"As do some of our highest medical authorities, I now know that 'Uric Acid' aever did and never will cause rheumatism! But it took me many years to find out this truth. I learned how to get rid of my rheumatism and recover my health and strength, through reading 'The Inner Mysteries of Rheumatism,' a work written by an authority who has scientifically studied the cause and treatment of rheumatism for over' twenty years. It was indeed a veritable revelation:

We had read and talked so much about 'Uric Acid' that our minds seemed poisoned. But the 'Inner Mysteries of Rheumatism' made it all clear to us and now we are both free from the suffering and misery we endured so many years. I believe I was the hardest man in the world to convert! For me to discard the old 'Uric Acid' theory, and what I now know to be absolutely false, for the new, scientific understanding of the causes and cure of rheumatism, was like asking me to change my religions beliefs! Lesson XIII. March 28, 1920. The Life Work of Peter and John. Rev. 21:21-22: 5.

SUMMARY.—Lesson I. Topic: The permanent meaning of Pentecost. Place: Jerusalem. As Jesus had commanded the apostles, they with others of his followers waited and prayed in Jerusalem: for the coming of the Holy Smirit. On the day of Pentecost ha Jerusalem for the coming of the Holy Spirit. On the day of Pentecost he came, and through the preaching of Peter there were three thousand converted in one day. Jews were there from all lands whither they had been scattered, to receive the gospel message.

themselved Place: Jerusalem. While Peter and John were laboring in Jerusalem, they went one day to the tem-ple at the hour of prayer. A lame man asked for money. They had man asked for money. They had none, but Peter bade him in the name of Jesus to rise and walk, and he was healed immediately. This miracle caused cuch a stir among the people that they came together and Peter had an opportunity of preaching Jesus to them. to them.

III. Topic: The need and source of Christian courage. Place: Jerusalem. Because of the healing of the lame man and Peter's preaching, Peter and John were placed under arrest. When they were brought before the council to answer for what they had done Peter preached Jesus and his resurrection to them.

IV. Topic: Modern forms of hy-pocrisy. Place: Jerusalem. In con-mection with the prolonged revival in Jerusalem there was liberality show on the part of the Christians. Ananias and Sapphira his wife were proas and Sappnira his whee were pro-feched converts. They sold some property and brought a part of the proceeds for distribution, pretending that it was the full price. For this deception Ananias was slain by the Lord, and a little later his wife was similarly numished. similarly punished.

V. Topic: Commercializing religion Places: Samaria; on the roat from Jerusaiem to Gaza. They evangelist Philip preached in Samaria and many believed the gcepel and were convert ed. Peter and John were sent there to assist in the work. A man named Simon desired to buy the power of imparting the Holy Spirit to any one whom he might lay his hands. Peter rebuked him severely.

VI. Topic: The secret of spiritual wer. Places: Lydda; Joppa. Dur-g Peter's ministry in various places came to Lydda and found there a man named Aeneas who had been sick with the palsy for eight years. He said to him, "Aeneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee well," and he was healed at once. Peter was called to Joppa

VII. Topic: Signif.cance of the convension of Corneline. Places: Caesarea: Joppa. Corneline. Places: Caesarea: Joppa. Corneline, a Roman military officer at Caesarea, was a pious man. He had a vision in which he was directed to send to Joppa for Petgr. Peter at Joppa had a vision to teach him that Gentiles could be saved. As a result Peter went to Caesarea, preached the gospel and the Gentile Cornelius was converted.

VIII. Topic: Things wrought by prayer. Place: Jerusalem. Because of his preaching Jesus, Peter was imprisoned and Herod expected to put him to death as he had James, to please the Jews. The Christians prayed for Peter and the Lord sent an insel to release him.

IX. Topic: Ideals for Christian living. Place: The First Epistle of Peter was written at Babylon. Peter shows the necessity of being free from malice, hypocrisies and all other evil dispositions and of feeding upon the word of God to become spiritually strong.

X. Topic: Christian love regenerating society. Place: The First Epistle of John was probably written at Ephesus. The apostle exhorts all to whom he sends his message to love one another. God is love. No one that loves God can hate his brother. When God's love is perfected in us, fear is teast out.

1 XI. Topic: The glorified Christ the centre of the Revelation. Place: Patmos. The apostle John was banished to the Isle of Patmos for Jesus' sake. He there received a vision of the glorified Christ and many other visions. He was told to write in a book what he saw. He saw Jesus marvelously

Topic: The permanent mes AII. Topic: The permanent message of the Book of Revelation. Place Patmos. John had a vision of heaven. He saw an innumerable company of those who were redeemed from earth arrayed in white robes and worshipping God. The angels also worshipped h.m. The redeemed ones had come out of great tribulations and had washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb.

PRACTICAL SURVEY. Topic,—The contribution of Peter and John to Christian history.

I. Peter II. John

III. Reffections.

I. Peter. His original name was Simen, by which Jesus always dressed him. The later name is Greek for Cephas, and was given the Christ when he was received into discipleship. After meeting Jesus he resumed his earlier occupation until there came the final call of the Master, which made him an apostle and inseparable companion. His home at inseparable companion. His home at Capernaum appears to have been a kind of rendezvous for the disciples, and was the scene of one of Christ's earlier miracles of healing. He was one of the chosen witnesses of Christ's miracles and of his glorious and tragic experiences. Peter was warm-hearted, impulsive and energetic. He naturally became the leader and spokesman of the company of disciples. He was spiritually receptive. From him came the immortal declara tion of faith, which Jesus said was received by reevlation. He was first and loudest in his protestations of utmost loyalty, was the only one who attempted his defence and denied him before daybreak. There was no break in the Master's confidence. His look turned the flood of repentance on his soul. To him first of the apostles the risen Christ appeared. Undis-mayed by threatenings and persecutions, he prosecuted by apostolic calling with the greatest energy. He experienced miraculous deliverances His missionary work was extensive and effective. His central theme us the death of Jesus and his resurrection as attesting his Messiahship.
II. John. Among the disciples John occupies a prominence equal to that of Paul and Peter. In his temperament As a disciple of the Baptist he seemed to apprehend his spirit and teaching more clearly than any other of his followers. His relations with Christ were the most intimate and spiritual of all the apostles. His temperament was retiring, thoughtful and recen In the early period of apostoli activity he was in company with Peter, who was the spokesman. The writinge of John are of great value and divide themselves into two classes: his Gospel and Epistles, and the Apocalypse. All centre themselves in the deity of Christ. He opens both his Gospel and Epistles with a statement of the divine antecedents of Christ, and makes especially prominent his relations with the Father.

III. Reflections. It is difficult to compare what are equal, though vary-ingity, excellent. Diversity is the basis of harmony. Christ is the controf-ling centre of Christian cohcord. Diverse as were the apostles whose his tory and writings we have studied. they were one in love and loyalty to the Son of God. Each contributed effectually his part to the progress of Christianity. Peter's evangelism is more fully recorded, and, as might be anticipated, John's . contributions Chrstian literature exceeded those of Peter. Each wrought in his sphere under divine protection and bepower-ment. Both were invaluable. Peter could not have received the Revela could not have received the Revena-tion, nor John accomplished Peter's evangelism. A purified stream flows through the same channel as the for-mer turbid tide. All have a part; each has a place. W. H. C.

Poultry World

(J. Harry Wolsieffer in Philadelphia Record.)

The past cold weather has made many blame the poor fertility on the brand of weather handed out and not as is so often the case, on the poor handling of the breeders. It is true that the elements may play some part in early fertility, but it is also a fact that much of the lack of fertility in the breeding pen lies with the management. There are thousands of poultry keepers who have poor results due to haphazard care of those fowls that are to produce the eggs for hatching. In fact, in a majority of cases the fowls are fed and too often feeding and handling for a large egg yield. This is proper when pommercial eggs are wanted, fresh hen fruit during the winter and early spring being the only things that will pay the feed bills, but when one wishes eggs that are to be the best, as far as strong fertility is concerned, then different methods must be adopted for the best results. (J. Harry Wolsieffer in Philadelphi Record.)

fertility is concerned, then different methods must be adopted for the best results.

Forced feeding and actificial lighting to promote a great egg yield will not in the long run, give the best results nature will assert itself sooner or later and the vise breeder is one who was give this considerable thought. So far it is not claimed that the artificial light have harmed ferility, but it is yet to new for any complete findings as to the extent that one may go as far as breaders are concerned. That it has increased egg production during the winter upon the is now known to be a fact, but the effect on fertility is yet to se learned. The breeding pen should to composed of the finest specimens of the lick, strong, hardy and which have never been sick, eight females to one male in the heavy breeders, and 10 or 12 in the lighter breeds has so far given best results when choice specimens are selected. In feeds the accepted ration is plenty of green feed in the form of sprouted oats, cabbage and beets, the latter giving the best results, although a few advanced breeders have obtained good results without the green feed, using in its place a tablet that contains elements that take the place of green feed.

Those progressive breeders must have found this of value or they would never the place of green feed.

Those progressive breeders must have found this of value or they would never have given up the long accepted theory and practice of green feeding, which for years has been considered one of the essentials. Grit, oyster shell and charcoal afe before the fowls at all times, and in the majority of cases the fowls balance this kind of feeding fairly well. Oyster shell aids in making the eggshell, and grit is needed especially when the fowls are confined to their quarters for a considerable length of time. As for charcoal, that is a debatable question. But is generally, considered one of the things that aid in the results aimed for. The dry mash can be purchased, and if the leading high-grade brands are used, good results can be obtained.

As a rule too much corn and heef sulta_aimed for. The dry mash can be purchased, and if the leading high-grade brands are used, good results can be obtained.

As a rule too much corn and beef scraps may be found in ready-mixed feed. That is ideal for the laying hens, put apt to force the breeders to some extent. One thing the poultry keeper should bear in mind, that of allowing the breeders, especially the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds, Orpingtons, etc., to have access to the feed hoppers only part of the day. They should be closed until noon. The morning feed of grain, composed of corn, wheat, oats and barley, should be scattered in a deep litter, compelling the fowls to scratch for it during the greater part of the morning. Avoid feeding foo heavy of corn in the morning feed and balance, if possible, the amount at the night feed by tife weather.

The colder it is the more corn one can feed. These small things play a big part in getting eggs that can be depended upon to hatch 317315 chicks—ine-kind that have a "kick" to them and grow to maturity without undue care. Eggs are worth money, and to have but one chick to every four or five eggs placed either in the incubator or under a hen means a large loss, and yet that is what happens in a majority of cases, specially in the winter months.

The poultry quarters also play an important part—more so than poultry keepers generally supposed. Comfort for the hens means much. New, clean straw, clean quarters, keeping the fowls free from lice and vermin go a great way toward increased fertility. The poultry house should be at all times dry, free from lice and vermin go a great way toward increased fertility. The poultry house should be allowed the run of the yards every day that it is fit to be out, unlike the commercial flock, which is kept confined to the poultry house until

The breeders who may produce a few eggs less due to allowing them the run of the yard, wil. repay the pouliry keeper in better fertility. Judgment, however, must be used, and the fowls should not be allowed the yard unless the weather is fit. For future breeders early hatching should be practiced. March and April are ideal months to hatch the future breeders. They make better bone, attain full maturity at the proper time, and if not unduly forced too hard for egg production, will make fine breeders as hens when they have finished their first year of laying. Hatching in May and June, year after year, as far as breeding fowls are concerned, is apt to prove a grave evil in years to come. The errors of improper handling of the breeding pen may not show the first year. But continued practice of late hatching and poor management of the breeders is bound to tell in the long run.

One thing the poultry keeper is up against is feed. While this in itself is high enough, with no prospects of it becoming much lower in price, the poultry raiser would like to see some quality in the feeds purchased. To obtain the best results, good feed must be lised. The poultry keeper, as a rule, pays the price, but often obtains any old thing. There are, however, a few exceptions in the leading brands, which cost a few cents more, but are cheap in the long run. There is much room for improvement in prepared feeds and it is to be hoped that in the near future the poultry keeper can adjust themselves, there is going to be a sad awakening for many concerns who put out poor feeds, saying: "Take it or leave it," which the poultry keeper was compelled to do.

And thus we perhaps give an oc-casional thought to the winds and snows of winter. We have come to think of the shut-in season as colorless and uninteresting in the out-ofdoors and pass unheeding the brave little bits of brightness that remain, never dreaming of "warming ourselve at the coals of the sumac's dying fire," which, though lacking its brilliant plumage, etill gayly flaunts its flowers of deeper wine. Out in the sleeping gardens and parks on a misty day there is a silvery blur over leaf-less shrubbery that is beautiful to dis-cover and in long lines on the city streets, and in irregular woodland sittings there are grev tree-trunks, luminous and silver-sheened, lovelier, perhaps, than their branches and twigs of brown.

The beeches and oaks, busily whispering in the sheltered wood places by means of the persistent little leaves that cling to twig-fingers, are set proudly dreaming, when the sun falls tenderly on their brave bronze foliage and lights here and there a stiff little fold into golden glints of remembered autumns. Lichen moss, delicate silver work of frosted beauty, clings here and there, and in sheltered nooks un-d.scovered by snow there are vivid green moss patches on old stumps. The evergreens, so faithful in their beauty are at their best in the nonths, and was there ever such flash of glory among them as the crimson of the cardinal, or such blue as the touches in the plumage of the bluejay; such deilcate shading as the blue-grey of the nut-hatch, and such vivid black as the crown of the chickades. Perhape the least noticed, but none the less lovely to discerning eyes are the withered stems and blades of rnehes and weeds in marshlands with their delicate thits of pale gold. All these quiet bits of color have new value as we watch for them in unexpected places on days of grey or gold—"So shall our hearts grow tender as we dream.

So shall our souls receive God's finger-mark."

SIR WILLIAM'S

CHAPTER XXXII.

CHAPTER XXXII.

It was only by instalments, like a serial story, that their friends and the world at large got to know the romantic story of Sir Wilfred and the strange and almost tragic incidents which had attended it and brought it about; for instance ,there was a suggestion of mystery in Hesketh's retirement from the political contest and his sudden departure. But, at any rate, there was nothing intangible or mysterious about the happiness of Sir Wilfrid and Clytic. That it was a love-match of the most pronounced type was, as Lady Mervyn said, ridiculously obvious. They were just two culously obvious. They were just two lovers, they did not seek solitude, but neemed eager to mix with their kind, and to take their proper place in the world in which they lived. Bramley Hall once more justified its old reputation as a centre of social and hospitality. It seemed as if Clytie, in making over her ownership to her husband, was eager to display her pride in him and to evince her desire that he should take the place and the position to which he was entitled as Sir William's son and heir. So it was that a series of entertainments, brilliant enough, although by no means ostentatious, were given by the happy young couple, at which every one was afforded an opportunity of making Sir Wilfred's cquaintance. He quickly became very popular, was made master of the hounds, sat on the Bench, and took a leading part in all the public efforts for the im-provement of the locality and the bet tering of the condition of the people and the party was very anxious that he should stand at the next election, but Jack drew the line at this.

he said, when the proposi-Sorry,' tion was formally made to him. "but I couldn't do it. It would mean so may of the months of the year may of the months of the year in London, listening to very long speeches—I am no speaker myself— and being bullied by the Whip. Too hard work for me; I'm a lazy beggar; besides, I'm fond of the coun You send some other fellow, and let me hunt the hounds and look after the estate; that's quite enough for me,

And, of course, Clytie agreed with him, as she always agreed with him.
"They are the most thresome couple in the world," Mollie declared. "If you want Jack to do anything, the quickest way to get him is to ask Clytie; and vice versa. They are like two children—on my word of honor, they often go about hand in hand!— and I feel more like a mother than ever I did, especially since I put my hair up."

Her hair was "up," and her skirts lengthened; but Mollie was still the light-hearted and "frank and free young English maiden," and more humored by the Bramley people, the friends of the family, and the sercants, than ever.

It was little wonder that she should share the be happy, that she should share the happiness of her beloved Clytie, for she had done no little to bring it about; and between Jack and herself was a very warm affection, for he was not only proud of her, but was full of brotherly admiration for her shrewdness and ready wit. 'Mollie was bad enough before-be fore you came," said Clytie, ruefully, but with a loving smile in her eyes and lurking about her lipe; "but she is do my Lady Mervyn, as I think you will admit, but he spoils her badly—as you do. He encourages her in all her wickedness, and is quite hurt if I venture to try and correct her. She has her own way in everything. For instance, nothing will do her but that we must go to Withycombe, to the farm there. "Hypocrite!" exclaimed Mollie.

"You know that you jumped at the idea, and that Jack said it was a "Hypocrite!" splendid one. Of course, he pretends that he wants to look after the jetty at Petwick; but I know, and you know, that you both want to go there spoon and to moon over old tim there. They will go out walking and sailing together, and I shall be left alone on the beach, a solitary and de-serted mermaid."

They went to Withycombe, and Mol-lie's prophetic programme was fulfilled with the exception of one item. She was not left alone on the beach, for Percy was there to keep her company. He had not forgotten her promise when she started for Australia, and he made fast and furious love to he whenever the slightest opportunity of-fered itself; and Mollie kept her pro-mise to the letter, and listened, without laughing or mocking at him; but she often remonstrated, and one glor-

she often remonstrated, and one glorious afternoon, as they were sitting the beach, waiting for Jack and Clytle to return with the boat, she said:

"This is the thirty-second time you have asked me to marry you—the thirty-second or thirty-third, I'm not sure which. Now, I promised not to laugh at you, and I've kept my word; but it's a ridiculous state of things, and I can see only one way of ending and I can see only one way of endin

Percy's face grew long and rather pale. "You mean by saying 'No' right out, Mollie?"
"Well," said Mollie, slewly and thoughtfully, as if she were gravely considering a problem in Euclid, "that is certainly one way, but I was think-ng of another."

He looked at her anxiously for moment, then he uttered a cry of joy and caught her to him; and a little later, when they met the others coming up from the boat, he said, his boyish face all aglow with happiness:
"Jack! Clytie! Mollie is going to

"Jack: Clytte: Monte is going to marry me!"

Jack grinned as he shook Percy's hand, and exclaimed, ironically: "Tell us some news, old chap! Well, you have my sympathy!"

Clytte threw her arms round Mollie

There was some news awaiting them when they returned to Bramley, accompanied by Polly, who had been petted to her heart's content during their stay at Withycombe, and had cried so bitterly as the moment came for parting that Jack declared they must take her with them for a long

It was important news which Mr. Granger brought them. It appeared that Mr. Hesketh Carton's health was still precarious and would not permit him to live in England. He permit him to live in England. He had, therefore, given instructions to Mr. Granger to sell the Pit Works. He had come up to Sir Wilfred at once to consult him.

"The works were your father's, Sir Wilfred," he said; "and for myself I must confess that I should dislike to see them passing out of the family. The owner of the Pit Works must necessarily be an important personage in Bramley; one wielding an immense influence for good or evil over the influence for good or evil over the lives of the Bramley people. I am authorized by Mr. Carton to sell the business by private treaty, if possible, failing that, to put it up to auction." He paused and looked straight before him; but Mollie, who, with Clytie, was present, had learned to read the old lawyer's countenance pretty

"He wants you to buy it, Jack," she said, in a low voice, and making a grimace at the old man, who frowningly shook his head at her.

"All right," said Jack, "I'll buy it No. I shouldn't like the Pit Works to go out of the family. My father made his money there; but for the works I should not be here, shoud not—"He laid his hand lovingly on Clytie's shoulder. "Yes;" said Mr. Granger. "Mt."

"No," said Jack—he had been pulling his mustache thoughtfully, and now turned to Clytie, whose eyee were dwelling on him, as they always dwelt, with proud and loving intentness—"I've got a partner, right enough. The very man!"
"Indeed?" said Mr. Granger, with some surprise.

"Stephen Rawdon."
Mollie uttered a cry of surprise and elight, and exclaimed: "Oh, Jack, you really are clever!

So, by the irony of fate—may it not bearings, and the result was that the next morning a cable was despatched to Stephen Rawden, who was helping Chope at Silver Ridge:

"Come back to England as soon as

"Come back to England as soon as convenient. Important post waiting for you. Bring Teddy with you. Letter to Mr. Jarrow follows."

So, by the irony of fate—may it no rather be said by the mysterious workings of a just Providence?—the man Hesketh Carton had wronged came to reign in his nie as and reigned sucto reign in his place; and reigned successfully, for the work-people, some of whom were inclined to resent their fellow workmen's sudden elevation, soon recognized with the working fellow workmen's sudden elevation, soon recognized with the working man's quickness of perception and sense of justice that a great change had taken place in Stephen Rawdon; that for him much water had flowed through the bridge since he left England, and that his old capacity for work had come back to him, and had returned accompanied by a certain power, dignity, and mental strength, which quickly justified Sir Wilfred's choice of him as a partner.

And Mrs. Rawdon was by her husband's side to help him smooth awdy band's side to help him smooth away any difficulty by the exercise of that tact which had enabled her to rende Sir Wilfred and Lady Carton so grea

From time to time there came tidings of Hesketh Carton, Strangel enough, he, too, had gone to Aus tralia. Poetical justice would seem to have demanded that he should have at once reaped the harvest of tare which he had sowed; but, alas! poetical justice is more often found in novel than in real life; and it must be recorded, with reluctance, that Mr. Hesketh Carton flourished exceedingly, like the green bay-tree, in the country of his adoption, entered public life, and became quite a great man. But success does not always bring happiness, and it was whispered that there was something in Mr. Hesketh Carton's past life which accounted for health, the pallor and stern ness of his counterance, and the coldness of his manner, which had a freezing effect upon all who came in contact with him, repelling even his best friends. The fact, too, that he had repeatedly refused to go to England when pressed to do so en public bus iness, was often commented on.

He lived alone and solitary in a huge house, surrounded by every lux-ury, but appeared to find little enoyment in his wealth and prosperity
As a rule, he was as impassive, as cold and self-contained in manner a in appearance. No one has ever seen him give way to one of the fits of il temper to which even the best of me are sometimes subject; but there was no one present when, seated in hi study, he read Mr. Granger's letter in-forming him that Sir Wilfred had pur-chased the works and made Stephen Rawdon the working partner; if there had been any one present, he would have been shocked and startled by the terrible fit of passion which transformed the cold impassive stateman formed the cold impassive statesman into something more like a wild beast than a human being.

It changed that, not very long after the birth of Clytle's second boy, Jack found it absolutely necessary to go over to Australia; for his interest at Silver Ridge had grown into vast proportions, and it was only right that he should may one visit at any rate. he should pay one visit, at any rate, to the place from which he derived so large an amount of money.

"Jack we'll all go!" excdaimed Mollie, when he announced his intention "Right! aye, Clytie!" he said, in his "Right! aye, Clytie!" he said, in his usual cheery fashion. And they went. It chanced that they put up for one night in the city in which Mr. Hesketh Carton loomed so largely, and Jack, who was still in ignorance, as was Clytie, of Hesketh Carton's villatingus attempt on Clytic's 1550 and lainous attempt on Clytie's life, and bore him no ill will for the little afat Withcombe, proposed to call on Hesketh. "Yes, if you like," said Clytie, but ith downcast eyes. Mollie said nothing. It was difficult o offer any objection without disclos ing the truth to offer any objection without disclosing the truth in all its hideousness, and she and Mary Seat on had agreed that the happiness of Clytie's and Jack's lives should not be darkened by such a shadow as the knowledge of Hesketh Carton's infamy would throw over it.

The weather was fine; they had an open carriage, and drove toward the great man's house. As the carriage approached the entrance, the door of the house was thrown open, and Hesketh Carton, thin, pale, and emaciated, but dressed with his old scrupulous care came out. His head was benthe looked prematurely old and bowed— but he raised his head at the sound of the carriage, and his eyes rested, for a moment, dully on the occupants; then they met Mollie's eyes fixed on his, and a swift and appalling change took place in his face, and, indeed it seemed, in the whole of his figure. White as death, he shrank back shaking, and with averted head, as if he were gazing at a spectre, rouse by the memory of something fearsome and horrible. His hand went but feely behind him until it touched the portice, as if he were seeking for support; then, with another look at the two women, who were gazing at him affrightedly—for at that moment it affrightedly-for at that moment it seemed to them that he was strick in by paralysis or death, so ghastly was his face, so distorted by the passion of fear and hate struggling for mast-ery—he turned, and, clutching at the arm of a servant, reentered the abuse. Jack looked from one to the other gravely, perplexedly.

"What does it mean?" he asked. "The man looked like—like a man who sees a ghost. It was at you, Mollie.

MOUNTAIN OF GOLD

The nearest approach, literally, to a 'mountain of gold" is Mount Morgan, in Australia. And they are mining to-day there as they did for thirty years. The net proceeds have been about $38,000,000. This so-called 'mountain of gold" has yielded, on an average, half an ounce or less of gold o the ton.
This has led many persons to ask

This has led many persons to ask seriously, "What would happen if a mountain of pure gold were found?" For ages men have dreamed and writers have written yarns about 'mountains of gold," but just what would happen if one were found is still a question with as many sides as a quartz nugget of the precious yellow stuff.

That it would lessen the value of That it would lessen the value of the gold standard goes without saying, and yet some other rare metal or substance would probably be found readily enough to take its place in coinage if this should happen. Concerning this interesting question, mining experts have talked most interestingly. Those of us, they say, who are familiar with gold mining, and more especially the big bonaras of the world, need not strain our imaginations to conceive of an ore body (g ations to conceive of an ore body a even a mass of gold big enough to upset international monetary stardupset international monetary staps-ards. Bad Breath? Don't Be Offensive Remove the Cause

The bad part of Bad Breath is the fact that nearly every case shows considerable trouble from indigestion, belching gas, bloating, piles or some form of stomach misery. Oftener than not a pimply face, a sluggish consti-pated condition is the true cause of many a man's failure in life. By aiding digestion and building up the weak muscles of the stomach and bowels, DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS completely overcome constipation and all forms of s'omach illness.

"I was terribly run down with stomach trouble that arose through neglected constipation," writes Mrs. P. D. Quigley, from Washburn, P. O. "I simply couldn't half digest my food.
I had dreadful headaches, piles and yellow muddy skin. The effect of DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS was phenomen-al. I have gained in weight, have a clear skin, no more headaches, I eat

BUGGERT MASS OF COPPER.

BIGGEST MASS OF COPPER. For in unce, what is the biggest mass of native copper ever found? Of course, it was in the Lake Superior region. It was in 1857, at the Mineregion. It was in 180%, at the mine-sota (not himnesota) mine, in the Ontonagon district—At a shallow depth there was discovered a mass of copper 46 feet long, with a maximum thickness of eight and a half feet The mean width was twelve and a half feet and the mean thickness four feet. The total weight actually recovered was 420 tons.

total weight actually recovered was 420 tons.

No such masses of gold as this, of course, have ever come to light. Yet gold in great quantities has been won in brief periods. California River beds yielded. $81,294,700 in 1851 alone, and the shallow diggings of Victoria gave $63,000,000 in 1853. In the Klondyke more recently one miner cleaned up $46,000 in eight hours and took out $750,000 from a claim about 80 by 50 feet.

AFTER EFFECTS OF-INFLUENZA OFTEN SERIOUS

Victims Are Left Weak, Tired and Mentally Depressed—Tonic Treatment is Strongly Recommended.

No pestilence in years has caused more widespread suffering than the epidemic of influenza which ewept over Canada in the fall and winter of 1918-19 and again this winter. The danger from this trouble is seldom over when the characteristic symptoms, the fever, headache and the depression of epirits have passed away. Influenza leaves behind it weakened vital powers, thin blood, impaired digestion and over-sensitive nerves. Men and women who were robust before stricken with influenza find their bodies racked by pains previously unknown to them. This condition is due to an abnormal thinning of the blood and leaves the system ouely unknown to them. This condition is due to an abnormal thinning of the blood and leaves the system an easy prey to other serious troubles. This is the time when the convalescent from influenza should build up the blood, with a reliable bloodmaking tonic such as Dr. Williams' Pink Pilis. Weak blood means impoverished nerves, impaired digestion, a feeling of tiredness after even slight exertion, and sometimes even slight exertion, and sometimes ever blood regains its rich red quality the nerves recover their strength and the organs of the body function naturally.

organe of the body function naturally. In fact building up the blood will vitalize the whole system.

The experience of Mr. Andrew Marty, Bathurst, N. B., will prove of value to a host of influenza sufferers who still suffer from the effects of the disease. Mr. Marty says:—"The new life and consequently new hope brought into my life through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is almost beyond my power of expression. Following a severe attack of influenza of Dr. Williams Pink Fills is almost beyond my power of expression. Following a severe attack of influenza in 1918 I found myself rapidly failing in health, and was naturally much faiarmed. I began to lose in weight, could not est, did not sleep well, and in a word I was reduced to a mere shadow. I was forced to discontinue work because, of my weakened shadow. I was forced to discontinue work because, of my weakened condition and things had a very blue outlook. I tried a number of suggested remedies, but without benefit. And then one day Dr. Williams' Pink Pilis were suggested to me. I acted on my friend's advice, began taking these pills and soon felt an improvement. Every day I seemed to growstronger, and after four weeks' ment. Every day I seemed to grow stronger, and after four weeks' treatment I felt fully restored to my old-time health. From my own experience I feel that, if given a fair trial, there is no medicine superior to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in building up a run down system."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a tonic protestimulant. They build up the

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a tonic not a stimulant. AMONG THE DECIDED NOVELTIES There are hats of imitation patent leather, shiny and black and looking very much like the patent leather which hitherto has been confined to belts and bags and such things. These new hats are usually in rather sailor-like shapes, with straight and high brims, and straight crowns. Often the material is embroidered—and extremely good-looking hat of this imitatiou patent leather was embroidered all over in red and blue. And speaking of embroidery reminds one that embroidery is very much in evidence this spring. There is embroidery of straw braid on straw hats, and embroidery of silk on the satin and taffeta hats, for which there is quite a vogue. is quite a vogue

There is certainly no lack of variety in this year of 1920. One of the very new ideas is to use raffla braid in bright colors, like yellow and emerald green and cerise and varnish it. The braid is used for facing sometimes, there is just a twist around a brim or a crown, and sometimes the braid is used in an embroidery design.

SYNOPSIS. John Davis and Hawk Morgan, executors of the estate of John Carr, miner, and joint guardians of his adopted daughter, Ethel, quarrel ever the disposition of the profits of the mine. Morgan secretly makes several unsuccessful attempts on the life of Davis, in one of which the latter is rescued by a mysterious hermit. Morgan summons a villainous accomplice named Spider Bellas and they plot to kill Davis.

John Davis, tricked into crossing the log which had been nearly sawed by the would-be murderer, Hawk Morgan, made a wild sideways leap as the trunk gave way beneath his weight. Landing in the branches of a near-by tree he went crashing through them until by good fortune he managed to hook one arm over a slender bough and stay his descent. From this he hung for a moment, then as he felt his strength come back he reached up and grasped the limb with his other hand. Hawk, seeing that his intended victim was about to save himself, drew his weapon and fired. The bullet half severed the limb which gave away, and John again plunged downward.

Had it not been that there were a number of fir and cedar trees projecting from the side of the steep incline, Davis certainly must have ended up a dead man. As it was, however, their tops through which he fell while not rugged enough to tear him limb from limb checked his fall greatly, plunging at last into a great mass of snow which had avalanched down from the ridge. Here he lay motionless, almost completely buried one arm thrust above the surface.

From the brink of the canyon side, Morgan, the arch conspirator, peered as the other man went crashing down in his long fall. A wolf-like smile spread the watcher's face.

'He's gone to glory this time, all right, and the girl and mine will eventually all belong to me."

On the other side of the gap from which Spider Bellas had been hurled by John when the former tried to kill him, the Spider arose from the little ledge upon which he had falien, little the worse for the battle he had been engaged in. Limping slightly and cursing beneath his breath he started to cross the ravine lower down. noise of Davis' falling body made him turn his head, and for an instant he saw the other in mad flight. From where he stood he was unable to see the termination of the fall, but upon the opposite side of the brink he saw the figure of his confederate, the Hawk, and waved him a salutation of triumph over the success of their plan. This done the Spider resumed his way, his intention being to join the Hawk upon the other side.

Morgan, seeing his victim end up a motionless body at the bottom of the eanyon, set about obliterating all traces of the fact that he had been tampering with the fallen trunk of the pine, whereupon he began to retra the trail leading to the cabin. Ethel, seeing him approach, opened the door and came forth to greet him. Hastily the Hawk told her of the accident to John, the breaking of the tree beneath him and his fall to death. face the girl paused only long enough to throw on a heavy wrap, and closely followed by Rainface they retraced their steps to the scene of the tragedy.

The Indian, following with ropes and blankets, met the Spider and was told who he was, whereupon that rascal reiterated the story of Morgan and the four hastened on to their grewsome task of rescuing the body.

While this had been hannening the Hermit of the Mountain, fur dressed and on a hunting trip, chancing to pass along the bottom of the canyon, saw a gun and cap lying upon the snow. Instantly his keen eyes swept the side descent, noting the broken tree tops through which John had crashed. Realizing that someone had fallen through them he began casting about. a moment later discovering the outstanding arm of the snow-buried one.

Bending over him and finding him senseless, the old Hermit quickly examined the body for signs of life. Finding them, he straightened up and looked around.

Above him some twenty feet was a ledge of rock from which a bowlder projected, and unwinding his lariat from his body he made a cast that settled the noose around the bowlder. Then fastening the loose end of the rope about the senseless form, he ascended the lasso hand over hand until he stood upon the ledge. This done, it was but the work of a couple of minutes for him to hoist the recumbent figure to his perch. Next he raised the form of Davis to his shoulder and bere him away, having left no clue behind him on the snow as to how he had vanished with the unconscious man he had found.

The rescue party finding the place where Davis had fallen saw the marks in the snow where someone had approached him, but no trail leading away from the spot. So far as they could discover both the dead man and the finder of the body had vanished into thin air. There was nothing left to do but retrace their steps, Ethelwith a heavy heart and Morgan with a much-puzzled brain.

Walking with heavy steps beneath his burden the Hermit continued his way until he reached a care at the foot of the ravine, the mouth of the place being well screened by a growth of shrubs. Into this opening he carried his burden and lighting a lantern again examined him. Finding no bones broken, he secured a bottle from a small medicine chest. Carefully he read the label.

"To induce sound sleep give patient twenty drops in water." The old man drew the cork.

"And keep bim unconscious I must until I can return him to the Indian and the girl." Pressing the draught to the still senseless man's lips he watched the other until he saw a gentle stirring of the form, soon followed by the deep breathing of slumber. Then taking down a bow and arrow he wrote a note, fastened it to the arrow's shaft and stepped to the mouth of the cave.

Night had fallen when he cautiously drew near the cabin. Taking aim at a lighted window he let the arrow fly, and with a splintering of glass the shaft passed through and stood quivering in a table. Alarmed by the sound of the breaking glass, the occupants of the place ran to the table. Ethel, arriving first, snatched the paper from the shaft and opening it read aloud.

"Davis is alive and in a deep sleep in a cave hidden by brush at the south of Pinnacle Rock in the gorge. See Jeremiah VI-25."

"And what does he mean by that? Who is Jeremiah?" growled the Hawk. Without speaking the girl slipping into her room picked up her Bible.

Quickly improvising a litter and securing lanterns and pine torches Ethel, Morgan, Rainface and the big-hearted Bridget started on their way to find the cave. With Pinnacle Rock as their guide they soon located its entrance, and pushing aside the screen entered. A glance showed them that it contained no evidences of ever having been inhabited, the only object that met their eyes being the form of the unconscious man. | Ethel, rushing forward, fell upon her knees beside it.

"Thank heaven he still lives," she cried fervently as she lifted her face after having it before his lips that she might feel if he were breathing. Murderous though his disappointment was that he had again failed to make way with his rival, the Hawk was obliged to smother it.

"That's lucky. We must get him back to the cabin as soon as we can." Placing him upon the litter they began on the mattress and quickly fell into a deep sleep. Curling herself comfortably in a big chair at his side, the girl settled down to watch over him through the night that she might be on hand to minister to any need, while Rainface, with a reat of approval, curied himself up to a dog on the mat before the door.

An hour passed and all was still save the breathing of the sleeping Softly arising the girl again secured her Bible and opening it at Jeremiah VI-25, read:

"Co not forth into the field, nor walk by the way, for the sword of the enemy and fear is on every side." Struck by a sudden thought she turned to the fore. Cunningly the Hawk began placok of Micah and again read: "A man's enemies are the men of his

Laying the book aside she rested her cheek upon her hand and became lost in thought. "The men of the house!" Rainface, Morgan, the Spider -could it be possible that one of them was plotting against this other man? Deeply she pondered.

Meanwhile within the harness house the two desperadoes sat with heads close together over a bottle of whisky. Morgan began cursing loud and deep. "If I can do away with him I get the gold and girl. Curse him, he seems to bear a charmed life, though." The Spider raised the bottle. "His luck can't hold out forever.

We've got two strings to our bow this time, and the scheme we have just thought out has got to work." The other rascal clenched his fist and struck the table.

"It would seem so. You go up the trail in the morning and fix the deadfall and I will look after the trapdoor before anyone is up. One more drink and then we'll turn in." A moment later they had put out the light.

By the first light of morning Morgan crept cautiously down the cellar by means of the outside door. Carefully he examined the ceiling, until in the dim light he stood beneath the place he sought. Directly above his head was a trapdoor of sufficient di-mensions to permit a man to drop, hinged upon one side and held up on the other by a huge iron bolt which was worked by means of a lever. Drawing an oil can from his pocket, the Hawk began carefully lubricating the rusty fron lever. Finishing this and being assured that all was in working order, he left the cellar with the secrecy with which he E d come. Nor during this time had the Spider

Leaving the harness room in the ghostly glow of daybreak, the Spider found a place on the mountain trail that promised to suit his evil purpose. the night, and trodding his way along in such a way that anyone following it would be sure to follow in his steps, the Spider bent his steps between two trees with rough bowlders upon each side of them, halting when he reached the place he had chosen. At this point a huge tree trunk had fallen until it hung above the spot, caught in the branches of its fellow rees, and here he began the setting of his trap.

First cutting a trigger which he placed and cunningly concealed across the trail in such manner that a passing foot would strike it, he cut the log in such manner that the slightest disturbance would send it crashing down, inevitably crushing to death whatever creature chanced to be passing beneath. The connecting rope between the trigger and trunk he carefully concealed with debris of the forest, then with a look of satisfaction for a moment surveyed his work, after which he stole away with the caution

As the breakfast horn blew, Morgan and the Spider came from the barn with the sleepy air of men just awakened from a long night's sleep. Calling their morning's greetings to those of the cabin they entered the cabin and ate heartily as they talked of the events of the day before. The Hawk turned to the others.

"Mr. Bellas is a mining expert who will be of great assistance to us in locating the missing mine," he said, with a meaning glance at the Spider. This afternoon we will search the hills for it. Suppose that you, Rainface, give friend Davis the keys to Carr's desk that he may look over them while Bellas and I are searching for the mine." John, still weak and shaky from his fall of the day before, nodded his assent.

"I am afraid I could not keep up with you today," he acquiesced with a weak smile. The prospect of being several hours alone with the girl at his side was ample compensation for his aches and bruises of the day being chairs and the table, arranging them so that his victim must sit over the trapdoor.

"And now for the search," he said as he drew the Spider's arm beneath his own. Out of the door they went, merely glancing at Rainface who just outside the door of the porch was working at the stormdoor with ax and other tools, but no sooner were they beyond the vision of any possible watchers than they wheeled, stole upon the cabin again and disappeared into the cellar.

Through the knot hole in the floor that the Hawk had unsuccessfully used in his former attempt upon the life of John, he peered into the room above. The chair in which Davis sat and which had been cunningly placed by the plotter was just at the edge of the trapdoor, which was concealed by a rug. Seeing that their victim was the place desired, very cautiously he drew the holt of the lever.

Sitting unsuspectingly in his chair, John, caught by the trap, felt himself going down. The desperate spring which he made to right himself all unavailing; beneath him the rug disappeared and the next instant his legs were through the hole. Before e had time to call out he was jerked downward, his head striking violently upon the side of the trap and leaving his mind a blank, the next instant landing a senseless, huddled heap upon the basement floor below. With a few swift movements the Spider thrust the rug into the room above and replaced it as it had been the moment before, as quickly hoisting the trap to its former place and shooting back the lever. Not over five seconds had passed, and the room above remained the same as before except that Davis vanished as a bubble bursts.

Binding the senseless man hand and foot they gagged him and placed him in a long wooden box which bore the label "Mining machinery for John Carr," closing the lid with a metal clasp.

"I reckon he's settled this trip," panted the Hawk. "Now for the next move." Quickly they left the cellar.

Ethel, entering the room which she had left the moment before on some slight errand, stared about in amaze ment. It was empty. Softly she called "John-where are you?" but there was no response. Bridget and Rainface, attracted by her exclamations came hurriedly in, followed a moment later by the Hawk and Bellas.

"What's up?" demanded Morgan. Swiftly she told them of the unaccountable vanishment of the missing

"Another mystery," murmured the Hawk in the tones of one greatly perplexed. "Come on and we will scatter and search. The scoundrel cannot have gone far." Drawing his revolver he rushed from the room the others upon his heels, filled with wonderment, dazed by the suddenness of it all and half wondering if the world had gone mad. A half hour's search revealed nothing and slowly they returned, standing idly about until the a despairing gesture entered the room.

In the cellar below a flicker of consciousness returned to the imprisoned John, and feeling the returning tide of life he began to writhe and twist beneath his bonds. His feet touched the end of the chest, and discovering, that he could make a sound by beating them against it he began a tattoo. Ethel in the room above him, hearing the weird sound and being unable to locate it, ran to the door and called to the others telling them of the mysterious noises that had reached her ears.

"What has become of it?" queried the Hawk as they all strained their Spider with a leer at her. "Spooks come back to the scene of the crime." "More likely it was further deviltry on the part of that mysterious stranger." added Morgan. "Bellas here and I will go to the barn and keep a lookout. If he turns up we'll get him sure." With a last assurance to Ethel that she need not fear so long as they were there to protect her, they disappeared within the barn. Once there they lost little time in pursuing the plan they had decided upon. Closing the door behind them they passed to a side entrance which beyond the view of a possible watcher from the Louse, and making a short detour crept silently into the cellar. Gloom filled the place, and feeling the way with their feet they approached the box and bent over it. As they did so a form arose from behind it and a mighty blow sent the Hawk reeling across the room, while the Spider felt himself gripped in a strangling grasp. Back and forth across the room the pair fought in the semi-darkness, while the Hawk, half dazed by the blow he had received, staggered uncertainly about unable to distinguish friend from foe. Ethel and Bridget. startled by the sudden turmoil beneath the floor, clutched each other in alarm. "Howly Saints, but it must be all the divils of the Pit, thimselves Phwat shall we do?" cried the Irigi-woman. Ethel sprang to the table and the next instant a lighted lamp was in her hand. "We must go and see. It might be John in distress," she cried. Quick as a cat Bridget seized a rolling pin and, rolling the sleeve up a mighty arm, went waddling toward the cellar

"May the Lord have mercy upon thim who is bateing him, be they saints or devils." she cried as she went heavily down the steps. Lamp held high the girl followed her close.

As the light from the lamp falling over them revealed the faces of the struggling men each to the other, by common consent they ceased their battling, and as Davis in amazement dropped his arms his heart leaped as he found Ethel clinging to him, sobbing, pressing her cheek against his shoulder. Gently he drew her to him.

"Where have you been?" she asked, quickly returning his embrace and freeing herself as a faint tide of color arose to her cheeks. Grimly John pointed to the box.
"In that thing where I lay until I managed to break my way out." He took a step toward Morgan. "What were you doing here." The Hawk fell back a step before the threatening front of the other. "Don't be too hasty, Davis. Bellas and I were in the barn watching and we saw a man in a fur coat and with his face masked sneak around the cor ner of the house. We followed, but when we had arrived there he was out of sight. Seeing the cellar door open and thinking he had come down here, we came down also and bad hardly intered when you jumped us like a mountain lion. Had it not been that Miss Ethel and Bridget heard the racket and came, I believe you would have killed us both before we could have gotten out of here." Slowly, deep in thought, John turned to the door.

"This thing has got to stop. We must catch that man or none of our lives will be safe. What the meaning of all of it is I don't know, but I am going to catch the villain and out." Morgan pointed directly up the mountainside.

"He must have gone that way. I'll go to the right. Let Bellas wait five minutes then go to the left. Davis, you wait ten minutes, also, then come straight up the trail. We'll search the ridge and meet at the top.'

Davis, the last to depart, had made but a few steps when Ethel came hurrying up to him. In one hand was the letter which had been attached to the opening the book she read to him the words from Jeremiah and Micah. Her hand fell on his arm.

"Don't go," she pleaded. "I am afraid Rainface, joining them, alshowed his disapproval. John laughed.

"That message means nothing. Morgan is my nearest relative and Bellas his friend, therefore mine. We'll be back in half an hour."

With a parting wave of his hand he vent up the trail, his rifle ready and his eyes searching every suspicious-looking object. Cautiously he advanced, every step bringing him near er to the trigger of the dead-fall which lay between the two trees.

Slight as was the impact of his foot against the trigger it startled John and he shot a glance upward. The mighty tree already was falling, descending upon him with a force that would crush him to pulp. He tried to spring back, but his feet caught in the rope and tripped him, and be fore he could recover himself he was driven to the earth and lay half stunned, half crushed on his back, the trunk across his chest.

Had it not been that there was a small depression in the ground where he fell, and which prevented the full weight of the tree from bearing him, he must have been crushed to death by its fall. Knowing that he death by its Iall. Marving the awful pres-could not long survive the awful pres-sure, despairingly he cast his eyes the lay close at hand. about. His rifle lay close at and seizing it and using it as a lever, with a mighty effort he raised the trunk a few inches and wriggled him-self free. Bruised and battered he gathered himself together as best he could, and went staggering along a trail. In his dazed condition he did not realize that instead of taking the path which led to the cabin, he was following the way which wound up at the small sawmill which John Carr in his lifetime had constructed for the ing of the logs which went into his buildings. The Hawk and the Spider looking from a window of the mil where they had retired for a consultation, saw their escaped victim come stumbling toward them. The voice of Morgan arose in a savage curse.

was upon his feet, a glare in his eyes and a heavy billet of wood in his hand. "Never mind how he did it, for the fact is that he did. But I'll get him now." Raising his arm he hurled the billet, and the missile flying true as a bullet landed with a crash upon the advancing one's head. Beneath the impact he went down as does an ox smitten by a maul. Rushing from the mill the two rufflans fell upon him, and picking him up ore him quickly out of sight within he building. Throwing him upon the door they stood gazing down upon him, the hatred of two fiends showing in heir faces. The Spider drew his gun. "I'm going to plug him now good and plenty," he swore, but seeing the other's movement the Hawk struck up the weapon. "Put that gun away, you fool. We ion't want to leave any bullet holes ochind us. Anyway, I've got a better scheme—a scheme that will make im repent with his last breath that he dared stand between me and that mine and the girl." "As you say," growled the Spider.

"But what's the ingin idea?" Without answering him the Hawk stepped to the gasoline engine which propelled the saw, started it, then pointed to the traveler which was used to carry logs to the spinning disk with its jagged teeth.

"We'll put him on that and let the machinery do the rest. He's tough, all right, but I recken that buzz saw will pe able to bite him. Lend a hand cere."

Quickly securing bonds they tled the still unconscious one hand and foot, then stopping the machine they laid Davis upon the traveler, lashing him upon it so that when the contrivance was again put into motion he must inevitably be carried to the whirling lade and his body severed even as would have been the trunk of a pipe. Then drawing back they surveyed their devilish work with satisfaction.

"It's too merciful an end for him," said the Spider. "After all the trouble he has made us and caused us to feel like a pair of fools, I'd like to see him wriggle a bit just before he realizes what is going to happen to him."

"Leave that to me," swore Morgan. We'll wake him up so he can see finish." Suiting the action to the word he picked up a bucket of water and dashed it in their captive's face. Slowly the eyes of John opened and he glanced about, but the two wouldbe murderers had crouched beyond the line of his vision and all he saw was the terrible machine upon which he was lashed. He gave a great surge of his body, but the cords which bound him were of great strength and the effort was wasted.

Sneaking up to the switch which put the machine into operation, the Hawk threw it on and slowly at first, then faster second by second until its voice arose to a snarling whine, the saw began to spin. And as it did so the traveler which hore the body of the helpless one began slowly to approach the whizzing teeth.

Seeing it all and realizing that another minute must be his last if he remained lashed where he was. John put all the great strength of his body into a last terrible struggle against the lashings which bound him.

L'AFFAIRE ROCHETTE.

French Financial Swindler Had a Remarkable Career.

Henri Rochette, banker and promoter, has been sentenced to two years imprisonment and a fine of 3,000 frains for swindling French investors to the amount of more than 10,000,000 france through the sale of Mexican railroad bonds in 1910.

"L'Affaire Rochette has afforded Paris a big sensation, which is not to be wondered at, considering the huge amont of money involved. Never in the course of French financial history has there been such an extraordinary successful promoter as Rochette, the man of 43, who not many years ago was a cafe waiter and a barber's assistant. He seems to have been able to raise all the money he required for everything he took in hand. He began life as a measenger boy at a railway refreshment room at Meiun. He inherited a small sum of money and went to Paris where he took lessons at a commercial school. He then became a junior clerk in a great French Henri Rochette, banker and prolessons at a commercial school. He then became a junior clerk in a great French bank, which he left to enter a company promoter's office. On his employer's failure Rochette circularized the credit-ors, offering it with their assistance, un-dertaking to get their money back for

He next succeeded in getting himself financed by a gentleman of large private means, and started the Credit Miner (Mining Bank). From that time forward he became a sort of financial wizard. Companies sprang up at his bidding as though at a command of a magician's wand. In a couple of years the Credit Miner was doing such business that it employed 400 clerks.

There was a continuous stream of promotions of companies of all kinds.

the Credit Miner was doing such business that it employed 400 clerks.

There was a continuous stream of promotions of companies of all kinds. There were issued to the public in turn the stock of collieries, copper, silver and gold mines. South American and Mexican land and railway concerns, banks, fisheries, gas-mantle factories, colonial concerns, and various other undertakings. So enormous did the financier's business become that he formed a subsidiary company, the Banque Franco-Espagnol, and started a daily financial newspaper. In his heydev his two offices gave employment to 700 clerks.

In 1906, everything was going on swimmingly, and all that Rochette wanted was the Ribbon of the Order of the Legion of Honor to enhance his prestige. An application was drawn up by some friends of his, and it was initialled by great political personage; but he got candescent gas at very smail expense, but it did nothing that was claimed for it.

It is alleged that M. Rochette spent a very large sum monthly in "hush money." It is stated that the money so paid amounted on an average to between $10,000 and $15,000 per month. Some of this influential protectors are said to have been in the receipt of weekly allowances of $250, $300 and $400 and from the Credit Miner, and it is alleged that but for their protection Rochette would have been arrested long before he was actually taken in.

Although at first his liabilities were placed at $20,000,000 it was later found that twice that sum would be a more correct estimate.

The whole "affairs" was made the subject of investigations by a Parliamentary Committee of Inquiry, and one of the most interesting witnesses examined was M. Lepine, the Prefect of Police in Paris. In the statement that he made he said that Rochette's method was to float companies in groups. As soon as one got into difficulties another was floated to support it, and was thrust upon the investing public by means of extraordinary advertisement. Seven companies were thus floated in the course of three years, he said, had brought Rochette more than $15,000,000, and by a system of inflating the prices of their shares they had been made to produce, altogether, nearly twenty-five millions. "It is a house of cards," he declared, "having no foundation but the credulity of the public.

The Roumanians had 40,000 men to enforce Roumanians had 40,000 men to enforce their demands. The admiral had two submarine chasers armed with six-pounders to enforce his.

SITTING A HORSE.

Rough-riding Westerner Talks About Royalty.

Pictures of the country's recen guest, the Prince of Wales, engaged n assistant cow punching in the west and riding a western saddle in the western fashion, have been gen-erally printed in the newspapers. Perhaps even in this age of automobile there are horsemen enough still left to share the interest in the exhibition expressed by a Canadian writing in the Daily Mail of London. "Yesterday," he writes. "I was comparing a photograph of the Prince of Wales taken in Hyde Park and another of him taken during his tour in Canada. In the first he sits an Irish hunter on an English hunting saddle. He has the seat of a born cavalier. In the second he sits a Canadian bronco an a California stock saddle (a stock saddle has a high cantle, a horn, and recently made and first put leg across Canadian horseflesh. Englishmen could not sit a horse, they proclaimed. They were all right for hacking about, but when it came to riding—real riding—they were not in it.

"I recall well the day the riding master strode into the Royal Northwest Mounted Police stables at Regina and announced that he was looking for a high-stepper to carry the heir to the throne. No 'mean' tricks, some sense and plenty of style was what he called for.

what he called for.

"I was in the rough-riding squad at the time, and we paraded a few of the 'perfect ladies' that we had in the stables. He chose a bay mare who had brains enough to do almost anything except talk, and told me to school her and get her into shape for royalty.

"Some weeks later the duke-today's King—rode through the on that same little bronco and spected the Northwest Mounted Po-lice. He inspected me casually, I am afraid, for she was giving him a lot to do. He did not understand the stock saddle and the bitting.

"We, on the other hand, inspected His Royal Highness critically. We liked his horse but we did not approve of his seat. Englishmen certainly could not sit a horse.

"Many years later we came to the war. And we saw Englishmen, many of them sitting on horses. At first we were inclined to sneer. There was nothing about the management nor the handling of horses they could teach us.
"But we worked side by side with orack British cavalry regiments, and they kept their horses in as good fet-tle as we did, and seemed to make le as we did, and seemed to make longer marches with as little fatigue, we began to wonder it, afte rall, there might not be something in the English seat and the English saddle.

"Finally our lot got cut up a bit and for reinforcements we got Hous Cavalry horses with universal saddles. And our boys looked 'all of a hump'

There are those in Japan who re-gard with disfavor, despite their ex-cellence in the eyes of 'reigners, the dolls wearing the "atost thing" in costume, that it has become more and more the custom to display the costume, that it has become more and more the custom to display in shop windows. These dolls, they ray, represent the decadence of the ancient Japanese art of doll making. They are quite overdone. They lack the simple art of the Japanese doll of an earlier period. They are nothing but window manuscript. The criticism window mannequins. The criticism seems to be founded on fact, for al-though there are some who maintain that doll making is still one of the Japanese fine arts, no modern doll-maker seems to have succeeded Kisa-buro Matsumoto, with whom ended, in 1889, the doll-making traditions of the pre-Restoration period. More than that, the mulern theatre and now the motion pictures have supplanted the puppet shows that long provided a fine incentive to the men who made dolls for them, and created a great number of Colls which everybody recognized as characters in the national forms. The other dolls processes drama. The other dolls, moreover, were not dressed in real clothes, but painted to represent different styles of costume, and a finished doll, like any other work of art the world over, was expected by the connoisseur to reveal something of the personality of the artist. No wonder the mannequins in the shop windows look to some drama. The other dolls, moreover in the shop windows look to some Japanese like the decadence of a fine art.

APPROACH TO THRONE.

Invoking of This Old Right in Britain.

The "right of approach to the throne." which dates back to the days of William and Mary, is seldom ercised in England at present, though it was invoked recently w a delegation of thirty called at Buck-ingham Palace with all the ceremony that marked similar events in the ancient days. The party consisted of Free Church leaders who presented to the monarch an address of congratu-lation and rejoicing on the coming of ceded in England the "right of approach" was used often by those who believe their rights were being trampied upon, and in many cases their contentions were well grounded. History tells also that the dissenters on various occasions failed to receive the affable treatment accorded to them by king George.

Non-Comformist bodies, according to the "right," have the privilege of approaching the sowereign and laying before him the facts regarding any cuttailment of civil or religious liberty which may threaten tham because of their faith. A general body was formed for the purpose of carrying this right into operation. It was composed of representatives of three great Non-Conformist churches—Congregational, Baptist and Precbyterian.

"Dissenting deputies" were appointed in 1722. They were laymen and were chosen originally to consider an application to Parliament for the repeal of the corporation and the test acts. The deputies became a permanent body later, with the object of looking after and safeguarding the civil concerns of the dissenters.

French Refuse Kapp Aid---Red Revolution Sweeps Across Germany

The Bauer Government, having voluntarily decided to fulfill the most essential political demands addressed to it, the rejection of which on Sat urday led to the establishment of the Kapp Government, Chancellor Kapp considers his mission fulfilled and retires, resigning the executive power again into the hands of the military commander-in-chief.

Berlin Cable — Following the resignation of Dr. Wolfgang Kapp, self-proclaimed Imperial Chancellor, and Gen. Baron von Luettwitz, de facto Minister of Defence, Gen. von Seeckt took over the command of the loyal troops for the removal from Berlin of the Baltic troops.

But their departure was suddenly halted, for at 7 o'clock to-night the supreme battle for possession of Berlin began with a terrific concerted attack by the Spartacists, who captured the railway stations of Strausburg and Vogelburg, two Berlin suburbs, and reported steadily gaining head-

The resignation of the Kapp-Luett

The chief nilitary trouble-makers, the Baltic origades, were, as stated, to be withdrawn consequent on Kapp's retire ment, but the Spartacist attack on the city now in progress is expected to keep them here to reinforce the other Government troops

The orders of the Kapp regime were just being cancelled and telephone and press censorship were about to be lifted when the Red attack however. Now the girl war has tack began. Plants Can See, Touch and Taste

Plants possess at least three senses sight, touch and taste. Though their manner of expressing their emotions is very modest, they are far from being inert. A very brief microscopic study of their life shows that thef possess a sentient existence which, though less perfect than that of the higher animals, in some cases is equal to the sentient life of the polyps and sponges.

Sight is the best developed of the vegetable senses. By this sense the plant perceives the light, though it does not distinguish objects. The earth worm, the coral insect and the oyster enjoy about the same amount of sight; they have no localized visual organ, but they perceive the difference between light and darkness. When a ray of light reaches them they contract under the stimulus.

The influence of light is clearly shown by the plant kept in a room where there is only one window: the plant is so eager to get the light that it crosses its stems and turns its leaves broads de toward the window. This action has led students of plants to say that plants are "heliotropic."
Physiologists say that the plant bends toward the light because the side in toward the light because the side in darkness grows faster than the other side. The simplet expanation is that the plant perceives the light and that it shows that it perceives it. The stem of the plant is perceptive, its sensitiveness of perception goes as far as its root, but the root shows its perception in a different way. If the stem is heliotropic, The stem shows that it perceives the light by turning toward it, the root shows that it perceives the light by turning toward it. turning toward it. the root shows that it perceives the light by turning from it, just as persons with weak eyes turn from the light and seek the shadow when the light is strong.

A sense equally well developed in plants is that of touch. The sensitive plants is that of touch. The sensitive plant is the exemplary case; the lightest touch causes it to furl its leaves and eventually it droops them toward the ground. Naturalists have explained this action by saying that a touch so influences the leaf that it drives the water to the depression in the stem and that the leaf immedi-sult is due to the animal's sense of touch.

The sense of taste is an endowment of plants of the lower orders, algae among others. When particles of different kinds are thrown in the water among the algae, the plants make a choice at once and cling to the objects they can assimilate; and if they are chapable of perceixing the savor of their ailments and of choosing certain kinds out of a mass of different kinds, they may be said to be endowed with the sense of taste. Among the higher plants the sense of taste is less common and less early distinguished, but in many cases it is undeniably present.

If an insect is set on the leaf of one of the drosera, the tentacles of the plant fall upon the morsel at once. If a non-nutritive substance is set on the same place, the plant gives no sign of recognition. The microscope shows that the tentacles quiver as if with delight when they close on an agreeable morsel, and that the plant secretes a special sap at that moment which it does not secrete at any other time. At such times the plant is comparable to the gournand whose mouth "waters."

Plants possess, them, the senses of sight, touch and taste. They have given no evidence of other senses, but some branches of the algae family, have two microscopic organs with many granulations which move incessantly. The two organs are remarkable vegetable world have a remarkable sense of direction in space. If a root growing vertically is set in the earth horizontally, it begins at once to turn the end of its root toward the centre of the earth.

Paris special cable: Despite the fresh reports to-day that the German militarist de facto regime under Dr. Wolfgang Kapp has thrown up the sponge, the Allies intend to maintain the closest "watch on the Rhine" and keep their troops at the strategic bridgeheads at their reinforced strength until there is absolute certainty that neither a reactionary nor a red revolution is sweeping the for Politically, the most important unofficial report from Berlin to day was that France had sent a diplomatic ma-cion to Stuttgart, where Friedrich Eb-ert and his Cabinet are holding forch. Another despatch had it that Ebert was in direct touch with the Allies to-day and had a technolic convergation day and had a telephonic conversation with Premier Millerand.

These reports were greeted with gratification by that section of the French press and public that been urging France to take the Prussian separatist movement South G-runany, thus taking advan-tage of an opportunity to obviate the German menace forever by splitting the nation asunder. A report that Marshal, Foch gave Dr. Kapp 48 hours in which to re-sign threatesing to march into clar-

A Royal decree, issued March 16th, says the place to be allotted to former Emperor William of Germany as his residence will form part of the Prov-ince of Utrecht, and that it will be fixed later by the Government. The decree was in connection with an announcement to the Allied Premiers regarding their recent note concerning the one time monarch. The Dutch -Premier has informed the President of the Upper and Lower Houses of Parliament by letter that former Emperor William has assured the Dutch Government that he will refrain from all political activity and de nothing which would involve Holland in any international difficulty.

"Save the surface and "Save save all"—Paint & Varnish

The Flat Oil Paint For Interior Decoration

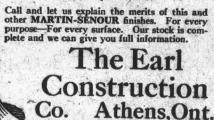

For the walls and ceilings of any room in your house, most delicate and harmonious effects can be secured by the use of NEU-TONE. It is cheaper and more sanitary than wall paper and will last much longer because it can be washed without injury. It positively will not rub off.

NEU-TONE is made in eighteen shades, and by the use of various tints most pleasing combinations may be secured.

MARTIN-SENOUR PAINTS AND VARNISHES

NEU-TONE is easy to apply. It covers well and leaves no brush marks, producing a dull, soft, velvety finish which will lend charm to any room

Any surface may be successfully treated with NEU-TONE—Plaster, wood, burlap or metal.
