest that there is no reason why section 8 should not stand. I am far from denying that there might be an arguable point, but I think the combined effect of subsection 8 of section 2 together with what I have said with respect to the general principles protect the validity of the section. But I am quite willing to let it stand for further consideration.

Mr. NEILL: Before we pass on may I ask one question? I am not seeking to intrude into a lawyer's argument but rather to educate myself at the expense of the hon. gentlemen's knowledge. If under section 8 the secured creditor who has valued his security is not going to be allowed to rank for the balance, what inducement is there for him to value it at anything below one hundred cents on the dollar? He is not going to get anything more than the low valuation, and he might value it too low.

Mr. BENNETT: The inducement to value it as low as possible is to ensure that the debtor will begin again and remain on the property, and perhaps secure under the loan act some small additional capital to enable him to do so. And I am bound to say—one wants to be perfectly fair about these things—that there was an indication on the part of some of the loan companies that under such a scheme as this they would not be averse to making some small advances themselves in the form provided by the statute to help to keep the men on the land, which is the one great consideration in their mind. We may be perfectly frank about it; all they care about is to get their money or as much of it as they can, and they are not going to get it if the farm is deserted; they cannot get tenants in these days to undertake to farm these properties. They are endeavouring to secure occupancy. I think that is the perfectly fair away to put it, from what I have observed in the discussions we have had. But the section may stand for the moment.

Section stands.

Sections 9 and 10 agreed to.

On section 11—Stay of proceedings.

Mr. BOWMAN: What is to prevent a farmer from making a second or a third application and thus keeping the proceedings indefinitely before the court or the official for the district or the board of review?

Mr. BENNETT: It will be found under section 12 that every effort is being made, even to the extent of giving the right to the board of review itself to formulate a plan based on the knowledge of the condition of the farmer and his creditors. If his condition is such as would indicate the possibility of a second or third application, it is probably not worth while endeavouring to do anything more. One of the subsections of section 12 deals with that. I do not think they could ever get before the board of review under the circumstances to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. RALSTON: I suppose subsection 2 of section 11 is germane to what we have been talking about in connection with secured creditors:

> On a proposal being filed the property of the debtor shall be deemed to be under the authority of the court. . . .

I suppose the Prime Minister and the draftsman had in mind that that meant the equity or whatever was not covered by the security?

Mr. BENNETT: No; instead of appointing a custodian and an interim trustee and a trustee we endeavoured to avoid all that expense. What we are suggesting is that this declaration that the property is in the custody of the law is some security for its preservation. The hon. gentleman, being trained as I was in the older school, will, I think, remember that in replevin actions we used to say that the property was in the custody of the court when the sheriff took possession under his warrant of replevin. This is merely to make a declaration that the property is in the custody of the court for preservation, instead of appointing a custodian. It is to save costs. We had no thought about the relation between preferred and ordinary creditors.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend thinks this includes chattels against which there is a mortgage or a farm which has a mortgage on it?

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact I do, and I know the hon. gentleman thinks there is some doubt about. I shall concede at once that any assertion by this parliament of such authority is open to question. But if it is ancillary to bankruptcy it is intra vires. If by no possible construction it can be said to be either directly or indirectly connected with bankruptcy it would fail. I think it must be said to be ancillary in this case. That is the only answer I can give as to the basis of the opinion I have formed.

On section 12—Provincial boards of review.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps we might take it subsection by subsection.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

Subsection 2 agreed to.

On subsection 3—Chief commissioner to be a judge.

Mr. RALSTON: Does the Prime Minister think that court is sufficiently elastic, if I may put it in that way, or sufficiently get-at-able? In that connection perhaps the Prime Minister would explain. One commissioner is appointed as a representative of the creditors and one is appointed as a representative of the debtors. Does that mean in connection with a particular case or is that a standing court?

Mr. BENNETT: That is a standing court.

Mr. RALSTON: And the selection of that person is made by the governor in council, having in mind a person with a disposition properly to look after the debtor as compared with one who would look after the interests of the creditors?

Mr. BENNETT: I admit that is not easy of realization as to the one who would adequately represent the debtors. We feel that in some of the provinces debt adjustment officers would be admirable for that purpose because of their wide knowledge. In others it might be more difficult, but I think it is always possible to find someone with a sympathetic mind and an earnest desire to do that measure of justice to the debtors that was illustrated by my hon friend from Selkirk (Mr. Stitt), for instance, in what he said tonight. I think that may be possible, though of course I admit the difficulty. This whole act is difficult.

Subsection agreed to.

Subsections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On subsection 6—Board may confirm proposal.

Mr. RALSTON: I have nothing more to say, Mr. Chairman; I have expressed my opinion with regard to section 8 and this subsection.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I think this is as far as we can go. To go a less distance would be to render the act futile. The young man who gave a great deal of attention to this, who looked up the authorities very carefully, is clearly of the opinion that we are within the law. Lawyers differ; hence they live. If the debtors or the creditors decline to approve the proposal, nevertheless the board may confirm such proposal. I think surely that must be within our power under bankruptcy. If there is power to approve or disapprove there must be power to amend, and if there is power to amend the proposal as formulated we have merely made a declaration to that effect. I do not think any good result would follow my taking up too much time, because I have stated the position as clearly as I can. I do not desire to state it with the emphasis of certainty; I am not unmindful of the difficulties, but this whole statute is surrounded with difficulty. There is not a legal member of the house who does not realize that, and the effort has been made to so steer the legislative ship that it will escape the shoals of the provinces on the one hand and the disaster of being beyond federal jurisdiction on the other.

Sections 13, 14 and 15 agreed to.

On section 16—Administration and expenses.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, on this section I should like to make a familiar request of the Prime Minister. The section reads:

> The Minister of Finance shall be charged with the administration of this act, and the expenses necessary for such administration shall be payable out of any unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund.

I should like to move, unless the Prime Minister would care to do so himself, that the words "any unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund" in lines 40 and 41 be struck out and the following substituted therefor "moneys appropriated by parliament." I think the Prime Minister will agree that we have gone pretty far in the adoption of a new practice with respect to the control of public moneys, by asserting in these acts that moneys shall be taken out of unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund. It is really desirable to have the Commons control expenditure; not only that, but to have an annual report to parliament together with annual appropriations, so that the total expenditure of the country will come before the house each session. If that is not done there is no way of keeping track of the total expenditure. It is also desirable in measures of this kind, which are largely experimental, to have a report to parliament of what in other respects may be done under the measures, in order to make perfectly sure that all phases of the legislation will be discussed each session.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I do hope the right hon. gentleman will not press that view. When he, in my place, had to consider the Old Age Pensions Act, in section 7 he provided that the whole sum disbursed by this dominion for old age pensions, amounting now to millions of dollars per annum, should be paid out of the unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund. Why did he do that? He did so for the reason that it was almost impossible to arrive at any accurate estimate of the amount required; therefore he enacted in that statute the provision to which I have referred. I just thought I would send for the statute, though the words are perhaps within the memory of the hon. gentleman:

> All sums payable to any province in pursuance of any agreement made under this act shall be payable from time to time on the certificate of the Minister of Finance out of any moneys belonging to the consolidated revenue fund of Canada not otherwise appropriated.

That was in 1927. At that time the right hon. gentleman had to assume responsibility for enacting something that would be workable, and he knew as I knew that to place in the estimates an amount which would be the result of conjecture and guess work probably would not be desirable. Hence this statute. It might be that in the second or third year, if it becomes necessary to utilize this measure for a period of years, that might be done, but obviously in the first year every argument that induced the right hon. gentleman to make that legislation effective with respect to old age pensions, involving millions of dollars, I submit is a powerful argument in favour of this section being enacted, not to authorize the payment of large sums but to provide for the expenses necessary in the administration of the measure. I trust that under those circumstances the right hon. gentleman will agree that what he found essential to make his statute practicable I find equally essential in the measure before us.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will agree that the Prime Minister is quite right in directing attention to what was done when the old age pensions measure was passed, but the fact that he does direct attention to it, and that he has done so several times this session, only emphasizes what I am now attempting to assert, namely the danger that once we adopt a course that may be a departure and which is intended for one single purpose and as an exception, in the course of time it may become a regular method of procedure. I am afraid that is the direction in which we are heading at the moment. We have adopted the practice now, with respect to nearly all relief measures, of doing away with the control of the house over annual appropriations. In the marketing legislation as brought in there was the same intention expressed in the statute; afterwards it very properly was changed. If I am not mistaken there was something similar in the excise measure.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that is a case of the minister and the governor in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is all a matter of the control of expenditure. I would much rather see the Prime Minister amend the Old Age Pensions Act in the direction of requiring an annual appropriation for that purpose than to see him citing that act as a precedent in introducing other measures and thereby following what I believe to be a wrong course, even if I may have been partly responsible for acquiescing in it myself. I do think there is a tremendous danger especially in these times when we are spending very large sums of money, of the public losing sight altogether of what annually these various experiments in social, industrial and economic legislation are costing the country. It is an important aspect of all legislation, the most important in some respects. I think it should be easy to form some estimate of the amount required, and if the estimate is not sufficient the Prime Minister knows that he is at liberty to introduce supplementary estimates when the time comes. That would ensure the house getting an idea at least of what this class of legislation and this particular measure is costing the country, and it would also ensure the matter coming up for discussion each year. I would like the Prime Minister to move an amendment himself, but if he does not I shall feel obliged to ask the committee to consider an amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman is in error when he suggests that we are making an exception to the general rule. It has been the rule—I took the trouble to look through a number of the statutes the other day; when the determination of the amount to be utilized is almost impossible and involves a rough guess, it is better to charge it up against the fund directly and positively than to cumber up the estimates with a statement of something of which when the minister is asked for particulars he can only say: I cannot tell you, but I guess it will be so much; it may be that much; it may be less or it may be more. I will admit that after an act has been running for a number of years one should be able to fix the amount approximately, but I do submit after looking through the statutes not only of this parliament but of other countries as well, that provisions for unappropriated moneys in the consolidated fund to be made available are usual and customary provisions.

It must also be remembered that there is a limitation; the revenue must be there. The expenditure cannot transcend the revenue, for then there is no unappropriated balance in the fund. That is perfectly obvious. Secondly, the sums of money that we pay under statutory authority are detailed every year in the auditor general's report, and their ultimate destination is indicated. I suggest to the right hon. gentleman, therefore, that we are not asking too much when we suggest that this should be left as it is, at least until we we see what is involved, and then if in the light of the experience and the knowledge obtained in the operation of the act for a year one is able to predicate even with any degree of certainty the amount that will be required, it should be introduced in the estimates. I quite agree with the right hon. gentleman as to the broad general principle of the control of the Commons House of Parliament over the expenditures of the country. That is true. But the fact that during all these years, nearly seventy years since confederation, we have found it necessary to make these appropriations in this way is an indication that there are exceptions to well defined rules which in themselves constitute the reason and the authority for the rule, and here, if ever, is a case in which neither the Minister of Finance nor myself can do anything more than guess at the sum that may be required.

Let me just put it this way. If there are extraordinarily good crops and a return by reason of bountiful rains to a measure of prosperity on the farms of Ontario, where there has been a shortage of certain crops, and in other provinces the same, I could not tell whether it would be necessary to spend five or five hundred dollars in any one province. It would be a plain guess in the dark. But when the expenditures have been made, I repeat, and with the knowledge of another year, I shall be perfectly content, sitting on either side of the house, to agree that an appropriation might well appear in the estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Might I ask the Prime Minister if he has any idea at all of what the expenditure is likely to be under this measure? Has he formed an estimate for example, of how much the government may be asked to pay for the salaries of the different persons whom it may be found necessary to appoint under the act? Can he give us any estimate at all of what the expenditure is likely to be?

Mr. BENNETT: In the discussions that have taken place, knowing as I do the economic conditions that prevail throughout the country, I did not think it would cost very much for salaries in connection with the administration of the act. The official receiver, so called, I had thought would not be a highly expensive official, and the first review that would have to be made would be the extent to which it would be necessary to utilize the provisions of this act in the several provinces; then the length of time that it might be necessary for the officials to act during a year. For instance, I know that in the winter time it is exceedingly difficult for them to view the properties or to have inspections made that would enable them to deal authoritatively with them, and that is true of almost every part of Canada. I confess that I may have underestimated what it might cost, but I thought that men could be secured for part time effort in that direction for perhaps $150 per month in some of these matters, and in some cases retired men who have had experience in valuation and matters of that sort. I thought it would not be a very expensive process. In the case of old age pensions, for instance, we were able to estimate from the census the number of people who would receive a pension, and in one province in particular the sum has been known for years, and was stated as one of the difficulties to be met in dealing with old age pensions. I am divulging no secret when I say that in this case the question of expense is all important, and we discussed the question how we might limit it to the smallest possible amount consistent with some measure of efficiency. I could not to-night indicate to the right hon. gentleman any sum at all that would be adequate for the purpose any more than it would be possible to indicate what sum might be required for a service that had never been given, and this is a new service in a sense.

We were given some information as to the sums expended under the debt adjustment acts in the three western provinces, and I think they have something similar in British Columbia, although I believe the act is not known there by that name. I am not sure if that is a correct statement of the situation or not. In Ontario there was also an endeavour to make some adjustments in that way. The salaries paid in the western provinces were small. I mentioned $150 a month for part time work. The hon. member who has just come in (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) knows that the debt adjustment officer in Alberta received moderately small compensation, and the first one, Mr. Fream, was a particularly good man. In a province as large as Saskatchewan I think they have two. In Manitoba I think the official gets small compensation. If I could enlighten the right hon. gentleman I would do so, but I am sorry I cannot do it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would it be possible to indicate in round figures about what the government imagines the total outlay for a year would be? I assume it would be nine months of this fiscal year, but figuring on a whole year would it be $50,000, or $500,000 or $1,000,000? Is it possible to give any estimate even as general as that?

Mr. BENNETT: I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, what I think the right hon. gentleman will realize at once is sound, namely that that depends upon the extent to which farmers make applications and proposals. The hon. gentlemen who sit beside the right hon. leader, one from Alberta and the other from Manitoba, will tell you that that is something which depends as much upon psychological reasons as upon physical reasons. Anyone who has lived in the west for thirty years and over as I have knows that they are never discouraged or overwhelmed. If you tell them that there are prospects that the grasshoppers are all dead or dying, that the rains are bountiful, and that there is no chance of frost, the chances are that they will say: Well, we are not going to try to compromise; if possible we want to pay one hundred cents on the dollar. I should be glad to hear from any hon. member of the committee—the hon. gentlemen in the southeast corner perhaps have a better idea than most of us, because they are more closely connected with the administration of that matter—as to the extent to which the farmer will make application to avail himself of the provisions of this section, as I have no idea.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not anxious to occasion embarrassment to the Prime Minister in any way as I realize the difficulties there are in the way of forming estimates in relation to this particular measure, which I should like to see of some benefit to those in distress. On the other hand, the matter of control of expenditure and taxation is, in the public interests, more important than anything else. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would consider inserting a clause which would require reports to be made to some official of the federal government or to the Minister of Finance by those who may be acting under the provisions of this bill, so that parliament, within a reasonable time after the opening of the next session, may be given a full statement of all transactions which have taken place under the act from the time of its enactment up to the end of the present fiscal year. If something of that sort were arranged for in detail this house would be in position to fix an estimate within reasonable bounds for any subsequent year.

Mr. BENNETT: I anticipated the possibility of the right hon. gentleman taking the position he has now taken. I canvassed the idea of the new official in bankruptcy being asked to make a report and that all who worked under the provisions of the bill should report to him in order that he, through the Minister of Finance, could report to this house. I contemplated that inasmuch as this legislation is based upon bankruptcy and the minister concerned in both instances is the Minister of Finance. I had contemplated that the right hon. gentleman would take the view he has taken with respect to this clause and I suggest that the superintendent of bankruptcy should make a report to the Minister of Finance who would lay the same upon the table of the house within a reasonable time after the opening of the next session. I am perfectly content to do that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In view of what the Prime Minister has said I shall not press the amendment which I have here. However, I might say that the period of the war was perhaps as uncertain from the point of view of the expenditures involved as anything could possibly be, but the Prime Minister of the day found it possible to give parliament complete estimates of the moneys necessary for war purposes. Those moneys were appropriated by this House of Commons and definite amounts were named. I hope we shall not be asked to countenance any action which may take us away from that first and most important of all rules, under which annual specific appropriations are to be made for definite objects and purposes and as little as possible expended except in accordance therewith.

Mr. BENNETT: I happen to have been in the House of Commons when those estimates were submitted and I am thoroughly familiar with them. The right hon. gentleman says they were complete or detailed estimates, but he knows perfectly well that they were only guesses as to how much would be spent for artillery, how much for infantry, and so on. The guesses were predicated upon the experience of the past year and increased according to the percentage of increase of the activities of the country in that regard. The first expenditures were made by orders in council. When the house met immediately after the commencement of the war it was necessary to grant credits and the granting of the credits involved an estimate as to how much would be required. But the estimates were quite general and quite vague when it came down to a question of detail, such as is involved here. There was nothing about salaries in those estimates. There was something about the payment of the troops, but there was nothing as to how much John Smith or somebody else would get for a particular purpose. There were general headings under which the expenditures were classified. I need hardly say that I think that is highly proper and desirable. I appreciate the attitude of the right hon. gentleman and I will draft an amendment to provide that a proper report should be made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to add one word arising out of what the Prime Minister has just said. I would not expect a statement to be made to the house at the moment in any detail, but I would have thought it would have been possible to fix an amount for the Farmers' Creditors' Arrangement Act, 1934, to be put in the supplementary estimates. This could have been just a round sum, and I would have liked to see it done. I hope if the act is continued another year this will be done.

Mr. BENNETT: I should think it will be.

Section stands.

On section 17—Rate of interest.

Mr. COOTE: As this is the only provision in the two proposals for the reduction of interest rates on existing mortgages I should like to know if it is intended to apply only to mortgages where the date of payment of the principal has not yet arrived?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BENNETT: This applies only to the cases mentioned in the section itself. The provisions of section 12, to which reference has been made this evening, and of section 6 and the other sections are indicative of the power which we believe may be exercised by the boards and the official receivers. They are the only provisions in the bill which deals specifically with the question of interest.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Will this section be limited to the interpretation of "farmer" in section 2? In paragraph (f) of that section a farmer is designated as a certain person, but I understand that this section is made applicable to any person. Are we to infer that this section will be applicable to persons other than those designated as farmers?

Mr. BENNETT: It will be observed that this section refers only to farm mortgages. It reads:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of any other statute or law, whenever any rate of interest exceeding seven per centum is stipulated for in any mortgage of farm real estate, if any person liable to pay the mortgage tenders or pays to the person entitled to receive the money, the amount owing on such mortgage and interest to the time of payment,—

And so on. This is a farm bill and it deals with interest as such.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: There is a certain class of person who would not come under paragraph (f) of section 2. A person in that class may have a farm loan and be living from the proceeds of that loan. He may not be living on and working the land, but he may have a mortgage on the land. Would such person be eligible under section 17?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: I am satisfied that there are thousands of farm mortgages bearing interest rates in excess of seven per cent where the principal is past due but where the interest has been kept up to date. I should like to know whether there is any proposal of any kind to deal with those cases. I cannot see the possibility of very many farmers being able to get the principal sum to tender to the mortgage company; that is where I see the difficulty.

Mr. BENNETT: We trust that the farm loan act will help in that regard.

Mr. COOTE: I suppose it would be fair to say, then, that the government expect, at least in a large number of cases, that the farm loan board will be in a position to advance money to take up some of these mortgages, and in that event the mortgage companies would be more inclined to reduce the rate of interest. It does seem to me that there will be a great many mortgages in connection with which the mortgagor will be still solvent and would not come under the terms of this act, but would still be compelled to pay eight per cent. Again I appeal to the Prime Minister if necessary to deal with the interest act in order to meet that situation, if it is not possible to do it under this act.

Mr. BENNETT: This act deals only with problems arising out of farm lands and the insolvent condition of those who at present occupy the farms. This section is intended to permit them, under a scheme of reorganization and readjustment, if new capital is received, notwithstanding anything in the mortgage contained, to pay off the mortgage if it carries a rate higher than seven per cent. That is all that is sought by this amendment. The other problems are dealt with in sections 12, 6 and 8 of the act, and it is believed these will have a very desirable effect. I had originally intended to deal with the problem in some such way as the hon. gentleman suggests, but after satisfying myself—and I was satisfied beyond peradventure—that five per cent was being paid for the money that was lent, I did not desire to risk the validity of the measure by attempting any confiscation on a large scale.

Section agreed to.

On section 18—Act to come into force upon proclamation.

Mr. RALSTON: The Prime Minister I understand is going to put in a section with regard to reports.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: This act contains provisions for quite a number of officials and a large amount of machinery. Section 3 provides for one official receiver in each county or district; section 12 provides for the board of review, which shall consist of the chief commissioner and two other commissioners; and section 13 provides for the appointment of a registrar and other necessary officers to assist the board, and they shall hold office during pleasure. Then it speaks of the official receiver, custodian or trustee. I merely want to say, what the Prime Minister knows as well as anyone else, though he will not mind my pressing it, that throughout the dominion there is now a complete set of machinery for bankruptcy purposes, and it would seem to me that the government can get along very well by utilizing most of that machinery instead of putting in a number of amateurs to handle what is after all a pretty technical matter which requires not only business training but a considerable amount of executive ability and accommodation as well.

Mr. BENNETT: Especially the latter.
