Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that there was not eight and a half years of the same treatment, and nobody knows it better than he does. He will not find the members who are sitting with him on that side of the house backing him up in that statement, because after all there are every year certain items of general public works that require to be done and that cannot be avoided no matter what the constituency may be. I do not think the hon. member for York-Sunbury is very serious when he makes that suggestion in the way he does, and I know perfectly well he will not get many to back him up in that statement.

Mr. CANTLEY: My hon. friend the ex-minister was good enough to keep me on the waiting list for four years, and it was only three months before the election that he brought down $48 000 for a post office in my native town of New Glasgow.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But my hon. friend got it, didn't he?

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes, I got it—election bait.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, you did.

Mr. CANTLEY: But only when you were afraid to keep it back any longer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: And my hon. friend was polite enough at the time to say that he had received very fair treatment. He will remember that, I think.

Mr. CANTLEY: I did thank him, yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend from Pictou means by his interjection to suggest that you should raise these amounts that can be let without tender from under $5,000 to over $25,000, I am surprised at him because I do not think that is his idea of good business.

Mr. CANTLEY: I did not say anything whatever in regard to that point. You are barking up the wrong tree.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then that is perfectly all right. I find in looking over this list of public works for Ontario, and I am referring particularly to Ontario because I think some of my colleagues will deal with some of the other provinces, there is about seven and a half million dollars to be spent in ridings represented by government candidates, and $2,747,000 to be spent in other ridings, of which amount about $2,250,000 is to be spent on a few items in the city of Ottawa which are necessary due to the fact that this is the seat of government.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Represented by Liberals, though.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh, yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Why leave that out?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I fancy that most of the ridings will be represented that way in a little while; it seems to be the trend of things. I do not want to labour the points that seem to me to be important in this bill, but a great mistake would be made in attempting to do these works without calling for tenders and without giving the contracts to the lowest tenderer. There has been no explanation given by the minister as to why that change has been made, not a word. Just as I warned the minister three years ago against the course that was being taken then of having public works done under unemployment relief without estimates being put through the house, I am just as much satisfied that he will find a year from now that my advice to-day is right as he is satisfied now that the advice I gave him three years ago was right.

The amount, Mr. Speaker, is a large amount, but I am not going to discuss that now. I quite agree with the opinion which I think is held on both sides of the house, that it is much better to be spending money for something that is needed in the country than giving it by way of dole to people, as has been done during the last three years. That is practically what we are on, the dole, and I want to congratulate the government on having experienced a change of heart in regard to their unemployment relief program. I understand that it has been decided that from now it is by a program of public works that they will afford unemployment relief.

There is another point about the bill that I do not like and that I should like to have cleared up, and that is as to the departments that will do the work. We have one department admirably equipped for constructing public works. I have the very greatest confidence in the efficiency of that department throughout, and I submit that works that are public works should be done under the supervision of the Minister of Public Works and by the officials of the Department of Public Works, instead of having them handed around from one department to another—works that are in reality public works.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. CASGRAIN: Getting more patronage to certain ministers.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is another objection that I make to the bill, and that is I do not think the practice should be followed of calling for tenders until the bill permitting the calling for tenders had passed the house. I understand that tenders are being called for, for some of these works before the bill has passed. I have no doubt that it will be passed, and that is a minor objection, but I do again protest just as strongly as I can against, first of all the abandonment of the public advertisements for tenders and secondly against the increase from less than $5,000 to over $25,000 in the amount that can be let without calling for tenders.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I desire to add a brief word before the motion is put, and I rise now because I have to attend a committee meeting very shortly.

The first thing I should say is a word of congratulation to the government for having had the courage to embark on a very substantial program of public works in Canada for the relief of unemployment. I take it that the spirit behind this bill is the relief of unemployment in Canada, and to that extent I think we are all in agreement. I agree with what the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) has said with respect to this system being an improvement over the dole system, and as far as I am concerned I hope the dole system is behind us forever, and that the people of this country will do something else than resort to the dole system.

With respect to what my hon. friend has said with regard to public tender, I do not understand that there is any departure being made from the principle that has been in existence for a good many years save and except with respect to those projects which may cost less than $25,000. I think ample justification can be found for the departure from the principle to which he has alluded. I am not defending or criticizing that. What I desire to place upon the records of the house—I ask the minister in charge of the bill to give attention to this—is that consideration should be given to several factors. First of all, provision should be made in the contracts that wherever available and other things being equal, local labour should be employed. Second, wherever available and other things being equal, local materials should be employed. I have in mind the erection of public buildings in New Brunswick; our free stone should be used rather than materials imported from other communities. Provision should be made to take care of these two matters. There is a third consideration which I desire to impress upon the government. One, two or three large contracting firms, such as I could name, should not be allowed to come in and get a monopoly of these contracts, even under the tender system. I think hon. members will agree that I am not approaching this matter in a narrow, parochial spirit; I do not want to be accused of that. I submit that the large contracting firms if given twelve or fifteen or more contracts under this program will be able to spread the overhead over all the projects and be in position to underbid the smaller contracting firms. I am anxious to see this work distributed, not only to local labour but to the local contracting firms. I believe such firms would give more sympathetic consideration to the local employment needs. I feel that they would give more consideration than the large, highly capitalized contracting firms, so many of which may turn out to be just subsidiary companies of American firms.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words on the second reading of this bill. I endorse what has been said by the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) with regard to the tenders, publicity and the procedure of making contracts. My intention is to deal particularly with the city of Montreal. I may say that I am very grateful as a citizen of Montreal to the government for the public works which it intends to erect in our city, but I want to point out that even this amount of work will not wipe out the obligations towards the city. The unemployment situation in Montreal has been especially bad and it must be viewed from different angles. The government owes a large amount of money to Montreal for past accounts in connection with direct relief. On many occasions, both on the orders of the day and otherwise, I have attempted to have the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) make a statement on this matter. Up-to-date the statements issued by this government or the Quebec government have not been very clear. It has simply been a game of throwing the onus from one government to the other or from both governments to the city of Montreal. Somewhat the same game has been played between the former and present administrations of the city and the unemployment commission. It would seem that it was nobody's and everybody's fault that these past due accounts have not been paid. Notwithstanding the vouchers which exist in connection with the contribution of the Ottawa and Quebec governments to the city of Montreal for direct relief, there is not the least doubt that a very large amount is due to the city. There is no excuse for not advancing immediately to the city at least a large proportion of the sums which are due. So far the reservations which have been made have made negotiation impossible. I know something of the difficulties in connection with the administration of the city and whether we or our friends or some other group are in power in Montreal, I take the stand, as a citizen, that both governments should come to the assistance of the city and pay at least a proportion of the arrears of direct relief. This matter is connected with this bill because the government takes the stand that the erection of these public works will bring the unemployment problem to a conclusion. These public works are all right but they will be insufficient to take care of our unemployment problem. The first thing which this government and the Quebec government should do is to pay a proportion of the arrears due to the city. The city needs this money very badly and has had to make huge interest payments because it has not been available.

I have another submission to make in connection with this matter and I hope it meets with the approval of my confrères on this side of the house. The government is going to spend six or seven million in Montreal on public works but I know from personal experience that that will not solve the unemployment problem. It will alleviate it to a certain extent as a certain number of unemployed will be given work, but I do not agree with the government's intention to discontinue direct relief payments on July 15. The government is attempting to do away with its responsibilities in connection with the general problem of unemployment by bringing down this bill for the construction of public works. There are 35,000 heads of families now unemployed in Montreal and while I have not made a calculation I know that this program will not take care of all those unemployed. The stand which I have taken in this house and at public meetings when I was more closely connected with the municipal administration is that as long as there is one head of a family not provided with work it is the duty of the governments to look after that family. Even though it is spending these millions of dollars, I do not think the government should take the stand that it is through with contributing to unemployment relief. I agree with the principle that the erection of public works is better than direct relief, but if those works are not sufficient, the federal and provincial governments still have a responsibility. It is very unfair to consider that the problem is solved when only fifty or sixty per cent of the unemployed have been given employment. This is the stand I take in connection with this bill.

I am glad the Minister of Labour has extended the period of contribution by the federal government to July 15. I do not say that he has done this because of our demands, it is probably because of his own convictions. But I contend that there should be no limitation in these payments. The government is trying to reduce unemployment by the erection of public works but it is wrong to say that on a certain date it will not contribute otherwise. It should contribute otherwise if, notwithstanding this program of public works, there are still heads of families in need and out of work.

In connection with the public works designated for Montreal, I should like to make this statement. There is a considerable list, and I do not complain on that ground; but I see that provision is made for a public building, No. 101, which I understand is the customs building, and No. 103, the postal terminal building, together with other works in the harbour of Montreal. If you look up the estimates of the last year that we were in power, 1930, you will find moneys voted for these or similar works.

Mr. CASGRAIN: And not spent.

Mr. RINFRET: Had we remained in power all these works which are now proposed, in a gesture of generosity towards the city of Montreal, would have been carried out four years ago; all these works would have been done if the estimates of the then government had been followed out.

Mr. CASGRAIN: This is an election spasm.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not say that these works will not have their good effect this year, but I think it is only fair to point out that there is no evidence of any considerable initiative, for instance, in providing for a postal terminal, when everyone knows that my good friend the former Minister of Public Works some years ago had in the estimates an adequate amount which was voted for the purpose, and when you remember that we purchased the site and did all the preparatory work in connection with that terminal. Questions were put to the present Postmaster General with regard to that construction and he replied by referring us to the Minister of Public Works, who in turn said that the matter was under consideration. I am glad now that we shall have accomplishment in some degree, but I must repeat that this postal terminal, the customs building and the other works provided for in Montreal, useful as they will be, and beneficial as they will prove to the unemployed of to-day, would have been built some years ago if the late government had been maintained in power after the election of 1930.

I do not wish to say much more at the moment because we will examine this bill in committee; but I share the view so well expressed by the former Minister of Public Works, that these works should be done in the ordinary way and that tenders should be called for and all the regular procedure of the department followed. It is not my purpose however to discuss that angle of the bill. What I rose for more particularly was to remind the government that its responsibility to the city of Montreal does not cease with the building of public works that should have been built four years ago if, as I say, the then government had remained in power. It still remains for this government, even after July 15, to do its share in the way of direct relief or by other means so as to help the unemployed in Montreal: because after all, after these works are started, there will still be thousands of families who will not benefit from them.

Even though this administration is not friendly to me, I wish to be generous enough to thank them even for what is being done; but I submit that the government should stop these conversations with the government of Quebec, in which one party says, "We will do it if you raise the interest 1 per cent" and the other party replies, "We will do it if you lower the interest." The fact is that both governments owe millions to the city of Montreal on past account. Montreal is solvent and could very well be advanced $6,000,000 as proposed, but without these reservations that put a stop to everything which the government declares it will do. Montreal needs the money on account of arrears and I hope that the government will not fix, for final settlement, upon the day which has been proposed, namely, the 15th of July, for contributing towards meeting future events and emergencies, not only in Montreal but in all the municipalities.

Let us not forget that this government was returned to power on the precise and very definite undertaking that within a few months it would put an end to unemployment or fall. Now this is the fourth year they have been in power, and while I want to be fair and acknowledge that events are against the whole world, at the same time those events so far as Canada are concerned must be faced; and if there is one administration more than any other that should meet the present situation it is this government, who promised that they would deal successfully with the unemployment situation. I thank the government for this belated generosity in giving to Montreal something that should have been done four years ago, but I say that this will not be sufficient and that the responsibility of the government will remain towards all those families that will not be provided for through this bill.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I do not desire to delay the second reading of the bill because I am not opposed to the principle of it, but I wish to repeat what has been said by the former Secretary of State and congratulate the Minister of Public Works and the administration upon having, after four years of dilatory tactics, adopted the principle and policy which we on this side have been advocating for the last few years.

An hon. MEMBER: Say a kind word.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I think my hon. friend from Parkdale had better go back to Toronto. The government is not only adopting the policy of public works, as we have advocated it, but is financing this policy exactly as we urged on this side through the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) and the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) over a year ago. As I did the other day, when discussing the Dominion Notes Act, I wish to commend the Minister of Public Works and the Prime Minister for financing these works in the way they are doing. In the second place I wish to emphasize in the strongest possible terms the complete inadequacy of the amount provided to meet the situation. The present unemployment crisis in Canada cannot be met by the expenditure of $39,865,000 as under the terms of this bill.

Mr. QUINN: Not a bad start.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): But you should have started four years ago. You are starting something which those on this side will finish before another year is out.

Mr. QUINN: Don't fool yourselves.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I wish to warn the Minister of Public Works not to repeat in this legislation the catastrophic blunders of the 1930-31 legislation. He will recall that we asked from this side of the house for certain precautions in connection with the estimates, certain precautions in connection with governmental control, certain precautions in regard to a national audit of every single cent spent; and we again warn the minister that we desire these precautions to be observed in regard to this legislation. I submit that under section 7 of the bill powers far too great are given to the minister himself.

I wish to identify myself with some of the remarks made by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson). As a matter of fact I had already drawn up an amendment before the hon. member spoke, to provide that, should no additional cost be entailed in connection with such public works and undertakings as are authorized, they shall be financed and completed in local areas and that local labour shall be employed in so far as possible in the completion of such public works. So far as we in British Columbia are concerned, with the meagre allowance given us, we do not desire to have any of the moneys spent in the fabrication of material in the city of Montreal. I mention Montreal by way of illustration; it might be equally Toronto.

In this bill, out of a total of $39,865,000 that may possibly be spent, $32,224,200 is to be spent on large public buildings of steel, of brick, of stone construction, and on steel bridges, harbour works, piers, wharves and works of that kind whereas only $7,641,400 is to be spent on what you might call ordinary undertakings. Under this measure skilled artisans will certainly obtain employment, but I am afraid that the common day labourer will wait on the side lines watching these buildings go up. My criticism of this whole plan is that the ordinary day labourer is not going to find an opportunity for employment under it. I make these observations, I trust, in a constructive spirit. When the time comes to consider the items I shall make some suggestions to the minister in regard to certain projects in my own province of British Columbia. In the meantime I support the constructive suggestions of the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) and the former Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) concerning this legislation. I have one further proposal to offer in regard to these public works; that the minister do what is done by the government of Great Britain in all such undertakings, that is in regard to the king's honour roll, that a certain proportion of ex-service men be employed on the contracts awarded. I think if the minister would include in his contracts these two provisos, the one I just mentioned and the other in regard to local labour and material as far as possible, then he will go a long way to meet the criticisms from different parts of the country.

I want to conclude as I commenced, by commending the administration for that in this eleventh hour of their political life they are embarking on this program, and by commending the Prime Minister for adopting at the same belated hour the suggestion for financing these works which we on this side of the house advanced years ago; and I trust that future administrations will enlarge it into a really comprehensive program of public works for the relief of unemployment throughout Canada.

Mr. C. B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): I am not going to congratulate the government upon this program of public works that they have brought down to-day because I believe that if this government had done what they promised to do in 1930 this country would be in a different position from that in which it is to-day. I want to criticize two or three clauses of the bill, and then state the reasons why I do not think this distribution is equitable. It is admitted by everyone that during times of crisis like this people flock into the centres in order to be taken care of, even if they cannot get employment; therefore the unemployment situation is much more acute in the larger centres than elsewhere. In the province of Quebec we have four large centres. Montreal is our main centre, Quebec comes second in population, and Three Rivers and Sherbrooke vie with one another for third place, they are practically equal. We naturally think that Sherbrooke is third, and Three Rivers people think they are. Now if you examine the schedule here is the situation. In the city of Montreal it is proposed to expend $5,989,500, which is certainly not too much for the city of Montreal. In Quebec it is proposed to expend $1,722,500, that is in the districts immediately surrounding those centres. In Three Rivers the amount to be spent is $484,000 while in Sherbrooke, the third largest centre in the province of Quebec, they do not propose to spend one single nickel. I shall give some figures to show what the unemployment condition has been, and what conditions are in the city of Sherbrooke at the moment. But in the whole of those eastern townships of Quebec, consisting of eight counties federally and eleven provincially, only one work is proposed, that is in Farnham, in the constituency of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel), amounting to $58,000. I think under those conditions I have a right to protest.

Population figures for the city of Sherbrooke as of last week show a total of 29,284. Taking into account the births during the year you find a net decrease in population during the past twelve months of 439 in spite of the unemployed coming into the city. In Sherbrooke we run a municipal kitchen to feed these people and keep them from starving. Our official figures of families on kitchen relief are as follows:

September	331
October	361
November	406
December	463
January	522
February	544
March	542

In other words there was an increase from September, 1933, to March, 1934, from 331 to 542, or 211 more families kept by the city of Sherbrooke on direct relief.

For wood delivered by the city to people who are not obliged to go to the kitchen, the figures are as follows:

1933—	Loads
September	213
October	318
November	550
December	942
1934—
January	1,010
February	1,190
March	830

Yet in spite of these figures we find not a single nickel provided under this bill for the city of Sherbrooke, the hub of the eastern townships of Quebec, to aid in unemployment relief.

One further aspect of the matter to my mind is more impressive than all the others; and I say this directly to the Prime Minister. I want him to realize the situation. I am one who believes that in a city the proprietor is what the Prime Minister termed the sheet anchor of the Canadian municipality. In Sherbrooke according to the last census we had 29,284 people, and in 1930 there were 2,975 proprietors; in other words 10·3 per cent of the people owned their homes. In 1931 the number of proprietors had dropped to 2,876; in 1932 to 2,596 and in 1933 to 2,233. In other words in a two year period, due to foreclosures and people losing their homes, there was a reduction of 643 in the number of property owners. If you carry that percentage on for another few years you might as well consider Sherbrooke in the class with a Russian municipality. I draw this to the attention of the committee because I think the distribution is absolutely unfair and shows no consideration for the needs of these centres in the province of Quebec.

I also criticize this bill in respect of the methods adopted for carrying out its objects. The word "public" is left out before the word "tender." I do not believe that this government or any government has any right to go on with a construction program without calling for public tenders. As this stands at present the government can call for private tenders or any other kind and go ahead and let contracts—

Mr. CASGRAIN: In the Tory fashion.

Mr. HOWARD: The proper way to do this is by public tender. The old legislation provided that for works costing less than $5,000 the minister had the right to use his judgment and go ahead without public tender. The figure has not merely been raised from $5,000 to $25,000, but the bill says "in excess of $25,000." Then it goes on to qualify that, it provides that an expert in the department shall estimate the cost. If he estimates it as not in excess of $25,000, they can go ahead without calling for tenders. That simply means that if their estimate should over-run, we will say, an ordinary percentage up to $35,000, the government propose to carry on the work without calling for tenders.

Then I do not see any provision with regard to the fair wage clause. I am exceptionally interested in that; I believe we should mention it in this legislation without leaving it to the fair wage act. I believe it should be put in here, because I am one of those who believe that if the wages you pay a man give him only a bare existence it is not of much benefit to the community. If you want to help your communities pay your men fair wages so they will have money to spend in order to make their fellowmen more prosperous.

Then I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the fact that Canadian companies are not specified. I know what has happened in the past; I know how United States companies evaded the law by forming Canadian subsidiaries to handle these contracts, and perhaps in prosperous times that might be countenanced. But in times of extraordinary stress I do not believe any United States company or any other outside company should be allowed to tender on or accept these contracts. As one other hon. member said a moment ago, we want Canadian labour to be used, Canadian companies to get these contracts and, so far as possible, local contractors and local labour to get their share of the work.

In closing I want to say that I agree entirely with those who have already spoken from this side of the house. After waiting three and a half years; after it has been found that the marketing bill will not remedy the situation; after the government have failed to raise the prices of agricultural products; after the Prime Minister has failed to implement the promise he made from the public platform in Sherbrooke in 1930, that if he were elected people would rush back to their jobs and the country would be prosperous, and that if this did not happen we could blame the government; after all that I want to say that I am glad the government have adopted the policy which we call inflation. If they had proceeded three and a half years ago to deal with our currency as they propose to deal with it in the legislation brought down last week; if inflation had been brought about three years ago the situation would have been quite different, and possibly this legislation would not have been necessary. I want to ask the Minister of Public Works, when he considers these items, to give particular attention to the large centres of the province of Quebec, and to give Sherbrooke its fair share in relation to Montreal, Quebec and Three Rivers, since we do not wish to be discriminated against.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, I would not have had anything to say had it not been that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) rose a short time ago and said that this program, or perhaps a more extensive program, had been proposed by the Liberal party. The number of things the Liberal party claim to have sponsored is to me amazing and amusing. They suddenly become the exponents of a publicly owned bank; they say they were the people who advocated a central bank, though I always understood that we were the people who converted them. I think everyone who sits in the house or in the press gallery will remember that over and over again the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) suggested a public works program on a large scale financed with new money, that is, money issued without interest against the general assets of the people. I do not think one needs to argue the point. I might say to His Majesty's loyal opposition that if they had really wanted to bring in a program of public works for the relief of unemployment they had an opportunity to do so before the election of 1930. I really think the Liberals were defeated then because of the depression and their inadequate methods of dealing with it. If they knew then what should be done it is a wonder they did not do it. At any rate, while those who sit in the southeast corner are very modest when the government bring in their programs, and do not like to rise too often and say, "Thank you very much"—or, as someone suggests, "We told you so"—still I think it is going too far when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre claims credit for the Liberal party for suggesting that such a program be inaugurated. The order paper to-day carries a resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for Macleod, as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, in view of the large number of unemployed, and with the necessity of increasing the purchasing power of the people, it is expedient that the government give immediate consideration to the inauguration of a large scale program of public works to be financed by a direct issue of non-interest bearing dominion notes.

Actually, if we enforced the rules as severely as they are enforced at times, we could not discuss the bill now before us because the subject matter is already before the house in this resolution, which was put on the order paper by an hon. member sitting in this corner.

I do most heartily congratulate the government upon bringing in a program of public works. It is four years late, but at any rate it is being brought in now and is being financed in what I believe to be the correct manner. The program should have been larger; I think this is only a beginning, and that still larger programs will be brought in to be financed in the same way. I am sure the government will not appreciate my prolonging my congratulations, so I will bring that part of my remarks to an end. I think at this time we could easily stand a program calling for the expenditure of $100,000,000 rather than $40,000,000, financed in just the same way, because we have been deflated much more than $100,000,000, and there is no reason why we should not reflate to that extent, if people like the word "reflation" better than another that might be used. However, undoubtedly even this small program, amounting to $40,000,000, will do a great deal to relieve unemployment. At least it will put $40,000,000 of purchasing power in the pockets of the people and to that degree at least will help business.

I am sorry this program is not larger; I think we could have stood a very much larger one. I could have said $200,000,000 instead of $100,000,000, but perhaps we had better put it at the latter figure. We are spending only a small amount now. I look for larger programs in the future; I think they are inevitable, and I think they will be financed in the same way.

As a last word I want to say to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre that I think he has claimed for himself and his associates about all the credit he had better try to claim this session.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am moved by somewhat conflicting emotions as I survey this vain attempt on the part of the government to save themselves from political extinction. That is what it means. They have one foot in the grave, and this is a great lunge to try and keep the other foot out. Of course it is claimed that this program is meant to relieve unemployment, and no doubt there is something to be said in that regard, but just how much of it will go for that purpose is another matter. It is something like the money spent for grasshopper bait; how much went for Grithoppers and how much for grasshoppers? No doubt this also will do away with the dole, in some little measure at least. Are we contemplating the expenditure of a great deal of money, nearly $40,000,000, for the purpose of affecting the coming federal election? That is what it is for; there is no use getting away from it. And it does not say very much for our criticism if we let them get away with it without pointing out that fact. And then to think of the stupidity of the government who seem to have the idea that such action will save them. Why, the deeper they are in the mud the farther they will get into the mire via this route. Have we been living all our lives with our heads buried in the sandpile so that we do not recognize these things when governments attempt to do them? We do not need to go back to antiquity to find it out. On the Prescott highway, part of that system of the King's highways, we saw men lined up like bees around honey and pretending to be working the day before the election. And out in Saskatchewan there were white men, black men, Indian boy graduates—all kinds of men, old and young, working on the roads only the week before and during the week of the election. How did they vote? Most of them just voted to soak the government that much harder. They took and earned their money and then put the boots to them afterwards.

That kind of blind failure has been this government's record, from its inception. Every move has been more stupid than the one preceding; each move has been non-effective in whatever purpose it set out to accomplish—and this is the hugest one of the lot. There was a time in my early political career when, from a political standpoint, I would have been very much alarmed at this procedure; I would have been afraid that the government would scoop in everybody and get all the voters within their toils. But to-day, even if they doubled the expenditures outlined in this bill, I would be quite composed, so far as that angle of the matter is concerned, because I know that their action will only result in the greater downfall of the government, when it comes. So we do not need to be alarmed at that.

Another matter which gratifies me is that recent events have shown that the people of Canada are not on the bargain counter. They are going to vote as they wish. They are going to take advantage of the secrecy of the ballot if the returning officers do not open their ballots as some of them did in Ottawa at the last election. They will vote, they will take advantage of what is supposed to be the secrecy of the ballot and in other respects they will govern themselves accordingly. There is no use haranguing the government. It is said that all governments do a little bit of this kind of thing prior to the elections. I do not admit that. But, for the sake of argument, supposing I do admit it; I suppose it is only natural that one should dress up and brush up before he presents himself to the people at an election. Put on your best clothes, have your front yard swept up, and your backyard ditto. Maybe a little of that is only natural. But the present wholesale attempt, with no pretence at saying that the purposes behind it are not as I have indicated—well, it is just too much for me to swallow at one gulp, and without protest. I am not making these statements because there are no appropriations for my constituency; as a matter of fact, I do not know whether there are or not.

Mr. McINTOSH: Not a dollar.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have looked it over, and I have not seen any, but that fact does not make any difference to me. If there were two or three expenditures for my constituency I would make the same general statements I am now making.

I was glad to see, however, that some small attempt has been made to spend some of the money for utility purposes and to the extent that such expenditures are made I commend the measure. There are many useful improvements which could be effected in Canada to help bring us back; we could invest the money in projects which would bring in revenue, and that would help us to get on our feet. Let me point to one. The bill provides for a fish processing plant adjacent to the cold storage plant in Halifax. I like that. That is an expenditure which will help to put the fishing industry on its feet, and I am sure the industry requires help. The new plant will be located beside the cold storage plant which was erected by the predecessors of this government. That plant needs business. So it would seem the money spent on the processing plant would be spent doubly well. Would it not be nice if we could say the same of all these expenditures, but perhaps respecting other industries. Of course the expenditures would not be all for fish or for fowl, but for some other useful purposes also.

Now that I have spoken of a commendable eastern project may I direct the attention of hon. members to the west. I wonder if this country realizes the opportunity now lying open with respect to rehabilitating those great plains of southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan, and in a little corner of Manitoba. Those plains are on the point of going back to a condition almost the same as that found in the Sahara or the Arabian deserts, if someone does not soon put forth a hand to save and to salvage them. But this measure does not contain a word about those plains. If they are mentioned, I shall apologize for what I am now saying. It may be that some provision may be hidden in the measure, as are some of the amendments to their legislation. Sometimes those amendments are hidden so carefully one cannot find them. Probably after the vote in Saskatchewan recently recorded there was not very much encouragement to make any further suggestive expenditures there. Would there be any encouragement to make further expenditures in Ontario? The political effect of the "Henry" road schedule was certainly not noticeable. By introducing this legislation the government is simply adding one more crime to its history, because in addition to trying to get public favour in a vulgar and brazen way it is adopting as stupid tactics as possible to get election results.

Let me revert to the open prairie plains I spoke about previously. In years of even limited rainfall that area is one of the most productive in Canada. Certainly it is the most productive part of the open plain area in Saskatchewan. Getting so little rainfall through the centuries, its fertility has not been washed out by water or by freshets, with the result that it is still exceedingly fertile. With the least bit of moisture perhaps only six or seven inches in a summer growing season one may grow a good crop of the highest quality. What is the matter with it now? Thirty years of cultivation by man in his mad effort to grow wheat has worked all the fibre out of the ground. The soil binder has gone; it has taken wings and it may be found anywhere between the Rocky mountains and Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. That is where our farm land is going; even the mortgage will not hold it down.

This government is not making any move, either through this or any other bill, to reclaim that country. Three or four years ago, after a very heroic attempt on the part of the committee on agriculture the Minister of Agriculture was induced to begin a policy of grass and clover seed distribution. But the government is becoming so impoverished that the vote has been reduced almost to zero. Even orginally it was so small for grass seed it was but a mere flea bite. It would take a century to accomplish anything with the moneys appropriated, but at least it was a step in the right direction. Then the Minister of Finance ruthlessly cut down the Minister of Agriculture's votes, and the moneys for this purpose have almost disappeared. Now there is nothing but empty talk; they talk about this, and they talk about that. They talk about what they are accomplishing but talk without money is cheap. In the present bill we find vast and varied expenditures scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific in a vast endeavour to influence the electorate at the coming election, and, incidentally, to give a little relief to the unemployed.

Speaking frankly, may I say I have tried to be fair with the government. But why do they act so stupidly on every occasion they make an attempt to do anything. Look at the wheat agreement. I know some people would say, "Look at the marketing act." but I will not say that until it is given a long and fair trial. But the wheat agreement; it is just as good as blown up in the air, and it could not be otherwise. I shall not go into this matter further just now, but I am merely pointing out the fact. At another time I shall say what I was going to say and will not say now—well, I will say it: If we as an opposition do anything to prolong unnecessarily the life of this government we will be censurable for doing so. Do not make any mistake about that. The sooner we get rid of them, the better for the country—and I think this bill will help to get rid of them more effectively than otherwise. For that reason I am going to give it a measure of support. It will help to hasten them off—good riddance to bad rubbish. That is my view of the situation, and the electors will think so too. The electors will hold the opposition in this house responsible if we do not help to hasten the government off. There is no hope for them. They seem to be going from bad to worse, and from there, as I said last session, to Milton Campbell. It seems to me that we are impotent so far as amending this legislation is concerned, and that all we can do is to point out to the country what is being done and express our regret, as I do now, that in the southern plains in the west and in other parts, if you like, nothing is being done to help us win our way back to prosperity although I will commend the government for their fish processing plant and anything else of a kindred nature that will help us to again stand up. If that $40,000,000 was spent with that objective in mind, what a lot could be done with it! We could then all shout for it, and the government might inadvertently get a little commendation from the country too. But this gets you nowhere. We all know what it is for, and the electors hold us in contempt for doing it. The very men who will earn this money chaff with each other about the government and say, "The government think they are going to buy us," and then they damn the government and cast their vote against it. That is the situation. It is an awful commentary on our democracy when these things can be done without exciting indignation and protest. There was a protest all over Ontario against it last week, far more eloquent than anybody by words can make, and there was a further protest in Saskatchewan of such fierce intensity that it did not leave a grease spot on the floor of the Tory government in that province, and I am amazed that within a week after that protest the government should bring down this thing just prior to a general election when there are so many useful projects for which the money might have been used.

I am half way in my seventh decade, Mr. Speaker, and I am proud of it. I am one who has seen Canada recover from a condition of very severe privation and excessive mortgaging back in the seventies of last century, when nearly every farm in eastern Canada was mortgaged to the hilt. I saw the cheese factories start. It meant hard and constant work Sunday and Saturday in season and out, but the agriculture of Ontario came back under that policy of dairying and kindred activities on the farm. That was sixty years ago, but it can be repeated to-day if you give the farmers an opportunity. They have run away ahead of themselves during the squander period of good times ever since the war and until recently, and now after sixty years we have got an old broken-down, obsolete creamery equipment which has to compete with other countries with modern equipment. There is not a country in the world with which we compete but what has up-to-date creameries and cheese factories, combined plants to convert milk into fifteen or twenty different processed commodities for the markets of the world, and here we are with our little jerkwater factories, puddling away at a high cost and with great difficulty keeping up the quality because of the insanitary conditions in some of these factories. What a God's blessing this vote would be if it were used to put up half a dozen such factories in Ontario and old Quebec or anywhere else where it was thought desirable, or even to put up a model plant to show what a modern creamery was like. But I do not see anything of that in this bill. I recommended that four years ago to this government, and I saw some evidence of it in the marketing bill, provided they can get the money as easy as this, but there is no evidence of it here in this bill. I would like to hope that it is not too late yet for the government to reconsider, for the mainstay of eastern agriculture has been dairying with its allied activities such as hog raising, which goes naturally with dairying.

If anybody can show me anything in this great outlay of money that is going to help agriculture I will be the first to commend the government because I know that this is the first duty to reclaim and rehabilitate those great southern plains on the prairies that I spoke of a moment ago. The first step to reclaim agriculture in eastern Canada is to rehabilitate dairying and hog raising, including poultry that goes with it. I do not suppose the government will care one hoot what I say about this. I do not believe they know enough about agriculture to realize what is required, and because of that I forgive them as they know not what they do. They give no evidence that they know what is needed for agriculture generally either now or at any other time.

I do not want to detain the house. I do not know whether the government feels any better or wiser for what I have said, but I feel an awful lot better myself.

Mr. P. A. SEGUIN (L'Assomption-Montcalm) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to immediately state that the bill under consideration has some redeeming features. The only fault one may find, is that it was not introduced sooner. The government certainly took a long time to descover that Canadians had a stout heart and that instead of begging for their bread they preferred to work and earn it. I am, therefore, wholly in favour of this bill, the object of which is to provide work at least for some of our people. I regret, however, that the intention is to utilize it as a political tool by stipulating that work, up to an amount of $25,000 may be awarded without tenders. The government has no excuse to revert to such an expedient and when I closely examine this measure, I deem it my duty, as a rural representative, to criticize the administration for not having shown more solicitude towards rural counties.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): It is unfortunate that the minister who prepared these appropriations did not first consult the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) and refer to the dole lists, in order to distribute this money in localities where it is most needed. Such a method would have been fairer and at least it could have been said that the government's object was purely to relieve distress.

Since 1930, sir, I have earnestly requested the hon. Minister of Public Works to erect a post office at L'Assomption.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): That is a fact.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): I think it is not a matter of luxury, sir. The building is supported on all sides by props which this government has had placed there instead of rebuilding it.

Mr. PARENT (Translation): It will crumble like the government.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): The town of L'Assomption had to resort to the dole. On many occasions I requested that the post office, which is in ruins, as you may judge by this photograph, be rebuilt.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Show it to the government.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): I forwarded a copy to the hon. minister at the time—

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): He did not bestir himself.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): —and he replied as follows:

> While I fully agree with you and appreciate the fact that the building in its present condition must present anything but a pleasing appearance, I regret we have no appropriation to which the reconstruction of this building could be charged. I have however, made a note of the matter and it will receive every consideration when the estimates are being prepared for the ensuing fiscal year.

This was on November 29, 1932.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): He forgot about it.

Mr. DUPUIS (Text): Who signed that?

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart). He certainly lost his memorandum because in quoting this item to relieve the unemployed, he forgot to provide for the reconstruction of the post office at L'Assomption which is crumbling; the Liberals, therefore, will be obliged to rebuild it as soon as they assume power.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): I regret also that the hon. minister has also lost sight of many other requirements affecting rural constituencies and particularly the county which I have the honour of representing in the house. The tobacco industry in my county is of primary importance and our farmers who are in distress requested, at various times, warehouses, so as to preserve their tobacco in good condition and enable them to market it advantageously. I earnestly requested the erection of such warehouses and I again do so now, if it is not too late; it could be included in this last item of the amounts to be expended:

To supplement where necessary specific amounts hereinbefore provided upon the authority of the governor in council.

Perhaps this paragraph could be altered; this amount of $500,000 would be increased, a few million dollars could be added to provide for various other requirements that the hon. minister forgot in the schedule.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Thus the post office at St. Lin; tobacco warehouses at St. Jacques-l'Achigan, St. Esprit and even at Joliette could be erected. The minister did not do so, he did not inquire in what localities this money could be utilized.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): He is not a connoisseur in tobacco!

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Moreover, it is urgent that a bridge be constructed at one end (bout) of "l'ile Jésus," on the Jésus river. This bridge would link Montreal to the eastern part of our province, at the village of Charlemagne.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Quite so, the Charlemagne bridge.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): The construction of this bridge would give work to a great number of unemployed in the adjacent counties. It would have been timely to construct this bridge, but it slipped the hon. member's mind. I could point out numerous urgent undertakings in my county. The hon. minister is aware that a dam was requested on the Assomption river, so as to raise the water to its regular level and thus draw to its shore much wealth. The government promised, at the time, to give it their serious consideration, however, this promise became a dead letter, and when work is being distributed, the government rather think of other counties to which large sums of money are granted. I do not envy my colleagues who reside in the neighbourhood. We obtained, at St. Jacques-l'Achigan, under the Liberal regime the construction of a very attractive post office which cost $28,000. I note that $48,000 is appropriated for such a building at Berthier. I wish to congratulate my hon colleague from Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Barrette): however, I think the government could have set aside, out of the large amounts which it expends in certain localities, some funds to provide for other localities which have been completely ignored.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): No justice exists.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): I do not wish to further delay the house, although endorsing the principle of the bill, I wished to point out that a grave injustice is being perpetrated in the distribution of moneys and that this bill seems rather introduced, not to win counties—it is futile—but in an endeavour to hold on to those which are in danger. I do not think that such a policy will succeed, in spite of all, the counties which are Liberal will remain so while the others will return to the Liberal fold.

Mr. J. A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of the remarks I have to make on this bill, I want to say that I approve of the spending of $40,000,000 for public works because it does away with the direct relief system which has done so much harm to the country since the present government adopted that means of relieving unemployment in Canada. On June 19 the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) introduced this bill in the place of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) who, as he said, was engaged in a patriotic duty. I want to take this opportunity of congratulating my genial friend, the Minister of Public Works upon the success he attained in the patriotic duty he was engaged in at that time. That success was considerable and has been heartily approved by the people of Ontario and the people of Canada in general. On that occasion the Prime Minister, answering a question asked by my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), stated:

I can assure my right hon. friend that when he looks at it he will regard it as being the acme of patriotism, inasmuch as communities which have little claim except their adherence to the time honoured tenets of the great party which he has the honour to lead, have not been forgotten.

I want to deal with those words of the Prime Minister and endeavour to find out if there has been an equal distribution of this work among the different constituencies and divisions of Canada regardless of the political adherence of the representatives of those communities. I intend to deal particularly wi h Quebec as I am more or less familiar with that province. The former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) has dealt with Ontario and I shall not attempt to touch upon that province or any other province. In looking over the schedule of the bill I find that the first place in Quebec which is to be benefited by the provisions of this bill is Beauport, to which $20 000 has been allotted. Beauport is in a Conservative constituency. The next place is Berthierville, to which $48,500 has been allotted. I do not know whether this amount would have been allotted last week had the government known that the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Barrette) was going to leave his party when an important vote was taken in this house on Friday evening.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does the hon. member know that in the estimates for 1930-31, prepared by his hon. friends, provision was made for a building in Beauport?

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): No, I did not know that.

Mr. VENIOT: Why did you not carry it out?

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): It should have been carried out before. As has been said before, it is coming four years too late.

Mr. MANION: Better late than never.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): The next item is $25,000 for Brownsburg. I think I am correct in stating that that is in the constituency of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley). The next place is Cantic, to which $31,500 has been allotted. At first I credited this as being in a Liberal constituency, but I see I made a mistake. Under the new redistribution act, as you will remember, Cantic as well as Lacolle forms a part of that famous Polish corridor which runs from the St. Lawrence to the Richelieu river in the present constituency of my hon. friend from St. Johns-Iberville, so that there will be in the next election some doubt as to the political adherents of this new county. But it has not been overlooked and we find that $31,500 is devoted to the purpose. The minster will explain just what this amount is for when the schedule is under study. The same situation exists so far as Lacolle is concerned. Lacolle is at the extreme southern end of the county of St. Johns at the present time, but it has been put into the new constituency of Chateauguay-Huntingdon, and the amount of $35,500, which I had allotted against the Liberal constituency, should be placed in the other column. The next is Champlain. We find that there is a sum of $18,000 in connection with Lorne drydocks, then we find $26,000 in connection with the Champlain drydock. Then there is $88,500 credited to the Liberal constituency of Chicoutimi. For a public building at Farnham there is a sum of $58,000. At Father Point there is provision for wharf reconstruction, $25,000. In the Liberal constituency of Grande Riviere there is a sum of $64,000. At Lake St. Peter there is a sum of $12,000; that is in a Conservative constituency; and then we find the sum of $5,764,000 allotted to Montreal. I will come back to that in a moment. On the north shore of the St. Lawrence $9,000 is voted; that is in a Liberal constituency. At Pointe au Pic there is the sum of $156,000 and at Port Daniel there is $23,300. In the city of Quebec there is an amount of $1,315,000, and it is hard to say exactly in what division these works are to be carried on; but you can regard this as a positive fact, that in the spending of this $1,315 000 the Liberal members from the city of Quebec will not have much say; the Solicitor General will have the disposal of that expenditure. The next constituency I find is Rimouski, a Liberal constituency, where there is $20,000, and at Riviere Ouelle, in the county of Kamouraska, there is provision of $40,000; that is Liberal. In Rouyn, in the Lake St. John district, which is represented by a Conservative member in this house, there is an item of $63,000. The next is Sorel; the ex-Minister of Marine was lucky in having the sum of $100,000 voted for his constituency. At St. Joseph d'Alma we find the sum of $30,000; this is a Conservative constituency. And the Minister of Marine has not forgotten himself in voting $40,000 for St. Lambert. The member for Saguenay was fortunate in obtaining $22,000 in that Liberal constituency. As regards Three Rivers, the hon. member for Sherbrooke went very thoroughly into this matter, and I find on examining the schedule that the sum of $400,000 was voted for that city. In Timiskaming, in the county of Pontiac, there is the very large sum of $475,000. That constituency is represented by a Conservative member in this house. I do not know what this work will be. The last item on the list is the sum of $25,000 for Valois, in the constituency of my good friend the member for Jacques Cartier. The minister will no doubt explain this amount to us when the item is under consideration. Valois is a summer resort on lake St. Louis, and I doubt whether the population is 500. There is nothing but summer cottages which are unoccupied in winter. How the government is going to spend $25,000 at Valois I do not know. It is a very charming place and I congratulate the member on having obtained this amount, although I cannot see what its usefulness will be.

An hon. MEMBER: I think you forgot Chicoutimi.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I mentioned it, $88,500.

Mr. GOBEIL: $153,000.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I have $88,000 and I stick to it.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Edmonton?

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): If you want to go to Alberta, more than half the amount in the province goes to Calgary, the constituency represented by the Prime Minister. But to come back to Montreal. What struck me most in examining this schedule was that most of the amounts were items that should have been in the main estimates rather than in this special measure for public works. We find that the sum of $200,000 is voted for an armoury for the 17th Duke of York's Royal Canadian Hussars, and that amount can be attributed almost to anyone. I have nothing to say in that regard. Then we find $2,000,000 for a public building addition. I suppose this is the new customs building on McGill street, Montreal. This site was acquired a great many years ago and a certain amount of work has been done on the lot. The pillars are there, the place has been fenced in, and it is only right that at this time something should be done to supplement the expenditure that has already been made there. The next amount, taking Montreal, is for the postal station at Notre Dame de Grace, $136,000, the site of which has already been acquired. In Notre Dame de Grace, in the coming elections, it is possible that there will have to be a new government candidate, because the member for the present constituency of Mount Royal does not reside in Notre Dame de Grace, nor does the member for St. Antoine reside there, so that there will be a new government candidate in this division when the next election, so ardently hoped for, comes along. There will be a new Conservative candidate, I say, and something must be done to ensure in the minds of the government the election of that candidate. Therefore we find the sum of $136,000 voted, to be spent on a postal station in this part of the city.

I represent one of the most flourishing cities in the province of Quebec, not quite as large perhaps as Notre Dame de Grace, but under the administration of my good friend the former Postmaster General we were lucky enough to have a post office built in the city of Outremont. But the amount was not anything like $136,000. I think it only amounted to some $40,000. I am sure that when consideration of this item comes up the minister will explain why so expensive a building is to be put up in this suburb of Montreal.

As to the postal terminal building, everyone who knows anything about Montreal is aware of what has taken place. We know that the site was acquired—that is mentioned here—but it was acquired by the former government. The sum of $1,800,000 is to be spent in putting up this building. We have nothing to say against that, we are rather commending the government for carrying out the program of the former administration. I am advised by the former Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) that there was an item of $600,000 appropriated in 1930 to carry out this project but it was cancelled by the government.

The next item goes to prove what I said a moment ago, that many if not the larger number of items in this schedule should have been included in the main estimates, but this futile gesture is made by the government pretending to come to the relief of unemployment. This $534,000 for repaving of certain surfaces should have been in the main estimates. And further to show that the nature of this work makes it clear that it should have been placed in the estimates, we find that the last amount for the city of Montreal is for the application of two protective coats of paint on the steel structure of the harbour bridge. A bridge of the importance and value of the Montreal harbour bridge has to be painted every now and then. That is not a matter of special relief but an ordinary expenditure that should have gone into the estimates.

The next item is for the reconstruction of eleven raceways at the Windmill point pier, $339,000. Under the former administration a sum of $1,500,000 was voted to carry out this work, but that was cancelled and now this government comes along with its belated generosity and votes the meagre sum of $339,000. Then we have another amount of the same nature, certain protection works against sifting of filling material supporting grain elevator No. 3. This is a work that had to be done of necessity and there is no special commendation to be given to the government for putting it in this measure. The next amount for Montreal is a sum of $242,000 for raising of a fronting wharf, sections 38, 39 and 40. That is work that should come under the ordinary expenditures of the government and should have been in the estimates, it should not be placed here.

I want to add my word of blame, Mr. Speaker, of the government for the clause in this bill which allows the granting of contracts for sums not in excess of $25,000 without calling for tenders. With great surprise also we find nothing in this bill calling for the fair wage clause. We know what has been going on throughout Canada as regards wages paid—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is provided in our specifications for all works that we undertake and in all works that we do by day work we conform to the act.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Why do you not put it in the bill? It is not stated in the bill.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It does not need to be in the bill because it applies to everything.

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): I just wish to make a few general observations on this bill. First I want to congratulate the government on launching this public works policy. I think it is sound in principle, and that in adopting it they have followed the lead given by other countries of the world in an endeavour to break the spell of this depression. I have no criticism whatever to offer in that regard.

Further, I think that the government should be congratulated particularly on the financial policy of using the nation's credit rather than borrowing money for this undertaking. I believe it is an experiment, and I have no criticism to offer as to their being cautious in launching such a policy. If it is successful and proves sound it can be extended to much of the work set in motion by the government in the future.

The work to be done in my own city, where rentals at the present time for offices used by the government amount to $52,000 a year, is a productive enterprise that will result in a large saving. With the self-liquidating provisions of the bill it will return to the people of this country the capital expenditure involved.

What I wish to bring to the attention of the government is the question of the fair wages policy. I am not unmindful of the fact that the fair wages act provides that:

> Every contract made hereafter with the government of Canada for construction, remodelling, repair or demolition of any work shall be subject to the following conditions respecting wages and hours:

But in subsection 2 the act says that:

> The provisions of this section shall not apply to persons employed in fabrication or manufacture of materials, supplies or equipment for use in the work contemplated where such fabrication or manufacture is carried on in any established plant or factory other than a plant or factory established for the purposes of the work contemplated.

Especially in view of the disclosures in the price spreads committee, I think the fair wages policy in connection with this work should be all-embracing. I believe the government should give leadership in this connection, should insist that every nut, bolt, screw and piece of wood or equipment that goes into this program should be fabricated or produced under fair wage conditions. Might I give as an example the furniture industry in this country, on which much light has been thrown during the past year. I think the government should insist that any furniture that goes into these buildings should be produced and manufactured under fair wage conditions, with wages that provide for a standard of living at least equal to what we consider a fair Canadian standard. I leave that suggestion with the government, notwithstanding that the act eliminates these establishments where the fabrication takes place from the fair wages requirements. I believe it would be wise on the part of the government to extend the provisions of that act to bring these establishments within the compass of that policy in connection with this undertaking.

Then I believe that every job should be awarded by contract. I would not accuse the government of endeavouring to use any of this work for political purposes in the broadest sense—

Mr. CASGRAIN: No doubt they will do so.

Mr. MITCHELL: —but I believe the safest way to overcome that evil is to insist that every undertaking set in motion shall be let by contract. Then in the big undertakings I believe that every subcontract should be registered with the government. I do not think that what are known as broker contracts should be permitted, where the main contractor gets the contract and then chisels the other contractors down to provide a profit for himself. I believe every contract of any kind or character that is awarded should be registered with the government in order to prevent the intrusion of the broker contractor.

I believe also, Mr. Speaker, that the government should give a lead in regard to the establishment of the six hour day. I believe the main purpose of this legislation is to distribute purchasing power among the building tradesmen of this country, and in passing I may say that it is a fact that the building and construction industry is the real cesspool of unemployment. I think it is a fact that eighty per cent of the money expended in construction goes in wages, and in view of the fact that the policy of the government is to take people off relief I think it might be well to experiment with the six hour day. I believe we are going to get the six hour day whether we like it or not; it is just a question of time. I believe it is a sound principle, and it might be well for the government to give leadership in that direction. It might be argued that it is not practicable, but I would point out that it would not be necessary to have a break in the midst of the six hours for meals or anything else; if necessary you could run two shifts, and in that way you would spread out the work so that as much as possible might be given those who want to put their hands to some productive enterprise.

I hope this government will not make the mistake that has been made by the government of Ontario in connection with some of their construction work. They insisted that a man must be on relief before he could take advantage of the work. I believe there are hundreds and thousands of people who have made every effort, who have used up the savings of a lifetime, in order to stay out of the relief offices. I believe those people should be given some measure of recognition. It should not be necessary for a man to be on relief before he can get work under this program. My main interest is that as many men as possible should be given work under this policy. In connection with the subcontracts I should like to point out that through the letting of these contracts by broker contractors the employees themselves may be placed outside the provisions of the workmen's compensation laws, and even the fair wage policy of the government. That is why I believe the government should insist that all these contracts must be registered, so that every bit of work done should be carried on under the legislation that has been enacted for the protection of men and women engaged in the industrial life of this country.

In conclusion I want to congratulate the government on launching this policy. I believe that in the next five years the respective governments will have to take an active part in launching building programs for the purpose of eliminating the slums of this country. I believe we might take a leaf out of the book of the British government, who launched an enormous home building program partly financed by the government. I believe that if the interest rates do not come down policies will have to be formulated and set in motion by the respective governments of this country looking to the abolition of the slums and the provision of housing accommodation of the kind we think is necessary in the life of this country.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): With the alleged purposes of the measure as set forth by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) I think all parties in the house will be in agreement. The threefold purpose, as the minister described it, was that of providing employment, providing useful public services in the form of buildings and other construction work, and stimulating activity on the part of others to do likewise. I call these the alleged purposes, because it seems to me that if they were the real purposes this measure would have been brought down many months ago instead of in the concluding hours of the session. The circumstance that the bill is brought down at this time within a few days of the prorogation of parliament, together with the sections of the bill itself, give one good reason to believe that the emergency referred to in its provisions is not so much one with respect to unemployment as it is an emergency with respect to the government's own position in appealing to the people, as they no doubt will, in the very near future. The bill has all the earmarks of a measure introduced for the purpose of assisting the administration in a general election. Parliament is asked to vote a public works program amounting to $40,000,000 on the eve of a general election; that in a nutshell is what the measure is.

May I point out to the minister wherein I think an examination of the measure will reveal its political intent. In the first place, were this an unemployment measure introduced for the purpose of setting an example to others and of stimulating employment, it would have been brought down long ago. I would remind the house that it was November 20 last when the Prime Minister publicly announced that during the course of the forthcoming session a program of construction of public works would be introduced. When I read the announcement, I thought, judging from what little knowledge I have of political affairs, and of hon. gentlemen opposite, that it meant a general election at the end of the session, that the government was preparing the way for a program of public works to be put forward, not in the regular way in the form of a supply bill, to be voted as estimates for public works, but as a measure supposedly in aid of the unemployed. During this session I have watched pretty carefully to see just when this program would be brought down, and the longer it was postponed the more certain I became that it indicated the near approach of a general election. Several times during this session I asked the Prime Minister when we might expect this public works program. He gave one reason after another, or I should not call them reasons; I should say he gave one excuse or apology after another for the delay. Once he said the program was like Jonah's gourd, that it was getting larger and larger, and numerous demands were being made which he had to consider. Later on we were told that it would not do to have it suggested that he was seeking to bribe the people with their own money by bringing down the program while the elections in Saskatchewan and Ontario were under way. But I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that long before there was any announcement of an election in Ontario or Saskatchewan, long before those dates were fixed, there was ample opportunity for the government to have introduced this program.

As a matter of fact, if this program really was intended to assist the unemployed and stimulate industry, it would have been brought down early in the session in the regular way, in the public works estimates, which would have insured proper control of the expenditure by this House of Commons. It is now almost July 1. As the minister knows better than anyone else, it takes a certain time to prepare plans for public works. Tenders have to be called for, or ought to be called for, and that takes more time. As a result we will be fairly well along in the year before this particular program, which is intended to take the place of the dole, will be in operation. What has been happening in the meantime according to the government? The government has been telling us that in the meantime conditions have so improved we do not need the amounts formerly required as assistance for the unemployed. They have told the different provinces that after the middle of July they will discontinue giving any more moneys for direct relief, that those moneys are not needed, and that the fifteenth of July will see the end of any necessity of the kind. They are seeking to persuade the public mind to the idea that under this administration conditions are improving.

Let me pause for a moment to ask this question: How are they improving? The government has already spent out between one and two hundred millions of public money to improve conditions, all taxes of the people. I suppose when, during an election campaign, reference is made to this public works program the situation of trade under it will be pointed to as further evidence of great improvement. However, the fact which will not be stated by the government is that it all is fictitious improvement where the taxes of the people are being spent to effect that end, and where the device of inflation is being resorted to so as to make it appear that prosperity is greater than that which actually obtains. In other words, the measure is just one more of the many measures the government has brought forward this session devised for election purposes and containing provisions intended, if possible, to beguile the innocent electors into believing that in some way or another the conditions of the country have been improved. The fact is that it is at his expense and from his taxes that this temporary stimulation is made possible.

Another feature which to my mind makes clear that this bill is intended as an election measure is the one pointed out by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) and other hon. members, namely that the bill does away with the necessity of calling for tenders by public advertisement before public works of an estimated cost of $5,000 or over are to be commenced. I can see no defence whatever for inserting in the present measure a section which runs distinctly counter to the provisions of the Public Works Act. I believe this feature is important enough, to justify me in placing on record the section in the Public Works Act to which I have referred. In order that the house and country may have before it the law respecting the construction of all public works, and the law which has governed during the last four years, I shall quote section 36 of chapter 166 of the revised statutes of 1927. Ever since this government took office we have been passing emergency measures, but, until this measure was introduced, one designed for the purposes of a general election, no attempt has been made to get away from the principle of securing tenders by public advertisement. Section 36 to which I have made reference is as follows:

> Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works, except in cases—
> (a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest; or
> (b) in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department; or
> (c) where the estimated cost of the work is less than five thousand dollars and it appears to the minister in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

That has been the law of the land for many years. It has governed the expenditure of all federal public moneys, and it is a law which should not be departed from. The minister cannot urge that these are emergent measures, because, if they were emergent, he should and would have brought in his bill six months ago. The fact that he has waited until the present time to bring it in makes it quite clear that there is not a single item in the program which is in the nature of an emergency measure, and for that reason he is not in any way justified in setting aside the clause in the Public Works Act to which I have referred. If the minister leaves in the present measure that clause allowing the government to evade its obligations under the statute with respect to calling for tenders by public advertisement, I say this action will be prima facie evidence of the government's desire to use this particular program for political purposes rather than for the purpose of assisting the unemployed. It will be for the purpose of enabling it to give contracts to political friends of the government, to people who the government believes will at the time of a general election best serve its interests. I do not think that sort of procedure ought for one moment to be countenanced by this parliament. While some hon. gentlemen opposite may entertain a different view, I am inclined to believe that in their heart of hearts the majority of them agree with me in the view that any attempt to depart from provisions in a statute which have been framed with a view to protecting the public treasury is unwarranted, unquestionably when such action is taken obviously for election purposes. In the long run it will do more harm to them than to anybody else. I say that is a procedure which in this parliament we should not countenance. Let the minister continue to deal with these contracts as his department has been and is dealing with other contracts.

There is even less excuse for the government bringing down the present measure in the form they have, because many months ago their attention was drawn to the desirability of adhering strictly to the general rule which gives this house control over expenditures for public works, and which obliges the carrying out of public works contracts in accordance with statutory provisions. When I saw mention in the speech from the throne of the intention of the government to have a public works program, I was prompted in what I said in the debate on the address to refer to the matter. The following words, directed to the Prime Minister, are to be found at page 39 of Hansard:

> If large sums of public moneys are to be spent for public works, this House of Commons should have the same control over these expenditures as it has over the ordinary expenditures of government. We should not be asked to vote to the government a lump sum of money for the purpose of carrying out public works wherever and whenever it pleases during any portion of this year or next.

That surely was a direct intimation to the government that adoption of the course they are now attempting to pursue would not be accepted by the opposition, and would quite properly be regarded with suspicion. Then I added:

> If we need public buildings to serve public purposes they ought to be voted in the estimates in the way in which we are accustomed to vote the items for the various public works.

The Prime Minister gave an evasive answer to that proposition. I noticed at the time of his speaking that his remarks were evasive, and I thought—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does not my right hon. friend think that the schedule to this bill meets the requirements as to details which he has mentioned?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, not at all. I am glad the minister has raised that question. When we come to the schedule, is the minister going to permit us to pass on each of the items, to move to strike them out, or to add others, if we wish to add others? It is understood we are at liberty to do that?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would not say "to add others" because that involves an expenditure on the part of the government. As my right hon. friend knows, nobody has the right to do that, except the government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister states then, that we are at liberty to vote on the individual items, does he?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Deal with them just as we deal with the estimates. That is what we are proposing to do.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad to have that assurance. We are not however in a position to move an amendment, as we would be on a motion to go into supply; we cannot, for example, present a want of confidence motion. The form in which the bill is prepared presents the items in the form of a schedule, and there is a clause in the bill which, if carried, would adopt the schedule as it stands, without any change one way or another. However, in view of what the minister has said, when we come to that particular section of the bill he will probably allow the section to stand until the schedule has been gone over clause by clause, and then we may adopt the schedule after that. So much to the good.

May I point out to the minister the effect of this? Looking at the schedule the work falls into two broad classes. There are public works which the minister says are necessary. Well, if they are necessary, why were they not put in the public works estimates and treated as estimates of public works? There is the other class of item, of works largely in the nature of repairs, the renovating of wharves, buildings and the like. Those are part of the regular expenditure on public works, and the effect of bringing down a measure in this form is simply this: The government in announcing its total expenditures to the country, as an evidence of economy points to the total expenditure amounting to such and such a figure, omitting altogether what is voted for public works under this bill which claims to be for the purposes of the relief of unemployment. But there are forty million dollars in this measure being credited to the relief of unemployment which really ought to be made a part of the total expenditure of the administration, and which ought to be put down as part of the regular expenditures of the government for this year.

May I say to the minister, since he has said that we are to all intents and purposes dealing with this matter as we deal with the ordinary public works, that I hope he may see his way to carrying out that point of view to the extent of complying with the requirement of the Public Works Act, which requires that wherever any of these amounts to be spent exceeds $5,000 the work should be awarded by tender, and the tenders publicly advertised.

The next earmark of the general election purposes of this measure is the obviously unfair allotment of work, and expenditures for public works, the manner in which the work has been distributed. That has been referred to by several of those who have spoken this afternoon. A moment ago one of the members from the province of Quebec pointed out how carefully these public works had been allotted to certain constituencies which are at the present time represented by hon. gentlemen opposite, and how constituencies represented by hon. members on this side of the house had been completely left out.

I am a member of this house for one of the constituencies in the province of Saskatchewan, and I cannot perhaps better illustrate the unfairness of this measure as one which has to do with the relief of unemployment than by drawing attention to just what is taking place with respect to the province of Saskatchewan and contrasting it with what is being done for the adjoining province.

I have gone carefully through the schedule, and I find that out of all the items there are only two which relate to the province of Saskatchewan, one which my hon. friend the member for Regina has succeeded in getting for his own constituency, and the other for the constituency of another hon. member on the other side of the house. With the exception of those two items, one for Outlook Saskatchewan, for a bridge across the south Saskatchewan river, $275,000, in the constituency I think of the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks), and the other an item of $400,000 for a new public building at Regina, there is nothing for the province of Saskatchewan, though as we have heard over and over again from the members for Saskatchewan on the other side of the house as well as on this, no province has been in so great need of relief as that particular province.

May I draw attention to a further circumstance. Let us see what has happened in the adjoining province of Alberta. I find that one-half of the total amount that is voted for the province of Alberta goes to the constituency represented by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). There are three items, all of which go into the Prime Minister's own constituency:

Banff, Alberta, post office and administration building, $150,000;
Bow River, Alberta, retaining wall, $150,000;
Calgary, Alberta, barracks for permanent force, $1,200,000;

There is a total altogether of $1,500,000 for the seat of the right hon. the Prime Minister.

Now how has the Prime Minister dealt with the leader of the opposition? For the constituency of Prince Albert which I represent, there is not a single dollar. I really do not think I need say much more than that to illustrate what I am alleging about the political purposes of this whole schedule. It reminds me of what took place in the concluding week of the last session of parliament when we had before us a redistribution bill, and the constituency which the Prime Minister represents was so readjusted as to make his position more secure, while the constituency which I represent, Prince Albert, was so gerrymandered as to remove from it those parts which gave the largest Liberal majorities in previous elections.

That is the kind of fair play and decency that we who are members of this house receive at this present time, when moneys are being voted for the alleged purposes of helping those in need of employment and to serve not only a patriotic but a humane end. Under the guise of those laudable purposes we are having as a result of this particular legislation a piece of diabolical political trickery. I could point out also where in previous estimates very large sums in addition have been voted for the Prime Minister's constituency.

Mr. CASGRAIN: For the Calgary post office in 1930.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am the more surprised because the Prime Minister cannot have been ignorant of the needs of the Prince Albert constituency for much in the way of very necessary public works. I have in my hand a program with respect to public works which was communicated by the mayor of Prince Albert in September, 1933, to Premier Anderson of Saskatchewan, setting forth the projects that he regarded as necessary. The mayor of Prince Albert at the time was, and I believe still is, a member of the Conservative party, but I doubt if he will be after he sees this bill. We all know too that Premier Anderson was interested at that time in the well-being of the Conservative party. In the communication from the mayor of Prince Albert the projects which are pointed to as being necessary are such all important and necessary projects as hydro development on the Saskatchewan river; highways and colonization roads; the clearing of lands for cultivation; grade separation in Prince Albert city; an interior storage elevator in Prince Albert city; reforestation in Prince Albert district; and the development of Prince Albert national park.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Those are all projects that were known to the government of the day here just as they were known to the government of Saskatchewan, because they were brought to the attention of the administration here, and the administration has had them before them in preparing this program. May I draw attention to a telegram which I received only this morning, from L. W. Andrew, city clerk of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan? It refers to a resolution, not from the members of a politcal party, but passed by the city council of Prince Albert. The telegram reads as follows:

Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Ottawa, Ont.

A resolution passed at a meeting of the city council on this date is as follows:

Whereas there has been and still exists a very serious unemployment situation in the city of Prince Albert and no immediate prospect of improvement, and whereas the city council of the city of Prince Albert feel that a national works program should be undertaken in this city to alleviate present conditions where fifteen per cent of our population are on direct relief at the present time, the city council therefore strongly urges that the following projects be undertaken by the dominion government: the construction of a union depot, grade separation, and airport and air harbour.

L. W. Andrew,
City Clerk.

That message was not sent by the city council of Prince Albert without the citizens seeing the necessity for these particular projects, and feeling that they have a right as taxpayers to share with other constituencies in this country in the much needed improvements being undertaken, amongst other reasons, for relief purposes. Unless the members of the government are prepared to meet some of these necessary obligations in constituencies other than those represented by themselves and their following, I tell the government that they will find they will have to pay a heavy price for that kind of partisanship in dealing with public moneys appropriated for relief purposes. I notice the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) is in his seat. I know his interest in the Prince Albert national park. While this park is in the constituency of Prince Albert it is recognized throughout Saskatchewan as being an enterprise which belongs to the entire province and which serves a need of the entire province. From that point of view the hon. member for Saskatoon has been very strong in his advocacy of the purposes of the park. I have always joined with him, as he has with me, in the support of that point of view. I hold in my hand a communication, not from Prince Albert but from Saskatoon. This is from the Saskatoon board of trade and is dated May 29, 1934. It is addressed to the Hon. T. G. Murphy, Minister of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada, and is signed by Mr. J. H. Holmes, commissioner. I again remind hon. members that this communication comes from a board of trade, this time the Saskatoon board of trade. It is as follows:

I am instructed to advise you that the Saskatoon board of trade has unanimously supported the resolution of the Prince Albert board with reference to development in the Prince Albert national park, which speaks for itself and of which I understand you have the original.

The exceedingly small appropriation for Saskatchewan is creating some comment in the province, where the park is regarded by the public generally as its one and only natural playground. Because of this, and because of the newness of the park, there are many developments essential before it can be fairly advertised to the tourist traffic as a holiday resort at all. The small appropriation reported in Hansard, scarcely sufficient for maintenance expenses when compared with funds provided for other federal parks, seems entirely out of all reasonable proportion.

The unanimous request of our board members is that in reviewing the proposed estimates for the various national parks in Canada, you will reconsider the Saskatchewan allotment, and with the knowledge that the amount now set down is entirely inadequate and out of all proportion to the allotments for the other prairie provinces, you will endeavour to provide in the supplementary estimates an amount requisite for the continuance of the developments already projected in this province.

I think that is a most reasonable request to be made by a representative body such as the Saskatoon board of trade or the Prince Albert board of trade. There is no institution in the province which is of greater service to the people than the Prince Albert national park.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I suppose the right hon. gentleman is aware that there is an item of $2,000,000 under the Department of the Interior which can be used for park development. I suggest that he discuss this matter with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am aware that there is an amount which may be used, but I am not aware that it is going to be used. When we take up that item I hope the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) will assure us that he is going to see that out of this amount there is set apart a considerable portion for the needs of the Prince Albert national park. I see the minister is in his seat and I ask him kindly to be prepared to tell us when we are discussing the schedule what proportion of the amount appropriated for national parks will be allotted to the Prince Albert national park.

There are as I have said, but two items in the whole program allotted to the province of Saskatchewan. As hon. members know quite well there has been no province that has suffered as Saskatchewan has suffered from many causes of distress. There has been no province in which there is greater need for relief, and I am amazed that the government should have brought down this schedule in this form with such vast amounts being allotted to some of the other provinces and so little for Saskatchewan which needs help so greatly.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They have had about $40,000,000 in the last three years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says that they have had about $40,000,000 but according to what hon. gentlemen on the other side have told us, all the money spent in Saskatchewan was needed because of starvation conditions facing the farmers whose crops had been completely destroyed.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And to take care of their debts.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not going to argue the point. All the provinces have been receiving much from the administration in the way of relief but no province has required relief as much as Saskatchewan. I think it is an extraordinary circumstance that in this measure there should be only this small provision for that great province. I might say a great deal more but I shall conclude by reminding the house that after all this is the money of the taxpayers of Canada regardless altogether of their political affiliations. They are all helping to pay the bill and they should be entitled to an equal share of any value that is to come from this public expenditure.

The Minister of Public Works still has a chance to redeem the situation a little, and when we get into committee on the bill, I hope he will permit us to strike out that clause which frees him from the obligation of calling for public tenders in connection with any contracts to be awarded. I hope to that extent at least he will give us assurance that this money is not going to be used exclusively to serve political ends, rather than the ends of humanity and the needs of the country. It is rather significant that after the government has been in office for four years and is, I believe, on the eve of an appeal to the people, we have had to wait until the moment at which the government is trying to save itself to get some of the relief in the form of work which long ago should have been given to help to save the people.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this motion and urge the minister to reconsider in a general way some of the items on the program. I notice that of the $40,000,000 involved, about $32,000,000 is for public buildings. Provision is made for the spending of $1,200,000 for barracks for the permanent forces in Calgary. I have no doubt that the situation has been canvassed but I make an appeal to the minister and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in particular, to consider changing that and some of the other items even at this late date and substituting for them items which I think will add much more to the general welfare of the people of the province and of the country. I hope that they will do something in the way of water conservation in the dried out districts and provide for the construction of sewage disposal plants in our larger cities and towns.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We do those things for ourselves.

Mr. GERSHAW: The ranching industry is one of the great primary industries of this country. At the present time these ranchers are on the verge of ruin largely because of their inability to get a sufficient water supply. I should hope that some of this money could be spent in these ranching districts so as to conserve water which flows so freely in the spring and provide water holes, so that the stock at various places can be supplied through the summer months. Such a policy would give work in the rural districts where it is very much needed. It would help to assure the permanency of that great industry and it would benefit a large number of people who will derive little benefit from the buildings which this measure proposes to construct. In addition to that, many of the cities and towns are situated upon the rivers and waterways. The sewage from these urban districts usually finds its way into the water, often with very little treatment, and communities further down stream have their health endangered because of the insufficiency of treatment which this sewage receives, because the purification by air is not sufficient to make it safe for human supply. I wish therefore to urge the minister to reconsider some of these items and make provision for the two projects I have mentioned, I realize that he will say this is a provincial or municipal responsibility, but after all the money is paid in taxation by the same people. The distinction between dominion and provincial responsibilities is not so clear at the present time, and I should say that these things I have mentioned would really add to the wealth of the country. In the case of water holes, they would be productive and would be an aid to industry. And in building for the future, surely it is up to us to consider the human aspect and to construct those works which would be of the greatest general benefit.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous leave of the house may I request you to return to routine proceedings to enable me to present the tenth and eleventh reports of the select standing committee on banking and commerce. This matter affects two private bills that were before the committee this afternoon.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion (Mr. Hanson) agreed to.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

DUPLATE SAFETY GLASS COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 12, respecting patents on certain inventions of which Duplate Safety Glass Company of Canada, Limited, is entitled to benefit—Mr. Lawson—Mr. Stirling in the chair.

On section 1—Power of commissioner of patents to grant patents.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to certain particulars in reference to the bill itself and certain principles which I suggest should be followed by the committee in regard to a grave matter of public policy. The bill is entitled:

An act respecting patents on certain inventions of which Duplate Safety Glass Company of Canada, Limited, is entitled to the benefit.

I think I can show conclusively to the committee that the Duplate Safety Glass Company of Canada, Limited, is not entitled by law or by practice to the benefit of the several inventions which are covered by the patents the numbers of which as granted in Great Britain are set forth in the preamble. These several improvements with regard to the manufacture of glass were the inventions of certain inventors in France. In cooperation with the inventors in France two French companies at successive dates applied for and obtained fifteen patents covering certain processes in glass manufacture. Under a convention which was signed by Canada at The Hague on November 6, 1925, and ratified by Canada on May 1, 1928, it is provided in article 4 that any person who has deposited an application for a patent in any one of the contracting countries shall enjoy, for the purpose of deposit in other countries, and reserving the rights of third parties, a right of priority for the period of twelve months from the date of the deposit of the first application in any country which is a party to the convention. That is to say that within twelve months from the date on which an application was made in France for a patent the French inventor was entitled to apply in other countries which were parties to The Hague Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property for a patent in that country covering the same invention.

The French companies proceeded to apply for patents in the United States and patents in Great Britain. Although the United States is not a party to the union or to the convention, congress has provided by law that a foreign patentee, that is the inventor who obtains a foreign patent, may apply at the patent office at Washington for a patent covering the same invention. But in the United States the application must be made, as under the convention, within a term of twelve months; no further extension of time is allowed, and if the application is not made at Washington within twelve months then the invention falls into the public domain and is open to public use throughout that country. In Great Britain the same rule applies, because England is a party to this convention. If an application is made in France for a patent, then within twelve months from the date of the filing of the application in France the applicants must make application at the patent office in London if they desire to obtain a patent there.

It has been held by the exchequer court in a decision by Mr. Justice Audette in 1924 that in Canada an application may be made under the convention within twelve months from the date of the application in the foreign country —and I include Great Britain as a foreign country in that respect—but that under another subsection it is held that an application may be made here within two years from the date of the grant of the patent in the foreign country. That rule has been followed by the Canadian patent office. By that rule, allowing twelve months under the convention, and allowing two more years under the decision of Mr. Justice Audette, applicants have practically three years from the date of the filing of the application in the foreign country within which to apply in Canada. Under that rule for a number of these patents the time within which application may be made in Canada has not yet expired. I shall refer to them by the English numbers, because although I have investigated and have the French numbers, the English numbers are placed in this bill, I think for purpose of camouflage and not otherwise. Patent No. 376219 still has under our law until October 11, 1934, within which application for a patent may be made at the patent office in Canada. Respecting patent No. 385843 the inventor has until January 5, 1935, to apply for a patent in Canada; respecting patent No. 393491 until December 31, 1934, within which to file an application for a patent in Canada; respecting patent No. 389314 until March 16, 1935, to apply for a patent in Canada. I therefore object to the house passing a special act providing for the granting of patents in Canada which are similar to foreign patents, when the applicants already have ample time within which to apply to the patent office in the ordinary way and have their applications investigated and decided upon by the commissioner. If the commissioner gives an erroneous decision then they can appeal from the commissioner to the Exchequer Court of Canada. I think as a matter of public policy we should not encourage applications to parliament for special acts providing for patents when the ordinary machinery of the patent act is still open to the applicants.

Those conditions, however, do not apply to the eleven other patents which are mentioned in the preamble to this bill. These eleven patents never have had force or effect in Canada. There is no right, title or interest outstanding in Canada with respect to those patents, to which any person in Canada or elsewhere can claim any beneficial interest whatsoever. They are patents which are, to use the ordinary phrase, in the public domain, and the inventions which they cover may be used by any manufacturer in Canada; they may be bought and sold in Canada without the payment of any royalty. The patent rights have never existed in Canada, and therefore no beneficial interest thereunder can be deemed to exist.

Patent No. 310838 was applied for in France on May 1, 1928. The applicants had twelve months within which to make applications in other countries under the convention, so the last day for an application for patent priority in Canada or in any other country of the union was May 1, 1929. The applicants applied at Washington within the twelve month period and obtained a patent. They filed an application in Great Britain on March 18, 1929, and the patent was granted which is referred to by its English number in this preamble. Patent No. 340108 was applied for in France on March 13, 1929, and there were twelve months in which to obtain priority in Canada, which would be until March 13, 1930. Within that twelve month period the applicants applied both at Washington and in Great Britain, the application in Great Britain being dated November 27, 1929. So I might go through the list of these patent applications, because we have taken the trouble to examine the English patents and, so far as our records disclose them, the facts with regard to the French patents and the dates on which they were applied for.

This has been the result: allowing the applicants the twelve months from the date of the application in France; then allowing them what is not allowed by any other country of the union, but only allowed in Canada by reason of a decision given in 1924 by our exchequer court and a subsequent change in the act to conform to that decision, that is to say, one year from the date of the application, because usually a year elapses before the patent is granted, and also allowing them two more years from the granting of the patent in France or in England, wherever it was granted first, these eleven patents to which I have referred are out-dated in one case by five years and in other cases two years and nearly two years. So the time for each application in Canada has long since expired, and our act, under the interpretation which has been given to it, grants more widely extended privileges as to time than any other act to which I have been able to obtain access.

No application has been made to our patent office with regard to any of these patents. I have explained that applications may yet be made with regard to four of them, and my contention is that these patents should not be granted by a special act. Allowing the two extra years the time expired, for one of them at least five years ago; for another the time expired more than two years ago. In connection with others the time expired approximately two years or more ago. I have the dates, which have been worked out and with regard to which I need not trouble the house.

Though these patents never had existence in Canada, and though the time had elapsed within which applications could be made in Canada, on November 21, 1933, the Duplate Safety Glass Company allege that they entered into a contract with Pilkington Brothers, of Liverpool, who are alleged to have previously acquired the English patents. The house is well aware that the English patent gave Pilkingtons no rights whatever in Canada; Canada happens to be an independent jurisdiction, in respect of patents. When the Duplate Safety Glass Company entered into a contract with Pilkingtons I am advised, and I think I can state it with absolute accuracy, that the Duplate Safety Glass Company were fully informed that there were no patent rights outstanding in Canada, and that, with regard to the eleven patents mentioned, the time had elapsed for the filing of applications here, including the first twelve months from the date of the application and the second term of two years from the date of the granting of the first patent. There was no deception whatever on the part of Pilkington Brothers. They disclosed all the facts to the Canadian company which is now promoting this bill. So that when the Canadian company applies to the House of Commons for this special legislation it is applying for a grant of a specific monopoly with regard to eleven inventions for the manufacture of glass, which inventions are now the property of the public. The main invention for five years, and the subsidiary inventions for terms of three and two years, may now be used at will by any manufacturer in Canada.

I suggest to hon. members that this is a case in which parliament should not intervene to create a private monopoly of the nature and extent of the one herewith proposed. As a matter of public policy I think this house should refuse to enact the measure. It is not an easy task for a minister of the crown to administer an office such as the patent office. It is fortunate that whenever the commissioner acting under the direction of the minister is in error, there is an appeal to the Exchequer Court of Canada in order that the remedy may be given by judicial decision. But that office is open to very grave temptations. I believe that the men now administering the office, although the temptations are great, are perfectly honest in their administration of it. But the applicants for this private monopoly, which it is now sought to create and establish in Canada by means of these patents, might just as well ask from the treasury of Canada a grant of $150,000 or more, because if these patents, which are proposed to be established in Canada, were put up to public auction one might obtain very large cash considerations for them. However, they are not for sale. They are the property of all those who are manufacturing in Canada at the present time. But if this bill is enacted the Duplate Safety Glass Company of Canada, Limited, will have a monopoly of the manufacture under these fifteen patents. It will not only have a monopoly of the manufacturing, but if these glasswares are imported from the United States or France or England, where they are being manufactured, the importer will not only have to pay the customs duties imposed by parliament for revenue and for the protection of Canadian industry, but such importer can be compelled by the Duplate Company to pay a special royalty on every pound of glass of that nature imported into Canada. This glass is becoming of great importance in the automobile and elevator trades because it does not splinter as does ordinary glass, and under the suggested legislation the Duplate Glass Company may demand a royalty from every person in Canada who uses this glass either when imported from abroad, or made by any other manufacturer in Canada except the concern which is granted this special monopoly.

These being the facts I ask the House of Commons to consider whether or not, as a matter of public policy, this House of Commons should pass the bill. It is granting by legislative enactment a private monopoly covering fifteen inventions, a monopoly which would be subversive of the interests of all Canadian manufacturers of the same or similar products who are now entitled, of their own right, to import, to make or to use these products without payment of any licence fee or royalty to any person or company in any part of the world. I contend that the enactment of the proposed bill will enable the promoters, without any shadow of right or claim, except such as they may acquire under this special enactment, to demand and receive in Canada from importers, manufacturers and users, licence fees or royalties during the term of sixteen to eighteen years, to which they have no right, title or interest whatsoever. I contend that the creation of such a private monopoly by special legislation invariably tends prejudicially to affect and injure the industrial and commercial interests of Canada, and to impair the effective administration of the patent office which happens for the time being to be under my supervision, as Secretary of State, and which I am bound, by my oath of office, properly to administer. I do not wish to use too strong terms, but it seems to me that the passage of this measure would be a prostitution of the parliamentary powers conferred upon this parliament to promote the interests of a private monopoly which should not be created or allowed to exist.

Mr. LAWSON: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak on the bill before any final disposition is made. The bill in question, of which I am the sponsor in this house, seeks to extend the time under which applications for certain patents may be made. The Duplate Safety Glass Company of Canada, Limited, entered into a contract with the holders of certain French and British patents to have the right to manufacture the glass in this country and to have the exclusive right, as they then thought, under protective patents.

The glass is an invention of such a nature that upon being struck, instead of shattering and flying into pieces which may cut one or cause injury, it merely crumbles. In the private bills committee we had several demonstrations as to its usefulness.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it covered by four or eleven patents?

Mr. LAWSON: I understand that the complete process is covered by eleven patents, but I am unable to state to the house just to what extent each patent applies.

This application was made because of an error on the part of two patent attorneys. The inventor instructed a French patent attorney to take out patents in France, the United Kingdom and other countries, and the French patent attorney wrote a firm of patent attorneys in New York city and instructed them to take out patents in America. Unfortunately the attorneys in Washington or New York concluded that apparently America meant the United States, whereas the French attorney intended the whole of the North American continent, and notwithstanding the statement of the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) that he was informed at the time the deal was made the Duplate Glass Company had knowledge of the fact that these patents did not exist so far as Canadian patents are concerned, I can only say that the statement was made in the private bills committee that it was during the course of closing the deal for the acquisition of the Canadian patent rights that the Canadian company discovered that there were no Canadian patents, and hence this application.

The Secretary of State said that under the law where a patent application is refused by the patent commissioner an appeal may be had to the exchequer court, but certainly it will be obvious to all the legal members of this house that such an appeal can deal only with a question of law. If an inventor made application for a patent and the commissioner held, for example, that the invention was not patentable, then we might have an appeal, but obviously when the time has expired within which you can make application there is no ground upon which one can appeal to the exchequer court, and the purpose of this bill is to extend for a period of three months from its passing the time within which that application for a patent may be made to the commissioner of patents.

Again there is considerable dispute on an interpretation of the act and the decision of the exchequer court to which the Secretary of State referred, as to just how long overdue this application is. I think I need not enter into any quarrel in that regard because, irrespective of that, the principle of the bill is the same.

As to the four patents in respect of which it is alleged by the Secretary of State that they are still within time to apply, I have investigated the matter and I find that to be correct and when I conclude I shall move an amendment to strike out those patent numbers from the preamble to the bill, which will then allow the applicants to make their application in the ordinary way to the patent office.

Prior to the discovery by the Duplate Glass Company that they were not protected with Canadian patents they had made an investment in machinery and plant for the purpose of manufacturing this glass in Canada of some $20,000. Needless to say, when they discovered the difficulty they ceased to continue a contemplated investment of $100,000 but have been manufacturing small quantities of this glass with the plant which they have available.

I should next like to point out to the house that there is nothing particularly new in a bill of this kind being brought before parliament. Before the private bills committee seven precedents were cited. It is within my recollection since I have been a member of this house that we have had such bills before the committee, and on each occasion the question for decision by the committee and by parliament has been whether or not in the particular circumstances of each case an extension of time should be granted.

The Secretary of State lays some emphasis on the question of monopoly. I will quite freely admit that if this bill is passed, and if in pursuance of this extension of time the commissioner of patents ultimately grants a patent, then it does create a monopoly, but it only creates the same kind of monopoly as is created in every single instance in which a patent is granted by this country in respect of any invention.

[Mr. Lawson.]

Will such a monopoly be injurious? At the present time this glass is not manufactured in this country except to the limited extent of the investment of the Duplate Glass Company. It is imported from the United States and France, and even with the limited extent to which it is manufactured by the Duplate Glass Company at the present time the price at which it is offered for sale in this country is one-third less than the imported article. I am assured by the parties interested in procuring this bill that if they are allowed to have some protection in connection with this matter they will make an investment of somewhere between $100,000 and $150,000; that they will employ three or four times the number of men who are now employed and that the glass will be on sale and available to the Canadian public at one-half the price they were paying for the imported article. Again I ask, will monopoly injure? I suppose the largest plate glass company in this country is the Consolidated Plate Glass Company. It was pointed out to me by the manager of that company that there is not a sufficient demand in Canada to support two manufacturers of safety glass. Consequently, although as alleged by the Secretary of State the right to make this glass has fallen into the public domain, nevertheless no one has sought to make it during these years that it has been in the public domain, and I fail to see how by giving protection to a firm that is now willing to make it, provide employment, and sell the article to the Canadian public at a price far less than the imported article, we are going to create a monopoly whch will be injurious to this country or how we are going to prostitute the powers of parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, for fifteen years or more I have voiced opposition in the house to bills of this character. It is my conviction that during many years past a number of such bills as this have been passed and patent rights established which, if all the facts had been fully understood by the members of the house and the public generally, would never have been granted.

I think it should be borne in mind that the basic reason for the granting of a patent by the state is to preserve to some talented individual the right of his discovery. It is assumed that a discovery of some new and useful device or some scientific discovery or formula which will be of benefit to humanity may be made by an individual who is himself perhaps unable financially to promote the manufacture or production of the article, and that therefore there should be preserved to him some of the winnings, shall I say, that come from the discovery which he has made. And so, through all the years and I think in all countries, the idea of granting a patent is to preserve to the individual the benefits that go with the discovery that has been made. As time has passed and as industrial development has become more complex and on a much wider scale than was perhaps true of years ago, the value of patents has become less according to the ability of the individual to press forward the merits of his discovery or to bring it into general use. I think it has become increasingly difficult for individuals to get the full merit of patents. Very often large corporations will purchase for a comparatively small figure the rights of a patent, put it away and never use it because the new device is such that it might conflict with some article already on the market and well established in their industry. In dealing with matters of patents I think the major duty of parliament is to preserve the interests of the individual primarily responsible.

The article here dealt with is a certain type of glass, a new type of glass. This is something which is very generally used and which is needed or required by a large number of industries. It is alleged that a patent attorney in France made an error or committed an oversight when dealing with a patent attorney in New York and instructing him to take out patents in America. Because the patent attorney in New York did not safeguard the interests of his clients in Canada, it is argued that this group of individuals have a right to come to parliament and ask for the special legislation now before us. It is very difficult for me to believe that a patent attorney in France would be so ignorant of what is necessary to establish his rights in various parts of the world that he would overlook a place like Canada. I am quite certain that a patent attorney in Canada would not advise an attorney in Paris to look after his interests in other European countries, and then pay no more attention to the matter. I am quite certain that when the patent attorney in Paris got his returns from the patent attorney in New York he at once recognized that he had received protection in but one country, namely, the United States. In addition to the United States, there is Mexico on the one side and Canada on the other. It is difficult to conceive that such an error could be made, and it certainly does not appeal to me as the reason why parliament should pass a special act to vest this patent in the applicants.

The suggestion is made that the granting of this patent will possibly result in the establishment of a new industry in Canada. I certainly would like to see a new industry established in Canada but I cannot conceive why the failure to obtain these patent rights would deter a bona fide industry from entering upon the manufacture of this class of glass. I am not at the moment familiar with the rate of duty upon this article, but that rate would be the same whether or not there was a patent granted. So far as the particular industry is concerned, the protection would be precisely what the tariff provides. In my opinion there is no argument in that contention. The only additional advantage to the applicants would be to obtain the exclusive right of manufacture in Canada, and that exclusive right of manufacture would mean the charging of royalties to those who desired either to make or use this glass. The advantage to anyone who wished to manufacture this glass in Canada of securing this special bill authorizing the issue of this patent would be that he could charge higher prices for the glass because he had a patent. I cannot follow my hon. friend in his argument in that respect. My hon. friend said that it would likely result in the cutting of the price of glass, but here again I find it difficult to follow him because the only difference in the price of glass would be the amount of the royalty, and that could be cut only if the individual securing the patent rights were to make the price of glass so much higher than otherwise would be necessary.

For a great many years I have raised my voice in this house in opposition to this class of bill. I feel it is unwise and very often improvident for this house to give these special rights. Very often we are asked to revive a patent which has completely expired. If I remember rightly, a patent right expires in Canada after eighteen years, which is two years longer than in Great Britain. We are frequently asked to extend this right because an article has not been manufactured or for some other reason. I think parliament should be exceedingly careful in these matters. I reiterate what I said a moment ago. In the first place, the object of a patent right is to protect the interests of the individual who makes the discovery. The assumption is that if the individual does not take advantage of his patent right within a reasonable time—I have forgotten the exact time, but I think it is two or three years—the right then expires and it becomes, as the Secretary of State (Mr Cahan) has so well defined, part of the public domain. I am sorry that I must differ with the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill but I take very strong exception to its passage. I do this, first, because of the general principles which I have indicated, and, second, because of the specific reasons which are inherent to this particular case, and which have been so ably put forward by the Secretary of State. I regret to say that as far as I am concerned I shall have to express my opposition to the bill by voting against it.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, for once at least I find myself in hearty agreement with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). He has outlined the reasons why patents are granted. I am heartily in sympathy with the principle of the granting of patents to men who have invented something useful for humanity. I think they should be allowed to reap in a large measure the benefit of their skill and industry. I am not nearly so favourably inclined to the large companies which secure patents from individuals. I think it is a well known fact that many clever inventors have lost almost the entire fruits of their inventions because they have been grabbed up by some of the big moneyed powers. When we come to deal with large companies or corporations I am not so leniently inclined as I would be towards a private individual. It is true that parliament on a number of occasions has passed special bills reviving patents which have been allowed to lapse because of some slight error. I have been in the private bills committee now for a number of years and on several occasions we have had such questions to deal with. But it seems to me that the circumstances surrounding this particular patent are very different from anything we have had before us up to the present time. I can scarcely imagine, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has pointed out, that the attorney in Paris would be so completely ignorant as has been suggested he might be. I know that in regard to many of the cases that have come before us I have had some hesitation in voting for an extension of the time during which a patent might be acquired; for in some instances it did seem that the attorney who had the matter in hand had not taken action, or had failed to take action until it seemed desirable in the interests of those for whom he was asking that action should be taken. However, I shall not go into that matter at any length.

Undoubtedly this particular patent is a matter of great interest to the Canadian people. The granting of a monopoly to this company for a period of sixteen or eighteen years would unquestionably place a heavy impost upon the Canadian people. The hon. member who is promoting the bill has made an argument which it seems to me will scarcely stand investigation. He tells us that the company is now manufacturing in small quantities and selling that glass at half the price of the imported article. Well, if it is doing that and can do that, why can it not continue to do it? The company has the protection of the duty, but it wants not only the protection which undoubtedly our friends on the other side would be willing to accord it, though we will not enter into that question at the moment, but also the right to collect a royalty on all glass imported. I ask any hon. gentleman in this house, does he for a moment seriously believe that a company which is now manufacturing this glass at half the price of the imported article will continue to manufacture it and sell it at that price when it has the exclusive monopoly, when it has not only the protection accorded by the tariff but also the right to collect royalties? For my part I certainly intend to oppose the bill.

Mr. CHEVRIER: For the same reasons which in the private bills committee warranted my voting against the bill, I will vote against it now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. CAHAN: I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Mr. Cahan moves that the committee rise. Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Those in favour of the motion will say aye.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Those opposed will say nay.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): In my opinion the nays have it. Shall clause 1 carry?

An hon. MEMBER: No; take a vote.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I think—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Out of order.

Mr. BENNETT: He is not out of order.

An hon. MEMBER: Clause 1 is carried.

Mr. BENNETT: No; clause 1 is not carried. The motion is that the committee rise.

Mr. SANDERSON: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, did you not declare that clause 1 was carried?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): No.

Mr. SANDERSON: With all due respect to you, Mr. Chairman, what did you say?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): The motion of Mr. Cahan was not carried. The question is now on clause 1.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CAHAN: Clause 1 provides:

If within three months from the passing of this act application is made to the commissioner of patents for the grant of patents on the inventions described in the British patents hereinbefore referred to, the commissioner shall consider and act upon the said applications notwithstanding any limitation of time contained in section 7 of the Patent Act.

In the ordinary course an application must be made by an inventor or by the assignee of the inventor. This provision is so broad that it allows any person whatsoever to make an application for the granting of this patent, without specifying that it must be made either by the inventor or by the assignee of the inventor, and on that ground I think the clause is altogether too wide, although I am opposed to it on general grounds as well.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely this committee realizes the seriousness of the situation with respect to this matter. This is not an ordinary transaction at all but a matter in which parliament is asked to do something it has sometimes done on previous occasions, very much to the detriment of the public interest. I have opposed these matters so frequently that I abandoned the idea of endeavouring to do so, because the committee had usually been well canvassed and commitments had been made in a friendly way without a realization of what was involved. In this matter a tremendous principle is involved. We are asked to amend the Patent Act of Canada so as to provide that a special privilege shall be conferred by way of patent on a process not patented in this country, and there is an international side of it that influences me entirely. We, unfortunately or fortunately as you will, saw fit to become parties to an international arrangement and approved of it in 1928. Having done so, we must not place ourselves in the position where it will be alleged that in bad faith we have—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Nine o'clock.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION ACT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. H. A. Stewart (Minister of Public Works) for the second reading of Bill No. 113, to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada.

Mr. MARTIAL RHEAUME (St. John's-Iberville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill No. 113 is introduced for a political purpose. On September 11, 1930, at the special session, I requested work to relieve unemployment in the town of St. John's which I have the honour of representing in the house. To a question I put to the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau), whom I am pleased to see in his seat this evening, he replied:

As to the second question asked by the hon. member: the deepening of the Richelieu river, my views on the subject are well known. I believe that this river should become a means of transportation from the St. Lawrence to lake Champlain, and I trust that I shall have the support of my colleagues in connection with this matter, as soon as it is found possible to act.

The hon. Minister of Marine certainly could have found it possible, under those circumstances, to fulfil his promises of the special session of 1930. In the course of the last electoral campaign, the hon. minister, who represents Chambly-Vercheres in the House, made promises of which some hon. members reminded him, he replied, at the time, that he could not remember having made such a statement. I trust he will not deny the excerpt which I have just quoted and which can be found at page 132 of Hansard, September 11, 1930. The hon. minister would have been worthy of praise had he remembered the Chambly canal.

I note in the Annex A of this bill an amount of $40,000 for St. Lambert. In 1931, an amount of $69,000, included in the appropriations for unemployment work, was expended in St. Lambert on a retaining wall. Of the $20,000,000 voted at the special session of 1930, $415,000 only was expended in the province of Quebec yet the county of Chambly-Verchères obtained $129,000 of that amount. The hon. minister could have, under the circumstances, remembered the Chambly canal. I think that $40,000 would have been better expended in improving that canal than by building a retaining wall at St. Lambert; it would also prove more profitable to the hon. minister, at the next election. The Chambly canal has been neglected for a few years past. Last year, hardly 100 boats passed through it during the summer. This year, for the first time, ever since I remember, the water was let in the canal on June 1. If the hon. minister, according to his statement, had wished to carry out the Liberal party's program, the opportunity was then offered to him. The Liberal party, under Sir Wilfrid Laurier's regime, in 1908, 1909, 1910 and 1911, had expended thousands of dollars to deepen the Richelieu river. It would have been a worthy act to carry on this work and not to allow the outlay already made in the Richelieu river to be a total loss.

I note in the Annex an amount of $35,500 for Lacolle and another amount of $31,500 for Cantic. Ever since the advent of the Conservative party to power in 1930, we have tried without success to have this work done, unfortunately, these localities are represented by a Liberal member and we have no chance whatever of succeeding. Since the redistribution of counties last year, the parish of Lacolle has been included in the county of Chateauguay-Huntingdon, and I note that $67,000 has been appropriated solely for Lacolle and $3,500 for Huntingdon—$70,500 for a county as large as my hand.

This afternoon, the leader of the Liberal party stated that this bill was introduced with a political end in view. The hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier) analysed the work proposed for the province of Quebec, going over the entire schedule, and our hon. friends opposite cannot deny that this work is being done with a political end in view.

I note that there is an item of $272,000 for Three Rivers. By this act, the hon. Minister of Marine perhaps intends to carry out the promises he made in 1931 and which were not fufilled up to date; however, this amount of $272,000 for Three Rivers is not sufficiently large to save the hon. member who represents that county to-day. Moreover, the outlay of $40,000 in St. Lambert will be of no avail to the hon. Minister of Marine to save him at the next election.

Work was requested by the town of Iberville which suffers from unemployment, for instance, work to improve the wharf of that locality. If there is one place in this country where money should be expended to improve a wharf, it is certainly at Iberville. That town is quite important. All are aware that the Richelieu is a beautiful and navigable river. Iberville possesses an old wharf only 75 to 100 foot in length. Requests were made on various occasions, in 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934. Unfailingly the answer was: There is no money. Under the present circumstances, it would have been an act worthy of praise. If this program of public works had not had a political end in view, certainly the town of Iberville would have been remembered and the Chambly canal would have been improved. The hon. minister is aware that this canal is very important. It was for Chambly-Bassin and Chambly-Canton a source of revenue which does not exist to-day because they are neglected and no improvement is made.

Some attempt was made, hardly a few months ago, to obtain funds from the Department of Railways and Canals to make improvement along the Chambly Canal which borders the national highway from Rouse's Point to Montreal. By improving the Chambly Canal, by dredging and building wharves, it would have been possible to widen the road. Very little material would have been required and it would have provided much work to the unemployed of the town of St John's. Within the last four years the town of St. John's has expended each year between $40,000 and $50,000 to relieve its unemployed. The government should not have granted favours but shown a sense of fairness towards the county of St. John's. Such was not the case, I am aware that this measure has a political end in view, nothing else.

Last winter, work was carried out on the locks at St. John's and along the canal. However, no work was given to the unemployed. To be employed on the Chambly canal it was absolutely necessary to have a letter of recommendation from the Conservative candidate so that men from Chambly and elsewhere were brought over there thus depriving the unemployed at St John's. Probably, because there are too many Liberals in St. John's; I can see no other reason. I state that it is a shabby procedure, on the part of the Conservative party, to refuse work to unemployed, heads of families, simply because they are supposed to be Liberals, while work was given to sons of Conservatives whose fathers were working and in no way were in want. When there were more than 350 unemployed receiving the dole, work was refused to these people because it was absolutely necessary that their applications be approved by the defeated candidate. As the latter is acquainted with every one and knows to what party they belong, those who were supposed to be Liberals were out of luck. The proof that these public works have a political end in view is that the government delayed introducing this bill until after the elections of Ontario and Saskatchewan, under the plea that they did not wish to influence the people of those provinces. In the county of Brome-Missisquoi, at Farnham, a beautiful little town, $58,000 will be expended for a public building. No reason is given. At Huntingdon, the wealthiest county of Quebec, where public works are the least required, $70,000 is granted. I therefore protest, sir, and contend that such public works have a political object in view.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Almost every member on both sides of the house, I believe, is agreed that the effort to provide employment through a public works program is very desirable. But in this program it is evident to me at least that the needs of the provinces have not been considered very carefully, at any rate the province from which I come has not received anything like equal treatment with the other provinces. I note that out of some $40,000,000 the amount allotted to British Columbia is just over $2,000,000. Might I draw attention to the fact that over $2,000,000 is allotted to one city alone in Canada, and more than to the whole of the province of British Columbia. The Prime Minister at various times has chided us for raising the cry of east against west, but when I look over this program of works I cannot help but feel that in the west, and particularly British Columbia, there is some justification for that cry. I would point out that so far this year $9,000,000 has been provided for the development of harbours and rivers on the Atlantic side of this country and only some $273,200 for the ports on the Pacific coast. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, is it any wonder that we rise in our places and ask when are we in British Columbia going to receive anything like the same treatment that has been accorded this year and almost every year since confederation in expenditures looking to the building up of the Atlantic coast? I repeat that this same state of things has already happened this year—almost nine millions appropriated for the Atlantic side and only a little over a quarter of a million for the Pacific coast.

Dealing with the bill before us I am not going to repeat what has been said by various speakers, that certain districts and certain provinces have been favoured over others. I am not going to say a great deal about what has been given to the city of Calgary, but it is interesting to note that over one million dollars, or more than fifty per cent of what the whole of British Columbia is to receive, is to be expended in the city of Calgary. Further I am not unmindful of the fact that considerable sums were spent for buildings in that city in 1930. If it were a question of providing works where necessary I would draw this to the attention of the minister—and I might say the various parts of the program I have in my hand have been given to both the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). Speaking of one, we have in the city of New Westminster a post office which was constructed in the year 1900 when there were only some 10,000 people in that city. Since then the district has grown until to-day some 60,000 people are served by that post office. So acute are conditions for those who have to deal with postal matters there that an annex has been provided close to the main building, and I am going to tell the minister of the conditions existing in that annex. The size of the annex is twenty-one by forty-two feet, and in it there are housed forty-three people. Bear in mind that this is an outside building. The parcel post and letter carrier deliveries have been inaugurated since the main building was erected. The rapid growth in population not only of the city of New Westminster, but of the surrounding district has made conditions for the workers there terrible, and it is no exaggeration to use the word. I have visited there; I was there before coming to Ottawa. I am surprised that they have had to carry on for so long in such cramped quarters. There are also three rural mail routes totalling some ninety miles, on which the volume of mail is very heavy. The main post office building is a one story structure. The ground for the extension was purchased many years ago; plans were drawn up and submitted to the department; they were O.K.'d by the postal authorities, but nothing has been done about it.

The minister may say, "Why was it not done when the Liberal administration was in power?" I can only say that if it had been my privilege to be here they would have heard about it. I am holding no brief for what was done or not done previous to 1930; I can only speak for the time I have been in the house, but certainly this situation should not have been overlooked. The minister may say that in the present bill some $300,000 is provided for Fraser river improvements. I am not objecting to that, but I would remind the minister that those improvements should have been dealt with in the main estimates. As proof of that statement I have under my hand the recommendations made by the district engineer last December, which include that sum for river improvement work. I expected when I came here that I would find the amount provided either in the main estimates or in the supplementaries, but for some reason or other it has been carried forward and placed in the bill now before the house. I claim that if British Columbia had received her fair share according to population she would have received some $3,000,000, while if it had been intended to help the province most necessitous and the people in it who are unemployed the amount would have been much larger.

May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the province of British Columbia is carrying a burden that is not being carried by any other province, in that there are some ten thousand transients on relief in British Columbia who have come from the other provinces of Canada. I heard the minister say that he hoped municipalities and provincial governments would carry out similar works, but I should like to ask him how that is possible for municipalities and provincial governments that have passed through some four years of economic distress, and especially in British Columbia where we have at least four or five municipalities in bankruptcy. In one of the municipalities I represent one in five of the people is on relief. It is impossible for the municipalities to carry on works such as those in the bill before us.

I was interested in following the discussion as to fair wages, and I noted that the minister rose to say that this was provided for. I would remind the minister that while that provision may be in the Public Works Act my experience would indicate that the contractors find ways of getting around that law. I drew one case to the attention of the minister, where a contract was let for rock work in the Fraser river. The work was sublet to another contractor, who paid only half the wages the first contractor would have had to pay under the fair wage clause. When I got after the dominion government about it the minister admitted that he did not know a great deal about that contract which had been sublet. It may be provided in the act that no contract shall be sublet without the authority of the minister, but I know that has been done in the past. Contracts involving considerable sums of money have been let to subcontractors who have cut the wages in two, which permitted the contractor to make large profits. I had another case in connection with the shingling of the armoury in New Westminster. The regular price for shinglers was, I believe, eighty cents an hour. The contract was sublet, and the subcontractor obtained workmen at some twenty-five cents an hour. This was stopped only after I drew the matter to the attention of the department here, and they found that the contract had been sublet without permission from Ottawa. The government should enforce the provision which states that contracts shall not be sublet without the authority of the department. I know that provision is in the Public Works Act, but it has been evaded, and I would urge the minister to see to it that under this program no contract is sublet without the entire authority and approval of the minister. We all know what subletting means; the man who obtains the contract sits back and draws his profits for doing nothing, while the subcontractor has to try to make it up—and does make it up—by bleeding the workmen and paying them low wages.

I also believe that full publicity should be given in connection with these contracts. This bill may be designed to give employment to those in need, but I do not see in it any provision similar to that section of the relief act which states that no discrimination shall be shown. I would suggest to the minister that if the bill is designed primarily to relieve unemployment in this country, a section should be inserted stating that no discrimination shall be shown as between Liberals, Conservatives and those holding other political views. I believe necessity should be the only requirement necessary in order to obtain work.

When we get into the bill I shall have a little more to say with regard to the section. I see nothing here for the development of the shipyards of this country. That is another proof that the bill has not been designed entirely with a view of relieving unemployment and helping to develop the country. We have some thirteen shipyards in the Dominion of Canada, and we require many ships to carry on our work, such as dredges, lightships, and so on. At the front door of this building we have the statement:

> The wholesome sea is at her gates,
> Her gates both east and west.

But here is a program providing for the expenditure of $40,000,000 or perhaps $50,000,000, which does not contain one item looking to the development of what could be and should be one of our major industries, that is, shipping.

My main reason for rising at this time, Mr. Speaker, was to protest against the treatment meted out to us in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Hull) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, although approving of the principle involved in the execution of public works to relieve the unemployed, I regret that the county of Hull, which I have the privilege of representing, has been ignored by the government in the bill under consideration.

Each time I spoke in the house, and this is every session, I exposed to the government the situation of the city and county of Hull.

We are at a disadvantage, from an industrial viewpoint, owing to our geographical situation. Previously, the city of Hull possessed numerous industries which afforded work to a population which, at present, comprises 29,339 people. Our population is almost equal to that of Three Rivers or Sherbrooke. This means that we occupy, so far as population is concerned, the fourth or fifth place in Quebec.

The present crisis, the depression and unemployment have indebted the city to such an extent that within the last two years, we have had a yearly deficit of more than $100,000 and, more precisely, in 1932-33, the deficit amounted to $115,000; in 1933-34, $140,000. We are so situated that it is impossible to further provide for the one-third required for direct assistance. The unemployed, in Hull, instead of decreasing, seem to be on the increase. We still have 7,077 persons depending on the dole, at a cost of $30,000 monthly. Our arrears in taxes amount to more than half a million. If the city must continue the dole system, it will have to pass under the control of the municipal commission.

This situation was exposed to the government in all fairness by my opponent in 1930, Mr. J. N. Beauchamp. The city authorities have directly communicated with both dominion and provincial governments; they even submitted a list of public works to be carried out. We had hoped to obtain fair play being so close to the capital and being part of the federal district which it is intended to embellish; moreover, the government has acquired in our locality a piece of land so as to turn it into a park.

The population is unanimous in protesting against the treatment dealt out to us. It is not a question of party politics, and both the dominion and provincial, governments seem to be of the same mind in their endeavours to relieve those in want. Our situation is most distressing, I therefore deem it my duty, this evening, to associate myself with my constituents in strongly protesting.

In April, I again state, a list of various enterprises was submitted to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart), because there was certainly work to be done in our city. I was furnished with a copy of this list which is in the hands of the Minister of Public Works. Improvements were requested on the post office building. For the last three years, the post office building has also been used by the National Revenue department. If I am not mistaken, the latter collected in 1933, almost $300,000 for the treasury. These various services are located in too small a building for the work to be efficiently carried out, this applies to the post office and national revenue. An extension or improvement costing barely $15,000 was suggested for this post office which requires to be gone all over and painted.

We suggested—this was requested even under the former administration—the erection of an armoury. We take pride in having in our midst one of the finest Canadian regiments, the Hull regiment which, at present, has no special building. We think that the government instead of paying rent to private owners, could have erected an armoury. We have in the city, two very dangerous level crossings. One on the Aylmer road, the highway linking two provinces and extending to Pontiac, Temiskaming and Abitibi. On another road which is the outlet for the Gatineau, on Montcalm street, in the very centre of the city, there is also a very dangerous level crossing. We suggested that two viaducts be constructed at a cost of about $50,000 to $75,000 each. I do not think that our requests were unreasonable.

Truly, we were amazed to note that not even a minimum fraction of what we requested was granted to us. We also asked for some help to repair the City Hall. We requested that the same procedure be followed as when, in 1907, the dominion government built the park which surrounds the City Hall, at Hull. A retaining wall was necessary on the Ottawa river—I think the government is building such walls in a number of counties—to prevent landslide and protect the Principal, Courcelette and Langevin streets.

I shall not refer to the construction of the bridge on Bank street ending at Langevin street, in Hull, which would help in relieving the traffic on the Interprovincial bridge. I could quote other undertakings. It is a list which was suggested to the government in March—

Mr. BARRETTE: (Translation): By whom?

Mr. FOURNIER (Translation): By Mr. Beauchamp, my opponent at the last election. I personally interviewed the hon. minister after the visit of Mr. Beauchamp. This shows that I have no political object in view; it is simply to help the 7,000 people who, at present are in distress in my constituency.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Indeed, the intention is excellent!

Mr. FOURNIER (Translation): The city council has also submitted a list of which I could furnish a copy to the Minister of Public Works. To-day although protesting, may I inquire of the government whether they could not grant us at least a slice of the $2,000,000 mentioned in item 78 and which is destined to build roads, aqueduct, drainage, and electric lighting systems, and protective work on rivers.

My second request, which I think is quite fair, is that Ottawa should look upon Hull as one of its outside suburbs—

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): As its daughter.

Mr. FOURNIER (Translation): I should not like to use that expression, because it would, at times, be an ill-treated daughter.

Hull is considered like one of the suburbs of the city of Ottawa. A large amount is expended in Ottawa to improve public buildings. I would request, at least, that the unemployed of Hull be employed in carrying out this work. If the hon. Minister of Public Works would only issue instructions to that effect to the superintendent or to the person who will be in charge of such work, the people of Hull could benefit by it like the unemployed of Ottawa.

Without wishing to criticize, I saw in an item that the beautiful city of Three Rivers would be granted about $400,000. I do not blame the government in favouring those who support their policy; however, they should not be given the whole cake, leaving no crumbs for other constituencies of the province. The citizens of Hull contribute to the dominion treasury, probably as much as the city of Three Rivers. Our people have paid their taxes, as well as they could, for the last four years, and certainly do not deserve to be treated thus in the bill under consideration. May I inquire of the government whether it would be possible to reconsider the bill and grant us some appropriation.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Chicoutimi fares better than you do.

Mr. FOURNIER (Translation): The situation is very distressing. I reside quite a distance from Chicoutimi. I am pleased that this town benefits by the government's favours; however, the city of Hull should not be considered like a stranger in Quebec or the dominion. May I request the government to help us; if not directly, at least indirectly by giving work to our unemployed in Ottawa.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention to take part in this debate; I wanted to leave to my hon. colleague (Mr. Stewart) the task of guiding his bill through the house. However, since two or three of my colleagues opposite have thought fit to discuss questions concerning Montreal and my county, I deem it my duty to briefly reply.

This afternoon, the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) displayed an extraordinary zeal for our beautiful Montreal city. He reminded the government of its duty towards this city with reference to relief—direct relief or otherwise. My reply to the hon. member for St. James is that the government, since the day it assumed office has been conscious of its duty towards the unemployed throughout the country. Canada has felt the world-wide crisis, there was a lack of work, as in all other countries, perhaps in a much less degree than in a large number of other countries. However, the government made the necessary provisions so that citizens without work did not suffer from want and received help. And although the responsibility in such matters rests first with the municipalities, then with provincial authorities, and lastly, with the Dominion government, we helped all provinces and, particularly, that of Quebec and its municipalities. Neither was Montreal forgotten, quite the contrary. I think that the hon. member for St. James will be fair to the government by admitting that we have well carried out our part.

The hon. member for St. James reminded the government that it should immediately advance its quota in connection with amounts paid out, within the last few months, by the city of Montreal in order to relieve the unemployed; while awaiting that the city accounts be vouched for by the provincial authorities. May I point out to my hon. friend that we previously thought of helping the province of Quebec in order to remedy this state of affairs; the hon. member himself alluded, this afternoon, to an offer made by the Dominion government to the provincial authorities to advance $3,000,000 from the federal funds—

Mr. DENIS (Translation): On what conditions?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): —to help the city of Montreal and partly to reimburse it of the amounts expended to relieve the unemployed.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): At unacceptable conditions!

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The provincial authorities thought proper to refuse the government's offer. May I add that this government would have no objection to an amount representing 60 per cent of the city of Montreal's accounts being advanced to help that city in the sums expended to relieve the unemployed, if the provincial authorities were willing to contribute half the amount. This would only be fair to Montreal, until their accounts are vouched for. It is not the Dominion government's fault, if the provincial government and the city of Montreal have not yet settled their accounts. We are bound to deal with the province and not with the municipality. That is why, we must wait until Quebec has audited the accounts of the city of Montreal. However, we are disposed to help out Montreal, and to follow the procedure I have just stated to the house.

What surprises me, is that the hon. member for St. James, when mayor of Montreal, did not think proper to settle this question with his Quebec government friends. It was necessary to elect another mayor to settle this question of advances to the satisfaction of the city of Montreal and its citizens.

Mr. RINFRET (Translation): If the hon. member will permit me I shall point out to him that the question is no nearer a settlement than it was six months ago and, may I add that my request is addressed to Quebec as well as to Ottawa. I made no distinction. I addressed myself to the two governments on behalf of the citizens of Montreal.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): My hon. friend will discover, perhaps, before a few hours have passed, that the question is nearer being settled than he thinks, as far as the dominion government is concerned. The hon. member seemed to congratulate the government as regards its schedule of public works attached to the present bill, in connection with the city of Montreal and surroundings. I wish to thank him. I trust that our friends in Montreal will recognize that we endeavoured—

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): At the expiry of four years.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): —to have the most urgent works authorized and especially those which will employ the most people from the labouring class of Montreal.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Will the hon. member permit me to put a question.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Two.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): One will be enough, I think, for my hon. friend on the back benches. The hon. minister states that he does his utmost to give work to Montreal and other parts of Canada. I wish to inquire how it happens that his interest on behalf of the people is felt only after four years, when he had promised to give work to all in 1930, and after he had withdrawn the $50,000,000 that the previous government had appropriated.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I thought that my hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) wished to put a question pertinent to the subject under consideration. We shall have an opportunity later to reply to my hon. friend on that point.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I would be pleased to have the reply now.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): We shall be in a position to reply without any fear.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Before the electors.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Our hon. friends opposite seem to forget that for the last four years a world wide crisis has held Canada in its grip. Instead of carrying on petty criticism, they should have helped the government to weather the crisis. Instead of making, in the house, suggestions of a practical order, instead of helping the government, it was thought wise for another reason than that of public interest, to unceasingly criticize. I trust that the people of Canada will realize the attitude of our friends in the house, for the last four years, and will judge them as they deserve to be.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The people gave their verdict in Saskatchewan and Ontario.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): In 1930 you had nothing to propose except a commission.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I had no intention, sir, to start a discussion on our general policy but simply to reply to the hon. member for St. James and briefly comment on the speech just delivered by the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume). The latter stated that the water route of the Chambly river was of great importance and contended that we should have included in the public works program a certain amount to carry on the improvement of this route.

I entirely agree with the views of my hon. friend for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume) with reference to the importance of the Chambly river, I stated so on many occasions. I am convinced that the section drained by the Chambly and Richelieu rivers would later on cater for the eastern part of the United States and that throughout this waterway, we shall be in a position to transport our products at a low rate and profitably. However, all remember that during the last four years, we had to be thrifty so as to balance our budgets and maintain the credit of Canada. Hon. members opposite should realize that it was impossible for us to carry on improvements on the Richelieu river. I may inform my hon. friends that this project is under consideration, and I hope that before long we shall be in a position to request the house to authorize certain outlays in this respect.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Make haste! You will not be long in power.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): So far as the work for which we are requesting authorization, one may note that we specially sought to relieve unemployment.

When we are criticized for having an amount of $40,000 voted for a retaining wall at St. Lambert, I may remind hon. members that there are, on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, thousands and thousands of unemployed, large parishes comprising former citizens of Montreal who have made their domicile on the other side of the river and who nevertheless earn their living in Montreal. We are aware in what situation these people now find themselves. Montreal thought proper, by regulations, to close its doors to workers who do not reside within the limits of the city, with the result that numerous citizens on the south shore are at present without work. We considered that the building of a protecting wall would give quite a lot of work to the people residing on the south shore. I shall point out to my hon. friends opposite that it is simply a question of extending a wall which at present is exposed to be broken by the ice in the spring; we must extend it to the mainland, so as to protect it.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): My hon. friend may rest assured that quite a number of people on the south shore, even those on the shores of the Richelieu and St. John's rivers may find work there.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): As far as Berthier.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): My hon. friends who complain that the program of public works contain nothing for their counties will realize that it was impossible to give details of all the work which we intend to carry out.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Fournier) pointed out just now, the items as a whole which we request the house to authorize and which amount to many millions of dollars. This will allow the government to distribute as fairly as possible the work in the various parts of this country. One must have noted the amount of $2,500,000, "harbours and rivers generally." This simply means that work will be carried out in harbours on the St. Lawrence river and other rivers from the amount included in this item. This project also comprises an amount of $2,000,000 for the Interior department. There is another item of $2,000,000 under the heading of "public buildings generally" — "improvements, additions, fittings, etc." These amounts will permit us to do justice, as much as possible, to all counties of Quebec, in all localities where unemployment prevails.

My hon. friends will note also in the schedule the last amount of $500,000. This item will again permit us to do justice to the various parts of all the provinces of Canada. May I request hon. members opposite not to complain too much. We shall endeavour to act as fairly as possible towards every part of this country and all localities where unemployment prevails.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Will the hon. minister permit me to put a question?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): With pleasure.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): To prove his good faith, his sincerity, could not the minister, out of this amount of $2,500,000 find $50,000 to improve the Chambly canal? You can also preach by giving the example.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): My hon. friend will realize that I cannot give an affirmative reply this evening. These general items being authorized, it will be the duty of the government afterwards to distribute, as fairly as possible, the work. The hon. member is perfectly aware that I shall neglect nothing to obtain work to be done on or along the borders of the Richelieu river and also for the Chambly canal; the government will have to decide where the work is to be carried on.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): That will afford the means to the hon. minister of proving his sincerity.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): My hon. friend will agree that I have the greatest interest in the beautiful Richelieu region as far as St. Johns; however, it is not always possible to obtain all that we wish.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): That will afford to the minister an opportunity of proving his earnestness.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I had no intention, sir, to take part in this debate, I simply wished to give a few explanations with reference to unemployment in Montreal and also as regards the work to be distributed in the various parts of Canada.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Will the hon. minister permit me to put a question to him? On what conditions will the government advance $3,000,000 to the city of Montreal? I also wish to inquire whether he is aware that the Quebec government is willing to advance $3,000,000 to the city of Montreal, providing that the Dominion Government does likewise, and on the same conditions.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I so stated a moment ago. As far as I am concerned, I would be disposed to request that an amount representing 60 per cent of the accounts of the city of Montreal, which have not yet been vouched for, be advanced and equally shared by the dominion and provincial governments.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): And this, unconditionally.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): On the sole condition of course, that when these bills are vouched for they will equal the amounts advanced. Personally, I am ready to recommend that 30 per cent of the amount be advanced immediately by the dominion government and 30 per cent by the provincial government.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): You will not impose any condition on the province of Quebec.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): As I have just stated with the sole understanding that we are to be reimbursed if the accounts vouched for do not amount to the sum advanced.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): Reimbursed by whom? By the province of Quebec?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): My hon. friend, is quite aware that we must deal with the provincial authorities. The duty of looking after the unemployed first rests with municipalities. Then, if the municipalities cannot cope with the task it behooves the provincial government, and lastly the dominion authorities come to the rescue of the provinces. Therefore, we can only transact with the Quebec government. I hope that, within a few days, we shall have succeeded in convincing the Quebec authorities that this advance of 60 per cent on the accounts such as they exist, at present, should be granted to the city of Montreal.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make only one or two observations on this bill. I shall confine my remarks more particularly to the province of Ontario, and shall corroborate the statements made this afternoon by the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott). Before I speak about Ontario, and before making a few observations in regard to the other provinces, I should like to say that this government is running true to form. It has brought down this bill in the dying days of the session, what perhaps may be the last session of this parliament. It is a bill providing for an expenditure of at least $30,000,000 on public works throughout the Dominion of Canada, they say for the relief of unemployment. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the method in their madness in regard to this bill is to endeavour to save themselves from defeat when the election comes on. If hon. members will go back to three years ago and look up Hansard they will see that the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and those who sit behind him pleaded with the government then that if they wanted to relieve unemployment in the Dominion of Canada they should submit a program of public works. I remember that at that time the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) said that his department had nothing to do with the expenditure of money for the relief of unemployment, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said that that was not the method of his government, and that he would never resort to that method in order to relieve unemployment in the Dominion of Canada. The members of the opposition at that time pleaded with the Minister of Public Works and with the Prime Minister at least to get away from the dole system, and if possible provide work by which men could earn their wages by doing a day's labour for the support of themselves and their wives and their children, and relieve unemployment in that way. But the Prime Minister said that that was not the policy of his government. Yet to-day we have the government coming down with this bill, which is nothing more or less than a bill for the expenditure of $30,000,000, and perhaps more, for political purposes in the Dominion of Canada. I say that seriously Mr. Speaker, and I say it because there is not a member of the government who has yet got up in defence of this bill.

Mr. MANION: Oh yes, the Minister of Public Works was up.

Mr. SANDERSON: I hope the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) will get up a little later on.

Mr. MANION: There is no necessity because we are all in entire support of the bill.

Mr. SANDERSON: Yes, and in a moment or two I shall have something to say in regard to the money which it is proposed to spend in the riding of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways.

Mr. MANION: Go ahead. If you know anything about it you will say something for it.

Mr. SANDERSON: I will say what I have to say, but before coming to that I will say this to the Minister of Railways who interrupted me, that despite the money that will be expended in his riding he will experience the same fate as the Conservative candidate who was defeated in that riding in the last provincial election.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend and his friends have been saying that for five elections, and in four of them my opponent lost his deposit. He will lose it next time too.

Mr. SANDERSON: I will say to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways that there always comes a time if you stay long enough in politics, and especially if you join one party and desert it for another, as my hon. friend the Minister of Railways did—you cannot play all sides all the time—I will make this prophecy, that the Minister of Railways will go down to defeat in his riding when his government gets the courage to appeal to the people.

Mr. MANION: I will take a chance on that.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am afraid the Minister of Railways has lost his influence with his friends in his constituency. He went up there and made two or three speeches for the Conservative candidate in the provincial election—

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is just as right as usual. I made one speech. My hon. friend is just one-third right, about as usual.

Mr. SANDERSON: That was enough. If the minister had made two there would have been a thousand more votes against the Conservative candidate.

Coming back to this bill and looking over these expenditures of the taxpayers' money, which is going to be spent apparently in an effort to get back into power this discredited government which has lost the confidence of the people, this ramshackle government which is trying to get back into power by the expenditure of money on public works, and in which the riding of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways is going to share, may I say to the Minister of Public Works that I have gone through this schedule very carefully and I do not see one dollar for Brockville or Leeds, and I have come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister and his government have decided that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has not the ghost of a chance to be elected in the next election.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I want to tell my hon. friend that he is one hundred per cent wrong in both the statements he has made.

Mr. SANDERSON: I shall be very glad to accept the explanation of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, but the electors won't. If you go carefully through this schedule of expenditures for public works in the province of Ontario, it is really marvellous. Take the county of Oxford, for instance. It is one of the banner counties of the province of Ontario, and in the last gerrymander, because it was not a redistribution but a gerrymander in the province of Ontario, the two Oxfords, north and south, were united. In all probability my good friend the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) will be the Conservative candidate in Oxford in the next election. There is not a dollar of expenditure in this vote for Oxford.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not need it to win.

Mr. SANDERSON: My good friend the Minister of National Defence predicted that in the by-election in South Oxford, the Conservative candidate, his namesake, another Donald Sutherland, would have one thousand of a majority whereas the Liberal was returned by fifteen hundred of a majority. Let me say to the Minister of National Defence that it is not because he does not need it that there is no expenditure for Oxford county in this bill. I have come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister, because we know that at times he is ruthless, and if he thinks one of his colleagues is going down he throws him to the scrap heap, has arrived at the conclusion that the Minister of National Defence has not a chinaman's chance in Oxford at the next election, and that is the reason there is no expenditure for that county.

Mr. SPOTTON: Well, well!

Mr. SANDERSON: I will come to my good friend from North Huron (Mr. Spotton)—

Mr. SPOTTON: To save time in this process of elimination and get on with the business, I will admit I have no chance.

Mr. SANDERSON: I give credit to my good friend from North Huron. He says he has not a chance, and he is right. There is no expenditure apparently for North Huron. The Prime Minister has come to the conclusion, and I regret it very much, that my good friend in the next election will be left at home. There is a rumour going about, which I hope is true, that the hon. member for North Huron is to be put in the Senate before the next elections are announced. I think he would at least add weight to the Senate, if nothing else.

Mr. SPOTTON: Barkis is willin'.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friend says, "Barkis is willin'." He says that he made only one speech in his own constituency during the provincial elections. It is too bad he did not make more.

Apparently the government have come to the conclusion that the Minister of Railways and Canals has a fighting chance in Fort William because I find an item for that city of $425,000 for a public building, site acquired. If it is necessary to expend $425,000 in Fort William in order to elect the Minister of Railways and Canals, I say that that is too high a price. I doubt very much if the expenditure of $425,000 will elect the minister.

I go down through the list. I am sorry the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) is not in his seat as I have something to say about him and South Wellington. I well remember a provincial by-election which was held in South Wellington a few years ago when a supporter of the Liberal party was elected. At that time the Minister of Justice made a retort from this side of the house that that would never occur again. Well, it did occur again and there was an increase of about one thousand in the majority. Apparently the Minister of Justice has convinced the Prime Minister that he still has a fighting chance to come back in South Wellington, because there is to be a considerable expenditure in the city of Guelph. I see an item of $250,000 for a new public building, and also one for $15,000 for the installation of an elevator in the public building. That is a total of $265,000 which is too large a price to pay in order to bring the Minister of Justice back to Ottawa. If anyone will go through the list of expenditures on public works in Ontario during the last four, five or six years he will find that a lot of money has been spent in Guelph by this government. If the Minister of Justice, with his influence with the Prime Minister and his colleagues, finds it necessary to bribe the people with $265,000 of their own money in order to be reelected, he had better stay at home. I will make the prophecy that it does not matter whether the government spends $265,000, it does not matter whether it spends half a million, a million or a million and a half, the time has come when the Minister of Justice will be defeated should he decide to test the confidence of the people in his riding.

Mr. McGIBBON: You said that in 1930.

Mr. SANDERSON: I did not. I say to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) that he had better watch his own step because I think he is doomed in Muskoka. I doubt if he will ever sit in this house again after the next elections, and I think the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario knows that as well as any one else.

Mr. McGIBBON: I ask the hon. member to come up to Muskoka during the next elections and then I certainly will be elected.

Mr. SANDERSON: It is not necessary for me to go up. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario can get up and make one of his Canadian National speeches or one of the other speeches for which he is noted, but even then I think he will lose his deposit. I shall be very sorry if he does not come back, but I am afraid he will not.

Mr. McGIBBON: You are wasting your sympathy.

Mr. JACOBS: Are they going to elect anyone?

Mr. SANDERSON: I will make this prediction—

An hon. MEMBER: Who is going to be elected in Perth?

Mr. SANDERSON: I have not forgotten Perth and I shall come back to it.

Mr. MacNICOL: Dave Wright.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have been waiting for the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol). He was the organizer for the Conservative party during the last provincial election.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I never was the organizer for Ontario at any stage of the game. The hon. member knows perfectly well that that is not correct.

Mr. SANDERSON: All right. The hon. member was chairman of the speakers' bureau. The hon. member worked day and night for a month, and on the Saturday before the polling took place he gave an interview to the Mail and Empire of Toronto. He said to the reporter: "There is nothing to it. Premier Henry will have 55 seats; I could name them to you, but it would only take up space in your paper, but he will have at least 55 seats." My hon. friend from Toronto had better keep quiet. He undertook to leave his seat in this House of Commons to go down to Toronto to superintend that campaign for Mr. Henry, Colonel Price and all the rest of them. What was the result? I should like to make a prediction about my hon. friend from Toronto.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member should confine himself to discussing the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am speaking about public works and the effect they are going to have on the various ridings.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has stated that the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol) was the organizer in the elections, and that has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. SANDERSON: If Your Honour will just be patient with me for a moment I will connect that up.

Mr. MANION: We all have to be patient with you.

Mr. SANDERSON: The items for Toronto total millions of dollars. The first is customs building addition, site acquired, $600,000; the next is new postal station "D", $100,000; the next is completion of ship channel walls—perhaps that is in my hon. friend's riding—$220,000; and the next is new dock at marginal way—I do not know what that is; perhaps it is the parting of the ways—$546,000. How much of that expenditure is to be made in the riding of my hon. friend?

Mr. MacNICOL: Not a single dollar.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is that because he has not a chance to be elected?

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member is again incorrect; I will be elected.

Mr. SANDERSON: Time will tell, but my good friend from Toronto had better keep quiet about elections. He was in charge of the redistribution bill which was put through last year, and believe me he took care of himself and of his friends. He carved it up beautifully, but it makes no difference; he too is doomed, and if he can get into the Senate I would advise him to go there.

Now, getting back to public works, I want to say that within the last week in the province of Ontario we have seen a government which had lost the confidence of the people to such an extent that they were almost annihilated. And how did they try to get back into power? By bribing the people with their own money on roads and highways and with patronage of all kinds, the worst example of political patronage that this country has ever seen. The government that was defeated last Tuesday had lost the confidence of the people of Ontario to a degree that no other government has ever done, unless it is the government across the way; because my hon. friends opposite—and I am glad to see that the Minister of Justice has come in—have lost the confidence not only of the people of Ontario, and to a greater degree than the Henry government had done, but they have lost the confidence of the people of the eight other provinces of the dominion. And they have not the courage to go to the country; they will hang on to power as long as they can. Yet they bring down this bill proposing an expenditure of over $30,000,000, almost $40,000,000, to bribe the people of this country to put them back into power.

Let me say a word about the contractors who will feed at the crib in connection with this expenditure. My good friend the Minister of Public Works—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Good friend?

Mr. SANDERSON: If I am not a good friend I will take it back.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Go on.

Mr. SANDERSON: I want to say to him that not later than three weeks ago, four weeks ago at the longest, an hon. member who sits on the opposition benches, from the province of Ontario, was in the minister's office in regard to some expenditure and the minister frankly told him he was going to do all he could to defeat him and therefore the minister could not do anything for him in the expenditure of money.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I deny any such statement. I never made any such statement to any member of this house at any time or on any occasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. GEARY: You had better unconditionally withdraw it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I ask my hon. friend to accept my statement and withdraw his. I will insist upon it too.

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. SANDERSON: By the rules of the house I am compelled to take the word of the Minister of Public Works and withdraw that statement.

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear.

Mr. SANDERSON: Nevertheless I have in my mind what my hon. friend told me—

Mr. McGIBBON: That is cowardly.

Mr. SANDERSON: Don't you call me a coward. I want that withdrawn.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Take it back.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Speaker, I have withdrawn my remark to the Minister of Public Works—

Mr. SPEAKER: The Minister of Public Works has denied a statement attributed to him and the hon. gentleman is obliged to accept the denial.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have withdrawn the statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member who called out "coward" must withdraw that remark.

Mr. McGIBBON: Mr. Speaker, I did not say "coward." I said that the action implied in the hon. member's reply, wherein he withdrew his statement under compulsion and intimated that he did not believe the denial, was cowardly.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Speaker, I quote to Your Honour rule 298:

> The following expressions have been ruled to be unparliamentary in the British House of Commons:
> Alleging that a member's statements were:
> not consonant with personal honour;
> cowardly;
> dishonest;
> insulting;

And so on.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have already ruled that the remark must be withdrawn.

Mr. McGIBBON: I withdraw it with great pleasure, and following—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Stop there.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think I have a right to complete my sentence.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Don't spoil it.

Mr. McGIBBON: Well, I won't spoil it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are a sport, doctor.

Mr. SANDERSON: Now let me refer to my good friend from Toronto South (Mr. Geary). The hon. gentleman went out in the provincial elections. He said he did not think it was worth while going into western Ontario because all the candidates of his good friend Mr. Henry would be elected. Finally he consented under pressure to go into three or four ridings and the result was that in these three or four ridings the people gave huge majorities to the Liberal candidates—much larger majorities, possibly, than if the hon. gentleman had not gone into the ridings.

Mr. GEARY: You are not complaining about that, are you?

Mr. SANDERSON: In regard to the contractors, I went to say a word or two, but let me observe that the Minister of Public Works deserves no sympathy from anyone on this side.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He is a good fellow.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He is not asking for any.

Mr. SANDERSON: When he was in opposition, without mercy and in a ruthless fashion he bombarded the Postmaster General for three weeks, and I fancy the reward he got for that was the position he now holds. Now he comes into this house and practically says in this bill, which he is sponsoring, that no contracts under $25,000 shall be tendered for. He knows that is wrong; the Prime Minister knows it is wrong; the Minister of Justice knows it is wrong; the Minister of Railways knows it is wrong; and the Minister of National Revenue knows it is wrong. They are injecting into public works, under the guise of relief for unemployment, a system of patronage and graft such as this country has never seen before. It is all very well for the Minister of Public Works, backed up by the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Justice, to say, "Oh well, this government—"

Mr. COTNAM: Tell us about Beauharnois.

Mr. SANDERSON: "—will be honest; they will be fair and take care of the people's money." Well, three years ago, two years ago, for hours, under the leadership of the leader of the opposition we pleaded with this government to have an audit of the moneys sent out to the provinces for relief. They laughed at us. The Prime Minister said that was insulting to the provinces, to the premiers and to the government. During the last four years about $32,000,000 was sent from Ottawa to Toronto for unemployment relief. I am not criticizing the amount, but a good deal of that money never reached the place for which it was intended, because there was no audit, no check.

Mr. ARTHURS: What about Quebec?

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not know anything about Quebec; I am speaking about my own province of Ontario. This government should have had an audit, a check on every dollar that went out from their treasury for relief, not only in Ontario but in all the provinces. Oh, they said, peace, order and good government, blank cheque legislation. Under this bill my good friend the Minister of Public Works, if he will let me call him that—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Just temporarily.

Mr. SANDERSON: All right, temporarily —the Minister of Public Works wants to get control of the expenditure so that any amount not in excess of $25,000 he can deal with in his office. Is that democratic government?

Mr. CASGRAIN: The pork barrel.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is that the kind of government the people of this country want? No. The only thing the people are hoping and praying for is that this government will have the courage to go to the country. They only want a chance to mark their ballots against it. I say to my hon. friends across the way: Watch your step, because the handwriting is on the wall and you are doomed.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): I rise not to predict anyone's rise or fall—

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I adjourned the debate this evening at six o'clock and I have not yet had a chance to speak.

Mr. MANION: I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman made the statement that he adjourned the debate at six o'clock. If therefore he did not go on at nine o'clock he has lost his position and cannot go on now.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He did not adjourn the debate; he just saw six o'clock.

Mr. MANION: I was simply taking the hon. gentleman's own statement that he adjourned the debate at six o'clock.

[Mr. Sanderson.]

Mr. SPEAKER: The fact is that no one adjourned the debate at six o'clock. The hon. gentleman has the floor.

Mr. BRADETTE: I just want to give the northern Ontario viewpoint on this bill. For the last four years I have always been in favour of a program of public works rather than of direct relief. As far as northern Ontario is concerned, under the northern development branch of the province most of our settlers were given some employment. This is no time to discuss the wages they were receiving, but this bill is a step in the right direction. The only regret I feel at the present time is that it was not inaugurated four years ago and maintained since then. I have no quarrel with other sections of Ontario getting millions of dollars, or with the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) when he gets $425,000 for his constituency; no doubt that expenditure is warranted in his section of the country. As far as Cochrane is concerned I am glad that the sum of $55,000 has found its way into the program for that town, but when you realize that in that riding at the present moment there are at least 100,000 people it means that under this bill there is to be provided for the relief of unemployment there an average of fifty-five cents a head. Anyone will readily see that that is no cure for the present situation in our section of the province. The same applies also to South Timiskaming; there is only $53,000 provided. I believe it will be absolutely impossible for the federal government to stop direct relief on the fifteenth of next month as far as northern Ontario is concerned, because in a population of nearly 175,000 people in the two Timiskamings there is only to be a total expenditure of $108,000. We never were parochial in our section, but I want the house to be fully seized of this fact, that from the gold tax as amended the government will receive from the southern section of Timiskaming, represented by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), and the northern section, represented by myself, some six or seven million dollars, yet these two ridings are receiving under this bill the small sum of $108,000. Coming again to my first statement, I am very glad that the government are going to build a post office in Cochrane, my home town, which is really the hub of the the north country, being situated much the same as Winnipeg was some fifty years ago. All the development taking place in northern Ontario will prove beneficial to that section of the country, and more particularly to Cochrane, and its environs.

Before I proceed to mention some of the things that I think should be included in this program, I want to compliment the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) upon the expenditure he is going to make in the town of Cochrane. I complimented him personally upon having found it possible to make some necessary repairs to the Indian hospital there. I now appeal to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart)—I hope he can hear me—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BRADETTE: For the last six or seven months the town of Timmins has been trying to get 500 new post office boxes, which so far they found it impossible to get. It is an expenditure which I know will eventually prove a paying one to the government. I trust that the minister will find it possible under this vote of $2,000,000 for public buildings to grant to the town of Timmins these necessary facilities. I said a moment ago that they require 500 boxes, and I hope the department will find it possible to give them at least 700; I am positive that every one will be used at once.

Another appeal that I want to make to the minister is for the new building in Timmins, which was built over four years ago, and which now needs a certain amount of painting and repair. I trust the minister will find it possible to take care of this also out of that $2,000,000 vote.

There is another very important matter that should be implemented in this program but I regret to see that there is no mention of it, I refer to the trans-Canada highway.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BRADETTE: Some hon. members from Quebec may not be interested, but I have always been interested in Quebec, and I would tell the hon. members that Quebec is in fact very much concerned with the trans-Canada highway. They should have direct communication from Montreal to Mont Laurier and west through Hearst to Winnipeg.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We are with you.

Mr. BRADETTE: I hope you are. As far as the federal government is concerned there has been practically no work done on the so-called trans-Canada highway in northern Ontario. What money has been spent was spent on the wildest section of the country on the north shore of lake Superior. During the last provincial election, Hon. James Lyons was telling his constituents that if he were elected and his party returned to power they would receive $8,000,000 for the building of that section. The logical route for the trans-Canada highway is that through the town of Hearst, westward along the Canadian National to Winnipeg. On that route there are less physical obstacles to overcome, and where ten dollars has to be spent for construction on the north shore one dollar would be sufficient in our section. We are very practical and logical in our requirements, and we also realize that it is not a matter of months but of years before that highway can be completed, but I want this government to be fully seized of the present situation. I well remember that five years ago the Hon. Howard Ferguson, speaking in my home town, stated that the governments should be given a certain amount of time to decide on the route of the trans-Canada highway. But five years have passed since then and the governments must have had sufficient time to settle where that route should be. Again I am pleading with this government, and also asking the Quebec members, whether from the Quebec district or Montreal or otherwise, if they want a direct route for the trans-Canada highway from coast to coast, to see that it goes through the northern section of northern Ontario. A few weeks ago in reply to a question I put to the Prime Minister on that very important matter of how the route was decided he told me it was decided by orders in council passed by the different provinces, and that as far as Quebec is concerned they were satisfied with the present existing route within their own limits, over the Montreal highway to Hawkesbury and through the Ottawa valley. I must say that in the province of Quebec someone must have been asleep at the switch. I know that at present the Quebec government have a party of men working west of here near lake Victoria, and this government should see to it that the construction near Norembega, which will involve building about fifty miles of road, is carried on in order to give direct communication between Montreal and Cochrane. This would save motorists hundreds of miles.

There is another important question I should like to mention. I must voice my disappointment in the fact that, in this bill I do not see even a mention of that very important work to which I have directed attention on previous occasions; that is, the construction of high powered radio stations in northern Canada. Through the good offices of the chairman I was able to appear before the radio committee and give the northern Ontario viewpoint. I believe I made that committee realize that so far as we in northern Canada, and particularly in northern Ontario, were concerned, we were not getting the service from the radio commission that we deserved. I am not blaming the radio commission or any other public body, but the house must be seized of this fact: If all the northern sections of Canada were absolutely in favour of the nationalization of radio it was because they realized that under then existing conditions the cities received the service they desired, while in the northern sections of Canada they were not and are not getting the service to which they were entitled. In my own section of the country at the present time at least ninety per cent of the radio users are not paying their licence fees. I have received dozens and in fact hundreds of letters from radio owners asking for my advice in this connection. Naturally I tell them that I believe they should pay their licence fees, but when one considers the little service they get for the money they spend in fees, equipment and so on, it is hard to blame them for not doing so. They get absolutely no reception in the daytime and in many instances they are unable to get reception at night.

According to my information the government, whether through the Department of Marine or the radio commission I do not know, had in view the expenditure of $5,000,000 in the construction of high powered radio stations across northern Canada. I make a very serious appeal to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart): I ask him if it is not possible at least partly to implement that undertaking. It would be one of the very best ways to give radio service to the section of the population that most needs it. At one time it took nearly three weeks to go to Moosonee; now the railway runs there, and the trip can be made in a very short time. But I want the government to understand that our pioneer population, who are within seven hundred or eight hundred miles of the capital, receive their daily papers at least thirty-six to forty-eight hours late. So the government should be fully aware of the situation with regard to those people; they should realize what it means to those people to be able to receive the broadcasts of the radio commission. I believe the people in the north are playing the game; they are extending civilization year by year, as their forefathers did in southern Ontario and on the shores of the St. Lawrence, but they are not receiving the treatment to which they are entitled.

I ask the Minister of Public Works if he will not try to implement the promises that were made in my part of the country. I remember that the present chairman of the radio commission told us we would have a high powered station located somewhere between Timmins and Sudbury, but so far we have obtained only local broadcasting stations in Timmins and Kirkland Lake. I understand that another is to be installed either at New Liskeard or Englehart, and there is another at North Bay. I have no quarrel with these local stations; they are giving a service to the people of those localities, but because of their wave lengths and their low power it is absolutely impossible for people more than a few miles away to receive their broadcasts. In any case hon. members will readily realize that local broadcasting is not sufficient for that whole region; we are entitled to better service than that. I believe I am speaking also for the people of northern Quebec; I am sure the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Bellec), who is in his place, will voice the same criticism with regard to the radio situation in his part of the country. I intend to keep up the fight until we receive the consideration we deserve. When I was discussing the proposed gold tax some hon. gentlemen opposite tried to make the house believe that some of us on this side were local in our point of view. I believe I proved quite clearly, however, that the gold tax would affect practically every citizen in this country. The same statement would apply to gold mining and the mining industry generally, and it applies also to the radio situation. We are entitled to the same service that is given in the larger centres of population, such as Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto. In the next fifty years our great development will be in the northern section of Canada; that is where our great natural resources lie.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I intend to carry on my fight. I am no prophet; I do not know what may happen at the next general election, but if I sit on the government benches I am going to carry on the fight as strongly as I am carrying it on at the present time, because I am fully convinced that so far as radio broadcasting is concerned that fine pioneer population is not receiving the service it deserves. I am not speaking politically when I say that. I received a great deal of information from the committee and also from the radio commission. I understand that under their departmental budget it was impossible for them to give us the service we requested, but surely in this public works program it should be possible to do so even if we have to increase the amount to be voted. This afternoon some hon. gentlemen said we were having mild inflation. This is not the time for me to discuss that matter, but if there is to be an increased circulation of our Canadian money it is wholly due to the gold mining industry of this country. I believe if all the facts were known the gold mining industry of Quebec and Ontario would open the eyes not only of this section of the continent but of the whole world. This applies with equal force to northern Ontario, to northern Manitoba, to British Columbia and to Alberta. If it is possible to inflate it is purely on account of that primary industry which in this year, 1934, is going to create new wealth to the amount of $50,000,000, eighty per cent of which comes from northern Ontario. Another large part comes from the northern part of the province of Quebec, and I believe to a certain extent that statement could be applied to the whole northern section of Canada.

Then, may I say that my section of the country has not sufficient radio broadcasting facilities. I know the Minister of Public Works is familiar with the situation, and I have no doubt that some appeal has been made to him, or to some department,—I am not sure just which one it would be. It has come to my knowledge that he has been approached in connection with the expenditure of from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000 for the creation of high powered radio stations in the northern section of the country. I fervently hope—and I am making the same appeal to the Prime Minister and to every member of the government and of the house—that this promise will be supplemented in the very near future—and when I say that I do not mean some time five years from now. I am hoping it will be supplemented under the present public works program. This work would entail a certain expenditure on raw materials; and it would mean that a large number of men would be employed on the construction of such high powered radio stations. Also it would add to the permanent equipment already erected by the government whereby all sections of the Canadian population could have radio facilities. I should be willing to give full credit for such advancement, or any such development.

Something has been mentioned, and very properly so, about contracting. May I say that I know something about contracting. I know that in this country it is the habit in most instances where big contractors find it possible, to sublet some of the work to be done, such as masonry, painting, plastering, flooring, and so on. In some cases it works out all right, but in a great many instances it works out badly for the working man. We were told that protection is afforded by the fair wages clause, and I was very glad to hear that statement from the Minister of Public Works. My fervent wish is, however, that the subcontractor will not be tolerated, under present conditions. The contractors should not make more money than that to which they are entitled. I maintain that under present working conditions they should not make any more than from six per cent to nine per cent profit on construction work, and that the rest of the money should go to the working men. That would be one of the best ways to relieve distress, and so far as the government is concerned, to have good construction work.

This afternoon the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) quite properly referred to the deplorable slum conditions in the Canadian cities. I know that there is a great movement on foot, one which was inaugurated by the lieutenant governor of Ontario, to initiate a construction program whereby those slums may be obliterated, and new buildings and sanitary conditions would be given to the working men. Again I have no quarrel with such a suggestion, and no doubt something will have to be done along that line. But may I suggest that there is another fine class of workers to be helped—the people living in the little log cabins up in the northern section of the country. Under present financial and economic conditions they find it impossible to graduate from the settler to the farmer class. I would not be opposed to the spending of those moneys to improve slum conditions, but I would suggest that such a program should include doing away with the slum conditions in rural sections. Such a program could apply to those little places the people in the northern sections call their homes. I have no doubt hon. members will readily realize the necessity, indeed the urgency of the need, for public expenditures in that direction.

When I spoke on the budget I said that the government ought to inaugurate a program whereby annually a sum of $5,000,000 could be spent to allow settlers under the jurisdiction of the different provinces of the Canadian federation to build their homes, and to build also barns and stables which they need so very much at the present time. I am in favour of the back to the land movement, but I believe this scheme could be effected by the government and would help the present rural population. It would allow the farmers' sons, young men who by their training, surroundings and mode of living are familiar with the present situation, to continue in their vocations. In northern Ontario hundreds of people are trying to find new occupations, as a result of the back to the land movement. That may be all right, but our own rural population, the people who did the pioneer work and held the line for the last fifteen or twenty years, think it strange when they see the federal and provincial governments bonusing people going on the land, to the tune of $200 per year, when at the same time the sons of farmers, the young men, have no work. The young men find it impossible to settle next to their fathers. I believe the government should inuagurate a scheme whereby the farmers could build decent homes. I do not ask for luxurious houses, but only for comfortable ones where sanitary conditions would prevail.

Making these suggestions in all sincerity I believe no man could properly accuse me of bringing any political discussions into my observations. I have always given credit where credit is due, and I believe I indicated that fact when only a few moments ago I referred in favourable terms to the Minister of the Interior. Speaking for the town of Timmins, may I say that I hope the Minister of Public Works will find it possible to give to the post office in that fine mining town the seven hundred postal boxes which at the present time are particularly needed. I know that the minister is fully seized of the facts. In two or three years those boxes would pay for themselves, and would, so far as the government is concerned, be revenue producers.

Speaking for my section of the country I must say that at least to some extent conditions are improving. The lumbering operations have been a little more active during the last winter, although prices are not yet what they should be. It is our hope that during the present season they may be increased. The northern development branch of the Ontario government voted this year only the sum of $3,500,000, while the usual vote had been $5,000,000. While we may have a more limited number of unemployed in our section, we still have a great number of them. I suggest that the present public works program does not justify the government in shutting off the relief on July 15. Again, in all sincerity I make an appeal to the government, because a great many of our rural and industrial population in northern Ontario are in the same predicament they were suffering from two or three years ago. The government must carry on its initial public works program; it should enlarge it if possible, but direct relief is still necessary for a section of our population, at least for a certain period of time.

Again I make the fervent request that before this bill is passed the minister should take action, if he has not already taken it—I know some statements have been made—to give the people in northern Ontario the radio service to which they are entitled. I know that if the people in my section of the country were receiving the service they deserve they would be willing to pay not only a two dollar licence fee but more if necessary. But at the present time the Department of Marine is actually losing revenue, it is not collecting more than ten per cent of the radio licences in the north country, and under the present public works program it should be possible to initiate the expenditure of $4,000,000 to $6,000,000 for radio purposes. I was told that this matter had been discussed in the radio committee and that the committee was in favour of bringing to the attention of the Minister of Public Works and of the government this expenditure of five million dollars. I do not think there is a member of this parliament on either side of the house who would criticize such an expenditure. I implicitly believe that it would alleviate the present situation in our part of the country, and that it would be a permanent remedy, and a step in the right direction. Our part of the country has never been sectional in its viewpoint. It has always had sympathy for other parts of Canada, and I trust that this suggestion will receive the attention which it deserves from the Minister of Public Works and the government.

[Mr. Bradette.]

On motion of Mr. Mercier (St. Henri) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.58 p.m.

Wednesday, June 27, 1934

The house met at three o'clock.

FRANCHISE AND ELECTIONS ACT

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BILLS NUMBERS 101 AND 115

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) presented the second report of the special committee to which was referred bill No. 101, respecting the franchise of electors at elections of members of the House of Commons and bill No. 115, respecting the election of members of the House of Commons.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens) moved:

That the first report of the joint committee of both houses on the printing of parliament, presented to the house Tuesday, June 26th, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 124, to amend the Customs Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read a second time?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Now.

Mr. SPEAKER: By consent, Mr. Matthews moves that said bill be now read a second time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sullivan in the chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS: What is the number of the bill?

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister give us some explanation?

Mr. MATTHEWS: The bill is not printed; therefore I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the department has been advised that in consequence of the amendment proposed to the Customs Act a slight amendment will have to be made to the Customs Tariff. Therefore leave will be asked to introduce that bill, which will constitute additional legislation, technically, to what I mentioned the other day, but it is complementary to the act that has just been before the house.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

H. MICHAUD

Mr. POWER:

1. Was Mr. H. Michaud employed on Canadian government vessels as fireman during every navigation season since 1911?
2. Was the said H. Michaud employed in the same capacity on C.G.S. Druid since 1929?
3. Was the said H. Michaud employed on C.G.S. Druid from April 1, 1934, to April 17, 1934?
4. Was he dismissed on this last named date?
5. If so, for what reason?
6. What character was given him on his certificate of discharge?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. No, not so far as the Department of Marine is aware.
2. Yes.
3. Yes.
4 and 5. He was engaged in a temporary capacity only for fitting out this spring.
6. V. G. (very good).

UPKEEP OF BUOYS—ISLAND OF ORLEANS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Who held the contract for the upkeep of buoys in the North channel, Island of Orleans, Quebec, from the month of May, 1931, to the month of May, 1934?
2. What was the contract price?
3. Was the contract awarded after competitive bids had been called?
4. Who were the tenderers?
5. Were complaints lodged against the person who secured the contract at the lowest tender price?
6. Has the contract for the year 1934 to the year 1937 been awarded on a tender basis?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1 and 2. Alphonse Poulin from July 2, 1928, to July 2, 1931, contract price $220 per annum; Charles Poulin from July 2, 1931, to January 2, 1932, informal agreement at rate of $220 per annum; Charles Poulin from January 2, 1932, to July 2, 1934, contract price $150 per annum.

3. Yes.

4. Charles Poulin $150 per annum; Alphonse Poulin, $220 per annum. Three additional tenders were received after the expiry date but all three higher than that of Charles Poulin.

5. No.

6. Tenders were not called. The price is that established by tender in 1931.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

POSTMASTERS DISMISSED—QUEBEC

Mr. BOULANGER:

1. How many postmasters were dismissed in the province of Quebec since the elections of July 28, 1930, to date, on the ground that they had taken an active part in politics?
2. Did O. L. Boulanger, M.P., inform the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice that J. L. A. Tanguay, of Quebec, clerk, grade 4, in the Department of Justice, had taken an active part in politics since his appointment?
3. Did the government have such charges investigated as in the case of the postmasters?
4. If so, what was the result of such investigation?
5. Will the government dismiss the said J. L. A. Tanguay in the same manner as postmasters were dismissed?

Mr. CAHAN: Return tabled herewith.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENTS SUGGESTED BY LABOUR REPRESENTATIVES IN VIEW OF JOINT OPERATING SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, on June 15, on the orders of the day, I asked the Prime Minister if it was the intention of the government to introduce legislation at this session amending the Railway Act in accordance with certain representations and suggestions made by the railway employees. I remember that at that time the Prime Minister told me the Minister of Railways and Canals was not in his seat, but he might be able at a later date to give information about the matter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I intimated to the hon. gentleman that the government did not desire to open the Railway Act, if it could be avoided. There was a special committee; I have not asked the minister what the substance of the discussion was, but I fancy that not having been mentioned it is not intended to open the act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT CONCERNING FURTHER BUSINESS, MORNING SITTINGS, AND PROBABLE TIME OF PROROGATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister in the event of the house not concluding its proceedings this week, what the intention of the government is with respect to sitting on Monday. In that connection I should like also to ask whether it might not be considered advisable at the present time to have morning sittings for the remainder of the present week, and sittings on Saturday, if necessary.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The right hon. gentleman has anticipated what I was about to say. I have been making a survey of the business the house still has to dispose of before prorogation. There will be considerable time taken up, probably, with the two bills considered by the special committee. I cannot speak as to the length of time they will take. Supplementary estimates are still standing with respect to one or two matters of some importance. If the suggestion which I hope may be acted upon is acted upon I anticipate there will be little difficulty about a matter which several hon. gentlemen opposite have brought to the attention of the house in connection with pensions legislation. If the suggestion I have to make is adopted it may require the changing of half a dozen words in one of the statutes, but I apprehend nothing of any material purport. Then, the only other matters are those appearing on the order paper. There is a third reading, there is further consideration of the public works bill and there is a report from the radio committee. From what the chairman said to me yesterday I gather that they are making certain suggestions as to how the service might be improved, but recommend that between now and another session of parliament the matter may be studied by engineers and others connected with the Department of Marine, as well as with the radio broadcasting commission, and that the legislation which expired on the first of May be renewed for another year. That probably would not take very long.

Apart from that I know of nothing which should engage the attention of the house at length, except it be a matter arising out of a motion which I understand the right hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Mackenzie King) may desire to make indicating their continued lack of confidence in the administration. Outside of that I do not see that any length of time will be taken up in the disposition of business. There is, of course, the interim report from the price spreads committee which will have to be considered. I understand that for the moment their sittings are practically concluded, and possibly to-morrow or Friday an interim report will be made by the chairman. If, therefore, we sat on Friday morning at eleven o'clock until one o'clock in the afternoon, and on Saturday morning from eleven o'clock until one o'clock, and sat until the evening, we might possibly be able to conclude our business. I cannot speak as to that. I was about to say, however, that so far as the government is concerned it will endeavour to expedite that arrangement, and if the house thought it desirable I would submit later a resolution providing for meeting to-morrow morning. But in that regard, owing to the committee still sitting, I thought possibly it would not be the desire of the house to do so. But if the house so desires I certainly will submit such a resolution this afternoon. That would obviate the necessity for sitting on Monday. However, I think in view of the circumstances if we cannot finish on Saturday we must endeavour to sit on Monday for part of the day, in any event, to be certain that our business would be concluded for the next day, when we could have prorogation. But if it is the wish of the house the government will use every possible endeavour to dispose of the business by Saturday night.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as the motion I have in mind is concerned, I think it will be easily understood by the country and so cordially approved by everyone—

Mr. BENNETT: I think so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —that I may be able to dispose of it in very short order. I shall try to accommodate myself to the wishes of the government in that respect.

Mr. POWER: May I suggest that we sit from eleven in the evening until at least twelve o'clock on Thursday and Friday.

Mr. BENNETT: I mentioned to my colleagues the desirability of sitting at least until half-past eleven. However, some hon. members have expressed great disapproval of sitting beyond eleven o'clock. I should be glad to make a motion to sit until half-past eleven.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Make it twelve o'clock.

Mr. POWER: Yes, make it twelve o'clock.

Mr. STEVENS: Twelve o'clock.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If we sit in the morning and remain until eleven o'clock at night I say that is all that any reasonable man can be expected to do.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I think we want to be fair. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has taken the same stand every session, and when he does the same thing to-day it is nothing new. He has always contended that we should not sit after eleven o'clock, if we met at eleven in the morning. I thought however that possibly he might be willing to wait until half-past eleven before calling it eleven o'clock, if we were getting along with our business. I shall therefore submit a resolution later in the day providing that the house shall meet to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock, that we shall meet Friday morning at eleven o'clock, that we shall meet on Saturday morning at eleven o'clock and at three o'clock. Possibly we had better provide for a sitting in the evening, having dissolution—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: —having prorogation in mind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If dissolution is in the Prime Minister's mind I might dispense with my speech.

Mr. McINTOSH: The truth must come out.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh well, you never can tell. I have seen willing dissolutions met by an unwilling electorate, and I have seen unwilling dissolutions met by a willing electorate. Then, we will provide in the resolution for meeting on Saturday evening at eight o'clock, in the event of our being unable to prorogue until later in the evening. If that meets with the approval of the house I shall submit a resolution a little later in the day.

UNITED STATES TRADE ZONES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 25, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) asked a question of the government with respect to recent legislation enacted by the United States congress. I can only say to him that of course the government has been advised by the Canadian legation in Washington of the enactment by the congress of the United States of a measure providing for the establishment of foreign trade zones in ports of entry. I have made a short resumé of the bill, which I brought with me and which I shall read.

The legislation is permissive in character, and authorizes the establishment of such zones by local bodies at their own expense under approved federal regulation. The administration of the act is vested in a board, of which the Secretary of Commerce is chairman. The board is authorized to grant permission for the establishment of foreign trade zones located in or adjacent to any port of entry of the United States. Such permission may be granted to either public corporations, including states or their legal subdivisions or agencies, or to private corporations chartered under state law for this purpose. Foreign and domestic merchandise, except such as is prohibited by law, may without being subject to the customs laws of the United States, except as specially provided, be brought into a zone and there stored, repacked, distributed, or mixed with foreign or domestic merchandise. Such merchandise may be exported or carried into Customs territory of the United States, where the foreign merchandise will be subject to any customs duties. The measure prohibits manufacturing or exhibition in the zone.

In that regard I might point out that there was a conference between the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the first view was that there should be exhibitions within the zone, but the final enactment provided that there should be no exhibitions within the zone.

The grantee is to provide and maintain adequate docks, slips, wharves, warehouses, fueling facilities, transportation connections, enclosures to segregate the zone from customs territory, and such other facilities as may be required. These zones would be operated as public utilities, their charges for services to be fair and reasonable, and subject to the general administrative control of the Secretary of Commerce.

The bill as finally passed is under my hand.

I think it only fair in this regard, since I am making this statement, to indicate to the house that the matter is nothing new so far as Canada is concerned. In 1908 the movement received its impetus in recent years in Canada from L. D. Taylor, now mayor of the city of Vancouver. He advocated that the city of Vancouver be made a free port. In 1920, twelve years later, the Vancouver board of trade appointed a committee to investigate the problem, and that committee unanimously recommended that a free trade area or free port be established in Vancouver. Mr. H. H. Stevens, who was then member for Vancouver, took up the matter with the then Prime Minister, Mr. Arthur Meighen, but no action was taken. Some consideration was given, however, to sending a commission to visit Hamburg and other European ports, but it ended there.

Then the Montreal harbour board, backed by the Montreal board of trade, recommended a free port system for Montreal around 1919 and 1920. In 1930, only four years ago, the Montreal harbour commission in its annual report revived the discussion, and urged the establishment of a free port in the Montreal harbour area. Similar suggestions were made from Halifax, and in this house on the nineteenth of March, 1929, Mr., now the Hon. Murray MacLaren, referred to the desirability of establishing free ports on the Atlantic seaboard.

A list of free ports throughout the world, so far as I have been able to ascertain from the inquiries I have made, includes Barcelona, Bremen, Copenhagen, Danzig, Gdynia, the new port established by Poland; Genoa, Hamburg, Saloniki and Stockholm. Hamburg, of course, is the most outstanding of those I have named.

There is a rather curious circumstance connected with this. Perhaps those who recall the biography of Sir Alexander Galt will remember that in 1860 he provided for the establishment of free ports at the two extremities of the province. One was to be at Gaspe, to care for the fishing business in the lower St. Lawrence, and the area was to include the town of Gaspe and the district around it and also the Labrador coast as far into the ocean as the straits of Belle Isle. The other area was to be established at Sault Ste. Marie, comprising the town of Sault Ste. Marie and the district west of it. Permission was to be given to import free goods, just as was provided in the legislation recently passed by the congress of the United States. It also provided for the calling of vessels at Gaspe and matters of that kind. Owing, however, to the difficulties in connection with smuggling and the complaints that were made that it had facilitated smuggling, in the end the matter was abandoned, and nothing further has been done except as I have suggested. I dare say there are members of the house, in view of the interest that has been indicated, who have read Foreign Trade Principles and Practices, published in 1930 by Huebner and Kramer, and there is a short extract from their work which might be of value. Without taking up time to read it at length, I will place it on Hansard, if that is the wish of the house, in order that hon. members may have the benefit of it:

Extract from Huebner and Kramer—"Foreign Trade Principles and Practices," New York, 1930

The establishment of free zones at American ports would undoubtedly stimulate the reexport trade, and they would probably also benefit foreign trade as a whole to some extent, but their importance should not be overestimated. Domestic exports and imports for consumption have grown and can continue to advance even though free zones are not established, for they are influenced primarily by the many factors, other than customs regulations, that have been discussed throughout this volume and they would at most be affected but secondarily by a free zone policy. The full effect upon reexports of foreign merchandise from the United States, which is the primary purpose of free zones, cannot be forecast with precision. The experience of foreign countries is not conclusive, for the reexports of some foreign free ports are very large, while those of others are small. The reexport trade of any port depends in part upon important factors quite aside from relief from customs formalities and a rigid system of drawbacks. Both reexports and direct vessel to vessel transshipment depend partly upon the geographic location of American ports with respect to foreign sources of supply and foreign markets.

Attainment of full effect of the free zone policy upon ocean shipping, likewise, depends upon unknown contingencies. Vessels discharging or transshipping cargo within a free zone would undoubtedly be relieved very largely from customs formalities, but many of them will probably be loaded with much cargo intended for domestic consumption. If they discharge this cargo at piers not located within the free zone, the usual customs regulations will apply. Will they discharge cargo both within the free zone and elsewhere? Will they discharge all of their cargo within the free zone? Or will they discharge all of it at the regular piers of the port, the merchandise intended for the free zone then to be transferred to the free zone?

Certain practical difficulties are encountered in the establishment of free zones at American ports. It is not feasible merely to set apart a section of a port that is already occupied by shipping, foreign trading, manufacturing, and other concerns variously engaged in foreign and domestic commerce. In any case, free zones will occasion much new construction. Suitable areas must be located and capital must be provided for the construction of warehouses, terminal facilities, railroad connections, factories, bunker fuel facilities, etc., and it may be necessary in some instances to dredge suitable channels and harbours. The keen rivalry between American ports, moreover, complicates the application of a free zone policy at some ports to the exclusion of others. The selection of a few is met by charges of discrimination, while the establishment of free zones at many ports would multiply construction and maintenance costs and weaken the probability of attaining certain of the benefits expected from a free port policy. In the latter case efforts and cargoes would be needlessly scattered.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I thank the Prime Minister for his very full explanation.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with very great interest to the remarks of the right hon. leader of the government, and I can conceive of no method which would do so much to stimulate the foreign trade of this country as that to which he refers. The free port of Hamburg, of course, is well known. There you find an enclosed area in one section of the port which is called the free port. It is walled and closed by gates, which when opened permit vessels to go in and pass out, and goods may be stored in the large two storied sheds provided for the purpose, opened, repacked and exported to other countries. If we had a similar arrangement in this country, a free port say on the Pacific coast, one in Montreal, and one in Halifax, I am assured it would largely aid in the extension of our foreign commerce, and I would recommend to the Prime Minister that the matter should receive very careful consideration. I believe there are large possibilities in it which should not be neglected.

Hon. PETER VENIOT (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion has been made that a free port be established on the Pacific coast at Vancouver, one at Montreal, and one at Halifax. Halifax and Saint John are our two winter ports on the Atlantic coast, and I would add to the suggestion that has been made that both these ports should be made free ports and that no discrimination be made as between the two Atlantic ports.

Mr. DUFF: If we had free trade we would not need free ports.

MONTREAL BRIDGE TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, during the session of 1930 the Hon. R. B. Bennett, then leader of the opposition, speaking on the question of the Caughnawaga bridge bill in the House of Commons said in Hansard, 1930, vol. III, page 2794:

> A bridge is nothing more than a part of the king's highway projected over a stream or a gully or whatever it may be, and that highway in principle is free for use to all the king's subjects. The toll idea is very much exploded as far as the general use of highways is concerned, and has been for years.

About a month ago a large number of petitions was tendered to the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) asking, not for the abolition of a toll on bridges, but for a reduction of tolls on the harbour bridge and the Victoria bridge, as this had been promised by the minister himself previous to his election. I wish to know from him if he has now a report to give to the house on this matter in view of the fact that he told the house he would soon have a report to make on the harbour bridge and the Victoria bridge.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I will answer because the question is directed to an observation that I made in this house, and was intended for that purpose or not at all. What I said on that occasion I repeat. I have no doubt about the desirability of highways being free, and bridges are but highways, but it well may be that those who have control of that matter have concluded that another policy may be better adapted to their conditions. When the government of Quebec made it a toll bridge they did it for reasons which undoubtedly seemed good to them, and it is not my province to question the soundness of their judgment in that regard.

With respect to the harbour bridge in Montreal, I think the hon. member as a party man would be rather sorry he mentioned it because he realizes that it costs this country several hundred thousand dollars a year, and the question of tolls was a matter of contract in connection with the construction of the bridge. The city of Montreal and the province of Quebec are both making contributions to that annually to enable the deficit for that bridge to be met, and any action by this government to free it from tolls would undoubtedly, unless some arrangement were arrived at, release the guarantors from their obligations and release the payment of bonuses. Therefore, we are not free to do as we would like until such time as adjustments have been made both with the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec.

Mr. DUPUIS: May I say to the Prime Minister that both bridges were in the same condition previous to the elections. He came into my riding of Laprairie-Napierville and promised that.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no.

Mr. DUPUIS: He promised to reduce the tolls on both bridges.

Mr. BENNETT: They have been reduced; the tolls on the harbour bridge have been reduced by consent.

Mr. DUPUIS: But not enough.

COMMEMORATIVE STAMPS

On the orders of the day.

Hon. PETER VENIOT (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé). I understand he is unavoidably absent so perhaps my question will be placed on Hansard to be answered to-morrow. I should like to know if the Post Office Department has given any consideration to the issuing of a commemorative stamp in connection with the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of New Brunswick.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): A new stamp has been issued but I should like this matter to stand until the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) makes a statement.

WINDSOR RADIO STATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) whether a new licence has been issued to the radio station in Windsor following the order in council passed some considerable time ago which provided for a lease between the radio commission and this station.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I think an arrangement has been made, but I have received no definite report from the radio commission.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. EULER: Would the minister say if it is the intention of the commission to carry out that agreement after the close of the session?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot answer for the commission at the present time.

BANK OF CANADA—BILINGUAL CURRENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the "Devoir" of Montreal, dated June 26, 1934, publishes a report of the evening celebration of the St. Jean Baptiste society, in the course of which the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) spoke. The report states that certain persons in the audience at Park Lafontaine wanted to know why the Minister of Marine had not voted on the amendment with reference to bilingual currency. Hecklers prevented him from replying. I offer him an opportunity to reply in the house, does he accept?

Hon. Mr. DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, my views on the question are well known, since I am a member of the government, and that the bill, such as approved by the committee, constitutes a government measure. My hon. friend is perfectly aware why I was unable to be present; I was called elsewhere on business, and I may add that the part of the report to which he refers is not in accordance with the facts.

BANK OF CANADA

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) (for the Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 19, to incorporate the Bank of Canada.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the house passes upon the third reading of what is to my mind the most important legislation of the present session, and having due regard for the desire manifested to expedite the business of the house, I wish to state as briefly, as concisely and as succinctly as I can the reasons why I believe this bill should be referred back to the committee of the whole house in order to amend it in certain vital, essential and fundamental ways. Before I enter upon the consideration of the vital objections which I have to this bill as it now stands, I desire to make a few observations from the report of that great economic body, the Macmillan committee on finance and industry which sat in Great Britain in 1931. The following appears on page 240 of the report of that committee:

—we are convinced that the Bank of England ought to be transformed into a public corporation.

My next quotation is from section 280, as follows:

The monetary system of this country must be a managed system—

And again:

—by individuals placed in a position of unchallengeable independence.

The next is from section 316, as follows:

In this case also the vicious circle is now complete.

And again:

The decline of new enterprise has reacted adversely on profits and prices, and the low level of profits and prices stands in the way of new enterprise. It is for this reason that some of us think that in the domestic field it may be necessary to invoke governmental enterprise to break the vicious circle.

And again from section 148:

In the third place, it is not necessary that the volume of note issues should continue to be regulated, as it is now, by reference to the amount of gold held in reserve.

In sections 71 to 74 inclusive the committee states that since the bankers as a whole under banking practice maintain a cash proportion of the profit of roughly ten per cent of the cash held in reserve, the bulk of the bank deposits arise out of the actions of the banks themselves, for by granting loans, allowing overdrafts and purchasing securities, a bank creates a credit in its books which is treated as the equivalent of a deposit of money. My next quotation is from section 47 of the addendum, which is to be found on page 203. It reads:

The theory that governmental expenditure in the promotion of public enterprise and social service is restricted by the accumulated savings available for investment is erroneous. When governments distribute wages by financing public enterprise with national currency and credit, the volume of capital for investment is increased.

My next reference is to section 24, which states that if governments pursue an inflationary policy, i.e., meet expenditures not out of revenue or loans, but by the issue of paper money, or the creation of credit in a national banking system, forces are set in motion increasing profits and wages and additional spending arises.

I shall now proceed very briefly to a consideration of the fundamental principles which may underlie central banking. One could easily quote the principles as given by Kisch and Elkin, by Ireton, by Sprague or any of the other great authorities on central banking. I should like to refer very briefly to what was said by the Prime Minister when speaking in this house on February 22, as reported on page 838 of Hansard. He said:

The central bank cannot accept deposits for interest. It will be the repository of the reserves of the chartered banks. In the very nature of things it will discharge the functions of the financial or fiscal agent of the Dominion of Canada; it will be the note issuing authority of the dominion; it will create and issue legal tender; it will determine the extent to which rediscount shall take place; it will determine the rediscount rate from time to time. If at moments there is the thought that the creation of this institution is intended to destroy the chartered banks of Canada, that is an erroneous view, for the chartered banks will still be the depository of the savings of the people and the central bank is not intended to transact that class of business.

Along with that statement I should like to place upon Hansard some extracts from the report of our own Macmillan commission. These have been referred to already and are to be found on page 4186 of Hansard. The first is:

In the first place, from a national point of view, the central bank, within the limits imposed by law and by its capacities, should endeavour to regulate credit and currency in the best interests of the economic life of the nation and should so far as possible control and defend the external value of the national monetary unit. In the second place, from the international point of view, the central bank by wise and timely cooperation with similar institutions in other countries, should seek, so far as may lie within the scope of monetary action, to mitigate by its influence fluctuations in the general level of economic activity. . . .

The next is from paragraph 207 of the report, and reads:

A central bank is at the same time an instrument and a force. As an instrument it is the means by which the state—which must necessarily retain ultimate sovereignty in matters affecting the currency—can give effect to the national policy. . . .

The principles which underlie or are supposed to underlie the legislation contained in Bill No. 19 are set out in the preamble of the bill, and these were referred to the other day by my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) when he was speaking on one of the amendments moved from this side. May I very briefly recapitulate the essential principles of the preamble of this legislation. I do not believe that there is a single member of this house who will quarrel with the preamble; there may not be in it such extensive provisions as some of us might desire, but as far as they go I think they will meet with the commendation of every member of the house. The principles are these, first:

To regulate credit and currency in the best interests of the economic life of the nation.

My first submission is that this legislation, which transfers to a private profit-making corporation, the complete control, with very slight governmental control, over the credit and currency of the nation, is not such as is likely to regulate that credit and currency in the best interests of the economic life of the nation. The second principle is:

To control and protect the external value of the national monetary unit.

It might be assumed by hon. members that this institution would be helpful in assisting us to extend the value of the national monetary unit, but my personal conviction is that when we transfer to this private organization, this private corporation which possibly may consist only of 2,000 Canadian citizens, assets which I shall describe, we are not doing anything that will enhance the value of our national monetary unit in other countries. The third principle set out in the preamble is:

To mitigate by its influence fluctuations in the general level of production, trade, prices and employment.

Again, I doubt whether the organization of a private, profit-making central bank can achieve these results. The general question of dealing with production, the general question of dealing with trade, the general question of dealing with prices, the general question of dealing with employment is deliberately avoided by this legislation, as it was deliberately avoided by the Canadian Macmillan commission, and I submit this afternoon that, despite the brilliant report which was produced in England in 1931 under the chairmanship of that distinguished Scottish jurist Lord Macmillan, the Canadian Macmillan commission's report was a most disappointing one to the majority of Canadians. There was in that report no comprehensive effort to review our industrial fabric, our financial fabric, our economic fabric, and the only true conclusions of the report were in the first place to advocate a central bank in Canada, which we had already determined to do before the commission was ever appointed, and in the second place the suggestion with regard to legislation affecting rural credits. To be fair, there is in the preamble a reservation:

—so far as may be possible within the scope of monetary action.

[Mr. I. Mackenzie.]

Then the last principle of the preamble is this, and it is very important, because I must steadfastly submit that it is not being carried out by this legislation:

Generally to promote the economic and financial welfare of the dominion.

I believe that this legislation will do something in that regard; I said so the other day. I believe that if we accept the principle of private ownership this legislation may be an improvement on the financial organization we have had in the last twenty years under the Finance Act. But I do believe that a system of directing, controlling and operating the credit of Canada for the public need and not for private profit would be much more advantageous than the bill which is before us this afternoon for third reading.

Now, without delaying the house I wish very briefly to review the history of this legislation since it has been before us for consideration.

On February 22nd the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) moved the following resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to incorporate a central bank in Canada, and to provide for the appointment and salaries of the officers and staff of the bank and the appointment and fees of the directors. . . .

I wish very briefly, in justice to the other side of the question, to review the arguments which were used by the Minister of Finance when he submitted to the house the resolution preceding the bill and, in the second place, when he submitted the bill itself. As reported at page 825 of Hansard, he said:

Admitting this fact however, is not to be taken as implying that our banking structure has deteriorated in recent years, making it necessary to supplement it.

And again:

Coming to the main features of the bill itself, I shall indicate them as briefly as possible. As at present proposed the Bank of Canada is to be a privately owned institution. . . .

At page 827 he is reported as follows:

Clearly, however, the bank should not be subject to dictation by the government, for at times the exigencies of public finance might not be wholly in harmony with banking policies that might be considered wise and essential in the general public interest.

He quotes from the Macmillan report at page 98—and I am trying now to repeat to the house the argument used by the Minister of Finance and subsequently repeated by the Prime Minister himself in favour of private ownership as against public ownership or control. As reported at page 829 of Hansard, the Minister of Finance quoted from the Macmillan report as follows:

A central bank is responsible for the control of the volume of credit and the maintenance of the stability of the value of the currency. This responsibility connotes that the bank should be granted the sole right of issuing currency (other than coin) for it would be intolerable that a central bank's policy should be hampered by the action of other issuing authorities in a country. The experience of other countries has shown conclusively that the right of issue is not indispensable in assuring adequate profits to commercial banks.

In that same debate—and at the moment I wish to emphasize this point—my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), in his contribution to the discussion, laid down what has been the policy of hon. gentlemen on this side of the house and which he enunciated on February 27, 1933. I wish to place on Hansard the reference made on that occasion to central banking, so as to indicate to the house that the amendment which I propose to move on this occasion is paralleled by the statement made by the leader of the Liberal party at that time in the House of Commons. He said:

The Liberal party believes that credit is a public matter, not of interest to bankers only, but of direct concern to the average citizen. It stands for the immediate establishment——of a properly constituted national central bank, to perform the functions of rediscount, and the control of currency issue, considered in terms of public need. A central bank is necessary to determine the supply of currency in relation to the domestic, social and industrial requirements of the Canadian people; and also to deal with the problems of international commerce and exchange.

And this was before the commission ever came here.

My submission to the house this afternoon is that the legislation which we are now about to pass and send to another place for consideration does not carry out the fundamental principles of a central bank as outlined by my leader on February 27, 1933. I wish to follow very briefly the remarks made by the Minister of Finance when the measure was up for second reading on March 8 of the present year. He referred to the resolutions at Genoa in 1932 and at Brussels in 1920, in support of his own plea for private ownership. Let me quote the resolution which he read to the house, passed at the International Financial Conference held at Brussels in 1920:

Banks, and especially banks of issue, should be freed from political pressure and should be conducted solely on the lines of prudent finance.

On January 22 the International Economic conference reported as follows:

Banks, and especially banks of issue, should be free from political pressure and should be conducted solely on lines of prudent finance. In countries where there is no central bank of issue one should be established.

And again:

The conference considers it essential in order to provide an international gold standard with the necessary mechanism for satisfactory working, that independent central banks, with the requisite powers and freedom to carry out an appropriate currency and credit policy, should be created in such developed countries as have not at present an adequate central banking institution.

Then the minister quoted from Kisch and Elkin and several other authorities in support of his contention. Let me give one or two quotations from his observations. As reported on page 1297 of Hansard of this year the Minister of Finance said:

Furthermore, a bank controlled by the government would inevitably be subject to sectional pressure and influence, a pull and haul from different parts of the country for certain special consideration and treatment.

Again he said:

Now, there is one other objection. I know that many hon. gentlemen will not agree with me, but I wish to say with all the seriousness at my command that it is my firm conviction that we cannot successfully operate a government central bank in Canada which is subject to patronage.

Later on in the same debate, during the evening he is reported on page 1299 in these words:

In its most extreme form this weakness or danger of public ownership is, in my judgment, illustrated by the case of a government which, unable or unwilling to finance itself by other methods, leans too heavily upon the central bank, forcing the latter to make excessive advances and usually bringing about financial disaster both for the bank and for the community.

Then he outlines the three fundamental objections to private ownership, the first being this:

If it is to have the sole right to issue and control legal tender paper currency it is felt that it would be inappropriate to give such right to an institution not owned by the state.

The second is this, as reported on page 1300:

The second objection is based on the undesirability of allowing excessive profits to accrue to private shareholders.

And the third is as follows:

The final and perhaps the greatest objection which can be lodged against private management is that the bank might be dominated by bankers and their interests or by other financial interests.

The last quotation which has already been referred to in these debates and which I wish to place on Hansard is one from Sir Thomas White which will be found in the report of the Macmillan commission. This is what he said:

> It was suggested during the course of our hearings that political influence might possibly affect unfavourably the administration of the Finance Act because the Treasury Board which authorizes advances and fixes rates of interest payable thereon is composed of members of the government. With regard to this I have only to say that if by "political influence" is meant partisan or improper influence not a shred of evidence has been adduced before the commission in support of such a suggestion.

This bill after its second reading was referred to the select standing committee on banking and commerce, and in that committee several amendments were moved by my hon. friends to my left and several by those of us who belong to the Liberal party. May I very briefly recapitulate the amendments which we moved there and which we subsequently moved in committee of the whole house? I had the honour personally of moving:

> That before the committee considers a single clause or detail of Bill No. 19, the committee record itself as being of opinion that this bank should be owned and controlled by and for the people of the Dominion of Canada.

That motion the committee on banking and commerce in its wisdom rejected. Subsequently I moved a resolution which gave to the Minister of Finance authority to call in shares at a valuation not exceeding par; in other words, our second amendment was a contingent public ownership in the discretion of the administration of the day. Then the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) moved a very comprehensive amendment giving to the government, to the Canadian people, absolute and definite control, not necessarily with ownership, over the new Bank of Canada, but the committee on banking and commerce, once again, rejected that amendment.

Then the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth moved that the deputy minister of finance who, at his instigation and suggestion, was made one of the directors, without voting power, it is true, be given the privilege of suspensory veto over the proceedings, deliberations and conduct of the privately appointed directorate.

Then the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Raymond) moved a resolution, which I had great pleasure in supporting, appointing a Canadian national as governor of this new Bank of Canada. At that time the Prime Minister asked the bankers who were present with, as somebody said, their backs to the wall, whether they thought Canadian bankers were competent to regulate and manage the Bank of Canada. I think only one answered. Since the Prime Minister spoke in the house the other day when we were considering this very question of public control, and of a Canadian governor, Sir John Aird, who has been fairly close to some members of the administration, has come out with a public statement repudiating the assertion of the Prime Minister that no Canadian is fit for the exalted position of governor of the Bank of Canada. I wish in a word, without elaboration, to endorse the argument so well advanced the other day by the hon. member for Beauharnois and to repeat what I said then that we need to have a Canadian as governor of this Bank of Canada. We need a Canadian who knows the complexities of our life, the peculiar problems of the province of British Columbia and of the spacious prairies that are facing tremendous agricultural questions at the present time, who knows old Ontario, the grand old province of Quebec and the peculiar problems of the provinces down by the sea. I suggest with emphasis and earnestness to the Prime Minister that no man coming from any other land, no matter how well qualified he may be in the technicalities of central banking, can provide the proper and adequate service in our own central bank that one of our own Canadian citizens could do. I repeat: So far as we on this side are concerned we shall offer no objection to the introduction of all the technical advisers considered necessary from the Bank of England or the Bank of France or any other central bank to advise the Canadian government for one year, or, if necessary, for two years in the intricacies and technicalities of central banking.

Then there was an amendment, in which I heartily concur, moved by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) both in the committee on banking and commerce and on the floor of this house. I can do no more than support the glowing and inspiring address given in this chamber the other evening by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) when he said that we should maintain not only our sovereignty in regard to credit in this our native land, but the sovereignty of the French and English speaking peoples in every nook and corner of this dominion. As a comparatively newcomer to Canada, only twenty years ago now, I have the greatest veneration for its early and romantic history and when we consider the first one hundred and fifty years of our splendid pioneers; when we consider the celebration we are to have in a few weeks time, it is only fit that there should be in every mind in Canada the splendid efforts and worthy endeavours of those pioneers in settlement and in government who have given us the house in which to-day in this country we dwell.

Then we come to the question of control. When I moved in this house the other day for public ownership, the Prime Minister made the following objection. He said that in the first place this is against the experience of the world. Well, I am not so very certain that the experience of the world is a safe guiding factor at this time. If he is going to go by the experience of the world in regard to control of banking institutions, is he going to go by the experience of the world in regard to those crazy dictatorships which are being set up in every country in Europe? I suggest that we should preserve for the Canadian people full control over credit, over currency and over note issue; that is the proper course to follow, instead of taking the experience of some crazy nations of Europe which have gone wrong in matters of finance as well as in matters of government.

Then the right hon. gentleman repeated the point with regard to political control. I think Sir Thomas White has answered that, and I think I have answered it sufficiently. He went on to say that under this legislation the profits accrue to the people. Mr. Speaker, under the bill as drawn up at present we have a capitalization of $5,000,000 and an interest rate of four and a half per cent, which means an ostensible profit of $225,000. But may I point out, as I did once before, that when you support this legislation you support the transfer, in the first place, of $70,000,000 worth of Finance Act gold which at the present moment belongs to the people of the Dominion of Canada, to a privately owned, profit making corporation. In the second place you are going to transfer later on $40,000,000 worth of bank gold, less the amount the banks require for external obligations; that is to be transferred to a privately owned, profit making corporation. Then, on the day this bank opens its doors for business, you are going to create $63,000,000 worth of new, three per cent securities; you are going to hand these over to this new, privately owned, profit making institution, and the taxpayers of the Dominion of Canada every year will have to pay $1,800,000 in interest. Bigger than all these things, however, is the sovereign control over note issue, which belongs to parliament and to the people, and you are handing that over to a privately owned, profit making corporation under the legislation which we are asked to support at the present time.

Our resolution with regard to public ownership has been rejected. Our resolution with regard to public control has been rejected, and this afternoon I submit in the strongest possible way that this government, repudiated and rejected, inferentially if not actually, by the people, has not a moral right or a moral mandate in the eleventh hour of its life to pass this legislation, which will bring about a complete transformation of the financial organization of the Dominion of Canada. I say the government have no right to do that on the basis of private ownership without first of all having the principle of private ownership endorsed by the free will of the Canadian people. So, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I am endeavouring to give expression, in the first place to those who believe in the principle of public ownership, and in the second place to those who believe without debating the merits or demerits of public ownership, that a rigid, definite and well defined public control is necessary in regard to this institution. Therefore I submit the following amendment:

> That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power so to amend it as to provide that the Bank of Canada shall be either,—
> (a) Government owned and controlled;
> (c) Government controlled.

That is seconded by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). Under this amendment, when the bill is referred back to the committee of the whole, we will have the right to reconsider sections 9 and 17, which deal in the first place with the principle of public ownership and in the second place with the principle of public control of this bank. When I review this legislation as it now stands I am reminded of a quotation from the 32nd chapter of Isaiah, as follows:

> The instruments also of the churl are evil; he deviseth wicked devices to destroy the poor with lying words, even when the needy speaketh right.
> But the liberal deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand.

Believing as I do, Mr. Speaker, in public ownership and control of this great national financial institution I am pleading with this house this afternoon to devise liberal things, and so far as we on this side of the house are concerned, by liberal things we shall stand.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Just why once more, in dealing with a matter of profound importance to the Canadian people, it is thought desirable to interject a note of pure politics into the discussion on the third reading, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say. The hon. gentleman himself must be best able to answer that. Everything that he said this afternoon he has said at least three times before this session. In most cases this is the fourth time he has brought forward his arguments, and in one instance it is the fifth time to my knowledge that he has made the statement.

Mr. McINTOSH: Repetition makes for success.

Mr. BENNETT: It is suggested that repetition makes for success, but that is a theory that has been exploded long since.

Mr. McINTOSH: No. It is a psychological truth.

Mr. BENNETT: It was found to be so by those who met their fate at the end of a rope.

I do not propose, therefore, to traverse what has been said this afternoon, but I do desire to point to the second observation made by the hon. gentleman. He quoted from the Macmillan report in England, and the last quotation he commended to us was that the institution should be of unquestioned independence.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Unchallenged independence.

Mr. BENNETT: Who, listening to the speech this afternoon, would think that any Bank of Canada could be independent that was under the control of a government of which the hon. gentleman was a member? All you had to do was listen to the extreme statements that were expressed and then ask yourselves whether the Canadian people dare trust their central bank to such control. That is the answer, together with what has taken place in this house since this bill came back from the committee.

I have said that I commenced my study of this problem from the standpoint of believing that it would be desirable to have the bank publicly owned. When I studied the matter; when I observed what had been written with respect to other countries, notably in Kisch's book; when I realized and recognized what has transpired in this country with respect to political considerations; when I reviewed, as I did carefully, the appointments that have been made to the various commissions of this country; when I saw patronage in all activities with respect to our publicly owned institutions; when I saw the effect of such appointments, and when I saw the governmental intervention with respect to some matters of business that were dealt with by commissions in this country, I determined that if we were to preserve the unchallenged independence of this bank we must do something more than merely leave it to public ownership. Then, having decided that this was the correct thing to do, the next problem was to ensure governmental control. If one looks at the amendment that has been proposed one finds these words:

—with instructions that they have power so to amend it as to provide that the Bank of Canada shall be either (a) government owned and controlled; (b) government owned, or (c) government controlled.

I have pointed out to this house, as I did to the committee—and I will not take time to do so further—that in the very inception of this bank it comes into being with provisional directors. Then it must appoint a governor, a deputy governor and an assistant deputy governor. Those are to be selected by the governor in council, in order that governmental control may be ensured with respect to the management and adminstration of the bank. In order to promote political views certain objections were taken to this provision. They were purely political objections, narrowing and limiting the power to appoint beyond that which is usual in such cases. They would not be thought of otherwise; they were merely an endeavour to create prejudice and passion with respect to these appointments. Every man who has read the debates, every man who has read what transpired in this house knows that to be so.

Then you proceed to the next point. Having created your organization, and having your directors provisionally appointed, they are called upon to select from among their numbers directors who will be permanent, retiring in rotation—so many at the end of two years, so many at the end of five and again at the end of seven years, in order that the continuity of policy may be maintained, and that the bank may function free from interference and free from objection by those who endeavour to discharge through it their ideas of political patronage. That being done, the next question is: How shall the bank function? The bank begins to function by taking over the issue of money, by taking over the obligations under the Finance Act, for each note issue, and receives a bond on which interest is paid. Hon. gentlemen opposite know well that these bonds are merely bookkeeping entries by which three per cent is paid to the bank, and by the bank back to the government. That is so well understood that one wonders just what extreme views are in the minds of hon. members who in their statements overlook making any observations of that character when speaking to this house. Further, when the bank has been established, and when the security has been put up to care for the note issue, and when it has taken over the gold from the Department of Finance, and when it has taken over the gold from the banks, why was it not indicated by hon. members that the purpose is not to enable the bank to do what it pleases? The bank has at once assumed, under this statute, the responsibility for the maintenance of a 25 per cent gold coverage for all note issues made by the bank, and not only for that which is covered but as well for that which is uncovered. That reserve must be kept in gold and silver; at least 25 per cent must be kept in gold. The effect of this legislation is to transfer to the central bank the custody of the gold which formerly was in the Department of Finance under the control of the minister and in the banks under their private control. Why is this done? In order that they may be able, when the gold standard is once more effective in this country to make transfers by bullion exchange, when there will no longer be free coinage of gold in this or any other country in the world. There will be that exchange of bullion gold for external purposes, and to the extent of not less than 14,000 units, to enable the controlling of foreign trade to be carried on. Is it better that that should be subject to political patronage, or under a control that is free from it?

When it was said by Sir Thomas White that there was no political patronage in connection with the Finance Act, I ask how could there be? How could there be? Every man who knows anything with respect to it knows that in the beginning of the year a resolution was passed which enabled the banks of this country to receive from the Department of Finance legal tender or dominion notes up to a certain margin of credit based upon the deposit of securities. In most instances the securities were the bonds of the Dominion of Canada, and in some instances those of the provinces. They were in known percentages of the advances made. That is why. How could there be any political interference there? One need only look at the bank returns issued from month to month, and particularly at the end of the months, to see the extent to which legal tenders were held under the Finance Act, and to realize that these were secured for window dressing purposes, and nothing else.

Then, having the construction of the bank, carrying on its business as I have indicated, to issue notes and to maintain external trade and external balances to meet our obligations, the question is: To what extent is the action of the directors controlled by the governor of the bank? After all the governor of the bank is the principal official of the institution. He is the one who, under the statute, is primarily responsible for its administration. The act provides, as has been pointed out, that no resolution or no bylaw passed by the directors or by the executive shall have force or effect until it has been approved or concurred in by the governor or, in his absence, by the deputy governor. So we have removed the bank from purely directorial control, and we have placed it in the hands of the person who, by common consent with respect to central banks must always occupy the primary position and must be responsible for concurring in or agreeing with the action taken by the directors or the executive committee.

And more than that, the other day it was said that the government should be represented on the board. When the bill was introduced the minister indicated that amendments either in committee or during the progress of the bill through the house would be carefully considered, from whatever source they may be suggested, and that if they met with the approval of the government they would be incorporated in the bill. In other words, there was no pride of authorship to stand in the way of accepting suggestions which might be made which, in the opinion of the government, would improve the measure. At one time the government was of the opinion that it might meet the situation by having the Minister of Finance a member of the board of directors, without a vote. But on analysis it was realized that that would introduce a factor which might not be in the best interests of the country as a whole, whereupon the government accepted the amendment by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), whereby the deputy minister becomes a member of the board, without a vote. So that there will be continuous communication between the government on the one hand and the bank on the other. Public business will be conducted as it should be by the bank, as the fiscal agent of the dominion, in a manner that is satisfactory to the Department of Finance and to the government. On the other hand the government will be fully advised of the steps taken from time to time to deal with problems affecting the various industries of this country through credit control. In every particular there shall be that measure of cooperation between the bank and the government which will ensure its success. Again the governor is given further power.

As we said the other day, he has the power of veto with respect to any transaction affecting the welfare of the institution.

I shall not further occupy the time of the house. I am not going in any sense to take up the time in these closing days of a session of parliament to discuss this matter further. The government has given the measure its best consideration and attention, and has looked into every phase of the central bank problem. We believe we are placing on the statute books a central bank bill which is as good as if not better than any such legislation in any other country of the world. It is not only my judgment that that is so, but that is the judgment of others as well. We have ensured that there shall be no political patronage, and that the bank is not liable to become a medium for political patronage. I am not now charging either one party or another party, but I am simply dealing with the frailties of human nature, the pressure which cannot be resisted, which never has been resisted, and which never will be resisted, namely to yield, for purposes all too apparent, to the glamour of their supporters or those who see in this particular course, something which would be of advantage to them.

Just think for a moment of what transpired in this country from 1922 until 1930. It happened that in those years hon. gentlemen opposite were in power—but that is not the point I am making. What I am about to describe was not as a result of their being in power. Look at the combinations of capital in this country; look at the mergers, every one of which has brought disaster to the country and loss to the investor. Why? Because you had a condition prevailing in which there was no credit control, none whatever. Everyone knows that. There was no credit control at all. Look at the borrowings under the Finance Act for the purpose of clearing up transactions at the end of the month. Look at what transpired in this country and the ruin that was brought on people who bought stocks in these amalgamated enterprises between 1922 and 1930. I am not blaming the government of the day for it. But I can say they saw it being done and did not stop it. And what effective control did the banks exercise?

But here we have the machinery at least whereby a sound governor, with proven experience in matters of finance, is appointed for the purpose of supervising the administration of the bank. What is more, the hon. gentleman said that he did not know about the experience of the world being of value.

[Mr. Bennett.]

He talked about the crazy countries of Europe. Well, the Bank of France is not crazy. Those who know the gentleman, Mr. de Retzke, who has had control of the economic policies of that bank during the last few years, know that he is not crazy, and there are those who would not suggest that those responsible for the policies of the Bank of England were crazy, and they are part of Europe. Both those banks are privately owned but government controlled banks, and there has never been an occasion when the Bank of France or the Bank of England and the government have failed by cooperation to work out a common plan. It is true it cost $100,000,000 of the taxpayers' money in France to assist the Bank of France in connection with the transactions that took place after England went off the gold standard, but that is neither here nor there in connection with the general principle.

I can only submit as the last word, because the matter has been covered by the Minister of Finance and by others, and by discussions in the committee and discussions in the house, that we have here a measure which we submit to this country with pride. It is a measure which we believe will meet the very purpose described in the preamble. This institution will at least be free from that political control that has marred the efficiency of many publicly created bodies in Canada and elsewhere, and the difficulties that have been experienced in connection with publicly owned enterprises, and I could name them without number, here at least will be subjected to control.

One great thing we can say, that this institution with a body of shareholders, with a privately created directorate, will be controlled through government to an extent that no other privately owned central bank is controlled either in France or Great Britain or elsewhere. We confidently believe that freed from political control, freed from the evils of patronage and with the merit determined by experience of those who are engaged to manage the bank, it will function as an institution that will discharge the obligations for which it was created and thereby bring improved conditions to the Canadian people.

If I believed that there was any method by which you could create this bank and free it from the claims of the five factors that I mentioned the other day—politics, what is its politics?—race, what is its racial origin? —religion, what is its religion?—occupation? and where does it live?—are these to be the factors that govern and determine the fortunes of the central bank?

The hon. gentleman referred to the incidental effect of recent elections. I ask him if he has read the appeals that were made. Has he read them, and did he understand them? Is that the basis upon which a central bank is to function? Is it to function upon the question of religion. Is it to function upon the question of race? Is it to function upon the question of occupation? Is it to function upon the question of the residence of those who may be directing it? Is it to function on the question of politics? With that issue I am content for the public of this country to deal. But having studied the matter as long as I have, I could not in the present disturbed condition of public affairs, and with the appeals that have been made, venture to launch this institution on the stormy career that lies before it if it is to function successfully and bring credit to the Canadian people, and allow it to be subjected to the play of the forces to which I have just alluded.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in his reply to the very able, lucid and convincing address of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), who has presented the amendment, began his remarks by saying that the hon. member had said over and over again, he said I think for the third, fourth or fifth time, some of the things which had been said in the initial stages of the debate on this question. That is perfectly true, but it is also equally true that notwithstanding these all-important things have been said so often, the government have paid no heed to them, and the strength of the argument remains what it has always been. I purpose at the moment therefore to say once again some of the things that have been said over and over again from this side of the house with respect to this bill in the hope that before it passes, even now at the eleventh hour, the government will consider the very reasonable amendment which has been proposed, namely, to refer this bill back to committee of the whole, giving the committee power so to amend its provisions as to constitute this bank one either publicly owned and controlled, or at least publicly owned or publicly controlled, which ever may appear most advisable to members of the committee.

May I say at once, Mr. Speaker, that I know there has been a good deal of searching of heart on the part of some hon. members on this side, as well as is the case with the Prime Minister and his followers with respect to what really is most in the public interest with regard to the constitution of this great financial institution, as to whether public ownership of a great central bank was the most desirable thing, as to whether public control was the most desirable thing, or as to whether both public ownership and control was most desirable. With respect to a new institution like a great central bank it is obvious that considerations which are all important should have to be weighed very carefully pro and con.

Speaking for myself, may I repeat that I can see wherein the question of public ownership of a state bank may well be a debatable question. I regard it as debatable for the reason that there is much to be said on both sides. Unfortunately it is not a choice between perfection on the one side, and what is unmixed evil on the other. It is a choice between which is the better of alternatives, each of which has some certain very obvious definite limitations.

The objection that I see, so far as it can be named an objection, to public ownership of a central bank is that it may raise in the minds of the people of the country many expectations which may not be capable of ever being realized. Many will believe that because the state owns the central bank it will be able to meet each and every disorder that may arise in the country from any financial cause. We here all know that a state owned institution, any more than a privately owned institution, will not be able to do anything of the kind. At the same time there would be occasioned the thought in the minds of many people that having set up a publicly owned institution we had discovered a public remedy for all social and financial ills. I do not think it is advisable, or in the public interest at any time for parliament to create in the minds of the people at large expectations which are not capable of being realized.

In the second place, I believe there is always a possible danger to the position of the state itself in the event of anything untoward happening to a bank which is owned by the state. There may quickly arise in the public mind confusion between what may be a matter confined in its effects to the bank, and what may be assumed to concern the very life of the state itself. This may not happen so much within the bounds of the country where the situation may be known and understood as beyond its confines, and in the minds of peoples of other nations. One will recall that only a few months ago a very serious national crisis arose in France because simply of what was regarded as the intimate relations of the government with an institution with which it had to do to the extent only of granting licences. If a condition of that kind were to arise with respect, not to some institution simply licensed by the government but to a government owned bank, through some fault of management resulting in personal and public loss, I can see where conceivably there might be created something in the nature of a panic in the state owing to the confusion which might arise in the public mind through the identification of the state itself with the institution. Anyone who has had the responsibility of government must realize that in connection with state affairs it is all important that at all times the soundness of the position of the state itself and of the position of the state in the mind of the public should be one which admits of no doubt whatever.

These are simply contingencies and they must be considered as against other contingencies. Against them it is to be said that that situation has never arisen in connection with any government owned institution in this country. It is to be said further that having a knowledge of our people and having a knowledge of the character of the persons likely to be in charge of the administration of this country's affairs there is little or no probability of that situation arising. To the alternative of a publicly owned and controlled institution, there has to be considered the pros and cons of a privately owned and controlled institution and the alternatives which lie in between these two extremes. The government has apparently decided wholly in favour of a purely privately owned institution, not one privately owned only but one privately controlled as well.

I want to take very strong exception to what the government is doing. Because the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has decided in his own mind against the idea of a publicly owned institution, he and his colleagues and his supporters are now going to the other extreme of private ownership and private control and are deciding against any kind of effective public control. They are declaring for a privately owned and a privately controlled bank. That is going to an extreme which it seems to me, when its probable effects are carefully considered, will be found to be very much against the public interest. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre makes it clear that in seeking to find what is most in the public interest this house should not be restricted to a consideration only of extremes and called upon to reach a decision in accordance with the one extreme or the other. The amendment suggests, seeing that views are so divergent that a place may be found within the two extremes, which may avoid what might be in the nature of dangers in either. We believe that with extremes ruled out this can be found in providing at least a sufficient amount of public control to insure that the control of this bank will be in the hands of the state and not in private hands. The amendment simply asks this house, in view of the fact that the government is going to the extreme, to reconsider this matter before it is too late and see by reference back to the committee whether it is not advisable and possible to adopt something short of the extreme measure which is being proposed and something which will ensure no uncertain measure of public control.

Having been one who right along has strongly advocated the establishment of a central bank, I wish at this time to make clear the grounds upon which I personally have advocated the institution of a central bank and the grounds upon which the Liberal party has made the institution of a public bank a part of its policy. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has referred already to what I said when speaking in this house on February 27, 1933, in outlining the position of the Liberal party on the central bank. I should like to read again the words quoted by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. Referring to the control of credit and stating the position of the party with respect to the control of credit, I said:

> The Liberal party believes that credit is a public matter, not of interest to bankers only, but of direct concern to the average citizen. It stands for the immediate establishment of a properly constituted national central bank, to perform the functions of rediscount, and the control of currency issue, considered in terms of public need. A central bank is necessary to determine the supply of currency in relation to the domestic, social and industrial requirements of the Canadian people; and also to deal with the problems of international commerce and exchange.

I desire to direct special attention to these words:

> —a properly constituted national central bank—

Also:

> To perform the functions of rediscount, and the control of currency issue, considered in terms of public need.

Note "in terms of public need" not possible private gain.

When this bill came up for second reading very careful consideration was given by this side of the house as to whether or not the bill should be allowed to pass its second reading, without division, inasmuch as, in the form in which it was drafted, it appeared to be a bill for a privately owned and privately controlled central bank. It was only when the Minister of Finance gave the house the assurance that the questions of ownership and control were to be left open and might be very fully discussed in the committee to which the bill was to be referred, and that the question of private ownership and control was not to be considered as being in any way the principle of the bill, that the only principle involved was that of the establishment of a central bank, that we as a party decided to allow the bill to go to committee without division. Had we believed that there was a mental or any other reservation on the part of the Minister of Finance or of the Prime Minister with respect to the greatest freedom being permitted the committee in the consideration of the question of public ownership and control, I may state quite frankly that we would have been a unit against allowing the bill to pass without division.

This afternoon the Prime Minister has referred to one or two factors which he claims are in the nature of control by the government. One is the appointment of the deputy minister of finance as a member of the board of directors, although without any right to vote. Another is the power of veto given to the governor in certain contingencies. These amendments which inserted an element of control were proposed by hon. members of the committee who are on this side of the house. However, those amendments are insignificant in comparison with the other amendments moved from this side and which were very substantial and in our belief absolutely necessary. Those one or two small amendments were all that we were able to secure after a very strenuous battle. They are not sufficient, however, to have it for one moment assumed that in this bill there is such a thing as effective government control. The Prime Minister has referred to the right of the government to appoint the governor and the deputy governor, but that is a right which relates only to the inception of the measure. We are passing a bill which is to be upon our statutes for years to come and which it has been stated can only be amended or repealed with the consent of both houses of parliament and the bill states that the governor and deputy governor appointed by the government hold office only for a stated number of years. Thereafter the governor and the deputy governor are to be appointed by the shareholders.

Mr. BENNETT: With the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but the appointment is by the shareholders, the governors become appointees of the private interests; so that the bank in the course of a very short time becomes representative entirely of private interests. Now that, it seems to me, is a very serious matter faced as we are in times like the present with what appears to be the most formidable of all conflicts of perhaps any age, namely, that of the money power versus the power of government as represented by the people in their houses of parliament. That is the issue, as I see it, the crux of the whole situation—whether this parliament, representing the people of Canada, is to create a great financial institution which is to control the credit and currency of the country, place that institution in private hands, both as to ownership and control, hand over to this privately-owned and controlled institution many of the functions and powers which the government itself at the present time is exercising, part in large measure with what the government now possess in the way of control of credit, part with what it possesses at the present time in the matter of the right of issuing currency, and hand over gold reserves and securities which are at the present moment in its possession—all this to be handed over to an institution which is to be privately-owned and controlled, or whether the institution to which these rights, powers, possessions and privileges are to be given is to be subject to an effective measure of government control. That, I think is a very serious situation, and there is no argument, it seems to me, which it is possible to bring forward that can really defend action of that kind on the part of this parliament. If it were of necessity a choice solely between the extreme of absolute government ownership and government control on the one hand, and on the other complete private ownership and private control, I could understand that there might be many who would find it difficult to decide one way or the other, there being no possibility of a middle course which would help to avoid what would be regarded as the dangers in either extreme. But there is a middle course, and it is that middle course which the government is apparently unwilling even to consider at the present time. That middle course would be to enable the government to appoint a certain number of directors, a number sufficient to give the government control of the central bank, directors who would not own shares but would represent the government, and who would sit along with the directors who were the nominees of those who owned the shares. Short of complete government ownership and control, could there be anything in the interests of all classes generally which obviously would serve the common interest better than that? One group of directors would be watching the actions of the bank from the point of view of investors, and the other group would be watching the actions of the bank from the point of view of the interests of the public at large; and these two in conference from day to day would undoubtedly be able to prevent many extreme actions being taken which might be contrary to the public interest, and they would also be able to bring about that unity and continuity in the affairs of the bank which the Prime Minister regards as so all-important. It is because we feel that even yet there might be a chance of saving the situation in some such way that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has brought forward the amendment he has.

When the bill was in committee I spoke of the dangers which I feared might arise in the way of conflict between the government and the bank. In a word I indicated that they might develop to the point where in the public mind they would become a conflict between those in authority, as the government of the day, and the money power in the land; and that if that conflict ever arose we should have the most serious situation with which it is possible for a country to be faced. I think that possibility ought to be avoided at every cost. I do not think we ought to pass in this house a measure which is liable some day to create a conflict of that sort. The Prime Minister the other evening stated his position in these words. They appear in Hansard of June 21, at page 4195:

> What we wish to secure is a policy based upon the economic conditions of the country, not a policy of the bank based upon policies of a government. That is what the right hon. gentleman desires.

Now all parties wish to have a policy based upon the economic conditions of the country. The Prime Minister was not stating the matter quite fairly, because we know all parties wish to have a policy based on the economic conditions of the country. What the Prime Minister wants, what he meant, is a policy of the bank based upon the will of the financial interests, policies of the money power, and he made that quite clear when he said in the earlier part of the same statement:

> If the government were in complete control of the bank it would mean that if you had one government succeeded by another the bank would naturally change its policy, assuming that the policy was as the right hon. gentleman suggested. Then you would have governments controlling policies without continuity.

In other words, the Prime Minister does not wish that the government should in any way control the policy of the bank, but rather that the policy of the bank should be controlled in accordance with the views of the bank itself, the bank representing financial interests. In support of his position the Prime Minister raises this bogey of political pressure. Now it is necessary to keep in mind the distinction between what is meant by political pressure in the sense of a government being subject to pressure from its own followers and supporters in the country and what is meant by obeying the will of the people with respect to large national policies as expressed by the people themselves in the manner in which the constitution enables them to express their views. As regards there being danger of political pressure on a Prime Minister and government with respect to matters relating to a central bank, I question very much whether it need be greatly feared. There are undoubtedly considerations of sectional, racial and religious interests that arise in all matters of government, but they are not the determining factors. What any leader of an administration seeks to do as far as he can, what any government seeks to do as far as it can, is to harmonize different, and often conflicting, interests in the country; but always I venture to say, in any important appointment, the first consideration will be the fitness of the man for the position and the rightness of the position itself. When these things can be equally effected by adding to them further considerations, of what may help to keep the country united, be they economic or racial or religious, then I think it is altogether desirable that these other considerations should be taken account of. But it is absurd to talk about these considerations as controlling the situation with respect to any matters of government of a major character. On the other hand, questions of the policies which are to control in matters of government are all-important. Every parliament should be careful not to enact any measure which will create an institution that at any time may be indifferent to, to say nothing of being defiant of, the policies of a government as expressed by the people through their representatives in parliament. To permit anything of the kind is to create a power which is greater than parliament itself. It is especially dangerous when the power is that of financial interests, the money power so-called. A central bank is an institution to which the state delegates a certain very important function, the control of the monetary system, but this function has definite social and public aspects and must be regarded as such. The report on which this bill is based at paragraph 207 says that the state "must necessarily retain ultimate sovereignty in matters affecting the currency." The important point is that the central bank is a social function. It is, to say the least, questionable whether a created private organization should have this power delegated to it. There can be no question that it is the duty of the central bank to stand out against the pressure of governmental policies which the bank believes to be injurious to the public good. But if a government decides that a certain monetary policy—using the term in its broad sense—is desirable, and if it is prepared to follow it at all costs and to be responsible to the public for it, then it must be, under a democratic scheme of government, the duty of the central bank to carry out that policy. That, I think, is sound and will be appreciated as lying at the essence of democratic control on the part of the state of all that relates to the affairs of the people themselves.

I touched on all this at some length the other evening. I spoke as well of something else, and that is the danger of this institution which we are creating, establishing policies that will be in direct opposition to those of the government of the day, and policies which may be able to set at defiance or wholly to defeat those of the administration of the day. As I have said over and over again, I believe the Prime Minister is interested in furthering imperial policies with respect to trade, shipping, finance, defence and all other aspects of our economic life. So far as hon. members on this side of the house are concerned we believe in national policies which will retain freedom to our parliament at all times with respect to carrying out the will of the people as it may be expressed in regard to any of these questions, whether they be trade, shipping, finance or defence. We believe so far as Canada and other parts of the empire are concerned, that any step which lends itself to the development of imperial policies in a way that may bring about a conflict between an imperial and a national point of view in matters of government is going to be the first step towards the dismemberment of the empire itself. For that reason we are very strongly opposed to any measure in which we see a danger of that kind.

The present legislation, establishing the Bank of Canada, is a definite step in the establishment of an imperial policy of finance, under which the financial destiny of Canada is placed under persons independent of parliament, who can maintain, through the Bank of England and the other central banks of empire nations, a definite and positive control of empire currency, credit and trade. That being the case, I feel very strongly that this measure ought to be reconsidered before we are asked to vote upon it.

The Bank of Canada, as constituted by this proposed enactment, will undoubtedly be the means of vesting in the Bank of England the management and control of Canada's foreign exchange and Canada's internal credit administration. As I said the other evening, once a nation parts with the control of its currency and credit, it matters not who makes the nation's laws. Usury, once in control, will wreck any nation. Until the control of the issue of currency and credit is restored to government and recognized as its most conspicuous and sacred responsibility, all talk of the sovereignty of parliament and of democracy is idle and futile. Those are strong words; they constitute a strong argument and they are words of which this house ought to take full account before it is too late.

May I, just before I conclude, draw attention to the nature of the struggle there has been in Great Britain itself between the government of that country and the money power there as represented by the Bank of England. What I wish to point out is that for years, for decades, for almost a century past the government of England has been trying more and more to free itself from the control of the banks and the financial interests as represented by the Bank of England in particular. They have been seeking to get the control of credit more and more into the hands of the state, into the hands of those who represent the wishes and the will of the people. This has been a long and very hard struggle. At the present time the whole trend of discussion on financial matters in Great Britain is to bring about in Britain itself a larger measure of state control of the banking system and of credit. What are we doing? We to-day are deliberately seeking to part with what measure of control we now have, and to make the financial interests even more independent of parliament than they have been heretofore.

I do not know that I can better emphasize what I have been saying about the situation in England than to refer to a record which Mr. Gladstone has left of the position that he encountered when as Chancellor of the Exchequer he began to try to introduce certain financial reforms. It throws a good deal of light on the significance of what by this measure is being done by the present administration in Canada. In the Life of Gladstone by John Morley, volume I, at page 519, Lord Morley refers to "the controversies on currency that thrive so lustily in the atmosphere of the Bank Charter Act." He deals with Mr. Gladstone's effort "to readjust the banking relations, properly so called, between the bank and the state." It was in connection with Mr. Gladstone's effort to readjust those relations that Mr. Gladstone himself drew up a memorandum which is referred to as an "undated fragment" and which Lord Morley has included in the appendix of volume I under the heading of "Mr. Gladstone and the bank." I read this passage to hon. members and ask them to consider it very carefully. This is Mr. Gladstone speaking:

> From the time I took office as Chancellor of the Exchequer I began to learn that the state held in the face of the bank and the city an essentially false position as to finance. When those relations began, the state was justly in ill order as a fraudulent bankrupt who was ready on occasion to add force to fraud. After the revolution it adopted better methods though often for unwise purposes, and in order to induce monied men to be lenders it came forward under the countenance of the bank as its sponsor. Hence a position of subserviency which, as the idea of public faith grew up and gradually attained to solidity, it became the interest of the bank and the city to prolong. This was done by amicable and accommodating measures towards the government, whose position was thus cushioned and made easy in order that it might be willing to give it a continued acquiescence. The hinge of the whole situation was this: The government itself was not to be a substantive power in matters of finance, but was to leave the money power supreme and unquestioned. In the conditions of that situation I was reluctant to acquiesce, and I began to fight against it by financial self-assertion from the first, though it was only by the establishment by the post office savings banks and their great progressive development that the finance minister has been provided with an instrument sufficiently powerful to make him independent of the bank and the city power when he has occasion for sums in seven figures. I was tenaciously opposed by the governor and deputy governor of the bank, who had seats in parliament, and I had the city for an antagonist on almost every occasion.

I ask the house to listen to what Mr. Gladstone referred to as "the hinge of the whole situation." It is not less the hinge of the whole situation in Canada to-day as it will be with respect to the Bank of Canada after this act is passed, than it was in Great Britain as respects the Bank of England in Mr. Gladstone's day as regards the relations of the government and of the bank, or to express the same thing in its rightful proportions the relations of parliament and the money power:

> —the government itself was not to be a substantive power in matters of finance but was to leave the money power supreme and unquestioned.

That is exactly what the government proposes to see is done by this bill in its present form. In matters of finance it makes the bank supreme; it makes the bank the body that will determine the monetary policy of the country, that will have the power to enforce that policy and to resist any monetary policy that may run counter to it. This privately owned and privately controlled institution is to be permitted to do that. The government itself is not to be a substantive power. That is a pretty serious situation, Mr. Speaker. As I see it what we are doing in following the government amounts pretty much to this: We are handing over to an institution that is our own creation supreme power in the matter of financial policy, in the matter of the control of social credit and in the issue of currency. We are parting with all these things to this institution, allowing it to go its way and we leave ourselves as the representatives of the people, in a position where, once the bank is instituted, and free to pursue its own course, we no longer will have any real control over it.

Hon. members of this house have witnessed, no doubt frequently, one of our great ocean liners about to leave port. First it takes on board the passengers and cargo; the crew are already aboard, then come the officers and the captain. Finally, the gangway is pulled up; the fastenings are loosened, and little by little the vessel moves away from the shore. Once out into the harbour it may lie at anchor for a short time. Then it draws up anchor and proceeds to sea, absolutely free from any relationship with the port it has just left or with those who have been responsible for giving it the powers, the passengers and the cargo it possesses. As I see it that is exactly what we are doing with this Bank of Canada. We are creating a bank that is to control the credit, to issue the currency and to hold the gold reserves of the country. In this new banking venture, we are loading the new vessel of state—the Bank of Canada—that is being created by the state with the gold reserves out of our treasury, together with our securities, and we are giving it all powers with regard to the issue of currency and the control of credit. Having done this the Prime Minister appoints the captain and first officer and tells them to go aboard. We have already provided that the passengers are to be the private shareholders, so they are already on board. It having been provided that the passengers and the captain and officers are to have full possession of the entire precious cargo, this house then begins to release the vessel from her moorings. The Prime Minister gives orders that the gangplank is to be drawn up, no subsequent governor or deputy governor is to be appointed by the government, and no directors. This House of Commons is to have no further opportunity save by the sanction of the other house of parliament, to get aboard the vessel, or to say what is to be done either in relation to its cargo or in regard to the direction in which it is to go.

The bill goes from here to the other house, and what happens? The next step is there taken; the fastenings are further, almost completely loosened, and when the bill passes that house, the new ship, the Bank of Canada, gets a little further out on its own. It may lie at anchor for a short time until His Excellency the Governor General comes to give the bill assent. Then the anchor is drawn up and what is the position? The Bank of Canada starts out on its own, in the world of finance, free to do as it pleases with respect to the policies it seeks to put into force, and with the powers which have been given to it, and this House of Commons, save in so far as the other house approves, has no power or control whatever over this institution.

I put that picture forward in a very simple and, I am afraid, haphazard sort of fashion, but it is one which should bring to the minds of everyone a very clear realization of the position this House of Commons is going to be in from now on in relation to this new Central Bank, unless one further provision is made; that is, the provision that there shall be a link between the government and the bank in the nature of a majority of directors to be appointed by the government which will assure some immediate and direct relationship between the two. It is to be hoped that policies of the bank and of the government may not conflict, but where there is a conflict of policy on a matter of major concern to the people, we should see to it that provision is made whereby the will of the people should be made to prevail. This can only be effected as matters now stand by some provision which will ensure representation of the government in a majority control on the board of directors of the bank.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is not necessary for me to explain, either from my personal point of view or from that of the group in this corner, that we believe sincerely that the financial institutions of this country should be publicly or socially owned. For upward of twelve or thirteen years in this house we have urged that position from time to time, so in speaking a word for that principle now I need make no apology whatever.

I am rather sorry that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) is so ambiguous as to be very difficult to follow, and indeed as to make it practically impossible for anyone believing in public ownership to support. I do not wish to be unkind in referring to this amendment but really it is the most peculiar piece of construction I have ever seen in my experience in the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman concluded his argument by quoting something that was a "liberal thing," and I would say this amendment certainly is a liberal thing. It begins by asking for a government owned and controlled bank. Then it asks for a government owned bank, and then for a government controlled bank. In God's name what sort of bank do they want? I presume there are some people who want government owned banks in Canada; therefore the Liberals can say, "We asked for a government owned bank." Undoubtedly there are some people who are very much afraid of government control of anything and they may say, "Well, we asked for a government owned bank without having government control." Then there may be some people who believe in government control without government ownership, and the Liberals may say, "Well, we asked for that too."

This is most decidedly and characteristically a Liberal amendment. The right hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Mackenzie King) has spoken to it admirably; no man in this house knows what sort of a bank he spoke in favour of. I would almost say that I doubt whether, at the moment, he knows himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. IRVINE: I am not seeking to reflect on the unquestionable integrity of the right hon. gentleman, nor on his undoubted intellectual ability; I want my hon. friends to understand that. But the right hon. gentleman did say that the question was a very debatable one, and if that means anything at all it means that he was in doubt—and the right hon. gentleman is perfectly right to be in doubt about any issue—at this moment as to whether that bank should be government owned or privately owned. When the hon. member for Vancouver Centre began his remarks he took some time in trying to establish that the amendment he was moving was in accordance with the position taken in previous debates by his right hon. leader. Thus he made it appear that in moving the amendment he was speaking for the entire Liberal party. It is unfortunate I think that the right hon. leader of the opposition should have so clearly revealed in his address that the policy indicated in the amendment with respect to public ownership is not the policy of the Liberal party.

Under (b) of the amendment what sort of bank would we have, if it were government owned without being government controlled? Who is going to control a government owned bank?—a private institution? And if it does not mean that it is possible to have a government owned bank without being government controlled, then it means absolutely nothing at all. Then, paragraph (c) of the amendment indicates that the Liberal opposition would be content with a government controlled bank which was not government owned, while (b) indicates that they would be content with a government owned bank which was not government controlled. Paragraph (a) indicates that they would like to have both at the same time.

What I am about to point out may be regarded as having a political intent. I do not as a rule seek to establish any particular rights, from our point of view. I usually speak on the issue for what it is worth. But when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre tries to establish that a policy of a government owned and controlled bank is what the Liberal party stands for and calls upon the house to adopt, then I must take issue with him and indicate that if that has become the Liberal policy it is because the group in this corner of the house have popularized it in the minds of the Canadian people, and because at the next general election it is quite possible that those who stand for a publicly owned bank will have a considerable following. Here is a fact which I believe will substantiate the point I am making, namely that the Liberal party in the mouth of its leader has never declared for public ownership of the financial facilities in this country. In this connection I ask hon. members to look at Hansard for April 26, 1932, upon which occasion the right hon. leader of the opposition was speaking in the budget debate in reply to an amendment which had been moved by an hon. member in this corner of the house. Before referring to the amendment the right hon. gentleman said:

> May I come back now to the other part of the subamendment of the Progressive party? It is as follows:
> "That in the opinion of this house, as a first step towards general economic reconstruction, our financial system should be nationalized, and provision be made to issue immediately sufficient money to bring the value of the dollar as speedily as possible to that point at which the major portion of our debts were incurred during the war; stabilize the dollar at this point internally and thereafter manage credit and currency issue to secure and maintain a stable price level within Canada."

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that we were asking in that subamendment for the nationalization of the banks. We asked also for a measure of inflation or, if you like, the issue of sufficient money to carry on the business of the country and to reduce debts by the amount they were increased by deflation. We asked also for a stabilization of the dollar at that point internally, and for the management of the credit of the nation.

May I point out that in the legislation of this session there has been a decided move towards at least two of the principles included in that motion. Let us see what the right hon. leader of the opposition had to say at that time about nationalization. These are his words:

> That is the substance of the subamendment. It suggests two things: First, the nationalization of our financial system and, second, the direct adoption of a policy of inflation. May I in the first instance ask this question of those who have moved this subamendment: If our financial system is to be nationalized, whom are you going to entrust with that work? Are you going to entrust the government opposite with it? Are you going to entrust hon. gentlemen opposite, who have dealt with the tariff in the manner in which they have, under the freedom which has been given them, to nationalize the finances of this country? Yet that is what this amendment is suggesting, because it is addressed to parliament as it exists at the present time. May I ask another question? Were a Liberal administration in office would you entrust a Liberal administration with that task? May I ask still another question? Were you in office yourselves,— —would you undertake the work of nationalizing the finances of the country? I do not believe that any group of persons who have given thought to these matters would attempt a task of that kind in Canada at this time. And, if we ourselves would not undertake a scheme such as this, what would be thought of Canada by other countries if it were announced to-morrow that this House of Commons had attempted any such task as the one indicated in the subamendment?

Speaking of hon. members in this corner of the chamber—

There is a very clear and distinct declaration made over two years ago, namely in 1932, by the right hon. leader of the opposition, that they would not countenance this parliament or this government taking charge of the financial institutions of this country. He was clearly, unmistakably and unequivocally stating the position of the Liberal party, and so far as I can make out from the statement made to-day by the right hon. gentleman that position has not altered. On two occasions he has stated very clearly, and only a few moments ago repeated the statement, that the whole matter as to whether or not the financial institutions of Canada should be owned and controlled by the government or should be controlled and owned by private institutions is a matter for debate. So, while I have no doubt that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre stands very sincerely for the socialization of finance, I am afraid he cannot speak for the whole Liberal party in making any such amendment.

Let me add, further, that this corner of the house does not think the matter is now open for debate. We are quite certain that the time for debating this matter was in the last century; we feel it has been debated and redebated, and that it has been settled in the minds of those who pay any attention to debate, that no private institution should take control of the finances of any country whatsoever. The issuing of currency, the managing of credit and the control of the whole financial institution are peculiarly functions of the state. That is the position hon. members in this corner have held consistently and now hold. As I say, I cannot vote for the amendment because it does not mean anything. As I pointed out earlier in my remarks, it is a sort of omnibus, which is on an eternal and circuitous road leading nowhere. I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), that all the words after "be" in the fifth line of the amendment be struck out and the following words added, "government owned and controlled." That removes all doubt. Those who vote for that unequivocally stand for government ownership of this central bank and the country will know exactly what we mean.

In concluding I desire to say that while the government has no doubt excellent reasons from their point of view for the position which they have so firmly held in this regard, and while the argument which the Prime Minister made this afternoon and on previous occasions with regard to the unhealthy influence which politics as they exist in Canada to-day may have on a government controlled institution, I still think that his argument is more of a condemnation of the weakness of our own parliamentary system than it is an argument against the socialization of the financial institutions of the country, and I believe that we should endeavour at this session of parliament and at this moment to secure complete government ownership and control of the central bank.

If there is a vote to be taken on the main motion I shall then have something to say on the merits of the bill on the basis on which it is drawn and the advantages which, in spite of the fact that it is not socially owned, the new central bank does give over anything which we have previously known in this country, but for the moment I shall have nothing further to say beyond referring to the closing remarks of the right hon. leader of the opposition when he emphasized that we are now making the central bank supreme in Canada. The fact of the matter is that even when the right hon. gentleman was in power himself the chartered banks of this country were supreme, and were more supreme than this central bank will ever be, for there are restrictions here while there were no restrictions to the powers of the chartered banks before in the matter of the control of credit. So there is no need for us to blink the issue. We in this corner want outright social ownership and control, but if this parliament votes that down then unquestionably the new central bank will be a great improvement on the financial institutions of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: I rise to a question of order, Mr. Speaker. When the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) moved his amendment I had not time to look into the authorities while I was following him, but it is quite obvious that his amendment is not valid.

Perhaps I might state roughly before the Speaker comes in so that hon. gentlemen opposite will realize my point, that May, twelfth edition, at page 461 says:

> Every amendment proposed to be made, either to a question or to a proposed amendment, should be so framed that, if agreed to by the house, the question or amendment, as amended, would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

There are three alternatives in this amendment. If it is carried by the house which one is to be adopted? It must be complete within the amendment itself. Therefore there must be three several amendments moved in order to have these three questions considered by the house. If this amendment were adopted as it stands the house would not know what would be the result, for when it is carried which alternative have you voted for? Have you voted for a government owned and controlled bank, for a government owned bank or for a government controlled bank? You have to have one or the other, and it must be complete within itself.

That is the position, Mr. Speaker, and inasmuch as the rule seems to be reasonably clear—I have now in my hand May, thirteenth edition, page 285:

> Every amendment proposed to be made, either to a question or to a proposed amendment, should be so framed that, if agreed to by the house, the question or amendment, as amended, would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

I did not have the thirteenth edition in my hand when I rose, and I was quoting from May, twelfth edition, page 261.

I put this to Your Honour: If the house carries this amendment hon. gentlemen opposite vote for what? To provide that the central bank shall be either—"either," mark you—(a) government owned and controlled; (b) government owned, or (c) government controlled. It does not require a lawyer to point out that when the house arrives at a conclusion with respect to an amendment to the third reading of a bill and the house as a result goes into committee it must be able at once to give effect to the amendment proposed. The amendment as it stands means that the house has voted for no principle but that it has taken a chance on any one of three. Under those circumstances clearly three amendments are necessary. I shall be glad to accommodate the hon. member for Vancouver Centre if he wishes to strike out any two alternatives. We can then have a separate vote on the one remaining, and a separate vote on each alternative, if he so desires. But to do so there must be three amendments.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this house is not bound specifically to all of these three alternatives. This house, if it votes for this amendment, votes to send back Bill 19 to a committee of the whole house. Suppose the amendment carries. Then the committee of the whole is specifically empowered to consider not only section 19 to which I have previously moved an amendment, but also section 9, to which the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth has moved an amendment. The amendment I submit is completely in order for this reason, that the other evening we had an exactly similar amendment moved in the house and passed, and the point of order was not raised either by the Speaker or by anyone else.

Mr. BENNETT: It is being raised now, though.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I say that previously in this house I have seen precedents established on points of order. My right hon. leader moved an amendment to the marketing bill, Bill No. 51, the other day, and we sought in that amendment to refer Bill 51 back to committee of the whole to consider giving the committee the right to amend it in two particulars which were not related in the remotest degree. Is that not correct?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly we can do that. The hon. gentleman has not caught the point. Which one of these three does the house adopt by accepting the amendment?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Neither.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I say, and therefore it is invalid. You might as well have twenty-three.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This house if it passes the amendment authorizes the committee to consider the sections which are affected by these various amendments.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): If I am ruled out of order by Your Honour I will with pleasure accept the suggestion of the Prime Minister and leave out the two second alternatives in the amendment so that we can vote on a government owned and controlled institution. We took similar action the other day on the marketing bill. If Your Honour is going to rule against me I shall be glad to delete the word "either" and the two second alternatives.

Mr. BENNETT: In fairness to the hon. gentleman and because of the fact that I did not raise the point of order at the time because I had not the books beside me, I am quite willing if the house will agree that he should strike out the word "either" and any two of the three alternatives that he may choose to strike out.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Strike out (b) and (c).

Mr. IRVINE: I object to the hon. gentleman having a chance to amend his out-of-order amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Speaking to the point of order, I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine). If the house is willing unanimously to adopt the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, I cannot see why he or those around him should take any exception to that action.

Mr. IRVINE: That is my point. If it is going to be accepted unanimously by the house, I am quite willing.

Mr. MacINNIS: As I understand the point of order, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) has withdrawn his amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MacINNIS: He has withdrawn his amendment in so far as it does not agree with the subamendment.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to speak just one moment on the point of order. I did not realize that an hon. member had moved a subamendment. Therefore I do not think the house, even by consent, can make a change in the main amendment without the consent of the hon. gentleman who has moved the subamendment. He says he does not agree and therefore I submit that the amendment must be declared out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The objection taken by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) is sound. Except by unanimous consent an amendment cannot be altered.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I move that the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power so to amend it as to provide that the Bank of Canada shall be government owned and controlled.

Mr. SPEAKER: As I understand it, the unanimous consent of the house has not been given to the alteration or the withdrawal of the amendment. The amendment and the subamendment are both still before the house and, consequently, the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) is not in order in moving a further amendment.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I understood that Your Honour had ruled them out of order.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker has not yet ruled upon the point of order. The point of order is that you cannot have three alternatives, nor twenty-three nor thirty-three on an amendment to the third reading of a bill. If it is good for three it is good for fifty-three, sixty-three or one hundred and three. I ask the Speaker to rule that the amendment and the subamendment are out of order and then we can proceed with the motion for the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: On the objection taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to the form of the amendment, I consider the amendment out of order. I consider it out of order on the further ground that it is a motion entailing the expenditure of public money. Such a motion can be considered by the house only on a day later than it is introduced and it must be introduced by a cabinet minister. For these two reasons I rule the amendment and subamendment out of order.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I move, seconded by the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) that the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power so to amend it as to provide that the Bank of Canada shall be government owned and controlled.

Mr. SPEAKER: I rule that that amendment is out of order because, like the original amendment, it entails an expenditure of public money and is a violation of the terms of the British North America Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): In connection with the ruling of Your Honour with respect to this amendment entailing the expenditure of public money, I respectfully submit that Your Honour is not correct. I submit that this amendment does not entail the expenditure of one single cent of public money. If the Bank of Canada was already set up and was functioning, if the capital had been subscribed and we were transferring that capital from a private institution to the public domain, then Your Honour's point would be well taken. Up to the present we have not spent a single cent of public money and by setting up public ownership, as recommended in the amendment of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain), we are not involving the expenditure of one single cent of public money. I submit in the strongest possible way that the amendment is in order and if Your Honour insists upon your ruling I shall be compelled to appeal.

Mr. POWER: I have not the reference before me at the moment, but I suggest that this bill was preceded by a resolution which provided for the setting up of the bank. I submit that this amendment would fall within that resolution which has been submitted to the house and carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: As hon. members have not given me any reasons to induce me to change my ruling, the ruling is that the amendment is out of order. The Speaker having ruled that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr Casgrain) to the motion that Bill No. 19 be not read a third time is out of order, the hon. member appeals from that decision.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chair be sustained? And the ruling was sustained on the following division:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I beg to move the following amendment:

That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend same so as to safeguard the sovereignty of parliament over Canada's financial policy.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no difficulty about that being out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: My recollection is that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has already spoken.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not yet spoken to the third reading of the bill. I know that some gentlemen on the government side suggest that it is out of order anyway.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to raise the question as to its being in order. The amendment does not direct the house to do any specific thing. On the third reading, as I pointed out a moment ago, it is desirable, nay, it is necessary and incumbent upon those who move an amendment, to do one of two things, either to negative the motion for third reading or to move that the bill be read this day six months hence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the resolution does ask the committee to do a very specific thing, namely, to safeguard the sovereignty of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: We say that is done.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is a matter of judgment, but it does not affect the point of order. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) earlier in the discussion, when an attempt was made to move an amendment, had the following to say, as reported in Hansard of March 8, at page 1291:

Mr. Rhodes: That is the only principle. The point whether this bank should be publicly or privately owned as well as questions respecting the numerous other details incidental to the bill are matters of detail which can be dealt with by way of amendment in the regular course as we proceed in committee on banking and commerce, or in committee of the whole house, or upon motion on the third reading of the bill.

With that understanding we then postponed the amendment. Now we find apparently that there has come a change in the mind of the government and that the Minister of Finance was quite wrong and that no amendment can be made on the third reading of the bill, looking to the public ownership and control of the bank. I submit that it is a very serious matter if, on great general principles, we are not permitted to have any voice when it comes to the third reading of a bill such as this. I contend, with regard to this particular point of order, that there is a very specific thing which we ask that the committee should do. It is quite true the Prime Minister thinks it is not necessary; that is natural. Some of us think it is necessary, but it is a specific thing which we ask should be done, and I submit on a point of order that this motion is really in order.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. gentleman move the adjournment of the debate, leaving the matter as it stands, in order that, with the consent of the house, I may move the resolution which we agreed would be presented some time before the house rose?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I shall be glad to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS FROM THURSDAY, JUNE 28 UNTIL END OF SESSION

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): With the consent of the house I should like to revert to motions in order to move, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That on Thursday, the 28th instant, on Friday the 29th, on Saturday, the 30th, and every sitting day and Saturday thereafter until the end of the session, the house shall meet at 11 o'clock in the morning, and that in addition to the usual intermission at 6 o'clock p.m., there shall be an intermission every day from one to three o'clock, p.m., and the order of business and procedure shall be the same on Saturday as on Friday.

If that is along the lines of what we agreed to, I should like to move it, first reverting to motions in order that the procedure may be correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would ask the Prime Minister if he would have any objection to having the word "Monday" substituted for the word "Friday", so that the order of business on Saturday would be the same as on Monday?

Mr. BENNETT: For the purpose of enabling the hon. gentleman to move his motion—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it is necessary. I do not say that it will be.

Mr. BENNETT: Speaking for the government, the government consents to the right hon. gentleman making any motion he desires to make, but somebody else might object and then he might be precluded; so it is better to substitute the word "Monday" for "Friday." Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you would substitute the word "Monday" for "Friday" in the motion, so that the order of business on Saturday shall be the same as on Monday.

Motion as amended agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What will be the first order of business to-morrow—this bill?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, this bill.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, June 28, 1934

The house met at eleven o'clock.

ELECTIONS ACT

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BILL NO. 115

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) presented the third report of the special committee to which was referred Bill No. 115, respecting the election of members of the House of Commons.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 125, to amend the Customs Tariff.

He said: I beg to ask leave to introduce a short bill, a bill to amend section 6 of the customs tariff, by adding a new subsection to be called subsection 2A, by which the governor in council may order that excise duties or excise taxes may be disregarded in estimating the market value for purposes of special or dumping duties on goods imported from certain specified countries, which are entitled to entry under the general tariff.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Another election sign.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The elections are coming.

Mr. McINTOSH: Dissolution is on the horizon.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read a second time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I presume this is the measure referred to by the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the complementary measure, and unless it was passed the bill which was introduced yesterday and which stands on the order paper would not effect the purposes intended. This is a complementary section in the customs tariff to the amendment made in the Customs Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister referred to this matter yesterday and I see no reason why it should not be given second reading now.

Mr. MATTHEWS moved the second reading of Bill No. 125, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

INQUIRY AS TO THE INTRODUCTION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister when he intends to bring in amendments to the Pension Act, and if we could have some information in regard to it.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It might not be necessary to introduce other than a very formal half dozen words. It is hoped that that is all that may be necessary. I will be able, I trust, before the house rises this evening to let the hon. gentleman know.

PRIVILEGE—MR. MULLINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. MULLINS (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The Toronto Globe of Wednesday, June 27, carries the following headline: "Nickle exposes Cook's Tour prison visit," and my name appears throughout the article. I wish to say that I was not conducted on a Cook's tour. I had my perfect freedom inside the walls of the penitentiary. Further I want to say the article suggests that I am related to General Ormond. I deny that I am in any way related to him, and I wish to make that denial on the floor of this house. The statement I made on the floor of the house when on a former occasion the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) was speaking, in regard to dishes which were used, was and is absolutely correct.

MARKETING ACT

ORGANIZATION TO IMPROVE METHODS AND PRACTICES IN MARKETING NATURAL PRODUCTS—SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps with the consent of the house we might take up the Senate amendments to numbers 7 and 8 on the order paper, so as to expedite that business before proceeding with the Bank of Canada Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the right hon. gentleman mean Bills Nos. 92 and 93?

Mr. BENNETT: No, Bills Nos. 51 and 89. Bill No. 51 is the Marketing Act. The Senate took out the word "wheat" and we are declining to accept it. Then, they made some changes in Bill No. 89, to amend and consolidate the Excise Act, which I believe do not completely express the intention. We propose to send that back also. Will that be acceptable?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the idea of removing wheat? I did not think it was going to be operative anyhow, but what harm was it going to do?

Mr. BENNETT: We are sending it back to the Senate to put wheat in.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I beg pardon.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry but we could not hear whether the proposal of the government was to retain wheat or not.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, we are differing with the Senate and are asking that the bill be sent back to them.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Another election.

An hon. MEMBER: Dissolution again.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not unmindful of the fact that it was a reformed Senate.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We will see.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house disagrees with their first and second amendments to the Bill, No. 51, an act to improve the methods and practices of marketing of natural products in Canada and in export trade, and to make further provision in connection therewith, for the following reasons:—

"Inasmuch as wheat producers should not be treated in a different way from other producers of farm products;

Also, the Natural Products Marketing Act does not conflict with the Canada Grain Act in the case of wheat, nor in the case of coarse grains which are included in the act, and to which no exception has been taken."

And that the clerk of the house do carry the said message to the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order No. 7 has not yet been called and therefore this motion presented by the Minister of Agriculture is premature.

Mr. BENNETT: He is making the motion now.

NON-CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The house proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 51, an act to improve the methods and practices of marketing natural products in Canada and in export trade, and to make further provision in connection therewith.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I now move the motion which is in your hands, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. POULIOT: Just before the motion carries may I say how thankful I am to the other chamber for the opportunity which it is now giving to the hon. Minister of Agriculture to answer my question about the decrease in the home consumption of farm products.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I desire to support the motion of the minister. While not abating in one single particular the objections which were made from this side of the house to some of the clauses of Bill No. 51, if we are going to have a marketing bill my conviction is that wheat should be included in that bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I desire to urge the same thing. I am opposed to the bill, but if it is going to go on the statute books I think that wheat should be included as well as other farm products.

Motion agreed to.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

NON-CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house disagrees with their amendments to Bill No. 89, an act to amend and consolidate the Excise Act, for the following reason, namely:

That the said amendments do not fully assure protection to the revenues of the crown.

And that the clerk of the house do carry the said message to the Senate.

He said: In making this motion, I would like to say that in my opinion the effect of the amendment made by the Senate would be to give to the owner, and not only to the owner but also to anyone who holds a mortgage, charge or lien upon a vehicle or thing seized as forfeit to the crown for a breach of this act the statutory right to have the forfeiture set aside in his favour. It may appear to be a hardship that an owner or lien holder should lose his property or his interest in a seized vehicle because the vehicle has been put to an illegal use by somebody else, but it has been found from long experience that in the enforcement of revenue laws and laws for the protection of public property it is necessary to have some such principle recognized. It is recognized in other acts of this parliament, for example, the Customs Act, the Fisheries Act, the Fisheries Protection Act, and the Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act. It is also, I am informed, the law in Great Britain and in most, if not all, of our own provinces. The remedy for hard cases is administrative remission which can always be arranged when it appears to be in the public interest. It is felt that the principle embodied in the proposed amendment should not be accepted by this house. It would be giving notice to all concerned that a vehicle owned by somebody else or subject to a lien can be used for illegal purposes with complete impunity.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, despite all that the minister has said, if the vehicle of an innocent party happens to be used by a third party and a seizure is made of the vehicle the only way in which the owner can recover his property is through the leniency of the departmental officials themselves or by an action in the exchequer court, and my hon. friend the minister knows full well that the exchequer court sits very seldom in the outlying provinces. All that this amendment which has been made by the Senate does is to ensure that action may be taken in a superior court—

Mr. BENNETT: It is much more than that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Let me put it this way, that action may be taken in the courts of the province in which the seizure is made.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the matter about which the difficulty arises at all.

Mr. STEWART (West Edmonton): Surely some protection should be given to an absolutely innocent party. From the statement of the minister himself, I gather that no attention is being paid to that matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes.

Mr. STEWART (West Edmonton): I fail to discover it. I have a case in mind which happened in Saskatchewan. Before going away a father left explicit directions that his automobile should not be used by his son. In some way the son secured a key to the car and took it out. Along with some of his friends or with those who happened to go with him, a bottle of liquor was found in the car by the mounted police. This happened four years ago and up to date the father has not been able to recover possession of his car which is still in the hands of the department through the agency of the mounted police. Moreover, before he can take action in the exchequer court he must deposit $400. That court sits in the western provinces when there is business for it; there has been no sitting and there is not likely to be a sitting. All this has been permissible under the provisions of the Excise Act. While I am in sympathy with every facility being given to the officers of the department to take action, nevertheless there are cases of extreme hardship about which something could be done. As far as I am concerned, I do not see anything sinister in the proposal of the Senate to remedy this evil. It is an evil and it is most unfair. Surely the crown does not want to take undue advantage of a private citizen, and that is what is happening under the provisions of these sections. After all, it is left pretty well to the local officer as to how he shall construe this matter. When a man in order to obtain property which is rightfully his and which has been wrongfully used against his will and consent has to refer to the procedure to which he must refer to-day, surely something is wrong and something should be done to remedy such a situation.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Just a word in answer to what the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) has said. It is hoped that by bringing the matter again to the attention of their honours in the Senate, certain difficulties will be overcome. The hon. gentleman's reference to the use of the courts of the province rather than the exchequer court is a matter to which no serious objection is made but the amendment as it stands is so at variance with all the principles that have hitherto governed in the consideration of matters of this kind. As we see it, an inducement is being offered to smugglers and those who violate the law. The principle which the Senate has asserted may be maintained but it would have to be strengthened by the addition of several subsections to the section as it stands.

I may say to the hon. gentleman that confiscation to the crown of instruments by which revenues have been defrauded is an amplification of the oldest principle which we have in our laws. In fact, it goes back to beyond the time when we had institutions at all. In our own country it is founded upon principles which were laid down in Holy Writ and in the early days of another dispensation. It is true that it is extremely difficult completely to differentiate between the innocent and guilty but it has been found in practice that unless the provision of forfeiture to the crown exists, those who disobey the law look upon perjury as a very simple thing when compared with the offence which they themselves have committed. According to judicial opinion, one of the greatest evils which this country now encounters is the prevalence of perjury. Those men who commit offences look upon perjury as a small matter when compared with the offence which they have committed. They are willing to commit perjury for the purpose of carrying through their nefarious actions. We have had striking illustrations of this in western Canada. There have been the most terrible cases in which I am convinced that human life has been sacrificed for greed and gain in connection with the administration of the liquor laws. There has been an endeavour made to impair and destroy the usefulness of our institutions by providing huge sums of money for elections and other purposes. This has been so apparent that we have to have the most stringent provisions in our laws in order to meet the situation. In these days of motor cars the situation is somewhat different. Many cases such as that mentioned by the hon. gentleman have been brought forward but where you have a father and son living in the same house and the car from the home of the father has been used for illegal purposes, the question of the forfeiture of the car has never been seriously in question until this moment. Innocency is not spelled merely by a father telling his son not to use his car. If the boy took the car and knew it was to be used for an illegal purpose, then the car becomes forfeited. One leading case we had concerned a new Cadillac car which was passing from Fernie to Montana and was forfeited. This happened in Alberta and the conviction was sustained by the privy council. I am not unwilling that there should be some modification of the statutes but as it now stands it is essential that some additional provisions be inserted in order to safeguard the public interests.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I regret I was not present during the whole of this discussion. I have some sympathy with what the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) has said although I cannot go quite as far as he does, nor can I go quite as far as the provisions of the amendments proposed by the other house. I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is quite right when he says that there must be very stringent regulations so far as smuggling is concerned. It is quite possible that if a provision was inserted in the present law whereby the rights of forfeiture were abrogated as far as the owner of an automobile or vehicle being used for smuggling, even in a small way, was concerned, that might be very much abused. From my own experience in the department I realize that there might be collusion and possibly perjury. Smugglers might be able to accomplish their purpose and yet make it appear as though they were innocent parties. This must be guarded against. While I have no desire to criticize the Department of National Revenue, a case like that mentioned by the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) should not be held over for a period of four years. I think it would be possible by a conference between representatives of the Commons and the Senate to work out something whereby some of these abuses could be prevented.

While I am on my feet I should like to refer to another phase of this matter. I have in mind the using of an automobile in connection with the bringing in of a small quantity of cigarettes or a silk dress. Some person may be visiting Buffalo, Detroit or one of the other border cities and bring in a silk dress, a pair of shoes or two or three cartons of cigarettes. In the case of a woman, she may be wearing the shoes. I have always contended that while an automobile was being used in the smuggling operation, the automobile itself was not intended to be used for smuggling. It just happens to be the means of conveyance for bringing the person in from the United States and incidentally bringing in perhaps a carton of cigarettes, a bit of tobacco or something of that sort. In the past the department has not forfeited the vehicle in a case of this kind, although I suppose it had the power so to do under the law. That would be a most extreme application of the law. To-day—and it was the same during my incumbency—the penalty is as high as $50 or $25 on the proprietor of a vehicle being used perhaps by a passenger who might bring in one or two cartons of cigarettes. I always contended that this was an extreme application of the law, but it comes to this in the end, that the officers of that department at the border—and I think certainly at headquarters in Ottawa—should exercise a reasonable degree of common sense. That is practically what it comes to. You have to have a stringent provision in the law to provide for cases where severe action should be taken; but the minister or his deputy or the commissioner or officers at the border should be instructed to use some degree of what is usually called horse sense in the application of the law. It might be possible to frame some modification, by conference with the Senate, whereby the situation might be eased in those cases where there is no real intention to smuggle, and I would draw a very distinct difference in cases where people are bringing in goods to be sold again as compared with the man or woman bringing in some little article which they happened to have bought in Buffalo or Detroit or any other border city. I would commend to the government that they consider the possibility of making some slight modification which would relieve the situation and yet not prejudice the revenues in any large way.

Hon. PETER VENIOT (Gloucester): The suggestion that after an act has been passed instructions should be issued by the department to outside officials to exercise a certain degree of leniency or judgment is in my opinion very wrong. I have had ten years' experience in enforcing the excise laws, and if I had received word from the department under which I was working, after they had passed a law and placed it in my hands to be carried out, that I should exercise leniency, I would not have thanked the department for placing me in that position. I have had experience as a seizing officer and have done quite a bit of seizure work during my incumbency as collector of customs in New Brunswick, and very often it was quite a task for me, conscientiously speaking, to carry out the law as it stood; yet it had to be done. I could see that in the carrying out of that law great hardship was imposed upon some individuals, but I think there should be no difficulty in framing a clause of this act which would carry out the intention of the minister in his effort to prevent smuggling and at the same time to do justice in such a case as the one referred to by the hon. member for West Edmonton. In New Brunswick, under our provincial automobile laws, we have an easy method of tracing the owner or anyone who has had anything to do with a car that may be seized, because the owner cannot drive a car without first having his licence plate, his registration, and a certificate to the effect that he is owner of the car. In the next place, any member of the family who may drive that car without a certificate or authority from the Department of Public Works, indicating that he is certified to by the head of the family as one authorized by the owner of the car to drive it, is liable to punishment. Again, no one not the owner may drive a car unless he has a chauffeur's licence. I do not know what the law is in the other provinces, but by that means in New Brunswick the authorities can trace any car to the owner or any member of the family who has authority to drive it. If, as in this case, the man who took his father's car without consent had authority under the provincial law, with a certificate to drive the car, the father would be responsible. The case is a hard one and every means possible should be taken to protect the owner whose car has been taken without his consent, and to obviate the necessity of heavy legal expenses and in many instances long delays in proving ownership, as in this case. And what about a stolen car? My car is lying out in my garage at night and some individual comes along and steals it. It is an easy matter to steal a car even when it is locked, because those who know how to go about it have simply to push up a piece of wire into certain sections of the connecting links without using the key at all, so that a car may be taken whether the person who steals it has the key or not. In this way a car might easily be stolen and used for smuggling purposes and I, the owner, knowing nothing about it, after the car has been used for smuggling and has been seized by the department, find myself without the use of that car. There should be some means whereby I can reclaim the car without having to go to heavy legal expense and without having to wait two or three years to recover the car.

Mr. MATTHEWS: If anything like that happens to my hon. friend he will have his car back immediately.

Mr. VENIOT: It may be all right for me, but some poor devils have to wait two or three years for it, and that is what I want to avoid. The trouble in the past has been in rectifying these errors and in trying to alleviate injury consequent upon a strict enforcement of the law by the officials. I say, however, stand by your officials when you place a law in their hands and ask them to exercise their judgment. Their judgment may be at fault, but, I say, always stand by the officials and find some means of rectifying any injustice done. That stand I take on behalf of the officials because I have been one myself and have had to suffer from a strict enforcement of laws of this kind, both in conscience and otherwise. I feel that anything the department can do to help the officials should be done. But instructions should not be issued to officials to use their judgment and leniency; when a law of this kind is placed in their hands the officials are supposed to exercise it to the letter.

Mr. G. W. McPHEE (Yorkton): I happen to be acquainted with the case referred to by the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) and the facts are a little stronger even than he put them. The facts are these. On May 15, 1932, a certain gentleman who resides in the district I represent, the owner of an Essex sedan automobile, being obliged to go away for a week, left instructions with his wife that the son should not be allowed to use the car, and the ignition key was placed in her possession. When this man returned he learned that his son had taken the car on May 16, without permission, and notwithstanding that his mother had forbidden him to do so. On May 15, 1932, the son took the car at the request of a friend and went to Verigin. On arrival there, he met another friend who asked for a drive to Kamsack and the son allowed this friend to get into the front seat of the car. He was then requested by another man to give him a ride to Kamsack, which he agreed to do on that man agreeing to buy a gallon of gasoline. They then drove to a gasoline filling station. When this third man requested a drive to Kamsack, the son had no knowledge that he or anyone else in the car had any spirits or liquor of any kind and no arrangements were made that any liquor should be brought into the car by the third man or any other person and neither the son nor his friend first mentioned had any liquor on their persons or in the car. While the car was parked in front of the gasoline station a constable came along and searched the car. The third man who had a bottle of illicit liquor on him had hid it under the car where it was found, and the car was seized. That man has been without his car for three years; he has taken action in the exchequer court and has deposited $400 but that court will not meet in Saskatchewan until some time late this fall. If he has to wait until the exchequer court decides whether the car was illegally seized, he will be three years without the use of his car. I was wondering whether the Prime Minister in view of the statement just made about adopting equal jurisdiction of the superior court and the exchequer court in this matter would suggest another amendment that actions pending before the exchequer court have the privilege of being referred to the superior court.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I shall see that when the matter is being considered with the Senate that view will also be put forward.

Mr. McPHEE: I thank the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Just one suggestion. It might be well to adopt the same practice as prevails in the United States where, I am told, their citizens are allowed to bring in goods from Canada to the value of around $100. Why not insert such a provision in our law?

Mr. BENNETT: Successive governments have looked into that and declined to do it for reasons that are clear; it would involve millions of dollars in revenue.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Make it $50.

Motion agreed to.

BANK OF CANADA

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 27, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) for the third reading of Bill No. 19, to incorporate the Bank of Canada, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Woodsworth.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to enter into any lengthy discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) proposed an amendment before the house adjourned last night. The motion is that the bill be read a third time. It was moved in amendment by Mr. Woodsworth:

That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend same so as to safeguard the sovereignty of parliament over Canada's financial policy.

I find that the amendment is out of order for this reason, that it is irrelevant. The sovereignty of parliament cannot be affected by the passage of a bill in this house. The sovereignty of parliament is created and defined by the British North America Act, section 91 of which states that it shall be lawful for the parliament of Canada to make laws in relation to all matters except those assigned to provincial legislatures and in the classes of subjects enumerated there are included "banking, incorporation of banks, and the issue of paper money." The sovereignty of parliament can be affected only by an amendment to the British North America Act. This amendment is therefore out of order.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, the position taken in this corner of the house on financial reform is well known. We have for years past taken the stand that we should do everything possible to obtain a stable currency and credit system.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I think I had the floor when the house adjourned last night. With regard to the point of order it is not my intention to challenge the ruling of the Speaker. I feel that process only delays the house although I would point out that there is an open question before us as to whether the sovereignty of the house may not be destroyed, but I suppose ultimately that question could be settled only in the courts. It is, however, becoming apparent—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I interrupt my hon. friend? He says "the sovereignty of the house." His resolution reads "the sovereignty of parliament." We are beginning to see that there is a difference between the two.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not quite catch my right hon. friend's remark.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend in speaking just now used the expression "the sovereignty of the house", but his amendment relates to the sovereignty of parliament, I agree with him that the sovereignty of this house is being affected materially by many measures which are being put through but the sovereignty of parliament will remain what it is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not going to go into this technical constitutional question. I believe the sovereignty of this house is not being safeguarded and also the sovereignty of parliament is not being safeguarded. There is, of course, a difference between the two. I shall go a little further and say that the sovereignty of the people of this country is not being safeguarded. But it seems to me it is not necessary to go into every little technical constitutional matter when one is discussing a general principle.

The house is being placed in a rather peculiar position by the decisions of the Speaker. It appears that no general resolution of this kind is permissible on third reading. It appears further that no definite amendment is permissible on the very general grounds that it might involve expenditure of money. Some of us would very definitely deny that the making of this institution a public bank would in any way interfere with His Majesty's revenues. I should have been delighted indeed to support the amendment as it was finally drafted by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). If, however, we are not going to have the opportunity of moving any amendments, I suppose we have to let the public know that and to leave the matter as it is.

In connection with this bill I may say that I have left the matter very largely to my colleagues who were members of the committee on banking and commerce but I should like to take this last opportunity of saying a few words in regard to the situation. Perhaps I should congratulate the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) on his growing recognition of the danger of the money power. I hope he is really recognizing that danger. As a matter of fact, I am afraid he is simply repeating some phrases. I am delighted, however, to have those phrases coming from him because this marks a very decided change of attitude. For years we in this corner have advocated a central bank, one publicly owned and controlled. I regret that we were not able to place our position definitely before the country by means of an amendment to the third reading of the bill.

On the second reading I spoke strongly in favour of public ownership and control. Indeed I went so far as to say that I thought if the matter came to a vote I should have to vote against the measure. I still feel the same way. In setting up this Bank of Canada we have the opportunity to make it a public institution, and to extend the power of parliament into the realm of finance, but the government is determined that this course shall not be taken. I regret it exceedingly. It is true that certain amendments to the bill have been made in committee; I think these are all to the good, although I suggest that they are not fundamental and do not go far enough to alter the principle of the bill. I have listened to what the Prime Minister had to say but I have not been at all convinced. He pointed out the danger of political pressure; I would say there is much more danger of irresponsible class power. He speaks of appointing a sound governor. That means a man who can be trusted to carry out the behests and policies of the leaders of finance. The Prime Minister believes in having this governor practically independent of public opinion; I think that is a very dangerous proceeding. It is true that to a very large extent in the past the leaders of finance have been independent of public opinion, and I think that is the situation to-day. The trouble with this bill is that it frankly legalizes that situation. We are putting power that should belong to the sovereign people into the hands of private and irresponsible individuals. I quite recognize that the Prime Minister may not realize the danger of this situation. He himself has always moved with wealthy men—

Mr. BENNETT: No, he hasn't.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In my judgment he has distinctly the class consciousness of wealthy people, he accepts their point of view and their policies. He is probably firmly convinced that these are in the interests of the country at large. Some of us must challenge that position. We believe that the interests of financial men are not the interests of the public at large. We believe that it is because the country has been at their mercy that we have got into the position that we are in to-day, and that it is only as a sovereign people can make its will effective that we can hope for any remedy of the present situation. I would suggest that the Prime Minister's argument goes altogether too far. If carried out his doctrine would undermine democratic government. If he cannot trust the people, does he think he can trust someone who is altogether removed from the control of the people, or even from the pressure of public opinion? I think too highly of the people themselves, of the ultimate good common sense of the people when their own welfare is really at stake and they are roused to actual conditions, to accept that viewpoint. The Prime Minister might as well proceed frankly to set up a dictatorship, not merely in the realm of finance but in parliament. If the people are not able to judge of financial matters, that is the fundamental principles in finance, I cannot see how they are able to judge of the fitness of individuals to represent them in parliament or the fitness of a government to maintain its administrative powers.

The Prime Minister speaks of the difficulties in making appointments. He says that consideration must be given to race, to religion, to residence, to political affiliations, to occupation and so on. I wonder if that argument does not carry him altogether too far. We have at the present time a very capable deputy minister of finance; I wonder whether questions of race and religion and occupation entered into the consideration when he was appointed. I hope not. I cannot see why they should enter any more into the appointment of a governor of the Bank of Canada. Had I time I might take the different departments, a number of them in charge of very capable deputy ministers. Does the Prime Minister mean to infer that questions of race and religion and political allegiance and so on were at the basis of the appointment of those men, and for that reason we cannot trust them? I think that is going altogether too far. It is a decided reflection upon people to-day in public office. If our politics have been corrupt in the past, if in the past there has been altogether too much political influence of the wrong kind, surely the way out is to give scope for political influence of a better kind, to have an educated public opinion exercising its influence; not to have whole areas of public business removed altogether from the control of the people.

It is a practical question for some of us as to how to vote when the amendments are at last disposed of. I frankly admit that in a matter of this kind one could justify a vote either in the affirmative or in the negative. I believe, as indicated by the amendment which I attempted to move, that this bill does not safeguard the sovereignty of this house or of parliament. On the other hand I suggest that finance is a realm in which the people have never had sovereignty. Finance has always been aside from and superior to parliament. I think it has always dominated parliament. Theoretically parliament has been supreme, but in practice the financial kings have always dominated the political kings. There is no doubt whatever in my mind as to that. So, since we never have had sovereignty, I suppose we are none the worse off because this bill does not give us sovereignty. In the past we have often had conflicts between church and state, it is needless to enter into that question to-day. Now we have reached the conclusion that there is a realm in which the church is sovereign, and another realm in which the state is sovereign. In Japan, I believe, it has always been conceded that the state as constituted was never supreme over the military autocracy. The military class have been quite independent of the representative institutions of the country. There is something parallel to that in our attitude towards financial affairs. The representatives of the people through the centuries have gradually acquired power over certain realms of our life, but over the financial realm, which is so important, so vital, they have no power whatever. I would say that some of these days we will simply have to challenge the position of the financial interests or they will completely dominate our public life. That dominance undoubtedly has not been challenged in the bill before us.

Then, perhaps there is another consideration which may come in. Personally I am not anxious to give the present government too much authority. It is possibly quite true that the governor of a bank may be trusted just about as much as the present government in connection with the administration of financial affairs. I do not know that there would be much difference in policy. However, that ought not to affect one's decision in a matter of this kind. We hope that some of these days there will be in authority a government which will be in a better position to administer the financial affairs of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Needless to say I am not referring to my friends to the right. Looking over the bill with some care and studying the general situation I do believe that this measure marks an advance on anything we have had in the past. It is by no means one hundred per cent perfect, it leaves much to be desired, and it does not safeguard the interests of the public as I think they should be safeguarded. Nevertheless it does seem to me to be a piece of necessary machinery, and as such, an advance over the old arrangements we had under the Bank Act and the Finance Act. I would further suggest that under a more advanced government it may be used in the interests of the people. Certain amendments can be made, and I hope if my Liberal friends become the government party they will proceed to make amendments through which—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I expect they will.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, I know that is expected. I hope they will proceed to make amendments so that the Bank of Canada will be both publicly owned and controlled.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to hear my Liberal friends applaud that statement. I should like to have had their position definitely placed upon Hansard in the form of an amendment, and I am glad to have their applause and approval. If when we come to the next parliament they are the government party I will warn them that we are going to hold them strictly to that position, namely, that they will proceed to amend this act so that we shall have a publicly owned and controlled bank.

Mr. GOTT: They think they are in office now.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Very near.

An hon. MEMBER: You will forget all about it in another year.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Some hon. member suggests they will forget all about it. I am afraid that the financial power which is now denounced will prove a little bit too strong.

Mr. GOTT: Half of them will not come back.

Mr. CASGRAIN: You won't.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: However, we can leave that to the future. In the meantime I wish to say, since we have no opportunity to state it formally, that we stand definitely and emphaticaly for public ownership and control of the central bank. That taken for granted, I am inclined to think that this measure marks an advance beyond anything we have had in the past, and for that reason, on third reading I shall vote in favour of the measure.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, when I rose to speak a few moments ago I did not know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) had the floor. Needless to say I willingly gave way to him. For many years hon. members in this corner of the house have supported a stable currency and credit system. When we look back to the period between 1926 and 1929 and realize that during that time no less than $635,000,000 of new money was put into the money flow of this country, one appreciates that not only was trade improving, but in the event of a sudden reaction things would be very bad indeed. Then we find that in the deflation period between 1929 and 1933 there was no less than $704,000,000 written out of existence. One has to appreciate that that is one of the real reasons why we have had such a drop in prices. It is because we are up against these great differences, and these extremes of inflation and deflation that hon. members in this corner of the chamber have consistently advocated a stable currency and credit system. We have also taken the stand, as the records as far back as 1923 will show, that we believe our money system should be based on goods and services, and not upon gold. That being so we have consistently fought the idea that we should be handicapped for the sake of not having what some people think is a sufficient gold basis on which to base our monetary system.

I should like also to remind the house that we have not made proper use of our national credit. While from year to year, with our possibilities for production, we have become richer, we have actually curtailed national improvements. When we found it advisable to construct public works of different descriptions we should have been in a position to use our national credit. Only a few years ago the amount of $50,000,000 was struck out of the estimates for public works, having in mind the idea that such a saving would be one of the solutions towards bringing back prosperity. To-day I am very pleased to find that the government has realized it can make use of the national credit, and in the legislation proposed last week by the Prime Minister on behalf of the Minister of Finance we find we are going to have the sum of $40,000,000 put into public works of different kinds, without any interest cost to the nation. I claim that procedure should have been adopted years ago. The Prime Minister admits he could use $100,000,000 in that way. I take the stand that wherever there is a public work to be done, one which is needed for the public benefit, it should be done without interest charge. I contend, further, that so long as there are public works needed we should not have a pair of idle hands in the country. Such action would have the effect of cutting down the debt burden of our country, because up to the present time we have entered upon public works programs through the medium of creating debt, and such debt is creating one of the greatest burdens we have to face.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Believing along the lines I have indicated I take this opportunity of moving, seconded by Mr. Coote:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment is out of order. The only point that I think the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) has overlooked is this, that you may amend the third reading of a bill by moving that it be not now read a third time, or you may vote against the bill being read a third time, which negatives the motion and precludes it being brought up again the same session, and lastly, if you do undertake to send the bill back to a committee to be amended it must be specifically indicated in the amendment what it is proposed to do in the way of a new or amended section. I think the hon. gentleman will agree when he has read over his amendment that he has covered everything that could well be thought of but that he has not indicated just what amendment might be made for the purpose of enabling a committee to pass upon it. In other words, the committee has to go to work and draft a new bill. Now that is not the purpose of a third reading amendment.

Mr. POWER: It is easy. Appoint Mr. Gerry McGeer as governor of the bank.

Mr. BENNETT: It is out of gear—whether it is McGeer or not I cannot say. At any rate I think the hon. gentleman will agree that this proposal if accepted by the house would impose upon the committee the duty of sitting down and trying to draft a bill, whereas the purpose of a third reading amendment with respect to the matters I have referred to would be to indicate what the amendment should be that was to be inserted in the bill or the amendment that is to be made to bring the bill into accordance with the provisions of the suggested amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the objection taken by the Prime Minister is well grounded. This document does not profess to be an amendment to the legislation. It does not deal with the bill before the house and it gives no intelligible instructions to a committee.

Mr. SPENCER: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, when I sat in my seat and heard four other amendments ruled out of order, each one drawn in a different way with the object of trying to get a vote of this house upon it, I rather anticipated that mine would meet with the same fate. I am not going to question your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I am only sorry that we cannot find an amendment that is acceptable to both sides of this house.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, with many of the arguments of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) as to the sovereignty of the House of Commons and parliament I would heartily agree, but when he attempted to deliver a lecture to hon. gentlemen on this side of the house, coupled with his arguments, I would remind him that perhaps if we had had his cooperation and that of his group on other measures which have passed the house this session, and which were just as much against the sovereignty of parliament and the House of Commons, we might have achieved better success. May I refer particularly to the peace, order and good government clause in the Unemployment Relief Act? I admit that my hon. friend voted with us on that but he had a very limited influence with his group because apart from the member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) they all voted with the government and against the sovereignty of parliament and the House of Commons.

I think my hon. friend himself and all the other members of his group also voted against the amendments which were proposed from this side of the house to the marketing bill with regard to the sovereignty of parliament. I do not want to blame my hon. friend but I think he might refrain from delivering lectures to us in that respect.

But I rose particularly to say a word about section 24 of this bill and the amendment I moved in committee of the whole to that section. The government then took the amazing attitude that they would stand or fall by their proposals with regard to the issuing of notes, that they would resign if a majority of the house would consider it better that the notes of the Bank of Canada should bear English and French words instead of the notes being issued in two sets, one in English and one in French. Following that intimation the committee gave a decisive vote against my amendment. I do not propose to offer it again because that would merely give another opportunity to say that I was acting from political motives.

But I think I owe it to the principles I have upheld and to myself to say a word in answer to what I believe were the uncalled-for insinuations of the Prime Minister in his speech in answer to me. How he could say that I was violating the constitution I am at a loss to understand. He himself said that he stood for equality. That was the purpose of my amendment; that was the principle on which it was based.

How he could say, further, that I and those who think as I do were trying to coerce or dominate the majority is still more fantastic. I took the trouble to say that I was pleading with the majority in order that they might be persuaded that the mode that I was offering was preferable to the other. Was that coercion? Was that a dominating spirit? Why should not the matter be discussed without diverting the discussion in another direction? And, Mr. Speaker, I think nobody has a right to describe me anywhere as being unreasonable and a sort of firebrand. I have tried all my life to preach Canadian unity and Canadian brotherhood in Canada, in all the provinces and in both languages, and if Providence gives me strength I propose to do so during the remaining years of my life. I repeat, why should not this matter be discussed without the use of abusive and threatening language?

Let me only say this in conclusion. Canada will continue growing and developing along sound Canadian lines. Canada and Canadians are bigger and better and more lovable than some of those who assume sometimes to speak for them. When both the Prime Minister and myself have disappeared the principles of good will upon which Canada has been built will continue to be upheld, and I hope will continue to be accepted by Canadians, and the country will advance along sound national lines.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On a question of privilege, may I call the attention of the Prime Minister to an unintentional omission. No motion has been made that the bill be passed and that the title be as on the order paper.

Mr. BENNETT: I thank the right hon. gentleman. The motion that the bill be read the third time was declared carried, but the further proceedings, the motion that it be now passed and that the title be as on the order paper, have not been followed. May that motion be put, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Bennett moves, seconded by Mr. Guthrie, that Bill No. 19 be now passed and that the title be as on the order paper. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 70, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Mr. BENNETT: The only amendment made by the Senate was to strike out the word "company," inasmuch as, under the Interpretation Act, the word "person" covers "company" and there is no necessity for the latter word.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BENNETT: I will not take until after lunch Nos. 10 and 11, in order that the Department of Justice may look into them. No particular changes have been made in these two bills except in the form in which they are expressed, and they will stand until after lunch.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have looked at these amendments and I find that there is a difference only in phraseology.

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly as I see it. I desire to make some inquiries during the luncheon hour to find out why they were put in the form they are in.

LOAN COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 123, to amend the Loan Companies Act.

He said: This bill endeavours to provide, so far as this parliament can, that the corporate powers of companies shall not be exercised where the rates of interest are larger than those they are entitled to exact by their act of incorporation. It has a retroactive effect because it applies to all companies heretofore as well as hereafter incorporated and leaves to parliament the right to decide what the maximum that may be charged shall be; and a charge in excess of that rate would result in the forfeiture by the company of its powers, there being undoubted jurisdiction in this parliament to provide that, as a condition of granting corporate existence to any group of men, it shall also follow that if they depart from the conditions imposed as to rates they may charge, forfeiture of their corporate powers shall ensue. With respect to provincial companies, that difficulty would be overcome, except to this extent, that so far as we have power, and of course we have considerable in the way of affording them recognition or dealing with them as such, they would forfeit any rights to protection from the dominion.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the legislation which is embodied in Bill No. 123 does not go further than it does.

Mr. BENNETT: How far does the hon. member want it to go?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I commend it as far as it goes but my submission to the minister is that it does not remedy the evils that are alleged to exist in regard to loan companies that are now carrying on; the exorbitant rates of interest which have been charged according to the terms of their charters can under this legislation still be charged. This bill says only that if they do exceed the powers given to them in the various charters they have received from parliament at different times, those charters may be forfeited. But I regret very much the adminstration in conjunction with the superintendent of insurance were not able to fix a certain specific rate beyond which those loan companies could not go and which would apply to both those that are asking for charters this session and those that have received charters in years gone by. If not this year certainly at a later date parliament must face the situation and fix a definite maximum rate of interest beyond which those loan companies cannot go. This legislation, in my humble judgment, is practically innocuous because under their charters those loan companies can make exorbitant charges and they can still do so even after we pass Bill No. 123.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). The bill before the house is a great disappointment in relation to what we expected. There is in it nothing that specifies what the loan companies are allowed to charge. When I brought the matter up on a bill that came from the Senate some weeks ago and suggested that they should not be allowed to charge more than 13 per cent, the Prime Minister proposed that the bill be sent back to the committee on banking and commerce where it might be possible to make the charge even less than I had suggested. This has not been done and so far as I can see the loan companies can go ahead charging most exorbitant rates. The rates given us the other day by the superintendent of insurance for a loan of $100 for twelve months ran as high, including expenses, as 49 per cent and for a $50 loan for twelve months the total charges and interest came as high as 94 per cent. We should do something definite in this house to stop this sort of thing. I am certainly against letting this bill go through as it stands.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to have jurisdiction over provincial charters—

Mr. BENNETT: That is the point.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):—and nearly all the offenders are operating under provincial charters so that, frankly, I cannot see how this bill can be of very much service because the main offenders get their charters from the provincial authorities and of course the federal authority is powerless to reach such companies. If the bill goes through some definite maximum rate of interest should be fixed.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): There are on the order paper now, I think, three bills establishing small loan companies which by their charters are given very wide powers. The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) has already said that the superintendent of insurance in addressing the committee on banking and commerce in regard to these bills showed that in some cases those loan companies could charge over 90 per cent, that being the total interest and service charges which they could make. He said that in practically all cases if they made the very maximum charges which they were allowed under their charter, those charges would amount in the case of small loans to over 90 per cent. When one of these bills was called some time ago the Prime Minister, as I remember, intimated that the government would consider introducing legislation which would limit those companies in the loans they could make, to an interest rate of not more than 13 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: That figure was mentioned by the hon. member for Battle River.

Mr. COOTE: The superintendent of insurance stated that in his opinion a maximum of two per cent per month was all that should be allowed to those companies, and that two per cent should include interest and all other charges except any charge actually paid out for registration.

Mr. McGIBBON: That was on the unpaid balance.

Mr. COOTE: That was on the money actually received.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps I can help the hon. gentleman as to that. The difficulty with it is that with respect to the charges the matter is governed by the authority of each province. We have jurisdiction only with regard to interest. I am prepared to add to the present bill a provision that the interest rate shall not exceed 12 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: I am sorry I have not one of the bills before me but there is in both of the measures that are now on the order paper a clause which allows the company to make a service charge of $10 in the case of each loan; that is in addition to a rate of seven per cent and another rate of two per cent. The service charge of $10 is to cover a variety of costs or charges which the company might naturally incur; it is supposed to cover actual disbursement. The companies do practically all of this clerical work in their own offices and by their own employees, and yet they make this $10 charge. The two per cent they are allowed to charge in addition to the seven per cent is, I believe, really intended to cover that service charge and in many cases no $10 charge should be allowed. It would be quite within the rights of parliament to insert in this bill or to have inserted in each one of the bills that are before us a provision to the effect that the total charge that loan companies can make for either interest or other charges shall not exceed two per cent per month.

Mr. BENNETT: That is too much.

Mr. COOTE: If they cannot operate on a total charge of two per cent per month they should not make the loan and parliament should not be granting them charters to enable them to carry on business where they can make exorbitant charges.

Mr. BENNETT: I am willing to add such a provision to the bill but I shall point out when we come to it the difficulty from a legal standpoint. I think the rate suggested is too high.

Mr. COOTE: With that understanding I shall not delay the second reading and perhaps when we go into committee the amendment which has already been suggested may be considered there.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

On section 1—Company defined.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the maximum now?

Mr. BENNETT: This bill came in this form from the committee, so what my personal views are need not be stated. But I am prepared to accept and add to this bill a provision as a condition of the exercising of the powers granted by parliament, that hereafter no company's charges shall exceed for all purposes two per cent per month. For the purpose of having that put into proper shape; I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION ACT

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stewart (Leeds) for the second reading of Bill No. 113, to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, this bill has for its purpose the construction and betterment of certain public works enterprises throughout the dominion. With the title of the bill hon. members on this side of the house can be in accord, because it expresses a worthy purpose. However, if we look into the details and examine the schedules we find that it is designed more to meet the ends of the government of the day and might be described as a bill to advance Tory interests in this country. It is intended to be put into force in order to help the government in the next general election. It is intended, through the bill, to relieve unemployment and, to a certain extent, it is called an unemployment relief measure. If in the speeches delivered some time ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), and by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who, during the course of his several addresses in the country and to this house has told us that unemployment is past, that we are on the upgrade, and that things are getting better, we were given the facts, then apparently this program would not be needed.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will have to withdraw that statement. At no time did I say that unemployment was past.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Well, if the Prime Minister states that he did not say unemployment was past certainly he indicated to the country that unemployment was on the downgrade.

Mr. BENNETT: I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I will withdraw it. But after the utterances by members of the government and by the Prime Minister himself I think I am safe in saying we were given to understand that the worst is over, that unemployment is on the downgrade, that business generally is going on in greater proportions, and that we may expect a return to greater activity very soon.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN: If these statements are true, and if the government states they are true, then the country can stand on its own feet, and I do not think these public works would be necessary in all places. I do not say that some of the works in the bill are not necessary; on the contrary some of them were needed four years ago. Some were needed as far back as ten years ago, but for some reason or another the government of the day could not proceed with all the works and undertakings, and little by little they carried them out as far as they could.

May I point out that in the years 1929, 1930 and since requests were made to the Department of Public Works and to the government by the constituency of Charlevoix-Saguenay for certain works which were absolutely necessary. I hold in my hand a copy of the votes and proceedings of this house for May 17, 1933, in which I find certain questions credited to me. These questions were asked regarding certain works at Pentecote River, Aux Coudres Island, Mutton Bay, Moisie, Magpie, Longue Pointe du Mingan, Harrington Harbour, Hamilton Cove on the Portneuf river, Dolbeau, Betsiamites, Beaupre, Richers Bay, Petites Bergeronnes, Point-au-Boisvert, Point Lebel, Port-au-Persil, Port-au-Saumon, Riviere-aux-Vases, River Blondelle, St-Anne de Beaupre, a retaining wall on the St-Jean river, work on the St-Margaret river, a wharf at St-Irenee, the building of a post office at Pointe-au-Pic and works at St-Simeon, Sept-Iles, Sheldrake, Baie St-Paul and Petite Riviere St-Francois.

All these works I have just mentioned are absolutely necessary now, and were necessary in 1930, 1931, 1932 and 1933. As a matter of fact, in the schedule appended to this bill there is an item of $156,000 for a wharf extension at Pointe-au-Pic in the county of Charlevoix. I am pleased that this amount has been provided for the work at that place. In the year 1930 the previous government had appropriated the sum of $125,000 to proceed with the construction of work necessary at that place, a work which had been recommended by the officers, engineers and technicians of the Department of Public Works. If those moneys had been spent they would have given a great deal of work to the unemployed people in the vicinity of Murray Bay, where there is a large pulp and paper mill and where, for the last three years, the people have been out of employment.

I say this bill is just four years too late. The works mentioned in the schedule to the bill should have been proceeded with in the years 1930, 1931 and 1932, when there was more unemployment and more need for assistance than obtains at the present time. The work at Pointe-au-Pic which I have just mentioned was recommended in the year 1930. Demands have been made by public bodies, municipalities and corporations interested in the various districts needing public works, and there are on the government files reports to the effect that the works are necessary.

Just to illustrate my point may I say that only this morning I received a letter from the president of the Clarke Steamship Company Limited, drawing my attention to the condition of the wharf at Havre St. Pierre, and he has asked me to urge upon the government the necessity for spending some money to do necessary and urgent repairs at that place. The letter, addressed to me, is as follows:

> I have your letter of the 8th instant, regarding Havre St. Pierre wharf, which I had on my return from Newfoundland.
> I have had another report since writing you regarding this wharf, and I cannot urge too strongly to press the government in this matter, as if something is not done immediately, I am afraid this whole wharf will go out, and it is very dangerous at present; it is also a danger to anybody going over the wharf in its present state.
> I would appreciate it if you would again follow this matter up with Mr. Stewart.

And the letter is signed by the president. A few days ago I wrote the minister drawing his attention to the condition of the wharf at a place called Mille Vaches. The wharf at that point was in a bad state of repair. The people in that vicinity have to use it in the export of pulpwood and other materials.

The minister in introducing the bill stated that the government was proceeding with a public works program to take the place of the dole. Those may not have been his exact words, but I believe I have expressed his meaning. We are glad to hear that the dole will pass away, and that to a certain extent we are going to give work to our own good Canadian labourers. I appreciate that fact. I must subscribe, however, to the statements made by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) to the effect that the present program will not entirely relieve the state of unemployment, that it will be necessary for the government to do some work along the lines followed previously, and that at least to some extent it will have to carry on the dole in order to save people from starvation. We know that these works will not be proceeded with before the end of the fall, or possibly next year. The minister stated that approval of the program was general. That may be so on the government side of the house, because hon. members may have noticed that about $7,000,000 are to be spent in Tory constituencies and only a little over $2,000,000 in Liberal constituencies in the province of Quebec. The minister stated that because of recent storms it was necessary to do a great deal of work in the maritime provinces and along the Atlantic coast. May I say to him that in the constituency of Charlevoix-Saguenay, along the Canadian Labrador coast and the north shore, and other places, there are plenty of works needed. All these places are in need of works. Many works have been dismantled recently and the government has no reason, simply because they are doing some work on the Atlantic coast to pretend that they are meeting the wishes of the country at large.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to some of the points that were made the other day by the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau). He said that not all that was intended to be done was included in the schedule of this bill, and he drew the attention of the house to an amount of $2,500,000 under harbours and rivers, and to another large amount for public buildings, and said that money could be drawn out of those two votes for public works and relief. I protest, Mr. Speaker, against that way of doing business. If there are certain works that are going to be done, and the money is going to be taken out of those two large votes for works in this province or in that, I say that the house and the country has a right to know what works these are, where they are going to be done, and who is going to be benefited by them. I am afraid if we allow the government to go on with that kind of program and appropriate as large an amount as they like for harbours and rivers and public buildings generally, we shall find when we get nearer to the election that only those constituencies will be in need of public works where it will promote the interests of the government to spend public money. It means that we are simply giving the government another blank cheque as we have been forced to vote them others both this year and in the other years since this government has been in power.

The Minister of Marine also stated that the government has had in view the task of finding out the works that were the most urgent and that would give the most employment to the largest number of people. Looking over the items in the schedule we find, as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) has mentioned, that a lot of them may give employment to big corporations and certain kinds of engineering firms, but the hard-working common labourer will not get his fair share of many of these items. I think it is our duty to make the government aware of these facts and to urge them to make sure that in carrying on these works the greatest amount of work will be given to the ordinary working men.

The Minister of Marine also stated the other day that the government ever since they have been in power have done their duty by the city of Montreal, that they have worked for the interests of Montreal, and seen to it that all those who did not have work did not suffer hardships but were taken care of. If what the Minister of Marine has said is true, how is it that in the city of Montreal at any time within the last six months or within the past year no man can walk along Notre Dame street, St. James street, or anywhere along St. Catherine street, on his way from his office to the upper part of the city without being stopped by half a dozen passers-by, real, honest, good Canadians, asking for five or ten cents or a quarter to get a meal or shelter for the night. If the government had really done their duty, if they had done what they claim to have done, and these people had been receiving sustenance, conditions would not have been such that so many people would have had to ask for charity on the streets.

The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) has mentioned his objection to clauses 5 and 6 of this bill. I also object to these clauses, Mr. Speaker. I think that too great powers are given by this bill to some of the ministers to control the spending of these moneys. The government should have asked parliament for these moneys in the ordinary way by bringing down a supply bill, and it should have made a condition that on these works local labour would be employed and Canadian material used; that contracts would be given not only to big corporations but to small firms; provision should also have been made for including the six hour day and a fair wage clause in the contracts, and for the awarding of contracts to Canadian companies. The government should not award contracts simply on the basis of promoting the interests of a few friends and promoting their own interests at election time.

I am not against the principle of this bill, Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, but I see danger because the government wants to arrogate to itself the right of distributing the moneys to be expended among its own friends, and while claiming that the expenditures are for the benefit of the people, expending the money really with the object of bringing the government back into power. The government I say has not the right to bring down such a bill because it has lost the confidence of the people of this country. This government through its friends in Saskatchewan and Ontario has suffered two disastrous defeats recently, and a moribund government such as this has no right to ask the people of this country through its representatives in parliament to vote huge sums of money to be expended only for the benefit of the people who sit to your right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspe): I would like to add a few words to what has already been said in respect to this bill. I am pleased to say that my constituency has been more fortunate than many others because the bill provides for two rather important items of construction for it, one an item of $61,000 for the reconstruction of the quay and betterments at Cap-aux-Meules, and the other the expenditure of $64,000 for repairs and betterments to the port of Grand Riviere. I want to congratulate the minister upon having included these items, but I would remind him that both this session as well as in previous sessions I have asked him for appropriations for many other places in the county which I have the honour to represent.

My constituency has over five hundred miles of coast and seashore, and although many wharves and breakwaters were built by the former Liberal administration there are still many places that are in need of betterments, and there are also many places where repairs are needed to be made to public works already in existence, places, for instance, where public works have been damaged by storms. In asking grants for these places I pointed out to the minister that the providing of work in that way would be a proper method of curing unemployment in those localities at least. All along the coast there is pulpwood to be shipped, farm products, fish and so forth, but the people are handicapped and cannot ship out these products as there are no wharves where the boats can come in and pick them up.

This bill will not do away with the responsibility of the government for unemployment or with its obligation to end it. My constituency was one of the hardest hit by the depression, and the work which the government intends doing there will remedy the situation in only a very small degree, and only in those communities where the work will be carried on. I would therefore ask the minister to reconsider some of the items in this schedule, that he strike out some of the works which are not very necessary as, for example, the item for Valois, as was mentioned yesterday by the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier) and replace them with items for some useful and very necessary works which have been asked for by me in the course of this or previous sessions. I would point out to the minister that he could easily take $200,000 out of the $1,200,000 to be voted for the constituency of the Prime Minister and use it in my constituency in building wharves, where it would be of very much greater use than in building barracks for soldiers in the Prime Minister's constituency.

I notice there is an item of $2,500,000 for harbours and rivers generally. I should like to know if some of that money could not be spent in building and repairing public works in my constituency? It is quite true that the cities are very much in need of help from the government but it should not be forgotten that the smaller communities are also in need. I hope the minister will give very serious consideration to the demands which I had the honour to lay before him this session and will try to grant some of them. There is one item for my constituency, $64,000 for harbour repairs and improvements at Grand Riviere. My constituency is about five hundred miles long and as Grand Riviere is at one end of the constituency, this expenditure will not benefit the biggest part of the district. I should like to see the minister appropriate $5,000, $10,000 or $15,000 for different wharfs and works in my constituency. This would help to bring the end of unemployment.

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only a few words in order to express the viewpoint of the rural members. I notice from the schedule attached to the bill that most of the work to be done is to be done in the cities. The rural members and the electors whom they represent are not jealous and my purpose in rising to speak is not to complain of what the cities are receiving, it is to make a suggestion or two to the government. I realize that it is more difficult to provide for large works in the rural districts than in the cities. Those counties which lie along large rivers like the St. Lawrence offer an opportunity for the building of wharfs, retaining walls and works of that kind, but that is not the case in counties like the one I represent. However, I think if the government would exercise their ingenuity a little they could find means of providing work in entirely rural counties like Bellechasse. I hope some method will be found of accomplishing this work by means of the money to be voted in a general way.

For example, the government could assist in the clearing of land on a large scale, what I would term the mechanical clearing of land. This could be carried on in a large way instead of having it done by the individual owners of the land. The government could undertake to clear a whole parish, a whole township or a whole section of country by the use of tractors and other mechanical means instead of leaving this clearing to be done by the individual farmers. In this way employment could be given to many people in the rural districts who are now out of work. The upper part of my county is newly settled and there is a great deal of unemployment. These people work in the woods and in the lumber camps, mostly on the other side of the border in the state of Maine. At the present time this means of employment has been closed to them because the American government has barred Canadian workers. They insist that only American lumbermen shall be employed in the lumber camps of Maine and the other states. We cannot blame them for protecting their own people before offering advantages to others. The result has been that these lumbermen who have to go to the woods in the winter in order to obtain the means of existence have had to stay at home without employment. I think my statement in this regard will be borne out by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon). This unemployment has resulted in great misery in the newly settled parts of our respective communities. If the government will undertake a large scheme of clearing land by mechanical means these people can be employed and they will be able to support their families.

There is one more suggestion I should like to make. It has been estimated that there are between fifty and sixty thousand young farmers between the ages of twenty and thirty years at present unemployed in Quebec. I imagine the same would be true of the other provinces. These young men have absolutely nothing to do and a little help from the government would establish them in some useful employment. Because of the depression and the low prices prevailing for farm products their parents have been unable to assist them. The government is contributing to the establishment on the land of the city unemployed; this is a very good work and is to be commended but why could not the scheme be extended to include young unemployed farmers who are only too anxious to establish themselves on the land? If this were done it would prove of great benefit to the farmers, not only of Quebec but of all provinces. I hope the government will consider the two suggestions which I have made with great sincerity and in no spirit of criticism. I hope money can be found to look after the unemployed in the rural parts of the country.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, according to the 1931 census there are 44 cities and 347 towns in Canada. By this bill the towns have not received consideration proportionate to that given to the larger cities. The population of the various towns in Alberta is 34,042 while the population of the cities is 194,203. The population of both towns and cities totals 228,245. The total population of Alberta is 731,605 and subtracting the population of the towns and cities, leaves a population of 503,360 in the villages and upon the farms. I could supply the figures for the other provinces but I understand at this late stage there is at least a moral time limit upon our speeches. Therefore, I shall not take up the time of the house by quoting these various statistics. For every person living in the towns of Canada there are no more than six living in the cities. As these expenditures are allocated, all that Alberta will get is $150,000 for a post office and administration building at Banff, $1,200,000 for barracks in Calgary, $200,000 for Royal Canadian Mounted Police barracks in Edmonton, and $7,400 for a telephone line from Keg river to Carcajou. It is on behalf of those who live in the small towns that I speak to-day. I will speak for the farmers later. A member on the other side said that some of the money to be expended on these barracks in Calgary might easily be transferred to his district in Gaspe or the town in which he lives; I forget what he said. Well, I might say that at least $50,000 of this money could easily be transferred to the town of Vegreville where we have police headquarters, because these men have absolutely no housing. I would therefore ask the minister if at all possible to reconsider this vote so that some of the towns in our province might come in on the allocation of these expenditures.

Take the maritime provinces. There are only about a million people there, and not only from what I have heard from members from that part of the country, but from what I have read in newspapers and magazines, they are not suffering from the depression as we are in the west. In the three prairie provinces we have 2,350,000 people as compared with a little over 1,000,000 in all the maritimes; yet the maritimes have received $5,000,000 whereas the province of Alberta receives only $1,700,000. The maritimes are receiving $100,000 more than the three prairie provinces put together. In conclusion I do not think I can do better than quote to the house the views of the various chambers of commerce in the west regarding the allocation of these expenditures so far as the small towns are concerned. Here is a resolution passed in a very large district in Alberta:

Whereas the effects of the depression have been equally disastrous to all classes of urban communities, in that many of the smaller centres have a relief burden as great (on a per capita basis), as the largest cities;

And whereas the tax-paying ability of the residents of much smaller centres has become seriously impaired because of depressed business conditions;

And whereas the people of the dominion, regardless of place of residence, will indirectly pay for any national program of works that may be instituted:

Be it therefore resolved, that we, the boards of trade and chambers of commerce of north eastern Alberta in conference assembled at Vegreville, this 15th day of January, 1934, petition the government of the dominion and province respectively, as follows:

1. That any program of public works be so framed as to afford relief from the unemployment burden to all classes of urban municipality alike.

2. That any such program be of a nature to be of lasting benefit to the province generally and be designed to create buying power and debt paying ability in the smaller as well as the larger centres.

3. That employment on any works instituted as a part of the national program be afforded to unemployed on the basis of merit only, and without reference to former domicile. Provided, however, that this condition shall not apply, should the municipality in which the work is instituted share in the cost thereof to the extent of at least 33⅓ per cent.

One hon. member to my right said that these moneys should have been expended four years ago. I might add that something of this sort should have been done in 1930 but was not. I believe that more money could be expended, but I certainly do think that some of it should have been allocated to the smaller places—at least more than has been given. I therefore appeal to the minister to do something for the smaller towns.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I wish to call the attention of the minister to a fact which is evident throughout the whole schedule. In fifteen or sixteen different places where public buildings are to be erected, it is indicated in brackets that the site has been acquired. When we are in committee on the bill the minister, I think, should be prepared to tell us when these sites were acquired. It will be recalled by many that before the war the government of that day was in somewhat the same position as the government of to-day. There was a revulsion of feeling in the country against the government after the election of 1911, and so, with another election in contemplation, there was launched a program of public buildings and sites were acquired all over the country. It is true the war came on and that program was not carried out. It may be that these were the sites acquired at that time, and possibly some of them were acquired under the last government; I do not know. At any rate we should like to know. One of the sites acquired before the war is in Manitou, which is in my own constituency, and when this item of $2,000,000 for public buildings generally is before the committee, the minister might do worse than give some attention to the needs of the town of Manitou, where a building of moderate size would meet the needs of the community.

All I wish to say in regard to the bill generally is that while undoubtedly it will do a great deal to relieve unemployment, I am by no means as sanguine as some seem to be that it will enable us to get rid of the dole entirely. The $20,000,000 voted in 1930 did not go far in that direction, and I doubt whether the $40,000,000 which it is now proposed to spend will entirely solve the problem of unemployment relief. If that problem is solved it will not be by reason of this bill but for other causes.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): No doubt the people of Canada have been looking forward to the introduction of this bill ever since the announcement was made early in the winter that such a measure would be brought down. I believe that the people throughout the dominion are interested in this bill, more so possibly than in any other bill, and for that reason I think it is the duty of every hon. member to express his views regarding it.

I will not indulge in any congratulations of the government on bringing down this bill, nor am I going to criticize them for not having brought it down sooner. It has been said that the fault to be found with the bill is that it is four years too late. With that statement I entirely agree. As a matter of fact I believe that if the present opposition had been half as sympathetic in 1930 to the needs of the unemployed as they pretend they are now the government now in power would not be sitting where they are. It is largely because of the unsympathetic attitude of the opposition at that time that the Conservative government came into office.

One criticism I have to make is this. I believe that the money could be spent to far better purpose, at least some of it, than in the way allocated in the schedule. For instance, I notice that in the city of Vancouver there is an amount of $240,000 for armouries, and I could suggest a number of uses to which the money could to far greater advantage be put in meeting the needs of the people than in building armouries. We need hospitals and schools. Not only in Vancouver but throughout the dominion. We need better homes for the working class and some of this money could be used for that purpose to far better advantage and more in the interests of the Canadian people than for the building of armouries and mounted police barracks. In regard to hospitals I should like to put on record a statement that was made by Doctor Hatfield, head of the tuberculosis clinic of the Vancouver General hospital, quite recently. I am quoting from a news item in the Vancouver Daily Province. This is what he said:

> There are fifteen hundred cases of tuberculosis in Vancouver. Two new cases occur every day, and as many as a hundred and twenty cases were found in one month this year.
> One death occurs every forty-eight hours in Vancouver from the disease, which is causing six times as many deaths here as all other infectious diseases together.

Then he goes on to say:

> Doctor Hatfield went on to describe the sad plight of men released from tuberculosis treatment but unable to compete on the labour market immediately. He showed how these men break down from overwork and lack of sufficient nourishment, suffer a relapse and again spread the disease. Such men, he declared, should be cared for until they are fully competent to go into the open labour market again.

But they cannot be cared for because there is not sufficient hospital accommodation to look after them. And for that reason again I would suggest to the Minister of Public Works that he reconsider this item for the armouries in Vancouver and see if at least some of the money cannot be used to take care of the sick that the municipality is unable to take care of at the present time.

I hope before the bill is finally passed every precaution will be taken to see that in all contracts let the fair wage clause will be inserted and that provision will be made for its enforcement with the utmost strictness; also that no subcontracts shall be let or, if such are let, that provision be made that fair wages must apply on all subcontracts as well as on the original contracts.

There has been some criticism of the provision in the bill that where the amount of the work does not exceed $25,000 tenders need not be called for. It is rather an indictment of our present system of government administration that all our work could not as well be done by day labour under the engineers of the Department of Public Works as by calling for tenders and the letting of contracts for the work. I have had some experience of municipal administration and the carrying out of municipal work and we have proved time and again that the work can be done much cheaper than by contractors. As a matter of fact, we can save more than the contractors' profits on every piece of public work done by day labour under a competent engineer acting for the municipality or for the various boards that have been appointed to carry on certain municipal works.

I remember when the Prime Minister brought down the $20,000,000 appropriation at the special session of 1930 he remarked that it was not a solution for the unemployment problem. I hope we shall not consider this public works program as a solution for the unemployment problem, because it is not. We shall have to solve that problem in some other way; it cannot be solved by a policy of public works. It can be solved only when the purpose of our production and our productive effort is used to provide for the needs of our people and not, as is the case at present, for the making of profit.

Mr. L. E. PARENT (Terrebonne) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the house very much in discussing this bill; however, in the interest of my constituency I intend to make a few comments. In principle, I approve of this measure because it affords us the means of relieving the unemployed in this country. However, like many who preceded me in this debate, I find that this measure has been too long delayed. If the $40,000,000 which the government intends to appropriate to public works had been expended two or three years ago, what a difference we would have noted throughout the country in the purchasing power of the people and the ordinary trade! But let us proceed. The bill provides for the construction and improvement of certain public works in urban centres, especially in thickly populated places. I admit that there are more unemployed in urban centres than other centres and rural counties, however, one must remember that unemployment also prevails in rural districts. There are small towns in rural counties. For instance, we have in the county of Terrebonne, the town of St. Jérôme with 10,000 population; the towns of St. Thérèse, Terrebonne and St. Agathe, where I have the honour to reside. These centres during the last three years of the crisis, had to provide for the needs of a great number of unemployed by carrying out certain undertakings with the help of both dominion and provincial governments. If the entire $40,000,000 are applied to erect buildings whose superstructure is of steel, that will require artisans, experts, skilled labour. Many unemployed—the majority of them—are neither bricklayers, carpenters nor masons, but are purely and simply navvies or labourers. In our rural counties there are many of these people residing in small towns, heads of families who require work. That is one of the reasons why I requested the government to remember rural counties and grant them certain amounts for various works not connected with the erection of large buildings or steel bridges, but with the construction of or improvement on roads and concrete bridges. All are aware, to-day, that with the development and improvement of traffic the subsidiary road to the national highways are called upon to stand the wear and tear of heavy traffic. The bridges have broken down, they must be rebuilt; and who will foot the bill? It will be the farmers who look after the highways and the grades. If the government granted to each county a certain amount to build bridges and improve the roads, labourers and heads of families could benefit by it.

Moreover, sir, we have in counties like the one I have the honour to represent, the advantage of being able to carry on certain work in the forests. We have in Terrebonne, north of Montreal, a large tract of land known as the Mont-Tremblant park, of which it is hoped to make a national park so as to attract tourists to this locality. A great number of shanty men who, in the past, found work in lumber camps from lumber companies, might to-day, be employed in opening up roads, clearing and preparing this large tract of land known as Mont-Tremblant park, which would become a pleasure resort for tourists. This would have the effect of increasing the income of the people of the district who mostly depend on the tourist trade for a livelihood.

I closely followed yesterday, the remarks of the hon Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) who kindly requested us not to criticize too much, because there are various amounts which will be appropriated to rural counties. He mentioned, among others, an item of $2,000,000 included in the estimates of the department of the Interior. $2,000,000 for the rural counties out of a total of $40,000,000 is a very thin slice. Mention is made of the building of highways, of electric lighting systems, aqueducts, drainage, pleasure grounds, protection work on rivers, etc. Other items should be placed under the same heading as the item to which I just referred, for instance: the item of $60,000 to apply two coats of paint on the steel structure of the Montreal Port bridge. I am quite aware that this work is necessary, but it should be placed in the estimates of Public Works, under "Maintenance" of the Port bridge and not included in this bill as a relief to the unemployed.

There is another item for public buildings in general, improvements, additions, fittings, repainting, painting and other repairs, which should be included in the estimates of the Public Works department. These two items, totalling $2,050,000, should be applied on construction work in rural counties so as to relieve the unemployed who reside in the small centres to which I referred. The quota amounts to but one twentieth of a total amount appropriated if I rely on the statement of the hon. Minister of Marine that $2,000,000 only out of $40,000,000 will be applied to rural counties. One must remember that half the population of Canada is rural, and that a large number of unemployed are to be found in small centres and towns. It will be necessary that more than one twentieth of the total amount be appropriated to public works in rural districts.

As many have stated, I am not finding fault with the amounts granted to other counties. There is an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the constituency of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). I am pleased for the citizens of that constituency, however, I think that some consideration should have been given to other parts of the country which have a right to receive, by virtue of this bill, at least some small portion, without in any way affecting the amount of $1,500,000 for the constituency of the right hon. Prime Minister. That is why I uphold the rights of the county of Terrebonne which I have the honour of representing, because I think it should be granted about $100,000 for bridge work, improvements on roads and various other works to which I referred. I request but one thing, it is that, by this bill, a fair and just distribution be made among all the counties where unemployment prevails —there are unemployed in all parts of this country—in order that no blame be placed on the government and those who represent the people in this house, because should this bill be adopted in its present form, we shall certainly be criticized.

Mr. A. E. MUNN (Vancouver North): I do not wish to take up much time of the house, but I wish to say to the minister that the allotment for British Columbia under this bill is a little under the average. However, I have no particular complaint, because there are items here under which we may get something which is not specified. During the past two or three months I have made certain requests to the minister concerning repairs to wharves, new wharves, public buildings and other matters. While he has not made any allotment for my riding of Vancouver North I am hoping that he will spend some money in that riding, especially on the wharves and public buildings that I mentioned to him.

In regard to one item in the bill, No. 175, $14,000 for a retaining wall for Stanley Park, I want to compliment the minister for having that in the bill, but I think the amount should be doubled, then he would have a first class job. I know it will be impossible to make a good job of it for $14,000. I suggest to the minister that before letting this work he get a report as to how much it will take to complete. Another thing in connection with Stanley Park. It belongs, as you know, to the government, and is under lease to the city of Vancouver. It is one of the beauty spots of the Pacific coast. In my opinion it is being neglected, in this respect: some people say Stanley Park is virgin timber, but the fact is that it has been logged off. There is a lot of dead, rotten timber scattered through the jungle that should be cleaned out, as it serves as a breeding ground for the beetles that are destroying the green trees that are left. I have investigated and I know what I am talking about. I think the minister should get a report as to the condition, and that some of this money should be allocated for cleaning up that debris.

Another item that I see in the schedule is an assembly wharf at Nanaimo. I wish to caution the minister about building an assembly wharf there. In my opinion Nanaimo is not a suitable location. Nanaimo is the centre of a coal-mining industry rather than a lumber industry, there are no lumber mills at Nanaimo, and if an assembly wharf is built there it will surely be a failure because the dust from the coal will get on the lumber and when it gets to the planing mills they will wonder what has happened. This is something of which I think the minister should take special note and make sure that the lumbermen of British Columbia want that assembly wharf built at Nanaimo.

I am not holding any brief for any other town, but as a practical lumberman I know that Nanaimo is not a suitable location.

I would also advocate the inclusion of a fair wage clause in all contracts, and I think that any work costing over $5,000 should be let by tender.

There is nothing ear-marked for my riding in this bill, but I have made certain representations and am asking that if possible some part of items 75, 77, 78, 79 and 135 be allocated to the works I have suggested. I have not asked for anything unreasonable.

Mr. E. C. ST-PERE (Hochelaga) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, any one who would hope, through this bill, to see unemployment completely disappear from our large cities, would be very optimistic but not practical. No doubt this measure will somewhat improve the sad plight in which the workmen of Montreal and those of all large cities in Canada find themselves at present.

I accept, in principle, this bill, but with certain restrictions. I trust that no political distinction will be made in distributing the work among those who request it, secondly, wages not only rational but substantial should be paid to them. Many unfair, unjust, I may even say vile acts take place at present under the plea of so called rational wages. I therefore request as an appendage to this bill, not only rational but substantial wages, to which all workmen are rightly entitled. Moreover, I equally request that tenders be the rule laid down in regard work calling for even a smaller outlay than $25,000.

There are in our large cities a considerable number of small contractors who, in the past, have contributed more to help the workmen and to increase public wealth than those large companies which operating here and there, whose shareholders are foreigners and managers do not understand the mentality of our workers. These small contractors have had, within the last few years, material lying idle and it is high time that the government allow these people, who have made enormous losses since the beginning of the crisis, not only to utilize their material but to give work to the men they employed in the past.

There is another matter which I want to point out: The hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) insisted the other day in the course of his speech, that the material utilized in these various enterprises should be Canadian in order that this bill should afford still more work to those who in this country have been idle for a number of years.

[Mr. Munn.]

This measure, I stated a moment ago, will not afford the complete relief expected. What will become of our white shirt employees? What will become of our former office employees? What will become of our youth?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): The white shirt employees can become bookkeepers.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): The white shirt employees cannot become bookkeepers?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): They are clerks.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): The present bill will require bookkeeping, but this work will be performed by the employees of large companies, so that our white shirt people will find very little comfort in the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): You have just referred to small contractors.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): They are all "cimenteurs" (such liars or cement workers).

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Instead of so often interrupting those who take more interest than he does in endeavouring to relieve the depression existing in our rural districts, the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé would be more deserving of praise, if following the example of the Liberal members who spoke just now, he championed oftener in the house the interests of his county.

I shall be brief, sir. It is very fine to present to workers a measure of this kind so as to deceive them, but—I am addressing myself to the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé—is he or would he be following the example of his government, in favour of cutting out the dole? I state that the dole—necessity is law at present—must still be continued after this act is put into force. It is futile to think for a moment of cutting out the dole, let it be a joint contribution by the dominion government, provincial governments and our cities. I am in favour of continuing the dole, recognizing, with all those endowed with some practical sense, the impossibility, through a bill like this one, of affording a complete solution to the sad unemployment problem. And that, sir, is my last word.

Mr. W. H. MOORE (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he has been informed as to the deplorable condition of the harbour at Whitby, county of Ontario.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions representations have been made as to the necessity for dredging at Whitby. The general vote is in terms sufficiently elastic to permit that work to be done, if we conclude that it should be done.

Mr. DUPUIS: No definite answer yet.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): Have I the assurance of the minister that the matter is under contemplation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are not in committee.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The hon. member may have the assurance of the minister that what he has said to-day will be considered, and the situation at Whitby reviewed.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): I would not press the matter were it not for the fact that this bill has been staged as a relief measure. There are unemployed in Whitby. It has been pointed out by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw) that the majority of the undertakings are for non-productive purposes. I regret the action of the government in spending so much money on such non-productive purposes. May I associate myself with the statement or warning of the leader of the opposition as to the dangers of inflation. However, since the measure is for non-productive purposes, since it is to be financed out of money drawn from the clouds and since we have unemployed in Whitby I would ask that this bill should provide that the unemployed in Whitby may be set to work on the improvement of the Whitby harbour.

Mr. CHARLES E. FERLAND (Joliette) (Translation): A number of speakers, sir, who preceded me in this debate have in one way or another apologized for taking part in the discussion, stating that their intention was to be brief. There are so many things to say about this bill that I shall immediately state that I shall take the necessary time to make my remarks. The bill under consideration had for a long time been promised to us. It was announced with much flurry and exaggeration during the election campaign of 1930, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and his followers promised to settle the unemployment question. Let us examine the promises of this session; for many months we have been promised this bill to relieve unemployment. A few weeks ago our scrupulous Prime Minister stated that he could not introduce this bill before the elections of Ontario and Saskatchewan for fear of influencing the people's vote. I now realize that he was perfectly right. In fact it would have influenced the people. The constituencies set aside in this bill are numerous; there are many needs for which the bill should have provided, yet they were ignored Had this measure been brought down previous to the Ontario election, there can be no doubt that the poor candidates of Ontario would have had the same fate as those of Saskatchewan, who failed to elect one of their candidates. The Prime Minister feared to harm the chances of the Conservative candidates and that is why he did not wish to embarrass them.

If we consider the bill, on the whole, we find that certain features must be examined. Its object is to relieve unemployment. Therefore, it must provide work wherever there are unemployed. What do we find in this bill? There are in Quebec about 1,400 municipalities. How many are included in this measure? Can any one find more than twenty-four? Among these twenty-four a number have no unemployment problem. Thus, for instance, I could point out to the little municipality of Valois, in the county of Jacques Cartier where, to my knowledge, no unemployed are to be found, but where, however, an expenditure of $25,000 is authorized.

What characterizes this bill, is the total disregard for farmers in centres half urban and half rural, as in the case of the county of Joliette. In cities like Joliette or St. Hyacinthe, and those of the importance of Sherbrooke or Rivière du Loup or in so many other cities of Quebec, where there are so many unemployed, it was an easy matter to provide for public works which would at the same time have helped the farmers. There are many public buildings which could have been erected in such cities. As the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Parent) also pointed out, a moment ago, many of such undertakings could have relieved the unemployed, even outside of cities. For instance, if one examines the present situation in the northern parts of the counties of Joliette, Berthier Maskinonge, l'Assomption, Montcalm and Terrebonne, one may note that many farmers cannot depend any longer on their land for a livelihood because the returns are insufficient, although in the past the land was profitable and the farmers were comfortably off. There are public works which could be carried out in those northern sections; roads to be built in the county of Joliette, as well as in the county of Berthier-Maskinonge represented by a member who was able to obtain for the town of Berthier a post office which will cost about $48,500.

The government could and should have appropriated for such works a larger amount, since it is an easy task for them to finance undertakings of this nature in a country whose credit, are we to believe our friends in the government, is greater than that of all other nations. The government could have provided for certain undertakings which would have given practical and profitable results to farmers. At the inquiry on the spreads of price and mass purchasing, the disadvantages of tobacco trusts were investigated and it was pointed out to the government that the tobacco growers of Quebec especially those of the counties of Joliette, L'Assomption, Montcalm and Berthier-Maskinonge can no more find markets for their products which they have to sell at exceedingly low prices, a few cents per pound. At a sitting of the committee, the mayor of St. Jacques-l'Achigan, Mr. Joseph Marion, brought out a very interesting memorandum which contained suggestions made by tobacco growers of my district in order to remedy this disastrous and ruinous situation. It concludes as follows at page 1682 of the report:

Our suggestions greatly resemble those made by the Ontario tobacco growers: organization of the official grading through the means of a central warehouse for drying, grading and public auctioning.

The government should have provided for a central warehouse for drying, grading and selling by public auction, in our important district. While giving work to the unemployed in our district, it should also have provided for cold storage plants for the farmer's perishable products in order, to complete the work undertaken by the co-operative associations of butter-dairies and farm industry products. Perishable commodities could be stored in these plants, such as butter, when, during a few months in the year, prices are low or when there is over production. One could store in those plants, for the time being, the maple products which are marketed without being graded or carefully selected and sacrificed at ruinous prices, while a local market is being flooded with large quantities of this commodity, far more than required by the local population.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me to ask him a question? Does he not think that the Marketing of Natural Products Act will permit exactly what he suggests?

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I regret, sir, that I have to reply in the negative, because I have no faith in the results of the act to which my hon. friend, the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) has just referred.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): To be saved, one must have faith.

[Mr. Ferland.]

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Faith will remove mountains.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Am I to understand that the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Barrette) has no faith himself in that act?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): I did not make that statement. I am quite confident on the contrary.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Would the hon. member repeat what I did not catch? Will he explain what he means when he states that I have no faith?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): I stated that to be saved, one must have faith.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Then, I must reply to my hon. friend that if one must have faith to be saved, I doubt very much that he has enough to save his party and government at the next election.

What also characterizes the bill under consideration, is the particular solicitude of the government to specially favour the Quebec Counties represented in the house by Conservative members. One notes that the government paid special attention and carefully handled the matter.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): That is quite natural.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): To this, the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Laflèche) replies: Quite naturally.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): That is natural!

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): This remark is entirely in keeping with his principles, his mentality and with the policy of the Conservative party generally.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): You have principles when in the opposition and then when in power, you disown them. That is the difference existing between us.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): We expected that partiality in the distribution of public works in Quebec. If at least they had been distributed in all cities where there are unemployed!—And we are aware that there are unemployed in all cities. The government has not forgotten that it helped the unemployed of all cities in Quebec and that, at present, there are unemployed in all the cities which are not mentioned in the bill and which should have been included among others Sherbrooke, whose population is close on 30,000; Joliette whose population reaches almost 12,000; St. Hyacinthe, Riviere-du-Loup.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): Those two counties are represented in the house.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): —and even Hull. I find it ridiculous that the government has not thought of helping the unemployed of Hull. If there is a city which is suffering from unemployment where the working population is at present in distress it is certainly the city of Hull. The government can certainly not close its eyes to what takes place just outside the limits of the Capital. Yet for the sole reason, obviously—if there are others, we should be told—that Hull is represented by a Liberal member, no work for the unemployed is mentioned, for this municipality, in the bill.

Why should there not be any work in the new diocese of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm? There is no excuse for ignoring this new county, there is no reason for not affording relief to the people of this new constituency. This county has a number of parishes on the St. Lawrence river, and it could also, have benefited by the work to be undertaken in the various rivers of this country. Particularly in Quebec, a considerable amount of the money to be voted, which represents many millions of dollars, will be utilized in carrying out work on the St. Lawrence or other rivers. One might think that it is "watered stock"—election watered stock.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Are you opposed to the work which will be done on the St. Lawrence?

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): In principle, I am in favour of the work to be carried out on the St. Lawrence, but not in the way which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine wishes to distribute it.

For instance, I am opposed to spending considerable amounts, hundreds of thousands of dollars to build a concrete wall in order to prevent the embankment in the county of my hon. friend from falling into the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): It is to prevent the county from sliding away!

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): There is precisely in this bill a large item, $40,000 to construct a cement wall which according to the hon. Minister's statement would serve to protect another wall that cost $68,000, and also be an extension to the latter.

Especially—this is not the statement of the hon. minister—the said wall will serve to protect the government at the next election. I fear that the protection will be of no avail.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Time will tell.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): What are the undertakings you have suggested for the county of Joliette?

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I suggested a number of undertakings for the county of Joliette, which could also have applied to the county of Berthier and which the hon. member forgot to request. He contented himself with a post office at Berthier. For at least three or four years past this post office has been requested. I am pleased that the hon. member has obtained it and I have no objection to there being erected at a cost of $48,000 a beautiful post office in the town of Berthier and, even, that there should be placed at the main entrance a commemorative bust of the member for Berthier who is not very tall, so that it will not take a great deal of stone, and therefore, will not cost much.

For some time past, sir, a campaign has been waged in the press so as to protest against the deplorable state of the two bridges which link Montreal to the Joliette L'Assomption-Montcalm county. As stated in the press, these bridges are truly a disgrace to the Canadian metropolis; they are in a lamentable state, paved with planks which act like an accordion when automobiles pass over them, the bridges are too narrow and have no sidewalks for pedestrians who travel daily from Charlemagne to Montreal to earn a livelihood.

These pedestrians are constantly exposed to serious accidents. It would be an easy matter to rebuild these bridges with the funds appropriated to relieve unemployment and if there be not sufficient to rebuild them, they could be repaired; the foundations could be strengthened, sidewalks could be added on each side for pedestrians and these floating planks could be replaced by a cement floor or by some other material. However, it is quite easy to explain that the government did not think of repairing or rebuilding these bridges. The counties of Joliette and L'Assomption-Montcalm are negligible quantities for our friends opposite since they do not even want to let them keep their members and that they remove from these counties, owing to the redistribution of seats, one member out of two.

Such is, sir, the spirit of justice which animates our friends of the Conservative party. This is quite in keeping with their policy of the last few years, it is clearly written in this bill, which is also as unfair as the Redistribution Act by virtue of which there exists in Quebec rural counties that have only about 20,000 population while others have a population of 60,000. To prove my statement, that this bill is unfair and that it sets aside the Liberal counties, I have but to point out to the fact that the largest rural county of Quebec, the new county of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has been entirely ignored, not even being mentioned.

Certain municipalities will benefit by this bill; I am very pleased. I have no objection to counties represented by Conservative members being given work; however, I state that counties having Liberal representatives should also have their share, since there are unemployed everyhere.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): Chicoutimi and Father Point are in counties represented by Liberals. Lacolle is represented by a Liberal, the member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume).

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Lacolle has been transferred (decollé).

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): That does not go (colle).

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): The hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Laflèche) states that some counties represented by Liberals obtained work. It is true that some did; however, in most cases one finds that the reason and justification for this is very obvious. If, for instance, we take Sorel, it was necessary to authorize work in that place, since by the policy of our Conservative friends, the workers at Sorel had been dismissed so as to make place for workers from the counties of Berthier-Maskinongé, Champlain, Yamaska and other Conservative counties. The conservative electors must be taken care of and given assistance wherever they are, even if they are in Liberal counties.

I shall not insist any further, sir; I clearly showed that this bill smacks of partiality, unfairness and "partisanship" the usual policy of the government, and, although the principle of giving out work is accepted by all, I state in closing my remarks that the government is to blame for the way it distributes work.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the hon. member begins his remarks, I should like to transmit to the house the following message from the deputy assistant secretary of the Governor General:

Ottawa, June 28, 1934.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Mr. Justice Rinfret, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber to-day at 5 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. L. C. Pereira,
Deputy Secretary to the Governor General.

[Mr. Ferland.]

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate does not insist upon the amendment made to Bill No. 51, to improve the methods and practices of marketing of natural products in Canada and in export trade, and to make further provision in connection therewith, with which the House of Commons has disagreed.

I also have the honour to inform this house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate does insist upon its amendments made to Bill No. 89, to amend and consolidate the Excise Act, with which the House of Commons has disagreed.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION ACT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stewart (Leeds) for the second reading of Bill No. 113, to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada.

Mr. T. ADELARD FONTAINE (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I deem it unnecessary to discuss at length the reasons, considerations and comments in connection with this bill.

I had the opportunity, recently, to submit to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) in a petition I presented to him on behalf of the people of the county of St. Hyacinthe-Rouville, which I have the privilege of representing in the House, a few requests in connection with work which could be undertaken in my county. I think that one may rightly state that it is unfortunate, nay, most unfortunate, that it was thought proper to set aside or overlook certain counties and some of the principal cities of our province, cities in majority Liberal such as Hull, St. Johns, St. Hyacinthe, Sherbrooke, Joliette and a few others. I do not intend to speak at length on this measure. Every member approves the principle of this bill. Fortunately, as the hon. ministers, once or twice, have pointed out there still remains to distribute quite a considerable amount, 6 or 7 million dollars, I think. I have faith, inasmuch as the county I represent is concerned, that consideration will be given to the requests and petitions that I presented and that they will be acted upon in a practical manner by granting to this county the fair quota to which I know it is entitled.

Mr. J. FERNAND FAFARD (L'Islet) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not envy the considerable amounts voted to relieve our large cities. It was but fair that the government, after having starved the people by its policy, should have come at last to their rescue and provided food to the working classes. What characterizes the bill under consideration, is the complete denial of work for our rural districts. The government does not seem to remember that, since 1930, our farmers have been in distress, that at the end of each year they witnessed the prices of their products decrease, while, on the other hand, they had to pay the same prices for what they required. It would have been an easy matter, by this bill which, at first, provided for an amount of $50,000,000, to vote some moneys to help the various provincial governments in draining the lands. In Quebec, Ontario and the Maritime provinces, thousands of acres could easily be cultivated, if we had the necessary funds to carry out drainage work, we could thus help our numerous rural families. Since the government also states that it wishes to help the back to the land movement, it would have been an easy task to assist the various provincial governments by granting certain funds to help to clear the land. We would have thus had an actual back to the land movement and the funds would have been distributed equally and fairly to all.

What is happening at present? I represent a rural county and I receive a dozen letters a day from young men inquiring whether it would not be possible for them to find work in the large centres where they know that large undertakings are being carried out. It is all very fine, sir, to erect customs and post office buildings. I have no objection, however, we must realize that these buildings give no returns to the country; they are rather a cause of expenditure, either because of insurance or repairs and maintenance necessary while the money expended for the drainage of lands or to establish settlers, becomes an actual asset. The farmer, at present, pays too much for what he requires. I am certain that, if an audit was carried out to discover the additional amounts which farmers had to pay because of duties on farm implements, barbed wire and fertilizers, we would discover that a large portion of the $40,000,000 which will be expended in large cities, is derived from money contributed by our rural constituencies.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few remarks to those of hon. members on this side of the house as regards Bill 113. The object of this measure is to provide work for the working classes and reduce the expenses in connection with the dole. If one examines this bill, one notes, generally, that the public works mentioned in Annex A have already been requested by liberal members, on many occasions, especially with reference to the Montreal post office—the postal terminus. In 1930, an amount of $6,000,000 had been provided to erect this building. We requested, by our questions and speeches that the unemployed should be relieved, that work should be given by erecting an annex to the customs and excise building at Montreal. As last the city of Montreal obtains what it requested, but it is a little late because such work should have been undertaken at the outset of the crisis under the measure enacted by the house in 1931.

Moreover, we had appropriated in 1929—and that would have served the purpose—$50,000,000 for the Canadian National. This was carried in the house on division and without discussion. In 1930, about $12,000,000 were expended and the balance remained in the Public Treasury. This would have provided much work, especially for labourers. I cannot figure how, through the projected public works, our workers will obtain much work, although they are the ones who suffer most in Montreal, in our cities and rural sections. When contracts are to be awarded in Montreal, the trades union people will be employed and quite a number of them still have a little work in building and repairs, but one will find out that there will be no work for those who receive the dole, those on whom the factory doors are closed, at present, and for the labourers without any special trade.

The work will be done in the central part of Montreal, except for a very small part in the eastern section of the city. As to the western part where unemployment greatly prevails, no work will be available for our workmen. The centre of the town will become the Mecca! All will endeavour to reach it in caravans or in processions so as to obtain work and the government shall require a good employment bureau, capable men, and secretaries to choose these workers, to compensate them for the dole which will end about July 15 or August 1, next.

I have my doubts about sections 6, 7 and 8 of the bill. If you suppress the dole you will be faced with work of urgency because municipalities will call for help, they want to be given work as soon as possible. Provinces and rural centres are doing the same, all are on their way to Ottawa! What steps will the government take when faced with section 7 of the bill? In schedule A, one notes that, out of 163 items, 73 of them, when added, only amount to $25,000 or even less. That means in urgent cases the government will award the work without tenders. Patronage will completely prevail in each county; contracts will be awarded under instructions from the minister solely, and tenders will not be called because the government will invoke section 7 which reads as follows:

> In the case of work of pressing emergency in which, in the opinion of the governor in council delay would be injurious to the public interest . . .

The moment you suppress the dole, all these undertakings will become urgent, the government may resort to section 7 on all work costing $25,000 or less—73 out of 163—will be awarded without tenders.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Is that a crime?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Public interest requires that the work be carried out on the most economic terms possible. When a government awards a contract of $25,000 for work which can be done for $10,000 or $15,000, the public treasury is the loser.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): How does it happen that Quebec never publicly calls for tenders?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): We are not in Quebec but in Ottawa.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Fortunately.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): According to the act in force, any dominion contract for an amount over $5,000 must be awarded after public tenders have been called for by the Public Works department. The present bill will do away with this provision of the present statute. The member who is fortunate enough to obtain work for his county will be master of the situation. In the Christmas tree erected in June—it is the first time I see such an event in midsummer—blue and red stockings hang. You Conservatives will find in your blue stockings the jewels, the work which your party will award you, while we Liberals, will find nothing or almost nothing. You placed potatoes in our stockings, but from now on until the dominion election, you will discover that your contracts of public works will change into cabbage leaves and that our potatoes will turn to sweet potatoes; and this under the magic rod of the Canadian people.

In 1930, we had voted funds for numerous works. To-day the government places in the schedule of the bill works which should have been included in the budget. And what became of the work recommended in 1930? An item of many thousands of dollars had been approved for a post office in the constituency which I have the honour of representing. It disappeared like a cloud in the skies of St. Henri. What became of the suppression of level crossings in the same county? If the contract of the Canadian National had been carried out such as enacted in the dominion statutes, we would have to-day the free circulation of traffic in the western part of Montreal.

In connection with unemployment work, how far advanced is the construction of the tunnel under the Lachine canal at Côte St. Paul, linking the municipal wards of St. Henri and Côte St. Paul? The act authorizing the construction of this tunnel was approved on January 15, 1931, by the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec. It will be found at chapter 124 of the Quebec statutes, 21 George V, 1930-31.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Did you vote for it?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): That was in Quebec and I sit in Ottawa. As a member of this house I am in favour of the immediate construction of this tunnel. His Worship the Mayor, Camilien Houde, at the request of the citizens of the western part of Montreal, had this measure enacted. In 1931, when he ruled in Montreal and was leader of the opposition at Quebec, his executive and councillors went down to Quebec to press the passing of this act, authorizing the construction of two tunnels under the Lachine canal, one at Wellington street and the other at Côte St. Paul, which were to link the municipal wards of St. Henri and St. Paul. With that in view he had then obtained from the legislature the authorization of making a loan of $5,500,000 for those two tunnels. He is again in office in 1934; he is at the head of the municipal destinies of the city of Montreal. He will soon be granted, through the cooperation of his friends opposite and ours, an amount close to $4,000,000. With these $4,000,000 he will undertake the work promised at the time, and which he requested and had adopted at Quebec. The preamble of the act reads as follows:

> . . . there will result considerable advantages for the public as regards traffic and the help which the execution of such works will bring to the unemployed.

However, this statute will only come in force inasmuch as unemployment prevails in the city of Montreal. Section 2 chapter 124 of the statutes of Quebec, 21 George V, 1930-31, reads as follows:

The said city is authorized to enter in such contracts as it may deem advisable with the federal government and the Montreal Tramways Company for the purpose of obtaining from one or the other or from both a contribution in money to assist it to pay the cost of such undertakings.

A delegation in 1931 interviewed the government and the latter immediately approved of the construction of the tunnel under the Lachine canal at Wellington street. According to the act these $5,500,000 were to serve to build the two tunnels, however, realizing that the funds were not sufficient, another delegation the following year went down to Quebec, and the $5,500,000 were increased to $7,000,000. I now find in this act, chapter 106 of the Quebec statutes, 22 George V, 1931-32, an act amending the statute 21 George V, chapter 124, passed on February 19, 1932, the following:

The cost of the Wellington tunnel must not exceed four million two hundred and twenty thousand dollars and the balance of the five million five hundred thousand dollars must be applied towards the cost of the other tunnel.

That is clear. The tunnel of Wellington street was to only cost $4,420,000; if we deduct this amount from the total of $5,500,000 for the two tunnels, there remains a balance which the city of Montreal must have in their treasury for the construction of this second tunnel so as to relieve unemployment as stipulated in the Quebec statutes. The municipal administration which is again in office in Montreal must have in the treasury for the construction of the second tunnel, an amount of $1,280,000. As the work on this tunnel, according to the figures of a competent civil engineer, Mr. Jean-Paul Lalonde, of Montreal, would cost $1,114,474, there still remains sufficient to build the tunnel of Côte St. Paul. The amount of $1,500,000 which is the difference between $5,500,000 and $7,000,000 must certainly be applied to the necessary expropriations for the two tunnels, that of Wellington street and Côte St. Paul. There still would remain enough, a few hundred thousand, to carry out the necessary expropriations of the streets ending at the tunnel of Côte St. Paul, and those on the St. Henri and St. Paul sides. I maintain that the dominion government are directly interested in this work. They have indirectly pledged themselves to build these two tunnels. Let them provide work for the unemployed of Quebec. When statutes were jointly enacted by the city of Montreal and the Quebec legislature, authorizing such work as a special relief for the unemployed; when, on the one hand, the government has already placed in the supplementary estimates an amount of $785,300 as its quota to construct the Wellington street tunnel, I state that, if this work is carried out, the government would be providing work for our workmen. Out of the total cost of this undertaking amounting to $1,114,474.67, $582,251.85 would be applied to material and $186,440.35 would be paid to labourers, the unemployed who prefer to work rather than receive dole cheques. That is how the government could help the unemployed and at the same time, carry out an undertaking indirectly contracted by recognizing this statute and by partly applying it to the construction of a tunnel under the Lachine canal at Wellington street and partly to another tunnel at Côte St. Paul.

I am not the member for Jacques Cartier, however, I appeal to my hon. friend the representative of that county (Mr. Laurin), that he may plead with the government, as the latter wishes to decrease the unemployment, especially when the city of Montreal must have in its treasury $1,280,000 which has not been expended although authorized to do so. The government can help to complete this work by its contribution as it did for the construction of the Wellington street tunnel.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Are you for or against this bill?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): What bill?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): The bill in connection with public works submitted to the house.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): In principle, I am in favour of the bill. On the other hand, I find nothing for the western section of Montreal; no work was provided for that part of the city in order to relieve the unemployed.

I am not one of those who envy their fellow-citizens or any particular member because he obtained work for his county, for I am aware that it will benefit the people of his constituency; however, I hope that Liberals as well as Conservatives may be given work. What I dislike, is that the government seems to ignore that, in the western section of Montreal, there are also people unemployed. It is thought that they will be able to take care of themselves when the dole is discontinued; when such a useful undertaking as the tunnel under the Lachine canal, at Cote St. Paul, is set aside, when the Tramway Company was to contribute one third, as it did for the Wellington street tunnel; the city of Montreal, one third, and the Dominion government also one third; it simply shocks me. I state that this work should be carried out in this ward separated from the rest of the city by the Lachine canal. Did not the Lachine canal cost enough, last autumn, to the railways and canal department, I ask the Minister of Marine or the Minister of Public Works, when it froze, in November, and the tramway service was interrupted for days, necessitating detours by adjacent streets, on routes under construction, and when special squads had to be despatched to break the ice at Cote St. Paul, so as to allow free navigation? I state that we must remedy this state of affairs. I am aware that it was a Statute of Quebec which I quoted, but as one of the representatives of Montreal, I know that its administrators are in a position to carry out numerous enterprises to relieve unemployment. I appeal to my hon. colleague, the member for Jacques Cartier, in order that his constituents of St. Paul may cherish his memory after the next election, in order that his people may appreciate this worthy act of the present administration of the city of Montreal which intends to request the Dominion government to build this tunnel. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier is on excellent terms with the administrators of the city of Montreal and is the Dominion organizer of the Conservative party in the Montreal district; he is a friend of Mayor Houde and of the chairman of the executive, Mr. Savignac. Under such circumstances, he can help the member for St. Henri in his just claim for public works. I feel certain that the Government would not like it to be said that it does not carry out its promises by not having this work done. That is why I appeal with confidence, in order to obtain, for the western section of Montreal, the new tunnel under the Lachine Canal to which it is entitled. At the same time, according to the special measure enacted by this house, the government should show its kind feelings towards the Canadian National, by doing away with the level crossings in the western section, and these dangerous barriers, where so many people are killed each year, just as they have been done away with throughout Canada. The viaduct should replace, in this period of railway progress, the frightful and dangerous level crossings.

Mr. W. W. KENNEDY (Winnipeg South Centre): Opposition is expressed to this bill on the ground that some constituencies have been favoured more than others. It seems to me that the principle has been followed that, inasmuch as this program of public buildings is an anticipation of the needs of the country, public buildings shall be erected in those centres where unemployment conditions are greatest. It appears throughout the bill that that principle has been followed. I will not detain the house, but I would refer particularly to the city of Winnipeg, one of the constituencies of which I have the honour to represent in this house. In that city throughout the winter there have been over 30,000 people on direct relief. Much criticism has come from members representing some constituencies, but I feel that I should take this opportunity to convey to the government my appreciation, and through me the appreciation of the citizens of Winnipeg, of the fact that this bill has provided for public undertakings in that city approximating $2,000,000.

For years those engaged in the building trades, artisans and others, have been unemployed and have drawn upon all their resources until they are exhausted. This forward step in providing work with pay instead of doles is very greatly appreciated in Winnipeg, as I have no doubt it is in all parts of the country, and so, on behalf of that city, I take this occasion to convey to the government and the Minister of Public Works Winnipeg's appreciation of the fact that they have seen fit to undertake in Winnipeg works which can be economically carried out to the extent of $2,000,000. It is a welcome forward step.

In common with many other cities in Canada, Winnipeg would like more, but even though it would like more, I desire to express our appreciation of what is being done. One point I would like to stress is that there seems to be some confusion arising out of the nature of the works that are to be carried out. The city of Winnipeg have urged upon the government certain projects as being necessary, such as the sewage disposal system, that are not included in this program. It is only fair to point out that this program has in contemplation only works that are strictly federal in their nature. This does not mean that other works to which contributions will be made by the municipalities and by the provincial governments will not be undertaken.

I would like to draw the attention of the government on this occasion to the fact that in Winnipeg, while this is a welcomed step, yet they expect that additional work will be undertaken by the city in conjunction with the province of Manitoba and the federal government whereby further employment will be provided to Winnipeg labourers. I would ask the government to give its earnest consideration to representations that have been and will be made looking to works such as sewage disposal which will give employment to many unskilled labourers in that city. I would like to refer particularly to the municipality of St. James which adjoins Winnipeg and which welcomes the fact that in that municipality there will be constructed an addition to the Deer Lodge hospital costing $250,000, which will give employment to certain skilled artisans, but there are many there who are not skilled, who are in the unskilled labour class and who will still be without relief. So I urge upon the serious consideration of the government and particularly of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart, Leeds) that they take up with the province of Manitoba, the city of Winnipeg and the municipality of St. James these further undertakings which will give employment to what might be classed as unskilled labour.

During this session there has been conducted an investigation known as the Stevens' committee on price spreads which has disclosed conditions affecting labour that any hon. member will agree are scandalous. Without going into them in detail, let me direct the attention of the government and particularly of the Minister of Public Works to this point: it seems to me that the government should lead the way in ameliorating conditions, so I suggest that not only in all contracts which may be let there shall be included what is known as the fair wage clause guaranteeing to those who are employed the fair wage scale, but, more important still, that they make it their business to see that the terms of the fair wage clause are carried out. Tenders are called for by this and provincial governments from time to time for the filling of orders. It is true it is laid down in the contract that the man or firm receiving a contract shall conform to the minimum wage law of the province in which he carries on his business. That is the letter of the law but it is my confirmed belief after the investigation which has taken place that in ninety per cent of the cases the law is evaded. So I suggest to the government that not only the fair wage clause be included in all contracts but they make it their business to see that the inspectors, instead of warming the seats in their offices, go into the factories, the shops of those concerns and see that the laws are obeyed. I suggest that in every contract that is let there be included not only a clause that the provisions of the minimum wage act or fair wage laws be carried out but a very stiff penalty so that any firm receiving a contract in connection with those public buildings will find that it is to its interest to carry out the contract not only in letter but in spirit. I suggest that to that end every firm which tenders upon one of those contracts, certainly every firm whose tenders are accepted, shall post with the government a bond in sufficient amount to guarantee the carrying out of the fair wage schedule, and if it be found on investigation they do not live up to that schedule, that such money be forfeited.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): Mr. Speaker, just before this bill goes into committee I would like to make a few remarks and bring to the attention of the house a resolution that has been passed by the board of trade of the town of Summerside. In looking over the amount that is allocated to Prince Edward Island, I notice that it is less than $100,000; in fact, it is only $97,000. If we take proportional representation over the dominion, an amount of $40,000,000 would mean an average of about $4 per head.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is my hon. friend taking into consideration in any way whatever the general vote out of which substantial amounts may be spent in his province?

Mr. MacLEAN: I think the minister should wait until I get started. If he wants to know about the general vote I think I can make a good long speech on that, because in the general vote there is nothing for Prince Edward Island. There is an item for the province of about $50,000, but in the past years we in that province have had amounts ranging from $229,800 in 1928 to $339,800 in 1927. Now my hon. friend comes along and says: We will give you $96,000, and because there might be some repairs made out of the main estimates you had better sit down and keep quiet. I am not going to do that; I am going to present my case. If we got our just rights according to population we should receive out of this grant some $332,000. People may say: There is no unemployment in Prince Edward Island. So far as unemployment money is concerned that province has received less consideration from this government than has any other province. We could have used the money there very well, but the people are not built that way, to use a common expression, and they get along in the best way they can. But when the minister says that they are going to spend this money only where there is unemployment he can come to Prince Edward Island and he will find that our people down there can use a good portion of this amount. The board of trade of Summerside have sent me the following resolution, and I have written to the minister in connection with the same:

I am directed to communicate to you two resolutions adopted by this board of trade at a meeting held on the 11th instant. These were sponsored by the recently formed agriculture committee of the board and thought to merit support.

1. "That in the event of a government grant being available for public works, serious consideration be given the construction of rust-proof warehouses for potatoes at various railroad stations throughout this province."

2. "That the department of public works be asked to fortify against frost the warehouses on the government wharf at Summerside, by papering and sheathing the studding inside the building and by stopping the drafts under this building."

This is signed by R. A. Gordon, secretary of the board of trade.

Now, I have no objection to this work being done, but what we all wonder at is why this program was not brought down in the regular way in the main estimates. I think my hon. friends opposite will have a lot of difficulty explaining to the country why they told the country they were saving $17,000,000 in the estimates, heralded it in big headlines all across the country from coast to coast, and then at this late date come in with this bill to expend $40,000,000. It is only a belated effort, it should have been in the main estimates as in former years. In the province of Prince Edward Island we have always received from $229,000 to $340,000 per year for public works under the Liberal government.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the house went up to the Senate,

And having returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bills:

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION ACT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Mr. Stewart (Leeds) for the second reading of Bill No. 113, to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): I notice that $56,000 of the amount allocated to Prince Edward Island is for dredging. No doubt all hon. members will agree that that is an operation which is taken care of almost every year in the general vote. In looking up the estimates for the year 1929 I noticed that for the maritime provinces there was a vote of $540,000 for dredging. I think hon. members will agree with me that dredging is a work which will not give very much employment to those who are out of work. Two dredges have been tied up in the province of New Brunswick since 1930 when they should have been doing important work, and they have remained tied up ever since this government took office. Now, on the eve of a general election, these dredges will be put into operation and sent over to the province of Prince Edward Island to do work costing $56,000. No doubt my good friend from Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) will see that a crew of good New Brunswick men are on the boat when she comes over to my province to do the work. If that is the case I do not suppose the men in Prince Edward Island will derive very much employment from those dredging operations.

Section 7 of the bill provides that works up to $25,000 may be done without tender. When only a few years ago hon. members now sitting on the government side sat in opposition they were strong in their condemnations of the government then in power because it did not call for tenders even on contracts below $5,000. The Public Works Act states emphatically that works costing over $5,000 must be let by public tender. I regret that the department has departed from the old regulation and by the present legislation has overruled it. I believe that is one feature of the bill which the people will look upon with a little suspicion and they will wonder why the government has taken such action. In 1930 there were appropriations for a great many public works in the province of Prince Edward Island, but I regret to say that when hon. members took office they saw fit to cancel them. I remember that certain of our people have been asking ever since confederation for a vote for a boat harbour at Skinners Pond in the constituency I represent but no government had been good enough to put an amount in the estimates for that work until in 1930 we succeeded in getting an amount of some $30,000, and it would have been of great benefit to the fishermen of that community if the work had been allowed to go forward, but the Minister of Public Works has seen fit to cancel that very important work, and the fishermen in that community have had to labour under very great disadvantages ever since.

I would like to point out again that instead of Prince Edward Island receiving $332,000, which would be our share of this appropriation on the basis of population, actually we are receiving only $97,000. I can scarcely understand why that should be so, because there are three very strong supporters of the present government sitting on the other side of the house, and one of them is a member of the cabinet. I had really hoped that this program of public works would have been much larger than it is. There are a great many ways in which money could be spent to splendid advantage in the province of Prince Edward Island. Works are needed to be done and the money could have been spent in that way for the relief of unemployment. I hope that even at this late date my good friend the Minister of Public Works will see fit in the supplementary estimates which he will bring down before the close of the session to provide some larger amounts to take care of the needs of the province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. I. D. COTNAM (North Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the purpose of this bill, No. 113, an act to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada, is more or less to provide relief for unemployment. I should like to know from the Minister of Public Works on what basis the relief has been apportioned to the various constituencies throughout the dominion.

Yesterday the leader of the opposition attempted to build up a case apparently to show that his constituency of Prince Albert had been neglected in this program of public works because it happened to be represented by himself, a Liberal. My complaint to-day is that the constituency of North Renfrew, as well as the constituency of South Renfrew, and we can hardly consider them yet in the Liberal fold, have not received any consideration at all in Bill No. 113.

More than that I notice that this good city of Ottawa, and you could hardly say it has been represented by a Conservative member for many years—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. COTNAM: Naturally my good friend from Ottawa feels very pleased with the appropriations that are made in this bill for the city of Ottawa, because the city of Ottawa manages to get in this bill about $2,464,000, while up in the Ottawa valley, where we have Conservative members, we receive absolutely nothing. So the government cannot be accused of political partisanship in the way in which these moneys are being apportioned.

We have in the constituency which I have the honour to represent, and more particularly in the town of Pembroke, a very serious unemployment situation. In that town we have a population of 10,000 people and during the last three or four years our unemployment situation has been very acute, for various reasons probably more or less geographical in character. In the Ottawa valley industry in that particular locality has been largely confined in the past few years to the lumber trades. We had two large mills situated in that locality, but they have scarcely operated at all in the last four years, and that is also true of the branch factory of the Eddy Match Company where they manufacture match splints for export. Unemployment has been rife in the town. We have between 350 and 400 families at the present time drawing direct relief, and the town is now in the hands of a board of supervisors.

On various occasions in the past it has been necessary to carry on certain dredging operations in that locality. Last year during the period of low water in the Ottawa river, and that situation was more or less prevalent throughout the Dominion of Canada, the water was so low that for a time it seemed that even these wood-working plants that were operating would be compelled to close down because their logs were exposed, and it was almost impossible to bring them into the mills from the areas where they were boomed in. That condition became very acute, and this year it has become aggravated, as the minister well knows, because of the fact that the Timiskaming dam went out a few years ago, adding to our difficulties in the lower stretches of the Ottawa river. When these logs are out of the water and exposed to the sun, the management there tell me that eventually the logs become almost unfit for the purpose of making match splints.

I have urged on the minister at various times the necessity for taking some action that would be more or less permanent in character. At the present time they contemplate rebuilding the Timiskaming dam, and claim that if that is done it may relieve the situation but I would like to point out that even when the old Timiskaming dam was on the upper stretches of the Ottawa river we still had our difficulties with low water levels on the lower Ottawa, and it is not at all certain that the Timiskaming dam even when it is rebuilt will relieve our difficulties in the town of Pembroke and in those localities situated below the town. At various times dredging operations have had to be carried on, but as everyone knows they are not of a permanent character, and have to be repeated year after year. In a locality of that kind it would appear that you do not get much for your money spent on dredging because in the end the silt and dirt fill up the part that was dredged and it is only a matter of time until you are as badly off as before.

I have urged on the minister at various times the necessity for having his engineers study the local water situation on that section of the Ottawa river at the town of Pembroke. It has been proposed that a regulating dam might be constructed below Pembroke two or three miles to take care permanently of the low water levels on the Ottawa river. There has been a very strong agitation in the town of Pembroke and also in the county of Pontiac across the river in the province of Quebec. On Allumette island we have about four thousand people, and during the late fall months when the ferry does not operate and again in the spring these people are practically marooned on that island for from four to six months. They have no hospital facilities, and consequently there is a very serious situation of times for these people. For many years there has been an agitation that a bridge should be constructed which would link the mainland of the Ontario shore with Allumette island across the river. I think plans and specifications have been drawn up in the Public Works department, but the proposed structure was always too expensive apparently Moreover, this entailed the cooperation of the provincial governments of Quebec and Ontario and the federal government at Ottawa. Probably the first demand should be made by the people of Quebec, as the people living on Allumette island are the ones who would be primarily interested in having a bridge at that point. On the other hand, such a bridge would be of decided benefit to Pembroke and that section of Renfrew county. Pembroke is a natural market for the farm products of the island as well as the wood products which are sold in large quantities to the wood-working plants in Pembroke. As I say, during the spring and fall of the year these people are shut off from their natural market sometimes for weeks at a time.

A regulating dam at Morrison's island, just below Pembroke, would take care of the low water level situation which affects the wood-working plants in Pembroke and at the same time it could be so constructed that if at some time in the future Ontario and Quebec were willing to enter into an agreement with the federal government, it could be utilized as part of a bridge project. The lack of a bridge is a very serious matter to the people on Allumette Island. I am pleading as much for the people of Pontiac county in Quebec as I am for the people of Pembroke. If this regulating dam were constructed its cost could be considered as the contribution which the federal government might wish to make to a bridge project which might be carried out eventually.

I cannot conceive of a more opportune time to carry out this work. It would provide employment to the 350 or 400 unemployed in Pembroke. Employment would be provided during this coming year and until the lumber industry comes back a little more than it has up to the present time. I urge the minister to give this Tory constituency a little more consideration in this Bill No. 113. Perhaps out of the generosity of his heart even at this eleventh hour he may be able to give us a little consideration. I am vitally interested in the providing of work for the unemployed of Pembroke and I cannot conceive of any other undertaking which would prove to be of more benefit to those people than the erection of this regulating dam.

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I had intended reserving my remarks until the item in the schedule in which I am particularly interested was reached but as most hon. members have been making their appeals on the second reading and as it may facilitate the passing of the schedule as a whole, I want to take a few minutes to present the case of Cape Breton South. There is but one item in the schedule, one for $11,500 to cover a warehouse extension at Sydney. Of course, we are very grateful for that but I want to point out to the minister, as I have already pointed out, that this amount is totally inadequate to meet the requirements of Sydney as far as wharf extensions are concerned. In order that the business now passing through Sydney harbour can be handled, a large extension should be made to the wharf erected by the late government. The expenditure of $200,000 is needed to furnish proper facilities to handle the freight now passing through this harbour. We now have five lines of steamers serving a population of 70,000 within a radius of fifteen miles. The present wharf is capable of holding but one steamer and the warehouse will not accommodate the freight landed from that one steamer. Numerous representations by the city council and the board of trade of Sydney have been made and some severe condemnation has been passed upon my humble self for the lack of activity in securing this vote. I want to assure them that this has not been from any want of diligence on my part. I think the minister will testify that I have bothered him quite often in connection with the matter and at one time I thought I had convinced him as to the justice of our case. If it is at all possible, I appeal to him to give some consideration to this matter. We have the Newfoundland and Canada steamship line; we have the Provincial steamship line; we have the Nova Scotia steamship line; we have the Canada steamship line and in addition we have been given the promise that two large ocean liners will call at Sydney next summer. None of these boats can be accommodated at the present wharf. I am not entirely hopeless in regard to this matter as I know that when the minister is convinced of the necessity of this extension, it will be put through.

There is one other appeal which I want to make and which is possibly based on stronger grounds. I refer to the construction of a public building in New Waterford. This is a mining town of about 8,000 population and is possibly one of the most up-to-date towns in eastern Canada. It has a hospital, school, water service, concrete sidewalks, paved streets —and a post office in a shed on a back street.

Mr. COTNAM: I have one like that.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Not quite as bad as this. The former Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) visited this town in 1930 and was so convinced of the necessity of a public building that he made strong representations to the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott). He did not succeed in convincing that hon. gentleman of the necessity of the work. But in 1931 the present government was convinced of the necessity of it and an item was passed in the estimates for $45,000. The site for the building was secured; tenders were called for, plans and specifications provided, and the contract given for the construction of the building. The contract was cancelled before construction began and from that time to this we have been pleading in vain for a public building there. Naturally the people of that town are very much incensed. It is to be expected that they will pass, and as a matter of fact they did pass, very censorious resolutions on the government and on the humble individual supporting that government; but I have no doubt on this point, that the minister will admit there must have been an oversight in connection with this building for which provision had already been made in the estimates in 1931. But preparations will be made for the erection of the building before many months have gone by.

There is one thing that is rather amusing to the people of the island of Cape Breton.

For many years that island has been the water carrier and the wood hewer for the rest of the province of Nova Scotia. Cape Breton has been carrying Nova Scotia on its back for over a hundred years. We have the natural resources in that county, and the coal royalties have contributed the large portion of provincial revenue; but we get very little in return for it. Before 1820 Cape Breton was a separate province, but in 1820, through the characteristic stupidity of some of the English aristocrats of that day, it was tied on to Nova Scotia and ever since then it has been the tail of the dog. So that it is rather natural that we should feel a little resentful when large amounts such as appear in this bill are sprinkled over the rest of the province on the ground that they are for national ports. May I tell this house and the country too that the natural national ports of Canada are in the island of Cape Breton. Artificial ports have been built up at Halifax and Saint John and many millions have been spent in their construction; but the time will come when the very forces of geography will work so that the town of Louisburg will come into its own, and the city of Sydney as well. Let me give one illustration of the injustice perpetrated on that little town of Louisburg. In 1758 it was taken by the English. At that time it was the most important French fortress in Canada. By the taking of Louisburg the taking of Quebec the following year was made possible; had Louisburg not been taken Quebec would never have been taken. At that time over $25,000,000 had been spent in fortifications in Louisburg but they were all destroyed and Halifax was built up. Since that time millions upon millions have been spent decorating the Plains of Abraham in Quebec city while Louisburg, a town of such historic importance, has been languishing.

I want to close with one last appeal to the minister. I hope, and I have reason to hope, that within the four corners of the act itself some provision will be found to remedy what we at least consider a great injustice to the county of Cape Breton.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

FREE CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE IN VIEW OF AMENDMENTS

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue): By unanimous consent of the house I move:

That a message be sent to the Senate respectfully requesting a free conference with Their Honours to consider certain amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 89, an act to amend and consolidate the Excise Act, to which amendments this house has not agreed and upon which the Senate insist, and any amendment which at such conference it may be considered desirable to make to said bill or amendments thereto.

That the clerk do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION ACT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stewart (Leeds) for the second reading of Bill No. 113, to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, before Bill No. 113 is given its second reading, I should like to make a few observations with regard to its negligible operation in the northern part of Saskatchewan. I recognize the principle of a public works program in the curtailment of unemployment; I believe that is a generally recognized principle on and off this continent. I recall, I think it was in 1928, the Senate of the United States appointed a special committee to investigate unemployment and to report thereon. If I remember correctly, about the same year a committee of the House of Commons in Great Britain was appointed to investigate unemployment conditions and to report thereon. In both those reports the principle of a public works program was accepted; I might say that it was only accepted as one factor therein because it was not the only solution put forward for the relief of unemployment. Another principle was education; another, immigration; another, monetary reform; still another, industrial reorganization and, lastly, freer trade. But we are dealing to-night with a program of public works and I would like to speak briefly in a general way for Saskatchewan and in a particular way for the constituency of North Battleford.

I would like to deal with three points and, as I said, somewhat briefly. First, in looking at the preamble of the bill I notice that the argument is put forward that the construction program outlined therein will be for the general advancement of the country and to accelerate recovery. Possibly it may accelerate recovery; I believe it will to a certain extent, but this acceleration will be only sectional and not national. Consequently I fail to understand why the word

"national" is used in the preamble, because it seems very evident that the legislation is in a paramount way sectional and not national.

If we look at the bill from the standpoint of a percentage basis, what do we find? We find an approximate appropriation of $39,000,000 for Canada and as Canada has a population of slightly over 10,000,000, that means about $4 per capita. Saskatchewan has a population of approximately 1,000,000, so at $4 a head we ought to have on a mathematical or percentage basis about $4,000,000 spent in the province. How much is to be spent in that province? We find that the only amount to be spent in Saskatchewan is $675,000, or practically one and one-half per cent. Therefore, if we look at the problem from the standpoint of population, the proportion ought to be around at least ten per cent, which would mean well over $3,000,000 or $3,900,000 odd.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In arriving at these figures does the hon. member in any way take into consideration the large general votes for that province?

Mr. McINTOSH: No, I do not, and so far as northern Saskatchewan is concerned there is no large vote. As I will show by the time I have finished, there is in the main estimates hardly a dollar for northern Saskatchewan.

Again, if hon. members will look at the problem from the standpoint of area, Saskatchewan has an area of one-thirteenth or one-fourteenth of that of Canada. If you divide the amount by thirteen or fourteen, you will still get about $3,000,000. So, on a double count, from the point of view of population and area or of special need Saskatchewan is not getting a fair deal in the legislation now before the house. That is one point.

Let me proceed now to deal with the performance that we are going to get under this measure. From a percentage or mathematical point of view the thing is absolutely wrong so far as Saskatchewan is concerned; it cannot be defended, and as a representative of northern Saskatchewan I want to protest and to put some facts in a very plain and emphatic manner before hon. members on both sides. I reviewed the percentage principle that is lacking in this legislation; let me go on to see what the performance is. The performance is simply spending in Saskatchewan $675,000 out of a total of $39,000,000. Where is this money to be spent? In two Conservative ridings in that province, one in the constituency of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), and the other in the constituency of the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks). To prove that this is a political bill, I may say that the hon. member for Rosetown went home during the provincial election and on the platform in Saskatchewan used the argument that there was going to be a bridge built over the South Saskatchewan river at Outlook and in that way he tried to hold one of the local ridings for the Tory party. He could not do this; he hopelessly failed, but the very fact that he used this argument is proof positive that the foundation of this bill is to a very large degree political.

Let me go just a step further. In 1931 we had a letter from the Dominion Unemployment Relief department, Ottawa, under date of August 7 of that year and we were asked to report on undertakings in our constituencies that would alleviate or somewhat reduce unemployment. I fancy all members from western Canada, whether Conservative or Liberal, did report. Personally, I know I reported but there was nothing done. What was reported on about three years ago? I said: If you want to handle unemployment in northern Saskatchewan there is much work to be done. For instance, my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) referred the other day to colonization roads. That was one of the undertakings I recommended three years ago. Colonization roads should be built for the farmers of northern Saskatchewan if the government was going to undertake any relief program. Then certain other roads could be built for better transportation facilities. Further, the Beaver river, 200 miles north of North Battleford and 100 miles from Meadow Lake could be cleared of some of its rocks in order to improve transportation facilities between that great northern area and northern, central and southern Saskatchewan. But in this bill nothing is to be found with regard to any of those greatly needed facilities. More than that, I also recommended that the bridge at Ceepee on the great traffic artery from North Battleford to Saskatoon be built over the North Saskatchewan river, if there was to be any real undertaking started with a view to solving the unemployment problem in that part of the province. I have here a telegram from the North Battleford board of trade on that point. It reads as follows:

North Battleford, Sask.,
June 21, 1934.

C. R. McIntosh, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Executive of North Battleford board of trade keenly disappointed that there is no provision in announced relief program for work in northwestern Saskatchewan. Strongly urge representations be made to government to steel St. Walburg-Bonnyville railway; also to construct traffic bridge over North Saskatchewan river at Ceepee.

F. Wright,
Commissioner.

So you have in that telegram the North Battleford board of trade supporting the request for the building of this bridge at Ceepee, and also strongly backing up the placing of rails on about seventy miles of grade north of St. Walburg towards Edmonton. But in the bill there is not a word about these two great undertakings in the constituency of North Battleford.

Then I have a resolution here from the rural municipality of Great Bend, No. 405. It reads as follows:

Whereas there is a possibility of a bridge being constructed across the North Saskatchewan river in the near future, as a relief measure;

We, the council of the rural municipality of Great Bend, No. 405, wish to go on record as petitioning that this proposed structure be at the present Ceepee ferry crossing, believing this to be the logical and strategical point for the same, as records will show that this ferry crossing in the past has carried the heaviest load in the province, and is also on the main No. 5 provincial highway.

We would also urge that this work, once approved, be commenced at the earliest possible date, as it would be of considerable assistance in alleviating the relief burden of the adjacent municipalities.

There you have a resolution from a rural municipality and a wire from the North Battleford board of trade backing up what was recommended over three years ago, and this government has been in power now going on four years and has made no attempt to use a dollar of relief money in building colonization roads in the north, or improving transportation between the north and south or doing anything else in a constructive way to help unemployment conditions in the whole of that great northern area.

Mr. QUINN: Their representative in parliament is not effective.

Mr. McINTOSH: If my hon. friend will just attend to Halifax that will be all he can do in the next election. My hon. friend has sung his swan song; his political dirge has sounded.

Mr. QUINN: Will the hon. gentleman come and run against me in Halifax? I challenge you now to come down there.

Mr. McINTOSH: I might consider that. May I say it would be a very easy run. My hon. friend would be buried with ballots. I might invite him to come to North Saskatchewan and be politically submerged.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

An hon. MEMBER: He cannot get over the bridge.

Mr. McINTOSH: There is one thing more I want to mention. This bill runs true to form, true to the policy of high protection that has been guiding the destiny of this country for the past four years. It is eminently selfish. Whenever we get a Tory government putting forward high protection principles under the cloak of unemployment relief we can bet our last dollar that the essence of the legislation is selfish, and sectional, and costly. If unemployment is going to be cut down there is only one way to do it. This program may help, but it will not solve the problem. What must be done is to take down the tariff barriers between Canada and the empire and the world. We have to liberate internal trade by ending artificial price control and trade restrictions. In this bill there is no attempt to do that, consequently as far as a solution of the unemployment problem is concerned I am afraid it will be at best but a half way measure. Then we have to liberate external trade; internal and external trade go together. We have to liberate trade in every direction to help Canada and to enable Canada to help liberate the world. By doing that the Liberal party believes we shall get business, and the moment we get business our industries will get busy, our farmers will be able to sell their produce at home and abroad and unemployment will gradually disappear. In other words, we desire to promote trade with all nations, not only with the empire, not only internal trade, but trade with all the nations of the world, by abolishing the extravagant increases in tariffs that have taken place from 1930 on.

Mr. QUINN: Look at your own record for the last nine years.

Mr. McINTOSH: Only thus can a contribution be made to the solution of the unemployment problem. In closing let me again express my regret that the Minister of Public Works has done nothing constructive to help conditions in northern Saskatchewan; he has made no attempt to work out a bill on a sound and fair basis; he has done nothing that will mean really anything to northern Saskatchewan. Lastly he has done nothing that will help to free internal or external trade and thereby overcome the serious difficulties that to-day affect the whole of Canada from one ocean to the other.

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Before the question is put I would like to have just a minute or two to mention three items that affect the constituency of West Lambton which I represent. First may I thank the minister for including in the estimates provision for the completion of the public wharf at Sarnia by placing on it the warehouse the building of which I have been urging for the past three years. The minister is quite conversant with the need for this, and at one time the matter had proceeded so far that tenders had been called, but then the red pencil of the government struck it out. In making this grant for the completion of work begun by the late government we shall have brought it to a successful conclusion and will be in a position to utilize to better advantage the fine natural waterfront of the city of Sarnia.

In connection with the experimental cold storage plant for the onion growers of that constituency, I quite appreciate that this is an experiment. I do not believe that the amount is sufficient, but when one gets even a crumb from the table of this government I suppose he should be satisfied. I rise in particular to protest—I am sorry to do this, especially in view of the fact that I do not see in the house any member from the county of Essex—because I find included an item of $600,000 to build an elevator at the city of Windsor. In other words the government is going into the elevator business in competition with the Georgian bay ports, Collingwood, Owen Sound and Goderich. The hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Spotton) should be here. The minister kindly received this week a delegation representing these various ridings, consisting of three members of his own political faith together with the representative of the constituency of West Lambton. The views of these gentlemen and of the elevator owners, namely the municipalities in which they are built, have been fully placed before the Minister of Public Works. He quite properly stated that he is carrying out the building program which has been placed on his lap. He did not in any way attempt to shirk responsibility for the item, but he did state, and I believe quite truthfully, that the item of $600,000 had been placed in the schedule on the recommendation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who, I am sorry to say, is not in his seat. The deputation was received by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is therefore quite conversant with the views of these municipalities. As I have said I am sorry not only that the members from the Essex constituencies are absent, but that hon. gentlemen representing the constituencies in which are Collingwood, Owen Sound and Goderich are not in their places and are therefore not in a position to add to the protests I am making.

The reason given for including this item providing for the erection of an elevator at Windsor is that there is a need to stimulate the growing of corn in the great southwestern Ontario corn belt consisting of Lambton, Middlesex, Kent and Essex. The facts have already been presented indicating that already there is at Walkerville an elevator capable of taking care of 400,000 bushels of corn. At that elevator they have the driers, cleaners and all the equipment necessary to carry on the operation. An attempt has been made to stimulate the growth of corn in those counties, and should the government desire to lease the plant it would be available at a very nominal rental. Yet, despite this fact, at least for the moment—and I say that because I still believe the government will give serious consideration to our representations which may not have been made until after the item was placed in the schedule—the situation I have described exists. First, as I have said, there is no need for this building, and although I have already placed the reasons before the house I shall repeat the chief one, namely that there are already facilities at that point. Secondly there is the fact that the municipality I represent—and I do not pretend to speak for the others—is already in the elevator business on the strength of the fact that elevator capacity sufficient to serve the grain trade was needed at these various points. In the city of Sarnia we constructed at a cost of $800,000 an elevator with a 2,000,000 bushel capacity. The municipality issued the debentures, and then by an agreement with the elevator company extending over a twenty year period, entered into an arrangement whereby there would be a return. At the moment the elevator company in Sarnia have managed to keep up their payments of principal and interest, but there is still the sum of $665,000 owing. If the Toronto Elevator Company Limited, owners of the Sarnia elevator, did not buy their own grain, bring it down, and look after it in the businesslike way in which they conduct their business, our elevator would not be filled today, and they would not be able to pay the interest and the principal as it falls due. Yet the government is now proceeding to enter into competition with these municipalities who have staked their financial backing in order to encourage the grain trade of the dominion. I say that if it were only a matter of stimulating the corn trade in the counties I have mentioned I would have no complaint.

If we could label the elevator which the government proposes building with the words "for corn only," I would have no complaint. But it cannot be believed that this elevator will not enter into direct competition with the elevators on the bay ports, Goderich and Sarnia. The government is placing in jeopardy the faith of these municipalities in respect of the elevator companies when it goes out into competition with them.

As I have stated, the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister are now fully conversant with the facts. Although the item will be reached again in committee I do not intend to repeat what I have said. I earnestly suggest to the minister that before the government enters into open competition with the municipalities who have shown their faith in the grain trade by investing in these elevators at various points, he should consider seriously the representations which have been made to him during the past week. I am glad to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce has now taken his seat, and I suggest he should instruct the Minister of Public Works not to proceed with the construction of the elevator named in the schedule which, I submit, would be in the nature of a duplication and an unnecessary expenditure.

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I desire briefly to join with the other hon. members from the province of Saskatchewan who have preceded me in the debate, and to express my dissatisfaction with the amount of money to be allocated to our province. We find only two items; one is a bridge at Outlook costing $275,000 and the other a public building at Regina costing $400,000.

Mr. McINTOSH: About half a million dollars.

Mr. McKENZIE: These votes would not have a tendency to relieve the strain in that part of the country where relief is most needed. I have always had some doubt as to the advisability of erecting public buildings as a means of relieving unemployment, because a great deal of the money expended in such works goes towards the purchase of material and for purposes other than the payment for actual labour.

Speaking in this chamber on February 8, I drew to the attention of the government a proposal for the constituency I have the honour to represent, and one which I believe would result in more unemployment relief than either of the proposals outlined in the bill. I referred on that occasion to the proposal to erect a dam over the Souris river west of the town of Estevan. The purpose of the dam in the first place would be to control the flood waters of that river and to give a regular water supply to this growing town. It would also ensure a water supply for the developments which they hope to carry on at that point. The cost as estimated by the engineers who went over the ground a year or two ago was $125,000. The work consists in scraping down two hills into the ravine and river bottom, thereby forming a dam. The width of the space between the two hills is between 1,900 and 2,000 feet. The $125,000 which I have mentioned would to a large extent be expended on day labour and team work. There would be very little necessity for expenditures for material. Plenty of rock is available at the site for any work which would be necessary, and there would be very little need of any investment other than the payments to labour. This work would be of great benefit to the people in that constituency who are in need not only of work but of a little money. I believe the town of Estevan has an industrial future. We look upon it as the coming industrial centre of Saskatchewan because of the coal and other natural resources in that area. For the development of these resources a supply of water is essential, and that is one reason why the town officials and practically all the organizations are so solidly behind this project. I understand that at one time there was some international dispute as to whether the Canadian government would be allowed to dam back this water but I am advised now that the people of the state of North Dakota are very much in favour of the proposal I have put before the house. If the government have the idea of relieving unemployment as much as possible by this schedule of works presented to the house, there is nothing I can think of that might be included in the schedule of this bill that would give more relief for the money expended than this proposal, and therefore I would highly commend it to the government for inclusion in the schedule before this bill passes.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): I do not ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) for any favours, but I would remind him of his duty. He has dealt fairly with me in the past and I hope he will deal fairly with my constituents in the future, and especially during this summer. I ask for nothing. But I would remind the minister that in Témiscouata county, which was cut in the last gerrymander, there are still some very important places. On the shore of the St. Lawrence river I would remind the minister that there is a wharf at Notre Dame du Portage, which by the will of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and his supporters is now a part of the county of Kamouraska. The wharf there was kept in very good repair when the Liberal party was in power, but it has been destroyed since because the necessary repairs were not made. A resolution was passed by the municipal council asking that repairs be made to this wharf to relieve unemployment, but nothing has yet been done about it. Now is the time for the Minister of Public Works to see to it that this work is done this summer. I need not describe to the minister Notre Dame du Portage. It is one of the finest summer resorts in lower Quebec, and I simply draw his attention to the matter. This work was not proceeded with because of a foolish promise that was made by the Conservative chiefs in the parish saying that the government would spend $15,000. This amount was decided to be spent for the purpose by the former minister of public works, but the work was not done and it will be more expensive to do it now. I hope that the minister will see that that work is done.

Leaving Notre Dame du Portage I come to the present and the past. I would speak of the beautiful city of Riviere du Loup. May I tell the minister that important works have to be done there? I would remind him that in the past when I told him of the abuses that had taken place at Riviere du Loup he righteously saw to it that the wrongs were redressed, and that those who were guilty of padding the roll were obliged to refund to the government. I give credit to the minister for that. But now he should see to it, if some public works are to be done at Riviere du Loup that they are supervised by honest and reliable men, and that men of both political parties be given the opportunity to work. These are no ordinary items of supply, Mr. Speaker. This is the schedule of an act to relieve unemployment, and both Liberals and Conservatives have suffered because of unemployment and both should be given work regardless of their political creed. There are some very important works to be done at Riviere du Loup, both at the wharf and in the river. The minister knows what I mean and I shall not insist any more about it. The minister knows what is his duty and I leave it to his conscience and sense of duty to be fair with the people of Riviere du Loup, whatever may be their political creed.

Next is the beautiful summer resort of Cacouna. If the minister wants to know what Cacouna is he has only to look into the files of his department and see what kind of works have been done at Cacouna in the past. These works should be looked after. The wharf should be kept in good repair, and there must be some dredging done there also.

Next I come to Isle Verte, and Notre Dame de l'Isle Verte. There is a sea grass industry there which is of great importance. There are only two places in Canada where sea grass is cultivated; one of them is Isle Verte, and the other is in Nova Scotia. It is an industry which gives a little profit to the farmers in the summer time, and the minister should see to it that all those who are engaged in that industry are given a fair deal.

The wharf at Isle Verte is also important. It is a means of communication with the north shore, and it needs repairs very badly. Let me tell the minister that Isle Verte is a very important farming community. It is also a place where people pick berries in the summer time for shipment to the north shore, and there is great activity on the wharf there. I direct the minister's attention to that and to all the work that must be done in the neighbouring rivers not far from the wharf.

Let us go next to Tobin, halfway between Isle Verte and Trois Pistoles. This is no longer in my constituency. By the will of the Prime Minister this wonderful place was annexed to the county of Rimouski. Nevertheless there is some work to be done there. Some work was to have been done in 1930 but the government decided otherwise. This time they have another chance to do it. There is a lot of unemployment there and the minister should see to it that in order to relieve unemployment important work is done there.

Next we come to the delightful place called Trois Pistoles, which by the will of the Prime Minister has been annexed to the county of Rimouski. I know the people there well. They are my friends. After an election I do not consider whether they have voted for or against me. I try to serve them all to the best of my ability, but let me tell the minister that he should see to it that these people are treated fairly. I am sure that the people of Trois Pistoles will be well looked after by my good friend from Rimouski, (Sir Eugene Fiset) as well as the people of Notre Dame du Portage will be looked after by my good friend from Kamouraska (Mr. Bouchard). In spite of the fact that these fine parishes have been taken from my constituency I have still an interest in the welfare of these people and I direct the minister's attention to the important works that should be done there.

I have rendered the minister a great service in pointing out the abuses of which the Conservatives at Trois Pistoles were guilty when they sold cement for twice as much as it was worth, and I congratulate the minister upon the action he took in that matter. I informed him of what was going on, that the man in charge of the patronage was selling the cement for twice what it was sold for before, and the minister gave an order that that man should refund the money or that the account should be reduced. After what I told the minister he succeeded in saving money for the Canadian exchequer. I did this not to cause harm to anyone but just because it is my duty. I am sure the minister appreciated my stand in the matter, as I did his.

We have a beautiful inland sea in the constituency of Témiscouata. Lake Témiscouata is twenty-seven miles long and there are many parishes along its shores such as Dame du Lac, Cabano and St. Juste du Lac, while on the shores of the Madawaska river is Ste. Rose du Dégelé. There is also the Squatteck wharf. After the erection of a dam on the Madawaska river the waters of the lake were much higher than they had been before and much damage has been caused to these wharves. I direct the attention of the minister to these matters. I ask him to look into the corrupt practices which are prevailing among the Tories in charge of the patronage in my constituency. I have no right to ask for favours for the Conservatives or the Liberals. My duty is to direct the attention of the minister to what he should do in the future. I am sure if he does not listen too much to those greedy ones who are trying to make abnormal profits at the expense of the state he will see to it that we get a fair deal when the money voted under this bill is spent. I leave it to his conscience as to whether he does his duty.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I desire to associate myself with the other hon. members from northern Saskatchewan in raising objection to the contents of this bill. I have been looking over the estimates for the years 1932-33, 1933-34 and 1934-35 and it is rather interesting to note that the total amount estimated to be spent under this bill is just about equal to the reductions which have occurred in the votes for public works. In 1932-33 we spent $1,060,000 upon public works chargeable to capital; in 1933-34 the amount dropped to $250,000, and this year we have dropped down to $220,000. This money really should have been spent during the last two or three years.

I must compliment the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks) if he is responsible for the item of $275,000 for the building of a bridge across the South Saskatchewan river at Outlook. In my opinion this bridge is very necessary and it will serve a great portion of middle and western Saskatchewan. The hon. member is to be congratulated. I notice that this afternoon, when certain hon. members were objecting to the appropriations given to their provinces, the minister drew attention to the fact that probably something might be done under the general items in this bill. I have gone through the bill very carefully and I can find only three items under which the province of Saskatchewan could benefit in a general way. The first item is No. 78 and reads:

Interior Department—

To provide for the construction and development of public buildings, campsites, electric light and telephone systems, highways, trails, water and sewer systems, recreational areas, wharves and river protection works.

The amount allotted to this item is $2,000,000 and it is possible that Saskatchewan may get some of this. The next item is $500,000 for the construction of Indian residential and day schools, and hospitals. It is possible Saskatchewan may get something out of that. The next item is No. 135, public buildings generally—improvements, additions, fittings, repointing, painting, repairs and so on. The amount here is $2,000,000 and possibly we may get something out of that. If the total of these three items is to be divided among the nine provinces there will be only about $500,000 for each province.

I should like to endorse what the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) said this evening. I do not think there is a place in northern Saskatchewan where a crossing is more necessary than at Ceepee. I think when the government was contemplating spending approximately $40,000,000 they would have been well advised to provide for the building of a bridge at this point. I also want to associate myself with the hon. member for North Battleford in his criticism of the government for not setting aside some portion of this $40,000,000 for the building of colonization roads. There has been a large influx of people into the northern areas and roads are badly needed. I was sorry to see that the government had not made any appropriation for this purpose.

No doubt when the minister is dealing with his supplementary estimates he will point out that considerable has been given to the western provinces. I notice there is an item of $7,000 for the purchase of an old bank building in my home town for postal purposes. This is not exactly a relief project although, as has been suggested to me, there is probably a measure of relief in that $7,000 for the Canadian Bank of Commerce. If the minister goes through his estimates for the last two years and this year he will find that the reductions which have been made total about $39,000,000, which is just about the total covered by this bill.

Mr. ARTHUR DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, before this debate ends, I wish to reiterate my request of the other day with reference to the stone cutters of the city of Montreal. I requested the government to kindly specify in the contracts which it would award in erecting buildings in Montreal or elsewhere, that the contractors would have to employ stone cutters to carry out the work, instead of machines. It is obvious that such a provision would be of a nature to considerably decrease the number of unemployed in Montreal and elsewhere. Experts in the matter contend that a machine does the work of 25 men and, therefore, throws 25 workmen on the street. On the other hand, I am told that the stone cut by machines is of an inferior quality to that cut by expert workers.

Often there exists in the rock certain cracks, certain weakness which cannot be discovered by machine work; however, when a workman cuts it, he notices whether it is split, cracked or of inferior quality. The stone cut by machine detracts a good deal from the value of the building. Therefore, I request the government to furnish work to the stone cutters, who are, to-day, among the unemployed in Montreal.

I do not wish to congratulate the government for having submitted to us this bill at the end of the session. "The mountain in labour has brought forth a mouse!" This government which thought itself important and capable of settling the unemployment crisis in 1930, submits to us, after four years in office, a bill which will permit it to expend $40,000,000 to relieve those who are unemployed since then. It seems to be an important event, but let me assure you, sir, that it does not amount to much. It is not a permanent remedy to cure unemployment, it is an artificial, a temporary measure which will amount to nothing, unless it be for a few months this year. The government thinks, thanks to such a measure, that the Canadian people will forget the 1930 promises and its inertia heretofore! Being acquainted with its rule for the last four years, especially during this session, the Canadian people realize perfectly that they were wrong in replacing the Liberal regime by this one and will again repose their trust in us They will replace this government by a Liberal one. If one examines specially this session's legislation, one might conclude that the goverment did its utmost to create positions, carry on patronage and thus endeavour to capture the confidence of the Canadian people. I wish to protest, sir, because so little work has been set aside for Quebec.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): You should cooperate, instead of protesting.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Let the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge have no fear. When the time comes, I shall cooperate, as I have always done in the past, especially for sound and rational measures; I have never refused to accomplish my duty in the house or elsewhere. It is not in introducing such a bill after four years, that the Canadian people will be led to believe that the government carried out its duty and understood the responsibilities that it had to assume in this respect. It is not because the government erects in the town of Berthier, a public building at a cost of $48,000 or $50,000, that it can imagine that it has performed its duty. The government in this respect only proves that it cares very little for the people's money and, to help in electing one of its friends, it has no compunction in having parliament appropriate an amount double to what would be necessary to satisfy the town of Berthier and the whole county. The government showed that it was incapable of administering the finances of this country. That is why the Canadian people will remember, when the polling day comes, to thank the government for its services to Canada

I shall not add anything further, sir, so as not to delay the house. I am aware of the servile majority of which the government disposes. When it is a question of championing our nationality and allowing bilingualism on our bank notes, our good friends opposite, with a few exceptions, thought fit to repudiate the rights of Quebec and the French language, by voting against the amendment moved by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). One more thing to stir up the people's regrets and feelings—I shall not say of rebellion—of revenge towards those who, in the face of the country, have, so to speak, repudiated their language to servilely support their leader.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me a question? Could he inform us why, from 1921 to 1930, when the hon. member for Quebec East formed part of a strong government, supported by almost 60 French Canadian members of Quebec, neither him nor any other representative of the French Canadians, among whom was to be found the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) dared raise their voice to request that the two languages be both printed on dominion notes, and never dared to request—

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): There was no question of a Central Bank then, and we had notes in both languages.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I did not put my question to the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain).

Mr. DENIS (Translation): In reply to the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau), may I state that there was no question of a bank of Canada under the Liberal regime, from 1921 to 1930.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): There were dominion notes.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): May I point out one thing. If we have, to-day, stamps printed in both official languages of this country, we owe it to the Liberal administration which fulfilled its duty towards the French language, in this country.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): You have not replied to my question.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I replied to it, myself.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): That is no reason to invoke. If in the past errors were committed, if there was neglect, it is not a reason to always follow the same path. When means are offered to us to redress such wrongs and to adopt a reasonable suggestion, like the amendment of the hon. member for Quebec East moved, I see no reason not to acquiesce, when our good friends, the English Canadians of this country, are well disposed towards us I wish to thank these English friends on this side of the house, who unanimously supported the amendment of the hon. member for Quebec East and who proved thereby, that they desire union, harmony and bonne entente and, especially that they desire to give to the French Canadian race the legitimate share to which it has a right.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close my remarks by these few words.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): What would you suggest?

Mr. DENIS (Translation): I would request the hon. Minister of Marine to forget the past, to fulfil the whole of his duty towards the people, the province of Quebec and the country.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): In rising to close the debate on the second reading of this important bill I desire to express my satisfaction at the very large measure of approval which the bill has received from those who have spoken upon it. I do not recall, as a matter of fact, that any hon. gentleman has condemned it outright. In fact, I think that nearly every speaker has found in it a measure of good, and the amount of good which has been found in it naturally varies as to circumstances and conditions. Some, for instance, say it will go a long way towards the relief of unemployment; others intimate it will be of very little value. Some say that it has been introduced about four years too late; others say it has been introduced too soon—it should not be introduced at all. Some say the amount is too large, others that it is too small. Well, I shall allow these criticisms to cancel each other and allow the great body of approval which this measure has received to stand as its commendation and in support of the motion for the second reading.

Now I am sure that hon. gentlemen who have criticized the bill will forgive me if I do not specifically deal with each objection and criticism that has been made. At this time, on the second reading of the bill, that is not expected and I believe that hon. gentlemen have taken advantage of the second reading to express opinions which perhaps otherwise they might feel it necessary to express at a later stage. I have no objection to that. I always welcome fair and candid criticism; it helps the administration of a department. And let me say, as to the suggestions that have been made, that each and every one of them will be considered. They will be taken up with the officials of the department, and I can say now that I know it will be possible to meet some of the requests which hon. gentlemen have made out of the general votes which are in the schedule of this bill.

The criticisms, as I have said, have been of a varied character and I think it proper that I should explain the basis upon which this program has been framed. The object has been to afford a measure of employment particularly in centres where unemployment is acute and where there is a large volume of it; not only that, but to provide a measure of employment that will be sustained over a considerable period of time. This necessarily involves undertakings of a larger character. Let me say to those who seek to balance the expenditures in this schedule on the basis of population, on the basis of comparison of one constituency with another, that they are proceeding upon an entirely false basis. The bill has not been prepared with the object of giving something to every constituency. It has not been prepared, as has been suggested by many hon. gentlemen, as an election program. If any of the hon. gentlemen who suggested that had been entrusted with the preparation of an election program and had made such a failure of it as I am sure they find in this, then I would say that it would have been a complete failure indeed. If I had been entrusted with the preparation of an election program, had consented to undertake to do so and did not produce any better results than this, I would be ashamed of myself.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We agree to that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sure hon. gentlemen will agree that had there been any such plan or purpose behind this measure there would have been found dotted all over the Dominion of Canada, in practically every constituency, small projects. That is not the plan, the purpose and the anticipated result of this program, and I am sure hon. gentlemen will agree that unemployment would not in a very large measure be relieved by a program of works of that kind, because when a small building is constructed, the time occupied is brief; when the building is completed the work is done and there has not been any sustained or large measure of employment provided.

It is well to remind the house of the basis upon which all governments have acted in their programs for the relief of unemployment. The former government, I believe, laid down the principle that unemployment was primarily a matter for the municipality in which it arose; that in the second instance it was a matter for the province in which the municipality was situated and that in the last resort it was a matter for the federal government. Tonight hon. gentlemen have made suggestions as to many undertakings that are not to be found within the scope of this bill. Some have suggested roads, highways, the drilling of wells and other works. Let me point out to them that those are not works in which the Dominion of Canada can engage; they are projects which must in the first instance be initiated by the municipality, by the province, and toward which in some cases, if the program is sound and approved, the dominion may make a contribution. This is not the only measure which this government has introduced or may introduce for the relief of unemployment in this country and this is not the only program which may be undertaken for that purpose.

The leader of the opposition, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Mackenzie King), says that he finds discrimination in this bill; he speaks about his constituency and says that in this legislation there is nothing for Prince Albert and that he finds in it much for Calgary. On the surface of it he may be correct, but let me remind him of the general vote for his constituency. He was speaking of Prince Albert park, as I recall the matter, when he suggested that expenditures might be made. I have before me the expenditures made in that park during 1927-28, 1928-29 and 1929-30, and I shall give the figures.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has my hon. friend the figures for the parks in British Columbia, Manitoba and Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am dealing just with Prince Albert, the constituency with which my right hon. friend dealt. One constituency at a time is pretty good.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the hon. member will give the others I shall be satisfied.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The expenditures in that park are as follows:

1927-28	$ 32,223 49
1928-29	150,093 48
1929-30	93,632 24
Total	$ 275,949 21

Let us come now to the year 1933-34 when the expenditure in that park for that one year was $277,411.07, or more than in the three years when my right hon. friend's government was in power, a larger amount in one year than in the three years I have mentioned. I am sure my right hon. friend could not have been aware of that figure when he was speaking.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have those and I have the figures for the other parks also —relief camps.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am speaking about Prince Albert expenditures.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Those are relief measures.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then he spoke about the city of Calgary and the large expenditure there for the barracks. This undertaking has been under consideration for a good many years. It is for the permanent force, and this bill affords an opportunity of having the work done at this time and providing the largest possible measure of employment. It is a needed work, one that has been considered essential for a long period of years, a work that is past due and the completion of which at this time is from every standpoint fully justified by the circumstances.

The former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) offered a criticism of the measure and stated that provision should be made for public tenders. Let me point out to him that these works are not all to be carried on under the Public Works department. The bill is a comprehensive one, including works that would come under the Public Works department and other departments. Works in harbours are usually done by harbour commissions, and it includes work in parks and works of a kind other than those contemplated in the Public Works Act. In connection with similar undertakings I believe it has not been the practice in the past, either of the late government or of this government, to invite public tenders. I know of undertakings of considerable extent for which public tenders were not invited. But although it is not provided that public tenders must be called for it does not follow that they will not be. The principle has not been abandoned. These works have to be carried out under the direction of the governor in council, and assigned to the particular department and the minister which may appear to be best equipped to carry them on. Already, in anticipation of the passing of this bill, a large number of advertisements have been published by the Public Works department calling for tenders, and there is no reason to assume that the government is abandoning the well established and sound principle of inviting public tenders. I can assure my hon. friend that the government are as sensible of their responsibility in this matter as any member of the opposition can be.

As to the objection that this work should have been done earlier, I would say that in the ordinary course public works expenditures are made out of revenue, and until revenue showed some expansion I think we would have been open to criticism if we had done anything further in this direction than we did. It was necessary to curtail, and curtailment was made.

Mr. VENIOT: Are all these expenditures to be out of revenue?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): They are to be out of consolidated revenue fund. Let me remind my hon. friend that the revenues are very much improved over what they were a year or two ago.

Mr. VENIOT: What about the principle laid down that these works are to be paid for by the inflation of money?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am pointing out that in the past such expenditures were made out of revenue, and the revenue did not warrant it at the time.

Mr. VENIOT: But do not say that these expenditures are out of revenue.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Well, I do not think the man who gets employment will worry very much whether these works should have been in the estimates or in this bill; or are paid for out of revenue or how. He will be very glad to get the work.

Mr. VENIOT: I just wanted to keep the record correct.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I also am very anxious that it should be correct, so we are agreed on that.

Now some hon. gentlemen have complained that there is no provision in this bill for anything in their constituencies. I wish they would meet some of my hon. friends behind me and discuss the situation with them. I think they would find that the grievances of members on this side are greater than any that I have heard expressed to-night from the other side of the house. However, let me candidly say that the day is long past, if it ever existed in Canada, when a government could go here and there and drop a public building or a wharf or a public work in a constituency purely for patronage purposes. If that day ever existed, or if that was ever done, the time has passed. The obligations of this country are such that a program of that nature cannot any longer be justified.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will the minister please tell that to the marines?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am telling it to the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell).

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member does not accept it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Probably I might as well tell it to the wind as tell it to him; however, it is a fact and the hon. gentleman knows it perfectly well.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Less than $3,000,000 going to Liberal constituencies and $37,000,000 to the Tories.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): On a fair balance that is not correct. I assure my hon. friend again that the program has not been prepared on any such basis. If it had been, the results might have been very different from what they are, because on analysis he would find that the larger expenditures are going to constituencies represented by my hon. friends on the other side. It happens so because the conditions in those constituencies are such as to justify these expenditures.

I do not want to delay the second reading of this bill. I say that this work will be carried on expeditiously, with due regard to the public interest, and with a full sense of responsibility, and I honestly believe it will assist materially in the relief of unemployment and towards recovery in Canada, which is already well under way.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sullivan in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the title is correct, that it is a bill for the construction of certain public works, but I think that being for the construction of public works, these various sums should have been made part of a supply bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister indicated that he thought he would be able to meet some of the suggestions made by the opposition regarding certain works. How is he going to do that with any that we pass? Does he mean that he will bring down a further amount in the supplementary estimates, or will he add to this $40,000,000? I suppose that anything we pass cannot be changed afterwards.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would point out that there are in the schedule two items of very substantial amount, one for $2,000,000 in connection with public buildings generally and one for $2,500,000 for harbour and river works and improvements. These public buildings are located all over the dominion, and I am sure we have some in the constituency of my hon. friend.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was not arguing for that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No. The intention is to go over these buildings, each of them, and to put them in first class repair; that is to say we will do painting, plumbing, wiring, heating, roofing and masonry and bring them up to the highest point of efficiency.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Where is that vote?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is a vote of $2,000,000 in the schedule for public buildings generally. There is not a constituency in which there is a public building which will not receive some benefit.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A little job for everyone during the campaign.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Oh well, it will be done long before the campaign.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Authority to make contracts to execute and complete works.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hold that section.

Mr. VENIOT: It should be held until we get to the schedule.

Section 2 stands.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Amount appropriated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have a suggestion to make to the minister, namely to insert in the section words to make clear that the amounts are to be in accordance with those specified in the schedule.

The section reads:

> The governor in council may pay out of moneys provided for that purpose in the consolidated revenue fund such sums of money as may be necessary for all or any of the purposes of this act, not exceeding in the aggregate the sum of forty million dollars.

It would be well to insert after the words "purposes of this act" the words "in amounts as specified in schedule 'A' to this act." It just makes sure that the moneys in the schedule are appropriated and spent as therein designated.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I assume the object of the suggested amendment is to prevent what might be called switching.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes that is it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds) Well, under the recent amendments to the Audit Act I do not think that would be possible, because before any department may obtain authority to make an expenditure it must go to the comptroller of the treasury and outline the proposed expenditure. The comptroller must find that there is authority for that particular vote, and secure an encumbrance upon it. There is no possibility of doing what my right hon. friend suggests might be done. Such procedure might interfere with the last item in the schedule, which reads as follows:

General—
To supplement where necessary specific amounts hereinbefore provided, upon the authority of the governor in council, $500,000.

That item is in the schedule to be effective when we find that we are a little short, probably $5,000 or $10,000, on a construction work. In such an event part of this $500,000 might be used to effect completion. But I am sure if the right hon. gentleman had read the amendments to the Audit Act he would agree that there would be no possibility of any department switching an item of expenditure from one building to another or from one purpose to another.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If provision for these expenditures had been made in the regular way, namely, in a supply bill where individual items are voted, I would think that what the minister is saying would be quite true. But in its present form, as the schedule to this bill, a lump sum will be voted. We have the lump sum of $39,690,050 mentioned in the schedule, and that is the sum which the comptroller of the treasury will have before him. He will not have the items before him in the form in which they would appear if they were brought in in the regular way, and the way in which I say they should have been brought in.

The minister has referred to the sum of $500,000 which may be moved backwards and forwards. Well, that is just half a million dollars to play with, and I do not think public money ought to be voted in that way. The minister has the same trouble with respect to all his public works. Sometimes he is a little above and sometimes a little below his estimate, but he has to make good his amounts by having parliament make the necessary additional appropriations. I certainly believe he ought to insert the words I have suggested. I sent the suggestion to him in the hope that he would move it, but if he hesitates, I should like to move it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can say only this, that the wording of the item for $500,000 is exactly similar to the item which has been in the estimates of the Department of Public Works for years, and has been used for supplementing undertakings. There are some purposes for which the money may have to be expended which are not set out in absolute detail. I am afraid without really accomplishing any useful purpose the amendment might be calculated to defeat the object we have in view. For that reason I cannot see that—

Mr. ELLIOTT: May I point out to the minister that this bill provides for an expenditure of $39,690,050, and the insertion of clause 4 simply means that the government is given another roving commission to expend $310,000.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is what it means.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I say that already there are too many of that type of items in the schedule. But at the present time we are not discussing the schedule particularly. Let me call attention to the fact that already there are several general items, which the minister has mentioned. There is an item of $2,500,000 for harbours and rivers generally. Then there is an item of $2,000,000 for the Department of the Interior. Of course I realize that does not come particularly under the Department of Public Works, but the works therein indicated will be done as public works. Then there is an item of $2,000,000 for public buildings generally, and a further $500,000 to which the minister has referred. Clause 4 would simply mean an additional $310,000 all but $50. I say that that is not fair.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I submit that under the provisions of the Audit Act and because of the necessity of going before the comptroller of the treasury you cannot do it, that is all.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If it cannot be done, why put in a section authorizing it?

Mr. BENNETT: It says it shall not exceed $40,000,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think that is not a proper way to have it.

Mr. EULER: I was about to express my approval of the principle laid down by the minister when he stated that the basis for the allocation of the various moneys comprised in the vote of $40,000,000 was the needs of the various communities in Canada in which unemployment and the necessity for relief existed. I was going to ask whether or not his department had made a really careful survey of the various centres in which unemployment exists. Probably he will answer that question afterwards. I think no hon. member would accuse me of ordinarily making any sectional appeals, and I do not propose to do so to-night. But in looking over the list of appropriations made I find that in my native city of Kitchener—including the town of Waterloo which to all intents and purposes, except municipally, is one with the city of Kitchener, with a combined population of about 40,000 people—there are 3,000 people even now on relief, and no appropriation whatever has been made for it. It does look a bit strange to me, although I do not desire to make a sectional appeal, that immediately to the right of us, only fifteen miles away, for the city of my good friend the Minister of Justice something like $265,000 is appropriated, and directly to the south, for the city of Galt in South Waterloo there is $161,000, and yet for this centre of 40,000 people where, as I say, 3,000 people are still on relief, nothing is appropriated. I would like to ask the minister whether he did make a survey and, if not, whether he will not do so in order to inform himself whether there is any justification for consideration not being given to that city. I say this particularly because I have to-day had handed to me by the mayor of Kitchener a request from the city council of that city for consideration on the part of the government, and expressing, not resentment exactly, but the feeling that the city has not been properly treated, that no survey has been made and perhaps not sufficient consideration given to that place.

Mr. J. A. VERVILLE (Lotbiniere) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) for having been so kind as to allow me to speak before replying to the questions put to him.

I observed, in the course of the debate, that all made their little speech, almost every one wants money for the work which is to be done. I also observed that few representatives of the counties along the St. Lawrence river requested anything. For my part I have not been exacting, because I think that it is specially in a period of crisis that one must practise thrift. Let me point out to my friends opposite that they wish to help many people by this bill. Let me also inquire of them whether they are ready to carry out their promises of 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934; if they are willing to provide for the class of people they created and relieve the unemployed until they resign their office—which will be soon?

I shall ask them another question: Is it a fact that the government—I did not intend to broach that subject, but as all made their little speech, I deem it my duty to take part in the debate—is ready to support all the Tory leaders of the county of Lotbiniere who have been loudly proclaiming, for some time past, that a road, from St. Edouard to Joly and from the latter place to Nelson, would be built by money flowing out from the Dominion treasury? That is the question I put. My speech will be brief, however, I wish to be posted on the subject, when to-morrow or the day after the session is prorogued. Will the road be built between Joly and St. Edouard, with the money which the Dominion government is having voted or will it not? Will the road from Lister to Joly, through the back (rang) row No. 1 and from there to St. Edouard be built by the Dominion government?

May I inform the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennet) that in the county of Lotbinière, there is a Tory leader at Joly by the name of Cinq-Mars who also promised the same thing.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): He is a good fellow.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I shall inform the Prime Minister that there is also at St. Edouard de Lotbinière, a Tory leader known as Laquerre who also promised the same thing.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): Another good fellow.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Will this government build this road? That is all I wish to know, for the benefit of the Prime Minister who does not reside in our county, who even resides at a great distance away. This also applies to all his ministers who are not acquainted with my county—for I have a beautiful settlement about two miles from where I reside. I request the Prime Minister, all the ministers and the government to inform me whether they promised Mr. Laquerre and Mr. Cinq-Mars that a road would be built from St. Edouard to Joliette and then to Lister?

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Answer! Answer!

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I heard a few replies, but, unfortunately could not quite catch their meaning. If the one who spoke will repeat his reply, I shall listen.

Then I do not request any work for Lotbinière. Remember one thing, that last year, I refused the money for a wharf which was useless, and since then proof was furnished to me that the Tories of that parish were thankful that I did so. At present, I request nothing for my county; however, I desire that a just and fair distribution be made of the funds. If it is distributed in all the counties, I claim some for Lotbinière. And if a promise was made to Laquerre of St. Edouard or to Cinq-Mars of Joly, let the government supply the funds to build those roads, they will be useful. Grant funds to the county of Lotbinière, grant as much as you do to others. I apologize for wandering from the subject. I also apologize for giving the names of two persons who are my friends. I do not wish to refer to the next election. They are Tory leaders, one never knows what they may do. Give Lotbinière the fair quota to which it is entitled.

Moreover, I wish to make a request. Cooperate with the Quebec government in granting funds to allow settlers to work their land at a fixed sum per acre. Let us cease helping the unemployed who expect a scrip from both dominion and provinical governments. Let us accept the system which I suggested and which was rejected. I live in a locality where I am understood and known where one knows how to figure. Let the dominion government grant a certain amount to permit the settler to clear, plough and sow the land, to clear and burn the brush and remain on the land. Within two or three years, through this system, we shall have settlers who will not depend on the dominion government, the provincial government and the municipalities, but who will provide for themselves. Thus will you have performed useful work. I shall suggest a means: Place the money that you have uselessly voted to help your party which will be defeated by the people who belong to your party and those of the Liberal party, place it in the hands of the parish priest who will distribute it and tell each one: "You, you are entitled to so much." And in two years, instead of having to help these settlers, you will have families who will be an asset to the country beside earning their own livelihood. That is the system which I suggest and I request you now to accept it and distribute the money through the medium of impartial people, who will do more for this country than we can do and more than you can do because you may have some election advantage to gain, and this is where your bill is repugnant and, so to speak—pardon the expression—shameful.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: Why should we make this difference from any other public works bill that we have passed?

Amendment (Mr. Mackenzie King) negatived on division.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In reply to the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) I desire to say that many of the undertakings in this program were suggested to the government by the Canadian Construction Council which made a survey of the whole dominion.

Mr. EULER: Is that a government organization?

[Mr. Verville.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, it is an organization in connection with the building and construction trades of the country. That was the basis for the selection of these items. We checked their recommendation very carefully. This survey included not only works which might be undertaken by the dominion government but those which might be undertaken by the provinces and the municipalities. Wth regard to Kitchener, I do not recall that there was anything in that report in connection with that city, nor do I recall any representations were made by the city council or by my hon. friend.

Mr. EULER: He is doing it now.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think my hon. friend will agree that it is rather late to be making a suggestion. Suggestions have been coming in very rapidly since this bill was brought down but many of them are of a character which do not come within the scope of our activities. They cover municipal works such as sewers, town halls, roads; they cover anything and everything except what this government constructs. I do not know what my hon. friend has in mind in connection with Kitchener when there have been no suggestions from any source whatever.

Mr. EULER: I asked the minister whether a survey had been made on the basis of the principle which he had laid down in connection with large allocations of money, and he said that the principle followed was the need in these towns in the way of unemployment. I told him that Kitchener had a large amount of unemployment and a large number of people on relief. I am amazed when he now tells me that instead of a survey being made by the government, it was made by a builders' association. This may be a perfectly respectable organization, nevertheless it is a private organization and the government has taken its recommendations. Without becoming excited over the matter, I would say that all this has no connection whatsoever with the principle of responsible government. The government has taken the recommendation of a private organization which, after all, is more interested in its own operations and profits than it is in the good of the people of Canada. I think it was the duty of the government to make this investigation and then allocate the moneys in the proper way.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think the government should receive representations from any source that is open and available.

Mr. EULER: And make none of its own?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Surely my hon. friend does not suggest that we should not listen to or consider representations made by associations such as the Canadian Construction Council.

Mr. EULER: No, not for a minute.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can assure my hon. friend that their recommendations were not accepted wholesale and without investigation. The government assumes full responsibility for the items that appear in this schedule.

Mr. EULER: They may have been quite right in some of their suggestions, but I am asking if the government made an independent investigation of its own. It should have if it is to be responsible.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Did the minister receive recommendations from public bodies such as boards of trade, chambers of commerce and municipal councils and also from officials and members of the House of Commons?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Representations were received from time to time from all the sources mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Were the items in the schedule based upon the recommendations received by the public bodies I have mentioned?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): They were based upon all the recommendations received. Full consideration was given to all the circumstances and to the requirements of the public service and the amount which was available. I might say that all the requests and suggestions received would have involved the expenditure of $100,000,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: As we take up the items in the schedule will the minister be able to tell us what items were recommended by the association to which he has referred and what items were recommended by public bodies or individuals?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It would involve a good deal of research to gather that information.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is very important that we should have it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That might prove to be interesting information for my hon. friend and for the committee but I do not see what would be the advantage of it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I protest, as did the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), against an organization outside the control of parliament giving information and advice to the government as to what should be done in each riding.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is section 5 the section under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Yes, section 5.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Under section 5 the governor in council may from time to time place the administration, management, construction and execution of any of the works under such minister or department of the government as may be considered most advisable in the public interest. Practically all the works allotted to the city of Quebec are in connection with the harbour. There is an item of $463,000 to replace sheds number 24 and number 25 on pier number one. There is another item of $730,000 to widen pier number one. I wish to know whether the execution of these works will be under my hon. friend. Those sheds are owned, in trust of course, by the harbour board of Quebec and the works done there are usually carried on by that board, the money being loaned to the board, they issuing bonds and so forth. But this is a special work. This is an amount that is not loaned to the harbour board; it is an expenditure of money directly by the parliament of Canada. I wish to know whether the contract will be entered into by my hon. friend's department and whether that department will be in charge of the execution of the work.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The explanation of this section lies in the fact that there is one schedule and one schedule only. Ordinary estimates, as my hon. friend well knows, are prepared under departmental heads, but here they are all gathered together and the work will be assigned under the direction of the governor in council. It has yet to be determined under which ministry the work will be carried on.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But will it be carried on under some minister rather than under the harbour board?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That will be determined by the governor in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What the minister has just said is evidence of the fact that this section is another election device. A moment ago I pointed out that half a million dollars was given to the government to play with at election time, so that the governor in council might assign a little here and a little there, and now we have another clause which gives them a chance to pass the amount on to whichever minister they see fit. The minister has just said that in the regular way the estimates set forth the amount in detail, indicating what department of government will have to do with any particular expenditure; but here they are all lumped together as one and, he says, it has not yet been determined what minister is to do the spending. That is irregular, and I say that the section is framed as it is to allow the governor in council to use half a million of loose funds in any way that will best suit their purpose at the time the campaign is on.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: How much did your government appropriate to play with, as you put it, in 1928?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not a five cent piece.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: That was your appropriation for the unemployed, but you had $800,000 in 1928 to play with under this very item.

Mr. CASGRAIN: With reference to the amount of $156,000 for wharf extension at Pointe au Pic, is it proposed to carry on the same extension project mentioned in 1930, or is this a new program?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The conditions now, I assume, are not the same as in 1930 at that wharf, and the item is put there for improvements and repairs that are necessary and recommended by the engineer at the present time.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Because more repairs are necessary than in 1930?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I suppose so, although I believe that minor repairs have been done in the meantime.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The same program will be continued as was anticipated in 1930.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should think there must be some extension there in view of the size of the amount.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is it intended to deal separately with the various items in the schedule or will it be passed en bloc? I want to discuss a particular item in connection with Vancouver.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I said before that every opportunity would be given in committee to discuss any item in the schedule. I do not intend to ask for the passing of the schedule en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Shall the section carry?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. SANDERSON: I take it from the minister's reply to my hon. friend from North Waterloo that there is no provision in this bill for such works as sewers, water systems, and so forth. Am I right?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Except possibly in the parks branch where these works have been carried on. That is in the Interior department, but it is on government property. What I meant to say, and what I think the hon. gentleman will agree with, is that in a municipality such works as sewers, town halls, hospitals or anything like that are municipal and provincial, the dominion in some instances making a contribution. But to do any of these works at our own expense exclusively is not our program at all, and anything of that sort which my hon. friend may find in the Interior department will be found, I think, to be on government property.

Mr. SANDERSON: I would point out to the minister the item in the schedule in connection with Chicoutimi, Quebec,—water system, $12,500; hydrants, hose, etc., $4,000; further gravelling of reclaimed area, $45,000; surfacing existing roads with macadam, $17,000; road at rear of new wharf $10,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is in the harbour of Chicoutimi, a public harbour.

Mr. SANDERSON: What is meant by water system?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is a marine item, but I can say that there are some water connections or pipes. The minister in charge of that department could give the information.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Before the year 1930 large works were undertaken by the government of my hon. friends, the construction of a large pier, and we have to complete these works and instal a water system.

Mr. JACOBS: There is water in the harbour now.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I remind the minister that in the session of 1930, under the previous government, there was an amount of $12,000 in the supplementary estimates for a public building in the county of Provencher. Tenders were called for, the money having been voted. The present minister did not accept the tender; the work was not proceeded with, and the reason he gave was that the government had to economize on account of the depression and the demands made upon the administration. I had no quarrel with the minister at that time, although I think he should have respected the vote of the House of Commons which on that occasion was unanimous with regard to those estimates. The house had decided that a certain amount of money should be expended for the erection of a particular building in the county of Provencher and the minister should have respected the decision of the house at that time. The building, however, was not constructed.

I know the minister has had several demands from the county of Provencher for certain small buildings in centres where such buildings are very badly needed, and when he is about to spend $40,000,000 for the construction of public buildings and other works throughout the whole dominion, I really think he should have opened his heart in order to rectify what I think was an injustice in refusing an expenditure which was voted by the house in 1930. In looking over this schedule I find that Provencher is entirely forgotten. I want to remind the minister and the house that I represent one of the most historic constituencies in Canada, a constituency that has been represented here by men much more distinguished than I am, men who have been prominent in Canadian history, such as Louis Riel, Sir George Etienne Cartier. Therefore I cannot for the life of me see how the minister can sit in his seat and allow $40,000,000 to be expended in Canada and at the same time forget the county of Provencher. I do not think that is fair, and as I know the minister wants to be fair, the least he could have done would have been to insert in this schedule the amount voted in 1930 and provide for carrying on the construction of those buildings.

Unemployment in Provencher is not, I grant you, very great, but why should $250,000 be spent in the county of Selkirk; why should $20,000 be spent in the county of Souris; why should $15,000 be spent in the county of Marquette? If the hon. gentlemen representing those constituencies have been influential enough to get those expenditures in their ridings, I have no quarrel with them, but why discriminate? The discrimination is very plain. In view of the fact that the minister himself, after the money had been voted by this house to erect a certain building in Provencher, cancelled the expenditure after he came in as Minister of Public Works, I do not know how he can justify his present course and I do not think he can. If he does not see his way clear to take a certain amount of this money that is being voted for the relief of unemployment in Canada and expend it on the erection of certain buildings in Provencher, the party he represents will have to stand the consequences at the next election. Probably the Conservative party will have no votes at the next election, but if they have any in the county of Provencher, they are certainly shooting them all away in about five minutes in this chamber.

It is not my intention to delay the committee longer—I refrained from speaking on the second reading of the bill. I have tried to influence my friends on this side, but none of them will listen to me. May I again plead with the minister that even under some of the items that are not detailed, such as so much money for the Department of the Interior or any other department, he take steps to give the county of Provencher just a small expenditure to construct one or two small buildings.

May I also ask him whether he has had any representations from any organization in Manitoba to allow a certain amount of this money to be used in the way of guaranteeing bonds to construct a sugar beet factory in that province? If he has, why has he not given some consideration to that in these schedules? If a certain amount of money is to be spent to relieve unemployment, why should it not be spent on projects which will give employment? You construct a public building to-day and after it is erected there is a cost for its upkeep, but if certain concessions were given for the construction of, say, a sugar beet factory, that would give employment for years to come and I think the money would be better expended. I do not know whether the minister is in a position to answer me now, but if he cannot do so, I hope before he spends this money his heart will open up for the historic county of Provencher.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am very much moved by the eloquent and patriotic appeal of my hon. friend, and I quite join with him in his appreciation of the magnificent constituency of Provencher. But I want to point out to him that in every year in which estimates are passed there are many items that are not expended. The insertion of an item in the estimates does not create any obligation on the part of the government to expend the money; it just makes it available for the purpose if and when the government decides that it should be so expended. My hon. friend knows very well that in 1930 the estimates for public works were very large; they were larger than I think the revenues of the country warranted, and it was found that the revenues as they came in did not warrant the expenditure of the amounts that had been placed in the estimates. Just as in other years certain items were abandoned, so some were abandoned in 1930, some were abandoned in 1931 and 1932 and some will be abandoned to a greater or lesser extent in every year by every government.

As to the building to which my hon. friend refers, I assume that it is of smaller type, and as has been said by several hon. gentlemen, that kind of construction does not contribute very much to the relief of unemployment which my hon. friend is frank enough to admit is not very severe in his constituency. So, bearing in mind the principle upon which the bill is framed, I do not think it is at all remarkable that he does not find anything in it for Provencher. As to the sugar beet industry, I do not recall any representation whatever. It would be entirely outside the scope of a bill of this character.

Mr. VALLANCE: Will the minister undertake to justify an expenditure under this bill to-day when he cancelled expenditures that had been voted by this house for my constituency? I do not see how he can do it. I have no quarrel with anyone who can get a public building in his riding, but the minister when he came into power cancelled the construction of buildings in my riding for which tenders had been called, yet to-day he is voting money under this schedule for works which to my mind are no more essential than those voted in 1930.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If it is any satisfaction to my hon. friend, I can assure him that his constituency is not the only one that has been treated in that way. Several hon. members behind me have the same complaint.

Mr. VALLANCE: The reason my treatment is different is that the money had already been voted by the house for this building in my constituency.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There are others. I could give my hon. friend a long list of others who were treated just the same.

Mr. VALLANCE: Well, if the minister treated anyone else that way I think he did not treat them fairly.

Mr. McGIBBON: I was one.

Mr. VALLANCE: If I had been treated as you were I would certainly get away from supporting that government.

Mr. McGIBBON: I put the country before party, which the hon. member does not.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. BOYES: I have no disapproval to express in connection with this bill, and while I am like my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) and some of the other hon. members who have already spoken, in that there is no provision in the schedule for any expenditure in the riding I represent, at the same time I heartily approve of the provision of $1,500,000 for a building in the city of London. A year ago I advocated in this house the provision of a new post office building in London. This bill takes care of that and also makes provision for other federal buildings. While that will help the riding of East Middlesex I feel that the riding of West Middlesex will also receive some benefit.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Most of it is farther away.

Mr. BOYES: A little farther away. One thing I wish to draw to the attention of the minister is that part of the city of London is in the riding of East Middlesex, and if it were possible for him when letting the contract for the work there to provide that a certain portion of it, for example, digging the basement or building the foundation, might be let by day labour so as to provide work for some of the unemployed in East Middlesex, it would be greatly appreciated. In the part of London which I have the honour to represent there are many unemployed and I hope some provision will be made to give them work.

There is another federal building in East Middlesex, the Westminster hospital. If the minister would have that building examined thoroughly I think it might be found that the roof and other parts need repair, which would give employment to some of these men. As I said before, I heartily approve of the expenditure provided for London, and if the minister finds it possible to comply with my request I shall appreciate it.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I decided not to say anything on the second reading of this bill because I was in favour of the principle, but now that the bill is in committee I want to draw the attention of the minister to one or two items which I think he has overlooked. I find for British Columbia three or four items specified, for Vancouver, Victoria, New Westminster and Quesnel. I call the minister's attention to the fact that on several occasions representations have been made to the government and to himself by boards of trade, by the Conservative association in northern and central British Columbia, and by myself, as to the necessity for having a federal building for that district in Prince Rupert. The building that houses the different departments there at the present time is a barn, not fit to be called a public building, yet the federal revenue from that district is approximately $200,000 a year. The government are paying rent for the shack they occupy in Prince Rupert. I know that the minister is tired of listening to me, and the minister who represents British Columbia in the cabinet, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), is watching me and I know he is also very familiar with this story. I fail to understand the omission from this bill of any item for Prince Rupert because I know that the boards of trade and other bodies have made representations; the government of British Columbia and the premier of British Columbia have made representations to the minister as well as to the Prime Minister, showing that this is a necessary work and one that should be carried on for unemployment relief. Yet nothing has been done, and as a representative of north and central British Columbia I ask the government what voice they listen to in regard to these matters. If it be the provincial government, if it be public bodies such as chambers of commerce and boards of trade, representations have been received from them. If it is recommendations made by the representative of the constituency that they listen to, I have made such representation. If all those representations are ignored I presume the one who is heard is the minister representing British Columbia in the federal cabinet, the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I know that he has always been fair to the whole of British Columbia, not to a part only, so I fail absolutely to understand how it is that all these representations in respect to northern and central British Columbia have been entirely ignored. I might point out that while some money is appropriated for British Columbia, the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows that those works are all in the southern part of the province, hundreds of miles or as much as a thousand miles from central and northern British Columbia. Is it reasonable to expect that men who need employment are going to be sent a thousand miles to get the benefit of this work, or is something to be done for them in their own district? I realize that there is a provision of $2,000,000 for miscellaneous works under the Department of the Interior. I appreciate that the government are finding something to take the place of the dole, which I was absolutely against from the beginning. But since this work is to be distributed to help unemployment the government should give some recognition to the suggestions from public bodies that are familiar with conditions in each district. I hope that when the distribution is being made of this money for rivers and harbours and buildings in general, something like $5,500,000, the needs of northern and central British Columbia will be given consideration. I should like very much to have a few words from the minister, because I believe he will appreciate what I have said, and the representations I have made. May I have an answer?

Mr. STEVENS: What rather impressed me as being a bit extraordinary was the reference the hon. member made to the building now occupied by the federal services in Prince Rupert. On one occasion he referred to them as barns, and on another occasion he called them shacks.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Yes. Both names apply.

Mr. STEVENS: He states now that that is true. I recall that the government which preceded this one, and which he supported, entered into a five year lease on these buildings at a rate of about $5,000 a year, and I find it a little difficult to justify the payment of $5,000 a year for either a shack or a barn.

Mr. JACOBS: There must have been extenuating circumstances.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member is on the horns of a dilemma. However, I have heard what he said, and have taken note of the fact that he appealed to me as a minister representing the province of British Columbia. Obviously every place cannot be cared for. Certainly no one is putting any obstacle in the way of a building being built where he has indicated. The matter of a building for Prince Rupert will in due course receive consideration from my colleague the Minister of Public Works and from me, so far as I have anything to do with it. I do not think it is perhaps possible for such a building to be considered this year.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): In 1919 a Conservative government acquired a site for a federal building in Prince Rupert, and paid pretty close to $70,000 for it. They did a certain amount of excavating, and I am suggesting that by establishing a building at that point the government would not have to pay anything for the site or for excavation. Labour and supplies would be the only expenditures.

Mr. STEVENS: Why did not my hon. friend induce his friends who were in office for nine years to do that?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He was not here then.

Mr. BENNETT: He was in the tie business.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Neither this government nor the former government have treated the port of Prince Rupert fairly.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): In bill 113, under consideration, there are two items which particularly interest me because my constituency is situated on the south shore of the river, while a Conservative member represents the constituency on the north shore. I have much esteem for the gentleman. The following is what I find:

Champlain and Lorne Dry Docks, Que.—Repairs to buildings, caisson house, hose tower and concrete masonry, $18,000.

I also see:

Champlain Dry Docks, Que.—Keel blocks, $26,000.

This amounts to $44,000. This bill is intituled:

An Act to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada.

I am aware that the hon. member representing the constituency on the north shore has received his full share; $44,000 is being voted for his constituency. I wish to inquire of the government whether this $44,000 is included in the 40 or 50 millions appropriated to public works or whether it is included in the estimates of the Department of Marine? Moreover, whether this is a gift to the county of Champlain, exclusively of other counties? Until I read the section of the act, I never thought that there existed a dry dock at Champlain. I was under the impression that there existed some dock to build vessels, but as such docks could not exist everywhere, I began to wonder whether it was actually a gift so as to build a dry dock at Champlain. Is this amount included in the $40,000,000, or $50,000,000 or whether it is included in the estimates of the Marine department? Is there a dry dock at Champlain?

Mr. DUPUIS: I am anxious to get some information from the Minister of Public Works. First of all may I say that it appears curious not only to myself but to the house and country that the government should bring at this late hour in the session a bill providing for an expenditure of $40,000,000, without giving proper time for the representatives of the people to discuss intelligently the items included in this bill. I wonder if hon. gentlemen opposite realize what $40,000,000 mean.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): The hon. member is out of order.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. DUPUIS: Well, I am just coming to the items.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): The hon. gentleman is entirely out of order. We are considering clause 5, administration.

Mr. DUPUIS: We have been told by the Minister of Public Works that opportunities would be given to discuss the matter fully.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): If there is unanimous consent of the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. DUPUIS: I am merely asking the same privilege which has been extended to other hon. members.

Mr. RINFRET: And further, if the committee will permit me to say so, we are discussing section 5, whereby the minister may transfer the expenditure of moneys to several departments.

Mr. BENNETT: The governor in council, not the minister.

Mr. RINFRET: That covers practically the whole program.

Mr. BENNETT: The governor in council has that power.

Mr. RINFRET: Yes. It may transfer to the different departments the expenditure of this or that money. I submit that under section 5 it would be proper to discuss the whole bill, because every expenditure is involved.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Go on; go on.

Mr. DUPUIS: With all due respect to the chair, may I continue my argument? Before proceeding to the questions I wish to ask I should like to observe that the people throughout the country think it strange that in the dying hours of a session, if not of the government itself, the representatives of the people should be asked to vote $40,000,000 to be expended upon the recommendation of a body—no matter how respectable it might be—the builders' corporation, I have been told. By the way, I should like to know if the association of builders are going to have all the contracts to be awarded under this measure. However I am not going to go too fast; we will wait and watch. Does the government realize that $40,000,000 is a very large amount of money?

Mr. DUPRE: Some of the people say it is not enough.

Mr. DUPUIS: If the Solicitor General, who has just interrupted me, will take the trouble to count $40,000,000, one dollar a minute, he will find that it will take him 1,388 days to perform his task, and by that time he will be in the opposition, or back in his office in Quebec. Hon. members on this side are interested in this discussion, and yet we have not time to discuss matters. That is why we are bound to shorten our remarks. The Minister of Public Works is aware of the fact that last year and again this year I wrote him and interviewed him about dredging the Petite Riviere Montreal. That river drains about eleven thousand acres of the best land in the country, and upon that river there has already been spent jointly by this government and the Quebec government from $26,000 to $30,000. At a time when that expenditure was about to produce its effect, this government, because the riding is a Liberal one, refused to appropriate the further amount necessary to finish the work, though only about five thousand dollars more is required. I do not see any item in the schedule for that purpose, and I very respectfully ask the minister why such an item is not there.

Mr. McINTOSH: There is no adequate reason.

Mr. DUPUIS: Furthermore, in the town of Laprairie we have a brick industry, practically the only industry in the town, but due, I will not say wholly to the policies of this government, construction in this country is at a standstill and as a consequence the brickyards in Laprairie, four in number, are idle. We have at least four hundred families in Laprairie who are without work and in a state of starvation, despite the fact that the town of Laprairie, through the provincial government, backed by the request of Conservatives in my riding, by my good friend Mr. Gustave Monet, my opponent in the last election and a very influential representative of the Conservative party in Montreal, and also through myself, requested this government to contribute to the construction of a street called Ste. Rose in Laprairie. This government has been begged to do that work for the last two years, and only last year this government decided to build the street under its relief policy, but that was at the beginning of December when it was too late to begin the work. I do not see any item in this schedule for that work. It would require an expenditure of approximately $10,000, but nothing has been done.

I see a large vote in the schedule of this bill for the Interior department and for the Department of Indian Affairs. I wonder if the government has in mind the building of a water system, as the Minister of Public Works indicated a short time ago, for the Caughnawaga Indian reserve. It is a large reserve and for many years they have been asking for a water system to be built at Caughnawaga, but they are still obliged to fetch their water from the river because the village of Caughnawaga is built on a rock and there are no wells from which they can get water. This work is absolutely necessary and I would ask the minister if he has any amount for that purpose.

I also see an amount under the Department of Indian Affairs for the reconstruction of Indian residential and day schools and for hospitals. The Minister of Public Works knows perfectly well that Caughnawaga is badly in need of a hospital. Is any special amount being voted for that purpose? I should like to have an answer from the minister to all of these questions.

I am sorry that the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) is not in his seat. I would like to know how so influential a member of the government has not been able to get a larger amount for his riding. I have been told all around here that this money has been appropriated upon the influence and recommendation of friends of the government. I am surprised that a minister of the crown so near to the government has got only $40,000 for the county of Chambly, just for a dyke. What about the Chambly canal, repairs for which are so necessary that it is impossible at the present time for a boat to pass through the canal because it is pretty nearly full up, like some of the ditches in Ontario were filled up during the last election campaign, making it absolutely necessary that they should be dug out again.

I strongly protest, Mr. Chairman, against this policy which the government presents to parliament in the last hours of the session, and I also protest strongly against the government appropriating moneys where it is not needed in many cases, and appropriating nothing for many other places where there is urgent need for public works. I am speaking not only for myself but for the people I have the honour to represent in this house, and the country as a whole I believe will resent this policy of the government, coming down and asking parliament for an appropriation of forty million dollars just to be used for electioneering purposes, and doing it in the dying days of the session after the people of this country have been waiting for four years for redress and for fulfilment of the promises which hon. gentlemen opposite made during the last election campaign. I think the people have a right to know that the government is following such a policy, and if the government is unable to give an answer, one thing I am sure of is that the people will give the proper answer if opportunity is afforded them.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend, who is a prominent member of the opposition, seems to have provided me with a very strong argument to answer the contention of some of his friends that this is a political measure. He has pointed out that one of my colleagues, as he says, an influential member of the government, is getting practically nothing for his constituency. I am glad to have had that comment by my hon. friend. In connection with the Indian reservation, I would ask him to wait until the item of $2,000,000 for the Department of the Interior comes up. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) will give an explanation in connection with that. It comes under that department and I really know nothing about the matter. In connection with the construction of a street in Laprairie, this is a matter which should come through the municipality and the province in the way in which matters of this kind have come in the past. I do not think it is a matter which should find its way into this bill.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is it not true that the minister has received petitions asking that a contribution of one-third be made by the government for the building of that street in Laprairie due to the fact that nearly everyone in the town is unemployed?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My friend is quite right. Requests of that kind have been received, but again I remind him that that is not the way the matter should be handled. It should go through the province.

Mr. DUPUIS: It has been there.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then it goes to the Department of Labour.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Tenders.

Mr. BURY: I should like to say a word on the question of tenders. I should like to urge that where tenders are called for, especially for works which are not very large, as far as possible they should be confined to the particular locality provided there are a sufficient number of contractors of repute to ensure proper and reasonable competition. I take it that the purpose of the bill is to provide work, and I am a little bit afraid that a wide call for tenders would mean cut-throat competition and the benefits of the work would be practically nil. I suggest that in calling for tenders for works involving $200,000 or $300,000 the invitations for tenders should be confined as far as possible to local contractors where there are a sufficient number to ensure bona fide competition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has special reference to Edmonton tenders?

Mr. BURY: No, I have not. I am referring to tenders for works of a comparatively moderate character, no matter in what city they may be. If tenders are to be called for over the whole province or over two or three provinces, it will mean that the local people will not get the benefit of the work. Many local contractors have been without work for a long time and they will find that the contracts are being awarded to large contractors who have underbid. In such cases the large contractor generally brings in some of his clerks and higher paid employees from some other city. If the purpose of this bill is to provide as much benefit as possible, consideration should be given as far as possible to the local places in which the work is done.

There is another matter which I should like to emphasize, and which has been emphasized already by hon. members on both sides who have spoken. Special care should be taken to ensure that the fair wage clause is inserted, not merely in the original contract—I know it will be—but in the subcontracts as well, and that this clause is enforced in connection with all contracts. I know that in many tenders let by the government, not for construction work but for the supplying of goods, the fair wage clause is scandalously ignored. Work is being done under government contracts under conditions of practically sweated labour. The prices paid in some instances are so low that the work cannot be produced on terms of fair wages or fair working hours. I ask that special care be taken to see that these conditions are observed in connection with this relief bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The minister was good enough to let me have a copy of the amendment which he proposes to move to section 7. I had already prepared an amendment to take the place of sections 6 and 7, and I was wondering if there would be any objection to considering the two sections together.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Section 6 provides that tenders shall be invited "except as hereinafter provided." The principle of that section is absolutely sound, and it is the basis of all operations under the bill. It is what my hon. friend has been contending for. I think we should start with that principle, that tenders are to be invited except where the governor in council decides otherwise. I believe we should retain that principle.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The minister will bear in mind that my objection to section 6 is that the tenders are not to be publicly advertised. I think this question of tenders should be settled along the lines of the suggestion of the Prime Minister, that it should follow the provisions of the Public Works Act. Even with the amendment which my hon. friend proposes to move to section 7, I submit that the objects of the bill will be better served by putting in section 36 of the Public Works Act, which would cover both section 6 and section 7 of the bill. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot):

That sections 6 and 7 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"6. Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works, except in cases

(a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest; or

(b) in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department, or

(c) where the estimated cost of the work is less than five thousand dollars and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

2. Whenever in case of any work tenders are required to be or are invited, the minister having charge of the department concerned shall submit all tenders received therefor to the governor in council, and the contract for the work shall be awarded under the direction of the governor in council.

And that present sections numbered eight, nine and ten be renumbered as seven, eight and nine.

In moving that, I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything to what I said yesterday in regard to this matter. It will give us public advertisement of tenders and will do away with the necessity for the two sections 6 and 7. I understand that the minister proposes to concede, in section 7, pretty much what was advocated yesterday by other members on this side as well as by myself. I wish to say one word which I did not stress yesterday and it is partly in answer to what my hon. friend from Edmonton has said in regard to the persons from whom tenders are received. It is a pretty dangerous thing to attempt to limit the scope of the tender. In tenders for Canadian business, it seems to me that if you are going to get the best value for your money you should not attempt to limit to any one province or section the people from whom tenders may be received. That has been the practice in the past and it is the proper policy. I believe that all the advantages suggested by my hon. friend from Edmonton can be obtained by imposing upon whoever gets the contract the conditions that are requested with regard to the labour that shall be used upon that contract.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): This amendment is not in order. We are considering section 6 and this is an amendment to section 6 and 7. Standing order 76 provides:

In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I made the suggestion, and I thought it was concurred in, that 6 and 7 be considered together.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have been contending the very opposite, that 6 should stand on its own merits. I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have some further remarks to make.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, June 29, 1934

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRICE SPREADS AND MASS BUYING

PRESENTATION BY MR. STEVENS OF THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce) presented the third report of the select special committee on price spreads and mass buying, together with the evidence. The report is as follows:

The select special committee, to which was referred the following resolution of the House of Commons passed on February 2, 1934:

"That a select special committee of eleven members of the house be appointed to inquire into and investigate the causes of the large spread between the prices received for commodities by the producer thereof, and the price paid by the consumers therefor; and the system of distribution in Canada of farm and other natural products, as well as manufactured products, and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, more particularly to inquire into and investigate:—

(a) the effect of mass buying by department and chain store organizations upon the regular retail trade of the country, as well as upon the business of manufacturers and producers;

(b) the labour conditions prevailing in industries supplying the requirements of such department and chain store organizations, and the extent, if any, to which existing conditions have been brought about by the purchasing practices of such organizations, and the effect thereof upon the standard of living amongst those employed in such industries and organizations;

(c) the relation between the flour milling industry and the bakeries of the country, and the effect of such relations upon the baking industry of Canada;

(d) the methods and system prevailing in the marketing of live stock and animal products for domestic consumption and export, and the extent to which the present system affords or restricts opportunity for fair returns to producers.

"That the committee shall have the power to send for persons, papers, and records and the further power to request the appointment of a commission or commissioners under the Inquiries Act, to secure evidence to be presented to the committee by such commission or commissioners.

"That the committee shall report to the house from time to time its findings, together with recommendations of such measures as in the opinion of the committee may be considered necessary to secure as far as possible fair and just practices in the distribution and marketing systems of Canada, with fair and just returns to producers, employees, and employers, not inconsistent with the rights of consumers."

begs to submit the following as a third report.

Pursuant to the resolution of the House of Commons of February 2, 1934, above referred to, your committee has been in session on sixty separate days and has heard and examined under oath various witnesses, and under the powers conferred upon it, appointed auditors and investigators to examine into matters pertinent to the said order of reference and coming within its purview. Due to the voluminous character of the evidence and the limited time at the committee's disposal it has not been possible for the committee to complete the investigations and inquiry contemplated by the terms of the resolution and to report thereon before prorogation.

Under the rules of parliament the powers of your committee cease on prorogation, and being fully seized of the necessity of completing the subject matter of the said resolution, your committee begs to recommend:

That the inquiry be continued;

That the members of this committee be appointed commissioners under the provisions of Part I of the Inquiries Act, Chapter 99 of the Revised Statutes of Canada (1927), to continue and complete their investigations and inquiry;

That the commissioners be authorized to engage the services of counsel, secretary, accountants, technical advisers, reporters, clerks, stenographers and investigators to aid and assist the said commissioners in the inquiry, and to print the evidence, proceedings and documents received by the commission;

That the records, exhibits and evidence received and taken by the said special committee be made available to the commission;

That the commissioners may hold meetings at such places and at such times as they may consider expedient for the purposes of the inquiry; and

That the commissioners report their findings to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

A copy of the evidence and proceedings taken is submitted with this report.

H. H. Stevens,
Chairman.

RADIO BROADCASTING

PRESENTATION BY MR. MORAND OF FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. RAYMOND D. MORAND (East Essex) presented the second and final report of the special committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the operations of the commission, under the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, as amended at the last session of parliament, as follows:

Your committee held twenty (20) sessions and heard thirty-seven (37) witnesses, including five (5) members of parliament, and, after reviewing the evidence, it has been made apparent to your committee that the establishing of national broadcasting in Canada presents many difficulties, for the correction of which time, experience and large expenditure of public money will be necessary.

Your committee therefore recommends:—

(1) That in view of evidence given before this committee, the government should, during the recess, consider the advisability of amending the act, with a view to securing better broadcasting facilities throughout the dominion. In the opinion of your committee, radio broadcasting could best be conducted by a general manager.

(2) That the collection of the fees for radio licences should be simplified and that one licence fee should cover only one receiving set.

(3) That the provision of the act dealing with advertising should be more liberally interpreted.

(4) That a greater use of electrical transcriptions be permitted.

(5) That, pending nationalization of all stations, greater cooperation should be established between privately-owned stations and the commission.

(6) That chapter 35 of the statutes of Canada for 1933, which expired on the 3rd day of April, 1934, be renewed until the 31st day of March, 1935.

A copy of the minutes of proceedings and minutes of evidence adduced before your committee, together with papers relative thereto, filed by witnesses, is hereto appended for the information of the house.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Raymond D. Morand,
Chairman.

Mr. WRIGHT (for Mr. Morand) moved that the report be concurred in.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising is not to make any objection, but simply to inquire as to whether or not the committee considered the question of the use of the radio during the period of a general election, in order to ensure impartiality and fair play as between the different political parties. This particular subject may not properly arise at the present moment; it may, I imagine, more properly be discussed when we are considering the Elections Act. I mention it now however because it is a subject which I think should receive some attention from the house before we conclude this present session.

Mr. MORAND: The matter was not considered by the committee.

Mr. EULER: I should like to know the meaning of that clause in the report which recommends a more liberal construction of the provision with regard to advertising. Under the present regulations five per cent of the time is limited to advertising and I should like to know if it is the intention of the department to recommend that more than five per cent of the time may be devoted to advertising.

Mr. MORAND: This does not change the act which will still provide for five per cent of the time. The commission has some leeway and this is simply an invitation that they shall be a little more liberal.

Mr. EULER: Meaning, to give more time?

Mr. MORAND: A little more liberal in the interpretation of the five per cent provision which is still in the act.

Mr. EULER: There must have been something in the minds of the committee. Did they intend that the commission should be more liberal and give more time; is that the idea?

Mr. MORAND: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

RADIO BROADCASTING ACT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): With the consent of the house, I should like to move for leave to introduce Bill No. 126 which is based on the report made by the radio committee. This bill merely reenacts chapter 35 of the statutes of last year, except that in the last section the figures "1935" are substituted for "1934."

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second times.

Mr. BENNETT: If the house consents, I will move the third reading.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member who represented this section of the house in the committee is not present and it seems to me it is rushing things a little too much to have the three readings at one sitting. I think third reading could be deferred until later.

Motion stands.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): With the consent of the house and only for the purpose of having it printed immediately, I move for leave to introduce Bill No. 127, to amend the Pension Act. This merely adds a subsection to one of the sections to provide that in the event of there being a vacancy in the chairmanship, a judge of any superior court of any province may be appointed to hold office for not more than one year and to receive his salary as judge and a per diem allowance of $15. Last year the house provided for a larger allowance in the case of the appointment of an ad hoc judge. It is considered that under present day conditions an allowance of $15 is sufficient.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (South Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, that part of the report of the special committee on the civil service which refers to the soldier settlement board will, I understand, require legislation in order that it may be implemented. I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if it is the intention of the government to bring down a bill for this purpose before the house prorogues.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It was not intended to do so.

COMMEMORATIVE STAMPS

On the orders of the day.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) asked if the Post Office Department had given any consideration to the issuing of a stamp in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of New Brunswick. During the past two years the department has been dealing with applications for the issuing of commemorative postage stamps in connection with anniversaries in various cities and provinces. Owing to the urgent need for economy and in observance of the regular policy of the department, it has been found impossible to issue stamps except those which would be of nation-wide interest. There are two stamps which will issue on July 1. One is in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of Canada by Jacques Cartier. The other is in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement in Canada of the United Empire Loyalists. Among the applications received, was one from various persons interested in the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of New Brunswick. The department is aware that this event is not to be confused with the landing of the empire loyalists in New Brunswick, which event I understand was celebrated last year, but it is felt that the new stamp issue undoubtedly will prove of interest in connection with both events. The long established policy of the department has been not to issue stamps in commemoration of provincial or municipal anniversaries, and the issuing of such a stamp as referred to by the hon. member would be a direct departure from this established practice. The two stamps which are now in the course of preparation were considered to be of paramount importance. Widespread demands were received from all parts of Canada that such stamps should be issued and as their issuance would be in accordance with the regular practice of the department, they were given precedence over all other applications. Among other applications the following are mentioned: Toronto Centennial, Trois Rivieres, Diamond Jubilee of British Columbia, Montreal Centennial, Founding of Basilica at Gaspe, Empire Games at Hamilton, Montreal Harbour Bridge, Welland Ship Canal, Laura Secord Anniversary.

Mr. VENIOT: When I asked the question it was not my intention to introduce the subject of celebrating provincial events by the issuing of memorial stamps. The minister has said that it has been against the practice of the department for many years to issue such stamps, memorial stamps being intended to commemorate dominion-wide events.

Mr. SAUVE: I did not make the statement to provoke a debate.

Mr. VENIOT: I am not going to provoke a debate at all. I merely wish to point out to the minister and the house that the United Empire Loyalists first landed in Canada not in Ontario but in New Brunswick, and that the issue of a memorial stamp commemorative of the 150th anniversary of the event is not dominion but provincial wide.

[Mr. Sauvé]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I understood the Prime Minister to intimate yesterday that there were further supplementary estimates. If there are to be such, I should be glad if he would indicate what they are.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I said there were supplementary estimates not yet passed. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman will recall that we agreed that certain items in the supplementaries should stand in order that discussion might be carried on, he having agreed that we should pass the main estimates. The supply bill was assented to yesterday in order that there might be no delay in supplying cheques to the staff. That is why we had to take royal assent yesterday.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 93, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

He said: In moving that the amendment be concurred in, I merely desire to point out that inasmuch as we added a new Part II to the Canadian Farm Loan Act, and in section 11 of the bill as passed by this house we used the word "act," the Senate has suggested that the word "act" be deleted and "part" substituted therefor. I therefore move that the amendment be concurred in.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No conference on that, is there?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

FARMERS'-CREDITORS' ACT

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS BY THE SENATE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 92 are in one sense important and in another merely a change of words. In subsection (1) of section 3 this house provided for the appointment of one official receiver in each county or district, and the Senate has amended that by providing that the governor in council may appoint an official receiver or receivers in each county or district, and I cannot see that the meaning of it is in any sense changed. The effect of the Senate amendment is to strike out subsection (1) and substitute therefor the following:

(1) The governor in council may appoint an official receiver or receivers in each county or district or for any number of counties or districts of any province to which this act applies, as he may deem necessary or expedient.

I cannot see that there is any great difference in result between the two and I would therefore move that that amendment be concurred in. When we come to section 17 however I have to disagree with the Senate, and I therefore move:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this house agrees to their amendment to clause 3 of the Bill No. 92, an act to facilitate compromises and arrangements between farmers and their creditors.

And disagrees to their amendment to clause 17 for the reason that, unless the interest rate is reduced to five per cent after the payment of three months' bonus, there would be no inducement to the lender to accept payment. The purpose and intent of the proposed legislation are to induce the lender, on payment of the principal sum and interest to the date of payment, with the bonus of three months' interest, and thereafter by reducing the interest rate to five per cent, to accept payment without further delay.

And that the clerk of the house do carry the said message to the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate was to leave seven per cent as the amount payable after payment had been made of the principal sum and interest to the date of payment, with the bonus of three months' interest, and there would be little or no inducement, which was the point we were aiming at, on the part of the lender to accept payment. This probably is a misunderstanding of what the purpose of the measure was with respect to that part of the section which is dealt with by the Senate, and I therefore move that we concur in the first amendment and, as regards the second amendment, disagree for the reasons stated.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 101, respecting the franchise of electors at elections of members of the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sullivan in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to make a suggestion to the Minister of Justice with a view solely of expediting the consideration of this measure. Would it be agreeable to the minister that the committee should run through the bill, pass the noncontentious clauses first and hold over the contentious clauses, excepting possibly any minor amendments, and reserve until we get through the noncontentious features any observations of a general nature on the measure.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is quite satisfactory to me.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My recollection is that when this bill was read the second time my right hon. leader took the ground that he supported it with the understanding it was without prejudice to the discussion of any phase of the bill and I want to express my disapproval, on the first clause, the usual time, as I understand the matter, to take exception and strong objection to the principle of a closed list especially as applied to rural areas. We had some experience of that in the past, away back in 1896, in the Northwest Territories and it proved to be utterly impossible to get a proper closed list within any definite time before election day. It lends itself to all kinds of disfranchisement of remote or isolated electors left off the lists and I do not want any more of that so far as rural Saskatchewan is concerned.

Further, in 1912 the Conservative provincial opposition in Saskatchewan of that day led by Mr. McLean, I think it was, took it into their heads right after the election on reciprocity that open lists were bad for their party; that all the frontier areas were usually Liberal and many were obliged to swear on their names on election day. They set up a blockade against the Liberal franchise bill and insisted on a closed list. I do not suppose many in the house are aware of that but for sixty hours in succession the opposition in the legislature of Saskatchewan in 1912 stuck out for a closed list. The government of the day led by the Hon. Walter Scott was opposed to this and warned them what a closed list would mean to them, the imperfect nature of it in a new country like that, but after we had been hanging around the corridors for sixty hours a closed list was accorded them. The election of that year was fought on closed lists, the first time since 1896. The poll on voting day showed that the government were justified in taking the ground that it was the opposition that forced through its views on the franchise bill, no closure existing in those days in the legislature. We had a terrible time getting all eligible voters on the lists and then, although it was the opposition that forced this on the government, the government had to take the responsibility for it. As soon as the election was over, however, we had no more closed lists in Saskatchewan and we have not had since. Of course I realize that is twenty-two years ago and the country is now more settled but the methods of handling closed lists are or may be made just as unfair to-day, as the government and their officers desire to make them. I must admit quite frankly that after the experience of last year when this government deliberately tried to steal a lot of federal seats in their redistribution bill they will not hesitate to steal the election on election day through this franchise bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no order about it; I know what I am saying. It is all very fine for the government to make all kinds of professions of what they desire, but I know what they want. They want political advantage through this bill to their side and I do not want them to get any such unfair advantage. Therefore I am opposed to this provision and whatever clauses it comes up on I desire to give full notice now that I am going to oppose it. The government is not so foolish as to believe that we think this bill is for anybody's manifest advantage but their own.

Moreover, when I remember the draftsman of this measure and his pedigree and record in the past, one Mr. J. F. or F. J. O'Connor, the same draftsman who drafted the War-time Elections Act, I am most fearful. It was the most heinous disfranchising act that was ever put on the statute books in Canada. This bill, according to the honeyed words of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, when presenting it, is supposed to be the very opposite of the War-time Elections Act. Honeyed words from the lips but the poison of asps under their tongues is a bad contrast, but that is what it was. Having regard to the before mentioned draftsman of the measure we could not expect anything else. Can a fountain give forth both sweet and bitter waters at the same time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Can Mr. O'Connor draft an act such as the War-time Elections Act, the like of which we never saw before, and then draft a white man's bill to-day? Certainly not. When the government employed this individual they should have known what would have been expected in the initial draft legislation. Having regard to that fact we should not be quite such simpletons as to accept at their face value those nice words with which the resolution was presented, nor can we accept what they are saying to-day that the original draft was in the nature of a memo. I think I have made sufficiently plain that I have a lack of confidence in the government in putting through any kind of franchise act at this time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Evidently this clause is one which will open the way to a general discussion of the measure. Perhaps my colleague did not hear the suggestion I made a moment ago to the effect that we run through the bill, pass the non-contentious clauses first and hold over any that are at all contentious. As soon as we begin to discuss the contentious clauses, we might then open up a general discussion.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is agreeable to me, but of course the question is interwoven all through the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but if at any point an hon. member wishes to have a clause stand, it is understood it will stand. I made the proposal I did solely with a view to expediting the consideration of the measure.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am quite agreeable to that but one needs to have all one's hearing to understand some of these blamed sections, subsections and provisions when we come to them hurriedly and the first thing you know they are through although the clause may be contentious and should therefore stand. I am, however, willing to take my chances. I have a new battery on to-day and I think I can catch pretty much what's going on.

Section 1 stands.

On section 2—Application.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Stand.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why should clause 2 stand?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the one on which a general discussion might best come, clause 1 might be carried.

Section 1 agreed to.

Section 2 stands.

On section 3—Interpretation.

Mr. POWER: I have suggested an amendment to another section which might involve the drafting of an amendment to clause 3 for the purpose of defining the words "former electoral district." I have sent a copy of my proposed amendment to the Minister of Justice, but subject to a discussion of that later on I think the whole of clause 3 might pass.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will let it pass subject to the hon. member's objection.

Mr. MacINNIS: Before clause 3 passes I would like to say something on rule 9. If this is not the proper time I shall reserve what I have to say for some other time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then we had better let the whole clause stand.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why not carry clause 3 except rule 9? That is the only thing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is rule 9 the only section?

Mr. MacINNIS: That is the only section I wish to say anything about. I suggest that we carry the section subject to further discussion on rule 9.

Mr. POWER: I think I sent an amendment over.

Section agreed to, subject to reservation of rule 9.

On section 4—Qualifications and disqualifications of electors.

Mr. POWER: Would you let stand subsection (xii) and subsection 3? I have an amendment, a copy of which I shall send to the minister. Further on there is a section which says that swearing in by the elector accompanied by a person vouching for him before the enumerator will definitely establish that elector's right to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We shall let subsection 3 stand.

Section agreed to subject to reservation.

On section 5—The commissioner and his staff.

Mr. POWER: That section may require amendment later on, depending entirely on who is appointed commissioner. If he held a high position in the civil service the time spent in the civil service should be allowed to count for superannuation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And subsection 3 has to be filled in as to the amount of salary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Subsection 3 of section 5 stands.

Section agreed to, subject to reservation of subsection 3.

Sections 6 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

On section 17—Preparation of lists of electors.

Mr. POWER: Has the minister considered the amendment?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not yet. Let it stand.

Section stands.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think we can deal with the rules in section 17.

On schedule A to section 17—Preparation of lists of electors in urban polling divisions.

On rule 1.

Mr. POWER: May I call the attention of the minister to line 19 and following, where it says:

> The enumerators shall leave at the residence of every elector visited by them, whose name they propose to register on the list of electors which they have been appointed to prepare, a notice in form No. 7, that they have granted the elector's application to be so registered.

I suggest an amendment indicating that they shall leave a notice that he has been accepted or refused. In case he is refused it is well that he should have a notice.

In that case you would have to change form No. 7, and I am sending to the minister a copy of a proposed change in the form and copy of a suggested amendment:

> That rule 1 of schedule A to section 17 be amended by inserting after the word "granted" in line 24 the following words "or refused as the case may be."

Mr. GUTHRIE: I accept that amendment.

Mr. POWER: This involves changing the form.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Amendment agreed to.

Rule as amended agreed to.

On rule 2.

Mr. POWER: There was a suggestion made in the committee that the wording "the enumerators shall visit every house in their polling division" does not sufficiently describe what is intended. They should visit every dwelling place. For instance if it were an apartment house he could say he visited it, but there might be many families.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no objection to making it read "dwelling place."

Mr. POWER: "Every house and residence" has been suggested.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think "dwelling place" is the broader term.

Mr. POWER: Shall the amendment be:

To substitute the words "dwelling place" for the word "house."

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am satisfied. You will have to change it in line 30 also.

Amendments agreed to.

Rule as amended agreed to.

Rules 3 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On rule 11.

Mr. POWER: The suggestion I make is for the convenience of all parties. In connection with subsection (c) the following appears:

of objections to the inclusion of any names in any preliminary list of electors of which at least two days' notice has been given in writing sent by mail, registered and prepaid, addressed to the person whose name is objected to at the address given for such person in the list.

My suggestion is that a form of such objection be prepared. As the minister is aware, there is a form of objection when the objection is made on oath, but in this case there is no form. In fact it is intended that these objections in writing shall be made in an informal way, but I suggest that if the registrar had forms which he could distribute to candidates or party workers or those interested it would be much more convenient both for the registrar and those interested in the election. This form could be sent through the mail. As it is now any sort of letter may be written.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is that not better than limiting it to the form? Any kind of objection may be made by letter.

Mr. POWER: But in a great many cases there are certain objections, and those objections are fully stated in the form which is to be used when the objection is made under oath. I would suggest that an identical form, with the exception that no oath would be required, should be provided in this case for the convenience of all parties. It is only a matter of convenience.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think there is very much in this suggestion.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Is not subsection (c) clear enough? The right is given to object to the inclusion of any names in the preliminary lists of electors as to which at least two days' notice has been given in writing. Does that not cover it?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think that is broad enough to cover it.

Rule 11 agreed to.

Rule 12 agreed to.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

On rule 13.

Mr. POWER: I would ask to have this stand, because it is not quite clear. Perhaps I should explain to the minister my objection to it. It reads:

Every elector applying in person to the revising officer to have his name as it appears on the preliminary list for his polling division corrected shall sign an application in form No. 10—

Form No. 10 provides for correction.

—in which all the information required by the said form shall be sufficiently filled in either by the applicant personally or by the revision officer at the applicant's request. Before correcting the list the revising officer shall satisfy himself that the applicant understands the effect of the statements in the application, and that he is entitled to have the list corrected pursuant to his request.

May I ask why it should be necessary to sign this application to the revising officer?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is for the purpose of precision. Evidently an error has already occurred, and this is to make it precise.

Mr. POWER: Only for correction?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is all.

Mr. POWER: There is nothing here that says what shall happen to the elector applying for inclusion, not for correction. He has not been included in the enumerators' list and he wishes to be included. That would be covered by rule 15, which says he shall sign an application. If the elector applies in person to the revision officer that should be sufficient to have his name entered on the list, but he should obtain a somewhat similar certificate to that which is given by the enumerator.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he is right there on the spot and sees his name added I should think that would be enough. I am afraid we are going to have too many documents if we do not look out, and there is a certificate under rule 15.

Mr. POWER: Then let us provide that he shall see the name is entered on the list.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The revising officer has to detach a part of the stub and hand it to the applicant.

Mr. POWER: No, he has not. Unfortunately we have overlooked the fact that this stub refers only to the correction and not to the application for inclusion. There is no form providing for an application in person. There is a form providing for a correction but there is none for an application in person, so therefore this stub does not exist. That is left over from the act as it was presented to the house originally.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think it is of much consequence. If the man is there and sees his name put on the list that ought to be enough.

Mr. POWER: After all, in rule 15 we say:

If the revising officer decides that the applicant's name should be included in the list, or that the amendment thereof which he requests should be made, he shall certify accordingly by signing the appropriate certificate on the stub of the application, which he shall forthwith detach and deliver to the applicant.

We do not provide anywhere for an application to be included; there is no form for it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are two kinds of applications, and one is where a man appears in person. I grant that there is no form when a man appears in person.

Mr. POWER: How are you going to give the stub if there is no form?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The form as provided has two parts to it; it is divided. On the one side appears:

This is to certify that the application bearing the undermentioned number was refused.

That is on page 50.

Mr. POWER: That has to do with rule 19.

Mr. GUTHRIE: On the other side appears:

This is to certify that the application bearing the undermentioned number was accepted.

Mr. POWER: That form is called, if the minister will look at page 49, "form No. 10 (section 17, schedule A, rule 13):

Application of an elector for correction of his name, etc. as in a preliminary list.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Do I understand that my hon. friend wants this form to apply to all applicants?

Mr. POWER: I would suggest to the minister that when a man applies in person he does not need to sign a form. The revising officer then and there decides whether he should be on the list but, for the purpose of appeal, as dealt with in another section, he should be told why he is refused if he is refused, and given a certificate of inclusion if he is included. It is a very easy matter to correct.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not object to it, but I must say I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. POWER: Certainly it is necessary at the present time. In section 15 you refer to the stub of an application, and there is no such thing as an application for inclusion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will include it.

Rule stands.

On rule 14.

Mr. POWER: I would ask that rules 13, 14, 15 and 16 stand.

Rules 14, 15 and 16 stand.

Rules 17 to 20 inclusive agreed to.

Rule 21 stands.

Rules 22 to 28 inclusive agreed to.

On schedule B—Preparation of lists in rural polling divisions.

Rules 1 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On rule 8.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Are we dealing with rural polls? What is being done? Are all these rules being passed or do they stand? There is no use talking about the thing afterwards if you are passing all the rules now. Have all the rules under the heading "Preparation of lists in rural polling divisions" been passed?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the hon. member wishes any to stand, we will let them stand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are now standing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, but if the hon. member wishes them to stand we will let them. Otherwise, if there is no contention we will pass them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is every contention, if you are preparing rural polls on a closed list basis. I contest it, and the understanding is that the controversial parts of the bill are to stand. I am positively opposed to rural closed lists being run off like this. The understanding is that the non-controversial sections only may be passed at this time. That is the very essence of my objection; let them stand.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Will they all stand?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, sure.

Mr. IRVINE: We could hardly have them all stand on an objection of that sort, because such objection involves the whole principle of the bill. The proper procedure would be to move an amendment on third reading, and kill the bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Nothing of the kind. The understanding upon which second reading was granted was that it would be read a second time without prejudice. The understanding was to allow second reading to see if we could not make a bill out of it, as we did with the central bank legislation. We wanted to get something out of it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, suppose we let one rule stand, with the understanding that the whole subject is open.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All right.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Then rules 1 to 10 are carried?

Mr. POWER: I have an amendment to rule No. 10. I move—

That rule 10 of schedule B to section 17 be amended by striking out the words "qualified elector" in line 39 and substituting the word "person" therefor.

I shall send a copy of the suggested amendment. Since rule 10 will stand, perhaps the minister would consider the amendment, and at a later time he will be in a position to say whether or not he is prepared to accept it. I believe the amendment is self-explanatory. Is the minister content to let it stand for a moment?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not see that the amendment would affect the rule, because if he is not a qualified elector he cannot get on the list.

Mr. POWER: But you are putting the cart before the horse.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And an "elector" means a person who pursuant to section 4 of the act is qualified.

Mr. POWER: This person is a person who makes application but presumably he has not pursuant to this act been as yet qualified, because he has not been put on the list. Anyway I shall discuss the matter with the minister.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no objection to it, if my hon. friend wishes to have the amendment. The change will be made as he has suggested.

Amendment agreed to.

Rule as amended agreed to.

Mr. POWER: Then, as rule 10 (a) I should like to suggest the following:

That schedule B to section 17 be amended by adding the following as rule 10 (a):

The enumerator shall permit to be present in the place of revision two representatives of each recognized opposed political interest in the electoral district, but no representative shall, except with the permission of the enumerator, have any right to take part in or intervene in the proceedings.

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree.

Rule 10 (a) agreed to.

Rules 11, 12 and 13 agreed to.

On rule 14—

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to make one observation in connection with this rule. It provides:

The registrar of electors shall, forthwith upon the receipt by him from any enumerator of copies of any preliminary lists of electors or of any statements of changes and additions made in any such preliminary list, supply to each of the persons who were candidates at the last held dominion election in the applicable electoral district, or their representatives, one copy of such preliminary list or statement of changes and additions.

I have looked at the bill, and stand to be corrected, but my understanding is that when the yearly revisions take place afterwards there is no provision for any such corrected lists to be sent to the former candidates, either the candidates at previous elections or the sitting members.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When we come to Part III my hon. friend may discuss that matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): I should like to ask if it is the intention, in connection with a district which has been divided, to send the forms to the candidate who formerly represented the whole district?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the intention, yes.

Rule 14 agreed to.

On rule 15.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We had better hold rule 15 open for a general discussion. For that reason rule 15 will stand.

Rule 15 stands.

On section 18—Lists remain valid until superseded.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that section should stand.

Section 18 stands.

Sections 19 and 20 agreed to.

On section 21—Notice of revision.

Mr. POWER: I believe on this section I may be able to meet the objection stated by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay

(Mr. Casgrain). I had suggested an amendment be prepared to subsection 6 of section 21, and I think the minister would accept it. I suggest that it is through an oversight subsection 6 of section 21 with the marginal note "copies to ex-candidates" reads as follows:

(6) The registrar of electors shall, on the same day as that whereon he sends by mail copies of such notice to the various postmasters, also send by mail or deliver five copies of the notice to each person who was, at the last dominion election held in the electoral district, a candidate for election.

I suggest to the minister that at this point he should use words similar to those used in section 16, to this effect:

In the case of a new electoral district wherein, as that electoral district is by law newly described, no election has ever been held the registrar shall mail or deliver ten additional copies of the notice to each person who was at the last dominion election held in any electoral district any part whereof is embraced within such new electoral district a candidate for election, and shall request that person to mail or deliver such additional copies to such other person or persons in such new electoral district as in the judgment of such first named person ought to receive them.

The idea is that in a new district the former member or defeated candidate in the old district shall be notified, in order that he in turn may notify the persons whom he thinks should be notified. That covers the point raised by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay. That is to say, the candidate in the former electoral district or seat should receive the notice mentioned in this bill.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Does that cover changes and additions made in annual revisions? I want to make sure that the additions and revisions made in each succeeding year after the first list is made shall be sent to the candidates, as is done in connection with the first list. I do not see in this bill any provision applying after the first list is made whereby any order is issued or it is incumbent upon the official making the list to send copies of changes or modifications of the list to the sitting or defeated members.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think that is covered now.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are printed and twenty copies are sent out.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What paragraph is that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will come to it. Twenty copies go to the candidate and the opponent who had the highest number of votes.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): What is the necessity of subsection 3 of section 21? There is no more need of such a procedure in the Yukon than in any other constituency.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I should like to strike that out.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): It should be struck out.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will come to it in a moment.

Mr. POWER: That provision is in another section. I imagine it has been carried over from the old acts. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Black) will notice the same provision in subsection 3 of section 16.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will strike it out as being unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): In sections 16 and 21.

Mr. POWER: It may be somewhere else.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) read an amendment to this section.

Mr. POWER: I have not one prepared at the moment and my suggestion is that when we go over the bill again we have an amendment prepared incorporating the provisions of section 16.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will have one at that time.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I was given to understand that all additions, changes and modifications would be sent to the defeated candidate and the sitting member. The officer who is sitting in front of the minister signified to me that there was a provision covering that. If there is such a provision I should like to know where I can find it.

Mr. CARDIN: Section 46 covers that.

Mr. POWER: I do not think that section covers the point raised by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay. It states "every candidate at an election" and a person might not be a candidate at the time the annual revision was made. There might not be an election in prospect so he would not be a candidate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What does my hon. friend want?

Mr. POWER: Perhaps section 31 could be amended.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have not come to that yet. Just remind us when we reach it.

Mr. POWER: Section 31 states that when a list of electors is prepared the registrar shall certify it as correct and transmit to the commissioner the certified original list, the original signed applications for registration and all other lists and documents had by him in connection with the revision. Perhaps we should insert a clause to the effect that several copies of these lists should be forwarded to the candidates at the former elections.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That would entail a terrific lot of work; he gets a printed list almost immediately.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is that covered by section 46?

Mr. POWER: Section 46 is not broad enough either. We will have to change them both.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The definition of candidates is:

"Candidate" includes a person who is, pursuant to The Dominion Elections Act, 1934, nominated as a candidate at an election of a member to serve for an electoral district in the House of Commons of Canada, and a person who was, pursuant to that act or to the Dominion Elections Act, nominated as aforesaid at the election last held in such electoral district before the commencement of a general registration of electors—

That covers the presently nominated candidate as well as the then nominated candidate at the last elections. Subsection 2 of section 46 states that every candidate at an election shall be entitled on demand to twenty copies of the lists. If the words "at an election" were struck out it would then cover the candidate nominated for the next election as well as the person who was a candidate at the last election. I think that would cover the point. When we reach this section I will move that the words "at an election" be struck out.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does not that refer only to the final lists?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the printed lists?

Mr. CHEVRIER: After the basic list has been prepared, a revision is made each year and what we want is some provision whereby those revised lists will be received by the candidates at the last elections or the persons who may be candidates at the next elections.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The list is printed every year when it is finally revised and twenty copies go to each person who is a candidate.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Shall section 21 carry?

Mr. FACTOR: There is an amendment.

Mr. IRVINE: What section are we on?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Subsection 6 of section 21.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an amendment to be prepared.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would there not be a little conflict? The defeated candidate would be the person who was a candidate in the last elections. That person might be supplanted by a new nominee and as this section now stands the lists would go to the defeated candidate at the last elections rather than to the new nominee.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That has always been the custom and it has never caused any trouble that I have heard of.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not suppose it would cause trouble.

Section agreed to.

Sections 22 to 26 inclusive agreed to.

On section 27—Application for registration prior to sittings.

Mr. POWER: I have an amendment the principle of which was accepted in the committee. I would move that section 27 be amended to provide that the registrar shall post up in his office, and shall cause to be posted up in an office within the polling subdivision in which the applicant resides, or, if there is no post office therein, then in the post office nearest thereto, the name of every applicant, and that he shall keep it posted for two weeks, and so on. This amendment provides that instead of merely hanging up the name of the applicant in the office of the registrar, who may reside a hundred miles away from the polling subdivision in which the applicant lives, the name shall be posted up in the post office within or nearest to that polling subdivision. That amendment was carried in committee.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, it was not; I understand it was passed and withdrawn. Consider the inconvenience and trouble involved. A man writes a letter before the first of May applying to go on the list, and if there is no objection his name goes on. In the meantime the application must be posted somewhere and it is posted in the office of the registrar. My hon. friend wants the list posted in all offices—

Mr. POWER: The post office.

Mr. GUTHRIE: —from which the application has come. There may be applications from twenty post offices. Is anything to be accomplished by machinery of that kind? Is there any necessity for it? I do not think so, and the committee finally concluded that it was not necessary.

Mr. POWER: The minister will remember that in the committee we divided on it and it was carried on division.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister says it was carried and withdrawn.

Mr. POWER: It was carried on division, and the hon. member for Souris was kind enough to give us his support.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And we reconsidered it immediately and decided that it was not necessary.

Mr. POWER: I did not decide that it was unnecessary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Look at the trouble and expense for nothing.

Mr. POWER: You might just as well not have any proceeding at all as hanging up the list a hundred miles away from the place of residence of the person concerned.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is not for his benefit, but for the benefit of those concerned, who know he is applying to get on the list.

Mr. POWER: Yes, that is the point. The people residing in the same subdivision, his neighbours, who know that he has made application should see the list. This provision as it stands is an absolute waste of time. For example, what is the sense of posting up in Murray Bay the name of an applicant residing in the constituency of Charlevoix-Saguenay, or posting it up in Anticosti island ?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If it were posted up in Murray Bay, to take the case cited by my hon. friend, the member or his agent would have knowledge or notice from those in that particular polling division.

Mr. POWER: How would he know whether Baptiste Laframboise had applied?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think there is much object in posting the list at all except to give general information. But if you impose on the election officials the task of sending notices to every remote poll or post office, it seems to me to be an unnecessary burden.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But the act is framed for the convenience of the elector, not for the convenience of the officials.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am talking of the expense and delay.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The elector ought to be considered above everything else in this matter.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree that he should, but I do not think that in the committee there was any insistence upon the amendment. After the motion was carried it was expressly withdrawn and we worked on the principle here set out. That is the record of the committee according to the clerk who was there.

Mr. POWER: If the clerk made such a record I will ask him to have it stricken from the record because I certainly insisted upon it during the discussion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let us know what the amendment is.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: At any rate it is controversial and it should stand.

Mr. POWER: The amendment is to the effect that the list shall be posted up in the post office nearest to the polling subdivision in which the man who makes the application resides.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why not in the post office from which the man writes the letter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Let it stand.

Mr. POWER: What is the objection to posting it up in the post office situate in the place in which he lives or, if there is not a post office there, in the one nearest thereto. The objection made by the minister in the committee was that it might be posted up on a tree somewhere in the forest, and at the suggestion of the hon. member for Weyburn decided that it should be posted up in the post office nearest to the polling subdivision.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I wish to support my hon. friend from Quebec South. I am sorry there is such a misunderstanding, because my hon. friend from West Edmonton remembers as well as I do that the matter was put to a vote and was carried. Now, we are changing the law. The law as it stood allowed everyone not only to get on the list but to swear his vote in; there was no danger of anyone being left out. That is replaced by a closed list. Surely we must give an opportunity to everyone to get on the list if he is entitled to get on, or to remain on it if anyone asks that his name be removed. How can he get notice if the notice is posted up at Murray Bay three or four hundred miles from his place of residence?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Five and six hundred miles away.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It would be impossible. We must ensure that the elector, who will be deprived of the easy way of registering his vote as provided under the old law, shall be given every opportunity to get on the list. Certainly we should not make it impossible for him to get on this closed list, without which he will not be entitled to register his vote.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I support the views expressed by the hon. member for Quebec South and the hon. member for Quebec East. The example cited in my own county is a real one in point. There is only one boat regularly in the summer time going down the St. Lawrence and it takes ten days to make the trip. If a man gets notice at a certain time he will have to send his letter to someone supporting the candidate to have the list revised and he may lose his opportunity of getting on in time. There would be no difficulty if the list were posted in the post office nearest to the polling subdivision in which the applicant resides. When the lists were prepared under the old law this point was taken into consideration. The minister said that every man should be given the fullest opportunity to have a vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think we are pretty generous; there is no complaint and there was not in the committee; we got on there very harmoniously. This is only a matter of convenience or inconvenience and if there is anything to be gained by it I am willing to accept the suggestion but in my view it is entirely unnecessary. If, however, it is the opinion of the committee and particularly of my hon. friends opposite that this should be inserted, we will put it in, but I still hold to my opinion it is an entirely unnecessary bit of machinery. This reads:

And shall cause to be posted up in a post office.

Does that mean an enumerator has to go to the post office and post it up or has the postmaster to do this?

Mr. POWER: We are now dealing with the revision. In the bill there is a clause which says the postmaster.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In each instance where you put a responsibility on the postmaster you have placed it in definite language and we shall have to do the same thing here also.

Mr. POWER: I thought there was in the bill a general clause which made postmasters amenable to the rule.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: Would it not be sufficient to say "shall mail it to the postmaster"?

Mr. POWER: Who shall post it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Clause 27 had better stand for amendment.

Section stands.

On section 28—Procedure and action of registrars and revisal courts.

Mr. POWER: I would ask that paragraphs (a) and (b) stand.

Paragraphs (a) and (b) stand.

Paragraphs (c) to (h) inclusive agreed to.

On paragraph (i).

Mr. POWER: I think there will have to be a correction of form 28. Perhaps I could explain this to the minister after the adjournment; it is somewhat involved.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Stands as to form No. 28.

Paragraph (i) stands.

Paragraph (j) agreed to.

Section stands.

Section 29 agreed to.

On section 30—Transfer of name from one list to another.

Mr. POWER: Stand. There is some little amendment to be made.

Section stands.

On section 31—Certification.

Mr. POWER: Is it clear it is proposed to amend the clause?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Stand.

Section stands.

On section 32—Right of Appeal.

Mr. POWER: I think this should stand to provide for the right of appeal by a third party who wishes to place the name of someone on the list. This is not covered by clause 32 as we have it now. An amendment covering that was drawn.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Does the whole of clause 32 stand?

Mr. POWER: Subclause 1 stands.

Subclause 1 stands.

On subclause 2—Meaning of "a judge."

Mr. POWER: I think the hon. member for Quebec East wished to discuss the meaning of "a judge."

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have something to discuss on this subclause.

Subclause stands.

Subclauses 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Section stands.

Section 33 to 45 inclusive agreed to.

On section 46—May print in any or all districts.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps this had better stand for further discussion.

Section stands.

Sections 47 to 52 inclusive agreed to.

On section 53—To be gazetted.

Mr. POWER: This clause reads:

This act shall not come into force until a day to be fixed by the governor in council and proclaimed by him in the Canada Gazette.

Just for my own information, will this be sufficient in view of what we were obliged to do in connection with the Elections Act? It was first proposed it should come into force by proclamation but it was found we had to make some other provision.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This clause is all right because we are preserving the Elections Act so far as by-elections are concerned which may take place before a dissolution of parliament.

Section agreed to.

On schedule 1.

Forms Nos. 1 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On form No. 7.

Mr. POWER: There should be added there "stub to be left with elector", indicating whether he is included or excluded. I think the minister has an amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is this the right form?

Mr. POWER: This is form No. 7 which is left at the residence, the dwelling place, of the elector and it provides only a notice to him that he has been included.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is this the one to be amended?

Mr. POWER: Yes, by inserting a clause that will indicate that he has not been included so as to give him an opportunity to go before the revising officer and have his name put on.

Form stands.

Forms Nos. 8 and 9 agreed to.

On form No. 10.

Mr. POWER: I think this should stand for a little further consideration.

Form stands.

On form No. 11.

Mr. POWER: While we are on this I would like to repeat my request that we should have a form, say No. 11A, which would be a form of objection not under oath to a registered elector. I am, however, only making the suggestion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Form No. 11 is all right?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And there is a suggestion as to form No. 11A.

Form agreed to.

Forms Nos. 12 to 29 inclusive agreed to.

On form No. 30.

Mr. POWER: That will have to be changed, to do away with clause 4.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That comes out anyway. Strike out clause 4.

Mr. POWER: Also clause 9.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Strike it out too. Clauses 4 and 9 come out.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): By unanimous consent.

Mr. POWER: I do not know that clause 12 should not be stricken out also.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, that is rather important.

Mr. POWER: You do not ask the man himself to say he is not, why should you ask a third party?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The agent says it.

Form No. 30 as amended agreed to.

On form No. 31.

Mr. POWER: I think this should be further discussed.

Form stands.

Forms No. 32 to 34 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is it the wish of the committee that we proceed with the sections that have been allowed to stand, or go on with the Dominion Elections Act, and take the non-contentious clauses of it?

Mr. POWER: Let us see what we can do.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before you proceed, Mr. Speaker, might I, with the permission of the house, move for leave to introduce a bill dealing with a matter that could not be dealt with under our practice after a bill has had its third reading here and third reading in the Senate? It is in connection with the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932, to make available the debentures and debenture stock and other evidences of indebtedness of corporations that have paid their dividends regularly for a period of at least ten years immediately preceding the date of purchase. It affects one transaction at the moment and has affected others in times past. I now have the bill printed, I should have had it this morning but it was not available. If I can get leave I merely move the introduction so that it can be taken up later in the day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Leave to introduce so that we have opportunity to see the bill?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I move we revert to motions.

Mr. SPEAKER: By consent the house reverts to motions.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 128, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 115, respecting the election of members of the House of Commons.

Mr. NEILL: Bill No. 115 is not printed yet.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It was given to me yesterday. There was no reprint ordered. There were very few corrections and they were done on the typewriter.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

Mr. POWER: May I suggest that, with the same reservation as was made in respect to the Franchise Act, the general discussion can be held later on and that we now proceed to pass the non-contentious clauses, of which there is a large number?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Interpretation.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

On section 2, subsection 2—Application for registration.

Mr. POWER: This should be amended.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an amendment made in the committee.

Paragraph 2, subclause 2 is struck out and the following put in its place:

By-election means an election other than a general election.

That is the only change.

Mr. POWER: Has the minister copies of these amendments?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have the copies that were supplied to me.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

Subsections 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On section 2, subsection 6—Election documents, or election papers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is amended in the ninth line by striking out the words "and books of signatures of voters."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then in the tenth line the words "all written applications for registration as electors," are struck out, because we abolished those signed statements.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

Subsections 7 and 8 agreed to.

On section 2, subsection 9—Elector.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a change in subsection 9, just a capital "t" in the word "the."

Subsection agreed to.

Subsections 10 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On section 2, subsection 13—Identification book.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That subsection is struck out.

Subsection withdrawn.

Subsections 14 to 31 inclusive agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—General powers of chief electoral officer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an amendment to this section. In line 36 after the word "shall" the words are inserted "continue to" making it read, "shall continue to be exercised." Then at the end of the section the following words were added:

and the person who is now chief electoral officer shall continue to hold that office under and pursuant to this act.

Mr. POWER: There is one point to which I should like to direct attention. The section states:

The powers and duties appertaining to or connected with elections which, immediately prior to the 1st day of July, 1920, were exercisable and performable by the clerk of the crown in chancery—

I am under the impression that the clerk of the crown in chancery had something to do with the making of the lists, though I am speaking subject to correction. I remember that he furnished the lists to candidates.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think there is any conflict there. He had the custody of the lists.

Mr. POWER: I am under the impression that the franchise commissioner takes over some of the powers formally conferred upon the clerk of the crown in chancery.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There may be a conflict, so we might let this section stand.

Section 3 stands.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Staff.

Mr. POWER: I think there was a suggestion in committee that this section should be recast.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has been altered in committee. In the last line on page 5 the words "all of whom shall be appointed by the governor in council" have been struck out, and at the end of subsection (l) these words have been added:

such assistant chief electoral officer and stenographers shall be appointed by the governor in council.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8—Appointment of returning officers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In committee we inserted in subsection (a) the words "sixty-five."

Mr. POWER: If we have our way the whole section will disappear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The section had better stand.

Section 8 stands.

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10—Notice of returning officer incapacitated.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A change was made by the committee in line 47. The last word "the" has been struck out and the words "any pending" have been inserted. It will then read, "any pending election" instead of "the election."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 11 agreed to.

On section 12—Office for returning officer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: An amendment was made to this section, by inserting before the word "such" in line 27 the words, "the proclamation of the election in form No. 5, or in other manner as the chief electoral officer may direct."

Mr. POWER: Would you allow this section to stand?

Section 12 stands.

Section 13 stands.

Section 14 agreed to.

On section 15—Supply of election materials by chief electoral officer.

Mr. POWER: We can carry this up to paragraph (d).

Mr. GUTHRIE: Paragraphs (d) and (e) are struck out.

Mr. POWER: The rest is carried.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And paragraph (f) is amended by inserting the words "or portions" in line 31, and by inserting in line 32 the words "and rural polling subdivisions respectively."

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 16 to 21 inclusive agreed to.

On section 22—Return by acclamation.

Mr. POWER: There was some amendment to be made here.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There was no amendment made to this section.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps the section might be allowed to stand.

Section 22 stands.

On section 23—Granting of poll.

Mr. POWER: There was an amendment to this section in subsection (4). The form is No. 9 instead of No. 25.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That amendment has been made.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 24—Deputy returning officers.

Mr. POWER: There was an amendment here, I think.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no note of an amendment to this section.

Section agreed to.

Sections 25, 26 and 27 agreed to.

On section 28—Ballot boxes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a word to be added here. In line 29 the word "as" should be changed to "at."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): We had reached section 29.

On section 29—Ballots and their form.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are no changes in section 29. I suppose it is all right.

Section agreed to.

Mr. IRVINE: Did section 29 stand?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has just been carried.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like to have it stand, because I want to make a motion in connection with it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think I understand the motion the hon. member contemplates. If it carried, a great many sections would have to be changed. In the meantime we will carry this section, with the understanding that if a change becomes necessary it may be made in the future.

Section agreed to.

[Mr. Power.]

On section 30—Further duty of returning officer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Section 30 has been amended in committee. At lines 22, 23 and 24 the following words have been struck out "an identification book, the parcel of signed applications for registration which relates to the deputy returning officer's polling station." Those words have come out. And then at line 35, the words "identification book, signed applications for registration" come out.

Section agreed to.

Sections 31 and 32 agreed to.

On section 33—Application of this section.

Mr. POWER: There is a slight change here.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no change at the present time but the suggestion has been made that, where a suitable location can be had, for the sake of convenience all the various subdivisions of a polling division might be allowed to sit in the same building. For instance, at some points the armoury is used as a polling station, and where there are four or five separate polls they might be held under the one roof. That, of course, would depend upon the direction of the chief electoral officer. It is only a matter of convenience, and to save people travelling here, there and everywhere in the same polling division. I suggest, therefore, if the committee approves, that the following words be added to section 33, subsection 2:

And such separate and adjacent polls may all be established in the same building where sufficient accommodation may be available.

Mr. POWER: I take it this subsection refers only to a case where a poll has been subdivided.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is what I mean.

Mr. POWER: But it is restricted in that way.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is all we want. We are asking that all the subdivisions of a single poll shall be under the same roof, if such a building can be obtained.

Mr. POWER: That does not quite meet the objection made to me by one hon. gentleman on the other side, that it would be possible in a city or a town to have all the polls in one place.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is going farther than I wanted to go.

Mr. ESLING: Ever since I can remember in mountainous municipalities of British Columbia where there are fifteen or twenty polls, available space has been scarce. Residences are on hillsides possibly from two hundred to a thousand feet up, and to reach those separate polling stations it would be necessary to climb the hills. Because of that, for many years back a central polling station has been established in the centre of the town, at the armoury, the city hall or elsewhere, and that procedure continued until the last federal election. I understood at that time it was within the discretion of the returning officer to say whether or not there should be a central polling station, or whether there should be several polling stations. Upon that occasion the federal returning officer much to the inconvenience of the electors determined that there should be several polling stations. For instance, there were fifteen hundred electors, and the new polling stations were scattered all over the hillside. An old man would have to walk up probably five hundred or six hundred feet only to be told that he voted across the gulch, or a woman pushing a baby carriage would go to one station and be told that she voted elsewhere. The result was that officials of the three parties were compelled to send out postcard notices to all electors in the district indicating at precisely what points they should vote. It caused great inconvenience, and was totally at variance with the custom which had been in vogue for many years.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the amendment does not meet the views of my hon. friend. I am advised that perhaps the section as it is now drawn would vest sufficient powers in the chief electoral officer.

Mr. POWER: I do not think so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he wished to exercise it.

Mr. POWER: I do not think it does.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Subsection 2 contains the words:

> If the chief electoral officer so authorizes or directs, and, in any event, where the list of voters of any polling division contains the names of more than three hundred qualified electors, the returning officer shall, for the purposes of, and during, any election, provide within that polling division sufficient separate and adjacent polling stations, so that not more than three hundred, and, when practicable, not less than one hundred and fifty names shall be on the list of voters for each of such polling stations, and so that the name of every voter on the list for the polling division shall appear on some one, and on one only, of the lists for the polling stations.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. POWER: Section 13, which we passed, states clearly that the polling station shall be established at a convenient place within the boundaries of the polling division. I think the objection could be met, first, by limiting the discretion of the returning officer to place the polling station or booth outside the polling division to certain towns of, say, under ten thousand population and, secondly, if we provided that this could be arranged by agreement between the parties. In cases where it is obviously convenient, as has been pointed out by the hon. member, I believe all the interested parties would be quite ready to select one central place, such as an armoury or otherwise.

Mr. ESLING: That was exactly the trouble at the last election. There were three parties in the field. Two candidates were keen to follow the old custom of having a central polling station, but the third candidate opposed it. We got into communication with the chief electoral officer, and he replied that the several polling stations would have to remain, as they had been designated by the returning officer.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Apropos of what the hon. member for West Kootenay has said, I wonder if what he has in mind would not best be met if there were an obligation upon the returning officer to notify every elector as to the place where he must vote. This was a proposal which I had intended to bring up later in the form of a clause to be added to the provisions of the bill, and I may perhaps now mention it in advance, namely the placing upon the returning officer the duty of sending a card to each elector informing him of where he votes. Under such a provision my hon. friend's friends would not be so greatly inconvenienced. The woman with a baby carriage would have to make only one trip, and the old man would not be unduly inconvenienced by going up and down hill. I say that that ought to be done, the extra cost this requirement would entail should be borne by the state. Voters should not be put to unnecessary trouble and expense in discovering where they are to cast their votes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Would the committee approve if we drew up a clause to provide that in municipalities of less than 10,000 population, the chief electoral officer may, if he sees fit, direct that there be a central polling location?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If he sees fit?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Leave the discretion to the chief electoral officer. If he thinks it is proper so to do, he may establish a central polling station in municipalities of less than 10,000 population.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That would mean rural municipalities as well?

Mr. POWER: I am satisfied with that.

Mr. REID: Would that power be given in connection with municipalities of over 10,000 population?

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. REID: He would not have the power?

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Would that cover rural as well as urban municipalities?

Mr. POWER: Only rural.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to understand this section more clearly. Would the chief electoral officer or the deputy returning officer have the authority to establish a central voting place for a single parish in any constituency?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The proposal is that there would be one central station instead of running around to half a dozen, provided there is a building large enough to take care of the need.

Mr. VENIOT: That would force people to drive twelve, fifteen or twenty miles to a central polling station in order to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This would apply only to cities up to 10,000 population.

Mr. POWER: If the minister's suggestion is to be carried out he would have to say in cities between 5,000 and 10,000 population.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why not say urban polls not exceeding 10,000 people?

Mr. POWER: There is no such thing as an urban polling division in a municipality under 10,000. Everything under 10,000 is rural and everything over is urban.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If we decide on the principle we can easily fix the language.

Mr. POWER: Subsection 6 of section 33 reads:

> Every voter of an urban polling division who resides on a street, road or avenue which is included within the numbers and names of streets, roads and avenues designating a polling station and contained in a list of voters prepared pursuant to subsection 4 of this section shall vote, if at all, in the station to which such list applies, and not otherwise.

That subsection seems to be in contradiction to subsection 3 of section 38, which reads:

> For the purposes of an election every elector shall be deemed to have resided, and to continue until the close of the poll to reside, in the electoral district,—

In order to avoid confusion, I think we should say in subsection 6 of section 33, "every voter of an urban polling division who has resided." That is to say, his right to vote would be considered as from the time he puts his name on the list. Otherwise, an over-zealous officer in a poll might be given the opportunity to object to a person voting because at the time of the polling he did not actually reside in that particular polling division although his name had been properly placed upon the list at the time of registration or revision. Subsection 3 of section 38 is quite clear but subsection 6 of section 33 is not.

Mr. SULLIVAN: "Who resided" would not make it clear.

Mr. POWER: Those may not be the exact words but I am suggesting that it should be changed to conform with subsection 3 of section 38.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not appreciate the conflict but we will let the subsection stand. This only applies to polls having more than one division.

Mr. POWER: The point is that it gives an excuse to somebody to object to a person voting.

Section stands.

Sections 34 to 36 inclusive agreed to.

On section 37—Persons in receipt of pay disqualified.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There was a change to be made in subsection 3. We were to strike out the words "votes, or" in line fourteen and the words "he, or" in line fifteen.

Mr. POWER: If the minister has no objection, I should like to move that this whole section should be struck out. I do not intend to delay the proceedings in any way but I should like to place before the committee the objections which a great many hon. members have to this section.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Could we not proceed and let this section stand?

Mr. POWER: Perhaps I could give my explanation for the information of hon. members. This section states that it shall be a reason for disqualification for any elector to be employed by any candidate. A stenographer, a telephone operator, a worker in a committee room, a driver of a taxicab or automobile, any person employed by any candidate during the period of an election is disqualified from voting. It was pointed out in 1929 in the house or in the committee by the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) that in order to be strictly within the law he was obliged to have the work of checking his polling lists, typewriting and so on done by people from a neighbouring constituency. This provision seems to me to be ridiculous. In these modern days the conduct of an election is something like conducting a large insurance or any sort of business. It is necessary to have twenty-five, thirty or forty people employed in addressing envelopes, sending out circulars, looking after advertising and taking care of the various activities which must be undertaken by a candidate who hopes to carry on an election with any degree of efficiency. All these people would be disqualified from voting. Not only that, subsection 3 states:

> Any person who votes, or induces or procures any other person to vote, at an election—

Would be punishable under this act. That is to say, the candidate who employs a typist or a stenographer might be presumed by his speeches to have persuaded or induced that particular person to vote. However, as they are closer to the seats of the mighty, they may have fewer illusions on the subject and may not vote for the candidate. But the fact remains that the candidate renders himself liable to disqualification, and all these other persons are disqualified. This section has been in the act for many years and I think in view of our more enlightened and modern times it ought to be stricken from the act altogether.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend would be obliged to employ my electors.

Mr. POWER: As my hon. friend from Quebec East points out, I should be obliged to employ his electors, and he to employ mine, which is an anomaly that should not be permitted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: You cannot carry on an election with that clause.

Mr. POWER: Elections have been carried on from time immemorial, both in my hon. friend's constituency and in my own, while this clause has existed; but I submit that we were wittingly or unwittingly performing illegal acts and we might as well get rid of it.

Mr. IRVINE: I think there is a good deal of force in the argument put forward by the hon. member for Quebec South. As a matter of fact, I should say that very few candidates can actually carry out the section. I think it induces a good deal of hypocrisy and I cannot see that it can do much good or prevent any sort of corruption from taking place; for, as pointed out, if I can hire C.C.F'ers from the next riding to come into mine and C.C.F'ers from my riding can go into the next one and vote, we are not doing much good by this section. In the last election we had great difficulty avoiding complications under this provision, and I do not see much good in it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If it is the fairly unanimous opinion of the committee that this clause should be struck out I have no objection.

Mr. POWER: Let it stand for further consideration.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understood that all these controversial clauses would stand.

Section stands.

On section 38—Effect of presence of name on list of voters.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): The candidate is permitted to appoint two agents at a poll, under section 34. I do not see any clear definition to show who may be appointed as an agent. Suppose a qualified voter from another district were in my district on election day; could he be appointed as an agent and qualify to vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He has to be a voter in that constituency.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): A voter in the constituency can be transferred from one poll to another?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. POWER: I think section 38 should stand to accord with 34 if necessary.

Section stands.

On section 39—Oath of elector.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is only one change here. In line 17 the words "or produce any evidence" are struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The whole of sections 40 and 41 are struck out.

On section 42—Corrections in lists and entries in poll book.

Mr. POWER: I thought there was an amendment to the original act in section 42.

Section agreed to.

Sections 43, 44 and 45 agreed to.

On section 46—Ballot paper to be initialled.

Mr. IRVINE: This is the section on which I desire to move an amendment and I should like to have it stand.

Section stands.

Section 47 agreed to.

On section 48—Returning officer and deputy to be conservators of peace.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In subsection 7, line 46, there is a change—"shall appoint."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 49 agreed to.

On section 50—Counting votes by deputy returning officers.

Mr. IRVINE: If my amendment to section 46 should happen to carry, a slight amendment will be necessary in section 50.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Many amendments might be necessary. On page 38 the words "ballot box" should appear at the beginning of line nine.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 51—Custody of ballot boxes.

Mr. POWER: Have we definitely decided that "greatest" is preferable to "highest" number in subsection (3)?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The subsection reads "majority" and we made it "greatest number." Perhaps "highest number" would be better, or "largest number."

Mr. IRVINE: If you leave it as it stands now a great many members of parliament could be unseated because they have not a majority of the votes. If you change it to the largest number you are defeating the object of the whole act, which is to guarantee that the members elected shall receive a majority.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: The subsection as amended would read:

The candidate who, on the addition of the votes, is found to have the largest number of votes . . .

Is that language correct?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think myself that "highest" would be better.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 52—Adjournment if ballot boxes are missing.

Mr. IRVINE: Subsection 7 will have to be altered to correspond with the previous section.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will put "largest number" there instead of "greatest number."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 53 agreed to.

On section 54—Application for recount or readdition by judge.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a change in this clause on page 43. It is merely a change in the numbering. Where the words "section sixty-eight" occur in line 30 and again in line 35, the words "sixty-eight" should be struck out and the words "fifty-one" inserted.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 55 agreed to.

On section 56—Return of candidate elected.

Mr. CASGRAIN: This clause deals with returns that have to be made after an election in accordance with certain forms by the official agents and the candidates themselves regarding certain expenses incurred during the election. As all hon. members know and as, indeed, everybody knows, it is very hard to make those returns accurately in the forms provided by this clause and also according to the very forms that are appended to this bill. I dare say every person who has had to carry on an election has found it very hard to fill out the forms in conformity with the law and every prescription of the law. If everyone wanted to comply exactly with every minute detail exacted by this return from the official agents and the candidates themselves I do not know where we would all land. I know in the election laws of some provincial legislatures similar provisions existed and they were withdrawn.

Mr. POWER: That is clause 63.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Well, maybe I am not on the right clause. I may be in the right church but in the wrong pew. Anyway, the remarks I have made ought to be considered when we come to the other clause.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Clause 56 has been amended. In line forty-five at the bottom of the page we have struck out the words:

The parcels of original signed applications of electors for registration as such, the identification books and poll books used in the several polling divisions.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In line 31 we have substituted "thirteen" for "twelve" and "nineteen" for "forty" in the numbering of the sections.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 57 and 58 agreed to.

On section 59—Chief electoral officer to retain papers, etc.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This clause has been amended by striking out in line 29 the words in parenthesis:

Excepting all packages of signed applications of electors for registration as such, received from the dominion franchise commissioner.

And by striking out the last sentence of subsection 1 beginning at line 34 as follows:

He shall return all such packages of signed applications to such commissioner forthwith after receipt of them from the returning officers.

Both of those come out.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 60 to 62 inclusive agreed to.

On section 63—Return of election expenses by official agent.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Continuing the remarks that I started to make a few minutes ago I would ask the committee and the government to consider very seriously following the same course that was taken in some of the provincial legislatures when they deleted from some of their acts these provisions especially concerning the candidates themselves. There is good ground for doing that. If we want to improve the law we ought to consider removing certain of these obstructions which are really obstructions to the candidates. We really cannot carry out the law if we are called upon to comply with each and every detail of the forms and the provisions in the clause. If everybody had to comply with that law, we would not be here. Especially subclause 3, on page 52, should be entirely eliminated.

An hon. MEMBER: It is hypocrisy.

Mr. CASGRAIN: An hon. member says that it is hypocrisy. Everybody knows certain expenses have to be incurred during an election. In the law there is a provision that only $500 must be expended by the candidate for personal and travelling expenses. This is possible in certain ridings of a small area but when you have ridings about 800 miles in length, when you have to hire boats every day incurring necessary expenses to go from one place to another and when also in certain cases you have to use aeroplanes, there is not a candidate who could look anyone in the face fairly and squarely and say that he had spent only $500 for travelling expenses.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In this bill we have raised that to $1,000 just for my hon. friend's riding.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That might not cover it in some cases.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is pretty reasonable.

Mr. CASGRAIN: As regards the returns that the official agents and the candidates are called upon to make, it is not within the power of any human being to make those returns in their present form. In some of the provincial legislatures they have held this view and have struck out similar provisions. What is the use of being hypocritical about the matter? In some ridings the cost is greater; in others it is less, and I do not think these returns in their present form ought to be exacted.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to offer an amendment to this clause. Perhaps I might follow the precedent of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) and give a general idea of what I have in mind. About a year ago the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) in a speech in this house undertook to tell hon. members that I was very largely responsible for making permissible contributions from corporations and also in speeches across this country he tried to make me more or less directly responsible for the contributions from Beauharnois to the Liberal party.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member took the lead, the initiative, in the matter. That is what I said.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The fact is that I suggested an amendment to the Elections Act on May 28, 1930, when that act was up for revision. Section 9 of the act as it then stood read:

No unincorporated company or association and no incorporated company or association other than one incorporated for political purposes alone shall, directly or indirectly, contribute, loan, advance, pay, or promise or offer to pay any money or its equivalent to, or for, or in aid of, any candidate at an election, or to, or for, or in aid of, any political party, committee, or association, or to or for, or in aid of, any company incorporated for political purposes, or to, or for, or in furtherance of, any political purpose whatever, or for the indemnification or reimbursement of any person for moneys so used.

That section had had the effect of prohibiting contributions from labour unions or from farmers' associations to campaign funds. Those contributions were made in the open; they were small in amount but they might very well invalidate an election. On the other hand no provision was made for a report of contributions to central offices. We know there are large campaign funds collected at any general election. Senator McRae said last year that it cost over a million dollars for either of the old parties to carry on a general election campaign. Some years ago the brewers admitted having given large sums to both parties. There is no provision in the clause for any report being made of this central campaign fund, the only provision is for the reporting of sums received by the agent of the local candidate. Apparently then this clause did not fulfil the purpose for which it was designed. Further there were no penalties attached, so it was very largely a dead letter. I did suggest that I had tried in vain to get an amendment exempting the trade unions and other bodies of that kind from the operation of the clause. On an occasion something like this, I did suggest that the clause be struck out. The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) who was chairman of the committee said he was quite agreeable; and with no dissenting voice, except, I think one by the Prime Minister on a technicality, the amendment passed. I would suggest that it is hardly fair for the hon. member for Melville to go across the country charging me with exclusive responsibility for having cut out this clause.

Under the circumstances it is only right that some provision should be made with regard to campaign funds, and I make this suggestion, that an amendment of this kind should be added. I am not quite sure that it covers the ground adequately; I prepared it hurriedly during the luncheon hour:

That section 63, subsection 1 be amended by adding a paragraph, as follows:

(f) a detailed list of all contributions or stocks of literature, posters or other printed material or services supplied from any central committee or any other organization.

As we all know, into most constituencies there come very large supplies of literature from headquarters. Ordinarily there is no accounting made of this. The reports which the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) speaks about are very different. They certainly make no provision for anything of this kind.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They are no good anyway.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Further than that there are large quantities of posters and other printed material shipped in from headquarters of which no report is made.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not like to interrupt, but we are taking the non-contentious clauses. Had we better not let this stand?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I shall be through in a moment. My purpose in introducing this proposed amendment now is that if the idea meets with the approval of the minister, in case the particular wording is not acceptable he and his officers might perhaps draft one that would better serve the purpose. When interrupted I was saying that it is the practice to bring in large quantities of printed matter, it is very often the practice to have organizers sent in and the greater part of the campaign carried on by paid organizers, who however are not paid by the local people. If we are going to have any reports why not have a full report of all the money spent in the constituency? Why, as a candidate, have I to report some one hundred dollars that my agent is paying out but make no report of the thousand or ten thousand that come from some outside source? I suggest that this be taken into consideration by the minister.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How would you find out the value?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The clause stands.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) require more than passing notice. The hon. member and his party have never ceased talking about the Beauharnois campaign fund. I have always taken the ground that they are the last party in this house that should talk about it. The hon. member for Winnipeg

North Centre was the one who took the initiative to make campaign fund contributions from corporations "legal and proper," in the terms of the right hon. leader of the government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Sit down and take your medicine.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —I submit that the initiative in removing clause 9 of the act as it then stood did not make this legal and certainly did not make it proper.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is no point of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If it was not making it proper why did my hon. friend move to make it proper? My hon. friend says it did not make it legal. I have the authority of the Prime Minister that it did. My hon. friend says it did not make it proper. Well he tried to make it proper and if it is improper he is responsible for it. My recollection is that he tried this stunt three times before he pulled it. On the first two occasions the government turned it down. The third time, I remember quite well, the Solicitor General—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I want to finish this and finish it right. The Solicitor General at that time indicated that it was agreed in the committee on elections that this question would not be dealt with at that session of 1930, would not be allowed to come up, and it did not except to say we could not change the prohibition against these corporation campaign contributions. I remember quite well that there were only four hon. members in the house who spoke on that occasion. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre took the initiative in spite of the understanding to the contrary in the committee, trying to get this prohibition against campaign contributions removed, and finally he succeeded. The Solicitor General spoke a short time indicating that the committee had agreed not to deal with it and make it legal or proper. The hon. member for Quebec South was indifferent about the matter. I think he was on the committee; I forget, but he spoke as if he did not care much which way it went. Then the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Kellner) was strongly with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in favour of removing this prohibition. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre admitted on a previous page of Hansard that he had himself received $100 from his central committee. Apparently with him it is a matter of size of contribution. Then in the first election after this prohibition was removed he started getting campaign funds from his own central organization. Is not that just what the other parties were doing from their respective sources and centres? I cannot conceive the logic of his reasoning, or that he, having taken the initiative, was not more guilty, if that term is justified, than the leader of any other party in this house or any other member.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who was in control of the house at that time?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I take the ground that every one of the 245 members, who was a consenting party, was jointly responsible with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Only four said anything about it, all the rest who were present were consenting parties. Had my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre not insisted upon it the prohibition would not have been removed, it would have been there to this day, and there would not have been any masquerading about this country in favour of immaculate elections and then taking the initiative to make them other than immaculate. Not satisfied with that he is now blathering about the country and complaining about being exposed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I must answer one or two of the statements of my hon. friend which I think are not correct. Reference was made to my having stated in this house that I had received $100 from a central committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was your own statement.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That was quite correct. That $100 was secured from the workers, but at the time I made the statement I was trying to point out that there were central committees with regard to which we need not report. That is the very point I am trying to make to-day. I did not receive $100 from any great corporation or anything of that sort. I want to emphasize the fact that we are required to report with regard to local matters, but not with regard to those things that come from central bodies. In the next place the hon. member for Melville stated that I tried three times previously to have this section repealed. I had not tried in any way to have the section repealed; I did try to get an exemption in the case of trades unions, which is a different matter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is that much worse.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Further than that, I hope the hon. member for Melville will not insist that the Liberal party took the Beauharnois funds entirely because they felt free from the law in this regard. With regard to blathering around the country, it seems to me rather a strange thing that the hon. member for Melville should write special letters for a provincial campaign dragging in this issue, and further than that go to the church paper in an attempt to discredit me.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I notice that the hon. member has never deigned over his own signature to deny any of these communications. The letter to the church paper had to do with matters brought up in this house, and not one sentence or syllable of it was ever challenged by my hon. friend or by anyone else as to its accuracy. Since my hon. friend apparently wants a little more than he got I would ask him if he has been opposed by the Liberals in Winnipeg North Centre since 1921, and where the support of the Liberals went in the various elections that have taken place there since that time. I would ask the hon. gentleman where he got his assistance, with the Liberals not running any candidates. It is the same thing with the whole gang of them over there; they are supported by one or the other of the old parties. We know that; the public know it. That is the farce of the whole thing. There is not a mother's son of them over there who has not been supported by one or the other of the two old parties since 1921. Having regard to that fact what a farce it is to pretend that they are a distinct entity. Does anyone suppose that Milton Campbell was not financed by the Tories? Or does anyone suppose that the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) is not in the same position? I cannot prove it, but we all know a lot more things than we can prove.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It happens that I was opposed by the Liberals in 1925. That is another case in which the hon. member for Melville is not correct. Further than that I was not opposed in the last election by the Conservatives. I did not know that the Liberals were so stupid that they and the Conservatives contributed these large amounts to elect me.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is just a difference of ten months between 1925 and 1926.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): The committee is on section 64.

Section 64 agreed to.

Sections 65 to 69 inclusive agreed to.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

On section 70—Liability of election members.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a change in subsection (5) on page 59, in line 19. The words "section seventy-two" are struck out, and in line 22 the words "or section seventy-two" are added.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 71 and 72 agreed to.

On section 73—Conveyance of electors to polls.

Mr. POWER: I am going to move that this section be struck out.

Mr. SULLIVAN: I second that motion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Stands.

Section 73 stands.

Section 74 stands.

Sections 75 to 82 inclusive agreed to.

On section 83—Election not voided unless illegal practices by candidate.

Mr. SULLIVAN: I do not think section 77 should be included.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Stands.

Section 83 stands.

Sections 84 to 94 inclusive agreed to.

On section 95—Who may vote at advance polls.

Mr. POWER: Subsection (b) is new, it it not?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 96—Conditions for voting at advance polls.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This has been amended so that subsection (a) shall read:

(a) he produces to the returning officer at the advance poll an advance poll certificate in form No. 40 that he is a person to whom the privilege of voting at an advance poll extends, which certificate shall be signed by—
(i) the returning officer, or
(ii) the election clerk.

Mr. POWER: I would ask to have that stand.

Section 96 stands.

Sections 97 and 98 agreed to.

On section 99—Who shall not be appointed election officers.

Mr. NEILL: Was there not to be an amendment to section 99?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I believe there will be an amendment moved, and perhaps I could state the nature of the amendment without moving it at the present time. It is to provide for absentee votes among certain occupational classes including lumbermen, miners, fishermen and sailors. If any person in those four classes is more than twenty-five miles away from the polling division where his name appears on the voters' list he may go to the poll nearest to the place he happens to be working, and deposit a special ballot.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In the same province.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, it must be in the same province. The ballot is accepted by the returning officer at that point and is transmitted to the proper poll where the person's name appears upon the voters' list. This is a system which for a number of years has been in force in British Columbia, and it was suggested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) that to meet the special requirements of many constituencies in the province of British Columbia such a clause should be adopted generally throughout Canada. I have given the matter the best consideration I can. It was discussed in committee, although the committee did not reach any definite conclusion on the matter. I have now drawn an amendment which I think will cover the point, and when we come to the contentious clauses I shall move it.

Mr. SANDERSON: Where does the special ballot come from?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is supplied by the returning officer who will be supplied with the special absentee ballots.

Mr. McINTOSH: When will it be transmitted to the correct poll?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Immediately after the count a telegraphic dispatch is sent showing the number of votes.

Mr. BROWN: Will it be transmitted from one constituency to another?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Within the same province.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is it to be done under oath?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, the voter must swear that his name appears on the voters' list of a certain subdivision more than twenty-five miles away from the point at which he happens to be working. If he is a qualified elector and takes the oath printed on the ballot he affixes his signature, and then marks his ballot which is put in the box. Of course, these ballots are different from the others. When they are counted the absentee votes are marked under their proper polling subdivision, and the number of them is transmitted forthwith by telegraphic communication to the returning officer of the appropriate division.

Mr. DUPUIS: Will the minister tell me why—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Probably we had better wait until I can elaborate upon the matter, because the amendment is somewhat lengthy.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has suggested four classes to whom this provision would apply. May I ask if he would not also include men in construction and relief camps? They are in a similar position.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I cannot extend the privilege any farther, and at a later time I shall explain the reason.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What kind of ballot will it be?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I shall explain later.

Mr. THOMPSON (Simcoe): I should like to ask the minister if it would not be possible to adopt the same provision for mariners as appears in the Ontario act, whereby a sailor may vote in his own riding by giving a proxy to a relative who is a voter.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have not considered that.

Section 99 stands.

Sections 100 to 103 inclusive agreed to.

On section 104—No amendment to apply to election for which writ is issued within three months, except after notice.

Mr. POWER: I find in this section the words, "no amendment to this act." Does that mean the Canada Temperance Act, or the bill we are now discussing?

Mr. GUTHRIE: "This act" means the Elections Act.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps we had better let the section stand until we read it over.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The heading "Canada Temperance Act elections" might lead to some misunderstanding. I do not know that the expression should be used here at all.

Mr. POWER: Well, we will let it carry.

Section agreed to.

On section 105—Repealed enactments.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an amendment to this section whereby we add as subsection (2) the words:

Notwithstanding anything in this act contained all by-elections which shall occur before the dissolution of this present parliament shall be had and held under and pursuant to the provisions of the acts which by subsection 1 of this section are repealed and for the purposes only of by-elections so had and held such repealed acts shall be deemed to continue in full force and effect.

The object of the amendment is to provide that any by-election which may be held in Canada before the dissolution of parliament shall be continued under the present elections law and not under the new act.

Mr. DUPUIS: That is a new subsection.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has been added by the committee.

Mr. POWER: In this connection I think it will be necessary to refer to section 106 which states:

This act shall not come into force until a day to be fixed by the governor in council and proclaimed by him in the Canada Gazette.

If I understood the amendment correctly it was to the effect that the subsections repealing the Dominion Elections Act, an act to amend the Dominion Elections Act, and a further act to amend the Dominion Elections Act will continue to apply to by-elections. But the last section in the bill, namely, section 106, suspends the operation of the legislation until it is proclaimed. Is it possible to have the two acts proclaimed at the same time?

Mr. GUTHRIE: When this legislation is proclaimed it immediately comes into effect. But no matter when it is proclaimed, if any by-election is held between now and dissolution the provisions in respect of elections in the present act shall prevail.

Mr. POWER: Has the minister covered a case where a proclamation has been made, and yet the old Dominion Elections Act remains in force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The new subsection does not come into effect until the proclamation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If any hon. member wishes the section to stand, I am content to have it stand.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. POWER: No, I am content.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 106 agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I propose now to go on with the contentious clauses of both bills. Meantime, however, I have been asked to report progress so that the house may proceed with some other business.

Mr. POWER: Could we not go through the schedules before that is done?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, I believe we should do that before we report progress.

Schedule 1.

Form 1 agreed to.

On form 2—Oath of returning officer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have an amendment to this form. I move that the words "by section 22" be changed to "by section 9."

Mr. POWER: Should we not say "Dominion Elections Act, 1934"? Is that not the proper title?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, that is the title of this legislation.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps we should amend accordingly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Probably so, as that is the title under section 1 of the bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Form as amended agreed to.

Forms 3 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On form 13—Oath of poll clerk.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a change in this form. The present words are "with partiality" and they should be "without partiality." These words have been in for years.

Amendment agreed to.

Form as amended agreed to.

Form 14 agreed to.

On form 15—Form of ballot paper.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is just a slight change to be made here. The word "block" should be "black."

Amendment agreed to.

Form as amended agreed to.

Forms 16 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On form 19—Oath of person applying to vote.

Mr. POWER: I think this form should be altered. It should be remembered that in one section of the bill it is provided that no person shall be called upon to take an oath other than those provided for in this act. The oath is:

You swear (or solemnly affirm) that you are (name of the voter) whose name is entered on the copy of the list of voters now shown to you (showing copy of list to voter); that you have not before voted at this election either at this or at any other polling station, that you have not been employed by any person for pay or reward, in reference to this now proceeding election in any electoral district unless lawfully by an election officer and that you have not received anything, nor has anything been promised to you, either directly or indirectly, in order to induce you to vote, or to refrain from voting, at this election.

If the amendment which I moved with respect to those employed in committee rooms is carried, this form will have to be modified. I think the person should be asked to swear if he is a British subject and twenty-one years of age. That has always been provided for in any other act. In closed lists of this kind it is often found necessary to challenge a person as to whether he is a British subject or twenty-one years of age.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The fact that a name is on the list is proof that the person is twenty-one years of age and a British subject.

Mr. POWER: On many occasions in the past when voting with closed lists it has been found possible to challenge a person as to whether he is a British subject or twenty-one years of age. Is it intended that the fact of a name being on the list is sufficient to permit a person to go to the poll who is not properly qualified? The name may have got there in the hurry and bustle of registration. I do not propose to add a long list of qualifications but I think a person should be qualified as to being twenty-one years of age and a British subject.

Mr. BROWN: And as to residence.

Mr. POWER: Residence would not be of any importance because the fact that a person's name is on a closed list is some evidence that at the time the list was made he was qualified as to residence.

Form stands.

Form 21 agreed to.

On form 22—Oath on transfer certificate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This should read "dated this ..... day of ..... 19..."

Amendment agreed to.

Form as amended agreed to.

Forms 22 to 25 inclusive agreed to.

On form 26—Information for voting.

Mr. POWER: I am asking that this form stand. Is this a new provision?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I think it has always been in the act.

Mr. POWER: I think it is new.

Form stands.

Form 27 agreed to.

Form 28 stands.

Forms 29 to 34 inclusive agreed to.

Forms 35 to 38 inclusive stand.

Form 39 agreed to.

On form 40—Advance poll certificate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The words "or as the case may be" have been added.

Amendment agreed to.

Form as amended agreed to.

Form 41 agreed to.

On schedule two.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has been suggested that the name McAdam Junction should be added to the New Brunswick list, and the names of Brantford and Woodstock are to be added to the Ontario list.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps this schedule could stand. I do not think certain hon. members on this side were aware that there would be a possibility of adding names to these lists.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Why is Swift Current not included?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Because no application has ever been received. If my hon. friend desires it should be included and it is a place of consequence, we will add it.

Mr. BOTHWELL: It is a larger place than many on the list.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They were a little more active.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I ask that it be inserted.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I shall be very glad to insert it.

Schedule stands.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I spoke this morning of the insertion in one or the other of these bills of a provision with respect to the use of the radio for broadcasting purposes during general elections, a provision which would ensure an equitable division of time and use of the service as between the political parties. Considering the importance of the radio in electoral contests, some provision of the kind ought to be made, and I suggest to the minister that while dealing with other matters in the interval he should take this one into consideration.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I shall be glad to consider it and also the other suggestion in regard to notification by the returning officer to all persons entitled to vote as to where they are to vote. I am in favour of that, but considering that there are six million names on the voters list it would require an enormous staff throughout Canada to notify them all. They tell we that in ordinary work a clever stenographer can address fifty postal cards in an hour, which of course cannot be done by penmanship. In eight hours you would get only four hundred done. There are twenty-five thousand more names on the list in the ridings, but the total is some six millions. If it were not for the expense I should say yes; but it would be a pretty expensive operation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If there is considerable expense, the alternative lies between the state meeting a legitimate expenditure and placing what is a perfectly proper electoral charge on the shoulders of the candidates and their supporters. The elections act is part of the machinery of government. The elector must know where he is to vote before he can discharge his duty as a voter. It seems to me it should be an obligation of the state to notify him officially where he has to vote.

Where the work is left to committees they have to incur all the additional expense of postage, as well as of stenographic assistance. If the electors were notified by the state, the frank could be used, and all that expense would be saved to candidates and political parties without adding anything in this way of expenditure by the state. Furthermore, it would avoid a great deal of confusion. If a voter received an official card notifying him that he was to vote at such and such a poll, if any question arose as to his being at the wrong poll, the possession of an official card would be prima facie evidence of his being at the right poll. As regards expense, we are at this very moment voting $40,000,000 as a special measure to help to provide labour for the unemployed and improve conditions in the country. Of that amount there is over $1,000,000 to be voted for a barracks in the Prime Minister's own constituency. Surely, if we can vote $1,000,000 for a barracks, even should it require $1,000,000 to see that a truly representative poll is taken in a general election, that would be preferable to devoting an equivalent amount of money to the other purpose. I think the bogy of expense is all nonsense, where it is not necessarily considerable and is both necessary and legitimate. I stand for economy, but I recognize that it is absolutely necessary that every elector should know where he has to vote. With closed lists I think he is entitled to be officially informed. At the last provincial election in Ontario I asked my secretary to find out where I was to vote, and he informed me he was obliged to make inquiries from five different sources before he could definitely ascertain where the poll was located. It must be remembered that while some of us may be in the fortunate position of having telephones and motor cars which enable us without too great inconvenience to go from one polling booth to another, the majority of people have neither telephones nor cars, and are without ready means of informing themselves; and, if they are dependent upon what some party committee advises them, they may often be deceived by being deliberately furnished with a wrong notice from some committee. I do think it would relieve candidates and their supporters of a very considerable expense. We are seeking to have elections as free from corruption as possible and to get rid as largely as possible of the necessity of campaign funds. As everyone knows, corruption may arise out of expenses that are essential to the legitimate conduct of elections, and not only out of practices that may in themselves be termed corrupt. Campaign funds have to be acquired for the purpose, and, if we can reduce the amount of campaign funds which are necessary for perfectly legitimate purposes, it will all help in the matter of securing cleaner and better elections. I am glad that the minister agrees with the suggestion and the idea; I believe that members on both sides of the house are practically unanimous with respect to it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not want the committee to go away with the idea that this is a new suggestion on the part of the leader of the opposition; it was discussed when he was Prime Minister and was not adopted. We did discuss this very question in the committee and the whole committee was in favour of it, the only question being one of expense. I agree that we should do everything to make the franchise as complete and as convenient as possible to the voter, but a line must be drawn somewhere. The next demand will be to carry the voters to the polls. There is a responsibility on the voter to do something for himself. He should take sufficient interest in the question to see that his name is on the list and to poll his vote without being coaxed to do so. I think the suggestion is a good one, and the only thing that causes me to hesitate until I further consider it is the question of expense. If we can overcome that I am heartily in favour of it.

Mr. POWER: I suggest a compromise. I cannot share the enthusiasm of my leader; I should not like a partisan returning officer to notify the voters in my constituency. It would cost far less to the country if the candidates, within a certain period prior to the election, were permitted to use a frank to send out notices to the electors, and if the electors were not properly notified as to where to go only one or two persons would be to blame, the respective candidates.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Suppose a supply of cards, sufficient in number to cover all the names, were given the various candidates and on these cards we printed a frank, "On His Majesty's Service": you would get rid of a large portion of the expense.

Mr. POWER: That is a good idea. It has been calculated that in large cities like Montreal, indeed in any city, it costs 4 cents per name, including the printing of the card and 2 cents for postage, and that is something worth considering when you run into constituencies of fifty or sixty thousand voters. The suggestion made by the Minister of Justice is an excellent one.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Let us agree on that suggestion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should hesitate to accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Quebec South; it seems to me the suggestion of the leader of the opposition is preferable. There might be trouble if we had a returning officer who was very partisan. The suggestion of the leader of the opposition lifts the matter to a higher level. If you leave it to each of the committees, it means three sets of cards in a great many constituencies, and that is not only a duplication but a triplication of expense all round. Moreover, a procedure of that kind might easily lend itself to manipulation. Someone in any party might put down a name or an address that was not the proper one and send it out, and the poor elector would have to travel all over the country.

Mr. POWER: That has been done; there is nothing original about that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, it has been done and it is possible under the hon. gentleman's suggestion. Very often there is a great deal of confusion as between polling booths in federal, provincial and municipal elections. In the municipal elections in my own city the city clerk sends out a card of notification and it is found in practice to be helpful. Each elector knows precisely where he has to go and that official intimation helps to clear the situation. I would endorse rather the suggestion of the leader of the opposition; I think his arguments are sound.

Mr. POWER: Might I point out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that there is a wide difference between a notification given in municipal affairs and one given in federal or provincial affairs. So far in municipal affairs, at any rate in most municipalities there are not clearly defined political parties and the municipal clerk is not supposed to be the appointee of one political party. He is as a rule a permanent official who is far above parties. In this case there would be an officer appointed by a party whose duty it would be, if the suggestion of the leader of the opposition is carried out, to notify every elector as to the place where he shall poll his vote. Inevitably, whether a returning officer is impartial, nonpartisan or not, some of those notices and some of those cards will be lost. When a large number of cards of that nature are being distributed, the postmen as a rule are extremely careless with them and a large number will be lost. That will serve to arouse among the people who have not been notified a prejudice against the returning officer and possibly partly against the party which appointed him. I say frankly there is no doubt any man who does not receive his card will say: This is the fault of the party that appointed the returning officer and he is doing it on purpose that I will not be notified. This will only cause ill-feeling and complicate the election issue for no good reason. Were all three parties, if there are three, to proceed to the notification of their electors, surely one out of the three would hit the right man. Time and again in an election campaign complaint is made to me: I did not receive notification from you where the polling place was, but I received it from your opponent. That is all right; there is no objection to that, but with three parties notifying the elector there is no doubt he will receive notification.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I believe the Senate is waiting for something and we can go on with this afterwards. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

FREE CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE IN VIEW OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message from the Senate:

Friday, June 29, 1934.

Resolved that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house that the Senate has agreed to the free conference desired with the Senate for the purpose of communicating the reasons which induced the Commons not to concur in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill 89, intituled, "An Act to amend and consolidate the Excise Act," and has appointed the Right Honourable Senator Meighen and the Honourable Senators Copp and Coté as managers on their part at the said conference, and

Also, that the managers of the free conference on the part of the Senate will meet in Senate committee room No. 258, at six o'clock, p.m., on this 29th day of June, instant.

A. E. Blount,
Clerk of the Senate.

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that the House of Commons has appointed Messrs. Matthews, Cahan and Euler to act as managers on behalf of this house of the free conference with the Senate with respect to the amendments made to Bill No. 89, an act to amend and consolidate the Excise Act.

That the clerk of the house do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 115, respecting the election of members of the House of Commons, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

On section 37—Persons in receipt of pay disqualified.

Mr. POWER: This is the clause which it will be remembered I moved should be struck from the bill on the ground that it disqualified persons working in committee rooms, etcetera. I do now formally move that the whole of clause 37 be struck from the bill.

Mr. MORAND: While I am entirely in favour of this disappearing, there should be some limit to the number that can be employed, because otherwise this will lend itself to a very nice way of employing one person for just an hour and paying him whatever is wished, and so on. Some limit should be set as to the number who can be employed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the amendment is much too sweeping. This has been a provision in the law for a long time. While it may be inconvenient, I do not know that it has ever been abused and I do not know that it has ever been a very great inconvenience. I have never found it so and I believe I have contested probably more elections than anyone here. It has been in the act as long as I can remember. It may, however, be capable of some modification but I could not agree to its being stricken out and nothing else put in its place.

Mr. SULLIVAN: I object to this clause. In the large cities we cannot carry on an election without employing hundreds of people to prevent impersonation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend from East Essex (Mr. Morand) made a suggestion that we must pay heed to. If we have no limitation at all there is nothing to prevent one hiring one hundred people for an hour at $5 each, which would be a clear case of bribery. We must make the thing reasonable.

Mr. POWER: In these days of depression one is not likely to hire a hundred people at $5.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The depression will be over before the election.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Another false promise.

Mr. POWER: I have no objection to some form of limitation if it can be worked out.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think we shall have to draft a clause. I would not like to strike out the whole thing.

Mr. POWER: I am quite willing to let it stand.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The carriers of the election officers are not disqualified.

Mr. POWER: No, they are excepted.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. The objectionable words in subsection 1 are:

> Every person employed by any person for pay or reward in reference to an election in any electoral district shall be disqualified. . . .

Now the exceptions are all right, I understand.

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The limitation will have to be applied in subsection 1.

Paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Can we get a section or paragraph (e) to subsection 2, which will put a reasonable limit on those persons who may be employed?

Mr. FACTOR: Why not follow the wording of paragraph (d), "any person necessarily and properly employed"?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is just as objectionable, because you might employ half your constituency.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I cannot see the wisdom of having any limitation at all. You might as well leave it as it is; why limit it to one or two or three or four? The evil is there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Leave it as it is then.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, I want the whole thing struck out. It is just as ridiculous when you come to the other parts, whether you have one or twenty-five.

Mr. POWER: The implication of this would extend to the trainmen employed on the private car which conveys the Prime Minister or the leader of the opposition about the country, the people employed on the radio when some candidate makes a speech, the man who pilots an aeroplane, or to persons who are often employed to make speeches for one or the other political party; although I do not think it ever has been applied to that length.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The question is what is reasonably necessary. Can we fix any limit?

Mr. POWER: Any limit to the amount of money expended?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, it is not the amount of money, it is the number of persons who can be employed.

Mr. POWER: As pointed out by the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan) in large constituencies it is very difficut to limit the number. What would be extraordinary and extravagant for a constituency in the city of Quebec would be far too small in the city of Montreal. I can well remember that at one time it was stated here, I think a return was made by one of the candidates, that he had expended $44,000 in legitimate expenses in his election; that was His Excellency the Hon. Mr. Marler. The Secretary of State should be very familiar with the expenditures in that constituency, though I would not go as far as to say that he expended $44,000 in legitimate expenses.

Mr. CAHAN: He made a return under oath with a proper audit.

Mr. POWER: I quite agree, and I am not complaining, I only indicate that you cannot possibly place a limit on the amount of money expended for perfectly legitimate employees in a large constituency. It will be remembered, I think, that during that election candidates on both sides sent canvassers out to take photographs of the voters in order to be sure that there would be no impersonation at the polls. They went from door to door and asked voters to sit for their photographs and took snapshots. It costs money to do that with thousands and thousands of voters. But that is a perfectly legitimate expenditure, in fact it is to keep the election clean.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Suppose you have in a committee room four or five telephones, would you say that you should not have more than one telephone operator, more than one stenographer, more than one clerk? I think it is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How would it be to add to paragraph (d) a clause something like this:

> And such persons as may be reasonably necessary to afford clerical help to the candidate during the election, but which in no case shall exceed in number.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That would satisfy me.

Mr. SULLIVAN: Will that prevent impersonation? We may have a hundred men going from door to door taking photographs of these people, getting their names and addresses and whether they have a telephone and so on. If we have sixty thousand electors, we have to be very careful, three or four thousand people may come and telegraph; that is what we are up against.

Mr. POWER: I think if the minister would let it read "such persons as may be reasonably and properly employed" that would be enough. Our object is to prevent what you might call electoral blackmail. If this thing is carried on during elections—and it is, there is no use trying to get away from it—at least let us be able to put up a good case before a judge if we have to go before him, and if the judge is a bit sympathetic and knows that the complaint is not bona fide but only made for the purpose of intimidating a candidate or the person elected, then he will have a chance to throw out any prosecution. That is all we want.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: While there may be danger in the clause as it now stands, I submit that to strike it out is a still more dangerous proceeding. There would then be no limit to the amounts that might be spent. It may be that the island of Montreal is an outstanding example of the difficulties of winning an election without a large election fund, but I submit that there are other methods by which elections in that city might be cleaned up than by opening wide the door to a reckless and unlimited expenditure. If this is cut out it will simply be a race to see who can spend the most money, because there will be no limit to what might be done in the way of sending out literature, employing canvassers, having people check and re-check, and so on. That would mean that the man with the deepest purse or the man who could command the utmost in the way of resources would be the man who would win the election, and that is fatal to any real democracy. So I would rather take the chance and insist that if people will not do this work voluntarily they must lose their franchise in that particular election. I think that is the only solution, short of what I suggested several years ago, that legitimate expenses should be put up by the government itself. I think that would be a reasonable proposal. If it is worth while to carry on an election in order to select a government, it seems to me worth while for the country as a whole to put up reasonable expenses. As an alternative, however, I should like to see this section retained.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman misses the point entirely. This has no reference to the number of people who may be employed; it states that those people will be disqualified from voting. If a candidate wants to employ a thousand people and pay them—and have one thousand votes disqualified—he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I cannot accept the motion, but if there is any reasonable basis upon which we can arrange it I am willing to confer with my hon. friends. I think there must be some limitation. I think my hon. friend from Ottawa has misapprehended the situation. At present you may employ such clerical assistance as you need, and you may pay for it, but those who are employed are disqualified from voting in that riding. That is a safeguard. If we removed this section a man might employ say a hundred workers for an hour at $5 or $10 each. That is bribery, but it could be done without disqualifying those workers. I do not object to a reasonable number being employed during the campaign, but I do not know what a reasonable number is. I know that from five to eight would be employed in the central committee room in my riding, and they would be chiefly stenographers.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Several hundred might be needed in other ridings.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no experience in the large cities, but I believe there should be some limitation. I do not like to open the door too wide. If my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) thinks we can come to any satisfactory arrangement I should be glad to discuss the question with him, but if not I would have to ask that the section remain as it is.

Mr. IRVINE: If there are those who desire to use money to prevent the people from expressing their true views at the polls I cannot imagine a better way to do it than under this section. A very wealthy Conservative might hire all the C.C.F.'s the night before, and disqualify them all, or perhaps a wealthy Liberal might do that. The point is that anyone who wants to act crookedly can do so under the section as it now stands.

Mr. CAHAN: I have had some experience in running elections in the city of Montreal, and as a matter of fact I do not employ voters in my own constituency; I employ voters who reside and vote in other constituencies, which is perfectly legitimate. As a matter of fact, if I am to conduct an election in the constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George first I must have an inquiry to ascertain that the alleged voter resides where he says he resides. Then I must have some description of him so that he can be identified, and usually in order to identify him by questioning I wish to know his telephone number; if he has an office I wish to know where his office is situated and his office telephone number. I cannot run an election otherwise. In one of my elections a thousand voters were impersonated before they got to the polls. You must have means for a complete identification, and your representatives at the polls must be thoroughly informed so that they may prevent impersonation. At election time I employ people who do not vote in my constituency to do that clerical and protective work.

You must remember that if you are running an election in the city of Montreal you can go to an association in New York who will supply you with fifty or one hundred or two hundred or three hundred impersonators. These men will come to the city the day before the election, supplied with cards stating whom they are to impersonate; they will go from poll to poll impersonating voter after voter. In one election the only way we succeeded in preventing it was with the aid of a number of young men belonging to athletic clubs, some of them associated with McGill university, who were active supporters of mine. They saw an automobile carrying five or six men; it would stop at one poll and one man would get out and vote; it would go to the next poll and another man would get out and vote; and we then discovered that they were imported personators. We took the law into our own hands and disabled each one of those automobiles, and defied the police to take charge of us for breaking the law in that way. So we were able to smash the combination. But there must be some way whereby money may be legitimately spent in investigating and informing ourselves with regard to prospective voters, in order to secure such information as will enable us to identify each and preserve his right to vote. I can only avoid the present law by going to some other constituency and engaging men there to do that preventive work for me.

Mr. SULLIVAN: I could not do that. Your riding is different; I am one of your electors.

Mr. CAHAN: There must be some way to ensure that elections will not be carried by impersonation. That is very difficult indeed. So far as I am concerned I will be satisfied if this section remains, but then I may not employ people in my own electoral district to secure the information which is absolutely necessary. In one case I think we secured thirty or forty detectives from another province and some twenty or thirty others elsewhere. Strange to say, before the election I learned that even they were being bribed. We brought some sixty of them into the main committee room, told them we knew they were being bribed and were working for the opposite party and asked those who admitted it to take two paces to the front. Two-thirds of those men took two paces to the front, admitting that they were working for the other party and not for us. Such a situation is difficult but some way must be found to remedy it. I have evidence that at least fifty or sixty blank warrants were issued for use in my constituency. They were signed by a judge to be filled out when necessary. One committee in the St. Lawrence ward of my constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George, composed of respectable men, were arrested and put in gaol before the poll opened, through the use of blank warrants ostensibly signed by a judge in the city of Montreal. I have had police officers come to my main committee room where most representative women of the city were engaged on the telephones to persuade the voters to come to the polls. Those police officers had blank warrants which had been filled out on the street, with which they attempted to come in and arrest the most representative people in the city. We have stood at the door and said we would use strong measures if they attempted to carry these warrants into effect, because we knew they were false and fraudulent. That sort of thing is carried on, and it is not surprising to find that in the constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George the election expenses have run up as high as $120,000 or $125,000 in a single election. I know of one case where the candidate contesting the election spent $75,000, and there was a contribution of $25,000 to the election fund which had never been reported to him.

I claim no special purity whatsoever, but I do claim that I have taken every possible step to prevent fraud. No dollar has been expended except on the approval of an auditor, and every person who works for me during an election is told that we have put up a fund to send him to gaol if when working in my interests he secures a vote for me by fraudulent means. I have done all I can, and there it remains.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does not the Secretary of State believe that the closed list would help to remove a situation such as he has described?

Mr. CAHAN: I think it would, to a great extent. I do not wish to refer to personal matters, but may I say that when some years ago we were discussing this matter in the committee on privileges and elections some hon. gentlemen opposite representing the province of Quebec were the most earnest supporters I had in my endeavour to secure better conditions. Since in and out of committee we have entered upon a discussion of this matter, may I add that I have been gratified that hon. members sitting behind the right hon. gentleman opposite have expressed to me with every evidence of sincerity—and I have full confidence that they were sincere—their desire to prevent this sort of fraud. I am sure they are as anxious as I am to prevent it.

Mr. BRADETTE: I wish to say only a few words, because I believe the more we try to amend the act the worse it will get. I notice that subsection (c) of section 37 states:

> Any person employed pursuant to this act as a deputy returning officer, poll clerk, messenger, interpreter or constable, or otherwise necessarily or properly employed by the returning officer for the conduct of the election.

May I say that scrutineers are engaged. It is legal for a candidate to have two scrutineers, one inside and one outside the poll. It is a well-known fact, and this applies to every hon. member and every candidate, that in some cases those men are paid. In my own riding I have an area bigger than the whole of the province of New Brunswick in which there are hundreds of polling divisions and hundreds of scrutineers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But you never were allowed to pay scrutineers.

Mr. BRADETTE: It is done. I do not say that the law permits it, but it is done. We are doing some plain talking and I want to be fair about this matter. I say it is not fair to deprive hundreds of voters of an opportunity to vote at election times. In my section of the country many people have to go some considerable distance to vote; some of them are old, and cannot walk. My opponents have hired cars, and I have hired cars; that is a well-known fact. May I say that that applies not only on voting day but throughout the whole election. Then, I must pay the man who drives my car. No one can expect another person to work during an election campaign without receiving something for his time.

Mr. MacINNIS: As one listens to the statements made by the Secretary of State one would despair of making progress through democracy. As I listened to his remarks I was satisfied that I lived in the wild and woolly west and not in the liberal and ultra-religious city of Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Order.

Mr. MacINNIS: Order is right. I am not particularly concerned with this section, because I do not pay my workers. As a matter of fact, they sacrifice something in order to do the work. However, if there is any further proof needed that the clause should stand as it now is, or that there should be very little modification—

Mr. POWER: To shorten the discussion I shall withdraw my amendment. That will carry the section. We are just wasting time.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. SULLIVAN: Why?

Mr. POWER: I am afraid it does not meet with anything like the unanimous support of the house, and in such a matter I do not think I should insist. I should be content, if the minister and hon. members agree, to have a vote right now.

Mr. SULLIVAN: I understood the Minister of Justice was going to move an amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I am satisfied to have it withdrawn.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The best argument against the withdrawal of the section is made by the Secretary of State himself.

Amendment withdrawn.

Section agreed to.

On section 38—Effects of presence of name on list of voters.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This section was allowed to stand.

Mr. POWER: It was allowed to stand for some redrafting, and to make it conform to another section. It does not now conform to subsection 6 of section 33.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let it stand for redrafting purposes only.

Section stands.

On sections 63, 73 and 74.

Mr. POWER: In these three sections the same question is involved. I refer to payments for conveyances to carry voters to the polls. These provisions have existed for many years and, if I may so express myself, they are more notorious in their breach than in their observance. There is hardly an hon. member on either side of the house who at one time or another has not known that remuneration of some kind was being paid to persons who conveyed electors to the polls. If the house were in a more favourable and receptive mood I would urge the necessity for these pieces of arrant hypocrisy being taken out of the act. I know of nothing more hypocritical than for 245 members of parliament to make a crime of something which every one of them has carried out at one time or another. That is absurd and ridiculous and it belittles us in the eyes of the people. However, if all this is going to delay prorogation I am going to let it drop but I shall bring it up again on some other occasion when we have more time for discussion.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I want to make the same remarks which I made with reference to section 63. It would be pretty hard for an agent to make this return, especially in polling divisions as extensive as some of those in my constituency. It would mean he would have to be in contact with people within a radius of fifty, sixty or one hundred miles or more. It is most ridiculous to insist that this form should be filled in.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let us get this thing straight. Do I understand that objection is being taken to section 63 by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) and to sections 73 and 74 by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power)? Are these agreed to?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before these sections are declared carried, I should like to object decidedly to the statement made by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) that every one of the 245 members has carried on elections in contravention of this act. As far as I am concerned, that is not true.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Write him a letter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That statement has been made on the floor of the house and I want to contradict it. Furthermore, the hon. member has suggested that we are hypocrites because we do not endorse the method of remedying the evil which he has suggested. He claims that that is the best means of getting away from the difficulty, but I think there is another method. If he brings it forward I shall be glad to consider it carefully. We are not hypocrites simply because we do not jump at his particular method.

Mr. POWER: I do not know the right biblical quotation but I accept the statement of the hon. member that he never paid anything to his knowledge for the conveyance of voters in an election in which he has taken part. I accept his statement in the spirit in which it is given, but I must say that he is a remarkable exception.

Mr. SPENCER: I would remind the hon. member for Quebec South that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is not the only exception.

Mr. POWER: We will except the whole lot of them.

Sections 63, 73 and 74 agreed to.

On section 46—Manner of voting.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, I desire to move an amendment to section 46. I understand that the act which we are amending is an instrument to assist in the carrying out of the will of the electorate in electing members of the House of Commons. I understand that the underlying principle is that the House of Commons shall truly represent the will of the people so voting. I think hon. members will agree with me when I say that it would be rather an accident if under the system of electing which we have been considering in this bill we should return to parliament a true representation of the will of the people. I do not think it is necessary for me to enter into any exhaustive treatise on the subject of proportional representation. This has been put forward from time to time in this house as a remedy for the fact that very often after an election the will of the majority of the people has been defeated by the method of elections. Fortunately, proportional representation is not a new thing in this house. It has been discussed exhaustively on several occasions. I would refer hon. members to the discussion which took place in this house in 1921, I think on the motion of Mr. Sexsmith. I refer them also to the committee of the house which was appointed to investigate the whole matter as a result of that motion. I also refer them to the motion made by Mr. W. C. Good on May 10, 1922, when this matter was covered both comprehensively and in detail. As the principle of proportional representation is well understood by hon. members, I shall not attempt anything more at this time than to state the important points which now concern us in view of the fact that the Elections Act is now before us.

I should like to draw attention to the weaknesses of the present method of voting. I think the first thing every hon. member should do is to face frankly the weaknesses in the present voting system and for which proportional representation is the proposed remedy. As I have said, it would be accidental if the present system of voting resulted in a parliamentary membership which reflected the true will of the people. Under the present voting system it is possible for a minority to be either entirely excluded or to have a representation far below that to which their voting strength properly entitles them. On the other hand, it is possible for a minority to obtain representation in parliament far in excess of that which is warranted by their voting strength. One or the other of these undesirable results occurs to varying degrees in every election. In some elections a party representing a minority of the electorate goes into power, thus depriving the party receiving the majority of the votes from forming the government, as it should do properly. An occurrence of that sort certainly violates the true principle of representative government. In other cases a large majority may have no representation at all, as occurred in the recent election in Saskatchewan where the Conservative party, having roughly over one-third of the entire votes of the province, did not secure a single representative. The recent elections in British Columbia and Ontario demonstrate the same weaknesses in our voting system, to which I have referred already. I mention these elections because they are fresh in our memories and we can refer to the facts very easily. An examination of the results of almost any election conducted under the present system of marking ballots would give similar evidence.

I refer to two other instances. In the dominion elections of 1926 the Conservative party polled 83,000 more votes than the Liberals, yet had 25 fewer seats. In the federal elections of 1930 the Conservatives polled 1,909,955 votes and obtained 136 seats while all other parties polled 1,989,040 votes and obtained only 107 seats. Under proportional representation the Conservatives would have had 119 seats and the other parties in the house a total number of 124 seats. This makes a difference of 17 seats which the Conservatives obtained under an unjust system of voting. An examination of the figures of almost any election will reveal that it is practically impossible under the system in vogue to procure a parliamentary membership which reflects accurately the opinion of the voters. In other words, we have what the Right Honourable David Lloyd George called an "anomalous, unjust and grotesque electoral system which is a fraud and a mockery of democracy." So much for the defects of the present system of voting.

Proportional representation is a method of voting which gives representation of citizens on elected bodies in proportion to their voting strength, thus ensuring that the majority of the electors shall rule, while at the same time providing that all considerable minorities shall be heard. The method of voting adopted under proportional representation is called the "single transferable vote." This implies:

1. That constituencies shall be grouped or be made large enough for the purpose of electing several members, the number to be fixed according to what is practically convenient.

2. That while there are several members to be elected in such a grouped constituency, each elector shall have, as now, only one vote.

3. The elector, in marking his ballot, will use the figures 1, 2, 3, and so on, indicating the order of his preference of the candidates, instead of marking an "X" opposite only one of the candidates, as he now does. Voting is quite as simple for the elector under proportional representation as it is under the present system, the only difference being in the task of the returning officer in making the count and in the results of the election which a true voting system would yield.

4. The vote of an elector may be transferred according to the choice as indicated by him in marking his ballot.

5. A vote may be thus transferred according to indicated choice in the event of the candidate against whose name the figure (1) has been put not requiring to use the vote thus given. There are two conditions under which the candidate of the first choice may not require the vote of an elector. These are: (a) if he is hopelessly defeated; or (b) if he has a number of first choices equal to or greater than the required majority.

In the former case the candidate so hopelessly defeated is dropped, and the second choice attains the status of the first choice, and so on until each ballot is exhausted in the election of a candidate, whereas in the case of the single transferable vote in multi-member constituencies, the surplus above the desired majority may be transferred in the order of the indicated choice, as well as the votes giving first choice to a candidate who comes last in the running.

6. The majority required in a grouped constituency is determined on the same principle on which a majority is determined in a single member constituency. That is to say, a majority in a single member constituency is determined by dividing the total number of votes by one more than the members to be elected and adding one. If there were five members to be elected, the total vote would be divided by six, and adding one to that quotient would give the majority required by each candidate, or as it is called, the quota.

7. In single member constituencies this principle of vote transference is known as the alternative vote. It is applied only when there are more than two candidates running in a single member constituency, and it ensures that the elected member shall obtain a majority of the votes cast in the constituency. The candidate with the lowest number of votes in this case is dropped, and his votes are transferred to the others according to the choice indicated by the voter. In this way the candidate elected will finally obtain a true majority of the votes cast in the riding. While the alternative vote does give a majority in each riding to the elected member, it would not in itself prevent the total membership of the house representing a minority vote, nor would it be a guarantee that minorities would have representation. It only guarantees a majority in each riding where it is used.

The transfer of votes according to choice may be carried out with complete justice to each candidate and to the electors concerned. The method may be illustrated in the following manner. Let us say that the quota required to elect a member in a grouped constituency is 2,000. A obtains 3,000. He therefore has 1,000 votes that are useless to him. One thousand votes happens to be a third of all the votes which were marked with a "1" for him. The returning officer, therefore, goes over the three thousand ballot papers a second time, and discovers the names against which the second choice have been marked. Let us assume that candidate B is second choice on 2,400 ballots and candidate C is marked second on 600 papers. We have seen that candidate A can spare one-third of all his 3,000 votes. He can, therefore, spare to B one-third of 2,400 of the ballot papers on which B is marked second choice, or 800. He can also spare to C one-third of the 600 on which C is second choice, or 200. This would result in electing A with his proper majority of 2,000, and would transfer the other thousand to B and C proportionate to the choices indicated, which as we have seen was 800 votes to B and 200 to C.

Is proportional representation the remedy? That proportional representation would do as it claims it would do, namely, result in an elected assembly which correctly reflected the opinions of the voters concerned, there can be no doubt. Fortunately, the system is used in many countries, and in many cases other than in elected public bodies. I quote only one case. The provincial election in Alberta in 1930 gives us a notable example. Proportional representation is applied in the cities of that province. I quote what happened in the city of Calgary in the 1930 election. The Conservatives obtained, in the final count, 10,519 votes. They elected three members. The Liberals obtained 7,082 votes. They elected two members. Labour obtained 3,492 votes, and elected one member. Contrast these figures with rural ridings in Alberta at the same election, when the U.F.A., with a vote of 70,957 elected thirty-four members. The Liberals, with 34,187 elected eight, the Independents with 23,832 elected three, and the Conservatives with 7,481 elected none, while Labour with 6,156 elected two members. The figures should have been, under proportional representation, 24 instead of 34 U.F.A., 11 instead of 8 for the Liberals, 8 instead of 3 for the Independents, and 2 instead of none for the Conservatives.

Proportional representation is used for elections to municipal councils in:

Cleveland
Cincinnati
Hamilton, O.
Boulder, Colo.
Winnipeg
Calgary
West Vancouver
St. James, Man.
Dublin
Cork
Christchurch, N.Z.
Armidale, N.S.W.
Berlin
Hamburg
Vienna
Budapest
Copenhagen
Stockholm
Oslo
Amsterdam
Rotterdam
Zurich
Berne
Geneva

And hundreds of other municipalities in the following countries:

For all important public elections of representatives in:

The Irish Free State
Germany
Austria
Denmark
Sweden
Norway
The Netherlands
Luxemburg
Bulgaria
Saar Valley
Cuba

For parliamentary elections in the following countries also:

Malta
Belgium
Switzerland
Czechoslovakia
Poland
Finland
Iceland
Esthonia
Latvia
Lithuania
Danzig
San Marino

For some members of parliament in:

Great Britain
Northern Ireland
South Africa
India
Costa Rica
Portugal
Hungary
Uruguay

For provincial elections in most of the countries mentioned, and in:

Manitoba (part)
Alberta (part)
Tasmania
Argentina (part)

For school boards throughout Scotland.

I have taken a little time outlining proportional representation, because I want to make it clear that while the amendment which I shall move does not include that method, in my opinion until that system is applied we shall not get rid of the whole difficulty to which I have alluded, namely, that under the system now used minorities may come into power while on the other hand they may not have representation at all—results depending on the accident as to how the votes happen to be divided in constituencies where more than two candidates run.

Mr. REID: How would the hon. member prevent plumping under that system? Suppose there were three candidates, how would you make sure that they indicated first, second and third choice?

Mr. IRVINE: There is no possibility of preventing the voter from doing what he pleases; he may exercise all his choices or only one. If he decides to use only one, there is no discrepancy or injustice done him at all; he has done all that he wanted to do, and that is often done. In many cases voters do not use all their preferences, but in most instances they do, and with satisfactory results.

I am glad to say that in urging the adoption of the alternative vote in single member constituencies where more than two candidates are running, I am able to quote the recommendation of a special committee appointed by this house in 1921, and which committee reported to the house on the 13th of May that same year in part as follows:

> It must be apparent to all that the present system of election in single member constituencies meets fully the purpose intended only when not more than two candidates are nominated. Recent experiences in elections in Canada have brought home to our people the fact that where three or more candidates present themselves in single member constituencies, the candidate declared elected may and often does, represent merely a minority of those voting in the constituency.
> Your committee believes that in constituencies where more than two candidates present themselves, the adoption of the alternative vote offers a solution of the difficulty, inasmuch by such method the candidate finally declared elected would represent the choice of the majority of the electors.
> The system of the alternative vote has its application only in those constituencies in which more than two candidates present themselves. The work of the elector is simple. Instead of marking a cross opposite the name for which he desires his vote to count his privilege is to place the figures 1 and 2 after the names of his first and second choices. If upon the counting of the ballots it is found that a majority of those voting have placed the figure one (1) after the name of one of the candidates, then that candidate is declared elected. Should, however, it be found that none of the candidates has received an absolute majority, then in such event the following procedure is adopted. The candidate having the lowest number of first choices is dropped and the second choices expressed on his voting papers are transferred to those indicated on such ballots. This procedure of dropping the candidate having the lowest number of votes after each count is continued until but two candidates remain, and the candidate who has the greater number of votes of these two is declared elected.
> Your committee is of the opinion that this system will give a truer reflection of the desires of the voters in the various constituencies than will be obtained where more than two candidates run under our present method of counting the votes.

As already stated, the only difference to the voter in marking his ballot is that he uses figures instead of an "X" or a cross. In actual practice it has been shown that this method of marking ballots is as simple to the electors as the other, and the percentage of ballots spoiled in provinces where this system is used is no greater than that of those that used to be spoiled under the old system.

May I, in further urging the adoption of the alternative vote in one-member constituencies where more than two candidates are running, draw the attention of the committee to the figures in a recent election, which figures, I think, will give point to the contention. Again referring to the election in Saskatchewan we find that the Liberals obtained 173,066 votes and secured forty-nine seats; the Conservatives polled 103,647 votes and got no seats at all; the Farmer-Labour party polled 87,709 votes and got five seats. In other words, the Conservatives and the C.C.F. combined had a plurality of 18,290 votes and elected only five members, while the Liberals, who were in an actual minority of the votes polled in that province, secured forty-nine seats. If the object of the election act is actually to assist the people of this country to say who shall govern, the method of voting must be altered. Of course I am not arguing that if we had had the single alternative vote in Saskatchewan the result would not have been the same; the electors might have voted Liberal on second or third choice, but they should have had the privilege; that is all I am contending. I am sure all hon. members will agree with me it is our duty to give the electorate that opportunity to make a second choice in cases where there are three or more candidates running in one-member constituencies so that the individual who may be elected will have a majority of the votes in that riding.

I would gladly have moved the acceptation of the entire proportional representation proposal, but I know, in order to put that into effect, we have to group our constituencies in some form or another and that would mean going over the whole redistribution again. At this time of the session, and probably for all I know, the last session and perhaps the last parliament for some, it is better, I think, that we should confine the amendment to the alternative vote which is practicable and which would go some way at least toward remedying the evil. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer):

That section 46 be amended by striking out subsection 3 and substituting therefor the following:

Every voter shall have one vote only which may be transferable in the manner hereinafter provided.

The voter on receiving his ballot paper shall forthwith proceed into one of the compartments of the polling place and there mark his ballot paper with the black lead pencil provided, as follows:

(a) Shall place the figure 1 on the ballot paper within the white space containing the name of the candidate who is his first choice and every vote given by placing the said figure 1 in such white space shall be a "first preference vote."

(b) May in addition to the figure 1 authorized by this section place on his ballot paper the figure 2 within the white space containing the name of his second choice, the figure 3 within the white space containing the name of his third choice and so on in the order of the candidates he would prefer if the candidate of his prior choice does not need his vote, or cannot be elected. He may thus express as many choices as there are candidates.

(c) He shall then fold the ballot paper so that the initials and stamp on the back of it and the number on the counterfoil can be seen without opening it and hand it to the deputy returning officer, who shall without unfolding it ascertain by examining his initials and the stamp and the number of the counterfoil that it is the same ballot paper that he furnished to the voter and shall then in full view of all present including the voter, remove the counterfoil and tear up or otherwise destroy it and place the ballot paper in the ballot box.

This amendment has been taken verbatim from the Alberta Elections Act which provides for this method of voting, and in the event of the committee carrying this amendment there are several other clauses that would have to be correspondingly amended. For instance, the clause dealing with spoiled ballots would have to be amended; the instructions to the returning officer would have to be slightly amended, and the facsimile of the ballot would have to be slightly changed, but beyond that very few changes would have to be made. I suggest that if the committee did feel like accepting this, we could avail ourselves of the Alberta Elections Act and if it did not suit us in its entirety, it would at least form a basis for the amendments necessary.

I conclude by making an appeal to the leaders on both sides of the house to call off the whips in connection with this vote. Recognizing that there is a wrong here and in a matter of this sort, taking all things into consideration, the leaders of the house might very well allow hon. members to settle this question as they themselves actually think outside all party considerations whatsoever. If under those conditions it is defeated I shall be, not content but at least I shall know that we have acted according to what we actually think individually. I suggest that the leaders take that suggestion into consideration.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am sure the committee appreciates the very able and concise manner in which the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) has presented the question not only of proportional representation but also of the alternative vote. I had noticed that my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin was going to present this matter by way of amendment during the committee stage of this bill; he mentioned the matter in the committee but the committee thought it would not be well to consider it there and that it should be discussed in committee of the whole.

I hope he will not think me disrespectful if I do not seek to elaborate what may be called the case against proportional representation and the alternative vote. I am well aware that there are certain sections of the country and large bodies of people who are entirely favourable to a change in our electoral system by the adoption of some means akin to the suggestion which the hon. member has just made, but I do not think there is in Canada any very general demand for a change. I would not be prepared to say that there is not a great deal of merit in the proposal, but I do not think that at this time in the history of the country and at this hour of the present session it would be profitable to enter upon a prolonged discussion of this subject. I think it would be better if my hon. friend were content to let the matter lie until a later date, after another general election. I do not think that the present time is opportune for the consideration of a question of this kind, therefore I must tell my hon. friend that at present we cannot look favourably upon the proposed amendment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Chairman, I have already supported the principle of the alternative vote in this house and I feel that I am bound to support the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Irvine) although I agree to some extent with what my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) says as to the lateness in the present session and the difficulty of considering on its merits at this time a question which involves such an important change in the election law of the country. I only regret that this matter had not been brought before the house at an earlier stage of the session. I must call the attention of the committee to the fact that this House of Commons has already expressed itself as being in favour of the principle of the alternative vote, not only by a vote in the house in 1923 but also through the report of a committee in 1921 which had been sitting for a long time and which recommended the adoption of the alternative vote, a report which was accepted by the house. I might say that in Ontario also during the session of 1921 a committee reported favourably on the principle of the alternative vote.

There is all the difference in the world between the alternative vote and proportional representation. Under the system of proportional representation minorities are represented in parliament. The alternative vote is the opposite of that; it is to assure the representation of the majority at all times. In England a royal commission investigated that matter for a long time and declared against the adoption of the proportional representation system but in favour of the alternative vote. Their report was accepted by the House of Commons by a majority of one, but the Lords rejected it. It was revived later, in 1924, I believe, when the Labour government was in office. Mr. Henderson for the government said that if it were limited to the alternative vote they might adopt it, but the motion was for proportional representation as well. The Liberal party in Great Britain at every annual meeting adopts a resolution in favour of both proportional representation and the alternative vote, but I must say that the Labour party in England seem to have changed their views when they came into power and refused to put into effect what they had been advocating in opposition.

There is no doubt that the alternative vote system is a fair way of assuring representation of the majority in each constituency in the House of Commons. In many continental countries they have what they call the ballottage—I do not know whether "ballottage" would be a good translation—meaning that when no candidate has the absolute majority of the votes the weakest candidates are eliminated, and eight days after the date of the general election they hold a special election between the two strongest candidates. It is the same thing except that it happens after the election while under the alternative vote it happens at the time of the election.

I think there is more justice in that system than in our present system of electing the one who in the polling comes first. There are electors who would prefer one candidate on account of certain planks in his platform, but would like another on account of certain planks in his. Nobody is perfect, and there are always various questions submitted to the electors; it is a good thing that the electors give their first vote to the candidate they prefer, but have a chance to make a second selection. In the end it ensures that no member of the House of Commons would be there against the will of the majority of the electors in that constituency. I repeat that I think this is a fair method which should be accepted in this country. I am not quite sure, however, that at this late hour of the session, when no educational work has been carried on and when the question has not been submitted to a committee, as should be done before such a radical change is effected, it is wise to press the amendment. I quite understand that there are those who would not be willing to vote favourably under these circumstances, but so far as I am concerned I will support the amendment of my hon. friend.

Mr. BROWN: I should like to give my support to the amendment that has been moved by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine). I do not see that there can be any reasonable objection advanced to the alternative ballot, though there are objections to proportional representation in a country like Canada. Our population is too scattered; it would necessitate very large constituencies, and for these reasons to my mind proportional representation in Canada is impracticable. But as I see it there can be no objection to the alternative vote. I do not think the objection that it is late in the session and that the system is not sufficiently well known should carry weight. This is not a new system in Canada. We have had it for some years in Manitoba; I think it was introduced by the Liberal government about 1920 or thereabouts. I think I am correct in saying that three provincial elections have been held under the system. In Manitoba we have both proportional representation and the alternative vote. In the city of Winnipeg we have proportional representation; Winnipeg elects ten members. In the last provincial election the Liberal-Progressive government elected three who passes the pole first. There are electors members, the Conservatives elected three, and the Independent Labour party elected four. I think it was pretty generally conceded that this was a fair representation of the wishes of the electors. In the great majority of the constituencies the Liberals and the Brackenites, as they are sometimes called, formed a coalition, and in most constituencies there were only two candidates. There were, however, some three or four constituencies—I have forgotten the exact number—in which the result depended upon the second choice of those who had voted for candidates who were eliminated by virtue of being out of the running entirely, but I think when the second count was made the candidate previously receiving the majority of the votes was elected, which expressed the wishes of the people. I think in every case it happened that the candidate having the largest number of votes also received the majority of the second choices, but it might have been the other way just as easily.

I do not think we should have a condition such as resulted in Saskatchewan after the last provincial election. The probability is that if the alternative ballot had been used in that province the C.C.F. would have been eliminated completely and a number of Conservatives would have been elected; at least that is possible. Whether or not it would have been desirable, of course, is a matter of opinion. However, I do not think it well that large bodies of the electorate should have no representation in the house. I have been a supporter of the alternative ballot for the last twenty years, or ever since it was brought to the attention of the people, and I should like to give my support to the amendment that has been moved. I do not think the objections that have been raised are valid, in view of the fact that it is such a simple matter. It is not as though we were bringing in some elaborate scheme; this is so simple that we might as well pronounce upon it now as at any other time. It is simply doing in one operation what in our nominating conventions we do in two. If three candidates are nominated the low man drops out and a second vote is taken, giving those who voted for that man an opportunity to exercise a second choice as between the two candidates remaining. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The committee I know are anxious to vote before six o'clock, so I shall be very brief in what I have to say. The hon. member who introduced the amendment suggested that the leaders of the parties give their followers freedom to vote as they please. Let me say to him at once that as far as the Liberal party is concerned, each member is absolutely free to vote as he pleases. Personally I shall vote for the amendment if it comes before us, and the hon. member presses it to a vote, because I am in favour of the alternative vote and am also in favour of proportional representation. But I must say that I agree with the Minister of Justice and my colleague from Quebec East, that to press this matter to a vote at the moment would probably only serve to prejudice the cause the hon. member has at heart. I imagine at this time many hon. members are voting to get away rather than to add to the number of sections that will have to go into the act.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. IRVINE: In view of the fact that we are hurrying to get through and in view of the remarks of the right hon. leader of the opposition and the Minister of Justice in regard to the difficulty of carrying this change through at the present time I would rather not press for a vote which might prejudice the case, as the right hon. leader of the opposition has just said. So with the permission of the committee I will withdraw my amendment in the hope of having an opportunity of introducing it at some other time.

Amendment withdrawn.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 118, for the relief of Eugenie Margaret O'Reilly Stavert.—Mr. Davies.

Bill No. 119, for the relief of George Harold Allen.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 120, for the relief of Ena Beatrice Duclos Boyd.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 121, for the relief of Paul Herbert Addy.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

THE SMALL LOAN COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. 15, to incorporate the Small Loan Company of Canada—Mr. Geary—Mr. Stirling in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. COOTE: There was considerable discussion concerning several of these bills, and I thought it was the understanding that they were to stand until consideration had been given to Bill No. 123, to amend the Loan Companies Act, introduced by the Prime Minister and considered only yesterday. So far as I am concerned I should oppose very much the passing of this bill unless we had some assurance that the other bill would be proceeded with. If possible I should like to proceed with it first so that we may know the circumstances under which this company will be allowed to operate.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, since yesterday, when we dealt with the amendment to the Loan Companies Act, I have given some consideration to the preparation of new sections for the amending bill, No. 123. The proposal is at this session to make all companies heretofore or now or hereafter incorporated subject to the amending bill or, as it will be, the amending act. Section 111 of the Loan Companies Act will read as follows:

Where it is established to the satisfaction of the Minister of Finance that any company has, subsequent to the passing of this act, in respect of any loan or other transaction, charged, imposed or collected, directly or indirectly, interest and other charges, of any kind, nature or description whatsoever, exclusive of fees imposed for registration purposes,—

That probably should be changed to "disbursements imposed for registration purposes," as suggested by the hon. member for Battle River this morning.

—amounting in the aggregate to more than two per centum per month on the monthly balance due by the borrower—

And I suggest that it should be "owing by the borrower."

—the minister may recommend to the governor in council that the charter of the company be forfeited, if it be a dominion company, and that its dominion powers be terminated if it be other than a dominion company, whereupon the governor in council may by order provide that upon such day as may thereby be fixed,

(a) if the company be incorporated by an act of the parliament of Canada, its charter shall be forfeited;

(b) if the company be otherwise incorporated, any or all rights, powers, franchises or authorities granted to it by any act of the parliament of Canada shall cease and determine.

2. Upon the making of any such order, such charter shall be forfeited or such rights, powers, franchises or authorities shall be terminated, according to its terms, as fully and effectually as if the provisions of such order in council were incorporated in this act.

Bill 123 has been reprinted and now appears on the files of hon. members. Since yesterday I had the opportunity to look into the Money Lenders Act of Great Britain which was passed in 1927, and about which it will be remembered a very great deal of discussion took place both in the Lords and in the Commons. Also I have had an opportunity briefly to study the provisions of American statutes dealing with money lenders. In Great Britain the maximum is four per cent per month, by statute. That covers all charges such as we have here. In many of the American states the rate runs between three per cent and four per cent. As I indicated to members of the committee my own view is that two per cent may be too small, and that two and a half per cent would seem to be the minimum we might hope to use in this country, having regard to the experience of other countries.

Frankly I may say I have no idea that these small companies discharged the useful functions in all countries which an investigation by the Russell Sage Foundation disclosed. As they are the subject matter of much legislation in various countries my own view is that the enactment of this amendment will protect the public in the meantime, and that we could pass at next session of parliament a money lenders' act modelled along the general principle of the British legislation. For instance, it was news to me that one company on the American continent has about four hundred agencies, and does a very substantial business with a limitation much greater than that which is imposed here. I believe it operates at a rate of three and a half per cent.

Under the circumstances I desire to assure the hon. member for Macleod that it is my intention to proceed with this bill immediately the opportunity offers, and to make all companies, which heretofore have been, are being or may hereafter be incorporated, subject to it. The limitation mentioned in the bill is two per cent, but after reading the British Moneylenders Act, and other legislation, I may say that when the time comes we may adopt a rate of two and a half per cent instead of two per cent.

Mr. SULLIVAN: A minimum of two and a half per cent and a maximum of three per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no maximum. That is the maximum.

Mr. COOTE: May I congratulate the Prime Minister on his attitude in connection with this matter. My own opinion is that two per cent would be quite high enough, but I certainly would not disagree with the Prime Minister if he thinks that two and a half per cent should be allowed. I doubt whether the Prime Minister and hon. members generally are aware of the type of advertising being carried on by these companies, and I do not believe they realize the extent of their operations. I had handed to me only to-day a circular which has been broadcast through the mail. It has a very attractive picture at the top of it, and underneath appear the words, "Keep on the sunny side." Then in the next text I find the following:

Harassed by petty debts?

Are they impairing your ability to work? Clear them all this simple way.

Figure up how much you owe—then come to the Industrial Loan. We will advance you sufficient to pay them all at once. Take a year to repay us in small monthly instalments.

Do it now! Free your mind of worries and get out of debt on the convenient thrift plan.

You will be surprised how easy and simple it is for any salaried man or woman to obtain a loan from $50 to $500 or more.

If you are keeping house and are able to make regular monthly repayments, you have all the security necessary for a loan. No negotiable collateral or real estate are required, the only signatures necessary are those of husband and wife.

Simplicity is the keynote of the thrift plan.

Then at the bottom appear the words, "Industrial Loan and Finance Corporation," and in brackets the words "under dominion government supervision." Then the circular goes on to give the name of the manager and the address of the Ottawa office. Then, in the corner, under the very pretty title of "Keep on the sunny side," I find the following:

Personal loans from $50 to $500.

1. The only investigations made are the questions asked of you.

2. The only signatures needed are those of husband and wife.

3. Lowest charge in Canada on loans of this type—our rate authorized by a special act of the dominion parliament incorporating the company.

My reason for bringing this circular to the attention of the Prime Minister and the government is to suggest that in some section of the bill we should incorporate a paragraph which would limit the type of advertising these companies may carry on. I think that some of the literature sent out is at least misleading. While we may not properly settle the point under section 1 of this bill, I hope that at some stage the hon. member in charge of the bill will be willing to accept an amendment limiting the type of advertising the company may carry on. I certainly think some of this advertising is misleading.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is objectionable?

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to say that I have considered that and in my judgment the bill which we are now proposing to ask the house to accept is of so drastic a character, imposing the risk of the loss of the charter, that I do not think we need fear much of that form of advertising. I believe that the whole matter must be dealt with and should be dealt with while we are a new country and before the vested interests create a situation such as developed in Great Britain when the Moneylender's Act, 1927, had to be considered. If the indulgence of the electors permit me to do so, this may be done after the next elections.

Mr. COOTE: I understand that in Great Britain the kind of advertising which these companies may carry on is very well defined by the law.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is there in that advertising that is objectionable?

Mr. COOTE: They say that you can get out of debt by borrowing from the company on very easy terms. The evidence given in the banking committee was that these companies were receiving from forty to ninety per cent on the bulk of their loans. Once a person borrows from such a company, I will not say he is in debt for the rest of his life but he certainly is in debt for a long time. I think it is safe to say that at least one-half of what the borrowers pay in, is for interest and other charges. It should not be called interest; it should be called usury. I am not saying that the companies make too much, because I do not know what their earnings are, but I think parliament should be very careful in granting charters to these companies. It is a serious reflection upon our social and economic system that people are obliged to pay such high charges in order to secure loans of from $50 to $200. Advertising of this kind is simply leading people into trouble. I am advised that the city manager of one company was formerly a manager of a chartered bank. This company must be making very good earnings in order to employ a man of that type as manager. What I should like to see done is to have this advertising controlled so that the people will not be misled into thinking that they are getting loans at low rates of interest. The circular which I quoted from states that the company charges the lowest rates in Canada on loans of this type and that their rates are authorized by a special act of parliament incorporating the company.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They do not say what their rate is.

Mr. COOTE: The superintendent of insurance, to whom all these companies report and who is well acquainted with their operations, stated that in some cases the interest and charges collected amounted to ninety per cent of the amount of the loan.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That statement is misleading. The inference is that that all goes to the company whereas it includes disbursements.

Mr. COOTE: There was also corroborating evidence to the effect that practically every cent of it goes to the company, that the so-called service charges and disbursements were made to employees of the company.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That was assumed but it was never definitely determined.

Mr. COOTE: The superintendent of insurance made a very definite statement on that point. He said that in most cases the charges were paid to employees of the company.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He said in some cases; he did not say in all.

Mr. COOTE: I am sorry his evidence was not recorded as I am sure it would have shown that in the majority of cases this was so. In a number of cases the chattel mortgages were not even registered so there were no disbursements in that connection.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: The objection I take to all these bills is that it would nullify our other financial legislation. All these loan companies should be like Caesar's wife, above suspicion. The marginal note states, "forfeiture of charter of company imposing interest and charges exceeding fixed limit." The Prime Minister has mentioned two and a half per cent. While that provision will not wholly eradicate the evils of these various bills, I believe it will partly do so.

Mr. SPENCER: Do I understand that we have the assurance of the Prime Minister that should these bills pass, Bill No. 123 will be put through this session?

Mr. BENNETT: I will ask that they stand for third reading until our bill has passed.

Mr. SPENCER: I have three amendments to move, two to section 5 and one to section 8. If this other bill passes it would not be necessary to put them forward.

Subsection (a) agreed to.

Subsection (b), paragraphs (i) and (ii) agreed to.

On paragraph (iii)—Additional charge.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): This has been amended by adding the following words at the end of the paragraph:

—save that in the case of loans of one hundred dollars or less in amount, the said charge for the legal and other actual expenses disbursed by the company in connection with the loan, but not exceeding the sum of ten dollars, shall be in lieu of the charge authorized by subparagraph (ii) of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): This subsection is to be amended by adding the following words at the end:

And in neither such case shall the charge exceed the sum of five dollars.

Mr. MITCHELL: I think the charge of $5 is too high.

Mr. BENNETT: That will be governed by the provision in the general statute, that it cannot be more than two and a half per cent for any purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is inclusive.

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

On subsection 4—Penalty.

Mr. COOTE: I wish to move an amendment to be known as new subsection 3 (a):

The company shall not, nor shall any person acting on its behalf, knowingly send or deliver or cause to be sent or delivered to any person except in response to his written request any circular or other document advertising the name, address or telephone number of the company or containing an invitation—

(a) to borrow money from the company;

(b) to enter into any transaction involving the borrowing of money from the company;

(c) to apply to any place with a view to obtaining information or advice as to borrowing any money from the company;

nor shall the company or any such person publish or cause to be published in any newspaper or other printed paper issued periodically for public circulation, or by means of any poster or placard, an advertisement advertising any such particulars or containing any such invitation or containing any information or statement other than the name of the company, the authorized address at which the company carries on business, the telephone number of the company, a statement that the company lends money with or without security, the highest and lowest sums that the company is prepared to lend and the date on which the business of the company was first established.

If any document issued or published by or on behalf of the company purports to indicate the terms of interest upon which the company is willing to make loans or any particular loan, the document shall express the interest proposed to be charged in terms of either an effective rate per centum per annum or a rate per centum per month.

The reason why advertising by such companies should be circumscribed is that they are using the mails to advertise their business and get a lot of people into debt, people who normally, I think, might keep out of the clutches of such concerns. In spite of what some hon. members think, I believe that the advertising which many of these companies indulge in is misleading. It is desirable, I submit, to keep people from getting into debt with companies of this class as far as it is possible to do so. Certainly we should prevent, if possible, companies of this type from indulging in lavish advertising which I think creates a false impression of the position which people will find themselves in once they enter into an agreement with one of these companies for a loan.

Mr. BENNETT: I trust the hon. member will withdraw the amendment which in terms is a section that appears in the British Moneylenders Act, adapted to our present conditions. I am wholly in favour of it, but it would be rather anomalous to include it in the present bill and leave all those companies that have heretofore been incorporated not subject to its provisions. It would be difficult in a general bill to make such a provision without making a study of the various charters issued by this parliament, and in view of what I have suggested regarding the necessity for a general statute dealing with money lenders, I think it would be desirable not to press the amendment at this time. I make that suggestion in what I conceive to be the public interest.

Mr. COOTE: On the suggestion of the Prime Minister I am willing to withdraw the amendment unless I have some assurance that the committee would like to have it pressed. Personally I am willing to have it included in this bill although it may not be applicable to companies already incorporated. If we may expect at some future session—I trust at the next session, regardless of what government is in power—steps to be taken which will bring the general act up to date, I am prepared in the meantime to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SPENCER: May I ask the Prime Minister whether it would be in order to insert in Bill 123, which will come before parliament this session, an amendment such as my hon friend from Macleod suggests?

Mr. BENNETT: As I intimated to the committee this afternoon, after having got the British Moneylenders Act and looked up the authority, which is a combination of names—a book has been published upon it and is in the library—I concluded that it would be undesirable to do it in that bill, because a general bill must be introduced at a not distant date embodying many other considerations than are in the measure now before the house. In fact, the Moneylenders Act of Great Britain covers several pages of statutes, and I think it undesirable to endeavour to deal with the matter piecemeal for the short time that remains before the whole question will be considered.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would it not be a good thing to refuse to grant more incorporations of this kind until that safeguarding legislation is introduced?

Mr. BENNETT: I think not, in view of the fact that there are other companies outstanding at the moment whose charters are valid. And the fact that there is competition in the market may ensure better conditions for those borrowing. Furthermore, with the restrictions that will be imposed by the statute I am about to ask the house to adopt, I think few of them will run the risk of losing their charter, which is the penalty involved for dereliction of duty with respect to the provisions of the law as it stands.

Amendment withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Subparagraph (iii) of paragraph (b) is amended by the addition at the end of it of the following words:

And in neither such case shall the charge exceed the sum of five dollars.

Mr. COOTE: Will that make subparagraph (iii) identical with a similar provision in the bill which was passed just before this?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): So far as the additional words at the end of the sub-paragraph are concerned they are identical.

Mr. SPENCER: This bill is identical with the one we have just passed, only that it has a different title?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DISCOUNT AND LOAN CORPORATION OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. 58, to amend an act to incorporate the Discount and Loan Corporation of Canada—Mr. Sullivan—Mr. Stirling in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. SULLIVAN: This company was incorporated last year and this year it came before parliament to have a certain amendment. When the bill came up for third reading it was referred back to the committee on banking and commerce. In that committee clause 2 was deleted and subparagraphs (ii) and (iii) of clause 3 were also deleted. We are now asking for clause 1, incorporation. The idea is to have in Quebec the right to have the name of the company officially translated into French. It would be "La Corporation de Prêts et d'Escomptes du Canada."

Mr. SPENCER: This bill came before the house and got first reading. After second reading, instead of going to the committee on banking and commerce it came into committee of the whole. For some reason, apparently in private members' hour no one was wise to what was in the bill; it was not challenged and it stood for third reading. It was merely by chance that it did not receive third reading on the night it went through committee. Owing to its being held for third reading a number of members, including myself, hearing of what was in the bill, criticized it when it came before the house for third reading. It was on this bill that the Prime Minister suggested that I withdraw the amendment I had made that there should be a limitation of thirteen per cent to cover all charges and that instead it should be referred to the committee on banking and commerce. The bill therefore went to that committee and it was found so objectionable that, on the recommendation largely of the superintendent of insurance and a majority of the members, it was reported by the committee with a large amount of it deleted. This only shows that it is very good policy for these bills to be sent to special committees where more detailed attention may be given to them. I would like to ask the mover of this bill where the head office is.

Mr. SULLIVAN: Montreal.

Mr. SPENCER: Has all the capital been obtained in Montreal or is it connected with some United States interest?

Mr. SULLIVAN: All the capital is paid up in Montreal, $250,000 all paid up.

Mr. SPENCER: Is it not connected at all with Chicago or New York?

Mr. SULLIVAN: Some money may come from New York. I do not suppose we have any objection to taking American money.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the hon. member inform the committee what percentage of it comes from the United States?

Mr. SULLIVAN: It is their own money; they may get some from New York,—I cannot tell how much they get from the United States. They are all pretty well to do people.

Mr. SPENCER: To what extent is this company or the parent company doing business in the United States?

Mr. SULLIVAN: I cannot say what proportion. I know that in the United States they are a very large company, the largest of its kind in the United States. But they may have subscribed to this company, what amount I do not know. All I know is that the capital of this company is $250,000 fully paid up.

Mr. SPENCER: Is it true that the representative of the company attending the banking and commerce committee came from the United States headquarters?

Mr. SULLIVAN: Yes, he came from New York.

Mr. SPENCER: So that there is a very close relationship between the United States corporation and this company?

Mr. SULLIVAN: There is.

Mr. SPENCER: What would that relationship be?

Mr. SULLIVAN: I presume that these people are always ready to lend money, because they are not making much money. They will never be broke, and they will always be in a position to reimburse, to pay any debt they may owe.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member says they are not making much money, yet they will always be in a position—

Mr. SULLIVAN: To pay.

Mr. SPENCER: —to make up any deficiency. Could the hon. member give some idea of the relationship? Are there so many common directors?

Mr. SULLIVAN: All the directors are Canadians, every one.

Mr. SPENCER: Are any of the Canadian directors also on the United States board?

Mr. SULLIVAN: No.

Mr. SPENCER: None at all?

Mr. SULLIVAN: No, none at all. All the directors are Canadians; all the shareholders are Canadians. It is a Canadian company doing business in Canada, with its head office in Montreal, and that is why we are asking to have a French name in the province of Quebec. We are bilingual.

Mr. SPENCER: I am not objecting to that, but I am drawing the attention of the committee to the fact that this bill very nearly slipped through the house on third reading, and because it did not but went to the banking and commerce committee—

Mr. SULLIVAN: It was pruned.

Mr. SPENCER: —it received rather severe treatment there. I remind the committee that we ran a close chance of having put through this house a bill that the banking and commerce committee decided to cut down considerably.

Section agreed to.

Mr. SULLIVAN: Clause 2 is struck out.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Clause 2 has been struck out in committee.

On section 3—Loans.

Subsection (i) agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Subsections (ii) and (iii) have been struck out in committee.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bills be read the third time?

Mr. BENNETT: The loan company bills, Nos. 15, 43 and 58, will stand for third reading until later this day or next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the order:

Mr. BENNETT: If the house will permit I should now like to take the order, Bill No. 123, to amend the Loan Companies Act, because it is a bill in committee; we can give third reading to that and to the other bills that are now suspended.

Mr. COOTE: Would the Prime Minister be willing to let me proceed with Bill No. 122, a public bill?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is not serious?

INTEREST ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod) moved the second reading of Bill No. 122, to amend the Interest Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. COOTE: This bill asks that no interest exceeding the rate or percentage of five per cent per annum shall be chargeable, payable or recoverable on the whole or any part of the principal money advanced on or secured by mortgage of real estate hereafter made, advanced or executed; and that this section shall come into force on September 1, 1934.

The Interest Act as it now stands places no limitation whatsoever on the rate of interest which may be charged. That is left to agreement between the lender and the borrower. The Bank Act, however, does fix a limit of seven per cent which may be charged by any bank on a loan. Amendments to the act recently passed make this seven per cent clause effective, although it was not before. The bill I have introduced asks for a limitation on the rate of interest which may be charged on real estate mortgages. According to evidence given before the banking and commerce committee last year real estate mortgages on farms are estimated at $726,000,000 and urban mortgages are estimated at $765,000,000, making a total of $1,491,000,000.

I should like to deal first with farm mortgages. Last year the committee received a statement from the bureau of statistics to the effect that the rate of interest charged on all mortgages in Canada, rural and urban, would average 6.90 per cent. I think it is fair to estimate that the average rate on farm mortgages would be at least seven per cent. This would make the interest charge to be met by the farmers of Canada on their mortgages approximate the sum of $50,000,000. I think everyone will agree that this interest, if it is to be paid, must come from the production on these farms. Everyone knows that the farmers have been going through very difficult times for the last four years. From 1928 to 1932 the net revenue of the farms of Canada fell by 57 per cent; in other words the revenue in 1932 was only 43 per cent of the revenue in 1928. The costs of the farmer and the expenditures necessary to production were not reduced to anything like the same extent.

Mr. BENNETT: In some cases more.

Mr. COOTE: So really the farmer has been producing in most cases at a loss, and has had no margin whatever out of which to pay interest, though for the last four years the interest charges have been continuing. In 1932 the net agricultural revenue in Canada is estimated by the bureau of statistics at $600 per farm, out of which the farmer had to pay interest, taxes and other cash payments, and on the average there were six persons who had to get their living from each farm. The interest burden is becoming intolerable, and here is a very good example of what is going on. I have here an article from the Renfrew Mercury, repeated in the Ottawa Citizen:

> Not many weeks ago, not a hundred miles from Renfrew, an Ontario trust company sold a fine, well-cultivated farm which had come back on their hands, for less than $2 (two dollars) per acre. Why? There had been loaned upon the farm, on the security of a mortgage, an amount of several thousand dollars, but the mortgagor, the farmer who had owned the farm, could not meet the payments; the price of farm products was not sufficient to pay for wages, living expenses, mortgage interest and taxes. So the farm was sold for less than it would have brought nearly one hundred years ago.
> Something has happened to the farmer's dollar—it has shrunk in value, failed to keep pace with the fluctuations in prices of the things which the farmer has to pay for, for the farmer's currency is the products he grows or raises or manufactures ...
> It is too much to expect that the problems of Canadian agriculture are capable of being solved over-night—especially with Canada's present defective monetary system—but this much is certain, that the present fiscal policy of the Dominion is inimical to the best interests of agriculture and until the policy of exploiting the farmer for the benefit of the non-producer, of crushing down agriculture with a burden of invisible indirect taxation, and of taking away with the one hand any benefit extended to agriculture with the other, is abandoned, the "fair exchange value" will never be experienced by the Canadian farmer, and the return of prosperity to the nation will be deferred.

The burden of interest is felt very keenly by the farmer because, as I said before, it can only come out of the margin the farmer has over his costs of production. To-day, as for the past year or two, farmers are being urged to sign mortgages bearing rates of interest of seven per cent and eight per cent. I have personal knowledge of farmers who have paid eight per cent for twenty years and still owe the principal. Had they been charged only five per cent the other three per cent would have amortized the loan and the debt would have been retired by this time. I admit that some relief legislation has been introduced, but it is not in any way sufficient to deal with the existing situation.

Let me direct the attention of the house to legislation passed in Brazil on December 1, 1933. I am quoting from the monthly bulletin of the British chamber of commerce of Brazil, and this quotation is taken from one of the official journals:

> Whereas:—
> Agricultural production contributed almost the whole of the sacrifice demanded of the country for the purpose of national exchange defence measures;

owing to the crisis having become general, and all the products thereof have suffered a considerable reduction in value;

such reduction in value has placed almost all agriculturists—or, it may be said, national economy itself, since its foundations rest on agriculture—in a position of serious difficulty; in such cases it is incumbent upon the public authority to act in the matter, taking the necessary steps for the defence of national interests intermingled with those of private individuals;

The head of the provisional government of the republic of the United States of Brazil, by virtue of the powers conferred on him by article 1 of decree No. 19,398 of November 11, 1930, decrees that:

Art. 1. As from the date of this decree, the amount of all debts of agriculturists contracted before 30th June, 1933, against real or pledged security, is hereby reduced by fifty per cent.

I should like to direct the attention of the house to that paragraph once more:

—the amount of all debts of agriculturists contracted before 30th June, 1933, against real or pledged security, is hereby reduced by fifty per cent.

In the next paragraph debts contracted after June 30, 1933, provided they constitute renewals of old debts, are also included under the provisions of the decree.

My time is almost up, but before sitting down I would say in regard to urban mortgages that the ability of the people to pay is fixed by the income they receive. To indicate the extent to which their ability to pay has been reduced may I point out that in 1929 the wages paid by the Canadian National railways amounted to $177,000,000 while in 1932 they dropped to $106,000,000, and that is a good indication of what has happened to the wages of our people generally.

Those two great classes of people, the farmers and the labouring people, are responsible for most of the interest which must be paid on real estate mortgages. Their ability to pay has in many cases almost completely disappeared, and I would urge the house to give consideration to this measure which asks that a limitation of five per cent be placed on real estate mortgages entered into after this time.

LOAN COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before you proceed, Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the house may I proceed with this short bill, because the bills that passed this evening are subject to this general act. I redrafted the section, and it has been circulated as reprinted. I think we could get rid of this rather quickly and then give third reading to the other bills, so that all the bills could go to the Senate.

The house resumed from Thursday, June 28, consideration in committee of Bill No. 123, to amend the Loan Companies Act—Mr. Bennett—Mr. Smoke in the chair.

Section 1 (amended section 110) agreed to.

On section 1 (amended section 111)—Forfeiture of charter of company imposing interest and charges exceeding fixed limit.

Mr. BENNETT: I move in amendment:

That the word "imposed" be deleted from the eighteenth line, and the word "disbursed" be substituted therefor.

I believe this makes the meaning a little clearer. Then, I move:

That after the word "two" in the twentieth line the words "and one-half" be inserted, so that it will read "two and one-half per centum."

And I have the following amendment promoted by the hon. members from Macleod (Mr. Coote) and Battle River (Mr. Spencer):

That the word "due" in the twentieth line be deleted, and the word "owing" substituted therefor.

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the Prime Minister satisfied that there is no conflict of jurisdiction between the federal and the provincial powers with regard to the words "and other charges".

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman would be entirely right in questioning the procedure if we were endeavouring to interfere with a contract, but this parliament having granted a corporate existence and made the company into a corporate entity, has imposed a condition on the exercise of its powers. That comes directly within a judgment of the privy council, namely, that parliament in the exercise of its incorporating power may impose conditions on the exercise of that power. This is one of the conditions.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I would now move that bills Nos. 15, 43 and 58, which stood for third reading this day, until Bill No. 123 was passed, be read a third time.

THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 15, to incorporate The Small Loan Company of Canada.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 43, to incorporate Personal Finance Corporation.—Mr. Hackett.

Bill No. 58, to amend an Act to incorporate the Discount and Loan Corporation of Canada.—Mr. Sullivan.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln) presented the fifth report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping as follows:

The select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government begs leave to submit the following as a fifth report:

Your committee, in accordance with order of reference dated May 4, 1934, has considered the annual reports respecting the accounts of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, and in connection therewith has examined the following witnesses;—

Hon. C. P. Fullerton, K.C., Chairman, Board of Trustees, Canadian National Railways.

Mr. F. K. Morrow, Trustee, Canadian National Railways.

Mr. J. E. Labelle, K.C., Trustee, Canadian National Railways.

Mr. S. J. Hungerford, President, Canadian National Railways.

Mr. S. W. Fairweather, Canadian National Railways.

Mr. V. I. Smart, Deputy Minister, Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. B. J. Roberts, Comptroller, government guarantee branch, Department of Finance.

Mr. T. H. Cooper, Canadian National Railways.

Mr. O. A. Matthews, of Geo. A. Touche & Company, accountants and auditors.

Your committee recommends that in future the naming of the committee on railways and shipping be made as early in the session as possible, and that the railway management be requested to expedite the submission of their reports and estimates with the least delay after the close of the calendar year.

A copy of the proceedings and evidence taken is attached hereto.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. D. Chaplin,
Chairman.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE—APPOINTMENT OF FRANCHISE COMMISSIONER—PRINTING VOTERS' LISTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 101, respecting the franchise of electors at elections of members of the House of Commons—Mr. Guthrie—Mr. Smoke in the chair.

[Mr. Bennett.]

On section 3, rule 9.

Mr. POWER: We asked that rule No. 9 on page 4 should stand until it was possible to draft an amendment to cover the question of residence of persons temporarily absent from their residences in so-called unemployment camps. Accordingly I move:

That after the word "and" in line 26 the following words be added "if there be any such place of residence or home either of himself or any member of his family to which he could return he shall, notwthstanding his presence in such unemployment camp, be registered at such place of residence or home, and moreover—

And so on.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree.

Amendment agreed to.

Rule 9 as amended agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (xii).

Mr. POWER: The next section which stood was at page 5 of the bill paragraph (xii) dealing with Doukhobors. The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) had a word to say in this connection so I shall ask to have the paragraph stand.

On section 4, subsection 3.

Mr. POWER: I should like to move the following amendment:

That after the word "shall" in line 46 the following words be added, "subject to the provisions of rule 10 of schedule B of section 17 of this act."

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

Mr. POWER: I should explain that subsection 3 of section 4 provides that the franchise officer shall be the final arbiter as to disqualification and incapacity of any particular person. Rule 10 provides that in cases where the enumerator refuses to add a name to the list in a rural subdivision, if the person takes the oath and is accompanied by another person who vouches for him, the enumerator shall be obliged to accept that oath. This is proposed to carry out the intention of rule 10.

Mr. JACOBS: What is the position of the Doukhobors under this amendment?

Mr. POWER: I thought that stood for the moment.

Mr. McPHEE: Of all asinine sections to put in the bill, this is certainly one. I have some Doukhobors in my constituency and if one of these should happen to be the son of a Doukhobor living in British Columbia, he would be disqualified notwithstanding the fact that he was a good citizen. These Doukhobors are as good citizens as any others in this country. On their behalf I resent this section.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I quite realize why this section was inserted; it was because of the troubles that have occurred in British Columbia through the refusal of certain citizens to observe the laws of the country. However, I want to go on record as being absolutely opposed to any sect or any religious community being singled out by name, as they are in this legislation, and disfranchised by the parliament of Canada. I am entirely opposed to the lawless practices of some members of this sect; I am absolutely in favour of law and order being observed, but it will be noted that in the statutes of British Columbia they are not mentioned by name. The minister will find that the provincial act of 1931 states:

—that every person exempted or entitled to claim exemption, or who on production of any certificate might have become or would now be entitled to claim exemption from military service by reason of certain orders in council, and every descendant of any such person, whether born in the province or elsewhere, shall be disqualified from voting.

I may be incorrectly informed, but my information is that certain Doukhobors in British Columbia served overseas with the Canadian forces. It will be noted that the next section in the British Columbia act includes Japanese who saw service overseas with the Canadian forces, and the same thing is done in the federal act. It seems to be exceedingly unfair to disfranchise the sons of Doukhobors or naturalized Doukhobors or even Doukhobors who served overseas. I think we are adopting the wrong principle when we are bound more or less by the terms of a provincial statute. I am opposed to any sect being disfranchised by name. If it is necessary to do so, I would rather see it done some other way. We grant certain privileges to other people who served overseas, so why should we not give it to these if there be any? The sons or grandsons of these people who are born in British Columbia may migrate to Yorkton or some other constituency, and they will be disfranchised. If these people refuse to obey our laws they should be punished, but I think disfranchisement is the wrong form of punishment. It is an invidious distinction. I hold no brief for these people as I think they deserved the punishment which the attorney general and the government of the day in British Columbia meted out to them, but I think it is a bad precedent for this parliament to follow. I sympathize with the troubles of the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling), but this is the wrong principle to follow.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I spoke in connection with this matter the other day. It is a bad principle to have a federal law dependent upon provincial laws. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) will recognize at once that that is not a good way to pass federal legislation. In connection with this particular sect, probably only one out of twenty Doukhobors are members of the Sons of Freedom, who have been causing some trouble to the government. The rest of the Doukhobors are good citizens, as is shown by the report of the royal commission appointed some years ago by the British Columbia government This fact is known to those who are resident in Saskatchewan. This legislation is something new in the history of the country. It is directed not against a national group but against a religious group. It is a very serious thing. Apart from the fanatical outburst of a few of their number, the only thing against the group as a whole is the fact that they refuse to bear arms. The whole country was shocked a few months ago when certain individuals were refused citizenship in the United States because they refused to bear arms.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They also refuse to wear clothes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am referring to certain individuals in the United States who were refused citizenship, one of them being a woman, another a Canadian of high standing. We all thought at that time that it was a serious thing when individuals were penalized and refused citizenship for no other reason than their conscientious objection to participation in military service.

I am sure that this section will involve all kinds of complications. There is a large number of Doukhobors resident in Saskatchewan; there is a smaller number in Alberta and quite a large group in British Columbia. There is an invidious distinction between those in Saskatchewan and Alberta and those in British Columbia. As the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) has pointed out, all sorts of complications will arise by these people passing from one province to the other. Only a few weeks ago I met an old friend of mine who is now a lawyer in Saskatoon. I have known him since his undergraduate days, almost twenty years ago. He is a Doukhobor who in his earlier days was given an education by the Quakers in Pennsylvania. I am sorry to bring personal matters into this discussion but the matter is such a serious one that I think I am justified in doing so. The wife of my Doukhobor friend is the daughter of a former lecturer at Queen's university. If this prominent lawyer, who was a candidate in the recent Saskatchewan provincial elections, should migrate to British Columbia he would be disqualified, and his descendants, the children of the daughter of a former lecturer of Queen's, would also be disqualified.

An hon. MEMBER: Where was he born?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: He is I think Canadian born, and the only objection which could be taken to him would be on account of his parentage. This man has received a splendid education in the eastern states which he completed in Saskatchewan university where he was one of the popular students. He then took a course in law and has been practising in Saskatoon for a number of years. It is absurd that a man of that character and his children should be disfranchised. It is a wholly new doctrine. Not only is the individual discriminated against because of his religious beliefs but such discrimination extends to his descendants. Most of us have assumed that a man's religion is a matter of his own choice, and that if he wishes to do so he may repudiate the religion of his parents. But that is impossible under this law. The section enumerates certain classes who may not vote. Subsection (xii) reads:

> Every Doukhobor person in the province of British Columbia, and every descendant of any such person whether born in that province or elsewhere, who is by the law of that province disqualified from voting at an election of a member of the legislative assembly of that province.

It seems to me a most indefensible piece of legislation and one that is bound to cause very serious trouble. I think the minister would be well advised to withdraw it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To begin with I do not think the minister has carried out the intention of the government in the way the section is worded. I recall that the Prime Minister, when discussing the franchise bill before, said that any disqualification respecting Doukhobors would apply only to Doukhobors voting in British Columbia. As this is worded, it would if he happened to be a descendant of British Columbia Doukhobors disqualify a Doukhobor in Saskatchewan or Alberta or any other province. The error is due to the transposition of a clause. In order to carry out the intention of the government it should read: "Every Doukhobor person in the province of British Columbia, and every descendant in the province of British Columbia of any such person. . . . . " That would correct the first error; as it is at present worded the provision is contrary to the government's intention as proposed. A further reading of the section would disclose that it carries with it the right of a Doukhobor born in British Columbia to vote in another province if he happens to go to another province.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No doubt about that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am pointing this out in regard to the drafting. Apart from that, on the principle involved I agree with other hon. gentlemen; I do not think that persons of any class or race should be disqualified on the score of their religious belief, and especially that one should not go back to the Old Testament times and seek to visit what we regard as the iniquities of fathers upon their descendants to the third and fourth generation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The words suggested by my right hon. friend should be inserted. After the word "person", in line 31, there should be added the words "in the province of British Columbia".

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would it not be better, and would it not obtain the same result if you struck out the word "Doukhobor" altogether and also the words "and every descendant of every such person" so that it would read: "Every person in the province of British Columbia who is by the law of that province disqualified from voting", and so on.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That would disqualify a lot of other people besides Doukhobors. This is the law of British Columbia and we have adopted that law, and while it is true that in the British Columbia legislation the word "Doukhobor" is not used, I think we are more candid about it and have put it in. The idea of the section is that they shall not vote if they are not entitled to vote in British Columbia—not in any other province but only in British Columbia. To make that clear I move that the words "in the province of British Columbia" be inserted after the word "person" in line 31, as suggested by my right hon. friend.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will not be satisfied with any mere amendment to this section. I want to know whether we are going back to the days of the thumbscrew and the inquisition in matters of religion. Now that is not a dream. There are many of us who have not much religion, and you find others with too much. It seems to me we require in Canada some with too much in order to preserve a half decent average. Here we are, supposedly a Christian community, making the franchise depend upon the religion of certain people. The Doukhobors are a distinctly religious sect, fanatical if you like. They take the ground, some of them, and at times, that they can worship the Creator better in a naked condition than clothed or partially clothed. Well, we sometimes run across other people with peculiarities in religious matters, but if they are genuine, is that a good ground for disfranchising them? How will that cure them? I will not say anything of a threatening nature, but I would not want anything better than this in an election to campaign with against the government. The government can leave it there if they like. There are other heinous provisoes connected with the franchise which appeared in the bill when it was first drafted, and when the proper time comes we shall not forget any of these attempts to disfranchise good citizens. As regards these Doukhobors, I say it would be a standing disgrace to Canada, as it would be to any Christian country, to pass this section. It is a fine example of reactionary Toryism when applied to the franchise with respect to certain people who have cast their lot in with us in Canada. I know something about the Doukhobors. We run across them as farm labourers on adjoining farms, and I know that they are as a whole a hard working, conscientious people, industrious, thrifty and, if you like, God-fearing. The hon. member for Yorkton has not exaggerated their many good qualities. I do not know how they vote and I do not care. A lot of them did not vote at all in the early days as a matter of principle, but that is not the point. Just imagine what is being done now in this day, when we seem to be developing a more active spiritual religion, a real live religion, stimulated by the Oxford group and other movements of that kind. While that is going on, within the shadow and even within this building, we have this government penalizing a religious sect and saying to them, "You cannot vote and be citizens of Canada so long as you hold such and such religious beliefs." It is no wonder the Minister of Justice is getting as red as a bubbly-jock. It shows there is some hope for him yet. He is getting white behind the gills and red in the wattles; that shows also there is some conscience left in him. I appeal to him now not to disgrace us all by committing this unseemly act. If it were only disgracing an already disgraced government it would not be so bad, but it will disgrace this whole parliament, the Senate as well, because they will be expected to swallow it. I wonder, is that the artist sitting in front of the minister, the artist who drafted this blooming act as well as the War-time Elections Act. If he is so artistic as to draft this bill he should be able to draft another one equally good and avert this political crime.

Mr. STANLEY: Be fair; the man cannot defend himself.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh well, I will take on anyone either in parliament or out of it as far as that goes.

Mr. STANLEY: When he can't talk.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister ought to be ashamed to have the draftsman of this act and of the War-time Elections Act sitting in the house before him, and trying to make out it was just a memorandum they gave the conference members on this side, when it was a full fledged act like any other.

Mr. McINTOSH: Deliberately drafted.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, and deliberately deceiving us into thinking it was only a memorandum. It was bad enough to draft the thing, but to come here and brazenly falsify it is a thousand times worse. The Doukhobors don't do anything like this anyhow; they are usually truthful. What they are they are, and they are not ashamed of it. But this government, hiding behind the draftsman, brings down this kind of legislation, this kind of heathen stuff, to push through parliament.

Mr. ESLING: Hon. members opposite need have no concern about any injustice to the Doukhobors. Had they had just a little experience with them, they would not be disposed to extend very much sympathy. For the past fourteen years prior to the last election there has never been a Doukhobor vote cast in British Columbia, although within the past fourteen years many Doukhobors born in Canada have been entitled to exercise the franchise. It was only at the last election that they ever were encouraged or signified any intention to vote. I assure hon. gentlemen opposite that could they have witnessed the scenes in West Kootenay at the last federal election they would all have been quite willing to have disfranchised this religious sect. There can be no sense of responsibility and no individualism in a member of any group in which the leader dictates and dominates the marking of the ballot. Just prior to the last election the Doukhobors in British Columbia were called together by their leader, Peter Verigin; there they were instructed just how to mark their ballots and they marked them with all the precision and accuracy that any well trained and intelligent Canadian could use; indeed, more accurately, as was indicated by the fact that out of 248 ballots cast at one poll not a single ballot was spoiled and every one was marked accurately with a cross after the Liberal candidate's name.

Mr. YOUNG: Is that why they are being disfranchised, because they voted Liberal?

Mr. ESLING: No. To those who may be disposed to think that this may be a political advantage, we will admit it is a political advantage and a very pronounced one, but it is a political advantage to every candidate regardless of what party he may be affiliated with. There is no individualism in permitting a leader or one man practically to vote for any one group. There are 4,500 Doukhobors in West Kootenay and there are 1,000 more in the adjoining federal district of Yale. Of the 4,500 in West Kootenay, about 2,000 have the franchise and they could very well have exercised it at the last election had there not been an endeavour to prevent them. In other words some registrars did not make a return of their lists to the returning officers. Those lists came to light just at the last day.

Let me say just this to satisfy my hon. friends opposite: the Doukhobors came here in 1898 under an order in council passed in 1896. They were given large tracts of land; they were otherwise bonused or provided with implements and with some money and they went upon the land. We heard very little of them for a while until they moved to West Kootenay some twenty odd years ago. They have absolutely no regard for Canadian law. They will not admit of any provincial law. They will not register births, deaths or marriages. There is not anybody who can challenge a Doukhobor and tell who he is and what is his age. More than that, they have just exercised their own inclinations by the burning of schools; they did not want their children to go to school and their action in that regard in the last few years has resulted in the burning of some thirty-five schools in British Columbia. The situation became so tense in the federal district of Yale that the people there had to guard the schools with floodlights. Then the Doukhobors had their nude parades which cost British Columbia some $50,000 for keeping those Doukhobors at Okalla and they have cost the federal government many thousands of dollars for the creation of this penitentiary at the coast.

One specific agreement under the order in council states that the Doukhobors should be exempt from military service and that is their greatest and keenest desire. Let me assure hon. gentlemen opposite, regardless of what they say, the Doukhobors do not want the vote. Just about two weeks ago they had a mass meeting and strange as this may seem to hon. gentlemen opposite, that body of Doukhobors passed resolutions at their mass meeting presided over by their leader, Peter Verigin, extending the most grateful acknowledgment to this government for having indicated that it would disfranchise them at the federal election. They simply took the ground that this disqualification confirmed the agreement under the order in council made in 1896 which exempted them from military service, and that is precisely what they wanted.

Further, after that mass meeting the younger element of Doukhobors, a society known as the Doukhobors Youths, gathered at a public meeting within the past ten days and recorded resolutions again thanking this federal government for having disqualified them, and this was done simply on the ground that the government's action confirmed the terms of the order in council exempting them from military service.

Mr. JACOBS: May I ask my hon. friend this question: This government has not disqualified them yet. Were they not a little too soon with their resolutions?

Mr. ESLING: I know that, but the press reports to that effect were out nearly a month ago.

Mr. JACOBS: They relied upon press reports. I would ask my hon. friend this further question: How is disfranchisement going to help the situation? Will they wear clothes if they are disfranchised?

Mr. ESLING: I hope they will when the hon. member for Cartier comes to British Columbia.

Mr. NEILL: The tale told by the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) has not that sickly sentimental flavour that some of the speeches we have heard to-night have had, but it happens to be true. This is not a question of religion; it is one of behaviour, which is quite a different matter. An attempt has been made to show that these Doukhobors are a downtrodden, God-fearing people. It is not part of their religion to go without clothes; that is not why they take their clothes off. They do this to show their displeasure when they are asked to obey the laws of the land; they stage these nude parades in order to show their displeasure.

Mr. JACOBS: They want to tell the naked truth.

Mr. NEILL: It is easy to trot out one particular case. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Woodsworth) talks of an isolated case of a professor, but they are not all professors. The hon. member for West Kootenay talked about their burning schools and I think he mentioned thirty-five schools, but he did not tell of the Doukhobors bombing a school when a poor young white woman teacher was in it. The teachers had to be taken from the schools because their nerves gave way. The hon. member did not tell the committee of the time that a train was bombed and their leader and a member of the legislature were killed. He did not tell of the Canadian Pacific having to spend enormous sums in guarding railway bridges because the Doukhobors had a playful habit of blowing them up too. That does not sound so God-fearing if you put the matter in that light.

There is one point I should like to speak about, and that is the remark of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) when he said that it was outrageous or unbelievable or something like that, that the federal franchise should be dominated by or from the provincial legislature. That is exactly what we are bound to do, to follow the provincial law in that regard. The question was brought up some years ago in connection with the admission of Hindus. My hon. friend to my right was very enthusiastic on behalf of them, I remember. I heard the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen, then leader of the opposition, most emphatically lay down that principle, and I rather think the right hon. leader of the opposition to-day spoke along the same lines, but he is here to contradict me if I am wrong. At any rate I know that Mr. Meighen laid it down as an accepted axiom of constitutional law under the British North America Act that we in this parliament were bound to follow the inhibitions or any other restrictions made by the provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may be strong on the constitution but I never said that.

Mr. NEILL: I naturally associate the word "constitution" with the right hon. leader of the opposition. I do not think he will say that he did not support the idea that we ought to follow the provincial legislatures in their franchise.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I do not think I ever agreed to anything of the kind.

Mr. NEILL: Then I will take it back; he ought to know what he said. But I remember distinctly—Mr. Meighen is not here to contradict me—I know I quoted him in contradiction to my hon. friend here, who would not let a chance like that slip.

Mr. JACOBS: My recollection is the same as that of my leader.

Mr. NEILL: You see the extreme partisanship. He only thinks the same as his leader. Mr. Meighen said it—and even if I am deprived of Mr. Meighen's backing I can point to history: we have always done that, always followed any inhibition that the provinces created in regard to the franchise.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask my hon. friend if that is true in regard to the disfranchisement of women in the province of Quebec? They have a vote in the federal not in the provincial elections.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And we are in favour of their having a vote here.

Mr. NEILL: The question came up the last time this Franchise Act was put through, in 1924 I think; the same question was raised in connection with the Japanese voting in British Columbia, and it was decided under the leadership of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, at any rate he did carry into our franchise the inhibition against orientals that existed in British Columbia. That is what I am saying to-day, that the province has the right to say what their own franchise shall be. The matter was taken to the privy council on one occasion in connection with a Japanese called Yatagama or some such name.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has the amendment that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) moved been carried?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The insertion of the words "in the province of British Columbia" in line 31 after the word "person" is the amendment.

Mr. JACOBS: If I am in order I would move that paragraph (xii) be struck out of the bill.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should very much like to second that motion. I am going to take the opportunity of making some further comments in regard to this little-understood sect. I have personally known them since they were brought here under the late Sir Clifford Sifton who was then Minister of the Interior. They were granted at that time certain privileges, among others that of living in communities and of exemption from military service. When Sir Clifford Sifton was superseded by Hon. Frank Oliver there was a change of policy on the part of the department; they insisted that the Doukhobors should take up individual homesteads and swear allegiance, which was contrary to their rather peculiar ideas. So they gave up lands which some have valued at $10,000,000, a great many of them subsequently going on small farms for themselves, breaking with the parent community. A number of the members of the community proper then migrated to British Columbia, and established a community at the junction of the Kootenay and Columbia rivers. Undoubtedly, as I remember the late president of the university of British Columbia saying to me, they have managed to accomplish through their cooperative efforts in that rather rough country what the ordinary individual settler had been unable to do. Anyone who visits their community there and inspected their jam factories and logging operations and so on cannot but recognize that at least from a material standpoint they have made good. Certain of the merchants in the town of Nelson several years ago set up an agitation against them because they were buying by wholesale rather than from the retail stores. A commission was appointed by the British Columbia government to investigate the whole situation. Had I known this matter would come up I would have had the volume here to quote from the report of the commission, but I remember it very distinctly. The report of that commission stated that there was no crime whatever among them, that they were good citizens in every respect, but according to their religious ideas they would not participate in the ordinary affairs of government. That was a number of years ago.

From the first there have been in that community, I quite frankly admit, a certain number of people who have been fanatical. Personally I am inclined to think that some of them are a little crazy—

An hon. MEMBER: They are not alone.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —and they have fantastic ideas. It was this particular group that caused trouble when they went to Winnipeg some years ago, having abandoned their homes and implements and so on. They had to be returned. Every once in a while this fanaticism breaks out. There are to-day three distinct groups. I should say that while about eight or nine thousand Doukhobors came to the country forty years ago there must be nearly twenty thousand in Canada to-day. There are three groups; first the community Doukhobors proper under the jurisdiction of Peter Verigin; second the non-community Doukhobors who have broken with the colony and who have individual farms and homesteads. Most of those in Saskatchewan now are non-community Doukhobors, descendants of the original immigrants who have gone off on their own and are in every respect Canadian citizens. Then, third, there is this little fanatical group called the Sons of Freedom. That is the group that has caused the greater part of the trouble in British Columbia and also whenever there have been outbreaks in Saskatchewan. They refused to obey even Peter Verigin—and perhaps I may say that although the first Peter Verigin was an able man I believe the present man is not a very desirable type of citizen. Nevertheless he was regarded as the religious head, and his followers gave him their allegiance.

Reference has been made to some acts of terrorists. Someone bombed a train; Peter Verigin was on that train and was killed. It has never been established who bombed the train. The Doukhobors themselves are inclined to blame the Sons of Freedom. I talked to the engine driver on the train concerned, and he told me he believed it was a prospector, who had some dynamite aboard and who was also killed at the time. He did not think the Doukhobors were guilty of the outrage. I do not know.

Then we find that in British Columbia a number of schools were burned. The people who follow Peter Verigin, the community Doukhobors, believe it was done by these Sons of Freedom, and they were so much afraid of the Sons of Freedom that they called in the mounted police and the government officials to protect them against this small fanatical sect. I could show that by reference to the Nelson News, in which a good many documents were published a few years ago. So that although a certain number of Doukhobors were presumably guilty of outrages, it was never proved in any court but it was believed by the Doukhobors themselves that it was the Sons of Freedom who were guilty, and certainly it is the so-called Sons of Freedom who have given the government such trouble. But my point to-night is that it is not fair, when perhaps not more than one out of twenty belongs to the Sons of Freedom, to penalize the other nineteen-twentieths of the Doukhobors in this country.

Mr. JACOBS: And their descendants.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: And their descendants. The statement is made that they do not want their children to go to school. That was true a great many years ago. That is still true of the Sons of Freedom; it is not true of the great majority of the Doukhobor people. For years I have been closely in touch with those people in Saskatchewan. Some years ago I had occasion, while working under a government bureau, to make a rather careful analysis of the situation existing among the non-English speaking peoples, and I found the great part of the Doukhobors in Saskatchewan attending school in the districts in which they lived. There is no trouble there. Two years ago I took occasion to revisit the community near Nelson, British Columbia. I visited four or five schools and talked with the teachers. One of the teachers was a young Doukhobor woman; the other three were Canadian born girls. I asked one of the teachers who had been there for six or eight or ten years, "Do you see anything of these parades?" She said, "In all the years I have been here I have never seen a nude Doukhobor." I asked, "What about the education of the children?" She said, "Practically all the children in this district are now attending public school, and a finer class of children you would not see anywhere." I saw them in their classes; I saw them out on the playing fields, and they were a fine type of children. They came from the neighbouring districts to attend these schools.

I think it is absurd that the newspapers, with the idea of getting some picturesque stories, should have played up these nude parades to such an extent that it has given the Canadian public the idea that the great majority of the people are fanatics. That is not true. I quite admit that it is true of a certain sect, but that is just my point. Penalize the people who refuse to obey our laws, if you like; that is right, but do not penalize merely because of religious ideas. It very well may be that the present Peter Verigin may want to keep his people from exercising the franchise. I can quite understand that. As someone has said, he is a little dictator, but why should we heed the behests of Peter Verigin? I submit that among the younger people especially there is a decided move to participate in the life of the Canadian people which should be encouraged. If we do encourage that move it will be only a few years until these troubles will have passed away with the older generation. If, however, we keep them isolated and refuse to grant them citizenship with the rest of us undoubtedly there will be trouble all along the line.

It has been stated that one individual taught them how to vote; apparently the shoe is pinching because he taught them to vote Liberal instead of Conservative. I think it is absurd that these people should be disfranchised merely because they are told by one of their spiritual leaders how to vote. If the newspapers are right, in the last Ontario election some of the clergy told the people of Ontario that they should vote Liberal.

Mr. McINTOSH: They did not need to be told; they knew enough.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But that does not alter the fact that they were told. It would not be the first time that religious leaders have instructed their people how to vote. It is not the course of wisdom to play into the hands, if I may use that expression, of the one dictator we have there, Peter Verigin. I hope the amendment moved by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) will be accepted. The only possible justification for legislation of this kind would be if it were confined very strictly to the people who have broken the criminal laws of this country. I do want to plead very strongly for this section of our community, and I wish to protest against certain religious tenets being made the basis for disfranchisement.

Mr. STIRLING: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has given the committee the benefit of a most specious piece of special pleading. He has stated that he has been well acquainted with these people ever since they reached Canada. I very much regret that, according to my experience with them, his acquaintanceship with the Doukhobors has not benefited them. The hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) has recounted some of the behaviour of the Doukhobors in his constituency at the time of the 1930 election; may I, in a very few moments, carry the chapter one page further.

Five days before the general election of 1930 Peter Verigin arrived in the town of Grand Forks. The Doukhobors had not been placed on the voters' lists; they had not asked to be placed on the lists, neither had the enumerators asked them if they desired to be on the lists. Peter Verigin instructed them to swear themselves on the lists on the day of the poll, and they flocked to the polling places for that purpose. They came in such numbers that by the time the poll was closed by no means all had succeeded in swearing themselves on the lists, for to a large extent the men resembled each other like two peas, and the women were so much alike that it was necessary to challenge each one in the attempt at least to record the name of the individual. They voted. I have not the clear evidence of how they voted that the hon. member for West Kootenay has in regard to one certain poll, but I have this very fair inference, that in the polling divisions concerned my majority was reduced to a certain extent at each poll. Therefore it follows, to my satisfaction at least, that the Doukhobors voted Liberal en bloc. That has nothing whatever to do with the case before us, except that if they voted en bloc in one direction, there is no reason why they should not vote en bloc in another direction at another time, and personally I do not consider that the franchise in Canada should be so exercised.

There is one other incident to which I should like to direct the attention of the committee; I refer to the happenings on the hills above Grand Forks, where the Doukhobors live, at the time an attempt was made to take the census. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre describes these people as virtuous, as having children who make good scholars and as a happy, contented, industrious people. When the census officer went to their community he endeavoured to obtain the information that was required. They are a people, as the committee already has been informed, who have always snapped their fingers at provincial statutes such as the vital statistics act. There is no record of when they were born or where they were born. They refused to give the information; three attempts were made on three successive days to secure the information required for the census. At last a solicitor employed by the census bureau accompanied the enumerators to endeavour to explain to these people that no harm would come from filling out these forms so that the statistics of Canada might be complete. I am sorry to say that an attempt was made to take the clothes off the solicitor. I must draw the attention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to the fact that the leaders of those unruly proceedings were two girls who had been through high school.

[Mr. Stirling.]

Let me recount one further incident. In the summer of 1931 or perhaps of 1932, the citizens of Grand Forks, utterly weary of the difficulties they had experienced in watching their schools, in flood-lighting them, in endeavouring to protect their water intake in the river and so on, called a meeting of their prominent citizens, to which the provincial member and myself were asked to come. It was a meeting of the city council, the board of trade, representatives of the church and representatives of the various social organizations of that little town, and we heard what they had to say with regard to the Doukhobors. I should like certain hon. members who are advancing contrary views to have been present on that occasion and to have seen a side of the picture exactly opposite to that described by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and several other hon. members. The farmers on the outskirts of Grand Forks whose farms lie on the borders of the Doukhobor community not only suffer from fright but suffer from actual danger to life and limb. The Doukhobors behave with disgusting indecency in front of their farms. The children and the growing up young men and women cannot comport themselves in reasonable freedom because of the danger of molestation from the Doukhobors who certainly do not regard clothes as an absolute necessity.

I was very much surprised to hear the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) make the statement—if I understood him correctly—that some of the Doukhobors in that area had seen military service.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was informed that was the case, but I did not know.

Mr. STIRLING: I wonder if the hon. member could produce proof of the statement, because I think it would be read in southern British Columbia with great astonishment. I have lived in the neighbourhood for ten years. I make an annual visit into that country and endeavour to inform myself as to the circumstances. While on any of my visits I have never heard the statement made by the hon. member.

It has been suggested that the Sons of Freedom are the bad actors. I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that the people who endeavoured to take the clothes off the young lawyer were certainly not calling themselves Sons of Freedom, and if you endeavoured to find out just who the Sons of Freedom are or who are the free Doukhobors, you would find it impossible to draw any distinction between the Sons of Freedom and any of the rest of them.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to check up on the remark that I made a moment ago. I now have Hansard before me, and after consulting it I must apologize to the right hon. leader of the opposition. The allusion was not to him, but to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. At page 4647 of Hansard for 1923 I spoke as follows:

It is a British Columbia problem for this reason: the franchise invariably originates in the province. It is entirely a provincial matter. I would quote Sir Wilfrid Laurier who in 1917 laid down in most emphatic language in paragraph after paragraph that the true basis of our dominion franchise under the British North America Act is the provincial franchise. He used the word "originates." The franchise originates in the province and then has to be translated into the dominion act. The right hon. leader of the opposition,—

That was Mr. Meighen.

—last year is on record in Hansard to substantially the same effect. He said that where prohibitions existed in the provincial franchise we carried them into the dominion franchise, and if that is correct, and here we have two of the ablest men of our time on this subject, then the thing for us to do is to take this subject up in British Columbia and deal with it there, and the province of British Columbia would know how to deal with such a subject in the best interests of Canada as well as the best interests of the province.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend should mention the fact that at the time Sir Wilfrid Laurier made that statement the dominion lists were based on the provincial lists. That is not the case to-day.

I have only one further observation to make. I do not wish to delay the committee, but I still think that in its present form the clause is ambiguous, and might carry the same meaning as it did originally. I suggest the proper transposition would be to begin the clause with the words, "In the province of British Columbia" and thus obviate ambiguity. The clause would read:

In the province of British Columbia every Doukhobor person and every descendant of any such person, whether born in that province or elsewhere,—

And so on. It now reads:

Every Doukhobor person in the province of British Columbia, and every descendant of any such person, whether born in that province or elsewhere—

And so on. I suggest that change should be made.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The criticism some of my remarks incited render it necessary for me to make some further observations. I happened to be a member of the first Saskatchewan government, and one of our first duties after taking office in 1905 was to deal with some of these Doukhobor parades. I remember them distinctly. There was no resentment against authority at that time; the parades were part of their religious rites and performances. I do not know what later developments were; it may be that in later years it developed into an action of resentment, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has said. I can say, however, that in earlier years it was an act of worship towards God. We found in the administration of justice through the department of the attorney general that a great deal could be done by tempering justice with mercy, and fair dealing with kindness. The history of the world indicates that if you undertake to persecute a people for their religious beliefs, no matter how absurd you may think they are, you will just make them more determined, and bring the very worst out of them. As a matter of fact, was not the Christian church disseminated all over the world by persecution? I ask you that. The blood of the martyrs was said to be the seed of the church. The point is that in this instance we may not confine such action to the Doukhobors, because if we set our hand towards establishing this kind of precedent, we do not know who or what people will bring down the wrath of the Tory government next.

I do not know how many hon. members can recall the advent of the Salvation Army into Canada. In those days I was attending school in the old town of Perth. The Army did things which appeared strange to us, and were garbed much the same as to-day They beat their tom-toms just the same, and they sang just the same. They assembled in front of the hotel doors just the same and offered up prayers for the guests, and they had pitchers of water thrown on them from upper windows as a kind of reception or collection. That was the only collection they got in those days of nearly sixty years ago. When we look back to those days we have no cause to be proud of ourselves. To-day the Salvation Army is one of the most respected religious bodies in the world. But, because they were different from the rest of us, we seemed to think that hating them would count as righteousness into us. Civilization based on hating some one or some thing is not on a good foundation; yet that was our attitude towards the Salvation Army. I was born a severe hater of everything that was French and everything that was Catholic. Anything I can do to rectify that mistake, that terrible mistake of my early training, I shall do for the rest of my life. I was wrong; absolutely wrong. And towards men and women who worship at the same shrine as we do, and who worship the same Godhead as we do, how dare we take this attitude of persecution? That is all I have to say. I am in favour of the amendment to throw this section out of the bill higher than a kite.

Mr. MITCHELL: I feel I should make some observations, because if there were a vote I should feel I must vote in a certain way. I believe cooperation with a government is an elementary principle of civilization. Where would our institutions be if that were not the case? I am a great believer in freedom and in the rights of the individual, but I wonder where the country would be if all the different racial groups refused to cooperate. I think this question transcends the liberty of the individual. If the French, the English, the Irish, the Scotch, the Welsh, the Ukrainians and others all failed to cooperate in enforcing the laws of this country, where would we be? The first obligation of any individual is to cooperate with the state. I think that is elementary in the building up of our democratic institutions.

Mr. IRVINE: I have only one word to say, but if this is going to a vote I want to show why I am voting the way I intend to vote. To a great extent I agree with what the previous speaker (Mr. Mitchell) has said. I think that those who refuse to recognize our institutions and abide by the laws of our country have no right to the franchise, but, on the other hand, we have some responsibility to these people. We may be forty years too late in discussing this problem. I should say that the proper way to deal with this matter is not to impose political persecution in a statute but to get these people out of the country if they refuse to obey our laws. We cannot afford to allow the great seal of Canada to be placed on a statute of persecution.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the minister agreeing to the amendment to put the name of the province first?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not agree with that. If you read down the whole section you will see it states every person, every Indian, every Doukhobor. I think it means the same if I put in the words "in the province."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not want to be meticulous but I think it should be made perfectly clear that the section relates only to the province of British Columbia.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We could make it read, "in the province of British Columbia, every Doukhobor person and every descendant of any such person."

Amendment agreed to.

Paragraph (xii) as amended agreed to.

Mr. DUPUIS: We are dealing with the liberty of citizens of this country. Even if the citizens described here by their racial name voted Tory in the last elections I would be in favour of allowing them to continue to have their rights. Are we going to allow this government—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smoke): I would call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the section was carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The section was carried before.

Mr. DUPUIS: I ask the consent of the committee to revert again to that section.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. DUPUIS: I want to voice my protest against the disfranchisement of these people.

On section 5, subsection 3—Appointment, tenure of office and rank of commissioner.

Mr. POWER: I have not prepared an amendment to this subsection but I suggested to the minister that it might be necessary to make some modification. We want to know what the commissioner is to be paid and what pension provisions are to be made. If the minister is not prepared to give us this information, I can go on to another amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know what the salary is as yet.

Subsection 3 stands.

On section 17, subsection 3 (b)—Enumerators.

Mr. POWER: This paragraph deals with the appointment of enumerators by candidates of political parties.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the hon. member will read his amendment I think I can accept it.

Mr. POWER: As no argument seems to be necessary I shall proceed to read my amendment. I move:

That section 17, subsection 3, be amended by striking therefrom clause (b) thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

"(b) Within five days after the registrar shall have published the proclamation mentioned in section fourteen of this act the candidate who at the then last preceding election in an electoral district, as then by law bounded (and hereunder termed the former electoral district) part or all of which is embraced in or identical with the registrar's electoral district, received the highest number of votes in such former electoral district, and the candidate who representing at that election a different and opposed political interest, received the next highest number of votes, may, each, by himself or by a representative, nominate a fit and proper person or fit and proper persons for appointment as enumerators in any or all of the polling divisions (or parts of polling divisions) in the registrar's electoral district (if it is identical with such former electoral district), and, if it is not so identical, then in such part of the registrar's electoral district as is identical with the part or whole of such former electoral district embraced therein, and, subject to the provisions of this section, the registrar shall appoint such persons to be enumerators of the polling divisions or parts thereof for which they have been nominated."

Amendment agreed to.

On paragraph (d).

Mr. GUTHRIE: The next paragraph will have to be amended.

Mr. POWER: In connection with this paragraph I move to strike out all the words after "possible" in the twenty-second line and to the word "or" in the twenty-fourth line. The following words should be struck out, "or if the electoral district, as bounded and described by law, is new, and no election has ever been held in it".

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection 3 as amended agreed to.

On rule 15.

Mr. POWER: I think the amendment to this rule has been handed to the minister. If he will move it, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The amendment my hon. friend has in mind is that rule 15 shall be amended by striking out the words:

"or that the amendment thereof which he requests should be made, he shall certify accordingly by signing the appropriate certificate on the stub of the application, which he shall forthwith detach and deliver to the applicant."

All that is struck out and the following is substituted therefor:

He shall in the presence of the applicant enter his name upon the list.

Mr. POWER: That passes 13.

On rule 16.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A further amendment will be necessary to rule 16. In line 31 the word "openly" should be struck out and after the word "applicant" there should be inserted the words "in writing"—he shall notify the applicant in writing.

Mr. POWER: That passes 13, 14, 15 and 16.

Mr. DUPUIS: Do I understand that now a third party will not have the right to ask the revising officer to put an elector's name on the list? It will be necessary that the elector himself register his name?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Or his agent.

Amendment agreed to.

Rule 16 agreed to.

Rule 15 agreed to.

On section 21—Notice of revision.

Mr. POWER: An amendment has been prepared by the draftsman in connection with subsection 6 of section 21.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The amendment is to add at the end of section 21 the following:

In the case of a new electoral district wherein, as that electoral district is by law newly described, no election has ever been held, the registrar shall mail or deliver ten additional copies of the notice to each person who was at the last dominion election held in any electoral district any part whereof is embraced within such new electoral district, a candidate for election and shall request that person to mail or deliver such additional copies to such other person or persons in such new electoral district as in the judgment of such first-named person ought to receive them.

It is to provide for the case of electoral districts newly created and which formed parts of former districts. The object is that in the new district copies of the list shall be distributed to the new candidate.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 27—Application for registration prior to sittings.

Mr. POWER: I have recast this section to provide for the mailing and posting up of notices of applications which have been made to the registrar, and I will read it. I move that section 27 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"Any elector may at any time during the month of April in any year file with the registrar of electors of the electoral district whereof the polling division in which such elector resides is situate a signed application in Form No. 28 to be added to the existing lists in such polling division. The registrar shall post up in his office the name of every such applicant as such and keep it posted up for at least two weeks, and mail it to, and cause it be be posted up for at least two weeks in, a post office within the polling subdivision in which the applicant resides, or, if there is no post office therein, then in the post office nearest thereto;

(2) Every postmaster shall, forthwith, after receipt from such registrar of such name for posting, post it up in some conspicuous place in his office to which the public has access and maintain it posted there for not less than two weeks, and failure to do so shall be ground for his dismissal from office, and for the purposes of this provision such postmaster shall be deemed to be a franchise officer and shall be liable as such.

(3) Thereafter, if the registrar has no cause to doubt the bona fide character of the application he shall add the name of the applicant to the list of electors of the polling division in which he resides. If, however, the registrar doubts the bona fide character of the application he shall notify the applicant to appear before a sitting of the court of revision where his application will be heard and dealt with pursuant to paragraph (c) of the next following section of this act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 28—Procedure and action of registrars and revisal courts.

Mr. POWER: I had made some objection to section 28, paragraph (i), but on further explanation from the draftsman I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understood that (a) and (b) of section 28 stood.

Mr. POWER: I am satisfied, and (i) is also satisfactory.

Section agreed to.

On section 30—Transfer of name from one list to another.

Mr. POWER: This section stood for a small amendment. In line 43 I move that the words "general registration of electors or" be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 31—Certification.

Mr. POWER: This section stood in order to strike out in line 17 the words "the original" and in line 18 the words "signed applications for registration of electors." I think the words "received by him" should also go out. The words struck from this clause then would be:

The original signed applications for registration of electors received by him.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the words "received by him" might stay in, because there follows:

And all other lists and documents had by him in connection with the revision.

Mr. POWER: This is the first time the words "received by him" occur. With the words I have mentioned struck out, it will read:

The certified original list and all other lists and documents had by him in connection with the revision.

Mr. GUTHRIE: All right. Strike out also the words "received by him."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 32—Right of appeal.

Mr. POWER: This clause covers the right of appeal to a judge. I did propose to have it stand and to draft an amendment making it quite clear that a third party could have an appeal. I am not convinced that this is permissible under clause 32 but the draftsman believes it is, so I am going to take his word for it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Before this clause carries I would move:

That subclause 2 of clause 32 be amended by adding after the word "judge" in the thirteenth line the words "or a district magistrate" and also by amending paragraph (c) of subclause 2 of clause 32 by adding in the twenty-sixth line, after the word "lies" the following "or a district magistrate."

That has to do with the subject matter which I discussed in the committee here and also in the special committee on elections regarding the trouble some people may have if they want to apply for revision of the list before a judge in order not to force people who live in remote places in my county to travel 400 or 600 miles to go before a judge of the superior court either at Murray Bay or at Rimouski. A district magistrate in the province of Quebec, has jurisdiction up to $200. District magistrates sit at various periods of the year on the north shore in different sections of the district I represent and might be able to look after this revision of the lists. I leave it in this way, that the appointment of this district magistrate would be under the direction of the chief justice of the superior court or the acting chief justice, so that there would be no danger in this.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is limited in every province to judges in the various courts of the different provinces, and I would not consent to an innovation of the kind suggested in the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Section agreed to.

On section 46—May print in any or all districts.

Mr. POWER: Subclause 2 of this clause stood in order to meet the suggestion made by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay to provide that copies of lists should be furnished to candidates. I would move:

That the words "at an election" in line eight be struck from the clause and that there be added after the words "electoral district" in line eleven, that is after the last word of this subclause, the following words "he may demand such copies in the case of an annual revision of lists as well as of a general registration of electors."

Mr. CHEVRIER: He shall be furnished with.

Mr. POWER: I will accept the suggestion of the senior member for Ottawa.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he does not ask for them, I do not know that he should be furnished with them.

Mr. POWER: Let it read:

And he shall be furnished on demand.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smoke): I had better read the amendment:

And he shall be furnished on demand with such copies in the case of an annual revision of lists as well as of a general registration of electors.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. MacINNIS: Has clause 46, subclause 2, been carried?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am afraid the amendment moved by the hon. member for Quebec South takes away the sense of the subclause. It provides that at an election the candidate shall be entitled to demand so many copies of the list. If the amendment, as I understand it is passed, he will not be entitled to that except at election time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: "Candidate" is defined in the interpretation as a candidate at an election.

On form 7.

Mr. POWER: I am satisfied that this form meets with the requirements.

Form agreed to.

On form 10.

Mr. POWER: In view of the amendments to section 15, this form is now all right.

Form agreed to.

Mr. POWER: I suggested this morning that we draft a form 11a, but as far as I am concerned it is no longer necessary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Section 2 was allowed to stand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that closed lists are all settled now; I can feel the rope tightening around my neck already. And my hon. friends opposite will pull on the rope too. I know exactly what we are confronting, and what it is for. Apparently the house will have to go through one closed list experience in rural areas before they know what it means. I want to warn all on this side that they will have to be prepared to have about three thousands votes more than is necessary to elect them in some ridings in order to have enough to save them from defeat. I know what was done via the closed list route in 1896. It was not always in the law but in the way it was interpreted. The lists were closed two days before the election, but they were not closed to the enumerators. During those two days it was not quite clear what the duties of the enumerator were, but an interpretation came from Ottawa to the Northwest Territories indicating that during that two days the enumerator could still put on the list what names he liked, and then the counterpart of that, he could still take off what names he liked. Good eligible names were taken off wholesale and others put on. It was easy to keep the ineligible from voting by means of active scrutineers, because such would have to be sworn, but those kept off were off. Let me say further, for the benefit of the government, that when you go too far in a matter of this kind it is so badly overdone that the people rebel. Dozens of enumerators refused to act after they learned the nature of the law, showing that in the Tory party there is a lot of fine white men in spite of the official Tories. They refused to act as deputy returning officers when they learned the power of the enumerator and what they were expected to do. They turned in their resignations. A lot of others would not take advantage of the law as interpreted, while some of the others pretty nearly got tarred and feathered when they did take advantage of it. At a number of polls, as soon as we found on election day what was happening and saw what a large number were being disfranchised, we had to send out to the adjoining polls on fast horses all the runners we could get, with advice as to what the government officials were doing to old and eligible voters. The result was that polls that never gave a majority in their lives gave one in 1896 because of the heinous crimes of the government and their officials of that day.

So I am comparatively calm about the matter. There is a sense of justice among the electorate of Canada and I predict that in many districts this government will not be able to find the necessary officials to do the kind of dirty work that they expect them to do.

Section agreed to.

Mr. MacINNIS: This morning I said I wished to draw attention to rule 9 of section 3. This refers to unemployment relief in Canada and provides that no person shall lose his franchise because of time spent in an unemployment relief camp.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smoke): I would remind the hon. gentleman that this clause was carried.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was not in when we began this evening, and the Minister of Justice said this morning he would hold it over.

Mr. POWER: We had to stay here all day to pass these, and I object to any hon. member coming here and saying he wants to go back because he was not here all day. We have been here all day.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was here but I was called out just as we began with this section this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smoke): Order.

Mr. MacINNIS: This is a matter which concerns the unemployed and we could very well give a little time to it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The book is closed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Section 3 was carried, and the title.

On form 30.

Mr. POWER: I think the minister agreed to strike from this form section 4 as well as section 9.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smoke): That is struck out.

Form 30 agreed to.

On form 31.

Mr. POWER: I asked that 31 stand, but I am willing to withdraw my objection now.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is marked "carried" here. Then there is a blank as to the commissioner. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. POWER: Let us finish the elections act.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

The house in committee on Bill No. 115, respecting the election of members of the House of Commons—Mr. Guthrie—Mr. Smoke in the chair.

On section 30—Supply of election materials by returning officer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is one clause I want to discuss for a moment, with regard to sending cards of notification. I have drafted this clause, to be added, if it passes, to section 30 as clause (f):

The chief electoral officer shall also furnish to the returning officer for each electoral district a supply of notification cards equal to the number of voters upon the voters' list for the applicable electoral district, and the returning officer shall cause one of such cards to be mailed to each voter whose name appears upon the said list at the address stated upon said list notifying such voter of the date and place of polling and the polling division for which such voter's name appears upon the voters' list. Such cards shall be mailed not later than the day after the day fixed for nomination and shall be entitled to pass through the mails free of postage. Such notification cards may be in Form No. ....

Form

Electoral district of .....

Take notice that your name appears upon the voters' list for polling division No. ...., in this electoral district.

Polling will take place on the ..... day of ....., 193.., between a.m and p.m.

You are entitled to vote at .....

.....

Returning officer.

Mr. POWER: Did the minister specify that this applies only to urban polling divisions?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, to every polling division in the country.

Mr. POWER: And that the notification shall be given within twenty-four hours after nomination?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The day after nomination. Of course in some ridings—for instance I shall probably get an acclamation and it will not be needed in mine.

Mr. POWER: A third suggestion I should like to make is that the returning officer notify the candidates on both sides as to the cards which have been returned.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I am not cluttering it up in that way. That is too much.

Mr. POWER: I respectfully submit it is not cluttering it up.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He would not get them back until after the election.

Mr. POWER: They would get back the next day in cities. Put it in for urban divisions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When I give an inch you try to take everything.

Mr. POWER: We might as well recognize that the returning officer is to be appointed by this government; he will be a partisan officer, and is very likely to think that his duty is rather to the government than to the state. In cities, and after all that is where it is important, he will know by the cards returned that Mr. So and So, whose address is so and so, has moved from that place, or is dead, or has moved to another address, as the case may be. That returning officer inevitably will give that information to the Tory committee room.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps we had better not insert this provision at all.

Mr. POWER: I would prefer it not to be there at all rather than give an undue advantage to one political party as compared with another. It is one way of checking the lists at government expense. If the same information is given both political parties well and good, but if it is not I think it is an outrage. I believe it is altogether uncalled for to give that advantage of using the mails and the money belonging to the people of Canada to one candidate rather than another. Though I like the suggestion and am quite willing to support my right hon. leader, if it does not work out fairly, equitably and reasonably for all parties then I would prefer that the suggestion be withdrawn.

Mr. MORAND: I think the hon. gentleman is unduly suspicious of the men who will take the oath of office, but it would be very easy to have the postmaster not return these cards until after election day.

Mr. POWER: Then you are up against Tory postmasters; you have fired all the Liberals.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Surely it would be very easy and simple to provide that the returning officer should make available to the candidate or his agent any information he may have as to notices returned for one reason or another. Instead of requiring the returning officer to notify both sides, if that is expecting too much, simply require that the candidate or his agent shall have the right to obtain from the returning officer any information he may have with regard to cards that have been returned. The same information would then be available to both sides. It would not involve any expense.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not wedded to it at all.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Heuri): This is a good thing; it will be helpful to both the electors and the candidate. I believe the principle is sound. In Montreal during municipal elections every man who has his card goes to the polls. There is no canvassing; we are not obliged to go from door to door, and it saves an enormous amount of money to the candidate. If cards are returned they come back to the returning officer. There will not be so many of them if the list has been made properly. If I am the candidate in St. Henri I may find about five hundred cards returned. I try to find where those people have moved; then I give the new addresses to the returning officer, and he has a chance to send the cards out again. In Montreal if you mail a letter by ten o'clock in the morning it may be delivered the same afternoon, due to our efficient service, and if the address is wrong the card will be returned once more. I believe this is a very helpful suggestion, which will save a great deal of money to the candidate. We heard the Secretary of State say that in 1930 he spent $25,000 to be elected in the constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George, so I humbly submit that this is an appropriate remedy, and that it should be easy so to frame the law as to prevent any abuse.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I tried to meet in full, absolutely and completely, the suggestion made by my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition this afternoon. If it is not satisfactory let us drop it.

Mr. POWER: So far as I am concerned, if there is no amendment in the sense I have indicated I propose to vote against it, no matter who proposes it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Many of us feel that it is quite in harmony with the suggestions we made this afternoon. I do not think we should be too suspicious of the returning officers.

Section as amended agreed to on division.

On section 33—Extra polling stations.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There was a discussion this afternoon as to a central polling place in certain parts of Canada which offer certain physical, geographical difficulties; it was felt that if the polling places could be all brought together in the one building, as they do in some places, it would be a great convenience to the residents. The suggested amendment, which would be subsection 8, is as follows:

The returning officer may with the prior permission, and shall upon the direction, of the chief electoral officer, establish in any city or town of not more than ten thousand population a central polling place whereat the polling stations of all or any of the polling divisions of an electoral division may be centralized; and upon the establishment of such central polling place all the provisions of this act shall apply as if every polling station at such central polling place were within the polling division of the electoral district to which it appertains.

This can be done only on the direction of the chief electoral officer.

Mr. POWER: This is in towns of less than ten thousand population?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I believe it applies only in some places in British Columbia.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3—General powers of chief electoral officer.

Mr. POWER: This section stood because of some inquiries I desired to make as to the powers and duties of the clerk of the crown in chancery prior to 1920, but I do not know whether it is worth while going into that. I am willing to let it pass.

Section agreed to.

Section 12 agreed to.

On section 13—Polling divisions with three hundred electors.

Mr. POWER: The suggestion I should like to make to the minister is that instead of a polling station containing as nearly as possible three hundred electors, that number should be reduced to two hundred and fifty. I think perhaps three hundred electors is too many for a polling division. I only make the suggestion; I am not insisting on it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think we had better leave it at three hundred, as it was in the old act.

Section agreed to.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

On section 22—Return when no more candidates than number of members required.

Mr. POWER: This stood only for the purpose of checking up.

Section agreed to.

Mr. POWER: Section 37 has been carried, over my dead body.

On section 38—Effect of presence of name on list of voters.

Mr. POWER: Section 38 stood in order to have it conform to subsection 6 of section 33. I have no objection to it now.

Section agreed to.

On section 46—Manner of voting.

Mr. POWER: Section 46 stood so that the hon. member for Wetaskiwin would have an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We did discuss it.

Section agreed to.

On section 63—Return of election expenses by official agent.

Mr. POWER: That was carried.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That was carried this afternoon.

Mr. POWER: And sections 73 and 74 were carried.

On section 83—Election not voided unless illegal practices by candidates, agent, etc.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What about section 83?

Mr. POWER: Let us go on and finish up, and then come back to section 83. Has that section to do with absentee voting?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, that is farther on.

Mr. POWER: Very well, this section may carry.

Section agreed to.

On section 96—Conditions for voting at advance polls.

Mr. POWER: I think that section is carried.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, we did carry it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was subsection 7 of section 96 carried?

Mr. POWER: I have no amendment to it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The section did not stand, so far as I know.

Section agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a section standing which I should like to discuss.

Mr. POWER: Some forms stood; had we not better discuss them first?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Was section 63 called?

Mr. POWER: Called and carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have an amendment to move, of which I gave notice to-day.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Very well, we will revert to section 63.

On section 63—Return of election expenses by official agent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I move:

That section 63, subsection 1, be amended by adding as subsubsection (f) the following:
"a detailed list of all contributions or stocks of literature, posters or other printed material, or services supplied from any central committee or other organization."

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Amendment negatived.

Section agreed to.

On form 19—Oath of person applying to vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Form 19 refers to the oath. I agree with the suggested amendment. It is:

That after the word "voters" in the third line the following words be added, "that you are a British subject of the full age of twenty-one years."

What about the other part?

Mr. POWER: I was trying to copy the oath which has been in the act for many years. The form in the bill is a new form of oath, and I wished to have it conform as far as possible to the old one.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is the same as it is in the old act.

Mr. POWER: No. If I had a copy of the old act before me I could show that the form of oath therein stated differs radically from the form proposed in this bill. However, I think I can strike some form of oath which will be satisfactory to the minister.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I wanted particularly to insert the words "you are a British subject of the full age of twenty-one years." That is now in.

Mr. POWER: But I have some objection to the remaining part of the form.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The remainder of the form merely states:

That you have not been employed by any person for pay or reward, in reference to this now proceeding election.

Mr. POWER: We never had those words in the former oath.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does not the hon. member think it is a good clause?

Mr. POWER: No, because of the almost unanimous opinion of the committee to-day in connection with that section dealing with employment for pay of persons acting in committee rooms. The feeling of the committee seemed to be that if it was at all possible we should get rid of that provision. Why accentuate it? Do not make it worse than it was. The old oath stated that one was not guilty of any act of bribery or of any corrupt practices. Give us a chance to get away with an oath of some kind, instead of specifying all this hypocrisy.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the oath is all right as it is now amended.

Mr. POWER: Let the sin be on the minister's head, not on mine.

Amendment agreed to.

Form as amended agreed to.

Sections 36, 37 and 38 agreed to.

On schedule two.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Schedule two states the places where advance polls may be established by returning officers. I have had the request that in New Brunswick we add the name McAdam.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is schedule two?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Schedule two. To the Ontario list will be added the names of Brantford, Woodstock and St. Catharines; to the Saskatchewan list the name of Swift Current and to the Quebec list the name of Beauport.

Schedule as amended agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is another important amendment which will have to be discussed; shall I go on with it?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: These amendments provide for absentee voters casting their votes under these closed lists. This point was raised in the committee by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) and there has been considerable discussion over it. We have tried to adopt some of the provisions of the British Columbia act. These will be new sections and their provisions are limited to fishermen, sailors, lumbermen and miners. They will apply to men who are more than twenty-five miles away from home on the date of the election. Such a man will be entitled to go to the nearest polling division and obtain what is known as an absentee ballot. He then takes an oath which is attached to the ballot that he is on the list in some polling division within the province. He will be entitled to cast his vote and at the close of the poll the returning officer will count the absentee ballots and send them to the appropriate division where the man is on the voters' list. If it is found that he is on the voters' list in that poll, his vote will be counted. The machinery to put this into force is quite complicated but I think we have it fairly complete. Therefore, I move:

That Bill No. 115, the Dominon Elections Act, 1934, be amended by inserting, immediately after section ninety-eight, as sections ninety-nine to one hundred and five, inclusive, the following, with Forms No. and No. additional, and that the numbering of subsequent sections of the bill be altered to accord:

99 (1) In the six next following sections of this act the expression—

(a) "absentee voter" means a person, being one of the classes of persons in the next following subsection mentioned, whose name is registered on the list of electors of a polling division of an electoral district and who seeks to vote pursuant to sections ninety-nine to one hundred and four, inclusive, of this act;

(b) "fishermen" means and includes all persons who are engaged or employed in or about any of the processes of fishing as an industry, including sealing and whaling and the operation of fish or marine animal reduction plants;

(c) "lumbermen" means and includes cruisers, loggers, bushmen, sawmill employees and all persons who are engaged or employed in or about any of the processes of lumbering as an industry, including surveying, felling, hauling, driving and milling lumber or timber;

(d) "miners" means and includes prospectors as well as workers in or about mines, and all persons who are engaged or employed in or about any of the processes of mining as an industry, including surface operations, as by washing, hauling, assaying and milling as well as operations underground;

(e) "sailors" means all persons who are engaged or employed in any capacity whatever on board ships or vessels.

(2) The provisions of this section and of sections one hundred to one hundred and four, inclusive, of this act, shall apply only to persons whose regular occupation on polling day is that of lumbermen, fishermen, miners or sailors, as by subsection one of this section defined, and they shall not apply to any person who on polling day is not actually engaged or employed in one of such occupations within the limits of the polling division of the polling station whereat he seeks to vote.

100 (1) Any person who, being an absentee voter within the meaning of subsection one of the next preceding section, is, on polling day at an election, absent at a distance of not less than twenty-five miles from the polling station whereat, if he were there present on that day he would be entitled to vote, and who is not at the time out of the province in which he ordinarily resides and wherein such polling station is situate (whether he is or is not at the time within the electoral district which contains the polling division of such polling station), may, in manner stated in this section, obtain an absentee voter's ballot and poll an absentee voter's vote.

(2) The twenty-five miles mentioned in the next preceding subsection shall be calculated as running along the ordinary route of travel.

101 (1) The manner of polling an absentee voter's vote shall be as follows:

(a) The absentee voter may, at any time while the poll is open on polling day, apply to the deputy returning officer of that polling station which is nearest to the place where the voter is temporarily engaged or employed for leave to poll there an absentee voter's vote.

(b) The deputy returning officer shall thereupon require the absentee voter to sign and depose to an affidavit in Form No. . That Form shall be printed on the back of all absentee voter's ballot papers. That affidavit shall be made before that officer. The ballot paper shall be in Form No. or such other form as the chief electoral officer shall prescribe and direct.

(c) The deputy returning officer shall prepare the ballot paper for the voter by writing with ink on the counterfoil thereof the name of the electoral district to which the ballot appertains and by writing in the ballot with ink the names, residences and occupations of the candidates who, as shown by the printed list of candidates supplied to that officer pursuant to section one hundred and four of this act, have been nominated for the electoral district from which the voter is absent and to which his vote appertains. Only one name, description and occupation of a candidate shall be written in any one space in the ballot paper.

(d) The deputy returning officer shall, before delivering the ballot paper to the absentee voter, fold and seal it, in such manner that the voter's name and signature, as writen in the affidavit, are concealed.

(e) The deputy returning officer shall then deliver the ballot paper to the voter, who shall mark and fold it in the manner provided by section of this act and return it to the deputy returning officer, who shall, in the presence of the voter, and without removing the counterfoil, place it in the ballot box to be thereafter dealt with as in the next following section of this act provided.

(2) If in any case the absentee voter's ballot paper as supplied to the deputy returning officer has not sufficient spaces to contain the names of all the candidates the deputy returning officer shall add, by pasting thereto enough blanks in Form No. 43 to contain all such names. If in any case such ballot paper has more spaces than are required to contain the names of all the candidates the excess spaces shall be left blank.

(3) In the case of an absentee voter who is illiterate, blind or otherwise unable to write his name or mark his ballot the voter may sign by his mark, the deputy returning officer may write the voter's name and the ordinary provisions of this act shall in other respects apply.

102 (1) After the close of the poll, on the counting of the ballots, the deputy returning officer shall separate from the ordinary ballots of his polling station all absentee voters' ballots and segregate the latter into parcels according to the respective electoral districts to which they appertain. He shall unfold and examine that portion of them which shows the name of the electoral district and the names of the candidates and make a list showing the number of votes cast for each candidate in each electoral district. It shall not be necessary for him to enter in such list the names of electoral districts or of candidates in respect of which or of whom no votes have been polled.

(2) After the examination of such ballots and the compilation of such lists the absent voters' ballots shall be refolded by the deputy returning officer so as not to disclose how the voters or any of them have marked such ballots. The deputy returning officer shall then place the absentee voters' ballots which appertain to each electoral district, together with a copy of the above mentioned list in so far as it relates to each electoral district, in separate envelopes, which he shall securely close, marking on the outside the name of the proper electoral district along with the words "Absentee Voters' Ballots," and he shall without delay forward them prepaid, by registered mail, properly addressed, to the returning officers of the electoral districts to which, respectively, they appertain. The deputy returning officer shall place in the ballot box copies of all such lists so mailed and he shall supply copies thereof to any candidate or to the agent of any candidate present who applies for the same. Finally, the deputy returning officer shall send by telegraph, or by the most speedy means available, to the returning officer of each electoral district in respect of which absentee voters' ballots have been polled at his polling station, a statement of the number of votes polled for each candidate as shown by the list prepared pursuant to subsection one of this section.

103. On the making of the final count pursuant to section of this act the returning officer in every electoral district shall open each parcel containing absent voters' ballots received from each deputy returning officer at any time before the completion of the final count, and shall deal with each parcel separately and in the following manner: Without unfolding that portion of the absent voter's ballot paper containing the candidates' names and without disclosing how the ballot paper is marked by the voter, he shall open that portion of the absent voter's ballot paper containing the signature and the affidavit of the voter. After examining each affidavit and finding that it is signed by the deponent and by the deputy returning officer before whom it was sworn, and finding that the deponent is a voter whose name appears on the list of voters for the polling division named in the affidavit, and that no person has in fact voted as such voter at the poll held in the polling division, the returning officer shall detach that portion of the ballot paper containing the names of the candidates from the counterfoil, and shall put the ballot without being opened into a ballot box to be used for the purpose of counting absent voters' ballots, and shall note on the list of voters against the number of the voter the fact that he has voted as an absent voter. If the returning officer finds that the name of the deponent does not appear on the list of voters for the electoral district named in the affidavit, or that some person has in fact voted as such voter at the poll held in the electoral district he shall not count and he shall retain the whole ballot paper unseparated as to any part thereof and unopened as to that portion of the ballot paper containing the candidates' name. After all absent voters' ballot papers have been dealt with, the returning officer shall proceed to count the votes given for each candidate and in his statement showing the result of the election he shall take into account all absentee voters' ballots found by him as aforesaid to be countable.

104 (1) Immediately after the close of nominations on nomination day the returning officer of every electoral district in Canada shall transmit by telegraph to the chief electoral officer the names, addresses and occupations of all candidates whose nominations are in his hands, as these names addresses and occupations will appear on the ballot papers of such returning officer's electoral district. The chief electoral officer shall cause sufficient printed copies of the applicable names, addresses and occupations of candidates to be made to enable every returning officer in every electoral district of Canada to supply to every deputy returning officer in that returning officer's electoral district a list of the names, addresses and occupations of every candidate nominated in every electoral district in the province in which such returning officer's electoral district is situate and of the electoral districts wherein such candidate, respectively, have been nominated.

(2) The chief electoral officer shall, in time to enable performance by returning officers of the provisions of sections ninety-nine to one hundred and five, inclusive, of this act, transmit or cause to be transmitted to all returning officers sufficient copies of lists of names, addresses and occupations of candidates, absentee voters' ballot papers and Forms No. 42 and No. 43 to enable every returning officer to transmit to every deputy returning officer within that returning officer's electoral district (which operation that returning officer shall execute) in time for use on polling day, sufficient copies of such documents for use at and for the purposes of each deputy returning officer's polling station, to enable compliance with sections ninety-nine to one hundred and five, inclusive, of this act.

105. Every provision of this act which can apply to absentee voters and absentee voting as provided for in sections ninety-nine to one hundred and four, inclusive, of this act, shall apply thereto.

Form of absentee voter's ballot paper front

The black line above the first name shall extend to the upper edge, and the black line below the last name shall extend to the lower edge of the ballot paper, and all black lines be prolonged to the edge of the paper.

Now that is a lengthy proposal and the form of the ballot paper in blank is attached. It has been represented to me that in many provinces, particularly in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia, there are frequently large bodies of men engaged in remote places—

Mr. McINTOSH: And Saskatchewan.

Mr. GUTHRIE: —and it is impossible to have them poll their vote without bringing them long distances. This will simply provide that the absentee may vote and his vote may be counted at his own polling division and he may transfer it or vote at the poll nearest to the place where he is working, and anywhere within his own province that vote may be counted if he is on the list. The machinery is pretty intricate, but on the whole I approve of the proposal and I think we should add it to the purposes in respect of the four classes mentioned in the proposal.

Mr. RALSTON: Will the minister look at the definition of miner? It sounded to me as if there was no inclusive class similar to the definition of lumberman.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the hon. member could make it more inclusive I should be glad to hear his proposal. "'Miners' means and includes prospectors as well as workers in or about mines, and all persons who are engaged or employed in or about any of the processes of mining as an industry, including surface operations, as by washing, hauling, assaying and milling as well as operations under ground."

Mr. MacINNIS: I wish to propose an amendment to the amendment. Provision should be made so that men who are in unemployment relief camps will not be deprived of their votes. It is very well known to everyone that men in the relief camps are more than twenty-five miles away from the place in which they are ordinarily registered and it is of little use to give them the right to the franchise unless you provide for their exercising it. I would move therefore that included among those who may vote by use of the absentee ballot there be added persons in any unemployment relief camp.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The section in regard to relief camps has already been carried.

Mr. MacINNIS: No.

Mr. POWER: Not for voting in relief camps.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In relief camps anyone who is a miner or lumberman or sailor or fisherman can vote, I fancy, by the use of the absentee ballot, provided his home is in the province. It could not be taken in British Columbia for use in Halifax, for instance, and he has to be on the list where the vote is counted.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am in sympathy with the purpose of this legislation but it is limited distinctly to four classes of people: fishermen, sailors, lumbermen and miners. These men are undoubtedly in many instances remote from ordinary polling places, but there is another class which is just as important and unfortunately to-day it is very numerous, that is, men engaged in relief camps. We have already recognized this class by making provision that they may be registered in their home districts, but these home districts are sometimes one hundred or two or three hundred miles from the camp in which they are temporarily employed. It is all very well to make provision for their registration, but it is useless unless we give them an opportunity for voting, and there seems no reason why they should be discriminated against. It would be an easy matter for the minister to include as a fifth group those engaged in relief camps. We have already dealt with them in the other act. They are a clearly defined class, and I would ask the minister to add them to the list. It is bad enough for people to be out of work through no fault of their own, but it would be a serious matter if they were in practice disfranchised.

Mr. POWER: With all reserve of rights as to whether we will accept the whole amendment or not, which it is difficult to accept without consideration—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I read it for the purpose of making it public.

Mr. POWER: As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre very well said, we provide for the registration of men on unemployment relief; they are to be registered at the place from which they come before they enter the relief camps. There is no reason, if they are registered, why they should not poll their votes at the place at which they are when an election occurs. If we accept the principle and if it is found there are sufficient safeguards in the amendment as proposed by the minister, there is no reason why that category of person should not be added to the list of those who are to be included as voting as absentee voters.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is, provided they are on the list.

Mr. POWER: That applies to everybody in any case, lumbermen, sailors and everyone else.

Mr. POULIOT: With due reserve, I find the principle of this amendment unsound because a man has a right to vote in his constituency, in the area where he lives, and I do not see why a man should be permitted to vote within the province and outside the constituency in which he lives. This amendment has a strong smell of the War-time Elections Act. It refers to fishermen, miners, sailors and lumbermen. If the ship of state docks at Riviere du Loup wharf with all its crew I am not afraid of it; we can take good care of it. But the principle is most unsound and it is absurd to give men the right to vote outside their constituency in order to fill the boxes with ballots of people who do not live in the constituency in which they vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not inclined to increase the list. In the last twenty-four hours I have heard many demands for increases for school teachers, ministers of the gospel, berry pickers and apple pickers. We have decided that this is a special privilege to the people to whom it has been given and it was in that light our committee discussed the matter.

Mr. MALONEY: I rise to say a word in defence of the old act of 1930. I feel that every citizen of this country, man or woman, who is a British subject and is over the age of twenty-one, should have the right to vote. The old act was not so bad. While this may be better, I cannot see that it is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to the fact that it is now twenty-five minutes to twelve. This house decided that it would adjourn at eleven o'clock. It seems to me that this is stretching the matter almost too far. Evidently we cannot complete this bill to-night.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

FREE CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE IN VIEW OF AMENDMENTS—REPORT OF COMMONS MANAGERS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that a mesage has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate doth insist upon their first, second and third amendments made to Bill No. 89, an act to amend and consolidate the Excise Act, and that the fourth amendment be amended by substituting for paragraph (b) of subclause (2) of new clause 169A, the following:

(b) that he exercised all reasonable care in respect of the person permitted to obtain the possession of such horses, vehicles, vessels or other appliances to satisfy himself that they were not likely to be used contrary to the provisions of this act or, if a mortgagee or lien-holder, that before becoming such mortgagee or lien-holder he exercised such care with respect to the mortgagor or lien-giver.

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue): Referring to the free conference held to-day, on behalf of the managers appointed by the House of Commons at the free conference with the managers appointed by the Senate in respect to amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 89, to amend and consolidate the Excise Act, I beg to present the following report:

Your managers beg to report that they duly held a conference with the managers appointed by the Senate in respect to amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 89, of the House of Commons intituled: "An Act to amend and consolidate the Excise Act" and that the managers of the Senate have agreed to recommend that the Senate do not insist on their fourth amendment but agreed that the same be amended by substituting for paragraph (b) of subsection 2 of new clause 169A, the following:

"(b) that he exercised all reasonable care in respect of the person permitted to obtain the possession of such horses, vehicles, vessels or other appliances to satisfy himself that they were not likely to be used contrary to the provisions of this act or, if a mortgagee or lien-holder, that before becoming such mortgagee or lien-holder he exercised such care with respect to the mortgagor or lien-giver."

I move:

That this house do accept and concur in the first, second and third amendments by the Senate to Bill No. 89, intituled: "An Act to amend and consolidate the Excise Act" and also to the fourth amendment agreed to at the free conference with the Senate, and that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours therewith.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the minister if he would have any objection to making the last amendment retroactive? I ask him that seriously.

Mr. BENNETT: He could not do that.

Motion agreed to on division.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

Saturday, June 30, 1934

The house met at eleven o'clock.

FARMERS'-CREDITORS ACT

NON-INSISTENCE OF SENATE ON AMENDMENT WITH WHICH HOUSE OF COMMONS DISAGREED

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate to the effect that the Senate do not insist on their amendment to Bill No. 92 to facilitate compromises and arrangements between farmers and their creditors, with which the House of Commons disagreed.

PRICE SPREADS AND MASS BUYING

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved, seconded by Mr. Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre) that the third report of the special committee on price spreads and mass buying be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the house more than a moment or two in speaking to this motion. As a matter of fact, my only desire at the moment is to express, as chairman of the committee, my appreciation of the painstaking manner in which all members of the committee, not only attended its sessions most regularly but lent their earnest cooperation to the task undertaken. It was a difficult and exacting task, calling for the closest attention day after day over a period of approximately sixty days, upon most of which two sittings were held. I do not think any chairman ever had more cordial cooperation than I received from the members of the committee, and I desire to express my appreciation of that fact.

However, it became clear to the committee and ultimately was agreed upon unanimously that the work of the committee could not be completed within the period of this session. Consequently, the report which is very brief, asks for the erection of a commission under the Inquiries Act to continue the work of the committee. This recommendation constitutes the report rather than an attempt to make a fairly full analysis of the evidence. As I say, the committee was unanimous in that view. The evidence submitted was most voluminous and both the evidence and the exhibits were of a very technical character. I am quite confident that this evidence will be found most useful and valuable as a basis for the ultimate report as well as for other uses in years to come. I commend this motion to the house for its agreement.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Has the minister any idea as to how long the adjourned investigation will take?

Mr. STEVENS: The time will be considerable because of the amount of work to be done in preparing a report. There will not be an immediate hurry due to the prorogation of the house and it is very difficult to say just what actual time will be occupied by the commission.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is it not unusual to submit an important report like this and then move concurrence on the same day?

Mr. STEVENS: The report was presented yesterday.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have nothing further to say. What does it say?

Mr. STEVENS: Very briefly the report states that the work of the committee has not been completed and asks that the committee be continued as a commission under the Inquiries Act.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): When this commission is appointed, will it investigate the prices charged by the oil companies? Some time ago I asked a question of the minister with regard to the prices charged for fuel oil in Montreal. I pointed out that there was a combine there as well as in the prices charged to the owners of schooners and fishing vessels. I think it would be appropriate to have an investigation carried out along these lines.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Is it the intention of the commission to travel or will it just hold sessions here in Ottawa?

Mr. STEVENS: I am out of order in continuing this discussion. I should like to answer all questions, but I think it would be unwise for me to enter into a sort of committee stage on my own motion.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The question I asked is quite important.

Mr. STEVENS: What my hon. friend says has been noted.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): I have no objection to the adoption of this report to erect a commission to make inquiries after the session is over, but I should like to know if it is the intention of the government to take such action as the evidence discloses might be necessary? Unless we are assured that some action will be taken I see no reason to extend the life of this committee. Could the minister give us some assurance in that regard?

Mr. STEVENS: Once more, with the permission of the house. It is intended to make a very complete study of the evidence, which has not been possible up to the present. A report will be submitted which we hope will prove to be useful, effective and practical.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL—REFUND

Mr. W. W. KENNEDY (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on June 14 I moved:

That as the preamble of Bill No. 10, respecting a certain patent owned by the Firth-Brearley Stainless Steel Syndicate Limited, has been declared not proven as recorded on pages 153 and 160 of the minutes of the proceedings of the Senate of April 25 and 26, 1934, the fees and charges paid on the said bill be refunded less the cost of printing and translation.

Mr. BENNETT: A former Minister of Finance once said that he thought it was undesirable that fees should be remitted under the circumstances indicated in this motion, but inasmuch as the house has proceeded to do so with respect to all the measures that have been declined this session, I have no objection to this being one of the number.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RIVIERE DES ILOTS, NEWPORT, GASPE PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. DUGUAY:

1. Who was the superintendent in charge of works done at Riviere des Ilots, or Newport Islands river, Newport, county of Gaspe, from June, 1928, to December 31, 1930?

2. Who supplied the materials in connection with such works and what was the cost of same?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

(From January 1, 1930 to December 31, 1930)

1. Gregoire Chapados.

2. Alfred LaRocque, smithwork, $25.25; Le Marquand & Sons,, hardware, $10—$35.25.

Note.—The information requested re work at Riviere des Ilots from June, 1928 to January 1, 1930, was tabled in the House of Commons on June 21, 1934, in answer to a similar question for that period.

PRIVATE BILLS

AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDER 93—TIME LIMIT FOR DEPOSIT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That standing order 93 be amended,—

(a) By deleting the following words from section (1): "and if such bill is not deposited by the time above specified, the applicant shall, in addition to the charges for printing and translation, pay the sum of five dollars for each and every day which intervenes between the said first day of the meeting of the house and the date of the filing of the bill; but such additional charge shall not exceed in the aggregate in any one case the sum of one hundred dollars."

(b) By deleting the word "two" from the last line of section (2) and substituting the word "five" therefor.

He said: It is quite clear now that no interest can be affected by the proposed change in the rules that would be brought about by the acceptance by this house of this amendment. Standing order No. 93 reads in part:

(1) Any person desiring to obtain any private bill shall deposit with the clerk of the house, not later than the first day of each session, a copy of such bill in the English or French language, with a sum sufficient to pay for translating and printing the same; the translation to be done by the officers of the house, and the printing by the Department of Public Printing; and if such bill is not deposited by the time above specified, the applicant shall, in addition to the charges for printing and translation, pay the sum of five dollars for each and every day which intervenes between the said first day of the meeting of the house and the date of the filing of the bill; but such additional charge shall not exceed in the aggregate in any one case the sum of one hundred dollars.

(2) After the second reading of a bill, and before its consideration by the committee to which it is referred, the applicant shall in every case pay the cost of printing the act in the statutes, and a fee of two hundred dollars.

It is proposed to endeavour to secure the freedom of this house from the initial consideration of large numbers of private bills by increasing the business that may be presented to the second chamber in the way of private legislation. The effect will be to delete all these words that appear in subsection (1) which I have just read, commencing "and if such bill is not deposited," and to increase the sum charged, when the bill gets second reading, from $200 to $500, the view being that it will afford a larger measure of business to be transacted in the other chamber and free this house from too much time being taken with private legislation, until such time at least as it has been considered elsewhere.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST NARROWS BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask the Minister of Public Works once again whether he can give information with respect to the progress of negotiations affecting the First Narrows bridge in Vancouver.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): The situation is the same as when my hon. friend made his last inquiry—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No progress.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —but after the house rises I shall have the matter brought to the attention of council and I hope disposed of speedily.

AUSTRALIAN WHEAT AND FLOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a dispatch which appears in this morning's papers to the effect that the steamship Pennland is sailing from Southampton to-day for Halifax with a shipment of over 400,000 pounds of Australian flour. Is the minister aware of that, and has he an explanation?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not seen the dispatch but I will take notice of what my hon. friend says.

Mr. YOUNG: In regard to the shipment of Australian flour to Canada, I wonder whether the minister is aware that the millers of England are advertising flour made from soft Australian wheat for sale in Canada, and that the British millers are objecting that if this kind of flour is shut out of Canada they will shut out of Britain Canadian flour made from Canadian wheat.

Mr. STEVENS: I will also take notice of what the hon. member for Weyburn says.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce stop the importation of Australian flour until the three months necessary notice has expired?

Mr. STEVENS: That is under the control of the agreement—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then it cannot be stopped for three months.

Mr. STEVENS: —and the terms of the agreement will be observed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

BRANCH LINE CONSTRUCTION IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): The Minister of Railways, in a debate in the house about two months ago, said that he would have a statement to make with regard to Canadian National Railways branch line construction in western Canada. I wonder whether he could make a statement in that regard to-day.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): I think the hon. gentleman misinterpreted my words. I said that when the estimates of the Canadian National Railways were being discussed by the special committee the whole matter could be discussed, but no one brought it up. The officers were here and my hon. friend could have appeared and brought the matter up, but he did not do so, and consequently I have no statement to make.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): I have a question to ask the Prime Minister. Will concurrence in the last civil service committee's report be moved at this session, and, if not, will the right hon. gentleman indicate why.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The answer is no.

RADIO BROADCASTING

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. 126, respecting radio broadcasting.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I rise, not to object to the third reading of this bill but once more to bring to the attention of the government, and possibly by my words in this house at the moment, to the attention of the radio commission as well, the importance of some arrangement being made before a general election which will insure impartiality in the use of the radio as between different political parties. I mentioned the matter yesterday and I am not sure whether the government has included any provision in the Elections Act itself. It may be difficult so to arrange.

On the other hand, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) may be in a position to make a statement to the house as to what the country might expect in that regard. Personally I feel that the radio to-day plays such an important part in all matters affecting public opinion that it would be quite proper that some provision should be made whereby, for example, each political party which has a representative following should be entitled to have broadcast at the expense of the state one or two addresses which would set forth its platform or policies before the people. That I believe is the custom in Great Britain itself and it might well be followed here. Apart from that I think there ought to be some definite understanding that radio where it is to be used for political purposes will be used in a manner which will not give to one party which may happen to have more in the way of financial backing than other parties, a larger use of that national instrument. The radio to-day is a national instrument and the necessity for its use impartially as between different parties that are appealing for public support on matters of public policy is only too obvious. I hope the government has not overlooked making provision in the election measure which we will be discussing later in the day and that the Prime Minister will, either now or later on, make a statement to the house on the matter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which the right hon. gentleman has directed attention is one of very great importance. At the last federal general election it will be recalled that the Canadian National Railways had the largest measure of facilities for use in broadcasting and perhaps he will recall that lots were drawn for periods of time that would be used, with the exception that as Prime Minister he was to have the right to close, as he did. I was a party to that arrangement which I thought not an unfair one. I thought it was the proper thing to do; I said so at the time and I say so now.

My attention was forcibly directed to what the right hon. gentleman is now discussing during the progress of the recent election in Ontario when the facilities to a very considerable extent of some private enterprises were in the hands of one party and another had certain facilities of another kind. As there is no complete nationalization of radio broadcasting facilities, the right hon. gentleman will realize that the extent of the supervision or control that can be exercised by the broadcasting commission becomes of course of the utmost importance. There are complaints made against the commission if it says that the particular radio facilities at, we will say "X" town, should not be utilized continuously by one political party and that opportunity should be afforded for another party also to use them. That is not easily disposed of by the radio commission and I assure the right hon. gentleman that I agree with him that something will have to be done to prevent any abuses or cause for complaint that the radio facilities are placed by contract or otherwise at the disposal of one party to the exclusion of others, and that some opportunity must be given to all to place their case before the electors. Just how this may be accomplished I am not at the moment fully advised because the situation in Canada is not like that in England where the commission owns and controls the entire distribution, so to speak, through the air. Although in this country they have the power to control, they do not own the facilities through which the control can be exercised. I have every reason to believe and I can assure the right hon. gentleman that nothing will be done that will permit of any such abuse as he suggests. My personal opinion is, having regard to the satisfactory manner in which we disposed of the matter at the last federal general election, possibly some similar arrangement can be made. Whether or not that is possible is a matter on which I am not in a position to express any definite opinion. I can only assure the house that so far as the influence of the government may be able to control the broadcasting commission, no such difficulties as those to which the right hon. gentleman has referred will be permitted to arise.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, just a word. I quite realize that in privately owned stations, though they are to some extent under the control of the commission, it would be difficult to arrange in a definite way to apportion the time among the various political parties; but so far as the program of the commission itself, I mean the national hook-up, is concerned, it is very easy and I think it would be only fair for the commission to divide the time equally, or at least to give the same measure of justice to the various parties for national broadcasts of political discussions. I wish, as my right hon. leader has done, especially to direct the matter to the attention of the commission.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, might I suggest that when the matter is under discussion it be considered that at least two of those broadcasts, that is, one at the opening of the campaign and one at the close of it, be given free of charge to the various parties.

Mr. BENNETT: That costs the country money, you see. That is the point.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I quite appreciate that, but the matter is so important it seems those are two broadcasts that the country could well afford to take care of. We are in the Elections Act trying, as the lists are to be closed, to have so far as possible fall upon the country the costs that formerly to a great extent fell upon members of parliament.

Mr. MANION: To how many different parties?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would not discriminate against parties.

Mr. MANION: To how many?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There should be some understanding as to that but I would not say that any individual who calls himself a party should be given the privilege; I would not suggest that.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I would say that where stations are nationally owned there should not be any very great practical difficulty in working out some sort of scheme whereby it would be ensured that the different parties had equitable treatment in the matter of broadcasting during elections. But I rose to say this with regard to stations that are privately owned; when one considers the fact that these privately owned stations are in the nature of a monopoly granted by the government of Canada I do not think it would be at all unfair to put into the act or regulations something which would regulate them so that they could not abuse the privileges they have in the interests of any one political party.

Mr. BENNETT: That was what I was saying a moment ago.

Mr. EULER: I have heard of cases where one political party took the broadcasting of a privately owned station for two weeks with the express intention of shutting out their political opponents. That should not be tolerated in view of the fact that this is a monopoly which is conferred by the government of the dominion. Something should very properly be done with regard to that.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, I think from the slight experience I have had in connection with the radio and as organizer of a political campaign, political parties have that characteristic which is traditionally attributed to women in that all political parties wish to have the last word. On the occasion to which I refer when I was interested in this matter I found little or no difficulty in arriving at an arrangement with the opposite political party, even though the principal station in the district was owned by Conservatives. For instance, as is well known to this house, Sundays are the great speaking days throughout the province of Quebec, and it was arranged that if one party had Sunday afternoon on the radio the other party should have Sunday evening. But when it came to the last word on the last night, then the difficulty arose. The owner of the radio station in his loyalty to his party insisted that the Conservatives should have from ten to twelve o'clock on the very last night. I do not know how we could get over that difficulty.

Mr. MANION: What good did it do?

Mr. POWER: The Conservatives had the last word, the electors spoke the next day.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): May I be permitted a word along the line of the remarks made by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler)? I found some difficulty myself at the time of the last election. I communicated with one station in Quebec city asking to be favoured in having the use of the station to speak to my electors on the north shore. I wrote a letter to the party at the head of that concern but never got an answer, with the result that I did not get the use of the station although

I offered to pay for it, and the people of the opposite party got it and used it to speak as much as they liked.

Mr. MANION: You did not need it, you are here.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I was told, I do not know if the information is right, that the people opposing me, more especially the candidate, were more friendly than I was to the institution, and he got the use of the radio and I did not.

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): I am not desirous of challenging the statement of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) but I feel I am correct in saying that during the 1930 election there was no station in Quebec city of sufficiently high power to enable his beloved electors to hear him from there. Therefore I am sure he was not refused access to the Quebec stations, because even had they been at his disposal none of his electors would have been able to receive the broadcast.

With respect to what the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) has said, I say it is absolutely unfair to expect that the commission shall make broadcasting facilities available to political parties without any charge. As long as the House of Commons will not be public-spirited enough to vote the necessary money to the radio commission in order that proper facilities be afforded to the general public we ought not to expect them to give facilities for election speeches free. We have had many by-elections since 1930, and lately we have had general elections in two provinces. I think it is fair that it should be stated in this house that no complaints have been made against the commission as to what took place in Ontario, for instance. I was just speaking yesterday with Colonel Steel, who is in charge of broadcasting, and he told me he had received no complaint, therefore I think we can say that there was fairness to all political parties.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) stated that no radio station in the district of Quebec would have been able to reach the people in my district. My opponent who comes from Quebec city—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CASGRAIN: —spoke over the radio in that city and I heard him myself addressing the people in my riding.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is not a question of privilege at all.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): It must be gratifying to the house to find itself in such fairly close agreement on this matter of the use of radio facilities for election purposes. I appreciate very much the generous attitude that has been taken by the leaders of both the major political parties. I hope they will see to it that there is justice for all political parties in the use of radio. The one to which I happen to belong is not possessed of the necessary funds to undertake any extensive use of the radio, and in all probability it will be confined pretty much to local stations. I would like to direct the attention of the government and the leader of the opposition tc the fact that the total cost of election of all the members from the province of Alberta who sit in this section of the house did not exceed that of two national chain hook-ups It is out of the question for us to finance that sort of thing. I agree with the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) and approve of the suggestion he made. I disagree with the attitude of the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon), who, I think, has not given this matter the consideration he usually gives to such questions. After due consideration I am satisfied that he would accept as fair the idea that there should be one national broadcast at the beginning of the election campaign when the manifestoes of the three parties are put on the air, and there should be one at the close of the campaign from the major parties in the country. I believe those broadcasts should be free of charge to the parties concerned. I have no objection to the house entering into an arrangement for defraying any necessary overhead caused to the commission, but I do approve of the proposal that there should be a free initial broadcast and a free closing broadcast for all major political parties.

Hon. R. D. MORAND (East Essex): I wish to put myself definitely on record against any free use of the radio during election campaigns. If we wish to preserve nationalization of radio we must realize that in doing that you come in competition definitely with private business in the way of newspapers, and I do not see how you can expect to use the national radio in competition with other publicity agencies. In the United States I am advised that they have a rule for private stations whereby when a station gives a certain length of time to one party a similar length of time must be offered to the other party or parties. I think that idea might be looked into in making rules for both privately or publicly owned stations

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): This radio commission is another wart on the government. The government is shifting its responsibility in all ways. Last year when I asked the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) if he had any control over the radio commission I was very sorry when he answered, "Well, I do not know," He should have direct control.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I beg your pardon, I never made any such answer.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, the hon. minister made a normal reply, he did not say yes, he did not say no. Gentilment le Normand repond: "Ça me dit pas oui; ça me dit pas non." That was the answer of the hon. gentleman. I think he should have direct control over the radio commission, and the radio commission should be responsible through him to this house. That is my humble view. It would save a lot of difficulty and trouble. Therefore I am against the extension of the powers of the radio commission. It is the more necessary for the hon. gentleman to have direct control over the radio commission because it will save the Prime Minister a lot of trouble. When people work radio cross word puzzles and are unsuccessful they write to the Prime Minister's office and the Prime Minister directs his secretary to answer them: "What is the right answer?" Why do they waste the time of the right hon. gentleman? I have upstairs in my file an original letter sent by the Prime Minister's office telling a man in Montreal how he should do the radio cross word puzzle. I think the Prime Minister has enough to do in ending unemployment and bringing back prosperity without worrying himself about such childishness. If the Minister of Marine had control over radio and the people knew that, they would write him, and I know the minister would be a good enough business man to tell his secretary to refer all those people to Mr. Charlesworth and the secretary of the radio commission.

I am against the extension of these powers, first as a matter of principle and in the second place in order to give the Prime Minister a chance to look after the affairs of the country instead of wasting his time answering such futile questions.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): The question of direct control of the minister over the radio commission is a very much debated question in this country. Hon. members know very well that when the question of nationalizing radio broadcasting was brought up the associations requesting nationalization were strong in their demand that the radio commission should be absolutely free from political control, and I think everybody will admit that since this commission has been in operation it has been absolutely free from such control. I defy my hon. friends to show any instance where the party on this side of the house received preferred treatment from the radio commission. I may say that we were unable to broadcast some of our meetings over the commission's stations because of the tremendous cost. The commission represented that they had to make large disbursements for the use of telephone lines throughout the country, amounting to practically $1,000 an hour for a coast to coast broadcast.

I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite can complain of being ill treated in this regard. We have heard them over the radio so many times in the last two years that I think they have had the preferred treatment. That has been so much the case that to-day in Montreal when my hon. friends opposite have a broadcast on the air the radio owners tune in something else.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to ask the Prime Minister one question arising out of what he said a moment ago. I quite agree that in federal elections the Prime Minister should have the last word over the radio on any national broadcast, but I wonder if he would tell me how, not being a member of the legislature, he succeeded in having the last word in the recent provincial campaign.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman is in error; I did not have the last word. The last word, over another radio altogether, was said by the gentleman who is now the premier-elect of the province of Ontario.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 27, consideration in committee of Bill No. 124, to amend the Customs Act—Mr. Matthews—Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Governor in council may order that excise duties and taxes be disregarded.

Mr. DONNELLY: Would the minister tell us what articles come under this section?

Mr. MATTHEWS: I may say that gasoline is one of the principal items.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

Hon. R. C. MATTHEWS (Minister of National Revenue) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 125, to amend the customs tariff.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

On section 1—Governor in council may order that excise duties and taxes be disregarded in certain other cases.

Mr. DONNELLY: Apparently this bill is going to do away with some of the excise taxes that have been charged in the past, and I refer particularly to the matter of gasoline. In the fall of 1932, some time about November 9, I brought up this matter in the house and said that while we were taking off the dumping duty we were still charging the excise tax, which amounted to one and a quarter cents per gallon on gasoline. Shortly afterwards the Minister of National Revenue made a long speech in which he tried to make out that this tax did not amount to very much anyway. It does amount to one and a quarter cents per imperial gallon, which now, apparently, is to be done away with.

I do not object to that at all; I am glad it is being done, but I think the tariff on gasoline is still too high. I have in my possession a way bill covering a tank car of gasoline brought into western Canada from the United States. This tank car came to a place called Wilcox. The cost of the gasoline at the refinery was $305; the duty was $299.77. In other words, practically speaking there was a difference of only $6 between the cost of the gasoline and the duty imposed. The price of gasoline is one of the factors which go to make up the cost of production in western Canada. I may say that there is no single factor which has entered into the cost of wheat production and the production of other grain to any greater extent than has the cost of this commodity. Many of our farmers in the dried out areas are unable to get feed to feed their horses and cattle, and for that reason they are farming with gasoline tractors. Because of the high price of fuel they are farming at a disadvantage, as compared with those people who are doing their work with horses. Even after paying the enormous duty, which was equal to the original price, the gasoline could be laid down at Wilcox at a price of 18·9 cents per gallon, whereas the cheapest the farmers can buy gasoline from the Imperial Oil Company at Regina, laid down at Wilcox, is 19·7 cents. In other words, they were taking full advantage of the duty, and charging more for gasoline than the price at which it could be imported.

These conditions should be rectified. The duty of 2½ cents a gallon is ridiculous, and the excise tax of an additional 3 per cent results in a great injustice. The investigation we had last year into the prices of gasoline disclosed that the manufacture of gasoline cost less than one cent a gallon. The people in western Canada are paying 47 cents freight per hundred pounds for crude oil brought in from Tulsa, Oklahoma, and the freight rate on gasoline from that point runs up to $1.40 per hundred pounds. The oil companies in Canada take advantage of the 2½ cents duty and 3 per cent excise tax, and yet the farmers can import gasoline after paying all the duty and enormous freight cheaper than they can buy it in Regina at the present time. I say that the duties on gasoline are ridiculous.

I know of a company in Regina called the Highway Gas Company. It began operations, by bringing in crude oil from the Tulsa oil fields as well as from Alberta. At the end of ten months operations that company was in a position, selling gasoline 4 cents per gallon below the price asked by the Imperial Oil Company, to declare a profit of 8 per cent, a special bonus of 5 per cent, and to buy back 20 per cent of its preferred shares. In other words, it had a profit of 33⅓ per cent in a ten month period, by selling gasoline at a price 4 cents lower than that asked by the Imperial Oil Company. This company was a thorn in the flesh of the Imperial Oil Company. After trying to get rid of the independent companies by competitive prices and one thing and another, last spring an agent came from Chicago—he was supposed to be an independent agent—to buy the independent refiners. He went to one company, the plant of which was valued at $39,000, and paid $125,000 for it. In order to get their money back, the next day they shot up the prices on distillate 4 cents a gallon, and the farmers had to pay for the excess price paid for the refinery. The same thing happened in Montreal in connection with an independent refinery, known as the LaSalle Company. Three companies, formed a subsidiary company and had a man named Todd, buy the small companies in Montreal. The head of the LaSalle Company was given a job at an enormous salary, and has nothing to do. He was recompensed in that way for selling out. The price of gasoline in Montreal was immediately raised. The excise tax of one cent a wine gallon, which amounts to 1¼ cents an imperial gallon should be taken away, and the duty on gasoline should be reduced to about one cent a gallon. A protection of 2½ cents is given, and they have the further protection of the 3 per cent excise tax. I say that this matter of gasoline prices should be investigated by the committee which up until a few days ago was sitting, and which proposes to sit after prorogation.

There is no one factor which affects our western farmers to-day more than does the price of gasoline. It affects every man who drives a small car, who has a gasoline engine or any other machinery operated in that way. I brought this matter to the minister's attention two years ago. At that time he tried to side-step the issue. Again, to-day I bring it to his attention. There was an investigation into gasoline prices, and we had all the facts before us. Some hon. members on this side tried to bring the matter before the house for discussion, but we did not have the opportunity. We were voted down, solidly, by the present government. To a man, they voted against having the gasoline situation aired, and given to the public. This is a matter of vital importance. I should like to know what other articles may be affected by this measure. There must be another long list of articles to which the federal excise tax refers. I believe it refers to cylinder oil, and I should like to know from the minister if I am correct in my assumption.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to concur in the remarks—

Mr. DONNELLY: Let the minister answer.

Mr. MATTHEWS: In reply may I say that the bill refers to any article subject to excise tax in the country of export.

Mr. DONNELLY: I should like to know the names of the articles. Name some of them. Does it refer to cylinder oil?

Mr. MATTHEWS: It refers to any article upon which another government may impose a domestic tax. We have no control over that.

Mr. DONNELLY: Has the American government a federal excise tax on cylinder oil?

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am sorry, but I cannot give my hon. friend that information.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

Mr. DONNELLY: When speaking to the former Minister of National Revenue I said that it did refer to cylinder oil. This matter was brought up in 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: If it does, it does.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Willow Bunch. I have raised my voice very often this session to urge upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce to have the price spreads and mass buying committee carry on an investigation along the lines mentioned by the hon. member who has just spoken. The price spreads commission should consider the prices our farmers and fishermen have to pay for gasoline. Not only the farmers in the prairie provinces, but the fishermen and owners of schooners and other vessels in the province of Quebec and in the maritimes are affected. I say that the prices paid by these people for gasoline and oil are too high. Many people in my constituency have made representations along those lines, and have asked me to bring the matter to the attention of the house in order to see what can be done. I think the government would be well advised to follow the suggestion made by the hon. member for Willow Bunch to have gasoline prices investigated by the price spreads commission.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is something radically wrong with the sale of gasoline in Canada. Whether or not the remedy is to wipe out the tariff altogether, I cannot say. Last fall when I left Edmonton I paid 36 cents per gallon for gasoline. I made inquiries and discovered that it costs no more to deliver gasoline in Edmonton than to deliver it in Ottawa. Yet, when I arrived in Ottawa only two or three days later, the retail price was 9½ cents lower. There is certainly something wrong when the gasoline consumers in western Canada are called upon to pay such exorbitant prices. There is no difference in the cost of transportation from the oil fields.

Mr. MATTHEWS: This measure should lower the cost.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I agree that it should; but when you are doing it, wipe it out altogether.

Mr. MANION: Is the provincial tax in Alberta higher than it is in Ontario?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, it is the same—6 cents per gallon. The fact is that in western Canada we have had to pay between 7 and 10 cents a gallon more than the people in eastern Canada have had to pay.

At the present time in this city there is a gasoline war in progress, and we buy our gas 5 or 6 cents a gallon cheaper. That has happened three or four times previously. I say these companies are not entitled to protection of any sort; they should not have a particle of protection. The way they are going after the public in Canada is an outrage and a disgrace.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am afraid my hon. friend was not quite right when he said that this party as a party voted down that suggestion.

Mr. DONNELLY: Every member of the Conservative party voted against it.

Mr. MATTHEWS: The hon. member knows very well that his statement is not quite right.

Mr. DONNELLY: I should like to know who on the Conservative side voted for it.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Hon. members on the other side voted against it.

Mr. DONNELLY: That does not make any difference. Every hon. member on the Conservative side voted against having these gasoline prices exposed.

Mr. MATTHEWS: My hon. friend did not say that it was moved and seconded on that side of the house.

Mr. BROWN: We will attend to that.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 127, to amend the Pension Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

On section 1—

Mr. BENNETT: Several difficulties have arisen in connection with this act, to which the attention of the house has been directed on more than one occasion by several hon. members, noticeably by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). A difficulty arose some months ago and the government concluded that men were being deprived of rights without an opportunity to present their case in accordance with the well-known principle which has been established by judicial decisions in the courts of last resort. We felt that it was illegal to deprive a man of his rights without affording him an opportunity to be heard, and we so indicated to the commission. As is known to the committee, they ultimately undertook to restore to their former positions those whose rights had been taken from them and proceedings or hearings were instituted to enable the parties affected to present their cases. I understand that that has not been wholly satisfactory because of an attitude of mind, if I may use that term, which existed with respect to some of the problems. I have had the advantage of discussing this matter fully with those who officially represent the pensioners of the country in more than one of the organizations which we have in Canada. They are all anxious to avoid friction as much as possible and to improve the administration of pensions to the greatest possible extent. It is believed that with the aid of a judge acting as chief commissioner and the application of the well-known rule that he who asserts must prove the administration would be relieved of much of the difficulty which now exists. We could not have a long discussion with respect to various cases which might be misunderstood in many quarters, but we have concluded that the situation might be met by endeavouring to deal with the difficult cases in the manner I have indicated and by the application of the general rule of our jurisprudence. I have mentioned that he who asserts must prove, and that the presumptions which arise from a long-continued living together in a community of a man and a woman of repute could not be overcome except by the application of the rules of evidence as applied in the way I have just indicated. This cannot continue longer than a few months in any event, and it is believed that it affords an opportunity by administration to solve the difficulties which have been the cause of a great deal of concern. I should like to convey my thanks to the hon. gentlemen I have named for giving me an opportunity to discuss this matter with them.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Mr. Chairman, I have only a word or two to say with regard to this bill. I am personally in favour of the bill. My only reservation is the fact that on February 13 when this question was raised we received an announcement by the Prime Minister which was welcomed all through Canada. This matter was referred to the Department of Justice to see whether the hardships which resulted from a too rigid administration of the act could be met by administration or whether legislation would be necessary. It has been suggested in many quarters that legislation might be necessary. There will be an interval of at least six or seven months, in all probability, before parliament meets again, and the suggestion has been made to me that possibly the act could be amended to provide that where entitlement has once been conceded, this should not be subject to alteration or reversal except on the specific ground of deliberate fraud. This would protect the marriage cases which have merit and which now stand as reinstated. It would also provide protection for all classes of entitlement cases in the future. This proposal is directly in line with the British practice and the rights of the applicant, of course, would stand as they are at present.

There is another point which has arisen and which has caused some elements of dissatisfaction. I think there should be a definite delineation of the functions of the auditor general in regard to pensions. It should be made clear that findings of law or fact within the statutory jurisdiction conferred upon the commission should not be subject to question by the auditor general. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has referred to the attitude of mind of some people, and this undoubtedly has caused some trouble. In regard to other cases which arose somewhat recently a direction was given as to the policy of the pensions commission, and I think it would be very advisable in this case that a direction should be given to whoever is appointed under the bill to give these marriage cases every possible consideration upon their merits, and that there should not be an unduly biased attitude of mind with regard to their disposal.

Mr. RALSTON: Like the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) I am disposed to try the method of administration. I must say that I do so with some reluctance as I have expressed myself in this house on more than one occasion as feeling that that means could not be entirely satisfactory, particularly for the class whose interest I was specially representing, until a change can be made in the Pension Act. It seemed to me that in view of the fact that the attitude of the board of pension commissioners was what it was, plus the fact that the auditor general had seemed to consider he had a right to go there and question decisions of the board, the position of pensioners and of their dependents was extremely precarious under any administrative regulations. However, the Prime Minister has endeavoured to meet the situation with regard to the matter of personnel and I am disposed, if there is any difficulty about passing legislation, or if it is considered that legislation is not necessary, to try out an attempted revision of administration—and by administration I mean, not simply clerical work but the principles on which these pension cases are decided. I join with what my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre has said in suggesting to the Prime Minister that, in order to make the situation as definite as possible without legislation, the government or the minister indicate to the board of pension commissioners the principles on which they are prepared to have the board decide, particularly the marriage cases, and in fact any cases where there is a question as to the basis of entitlement. I suggested, in connection with the commission with which I had to do a good many years ago, that there should be no difficulty whatever in regard to these pension cases, because it seemed to me that the board of pension commissioners were pretty well advised as to what the views of parliament and of the country were, and that when they struck a snag in connection with the act, all they had to do was to go to the government of the day and intimate to them that something unforeseen, something not contemplated had arisen, and I felt sure they would have directions from the government to carry out administratively what was the intention of parliament, leaving it to the next session of parliament to amend the act. That, I submit, can be done here, and if the board of pension commissioners approach the matter in the right spirit, guided by a declaration as to the intention of parliament as we understand it, namely, that entitlement to pension should not be disturbed in cases where they have been paid, unless there has been deliberate fraud, then it seems to me that with that declaration the board of pension commissioners can proceed on firm ground. And if it is found in administering the act that there are cases in which there is too much generosity, that can be easily dealt with when parliament meets. I rather believe, however, that the trouble will have been settled if the principle I suggest is adopted, and it will be found that we have been doing just exactly what parliament intended and what the people of the country desire. Therefore, with that understanding, I accept the amendment which is proposed in this act and I am willing to accept the Prime Minister's suggestion that an attempt be made to carry out the Pension Act and deal by way of administrative action with the cases in connection with which there has been hardship. Subject to these two reservations I accept the Prime Minister's suggestion, two reservations with which I think the Prime Minister will agree: The first is that there should be a definite declaration by the government or the board as to the principles on which they are expected to proceed in connection with any proposal to change the basis of entitlement, and secondly, if that administration does not result satisfactorily between now and next session, that the act be amended accordingly and made retroactive.

Mr. ROSS: I support some of the statements just made. If the Prime Minister had been at home at the time I brought this matter to the attention of the government last November and December, pointing out to them that a campaign was under way along this line, perhaps a good deal of suffering and injustice might have been prevented. But the acting Prime Minister at that time said to me that no action could be taken nor any change made. There is another matter to be considered in addition to the marriage question, and that is the practice of going back on medical records to discover some little point on which they can upset a pension. I might bring to the attention of the Prime Minister one example. A certain ex-service man had received a pension for epilepsy. In reviewing the case an official of the board found that he had suffered from dizziness when eleven years old and therefore it was decided that his pension for epilepsy must be discontinued. There is nothing more ridiculous in the whole history of pensions than that example, but it is only one of very many. I trust that, as the last speaker said, a declaration will be made by the government, or a gesture from this House of Commons, which will bring about a different attitude of mind towards the treatment of these cases.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In common with other hon. members who have spoken, and having been made familiar with the situation, I had hoped for and looked forward to the introduction of some specific legislation to correct the point at issue. I realized however that that might be very difficult and further that it was the almost unanimous opinion of returned men's associations and of this house that the legislation itself as at present on the statutes was fairly just and satisfactory, the question being rather one of administration. That being so, I am prepared to accept the present amendment, trusting that a change in administration in these respects will bring about the results for which we have been looking. I do not think there is any question, from expressions of opinion in this house from time to time, as to the general view of parliament on these matters and the feeling that this law should be interpreted and administered in a reasonably sympathetic manner and not in a manner which would open it wide to unreasonable application. What is needed is a sympathetic interpretation in accordance with the intent of the various committees of parliament that have studied the subject and of parliament itself as a whole, and that intent as expressed by different members leaves no room for doubt in the matter. I assume that these peculiar cases, where they have been in good standing for many years and where recently a change has been made or suggested without additional evidence having been adduced, and in regard to which the attitude of the pension board has been so strongly criticized, will be dealt with by the acting chairman and dealt with, I hope, in a sympathetic manner in accordance with what I conceive to be the obvious intent of parliament, expressed so frequently in committee and in the house, as to the real meaning of the act. If that is done, I think the bulk of the trouble will be obviated. And if we then find that administration alone, however sympathetic or judicially proper, does not serve to correct one or two difficulties that still remain, it will be time at the next session for an amending act to be introduced which will put the matter completely beyond doubt. In the meantime, with others, I am prepared to accept the amendment in the hope, shared by all including the Prime Minister, that these various matters of discontent will be satisfactorily dealt with and that our pension legislation and administration will be placed on a proper and sure foundation.

Mr. VENIOT: Might I be permitted, before this goes through, to say that I agree with the suggestion made to try to remedy the abuses in the administration of the Pension Act? But from my experience before the pension commission in numerous cases, I do not believe we should wholly blame the pension commissioners. If we look carefully into the matter we shall find that the medical boards outside Ottawa, established in the different provinces, are greatly to blame for the way in which they make their reports. I have a case in point where a certain medical board—I do not want to give any names—have had a case outstanding before them for several years. This applicant, who has been receiving a small pension and who is applying for a larger one, they have trotted back and forth from one medical board to another and from one province to another and the reports are so conflicting that it is almost impossible for the commission to reach an honest and proper decision in the matter. I wish to state right now that my experience in connection with certain medical boards in the dominion has been that they are not doing justice to themselves nor to the applicants. I know of the case of an applicant who after travelling all night and all day, gets before a medical board at ten o'clock in the morning and is not attended to until three or four o'clock in the afternoon. When he gets there in the morning, there are no doctors present although there should be, and that man is kept waiting, without anything to eat, until two or three o'clock in the afternoon. Then, instead of giving him a full medical examination, they merely talk to him, discuss his case with him and then send him away. After this a report goes in that there is nothing wrong with the man.

I know of several cases and I have the facts in regard to one under my hand. This man was sent from a medical board in New Brunswick to a medical board in Quebec. The minute he got to the latter place he was put into a cell for mental cases although according to the report of the medical board in New Brunswick there was absolutely no sign of any such trouble. For three days he was kept in a cell with iron bars across the window and without seeing a doctor. The nurse in charge took pity on him and pleaded that a doctor be brought to attend him. Then when the report was sent back there was a great deal of doubt as to the hysteria from which it was claimed this man was suffering. This man went back to his native province and since that time he has passed a couple of medical boards. He went before a medical board; he was taken in and after two or three days he was told to go back because there was no room for him; there were others to come in and he had to go home. As he required treatment he had to go to a private hospital and employ a doctor to attend to him. Instead of the pension hospital doing this work, this doctor gave him hospital attention free. I have absolute proof of this; I know whereof I speak; I have the record of the doctor who attended to this man in the private hospital and this doctor is one of the leading physicians of the province in which this medical board sits to-day. I have reported those facts to the commission; I was before the commission yesterday; I looked over the reports and when I drew the attention of the doctors on the commission to the record of this case and they reviewed it, they did not know what to say about the matter. They were surprised to find that the case under examination revealed such a condition of affairs. Therefore I say that the commission at Ottawa is not always to blame for what are called injustices to the returned men. We must have a reorganization of the medical boards in the different sections of the dominion in order that at those medical boards those returned men will get at least a modicum of fair play and not be treated as they have been.

Mr. MacLAREN: Would the hon. member for Gloucester kindly furnish me with the names so that the case that he cites may be considered?

Mr. VENIOT: I gave the names to the board of pension commissioners yesterday and in doing that I thought I had done my duty. I am not going to go any further.

Mr. MacLAREN: Will he not also furnish the minister with the names because it is impossible to make any investigations into complaints and into that case until full particulars are available.

Mr. VENIOT: I am endeavouring to give fair play to the board of pension commissioners at Ottawa; they are not always to blame.

Mr. MacLAREN: I am not reflecting on my hon. friend, but I am asking that I be given an opportunity to look into this case personally and I can do so only if he will kindly let me have the names.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ralston) to know I have taken up with the auditor general the questions to which he has referred. The auditor general directed my attention to the fact that under one of the provisions of the Audit Act he is entitled to make inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining whether he is warranted in issuing his cheques. He gave me a number of cases which I in turn reported to the commission and which were cases that went back to the very start of the commission and possibly the basis of entitlement was not quite as clear then as it is now. But I endeavoured to point out to the auditor general that I did not think his function was to determine the sufficiency of the evidence on which entitlement was predicated but rather that it was whether or not a judgment was arrived at and if so he had reason to feel that he had satisfied himself that the country was properly paying the pension in question until further action was taken by someone else.

There is one other case, other than fraud, which possibly has some effect upon matters of that kind and that is "common mistake." There are a few of those cases that have come to my attention and I suspect the commission has no alternative but to act when by common consent there has been a misstatement that is not fraudulent but which arose from a misunderstanding of something, that amounts in law to an ordinary mistake.

Mr. POWER: I have no objection whatever to the passing of this legislation which in all deference I submit has nothing whatever to do with the matters which we have been discussing on both sides of the house. This bill simply provides that in the case of a vacancy arising in the chairmanship of the commission, the government may appoint a judge of the superior court temporarily to fill that place. When the matter was being discussed in the house before, I did contend that legislation should be introduced in order to clear up those marriage and other cases. I do not know that you can change a law by changing the judge; it is the law and not a change in the person who interprets the law that requires amendment. As to the suggestion made from this side of the house that the government or the minister should issue instructions to the board of pension commissioners, may I say that I do not think that should be done. The board acts under the authority conferred upon it by parliament. It is supposed to be and so far as possible can be independent of this or any other government.

Further instructions, as full and as complete as it was possible to frame, were placed in the statute, I think it is section 73, that the board of pension commissioners should under all circumstances give the benefit of the doubt to the soldier who made application. Those instructions have not been followed out, possibly for some legal reason or because the law was not properly drafted. If it was not properly drafted, it should be redrafted and amended so that the will of parliament will be imposed upon the board. Personally I cannot see that the fact of changing the judge will have any effect in legalizing these so-called marriage cases and in giving to the people with reference to whom complaint has been made, the rights to which they are entitled.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to say a word in reply to what the hon. member for Quebec South has said. This is the way in which the matter strikes me with regard to marriage cases. The pension board is authorized to pay pension to a man on account of his wife. That is what the act says. Wife I presume means legal wife. The question of administration is, how much evidence shall the board of pension commissioners require as to the legality of that marriage. I submit my hon. friend is wrong when he suggests that we have put full instructions in the act. We have told the board that they may pay on account of the legal wife. The act as it stands is perhaps deficient because it does not provide that they may pay to what is known as a common law wife when the soldier is living. In the case of death there is a provision that payment may be made to a so-called common law wife, but there is no provision that they may pay to a soldier an additional allowance on account of a common law wife where the pension is a disability pension. I come back to this: I think what the Prime Minister is suggesting is that in the matter of administration, that is to decide how strict they shall be in connection with the proof that a woman living with a man is his legal wife, there may be some latitude. As to that I am suggesting that directions should be given to the board that where a pension has been awarded, where the board of pension commissioners has admitted by payment of pension that the woman is the wife of the man, unless deliberate fraud has been proven that decision shall not be disturbed or reversed, and that shall apply to the period back of the time when this wholesale review took place whereby hundreds of people were cut off who had been receiving pension before for many years. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) mentions the date of February, 1933. But I think the Prime Minister has found some which go back beyond that, and I have sent him some myself. At any rate we know that in 1932 and 1933 there was a general, almost wholesale review, with the result that the board of pension commissioners tightened up their requirements regarding proof by saying to the pensioner, You have to prove that your marriage is not adulterous. That is about the effect. Up to the time these revisions were made we have taken it that the woman you have been living with is your wife, now we find that previously you had another wife and we are going to put on you the burden of proving that you are not living in adultery. It seems to me that the board of pension commissioners should be instructed that where they have admitted by payment the legal relation between the man and the woman with whom he is living, that position should not be disturbed unless deliberate fraud is proved. That is my answer to my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) when he suggests that we cannot make any change by administration. If that is not sufficient we shall have to pass legislation, because I believe the country intended that the same rule should apply with regard to pension payable on account of disability, as to pension payable on account of death, namely that the woman with whom the man is living, who has borne his children, who has carried the responsibilities of wifehood, should receive the benefit of the pension which this country intended for the returned man and his dependents.

Mr. BENNETT: You are eliminating from discussion the bigamous situation?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, I am discussing particularly the so-called marriage cases.

There is another class of cases interfered with by the auditor general. It is a most serious situation. That is, a man has been awarded a pension for a disability which was supposed to have been incurred during service. The auditor general has got in and rustled around among the papers and dug up files and medical reports and has come to the conclusion himself, gratuitously, that that man had some disability before enlistment and therefore what he has now and the thing for which he is pensioned is only an aggravation or increase of a pre-enlistment disability. While the Prime Minister calls attention to the fact that I am not referring to the bigamous cases; this is another class of cases in which the board has admitted from the time they started paying pension that the man had a war disability, not an aggravation, and was therefore entitled to the full amount. I say the board should not be allowed to interfere at this late stage with that and cut off pensions and start recovering back pension.

Mr. ROSS: Is not that the class of case to which I referred?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Ross) is quite right. I only mentioned it now because the Prime Minister spoke of my having dealt particularly with the marriage cases. I say the class to which my hon. friend refers are equally meritorious in the sense that they may be dealt with by administration if the board just exercises good common sense and endeavours to carry out the spirit of parliament.

Two things further. First the Prime Minister worried me a little by his reference to the fact that there should be an exception in cases of common mistake. I did not quite understand what he meant in that respect.

Mr. BENNETT: Substantially what you would mean in a contract action where mistake applies. The same as I would mean if I were in a court of law setting up mistake as defence in an action.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend knows that in cases of innocent mistake very often that is not a defence. I am thinking about those cases of innocent mistake, common mistake, as the Prime Minister calls it. The board of pension commissioners say: We were mistaken, we thought that woman was his wife from the evidence produced—

Mr. BENNETT: And he did, too.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, he says, I was mistaken too. I went through a form of marriage, I thought the other party was dead, or the divorce legal, or something of that kind. That is the case I am very much concerned about. It seems to me that if we except that case—and I do not think the Prime Minister intended to—from the beneficent instruction in connection with administration which we propose to give we would be throwing the door wide open, which we are trying to close.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to make clear that two wives cannot be getting pension at the same time in respect of the same man.

Mr. POWER: That has been done. I mean legally and properly. I think it will be found that a common law wife living in England, who had lived with the soldier in England and had children by him, actually drew pension on behalf of those children and probably on her own behalf, whereas the wife living in Canada also drew pension. But I think a division was made so that each had her share so to speak, according to her interest in the deceased soldier.

Mr. BENNETT: I was talking about the case where the soldier is not deceased, but a living man.

Mr. POWER: I am not quite sure of that.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think there is a case of two women receiving benefit as wives in respect of a living soldier.

Mr. POWER: Not as wives.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend has reassured me. If he is referring to the cases in which otherwise pension might be paid to two wives at the same time—

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I have in mind.

Mr. RALSTON: But if he is referring to the cases where there is a mistake on both sides, those are the cases I am trying to protect. I understand the Prime Minister to say it is not intended to except those cases.

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact I have not dealt with that state at all. I was trying to make clear that what was giving me concern was that we should not be paying pension to two women as wives of a living soldier. I am in difficulty though in view of what the hon. gentleman has said as to the question of the auditor general. The Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act does permit him to draw files for the purpose, as I submit, of deciding whether or not there was a legal basis for the payment. As to whether he would arrive at the same conclusion as to pensionability as someone else, I submit he has no right to deal with that—none at all. In the absence of fraud—of course, fraud vitiates everything. I have not heard anything further, I think it is probably now in process of adjustment. One case was very early in the history of pensions. His investigator in the course of investigation discovered something that seemed to indicate that the pension had been paid on a wrong basis. In my judgment that is not competent for him at this time.

Mr. RALSTON: The other suggestion I want to make is this: the right hon. gentleman understands that we are endeavouring to carry out what we believe to be the wishes of the country, and at the same time we want something that is satisfactory to those who officially represent the ex-service men. I have not had an opportunity of discussing this matter in order to find out whether or not the Prime Minister's suggestion is satisfactory to the officers of the Canadian Legion —to speak frankly—which I regard as by far the largest and most representative body of ex-service men, without in any way minimizing the efforts of the many others who are engaged in that sort of work. Can the Prime Minister tell me if the suggestion of endeavouring to meet the situation by administration, for the next year at least, is satisfactory to them?

Mr. BENNETT: That is my understanding, from my conversation with the president. I talked the matter over very carefully with him. I explained how difficult it might be at this time to endeavour to deal by legislation with matters of such a delicate character as those to which we have been referring. He told me they were content with the law, but that the administration of the law by a person without judicial experience—if I may put it that way—had brought about the difficulties, without questioning in any sense the high integrity and excellent character of the individual in question. I then asked what he thought should be done, and he suggested that the services of a judge might be utilized, who would understand what the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) has just stated. In nine cases out of ten, a witness is called and he says, "I saw him with his wife." That is the general reputation in the community; that is the woman with whom he lives and by whom he has children. Under our common law there is a presumption which a judge well understands. It is a rebuttable presumption, but it gets back to the principle I mentioned a moment ago. He who asserts must prove; if it is asserted that it is not a proper marriage someone has to prove it, instead of putting the onus on the man who, to all intents and purposes, is living the normal life of a married man. This administration on the basis of judicial experience and the application of the general principles of our common law will bring about these improvements. The president of the legion left the city yesterday, but he sent me a note indicating that he thought just as the hon. gentleman thinks, that this creates a situation which will result in curing, by administrative means, many, though we cannot say all, of the evils complained of.

Mr. RALSTON: Would the right hon. gentleman consider the suggestion that has been made, in regard to preparing some memorandum for the board?

Mr. BENNETT: I have a little hesitancy about that, together with the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), but on the other hand I am not unwilling to make a statement to the chairman of the board when he takes over his duties, along the general lines mentioned by hon. gentlemen. I would not like to put myself in the position of endeavouring to indicate to anybody what they should do, but I will take the responsibility of indicating that it is the will of parliament that the broad principles indicated should be applied, if they can be applied within the law.

Mr. RALSTON: If I might suggest it I would go further and say that if they cannot be applied within the law the government should be supplied with a memorandum accordingly, indicating the appropriate amendments which should be made, and I would suggest that these amendments should be retroactive.

Mr. POWER: I think that would be a most dangerous proceeding.

Mr. BENNETT: I hope the hon. gentleman does not wish me to commit myself to the last part of his remarks. I have already indicated that I propose to ask the chairman to keep a close record, almost in the nature of a diary, from the time he takes over, indicating any difficulties in the law as he administers it, so that we may be able to understand what the difficulties are. I could not commit myself to the other phase of my hon. friend's suggestion at the moment.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 128, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

On section 1—Investments of company's funds.

Mr. BENNETT: Section 63 of the act indicates the investments which may be made by companies, and those investments include debentures, debenture stocks or other evidences of indebtedness created by a statutory charge instead of by a trust deed. It provides that in cases where for ten years there have been uninterrupted payments of charges, such debentures or debenture stock may be available for investment. I believe there was thought to be no question about it, but a question has arisen. Inasmuch as some of the insurance companies had made engagements to acquire some of the debenture stock recently issued by the Canadian Pacific railway it was thought advisable to make it clear beyond peradventure that this is so. I state the case frankly to the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I see no objection at all to the amendment. I think the security provided is more ample than in most other cases.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 116, to amend the Representation Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second and third times and passed.

ELECTION AND FRANCHISE BILLS

Mr. BENNETT: The printed bills have just been placed in the hands of the minister, and we will be in a position to take them up at three o'clock. They did not come from the printing bureau until this morning. There is one amendment which is not yet completed.

Mr. POWER: Have the franchise bill and the elections bill been reprinted?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The amendments are printed in the elections bill. We are not going to reprint the franchise bill.

Mr. POWER: Some further time might be desired if we made a decision on the principle of the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) and introduced by the minister. We might save some time if we decided now whether or not the principle of the amendment is to be adopted.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That amendment is standing for consideration, and the other clause regarding the salary of the franchise commissioner is standing.

Mr. POWER: Could we decide the principle of the amendment before one o'clock?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Very well, we shall do that.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 115, respecting the election of members to the House of Commons—Mr. Guthrie—Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an amendment to section 99, respecting absentee voters.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, so far as I am personally concerned I am prepared to support the amendment. I think however, having regard to the very limited time we have had to consider the matter, every hon. member should feel perfectly free to take his own position on the amendment, so far as a vote is concerned. I am prepared to support the amendment, but I should like every hon. member to exercise his own judgment.

Mr. IRVINE: Was the alteration suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in regard to another group, added?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We disposed of that last night by a negative vote.

Mr. IRVINE: Was it considered last night?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. MacINNIS: So far as I can remember there was no vote taken last night. An amendment was suggested, but no action was taken.

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to the amendment read last night by the Minister of Justice I wish to state that after having given the matter some consideration I do not think it is the kind of legislation this house should pass in these late hours of the session, when we have not had an opportunity to consider carefully the election possibilities such an amendment might involve. There is a great deal of detail which should be considered. The amendment would provide that people may vote in a riding in which they are not known, and I believe it is a practice which would tend to election irregularities. Personally I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. NEILL: In answer to the hon. member who has just said that we are passing the amendment at a late hour of the session, may I say we are passing the bill at a late hour, and one is complementary of the other. The usefulness of the bill will be seriously invalidated if the amendment is not passed.

May I point out further that this legislation was enacted by the Liberal party in British Columbia in the year 1920, and when the Conservatives took office in 1928 they did not see fit to make an amendment. There was some trouble in the earlier years, and the privilege was abused. However when the abuse was discovered a very definite check was effected. For the last eight years the Liberals and the Conservatives have united in their acceptance of it. While many complaints were made about the last campaign, there was never a whisper about anything wrong with the absentee vote or the way in which it was operated.

A great deal of the opposition to this amendment comes from hon. members who are not familiar with the details. The amendment contains a great deal of language, some of which may be unnecessary, but all of which is quite simple when you understand it. I heard one hon. member say that he could not support the idea of telegraphing the vote, and that such a procedure was ridiculous. But when I explained to him that the only telegraphing done was done by the returning officer who merely wired the number of votes cast, he was quite satisfied to accept the suggestion. If hon. members would take the trouble to study the suggestion I think they would be thoroughly satisfied with it. If we are going to have what the right hon. Prime Minister and the right hon. leader of the opposition spoke about only the other day, namely the inherent right of every qualified person to vote, we certainly need this provision. The arrangements with regard to fixed or permanent voters lists would not have been accepted in British Columbia if it had not been accompanied with the right to have the absentee vote. In order to make the provision acceptable to our eastern friends it has been considerably modified. The amendment proposed affects only four classes, namely miners, lumbermen, fishermen and sailors, and I suggest that it will have very little effect in the cities about which hon. members from the province of Ontario have been speaking. The same would apply to the big cities in the province of Quebec. If this provision does not pass it will leave a sore spot in British Columbia which will be remembered for a long time. I repeat that this provision is corollary to the permanent voters lists, and I repeat that that system would never have been passed in British Columbia but for the right of having the absentee vote. Some people think the word "transients" suggests hobos, and people of that sort. It is nothing of the kind. It is no crime to have to earn your living away from home and by the methods I have indicated. There is no suggestion that these people are of a low standard because they have to go away to earn their living. Surely they are entitled to a chance to vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I hope we may be able to dispose of this amendment before the house rises at one o'clock.

Mr. RALSTON: Or before we call it one o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I must support the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I happened to be in the British Columbia legislature when the first amendment was introduced by Mr. Oliver, personally. He framed the act, himself. The act as at first conceived was not fool proof, and in 1924 we had distinct and sweeping allegations of irregularities. In 1925 both parties in the legislature got together, both Mr. Hinchliffe and Mr. Oliver, and drew up an amended bill upon which is based the present amendment. The difficulty with the first measure in British Columbia was that there was no provision whereby the returning officer could send the results of the absentee poll; in other words, the candidate did not know on the night of an election how many votes had been recorded in absentee polls. Under the new legislation however the results are sent by telegraph, and I cannot see any possibility of irregularities. I am in favour of the present amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. POWER: I should like to give notice of an amendment, but I do not wish the minister to think that I am going to insist upon the discussion of it now. The amendment is to the effect that the registrar shall strike from the permanent list prepared at any general registration or annual revision the names of persons who did not vote at the last election. The purpose of the amendment is to keep the list clear, and to effect some form of compulsory voting. I shall not read it, but with the permission of the committee I shall place it on Hansard. Of course I do not expect it will be dealt with at this session, but I shall ask the minister to consider it during the recess. I would ask hon. members to read it, and if it is not satisfactory as drafted they may offer their suggestions. I should like to have a consideration of the principle involved, namely that of striking off the lists the names of persons who have not voted at a preceding election. This is the practice in British Columbia, and I believe such a change would meet the wishes of a great many people throughout the country who believe we should have some form of compulsory voting.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the hon. member would put it on Hansard I am sure all hon. members, including myself, would give it consideration. It raises an important and interesting point.

Mr. POWER: It provides that a name shall be struck off the lists if a person has not voted at a preceding election, and also provides for reinstatement on taking an oath.

Mr. STIRLING: And automatically takes dead people off the lists.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there provision for sickness?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes, there is exemption for sickness.

Mr. POWER: I shall hand the suggested amendment to Hansard, so that it may appear in the proceedings:

That section 28 be amended by adding thereto the following sections:—

[Mr. I. Mackenzie.]

(k) The registrar shall strike off from the list prepared at the general registration of voters, or at the last annual revision, the names of all voters who from an examination of the books kept pursuant to section 42 (b) of the Dominion Elections Act, 1934, are found to have failed to tender their votes at any election held in the electoral district since the completion of the general registration or the last revised list of voters; provided, however, that except where the voter is otherwise debarred from voting by reason of any disqualifying provisions of the Dominion Franchise Act or of the Dominion Elections Act, he may apply for reinstatement, and shall be reinstated by making application as hereunder provided.

(2) Any voter whose name is liable to be struck off from the last revised list of voters under clause (k) of this section may at any time during the sitting of the court of revision file with the registrar an affidavit in support of his application for the reinstatement of his name on the list of voters. The affidavit shall be in Form .

Form

(Section 28 (k) (2))

Affidavit in support of application for reinstatement as a voter

I, do hereby apply to have my name reinstated on the list of voters for the electoral district of and I do hereby make oath and say (or solemnly affirm):—

1. That I now reside at No. street, in the of in the province of .

2. That I am registered as a voter in the said electoral district, but I am liable to have my name struck off from the list of such voters under clause (k) (1) of section 28 of the Dominion Franchise Act.

3. That I am in no respect disqualified from being registered as a voter in the said electoral district.

Sworn (or affirmed) before me at in the province of this day of 19 .

(Deponent sign here.)

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think Bill No. 115 is ready to report. The last amendment was carried and that is the only one left.

Bill reported.

Mr. POWER: I think we should see the amendments before the bill is read the third time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We can let third reading stand until later.

Mr. POWER: I would call the attention of the minister to the fact that all the amendments are not in. Form 19 does not conform to the amendment suggested last evening.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The forms are being examined by Mr. Troop, the law officer, and Mr. O'Connor. I am assured that they will be ready before the bill goes to the Senate.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 101, respecting the franchise of electors at elections of members of the House of Commons—Mr. Guthrie—Mr. Smoke in the chair.

On section 5—The commissioner and his staff.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): There is only section 5 to be considered. There is a blank in subsection 3 in connection with the annual salary of the commissioner. I now move that that blank be filled in with the words "ten thousand dollars." I am moving also that in line 16 the following words be deleted, "and be entitled to superannuation." As soon as this bill has received its third reading a motion will be moved to appoint Colonel John Thompson as chief franchise officer. As the committee is well aware, for a number of years Colonel Thompson has been chairman of the pension commission, and there is no provision for superannuation in connection with his present appointment. Under this section he will be entitled to the same conditions as a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. Until a judge has served fifteen years on the bench there is no provision for superannuation except for retirement through physical or mental incapacity. An arrangement is being made with Colonel Thompson to place him on a superannuation basis, but in order to do so he will have to make certain payments to the superannuation fund to cover the last fifteen years during which he has occupied his present position. These arrangements are now in process of completion and when completed it is proposed to place him on a basis of superannuation, permitting him to count the time served as chairman of the pension board for superannuation purposes. This need not delay the bill as I believe this arrangement is quite acceptable to the gentleman.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have no objection to that but in some ways this means to be a discrimination which probably in course of time and in the course of events will be rather hard to defend. It is a discrimination as far as certain other servants in the employ of the government are concerned. This is being done for this particular official and it is to be regretted that the recommendations of a certain committee were not concurred in so as to permit the same treatment being accorded to other long-time employees in the civil service. I think the government would be well advised to have but one rule for all its employees.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of the bill.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): While hon. members on both sides have worked together, I think very effectively, to improve this measure from the form in which it was originally introduced, I feel it is unfortunate that it is necessary to conclude our efforts by those on this side being obliged to take very strong exception to the change made by the government in the method of the appointment of returning officers. It is not in this bill, but the franchise commissioner is appointed under this bill and the power which was formerly exercised by the chief electoral officer is hereafter to be exercised by the governor in council. I for one had the impression, when the franchise measure was introduced, that it was understood there would be a new officer in the person of the franchise commissioner and that while he would have the appointing of revising officers, the chief electoral officer would remain in control of the electoral machinery and that the appointment of returning officers would continue to be under his direction: in other words, that there would be something of equality as between these two officers representing in a way the shades of opinion, speaking again very broadly, which are generally prevalent in the country. I do not know why the government has changed from what I believe was its original intention in that regard. Certainly I for one had that impression—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not after the first meeting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I had very strongly the impression that the chief electoral officer would continue, and I believe it was not until the Minister of Justice himself at a later stage told us in this house of the changes that were to be made in the general election act that any of us had the idea that the appointment of returning officers was to be brought again under the governor in council.

For many years past there has been a difference of view between the hon. gentlemen opposite and ourselves as to the appointment of election officials. We have held that election officials should as far as possible be non partisan and chosen where possible from persons holding particular positions rather than that their appointment should be made on a party patronage basis; and certainly, so far as the Liberal party when in office is concerned, we have proceeded along the line of endeavouring to secure in the appointment of returning officers persons already holding public offices, whereever that was possible, and so far as was possible officials who would be acceptable to members on both sides of the house. I think a most unfortunate departure is being made at the present time.

Under the British North America Act, 1867, section 42, appointment of returning officers was in the discretion of the governor general, which meant of course the governor in council.

Under the first Dominion Elections Act, 1874 (37 Vict. chap. 9) discretion was taken away from the governor general and the writ issued to the sheriff or registrar of deeds for the electoral district. The governor general had power to choose only in districts where there were no such officers. This was, and still is, the position in Great Britain.

In 1892, the governor general was given discretion in the matter of the appointment of deputy returning officers, and that continued until 1925; but in 1925 the law was amended to provide that returning officers, instead of being appointed for the particular election, should hold office during pleasure like other servants of the crown. That certainly is a position which it seems to me this parliament ought to seek to maintain—to secure in returning officers those who will feel that their continuance in office is not dependent on the particular administration in power, but rather that they are like other public servants, holding office during pleasure and, presumably, indefinitely, on the condition of good behaviour and the satisfactory discharge of their duties.

Mr. BENNETT: They only work six weeks in four years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but the principle remains the same, whether it be six days or six years or sixty. It is a question either of trying to maintain a civil service independent of patronage or of resorting to the patronage method in as many directions as possible. While in 1925 the Liberal administration of that day adopted the practice I have just mentioned, the shadow government of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, a year later took office. Though holding office only for a few weeks in that time they changed that arrangement, and under the Meighen government most of the appointments of returning officers made in 1925 were cancelled and new officers were appointed. When the Liberal administration came back into power and before the general election of 1930 the discretion and the power of recommendation was taken out of the hands of political parties and appointments were placed entirely under the jurisdiction of the chief electoral officer. That was evidence of a desire to secure strict impartiality as between all parties in the choice of returning officers, and I think the chief electoral officer did endeavour in making his appointments to see that those who were appointed would be persona grata to members on all sides of the house. The amendments this year take this discretion away from the chief electoral officer and restore it to political partisans. That is a very serious departure from what was an exceptionally good rule to follow. I have in my hand a statement which serves to illustrate the non-partisan character of the appointees under the late Liberal administration. I will not read it now but it may be given later. What I rise for at the moment, before the bill passes, is to protest as strongly as I can against this return to patronage in the appointment of returning officers. It is conclusive evidence that the government is seeking to get the whole of the electoral machinery into its own hands and under the control of its own partisan appointees, in a manner which cannot fail to occasion lack of confidence in the method of administering the electoral act.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Last night I took strong exception to the passing of the clause which disqualifies among others a sect of the Doukhobors resident in British Columbia and also the descendants of any such Doukhobors. I do not think it is necessary for me to repeat what I said then. I feel it is an exceedingly dangerous proceeding. The Doukhobors are not a race but a religious sect. It is dangerous to disqualify certain people because they belong to a particular religious sect. It may be extremely difficult to ascertain just who are Doukhobors because they cannot be judged by their nationality. Further than that, this section seeks to make the descendants of certain religious believers follow of necessity the religion of their fathers, and to disqualify them whether or not they wish to follow that religion. It seems to me an exceedingly dangerous proposal, and without covering the ground again, in order that the matter may be placed before the house for decision, I would move that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend section 4 by striking out (xii) of subsection (1). That motion is seconded by Mr. Jacobs.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): I presume that one can discuss this amendment for a moment or two. I approve of it. I think it will be a standing disgrace to this none too graceful session, so far as legislation is concerned, if this amendment is not accepted. There is one significant matter that I wish to call attention to, without going over the ground I covered last evening. I am not going over the ground that I went over last evening. But, Mr. Speaker, did you notice the two hon. members on the other side who got up to defend this outrage and to defend the government? The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) and the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) were, according to my recollection, the only two hon. gentlemen to defend the government's disfranchisement of the Doukhobors. Was there any particular reason for these two hon. gentlemen defending this legislation? Are their seats, as good Conservative ones, in danger? Is this the location of these Doukhobor settlements—in Yale and West Kootenay? If it is, then it would have been very much better for them if somebody other than they had stepped forward and tried at least to defend the government's outrageous legislation in this respect. I feel so strongly on this question I scarcely dare trust myself to talk about it at all. To think in Canada in this day of grace, when we are trying to develop a better civilization, anybody or any government would dare to do such a thing is past my comprehension.

I did not mention all the minorities to whom this legislation might be applied. We have our Mennonite brethren also holding peculiar religious tenets; my deskmate (Mr. Euler), I understand, is a third generation Mennonite. Is the government going to follow these third generation Doukhobors to heaven and gone, I will put it in that way, and disfranchise them all the way? How many crosses will it take to get the Doukhobor blood out of them and thereby qualify them for citizenship? If peculiar people are going to be disfranchised, how many of us will be left with the franchise? The world is full of extraordinary religious sects. I have heard of people in a very prominent religious denomination who actually would not worship with other denominations such as the Methodists and Congregationalists. Is the government going to disfranchise them too? It will come pretty close home to the Minister of Justice, if they do. So, I say, beware of establishing a precedent of this nature that because people entertain strange religious views, this entitles them to disfranchisement and they are not to be called citizens of Canada. That is all I have to say; I am merely warning the government, when they make a precedent of this nature, how very far-reaching it is and no man knows for instance, upon whose head the disfranchising axe may next fall.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say half a dozen words on this subject. This has nothing to do with religion in any way, shape or form; it has nothing to do with the religious beliefs of the people in question in any way, shape or form.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With what has it to do, then?

Mr. BENNETT: It has to do with the fact that these people have openly and successfully, mark you! defied Canada and the laws of Canada. They simply said: We will not be enumerated as citizens of Canada and they have succeeded, I am sorry to say, in preventing their names from being recorded as citizens. If they are unwilling to be recorded as citizens they are not going to vote as citizens. That is all there is about the matter.

Let us look at the situation. In every statute that has ever been passed in this country dealing with the franchise, there have been disfranchisements. It must be within the memory of most hon. members that in Nova Scotia while the late Mr. Fielding was premier of that province, no dominion civil servant could vote; every dominion civil servant was disfranchised in that province.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If that was the law then, this shows no advance.

Mr. BENNETT: That was the law. In all our statutes concerning dominion elections there are disfranchisements of certain named individuals. In the province of Quebec women cannot vote; they are disfranchised; every woman is disfranchised in the provincial elections in Quebec. Is that a blot upon the civilization of that province? Quebec has said: We do not want our women to vote.

They have a perfect right to say that and, what is more, the people have approved that action on more than one occasion.

Mr. JACOBS: We do not observe that in our dominion franchise with regard to the women of Quebec.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly; that is what I say, but in Quebec they do not permit the women to vote in provincial elections. I am only answering the argument that this is an effort to disbar a person for a particular reason that has to do with religion and to point out that ever since the franchise was established in Canada there have been exceptions to the general rule that all persons vote. It would take too long to deal with the history of the establishment of the franchise down to the days of universal franchise, but it is sufficient for my purpose to say that the Doubhobors are not disfranchised because of religion or politics; they are disfranchised because they have successfully defied the law of Canada to enumerate them as citizens of Canada, and I repeat: If they are not willing to become citizens of Canada and openly defy the law, then they should not be permitted to vote as citizens.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In view of what the Prime Minister has just said, may I ask him this question: Would not a better way to proceed have been to enact in the Franchise Act that any person who defies the law to the extent of refusing to be enumerated as a Canadian citizen shall not be qualified to vote?

Mr. BENNETT: That cannot be done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then innocent parties should not be discriminated against, or as Burke says, you cannot indict a nation; no more can you indict an entire race or all members of any religious sect.

Mr. BENNETT: I say that it is impossible to work that out, as the right hon. gentleman will see in a minute, because there is no general defiance of the law except by those particular people in the one province of British Columbia. They have simply said: We will not be enumerated and they drove off with pitchforks, arms and missiles the people who tried to enumerate them and succeeded in preventing their being enumerated except by force.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Perhaps some of them were willing to be enumerated.

Mr. BENNETT: They were not; they were given a chance.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: Did they refuse to be enumerated?

Mr. BENNETT: They were given an opportunity, and refused.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I wonder whether the Prime Minister is aware that some of the Doukhobors themselves assisted in the taking of the last census?

Mr. BENNETT: I certainly am not. I know an effort was made—does the hon. member mean in Saskatchewan?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, in British Columbia.

Mr. BENNETT: I know in British Columbia as a last resort we endeavoured to ascertain whether we could secure the aid of some of them in taking the census, and we failed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The assistance was secured.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am willing to admit that this matter has nothing to do with religion but I am very much afraid it has something to do with political considerations.

Mr. BENNETT: What nonsense!

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I want to repeat what I said last night; I am in favour of applying the utmost rigor of the law against any lawbreaker in any part of the dominion, but I tell the Prime Minister and the two hon. members who spoke to defend the government's action—

Mr. MANION: Three hon. members.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): —that it is the wrong method to punish any person in Canada by depriving him of his vote. The province of British Columbia has punished these men and properly so but it is a pernicious, vicious and iniquitous principle to single out any race by name in any legislation of this country and to deprive them of the franchise because this will affect not only the people there to-day but their descendants to the third and fourth generation. The Prime Minister of Canada by this legislation is visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children who in years to come may be the very finest of our Canadian citizens. This condition is not to be permanent; I trust these people with education and experience in the dominion will do what other races have done and grow up to be the very best of Canadian citizens. But here we are to-day as a parliament representing all free peoples within this country, saying that any man because he is a Doukhobor is absolutely deprived of the franchise and his sons and daughters and their descendants unto untold generations are also to be disfranchised. That is the most Tory measure I ever heard of in any parliament.

I agree with the suggestion of my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) that anyone who refuses to be enumerated for the franchise, shall be deprived of it, but we are here indicting the possibilities of a splendidly free system of Canadian education in regard to the descendants of these people.

Mr. BENNETT: Thirty-five schools burned up by them.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am not defending that for one second.

Mr. BENNETT: Bridges blown up and lives taken!

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am in favour of the law taking its course in such cases.

Mr. BENNETT: But it did not, it could not.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): But are the children of these people to be penalized?

Mr. BENNETT: One of the worst offenders was born in British Columbia.

Mr. POWER: The parliament buildings were burnt by the Tories but they have not been disfranchised for it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Here you are indicting the unborn children who through Canadian education may become first class citizens, who may grow up to be leaders in Canadian public life. We have people in this parliament belonging to races other than Canadian: We have one from the great country of Sweden, we have a Ukrainian—

Mr. BENNETT: Born in the United States.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Those who came from other countries are among the finest people in our national life, as a result of applying the best principles of Canadian education. I am not defending lawbreakers in the least, I am in favour of what the Conservative government of British Columbia did in prosecuting these men with utmost rigour, but what I am condemning is that this parliament should apply the punishment not only to the people who may have sinned in the present but to the innocent children who may grow up to be fine citizens of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): I wish to state my position, I will be brief. If you follow this thing to its logical conclusion it is pure anarchy, in my judgment.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is anarchy?

Mr. BENNETT: What you are supporting.

Mr. MITCHELL: This I maintain as fundamental, that if any man goes to another country, whatever his race or colour, he should abide by the laws of that country.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We agree with that.

Mr. MITCHELL: This House of Commons could not exist if defiance of law were permitted. This house exists because of the cooperation of the people in the enforcement of the laws. I am not going into the history of the struggle for the right to vote, to exercise some control over your legislative destiny, but I believe it would be a good experiment to let these people pass through something of the same struggle that we passed through to obtain a voice in the affairs of the country. Of course their struggle will be nothing in comparison with that of the people who went before us, but I believe it is fundamental that before people can be permitted to have a voice in the life and affairs of the country they should cooperate with the government. That is the genius of democracy, the cooperation of the people with the government. I am not convinced that this policy is not sound.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Very briefly, and really on one point only I wish to speak, because I have no defence to make of people who violate the law. But I think it is a dangerous principle to disfranchise any group of people—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): By name.

Mr. EULER: By name or by race or because of the religious beliefs they may hold. But I want to point out for the cool consideration of the government, what possible justice can there be in disfranchising the descendants of these people, who cannot possibly be held responsible for the sins, if you call them that, of their parents? It is utterly unjust and unfair and I see nothing in defence of it. I am referring particularly to that provision which says that the descendants of the Doukhobors shall be disfranchised. Probably there will be children of Doukhobors now living who will marry into some other sect, become converts to another faith, refusing to follow their parents in sentiment or religion.

Mr. BENNETT: But such were leaders in disobeying the law.

Mr. EULER: I want to put the thing as practically as I can. Suppose a Doukhobor girl marries a Canadian, say a Presbyterian or a Catholic—

Mr. BENNETT: They do not do that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They do, frequently.

Mr. EULER: It is possible that will be done from time to time, in Canada where racial differences are being wiped out. Surely then that person is no longer a Doukhobor. If you confined it to Doukhobors, the thing would not be quite so bad, but people who are descendants of Doukhobors but are no longer Doukhobors should not be disfranchised merely by the accident of birth, because their parents or grandparents were Doukhobors. I say it is absolutely unthinkable that a Canadian parliament should do a thing like that. Such an injustice should never get into a Canadian statute. I want to protest against that more than anything else.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The Prime Minister said that they are not disfranchised because of their race—

Mr. BENNETT: Their religion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —or their religion, but simply because they have violated the laws of Canada by refusing to be enumerated at a census. Well, Mr. Speaker, surely this provision should not be adopted, first because if that is the only reason, and the Prime Minister says it is the reason, why not have the law merely state, without referring to any race or sect, that any man who refuses to obey the laws of the country by refusing to be enumerated with the other citizens of the country should not have a vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Hear, hear, we are all for that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The worst feature of this provision is that just mentioned by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler); that because one man refuses to be enumerated at a census the sentence is that his children are to be deprived of the vote even if they are honourable, loyal and devoted citizens. That is not a law of a free country. I heard my right hon. friend interject, "Well, they are descendants of men who violated the laws."

Mr. BENNETT: No, they have done so themselves.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: How can you say that those boys have? They are referred to simply as Doukhobors, and because their fathers were Doukhobors the sons, whether they have refused to be enumerated or not, are to be deprived of the vote. I say that is a bad reason. The members of a free parliament should never vote for this measure.

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): Mr. Chairman, I just wish to register my protest against this legislation.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Last year, when I addressed you as Mr. Chairman, an hon. gentleman said that I should address you as Mr. Speaker. I now rise to the same point of order.

Mr. DUPUIS: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, to our hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) I just wish to register my protest against this piece of legislation. The majority of the citizens of this country are in favour of being good to the humble, to the weak and to minorities, whatever may be the opinion of the right hon. Prime Minister about qualifying minorities or others. It is a principle of our criminal law that it is better to free ninety-nine guilty men than to condemn an innocent one. In this legislation they put in one bag all the citizens who belong to a nationality or race and say that because they belong to such a race they are to be deprived of their right of citizenship—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): They are not a race.

Mr. DUPUIS: —and of the privileges attached to it. I say this is absolutely wrong, and following that principle of our criminal law, even if there is only one Doukhobor who abides by the laws of the country he should be granted the right to vote. I am sure, like those members who are conversant with these people, that hundreds and thousands of them abide by the law of this country. To govern the citizens of Canada we have criminal, civil and common law. If any citizen, whatever his race, his religion or his allegiance, does not abide by the laws of this country he may be brought into court and, if convicted, sentenced to fine or imprisonment. We have been told that the Doukhobors refuse to abide by the laws of Canada. Let us condemn those who refuse to do so but let us not interfere with those who do abide by our laws.

I am very much in favour of amending this provision because I belong to one of the races that is in the minority in this country. It may happen that I will not come back to this house—which I should regret—due to the fact that I have been deprived of my riding. That has not been done because the county of Laprairie-Napierville is one which should not be represented in this house; that is so because the Prime Minister of this country said, "We are not going to be governed by an arrogant minority." So I feel very keenly the fact that in this legislation the government deal with a whole race whom they have allowed to become citizens of this country. For the sake of argument let us say that the majority of them refuse to abide by our laws, but now the government are going to refuse to allow the remainder to vote and take advantage of the other privileges to which they are entitled as British subjects. If these people refuse to become British subjects let them be deported; so long as they remain here as British subjects they should have all the privileges and rights as well as all the responsibilities of British subjects.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): A higher authority than I ever hope to be has declared that there is a time to talk and a time to keep silence. Inasmuch as we are about to prorogue at any moment I think I will follow that advice and say what I have to say in a very few words, particularly as I had something to say on this question when it was up last night.

The Prime Minister makes the statement that these Doukhobors should be disfranchised because certain outrages were committed by some of their race in British Columbia. I do not know that we have a clear definition of what a Doukhobor is. I do not know; there is no interpretation of the word in the bill. How is a judge to decide who a Doukhobor is unless he comes into court without clothes? I cannot understand how the Prime Minister, who is a profound lawyer and a man of the world, could agree to a section of this kind becoming part of the law of our country; that is what surprises me. I have always had a very high admiration for the talents of the right hon. gentleman, but this time he has fallen in my estimation. I can only suppose that we have had so much heavy work during the last five or six months that he is slipping a bit, and if legislation of this kind is going to be introduced I think it is high time we closed parliament for this session.

I suppose the race to which I belong has suffered more from legislation of this sort than any other race. This is the introduction of Hitlerism into the parliament of Canada. In Germany, under the laws of the third Reich, it is declared that any person found to have Jewish blood in his veins as far back as the year 1800 is deprived of his status as a citizen In what respect does that provision differ from this law, except that we are visiting the sins of the father upon the children to the third and fourth generation while they are visiting the sins of the children on the fathers? As between the two I should say they were the most logical, because we know the history of the fathers while we cannot know the history of the children. I am surprised that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister should say that every Doukhobor now residing in British Columbia, and his descendants to the last generation, should be deprived of the right to vote because of certain incendiarism and other offences which have been committed in British Columbia. Surely that is not the well considered view of the Prime Minister of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: Neither is it the view he puts forward.

Mr. JACOBS: It resolves itself into this section of the law; that is what it means. It seems that in British Columbia disfranchising people is a favourite sport, because the Doukhobors are not the only people disfranchised there. There are the Japanese, the Chinese and so on, but I do not intend to raise that question. I remember that some ten or twelve years ago I offered some criticism of the system in British Columbia with regard to the disfranchising of citizens, and I walked into a hornet's nest prepared by my good friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I still remember the castigation I received at his hands, or rather at his tongue, at that time. So I am not going into that question, but I say this thing is spreading. To-day we have it to a certain extent in the province of Quebec; only last winter a follower of the Prime Minister, sitting on the government side, made a remarkable statement. I was not in the house at the time, and the two members of my persuasion who were in the house did not understand French. This is what the hon. gentleman said, according to Hansard of February 26 of last year:

> I would suggest to them—

He was speaking to the opposition:

> —if they are so anxious to work in the interests of their race, to travel down in groups to Quebec so as to request the government of that province to see that the chairmen of the two most important committees of the legislative assembly be French Canadians instead of being Jews, in the only Catholic province of Canada, as the Hon. Mr. Taschereau delights to call it.

There we have Hitlerism exposed in all its hideousness, in the province of Quebec, and now we find this new law coming into force which will only encourage men of the type of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) to continue that sort of work. I say a statement of that kind is not becoming to a member of the House of Commons, no matter on what side of the house he sits. It was offensive to me, Mr. Speaker, to see that gentleman invited time and again to act as chairman of the committees of the house in which I had to sit, and to have to address my remarks to him. I say he does not deserve to be in the parliament of Canada. This was the first time any statement of that kind was ever made in this house. Of course he received his just deserts from the premier of Quebec and from others who gave expression to their opinions in the public press. I have not heard any hon. member opposite rise from his seat and protest against that kind of conduct. If we are going to allow legislation of this kind to pass to-day, tomorrow we will have the hon. member for Compton or others of the same frame of mind declaring that in the province of Quebec the Jews should not be permitted to appeal to the electorate for election to parliament. This is how it could be done: Supposing in a moment of madness a man like the hon. member for Compton might have the reins of power—Lord forbid—in the province of Quebec. He would pass a franchise act declaring that no Jew could sit in the legislature of the province of Quebec or the parliament of Canada. He would ask that the law of the province of Quebec should be carried into the dominion franchise act. In such an event where would I be? Where would my colleagues be? Where would the Jewish people, even unto the fourth, fifth, or sixth generations be? They would be in the same position as the Doukhobors.

Mr. CHAPLIN: But you would still have your clothes on.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, I would have my clothes on, but I would not be permitted to show them. You would not see me here. That is the sort of thing that happens when we tamper with the franchise, and when we declare who should and should not be allowed to do this or that. The majority can declare whatever they like. It is always the majority that declares the minority is unfit to do this or to do that. We had a statement made yesterday by the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) to the effect that this had all been arranged beforehand. He said the Doukhobors had agreed that if they were given exemption from military service they would not ask for the vote, and the franchise would be taken from them. He said they were happy about it. They sold their birthright for a mess of pottage; they did not know what they were doing. They were sacrificing their rights as citizens of this country to obtain exemption from military service which service, I understand, is contrary to their religious views. So I think those of us who are fair minded and who look at things from a wider viewpoint than the government, see that we are quite within our rights in making a protest.

May I point out to the Prime Minister that the great dominion of Australia was at one time a penal colony, and everyone sent there was sent as a convict. Their descendants, the second, third and fourth generations are now at the head of the government. They went out in the first instance in the government's service, and they have remained in the government service—although in different degrees. I think the Australians would be offended if they knew that we treat our people in the way indicated to-day. They took their convicts, and developed them into first class citizens—sons of the morning, children of the light, and so on. They consider themselves in every respect the same as we are, and they are quite right. I do not for one moment wish to compare, for instance, Mr. Stanley Bruce who was entertained in Ottawa only a short time ago, with the poor Doukhobors who, without knowledge of the law, offend. After all, is it not part of our theory that we are carrying the white man's burden. We are looking after the "silent, sullen people," as Kipling says, half devil and half child—because that is all the Doukhobors are. It is part of the white man's burden to educate them to our standards. Certainly we are not going to achieve that end by disfranchising them and treating them as pariahs. I do not believe that to be the Christian idea of the condition which should prevail—and may I add, in passing, that I do not hold myself out as a teacher of Christianity. But I am in favour of a Christianity which Christianizes people, and it certainly comes with very poor grace from me, the only non-Christian in this house to-day, to tell Christian people what Christianity should be. Particularly is that so in regard to the Prime Minister, a man who has always represented the very best type of Christianity, a man whom I have admired for many years because of his talents, his wide and broad views respecting the Jewish people and the persecutions they have suffered, notwithstanding the views of some of his camp followers who sit behind him. What surprises me is that the Prime Minister should have allowed a piece of legislation of this kind to come before the house.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I certainly had no intention to take part in this debate, but after the reference to me made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) I do not see how I could remain silent.

Mr. JACOBS: You should have remained silent before.

Mr. GOBEIL: May I, at the outset, state that I am absolutely in agreement with this measure. Without elaborating may I say that in my view a man or woman who openly defies the law, who openly blows up schools, and takes part in parades such as have been described, should not take part in the affairs of this country. Hon. members opposite state that we are disfranchising not only those living to-day but their children and grandchildren. I say that if a time comes when these people, as a body or as individuals, understand and realize their duties and responsibilities as citizens, this law could be changed. We are not passing legislation to-day which could not be changed at the proper time. For that reason I think the arguments advanced by hon. members opposite to the effect that we are disfranchising not only present day Doukhobors, but Doukhobors of the future, are absolutely silly—and I do not use the term offensively.

I now come to the reference made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. Had he wished to quote at greater length from my remarks he would have disclosed that the views he obtained were only incidental to the remarks I made. When I made the remarks to which the hon. member has referred I was referring to hon. members opposite who on the occasion in question were trying, as they have had the habit of doing, to place themselves before the people of the province of Quebec as the great champions of their race, their religion and their rights. I was simply stating that if they were so anxious to render service to their race and their creed, there were many other fields of activity which were more important, so far as race and creed were concerned, than the question under discussion at that time. That reference was only incidental, and I do not consider that I attacked the Jewish people in any way. I simply referred to the condition as in my opinion not being one which should exist in the province of Quebec, which the premier is so proud of stating is the only Catholic province in the dominion. There were only two members of the Jewish race elected to the legislature yet both were appointed chairman of important committees of that assembly. I do not think there was anything offensive to the Jewish race in my statement because I mentioned other things as well. The hon. member said that fortunately the hon. member for Compton was censured even by the premier of Quebec. I would remind my hon. friend that though the premier came out like a lion on that day and stated he was going to censure me by a motion which would put the ban of the French race on me—

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I was of the opinion that we were discussing the Elections Act and the Doukhobor question, but now the hon. member is with the Hebrews. I pray him to leave them alone. He is trying to get out of a hole but is only getting in deeper.

Mr. GOBEIL: I do not think I can be reproached with having taken up too much of the time of the house on this question. I would not have brought up this matter if it had not been for the attack made upon me by my hon. friend. I want to take a minute or two to answer. I should like to remind my hon. friend that the motion of censure against the hon. member for Compton was never moved in the legislature. It never came and I do not think it ever will come. In closing, let me say that I never attacked the Jewish race. I am pleased to assure them that they have the right to live, just as has any other citizen of Canada. I simply stated that I did not think it was proper, or that I thought it to be a little out of place, that such a situation should exist in the provincial legislature of Quebec.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, before this bill receives its third reading I should like to make a few brief observations.

An hon. MEMBER: Make them brief.

Mr. McINTOSH: I usually do, and to the point. I was going to say that if I am allowed to make these observations without being expelled from the house or sent to the tower, I would appreciate that freedom of parliamentary debate which is conducive to the unhampered discussion of any public question. May I say that at times, as the Greeks said, speech is silver and silence is golden.

An hon. MEMBER: Right now.

Mr. McINTOSH: To-day speech is golden, and silence is silver. And since we are off the gold standard in more ways than one perhaps a few remarks on this vicious bill will be in order. When examining the Doukhobor provisions of this bill one comes to the conclusion that between the policies of the Conservative and the Liberal parties a great gulf exists—the gulf of civil and religious liberty and of fairness and justice to mankind. I should like to range myself with those on this side who stand for freedom whenever that question presents itself. I do not need to say that I belong to a race that has fought valiantly for its freedom; I belong to a race that has never been conquered and never will be conquered while it remains true to the principles of freedom and liberty. I would be ashamed of my race if those who represent it in this house did not stand up on an occasion of this kind to fight for those from whom the right of the franchise is being taken.

Certain outrages have been charged to our Doukhobor friends. I do not think there is an hon. member in the house who is so closely related to one of those outrages as myself. I had a first cousin in the coach in which Verigin was blown to pieces. Some of my direct relatives blamed the Doukhobors for that outrage, but I do not. I investigated the matter and I found out from Canadian National Railways men that that outrage was never committed by the Doukhobors, it was committed by the Canadian National Railways authorities carrying loose dynamite from one point to another on the railway. This is a case where the Doukhobors were blamed for an outrage for which they were not guilty. They are blamed for many other things for which they are not guilty. The very reason for this bill is based on such unproven outrages and political fear and to have such a foundation for a bill of this kind is not conducive to good and progressive citizenship. Therefore, I am opposed to it.

I have a few Doukhobors in my riding. I doubt if there is another riding in Canada which is as cosmopolitan as the riding of North Battleford. We have some Doukhobors there, Belgians, French from the old land, Germans, Ukrainians, British, Americans and Norwegians.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No Scotch!

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, they are everywhere, God bless them. I must say that our Doukhobor settlers have lived up to the law and have proved to be respectable and industrious citizens ever since they came to Saskatchewan. They have prospered on their farms and have brought wild areas into cultivation. They have built splendid homes and have made money. They have not been on relief like many of the British people have been for the last three or four years. I want to say a word for these people this afternoon, and to tell the house that the children of these people will be among the most progressive and law-abiding citizens of Canada. I have the fullest confidence in them and I am only too pleased to stand up this afternoon as a member from western Canada to defend them and to say that the principle of this bill is diametrically opposed to the very principles of freedom. This means I am opposed to subsection 12 of section 4 of the bill respecting the franchise of electors at elections of members of the House of Commons. I repudiate the principle of disfranchising and taking away the rights of citizenship from any group of people because of their religious and racial beliefs. I regret the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) have given their support to this measure, because I believe the government by doing so, and the Prime Minister by doing so, have disgraced and dishonoured Canada in the eyes of all good Canadians.

Mr. BENNETT: That remark will have to be withdrawn at once.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has no right to say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) by his action has disgraced and dishonoured Canada. I ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement as it is not parliamentary language.

Mr. McINTOSH: My inference was that this measure dishonoured and disgraced Canadians.

Mr. BENNETT: I ask that that language be withdrawn.

Mr. McINTOSH: If my words are not satisfactory in any way to the Prime Minister, I withdraw them.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have ruled that they are unparliamentary and I ask the hon. member to withdraw them.

Mr. McINTOSH: I have withdrawn them.

Mr. BENNETT: I submit that no hon. member of this house is entitled to place any condition on a withdrawal; it must be an unconditional withdrawal.

An hon. MEMBER: He did withdraw it.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not. He said "if," and I cannot permit that, in the interests of this house. No one who happens to be Prime Minister can permit it.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am sorry the Prime Minister cannot understand the English language. I am willing to withdraw the remark without qualification so far as the Prime Minister is concerned but not the government or the government measure before the house.

Mr. BENNETT: I wish to direct attention to an erroneous observation made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). This measure does not refer to descendants in the sense in which he used that word. It is a conditional prohibition only.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No.

Mr. BENNETT: Pardon me. If the law of British Columbia does not disqualify that person he is not disqualified by this statute.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): But I may point out that when you pass a law you presume its permanency. We do in British Columbia, and when we pass this law we presume that it will be permanent for the dominion.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): There seems to be some misunderstanding about Bill No. 115, respecting the election of members of the House of Commons, which was reported from committee. With the consent of the house I would move it back into committee as it is said that clause 8 was not passed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was under the impression that all clauses were passed, but for the purpose of considering clause 8 I would move the bill back into committee.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee on the bill, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On clause 8—Appointment of returning officers.

Mr. LAPOINTE: On this clause I desire to register my protest, as my leader did a few minutes ago, with regard to the change concerning the appointment of returning officers. It is most important that the officers who are in charge of elections in every constituency in Canada should be, so far as possible, free from political partisanship. My hon. friends opposite do not seem to like this now, but a few years ago when there was another government in office, they were the ones who advocated what I am saying to-day and it was agreed that the government should not appoint the returning officers but that they should be appointed by the chief electoral officer and that he would try to select the best man possible and the one who would be fair to the various political opinions in each constituency. That was done at that time; the system worked well, and to change it now is, I am afraid, a breach of faith. It means that my hon. friends opposite when they are in opposition will ask their opponents to agree to changes which will ensure impartiality in the elections, but as soon as they are in office they repeal those laws and see to it that their own political friends are put in charge of an election. That is a wrong principle; it is a wrong thing to do, and I say again that it is a breach of faith on the part of those who have taken advantage of the agreement which was entered into between the parties a few years ago.

Mr. POWER: This is the clause which provides for the appointment of returning officers. In order to make the matter clear may I just quote as briefly as I can a report of the chief electoral officer pursuant to section 74 of the Dominion Elections Act, made December 1, 1926, in the appendix of which he gave a summary review of the statutory provisions affecting from time to time the appointment and duties of returning officers. I am not quoting in extenso, because I do not wish to take up the time of the committee. He goes back to the British North America Act of 1867, section 42, where the governor general was empowered to issue a writ for the election of a member of the House of Commons to such returning officer in each electoral district as he thought fit, the person selected to conduct the election in accordance with the electoral law of the province in which lay the electoral district for which he was appointed. He goes on to say:

> Under the first Dominion Elections Act, passed in 1874, the discretion thus given to the Governor General was taken away, and it was provided that the writ should issue to the sheriff or registrar of deeds for the electoral district or a portion of it. The Governor General had accordingly power to choose the returning officer at his discretion only in a district in which there was no sheriff or registrar or the incumbents of these offices were disqualified or unable to act.

The position in Canada was thus assimilated to that which then existed and has ever since existed in Great Britain, where the returning officer is always, ex officio, the sheriff, the mayor or the chairman of the local municipal council. This new rule, however, continued in force in Canada for only eight years. In 1892, by 45 Vict. c. 3, s. 6, the Governor General was again given a discretion—

That is just another way of stating that the appointment was again put under patronage.

—whenever an election was required to be held in any electoral district, to select such person to act as returning officer as he thought fit, and this discretion he has continued ever since to exercise. . . .

Until, in 1925, the law was amended in the way to be later mentioned, this power fell to be exercised only on the occasion of the issue of the writ for an election, and it was accordingly inevitable, even apart from the fact that the returning officer had a casting vote in case of a tie, that appointments should, as a general rule, be made, from among the political supporters of the government of the day; in practice each returning officer no doubt was chosen usually on the recommendation of the person or persons by whom the local party patronage was controlled. Though there were exceptions to this general rule, particularly when officers appointed by the provincial government, such as sheriffs or registrars were available to act and were willing to undertake the returning officer's duties, these were not numerous, and a secondary but very natural consequence of the established practice was that the returning officers selected their deputy returning officers from among their political friends, the names no doubt often being supplied from the same source as that from which the recommendation for the returning officer's own appointment had emanated. Again the general rule was subject to exceptions: in some electoral districts there grew up the practice of selecting half the deputies from each political party,—

And let it be remembered that the party led by my right hon. leader was then in power.

—this exceptional practice being no doubt usually confined to those electoral districts in which the returning officership itself was not looked upon as a party appointment. In most electoral districts, however, the political party in power had exclusive administrative control of the election.

. . . In 1925, however, the law on the last point was amended, it being provided that returning officers, instead of being appointed only for the purpose of conducting a particular election, should hold office during pleasure like other servants of the crown. The first returning officers appointed under the new provision were those who acted at the general election held later in the same year. When, nevertheless, a second general election was required to be held within less than twelve months, most of the appointments thus made were cancelled and new returning officers named instead of the original appointees.

Now we come to 1929. In spite of the fact that we on this side of the house were made well aware by the actions of the majority of the persons representing the party now in power, of their manner of conducting elections, on representations made, especially by persons from the southeast corner, and acting on the recommendations of the chief electoral officer, the committee of 1929 of which I had the honour to be chairman, recommended that from then on the appointing of the returning officers should be taken out of the hands of political parties and placed in the hands of the chief electoral officer. I speak of this with some little feeling because at that time I was being constantly importuned. When we were sitting on the government side, I was being called into corners of the corridors and interviewed in my office and told time and again: You do not mean to say that you will make a recommendation that means that we may have a Tory returning officer, or a returning officer who will not be at our beck and call? I then took the attitude which I take to-day, that elections should be as far as possible taken out of politics. Day after day I was obliged to fight the men of my own side of the house, some of them very important men, in order to press the amendment through. I was told at that time by one after the other that if through some mischance the hon. gentlemen who now sit opposite came into power they would see to it that the election act was changed so that it would go back to the good old, bad old, days of patronage. In view of the representations made, in view of the concession if I may so call it, although it was not a concession, it was an amendment made in the interests of justice and fair dealing, in view of the action of one party, I took it upon myself to say I was convinced that for all time in Canada we would take elections out of politics. Unfortunately no sooner had hon. gentlemen opposite come into power than we began to discern that efforts would be made to change the returning officer. To-day, although I suppose that is not of much importance, but I feel somewhat humiliated, I have to face men from my own side of the house who make no bones about telling me they told me so. I think probably my leader feels very much the same way as I do, and that may account for the energy with which he opposes this bill.

It has been said that the Election Act of 1930 did not work well. I quote here the report of the chief electoral officer made pursuant to section 74 of the Dominion Elections Act in September, 1930. On the first page of his report to the Speaker of the House of Commons he says:

The recent general election following the dissolution of the sixteenth parliament was the first since confederation at which the administration of the election in all the electoral districts was carried out by returning officers appointed otherwise than by the government in power at the dissolution.

Then the second paragraph:

The most important alteration in the procedure followed was the abandonment of the use of provincial lists as a basis for the preparation of the federal lists. This affected particularly urban areas in which provision was for the first time made for an enumeration. The result of the change must be regarded as wholly favourable; notwithstanding that many errors occurred, the lists as supplied to the deputy returning officers were very much more accurate than they had previously been and clearly included a considerably higher number of the names of persons who were entitled to vote. . . .

Then part of paragraph 3:

On the other hand, the number of administrative difficulties and complaints against returning officers showed a notable decrease. From only twenty electoral districts was any complaint received against the conduct of a returning officer, and in most of these cases, as well as in the few additional cases in which complaints were made to me against the conduct of subordinate election officers, the making of the complaints appeared on inquiry to have been due to misunderstanding.

There was the situation at the end of 1930. We had an election act agreed upon by all parties in this house, which it was hoped would give a fair, reasonable and honest election, and according to the report of the chief electoral officer it did so. And may I say, in case it may be brought up later, that the power conferred on the chief electoral officer was used wisely and in the public interest. I have here a list of the appointments by occupation. I find that in Ontario out of a total of ninety seats twenty-nine were appointments of public officers such as county clerks and treasurers, town clerks, registrars, sheriffs, justices of the peace and crown attorneys.

Mr. RYERSON: And the balance were Liberals.

Mr. POWER: Assuming they were, we did more for you than you will ever do for us, you gave us one-third.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The Tories always do that.

Mr. POWER: The proportion for Quebec was thirty-two out of sixty-five. In Nova Scotia seven out of twelve were public officers. In New Brunswick two out of eleven. In Prince Edward Island the total number of returning officers, three, were sheriffs. In the western provinces there were no public officers because, as pointed out to the committee of that day, it was impossible to make the electoral districts coincide with those of the sheriffs and registrars.

An hon. MEMBER: They were all appointed by the patronage committee.

Mr. THOMPSON: (Simcoe): What was the agreement about deputy returning officers?

Mr. POWER: I do not know what happened in other cases, but in my own constituency I went to the Conservative ex-candidate, and we sat down together and agreed on a returning officer. His recomendation accompanied mine to the chief electoral officer, and during the progress of the election the Conservatives received the right to appoint fifty per cent of the deputy returning officers. That was my duty, as I conceived it, in carrying out an obligation which I had undertaken before the people of Canada.

Mr. THOMPSON (Simcoe): That was not the case in my riding; I never had a look in.

Mr. POWER: I can only speak of my own case. Now let us see the reason for all this eagerness on the part of the government to dismiss returning officers and appoint those of their own choice. I received a statement from the chief electoral officer, after I had questioned him in the committee, to the effect that since 1930 with resignations, deaths and removals there had been changes in regard to fifty-three returning officers, and that under the redistribution act there would be sixty new returning officers. There were thirty new appointments made necessary due to returning officers being over the age of sixty-five, and three appointments made necessary by reason of the fact that the returning officer now resided outside of his electoral district. In other words approximately 150 of the 245 returning officers would be dismissed in any case. So all this upheaval, all this change in this act and the franchise act, came about, I am firmly convinced, for no other purpose than to see to it that every single returning officer who was not appointed by the Tories would be dismissed.

There is no doubt that the object was to take charge of the making of the electoral lists, which duty was formerly performed by the returning officers. I say in all sincerity that if, as has been stated by the chief electoral officer, the deputy returning officers could carry on their duties of making up the lists during the time of the election, if they had a four year period when there was no election there was no reason why they could not have continued to carry on that work. Instead of that we are naming a whole host of officers to carry on the enumeration. I suppose the Minister of Justice knows as well as I do that something like eighty thousand officers are required to carry on the enumeration of an election, so during the course of this summer in this general registration something like eighty thousand people will be employed by this government, which is another way of bribing the electorate in addition to the public works program. The whole aim and object of these two thick, cumbersome bills was to get into the hands of the government control of the entire electoral machinery, from the time the man goes to register himself on the list until he goes to the poll to vote to put this government out of power. I do not think they will dare do anything to interfere after the ballots are counted.

I suggest to the Prime Minister that he should read the reports of the chief electoral officer of 1926 and 1930. I should like to quote from paragraph 11 of the report of 1926, in which the chief electoral officer says:

> ... the fact that appointments are generally made from among supporters of the party in power naturally inclines supporters of the opposite party to think that unfair administrative tactics are intended to be or are in fact resorted to.

To that statement I subscribe, knowing hon. gentlemen opposite.

> In some cases, however, the present mode of the selection of election officers does induce on the part of appointees a mistaken idea that they owe a duty to the party to which they belong rather than to the state by which they are employed and paid.

I have nothing more to say on this matter; already I have taken up enough of the time of the house in connection with this legislation. Before I take my seat I should like to thank the minister for cooperating in the minor amendments which were made to the act, in our endeavour to make the act more workable. May I say at the same time, however, that the general principle underlying the act, whereby once more we are bringing the whole electoral machinery under party patronage, to be operated for the benefit of party politicians, to my mind is not a principle which should be adopted readily by this house, particularly when we have had a chance to get away from it and the people of Canada were given an opportunity to see that in some instances the political parties could come together in an endeavour to give to the electorate a fair deal and an open, above board method of expressing their opinions when elections came on.

I submit that this legislation is in keeping with a great deal of the legislation that has been brought down by hon. gentlemen opposite. It has been said by adherents of and apologists for the government that they have not paid enough attention to the political side of administration, and that their acts have not been motivated by political consideration. May I say that in my humble opinion hardly one piece of legislation has been introduced in this house since 1930 that did not have a political motive and a political purpose back of it. The tariff measures of 1930 were pure politics; the marketing act of this year was pure politics, and the central bank act was pure politics. Ever since this government came into power the relief measures have been pure politics, and they have been administered in the same spirit.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): The hon. gentleman is out of order. I would ask him to confine his remarks to the bill under discussion.

Mr. POWER: The chairman calls me to order for having strayed a little from the subject. May I say that if all these measures I have mentioned were pure politics the two pieces of legislation we have been considering, as well as the redistribution act of last year, were politics of a kind I could not describe without falling foul of you, Mr. Chairman. Undoubtedly they were of the Tory brand of politics, which they hope will bring them into power at the next election but which I know will not do so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have refrained from saying anything on the floor of parliament with respect to these acts, though I had considerable to do with endeavouring to make them as workable as possible. I am not going to cover any of the ground already covered by my colleague from Quebec South (Mr. Power) and my right hon. leader in our endeavour to have the amendments so constructed that they would work fairly as between all parties, but there is one aspect of this whole procedure that I have not been able to understand. I refer to the necessity for this double staff of officials. If in the opinion of the government the chief electoral officer was not carrying out his duty they had the power, both in this house and in the other chamber, to get rid of him. But what have we done here? We have gone to work and provided for two sets of officials, which seems to me entirely unnecessary. I have said so all the time we have been dealing with these two acts. We have set up one group of officials with a chief known as a revising officer; his appointees are permanent officials who will work for a period of six weeks in the year at most. For the life of me I cannot understand why these same officials should not be the returning officers. Evidently, as my colleague has put it much better than I can, there is a desire on the part of the government to give to their political supporters in each constituency the right to name the individual who shall conduct the election, and they content themselves with leaving only the chief electoral officer as a permanent official. In my humble opinion there is no necessity in the world for those two sets of officers. In order to carry out their desire the government have adopted this circuitous route to arrive at their destination. So far as I am concerned the best treatment I ever received was from a returning officer appointed by a Conservative government, I refer to Mr. Wilson who conducted the election of 1926. I have not a word to say against him or against his officers, and if officials of that type are selected by my opponents I shall be satisfied. Again I do protest emphatically against doubling up officialdom in connection with carrying on elections. It is an expense which could easily be avoided. Let me say in passing that I am afraid we will find the proposed system a most cumbersome one. Not only that, but it will be very expensive to every candidate who may have to contest an election under the provisions of this legislation. While a yearly revision of the lists shortens the election period by a few weeks, the candidates and sitting members will be shouldered with a tremendous expense to see that the lists are properly drawn up.

All these years we have managed to get along in western Canada with enumerated lists, and so far as I know we have had a fair degree of satisfaction. The machinery was under the supervision of the electoral officer and the returning officers in the various constituencies. My protest, togther with those of other hon. members on this side of the house, is that there is no necessity on earth for the double-barrelled provisions in the two pieces of legislation we have been considering. While I have tried to see some virtue in the proposed procedure frankly I can see none. There is the exception, however, that no doubt everyone will welcome the shortening of the election period. But to establish two sets of officials when one set could do the whole work in a proper fashion seems to me to be a totally unwarranted expense.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I cannot but associate myself with the view expressed primarily by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). As in the case of other hon. members I base my convictions mainly on my own experience with the different forms of appointments, and the manner in which elections have been conducted. In passing may I express my appreciation of the extremely non-partisan attitude displayed by the hon. member for Quebec South when he attributed nothing but the purest political motives to anything done by the government since they came into power. I have heard words more unkind than that used by hon. members in his section of the house.

The question it seems to me is a simple one: Shall the returning officer look upon himself primarily as a representative of one party, or shall he look upon himself primarily as a civil servant responsible to the state for the proper carrying out of his duties. I am aware that appointments by a party should not necessarily, in the extreme sense, be partisan appointments, but it leaves the door open for that to take place. In common with other hon. members I have had the misfortune to contest several elections. Without hesitation I will say that from the point of view of its administration on the part of the returning officer, by far the most satisfactory election was that of 1930. Upon that occasion there was no Liberal candidate in my riding, although the returning officer was not aware of that fact at first. There was a Conservative candidate running against me. I believe I can speak for the Conservative candidate as well as for myself when I say that we received absolute satisfaction. The whole work was carried out in the fairest possible way, and without any regard so far as we could see—and we were in a position to judge—for the interests of any party in the field or which might be in the field, as opposed to those of any other party. The returning officer, although of course originally a party man, took a view which I considered quite correct and one which should be held by the majority of right-thinking men. He said he was not appointed under the auspices of any party. That is, he was employed by the state to see that the people in that part of the country over which he had jurisdiction had an absolutely fair opportunity to express their views, whatever they might be. I did not know the politics of half the deputy returning officers appointed, and I am not certain that my Conservative friend knew. But we did know that practically without exception those men under the instructions of the returning officer carried out their duties in an absolutely fair and impartial manner. As I said in the beginning, they carried out their duties in a fair manner, and gave far more universal satisfaction than I had experienced in any other election. When we had a system which appeared to be satisfactory, and when it has been proved not only to the satisfaction of hon. members belonging to the party in power by whom the appointments were made, but to others, that the elections were carried on satisfactorily to all parties concerned, it seems to me to be a retrograde step to go back to the system which obtained before that time, when it was not satisfactory, and to take the risk even if the returning officers did their duty and even if the government had the altruistic motives, of being branded throughout the country as having made an effort to do otherwise and to gain an unwarranted advantage.

I can only conclude as I started out, by saying that I associate myself heartily with the point of view primarily expressed by the hon. member for Quebec South, and I urge the government in their own interests, in the interests of clean elections and in the interests of the people, to think again before taking a step which I am persuaded will be a retrograde one.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I heartily endorse what has been said by my right hon. leader and by other hon. members who have spoken on this side of the house. I was one guileless enough to believe at the time of the last general election that there would not be a change for some years to come in the manner of the appointment of returning officers. I am amazed to find that hon. gentlemen opposite at this time wish to take the machinery into their own hands, and are determined to place the appointment of deputy returning officers in the hands of the governor in council.

Some reference has been made to what happened during the last election in Ontario. If my information is correct there was not a complaint to the electoral officers as to the conduct of any of the deputy returning officers. What was done? First of all, owing to the fact that for nearly thirty years, with the exception of a few years in which there was a farmer government, there had been a Conservative government in Ontario, nearly all the sheriffs were Conservatives. Sheriffs and other similar officers constituted twenty-nine out of eighty-two deputy returning officers. My recollection is that the balance were fairly evenly divided.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, no.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They may not have been quite evenly divided, but I heard no complaints. Most of the men who are now governing in this house are the men who were dominant in the party at that time. I must say it is a great disappointment to the people of the country as a whole to find that they have so totally changed their views as to what is fair play in regard to elections.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to say that I subscribe to all that has been said by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). Before 1926 we had adopted the principle of having an officer appointed by this house appoint the returning officers in connection with the elections. This was changed in 1926 when the so-called shadow government came into power. We returned to that system in 1930, and I do not agree with what has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite. From all the reports I have had from the province from which I come, that system has worked most satisfactorily. I did have complaints and there were some heartburnings on the part of some of my friends in the constituency when strong Conservatives were appointed as deputy returning officers, but so far as I know they did their duty quite properly. When the election was over there were no complaints whatever.

This government was elected under that system in 1930. In 1934 they come down with a franchise act in which they propose to perpetuate that system so far as the franchise is concerned. They propose to appoint a commissioner of franchise and he is charged with the appointing of the registrars of electors in the various counties. He does the appointing, not the governor in council. So far as the franchise is concerned, this government has adopted the idea of having an officer appointed by this house—supposedly independent—appoint the registrars of electors in the different districts. That officer is to be appointed, by this house which, as at present constituted, is made up of a majority of hon. members opposite. That officer is to make the appointments so far as the franchise is concerned, but in the same breath, at the same session, and on the same day, we are asked to pass a bill with regard to elections whereby the provisions which have been in the act since 1926 and under which an officer of this house appointed the deputy returning officers are to be repealed. This particular function is to be exercised by the governor in council. How can my hon. friends justify the difference in the two systems? For the franchise, the registrars of electors are to be appointed by an officer of this house; for elections, the deputy returning officers are to be appointed by the governor in council.

This must be because the chief electoral officer was appointed by a house in which those of us on this side had a majority. Hon. friends opposite now intend to have it both ways. They are going to appoint a commissioner of franchise with their majority and are perfectly willing to have that officer appoint the registrars of electors. On the other hand, they are going to repudiate that principle when it comes to the elections act, and have the deputy returning officers appointed by the governor in council. I submit that my hon. friends cannot justify the difference in these two systems. As the hon. member for Quebec South has said, there must be some sinister motive in this change at this time, in this repudiation of a principle which has been found to work quite well and which my hon. friends are accepting in the Franchise Act. They refuse to accept this principle in connection with the elections act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to make perfectly clear what the record discloses as to the understanding given to the house by the minister at the time the dominion franchise bill was introduced. The resolution preceding the bill was introduced on June 13, and at that time the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) gave a statement to the house as to the purpose of the measure. This statement will be found on pages 3938 and 3939 of Hansard. I shall read only one paragraph as the rest is simply an elaboration. He said:

It has been thought by the government that it would be well to devise some improved method to bring on a general or a by-election in this country in much less time than is necessary at present. The proposal is that the government introduce a bill for the purpose of establishing the franchise of electors for dominion purposes and at the same time of providing for the making and completion of voters' lists which shall be regularly revised and kept up to date and which shall be available at a moment's notice in any part of Canada should a general election or a by-election take place. Under the scheme which is contemplated by the motion now before the committee it is hoped a franchise and voters' list act may be passed through this house and that under the new legislation a general or a by-election may be held in not more than twenty-eight days and possibly in twenty-four or twenty-five days.

The succeeding paragraph elaborates those remarks. The minister then said:

Mr. Speaker, I have now made a general statement of the purpose of the bill which it is intended to introduce.

There was in all that the minister said at that time no indication whatever of an intention to deal with the general elections act. The minister stated that the elections act was really three acts in one, it was a franchise act; it was an act concerning the preparation of lists, and it was an act respecting the machinery of elections. He stated that so far as the franchise act was concerned, he proposed to leave it as it was with the exception of the provisions respecting Doukhobors in British Columbia. He stated also that he intended to leave the elections act as it was. Having in mind what had been said at the conference when the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) and myself met the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan), I gave to the house what I gathered was the intention of the government. No exception was taken by the Minister of Justice to my understanding of the matter as set forth in my remarks. What I said will be found on page 3943 of Hansard, as follows:

My hon. friend has intimated that the present elections is really three measures combined in one, that it is an act with respect to the franchise, an act with respect to the preparation of voters' lists, and also an act with respect to the machinery for the conduct of the elections themselves. He has stated further that the present measure is to take out of the general act as it now stands those parts which relate to the franchise and to the preparation of election lists. I see no objection whatever to that step being taken.

There was a distinct understanding that the general elections act would remain as it was. Elsewhere it will be seen that the Prime Minister made similar representations. It was understood that we would take out of that act those sections which had to do with the franchise or with the voters' list, but it was never thought by myself or others on this side, nor was it intimated by the government that there was an intention on its part to change the general elections act. As I said when speaking on the previous measure, according to my recollection, the position as presented to us was that these two officers would have charge of the election machinery. There would be the chief electoral officer and the new officer who would be the franchise commissioner and who would have to do with the revision of the lists. The question was raised repeatedly at the conferences as to why we needed these two sets of officers, and their appointment was defended on the ground that it would be evidence of fair play and that the different points of view on all sides of the house would find expression in that way. I agree with what the hon. member for West Edmonton has said as to the extra costs and unnecessary duplication. I can see in this nothing other than the purpose he has stated, namely, an endeavour on the part of the government to get control of all election machinery and of all appointments. What I regret most of all having to say is that we have been deliberately deceived as to the intention of the government as expressed both by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Justice when presenting this matter to the house.

Section agreed to, on division.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Before the bill is reported I should like to know the length of time estimated by the government to be necessary between dissolution and election day?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Castonguay informs me that under the new legislation an election could be held within twenty-five to twenty-eight days.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not see how you are going—where has the chairman gone off to now? This is an example of how they want to run the elections in such great haste.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): I would inform the hon. member that the motion to report the bill was carried.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no harm in asking a proper question at this stage. You do not need to be in a desperate hurry now, just as the government is in trying to run the election off in twenty-eight days. How will you conduct an election in twenty-eight days in some of the ridings? A government that has a rotten defence as this one has would doubtless like to run it off in twenty-eight minutes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Order nothing. And the party that has a good policy, a good platform and a good record wants time to get its information to the country. This unseemly haste is just one more attempt to steal the election.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Guthrie moves that the bill be now read the third time. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am rising at the moment, not to speak on the third reading but to ask a question of the minister before the bill passes. Will the minister advise the house whether it is the intention of the government to proceed at once with the preparation of the basic list, to do so immediately after prorogation? How soon will the work be undertaken?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The bill provides that the franchise commissioner shall at once take steps and within six months have all the machinery going and the revising officers appointed. He will have to go over 245 ridings to make appointments and preparations. The limit is six months, but he begins immediately after the bill becomes law.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Before the bill is read the third time I wish to bring to the attention of the house a provision which I think should be included in this measure. An attempt has been made in the bill to make it as easy as possible, within certain limits, for individuals to exercise the franchise, and this was further added to yesterday in committee when the Minister of Justice introduced section 99 which provided for absentee voting. That section provides that fishermen, miners, lumbermen and sailors may vote by use of the absentee ballot if on election day they are not in the riding in which they are registered or within twenty-five miles of the constituency.

During the last few years there has been a development in the life of this country through which there are other people besides those actively engaged in the occupations mentioned who are compulsorily taken away from their homes—I refer to the men in the unemployment relief camps. If we refer to those mentioned in the category as entitled to vote by use of the absentee ballot we find fishermen, miners, lumbermen and sailors enumerated, and they are allowed that privilege because on election day they may not be in the constituency in which they are registered or within twenty-five miles thereof.

Let me give a hypothetical case. Let us say that in the city of Vancouver two men are looking for work prior to an election. One gets work in a lumber camp and goes there and on election day, if he is not within twenty-five miles of Vancouver, he is entitled to vote by use of the absentee ballot. The other man finds it impossible to get work and by force of circumstances he has to go into an unemployment relief camp; and because of that, although he is registered, these camps being more than twenty-five miles outside the city, he is unable to exercise the franchise. I hold that this is a discrimination of the worst kind against a man who, through no fault of his own, finds it impossible to obtain work. I submit that those in the relief camps should be put in the same position as those enumerated in the category and who are unable to vote in the riding in which they are registered. Provision was made in bill 101 so that unemployed men away from home would not lose their franchise, but unless we make provision also for them to exercise it—and we have not made that provision so far—extending the franchise to them will be useless. To remove that discrimination I move, seconded by Mr. Mitchell:

> That this bill be not read a third time now but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house with instructions that they have power to amend section 99, subsection (1), by adding after (e) a new clause (f):
> "Unemployment relief camp workers" means all workers at any unemployment relief camp or at any institution or refuge maintained either by public or private moneys for the relief of distressed or unemployed persons.
> And in subsection (2) after the word "sailor" in the fifth line, the words "or unemployment relief camp workers."

I have used these words because they are used in bill 101, rule 9, to make provision for the exercise of the franchise by men in unemployment relief camps. I hope that the house, as a matter of justice to those men who are so unfortunate as to be unemployed at this time, will see its way clear to adopt the amendment. The men in the unemployment relief camps are to-day continually informed that it is impossible for them to change the economic order in this country by means of our democratic institutions. If we do not include this amendment, if we expressly leave them out, we are giving proof positive to them that such is the case.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): When the bill was before the special committee appointed by this house, this question was very fully discussed and it was then that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) made his suggestion about absentee voters. He was not a member of the committee but was present during most of our sittings and heard what took place. After he made the suggestion in regard to absentee voters this clause was again discussed very thoroughly, and my recollection is that the committee was unanimous in confining the suggestion to fishermen, sailors, miners and lumbermen. It may be that there was one dissenting voice; it may have been seven to one but I think it was unanimous. Immediately applications came in from members of the house to include farmers, fruit pickers, teachers and various others. Well, we felt that if we were going to adopt this provision at all we would have to confine it within some bounds and we confined it to those trades whose members we know go far away from home in response to the demands of their occupations. They have to go far from home and they might ordinarily be deprived of their vote unless some amendment of this kind were prepared. It was the opinion of the committee—and I am going to say it was unanimous, but it may not have been—that this should not be extended.

The question came up again when the matter was before the committee of the house yesterday and I expressed the same view as I hold now, that I would not be inclined to extend the provision. I understand that in some of the relief camps there are very few men belonging to the province in which the camps exist and they cannot take advantage of the clause in any event because it is confined to polling divisions within the province. It was suggested also that it might be broadened out that a man in a relief camp in Ontario might be permitted to cast his ballot down in Nova Scotia. We could not agree to that proposal and I do not accept it now.

Mr. ROSS: I would like to ask the minister a question. There is trouble sometimes in connection with military camps; will any arrangement be made about those?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are covered in the act now; they were covered in the old act and we have not changed that clause.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I believe all hon. members will hope the relief camps are temporary institutions and not permanent or likely to be permanent. The insertion of a clause of this kind is suggestive of the possible permanency of relief camps. That phase of the matter I feel makes it undesirable to include an amendment of this nature. On the other hand when such a large number of men are in relief camps at the present time and when it is probable that this large number will continue to be in relief camps at the time the next general election occurs, I believe for the purposes of the next election it would be eminently right and just to have this particular clause included. If it were inserted in the bill at this time it could be repealed subsequently if the country found it possible through improvement of economic conditions to be freed of relief camps. I for one, should I be in a position so to do, would seek to bring about such a repeal subsequently if the conditions of the country so permitted. But, with conditions as they are at the moment, I shall lend my support very gladly to the inclusion of this amendment.

I wish to take advantage of speaking on the third reading of this bill to touch again on the question I asked the Minister of Justice a moment ago as to the preparation of the lists and the intention of the government to begin at once on their preparation. The minister replied that it was intended that the franchise commissioner should begin at once with the appointment of the franchise officers and the preparation of the lists. He mentioned that the act gave the commissioner a limit of six months within which to make the necessary preparations. Personally, I think that six months part of the measure is pure bluff. I believe it has been so provided to have it appear that we are not likely to have a general election during the remainder of this year. It is equally true, however, that the law has been so drafted as to enable basic lists to be prepared inside four weeks or, at the outside, six weeks. I hope all who feel as I do about the present administration will take care to see that within the next six weeks they become as busy as they can to have the lists made as complete as possible.

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): May I say just a word as the seconder of the amendment. I do not think these men in relief camps are any different from the soldiers at the war and if I remember aright, provision was made for the exercise of the soldiers' franchise. I believe these men were forced away from their surroundings in just the same manner as were the soldiers and sailors. After all is said and done, the government of this country instituted these camps and in view of that fact they have a responsibility to see to it that nothing is placed in the way of these men exercising their franchise. It must also be remembered that owing to the low wages they are paid, it is impossible for them to return to their home towns or their places of origin in order to vote, and I see no reason why provision should not be made which will enable these men to take their part in the next election.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) said that these relief camps are temporary institutions. That does not alter the argument. While they may be temporary, as we hope they are, as a matter of fact they exist and an obligation rests upon the government, in view of their direct responsibility in the management of the camps, to see to it that these men are given an opportunity to exercise the franchise.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Under ordinary conditions I would support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis), but as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has stated, this matter came up in the special committee that was dealing with this bill. I and those associated with me were extremely anxious to get what we thought was a very necessary amendment made so that absentee voting could take place. A number of classes, other than the four agreed on, were suggested. Finally there was a compromise, which I understood was unanimous, that the committee would agree to the four now in the bill. I concurred in that and I feel in good faith I shall have to support the government in connection with the present motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before the motion is put, on a point of order, may I say, after hearing what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has said and what I have since learned from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) as to there having been an understanding in the committee on the basis of which there was introduced last night the amendment with respect to absentee voters, I feel I ought to explain to the Minister of Justice and to hon. members that I had no knowledge of that understanding or I would not have spoken as I did in support of the amendment. I shall, therefore, feel it my duty not to vote on the amendment, although I have spoken in support of it. I want to make it perfectly clear that I had not known that the committee had arrived at an agreement as to the basis on which that other amendment would be introduced.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. MacInnis) which was negatived on the following division:

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, June 30, 1934.

Sir,—

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate chamber at 10 o'clock p.m. to-day for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. Lascelles,
Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons,
Ottawa.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 114 to amend the criminal code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Sections 1 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On section 7—Lottery sale void.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will the minister explain what is meant by section 7?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This follows the English act on the subject of lotteries. In the present act an informer may lay complaint or bring an action to recover a prize won in a lottery. In Great Britain they have recently amended their law, providing that any such prize shall be forfeited to His Majesty. We have merely adopted that system instead of what is known as the common informer system.

Section agreed to.

Sections 8 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

On section 15—Right of appeal to continue to expiration of term for filing notice.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the change in section 15?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is only to include the words "British Columbia" at the request of the new attorney general of that province.

Section agreed to.

Sections 16 to 22 inclusive agreed to.

Form 76D agreed to.

Section 23 agreed to.

Section 24 agreed to.

[Mr. Bradette.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have forgotten one amendment, and with the permission of the committee I should like to revert to section 12 of the bill.

On section 12—Intimidation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This was my oversight, I am sorry to say. For many years the Trades and Labour Congress have requested that a clause which was formerly in the criminal code, in regard to picketing, should be restored or that the English clause in regard to the same matter should be incorporated in our law. In the statute of 1886 this clause appeared under section 501 of our criminal code, in regard to picketing:

> Attending at or near or approaching to such house or other place as aforesaid in order merely to obtain or communicate information shall not be deemed a watching or besetting within the meaning of this section.

This was the law until the statutes were revised in 1896, when it was dropped without any repeal by this house. Of course the effect of the passage of the revised statutes would operate as a repeal. I would therefore move that this be added as subsection 2 of section 12, which already amends section 501.

Mr. RALSTON: I notice that section 3 of the act comes into force on proclamation. That is a new section which provides for the registration of revolvers and pistols in the possession of anyone, and I have no doubt that the minister has in mind that there should be the widest publicity given to this section before it is proclaimed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think we will put it into force for three to six months, in order to give due publicity to it.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION ACT

The house resumed from Thursday, June 28, consideration in committee of Bill No. 113, to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada—Mr. Stewart (Leeds)—Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 6—Tenders.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When the committee was last considering this bill we were at section 6. I had asked that sections 6 and 7 be considered together, because I felt that if old section 36 of the Public Works Act were substituted for those two sections we would have a much better act and one which, with regard to draftsmanship and the possibility of being understood, would be very much superior to what we have at the present time. I understand that the minister is not agreeable to considering the two sections together, so I wish to withdraw the amendment which I proposed, making sections 6 and 7 one section, and to move that section 6 be amended by adding the words "by public advertisement" after the word "tenders" in line 4. It is not necessary for me to enlarge upon the advantage of doing that. We are now embarking upon a program of public works such as we have never had in this country before, and from the protection that is thrown around the expenditure of that money we are removing a safeguard that has existed ever since we had a public works act in this country. At this stage of the session I do not propose to elaborate on the advantage of receiving public instead of private tenders; that must be known to every hon. member of this house. Therefore I beg to move the amendment I have already read, and which I have placed in your hands.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: The other day the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) brought up a very important question; he suggested that tenders should be confined to the particular localities where the public works are to be undertaken and that local contractors should be given the preference over contractors from outside the city or particular place where the public works were to be carried on. I would go a little bit further; I would suggest not only that local contractors should get the contracts but that those who are unemployed should be given work on these public works rather than men who already have employment. Therefore I would ask the Minister of Public Works if these contractors getting contracts will cooperate to the fullest degree with the representatives of such municipal relief authorities in order to make the works most effective in relieving unemployment. I believe these municipalities are very anxious to cut down relief costs, and certainly this is one way of putting to work a great many of the unemployed throughout Canada.

Amendment (Mr. Elliott) negatived on division.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 7—Cases in which tenders may not be required.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have a complete change which I desire to move in regard to this section. The amendment is as follows:

That section 7 be deleted and that the following section be substituted therefor:

7. In case of work of pressing emergency in which, in the opinion of the governor in council, delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which, from the nature of the work it could be more beneficially executed under the direct supervision and control of the officers and employees of the department in charge of such work, the governor in council, on the recommendation of the minister of such department accompanied by a certificate of the chief engineer or chief architect of such department or of the chief engineer or chief architect of the Department of Public Works, may direct that the work proceed forthwith without inviting tenders. Provided that in case of any one work the cost of which is estimated to be less than five thousand dollars, the minister or department in charge of such work may proceed with such work under the direction of such minister or department.

The object of this amendment is to make the section more workable. The bill now provides that tenders must be invited in every instance. There will be a large number of works costing less than $5,000, and every tender would have to be brought before the governor in council. Under the Public Works Act as it exists to-day, works under $5,000 may be let without tender, and I am therefore making that exception. Everything has to go before the governor in council, except works under $5,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You are just embodying the present provision.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In that respect.

Mr. BENNETT: But it goes farther.

Mr. RALSTON: Is the minister cutting out the word "economically"?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and putting in the word "beneficially."

Mr. RALSTON: Beneficial to whom?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): To the public.

Mr. RALSTON: That ought to be said.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I had indicated to the minister that I intended to move an amendment which in many respects would be the same as the amendment he has now moved. I am wondering just why the words "expeditiously and economically" have been deleted, and the word "beneficially" substituted therefor. I think the effect is quite clear. The economical end is not quite so satisfactory as the beneficial end, to the framers of the bill. I assume there is a good and sufficient reason behind making the change.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will explain it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In accepting the suggestion I made the other day in connection with tenders under $5,000, the minister is taking a step in the right direction. I am glad he has seen the error of his ways, and I trust that at a later part of the bill he will not move another amendment, which I understand he has in mind, which would negative the good effect of the amendment he has just moved. I hope he will not kick over the milk pail which he has filled, in an attempt to amend a subsequent section.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 8—Assistants.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suggest that the minister ought to delete the words "and other persons." The section reads:

> For the purposes of this act, the governor in council may authorize the minister charged with the execution of any work under this act from time to time to employ such architects, engineers and other persons as may be required.

The expression "other persons" might include all sorts of people, and the effect would be that the money could be distributed among any number of persons—another election device as I see it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The object is to cover the employment of foremen, supervisors, draftsmen, clerks and even messenger boys who are in charge of binding plans, and so on. I think the section should stand as it is. There is no intention to expand it any more than is absolutely necessary, and it is stated that we must go to the governor in council for authority.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It looks to me like an election device.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 9—Orders laid before house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have an amendment to this section.

Mr. BENNETT: Probably the right hon. gentleman had better wait until eight o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall submit it to the minister, so that he may have an opportunity to consider it during the adjournment.

Mr. BENNETT: At eight o'clock we can take the amendments to Senate bills. There are some purely technical amendments. If acceptable to my right hon. friend, we could do that immediately after eight o'clock.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 19, to incorporate the Bank of Canada.

He said: The first amendment deals with subsection 1 of section 5, which is amended by adding to the end of the subsection the words, "who shall not as such be a member of the board." That refers to the assistant deputy governor, and I see no reason why it should not be concurred in.

The second amendment is in section 6 where the word "financial" has been substituted for "banking." The section would then read, "the governor and deputy governor shall be men of proven financial experience." I would think that that was an improvement.

The third amendment deals with subsection 3 of section 8 where the words "subject to the approval of the governor in council" are added after the word "shall." I suppose there can be no objection to that.

The fourth amendment is in section 9, subsection 5, where the word "reelection" is substituted for the word "reappointment" I think reelection is proper.

The fifth amendment is in section 10, subsection 2, line 3. The Senate proposes that the following words be added:

> ... and any person nominated for election as a director who is a shareholder of a chartered bank shall if elected divest himself of ownership of his shares within three months of the date of his election and shall not thereafter during the period of his office have an interest, either directly or indirectly, as a shareholder in a chartered bank.

I believe the English system is to permit a lapse of time after the date of election, either to acquire the necessary qualifying shares or to divest of shares which should not be held.

Mr. IRVINE: I fail to see how a director of a bank could become a director of this bank, since he is prohibited from obtaining shares.

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly my view. The point being made by the Senate is that a holder of shares in the Bank of Canada who is also a holder of shares in a chartered bank might be elected, and this is to give him a chance to divest himself of his shares, in order that he may have no interest in a chartered bank while serving as a director. If I had my way about it I would add these words, "and until such time as he has divested himself of such shares he shall not act as a director." That would be the logical and proper wording to add.

The sixth amendment is in section 21, paragraph (i). It is proposed to add after the word "banks" the words "or to banks incorporated under the provisions of the Quebec Savings Banks Act." This amendment will have the effect of authorizing and empowering the Bank of Canada to make loans to a bank incorporated under the provisions of the Quebec Savings Banks Act. There are only two such banks, one at Quebec and one at Montreal. I cannot speak with great certainty about the bank at Quebec, but the one at Montreal is in as excellent a condition as any chartered bank in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Are these provincial institutions?

Mr. BENNETT: That is the old act which I think had its origin in pre-confederation days. The Montreal District and Savings Bank and La Caisse d'Economie de Notre Dame de Quebec are incorporated under the provisions of this statute. I suppose there is no reason why the Bank of Canada should not lend to either one of these banks if they desired a loan.

The seventh amendment is in paragraph (m) of the same section. It will be observed that in the third line of that paragraph the word "savings" has been used. The word "Quebec" is being added, so that it will read "incorporated under the Quebec Savings Bank Act." The word "deposits" is spelled with a capital "D", and this should be a small "d".

The next amendment is in section 27. It is proposed to add the following as subsection 7:

Every bank incorporated under the Quebec Savings Banks Act shall maintain against its deposit liabilities such reserves in the form of notes of the bank or deposits with the bank or a chartered bank as may be deemed to be necessary by the bank, and shall furnish such information as may be required by the bank from time to time to satisfy it that such reserves are so maintained.

It is within the mind of the house that the question whether or not the two institutions I have named should come within the provisions of this bill was discussed in the committee and I think in the committee of the whole house. If my memory serves me aright, it was stated that if these banks desired to avail themselves of the provisions of this bill, they should make the same deposits as the chartered banks. As the subsequent sections anticipate that the gold of these two banks is necessarily to be transferred to the Bank of Canada, and as the reserve now provided for in subsection 7, which is added, provides that the reserves shall be to the satisfaction of the Bank of Canada, but may be kept partly in the Bank of Canada and partly in the chartered bank, that difficulty is overcome. But personally I have doubts as to whether or not the bank should be permitted to keep any part of its reserves in a chartered bank, because the theory of the statute is that the chartered banks themselves must keep their reserves with this bank; and therefore any bank that avails itself of the benefits of the Bank of Canada Act should also accept the responsibility of keeping its reserves either in the form of notes of the bank or in the Bank of Canada itself. I suggest therefore that the words "or a chartered bank" should be deleted from the amendment made by the Senate for the reasons I have indicated.

The next, No. 10, is found in section 36 and is one in which I think the house can concur. Subsection 4 reads:

The voting of the shareholders shall be by ballot.

The Senate proposes to add, after the word "shall," the words "in the case of the election of directors"—obviously, in my judgment, a very proper correction. And in the twelfth line of the same subsection the Senate proposes to delete the words "by registered post," taking the view that to provide that in every case the writing should be transmitted by registered post might create confusion and difficulty. So that, instead of reading as it does in the bill that went from this house, it would read:

No person shall vote by proxy except that any shareholder may give to the minister, in writing, instructions as to the manner in which he desires to vote on any business of the meeting.

The words "by registered post" are deleted on the ground that it might cause confusion and difficulty. Personally I cannot see the point, but I have no objection.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Originally, was it intended to limit voting by ballot to the election of directors?

Mr. BENNETT: The point is as to whether the letter shall be registered or not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But originally, was it the intention to restrict the voting of shareholders to voting by ballot on the election of directors?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, because that is the only thing that the shareholders do, and it was intended always that these words should be implied rather than stated. That is the implication, because there are few cases in which the shareholders would have necessity for voting.

The last amendment will be found in section 43, by adding to paragraph (d) of subsection 1 the following:

And such by-laws may provide for the nomination of directors before any annual general meeting and what constitutes such nomination.

That is a very admirable addition because, as it read, it might be necessary to imply it rather than to have any direct authority as to the manner in which directors should be nominated. We can concur in that also. I would move therefore that we concur in amendment No. 1, in section 5, "who shall not as such be a member" of the board—that is, the assistant deputy governor shall not be.

Mr. RALSTON: Did that refer to the deputy governor or the deputy minister of finance?

Mr. BENNETT: The assistant deputy governor. In my opinion it means that now, because, unless there is specific provision that does make him such, he is not anyway; and inasmuch as it is not specifically provided, he is not. But the Senate has added those words.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The deputy minister and the assistant deputy governor, both appointees of the government, will have no vote?

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The only votes on the board which the government directly controls by way of appointment are the governor and the deputy governor.

Mr. BENNETT: That is No. 1, and I move that we concur therein. No. 2 is the substitution of the word "financial" for "banking," which is an improvement, leaving a doubtful question much clearer than it was. No. 3, at the foot of page 3, adds after the word "shall" in the third line, subsection 3, the words "subject to the approval of the governor in council" dealing with the question of salaries. I think it is a proper safeguard, and I move that we concur in that one also. The fourth amendment substitutes for the word "appointment" the word "election," and I move that we concur in that amendment, because "election" is an accurate statement and "appointment" inaccurate. The fifth amendment deals with the question of the director elected, who owns chartered bank stocks, divesting himself of them in a period of three months. It seems to me that the logical thing to do would be to provide that until he has divested himself of such shares he shall not act as such director.

Mr. RALSTON: Or the board would be short in the meantime.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the board would be short. I am entirely in the hands of the house with respect to that, but I think we can leave it as it reads; it will not make any difference. The next amendment in which we can concur is No. 6, on page 10, paragraph (i) of subsection 1 of section 21, making the act apply to the Quebec Savings Bank Act, to which there is no objection, and adding the words "of Quebec" before the word "savings" on the sixth line on page 11, as well as making a capital "D" a small "d" in the word "deposits." I move that we concur in these six that I have just indicated, because I want to speak specially as to the next one.

The first six amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. BENNETT: The seventh amendment, at the end of section 27, reads:

Every bank incorporated under the Quebec Savings Bank Act shall maintain against its deposit liabilities such reserves in the form of notes of the bank or deposits with the bank or a chartered bank as may be deemed to be sufficient by the bank, and shall furnish such information as may be required by the bank from time to time to satisfy it that such reserves are so maintained.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does "the bank" there mean the central bank?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I apprehend that the reason for this is that the chartered banks will pay some small interest on deposits made by the savings bank. The Bank of Canada has none. I apprehend that whoever was responsible for the amendment contemplated the possibility of some interest being received.

I will state the case for this amendment and I will state the case against it. In favour of this amendment, which is the logical and complementary amendment, to guarantee all the privileges of the central bank to the savings banks, that is the maintenance of reserves, is to be found this: that they shall be maintained in such a way as to be deemed sufficient by the Bank of Canada. That, I take it, would enable the governor of the Bank of Canada to say: We are not satisfied with the size of your deposit in a chartered bank and therefore you will have to increase your deposit with this bank despite what you have in the chartered bank. Against that is this: the chartered banks themselves are compelled to maintain reserves and it is not the general spirit of the statute that one of the institutions which is permitted to carry on business with the central bank should be maintaining a portion of its reserves with one of the banks that has itself to carry on its business in the way indicated. The other answer in favour of the amendment is this: that inasmuch as any chartered bank that receives a deposit is compelled by law to have a deposit with the central bank, there is inferentially a twofold security, that is the security made by the chartered bank that has the deposit as well as the security of the reserve in notes held by the savings bank to the satisfaction of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As the Bank of Canada is in control, could it not ask for an increased deposit?

Mr. BENNETT: That is my judgment. Unless there is some reason in the minds of the house why we should disagree, after looking at the matter from every angle, in view of the fact that the deposit made by the savings bank with a chartered bank will have in itself to be covered by a deposit in the central bank, that makes the matter perfectly secure.

Mr. IRVINE: Would it not be quite satisfactory for these two banks for which provision is being made, to be governed in their borrowings from the central bank by the same regulations that govern the chartered banks?

Mr. BENNETT: They are. The only addition is this: hon. members will recall that among the powers that the bank may exercise is that of lending money to chartered banks and this puts the savings banks in exactly the same position as the chartered banks, so the only question for consideration is really whether a reserve partly maintained in a chartered bank but in every instance to the satisfaction of the governor of the central bank, is adequate. Frankly, in view of the fact that the chartered bank must maintain its reserve for that deposit, we are quite safe in accepting the amendment.

Mr. RALSTON: The only other point about the matter is that I think the method of requiring a reserve from these Quebec savings banks is perhaps more scientific than that which we adopted in the bill itself in providing for a rigid reserve. I am strongly in favour of this kind of provision for a reserve, namely, one which the central bank may increase or decrease as the exigencies of the case demand. That seems to give a better control of credit than to have a fixed reserve of five per cent.

I am in favour of the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, you have been good enough to let us carry on this discussion so as to expedite business. I quite realize the fact mentioned by the hon. member, but there are certain circumstances, to which attention need not now be directed, that arose out of the operations of the Finance Act and of the banks whereby their reserves are at a low figure relatively to the position in England where ten per cent is the figure for large banks, six per cent being in notes of the Bank of England and four per cent being in deposits in that institution. In this instance, when we say "not less than five per cent", we are giving the banks substantial leeway in view of the fact that part of that may be carried in notes of the central bank.

The question is: Shall we accept the amendment? I see no reason why we should not unless there is some reason given against it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BENNETT: The other amendments I think I have sufficiently explained as to the changes which are not important and which, I believe, are in the interests of the bill itself.

Mr. RALSTON: With regard to the surrender of gold, there is no provision for these banks surrendering gold. I do not know whether they have any or not, but I assume they have some. Is it intended that they shall surrender it?

Mr. BENNETT: The bill says: "every chartered bank shall", and they are chartered banks within the meaning of the statute. The words "chartered bank" means a bank to which the Bank Act applies.

Mr. DONNELLY: Has the Quebec Savings bank any gold?

Mr. BENNETT: It probably has not. It might have a little. It is not a rule for it to carry any reserve of gold, but there have been cases in which, according to the bank returns, these two banks have had gold. The name is not the Quebec Savings bank. The banks have their existence under the provisions of the Quebec Savings Banks Act. One bank is the Montreal City and District Bank and the other is La Caisse d'Economie de Notre Dame de Québec. I think it is contemplated that the gold would be returned over to the Bank of Canada.

I would therefore move that the remaining amendments be concurred in.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

FRANCHISE COMMISSIONER

APPOINTMENT OF JOHN THOMAS CONNOLLY THOMPSON, D.S.O.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I would like to make a motion now that the franchise bill has been disposed of. I move:

That John Thomas Connolly Thompson, D.S.O., of the city of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, one of His Majesty's counsel, learned in the law, be appointed dominion franchise commissioner in accordance with the provisions of an act respecting the franchise of electors at elections of members of the House of Commons.

I was going to ask my right hon. friend to second the motion.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in seconding the motion which my right hon. friend has just moved. All who know him must regard Colonel Thompson as a man of the highest probity and integrity. His honesty and ability cannot be questioned. I for one am prepared to believe that the qualities of character which have made him somewhat rigid in the work of administration of the particular commission over which he presides are characteristics of a strict impartiality and honesty of purpose which may give him a special fitness for this particular post.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the legislation provides that the salary be fixed as well?

Mr. BENNETT: That was fixed this afternoon; it is in the bill and not in this motion.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 113, to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada—Mr. Stewart (Leeds)—Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On section 9—Orders laid before house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At six o'clock I was speaking about an amendment that I wished to move to clause 9 which reads:

All orders in council made under the provisions of this act shall be laid before the House of Commons forthwith after the making thereof if parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within the first fifteen days of the next ensuing session.

This clause is similar to the one which has appeared in some of the acts respecting relief that have previously been passed, but it omits a very significant clause which is in the other relief acts, namely, that if parliament is not sitting such orders in council or regulations or an abstract thereof disclosing their essential provisions shall be published in the next following issue of the Canada Gazette. I ask the Minister of Public Works if he cannot see his way to include a similar additional clause to section 9, and to that end I would move:

That section 9 be amended by inserting after the word "then" in line thirty-nine, the words "said orders in council or an abstract thereof disclosing their essential provisions shall be published in the next following issue of the Canada Gazette and laid before parliament."

I point out that this measure provides for a total expenditure of forty million dollars, and the greater part of it will be made before parliament reassembles. I think it is but reasonable to ask, particularly as the measure is one purporting to be for purposes of relief, that the same procedure should be followed with respect to advising the country as to such orders in council as may be passed under this measure as has been followed with respect to orders passed under previous measures.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I submit that this section as drafted is sufficient to meet the requirements of the situation. The activities of the government under this act are not of a special character such as those contemplated by the Unemployment Relief Act. In fact my right hon. friend and some of his followers have contended that many of these items might very well have appeared in the regular estimates of the department. The opposition have contended from time to time that they were prepared to vote practically any sum for the relief of unemployment as long as the government came before the house and gave particulars and details of the expenditures. This is not a blank cheque—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): In spots it is.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Well, to a very limited extent. It is an act authorizing the expenditure of specific amounts for particular purposes. There is nothing extraordinary or exceptional in its character. Therefore the reasons which prevail for publication of orders in council under the Unemployment Relief Act, which are of a special and exceptional character, involving activities outside the regular sphere of the work of the dominion government, do not apply to this. These are additional expenditures upon purely dominion undertakings. As my right hon. friend has said, they might perhaps properly appear in the regular estimates. If they had appeared in the regular estimates no one would suggest that any such provision should be inserted. A special provision has been inserted in the bill, section 10, providing that—

> The Minister of Finance shall make a report to parliament within the first thirty days of each session during the currency of this act, containing a statement of all moneys expended under the provisions thereof and the purposes to which they were applied.

So I think we have anticipated to a very large extent the purposes which my right hon. friend has in mind. Let me compare that provision with what happens in the case of an expenditure in the regular way by the public works or any other department. These expenditures appear in the public accounts, but they would not be presented to parliament until the year following. We have anticipated that and provided that when parliament assembles we shall present a statement containing the details of these expenditures. They are not of an exceptional character, but are within the scope of the regular expenditures of parliament. It really is not necessary, I think, to go to the expense of publishing in the Canada Gazette a precis of orders in council with respect to the detailed expenditures. For these reasons I submit that the amendment is unnecessary and that every interest has been safeguarded by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The reason which was given by the minister is really amusing. It is quite funny. He says he does not think it is advisable to go to the expense of publishing a precis of these orders in council in the Canada Gazette. I suppose the cost of publication of a precis would amount to the cost of the setting of the type, because the rest of the cost would be the ordinary cost of getting out the Gazette in any event. It might come to ten or at the outside fifteen dollars an issue. I question if it would come to that. On the other hand the minister does not hesitate to ask us to vote forty million dollars for the purposes named in this bill. He asks us to vote that great sum for all kinds of purposes, and then he says it is rather too expensive to publish a precis in the Canada Gazette. I believe this measure—and I believe so more strongly than ever in view of what the minister has just said—is intended for election purposes. All these sums being appropriated are largely for the purpose of distributing money in different constituencies at a time just preceding an election. My belief is that an election will be held before parliament meets again, and the reason the minister does not wish to have any precis put in the Canada Gazette is that he does not wish the public to know how these moneys are being distributed. I say he must render himself open to that criticism and suspicion unless he is prepared to acquiesce in a very simple and obviously fair and reasonable amendment such as the one I have moved here.

Let me direct attention to the last item in the schedule to the bill:

> To supplement where necessary specific amounts hereinbefore provided, upon the authority of the governor in council, $500,000.

That is half a million dollars just to be moved about in differing amounts at the pleasure of the governor in council. This will have to be done by order in council. Why should the public not know how much of that half million dollars is being paid out, when and where, and how much is going to one locality and how much to another? There is no defence for not being willing to acquaint the public with that. This talk about having a report submitted to the next parliament is altogether beside the mark. It is meaningless. The public will want to know how this money which we are being asked to vote for relief purposes is going to be spent from month to month. The minister says that we were prepared to vote a large lump sum. That was always on the understanding that it would be accompanied with safeguards I am proposing which would ensure that the public be kept acquainted with the expenditure. And the attitude of the minister is the more unreasonable in that heretofore this has always been done.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have in mind the bill passed at the last session.

Mr. BENNETT: That was because there were no details of the proposed expenditures. It was an estimate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are no details of the half million dollars and other amounts here.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The wording of that item is taken from the wording of the regular estimates of the Public Works department year after year. It is an item that has appeared in the estimates of that department right along during all the years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then let us look again at schedule A; here is an item:

Harbours and Rivers Generally—
Improvements, maintenance of services, repairs and additions, $2,500,000.

Here is another: Interior department, $2,000,000. There is $4,500,000 just in a lump sum. That money will have to be spent, I assume, by orders of the governor in council. If not, it will be departmental expenditure previously provided for by order in council. If this is intended to help unemployment why should not the public have a precis from month to month? There can be only one answer, that the government is seeking to conceal the manner in which it will spend this money. I do not think we should allow this committee to report progress until we get satisfactory procedure on that point.

Mr. BENNETT: I take it the right hon. gentleman desires to be fair. Will he give me any instance in which there has ever been any such provision as this inserted in the law, except where there was a general appropriation? I am just telling what happened. During the last days of his government he entered into a contract with respect to dredging in the St. Lawrence river, for instance, for which we have had to provide money ever since, and which is not quite finished yet. We knew nothing of it and neither did the public, because there was an item in the estimates providing for dredging.

If you will be good enough to look at the schedule to this bill, Mr. Chairman, you will find that the name is given as to the location of every proposed expenditure. The half million dollars is merely to take care of the fluctuations that sometimes happen in connection with contracts. For instance, one of the contracts that came to this government as a legacy was in connection with a coffer dam in Saint John harbour, for which the contract price was so low that it was quite clear that it could not be built for that amount of money. The coffer dam went out twice, and for extras that had been incurred before we assumed office it cost us more than the contract price. No one published a precis of that in the Gazette; it was never asked or suggested that this should be done.

I suggest that if we are going to adopt this as a principle in this house it should be the subject matter of general legislation. I could start at Halifax and go straight through to Vancouver. For instance, I discovered only by accident that my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) had raised the salaries of charwomen a few days before the election.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That was understood months before.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly it was not published in the Gazette. Let us be fair with each other. Everything in this bill complies with the provisions that have obtained heretofore in connection with estimates. I will admit that there is one item of $2,000,000 in connection with the Department of the Interior, and a further item of $2,500,000 in connection with harbours and rivers generally. As I said to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) when he mentioned it the other day—and this was one of the matters that influenced the government in making the item so large—there have been severe storms on the Atlantic coast resulting in great destruction of wharves and breakwaters in the little harbours. We could not undertake to specify them all here; to do so would have been ridiculous, but this item will cover them. The reason the last section is in this bill is to enable parliament, just as soon as the house meets, to have full knowledge of what has been done. That is unusual, but because we have to spend money for these particular purposes, owing to conditions to which the hon. gentleman very properly referred the other day, we have provided that this house shall be seized of all the steps that have been taken as soon as the house meets, which is unusual. Otherwise we would have to wait for the auditor general's report.

I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will be fair and will not ask us, because we are near prorogation, to do something which is unsound as a principle unless adopted as a new rule in connection with all public expenditures. The hon. gentleman asks that whenever an order in council is passed a precis of it shall be published in the Gazette. The rules require that matters dealing with public policy should be so dealt with but in this case just what would happen? In connection with this legislation, over a period of months, probably there would be three or four hundred orders in council. What would the precis amount to? "Contract let for an addition to a building at Kamchatka for $10,000; contractor, John Smith and Company." That would be all, and what purpose would be served by that? It never has been done before, nor has it been asserted that it should be done. I can only say that I think the right hon. gentleman's sense of fairness, when he looks at the schedule, will satisfy him that we have endeavoured to do what always has been done, and have gone just one step further. I may say that I accept the responsibility for that last section. I felt that with respect to those basket items, if I might call them such, we should give the fullest information at the earliest possible moment, and when the house meets the information will be supplied at once. I think probably that is about as fair a proposal as has ever been made in this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The election will be over then.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman's prescience, I suppose, is very great in the sense that he is a Hielander, and no doubt always will have that second sight that is denied to other people, but it will be remembered that coming events cast their shadows before.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister cannot have it both ways. He can either say that these are ordinary items of departmental expenditure on public works and that the same policy should be followed with respect to them that is followed with respect to the items in the ordinary estimates, or he will have to take the ground, which he has taken up to the present, that these are all exceptional expenditures, and that they are for the purposes of relief, in which event he ought to follow the procedure that has been followed in the past with respect to expenditures for relief. I am basing my attitude and argument on the allegation of the government that these expenditures are intended for relief purposes; it is so stated in the preamble of the bill. The Prime Minister made reference to what happened in the last session of the previous parliament, and I think he spoke of the items that were brought down before the election.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I was not complaining about that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Evidently something of the kind is in his mind at the moment. My right hon. friend spoke about dredging in the St. Lawrence. I find here in the supplementary estimates presented a day or two ago an item of $1,000,000 for the St. Lawrence ship canal, dredging, and to provide for work performed and to be performed by contract. That looks like the eve of an election.

Mr. BENNETT: That is part of the legacy we inherited under that contract.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Why did you not vote it in the main estimates?

Mr. BENNETT: Because most of the work has been done. The rest of it is with respect to the St. Augustine bar which is in front of the bridge coming up the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This bill has been referred to right along as a measure for the purpose of relief, and the preamble says:

> —and whereas the construction and execution of the works mentioned in the schedule hereto will tend to increase employment and reduce expenditures for relief purposes—

That is the whole purpose of this measure, professedly. From the beginning I have said that I do not think such is the purpose at all but that the purpose is to put the government in possession of sums of money which they will be free to distribute all over the country. I think the public will be very much interested in knowing whether with its money John Smith and Company of such and such a village gets a contract of a certain amount just a few weeks before the election takes place; I think in other constituencies the public will be interested to know who secured the contracts that are let and sums paid out for all kinds of purposes. Unless that is what the government are seeking to conceal why will not the minister come across in this and do exactly as he has done in previous relief measures?

Mr. RALSTON: I just want to direct the Prime Minister's attention to what really are the blank cheque items. On page 4 there is an item of $2,500,000 for harbours and rivers generally; improvements, maintenance of services, repairs and additions. An item of that size never has been voted before in connection with harbours and rivers. Here is another basket item, to use my right hon. friend's expression:

Interior Department—
To provide for the construction and development of public buildings, camp sites, electric light and telephone systems, highways, trails, water and sewer systems, recreational areas, wharves, and river protection works; to provide for the development of historic sites including buildings repairs and restorations; also to provide for the construction of the Golden-Revelstoke (Big Bend) section of the trans-Canada highway between Golden and Canoe river, further to provide for the purchase and acquisition of building sites, $2,000,000.

That is spread clear across the Dominion of Canada, from Halifax to Vancouver. Then here is another item:

Indian Affairs Department—
For the reconstruction of Indian residential and day schools, and hospitals, $500,000.

That is spread across Canada as well. Then there is another item:

Public Buildings Generally—
Improvements, additions, fittings, repointing, painting, repairs and renewals to heating, floors, roofs, plumbing, electrical installations, improvement of grounds, sidewalks and roadways; and incidental expenditures in connection therewith, $2,000,000.

I submit that those are not ordinary items. There is another item on page 6 of the bill providing for an expenditure of $500,000. It is as follows:

To supplement where necessary specific amounts hereinbefore provided, upon the authority of the governor in council.

Those items are altogether different from the ones voted under the estimates. As is stated in the preamble, they are voted to effect national recovery. The actual words are "for the general advancement of the country and to accelerate recovery to more normal economic conditions". I submit that the Prime Minister ought to be fair, and—

Mr. BENNETT: I will meet my right hon. friend in this regard. I am content that with respect to those items for which there are no particulars, this amendment should apply, but with respect to the others the normal provision in connection with estimates will be applicable. If the right hon. gentleman will arrange his amendment accordingly I shall meet him. I will say that with respect to harbours and rivers generally, the representations made by the hon. gentleman were not without some force in connection with conditions on the Atlantic, because I had a report, myself, as to the abnormal storms which had created those conditions. In connection with the item of $2,000,000 for public buildings I think the minister proposes to add to it the new constructions, because there are places in which the old buildings have to be torn down entirely, and new buildings put up. I shall be pleased now to meet the conditions stated by the right hon. gentleman, by providing that in all items other than those specifically mentioned the precis should be published in the Gazette.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the circumstances I shall be prepared to accept the Prime Minister's offer. My amendment will then read:

That section 9 be amended by inserting after the word "then" in line thirty-nine, the words: "Said orders in council or an abstract thereof disclosing their essential provisions shall be published in the next following issue of the Canada Gazette, and laid before parliament, in the case of all expenditures the amounts of which are not specifically set forth in schedule A."

Mr. BENNETT: I am prepared to accept that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Thank you.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. POULIOT: Before the section is carried let us go back to January 2, 1931. I have before me a most admirable speech delivered in the city of Calgary about unemployment. It is reported in the Montreal Gazette. It is not very long, and this would be the most convenient time to—

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, the rule is that the hon. member is out of order, and perhaps it might as well be enforced to-night. I submit newspaper articles read for the purpose of influencing the action of parliament are and always have been out of order.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking to the point of order, may I say that I have no intention of delaying the session. I would not make a long speech. I have tried to learn some speeches by heart. But according to the rules of the house, a number of which I know by heart, let me tell you that it is permissible for a member to quote any speech delivered outside the house. The speech I shall read was not delivered by Abraham Lincoln at Gettysburg, but was delivered by the right hon. Prime Minister in his own constituency of Calgary. It is headed "Bennett Plans Move to Avoid Future Slump. Is Not Satisfied with Temporary Relief."

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What is the date of it?

Mr. POULIOT: January 2, 1931. The heading continues with the words "Seeks Final Causes." Then, this is a most important point —I am coming to it: Very often in this house I have asked the Minister of Labour to make a classification of the unemployed, in order to cure unemployment. I was delighted to hear the Prime Minister answer one question this year, after the numerous questions which for four years I have been asking. He answered that the government was doing its best to classify the unemployed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: And, sir, I quote this because I am sure that on that occasion the Prime Minister was right. I fully agree with what he said, but the trouble is that he afterwards changed his mind. What he said in Calgary on January 2, 1931, is O.K. He spoke as a statesman, and I did not have an opportunity to congratulate him. I began to congratulate him one day after I had spoken in a debate prompted by the hon. member for Bellechasse. I rose to speak, and I was about to congratulate the Prime Miinster when the house adjourned. Here is the quotation, by the Canadian press:

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order. We are discussing section 9.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): I must ask the hon. member to make his remarks as relevant as possible.

Mr. POULIOT: Just a minute, sir. May I say just one thing before you give a final decision. Section 9 reads:

All orders in council made under the provisions of this act shall be laid before the House of Commons forthwith after the making thereof if parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within the first fifteen days of the next ensuing session.

This section refers to orders in council. The orders in council express the policy of the government with respect to relief of unemployment. Therefore, sir, when I quote the excellent speech delivered in Calgary by the Prime Minister with regard to unemployment, stating his policy at that time to end unemployment, I am perfectly within the rules. I am quite in order because the orders in council mentioned in section 9 are supposed to contain the government's policy on the relief of unemployment. For these reasons I submit I am perfectly in order.

I do not criticize that speech. I eulogize it, I praise it, and I am sorry that the policy indicated therein has not been the policy followed by the government. I read:

Calgary, January 2. Application of temporary measures to correct present economic conditions will not satisfy Premier R. B. Bennett.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order.

Mr. POULIOT:

He is determined to unearth the final causes of the present depression and lay a secure foundation for permanent future prosperity. So he told a large gathering of his fellow citizens of Calgary assembled to-day at a luncheon arranged jointly by the board of trade, the young men's section of the board of trade, and the Kiwanis club.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order, order.

Mr. POULIOT:

"I cannot make up my mind" he said, "why this country between the lake and the mountains should experience the depression, why people who have lived here for years should now find themselves without any accumulation of goods, sometimes without the bare necessities of life."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order. I wish to call the hon. member's attention again to the section under discussion, and the fact that what he is reading is not, in the opinion of the chair, in any way relevant to this section. I declare his remarks out of order.

Mr. POULIOT: I am sorry that the chair is wooden and wrong.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. POULIOT: It is an insult to the Prime Minister. How can we praise the Prime Minister, when we are prevented from doing it?

Mr. BENNETT: Name him.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The amendment has been revised in accordance with the agreement with the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is accepted.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 10—Report to parliament.

Mr. POULIOT: On this section I would criticize the Prime Minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I am very sorry, sir, that those admirable statements made at Calgary have been forgotten. That was admirable; everyone agreed with it.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, it would be disastrous in the closing hours of the session if we should have to take action provided by the rules to deal with the hon. member for Témiscouata. I hope he will not make it necessary for the leader of the house to take action to that effect. I can say only this, that when the ruling of the chair is given we expect it to be obeyed.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, sir, on the point of order: The first part of the discussion was on another section, which has been approved. Now I was about to make another speech, but as it does not seem to please the government I will take the first opportunity to make it outside the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This section is somewhat similar to the section in the previous relief act, but there is no section in this bill similar to section 11 in the latest relief act which relates to the duration of the act. I think the minister should add a section to the effect that this act shall expire on March 31, 1935, unless there is some special reason why that should not be done.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My right hon. friend will observe that several of these items are for the construction of large buildings which manifestly cannot be completed by that time. Many of the works contemplated will be completed but many of them will not. I submit that we should not limit the operation of the act to a time known to be insufficient for the carrying out of its provisions and the expenditure of money which is authorized. I might say the practice in other countries is to make an appropriation for the carrying out of a certain work without limitation as to time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but the minister knows that the practice in this parliament and in the British parliament with respect to public works is to vote what is necessary only for a fiscal year at a time. That is one of the ways in which parliament maintains its control over expenditures. There is no reason in the world why these expenditures should not be subject to the same control on the part of parliament as all other departmental outlays. I see in this another election device in the desire to give out work which will run over as many years as possible and for which some subsequent government will have to meet the expenditure. I certainly think there should be some section to limit definitely the time for which these appropriations are to be made. If buildings are in the course of construction, a subsequent administration may vote what is necessary to continue the work.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just to supplement what my right hon. leader has said: The same point was raised when the first relief act was being considered, and I do not think anyone knows as well as the minister in charge of this bill the evils which arose under that act. There is no reason in the world why an estimate should not lapse at the end of a fiscal year. Any reasonable estimate will be revoted by the house. Should a contract be let for large public works which expires on March 31, I think it can be assumed that the necessary money will be revoted provided a reasonable explanation is given. I do not think it is within the experience of any hon. member that such a course was not pursued. I submit that there should be a limit upon these things, and that limit should be mentioned in the bill.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would point out that this is a special appropriation, the object of which is to provide employment over a considerable period of time. It is not in the nature of an ordinary supply vote; its purpose is well defined and well understood, to sustain employment over a period of a year or longer. Any termination of the act at any particular time would be calculated to defeat the object in view.

Mr. DUPUIS: Why not let parliament revote this at the next session?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): They are voting it now.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Could the minister give us an idea as to when most of these undertakings will be commenced?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should say that we will be able to commence some of the works within a month. Tenders have been advertised in a considerable number of cases while in others the plans are not yet prepared. It will take some little time to prepare the plans.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is it reasonable to assume that the work in connection with most of the undertakings mentioned in schedule A will be commenced within a month?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should think so. Some of these works cannot be carried on during all the year, although construction work on the Pacific coast can be carried on the year round.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I just move formally that the following section be added:

This act shall expire on the thirty-first day of March, 1935.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to refer to the adoption of the fair wages policy in connection with these contracts, and I think I am in order under this section. I should like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government in these works to enforce rigidly the fair wages clause in connection not only with construction but with fabrication.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Perhaps I should have explained on the second reading the procedure which we have adopted. An order in council has been passed which provides, first, that Canadian materials shall be used where available; second, that if Canadian materials are not available, then materials from within the British Empire shall be used. It is only when materials from either of these sources are not available that the contractor may supply from foreign countries. For some years we have included in all our contracts the schedule of wages adopted by the Department of Labour each year.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Does that apply to sub-contracts?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): These vary from year to year. I will take up the sub-contracts in a moment. This schedule of wages is attached to the specifications and made a part of the contract. It is posted on the work; the contractor must comply with it and we follow up very strictly to see that he does comply with it. With regard to sub-contracts, there seems to be some constitutional difficulty in the way. We go as far as we can go to reach the limits of our power under the constitution.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What about the use of local labour and materials?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That has been suggested. When you ask a man to sign a contract containing a provision which enforces him to employ local labour, you are immediately in difficulty. When you stipulate where he shall get his labour, and that sort of thing, he probably may have some claim for extras. We have had a large measure of success in making representations in this connection to the contractors, and we do all we can to see that local labour and local materials are used.

Mr. BENNETT: That can be done in the large cities.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): You cannot do it in the smaller places.

Mr. MITCHELL: May we rest assured that section 5 of the fair wages act will be enforced?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, as far as we have jurisdiction.

Mr. MITCHELL: I would suggest that no overtime be permitted to be paid in the carrying out of these contracts.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Overtime is permitted only in cases of emergency. Sometimes a contractor makes representation that it is necessary because of the season of the year. Sometimes if the work is carried on to a certain stage the contractor can provide work for his employees, perhaps during the winter time. Each of these applications is considered on its merits, and dealt with accordingly.

Mr. MITCHELL: With so much unemployment, I cannot imagine any job requiring overtime. I have no objection to running a job twenty-four hours a day with shifts, but I think there should be a limit to the hours worked by any one man.

Section agreed to.

On schedule A.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I trespass for a few minutes on the time of the committee? I am reasonably satisfied with the appropriations for British Columbia, but I want to refer particularly to the $2,000,000 item which I understand is to be under the control of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy). I see that a portion of the Big Bend highway is mentioned and I want to recommend to the minister that as far as possible in the interests of Canadian traffic from shore to shore this highway be completed as soon as possible. The minister is aware of the financial difficulties that keep British Columbia at the present time from carrying out its part of the contract, and my recommendation is that if at all possible he should improve the highway from Yoho park to Golden in British Columbia and, if it can be done, take over from the province the road up to Revelstoke park. All the boards of trade, automobile associations and business men's organizations are in favour of the suggestion. I want to commend the minister for the small item for bank protection in Stanley park. It is small but a step in the right direction. And now I wish to submit a human appeal and that is the very urgent necessity to-day for a new tuberculosis sanatorium in greater Vancouver.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not within our jurisdiction.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I submit that it is, in this way. I believe it is correct to say that in one or two instances the dominion government has provided twenty per cent of the cost of sanatoria, and that is all I ask for in this connection. To-day in greater Vancouver particularly there exists a very grave emergency in regard to tuberculosis. There are 1,600 active cases and probably about 1,000 not yet reported. There are two new cases being discovered every day and there is one death every forty-eight hours. The disease is causing six times as many deaths in Vancouver as are caused by all other communicable diseases, and the mortality is three times greater in that province than it is in Saskatchewan. Outside of Tranquille there are at least 2,000 active tuberculosis cases in British Columbia to-day and it is estimated by the medical authorities that twenty per cent of these originate outside the province. In regard to hospital treatment I am informed that it costs at least $1,000 a year for each patient, and the 400 cases from outside cost at least $500 a day. About ten per cent of these pay, leaving $450 a day to be paid by British Columbia, or $165,000 a year. Let me give briefly the death rate from tuberculosis.

Mr. BENNETT: Bad advertising.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): But the facts must be faced and grappled with immediately by the authorities. The death rate in British Columbia as compared with some of the other provinces is as follows:

	Per 100,000
British Columbia	80·1
Saskatchewan	28·7
Ontario	46·4
Alberta	49·1
Manitoba	56·3

This matter comes within the purview of the Department of National Health, and one of the deputies made a special report on the situation, submitting comprehensive recommendations with respect to the immediate necessity of facing this very serious problem and the request for an institution to provide for two hundred beds at a cost of $500,000. It is requested that the dominion government contribute twenty per cent of the cost, as was done in other provinces previously, or $110,000, the balance to be financed on easy interest terms.

I will not go over all the other details. The Prime Minister knows that we have a very serious oriental problem to deal with in connection with tuberculosis. The death rate from this cause may be graphically indicated by these figures:

	Per 100,000
White	53·2
Japanese	213·5
Chinese	270·7
Hindu	1845·0
General death rate	65·1

This is a grave situation that does not prevail in any other part of the dominion, and I would ask the Miinster of Public Works that, if at all possible, he try to meet the very urgent request of the province, involving a cost of $500,000, for which the dominion government would be responsible to the extent of twenty per cent only. I would urge upon the minister that, somewhere in greater Vancouver, as recommended by the medical authorities of the Department of National Health, he make provision in this regard. This request is made in an earnest and constructive spirit.

Mr. REID: Is the $300,000 for improvements in Fraser river for some specific purpose?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is for whatever may be found to be necessary. Conditions develop from time to time requiring attention and unfortunately we have not been able to meet all the suggestions of my hon. friend. This amount is to take care of existing conditions or conditions as they develop. I move the adoption of the schedule with the right of any hon. gentleman to discuss any particular item. I have however some suggestions to make in connection with two or three of them. First, in regard to No. 18, Calgary, $1,200,000, which has been the subject of some comment, I suggest that it be amended to read "Calgary or elsewhere in Alberta." There may be some question as to the exact location of the building.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The motion is satisfactory so far as we are concerned. The minister has referred to Alberta and perhaps I may at once say a word or two with respect to the items for that province, or rather for Calgary. The Calgary item is $1,200,000, barracks for permanent forces. That is one of three items that come within the constituency of the Prime Minister. The next is Bow River, retaining wall, $150,000, and the other, Banff, Alberta, post office and administration building, $150,000. The other evening I made a mistake in stating that the Prime Minister's constituency was receiving 50 per cent of the money voted for Alberta; I should have said 88 per cent. The total for Alberta is $1,707,400. Of that amount there is $200,000 to the Royal Canadian Police Barracks at Edmonton and there is an item of $7,400 for a telephone line from Keg river to Carcajou, Alberta, making $207,400, but leaving one and a half millions in the Prime Minister's own constituency. On the former occasion I called attention to the apparent discrimination between Alberta and Saskatchewan. In Saskatchewan there are only two items for the whole province, one for Outlook, Saskatchewan, a bridge across the south Saskatchewan river, $275,000, and the other a new public building in Regina, $400,000, making a total for that province of $675,000 as compared with $1,707,400 for Alberta. As regards the constituencies represented by the Prime Minister and myself, Prince Albert, in Saskatchewan, which I have the honour to represent, receives nothing whatever while the Prime Minister's constituency gets $1,500,000. By way of contrast, may I point out what took place in the last session of the last parliament when the Liberal administration was in office. I was then representing Prince Albert and my right hon. friend, Calgary. He was at the time leader of the opposition. Nothing was voted for my constituency at that time, but for a public building in Calgary there was a vote of $1,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: To pay for a building already under construction. It could not be escaped.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot understand how the Prime Minister has permitted these amounts to go into his own constituency.

Mr. BENNETT: I will explain, if you will give me a chance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It should be enough to defeat every follower of his in his own province and in the other provinces. Really, the only explanation I can give to myself that seems at all satisfactory is that the Prime Minister must be contemplating retiring from public life and is making a bequest out of the public treasury to the constituency that has honoured him with its representation in this house. Otherwise I cannot imagine why he has undertaken to vote $1,500,000 to his own constituency and these paltry amounts to others. He is all powerful in these matters, and this is what the schedule reveals.

Mr. BENNETT: I am simply astounded that one with the experience of the right hon. gentleman would speak in the way he has to-night.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was more astounded by what I saw in this schedule.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not reflect credit to this parliament that he should make the explanation he has made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say the same about what appears in these estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: If my right hon. friend will take trouble to listen he will have no difficulty in understanding the matter. In the first place the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart), who is sitting beside him, knows the conditions in Banff; he was Minister of the Interior. An opportunity is afforded to secure the old Brett sanatorium property for $20,000, the hotel having been burned. There is no administration building and no post office building in Banff. The town is visited by more people than is any other part of southern Alberta, and the complaints have been very numerous and have been directed against this government ever since we took office that we did not provide a post office and administration building. I felt that under normal conditions it was impossible to do so and this vote which has arisen because of the handing back to the people of the increased value that has come from gold has enabled a national park, which was in no sense looked upon as belonging to my constituency, to benefit. This was an opportunity to establish a decent administration building and a post office on a site that we should have had when the park was laid out, a site across the bridge on the main street of Banff. That is that.

Second, the retaining wall is being constructed because of the negligence of the right hon. gentleman's government. When he transferred the natural resources to the province, despite the protests that we made that he had not vested the waters in the province and had retained them for the dominion, he and his law officers persisted that they were right and we were wrong. They subsequently changed their minds and found out that we were right, that no steps have yet been taken to vest those waters in the province. This involves a very considerable difficulty because the Irrigation Act provides that those waters are the property of the crown in the right of the dominion and the irrigation works that have been constructed lying east of Calgary, enhanced the flow of water so that the bed has been eaten out by the scouring of the water until there is only a short distance between the water and gas and other pipes in that area. That explains the item, but it may interest my right hon. friend to know that the major part of the work is in East and not in West Calgary, the latter being my constituency. Very little and, in fact, I think under the new boundary none of it is in West Calgary.

The third item, that is the $1,200,000 is one about which I was quite confident that a person who has the attitude of mind of suspicion and distrust the right hon. gentleman has toward problems that affect public life would at once charge me with an effort to give to the constituency of Calgary more than it should receive. These are the facts: For long years the permanent force of this country has been seeking some permanent barracks. I believe the permanent force will continue to exist as long as governments exist in this country. It is a very small force but it serves to preserve the civil institutions of the dominion in times of civil disorder or insurrection or riot. It is essentially a police force for Canada. A unit of that permanent force has been in Calgary for some years but it has been so poorly housed it has had to be reduced and it is occupying the armouries that belong to the non-permanent militia, greatly to their detriment and greatly to the detriment of the efficiency of militia headquarters. This work involves the construction of ten or eleven units and it cannot be done to supply accommodation for horses and men for less than that sum of money. Recently the city council by a majority protested against that work being constructed in Calgary and I asked the Minister of Works to provide that the item should read: "or elsewhere in the province of Alberta." That is that that work should be constructed in the province of Alberta which is to be the home of a unit of the permanent force. That is the explanation of the item. Because that has been done it is charged that I have been guilty of many offences in endeavouring to remedy an injustice that has been done to the permanent force for the last ten years, because wherever the barracks are, the permanent force will be. If the building is not in Calgary, the permanent force will go somewhere else. That is the position.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We tried to get it to Edmonton.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I have no doubt as to that. But the necessity for the work was the only factor that governed in any of these matters. When the right hon. gentleman referred to the estimates of 1930 he must have known first of all that the public building is not in my constituency. That is number one. Number two is that in 1912 the government of that day acquired the site but the post office building, which it is, was erected originally on lots given to the crown by citizens of Calgary, the other lots being bought, and the site on the corner of Second street east and Eighth avenue was acquired in 1912 with a frontage of 250 feet on Eighth avenue. The contract was let and the sum of $1,000,000 in the estimates was to pay the contractor for the completion of the building which was completed in the fall of 1932. That is the story.

It seems to be idle to endeavour to induce hon. members opposite to believe there are those still living in this country to whom the question of public necessity is the governing factor in determining how money shall be expended. In this case there was necessity and no man knows the necessity better than does the hon. member for West Edmonton with regard to an administration building and a post office at Banff. Those who have read the press of that community and the criticisms made of successive governments because of lack of accommodation will understand what I mean.

With respect to the scouring of the Bow river and the wash-off of the water power, as I told my colleagues, unless we still owned that river, we would not for a single moment suggest that the work be done. On the other side of the river, as relief works were erected riprap works; we are doing this to supplement them and the majority of the work is in East Calgary.

As I said before, wherever the barracks are erected they are for the unit of the permanent force that must be housed and stabled somewhere west of Winnipeg. Thus far that unit has been in Alberta. This proposal is at my suggestion that the minister should move that there should be added the words: "or elsewhere in the province of Alberta."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. gentleman says that some of these items are due to the neglect of the previous administration and are necessary to fulfil an obligation outstanding for ten years. Why then was this not done in the first or the second or the third session or the fourth session while the Prime Minister has been at the head of the administration? Why do these items come into this bill just before prorogation, at this last moment of what I believe is the last session of this parliament? This item of $1,200,000 for a barracks is one that ought to have appeared in the Public Works estimates and should not have appeared in any measure that relates to purposes of relief. I want to take exception to these enormous sums for military and police purposes being voted under the pretext of relief.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. members say "oh, oh;" Have they read the schedule? Look at the large items in this schedule, for military and police purposes: Calgary barracks for permanent force, $1,200,000; Edmonton, Royal Canadian Mounted Police barracks, $200,000; Kingston, Ontario Royal Military College, $350,000—

Mr. BENNETT: Do you object to that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not objecting, I am pointing out that these military and police buildings are all being run in under the pretext of being in the nature of unemployment relief. They ought to be in the estimates either of national defence or of the public works department. Then again, a little further on: Montreal, Quebec, armoury, $200,000, and then: City of Ottawa, building to be put up here for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, site acquired, $1,200,000. Finally, Vancouver, armoury, $240,000. Here are large sums being voted in this measure for police and military purposes. I think that instead of spending a couple of million dollars for barracks and police buildings in the west at the present time as relief, it would be much better to spend the equivalent amount in constructing stock watering reservoirs which would be of service to the farmers of Alberta.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is a provincial matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the kind of relief that would mean something to the people of the province. This business of always bringing forward some humane or alleged patriotic purpose to do in one way what the government hesitates to do in an entirely different way namely in the open, is the kind of thing in this bill that I object to above everything else.

Mr. SANDERSON: I wish to make a suggestion to the Minister of Public Works. As I understand it he is moving an amendment that the amount of $1,200,000 for a barracks at Calgary be in Calgary or any other place in the province of Alberta. I would suggest to him that there is $1,500,000 to be spent in the city of Toronto; why not move an amendment that that be spent, if not in Toronto, in some other parts of the province of Ontario.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If there was any specific reason we might do that.

Mr. SANDERSON: I might be able to point out some specific reason.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think the minister is making a mistake in moving that amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: I am moving it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Or the Prime Minister. If it is going to cost $1,200,000 to construct a police barracks in Calgary, why not spend it and take the responsibility of spending it? This is one of the reasons why I object to the power taken by the government to transfer items.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no such power being taken.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are either voting these items as relief or as a straight estimate. I take it we are voting it as relief.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Relief would be the same.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As far as I am concerned, as a representative from the province of Alberta I have no particular objection to the expenditure in Banff. I hardly think that the Prime Minister should be charged with discrimination in that regard, because the park is a national institution for the benefit of all the people of Canada. But if these items are for relief, and as the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary are almost equal in population, with an almost identical relief problem, why are we voting for the city of Calgary as a relief proposition —quite apart from whether it is East Calgary or West Calgary—in the neighbourhood of $1,400,000, and only $200,000 for the city of Edmonton? I have a protest from the mayor and council of that city about this matter, and I would not be doing my duty if I did not bring it to the attention of parliament. Edmonton's responsibility in the way of relief is just as great as that of Calgary.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yet I hear hon. gentlemen saying—and I am not protesting—that it is necessary for these works to be performed by local labour. That leaves Edmonton in a bad position, particularly as the government have announced that they are not going to continue direct relief. Naturally the mayor and council of Edmonton are exercised over this matter. In the city of Calgary, with a population of about 80,000, $1,400,000 is to be spent, which is a vastly different proposition from the expenditure of $200,000 in Edmonton, provided, as I have said, it is for relief, and that direct relief is to cease. It means only one thing, that this government is discriminating against the city of Edmonton in favour of Calgary. If direct relief were being continued I would not have a word to say, because then the necessities of Edmonton would be taken care of. But if the government say that this is for relief purpose—and they have said it repeatedly—then they are not treating Edmonton fairly.

Mr. BENNETT: I also had a letter from the mayor of Edmonton, and I wrote a letter to him. The reason that only $200,000 is allotted there is that there was no other public work or undertaking required in Edmonton for which federal expenditure could be made. That was the position. In consequence of correspondence and negotiations with the provincial government we believe we have plans that will take care of the unemployment situation in the north. I quite agree with everything the hon. gentleman has said; I am fully aware of it. I wrote to the mayor, and I say to the hon. gentleman now, that public necessity was the reason for these items in the schedule, and not otherwise. In view of the fact that the capitol buildings have been constructed to the extent they have and the university buildings to the extent they have, and other public buildings such as the post office, there did not seem to be any building that was suggested by the construction survey or by our own except the barracks for the mounted police. The reason they were included was that it is better than paying rent. As there is no interest payable on the money used in the construction of these works, the whole $40,000,000 being available under the circumstances to which I alluded the other day, and as the amount we pay for rentals is very substantial, this will represent a great saving which will enure to the benefit of the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would point out to the Prime Minister that there is a very considerable expenditure to be made in the national park at Jasper—I intend to refer to it when we come to it—and would ask that some special attention be given to drafting men from Edmonton for that work.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to say a word regarding this shifting of items from one place to another—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is nothing of the kind.

Mr. BENNETT: Before the hon. gentleman speaks of that I want to say that the barracks is not a question of shifting, but they have to go some place in the province of Alberta if the permanent unit is to remain in that province. That is the reason for that provision.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then I take it that the Prime Minister's position is that this building shall be built, but the site is not yet settled?

Mr. BENNETT: That might be.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If the site for that building is not settled I say leave this estimate until some definite site can be submitted to the committee. That is the way to pass public works estimates—know where you are going to place the building before putting the amount for it in the estimates. The members of this house should pass not only on the site but on the building and the amount.

Then I want to say something in regard to the buildings in Ontario. In Ontario—and it strikes me this is not complimentary to this government—large sums are to be spent in the ridings of certain members of the government. I refer particularly to the grants to the city of Guelph, the city of Fort William, and the city of Kingston—it also I think is large—having regard to other places for which this bill makes no provision at all. I was Minister of Public Works long enough to know that if you have the money you can find plenty of places to spend it to good advantage, but I do not think it is complimentary to the government itself to have these large sums going to the constituencies represented by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways and Canals. I am glad to see the Minister of Justice here; I happen to have before me his views on these buildings at a time when there was money in this country with which to construct them. May I be pardoned for a moment if I refer the house to Hansard of March 10, 1927, when we were passing estimates not for a few million but for a few thousand dollars. The present Minister of Justice was complaining about an item of some $12,000, and he said:

As I said before, if we had the money in the treasury, if our finances were in a flourishing condition, these buildings might be all right; they might be very appropriate in these places. But these places have waited for a long time without any very great public inconvenience that we know about, and I say there is no warrant whatever for the expenditure of $20,000 at this place any more than there is for the expenditure of $12,000 at Kensington, Prince Edward Island.

Those were the days when we were reducing the debt and reducing taxation; we had money with which to construct buildings. I want to tell my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works that the people of this country, on whose backs this taxation will fall, are suffering about as badly this year as they have suffered in any year of their existence. That applies particularly to the farming communities, and I see that in this list of buildings those communities are overlooked to the greatest degree.

A couple of years ago the government told us, in regard to unemployment relief, that they would like to have suggestions from all members of the house. At that time I took the liberty of suggesting to the Minister of Labour that he relieve the rural constituencies, in which there were no harbours and which perhaps could get along for a few years longer without public buildings, by eliminating as many as possible of the level crossings. I directed attention particularly at that time to the work that this would supply to men and teams in rural constituencies, many of which are not receiving a dollar of the money being expended by this government. Nothing of that kind has been done.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is mistaken. We passed special votes for the board of railway commissioners to assist them in eliminating railway crossings. I well remember at least $1,000,000 being voted for that purpose, so my hon. friend is not right in saying that nothing of that sort has been done.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In what year was that?

Mr. MANION: In 1931 or 1932.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I direct my hon. friend's attention to the fact that these level crossings still exist.

Mr. MANION: There are thirty thousand of them in Canada.

Mr. ELLIOTT: And there are just about as many now as there were when hon. gentlemen opposite took office.

Mr. MANION: There are a few less.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Unfortunately, in the county in which I live, and in the adjoining county, there are a great many very dangerous railway crossings. A short time ago in the town of Rodney we had a level crossing accident in which four or five of the flower of the Canadian nation were wiped out in a flash. This is happening every day; you cannot pick up a newspaper without reading of such accidents, yet we have these large amounts expended in urban districts with very little consideration given the rural districts. I very much object to that.

I notice that in this schedule there are amounts to be expended generally; I want to make a plea to the Minister of Public Works, and I hope he will pay attention while I make it. I do think that, out of the amount he will have at his disposal, he could very well utilize a substantial sum to assist the railways in eliminating level crossings. I say the same to the Minister of Railways with regard to the sum he will handle. The Minister of Public Works was good enough to supply me with the estimates for each department, and after all, while he talks about these not being public works in part, let me call his attention to the fact that of this total sum nearly $30,000,000 is for the Department of Public Works. There is $700,000 for the marine department, $15,000 for national defence, $2,000,000 for interior, $500,000 for Indian affairs and $240,000 for railways and canals. I do think that if you are going to attempt to give work to men and teams in the rural constituencies you cannot do it in any better way or in any way which will arouse less jealousy as between the different parts of the community than by endeavouring to eliminate these level crossings which are such a great menace to the people of this country.

Mr. DONNELLY: In reading over this schedule I was very much surprised to find such a small grant for the province of Saskatchewan. If this were divided according to population the province of Saskatchewan should receive between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000, but we find only something like $675,000 going to that province. I do not think any part of the world or any part of the Dominion of Canada has suffered as much or needs employment more than Saskatchewan. A short time ago the Prime Minister said that he had in mind only two things in drawing up this schedule, first the relief of unemployment and second the necessity of the work. If he had those two things in mind I would suggest that there is no section of Canada that is more in need of aid than the southern part of Saskatchewan, and the southern part of western Canada generally. For five years these people have had no crops; for five years they have been practically on the dole. The necessity for relief of some kind or other is appalling. If the condition existing in Saskatchewan to-day were to come about overnight, like the Halifax disaster some years ago, we would find relief coming from every section of the world, but here we do not find a dollar given to the people in that part of Saskatchewan to help them in any way.

One of two things must be done. Either those people in the southern part of Saskatchewan must be moved out and the land abandoned or something must be done in order to rehabilitate them. I suggest to the government that something should be done to rehabilitate these people on the land. I still have faith in that part of the country, remembering as I do that for twenty years, from 1909 to 1929, it produced an average of something like twenty bushels to the acre. Those people believe they can still produce crops if climatic and other conditions become favourable. To-day they are suffering from three things, first from climatic conditions, second from soil drifting and third from pests of different kinds which have to be combated. I wish to refer particularly to soil drifting. Not one thing has been done to enable these people to combat soil drifting. This condition is spreading from the south to the north, across the open prairies of Saskatchewan. I say this government should do something about it. Something should be done, and done immediately. Things should be taken in hand either by a commission or by a body of men familiar with conditions in the country. They should buy the necessary amount of seeds, such as broom grass, crested wheat grass, rye grass and things of that kind, and those grasses should be supplied free of charge. The people should be taught how to use it and what to do in order to prevent soil drifting which is seriously affecting the prairies and destroying our lands.

This question is of paramount importance not only to the citizens of Saskatchewan, but to the whole of western Canada. If something of the kind is not done that section of western Canada will have to be abandoned and the people will have to be moved out. They have depended on one thing, and one thing only, to prevent soil drifting, and that is moisture. Moisture has come at certain times, and to a certain extent it has prevented the drift, but not to a sufficient degree to be effective.

This condition must be studied from a scientific standpoint. I would be out of order if I were to suggest or to move any vote for these purposes. I have before me a newspaper clipping dealing with this subject.

Saskatchewan's master farmers, agricultural experts and departmental officials will meet in conference to discuss and seek solution for the soil drifting problem.

Hon. W. C. Buckle, Minister of Agriculture, in discussing the need for such a conference said:

"There seems to be too great reliance upon soil moisture conditions alone, to prevent soil drifting. It would appear to be necessary to give greater attention to strip farming and cover crops as tillage methods."

I suggest to the minister that something must be done. There is a grant in the schedule for a building in Regina. I do not know what building it is, but I will say this: Buildings are all right, but invariably when one building is erected another is emptied. That is the condition, unless there happens to be no building in existence. In using an old building the only consideration is the rent which must be paid, and if you are paying too much rent you must cut it down. Some of this money provided for in the schedule should be given to the farmers to buy seed, to build dams to preserve the moisture in order to prevent the soil drifting. I urge that the Minister of Public Works should take the matter up with the Minister of Agriculture, that something should be done at once to teach these people what can be done to prevent the drift, and to bring back the conditions which obtained in the past. Knowing that a new grant cannot be made, I have seen fit to move, seconded by Mr. Bothwell:

That item No. 145 of schedule A be struck out and that the moneys therein provided be used for the purchase of grass and other seeds and for such other forms of state aid within the limit of this vote as circumstances and conditions after thorough and competent inquiry may warrant in order to intelligently and systematically assist the farmers in the dried out areas of the west to rehabilitate themselves.

Mr. BENNETT: The resolution is out of order. It contemplates a public expenditure, and only a member of the government can move it.

Mr. DONNELLY: Why is it out of order? I am not asking to reduce the amount. I am simply asking to change it from one item to another.

Mr. BENNETT: It contemplates a public expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Rule 510 is as follows:

It is not allowable to attach a condition or expression of opinion to a resolution in the committee of supply, or to change the destination of a grant.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to rule the amendment out of order. We are on a roving commission anyway; we are going here, there and all over Canada, in one province and another. We want something before us for a little while besides pork barrels, hogsheads and that sort of thing, do we not? This proposed expenditure of $40,000,000 launched a few days ago was especially to take care of the unemployed. It is now understood that it is for pork barrel purposes, about three-quarters of it. In his defence the Prime Minister mentioned nothing about unemployment. He tried to defend it on another score altogether.

We all remember the time the right hon. gentleman had in getting elected in 1921; indeed he failed to get elected at that time. His back is against the wall as badly to-day as it was in 1921. I hope the Liberals will not join with the Labourites in Calgary as they did in 1921; that would be too dear a price to pay for the defeat of the Prime Minister. But if they did do it, they could defeat him, and he would require this pork barrel and several like it to avoid defeat. That would apply not only in Calgary, but to all the ministers in other parts of Canada. They know what happened in the present temper of the people to their confreres in Saskatchewan. There is not a seed Tory left over in the Saskatchewan legislature for another campaign. They will have to get seed Tory relief through the peace, order and good government provisions passed by this aggregation over here, the so-called government of Canada. It is about time they were asking for another mandate, if I know anything. They are cutting up didos like this, trying to get a few seats by redistribution, trying to swipe a few more seats through the franchise bill, and hoping to retain power by those and other questionable means. And now the pork barrel is being rolled around into nearly every Tory constituency.

Mr. SPENCE: You had better get out of its way.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Who is trying to talk? Now the committee has a proposition. My right hon. leader—

An hon. MEMBER: He knows more about it than anybody else.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Are you calling me to order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I advise nobody to try that trick. I am not in the humour at all. I will bid good-bye to the government after prorogation, and express all kinds of good wishes and good will, but I will not wish them a return to power. I will have lots of good fellowship with them, but I am not in the humour to allow the prorogation of this house without protesting against these almost desperate and heroic efforts made by the government to retain power. That is exactly what they are doing all this session and did most of last. My right hon. leader suggests that instead of all these buildings on the prairies we might better consider the advisability of trying to put agriculture into something like permanently decent shape, especially in southern Saskatchewan and Alberta. I would ask any hon. member in this building to dare—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: To dare, I say, to declare out of order or even challenge the appropriateness of this proposition. The hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) is making a practical proposition, and my right hon. leader did the same. What good would those cities be, anyway if there were no farmers around and about them? I want to risk any reputation I have by stating that much of southeastern Saskatchewan can be rehabilitated. I have studied them and lived on the plains for over fifty years. Not only have I studied the plains in Canada but, not personally but through interviews and reading I have studied the plains of Russia, and I know something about windy farming conditions.

What are my hon. friends grinning about over there?—empty heads that have no knowledge of prairie agriculture. I do not expect them to, nor have they had an opportunity to learn of it. I want to say right now that this government has been looking on complacently for the last four years as if everything was going well on those southwestern plains. And they have never raised one hand to avert the impending disaster rapidly approaching those formerly wonderfully fertile plains, converting those great productive lands into an Arabian or Sahara desert. That condition has come about by soil erosion and through the action of hurricane winds. The government has not done a thing—point to one, and I will apologize. I am going to mention one teeny, weeny, little bit the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) tried to do. He did get some money to start the distribution of clover and grass seed. That might have helped but I have been able to find little if any of it in that vast southwest country. He just got this policy nicely started when his colleagues cut the Minister of Agriculture's estimates to the bone. Now they are putting up buildings and making all kinds of unnecessary expenditure; they are spending forty millions under this bill, of which three-quarters is for election purposes, and leaving that great country destitute. No one is stretching out a hand to help it at this critical time. It must be either helped or abandoned.

Mr. MANION: Saskatchewan for its population has received more money from this government than any other province, and has received more help per capita than any other portion of Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why did they give a million and a half to Calgary and only $400,000 to Regina if Saskatchewan is hit worst?

Mr. MANION: Because we have given $30,000,000 to Saskatchewan already.

An hon. MEMBER: They are paying good interest on it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) is getting a good hunk himself. Outside of the little bit the Minister of Agriculture has provided as already mentioned, nothing has been done towards seeding down and rebuilding that area. It is just a fleabite, what has been done towards permanent cure—something you could put in your eye and not see any the worse for it. That is all that has been done to avert the calamity which has been facing that country since 1929.

The wind is driving the soil all over creation. The reports from Sault Ste. Marie stated that the sun was blinded this spring with the dust from the Saskatchewan and Alberta plains. They had to turn on their gaslights at midday to dispel the gloom occasioned by the prairie dust. Although the average farm may have a mortgage, even that will not hold down the soil if these high winds prevail. Our farms are being strewn anywhere between the Rocky mountains and the Great lakes, and even farther. This government have taken no responsibility in this matter. What steps have they taken? Not one, except the little mite of the Minister of Agriculture, and I do not think any of that found its way into that territory. My right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) has suggested that if water supplies were secured it would remedy one serious condition at least. The hon. member for Willow Bunch has suggested that something be could done in the way of giving assistance to the farmers in order to make it possible for them to rehabilitate themselves. They know how but they have not the wherewithal to carry out their know-how. They are down and out; they are out at the elbows and down at the heels. They cannot raise themselves and go under their own steam because they are too impoverished. They must receive state aid for permanent cures. As the hon. member for Willow Bunch has said, there are two alternatives. We must either abandon that vast territory or come to its aid and get it on its feet. You cannot go along the way you have been doing for the last five years with a policy of doles and feed and all that sort of thing, because you will have a charge on both the federal and the provincial authorities in perpetuity. They will never come back enough by themselves to make a new start.

What is to be done? There is only one way to stop drifting. I admire the heroics of my good friend Mr. Bryant who conceived the idea of planting enough carragana shrubs and hedges to stop the drifting. That gentleman was doing his best but I do not know how many years it would take to succeed via that route. I doubt if it could be done in one hundred years, and by that time we and our children will be dead. There is only one permanent way I know of to stop this soil drifting. Take the land held in the hands of the crown and seed it down with broom grass or some other suitable grass. Crested wheat may be used, but I think the broom is better. We should put that wind swept region back in the state in which we found it fifty years ago, restore it to its soddy condition. That would provide a binder to stop the drifting. The other fifty per cent of the land could be taken care of on a rotation basis, including fall rye grass and clover. There will have to be some kind of a follow up policy, something like a land utilization commission to take charge of this vast area. There would have to be government supervision, there is no question about that. I remember when I had the privilege of being in the Regina house we had district representatives in that stricken area. Doctor Booth at the head of the economics branch was one of them. We knew there were special troubles which required special aids in order to enable the farmer to handle that country to advantage. But there is not one of these things being done.

Why? This government does not know enough about prairie agriculture to evolve a policy. How could they know? You cannot teach what you do not know yourself.

Mr. MULLINS: Is it not a fact that you brought in professors from the United States to try to seed that land and it proved an utter failure?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I cannot hear my hon. friend. I am used to the practice of talking just loud enough for Hansard to hear. Shout it out! Here, I will get my periscope on you. I have all the juice turned on; get up, throw back your shoulders and let me hear you. Has the hon. member nothing to say? Then let him forever hold his peace and not be interrupting me.

This is a very serious matter. I have been a resident of Canada all my life and I have lived fifty-three years in my adopted province of Saskatchewan. What has happened in that vast southwest territory, during the past thirty years? They have grown wheat continuously till the fibre is gone in the windiest part of the west. That country is especially windy right up to the foothills. In hot weather the high winds create a peculiar suction upwards. This is only beginning to be understood. The soil is taken up in fine dust like flour. With another five years like the past, the top five or six inches of soil will be practically all gone—where to, I do not know. It will be in the gullies and sloughs; it can spread it over a thousand miles and yet show very thin. If the top soil is blown off for another five years, ninety per cent of the farmers in that area will be lying on their backs on the hard pan with their tummies and their toes turned up. That is what will happen. I see an hon. gentleman shaking his head as though I was trying to string him, but let me tell him that this is all true and all too true.

I was brought up on a farm in Ontario where the top-soil in one field was removed by fire in the clearing of it. This happened over a hundred years ago but it has never been the same since, although it has been fertilized with ashes, with strawy manure, buckwheat ploughed in, and so on. It is still just blue clay, as hard as a brick. It is bad enough when the top-soil is burned off, and the ashes are left behind, but when the top-soil is blown off nothing is left but the pebbles, which will not blow, and hardpan. That is an infinitely worse condition, and a hundred years of reclamation will not bring it back once you lose the top five or six inches of soil. I cannot see how hon. gentlemen can defend their non-action in endeavoring to meet this condition. This area is one of the most productive parts of the prairies; if it gets seven or eight inches of rain or even less during the growing season it will then produce magnificent crops of thirty or forty bushels to the acre—I have seen crops of fifty or sixty bushels—of the highest quality wheat on what is now a bleak wilderness. If this great period of production had been distributed over the whole period since that country was first settled about thirty years ago, it would average a very nice crop every year, of about fifteen or eighteen bushels to the acre. The farmers thus far have been producing therefore an average of fifteen to eighteen bushels to the acre. But it seems that our predisposition is to plunge, to let money burn a hole in our pocket unless it is spent, expanding and expanding. And can you blame them, having obtained these magnificent crops and being innoculated with the virus of empire farming, undertaking vast areas run by combine and power farming generally. In other words, they invested their money in larger operation. That used to be the right thing to do, the enterprising thing, but it is not setting aside anything for a rainy day or making the fat years carry the lean. We all admit that we have made mistakes, and the more unusually prosperous one is in good times the more likely one will be left on his haunches when the hard time comes due to the policy of excessive exhaustion. I don't know whether this is getting into the craniums of hon. gentlemen opposite, or not, but there are not so many of them just now giving me that senseless grin that characterized them at the beginning of this talk. I am not talking for fun's sake but to point out a danger that hangs over a fine piece of our country which in ordinary years can carry itself. But the people there have had five bad years and this is the sixth, and they can carry on no longer without confronting the whole state with the problem as to whether they will vacate that country en masse with the aid of the government or start in now with something else than putting up city buildings which we have done without all along. The one in Calgary may be quite warranted and the Prime Minister may need it to get elected. And I should like to see him elected, because I do not like to see another shut-out such as there was in Saskatchewan recently; I should like to see at least one hon. gentleman on the opposite side returned at the coming election. So that if they can succeed in getting one elected by putting in another million in Calgary, go to it. But I say, do something for the rehabilitation of agriculture without which that country, neither urban or rural, can never get on its feet. That is my opinion, and if I am out of order let hon. gentlemen call me to order. But I challenge them to call the motion of the hon. member for Willow Bunch out of order when such a grave question is under discussion. Don't let the government think they can get away with that sort of thing to-night—when they do not like our proposals, turn them down by brute force by cries of order. With these few observations on my part, somebody else can get up and talk, although I have a lot more to say. We can see a plain path ahead, if there is anyone to take the helm, by following which that country can be got on its feet. I will not elaborate it to-night but I am pointing out the necessity of one of two things: either vacate or get behind and rehabilitate. But what is the government doing? Nothing but pork barrel. They are simply putting money into city buildings to save a remnant of them from destruction when the electors in their wrath descend on them in the next election.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In regard to the national parks, the minister the other evening mentioned certain figures which he said represented expenditures in Prince Albert park. He did not, however, say anything with respect to the other parks, and I find that the expenditures there were infinitely greater than those in Prince Albert. What expenditure there was in the Prince Albert park was in connection with relief. I hope that out of this appropriation the minister will see that Prince Albert park is properly treated, for the Prince Albert national park serves the interests and needs of all Saskatchewan. It is the third largest park in actual area and one of the newest, requiring most in the way of initial expenditure for development. Let me give some figures with regard to national parks, to show the comparative expenditures made in 1932 and 1933:

National Parks

	Fiscal year ending March 31, 1932	Fiscal year ending March 31, 1933
Alberta:
Banff	$303,000	$256,000
Jasper	137,000	115,000
Waterton Lakes park	70,000	64,000
Total	$510,000	$435,000
British Columbia:
Kootenay	$ 26,000	$ 23,000
Yoho park	51,000	45,000
Total	$ 77,000	$ 68,000
Prince Albert:
Total	$ 61,000	$ 46,000

These amounts cover salaries, wages, travelling expenses, materials, supplies, repairs, etc., and miscellaneous.

The auditor general's report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1934, is not yet available but the figures for that year are lower still. Prince Albert park has not been treated as it should have been by this administration, and I hope that the minister out of this appropriation will see to it that its great need is given due consideration. I have here one or two communications which I will not take the time to read, but which I would ask the committee to allow me to insert in Hansard. One is a copy of a communication that was sent to the government from the Prince Albert board of trade, pointing out certain immediate requirements that should receive attention. I should like also to put on Hansard a wire received to-day from the Prince Albert board of trade with respect to some projects that are very urgently needed and which should be made in part out of this expenditure.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why have all that put on Hansard?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If there is any objection I will read them. I am trying to oblige the house in its effort to get through this evening.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If hon. gentlemen wish to sit again on Monday, well and good, but I have been trying to oblige the Prime Minister and meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen that we might get through to-night. If, however, objections are raised I will read these documents. May I point out that during this session, except at intervals, I have relatively said very little on my own constituency; and if now, when the constituency is being starved in the matter of these appropriations, I ask that I be allowed to put on Hansard the representations of the constituents themselves, I expect to be allowed to do so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no objection at all from this side. I am not making any objection whatever.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who has objected, that before dinner he asked me whether I would accommodate him in seeing that he had time to make certain representations and I told him I would do what I could towards that end by foregoing much that I had intended to say. I am very much surprised that he should be the one to object to a brief statement of this kind, from constituents who have a right to be heard.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not in any way breaking faith with the leader of the opposition nor have I sought from him special favours. I asked him his own plan with regard to a certain matter of to-night's program. I knew we were expected to prorogue at ten o'clock and I told him that some of us proposed to discuss certain matters before prorogation. I do not know that the Liberals have been particularly expeditious, so far, in getting the business of the house through this evening in order that we in this corner should have a chance to discuss the matters in which we are interested. Regarding the reading of documents, I have always had the idea that there should be impartial treatment in this house, and again and again some of us have been prevented from placing on Hansard any document that was not read. I cannot see therefore why three or four documents should be presented by the leader of the opposition at the very close and be allowed to go on Hansard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I take up time reading them I am preventing my hon. friend from speaking.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We will sit here.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are not going to prorogue to-night. I will not sit on Sunday morning.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are two communications, one a telegram I received to-day, and the other a memorandum which came in a letter from the Prince Albert board of trade, to the ministry. Is there any objection to these being placed on Hansard?

Mr. STEVENS: Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I will make a note of it and ask that some members of this house should not be so prompt in refusing other members the right to transgress the rules.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think anyone has ever objected. I will hand the documents to Hansard and trust that their representations will receive due consideration.

Prince Albert, Sask., June 27, 1934.

Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Ottawa, Ont.

Board of trade at meeting to-day decided to wire Prime Minister, Minister of Agriculture and Minister of Public Works regarding the need for some project to relieve unemployment situation in Prince Albert and district. City council have suggested grade separation and union station, together with air port and air harbour. If government is considering building a bridge at Outlook, Fenton has much superior claim due to the fact that the crossings are invariably the heaviest in Saskatchewan. The average crossings at Fenton would be nearly twice as great as it is at Outlook. We would greatly appreciate any support which you can bring to bear upon the government to secure a fair share of this work for this city and district.

Prince Albert Board of Trade.

Whereas the estimates for the various national parks in Canada were recently before the House of Commons on April 20, 1934;

And whereas the appropriations for the four western provinces as reported in Hansard are allotted as follows:—

(A) British Columbia: $147,270—
Glacier park	$ 7,470
Yoho park	68,000
Kootenay park	61,800
Mount Revelstoke park	10,000
	$147,270
(B) Alberta: $538,294—
Banff park	$246,500
Jasper park	156,200
Buffalo park	57,053
Waterton Lakes park	57,700
Elk Island park	19,000
Nemiskam park	1,841
	$538,294
(C) Manitoba:
Riding Mountain park	$ 62,500
(D) Saskatchewan:
Prince Albert national park	$ 48,500

And whereas the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have only one national park located in each province as against four in British Columbia and six in Alberta, respectively;

And whereas the Prince Albert national park is the third largest in area in the Dominion of Canada;

And whereas the Saskatchewan national park had to be developed out of a solid wilderness of forest, lakes, and streams, making development much more costly than in the case of some of the other parks;

And whereas whilst the Saskatchewan park is the third largest in point of area in the dominion, it is the lowest in point of appropriation amongst all the larger national parks in the dominion.

And whereas the necessary development work in the Saskatchewan park has been retarded greatly through lack of sufficient appropriations with the resultant falling-off in tourist business largely, we believe, through the failure to provide sufficient recreational facilities;

And whereas in the appropriations for this year the amount is only sufficient to take care of regular maintenance and salaries and allows only the sum of $2,600 for sports' facilities;

And whereas this amount is totally inadequate to hasten the proper development of this park with the result that many important projects are being proceeded with much more slowly than should be the case, such as the completion of the eighteen hole golf course with club house; the erection of a fish hatchery in the park to restock the larger lakes; the completion of the road to the narrows; the establishment of campsites at the other lakes and the provision for an additional campsite at the other end of lake Waskesiu; the completion of Buffalo park, etc.;

And whereas, in our opinion, it is grossly unfair that the province of Saskatchewan, with the largest population of any of the three prairie provinces, should be placed in the position where its appropriation amounts to only about 9 per cent of the appropriation in Alberta and approximately 77 per cent of that allotted to the province of Manitoba;

Now, therefore, be it resolved that we strongly urge upon the federal government, through the Hon. T. G. Murphy, to have the appropriation raised to at least the sum of $100,000 in order that the necessary improvements may be carried out without further delays and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. R. Weir, Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, and Saskatchewan federal members and T. C. Davis, Esq., M.L.A.

Mr. GARDINER: I wish to take a few minutes of the time of the committee to discuss the program now under review. It will probably to some extent take care of unemployment throughout Canada in our cities and towns but so far as a certain portion of western Canada is concerned, which the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) and the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) have brought to the attention of the committee to-night, a situation exists on account of which the people need work just as badly as do the people in the cities and towns. This is a problem that the federal government will have to solve sooner or later because I hold the federal government responsible very largely for conditions that now exist since they invited people to settle in a part of the country that should never have been settled. I do not apply that to the whole of Saskatchewan; southern Saskatchewan has been an extraordinarily fertile portion of the west, but because of certain conditions, more particularly because of the lack or the running out of fibre in the soil, the situation has altered very much from that in the earlier days when the soil there was more productive. But as regards the constituency I represent and a very substantial portion of the country straight south from where I live to the international boundary, I know when it was proposed to open up that territory and to invite settlement there, the officers of the department, and in fact the minister who was responsible for opening it up—and it was a Liberal minister who did this—were warned against opening up that part of the dominion.

What happened was this: a tremendous settlement grew up and people took money in there; they spent their time and labour and to-day thousands of them have been forced out of that area with very little thanks from the people of Canada for their efforts in trying to settle up that territory and make it productive. I still hold that the federal government is responsible for that condition and because of that fact I expect the federal government to take some steps to relieve it. When I communicated with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) in regard to certain projects that might be undertaken as relief measures, he pointed out to me very emphatically that the proposals which I had made came under the authority of the provincial government. That is quite true; I admit it. Nevertheless, because of the responsibility of the federal government for opening up that part of the country and because of the need of the people to secure some money with which to buy food, even though they have farms there, I maintain that something should be done and done very soon in those districts.

I remember in 1922 and 1923 we were considering the possibility of rehabilitating that portion of the country because of a couple of dry years. I recall that I suggested to the then Minister of Agriculture, now the hon. member for Melville, certain things which might be done to relieve that situation. For instance I suggested the damming up of all the coulees and the low places for the purpose of holding water for stock. I suggested also the planting of trees along the road allowances and so forth, and also providing for seed for the reseeding of grass in order to put fibre back in the soil. I suggested to the then Minister of Agriculture that I did not expect the farmers to get paid fully for the work they were doing. I suggested that the federal government, in view of the responsibility it had for opening up that part of the country for settlement, might give some slight assistance merely to induce the farmers to do these things which eventually, in my judgment, would assist that area very substantially. The then Minister of Agriculture refused to take any steps or to do anything to save the situation. True, it was not as bad then as it is now and it did not extend to Saskatchewan, but now that he finds the same condition has extended to that province, he begins to think it is necessary to do something to help his people. But I am sure if we had started at that particular time a policy of tree planting, not in small groves around the farms of the people but along the road allowances for miles and miles in order to break the hot winds of that country, and also of damming up all the surplus water that runs off from the melting of the snow in order to create more humidity in that area, I am sure we would not have the condition that we have to-day, but the then Minister of Agriculture did not see fit to do anything in that regard.

I remember that the then leader of the Conservative party, now leader of the Senate, supported me in my viewpoint. I merely take the time now to impress upon the government the necessity of giving some consideration to the problem. I can assure the government that so far as the people on those farms are concerned, they are to-day just as hard up for food as are many people in the cities. True they have some live stock but they have nothing to feed them. While it might be expected that they would be able to produce a very substantial portion of their food supplies, yet when one has had experience of that part of the country and seen how their gardens and everything they have put in after great labour and expense in providing the seed, shrivel and dry up and they get nothing for their labour, one understands the troubles they have and the necessity of giving some consideration to the problem. I therefore suggest to the government that they take any steps they deem necessary to consult with the government not only of Alberta but of Saskatchewan in order to see if something can be done as soon as possible to relieve the situation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I had not intended to say anything at this time because it seems so absolutely hopeless in the dying hours of parliament that any plea we could make would induce the government to alter its policy. In this schedule there are special items for various classes of public buildings and we are told that they are necessary and that that is the reason they are selected. I would say that the fundamental purpose of these works is to distribute purchasing power among the people, to give work in order that those employed may through their work get money and thus find relief. If we are to have $40,000,000 distributed among the people, there are better ways of spending this amount than by erecting these public buildings. It seems to me that we are thinking altogether too much in the terms of public buildings. I know in the past that is the way in which the Dominion government has spent its money; I know that is the accepted way, but we have reached a stage when that is not the best way of spending this amount. There are other ways that would distribute this $40,000,000 among the people and at the same time would serve the country better than it would be served by the erection of a large number of public buildings. Of course I am very glad that in my own city we shall have one more federal building added, but I would infinitely rather have the government do something to supply the housing needs of the people of Winnipeg. This would mean the same expenditure of money on the part of the dominion government, the same amount of money coming into the pockets of the carpenters, masons and so forth but we would have something that would be of immediate and very substantial service to the people of Winnipeg. Someone may say immediately: That is a municipal or a provincial matter and the federal government cannot do that kind of thing. Why can they not? The municipality or the province would be only too glad if they did. The administrative detail can be worked out. If necessary a corporation might be constituted that would rent the houses In the meantime there are thousands of people in my own city of Winnipeg who are ill housed. A federal building, however beautiful, will not take the place of houses that these people ought to have.

As to this building under discussion, a barracks, it may be necessary—the Prime Minister seems to think it is—that the soldiers should be permanently housed, but I submit that there are many other things that should be done before that. This question of subway or overhead railway crossings, by which lives could be saved, is immensely more important. I do not see how we can do other than make this criticism of each item as it comes along, because only in this way can we point out the need for some other type of relief program.

Now I come to the matter mentioned by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr Donnelly). I was very glad that he had, shal I say the courage, to bring it up to-night. I believe the members of this house are not sufficiently seized of the seriousness of the problem in southern Saskatchewan, in parts of southern Alberta and of southern Manitoba. I overheard some hon. gentleman across the way say we should deal with this problem by ignoring it. Surely that shows lamentable ignorance of the urgency of the problem. There are two things that have to be dealt with, one the transfer of hundreds of thousands of our people within the next few months to an altogether different part of the country. Anyone who has seen these poor people trekking north with their goods loaded on their hayracks, not knowing where they are going and not finding enough grass along the way to keep their stock alive, must realize that it is a desperate condition. Our railways ought to be used, money ought to be advanced to enable them to build homes in the north, to break up land quickly enough that within the next year or two they would have some sort of return for their labour. The actual migration is taking place, but in my judgment there should be a migration of thousands, perhaps tens of thousands of families, from those stricken districts. It is something on which we shall have to spend millions of dollars if an enormous amount of human suffering is to be prevented. Then we have the other problem; these large areas of our country in some way ought to be saved; if they are not, the destruction will be extended in every direction, because that soil drifting will not be restricted within the area to which it is now limited but will grow worse. Again I do not think the eastern members realize the difficulty. I saw, within the last few weeks, alongside the railways, fences erected to keep the railway tracks from being covered by the drift, with sand piled against them four or five feet high. I remember years ago visiting Egypt and seeing where fences had been erected in the Roman days in an attempt to keep the sands back from the pyramids, and beyond them other fences erected by more recent engineers. That is precisely the kind of thing that is taking place in Saskatchewan. We are going to have to face it in a very serious form if prompt action is not taken. It seems to me that this government, instead of thinking as governments have always thought so much in terms of public buildings, ought rather to think in terms of the practical problems that confront us here and now. I would earnestly plead with the Prime Minister. He knows something of the west. I have been in the west since I was a child; I went there in 1882, over fifty years ago, and I know western problems, but I never saw conditions such as they are to-day. Housing conditions are bad enough in many of our cities, and I would plead with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works that even yet they alter their method of providing this relief. I am very glad that they have found the forty million dollars. I am glad that they have come to the point where instead of giving direct relief they are providing works by which people can earn a certain amount of money and for which there will be something to show. All that is to the good. But I submit there are particular types of work that can be done to much greater advantage than the public buildings proposed. I would urge that even at this late stage the government give serious consideration to a complete revision of this program.

Mr. MURPHY: Before the motion carries I beg to move—

Mr. BENNETT: There is another amendment before the committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) left the impression upon me that he was saying that somehow or other I preached in opposition something different from what I practised when we were in power. Anyone who thinks that is so has a chance to get up and say so. I say to the hon. member for Acadia in the kindest way I can that I wish he would particularize as to what that was. My then department had not charge of water supply. If anything like that was done, the minister of the interior, or public works, who was a resident of Alberta, did have charge of certain lands, looked after certain weeds; his predecessor drained certain sloughs and he perhaps carried that on a little; certain activities of that nature came under the Department of the Interior. The Indians were under that same department, and sometimes roads were constructed and that sort of thing. But I cannot think of anything that came under the purview of the Department of Agriculture that Saskatchewan got and Alberta did not get. There is one exception; that is there were no restricted areas established in Alberta to clean up bovine tuberculosis. Alberta was the only province in which they were not established, and my hon. friend knows why perfectly well. Alberta did not want it. He would be the last to say it should be imposed on them. I think the present Minister of Agriculture would be delighted, as soon as they are ready for a restricted area to be established in Alberta, to give them the same treatment the other provinces got in that respect. I would have been the most tickled man in the government if Alberta could have seen its way to put itself in line with the rest of the dominion in that matter. But they had a perfect right to take the position they did; they were taken up with another method which might prove to have something in it, one that is developing all the time—the B.C.G. test, they call it. Some day they may find an immunizing serum to prevent tuberculosis instead of merely slaughtering the cattle that are found to have it. Science may accomplish that. Meantime until something better is found we were using the other tuberculin method.

When it was decided to establish a seed elevator in Saskatchewan, there was a good deal of dissatisfaction, and I got the consent of my leader to establish a similar institution, or something to correspond to it in Alberta and Manitoba. Because Alberta and Saskatchewan were twin sisters, born at practically the same time, I was particularly anxious to treat them both evenly and justly. If I overlooked anything or departed in the least from that principle I would have taken it as a great favour if my hon. friend from Acadia had pointed it out to me when I was in a position to deal with it. I recall further that in order to aid in rehabilitating these great plains in the matter of grazing, while the interior department adjusted the regulations to the advantage of the ranchers on more occasions than one, the Department of Agriculture started a demonstration station at Manyberries in southern Alberta for the purpose of trying to rebuild the pastures of that one time great range country. They have been working on that for I suppose twelve years, to see what can be done to improve the pasture land for which that country was once so famous, not only for growing grass but growing high quality nutritious grass. I think my hon. friend knows about that. However, if he is in the humour I am in, if he can find something that I neglected at that time I will have no hesitation in admitting it, but as my hon. friend says the situation then was not so serious as it is now. That is a big admission. No one ever dreamed that we would see these days. Even in what we called good times there was hard sledding in certain parts of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, but these difficult times came with the advent of the Tories, and I hope they will go away when the Tories go out of power. That is just by the way; it just happened that way. Other years will come, possibly with better crops and prices. This year it looks as though the world crop would be about five hundred million bushels less than last year, so it would seem that nature is solving the problem of carry-overs much better than the international wheat agreements are.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I expected that from some yahoo over there in the rearguard. Well, it will soon be eleven o'clock, and we are not going to prorogue to-night. I believe in doing things decently and in order not by jamming them though in this way, proroguing in the dark midnight hours as though their deeds were evil.

I was devoting some attention to the well meant remarks of the hon. member for Acadia, which I think left a wrong impression as far as the Department of Agriculture was concerned. I have always found that hon. gentleman a pretty decent hon. gentleman, and I do not think he wants to misrepresent the situation. If he can point to any disparity between my attitude to-day and my attitude then, having regard to the different climatic and economic conditions, I am willing to be exposed. I do not want to take the ground that I am always right; time may prove that I have been wrong in some things this session. I do not think it will; I think time will prove that the stand I have taken this session was the right stand, but I will not feel humiliated if my hon. friend can point to something we failed to do in those days when we had the power to do it, but which we are preaching now. I will excuse hon. gentlemen on the opposite side for a moment if the hon. member for Acadia has anything further to add in that respect. I do not say that defiantly; I mean it in a kindly way.

Mr. GARDINER: I could not very well allow the hon. member for Melville to make the statement he has made without replying. He has suggested, together with the hon. member for Willow Bunch, certain things that should be done to rehabilitate the southern portion of Saskatchewan and parts of Alberta. I made the very same suggestions in 1923, not only personally to the Minister of Agriculture but also on the floor of this house. I suggested a policy which the government of that day might pursue in order to rehabilitate small areas then suffering from conditions similar to those existing to-day. The government of that day did not take any steps to remedy the situation, and I must say that if we had taken steps then along the lines suggested to-night we would have had some experience that could have been applied to the larger area where those conditions prevail at the present time.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am sorry, but my right hon. leader was trying to get something into my head, and I could not listen to the hon. gentleman at the same time. Would he mind mentioning in a word what that specific matter was?

Mr. GARDINER: It is only necessary to mention these points: the re-seeding of large areas with grass, with assistance from the government to buy the seed; the damming up of the surplus waters in the spring in order to create humidity in those areas, and the planting of rows of trees up and down the road allowances in large areas in order to protect the land so that the dry winds would not blow the farm from one place to another. Those were the three suggestions I made in 1922 and again in 1923, but the government of the day could not see its way clear to accept my suggestion and give some financial aid in that regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Department of Agriculture would have been responsible for only one item; that is grass and clover seed. I may explain that every experimental farm—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I can make just as much noise as my hon. friends can. For two or three years about 1927 the experimental farms in the west were devoted almost exclusively to the growing of reward wheat seed. My hon. friend knows that. Later the necessity arose for those elevators I mentioned. The very fact that in the Moose Jaw seed elevators we installed the very best grass and clover seed machinery that could be found on this continent is an evidence that we had in mind the requirements of that country in that respect. After having used the experimental farms to the fullest possible extent to grow reward wheat seed, when the next period of need came along I was not in charge of the experimental farms. The electors of Canada in their wisdom, or lack of it, decided to elect a new government. It is the prerogative of the people to make mistakes, but it is also their duty to correct those mistakes at the first opportunity. That is just by the way, but I would remind the hon. member for Acadia that we were not in charge in the last half of 1930. Otherwise I feel confident that we would have devoted the experimental farms of the west to the growing of grass seed. At an earlier date I gave the present Minister of Agriculture credit for doing work along that line to the extent that he had money with which to finance it. So I do not think my hon. friend has made out a very serious case against us, but if there is anything more I will accept the responsibility. I do not pretend that there were no mistakes at all or that coming events were always anticipated.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): I have another amendment, that item 135 of schedule A be amended by adding thereto the words, "and construction of new buildings."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MURPHY: I beg to move that in the Interior department item the words "landing fields" be added after the word "highways", and that in the Indian department item the words "construction and" be added, so that the item will read, "for the construction and reconstruction of Indian residential and day schools and hospitals."

Amendment agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 101, respecting the franchise of electors at elections of members of the House of Commons.

He said: The amendments are very minor. The only one of importance appears at page 5, in what we know as the Doukhobor clause. The Senate has transposed the words "in the province of British Columbia" and placed them at the beginning of the clause as was suggested by my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King). Then there is another amendment at page 27 where inadvertently the words appear "in the good opinion of the returning officer" and that has been changed to "in the opinion"; they have taken out the word "good". Then, at another point they have taken out the prefix "sub" appearing in front of the word "division". It was called a sub polling division, and that has been changed.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 115, respecting the election of members of the House of Commons.

He said: The amendments made to this bill are merely changes in the numbering of the sections.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

STATEMENT OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION CONCERNING WANT OF CONFIDENCE MOTION

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as no doubt hon. members are aware, it had been my intention on the motion for supply to move an amendment to the effect that the present administration no longer enjoys the confidence of the country. I think it is perfectly obvious that such is the case. May I say, however, that I realize all hon. members of the house are very anxious, if at all possible, to conclude this week. I understand if we do not conclude to-night by midnight or before midnight, that we will have to adjourn until Tuesday, as to-morrow is Sunday and Monday is Dominion day, and there being reasons which make it impossible to conclude the work of the session on Monday.

In these circumstances I feel I should be embarrassing the house unnecessarily if I proceeded with the motion to-night which I intended should be the last motion of what I believe and hope will be the last session of this parliament. Should I be mistaken, and should there be another, namely a sixth session of this parliament, I shall, if circumstances permit, make it the first motion of that new session. Meantime I think there will be further evidence, both through by-elections and probably further provincial elections, that the government no longer enjoys the confidence of the people. I do sincerely feel that this administration has lost completely the confidence of the country, and that it should no longer continue in office. The Prime Minister might well advise us that this being the end of the fifth session of this Parliament, the session will be followed by dissolution. The supply we are voting will be needed in large part to carry on the work of the government through the remainder of the present fiscal year, that is until March 31, 1935. I do not wish to embarrass the government in its effort to obtain what is needed of that supply. If however parliament should not be dissolved and this government should come back and ask the house to vote supply for the year ending March 31, 1936, I wish to say that the opposition will do all in its power to prevent this government obtaining any further supply.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am sure we all greatly appreciate the generous spirit which has been manifested by the right hon. leader of the opposition in foregoing the great pleasure of making another speech with reference to this administration. But I can only assure him that I think he is illadvised in making threats.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not a threat, it is a duty.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I laud him for that spirit which prompts him to discharge his duty. I am doubly grateful, as are other hon. members of the government, that he is making it possible to close business to-night, for the reasons he has stated.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Contingencies; further amount required for more efficient conduct of services, $25,000.

Mr. RALSTON: I wish to say one word at this time. I had intended to make some extended observations with respect to the tariff board, but under the present circumstances I shall curtail my remarks. In bringing down the bill with regard to the tariff board two years ago the Prime Minister made it abundantly clear, as reported in Hansard at page 3422, that this was to be a court of record. He said:

> We are creating a court of record with all that appertains and belongs to a court of record.

Mr. BENNETT: That was Part I, and the hon. gentleman knows it. It has nothing to do with Part II.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend says that was Part I.

Mr. BENNETT: You have made misrepresentations long enough; if we sit here until Tuesday I shall not let those remarks pass.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know what the right hon. gentleman means when he states it was Part I. He provided that it was to be a court of record for all purposes.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not so.

Mr. RALSTON: He made provision whereby it was to have a seal, it was to have the power of summoning witnesses, and was to have all the perquisites of a court of record. But what did the Supreme Court of Canada say? In the judgment of the court I find this:

> The board of customs was, and the tariff board is, in no sense, a court. By force of the provisions of the Customs Act, it is not a judicial body but an administrative body. Its functions were and are purely departmental.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what we always said.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the court which my right hon. friend always described as a court of record. He told us he was getting a gentleman of the highest judicial qualifications to preside over it. He felt that a court should be appointed for the purposes outlined in his speech on the imperial conference agreement, at page 114 of Hansard, 1932. This is what he said at that time:

> We have therefore provided that our tariff board shall act as a judicial body as well as a fact finding body, in so far as their functions of interpreting the agreement are concerned.

That statement is to be found in Hansard of October 12, 1932, at page 114. When the board made a decision with which the government did not agree, instead of my right hon. friend referring to the supreme court the question whether or not the board had made a correct decision, he was careful to make no such reference at all. Instead of that, he referred to the supreme court the question whether the board had jurisdiction. The supreme court expressly refrained from deciding whether the tariff board were right or wrong in their decision.

Mr. BENNETT: It certainly did.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend says it certainly did.

Mr. BENNETT: Decided it had no jurisdiction.

Mr. RALSTON: But it did not decide whether or not the tariff board were right or wrong in the accuracy of the decisions they made.

Mr. BENNETT: They could not have been right.

Mr. RALSTON: Let me read to my right hon. friend what they said.

Mr. BENNETT: I know it.

Mr. RALSTON: I read from the judgment of the court:

> Copies of the decisions of the board upon the concrete cases mentioned in the order in council, and also of the reasons for judgment in one of these cases were submitted to the court; but they were placed before us only for the purpose of illustration; and by the questions put, the court is not asked to say if these decisions were right or wrong. It was made clear at the argument that in our answers we are to limit ourselves to the abstract questions referred to us.

The abstract question was not: Was the tariff board right or wrong? it was: Has the tariff board jurisdiction? In submitting that case to the supreme court as he did, it seems to me that my right hon. friend intended to discredit the tariff board before the people of this country and the old country. He submitted a question which attacked only its jurisdiction but he deliberately left unchallenged the question as to whether its decision was right or wrong.

I am not going to develop this matter any further although there is a great deal more which could be said. The thing my right hon. friend should have done instead of referring these abstract questions to the supreme court was to make it positive by legislation that the tariff board was intended to carry out the functions which everyone thought it was intended to carry out under Part II of the act. What was the use of saying, as my right hon. friend did, that the tariff board was to be free from political considerations when as a matter of fact it has to go with its hat in its hand and ask the Minister of National Revenue to approve of the decisions which it makes. The right hon. gentleman stated in parliament that it was intended to substitute an independent tribunal for a political tribunal.

Mr. BENNETT: He was dealing with Part I.

Mr. RALSTON: The right hon. gentleman continued:

> You have in the one instance a political body, governed by all the considerations that influence political bodies; and we all know just what the pressure of contending interests may be to get a minister to make a recommendation to council. As against that we have this body which is not interested in political matters and makes its decisions free from political influence.

My right hon. friend says he was referring to Part I. Does he mean to suggest that it was to be a political body as far as Part II was concerned? Surely not. My right hon. friend left the impression upon our friends from over the seas, and he left the impression upon this house, that this was to be a board having judicial functions.

Mr. BENNETT: And it has in connection with Part I; the people overseas were not interested in Part II.

Mr. RALSTON: Part I simply gives the power to find facts and suggest to the government what changes might be made in the tariff, and how much tariff should be levied in order to equalize the costs of production. It has no judicial functions in the sense of making a decision which is binding upon anyone. Under Part II it had appeals from the dominion appraiser, and it was expected that it would have some judicial function. What is the use of taking an appeal from the dominion appraiser and solemnly going to this tariff board which has all the paraphernalia of a court, and then after the tariff board has made a decision, coming back to the Minister of National Revenue and asking him if he will please approve the decision of the tariff board? Who will ever go to the tariff board to have that judicial function exercised under Part II when as a matter of fact he would have to go back to the minister to have the decision approved? I do not think my right hon. friend believed that under section 48 the tariff board would have to come back to the Minister of National Revenue to obtain approval of their decision. If he did believe that, then I think he misled the house and the country when he laid down what the functions of the tariff board were to be and when he described the qualifications necessary for the personnel of that board. I say to my right hon. friend that the country was disappointed when he announced in this house that he was not going to legislate to give the tariff board the status to which it is entitled and which it has attained before the people of this country.

I shall take up but a minute more of the time of the house to quote an extract from the Financial Post of June 23, which expresses much better than I can the feeling of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: That is out of order. Any reference from a newspaper touching the conduct of this house is out of order.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend does not mean that. He knows that anything is out of order which reflects on the proceedings in this house. This is not reflecting on the proceedings of the house, it is expressing the opinion of the country. This journal is stating what should be done with regard to the matter of the tariff board.

Mr. BENNETT: The rule is clear; could I have the ruling of the chair?

Mr. RALSTON: Is my right hon. friend going to say that he is afraid to have read in this house a short statement by a reputable journal which does not reflect upon any member of this house?

Mr. BENNETT: Reflecting on the house.

Mr. RALSTON: No, not reflecting on the house but reflecting upon a policy of the government. Does my right hon. friend mean to say that that cannot be read in this house?

Mr. BENNETT: You cannot read anything which introduces another member into this house.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend knows there is no such rule.

Mr. BENNETT: The rule is clear.

Mr. RALSTON: The rule is clear that you cannot reflect upon the actions of a member but the rule does not say that you cannot quote a journal's opinion as to a policy laid down by the government.

Mr. BENNETT: You cannot introduce into this house another member. You cannot introduce the opinion of a newspaper for the purpose of influencing the opinion of this house. That rule has been so stated from time immemorial because it is adding to the membership of this house another member for the purpose of expressing an opinion and influencing this house.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend has made that statement a number of times but he will find no such rule about introducing another member. The rule he will find is the one which states that you cannot read anything which reflects on the proceedings of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: For the purpose of influencing the opinion of the house.

Mr. RALSTON: I challenge my right hon. friend to read the rule. He will find that there is no rule as to introducing another member. Will the chairman be good enough to read the rule

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Rule 306 reads:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the point.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Seeing that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is so strong on rules, under what rule are we working at ten minutes past eleven? I do not believe in conducting the declining hours of parliament by departing from the practices of decency and order in all things, including prorogation. I have seen this trick tried before. It was tried in 1931; I objected then and I object again. I have been here since January 25 without going home, and I am prepared to stay until we prorogue. This working in the dead of night would seem as if our deeds were evil.

Mr. RALSTON: I submit that my right hon. friend is wrong, but I am not going to take up time by arguing further. The article reads:

> The business community received a tariff appeal court with approval and began, promptly, to make good use of it. Under the impression, untrue as the event proves, that it had judicial powers, the tariff board proceeded to bring order out of departmental red tape and confusion: It nipped political interference in the bud: and it gained the respect and confidence of the business community.

Mr. BENNETT: Do not read any more speeches now.

Mr. RALSTON: It continues:

> The tariff board, as it stands in the light of the supreme court judgment, can perform only limited services for Canadian business. The government, if not prepared to amend the law—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RALSTON: It continues:

> —and give it the authority of a court, should repeal Part II of the Tariff Board Act and proclaim, in all honesty,—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): I ask the hon. member not to read the article.

Mr. RALSTON: It continues:

> —that tariff enforcement is to revert to a purely political basis.

Mr. CAHAN: When we were discussing Part II of the tariff board bill it was clearly stated to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), who invited the statement, that the decisions of the tariff board sitting as the customs board would be subject to the approval of the minister. In order to make it very clear that there was an appeal in certain cases, at the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman I drafted an amendment to that effect. Whatever the opinion of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) may now be I am quite sure that there was no misapprehension in the mind of his leader to that effect. The discussion is there reported and may be referred to. It is quite possible that the editor of the paper which has been quoted was entirely misled by certain statements that were not in accordance with either the fact or the law which the hon. gentleman had made on several occasions. The hon. gentleman seems to be under a complete misapprehension as to what the facts really are.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Penitentiaries—

Amount required to carry out agreement between His Majesty and the municipality of the village of St. Vincent de Paul for extension of the present water and sewer system connected with St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, $3,000.

Mr. ROSS: I had the floor when this item was up before. I am going to detain the committee only a few minutes. I am compelled to speak to-night on behalf of those guards who were dismissed by the new administration some years ago to promote efficiency. Their notice to go was in these terms: "Guard So and So: Acting under instructions from Ottawa, I have to advise that you will be retired from the staff of this institution to promote efficiency;" or: "Guard So and So: Acting on instructions from Ottawa, I have to advise that you have been retired from your position on the staff of this institution, to take effect from the 25th, to promote efficiency." I have a dozen of them here, notices to men who were dismissed by this new administration to promote efficiency, and now we have information that for eighteen months there has been no efficiency, though these gentlemen have lost their positions. I want to say on behalf of these guards that, at the time the riots occurred, the new superintendent came to my door, without solicitation from myself after he had dismissed about five or six of them, and gave me the promise that these men would be restored. He gave me a straight promise that they would be restored. I went to these men and begged them not to raise any disturbance but to keep quiet because they would be put back in their positions, and I told them that on the word of the superintendent. That word was not fulfilled, but instead of that about thirty more were dismissed. I am speaking to-night on behalf of these men, pointing out the injustice that has been done them. In addition to that, I would point out that if Warden Megloughlin has been dismissed, the people want to know on what ground and for what reasons. Was he dismissed because he was inefficient? Was he dismissed because he had not support from higher up? Or was it because he was carrying out some administration of his own or the administration laid down for him? These are matters that are disturbing to the people of Kingston and to the guards who have been dismissed. It is too late to discuss the matter to-night, but I can assure the committee that, having waited patiently for some time for an explanation of their dismissal, I am speaking now only in the interests of the penitentiary. No matter what any newspaper or anyone may say, I am expressing my own views, and I have at heart the welfare of these guards and of the people of Kingston as well as of the penitentiary. The people of Kingston are disturbed after the disclosure that has been made to the house that efficiency has not been secured, although a dozen or two of guards have been dismissed. I have done my duty, and though I have not time to-night to discuss the matter further I promise you that I shall return to the subject at the very beginning of the next session of parliament.

Miss MACPHAIL: Unfortunately it always happens that the penitentiary estimates come up at the very close of the session. I have sat through this session and listened to a good deal of good talk and a good deal that might have been better left unsaid, and I intend to-night to take up as much time as I would two weeks before prorogation.

In the winter the Minister of Justice, discussing the Kingston penitentiary riots, said that they were due to communist activities in that institution. When General Ormond, who was superintendent of penitentiaries in Canada, was listing the causes of the riots in Canada he enumerated eleven, and the last one was the only cause that could be interpreted as communistic. Oddly enough, the riot of October 17-20, 1932, was by no means the only one in Kingston. I take my information from Superintendent Ormond's reports. There was an uprising in Kingston on September 17, 1921; another on January 17, 1923; another on October 3, 1924; another on January 22, 1927, and some sort of disturbance called the conspiracy on August 5, 1931. Then there were the riots in October, 1932. It would be interesting to hear from the Minister of Justice what caused all the other riots, since many of them took place before the communists were in Kingston. It is too thin a reason to give to an intelligent body like the House of Commons, and I think that the events since that speech was made by the Minister of Justice have borne out the contention that the reason simply was not good enough. The minister at that time took the ground that the 50,000 communications he had received asking for an investigation into our penal institutions were from communist sources. I do not know where they came from, but I do know that the Toronto Globe, which could not by any stretch of imagination be said to be a communist journal, for weeks and even months campaigned in favour of an impartial investigation into the difficulties at Kingston. And not only the Globe, but other newspapers, such a journal as the Whig Standard of Kingston and more recently, since the debate in the House of Commons a few days ago, the Hamilton Herald and many others, have asked for an impartial investigation into all Canadian penitentiaries and particularly Kingston penitentiary, where there has been one disturbance after another. Moreover, such eminent authorities as Archdeacon Scott and Mr. W. M. Nickle, K.C., of Kingston, who had much to do with the defence of certain convicts in Kingston and has for a long time been deeply interested in the conditions in the penitentiary, and whose father was one of three people who made the finest report on penitentiaries we have ever had, have urged such an investigation.

Possibly at this point I might say to the hon. member for Marquette that Major W. M. Nickle, in an interview given the Toronto Globe on Wednesday, June 27, made reference to the hon. gentleman in these terms:

> Just to bring this matter to a head, I challenge Mr. Mullins to prove that any instance in my letter to Canon Scott is incorrect or false; and if the government will give me a chance I will prove that what I have stated in my letter is correct in every detail.

His letter, which was read on the floor by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is a terrible indictment of the management of Kingston penitentiary. Surely there should not be required any further urging of the government for an impartial investigation. There should be a royal commission or a special committee of investigation to look into conditions not only in Kingston penitentiary but in all the penitentiaries throughout Canada.

I should like to take some time to give what I think are some of the causes of the riots.

I am going to quote for a moment or two from the decision of Judge Deroche in the Rex versus Kirkland case in which he says:

> The men (meaning the inmates) had for months and possibly years been asking for the removal of certain grievances which were in their minds, with little or no response.

Then he goes on to say:

> They now decided that on October 17, at three o'clock p.m. they would walk out of the shops and make a peaceful demonstration to impress the warden and through him Ottawa.

At the end of the judgment he says again on page 7:

> Then to go back to the cause of the riot. This peaceful demonstration which developed into a riot, was for the purpose of emphasizing the demands of the men for redress of certain grievances which had been long and repeatedly denied them. Many of the grievances for which this demonstration was staged have already—

Before this trial took place.

> —been granted to the men, proving conclusively to my mind that those demands must have been reasonable.

Those are the words of the judge who tried one of the rioters and in his opinion there was cause—not that the judge wanted a riot—and he gives as proof of his belief that the grievances which the men enumerated were remedied between the time of the rioting and the judgment made by him. I am, however, inclined to think there has been a slipping backward between that day and this.

Then, too, I want to say something about the number of repeaters. The figures were given the other day by the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross), that in Canadian penal institutions twenty-one per cent of all the inmates are serving a term for their second offence; fourteen per cent for their third offence and twenty-two per cent for their fourth offence or over. Using a statement from Superintendent Ormond's report, seventy-five per cent of all the prisoners in Canadian penitentiaries have had previous convictions, for incarceration possibly not in penitentiaries, but, if not, at least in some other place such as a gaol or a reformatory. I remember one time Brigadier General Hughes told me that the average cost of a conviction was $1,200, so if we figure it out on that basis, the repeaters, using the percentage I have just given and the prison population of this year, mean an increased cost to the people of Canada of $6,735,600; that is the repeater cases over and above the first conviction. Therefore, I should think if the House of Commons is not affected by a humanitarian appeal it ought to be affected by a financial or purely material appeal. It is bad business to go on putting men into penitentiaries where they are not reformed, where apparently, after leaving such institutions, they cannot make a place for themselves in life and so return to prison.

I feel the House of Commons ought to take much more interest in this subject than hon. members have shown. It always happens just as it is happening now that this matter comes up at the very end of a session, one gets an indifferent house and nothing is done from year to year. So we have such cases as the one mentioned in Mr. Nickle's letter and corroborated in Judge Deroche's statement that a man called O'Brien has been in solitary confinement in Kingston penitentiary from August, 1931, at least until July 12, 1933, and is quite probably still in solitary confinement. Since, however, the department guards its secrets so very carefully I cannot say whether that is still the case, but it is quite true that he was in solitary confinement for the period mentioned. Just think of it! a man in solitary confinement from August, 1931, to July 12, 1933! It would have been much more humane to stand him up against the wall and shoot him. The idea of putting a man into solitary confinement for a period running on into two years in a cell three or four times the size of a piano box, to use the term of the report prepared by Nickle, Biggar and Draper, and leaving him there for that length of time, although during that time he has never been tried for the offence for which he was committed to the solitary cell. Whether this has been done recently, I am not prepared to say I would like the Minister of Justice, when he replies, if he does reply, to tell us whether or not O'Brien is still in solitary confinement.

I have also been interested in the case of Tim Buck. There are various reasons for my interest in him. The committee will recall that it was said he was shot at. That was denied, but it was admitted the other day by the Minister of Justice that eleven shots were fired into the cell of Tim Buck. I notice that Major Nickle in an interview which he gave to the Toronto Globe recalled to us all that when crown counsel MacKay was questioning Tim Buck, he, Buck, stated that his cell was the only one of seventy-six cells in D range which was fired at. It would be interesting to me to know on what date he was fired at, whether it was on the riot of the seventeenth or the riot of the twentieth, and whether he was fired at from the corridor directly into the cell or whether he was fired at from the yard outside. It seems rather remarkable that if there are seventy-six cells in range D, one cell should be chosen and eleven shots should be fired into it. We were told the other day that they were fired into it in order to quiet or frighten Tim Buck. I should think it ought to have been a successful method. I do not know whether others in the house feel as I do about the matter, but to me it seems a remarkable action that one cell should have been chosen and these volleys should have been fired into it. The shots were all supposed to have lodged in the ceiling and it is very lucky for Buck that they did. If they were fired from the yard outside they must have been fired by excellent marksmen if they hit the ceiling every time and did not hit Tim Buck.

I am going to quote Judge Deroche again. It was said by the minister that Buck was standing in the door of his cell encouraging the rioters. In this report the judge says on page 7:

Buck told them—

That is the prisoners.

—that the soldiers would not hurt them if they did no violence to person or injury to property.

That does not sound very much like encouraging the rioters or like a terrifically dangerous man who needed to be fired at eleven times in order to cow him. I am going to quote again from page 3 of the same report; it is very much in the same language:

When it was announced that the soldiers were coming, one of the men, Tim Buck, advised the men that the soldiers could not or would not hurt them so long as they did no damage to property or violence to anyone, and instructed the men to gather pails of water and barricade the door, expecting to stand siege.

At the end of this document when Judge Deroche is giving judgment on Kirkland, he gives a modified judgment because he says that they did no injury to anyone. All that would lead one to think that there was possibly as much violence on the part of the authorities as there was on the part of the men.

There is one other protest I wish to make; I feel it is useless and still I want to make it. I think we have altogether too much military control in penitentiaries. We started off with General Ormond, and then we had Colonel Megloughlin who now has been asked for his resignation. I want to point out that the technique which serves well with normal and healthy men and men more or less free, as soldiers are, would be quite different from the technique required for men who are morally or mentally sick, who are not free and who are embittered and therefore very difficult to deal with. I do not think that the method which works in one case will work in the other. We need to start as soon as possible to handle intelligently our prison population. We need a psychiatrist, as mentioned by General Ross, and we need segregation of prisoners. Possibly the Minister of Justice himself made the best plea for segregation of prisoners of any I heard. I think he said that there were not more than one hundred prisoners in Kingston —he was speaking of Kingston particularly —who were of a violent sort, and that the others were, to use what I think was his term, law-abiding citizens: I suppose he meant to say they did not give much trouble. One hundred out of something like—I forget at the moment what the population of the Kingston penitentiary is; at any rate they are a small part of the total. Superintendent Ormond gave the percentage of incorrigibles as fifteen. In another part of the same report he said that twenty per cent belonged to the born criminal class. Nickle, Biggar and Draper in the report of 1921 said that fifteen per cent had given trouble, and not more than five per cent were difficult to control. From all this I think we can conclude that only a small percentage of the prisoners are incorrigibles. Therefore it would seem a logical and sensible thing to segregate these, and try our best to save the others, not only for their own sake but for the sake of society to which they must one day be returned. Because if these men continue to be criminals they are going to cause destruction to life and property, with a great deal of suffering and misery to people outside the prison.

I feel that the government of Canada should no longer refuse to have an impartial investigation into our penal institutions. If they do, the responsibility must be entirely on the shoulders of the administration. We have done as much as we can do; newspapers and societies and a great number of people as individuals have said there should be an investigation. I believe that the public will never be satisfied until there is one, and I urge upon the government once more that it be held.

Before I resume my seat I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if it is true that Colonel Megloughlin is to be given a position in the civil service, as reported in an Ottawa paper just the other day.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I know nothing of the report, nor of any foundation for such a rumour.

I should like to detain the committee at some length in regard to the situation spoken of by the hon. member, but as I understand His Excellency is on his way to the parliament buildings, I shall have to reserve my answer to a future occasion, in order that what I think is the desire of everyone may be complied with and the house enabled to prorogue.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has taken a most remarkable attitude.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have given my reason.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has given his reason and I regard the reason as entirely insufficient. The hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross) said a little while ago that it is perhaps too late to-night to discuss this, but we have been put off for several years. It is an unfortunate condition, that even a supporter of the government has to admit that he has been put off for several years. We have all been put off for several years. Again and again the government has brought on these estimates at the very latest moment—

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is not a fair statement. These estimates have been up on at least two previous occasions this session; they have stood from time to time on special request.

Mr. STEVENS: When the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) was away.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Last year the estimate was put through at a very late time and without any warning. Often notice is given; last year it was not given. It is true that this year the estimate was held up, or one item, but there is no reason whatever why these estimates could not have been brought down earlier than on the last night.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the welfare of nine hundred men is at stake. They have been neglected for several years. The department has carried on the affairs of the penitentiary in such a way that very serious riots have occurred, riots that have involved heavy expense on the part of the government, and that have shocked the conscience of the people of Canada. I refuse to permit the Minister to say at 11.40 o'clock on a Saturday night that on account of the Governor General coming here he will decline to answer, and that we shall again be put off.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not at all refuse or decline to answer; I gave the reason why I did not at the moment do so. Now I understand that the situation is changed on account of the attitude of my hon. friend who is now speaking: His Excellency will not come, so there will be abundant opportunity on Tuesday.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I congratulate the minister and the government on its good sense in affording an opportunity for the discussion of a most important problem. Now do we go on?

Mr. BENNETT: I should think it would be desirable, in view of the statement made by the hon. gentleman, to discontinue the debate at this hour of the night. It is quite clear that it will be impossible to prorogue before Sunday morning. I propose to move that the house adjourn until Tuesday morning at eleven o'clock.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would remind the Prime Minister that he set a very good precedent several years ago for the action we are taking to-night.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to make it perfectly clear that His Excellency is prepared to come at any moment if he is asked to do so, but I will not take the responsibility of asking him to come to this chamber on Sunday morning. It would be within the law, but I will not ask that it be done.

While I am on my feet I should like to say that I took the responsibility, I think twice myself, and it was done once by another, to have the penitentiary items stand over because of the illness of the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) in order that she might have an opportunity to be present. The thanks that one gets for doing it are found in the observations she made to-night.

Miss MACPHAIL: I thanked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), on the first debate on this subject this session and I found I did it too soon. Whe have a very good precedent for the house not proroguing on Saturday night but being held over. I remember in 1929 the Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, held the house over from Saturday to Monday, and it was then quite the thing to do. I do not propose to have on my shoulders the responsibility for holding it over, because I have sat here constantly ever since the item was discussed on Monday, knowing it had to come up again, I have stayed in the chamber ready to go on at any time, but it did not come on.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Shall the item carry?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, Mr. Chairman, the item does not carry.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I move that when this house adjourns it stand adjourned until Tuesday morning at eleven o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 11.45 p.m. until Tuesday, July 3 at eleven o'clock.

Tuesday, July 3, 1934

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIME MINISTER'S BIRTHDAY

FELICITATIONS FROM LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION ON BEHALF OF HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I understand that this is the Prime Minister's birthday. I should like to extend to my right hon. friend my best wishes for many happy returns of the day, and perhaps on this occasion he will allow me to speak for the house and to extend these wishes on behalf of us all.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The very unusual and kindly act of the right hon. the leader of the opposition I shall not soon forget. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank him for having thought of so gracious an act as that which he has just now done and, more, for the felicitous terms in which he has expressed it. I have had a very interesting and very hardworking life; I have enjoyed the one and gained much experience from the other.

AUSTRALIAN WHEAT AND FLOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): On Saturday I directed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in regard to Australian flour shipped from Southampton to Halifax. Has the minister any further information?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There is no further information. There are a few small shipments coming in but nothing out of the usual. The necessary and, I think, effective steps have been taken to deal with the whole question and I may say that in this respect we are receiving the reasonable cooperation of the Australian authorities.

Mr. SANDERSON: My question was directed to the minister in regard to this one shipment, which he said he would look into—a very large shipment from Southampton to Halifax.

Mr. STEVENS: I am sorry my hon. friend—

Mr. SANDERSON: Don't be sorry for me.

Mr. STEVENS: Pardon me. I say I am sorry that my hon. friend persists in stirring up this question. I have stated repeatedly that with the very kind cooperation of the Australian government the whole matter is being satisfactorily dealt with. The shipments are not large when one considers the movement of goods. The shipment he refers to is three hundred tons, not a large one. The matter is well in hand and is being most satisfactorily dealt with, and I do not think there is any need or occasion for agitation or alarm.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does the minister suggest that I am agitating?

Mr. STEVENS: No, I said there was no need for agitation.

Mr. YOUNG: I hope the minister will not take any action that would tend to jeopardize the market for our own flour and wheat in Britain and other countries.

CAUGHNAWAGA SANITARY CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of the Interior. Yesterday I had the honour to be invited to the ordination of the first Indian priest in Caughnawaga, and while we were there the authorities were very anxious to know whether something could be done in the interests of hygiene. There is a very high death rate in that reservation. In the province of Quebec there are sanitary units and it would cost the Department of Indian Affairs only $150 a year, and the Quebec government could take charge of this reservation. I should be very much obliged if the minister, from his general estimates, could devote the necessary sum for hygiene purposes in this district.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DUPUIS: With the kind permission of my hon. friends opposite I should like to present this matter to the minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member is going to ask a question he should ask it. There is no motion before the house to justify a debate.

Mr. DUPUIS: This is not a debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member proceed to ask his question?

Mr. DUPUIS: I have no wish to embarrass the government, and the question is not asked for political purposes. It is only from a sentiment of humanity that I am putting the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Put it.

Mr. DUPUIS: I simply want to remind the minister that there is no sewer system there.

Hon. THOMAS G. MURPHY: (Minister of the Interior): I did not hear the question but I can only say that I shall be glad to give the hon. member's remarks consideration.

SUPPLY

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—STATEMENT OF MR. MOTHERWELL

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the Prime Minister whether we would have an opportunity on the supplementary estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) of discussing the international wheat agreement. If we would at that time, then I would not raise the question now, but if we shall not have that opportunity on the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, then I propose to take the matter up now although I would prefer to do so on the estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: It had better be taken up now in view of the condition of the estimates.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): As the house is aware, we have several times made the request from this side that we be given an opportunity of discussing the international wheat agreement, but the Prime Minister seemed to think we had already discussed it sufficiently in the interest of the question itself and of the country generally. Developments, however, have recently taken place in connection with the question, that render it necessary that we should have something to say about it before we prorogue. Because of that, rather than wanting to introduce the matter on going into supply, I thought maybe the Prime Minister would let it be discussed on the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I believe my right hon. friend's decision is correct that the matter should be taken up now rather than on the estimates because there is no estimate dealing directly with the question and therefore permission to deal with it then might be denied.

The first step looking toward the failure of the international wheat agreement was in 1930 at the special session when the government of the day authorized imposing of an embargo on six or seven of the major exportable commodities of Russia. They did this in none too delicate a way and it was accompanied by remarks that a great country like Russia could not be expected to entertain without some resentment. It seems to me that anyone who had any knowledge of international matters would know even at that time that embargoing the major exportable commodities of that great country was the last thing to do if we ever wanted to enter into an international trade agreement with Russia in regard to the production of wheat or any other commodity.

In 1931, the year following, there was an international conference at Rome respecting wheat. Russia had again come into the picture by that time as an exporter of wheat and the whole world was agog as to what was going to happen with Russia again exporting wheat, and at prices that some people said constituted dumping. The assemblage at Rome was brought about apparently with the hope that something might be done in the way of an international understanding about wheat. My recollection is that the Hon. Howard Ferguson, then and now High Commissioner for Canada, was Canada's representative at Rome and I think Doctor Riddell from Geneva was also there. The wheat pool had a representative there. Mr. Williams was there; I do not know whether he represented the pool or what, but Mr. Robertson was there on behalf of the wheat pool, as I understood. The conference was not very long under way when it became quite evident that very little was going to be done in the way of an international agreement. Russia was also represented. My recollection is—and I am subject to correction—that before the conference was very long under way, the wheat exporting countries were lined up on one side and the importing countries were lined up on the other. The conference adjourned with that line-up, the different countries not feeling very well disposed toward each other, the importing countries decided to reassemble in Paris under the leadership of the late Premier Briand and the others—the exporting countries—to reassemble in London under the leadership of the Canadian High Commissioner. This latter assembly was appointed more or less as a continuing committee to deal with this question, to dig into the matter of statistics and all that sort of thing, until finally in the following year, 1932, the Ottawa Imperial conference met in this capital city. The question of an international agreement with respect to wheat did not come up very prominently at that conference but the question of British preference in regard to wheat did. We do not need to go into that matter; the Prime Minister took the ground at that time that the preference was intended not to raise the price of wheat but rather to give Canada a sheltered or secured market in Great Britain which objective subsequent events do not seem to prove, has yet been attained.

In the year following that, the big world international conference at London was convened where sixty or more countries were represented. Surely something was now going to be done with regard to not only an international wheat agreement but many other matters. It was thought the world was ready for a rest in connection with tariff increases and the very knotty problem of exchange was also to the fore, Great Britain having gone off the gold standard in the meantime in September, 1931. I do not need to tell the house what happened at that great international London conference which was very imposing. It was thought there were great possibilities in it, but President Roosevelt apparently got a new light as to what his duties were and something suddenly arose with regard to the conference proper, that is so far as the two features I have mentioned were concerned. Out of that international conference proper, that is the one consisting of some sixty countries, was developed what might be called an auxiliary conference. It was practically the same conference but there was a subconference—I use that term for want of a better—comprising some twenty-one countries that were interested in either buying or selling wheat. According to my recollection my good friend the Prime Minister was chairman of that conference. I have no notes before me; I am speaking from memory and it will not aggrieve me at all if I run off the track and somebody sets me right; but I remember the right hon. gentleman was chairman; I may say that he was the head, the tail and the middle of that conference. We have just been passing felicitations about my good friend's birthday and this would be a nice time to make the remark that no matter whether it was a world conference or a smaller local one, my right hon. friend was never in it for ten minutes or at least half an hour before he was the centre of attraction and was pretty much in control of the conference especially when he was chairman. Naturally that would be the case. I can imagine him being there when he would be in the limelight, the central and the most brilliant member of that conference; I do not know anyone who would be more so. Had it not been for his great energy, personality and perseverance there would not on that occasion have been any international wheat agreement. But when we know him as we do and the masterful manner in which he takes up a question, especially one with which he was thought by the other countries to be pretty well familiar, there was nothing else to it but to go ahead with his great driving force behind the project and the conference. It has often been said that this was the one redeeming feature of the international conference consisting of sixty countries, that convened there some weeks or months previously. Therefore, when my right hon. friend returned from that conference in London with the laurels of what seemed to be a considerable victory on his brow, he might be pardoned for making some pretty strong claims on its behalf and at least he might have been expected to ask the concurrence and approval of this house in his wonderful achievement. But that has not been done yet. And we know why it has not been done. Anyhow the Prime Minister came back and made a very extraordinary speech in Winnipeg before a body of young business men, saying in regard to the agreement: What is there to do in this world regarding the increasing and embarrassing wheat carry-overs but just what business men are doing? When they found their shelves were full of goods for which there were not enough buyers they reduced their inventories, that is reduced orders for goods from the manufacturers until the shelves were lightened. We have to remember that that illustration was given before a body of business men; it was the sort of illustration that would appeal to them. It took like hot cakes, as the saying is, with them, and it seemed a reasonable thing to suggest that the farmers do the same in their wheat production policies. That was the way he put it—why should not farmers pursue the same method when they found they were overstocked with wheat or any commodity: reduce inventories and all will be well. I hope the Prime Minister will correct me if I am exaggerating in any way. To superficial hearers it seemed reasonable, but unfortunately it is not a parallel case at all. Business men can do that, even though it embarrasses the manufacturer, but when a farmer is invited to reduce his production of wheat there is a further question: what is he to do with his acreage? Either the Prime Minister did not think that a matter of concern or he overlooked it; at all events he did not enlighten the country or the farmers about it. That was an awful anti-climax to my right hon. friend's earlier dictum, when he said he was going to blast his way into the markets of the world. One could imagine all things that stood in the Prime Minister's way blowing up sky high. But now he says in effect: This blasting process has not worked out; the only way to meet the situation is not to have so much wheat to sell, and then I shall not have to use so much powder in blasting. He said further: Would it not be better to sell one bushel of wheat at one dollar per bushel than two bushels at fifty cents each? That was intended to be a clincher. I was up in Mackenzie riding at the time—you heard about the Mackenzie by-election last fall no doubt, Mr. Speaker. When we arrived there it was terribly wet; all meetings were cancelled because of the condition of the roads. In Wadena we assembled in a room in the hotel where there was a radio and were entertained hearing this or another speech from Winnipeg by the Prime Minister. It was not a question whether he was reported properly or not; we were delighted to hear him, and we were almost convinced against our judgment that the Prime Minister had the remedy,—selling one bushel at one dollar instead of two at fifty cents each. If it were only as simple as that, wouldn't it be glorious? But there were one or two difficulties. To begin with, who was to give us the one dollar? And the statement was chock full of other economic blunders and fallacies, in addition to that vital defect. Mr. McFarland has never been able to dispose of his wheat at one dollar since then nor any one else in Canada that we have heard of. So the whole idea was just a dream and a mighty bad dream. Now what is the next move—the next part in the play? I have always believed that the Prime Minister himself never thought much of that wheat agreement. He has too good a business head to think that you can get prosperous by artificially reducing the world's production by practically endeavouring to shorten the arm of the Lord and reduce the abundance with which He has blessed this world. I could not imagine a man of parts like the Prime Minister preaching such a horrible, heathenish fallacy.

But, when we come to see who were his advisers on that occasion, then I am not so surprised at his blunder. Who were the Prime Minister's advisers at this international wheat conference and before? The three prairie premiers, Mr. Bracken on the east, Mr. Anderson in the centre and Mr. Brownlee on the western front. In addition he had Hon. Mr. MacPherson, a very fine and capable attorney general for Saskatchewan, who I remember went overseas with the Prime Minister. Then there was a gentleman familiarly known as Andy Cairns. He was there as a statistician. Those were the Prime Minister's advisers on this problem of an agreement to control the international marketing of wheat, restricting it to what were thought to be the consumptive requirements of the world. Mr. Bracken made as good a case as could be made for an international agreement. He is the only farmer premier I know of in Canada,—I have not even that before me, because I did not know I would be speaking now. I followed him with a great deal of interest, particularly as Mr. Bracken was at one time a member of my own staff in Regina when I was a minister there. I knew him well; knew he was well informed, and his attitude had quite an effect upon me. I dug into the question further and further to see where he was wrong, if he were wrong, or if he were right wasn't it time I should get right and try to get behind this new theory of restricting our abundance in order that we might become wealthy. Might I point out incidentally that a while ago someone said that the man who could make two blades of grass grow where formerly there was one, such a one was the man of the hour, but now it seems that the man who would and could make one blade grow where formerly two grew is the boy from Galway. The latter was the Prime Minister's position. Well, I do not think much of that attitude. It is a new doctrine to me and I cannot get reconciled to it. Anyhow Mr. Bracken was behind it, Mr. Cairns was behind it; I understand it was he who gave Mr. Bracken the wrong slant. Mr. Cairns is a wizard with figures; he was adviser to the pool in the fall of 1929 as a statistician, but he is not an agricultural economist; that is something Mr. Cairns knew nothing about. But he can handle figures in a marvellous way; he seems to be able to mesmerize even those who should know better and convince them that he is also an authority on agricultural economics, which he is not. Consequently that adviser was never able to put my right hon. friend aright in the matter of what might come out of a world wheat agreement.

Then there was Mr. MacPherson, who went over with the Prime Minister. I know him very well; he was my opponent in the federal contest of 1921, when I got to know him very well and very favourably. But bless your heart, Mr. Speaker, what he did not know about wheat would fill a whole book and more. How could he possibly know anything about wheat? How could you expect to take a professional man, I don't care how high he is in his profession, and trot him off to a world conference expecting him to work out one of the biggest problems that was ever attempted to be worked out in connection with any farm commodity? Bread is spoken of as the staff of life, and here this uninitiated lawyer attempted to work out this great problem. I am not saying anything disrespectfully of lawyers; I would say the same thing of myself if I were put into some job I knew nothing about and expected to make a good job of it. I did not expect him to be of much use to the Prime Minister, and he was not; it was a case of the blind leading the blind, because on that wheat question they were both as blind as bats.

Now we come to Doctor Anderson, also a man of parts. I suppose he had more of a cosmopolitan education than Mr. MacPherson had; he was also a lawyer and he held an honorary doctor's degree. He was some man, but he did not know very much about wheat either. It would be difficult for anyone to live in the west without knowing a field of wheat when it was growing, but I have seen men come from eastern Canada who did not know a field of wheat when it was growing. Certainly Doctor Anderson was not qualified to give much good advice to the Prime Minister. Then there was the third prairie premier, Hon. Mr. Brownlee, another gentleman of parts, another lawyer, head of the farmer's government out there for a long time. He was very acceptable in that capacity but, notwithstanding his many qualifications, no one ever dreamed that he knew much about an international wheat agreement. I realize that he has been mentioned in connection with many appointments, but he lacked the one thing that was necessary in an effective adviser to the Prime Minister of Canada on such an important errand.

With all those advisers, or misadvisers, is it any wonder that the thing did not go? It did go in a sense; it went from bad to worse, and now it is about on the scrap heap. A wheat agreement including certain quotas that did not include Russia was a very defective agreement. No matter how she talked how could you expect a great, proud nation like Russia to agree to any such thing? She was coming along with a constitution and form of government that many of us did not like, but it was her prerogative to have any kind of government she preferred so long as it did not interfere with other countries. They were building up their country and we slapped them bang in the face with these embargoes. Then we expected the representatives of that great country to play Canada's game in connection with an agreement concerning wheat, with Russia on the up grade, developing her wheat in order to feed her own people, who were increasing in number very rapidly due to the natural increase. It was an act of childish folly for anyone to expect Russia to sign that quota agreement; it was contrary to the very nature of things. She was going onward and upward in wheat production and Canada was the last country that had any right to expect her to come down off her pedestal and adapt herself to our requirements with respect to wheat production.

That was the beginning of the let-down. It was true that the Danubian countries signed the quota agreement; Argentine signed, and Canada and the United States signed. Practically all the important countries signed with the exception of Russia, but it was not long before the Argentine showed signs of wanting to get out of it. Their crop was larger than they had expected; their quota was only something like 110,000,000 bushels, and it became rumoured that the Argentine had changed her mind, which might be expected in any democratic country. Sometimes governments are compelled to change their attitude. I am not criticising the Argentine; I have no doubt she changed her mind because her people changed their minds, but the result is that she is sailing ahead above her quota without regard to the wheat agreement at all. She has exceeded her quota now by some six or seven million bushels, and by the end of the present grain year she is expected to be something like forty million bushels ahead of her quota. I understand that she entered into some negotiations with the continuing committee in London, but that she did not say one thing or the other; she just went on sawing wood, or in other words exporting wheat, and she is not under the agreement now either technically or otherwise.

May I ask who was the first defaulter? Did not Canada default the moment she neglected to have this parliament concur in that agreement? I am not an international diplomat or authority, but I have been in politics for some time, and I have never seen an agreement come back either to a legislature or to this parliament which was not presented for concurrence or disapproval, as might be thought best. Invariably it was the government of the day that negotiated the agreement; invariably the government of the day was supported, but this agreement has not been supported or concurred in nor has this house been asked to do so. We were asked to concur in the silver agreement arrived at during the course of the same conference; so that a less important agreement was concurred in by this parliament, yet until to-day we have not been given an opportunity of discussing the more important agreement, so far as I know. We set a day apart to discuss sweepstakes, which surely are not of as much importance as an international wheat agreement. We discussed that subject for a whole day, and I think to advantage, but we were not given a day to discuss this agreement. It is up to the right hon. Prime Minister to explain these things. It is just possible that there may be an alibi, and if there is I think it is the duty of the Prime Minister to seek an opportunity to explain that alibi instead of waiting for me to bring up and press the matter.

I want to be able to go home and either say that the wheat agreement was concurred in by the parliament of Canada or that there was some sound reason for not asking concurrence. I think I know the reason. It began to dawn upon the right hon. Prime Minister, as it has been dawning upon the rest of us, that he was wrongly advised, so what did he do? He said in effect to the prairie premiers. "You have shoved me into this thing; now I am just going to pass the buck back to you and 'let George do it.'" The three Georges have been trying to do it ever since; they passed an act in each province allocating this 200,000,000 bushel quota of ours. Well, we are away below even the quota now and the grasshoppers are making it appear that we will hardly require a quota this year or next. The only excuse the Argentine gives for default, so far as I have seen, is that Canada did not live up to her agreement to reduce acreage. I do not know that Canada ever agreed actually to reduce the acreage; I do not know. That has been said, and that inference has been drawn. When you reduce exports however—and we have agreed to reduce exports—you must admit that inferentially it means a reduction of acreage. Otherwise you will have the excess production backed up on the hands of the farmers. Can the farmer pay his bills by looking at his wheat in rickety old granaries not fit to take care of it in the summer time, granaries in many instances with rats in the bottom and cracks in the sides?

That is the wonderful policy which the right hon. gentleman opposite evolved. I am looking forward to the Prime Minister telling me how he can justify not asking for concurrence, and still claiming that he played the game. As I see it, he was the first to default, on behalf of Canada—not counting Russia. She did not default, because she never agreed to her quota. If the Prime Minister will show substantial reasons why he did not ask concurrence I shall remove that harsh word. If you like, I shall remove it now. Probably I should wait until he makes his presentation of the case, and probably I should not be so harsh as even to suggest that Canada defaulted in her international obligations. But how can I get away from it? That is the excuse the Argentine gave; they said that Canada did not come to the scratch, and therefore they wanted to know why they should be expected to toe the mark. That is the way the matter stands. We will soon be out of the present crop year. The stabilization authority in Winnipeg has been very desirous of holding up the price, and for that attitude I must give him credit. I have pointed out on three or four occasions however that the moment you hold the price of a commodity out of line with those of your competitor, then your export sales weaken and dribble off. That is what happens and has happened in Canada. Apparently we are not going to get our quota of 200,000,000 bushels filled during the present year and with an estimated 160 millions or more of a carry-over on August next. It is a very laudable effort on the part of Mr. McFarland; He wants to get a price for the farmer, and I commend that attitude. We would certainly be glad to get a better price, but we would be gladder still to get more sales also. Are we going to be hamstrung like this in an agreement on which everybody else defaults even if I admit we may not have defaulted? As soon as it becomes embarrassing they say in effect, "Well, good-bye Mary Jane; I am off this quota business; anybody who likes can stay on." It is time we had a statement from the Prime Minister about this matter, and he should not have waited until the end of the session to make it. He looked as mad as a hatter or a March hare on Saturday night because some of us wanted to know a few things which we would not have known if prorogation had taken place then.

There is another phase of the matter about which I should like to make only a few observations. Who will say that even if we could have a practical international reduction wheat agreement, that is the right policy for us to persue. I put a resolution on the order paper a year ago last February asking this government to institute an inquiry into the possibility of selling more wheat and wheat flour in China. We were evidently being crowded out of Europe. The government were going to shut, indeed were shutting, their eyes to the possibilities of other markets. We could have looked for a market in China, and it was wrong, absolutely wrong before man and God, to try to reduce production when there were millions, tens of millions, hundreds of millions of people throughout the world going to bed hungry. Yet we did not even make an attempt to barter wheat with them for their goods. We did not send a commission, a committee or even a single minister to the orient to see what was going on, and to learn if something could not be done to sell our wheat. I would not be surprised if a famine visited this old world; it almost looks that way even now. If man is not ingenious enough, after the showers of food blessings which have been bestowed upon him, to make a better job of distributing than he is doing now, it will be like when the manna fell from heaven and a lot of those lazy old Jews would not even gather up enough on Saturday night to do them over Sunday. Do you think they deserved to have more manna, under the circumstances? No, let them starve someone avers; that would have been more like justice. If we always had full justice meted out to us I do not know whether we would even be here or not. We hope the justice will not be meted out to us that we sometimes bring down upon ourselves. But this government uses all the ingenuity at its command to lessen the abundance, to create artificially higher prices so that those who had abundance would get more therefor, and so that those who had little or nothing would not be able to buy that which was offering at even the low prices hitherto prevailing. What a great policy in a Christian country! Apparently there is no recognition of the fact that there is a Great Architect or Wheelsman at the helm of it all, but they—the twenty-one countries so engaged—just go along and say, "I will fix that up; I will artificially reduce the arm of the Lord in the matter of abundance." I can tell you it is being reduced all right, both in Europe and on this continent. But practically none of it is now going to China, as a result of the policies of my right hon. friend opposite.

I have been trying to learn what was done in the matter of wheat sales to China. For nearly five months I have been making constant inquiries. The government of my right hon. leader did not send the Hon. Mr. Marler to Tokyo as an ornament. He has been making reports, some of which I have seen. Of course I have not seen the inside of them. When officials representing the Hon. Mr. Stevens came to see me, to ascertain what would fill my order for a return, they showed me a number of documents, a whole lot of them, and they told me that two reports on wheat had been made by the Hon. Mr. Marler, respecting the possibilities of selling more wheat flour and wheat in China. I said that was all I wanted, and told them not to ask me to read the rest in order to get at those two. They went away quite happy. I know those reports are in existence, and the Prime Minister has indicated that they are private. He did not say whether or not they were marked "private" by the Hon. Mr. Marler; I venture to say that they were not marked private, at all by him. No doubt those documents refer to one of the subjects uppermost in Mr. Marler's mind when he went to China. I happened to be in Vancouver immediately before he sailed, and having held conversation with him I know what was uppermost in his mind. He went to be a real emissary to get contacts with the eastern world whereby Canada would be able to sell more of her wheat, and other commodities. The Prime Minister—and I suppose he has a right to do so—has said that those reports cannot be tabled. I will go farther, and recognize his right to take that action, despite the fact that they may not have been sent as private and confidential; or that they may not have been marked "private." I recognize his right to make them private, and so to mark them. They could be considered private from his standpoint, and I am not finding any fault with him in that respect. He could mark them as being private information and then pass them on to the department interested, namely the Department of Trade and Commerce. Under instructions from his leader the Minister of Trade and Commerce could not, under the circumstances, table the reports, and that is the reason I have not been demanding them recently.

We have been kept in the dark long enough, and that is why I am availing myself of this opportunity of bringing the matter to the attention of the house and the country generally. I think it would have been better for the Prime Minister if he had brought down the return I asked for on February 9 last, and given the people an opportunity to see whether or not Mr. Marler was performing his duty, or whether the government had failed to carry out its duties. Then we want to know which should be dismissed, and if either had been negligent. That is all we want to know. We have not been given that opportunity. I have nothing more to say at this time, except to express the hope that this appeal, which I expect will be the last one this session, may be answered. I hope that even yet the Prime Minister will clear the skirts of Canada by taking the responsibility of either asking this house to concur in this quota agreement or at least showing mighty good cause why it should not be concurred in if it is to remain in effect.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when a week ago

I asked this house whether or not it was thought to be desirable that we should have three sittings a day and close the business by sitting on Saturday, the house unanimously expressed the view that I should take the action which I subsequently did by preparing the motion which was submitted to this chamber and unanimously adopted. Had I thought for a single moment that matters such as the one now under consideration, were to be considered at this session I certainly should not have asked the house to sit three sittings a day and to sit on Saturday, for it was not at my instance that it was done but rather at the instance of the house whose will I endeavoured to reflect in the motion which was submitted to the chamber.

I do not propose to canvas this matter at this time; I only desire to correct one or two errors and then I shall be content.

First, Russia signed the agreement. That is number one.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not the quota.

Mr. BENNETT: Excuse me; I said Russia signed the agreement, and her signature will be found on the document submitted to the chamber.

Secondly, Russia was not mentioned in any legislation that was passed in 1930. It was not until 1931 that the embargo to which the hon. gentleman has referred was passed.

Thirdly, Russia at no time indicated any resentment with respect to the matter when dealing with the wheat quota. The question of the quota so far as Russia was concerned, was a matter to be arranged with the exporting countries when Russia knew something of the amount of wheat which would be produced in her country. There has never been difficulty with Russia except that the reports from time to time were out of line with what was believed by those who have been investigating, to be the quantity produced. It has turned out in fact—in fact; it is not a question of discussion—that the Russian crop has been somewhat less than was anticipated at the time the discussion took place.

Next, the Argentine has not withdrawn from the agreement. The Argentine has had the largest crop she has had for some time, and she has suggested that inasmuch as the quota which was granted to other countries would not be exhausted owing to the large crops that were available in Europe, she should increase her quota under the agreement. The question has been discussed on more than one occasion, and proposals have been made by the United States and representations by France and Great Britain to the Argentine with respect to the matter, and the representations of Great Britain, being an importing country, have had some effect. The question is still under consideration.

So far as submitting the agreement to this house for consideration is concerned, no one knows better than the hon. gentleman that the question of enforcing or endeavouring to enforce the area that should be sown to wheat was a matter within the realm of provincial jurisdiction, and each of the three provinces passed the necessary legislation. So far as the dominion was concerned, it assumed responsibility for seeing that no more than a given quantity of wheat should leave these shores for the purpose of complying with the conditions with respect to the quota. Those conditions have been complied with. Canada has not been in default; Canada will not be in default. Canada has complied with all the obligations which she undertook to discharge, and I cannot understand a Canadian trying to assert that others in strange countries may read that this country has defaulted in the obligations that it undertook. It has not done so and it never will default so far as we are concerned, in any of its obligations.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I ask the Prime Minister a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not an embarrassing one.

Mr. BENNETT: No question of the hon. gentleman embarrasses me.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wonder how many other countries have first to default before we default. The Argentine has surely defaulted. Will all the other countries have to default and we be left standing alone like the boy on the burning deck, being the only one to carry out the agreement?

Mr. BENNETT: The further question that has been raised as to the wisdom or unwisdom of there being a lessening in production is a matter that can always be discussed. It is a debatable question, and I am not going to say again what has been said so frequently, and what I did say in Winnipeg, that when a man finds himself producing in larger quantities than he is able to sell, and which he knows he cannot sell because the people who used to buy from him are supplying themselves, when fifty million acres that used to be sown to cereals were put out of production during the great war, and forty millions were added to production in the United States and ten millions in this country, it follows that as soon as the country that was out of production went back into production there would be a corresponding loss of opportunity on the part of the United States and of Canada to sell their cereals where they had sold them during the war and immediately thereafter.

Just as soon as the devastation caused by the war was overcome and the communities in question were able to sow and reap a harvest, just so soon was that market which Canada and the United States had theretofore enjoyed, limited to that extent.

So far as China is concerned we did have negotiations and we were offered, as I told this house many months ago, an opportunity to sell wheat to China on three-year terms, I think it was; but the conditions of government in China were such that we did not on that ground think it was desirable. But there was something more. They only desired to pay for the wheat a price equal to what our lowest grade of wheat would sell at, and we could not reduce the price of wheat in this country to less than forty cents a bushel in order to accept the Chinese offer, and we did not do so. The soft wheat of other countries found a more ready market than we were able to compete with. The price of wheat on the world market by reason of conditions that have been brought about partly by the agreement, partly by climatic conditions, partly by the acts of nature, and partly by grasshoppers, has been enhanced by these conditions, and I can only say to the hon. gentleman that it does appear to me to be—well, I shall not use the word I was going to use on this my birthday; I will only say that it does seem incredible that with knowledge of conditions as to the area that was put out of wheat raising and the increased areas that were put into wheat on the North American continent and in other parts of the world as well, when those countries went back to producing wheat to expect that we could sell them the wheat that we had been selling them while they were devastated.

In China the conditions of government are such that whether it is the government of Nanking or some other government that you are going to deal with you do not know what the conditions will be. Private purchasers have acquired wheat from Canada but the only offer which China made to this country in consequence of negotiations and inquiries and investigations was an offer to buy wheat at a price that we would not accept if we had the wheat to sell and at a price that we would not ask those who owned it to accept, and in addition they contemplated payment over a long term of years, necessitating that the dominion government finance the transaction in the meantime to provide the purchase price to those who sold. I am not unmindful that when the hon. gentleman first discussed a wheat conference at Regina he said, and the first literature that was prepared indicated, that all Canada had now to do was to produce, produce, produce, and many accepted his statement—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When did I make that statement?

Mr. BENNETT: When the hon. gentleman first started the discussion with respect to the world grain conference at Regina, and the first literature was withdrawn for that very reason, because there was such a lack of understanding and appreciation of the fact that the countries that had been devastated were now coming back into the production of grain. That was a very reasonable mistake to make, I suppose, but it was made. So far as we are concerned we have endeavoured by every means within our power to bring home to the Canadian people the fact that in the countries in which formerly they sold their product they can no longer sell it for the simple and obvious reason that those countries all over Europe—down the Danubian basin, in Hungary, France and elsewhere, and in the Czechoslovakian countries, in all that territory where grain was produced in such abundance before the war, and which with the war was devastated—once more began to produce: the hardy peasants, finding how few of them relatively were left, as compared with their numbers before the war, prepared the soil for wheat, with renewed energy, and reaped an abundant harvest by their labour. That has deprived us of our market, although in the meantime we increased our production by adding ten million and more acres to the area under wheat cultivation. And now, confronted with that situation, all that has been said is this: "You have no warrant to continue on such a large scale; you have no warrant to increase production"; and when the hon. gentleman referred to the Bible as an authority, I wondered whether he had read the Pentateuch. Does he realize that under the Jewish dispensation one of the first things taught was the necessity for lands to lie fallow? The husbandman was to leave his lands fallow for a time in order that there might be increased and improved production; and if you read the directions given in this regard—and no one knows this as well as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) does, who is a greater authority in this field than I am—you will find that in those days there was a clear appreciation and understanding of the fact that they did not produce more than they needed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There was also a jubilee in those days when all debtors were allowed to go free.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and if the hon. gentleman lives for a hundred years he will have one too—we shall all have a jubilee together. I can only assure the hon. gentleman that the arrangement that was made had met with great difficulty. The importing countries had urged upon the Argentine the necessity of doing nothing that would impair the value of the international arrangement, in the making of which so many countries had participated; and in view of the fact that the United States had the poorest crop it has had since, I believe, 1847—I speak subject to correction on that point—and with the stricken areas in some parts of Europe, and the low crop in western Canada, particularly Saskatchewan and some parts of Alberta, and the relatively small crop which Manitoba produced compared with the large total crop produced in western Canada, the situation is such that there is rapidly coming an equilibrium between production and demand, and until that time does come it is perfectly obvious that a difficult situation will exist. Whether it is brought about by man's action, vision, prescience and foresight, or by natural conditions or the devastations of grasshoppers, it follows that as the demand is fairly constant and can only increase where there is a diminution of supply in what were formerly importing countries, this country and others similarly situated will be able to meet that situation and that the husbandman, when there is equilibrium between supply and demand, will receive a reasonable return for the labour of his hands. But there is no sale of wheat in China at a price that would not involve the Canadian producer in a loss of from ten to twenty cents a bushel. That is the position.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As far as I can understand the Prime Minister, he overlooked telling us why he did not ask the house to concur in this wonderful agreement. If we had concurred, other countries could not complain that we had not done this or the other.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has exhausted his right to speak.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): I did not intend to say anything about this matter until the Prime Minister rose to address the house. Apparently all our troubles arise from the fact that Europe is now in production to a larger extent than before, or at least since the days of the great war. The amazing thing to me is that climatic conditions have played an important part in reduction in Canada and helped the situation tremendously. I wonder what would have happened to the Canadian farmer if we had produced at the same rate as we did in 1926, 1927 and 1928. Yet the right hon. gentleman seems to forget that the one country upon whom we could depend, or rather group of countries, Great Britain and the empire, for the absorption of our surplus wheat production, we have taken action against by way of tariffs, imposed in 1930 and 1931. The result is that to-day, even with depleted production, we are piling up surpluses every year. In view of the tariff increases against imports of British goods into Canada, can anyone blame Mr. Elliot and his propaganda for independence of any of the empire countries? Not a particle, when the empire countries treat Great Britain in the manner this government has done. While we have no claim on European countries, any trading we have done with them has been largely due to the fact that they required our product; and when owing to climatic conditions, the very best quality of wheat produced in Canada has been almost nil during the past three years, this government finds itself in the unhappy position of having piled up a larger surplus than any other wheat exporting country in the world. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite will tell us and the electorate that there was nothing they could do. The thing is perfectly absurd. There is a great deal that this government could have done and has refused to do, and I want to make this statement now in the House of Commons because I am going to make it on a great many platforms in Canada; and I am serving notice on the government that it will be made in no uncertain terms. So far as the farmers of this country are concerned, apart from granting relief, which I admit the government has done in a generous way, my hon. friends have done nothing, which they can name, that has been of the slightest assistance in selling the export products of Canada.

Mr. THOMAS F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Three things are disturbing the farmers of western Canada: first, our climatic conditions; secondly, a market for our products; and thirdly, debt adjustment. We believe that this government has done much to injure the market for our products. The one thing we have to sell chiefly in the markets of the world is our wheat. When the Liberal government came in in 1921 we were shipping between 200 and 300 million bushels, and in 1929 we were shipping 407 million bushels. Since that time the market for our wheat has gradually dwindled until this year, with a quota of 200 million bushels, we shall not be able to fill our quota. Year by year the market for our wheat has grown smaller and smaller, and the explanation is to be found in the trade policies of this government. Not long ago there was a conference at Rome attended by all the exporting countries and by practically all the importing countries, and one importing country which in the past has used a great deal of Canadian wheat gave us the answer then. France said: "We are willing to take off the restrictions we have imposed on Canadian wheat; we would like to take the duty off your wheat and are willing to buy it from you, but what will you buy from us in exchange for it"? Did we see a delegation set out from Canada to France to try to make arrangements to buy some of their products in order that they might buy our wheat? We did not; not a thing was done. The result is that the other day France doubled her duty on our wheat. When this government came into power her duty was eighty-five cents a bushel. It was increased to $1.44 and the other day it went up to $2.88 a bushel, making it absolutely impossible to sell any of our wheat in that country.

Mr. BENNETT: We could not sell at $1.44 either.

Mr. DONNELLY: We may not have been able but the price was high in France and it kept it up.

Mr. BENNETT: She was exporting.

Mr. DONNELLY: But she allowed the exchange.

Mr. BENNETT: And the duty has nothing to do with it.

Mr. DONNELLY: The duty has something to do with it. Just the other day, during the time of the elections, a Japanese agent was at Regina. What did he say? He said: "We have been buying 24,000,000 bushels annually from Canada and now we are buying 4,000,000 bushels. Why? Because Canada is not buying goods from us and we are buying from those countries that are buying from us. We are buying from Australia."

Mr. BURY: Are they buying wheat from countries that are buying from them?

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes. Why is Argentina able to fill her quota? Why are we not able to fill ours when we have a carry-over of about 200,000,000 bushels? Why is Argentina selling more wheat in England than we are and able to fill her quota? It is because we are not buying from England and Argentina is. Why does Switzerland that used to buy from us 10,000,000 bushels of wheat buy now only 3,500,000 bushels? Let my hon. friend read the Commercial Intelligence Journal. What does Switzerland say? She says: "We have to cut off our imports from countries with which we have an unfavourable trade balance and to buy from countries that buy from us." The result is that Canada has a market there 6,500,000 bushels less than she used to have. That is the whole story. We are not buying in the outside world from those that buy wheat and the result is that they buy from other countries that buy from them. Unless there is some change in this policy with which this government is imbued, our market for wheat will continue to fall off from year to year as it has been doing since this government came into power. The whole story is told, as the hon. member for East Edmonton said, in our high tariffs.

Mr. BURY: May I correct the hon. member? The hon. member for East Edmonton never said anything of the kind and hopes he will keep his brain sufficiently clear never to say that.

Mr. DONNELLY: I meant the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart).

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): The hon. gentleman (Mr. Donnelly) has referred to France. I sat down on one occasion with twelve or fifteen gentlemen representing four or five departments of the government of France, to negotiate a treaty with that country. When it came to the discussion of wheat I was pressing for the admission on favourable terms of Canadian wheat into the French market and I was very insistent. One gentleman, I think it was the representative of the Department of Agriculture asked: "Mr. Cahan, do you know anything of French history?" I said that I knew something of French history as a schoolboy and as a student at college, and I knew something of her later history. "Well," he said, "if you have studied French history you will know that for four and a half centuries no man in France has reached the age of sixty years and certainly not sixty-five years who has not seen this country overrun with foreign troops." He said: "We no longer are able to maintain a fleet that will safeguard the carrying of wheat to France from Argentina, Australia and Canada in case of war. We have learned by experience, and the policy of the French government and of all governments in France will be to produce sufficient wheat in France to maintain its population in case another crisis should arise in Europe." He said: "It is useless to present to us any arguments to the contrary." Then as I proceeded to urge that the use of strong or hard wheat was necessary in that country for mixing purposes, one of his assistants said: "But we are producing all the hard wheat that is necessary for French consumption." I asked: "Where?" He said, "For some years we have been importing from Saskatchewan hard wheat, sowing it in our North African provinces and producing there as good quality of hard wheat as you produce in Saskatchewan." He said: "We had available last year of hard wheat from the North African colonies 25,000,000 bushels for sale in France, and we must give prior advantage in our market to our Algerian colonies." One gentleman sitting beside him, a more elderly man—I remember his name but I shall not repeat it—said: "Perhaps you are misleading Mr. Cahan in this discussion, because although we imported hard wheat from Saskatchewan and sowed it, in the first year we produced equally good wheat as that of Saskatchewan, and from the seed of that crop there was equally good wheat the following year, yet in the third or fourth years the wheat tends to deteriorate and become soft, and we may have to import hard wheat from your country for our sowing every third or fourth year. But outside that you cannot hope for any large market for your wheat in France." Then, turning to the statistics, he showed me that for the previous year they had produced in France alone outside its colonies within sixty million bushels of the total product of Canada from sea to sea, and that for that year, according to the returns which were in then, they were producing more wheat in France alone than we had produced in the whole of Canada in the previous year. Under those circumstances it does not become a question of tariffs; it becomes, on the part of France, a grave question of national policy, based upon a clear determination on the part of successive governments and of all parties in France to raise in that country, at no matter what cost, sufficient wheat to feed their own people.

In Switzerland much the same situation exists. The Swiss regulations against the importing of foreign wheat have absolutely nothing to do with the tariff in Canada on Swiss products, but are due to the demand of the Swiss agriculturists that they shall be so protected and bonused as to enable them to supply from their own cultivated lands the entire quantity of wheat required in Switzerland. That is with them also a matter of national policy.

Mr. DONNELLY: Will the hon. member say whether this report of the Commercial Intelligence Journal regarding Switzerland is wrong?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know anything about the report of the Commercial Intelligence Journal and it is useless to ask me whether what somebody else says is wrong or right, but I know from personal experience that what the hon. gentleman has just said is not in accordance with the facts.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Lawson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Penitentiaries—

Amount required to carry out agreement between His Majesty and the municipality of the village of St. Vincent de Paul for extension of the present water and sewer system connected with St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, $3,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There was undoubtedly on Saturday night some natural resentment in our not getting away, but it was perhaps hardly fair that the Minister of Justice should blame us for holding the house over. The fact is that we had a great deal of work to do. The Prime Minister had taken a chance on business being through by ten o'clock. The Liberals took their full share in discussing various items before we reached the estimates for penitentiaries. Under the circumstances it seemed to me that the only thing to do was to insist on securing fuller information from the minister than had yet been given to the house. I recognize clearly that the minister is not personally to blame for what we believe to be the bad conditions in Kingston penitentiary. However, under our procedure there seems to be no other way of getting at the facts than by insisting that the minister give us fuller explanation than the house or the country have yet received. I would point out that the prisoners are the most defenceless class in the community. They have been deprived of the ordinary rights of citizenship. They have no means of making their grievances known to this house. They have even been deprived of the rights of normal ordinary human beings.

An hon. MEMBER: They are not normal human beings.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is true, but I say, being deprived of the rights of normal human beings it seems to me that that is all the more reason why we should see that no injustice is done to them. I think every one recognizes the difficulty of getting at the facts in a matter of this kind. On the one hand there is not the slightest doubt that we must discount the statements that come from ex-convicts; they are likely to be biased. But on the other hand I am coming to believe that we must discount to a considerable extent the official statements, the official denials, because it seems to have been the policy more or less to whitewash under-officials. I hope that is not true, but again and again we have had statements made that everything was going very well, only to learn a few weeks later that things were not satisfactory at all. We were told a few days ago that the resignation of Colonel Megloughlin was enforced because he had not been doing satisfactory work. It seems to me that that is hardly sufficient in view of the long history of trouble that there has been at that penitentiary. There are many who feel that in this case Colonel Megloughlin has been made the goat for inefficiency on the part of other officials, or perhaps for the lack of proper policy on the part of the department. It is for these reasons that we in this corner urge the appointment of a royal commission. We believe that this situation ought to be cleaned up. We believe that the public have the right to know the actual situation. It is difficult, as I have said, for the public to get accurate knowledge either from those who have been in the penitentiary or on the other hand from officials whose positions may be at stake. It is only by sending in absolutely impartial investigators that we shall get satisfactory results. Furthermore we urge that the time has come when there should be general consideration of the whole question of prison administration and the treatment of criminals. Other countries in the past have treated criminals more or less as we are doing to-day. Great Britain is an outstanding example of a country which at last realized that something was necessary. A royal commission was appointed, following which certain definite lines of reform were introduced; it is not necessary to go into that now. But if Great Britain found it necessary to make a thorough investigation and to reform the whole policy of dealing with prisoners, I think it is high time that we in Canada should follow suit.

I take it that in a general way crime is the result either of heredity or of bad environment. If it is a result of heredity perhaps the time has come that we must consider whether we should go on producing criminals, whether there should not be some effort made in the case of bad strains either to segregate or to sterilize those who may produce criminals—

Mr. BOUCHARD: To apply quotas.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No. My hon. friend behind me is making light of the question. I say that anyone who has made any study of heredity knows that there are people who are subnormal and some proportion of whose descendants will be subnormal. In that case it seems to me a crime that we should permit those people to propagate. Either they should be sterilized or segregated so that they could not produce children. I am not discussing to-day which course should be taken. But we have in our prisons large numbers of people who, if I may use the phrase, are born criminals. It is high time to remedy that situation. When men are known to be criminal, incorrigible as the minister points out, it seems to me that these men ought not to be turned loose again in the community after a few years' sentence. It is not that I would make the punishment more severe, but I would provide more effectively for the protection of society. If they are really incorrigible they ought never to be released. They may be treated with kindness and fairness, but they should be kept always apart from other members of society and not allowed either to injure society or to reproduce their kind.

But I take it that the great majority of prisoners are criminals not because of bad heredity but because of certain bad influences and surroundings. There is no doubt that when we have a large volume of unemployment the curve of crime goes up. That indicates a close connection between unemployment and crime. It would seem to me that the thing for us to do is not to build bigger and better prisons but rather to study closely the conditions that produce crime. Then coming to the individual, I do not think the treatment for criminals should be the same in every case. I know of boys being sent to reformatories, without the superintendent in charge being given any indication at all by the judge as to the boy's background, but only the statement of the crime committed. In the case of one boy it might be a first offence, with another it might be the result of very bad environment, and with another almost a chance occurrence. The treatment should vary accordingly.

So I urge that we have a royal commission to study not merely the actual situation in Kingston penitentiary but also to put us in the way of adopting more modern and humane and intelligent methods of dealing with criminals.

The minister the other day very definitely accepted responsibility for the recent punishment of a number of convicts. It seems that on the occasion of the visit of the Governor General to Kingston there was what the minister characterized as a noisy outbreak. As a result twenty-two men were awarded corporal punishment. Two of them, I think the minister said, were found to be medically unfit to sustain this punishment; the others got what is known as the paddle. I would submit that such severe punishment, if it is ever necessary, should be reserved for very serious crimes, and not be inflicted merely for breaches of prison discipline. I think if any of us were imprisoned and thus deprived of our liberty, and felt that there was a grievance—as these men felt there was a great grievance, and as it has been since acknowledged that there was a grievance,—we would take whatever means we had at our disposal to bring that grievance to the notice of the public. The fact that they beat some tin pans or did something of the sort when the Governor General was in Kingston was no very serious crime; it was merely a natural way of calling their grievances to the attention of the public, and I do submit that the very severe form of punishment known as paddling was altogether too drastic for such infringement of the prison regulations.

The minister told us that recently attempts were made to give the prisoners outdoor exercise. which developed into Sunday games to which the church goers took objection; they did not want to hear this noise on the Lord's day. It does occur to me, Mr. Chairman, that if people in the vicinity objected to the noise on the Lord's day the officers in charge very easily might have altered the time for these outdoor exercises or this recreation to some other day than Sunday. Most of the men are not working steadily; it is merely a matter of adjustment of the ordinary routine of prison life, and to one on the outside it would seem that it might be possible to give reasonable outdoor exercise on some other day than Sunday. To me that little incident seems typical of the regimentation we have there, the inelasticity of the discipline, and the unnecessary harshness of prison routine.

Now I come to the charges made by Major Nickle which, since I read his letter the other day, he has said that he is quite ready to substantiate. The other day I suggested to the minister that these were so serious in their character that it seemed to me that if any of them were untrue he ought to make a definite, categorical denial. Major Nickle says there is a form of punishment under which men have their hands raised about their heads; they are shackled to the bars, confined for seven or fourteen days and fed on bread and water.

Miss MACPHAIL: That has been abolished.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to know if that punishment has been abolished, as my hon. friend from Southeast Grey suggests; if it has been abolished, I should like to know when that was done. Was it abolished because of the protests of the prisoners? If it was considered right to abolish this form of punishment had not the protests of the prisoners real, substantial grounds, and why should we inflict upon them such severe punishment for protesting against what is now considered to be an altogether unjustifiable form of punishment?

I have already referred to paddling, and the minister has said that paddling is not administered now except by order of the department. I should like to ask him whether there are very definite criteria by which he judges whether or not this punishment should be inflicted, or whether the appeal to Ottawa is a perfunctory matter, as is so often the case in such affairs.

Further with regard to sanitary matters there is a very serious charge that people who have active syphilis bathe in the same tubs as other prisoners. I should like to ask definitely whether this situation has been altered and, if so, when. I cannot see that there ever could have been any reason for allowing a practice of this kind.

Further than that, have any real attempts been made at segregating youthful offenders? Some years ago some of us understood, when Collins Bay was being established, that it was for youthful offenders. Later I believe the minister denied that this was really the purpose, and stated that it was for certain preferred classes. The house will recall that a year or two ago attention had to be directed to the fact that apparently brokers were among the preferred classes, since they were placed at Collins Bay. I want to know whether, after all these years, during which royal commissions from time to time have made their reports and there have been protests in this house, there is any definite program before the minister with regard to segregating youthful offenders. Again Major Nickle says that of the total number of prisoners only some 125 are given a chance to learn a trade. Again and again it has been stated that at least one of the purposes of the penitentiary was to enable the criminal to become a respectable citizen once more. I wonder whether it is possible for men who are confined for several years, some of them for a greater number of years, to become respectable citizens and hope to again enter the normal life of the country if they are given no chance whatever to learn a trade while in the penitentiary. I know perfectly well that there are some difficulties in the way. A few years ago some of us were waited upon by some of the penitentiary officials asking that something should be done through which greater facilities for work might be afforded. I know there are certain difficulties in the way, but I do not think they are insuperable. With all the work that might be done in this country it seems to me some arrangement might be made under which the majority of the prisoners could learn trades or engage in suitable work. It may be that nothing could be done with the hundred incorrigibles to whom the minister referred, but what about the other six or seven hundred prisoners, many of whom are young people, who to-day have no opportunity of fitting themselves for their future life outside the penitentiary walls?

Miss MACPHAIL: And that is just one penitentiary.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; I am glad that my hon. friend reminds me that I am speaking of only one penitentiary. There are somewhat similar conditions existing in other penitentiaries, though I think in some of the others more has been done in the way of providing outdoor work.

Then there is another specific charge with regard to one John O'Brien. It was stated that he had been in solitary confinement since 1931. I think the house is entitled to know whether he is still in solitary confinement and, if not, when he was released, and in any case why he was kept there during those years. It is a very serious matter especially, as I say, for men who have no means of getting their grievances before the general public.

Then we come to another question, that of political prisoners. The minister may say that we have no political prisoners in Canada, but I think that is a statement that can hardly be made good, because the seven communists who are in Kingston to-day, of whom I think two have been released recently because of poor health—

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, that is not so.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I will leave the minister to explain the reason; I was giving him credit for kindheartedness.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Their health is good.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In any case these communists are there because of their political beliefs. I am not going to deal with that clause of the criminal code under which they were arrested, except to say that under that clause a man need not be guilty of committing any overt crime. He need only belong to a party which advocates the use of force to bring about political change. These men were not convicted of any overt crime. They were not charged with an overt crime, but were charged simply with belonging to an association which in turn was affiliated with another association which believed in force as a means of bringing about political change. I quite recognize that in mentioning the communists I immediately lay myself open to the criticism of being in sympathy with them. I have stated again and again in this House of Commons, and I wish to state once more that I have no connection whatever with the communist party and no sympathy with the tactics they pursue. Further, let me point out that according to a report in the Toronto Daily Star of Monday, February 19, Mr. A. E. Smith stated at Massey Hall that representatives of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in the House of Commons were responsible for the charges of sedition against him, as they suggested to the Bennett government that by means of a charge of this nature they could dispose of their political enemies and not have to resort to section 98 of the criminal code. Needless to say, members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in this house never gave any such advice to the Minister of Justice, nor have I ever held that in any sense of the word the Minister of Justice was responsible for the shooting at the cell of Tim Buck. I read the statement from the Toronto Daily Star simply to point out that hon. members in this corner of the house have been charged by the communists with bringing about the shooting. In this connection perhaps I should say Mr. Smith has stated he did not put it just that way. Very well; the fact is he never repudiated it. But whatever Mr. Smith actually did say, the communists have denounced us most bitterly. Notwithstanding that bitter denunciation I urge that prisoners should not be treated as apparently the communists in Kingston have been treated. Unless we agree with the kind of thing Hitler has been doing in Germany within the last few days, I would say that political prisoners have a right to be protected, and that all people in Canada—Conservatives, Liberals and members in this corner—should try to retain the institutions of democracy and to resist the inroads of anything like a dictatorship. If we are convinced that we must pursue democratic principles I think we must ask for the protection of political prisoners. Further than that we may very well consider whether or not it is wise to continue to have on our statute books laws under which men may be convicted merely for holding certain political opinions which are not generally accepted.

One of these communists, namely Tim Buck, had shots fired into his cell. There are nearly nine hundred prisoners in the penitentiary. How is it that the cell selected for the shooting was one in which there was a communist? That does look as if they have been singled out for this peculiar kind of treatment. The other day the minister admitted that eleven shots were fired into Buck's cell. I submit that that incident has a very ugly look. I believe our papers right across the country have expressed themselves as being definitely opposed to that kind of treatment, and they have urged that the situation be cleaned up.

The other day the minister gave us the impression—certainly he gave me the impression—that the shooting took place at the time of the riot on October 17. I understand—and I should like the minister to correct me if I am wrong—that the shots were not fired until October 20. There is a discrepancy which ought to be cleared up. If the big riot took place on October 17, it is very strange that a man should be shot at by the guards three days later.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There was a much bigger riot on October 20.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I shall be glad to hear about that. I thought there was a riot on the 17th.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That was the start of it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: From what place were the shots fired? I am informed they were not fired from inside the penitentiary, but that they were fired from outside.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is correct.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I hope the minister will clear up that matter. If there is a range of cells three stories high and there is one particular cell in which a prisoner is being confined, and if somebody outside marks that cell, and it is shot at, then I say that is a pretty deliberate act. It is a deliberate act, and requires some explanation. What was the reason? The minister says the reason was to intimidate Tim Buck, and he states further that Tim Buck was exhorting the other prisoners to riot. I confess I am absolutely mystified by the contrast between the statement of the minister and the report of Judge Deroche, from which the hon. member for Southeast Grey read. In his judgment Judge Deroche said:

> The men (meaning the inmates) had for months and possibly years been asking for the removal of certain grievances which were in their minds, with little or no response.

Then he goes on to say:

> They now decided that on October 17, at three o'clock p.m. they would walk out of the shops and make a peaceful demonstration to impress the warden and through him Ottawa.

Then at page 7 he states:

> Then to go back to the cause of the riot. This peaceful demonstration which developed into a riot, was for the purpose of emphasizing the demands of the men for redress of certain grievances which had been long and repeatedly denied them. Many of the grievances for which this demonstration was staged have already been granted to the men, proving conclusively to my mind that those demands must have been reasonable.

We have now from the Minister of Justice an entirely different view being conveyed to the house. At page 7 of the judgment Judge Deroche, with regard to Tim Buck, states as follows:

> Buck told them—

That is the prisoners.

> —that the soldiers would not hurt them if they did no violence to person or injury to property.

Then again:

> When it was announced that the soldiers were coming, one of the men, Tim Buck, advised the men that the soldiers could not or would not hurt them so long as they did no damage to property or violence to anyone, and instructed the men to gather pails of water and barricade the door, expecting to stand siege.

It is a very curious thing if, as is stated by the judge, Tim Buck took that stand and made those statements, that his cell should be selected three days later as the one into which were to be poured eleven shots. I remember in our childhood days we used to read the tales of Fenimore Cooper, and we learned it was the practice of the Indians in the olden days to tie a captured enemy to a tree and to fire arrows at him, seeing who could come nearest his head without hitting him. It looks to me as if this practice has been translated into the more modern method of putting a man into a cell, caging him up and then firing at him. Surely human beings are not animals. I do not think there is a single sportsman in this house who would undertake to shoot an animal by caging it up in a cell and then firing at it. There is something that needs explanation and I would ask the minister when he speaks to say very definitely who gave the order to fire. I do not think the minister himself did, but he is the responsible official, the head of the department, and it is possible for him to ascertain who gave the order. I think it is right that he should tell this house who gave the order to fire. If no such order was given I would ask, have the guards who fired those eleven shots been arrested and disciplined? Take the minister's own statement when he said that Tim Buck had been fired at. He said:

> Buck was one of those who were encouraging the disorder. At the door of his cell he was making speeches and encouraging the rioters, and for the purpose of frightening him, I suppose, or cowing him, certain guards fired into the ceiling of his cell.

I suppose that somebody knowing he was at the door of his cell must have given the order to fire, and they chased away around outside the walls and then from outside the walls they fired up at him. I do not know very much about criminal trials but that does not seem to me a very natural sort of procedure. I could understand a guard in desperation perhaps firing into a crowd, but why some of the guards should go away around outside the walls and fire eleven shots into a prisoner's cell is an absolute mystery to me. The minister said:

> At the door of his cell he was making speeches and encouraging the rioters, and for the purpose of frightening him, I suppose, or cowing him, certain guards fired into the ceiling of his cell. There can be no doubt that if any man had wanted to shoot Tim Buck he could have done so. The very fact that ten or eleven shots were fired and there was no harm to Tim Buck shows that they were not trying to hit him. He was there for anybody to shoot.

That is an astonishing statement for the minister to make, that a convict was in his cell for anybody to shoot.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If there had been any intention of doing so, and there was not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, I hope there was not, but the question still remains, who gave the order to fire? If the firing was done by the guards without orders, then I ask have those guards been disciplined? It would seem to me that when guards are sometimes dismissed for minor offences, or without reason given, it would surely be a reason for dismissal if guards in a responsible position should on their own responsibility fire into a cell. But if the orders to fire were given, I should like to know what official gave those orders and when it became the practice in our prisons to adopt this form of intimidation. It is bad enough to flog a man, but surely it is not, even in European prisons, a customary means of punishment that guards can go outside the prison walls and take pot shots at a cell in which a political prisoner is confined. The whole matter has a very ugly look, and I hope for the sake of his own department as well as for the credit of the institution and the man at the head of it, that the minister make a statement that will clear up this matter.

Before I sit down I once more want to appeal to the minister, and I wish the Prime Minister were in his seat so I might appeal to him, that on the grounds of humanity we should not longer delay having a very careful inquiry into the situation, and further than that, that the government appoint a board or commission of very able men, men of experience and humanitarian views, to inquire into the whole matter of prison reform.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, I want if I may to say just a word on this matter. Having had some considerable experience in connection with matters of this kind as crown attorney and prosecuting attorney for the county in which I live, I know something of both sides of this very difficult question. On the one hand crime must be put down in this country, and the people are entitled to protection against it. It is a very difficult matter to know when prosecuting criminals and dealing with them just when you can apply mild methods and when you must resort to the most rigorous methods possible. I happen to come from a section of the country where unfortunately most of the men who are in the penitentiary cannot say they are there because I defended them. On the contrary, I contributed when I was doing that kind of work to a good number going to these institutions. I do not know the man in question in this particular case, but I do want to say to the minister that I know something of his difficulties, and yet there is throughout the section of the country in which I live a very strong feeling that perhaps the possibilities of saving some of those who are not past saving are not being utilized to the best advantage in Kingston at the present time.

Mr. CANTLEY: How would you save them?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would say to my hon. friend, because I know he is humane, that he is not anxious that the younger men particularly should lose all chance of again becoming good citizens. I am sure that no one in the house would regret that more than my hon. friend, and there are a good number of these young men who are sent to the penitentiary who I do not believe should be allowed to associate with the hardened criminals. I believe it is possible to reclaim them by giving them a chance again to become good citizens, and if we err I think we should err on that side. Just where to draw the line it is difficult to say. It is pretty hard to draw the line between being too lenient towards somebody who will afterwards turn out to be a murderer and those who will profit by the chance that is given them.

But I would say this to the minister in just the minute I intend to devote to the subject, that I do think that an investigation by a royal commission into this matter would do a great deal to clear the air and would be in the interests of everybody concerned, including the minister himself and those who are associated with him in the administration of that institution.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: Before we resume the work of the committee, I think that in fairness to those who are responsible for the conduct of government I should ask the house whether or not they believe it is possible to prorogue this house this afternoon. On the strength of last Monday's proceedings, by which we undertook to prorogue on Saturday, His Excellency made certain plans. He has intimated that any plans he makes must of course be subordinated to his duty with respect to prorogation; but the uncertainty that has now characterized our deliberations for so long should in some sense, it seems to me, be disposed of. I should like to know therefore whether in the opinion of the house it is possible to prorogue this afternoon; otherwise we will sit to-night at eight o'clock and presumably conclude by eleven, although I understand that one hon. member has said we cannot prorogue to-day. If that is in the mind of hon. members I should like to indicate to His Excellency that such is the opinion of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister has asked a word from those who are responsible for the conduct of government; I rather hesitate to say anything in the circumstances. He is the one who has to do with that phase of affairs, but so far as we of the opposition are concerned I am not aware of any reason why the house should not prorogue this evening. I believe the ex-Minister of Agriculture wishes to speak when supply is taken up in connection with Trade and Commerce estimates, and I understand that there are two other hon. members to my right who have something in particular on which they wish to speak. Apart from that however I am not aware that it is the intention of any other hon. members to participate at any length in debate. There may be; I cannot say. I do think however that so far as we are concerned the purpose will be served by having the proceedings arranged for immediately after eight o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: Could it not be done after six?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as we alone are concerned, I should hope it might be arranged for five.

Miss MACPHAIL: Inasmuch as I had something to do with prolonging the business of the house I am glad to say now that I do not want more than ten or fifteen minutes, and if the statement made by the Minister of Justice is satisfactory from my point of view I shall not need that much time.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Since I have to share the responsibility for holding up the proceedings on Saturday night, I must say distinctly that we cannot at this stage give guarantees as to how long things will take. It is not that we want to prolong the business of the house unnecessarily. We were prevented for nearly an hour from going on this morning and I am not blaming anyone, but that is the way it turned out, and I think we should have a full statement from the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member realizes that the penitentiary estimates were held up on four distinct occasions merely for the convenience of those opposite, and normally they would have been disposed of weeks ago. They were held up to meet the convenience of two members of the house on the opposite side.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Not to meet my convenience.

Mr. BENNETT: You were not here when we were going on.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It might have been brought on any time in the last two weeks but for some reason or other, in the judgment of the government, it was left until the last on Saturday night. A number of other contentious items were put before us and precluded the discussion of these estimates on that occasion, and I think we have a perfect right as members of the house, in view of the importance of the question, to ask that we be not limited as to the time which this discussion will take.

Mr. BENNETT: No one disputes that right at all; it is merely a question of endeavouring to carry out what was a general understanding. If it cannot be done it cannot be done.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was not anxious to stay here over Sunday nor am I anxious to stay a minute longer than necessary to complete what I conceive to be the business of the house from my point of view. I want to get home; I have not seen my home for nearly six months, and I have as much to go home to as the average person in the way of attachment to home. But take the question of the international wheat agreement that we discussed this morning. How could I go home without having discussed it? And take what I propose to discuss with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the lost Chinese market; I do not see how I can forego saying something in that regard. This is the occasion on which we ventilate the grievances of subjects whom we represent and serve; it is a privilege handed down to us by the mother of parliaments, and if we do not avail ourselves of it we neglect our duty. With these qualifications, I will expedite prorogation as far as I can; but if it has to go to six or seven or eight o'clock then it is not my fault. Prorogation does not come first; the business of the country does. The facilities for prorogation are ready for the purpose and it is when we want them as a parliament that they should be used.

Mr. BENNETT: That is rather an unfair observation. I intimated that His Excellency would come at any time he was asked to come but I was making a suggestion in view of certain arrangements that had been made. No complaints were being made.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not hear the beginning of the discussion and if I put a wrong construction on anything I am sorry. But I got the impression that the ministry wanted to crowd things, without discussion, as was done on Saturday night.

Mr. BENNETT: We can just as soon stay for a week.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not mean any reflection on Their Excellencies. The responsibility is with the government to call them, not with them. The king can do no wrong, as is well known. It is the government we hold responsible and if they press us unduly they are wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: They are not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the use of talking about five o'clock or any other hour? Call His Excellency when we are through.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In answer to the Prime Minister, there is one item which seems to those of us who come from a certain district in Ontario to be of very great importance, and I assume that we can discuss it either under Agriculture, 293, 294 and 295, or Trade and Commerce, mail subsidies and steamship subventions, 316. There are a few members who I know desire to make representations to the government in this regard. I do not think they will be very long but they feel they must refer to the matter before the house closes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Before entering into a discussion of penitentiary matters I want to correct one impression which I think was caused by my hon. friend from Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) and also the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), in the discussion Saturday night. The hon. member for Southeast Grey said:

> Unfortunately it always happens that the penitentiary estimates come up at the very close of the session. I have sat through this session and listened to a good deal of good talk and a good deal that might have been better left unsaid, and I intend to-night to take up as much time as I would two weeks before prorogation.

The penitentiary items were under discussion in this house in March and again in May for a short time, but my anxiety was to have these items discussed immediately after Easter, and on three occasions the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) came and asked me to postpone them as a matter of convenience to the hon. member for Southeast Grey, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross) and I agreed to do so. That is the reason they have been delayed, not with the idea of limiting or of avoiding discussion, because I am in the happy frame of mind that I invite discussion in regard to penitentiary matters and these estimates to the fullest extent.

If I may be permitted, I shall try to deal with the various questions that have arisen in the discussion, in the order in which they have been brought up. I notice the hon. member for Kingston City is not in his seat but I have quite a distinct recollection of his remarks of a few days ago and also on Saturday night in regard to penitentiary management. Not only during the present session but on former occasions he has expressed a very deep interest in regard to what I might term the youthful prisoners who are to be found in the penitentiaries of Canada. He has made a considerable study of the penitentiary system, particularly with reference to youthful offenders, and he has some excellent ideas on the subject. But I have this to say with regard to statements which he has made in the house, that the instances which he has cited of boys of fifteen and the like, who have been sent to penitentiary and who have subsequently turned out very grave offenders and hardened criminals, do not pertain to present day conditions. I think the instance he cited of a boy of fifteen occurred some fifteen or twenty years ago and the description he gave of punishment cells in the prison where prisoners became insane and of the horrible conditions said to exist pertained, I believe, to a period between thirty and forty years ago; but the impression left upon some hon. members was to the effect that such conditions pertain to-day. I mention these matters only to clear up the present position because the hon. member for Kingston City did not make it clear that the conditions to which he referred do not pertain to-day.

In regard to youthful offenders confined in the penitentiaries I may say that under the law of this country, where a youth under sixteen years of age has committed an offence, he is sent to one of the reformatories or provincial institutions which are scattered throughout Canada. It is only when a youth has been a prisoner in these institutions and has proved to be incorrigible and beyond control that a trial judge or magistrate is entitled to sentence him to Kingston or some other penitentiary. Since I have been Minister of Justice there have been cases where youths under sixteen have been sentenced to penitentiary, but fortunately in the Penitentiary Act there is a clause which provides that on receipt of a youth under sixteen the minister may forthwith remove that youth to a provincial institution, and in all the penitentaries of Canada there is not to-day a single case of a youth under sixteen. Two cases have come up since I have been Minister of Justice and in both of them they were removed to provincial institutions.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

In regard to those between sixteen and eighteen years of age who have had no previous conviction, we have at the present moment two in St. Vincent de Paul, found guilty of armed robbery and sentenced by the judges of the courts of Quebec to seven years' imprisonment; we have two in British Columbia convicted and sentenced by the courts of the province to five years each, and we have one there convicted of the crime of perjury. That makes five. These lads have had no previous conviction and they are between sixteen and eighteen years of age. In Dorchester, New Brunswick, we have two convicted on charges of stealing and sentenced to two years. There is a special reason in the maritimes for the two-year sentence. Probably in Ontario or some of the other provinces the sentence would have been two years less one day, which would have allowed them to go to some of the provincial reformatories, but the maritime provinces are not well equipped with regard to reformatories. In Dorchester there is one between sixteen and eighteen years of age convicted of armed robbery, one convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to eight years, and one convicted of carnal knowledge of a child and sentenced to three years. That makes ten in all between sixteen and eighteen years of age throughout the Dominion of Canada. I find I have made a mistake; I did not give the proper total in regard to those under eighteen years of age because I find in St. Vincent de Paul there are nineteen under that age. The reason for that is that the provincial prisons in Quebec are not such as they are in Ontario and magistrates and judges sentence for the two year term in order to confine the prisoners in the penitentiaries rather than in the provincial gaols.

Between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one there is a total of 364 prisoners in Canada, as follows:

Penitentiary:	Number
Kingston	33
St. Vincent de Paul	141

Again no doubt owing to the fact that they have no provincial prisons such as there are in Ontario.

Penitentiary:	Number
Dorchester	50
Manitoba	38
British Columbia	34
Saskatchewan	21
Collin's Bay	18
Piers Island, Doukhobor prison	29

So that we have a total of 364 between eighteen and twenty-one years of age, forty-five between sixteen and eighteen and none under the age of sixteen in any penitentiary in Canada. I am giving these figures for the information of the hon. member for Kingston City and for general information.

My hon. friend's next criticism or complaint was in respect to dismissals of officials from the staff of Kingston penitentiary. I admit there have been dismissals in the last few years from the staff of that institution and I am sorry to say that in a great number of cases those officials have been residents of Kingston, and many of those dismissals or retirements have not met with the approval of the hon. member for Kingston City. I can only assure him that any such action taken to change the staff of that institution has been taken without regard to friendship or politics or anything else, but solely with the object of improving the penitentiary staff. I am inclined to think, from what I know of the matter, that these changes were necessary and improvement has resulted. There has been only one dismissal of a senior officer: a shoemaker instructor who was not considered fit for the work allotted to him and who had not control of the men placed in his charge. There were seventeen officers of various standing retired to promote efficiency. That means that there may have been no positive wrong doing on their part; there may have been no culpable act. They may not have been found asleep on duty or trafficking with prisoners and the like, but they were not suited to the job. It is not a position that appeals to a great many people; it is a very difficult position. Seventeen were retired from the staff of that institution to promote efficiency. Two were retired on account of age, having reached the age of sixty-five. One was retired and marked unsuitable after one month's trial. That makes a total to May 31, 1933, of twenty-one.

During the year 1933-34 the following retirements took place in Kingston penitentiary:

Dismissals of guards for trafficking with prisoners	2
Asleep on duty	1
Neglect of duty	1
Guard convicted of indictable offence	1
		— 5
Retired during the same period to promote efficiency	2
Retired on account of age	1
Retired as unsuitable after trial	5
Retired on account of reduction of staff	5
		—13

This makes a total for those two years of thirty-nine.

Of those dismissals two have been reemployed, making a net change of thirty-seven. In all these cases the retirements or dismissals have taken place after a very careful investigation. The investigation has been conducted by the warden and by the superintendent and the evidence has been submitted to me for my approval. I have not approved in every case, but I have in the great majority of cases on the evidence submitted. I have sought in every way to improve the penitentiary staff when changes have been caused by these retirements. If my hon. friend from Kingston City desires the fullest information it is available for him in my department at any time. I am not going to place before the house the names of these officers who have been retired or go into details in regard to any particular case unless requested so to do, but I wish to inform the hon. member for Kingston City that all the particulars and all the details are at his disposal if he desires to make himself familiar with them. I am aware that when a retirement or dismissal takes place the great majority of those concerned immediately go to the hon. member for Kingston City; he is a good-hearted man, he sympathizes with them, and he immediately communicates with Ottawa. The men likewise complain to me and lay their cases very fully before me. Then it becomes my duty to go over the cases and reconsider them. I have done the best I could; I have formed the best judgment I could, and I am prepared to stand by the conclusions to which I have come in each case.

Passing from that, the hon. member for Southeast Grey in her criticism of penitentiary matters on Saturday night dwelt to some extent on the case known as the Murray Kirkland case and on the evidence which was submitted when that case was tried before the criminal courts of Canada. It will be remembered by those in the house who have paid attention to such matters that when the riot took place in Kingston penitentiary on October 17, 1932, at a very critical and difficult time, the acting warden made an agreement with the rioters that if they were to desist and stop the riot he would refrain from punishing them under prison rules and would allow their cases to be heard before the criminal courts of the country. I do not know that the warden acted wisely when he made that arrangement, but he did make it, and on that arrangement being made and announced the rioters desisted for the time being. It was felt that that arrangement should be carried out, and subsequently in the spring of 1933, some twenty-nine or thirty of the rioters were tried at the county judge's criminal court at Kingston, and among others who were tried on that occasion was Murray

Kirkland. The name of Murray Kirkland has been raised in this debate not by me, but of course his name became prominently mentioned in the newspapers last spring during the trial. Ordinarily I am not supposed to give publicly the names of convicts and particulars in regard to them, but as this case has been made the centre of a great deal of criticism I am going to give some particulars in regard to it.

Murray Kirkland is looked upon as one of the dangerous inmates of Kingston penitentiary, where we have a large number of very dangerous men. He seems to have been connected with the banks as a bank clerk in his early life—he is yet a comparatively young man. On August 16, 1930, he committed an armed hold-up of the Bank of Montreal at King City near Toronto. Perhaps some hon. members may recall the circumstances; he and his gang locked the bank staff in the safe, obtained $916 from the teller's cage and made away with it. He committed bank robbery while armed at the Bank of Nova Scotia at Agincourt, near Toronto, on October 2, 1930. This time they operated by the same method and obtained $846 from the teller's cage. On November 6, 1930, he and his gang robbed the Canadian Bank of Commerce, getting in that case over $6,000 by armed robbery. He was tried for and convicted of these three charges and sentenced to eighteen years' imprisonment and fifteen lashes. Since he has been in the penitentiary he has received the lashes. These are not by the paddle; these are the lashes that are imposed by the court, a much more severe punishment than anything connected with the paddle that has been so much spoken of. Since his arrival in the penitentiary he has been considered, and justly so, a very dangerous criminal. He has been specially looked after to see that he does not commit any deprecation there in the way of attempting to escape, or an assault upon any of his fellow prisoners. This man was engaged in the riot in 1932. Notwithstanding the tender manner in which Judge Deroche spoke of him at his trial he was convicted and sentenced by him to an additional nine months at the conclusion of his present sentence, which is a long way off. He was one of the leading rioters. During his trial when he was charged with riot and destruction of property, his counsel, Mr. Nickle of Kingston, in mitigation of his conduct introduced the evidence of a number of convicts to show what they said was ill-treatment of prisoners in Kingston penitentiary. The evidence was in mitigation of the crime, not relating to whether or not the prisoner was guilty, but merely in order to mitigate the sentence. Prisoner after prisoner was summoned by Mr. Nickle and put in the witness box and these prisoners told the most horrible and lurid tales of ill-treatment. But Mr. Nickle in his letter to which I am going to refer said, "And this evidence went uncontradicted." That is young Mr. Nickle to whom I am referring, not Mr. W. F. Nickle. But I cannot understand a man of the standing at the bar of Mr. W. M. Nickle making such a statement when he was fully aware of the circumstances. There were present at the trial the warden, the deputy warden, the superintendent and the guards. They were excluded from the court and not allowed to hear the evidence. Then, at the conclusion of the case, the crown attorney who conducted the case for the crown said that as these were matters which did not relate to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner on this charge but were merely in mitigation of sentence, no evidence could be called in reply. That was why these extraordinary statements went uncontradicted. Mr. Nickle must have known that evidence in rebuttal could not have been given. If evidence could have been given in contradiction of these statements it would have been given at the time; all the officials and guards were there for the purpose of giving evidence, but they did not have the opportunity.

I think next I should deal with Mr. Nickle's letter. Mr. Nickle, I suppose, was rather disappointed that after all his efforts and after a prolonged trial he was unsuccessful in his defence; the man Kirkland was convicted, and rightly so. Mr. Nickle's next step was to write a letter to Reverend Canon Scott of Quebec. The letter was read by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on June 25, as reported in Hansard commencing at page 4293. My hon. friend has challenged me to make a categorical denial of the statements contained in this letter, and I propose to do so. These are the statements of riotous prisoners, which were made in court and were not contradicted at the time by reason of the facts I have just stated.

The first statement in this letter is as to the existence of the "hole." That term has been used by prisoners in Kingston for many years, and refers to the punishment cells under the keepers' hall, which are nine in number. There is no hole as one would understand it from reading this letter, but there are well ventilated, airy cells which are used only for the purpose of punishment. If a prisoner gets beyond control and has been tried and awarded punishment he is put in one of these cells, and if there is no other way of subduing him and keeping him quiet, an extra wooden door is placed over the steel door in order that he may not be permitted to disturb the rest of the prisoners. Murray Kirkland is not in the hole, and was not. The hole itself, or the so called hole constitutes the punishment cells. These cells have been examined by many competent and trustworthy people during the last twelve months, and I am going to state why this has been done.

The letter written by Mr. Nickle became public throughout Canada. Canon Scott preached a sermon on it a year ago. It was copied extensively in the newspapers, and in addition Mr. Nickle went to Toronto, appeared before the Social Service Council and laid his plea before them, repeating and elaborating the statements contained in his letter to Canon Scott so that the Social Service Council was made aware of all the allegations of Mr. Nickle. I mention that now; I will give my reasons for doing so a little later on.

The wooden door of which I speak has been closed I think only three times in six or eight months, and then only for ten, fifteen or twenty minutes at a time. It is only closed when the prisoner in the punishment cell is disturbing the rest of the prison by his shouts and noises. Let me tell you that in England they have the same system of extra doors; before I am through I am going to refer to the latest work upon English prisons. In the United States they have a more elaborate system, by which they can absolutely exclude both daylight and noise. In the cells at Kingston daylight is not excluded, but dim light is the result of the closing of the wooden door. I do not suppose you could read by it, but at other times one can read in these cells without difficulty. They are light, airy and well ventilated, but there is a bucket in these cells as they have no toilet arrangements. Neither are there any toilet arrangements in any of the best cells in the English prisons; the covered slop pail is adopted throughout all English prisons. In Kingston we have only these nine cells which, up to the present time, have not been equipped with the ordinary toilet requirements.

Now I should like to say a word in regard to the paddle. The paddle or leather strap is imposed as a last resort when prisoners become boisterous and unmanageable and defy the officers of the institution. We have a number of such prisoners. When they are sent to work they refuse to do so; any order given to them they resent, and in resenting it their language sometimes is beyond description. Such prisoners must be brought under discipline in some way, and the last resort is an application of the leather strap commonly called the paddle. When this question was last up, one of these straps was exhibited in this house by the hon. member for Kingston city. I noticed that it received great prominence throughout the country; photographs appeared in the Toronto Star, and other papers. This paddle is a leather strap, as hon. members of the house who were present on that occasion were able to see. This punishment can be inflicted only after the man has been tried and permitted to enter his full defence and after the evidence has been submitted to the superintendent in Ottawa and finally to myself; I have to read it. If I am satisfied that the infliction of this punishment is proper I confirm it. It frequently happens that the warden's court imposes a sentence of from fifteen to twenty straps, but these are seldom given. Three to five strokes, or at most ten, is about the usual application of the paddle. The medical officer must examine the prisoner before the punishment is administered and pronounce him fit.

There is nothing brutal about it. What the prisoners resent is the indignity of it; they will tell you so. I have made a careful inquiry of the officials who would know about these things in every penitentiary in Canada and never, in a single case, has the skin been broken, nor had any wound resulted or any blood flowed, notwithstanding the statements made by Mr. Nickle in his letter to Canon Scott, Mr. Nickle does not state anything of his own knowledge but merely gives the statements related by prisoners in the Kirkland trial, and which are absolutely untrue. You strap children at school. My mother used to strap me at home—yes, and in the same place as they strap the prisoners. But the prison officials are very careful in the administration of this punishment, and in order that there may be no injury inflicted the man is securely fastened to a frame so that the strap may be applied in the proper place without injury to the individual. There is a certain indignity about the process which prisoners do resent, but so far as the records of Canadian penitentiaries disclose there is no record of any injury, any skin broken or any blood flowing. The warden and medical officer must be present upon all such occasions. I give that statement in Mr. Nickle's letter a categorical denial.

Now let me take the next paragraph, in regard to disease:

Syphilitic inmates with running sores and other such patients are admitted to the hospital.

That is where they should go. Every inmate who comes to any of our prisons undergoes a very critical examination as soon as he enters the institution. He is carefully examined for all kinds of disease, and a record of his condition is carefully kept. In addition he has to undergo another indignity by being plunged in a very strong disinfectant bath, which I think many prisoners resent very much. A great many of them are not in very cleanly condition when they come in, and this treatment is absolutely necessary as a preliminary to their entering the institution. Then, if there is the slightest sign of any communicable disease they are isolated. Whether there is any sign of disease or not they are immediately tested in the way prescribed by science to see if they have any syphilitic affection. Every modern method is used, and a professor of Queen's university, who will be well known to the hon. member for Kingston, is among the men who have prescribed the method of treating and isolating these patients. Until a man is absolutely safe to mingle or communicate with others, until he is absolutely immune he is not allowed to communicate in any way with the other convicts. I am satisfied every precaution is taken, and that the system has worked well.

Miss MACPHAIL: At this point may I ask is it true that the dishes of other convicts in the hospital are washed in the bath tub in which all inmates of the hospital bathe.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, that is a statement of Doctor Withrow and by a prisoner at the Kirkland trial. My information is that it is absolutely untrue. That is another categorical denial. I will state further that with a prison population from 2,800 to 4,500, over the last fifteen years, there has not been one single instance of communicated syphilis in the penitentiaries of Canada, not one. I think that is probably more than one can say for the factories, the schools and hotels in Canada, because they do not take the special precautions that are taken in the penitentiary.

The fourth point in Mr. Nickle's letter is about the boy prisoners. He states:

Two or three boys who were sent to penitentiary at the age of fifteen for three to seven years—

And so on. I do not know what he refers to, unless it is the case mentioned by the hon. member for Kingston. We have no boys of fifteen years in the penitentiary at the present time, and I do not think there have been for a long time—but there may have been. The paragraph goes on to state that these boys associate with lifers. If any boys are sentenced from those provinces where they have boys' reformatories they will be immediately returned to the provincial authorities.

Statement number five is to the effect that it was proved conclusively that there are only 125 men at work, out of a prison population of 900 inmates. Well, the reason for that was that up until the time of the trial we did not reestablish all the workshops; they were doing it by degrees. Subsequently they were all at work. In fairness I think Mr. Nickle should have said that while since the riot only 125 had been put to work in the shops up until the month of April 1933, the shops are now running full time, except in regard to the few prisoners who have been isolated. But apart from the shops there were those who were working on the farm, those who were cutting stone, those who were working on ordinary chores, and others working about the penitentiary—though, as a matter of fact, when the trial took place in Kingston I think approximately 125 would be about the correct number working in the shops. But the impression sought to be created by Mr. Nickle is that the other 875 had no work to do. I categorically deny that allegation.

Now I shall discuss the case of a man named O'Brien, which was also in the limelight and received a good deal of newspaper notoriety, again through the efforts of Mr. W. M. Nickle, who took the matter up with the Toronto Globe and the Toronto Star. In that way the matter was given greater prominence than otherwise it would have been given. The case has been brought up in a very pointed way owing to Mr. Nickle's letter in which he states:

There is an inmate by the name of John O'Brien who was suspected of conspiring to escape on the poor allegation of a letter sent by one inmate to a warden, implicating O'Brien. O'Brien has been in solitary confinement in the prison of isolation since August, 1931, and has never been charged or tried on the charge of conspiracy to escape.

O'Brien had on each side of him two raving inmates, one completely crazy and the other a drug addict. I subpoenaed the crazy man to try to show to the court what was going on, but the Department of Justice got rid of him three or four days before the trial.

I give a categorical denial to that statement. O'Brien claims to be an American citizen. He has a fairly long criminal record in the United States and also a fairly long one in Canada. In the United States he is credited with two escapes from the penitentiary or prisons of that country, and he is looked upon as being a rather dangerous prisoner. I think that under all the circumstances careful watching is very justifiable. He was placed in the prison of isolation. That is not the keepers' hall; that is not a hole. The prison of isolation is composed of ninety-six cells which are the best cells in the prison. Probably they are the best cells on the continent of America, and they were favourably commented upon recently by a British prison commissioner. Ninety-six of those cells are segregated by themselves—larger cells, better light, fully equipped with running water, toilet arrangements and spring beds; but we keep prisoners there whom we consider dangerous. O'Brien was in the prison of isolation. There are six tiers to that prison, sixteen cells to a tier. He was in the lower tier, and at the time he was there I believe there was one occasion when there were only two or three other prisoners upon the same tier. But there is no such thing as solitary confinement in any penitentiary in Canada, and there has not been for at least thirty years. I do not know what there was in the last century.

Miss MACPHAIL: What did they mean when they used that term again and again? Had he so much time out of the cells for exercise?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, every day.

Miss MACPHAIL: How long?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Forty minutes.

Miss MACPHAIL: Was he treated just the same as other prisoners?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, just the same.

Miss MACPHAIL: Why should the warden make the statement—because it was he who said it—that it appeared the men were going out to liberate O'Brien who was in solitary confinement for a year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The warden made a mistake in using this phrase. In the isolation prison there would be ninety-six others when the cells are all filled. Another prisoner stated during the Kingston trial—and the Globe and other papers made a tremendous fuss about it—that he had been in solitary confinement for twenty-three years. He had never been in solitary confinement one day. What the poor fellow did mean was that he had served twenty-three years of imprisonment, and that was about his record—although not altogether —in Canadian prisons. However he used the term "solitary confinement". "Solitary confinement" is a term that the prisoners use in regard to the prison of isolation, but there is nothing solitary about it.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am sorry to interrupt again, but does the minister mean it is not solitary inasmuch as there are other prisoners near them?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They mingle and they mix. But there are times when it is quite possible that in a corridor with sixteen cells there may be only one man. That is uncommon, if it ever happened, but it is possible that it might happen.

Miss MACPHAIL: I cannot understand why the warden would say that this man had been in solitary confinement for a year if the treatment he was getting was just the same as the other prisoners got who were locked in their cells from four or five o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This case was investigated by the United States authorities because the man in question made the claim he was in solitary confinement and had not been tried. I think when the United States authorities went into the matter they were quite satisfied with the prisoner's treatment. I have heard nothing to the contrary.

This man O'Brien was implicated soon after he came to Kingston penitentiary in some breach of prison rules. He was punished for a few days by being sent to the punishment cells. I think he was there three days. That would be pretty solitary because I do not suppose there was anybody there at the time but himself. After that he was liberated from the punishment cells and at the end of July in 1931 he was one of the leaders in a very serious attempt to break prison. I did describe something of this on a former occasion in the House of Commons but I am going to repeat part of it again to-day.

There were six or seven men engaged working in one of the machine shops, and they contrived in some way to manufacture weapons which they hid in various places in the machine shop. It was arranged that on a certain hour on a certain day, I think the second of August was to be the day, when the prison truck came to that shop they were to seize the truck, do what they would with the two men who were on the truck, and take the truck and drive it as forcibly as possible against the prison gates with the idea of effecting a prison escape. One of those implicated evidently lost heart in the venture and told the penitentiary officers as to what was proposed. These men were immediately locked up, among them being O'Brien. A search was made according to the information which had been supplied by one of the confederates and the weapons were discovered. During the last debate on this subject in this house my hon. friend from Kingston City produced some more or less inoffensive looking implements and said, "This is all they found; these are merely little tools for scraping the machinery, and for that," he says, "they were punished."

Well, these men were tried. The former Superintendent Hughes and the former warden Ponsford were then in office, and after the trial these men were convicted and sentenced to the prison of isolation, which I have described. But the little innocent inoffensive weapons produced by my hon. friend from Kingston City—I do not know who handed them to him—are not the exhibits in the case at all. I have here the actual articles which were found secluded in the shop and which were filed as exhibits in the trial. I think this one has been made from a file. It is a very dangerous looking weapon.

Here is one which certainly has been made from a file. This was hidden behind some of the heating radiators.

This third exhibit, marked exhibit B, is a broken one. This was hidden under the floor.

Here is another dangerous weapon, made I think from a file, and marked exhibit D. This also was hidden behind the woodwork.

This one looks as if it were made from polished steel.

Of these weapons which I have shown to the house the longest and the most desperate looking one is from eighteen to twenty inches long, is sharp and pointed, and is made of good steel.

The next longest has a blade over ten inches long and is sharpened to a point. I think it was made from a steel file.

The next one is between ten and eleven inches long, and is a vicious looking weapon.

The small one is also made from a file and is sharpened at the point.

The last one I do not know so much about except that it looks like the article that was produced by my hon. friend from Kingston City. It may be some part of the machinery, but it has been sharpened at the point too. These are the actual exhibits in connection with the trial of these convicts. O'Brien was tried; he was convicted, and because he was looked on as a very dangerous prisoner he was placed in the prison of isolation and kept there until some time this spring. He is now freed from the prison of isolation. Perhaps he has learned his lesson; I hope he has. He is now engaged at the officers' mess in Kingston, and I think he has been placed in the ordinary cell block with the other convicts. He is one of those who were looked upon as dangerous, and he was certainly engaged in the effort to escape in August, 1931. He has to his credit two escapes from American penitentiaries; he is a long term prisoner. His sentence is for twenty years or for life, I am not sure which, but he requires very strict supervision. Such is my categorical statement in regard to the alleged ill treatment of O'Brien.

Next as to the silence rule.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Just to clear up one point, do I understand that Major Nickle is incorrect when he says that O'Brien has never been charged with or tried on the charge of conspiracy?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. I have a record of the trial before Superintendent Hughes and Warden Ponsford. O'Brien was found guilty of trying to escape.

Miss MACPHAIL: When?

Mr. GUTHRIE: August, 1931.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am not clear why it should be said he was in solitary confinement for two years or one year if the minister says there is no such thing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have described the confinement. I would like my hon. friend (Miss Macphail) to know that I have no reason for suggesting anything that did not happen. I want all the facts to come out and nothing will please me better than to have her visit the institution as she has on former occasions and see the actual cells and conditions. I make this further statement, that I would welcome a visit from the hon. member for Kingston City. I wish he would go through the institution with the most meticulous care, examine it from top to bottom, and hear stories and statements from prisoners, and I am satisfied that when he came away he would commend the institution. I would like my hon. friend from Southeast Grey to do the same thing.

Miss MACPHAIL: If it is as it was when I last visited the institution, the authorities will be very careful to see that no person makes a statement. They were not at that time even allowed to glance at visitors, much less to speak to them, except by permission of the warden.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the rule, and I will waive it in favour of my hon. friend for Southeast Grey or any hon. member of this house. Members of this house are statutory visitors. They have the right to go there and the right to see everything and to speak to everybody. That is what a statutory visitor is for. So has a grand jury that right, and so has a judge. If any one desires to examine these institutions either at Kingston or any other part of this dominion I will give them the greatest freedom to do so, they may investigate to their heart's content, and all I ask them to give is an unbiased and unprejudiced account of what they do see, having regard to the fact that these institutions are not hotels or boarding-houses but penitentiaries.

Miss MACPHAIL: Does the minister wonder that it is confusing to the people of this country when the warden says that a man was in solitary confinement for a year and then the minister stands up and says there was no such thing? I want to ask this further question. In the case of O'Brien—I notice the minister takes great trouble to tell the committee how terrible these prisoners are, and I am not defending them, because I know a great many are vicious; on Saturday I placed the percentage of the total prison population as twenty per cent—I am not arguing for O'Brien or Kirkland or anybody, but was O'Brien put in for the two years in solitary confinement other than the forty minutes a day, or was he allowed the same liberty as any other prisoner? Just what does solitary confinement mean?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. I believe he only got his daily exercise. Then he was offered work in his cell and he refused to do it. Subsequently I believe he asked for work in his cell and got it. His case I may say has been fully reported to the American prison authorities on O'Brien's representations that he was being discriminated against as an American citizen, and I think the American authorities are quite satisfied with regard to the matter. So far as I am aware, they are.

The next matter in the letter of Mr. Nickle is in regard to silence.

> Prior to October 17 there was a silent rule for convicts which read as follows:
> Every convict shall observe silence and shall not hold communication with another convict.

Mr. Nickle knew full well when he wrote that letter that the rule had been abrogated for a year or almost two years. It so happens that General Ormond, superintendent of penitentiaries, took office on the 1st of August 1932, and his first visit to Kingston was made on September 8, 1932. When he came back from Kingston he had a discussion with me. He said he was going to visit other penitentiaries, but that there were certain recommendations which he had decided to make in regard to these institutions, and one of those he mentioned was the rule with respect to silence. Another one was in regard to cigarette papers and another in regard to exercise. Prior to General Ormond's appointment the exercise period was only ten minutes and it consisted in walking around a yard, a sort of military march. He said that method did not appeal to him, it was not a proper exercise, and he recommended a change. I think that would be probably the 10th or 11th of September, six weeks before any riot took place. I said, "Had you not better consult other wardens before we change the regulations?" He replied that he would, particularly in regard to cigarette smoking. Unfortunately or fortunately the disturbance took place on October 17th, before there was any change in the regulation, but the regulation was changed on December 31, 1932, and the silence rule was abolished. It had been the rule of all Canadian penitentiaries for forty years and until recently was the rule in English penitentiaries—I think it is still the rule in Dartmoor—and it is also the rule in many penitentiaries in the United States. In the penitentiaries in Canada the silence rule was abolished on 31st December, 1931, and Mr. Nickle should have known that when he wrote the letter to Canon Scott:

> Let me say here, while it occurs to me, that the inmates were only given twenty minutes exercise a day, walking in a circle round the bull ring.

I thought it was ten minutes only of exercise that they were allowed before General Ormond took over as superintendent of the penitentiaries. Now it is forty minutes, and in Great Britain an hour. The kind of exercise is a matter on which there is some discussion and difference of opinion among prisoners. The exercise which has been prescribed by General Ormond for all penitentiaries in Canada consists for the most part of those exercises which you see in collegiate institutes and colleges, the Royal Military College and various places of that kind—rhythmic movement all under an instructor in the open air, and then a certain amount of walking exercise. Previously it had been merely walking exercise, but in Kingston unfortunately this additional exercise has developed into a kind of sporting contest which is not permitted under the present regulations. Instead of the regular exercise prescribed, baseball and the like has developed to a fairly alarming extent. Baseball has now been stopped and the Kingston prison is now run under the regulation with regard to forty minutes' exercise.

Is it necessary for me to deal with anything else in Mr. Nickle's letter to Canon Scott? I have tried to give a categorical denial to every important statement in it. As I pointed out, the statements are founded not on the experience or knowledge of Mr. Nickle himself, but solely upon the lurid statements of prisoners. Before I discuss that point further, however, there is one thing I missed. There is a paragraph in the letter in regard to shackling of prisoners to the bars; Mr. Nickle says that men have been shackled with their hands above their heads and left for hours until they were exhausted. That is untrue and I give a categorical denial to that statement. For two years there has been no shackling. O'Brien may have been shackled two years ago—I am not sure—and I had better not make too broad a statement. It is, however, two years since there has been shackling to the bars in Canadian penitentiaries—that system has been abolished under the present superintendent. Again I say that Mr. Nickle in these statements is not speaking of his own knowledge, but he has accepted at one hundred per cent these terrible exaggerations and misstatements made by prisoners when trying to justify the riot in 1932, in order to mitigate sentence. It was upon such evidence, given before a judge of the county court, upon which Canon Scott addressed the people of Canada in his sermons. These were the statements which were also laid before the Social Service Council in Toronto, before the Prisoners' Welfare Society in Montreal and before the John Howard Society in British Columbia, all prisoners' welfare associations. These are the statements which disturbed them and caused them to come to Ottawa last August or September to see the Prime Minister and myself and to ask for the appointment of a royal commission, and we gave a categorical denial to these statements at the time of the interview. The Prime Minister also suggested that they immediately send deputations to visit the penitentiaries and be convinced by what they saw. These societies appointed their own committees and visited every penitentiary in Canada. They were accorded the fullest liberty and exercised their rights to the fullest. They discussed matters with prisoners and with officials as well as with outsiders and have made a report generally recommending the system and the administration of Canadian penitentiaries.

Miss MACPHAIL: I have a copy of the report—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let me finish, please.

Miss MACPHAIL: —and I challenge the statement—

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend must not butt in until I finish. They did make certain specific recommendations and we are endeavouring as rapidly as possible to carry them out. One of the most prominent of these recommendations is in regard to the question of segregation. We have advanced in that respect in the last year and a half not only perceptibly but very satisfactorily. In each penitentiary there is a segregation board consisting of the warden, the deputy warden, two chaplains, the medical officer, the school masters and the trade instructors in the various trades. They periodically sit as a board and examine each individual prisoner and pass upon him as to his fitness to learn a trade, to carry on work that he has been put to, and as to his adaptability. They examine into his criminal record, antecedents and the like, with the idea of putting him eventually among the class which will most benefit him and at the same time of keeping what you may call the dangerous ones, the old offenders, the hardened criminals, as far as possible to themselves. That system has been in force in all the penitentiaries of Canada for some time now, except Kingston. I am sorry to say that the warden at Kingston, perhaps through pressure of other work in the difficult situation in which he was placed, had not time to institute that system in Kingston as it was instituted in other penitentiaries, but since the fifteenth of June the system has been placed in full operation in Kingston penitentiary. I think this is the system recommended by the Social Service Council and other societies so far as we have been able to carry it out up to the present time. I am aware that the superintendent himself has recommended very definitely that a psychiatrist, also a psychologist, should be attached to the staff of each penitentiary. We have competent doctors there now and I believe they are highly qualified men. The physician at Kingston has been there a long time; he is not an appointee of mine in any sense, but I believe he is performing his duty. He is not, however, what is technically known as a psychiatrist. When any mental case is under consideration it is necessary to send out and secure the opinion of some alienist who is not on the prison staff at the present time. But it has been pointed out by writers on penology in this country, the United States and Great Britain, that it is almost essential to have a psychiatrist connected with prisons for properly estimating the possibilities or the adaptability of the convict. We have no psychiatrists at present but it is quite possible that in the near future we will have them at the larger penitentiaries.

Another question that is very pressing is that of the segregation of the youthful prisoners. We have not as yet any system for youthful segregation nor so far as I am aware have they in any other country unless it be England. One cannot make a very fair comparison between the prison system in England and that of Canada. The best and most recent book on the English prison system is by one of the prison commissioners, Mr. L. W. Fox, a book published a few months ago and to be found in the library here. It brings the regulations up to date and explains the system concisely. But in England there is only one governing power. The British government or the Home Secretary has authority throughout the whole United Kingdom over all their prisons; in Canada we have a different system and the only prisons under the jurisdiction of the federal government are the penitentiaries. All the gaols, all the refuges, all the reformatories and all the provincial prisons are under the control of provincial authorities and the federal government has nothing to do with them. In England, where there is a single control, they are able to allocate their prisons to certain classes of prisoners, something which this department has no power to do, and they are allocating certain prisons for certain classes of prisoners. Of course in England they have a very large number of prisons at their disposal and they have instituted and are carrying out what is known as the Borstal system, a system which it is hoped will have the effect in many cases of reclaiming youthful offenders before they go too far in their careers of crime. The Borstal system applies in the first instance to those who are under twenty-four and afterwards there is a special period of application for those who are from twenty-four to twenty-eight. I believe from all I have read that the Borstal system has produced good results. We have, however, no experience in the dominion field in our penitentiaries of instituting a system of that kind. The youths and the young men do not and should not go to our penitentiaries. But it so happens that among our young offenders under twenty-one there are some very violent criminals with long criminal records and it is a very serious question whether they should be placed with other youths who may be in for a first offence. I doubt very much whether to do so would have a good effect on first offenders. You cannot classify them very well by age. It is a problem that should be and is being studied by many people, but the chief work to be done in that respect is not in the penitentiaries but in the provincial prisons and common gaols. Some of the provinces have as yet no reformatories as we have them in Ontario. In some of the provinces the common gaols are very strongly condemned by those who have had reason to visit them. On the other hand let me say this; a comparison between the treatment of prisoners in Canada and in England so far as humanity goes, so far as lenient treatment goes, is entirely favourable to this country.

Perhaps just at this moment I might refer to one other matter, and that is a letter which has been circulated throughout the House of Commons by Mr. A. E. Smith, Secretary of the Canadian Labour Defence League. I always refer to this organization as the Communist league. It was the Communist league until the trial of the seven offenders took place, until the convictions were made against them a couple of years ago. Then, at the instigation or at the instance of A. E. Smith the name of the organization was changed and the same band of people now carry on under the name of the Canadian Labour Defence League, but the man who has instigated most of the unrest in Canada in regard to penitentiary matters is A. E. Smith. The hon. member for Southeast Grey said the other night: How is it that there were disturbances in penitentiaries before there were any communist activities in Canada? The history of the world has shown that there are periodical disturbances in penitentiaries and prisons where there were no communists at all. We have had prison riots in Canada as far back as fifty years ago, very serious ones where the troops were called out, where firing took place, where the warden and deputy warden were murdered as in St. Vincent de Paul. We have had them at Kingston and at other points. There have been innumerable serious revolts in the United States with great loss of life not due to the communists' activities at all and they have had them in England as the late insurrections at Dartmoor show. Riots must be expected in all penal institutions and one must be prepared for them with a special staff of guards and appliances to restrain them. But it is strange that ever since the seven communists were imprisoned in Kingston, the agitation has gone on; it started within two months after their incarceration. The first was the complaint about not supplying cigarette papers.

That was reported to me by an ex-prisoner who told me that in the spring of that year there was very much dissatisfaction because they were not allowed to get cigarette papers. That dissatisfaction grew and culminated in the riot of October, 1922, but throughout the whole criticism has been in regard to Kingston. All the seven penitentiaries are run on the same principle, the same rules, the same regulations, but the criticism has all centred on Kingston where the seven communists are confined.

Miss MACPHAIL: What about St. Vincent de Paul? There are several communists there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am talking about communist activities.

Miss MACPHAIL: But there are communists at St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But the criticism has centred on Kingston. During all the discussion this session there has not been any mention of any other Canadian penitentiary than Kingston. All the letters that have been sent out; the fifty thousand odd messages I have received in the way of telegrams, letters, postal cards, insulting advertising in regard to myself, are all in regard to Kingston penitentiary and no other penitentiary in Canada is ever mentioned. All the agitation in the newspapers points to Kingston. I say to the hon. member for Southeast Grey: I give her the reason. It is on account of the communist prisoners who started some activities in Kingston but whose efforts have been from time to time aided by those of Smith and his so-called Canadian Labour Defence League. They are the chief agitators. He is the man who has sent this unfounded, lying document to members of the House of Commons. This document is dated June 18. I am not going to read it all. He says that 459,000 people have petitioned me; I would have said a couple of million, but he has got it down to 459,000. And he says:

To-day the condition of the seven is worse than ever.

That is a lie, that is the only word to use.

The Behan death has never been properly explained, and from authentic sources come stories that this was one of the cruelest since the Ormond regime of episodes that occurred there. But evidently this is not enough. For the last two weeks Ormond has been "reorganizing" things. Part of this reorganization has been to fling the seven communists again into the "hole."

That is an absolute lie. They are not in the hole and they never have been. The cells under the keeper's room is what he refers to as the hole. The communists are not there and never have been there. He says:

Into the "hole," the prison of isolation,—

That is better.

—where they were kept five days locked up,—

That is not true.

—and where they are now sleeping on punishment beds,—

That is an absolute lie. I made special inquiry; they have steel spring beds and two mattresses on top of that, and also both summer and winter bedding. If Smith went to England he would find that in all English prisons the prisoners sleep on plank beds. We give them a proper spring bed and two mattresses on top of that, and that is what all these communists have. Smith has not been in the institution. This may have been reported to him, but this is just another of his reckless statements which constitutes a lie.

—and in the daytime doing heavy work in the coal and wood yard.

They have been working on the docks at the lightest work in the penitentiary, and are there at their own request. They wanted outside work; they asked for it and they got it. To all appearances they are happy and contented.

The cruelties have played havoc with the health of Tim Buck and his associates.

I have had their health watched very carefully, and they are all in excellent health. True, I will grant you there has been a great deal of worry and fretting; there must be, because I do not think penitentiary confinement is conducive to health and strength and vigour of body and mind, but that is part of the punishment. But as far as medical men can judge their health is excellent. Two of them were liberated last week by my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) who sees to that branch of the Department of Justice. They were treated just as the brokers were treated. They were liberated because on June 29, they had served half their time, and they were liberated on that date, on ticket of leave, which enables them to serve the remainder of their sentence outside of prison walls. If they comply with the conditions which are endorsed on the ticket of leave they will never be called upon to serve the remainder of the sentence. And when the other communist prisoners have served half their time they will be treated in precisely the same manner, without any variation. But there is a proviso which goes with this statement; I stated it in the house on a former occasion. Provided that they are first effenders, that their prison conduct has been good, and that the crime was not one of violence or of assault on women, they will be given favourable consideration when half their time is served. I cannot speak as to the recent conduct of any of the five communists who are still there because I have not looked into it lately, but if they can meet that test the rest of them will be liberated when half their time is served.

Let me go on with this letter from Smith. The two men who were liberated last week were not liberated on account of ill health. Oh, they complain their health was bad. In one instance we allowed the man's own doctor to visit him; he gave me a certificate, as well as one I suppose to the prisoner's wife, and there was nothing to alarm me in that certificate; I could find no cause for releasing him on the ground of ill health. Representations were made in regard to another of them by an hon. member who is not here to-day. I could not find anything more than occurs to any person in an institution of that kind, but they were liberated because their conduct had been good, because they were first offenders and had served half their time. The letter continues:

Sam Carr is seriously ill.

That is not true. He was liberated last week.

But sick parole is denied him.

That also is untrue.

Popovich has been in the hospital some time.

Each of the prisoners has been in hospital, and under the statute hospital time is not computed in the days the prisoners are allowed for good conduct; however I waived Popovich's hospital time in this case and did not count it against him.

Tom Hill suffers from arthritis;

Not seriously; he seems happy.

Bruce is almost completely crippled with a broken back.

I believe he had some trouble with his back, and in this case I gave him a special hospital bed, as good as any you will find in the Ottawa hospital.

Tom Ewen complains of very bad headaches—

I fancy he may have had headaches; a good many of us have. But this letter would lead one to believe that we are keeping these men in there to their death, that although they were almost ready to go we would not hear the prayers of themselves or their wives for release before death was upon them.

That is the kind of letter that has been circulated by this man Smith throughout Canada. Based on that, petitions come to me, telegrams come to me; I got two to-day. Three hundred Ukrainians from Calgary sent me one, and a number of people from northern Ontario the other; I do not know what their nationality is. All there is in the petitions is a demand that at once I release the seven communists; they do not even know that two are out now. Well, they will be treated just as were the others.

One other matter mentioned particularly by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is that in regard to the shooting of Tim Buck. I made a statement on this in the house earlier in the session, and at that time I think perhaps I made a misstatement because I said that ten or eleven shots had been fired into his cell, into the celling. The truth is that there was a rifle shot and a pistol bullet fired there, and a shotgun containing buckshot; and the total number of bullets which made marks in the cell was eleven. I believe the evidence discloses that there were three shots. Tim Buck has made a statement, and I do not think he takes any exception to that in his statement. He was on the fourth tier in the prison, so that he would be about thirty-five to forty feet above the ground. The cells are arranged in tiers, back to back, and in front of each cell is a steel door or barrier, and in front of that again across a narrow corridor is a window. During the riot which took place on the twenty-second of the month—not the first riot; we shall call it the second—towards evening when it was growing dusk, about one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty convicts were not then in the cells—indeed we did not have cells for them and they were sleeping in dormitories. They congregated below the cell block, ripped up heavy planks from some building and started knocking off the locks of some of the cells with them. They had liberated quite a large number of prisoners. Buck was above this. He would come to his cell door and incite the prisoners to continue the riot "and get their rights." The guards had been armed with rifles and pistols for the purpose of meeting any emergency and suppressing it. The guards being on the ground, forty-five or fifty feet down, looking up could see Buck only when he came and shouted from his cell door. Shots were fired for the purpose of frightening him or stopping him, or, as I said when I was speaking on the matter before, cowing him—not with the idea of injuring him. As I said on a previous occasion, if anyone had wanted to shoot Tim Buck or to injure him it would not have been a difficult thing to do. The best evidence that no one was shooting at him is that he was not injured, by the shots which were fired. After three shots were fired Buck quieted down; he did no more. Buck has given evidence in regard to this matter at an investigation in the prison. It was not sworn evidence, but it was made on solemn affirmation, because he did not desire to take an oath. He was asked if he could identify the officers who did the shooting, but he stated that he could not identify anyone. Then he was asked:

Q. In your opinion, was there provocation for shooting into D block?

A. Absolutely no provocation.

Q. Have you at any time asked for an investigation into this shooting?

A. No, I have not demanded an investigation, mainly because I consider the shooting to be a result of the general attitude adopted by the administration during that afternoon and evening, rather than an isolated incident aimed solely at myself.

That is a very candid statement, and it is signed with the initials T. B. I think that is true. They did try to quell him and to quell the riots at the same time. Buck was inciting the crowd; he was calling on them to continue. His activities were stopped by the shots I have mentioned. I will say for Buck that he is man enough to admit that the facts as I have stated them are substantially correct. I do not know who ordered the shooting. The first riot broke out on October 17. An agreement was come to whereby a trial before the civil courts was promised, and the men went back to their cells. The second riot occurred on October 20. The acting warden of the penitentiary was Gilbert Smith, a man of large penitentiary experience, who had acted as warden at a great many penitentiaries during the last twenty years. The deputy warden was named Walsh. These two officers were in control of the penitentiary. General Ormond, the superintendent, was not at Ottawa at the time; I telegraphed for him and sent him on to Kingston as quickly as possible, and he arrived there on the twentieth. He began an investigation; he asked the convicts to state their complaints if they had any. They refused to do so unless they could come as a delegation—I think they called it a soviet delegation—and make a plea in regard to this shop or that shop or the other shop, stating their grievances, and they wanted the investigation to take place in the chapel. The superintendent said, "No, I will not hear any committees. I will hear any prisoner who desires to make a complaint." As soon as that decision was reported back to the men the second riot started. The prison was still in control of the warden and the deputy warden. The deputy warden was the man who instructed the guards to arm. I think it was proper to do so under the circumstances. Arms are there for the guards for just such occurrences; otherwise we would have no way of controlling the situation. The deputy warden gave evidence at the inquiry which was held; he was asked:

Q. Are there any revolvers kept in the keepers' hall?

A. No, sir.

Q. What position did you take up and what action did you take up yourself?

A. When I went into the dome and the levers were broken—

That was by the planks I mentioned.

—some had broken their toilets and water was running over the galleries. I stayed down there and as none of them came to the floor barriers up on the other barriers, I felt that they were as good as we could get them.

Q. Were you satisfied that they were under control?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the officers receive arms before you left the dome?

A. I remember sending up for shotguns, sir, and they came through the dome, and just in the excitement I don't know how they were handed out.

There is no doubt that there was a good deal of excitement.

Q. What did you do after that?

A. After that the militia came in, and I just simply went around the galleries and kept a lookout.

Q. Did you go inside the barriers?

A. No sir, I went into the ducts.

There is no evidence at all that the militia fired any shots.

Q. How long did you remain in the dome after the militia arrived?

A. I stayed in the dome until it got dark. I don't know just how long that would be.

Q. In your belief did the militia save the situation?

A. Yes, I would say yes.

Q. After dark where did you take up duty?

A. After dark when the lights went on somebody reported that they were breaking through their cells on third F. You could see it from the yard through having the lights inside. I went out then. I saw two men in a cell from the yard ... digging through the walls towards the end of third F range towards the chapel.

Q. Did you believe these men could dig out of the cell block?

A. I didn't think they could get into the chapel because it is a thick wall ... but I wasn't sure they couldn't get into the duct. I went in the duct and put an officer in there.

Q. From the outside what action did you take?

A. I sent some officers up in the chapel in direct line where they were digging through the wall.

Q. Did you order any firing in the penitentiary?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you carry firearms that evening?
A. Yes sir, a shotgun.
Q. Did you fire any shots yourself?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many?
A. At least two, sir.
Q. What did you shoot at?
A. I shot at the wall to scare those two fellows who were digging towards the chapel.
Q. How many guards were around the outside of the cell blocks?
A. There were groups of them all the way round.
Q. Did you take command of them?
A. I visited them.
Q. Did you place them in position?
A. I did, sir ... that is around the corners.
Q. What instructions did you give them?
A. After the incident I had reference to ... after that that there was no more shooting I know of. I told them not to do any more shooting.
Q. You were of the opinion further shooting was unnecessary?
A. I didn't think it was necessary after that. There seemed to be a lull.

While there is no statement that the deputy warden actually ordered the guards to fire, from what I know of the inquiry I conclude that he, as deputy warden, was the officer who would be entitled to do so if the warden was not on the scene at the moment. The statement has been made that General Ormond ordered the firing. General Ormond did not take control of that penitentiary until the twenty-second, two days later; he was there because I sent him there, but the warden was in control of the institution until the twenty-second. On the twenty-second when it became apparent that acting warden Smith was giving way or had lost his nerve after the trials through which he had gone during the previous forty-eight hours, it became clear that he was not the man for the job. He was sent away for a rest and after that, on my instructions, the superintendent took charge of that penitentiary. That was after the riot was over, and an inquiry was held which lasted for approximately two months. Nine hundred prisoners were examined; they stated their complaints, which were taken down, and I have read them all.

Many of the complaints made by prisoners would appear trivial to many of us, but they mean much to these men. Of complaints then made there are very few which have not been remedied. The chief complaint was about cigarette papers and cigarette smoking; that was granted. Another complaint was in regard to the silence rule; that was granted. The question of hair cutting, the close cropped head, was also dealt with. Open air exercise was dealt with; permission to have certain toilet articles was granted. Altogether thirty-eight requests were granted and I think probably about twenty-five requests were not granted. Some of the prisoners insisted on theatres, radios, football and baseball matches and the like. The vast majority of the men, however, emphasized those matters to which I have referred, and the great majority of the complaints were in regard to cigarette paper. The officers and staff were all examined with the idea of seeing what, if anything, was defective in the system, and after the most thorough investigation it was decided to relieve certain officers on the staff from duty. That was only done after careful examination. I think the only complaints I have had in regard to the retirement of officers were from my hon. friend from Kingston City and from the men themselves, so I need not go further than I have already gone this afternoon in stating that all the papers and documents are available to the hon. member for Kingston City if he desires to examine them.

There is one further point about which I should like to speak. I have been asked specically by the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre and Kingston why Warden Meglough-lin was recently removed. I have no hesitation in giving the reason, and my statement will be somewhat similar to the statement I made in the house on a former occasion. Apparently the warden did not carry out the definite instructions given to wardens in regard to penitentiary regulations. I mentioned some of them. He did not institute the course of exercises laid down in the regulations, but permitted a certain looseness which developed into noisy baseball games and demonstrations which are not permissible under penitentiary regulations. Such sports are permitted in Sing Sing penitentiary in New York, and one of the demands made by some prisoners in Kingston is that that they be granted all the privileges granted in Sing Sing. Another point was in regard to smoking. Very definite regulations have been passed that smoking must not be permitted in any building where there is inflammable material. That regulation I am afraid the warden disregarded, and two fires ensued. Whether such fires were caused by smoking or by some other means I am not prepared to say; we have not yet been able to ascertain that fact. There were a number of other regulations which at the moment I cannot recall, but action was taken because of the warden's failure to put regulations into force. They are in force in the other Canadian penitentiaries. I admit that Warden Megloughlin had a very very difficult task during his eighteen months at Kingston. It may be that on account of the peculiar situation there he used his own discretion, and thought it well not to put certain regulations into force. He did not institute a system of segregation such as I have described and such as was instituted in all the other penitentiaries in Canada. Perhaps he was not able to do so on account of the situation. He did not institute the training of staff officers and guards, as was ordered two years ago, and as has been carried on for at least eighteen months in all other Canadian penitentiaries. There were a number of regulations of that kind which were not put in force at Kingston, with the result that disorder broke out again. I described these disorders when I last spoke to the house concerning this matter, and I believe I need not repeat my observations.

I do not know that I can condemn Warden Megloughlin on account of his experience as warden in Kingston penitentiary. He had a most difficult time, but he did not bring the results which we anticipated. After a pretty full and careful inquiry I came to the conclusion that I would have to make a change. When I intimated my decision to the warden he told me after he had time to consider it he would prefer to resign. I accepted his resignation.

Unless some hon. member wishes to ask a question, that is all I have to say on the subject at the present time.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, I shall be through in the fifteen minutes I said I would take. I think anybody who has followed penitentiary conditions in Canada during the last three or four years must know that a great many if not all of the changes which have been made in penitentiary administration have come as a result of the uprisings or riots, or whatever they may be termed. I think at one point in his speech the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) said that the silence rule had been lifted some time previous to the riots, and then later, a few minutes ago, he said that it was—

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I said it had been discussed with General Ormond on the 10th or 11th of September.

Miss MACPHAIL: But it was not lifted until after. I had intended to read on Saturday night, but found it difficult to proceed in the then temper of the house, the excellent changes which have been made in the administration of penitentiaries. Those changes have been made since and not before the riots, unless it is in the matter of shackling to the bars. I have now come to the conclusion that very often ministers of justice are not aware of what is done. I believe the present minister (Mr. Guthrie) is now aware because there have been several disturbances as a result of which he has made careful inquiries. But they do not always know what is going on. I recall on one occasion asking about shackling to the bars and the then minister (Mr. Lapointe) said that the men were not shackled for any length of time, that their hands were never shackled higher than their waists, when the actual fact was they were shackled eight hours at a time to be let down only at noon, and their hands were placed high above their heads. I believe he did not know that, just as I believe that the present minister did not know about many of the things that were going on previous to the riots. But as I follow the whole thing through—statements in court, judgments rendered, newspaper accounts, and statements made in the house by the minister—I come to the conclusion that the changes which have been made have been made as a result of long, long unnecessary years of suffering which would not have occurred had the recommendations of Superintendent Hughes been carried out. Brigadier General Hughes made most excellent recommendations year after year, as appears in penitentiary reports, and had those recommendations been acted upon I am quite sure we would have avoided the greatest part of the difficulty, such as the great fires at St. Vincent de Paul and Kingston penitentiaries. Possibly the riots would have been avoided as well.

Let me now read to the house, in order to be perfectly fair, the changes which have taken place either very close to or since the time of the riots:

1. No corporal punishment until after the evidence has been taken under oath and award approved by superintendent.
2. Shackling to cellgate abolished.
3. Standardization of a minimum period of exercise in the fresh air for convicts employed in shops or cells—half systematic and half free movement.
4. Increased visits of relatives. Letters by convicts increased from one to three letters a month, but only to close relatives which shuts off many.
5. Close cropping of hair abolished except in the case of convicts who had previously escaped from a penal institution.
6. Introduction of compulsory education for teachable illiterate convicts, school to be carried on during working hours.
7. Silence rule broken—can talk from cell to cell until 7 p.m.

I notice that Superintendent Ormond recommends against the continuance of the talking principle. I read very carefully the list of recommendations and reports of Superintendent Ormond, as well as his special report on the riots. He condemns almost wholly the conduct of Warden Smith and Deputy Warden Walsh. That is, he laid a very great deal of blame—whether the blame should have been laid there or not I do not know—upon Warden Smith and Deputy Warden Walsh. I recall that last winter when the Minister of Justice was talking on this subject he placed almost all the blame for the disturbances at the door of the communists. I dislike them intensely, probably more than the Minister of Justice does.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Miss MACPHAIL: Oh yes, I do.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: What about this syphilitic fellow you are talking about?

Miss MACPHAIL: I will let you deal with that. I dislike the philosophy and technique of communism, but because I do dislike it and because I never want communists to become a force in Canada I have always argued and voted in favour of eliminating section 98 of the criminal code, because I do think the way we are going about to get rid of communism is not British and is non-effective. It would not matter so much if it were not British, but it is non-effective. The first thing we know we will have Tim Buck associations all over the country. I disagree with the government, yes, but certainly not because I have any use for communism. I do feel that some of the methods used in dealing with communists were about the worst methods which could have been used under the circumstances.

I should like again to refer to the judgment of Judge Deroche, because after all it is as authentic as anything we can get. He says at the bottom of page six:

> The crime of which I find Kirkland guilty is punishable with seven years' imprisonment. I do not intend to give him seven years. The riot itself was not as serious as it might have been. The men were in full charge that afternoon for some length of time. The warden and staff had lost control completely. The men could have destroyed property at will, and could have done personal violence to the warden officers and guards. They might, I think practically all have escaped if they had desired, but, generally speaking, no attempt was made to do any of these things as such. More than that, the leaders, or perhaps I should say the speakers, as they deny being leaders, the speakers at least restrained the men from doing any violence or injury, and so far as Kirkland is concerned, he obeyed that order, possibly gave the order himself.

He goes on to say, and I quoted this on Saturday night but quote it again in view of what has been said:

> Then to go back to the cause of the riot. This peaceful demonstration which developed into a riot, was for the purpose of emphasizing the demands of the men for redress of certain grievances which had been long and repeatedly denied them.

This judgment was given on May 11, 1933, and the riots took place on October 17 and 20, 1932. Quoting again from the report:

> Many of the grievances for which this demonstration was staged have already been granted to the men, proving conclusively to my mind that those demands must have been reasonable.

That is the statement I have always made. But it took all this, the riot, Major Nickle's letter, whether it is correct in every detail or not, and Canon Scott's preaching about it and our talking about it in the house to get to the stage where remedies were applied.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It was all done before that—December 31, 1932.

Miss MACPHAIL: However, I have my own opinion in regard to the matter and it is as I have stated. The minister has referred to the British system. I have been reading the book to which he referred, The Modern English Prison, and anyone who reads that book will see that in many ways the British system is severe, and I think severity is a very good thing. It is justice that matters, not severity. I think that prisoners as well as children and adults can stand a good deal of severity if it is justly administered and if they respect the people who administer it. In reading this book, as the minister no doubt has, he must have found that a great deal is done in the English prisons to counteract the deadly influence mentally and physically on the prisoner of the monotony and the fear and all that goes to makes up prison life. They have, for instance, approved visitors who are allowed to go to the cells in the evenings of very well behaved prisoners and help them in various ways, by conversation and planning for their future and all sorts of things.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We allow that.

Miss MACPHAIL: Then at page 84, in regard to discipline, I read this:

> Reports for these offences can only be dealt with by the visiting committee, of whom not less than three, two being justices of the peace, must adjudicate, their inquiry being held on oath. If corporal punishment is ordered, the order must be submitted to the Secretary of State for confirmation, with the evidence. The committee may order other punishments within their powers in addition to or in lieu of the corporal punishment.

And then in relation to education the author goes on to show how much the British have improved their educational system within the prisons. I quote:

The prison authority still remains in a sense an educational authority; but the role it plays is not ambitious, and does not aim higher than to teach the illiterate to read and write, and in the small space an opportunity given, to raise to a higher standard those who are just a little better than illiterates.

He goes on to show that great change has been made. To quote further:

Five years later we read: "The adult education classes have shown some further development during the year under review. The number of classes held has increased and they have been attended by some 9,000 individual prisoners."

Quoting again:

This "Adult education scheme" was set up in 1923 with the advice and cooperation of the adult education committee of the board of education. Its aim is not, primarily to improve the "standard" of imperfectly educated prisoners, but to counteract the mental deterioration inevitably attendant on prison life, and to increase the prisoner's fitness for citizenship, by stimulating his mind and furnishing it with material for healthy activity in confinement, and of continuing value in after life. Evening classes are held in the prison after long hours of associated labour, and the subjects are chosen on the broadest basis to include not only "school" subjects such as history, mathematics, or modern languages, but "vocational" subjects such as shorthand, gardening, technical trade courses, or handicrafts,

And so on. In relation to care after discharge the author goes on to say that one of the greatest difficulties is the reestablishment of the man when he comes out of prison. No matter how much a man may want to learn a trade in prison, when he comes out he has not a trade at his finger ends that he has learned from beginning to end, and what knowledge the prisoner possesses of a trade is incomplete. The author goes on to say at pages 130 and 131 that in England they have set up a Federation of Northern and Midland Aid Societies which are partly voluntary organizations but partly governmental inasmuch as they receive a government grant for accepting responsibility for the prisoners returned to this area.

These are but three or four things from the British system which show how very much in advance they are to anything we have here.

I want to take one moment to speak of Lewis E. Lawes, warden of Sing Sing, who has written a very excellent book called Life and Death in Sing Sing, and in that he says much of what we all want. He says that when prisoners come in they are very carefully examined by psychiatrists, psychologists and medical men. He says:

These prisoners will be subjected to a period of observation and study by the administrative department in order that it may get a line on their general character, by the medical department for physical condition and disease, by the psychiatric clinic to ascertain their mentality, by the school for their education, by the industrial department for vocational ability, and by the chaplains for moral and religious ideas.

And further:

This work is now being done in part only, but each of the departments has been established and is now functioning. The last department, the psychiatric clinic, was started in 1927 and within a year was utilizing the services of a psychiatrist, assistant psychiatrist, psychologist, and two field investigators.

And then I quote from the last paragraph of his book:

From personal experience it is my firm belief that much of the recidivism (crime repeating) is due to the fact that the ten dollars which the state pays a prisoner upon release is insufficient with his other handicaps to enable him to get a real start.

He goes on to tell that he has made it his business as warden to give the men who needed it small loans and that in almost every case they have repaid the loan. He thinks that some assistance on the discharge of the prisoner is needed in order to get him reestablished again.

The minister has referred to the Canadian Prisoners Welfare Association, of which I am a member, but whose meetings I may say, in order I may not prejudice the minister, I have never attended. They say in their report:

In our experience very few penitents emerge from our penitentiaries, a fact which shows how signally our penitive system fails to correct and discipline.

On top of that we can take it from the superintendent's report that seventy-five per cent of our prison population have had previous convictions and over fifty per cent have served previous terms in a penitentiary.

That shows that the system we are using has not been good enough. It is not reclaiming as many men as I feel should be reclaimed, granting that twenty per cent are incorrigibles, using the superintendent's own figure, the highest figure that has been used by any investigating committee or royal commission report or penologist's statement I have read.

In closing I am going to make the following recommendations to the minister.

I think that the spirit of our penitentiaries should be one that seeks the reform of the convict rather than his punishment. The reform of the convict should be the aim of penitentiary administration, and to simplify this work the hardened, brutalized and dangerous prisoners, usually called incorrigibles, should serve an indeterminate sentence in one prison. According to the figures given by the Minister of Justice, the superintendent of penitentiaries and the investigation committees, their numbers in no case exceed 20 per cent of the prison population and were quoted as low as 5 per cent by the royal commission in 1914. I am sure it is higher now. My second recommendation is the appointment of a superintendent trained in penology. There should be no more political or military appointments. Then there should be a system of adequate training for officials and guards, either a central one for all the penitentiaries or a smaller one in each. I would suggest also the classification and segregation of prisoners. Nothing more than an attempt has been made in that direction. We should have too a medical officer with some training in psychiatry and a travelling medical superintendent with psychiatric specialty. There should be no mental defectives or mentally diseased in the penitentiaries, and there should be work with pay, for good work, even if the pay is small, as a bit of encouragement. I submit that there should be properly supervised work by which the inmates are taught a trade from the beginning to the end of that trade, instead of such instruction being as now so small that the prisoner cannot find any work when he gets out. Every inmate should be in school part of the time, school sessions being held morning, afternoon and evening, if necessary, to accomplish this. Those who are learning shoe repairing, for instance, should be taught the whole business or their instruction will be useless. In regard to the question of inmates attending school, much more time should be devoted to this purpose than until recently has been the case, and certainly it should not be only during the noon hour. Until recently the only time during which prisoners could receive instruction or listen to lectures was between the time they had their lunch and the time they went to work again, which could never be more than forty minutes and usually less.

There should be properly supervised physical recreation. I do not see how keeping a man in solitary confinement, in a prison of isolation or whatever you like to call it, for two years, with forty minutes out a day, will make a man of him. I do not think it will improve him. Then there should be non-compulsory church attendance but increased facilities for personal religious work for those who want it. It is contrary to the idea of religion to drive people to listen to sermons if they do not want to go, but under a proper policy in this regard, if they received the right sort of religious training, it is possible that after a while they would want to attend church services. At any rate, it would be better to have only those go to church who wanted to do so than to have them all go against their will.

Something is needed in the way of a sppervising travelling board for inspection and paroles, one of whom would be the travelling psychiatrist, as I have mentioned before. In this connection I wish to indicate the method used in New York state. The parole board there is composed of two prison officials, the state commissioner of correction and the warden of the prison in which the prisoner is confined, and a third man whose training and point of view are essentially social. This board, according to the laws of the state, is neither a political nor a philanthropic organization but is composed of practical men who understand the crime problem. Lastly, we shall never succeed in reclaiming prisoners until some assistance is given them on release, not necessarily monetary assistance, but aid through prisoners' welfare associations or a combination of voluntary and government bodies. There should be a group of citizens outside willing to give a helping hand, whether by way of a word of encouragement or a job or a loan or whatever it may be, to the man or woman who cannot get themselves reestablished in life. If we follow the constructive suggestions and undertake as rapidly as possible some of the things that are done in British prisons and in Sing Sing—and all these recommendations do not come from those two sources—we shall do a great deal to lessen the tremendous number who go back to penitentiary for a second, third and fourth term.

I do not want to say anything more now except that I feel that, all that has happened having happened, it is in the public interest to have an impartial investigation which in all probability will result in far-reaching recommendations that will change the spirit of our penitentiaries without necessarily lessening discipline. In the very nature of things discipline must be severe, but it can be just and I submit that it could be administered better than it has been up until nov

Mr. MULLINS: Inasmuch as my name was mentioned freely by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) and the Toronto Globe, I want to say a few words in regard to this matter. A headline in the Toronto Globe reads:

Nickle exposes "Cook's tour" prison visits.

Let me say to this committee that it was not two children who entered the prison gates but one was an outstanding clergyman of Toronto and myself, under an agreement to see whether the things that were mentioned in the letter read by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) existed or not. I said to my personal friend, the Rev. W. A. Cameron, "Let us go to this institution and see whether these things exist, and if they do I will let the chips fall in the House of Commons wherever they may; I will spare no one." We entered that institution, and why the visit of that reverend gentleman and myself should be heralded in the front page of that newspaper by Mr. Nickle I do not know. I do not know this man, but he suggests that I am a relative of General Ormond. Let me quote what is reported:

Sometimes one wonders why Mr. Mullins takes such an interest in penitentiary affairs by publishing that all is well at the Kingston penitentiary. Can it be that Mr. Daniel Ormond, by family ties, or otherwise, has an influence in Mr. Mullins' riding?

General Ormond has no relatives in my riding, nor am I in any way a relative of General Ormond, and that statement is like a lot of other statements made by this man Nickle from Kingston. On my visit to Kingston I said to the warden when I got inside the gate, "I want to see what I want to see, not what you want to show me," and he turned Mr. Cameron and myself loose in the penitentiary and said, "Go where you like, interview whom you like."

I came across several men there, men whom I happened to know from Manitoba, and one had been a school teacher; he had taught school in the northern part of Manitoba. I took him to one side and said to him, "I have known you a long time; can you give me some idea of what is going on in this institution? Is there anything wrong?" He replied that there was absolutely nothing wrong; there was the very best food and everything was all right. I went there entirely on behalf of the men who were incarcerated in that institution, and in the report I made to the Minister of Justice I asked him to substitute for the khaki uniform a blue suit, which might have a better effect on those inside the institution. I saw the best food that could be given any man on aluminum dishes that were afterwards washed. I asked the question particularly whether there were any contacts, whether the same dishes were used by men who were diseased. He told me positively no, and showed me the tub in which the dishes were washed and we satisfied ourselves along that line. We remained until supper time to see the men go by in cafeteria style. One of them had a dish, nearly as large as the aluminum tray they give you in the House of Commons cafeteria. It had four partitions and in one corner there was a splendid piece of roast beef; in another, cabbage; in another potatoes, and in another, prunes. Then on top of that was a nice currant bun, a large mug of tea and three ears of corn. That was the supper, and I would like to ask hon. members if they would want any better food than that. The food supply was of the very best.

All these statements that were made were made for some purpose and I came to the conclusion that they were made for political purposes. I see now that since the Minister of Justice has made his statement my hon. friends are modifying their attitude. So far as I was concerned, if there was anything wrong or any ill treatment of them, I was prepared to take the matter up strongly on the floor of this house. The people that are in those institutions are not Sunday school teachers. One of them came to me and gave me a story. He said that he had seen me in the penitentiary; he gave me a line of talk and out of sympathy I tried to get him a position. At that time I was in Toronto. I gave him all the money I had in my pocket. When I came to look up his record I found that I was up against one of the worst crooks ever in a penitentiary; he had more than eight convictions against him. This same gentleman played the same game with one of my hon. friends in the house whom I can see from where I am speaking, and got money from him in the same way. I looked into every detail in that institution solely on behalf of the men, and I can say, having seen prisons in England, that our prisoners are fed and taken care of and treated as well as any prisoners that can be found in any part of that country.

Mr. SANDERSON: I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) will not think I am endeavouring to delay prorogation. I would draw their attention to the fact that since three o'clock this afternoon I am the only member of the official opposition who has stood up to speak; the speaking has been done from the group in the corner to my left and from the government benches, but I feel that on this matter I should like to go on record and I shall be only a few minutes.

This question of the administration of penal institutions is a very vital one in the constituency that I have the honour to represent in this house. Starting about a year ago and continuing all summer and into the fall, perhaps I had more visitors, requests and correspondence in regard to the condition at Kingston penitentiary than in regard to any other question that was put before me. In the town in which I live the whole population seemed to be very much stirred up in connection with not only penal institutions in the dominion generally, but especially Kingston penitentiary. As a matter of fact, one of our most prominent citizens in the town in which I reside addressed to me through the local newspaper an open letter to which he asked me to reply, requesting that I put myself on record as to what I knew about conditions in Kingston penitentiary. This gentleman, as I said, is a prominent citizen, prominent not only in business but in church and social welfare life. I want to say to the Minister of Justice—and I am sorry I have not before me a copy of this gentleman's letter and of my reply thereto—that this person was not at all critical of the Minister of Justice or of the department or of the government. He was seeking the light in regard to conditions in Kingston penitentiary; perhaps he thought I might be able to throw some light on the question and he asked that I reply to his letter.

I did so, but I said that I had no more knowledge than any other citizen, of conditions in Kingston penitentiary, with this one exception, that perhaps I had had the privilege of hearing the debates in the House of Commons; that I had followed carefully the debates to which I had listened here and that I had followed carefully the letters of Doctor Withrow which appeared in the Toronto Globe last summer for many days perhaps for two months almost daily, and also the letters of those who had been drawn into the controversy, sent to the Globe and to the newspapers generally.

Hon. members will remember that starting perhaps a year ago now and continuing all summer and fall, the newspapers, especially of Ontario, had huge headlines every edition in regard to conditions in Kingston penitentiary. I said in my letter that I thought conditions in that or any other penitentiary in the dominion were from the very nature of such institutions more or less of a closed book and that they had to be and that the public did not know very much about them. In regard to the letters of Doctor Withrow I said that I did not know whether they were true or false, and the public would have to weigh the matter as carefully as they could, read the statements of Doctor Withrow and, if you like, of other ex-inmates of the penitentiary and compare them with reports of the superintendent and the warden at Kingston penitentiary and statements that had been made by the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross) in the house, by Mr. Nickle senior and Mr. Nickle junior. Even then I said—and I repeat it here this afternoon—that out of this conflict of opinion and of testimony or evidence, whatever you like to call it, nothing had come to clear the situation in regard to the administration of penal institutions in this country.

I claim that those who are unfortunate enough to commit a crime, are found guilty and are sent to a penal institution, are sent there for punishment and should be punished. On the other hand, what is done for them in the way of their daily routine, daily life and so on, should be humane. The great question is: Has any reform been instituted in our penitentiaries during the last few years? I am free to confess that after listening very carefully and with a good deal of interest to the statement made by the Minister of Justice this afternoon, I think it would have been better for him and the government and more satisfactory to the country if he had made that statement perhaps a year ago instead of delaying it to this late date. I do not want to go into the question of what happened on Saturday but I think it is a very fortunate thing for the Minister of Justice that the house did not prorogue on Saturday night and that he had the opportunity to make the statement he made this afternoon. However, I am not yet fully satisfied that the administration of the institution is as it should be. I have not much criticism of the superintendent, other than this, that it appears to me that if you get too many military men in control of the discipline in these institutions you have not always the right kind of men. Military discipline is all right during a war, but if you get certain types of officers and guards and wardens in attendance at these institutions, with the military system operating twenty-four hours a day, to my mind it is not the right system.

I do not want to detain the committee any longer. I would recommend to the Minister of Justice and to the government, as the hon. member for Southeast Grey and one or two others have said, and as I said in my letter about a year ago to the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Deslauriers), that a royal commission or some sort of commission be appointed to investigate thoroughly, without bias or prejudice, no matter who was hurt by the evidence that came out, and go to the bottom of the whole matter of the administration of our penal institutions. I think the public want it; I think they are demanding it and will not be satisfied if they do not get it. In all seriousness I would recommend to the Minister of Justice that he take that matter into his serious consideration. We have had a lot of royal commissions; we have had them without any demand for them at all from the public, but very great numbers of men and women in Canada have a suspicion that things are not right in these institutions, and the only way to set their minds at rest is by a thorough and honest investigation through a royal commission or some kind of commission that will go to the bottom of the matter without fear or favour.

Mr. YOUNG: The minister's explanation has been satisfactory at many points. There is however, one matter that he has not properly cleared up, and that is the shooting into the cell of Tim Buck. If Tim Buck stood in the door of his cell, as the minister said, encouraging the rioters, it might have been possible to send a rifle bullet into the open door without touching Tim Buck. But I do not think that would have been possible with a shotgun. At that distance and that angle pellets from a shotgun would scatter sufficiently to make it almost impossible for any man to stand in the open door without being hit. The fact that Tim Buck was not hit indicates to me that he was not in the doorway. If he were in the doorway it was a very serious matter for anyone to attempt to shoot with a shotgun through that door to frighten or silence him. To my mind that is a serious matter that should be cleared up. No guard who would do that should be entrusted with firearms at all. While I am on this point may I say that in Montreal a year or two ago we had a case of a policeman shooting down a man without justification, and in Saskatchewan two or three years ago we had mounted policemen shooting over the heads of rioters to frighten them and sending bullets through the walls of houses and wounding an innocent person. It is time we were taking steps to be sure that firearms are not entrusted to those who are inclined to lose their heads.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Expenses of committees, etc.—further amount required, $140,000.

Clerical assistance, etc.—further amount required, $20,000.

Publishing debates, including salaries of amanuenses, etc.—further amount required, $20,000.

Estimates of the Sergeant-at-Arms—to provide for the appointment of J. A. MacKinnon as chief parliamentary messenger and housekeeper, at $2,220 per annum, from April 1, 1934, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, or amendments thereto, $1,998.

To provide for the full sessional indemnity to members of the House of Commons—days lost through absence caused by illness, official public business, or on account of death during the present session—notwithstanding anything to the contrary in chapter 147 of the revised statutes, 1927, an act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, or any amendment thereto. Payments to be made as the treasury board may direct, $21,000.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Hon. members will realize that I am not rising to object to expenses of committees or to clerical assistance for the publishing of debates, much less to that part of the item which provides for sessional indemnity to members of the House of Commons. My objection is directed to that part of the item which reads as follows:

Estimates of the Sergeant-at-Arms—to provide for the appointment of J. A. MacKinnon as chief parliamentary messenger and housekeeper, at $2,220 per annum, from April 1, 1934, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, or amendments thereto.

In the session of 1927 in the estimates of the House of Commons the chairman of the committee included this item in the estimates:

To hereby appoint ... notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act or amendments thereto.

Taking very strong objection to that, the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said as reported on page 2540 of Hansard, these words, which I wish to appropriate:

This is a disagreeable thing to stand up and speak about; yet in the very nature of things we must see to it that the House of Commons shall not become an instrument of injustice to its servants.

Those words I desire to appropriate as an introduction to the few remarks I have to make on this measure, reserving the quotation of further words from the speech that the hon. gentleman made at that time. Now this is a position which is classified under the Civil Service Act. I hold in my hand at the moment my draft copy of the report of the civil service committee of 1923 in which I find these words:

Your committee is of the opinion that the two fundamental principles of the Civil Service Act are the merit system and the system of promotion by competitive examinations and that both those principles must be maintained.

This is the original draft that I handed to Mr. Malcolm at the time. I find these words reported verbatim in the report of the committee's deliberations. Therefore as one who was to some extent responsible for the introduction of those words into this report I cannot countenance the appointment of anyone either in the house or to any other public service without the application of the civil service law whenever that is possible. This position was filled for many years by a Mr. Boudreault. He was here from the time the house opened after confederation. He was superannuated some time ago. The position is one that is classified under the Civil Service Act; one will find it in the classification to the edition of 1930. He is called the chief parliamentary messenger and housekeeper. The description of the position is as follows:

Chief parliamentary messenger and housekeeper.

Definition of class:—

Under the Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Commons, to direct and supervise the work of employees in attendance during sessions on officers and members of the houses of parliament and also of carpenters, doorkeepers, charwomen, and other employees; for to be responsible for the moving and placing of furniture and fittings as directed by the Sergeant-at-Arms; to act as housekeeper for the House of Commons; to have charge of cleaning and other household supplies; during recess to supervise the work of parliamentary messengers engaged in simple routine clerical work; and to perform other related work as required.

Qualifications: Primary school education; some knowledge of parliamentary routine; preferably a knowledge of both English and French; supervisory ability; tact, discretion, and good address.

And the annual compensation is set out. The Civil Service Act is quite clear in regard to promotion. Section 49 says:

Promotion shall be made for merit by the commission upon such examination, reports, tests, records, ratings or recommendations as the commission may by regulation prescribe.

Subsection 3 of the same section says:

In making promotions, the commission may, by regulation restrict the competition by merit to all employees or to employees of certain class or classes of a specified seniority, and may prescribe the marks or ratings to be obtained by such employees for efficiency and seniority, such marks or ratings not to exceed one-half of the total marks required under any merit system or method adopted by the commission for promotion purposes.

Under the Civil Service Act certain regulations have been made, and I quote from one of these regulations appearing at page 16 of the Civil Service Regulations of Canada, 1934:

Promotion is a change from one class to another class with a higher maximum compensation, and vacancies shall be filled, as far as is consistent with the best interests of the civil service, by promotion.

Promotions shall be made for merit by the commission upon such examination, reports, tests, records, ratings or recommendations as the commission may by regulation prescribe.

But rule 56 reads:

Requisitions for the filling of vacancies in permanent positions in the service shall include a statement from the deputy head of the department as to whether or not, in his opinion, it is consistent with the best interests of the service that the vacancy in question should be filled by promotion, and, if so, to what groups or classes the competition should be restricted.

I submit that in this case Mr. Speaker has failed to follow the regulations of the civil service commission, particularly in that there has been no recommendation made as to whether or not in his opinion it is consistent with the best interests of the service that this position should be exempted from the operation of the civil service law. This position might well be filled through promotion. No one knows better than the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) that there are employees who have been here for twenty years or more, and who served as understudies to Mr. Boudreault before his retirement. I must protest most energetically against this further encroachment upon the merit system. This position is not such that it cannot be filled consistently from within the ranks. On many occasions I have unhesitatingly stated that it might be well to go outside a certain department at certain times to select men of certain high technical ability when such men cannot be found within the service, but here there was no need for Mr. Speaker to defeat the civil service law by endeavouring to appoint this man in a roundabout way, by putting this item in the estimates. I have no quarrel with this gentleman; I know nothing of his merits, but I say there is no defence for this action on the part of the Speaker. There are other people in the service whose merits ought to be recognized. I think it is a sad thing, after having made a law, that we should endeavour to break it as often as possible. It is quite true that parliament is supreme; we can do as we please with the Civil Service Act, but if we are to break that act at every opportunity why not be fair and say we will repeal it?

This session we had a civil service committee which sat for many days and laboured long and diligently. A report was presented. I was rather proud of that report, which received the encomiums of a number of newspapers, and with which the civil servants were highly pleased. Now, however, it appears that no action is to be taken on it. That is rather discouraging to those who have supported this act.

I do not think I can do better than quote the words of the right hon. Prime Minister of to-day, then the leader of the opposition, on April 14, 1927. He said:

> We as law makers should not be law breakers. As those who framed the civil service law of the country we should not be the first to break it. Our right to ignore the act is undoubted, but the exercise of that power is injurious to the people of this country—

The right hon. gentleman used those words on an occasion absolutely on all fours with this occasion.

> I do not believe the Prime Minister would consider that justice was being done by the selection of one or two of these officials to the exclusion of others who, to the certain knowledge of the oldest members of the house, have greater claims.

The right hon. member for Argenteuil knows what I mean.

> This is a disagreeable thing to stand up and speak about; yet in the very nature of things we must see to it that the House of Commons shall not become an instrument of injustice to its servants. The Speaker may err in his selections, because we have striking evidence over his own signature of his strong partisanship in the removal of thirty-four postmasters in Gaspe.

With all due deference to His Honour let me say that if that statement was true he has followed nobly in the footsteps of his predecessor. Of all those whom I succeeded in having appointed when I came to the house, as vacancies occurred through illness or dismissals for cause, only a corporal's guard remain. I should say that Mr. Speaker has followed very well indeed in the footsteps of his predecessor in this respect. The records will show that when the time came for me to make these appointments in 1926 I was not responsible for the removal of one man, one woman or one page boy. The replacements I had appointed filled vacancies created on the instructions of superior officers; as these men, women or boys became inefficient or died or were removed for cause, the vacancies were filled. Then I should like to quote the concluding words of the present Prime Minister:

> Men in high, responsible positions may sometimes become partisans and it is because of that fact that I rise now, as my last act at this session—

See how history repeats itself.

> —to protest against this injustice which is being done deserving public servants through discrimination. I ask the house, regardless of politics, to assert our ancient authority—which is ours, and not the Speaker's—and to determine that we who have made the laws will not break them. That is all I intend to say regarding this matter.

As a result Mr. Robb then said:

> I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Dunning, that in item 452 all the words after "hereby appointed" down to and including "or amendments thereto" be struck out, and that the item be reduced by $13,500.

My advice to Mr. Speaker is that he would be well advised to follow the same line of conduct that was followed on that occasion.

Hon. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): As Speaker of the house perhaps with propriety I may say a word or two on this item. It is true that the civil service commission has the power to make such an appointment, but it is also true that this house has power to make the appointment. By investing authority in the civil service commission the government is not divested of the power of making such appointments. The office of chief parliamentary messenger and housekeeper is one peculiarly under the House of Commons and under the Speaker. Under the Sergeant at Arms that officer is responsible for the furniture, fittings and movable property of the house. He oversees the parliamentary messengers and the char service. He sees that this chamber, the corridors and the peace tower are all kept clean and in order, giving particular attention to members' rooms. I am sure there is not a member of the house who will not acknowledge that they have had splendid service from the man who has been acting in this capacity for the last couple of years. On his staff as messengers he has upholsterers, carpenters, joiners, painters, paperhangers and so on. The work of reupholstering the furniture of this house is done here, on these premises, and is not sent out at very great expense as was the custom in former times. During the recess the walls and ceilings of many rooms are cleaned and retinted at very small expense. Close attention is paid to purchasing. Wholesale rates, with special discounts for the government, are arranged, and to my knowledge in the two or three years the man has been here he has actually saved this government and country thousands of dollars, by handling the position in a businesslike way.

Speaking of the appointee, personally, may I say that he is a Nova Scotian. He is a returned soldier with a splendid war record. Enlisting as a private, he was promoted in France to the rank of captain, and went up to be a most efficient quartermaster. He was the quartermaster of the first machine gun brigade in France and went through some of the worst fighting of the war as one of the most efficient quartermasters in the Canadian Expeditionary Force. He has fulfilled the duties of his office most satisfactorily, and I am sure hon. members will agree with what I say. This is peculiarly an appointment by the House of Commons and I ask hon. members to support me and to make the appointment permanent, as this is a perfectly legal way of doing it. There are precedents for it. The matter might be referred to the civil service commission; they would set a written examination, the success of the applicant under which would in no respect be a definite indication of his fitness. You might get a round plug in a square hole; nine times out of ten you do, on civil service examinations.

We have here a practical and an efficient man who, as I say, has been fulfilling the duties of the position for a couple of years. He is quite competent to fill the job, and I ask the house to support me in the appointment.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I move in amendment that item No. 291 be reduced by $1,997.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to say a few brief words in support of the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier). I listened to Mr. Speaker state the qualifications of the person appointed to this position. I do not know the individual, but assuming his qualifications are as good as has been stated by Mr. Speaker, I must add we have not heard the qualifications of individuals who because of seniority and equally faithful service may be entitled to this position. It is quite true that the civil service commission can make an appointment, and that the government has the right to proceed in the present manner. I suggest however we should not lose sight of the fact that the civil service commission was created to deal with matters of this kind, and it was found through experience that the civil service commission could deal with these matters better than the government. If it is true, as Mr. Speaker, suggests, that nine times out of ten the civil service commission make wrong appointments, then surely it is time the legislation creating the commission was repealed, and the commission done away with. I do not think however that any member of the government would substantiate the statement made by Mr. Speaker. I think it has been shown on many occasions that the civil service commission is better qualified to make the appointments than is the government or the head of any governmental department. When discussing the central bank legislation the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) referred to the difficulty of carrying on the administration of the country without political interference. I suggest that if we want to get away from political interference we should not put ourselves in the position of taking appointments away from a body in charge of that work, and doing it through political interference. We ought to try to impress upon the Canadian people that we want to administer our affairs without political bias. We cannot do that if we allow appointments of this kind to be made.

Mr. BENNETT: The House of Commons claims the right to appoint its own housekeeper. As to whether or not that is sound I am not at the moment going to express an opinion, beyond this, that the Speaker of this chamber made a recommendation to the government as to who should be appointed housekeeper. The government assumes the responsibility for the item as it appears in the estimates.

Amendment (Mr. Chevrier) negatived.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have no intention to oppose this item of the estimates of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), which provides for the indemnifying of farmers or owners for the loss resulting from disease or death among their cattle. Nothing must be spared to help out our farmers, especially in this difficult period through which we are passing. I simply wish to express my regret that the government did not think fit to grant to the hon. Minister of Agriculture all the necessary funds to carry on the tuberculin test of herds especially in the sections set apart as restricted areas. For a few years past, the district of L'Assomption has been organized as a restricted area, however the work in connection with the test was not proceeded with, because the government did not place the necessary funds at the disposal of the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

However, I must complain of the fact that the test, which was neglected in L'Assomption, was carried out in other sections set apart as restricted areas, after that of my district. I refer to the districts of Argenteuil and Two Mountains. I admit that certain considerations must have been invoked since both counties are represented by ministers of the crown. I do not envy them; though, on behalf of the farmers of my district, I cannot help protesting against the discrimination shown in favour of these two counties. I trust the government will welcome with the same good grace the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé), when he insists on having a deputy postmaster general of the same race appointed, as the one who retired recently. I cannot too strongly insist that the utmost consideration be given to these good farmers which I represent and, particularly, to the milk producers of my county who cannot dispose of their dairy products in Montreal unless the test of their cattle has been carried out by the Department of Agriculture, according to the system known as the restricted area.

As I wish to have an immediate and precise reply from the hon. minister, I shall plainly put the following question in his own mother tongue, so as not to annoy him too much.

I desire to know from the honourable minister if I can be assured that the farmers in the zone of L'Assomption-Montcalm, at least those who are prevented from carrying on their trade in milk products, in Montreal, on account of their herds not having been tested, will have their herds tested, on special request, and enjoy the benefits of the zone system?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There have been many requests to have herds tested which we have dealt with and we should be only too glad to take into consideration the request of my hon. friend.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Would the minister state what new cold storage plants he has in mind, if any, to warrant this additional outlay?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The hon. member will appreciate that we have a number of applications in but we are not in a position to say which ones will be approved. This estimate is to make provision for those that are approved.

Mr. DONNELLY: On March 28 last I asked the minister a question with regard to his horse policy. My reason for asking the question was that I found in the Brandon Free Press of January 12, 1934, a report on the minister's horse club policy in which it is stated:

> In addition a definite improvement scheme has already started and which is to be featured by the purchasing of as many young stallions of the three draught breeds as possible, which horses will be placed at the experimental farm stations or other selected institutions to breed, free of charge, mares of approved quality and conformation, the object being to get approved breeding stock in greater quantity.

There was no mention made of this in the answer which I received, and I would ask the minister if this policy has been put in operation.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes it is in operation and will be extended to include other purchases.

Mr. DONNELLY: Are any horses being bought under that scheme?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The horses that have been purchased previously and are owned by the different stations are being used under this scheme, and in addition we have purchased four.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Referring to question number eight standing on the order paper under the name of Mr. Boulanger, and in view of the dismissal of Doctor Auguste Pepin, and in view also of the constant rumour that the seed laboratory in Montreal will be transferred to Ottawa or closed, would the minister be kind enough to assure us that this laboratory will be continued in Montreal because it is very useful to the farmers of the province of Quebec.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is no intention to move this laboratory from Montreal to Ottawa.

Item agreed to.

To provide for gratuities to former members of the pension tribunal and the federal appeal board, subject to allocation by the treasury board, $100,000.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I notice this is to provide for gratuities to former members of the pension tribunal and the federal appeal board, subject to allocation by the treasury board. In the last pensions committee of which I have the honour to be a member I took a very strong view in regard to what would happen to the rest of the staff. I notice that the former members of the pension tribunal and the federal appeal board are receiving consideration and I would ask if some consideration is not to be given to the members of the staff who were not fortunate enough to be in the higher categories.

Mr. BENNETT: The whole matter has received very careful consideration and the language of the privy council judgment in the Reilly case is the basis of this item. It is not probable that the whole of this item will be used but the suggestion on the other hand is that owing to the action taken by parliament there should be some compensation given to those who had an appointment for a given length of time and were deprived of it by the statute. The hon. gentleman has seen the judgment and realizes that it is the basis of this item.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Air Force—
Further amount required, $125,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On May 22 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if any undertaking had been given by the Canadian government to the British government with regard generally to an empire defence policy and with regard particularly to aviation, and the Prime Minister replied, "The answer is no." I notice that a few days ago with regard to the breaking up of the disarmament conference Lord Londonderry said:

His Majesty's government therefore have decided they can no longer delay the steps that are necessary to provide adequately for the air defence of these shores.

He went on to say that there was the closest relationship as regards personnel between the air force and the sister services in the dominion; that exchanges of junior officers operated at present with Canada and Australia, and that both Canada and Australia maintain liaison officials in London who "had full access to all the information at the air ministry which might be of assistance to their respective governments." In view of the recent decision of the Secretary of State for air to increase the air force of Great Britain I would ask the Prime Minister if any commitments have been arrived at between this dominion and the motherland with regard to air defence.

Mr. BENNETT: No commitments have been made, but the statement made by Lord Londonderry is an absolutely accurate statement as I understand it. The great facilities and the wide knowledge and experience of the British air force have been made available for Canadians through the means he mentions, and our officers have been constantly in communication with the British air force and learning from them everything they were possessed of in the way of knowledge and information.

I should like to say, however, that we are engaged in looking very carefully into the question of the transport of mails in which it is obvious that both the British and Canadian governments have a very close and allied interest. The movement of mails from the northern part of Great Britain and Ireland to Newfoundland, and from Newfoundland across the northern half of this continent and thence to China and Japan, is a matter that has been engaging the attention of the officials of the air force for many months. I heard a very distinguished air man say in Great Britain a few months ago that he believed within the next five years there would be a regular air service. But the question to which the hon. gentleman is directing attention is not a question that has been the subject matter of discussion or arrangement further than what has been carried on in the past few years since we have been afforded the opportunity of securing training and an exchange of officers in the navy, the army, and the air.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The construction of landing fields to which I made reference a year or so ago has no definite significance?

Mr. BENNETT: It has definite significance, of course, as regards civil aviation, and I need hardly say to the hon. gentleman that such fields will always be available if the necessity should arise for their use for any other purpose that might affect the defence of this country.

Item agreed to.

MAIL SUBSIDIES AND STEAMSHIP SUBVENTIONS

Additional amount required to provide for ocean and coastal subsidies, and to assist in the carriage of lumber from Churchill to the United Kingdom, $209,036.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Can the minister tell me what investigation is made into the financial standing of companies asking for steamship subventions?

Mr. STEVENS: In view of the circumstances obtaining at this stage of the session might I ask my hon. friend to be good enough to use the information we have placed at his disposal. I do not think it would be fair to the rest of the house for himself and me to discuss these questions back and forth, because I placed at his disposal all the information we had in the department, without reservation. I was in hopes that he could make his statement on the information supplied him. I am not inclined to refuse the fullest information but it would be better for him to make his statement on the basis of what we have submitted to him.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There was no information placed before me as to the representations that were made to my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: The whole file was placed before the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Am I to understand then that there was no statement by anybody with regard to the financial standing of this particular company?

Mr. STEVENS: No, my hon. friend knows that the contrary is true. The department did make some inquiries and I was under the impression that my hon. friend knew that fully. It was on the file and there was no hesitation in giving him the widest access to it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What was the information as to the standing of the company?

Mr. STEVENS: I am in a quandary how far I can quote. Any information we got from one of the mercantile companies is more or less confidential. There is no objection to giving it, but I question very frankly whether it is fair to Duns or Bradstreets or one of the commercial agencies to produce in the house statements made by them regarding the affairs of a private company. I do not think it is ever done in the house, nor do I think there is any object to be gained by reading it. I will send across to my hon. friend what I have here; it was on the files.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: Were any representations made to my hon. friend, apart from this, as to the standing of the company?

Mr. STEVENS: I presume that what he is now asking about is a letter from one of the members of the house, but that also he knows about. I cannot recall any others.

Mr. CANTLEY: The important thing is that the people have the facilities and the experience and are able to carry out the contract.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If that had been so it would have been important to the people I represent, but unfortunately nothing was further from the fact. What I want to call attention to is this. In February, 1931 a company known as the Richelieu Corporation was incorporated under letters patent, and a little later they had their provisional directors' meeting, when the setup of the company was made. Let me first of all point out who comprised the company. Mr. Richardson, who, at a meeting three days after the provisional directors' meeting, was made president of the company, was doing business in Montreal. He had formerly been unfortunate in business, was not successful, and had gone into bankruptcy some years before. Associated with him was Mr. James McDonnell, who ran a produce supply company. Mr. McDonnell was also somewhat known to the Department of Trade and Commerce, as I see by the file that he had taken part, not a creditable part, in some shipments of hay some years before and also in shipments of horses to Rotterdam in 1931. The records of the department show that he was not a man of standing in the department. The man associated with them and who apparently was the guiding spirit in the matter was Mr. E. A. D. Morgan, barrister. He apparently guided the company. When the set-up came it was this. Mr. Richardson had taken shares of the company for practically $20,000. In exchange for this he had shares in a concern known as Canadian International Corporation. I am told that these shares were worthless at the time. That is the finding of the auditors who have looked into the matter. So that we have Mr. Richardson owning all the company, with no investment except these worthless shares—that is, all the stock in one company that was of no value purchased by stock in another company which was of no value—and they started under their charter to do various things, such as dealing in live stock, canning operations and the operation of vessels. They carried on without much success, and I believe the auditor's report of September 30, 1932, shows that they had gone back $4,000 at that time from what they had when they started which was nothing. It is only fair to say that some money belonging to Mr. Richardson had been put in to keep the company going, but all the moneys received, including $13,000 from Mr. Richardson himself, $3,100 for sale of this stock, 31 shares, and what money had been paid out, left them at that time something like over $4,000 behind.

If one will look at the set-up of the company, it is quite apparent it never was one that was in a position to carry on business that needed any capital to carry it on. On September 30, 1933, they had gone behind about $9,000 more. In the meantime complaints had been made that they were dealing in cattle and a letter was sent by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Golding) to which he will himself refer, but I want to give just an extract from it. On October 12 the hon. member for South Huron sent to the minister a letter containing a paragraph which I shall read. It was with regard to a man by the name of Scotchmer who had been dealing with this company. He told of Mr. Scotchmer's difficulties; that they had agreed to transfer these cattle for $27 a head; that they were charging $32 a head, several dollars more than any one else in the business, for shipment to the old land, and when Mr. Scotchmer objected, apparently he received a threat of libel. This is one paragraph in the letter of the member for South Huron:

> I believe Mr. Scotchmer when taking this matter up with this company, received a letter threatening him with libel, which would appear to be a pretty high-handed piece of work. If you desire, I will obtain a copy of this letter for you.
> As far as I can learn Mr. Scotchmer estimates his loss on this shipment at around $800 or $900.

He says that there are a number of splendid cattle in the vicinity.

> I will appreciate it very much if you could, through your department, make an investigation into this matter and advise me what action is being taken to protect the shipper in matters of this kind.

He also gave a summary of the case which was enclosed with that letter. That summary describes the boat Glentworth as a ship that was not seaworthy with its engines in the condition they were in, and after leaving Halifax on a trip which it made on May 5, 1933, it could proceed at only half speed and did not arrive at Birkenhead until May 24. He stated that the vessel should never have been permitted to leave Montreal, not being in seaworthy condition on the one hand, and the accommodation for cattle being badly arranged and much overcrowded on the other hand.

In final result, instead of the cost of freight, transportation, feed, commissions and so forth being $27 per head, they brought what the company sought to charge Mr. Scotchmer up to $32 a head.

That was on October 12. There was also in the department certain correspondence which I shall not at the present time take up the time of the committee by referring to at length, which indicated that Mr. McDonnell, who was managing director of the company, had had previous difficulties in connection with the shipment—it was only a small shipment, it is true—of some horses to Rotterdam and also in connection with some hay business in which he had been engaged. On October 18 an amount of $7,000 was advanced to this company by the Department of Trade and Commerce to carry on the operations of the steamship Neiderholm.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is not stating that correctly. There was given to this company as to many others a grant for the installation of stalls for cattle in two ships—that is all; nothing more—on the condition that they make at least three trips, I think, in one case, and five in the other.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The grant was $7,000 on October 18 to the Neiderholm and on November 7, $5,004 to the Glentworth, the ship about which the hon. member for South Huron had complained. That was for fitting up stalls on the Glentworth and on the Neiderholm, but it seems to me rather remarkable because part of the complaint of the hon. member for South Huron in his letter of October 12th was that the fittings were not suitable, so I assume at that time there were fittings on the steamship Glentworth—

Mr. STEVENS: They were done under the British Board of Trade regulations.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —because this was referring to a shipment that had been made in May. These boats carried on. Might I just give the committee an idea of the financial standing of the company from time to time?

On May 5, 1933, they had in the bank an overdraft of $10,729.18. On the same day there was a deposit, which I understand was from farmers' cattle sent in to them, of $23,000. That left them to the good an amount of $12,270.83. On May 23 there was an overdraft of $10,710.83, and they received a deposit of $17,477.47, leaving a balance of $6,766.64. On July 3 they had an overdraft of $11,020.80 and they received a deposit of $7,640, which left them with an overdraft of $3,380.80. On July 7 they seem to have got a deposit of $22,826. I am told that as nearly as can be found out by the auditors those deposits appear to have all been received in this way; that is, farmers would ship cattle to them; a bill of lading would in many cases, prior to about the early part of October, be made out and the money, whatever balance was coming to the farmer, be sent back to him.

But about that time there came a change in the arrangements by which the farmers entrusted the cattle to them and the company drew against the farmers' cattle, put the money into the bank and the farmers were paid when more cattle were sold and the money came in. The condition on December 5 was that on that morning they had an overdraft of $12,394.22. A deposit came in of $31,164.94 from cattle that were being shipped on the Neiderholm. That vessel was going out on December 5. That left them a balance of about $18,000 to the good but this was of course the money of the people who had sent them their cattle on consignment to sell and to account to them for the proceeds. On February 1, with very few of the people who had sent cattle on the Neiderholm being paid, they had an overdraft of $24,605.56. Then came a deposit, which I think came from other cattle because they were still carrying on, of $9,957.81. Apparently no care was exercised; the auditors state and it is only fair to say, that these figures are more or less the best that the auditors can get from the books. A number of the books and documents are not now available; it would involve great expense to examine them, and there is no money in the concern to pay that expense so it is difficult to say just what the exact state of affairs is. But this is clearly established, that from the day this company received, if not before they received the money from the government, they were putting into their own account moneys received from the farmers who shipped these cattle. The difficulty is that Mr. McDonnell, who has already been referred to, was buying some cattle on his own account or under the produce supply company's account, and of course that was paid out of the proceeds from the farmers' cattle. Mr. Morgan bought sixty-three head of cattle, so Mr. Richardson states, and those cattle were paid for from this account. The result is that in the counties of Essex, Kent, Middlesex, Elgin, Oxford, Perth, Huron and some of the other counties in that district about $40,000 worth of cattle have been sent down and no money paid for them. The farmers have been robbed. I find it difficult in discussing this matter to refrain from using very strong terms. They sent their cattle to these people to sell for them expecting them to account for the proceeds, and they have not received that money to the extent of approximately $40,000.

It is impossible now to have an examination of the boat, one of the assets that the company in bankruptcy claims is still of some value. They started scrapping that boat on which this $7,000 of government money was expended in 1933, some months ago. That is our information. It belonged to this one-man company, Krogstadt and Company I think is the name—some man in Sweden—and it is quite impossible to get encouragement from any source to believe that there is any possibility of getting anything out of them on the guarantees in the charter party. The charter party apparently was arranged by a man named Harland, who, Mr. Richardson told us on the examination at the time the creditors were there, represented in obtaining the lease for the Richelieu company both the Richelieu company and the owners of the boat. It is quite impossible now to say for certain that anything can be obtained from that source. These farmers feel that they were misled by the stories that came from the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of Agriculture. Just here may I say it is difficult for me to understand why the equipment of boats for cattle, which is a matter for the Department of Agriculture, should be carried out by the Department of Trade and Commerce. I should like to know from the Minister of Agriculture, because I see him here, whether he recommended these people or recommended the fitting out of either of these old tubs to carry cattle. I would like to know what inquiries were made to ascertain the standing of this company, why they should be given a bonus to fit out boats when they were without any capital, thousands of dollars in the red when the bonus was given—why that should be done is something I would like an explanation of.

But the thing that affects me and the people in my section of the country most seriously is that we shall have at least twenty of the best farmers anywhere in Canada made bankrupt as a result of this affair. There is no question about that. These men and women who have been toiling to look after the cattle and feed them, who tried to grasp at any market that they could get, have lost that money, and of course anyone who knows anything about the cattle business knows that the cattle men, in common with almost all who are connected with agriculture in recent years, have had to do their utmost to keep one jump ahead of the bailiff and the tax collector. Then comes this additional blow, and some of the money has been borrowed to enable them to carry on while these cattle were being finished. The banks are threatening to sue them for what they owe, and it will mean putting a number of these men off their farms. I say to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the government—and I am glad to see here at any rate two of the members of the government from the province of Ontario and some from Quebec, because some Quebec people have suffered severely as a result of this company—that I realize it is impossible for the head of any department or perhaps the officers of any department to know everything about all the people with whom they have to deal. I know the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce are sympathetic; I have not learned the opinions of other hon. gentlemen with regard to the matter, but they suggest that there is no provision for meeting a case of this kind. The question is asked: Why did the farmers entrust these cattle to people they did not know? I would answer that by asking: Is the government any more justified than the farmers in trusting a company to the extent of $13,000 to equip boats for them.

If it were not for the great urgency of this matter to the people affected by it I would not trespass upon the time of the house at all at this hour in the session; I am not much addicted to taking up the time of the house. But from some source or other, during the months when these boats were being fitted out and these cattle being sent, literature was circulated through the whole country, mostly newspaper reports, and a good deal of it apparently came from the Montreal Star. Let me give you one paragraph as an indication of what was going out to these people to show how safely they could trust this company because the government was behind it. This is from the Montreal Star, containing a special cable by J. E. Poole, resident correspondent in London, dated London, November 21. I am not going to trouble the house with all of it; I should be very glad to place it on the table or hand it to my hon. friend, but it contains these words:

> The connections of the company with Montreal and the Canadian west, as well as its contact with the Canadian government, are extremely satisfactory.

It goes on to say that the opening ceremony in connection with the new lairages that were to create a new heaven and a new earth in the cattle world would take place about the middle of December, and that it was likely that Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, who left Montreal for England a few days previously, would be present. Then it goes on:

Mr. Richardson—

He was the president.

> —paid a very warm tribute to the work of Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, the Prime Minister, and to Mr. Stevens in doing everything possible to promote this movement of Canadian cattle to London. He added that thanks were owing to the vice-president of the Richelieu Corporation, James McDonnell, for unremitting efforts in connection with the scheme for the past two years. He recalled that Mr. McDonnell was a co-director with Mr. Bennett on the board of the old Calgary stock yard.

In the same paper, under date of December 28, just about the time this one shipment arrived and before other shipments arrived in London, another special cable appeared, by J. E. Poole, resident correspondent:

> Only a few of the Canadian cattle that arrived at the Tilbury docks yesterday remain unsold—

It goes on to say that there was a notable attendance of big buyers and that the cattle brought from £17 10s., or about $87.50, to £22 10s. or about $112.50 per head. It adds that despite the long voyage the animals gained in weight, and then proceeds:

> I am informed that a thousand could have been sold, and it is hoped that in the future there will be arrivals of from one thousand to two thousand weekly. Quick sales and good prices are certain if the quality is maintained.

Then in the Commercial Intelligence Journal, issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce under the guidance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce under date of February 3, an article dated January 6, 1934, along the same lines, appears under the name of W. A. Wilson, animal products trade commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Is the hon. gentleman going to proceed much longer? If so I must call it six o'clock.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am almost through, and I will try to conclude quickly. I would prefer to finish now, and I will be as brief as I can. This article tells what a wonderful institution this London cattle mart is and what it has done for the Canadian cattle trade. It refers particularly to the Neiderholm shipment, as follows:

> The steamer Neiderholm, sailing from Montreal on December 5 with 608 head of cattle, discharged the first cargo into the new lairages on December 25. Notwithstanding the close confinement during twenty days' ocean voyage —the steamer being delayed by ice in the St. Lawrence river and rough weather on the Atlantic—the cattle arrived in a condition rather better than usual. The quality of the hay and grain selected for their feed during the voyage and the ability and care exercised by the foreman and his men in attending to their comfort with bedding, feed and water, contributed effectively to their appearance at the time of landing. Owing to their discharge at holiday time there was some inconvenience in getting an adequate staff organization in the lairages ... All other comforts were complete and the first effort in handling so large a shipment reflected the company's determination to fix and maintain efficient service.

That is the shipment, Mr. Chairman, from which the greatest losses of these many losses resulted to the district to which I have referred. I realize how busy the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have been, and I want to thank them very much for what they have done in the way of endeavouring to give us interviews in the last few days, and I thank the Minister of Justice for sending a representative of the Department of Justice to Montreal at the time this meeting took place. Some of these people lost only small amounts; others are in such circumstances that this will not bankrupt them, but a number of these people are going to be put out of business, and they are almost out of their heads after worrying about it for the last few months. I should like the government to take into consideration the proposition of giving immediate relief. In the last few years we have given relief for a great many things. There have been unemployment relief, farm relief and various other kinds of relief. We have tried to combat the grasshopper plague and every other plague that came along. I want to direct attention to the fact that in this case the money was taken after the crop was harvested and fed to the cattle and the cattle were marketed. Unless these people obtain some relief very quickly they will not be able to stand the pressure from the banks and their other creditors to whom they owe money.

As I say, mistakes are made by everybody. These farmers may have made a mistake as the government did; I do not think there is any doubt about that. The old way of shipping was to not let your cattle out of your charge without receiving a draft, and we usually got almost the price of the cattle before the boat left the dock. But they answer, "We saw in the papers and we were told by these people, whom we believed"—and it was true—"that the government had assisted this concern, that the government was fitting out the ship and the government was back of them." Of course the government was back of them, to the extent of fitting out these ships. A great deal of money has been expended in various kinds of relief in past years by every government. There never was a more deserving case than this, and I am asking the Prime Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, as the head of the government and the minister of the departments most directly concerned, to see if it is not possible to find a way to at once assist these men who are in an extremely critical financial condition at the present time.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house again in committee of supply, Mr. Tummon in the chair.

MAIL SUBSIDIES AND STEAMSHIP SUBVENTIONS

Additional amount required to provide for ocean and coastal subsidies, and to assist in the carriage of lumber from Churchill to the United Kingdom, $209,036.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Chairman, with all that the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) had to say before the dinner recess in regard to the unfortunate experience of a number of farmers in the western section of Ontario I am quite certain all hon. members of the committee will sympathize. Furthermore, speaking for myself, may I add that with what he had to say regarding those who were responsible for the losses made I can concur. The question of responsibility is one upon which, of course, as Minister of Trade and Commerce I must definitely take a stand. The facts are as follows.

During the past two or three years there have been persistent demands from exporters of cattle in Canada for additional space on ships. There was a hesitancy on the part of ship owners to equip their ships for the handling of cattle. They told me, and I presume others, that one of the reasons why they hesitated to equip their ships was that the initial cost was considerable, and that unless they were assured of a number of voyages they could not afford so to equip them. They further advised me that in the past they had been so frequently disappointed in continuity of exports that they would not take the risk. Consequently there was a very great shortage of cattle ships in the year 1931, and again later in the winter and spring of 1932-33. So, through a vote of this House of Commons and with the full knowledge of parliament, the Department of Trade and Commerce undertook to assist in the installation of cattle stalls in ships for the purpose of carrying cattle across the Atlantic; some sixteen ships in all were equipped. Some of these were done in 1931, and others in 1933. Thirteen or fourteen ships were equipped in 1933. The attitude of the government, as expressed through the Department of Trade and Commerce, was simply this: We would pay a certain sum towards the cost of the installation of stalls. Usually these would cost between $12 and $16. I think the average we paid was about $12 per stall towards the cost of installation. The shipping company in practically every case undertook to make at least three trips. It worked out to about $4 per head per ship. We did that in a great many cases. The space on these ships, however, was to a large extent controlled by some cattle brokers in Montreal, and by some shippers in the west.

Last year representations were made to me to get some additional ships, after we had equipped a number. We thought at first a sufficient number had been equipped, but strong representations were made to the effect that additional ships were required. We looked about for ships, but found none available. Later, about the middle of the summer, the Richelieu Corporation, to which the hon. member has referred, asked for assistance to equip two ships. At first I believe they suggested they would equip three. I told them we would render them the same assistance we had rendered others, provided they could show that they were going to carry on the handling of cattle for a reasonable length of time. Meantime the Richelieu Corporation had sent a representative to London who had made contacts with the port authorities there and secured from them an agreement to open lairages in London. Canadians had been trying for a great many years to induce the port authorities of London to open that port for the landing of cattle, but until last year without success. The reason was there were no ships running direct from Canada to London carrying cattle, and the port authorities did not wish to have cattle lairages in the centre of the port, contending that it was inconvenient. However representatives of this firm, without any authority or assistance from the government and quite on their own responsibility, went to London and made arrangements with the port authorities of that great city for the opening of these lairages. From a Canadian standpoint the facility is certainly a desirable one, provided we could get the ships to run to that port. Those we had equipped were running to Glasgow, Cardiff and Liverpool; none were running to London. It was late in the summer of 1933 that I agreed to pay for the installation of stalls in two ships and, if they could secure them, in three, for the Richelieu Corporation. They put in the stalls.

It has been represented that these ships were not fitted for the carrying of cattle. That is the first time I have heard that claim advanced, because none of these ships was equipped until after inspection by experts in the Department of Marine who saw that they were equipped in accordance with British Board of Trade regulations. May I add that the regulations of the British Board of Trade are exceedingly drastic and exacting; in fact I sometimes think they are too exacting. The fact remains that we must comply with those regulations; otherwise the cattle would not be allowed to land in the ports of Great Britain. Representatives of the Department of Marine always assist us in this respect, and see that the ships are properly equipped in accordance with the British Board of Trade regulations. In this instance we did precisely what we had done with some fifteen or sixteen other ships. We paid for the cost of installing the stalls, in one instance in the sum of about $600 and in the other about $400, for the purpose of carrying cattle from Canadian ports to Great Britain.

I must point out to the committee that in no instance did we assume any responsibility, nor have we ever been asked to assume any regarding the shipping of the cattle. All we have done is to assist in providing facilities for the movement of the cattle from Canada to Great Britain. We did have a letter from the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Golding), to which we replied. I have not the hon. member's letter before me at the moment, but part of it was read this afternoon. There was something in the nature of a complaint in his letter and, in part, my reply was as follows:

> It is most unfortunate to receive a complaint of this nature, particularly as we wish to do everything to facilitate the exportation of live stock from Canada to Great Britain, and, as far as possible, reduce all handling, freight, and miscellaneous charges to a minimum so that the net return to the farmer can be increased.

The hon. member may have his letter before him and he will see that the complaint made was in connection with the charges. The object we had in view, which I have not mentioned, was to keep the charges down. Before we undertook the equipping of these ships the charge made was $20 per head. We secured a reduction in 1931 to $15 per head, and I think in 1933 this charge was reduced to $12 per head except in the case of a few shipments in the autumn months. All of the steamship companies which made contracts with us in connection with having stalls installed observed their agreements and charged only $12 per head. Late last fall some of the companies which had fulfilled their obligations raised the price to $15 per head. My letter continues:

After reading your letter and its enclosure very carefully, I can only mention that this department can hardly interfere with the trading methods of private individuals and I think you will appreciate our position in this respect. If Canadian exporters are dissatisfied with their negotiations with this company, I suggest that they communicate with any of the following firms:

Donald Munro & Sons, Reg'd., Board of Trade Building, Montreal.

Alex. Muir, 902 Burnside Blvd., Montreal.

D. A. Campbell, Board of Trade Building, Montreal.

The reason I am mentioning these other agents is because I know from actual experience that each of them handles large numbers of live stock regularly and in a most satisfactory manner to all concerned.

We indicated the firms which could be retained for the handling of stock. I do not think there is any object in prolonging the discussion. As I have stated, our responsibility was one and one only, namely, assistance in the equipping of ships. We took no responsibility in any instance in connection with the movement of cattle, and knew nothing whatever about it.

One point further. The hon. member for West Middlesex in his closing remarks put forward a plea for the farmers who had suffered. We have examined into the situation to see if there was any way in which we could assist them. We find that there are no grounds upon which the government might properly be called upon to compensate those who lost. I may say that the Prime Minister, the Department of Justice and our department are ready to give every assistance in the working out of prosecutions or anything of that character which might be necessary should the farmer shippers feel so inclined. I understand the Department of Justice sent a representative to Montreal, along with others who represented the farmer shippers, for the purpose of looking into the legal side of this matter. I may say to the hon. member for West Middlesex that if there is any service which the government of Canada can render to bring justice to those who are alleged to have been guilty of practices which would warrant their being brought to the courts, we are ready to render that service in order to give assistance to those who may desire to take action along that line. I am sorry to say that up to the present I can find no ground upon which we could be expected to take responsibility for the losses which have occurred. I close with the repetition of the statement I made a moment ago, that the only part we ever took in any of these matters was to give assistance in equipping the ships with stalls for the purpose of facilitating the movement of stock to the British market.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, I have only one or two remarks to make. I think this mistake which has occurred is due largely to the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) has once more been getting into Department of Agriculture business. As long as you have two ministers trying to administer one department you are going the have mixups like this. They will occur as long as the Minister of Trade and Commerce attempts to run every branch of the Department of Agriculture, such as milch cows, Yorkshire geldings, Percheron mares and now this putting of stalls into boats for the shipping of stockers and such like to the old country. We thought the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) was doing this as his friends indicated that he was. It seems to be a case of wanting to get the credit and passing it around as another government life saver. I suggest that the government come across and pay this bill. That is what should be done and I think that is what would have been done had the Department of Agriculture been handling this matter. The moment the government starts putting in stalls, it is almost an O.K. that the firm is at least solvent and worthy of being patronized. If the Department of Agriculture had been handling it these people would have been bonded under the terms and conditions of the live stock products act. Under that act no man can go into the market either on a home or export basis without being bonded. He must have a trading account established in what is known as the bank trust account. This policy has taken years to work out and if the Minister of Agriculture had been handling this matter I imagine he would at least have passed on the information to the farmers that the government were not taking any responsibility for this man's bona fides. They would have seen that he was bonded under the provisions of the act. I do not suppose the Minister of Trade and Commerce knew there were any such provisions in the live stock products act, and he certainly does not seem to have passed on this information to the unfortunate shippers. I think that either the Minister of Agriculture should hand over all the rest of the Department of Agriculture which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has not swiped off or else the Minister of Trade and Commerce should shake the dust of the Department of Agriculture off his feet and let the minister operate his own department. That is what caused this difficulty, and the only way I see out of it is for the government to cover up that loss, because certainly by their fooling around with this boat they left the impression on the shipper that all was well with regard to both the boat and the owner thereof, who was a cattle exporter as well. That is all I want to say in regard to that matter. I cannot understand any government for three years keeping these farmers out of their money. Dating back to Doctor Robertson's time, many years ago, every precaution has been taken to secure the farmers from loss through scallywagging dealers in cattle who were not worth the load of cattle and must be bonded before anybody would be justified in entrusting his property with them. But that was not done, and I would draw the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister. What is the use of haggling over technicalities? The Minister of Justice will tell them there is no obligation. He will be prepared possibly to tell them anything they want to be told. It is easy for him to ask them: What do you want? We think we are not responsible, the government say, and it is very easy for the minister to say: Well, you are not. That is the way it goes. But there is a question of equity in this at all events.

There is one thing sure. While the farmers have been almost giving their cattle away in the last four years, and in twenty months they were giving away one out of four on account of the adverse exchange, now these fellows are giving them all away, and I wonder if they had also to pay freight and insurance in advance? I do not suppose they did. Surely the cattle would be good enough to cover that.

It is just the same old story so far as this government is concerned. This may be their last session and the longer it goes the more it exposes their incompetency, hopelessness and helplessness. It shows at every turn of the tide as we find out more about these things. No wonder the government wanted to prorogue last Saturday. I think they should have prorogued a month ago and saved us a lot of this blooming legislation which they have been trying to strangle the opposition with in the last thirty days.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Chairman, someone has said "save us from our friends". The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) and myself were called in some four months ago on this matter. We worked upon it as a business matter and I can say for him and his colleagues that they have kept anything savouring of politics absolutely out of the matter. I am very sorry that the last speaker (Mr. Motherwell) has striven to inject some political prejudice into it.

The facts as I see them are these. The farmers in the counties of Huron, Perth, Lambton and Middlesex had a meeting at Ailsa Craig or somewhere in the county of Middlesex and passed a resolution asking me to introduce a delegation to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). They came to Ottawa and the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave us a very kindly reception indeed. We presented this matter to him as best we could, and those farmers that night were abundantly fair. They gave the Department of Trade and Commerce a great deal of credit for fitting up ships to assist in the passage of cattle to England. I myself with other members have waited on the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) asking that some assistance be given by way of fitting up ships. The ex-Minister of Public Works and myself, instead of acting like children, stubbing our toes and running to a parent, decided that we would go in and try to clean up the matter first. This we did. We had a meeting in Montreal and this firm was taken into bankruptcy. Then we had the Clarkson firm, a reputable firm of auditors, go into their books. A padlock was put on the door and Clarkson's were put in charge.

We find that there are no assets. There never were any assets, and we are not trying to place blame upon the Department of Trade and Commerce particularly, but we would ask the Department of Trade and Commerce not to assume the attitude that they cannot make mistakes. While this government is as free from making mistakes as any government I have ever known, yet I have never known any men who were perfect, and my plea to-night with the administration is not to assume the attitude that these farmers are the men who made the whole mistake. I think that is most unfair.

I will ask the men from western Canada if they know Captain Robert Pearson, John Pearson whose two uncles were in the Ontario legislature, and men of no mean mentality. By the way I do not think we have any longer any supermen. To me in the future the opinion of the man on the street will be just as good as that of the superman because it was the supermen who led us into the depression and they were nowhere to be seen to lead us out of it. I would ask any people in western Canada if they know this man Pearson in my riding who has lost $2,000, and can afford to lose it, and who is now out west again to bring home more cattle and fatten them and pass them on to the old land. But Mr. Chairman, there are men who cannot afford to lose this money. Yesterday I drove around my county and it was borne in upon me that there was going to be a sad wreckage. I came upon the parish priest who had been cheering up two parishioners, urging them to hold on a little longer, that some relief might come. I was not able to say that there would be relief although I had been led to believe here and there that there might be a little ray of hope.

I had gone to the bank managers who loaned the money asking them to be patient and now to-night I am asking the government not to take any cold business attitude on this matter. It is the duty of the strong to protect the weak. To say that we fitted out sixteen ships and that fourteen were good and two were bad is a fair batting average, and the minister should be given credit that he selected fourteen out of sixteen that were good. I do not think he should be at all offended to be told that two of the sixteen which his department selected were tubs—and, if they had searched the great metropolis of Montreal they could not have found three greater crooks upon whom to confer a diploma to go out into my county than the men they selected. E. A. D. Morgan is consulting solicitor of the company. When I said to him, "Mr. Morgan, you are more than solicitor," he got angry. He was the promoter, the man who came with high pressure salesmanship and put the thing over. There might be a medical college that would grant a diploma to some man who never studied medicine a day in his life. They might give him a diploma to go out and operate on the people of this country. And here were people who, according to Clarkson's report, did not even have the proverbial shoestring to start on, not a shoestring, not a dollar. If the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce had asked to see this company's charter, they would have seen the most fourflushing document that ever decorated a page. This is what these men who had no capital proposed to do according to their charter:

To build, acquire, lease, or operate elevators, buildings, or wharves, for the handling or storage of grain.

To buy, sell, or deal in cattle, horses, hogs or any and every kind of live stock and poultry including feeding, fattening, and in connection with the business of the company to establish stores, agencies, depots and other markets for the sale of the products of the company, including the right to manufacture, ship, deal in and sell canned goods or prepared meats, or foods of all description.

I suppose the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce who were supposed to be a light unto the feet and a lamp unto the path of the farmers of this country asked these people to show their testimonials. Further, they were going—

To build, purchase, lease and operate vessels whether propelled by steam or otherwise, and to carry cargo of any description in connection therewith.

Nay, more:

To promote, organize, manage or develop or to assist in the promotion, organization, management or development of any corporation, company, syndicate, enterprise or undertaking and to do all acts necessary or incidental thereto.

This may be legal phraseology, but I call to my witness the wrecks that have been strewn over this country in the past ten years, financial wrecks aided by legal phraseology. Imagine this, Mr. Chairman:

To subscribe for, underwrite, buy, sell, exchange, hold, hypothecate or otherwise deal in the stock, bonds, debentures, and other securities of any municipal, industrial or financial corporations or companies.

To enter into any arrangement for sharing profits or union of interests with any person or company carrying on or engaged in or about to carry on or engage in and to take or otherwise acquire shares and securities of any such company; and to sell, hold, resell with or without guarantee or otherwise deal in the same.

A company that never had a dollar, did not have a dollar and, heaven knows, that will ever have a dollar! Two out of the three men bankrupt and the other a lawyer whose name is to-night a by-word in the city of Montreal! Those were the three men who were granted the diploma studded by thirteen thousand golden dollars, to go up into my county and say to my farmers: "We would like to buy your cattle." "Well, we do not know who you are." "Well, we are just this good that the Department of Trade and Commerce spent $13,000 to fit up boats to assist us to ship your cattle." That is a pretty fair testimonial. I can think of no finer diploma given to any body of people, no greater licence to go out and do business among my farmers who feed a steer a thousand days at six cents a day, pay the freight to Montreal and give those steers to these Montreal scalawags.

I shall not trust myself further. If the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce are not going to take any blame in this matter and are going to lay the blame on my farmers that they are a bunch of dumbbells, and if the officials have been criminally negligent, then it is my duty as the representative of my farmers to say a word on their behalf. We thank the Minister of Trade and Commerce for his courtesy all through, and I do not think it would hurt him very much to-night to say that although the farmers perhaps did not use good business judgment, it is the duty of the strong to protect the weak, but inasmuch as we put stalls in boats that were not seaworthy—and if there is any doubt about that, with the knowledge I have I say: Give us an independent tribunal before whom we can place the facts—we are willing to assume the responsibility of proving our case. My attitude in this matter has been entirely changed within the last few days, when I learned of a brief that the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce had prepared in which they stated they took no blame in the matter, I claim that they are criminally negligent and I shall assume full responsibility in any capacity this house asks me, to prove my statement that this man McDonnell who was a bankrupt, this man Richardson who was a bankrupt and this man Morgan whose name is not sweet-scented at all in the city of Montreal, were granted a licence when they should not have been. We are all human; we all make mistakes and the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce, when their minister was very busy with other things—and his name will go down in history for his present activity—when he could not oversee everything, must have been responsible. But do not let us wrap that cloak about us and say: We cannot make a mistake. I never yet knew a government that did not make an occasional mistake. Inasmuch as mistakes have perhaps been made on both sides of this question; inasmuch as there are no newspaper reporters here and we are just gathered in this chamber in the closing days of the session I would suggest that he who gives quickly gives twice and I would say this: Halve the responsibility. Let my farmers stay on the land of their fathers and grandfathers and at least let the department admit that they endorsed unworthy men and fitted up unseaworthy ships and that they will halve this with my farmers.

Then, of course, the bugaboo is: There is no channel through which this can legitimately flow That is always the way with the old Ontario farmer; there is no room in the inn. If there is an explosion at Halifax or a Quebec bridge disaster or grasshoppers out west, or if the Rocky mountains started to erupt to-night and lava flowed down on the minister's side of the mountains, we would find a way; but the staid old Ontario farmer who toils from daylight until dark can be robbed by financial thugs in the city of Montreal, aided by a diploma granted by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and yet they say: There is nothing we can do for them.

Perhaps I have spoken a little heatedly in this matter, but my colleague the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Golding) while there was yet time wrote a letter and the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce should then have taken cognizance of and looked into the matter. What are these high salaried men in England connected with the departments of Trade and Commerce and Agriculture for if it is not to be a lamp unto the path of our farmers? Why have them at all? You say: There is a precedent. I say: No, because in the future this situation cannot obtain. Through our marketing act such men will be bonded and there can be no further precedent. The department listened to me and others and fitted up boats. But they did not do my farmers any favour when they fitted up a couple of tubs and put them in charge of a crew headed by Morgan of Montreal. I submit this and stand by it, although there has been objection taken, that if this so called Richelieu Corporation, which did not put up a dollar, but just exchanged cheques, if this defunct company had never met with officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce the cattle would never have been stolen, because the farmers never would have dealt with men who could not show some kind of testimonial. I must express appreciation to the department for what they have done in opening that channel; under the British Empire trade agreement we are going to have a channel there for years to come, and having made a little slip in this case let us admit it and let us go fifty-fifty. On behalf of my farmers who are being driven into bankruptcy through criminal negligence of the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce in giving credit to unworthy men who fitted out tubs that were entirely unseaworthy, I plead that they be given a little ray of hope, that the government will meet our people half way. That is what we are all doing, if a man owes us $100 we will take $50. Those are strenuous times. My farmers say there are millions for this and millions for that, but there is not a paltry $41,000 for the farmers in old Ontario. I would ask the administration to reconsider this matter on behalf of my farmers and the farmers throughout western Ontario.

Again I wish to pay tribute to my colleague from West Middlesex, the ex-Minister of Public Works. We have toiled for four months without money and without price, and it is hard for us to go home and face our people and tell them that while there are millions for railroads and millions for banks and millions for public buildings that may not be entirely necessary there is not the small sum of $41,000 for the old pioneer stock of western Ontario.

Mr. GOLDING: I just wish to make a few observations in regard to this question. Last summer my attention was called to the operations of the Richelieu Corporation in my constituency. Some of the friends of Mr. Scotchmer, about whom I wrote to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) came to me and told me the position he was in by reason of shipments of cattle made through this company. I told these people that if they would summarize the facts and give me a full statement I would see that it was forwarded to the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I had absolute faith that some action would be taken by the department to protect those farmers from further losses. Reference has been made to a letter I had written to Hon. Mr. Stevens. I think I should read that letter and also the statement that I had prepared in connection with the shipment to which it had reference, which was typical of other shipments that took place from Huron county at that time. We went to considerable trouble to get complete details. We endeavoured to get the log of the vessel and everything in order to lay all the cards on the table.

The statement is as follows:

L. W. Scotchmer is a farmer residing near Kippen, Ontario, in the county of Huron, and the Richelieu Corporation of Montreal is a shipping concern which has been securing shipments of cattle from farmers throughout Huron county for the purpose of sale in the British market.

The Richelieu Corporation chartered the ss. Glentworth for several trips, the first of which left Montreal, May 5, 1933. It is not known whether the Richelieu Corporation chartered the entire vessel or simply chartered space on the vessel, but at all events the corporation made structural changes in order to accommodate cattle on this boat. They own or lease accommodation on a pier in Montreal to which there is a siding so that they can unload from railway cars at the pier and load direct to the vessel without the necessity of taking the cattle to stockyards in and around Montreal. This should enable the Richelieu Corporation to eliminate considerable expense to its own and to the benefit of the persons dealing with them.

The program followed by the Richelieu Corporation apparently has been to send agents or representatives throughout the country to the farmers to book space on their boat according to the number of cattle the farmers are prepared to ship. It is represented to the farmer that the total cost of freight by rail, care, feed, water transportation and commission for selling the cattle in the British market is $27 per head.

That is what was told the farmers in our county.

When sufficient space has been booked a cattle train is arranged, the cattle are loaded and taken direct from shipping point to the corporations's pier at Montreal and there loaded on the boat.

Mr. Scotchmer, on the basis as represented to him, shipped cattle by the first boat this season, namely on May 5, 1933, there being twenty-six head. These were loaded on cattle cars at Brucefield, Ontario, and the Richelieu Corporation had full control of them from shipment until the sale in the British market. Mr. Scotchmer accompanied the shipment, which was supposed to leave Montreal April 28 or 29, but the shipment did not leave until May 5, owing to the fact that arrangements for fitting the ship for the cattle had not been completed, and the boat's engines were being repaired. Mr. Scotchmer's cattle were fed grain and hay at home and were in good condition, averaging 1,400 pounds, but on arrival at Montreal they were given a poor grade of hay and no grain until they were put aboard the ship. On ship the hay fed was a clover mixture, badly weathered and with considerable mold. The grain was a mixture of uncrushed barley, 40 per cent; uncrushed oats, 40 per cent; and cracked corn, 20 per cent, which is not considered to be a very satisfactory feed.

The boat cleared Montreal 4.15 p.m. May 5, 1933; exchanged pilots at Quebec 4.20 a.m. May 6, 1933; discharged pilot at Father Point 6.25 p.m. May 6, and at 6.50 p.m. the vessel stopped for repairs to engine. The vessel moved next on May 7, at 4.40 a.m. and at 10.50 a.m. stopped again for repairs, moving again at 7 p.m. on May 7; arrived at Halifax May 10, at 2 p.m.; remained in Halifax 3 days repairing engines before proceeding to its destination at Birkenhead. The vessel was not seaworthy with its engines in the condition they were in, and after clearing Halifax could only proceed at half speed and did not arrive at Birkenhead until May 24. The boat cleared from Halifax without cleaning out the accumulated manure. The cattle were not given enough room on the boat. For instance the spacing of Mr. Scotchmer's twenty-six head of cattle was forty-six feet, three inches.

Mr. Scotchmer and the other attendants had considerable trouble with cattle getting down and being trampled, until finally four of his cattle were moved to the centre of the ship where there was no protection against the sun or rain. With all the failure of feed and accommodation the cattle were badly shrunk on arrival, were in very poor condition and realized third grade instead of top prices. The ordinary experience in shipping cattle is that on ship they increase on an average, with good accommodation and good feed, about sixty pounds per head.

From what investigation it has been possible to make it is suspected that the vessel should never have been permitted to leave Montreal not being in seaworthy condition on the one hand and the accommodation for cattle being badly arranged and much overcrowded on the other hand.

In the final result instead of the cost of freight, transportation, feed, commissions and so forth being $27 per head, they have averaged more than $32 per head.

It seems that the Richelieu Corporation has secured shipments from a great number of farmers, particularly in this district, and that the general experience farmers have had with this corporation, is very unsatisfactory, and quite similar to the treatment accorded Mr. Scotchmer. The obligations of the corporation to the shippers are not definitely understood as there has been no contract in writing in any case. Complaints to the corporation have brought no redress.

On this first shipment Mr. Scotchmer should have realized from his cattle at least $750 more than he did, but his complaints to the corporation have been treated with scant courtesy. It is very important that this matter be investigated fully. Huron county has a great surplus of exportable cattle and many farmers anxious to ship to Great Britain. But, if the export of cattle is to be fostered and made worth while to Canadian farmers, some protection must be given them against shipping corporations transacting business in the manner of the Richelieu Corporation.

That is the statement I had prepared, and this is the letter that accompanied that statement:

Hon. H. H. Stevens,
Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Stevens:

I am writing you regarding the operation of the shipping company named the Richelieu Corporation of Montreal.

I have had the facts summarized in the enclosed statement.

The gentlemen who have shipped cattle through this company have stated their complaints to me, and I requested that they give me the facts, and I would then bring the whole question to your attention.

I assured them that I was satisfied that the department was anxious to promote this trade, and that I felt that any action taken by any company in this shipping business, which would deprive the shipper from receiving proper treatment, thereby causing him a loss, would certainly be frowned on by the government.

I am, therefore, bringing this matter to your attention, not in any critical way, but rather in a way that may be helpful, and that may prevent a recurrence if this man's experience.

I may say that Mr. Scotchmer is not the only one who had complaints against this particular company.

I believe Mr. Scotchmer when taking this matter up with this company, received a letter threatening him with libel—

That is a fact; he did receive such a letter.

—which would appear to be a pretty high handed piece of work. If you desire, I will obtain a copy of this letter for you.

As far as I can learn Mr. Scotchmer estimates his loss on this shipment at around $800 or $900.

There have been some splendid cattle shipped from this district, a load of seven cars went from this district. These cattle weighed around 1,500 to 1,700 pounds. I think, therefore, that we should do our best to see that the shipper receives proper treatment, as the farmer is certainly having a difficult time in making things go.

I will appreciate it very much if you could, through your department, make an investigation into this matter and advise me what action is being taken to protect the shipper in matters of this kind.

Thanking you for any information on this point, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

That is the letter and statement that were forwarded to the Department of Trade and Commerce, to which the minister replied very promptly. My letter was dated October 12 and this reply is dated October 13. The minister did not read the last paragraph, which is as follows:

In indicating the position of the department as I have done it is not my intention to consider the matter as closed, but on the contrary I intend bringing it to the attention of the minister on his return to Ottawa.

That paragraph led me to believe that some action would be taken by the department which, as I said in my letter, would prevent a recurrence of this man's experience. I may say very frankly that I was very much disappointed that the department did not take some definite action. I believe if they had done so the loss that was incurred in November need not have come about. It is all very well to say that we are not responsible for this or that, but I think hon. members of this house feel as at least I feel, that there is a responsibility on me as a member to do my utmost to see that the farmers are protected. I need hardly point out that under present conditions the farmers are absolutely unable to protect themselves. They are unable to enter into any litigation, and if we have men such as those described by the hon. member for North Huron going around the country swindling and defrauding the people I think it is the duty of the Minister of Trade and Commerce or of the Minister of Agriculture or of somebody, at any rate, to try to prevent that sort of thing.

Now I should like to say a word in regard to the fitting out of those two vessels. I think it was clearly indicated in the statement sent to the department that the Glentworth was not a fit boat to carry cattle across the ocean, and when they fitted up the Neiderholm I am perfectly satisfied that it was in worse condition than the Glentworth ever was. When we were discussing this question in Montreal we found from the Imperial Oil Company's statement that for three trips of that boat it cost over $18,000 for fuel. That will give you an idea of what sort of boat it was. It was chartered for three trips, and at the end of the three trips the boat was sold for junk. I do not want to play politics in connection with a matter of this kind; it is too serious to our farmers and those who are affected by these losses to do anything of the kind. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for North Huron, in many cases it means that if these men do not receive some remuneration they will be forced off their farms, which is a very serious thing in times like these. When members bring to the attention of the department a situation in connection with which farmers are being actually swindled, I cannot for the life of me see that they have not some responsibility in the matter.

This is not the only case that has been brought to my attention. This correspondence to which I have referred is in regard to the Richelieu Corporation, but I also had complaints in regard to some other shippers. Mr. Adams, near Seaforth, who has been in the cattle business for many years, shipped twenty-five head of cattle over there, and he was certainly disappointed with the price he received, as he and all the other cattlemen in that district assured me that they were choice cattle. We obtained a report on those cattle, as follows:

> These cattle left Montreal on November 21. landed at Cardiff on December 10 after an ocean voyage of nineteen days.

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins), who has shipped a great many cattle, made the statement in the house on one occasion that if cattle were on the water longer than twelve days they began to go back. This load of cattle was on the water for nineteen days. The report goes on to say:

> The trip was said be very rough and the cattle were dirt from head to foot. These cattle had to be rested before they were in shape for sale. Apparently none were sold in Cardiff where they were landed, but had to be moved to Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham and York. This movement entailed additional expense. It is contended that for some days the cattle were entirely out of feed, and as a result there was a very heavy shrinkage which meant of course instead of receiving top prices they were sold at a very much lower grade.

I just wish to bring these matters to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce in order, if possible, to avoid a repetition of the treatment our farmers have received. I agree entirely with what has been said by the hon. member for North Huron, namely that in discussing this matter all parties have endeavoured to keep the discussions free from politics. We are more concerned about helping our farmers. I too want to plead on behalf of those who have suffered such serious losses, and I trust that in some way or another the government may see its way clear at least to some extent to remunerate them.

Mr. BOYES: I wish to make only a few observations on this occasion. At the outset may I say that a number of producers from the riding I have the honour to represent were, unfortunately, involved in this matter. They shipped their cattle through the Richelieu Corporation, and did not receive payment for them. I should be very sorry indeed to have this matter brought forward politically, as was attempted by the former Minister of Agriculture. I am deeply interested in the producers and would do anything within my power to see that they were compensated for their very severe losses. The producers in my constituency were not critical of the government, in fact, they were very thankful that the government had assisted by procuring a market for their cattle in the old country and also they were pleased that the government had equipped a number of boats for purposes of cattle shipment. Upon many occasions they have expressed themselves as being very much pleased with the interest the government has taken.

As some hon. members have pointed out it is unfortunate that the Richelieu Corporation at no time had any finances. They were dealing in cattle before they came into western Ontario, and they reached western Ontario at a time when there were cattle for shipment. They received about six hundred cattle, a very large shipment, and according to the record they have been using the cash receiver from one shipment to pay for former shipments. On this particular occasion, however, they had a great number of cattle but did not pay the shippers. As a result of their operation I believe a number of shippers in my constituency will become practically bankrupt.

Mr. BENNETT: Did they make any down payment when they took the cattle?

Mr. BOYES: None at all, I understand. I have been interested in this matter to the extent of attending with a number of deputations before ministers, and going to Montreal in the interests of the shippers. Yet we have been unable so far to accomplish anything of real value. I know that the producers are unable to furnish sufficient funds to go ahead in a lawsuit, or to arrest the men at Montreal. I suggest that the government should take some action along these lines. If after furnishing funds to take action against these men it is proven that they have stolen the cattle—and at the present time that seems evident—the men should be severely punished. It may be that the men involved have receipts from these cattle which would enable them to pay something on account. However, if the government were unsuccessful in procuring any funds, I suggest that action could be taken similar to that which on former occasions has been taken, when compensation has been made. We remember what happened after the great Halifax disaster. In recent years we remember that the farmers in the dried out areas in Saskatchewan were assisted when they were unable to produce wheat. If we are unsuccessful in gaining financial support from the men in Montreal, while I do not feel the government is financially responsible, as has been stated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, yet in the interest of those producers and farmers I appeal to the government seriously to look into the matter and, if possible, to give compensation, as has been done in other cases. I am sure the producers would greatly appreciate such action and certainly I should appreciate it.

Mr. SANDERSON: I wish merely to go on record as agreeing with the hon. members for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott), North Huron (Mr. Spotton), South Huron (Mr. Golding) and East Middlesex (Mr. Boyes). Two or three farmers in the constituency of South Perth, which I have the honour to represent in this house, unfortunately have lost their money through the shipment of cattle. I have not attended any conferences with any of the ministers. I have not given the matter the close attention which has been given it by the hon. members I have mentioned, because unfortunately when the deputation first came to Ottawa I had been called home. Nevertheless I am vitally interested in the matter and should like to place my remarks on record along with those of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr Weir).

I am pleased the discussion has been free from political bias. This is not a political question, but one of justice to farmers who have lost their money because, as the hon. member for North Huron has said, the Department of Trade and Commerce gave a diploma to the Richelieu Corporation to buy cattle and to ship them overseas. I have several reasons in mind as to why I believe the government should compensate the farmers. The Minister of Trade and Commerce admits that his department paid $13,000 to the Richelieu Corporation to equip two boats for the shipment of cattle to Great Britain. When that was done the officials of his department must have satisfied themselves and forwarded the information to the minister that these boats were seaworthy. If that was not done, then the minister made a grave mistake.

Mr. STEVENS: Obviously there is no official in my department who could pass judgment upon the seaworthiness of any ship. The vessels were equipped according to the British Board of Trade regulations and the overseeing was done by experts in shipping matters. We had the assistance of the Department of Marine in that respect.

Mr. SANDERSON: Surely the minister will admit responsibility in this matter, even if his experts did advise that these ships were seaworthy. I think he must shoulder the responsibility when they turned out not to be seaworthy.

Mr. STEVENS: That has not been asserted except in this chamber.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am now bringing the matter to the attention of the minister. I should like to know if the minister made any inquiry through his officials or through the officials of any other department as to the solvency of the Richelieu Corporation when they entered into an agreement to pay them $13,000.

Mr. STEVENS: The firm was shown to have a capital of $20,000 and to be engaged in the exportation of cattle. I have the Dun and Bradstreet report here but I do not think it should be used in this house. However, I shall quote from the report in part. It states that the company is well spoken of in personal respects and that Mr. Richardson is believed to have supplied the necessary capital for the conduct of the business. As far as it was reasonable for anyone to assure himself on the matter, the departmental officials did so.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister says that he has some confidential information from Bradstreets.

Mr. STEVENS: No, I said I had the report. I sent one copy across and I shall send another. I do not think it is fair to Dun and Bradstreet to bring their reports into the house. They are supposed to give a confidential service and I think hon. members will agree that it is scarcely fair to them to use their reports. Personally I have no scruples about using them.

Mr. SANDERSON: Speaking for myself only, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that there should be no secrets in connection with this matter.

Mr. STEVENS: There are no secrets.

Mr. SANDERSON: A group of farmers in western Ontario have lost $40,000 because they sold their cattle to this Richelieu Corporation to be shipped overseas. Why was that loss sustained? Because it was represented to the producers of these cattle that the government was behind that corporation.

Mr. STEVENS: There was no justification for that statement.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am not quite so sure that there was not some justification for it. Surely the minister will not contend that the information he got as to these men being respectable and good citizens was sufficient to warrant the turning over to them of $13,000 of the taxpayers' money and practically giving them a licence from the government.

Mr. STEVENS: I admit no such thing. As I have said already, all that the government or the department did in this or any other case was to assist in the equipping of ships for the movement of cattle. We gave no licence and we gave no certificate. Neither in this nor any other case has the government taken part in the buying or selling of the stock that went on the ships.

Mr. SANDERSON: I want to be frank with the minister and I think he will be frank with me. Is he satisfied that he was justified or that his department or the government was justified in paying $13,000 to the Richelieu Corporation to equip these boats so that they would be suitable for the shipment of cattle? Is the minister satisfied that he did not make a mistake?

Mr. STEVENS: With the knowledge that we had I am satisfied that there was no other course which we could have adopted under the circumstances. Let me say to the hon. gentleman and to other hon. gentlemen who have spoken that very strong pressure was brought to bear for the opening up of traffic between Montreal and London.

Mr. SANDERSON: I will agree with that.

Mr. STEVENS: This corporation had control of the lairage in London. They spent considerable on that and I suppose that is more or less the reason why they went bankrupt. Pressure was brought to bear upon me to assist in the equipping of ships on that particular route. None of the ships which had been equipped were running to London; they ran to Cardiff, to Birkenhead and to Glasgow. Hon. members of this committee and others pressed me to assist in obtaining ships which were not under the control of those in the business which I have mentioned already. It was represented to me that these people had such control of the space that shippers in western Ontario could not get their cattle on the boats. I was urged to secure ships for this route and these two were secured. I had to leave the question of their seaworthiness to the insurance companies and to the inspectors. I could not assume responsibility for the seaworthiness of the ships. I know of nothing further which could have been done in connection with the securing of ships and the constructing of stalls for the movement of cattle to the London market.

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like to put another argument to the minister. I shall leave the question of the Richelieu Corporation for a moment. For some months the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been chairman of the special committee of this house which has been investigating the question of price spreads, fair wages, fair returns and all the rest of it, and I give him credit for starting that investigation. His object apparently is to investigate the question of undue profits. I put this question to him. Here is a matter affecting the farmers of western Ontario. They sold their cattle to this dummy company apparently under the endorsation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. STEVENS: No, Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow that statement to go unchallenged. May I just intimate to my hon. friend this:

Before this question came up in the house, so far as I am concerned and the members of the government we have been exceedingly anxious to find some way whereby assistance might be given to those who suffered, not because of having responsibility in any direct way at all, but because of the suffering of the farmers. But if my hon. friend is going to inject into this matter an alleged responsibility that is not ours, then in justice to myself, the department, and the government I shall certainly resist him to the limit. Let us be perfectly clear on that. My hon. friend cannot impose upon me responsibilities which are not mine. I take full responsibility for what has been done for which I am responsible.

Mr. SANDERSON: Let me say to the minister that I have not gone nearly so far as one of his own supporters.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh yes, my hon. friend did.

Mr. SANDERSON: No, I have not, and I have been very patient and lenient with the minister in his interruptions. My good friend from North Huron went much farther than I have done, but I am not afraid of the attitude of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in what he said to me in the last few minutes before he sat down. I am pleading for the farmers in South Perth who have sold their cattle and have lost their money. I do not know whether the minister knows what a loss of $2,000 is to the average farmer in western Ontario to-day. Our farmers for the last four years have been plodding along and losing ground every day with the result that all of them are almost bankrupt.

Mr. ROBINSON: Not at all.

Mr. SANDERSON: A great many of them are. My hon. friend may be able to speak for the farmers in Essex but I am speaking for the farmers of South Perth.

Mr. ROBINSON: I meant the farmers of South Perth.

Mr. SANDERSON: I think I know them as well as my hon. friend from Essex does, and I want to say to the minister that I do not think he realizes the plight of the average farmer in South Perth or in any of the western counties of Ontario.

Mr. STEVENS: I do, and I am just as anxious as my hon. friend to find ways and means of helping them.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am very glad to hear the minister say that. My object in getting up to-night is not to get into a controversy with the minister at all. I want to plead with him and with the Prime Minister and the government to be fair in this matter. I do not think my good friend the Minister of Agriculture can escape some responsibility in this matter, because primarily the shipment of cattle comes under his department. What he had to do with making the arrangements with the Richelieu Corporation I do not know. He may not have had anything to do with it at all.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Nothing whatever.

Mr. SANDERSON: But the minister will admit that propaganda went out through all this dominion that this government had at last found a market for Canadian cattle in Great Britain, and these shipments that went forward and were not paid for were part of the shipments for which the minister and his officials said they had found a market in Great Britain, and a market for large quantities of Canadian cattle. I do not charge the minister with any responsibility, but I do say to him that he should make some statement to this committee to-night in regard to this arrangement with the Richelieu Corporation. The Minister of Agriculture will perhaps understand me better than the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I plead with him for the farmers of western Ontario. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said to-night that he does not see how any compensation can be paid in this unfortunate matter. I do not want to take up the time of this committee, or to get into any political discussion, but I do want to point out to the minister, the Prime Minister and the government that under the legislation they have brought down in this chamber in the last four years they have found money for almost anything and everything in the way of relief—unemployment relief, and I do not criticize that at all, and farm relief. Well, here is an instance of a dead loss of $40,000 to farmers in western Ontario who already are so burdened that they really have not the money to pay their taxes. They got into this arrangement because it was represented to them that the government were behind it, and to a certain extent the government was behind this Richelieu Corporation.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. SANDERSON: Surely this government can find $40,000 to reimburse these unfortunate shippers of cattle who lost every dollar. They did not get a single solitary dollar back. It is all gone—a dead loss. Surely this government could do something in a case so extreme as that.

I do not want to enumerate what this government has done for the western farmers or the amount of bounties they have paid out, and so on and so forth, but here is a concrete case where these farmers have been taken in, as my good friend from North Huron said, by financial crooks who represented to them that the government were behind them, and in that way the deal went through. I do not think I can put my case any stronger, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend from North Huron said he thought the government should find some way of recompensing the farmers to the extent of fifty per cent.

Mr. SPOTTON: Would the hon. member be willing to call the amount which the government is going to give a compassionate allowance? That would not involve accepting any responsibility.

Mr. SANDERSON: It does not make any difference to me what they call it as long as they pay it. If it is a compassionate allowance I should say the government should pay the whole hundred per cent, the $40,000, and not merely a portion of it. They should pay the whole loss of the farmers of western Ontario who were in this unfortunate affair, and not merely fifty per cent. Surely this government can do that. I know that the Prime Minister has been taking the matter into consideration. I do not suppose he is moved by anything I am saying to-night but I do know that in the bottom of his heart he believes that these farmers have a case which they can bring before this government and that they should be paid back the money they have lost. I hope that to-night before we prorogue the government will announce that they will find ways and means of paying this loss. It is not difficult for they have found ways and means of paying money for other purposes, and this is a just claim which should receive every consideration from this government. I hope before the house prorogues we will have a statement from the Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the government will recompense these farmers.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I have taken the trouble to read the papers in this matter and I have also had an interview with the former Minister of Public Works, the member for South Huron, the member for North Huron, and the member for the other Middlesex. The government could not under any circumstances be made primarily liable in a matter of this kind. If the statement made by the former Minister of Public Works is correct, and I accept it as such, it is perfectly obvious that there never was a company and that the three men in question are personally liable for this amount. That is, if they are directors of the company and the circumstances are as stated, their conduct has been such as to make them personally liable. The government will take steps to investigate the matter thoroughly and will not mind expending some money if it is necessary for the purpose of prosecuting them for theft if the facts are as stated. But to ask the government to pay because men have made improvident bargains is something that will not be found in any of the relief acts and certainly has not been advanced in what has been said within the last few minutes. It is quite clear that there never has been a case with respect to any of these farmers where it is alleged that there was any failure to supply the equipment for carrying the cattle. The representations were that the government had supplied stalls and put them on the ships. It is admitted that these stalls were supplied. It is admitted further that the cattle were carried on the ships. The government assumed no responsibility for the ships. Lloyds, I assume, or some other firm, were the insurers and satisfied themselves because the work was done with the approval of the Board of Trade so far as the equipment was concerned. But if these men are worth the money they are liable civilly and they are liable criminally. The government will investigate both phases of the matter and if there is any assistance that can be given for the purpose of securing the return of the money stolen from these men under the circumstances as stated, we will give it. It will be time enough later to consider what the position of the government may be.

Miscellaneous—
Dominion Franchise Act, estimated expenditure for preparation and printing of basic lists of electors, $600,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I see that the Prime Minister is leaving the house. As he may not be back before we conclude with supply I should like to ask him a question, if he will permit me. I just wish to ask my right hon. friend whether his attention has been drawn to a speech that was made yesterday in London, England, at the Dominion day dinner given by the High Commissioner for Canada, the Hon. Howard Ferguson, in which Sir Edward Peacock is reported to have made a strong plea for the formation of a national government in Canada, alleging that Canada alone of British self-governing countries lagged behind in the formation of a national government, and that the problems of Canada could not be solved except by cooperation of the two great parties in the state and that if they failed to do so the progress of Canada could not fail to be retarded. I ask this question especially for two reasons: first, because Sir Edward Peacock has been mentioned as a possible governor of the new Bank of Canada, and, secondly, because when I withdrew my motion of want of confidence in the present administration the other evening in order to expedite the business of the house, I had not expected to see what is the equivalent of a want of confidence motion in my right hon. friend's government made at a Dominion day dinner given in London under the auspices of the High Commissioner for Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: The vote of want of confidence was in any dominion government the right hon. gentleman might form as well. It is observed he was pleading for a national government. Such a distinguished man as Sir Edward Peacock represents neither the right hon. gentleman nor myself. I knew nothing of his speech. When I saw in the newspaper that he was to speak I was awaiting the report of it in the daily press this morning.

So far as the other question is concerned I should like to inform the right hon. gentleman and the country that Sir Edward Peacock's commitments in London in the great position that he occupies would preclude the possibility of his accepting the position of governor of the Bank of Canada if he had been offered it. He has not been offered it either tentatively or otherwise, so I think I have answered all the questions the right hon. gentleman has suggested.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would the Prime Minister approve what Sir Edward Peacock has said?

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps I might ask the right hon. gentleman what he thinks about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think almost any government would be better than the present one.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I fancy the right hon. gentleman means what he says, that in his opinion any government would be better than the present one. I can also say that I can conceive none that would be as bad as the one that he would create.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. gentleman may have an opportunity of seeing the effect of a change before long.

Trade and Commerce—

Commercial Intelligence Service, including miscellaneous expenditure in connection with Canada's trade — further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This afternoon I told the Prime Minister that I was becoming so desirous of having prorogation that I was going to waive any discussion on this particular item under the heading of Commercial Intelligence Service. With the understanding that he will give me three minutes to correct two or three mistakes I thought he was correcting me in shortly after lunch, I will waive any claim here. He made what I thought were three corrections of mistakes I made, one with regard to the embargo on Russia being in 1931. Well, the order in council was. What I intended to say was that the legislation authorizing the embargo was passed at the special session in 1930 as it was. That was about when Russia got up in the air; it was not when the order in council went through; it was when the authority was passed by this parliament to impose an embargo on any country that was not a contracting party to the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. BENNETT: But Russia signed the agreement.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Russia was not mentioned in this legislation, but everybody knew to whom it referred. We are getting bolder in these matters now. When we want to talk about the Doukhobors we say that the Doukhobors are to be disfranchised, so the government is getting worse instead of better in that respect. Russia signed the agreement but not the quota. Well, what was the agreement without the quota? The quota was the crux of the whole matter, so I think my statement was absolutely correct.

The next mistake mentioned by the Prime Minister was that any offer that China had made to sell wheat would have been at a loss to Canada of from ten to twenty cents a bushel. The government should not be waiting for people to come round to make offers to them at this time. They should be out merchandising wheat and even if they had lost ten or fifteen cents a bushel, they have lost more than that on the storage of this wheat in the last three years with the wheat still unsold.

Mr. BENNETT: I merely say that the government has substantial credit at present-day prices of wheat.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is that—a substantial credit?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That had nothing to do with this agreement of McFarland's. My right hon. friend indicated that there would have been a loss of ten to twenty cents a bushel on accepting any offer that China may have made for a quantity of wheat.

Mr. BENNETT: Which the government did not own. I tried to make it clear to the hon. gentleman—perhaps I did not speak loud enough,—that the government owned no wheat that it had to sell. The Chinese proposals contemplated the purchase of wheat at a price that involved a loss of ten to twenty cents a bushel on the part of those who had it to sell.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That could easily have been fixed up; it is only a technicality. Someone lost more than fifteen cents in carrying charges during the last three years; do not make any mistake about that. I think that is all I have to correct.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not very much.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: And the statement on the Chinese wheat situation can wait a little longer; after prorogation there will be opportunity of discussing it publicly.

Mr. GARDINER: Before that item is carried may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if there is any further information as to when it is intended to publish the Canada Year Book?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, it will be published, but two years will be carried as one. There was considerable delay in getting certain vital information for which the final figures were being worked out in connection with the census, and which it was desired to include. We are doing what was done I think in 1927-28, carry the two years into one, but the book will come out a little earlier in the following year.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give any information as to the cost of the Canadian Annual Review which is sent to members annually? Who is responsible for sending that publication to the member?

Mr. STEVENS: I could not answer that question this evening. I have not the information under my hand.

Mr. GARDINER: May I suggest to the minister that he look that matter up and compare the value of the information given in the Canada Year Book with that in the Canadian Annual Review. It seems to me it is money wasted to send such a publication to members of this house.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. STEVENS: I shall advise my hon. friend.

An Act to amend The Representation Act, 1933.

An Act to amend the Loan Companies Act.

An Act to amend the Customs Act.

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An Act respecting Radio Broadcasting.

An Act to amend the Pension Act.

An Act to amend The Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932.

An Act to incorporate the Bank of Canada.

An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

An Act to provide for the construction and improvement of certain public works and undertakings throughout Canada.

An Act respecting the Franchise of Electors at Elections of Members of the House of Commons.

An Act respecting the Election of Members of the House of Commons.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1935.

To these bills the royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In His Majesty's name His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following bill:—

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1935.

To which bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of His Excellency the Governor General did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to these bills.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the fifth session of the seventeenth parliament of the Dominion of Canada, with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I desire to express my appreciation of the careful attention you have given to the various measures submitted to you for consideration during the present session, and to congratulate you upon the extent and importance of the legislation enacted which vitally affects the economic and social life of Canada. It is a source of profound satisfaction that the improvement in economic conditions in Canada which was in evidence when you commenced your sessional labours is still apparent. This improvement is reflected in substantially increased national revenues, a greater volume of inter-empire as well as foreign trade and a betterment in employment conditions throughout the country. Our favourable trade balances have strengthened our external exchange position and our national credit was never higher. The enactment of legislation incorporating the Bank of Canada to operate as a central bank will permit of the exercise of a sound measure of public control over credit and currency in the interests of the economic life of the nation and will secure to Canada a greater measure of freedom in the exchange markets of the world. The decennial revision of the Bank Act has been completed, and necessary amendments made to improve our monetary and banking institutions.

Legislation has been enacted to improve the methods and practices of the marketing of natural products. I express the confident hope that this legislation will provide the means by which the producers of primary commodities in this country may exercise over the marketing of their products a degree of regulative control which will inure to the benefit alike of producer and consumer. The Companies Act will provide greater security for investors in Canadian enterprises. The decline in world commodity prices experienced in past years has borne heavily on the producers of primary products, and the farming population has been faced with a great burden of debt. By means of the legislation which has been enacted speedy adjustments without expense to the farmers may be made with creditors, and authority has been granted to the Canadian Farm Loan Board to extend its operations so as to provide the farmer with additional capital by advances on farm mortgages and also by providing intermediate credit. Under the provisions of the Statute of Westminster legislation has been enacted to make effective extra-territorially the laws of Canada relating to navigation and shipping. The provision for the construction of public works and undertakings widely distributed throughout the country will, it is believed, further serve to stimulate economic recovery by providing employment in various lines of activity.

Among other important measures passed were: an act to provide for the franchise of electors at elections to the House of Commons, an act respecting the bureau for translations, a consolidation of the Excise act, measures affecting fruit, dairy, live stock and live stock products industries, and an act affecting Canadian and British insurance companies.

The exploratory work of the committee on price spreads and mass buying has awakened public conscience to the need of preventing unfair trade practices and exploitation of workers and price manipulation which unfavourably affects the consumer. Legislation is necessarily deferred until the work of the committee has been concluded.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The progressive improvement of general economic conditions in Canada which is presently much in evidence gives every indication of continuing in increasing measure. I commend the initiative, enterprise and indomitable spirit of the Canadian people and, for the many blessings that have been bestowed upon our dominion, I join with you in heartfelt thanks to Divine Providence.

This concluded the fifth session of the seventeenth parliament.

END OF VOLUME IV
