Poetry.
The Round of Life.
Two children down by the shining strand,
With, as blue as the summer sea,
While the striking sun fills all the land
With the glow of a golden mystery,
Laughing about at the seaward's cry,
Gazing up, up, on the blue sky,
Till the first star looks from the evening sky.

And the amber bars stretch over the sea,
A soft green dell by the breezy shore,
A sailing and a maiden fair,
Hand clasped in hand, while the tale of love
Is told again on the listening air,
The waves are young, the love is old,
And love above the heart can tell
The story of the heart can tell.

And the dawn light tells that has been told,
In the days gone by, in the days of old,
A trim little home on a sheltered bay,
A wife looking out on the glazing sea,
A garden for the loved one far away,
And prattling lips 'neath the roof-tree,
A lifted latch and radiant face,
By the open door in the falling night;
A welcome home and a warm embrace,
From the love who has with and his children bright.

An aged man in an old arm-chair,
A golden light from the western sky,
His hand by his side, with his silver hair,
And the open book of God close by,
Sweet notes from the golden psalm,
And bright is the glow of the evening star;
But golden are the days of youth,
And the golden streets of the Land afar.

An old churchyard on a green hillside,
Two lying still in their peaceful rest,
The fisherman's boat going out with the tide,
In the glory of the amber west,
Children's laughter and the mother's sigh,
The night that follows the morning,
A mother's prayer over her darling child,
Are the sound of our lives from year to year.

The Mistake about Hamp-See.

BY GEORGE CARY BOGERTON.
Hamp See is a name I may be so bold as to say I never heard of until I read in the "Weekly Monitor" of the 27th inst. that it was the name of a young man who had been killed in the late war.

One day Riley Vaughan was offering a pair of trousers for sale, and he was asked to supply him with his quarry the store for the million dollars over. He had a lot of trousers, and he was asked to supply him with his quarry the store for the million dollars over.

It was finished at three o'clock in the afternoon, and at 6 o'clock the water had risen two feet six inches at the dam; so the fall is two feet.

It looks so, said Riley, who was watching the rise of water. The workman had gone home, all of them continued that the attempt to back the water nearly a mile up the creek was the wildest foolishness, but old Riley and Hamp waited and watched.

It doesn't rise so fast now, said Riley. That's because it has a larger surface, but it still rises, and the surface won't increase much now, as there is a steep place just above the quarry, and it can't back any further up.

The water waited and watched. Eight o'clock came and the measurement showed five feet six inches at the dam. Still they waited and watched. At 10 o'clock in the morning the depth was four feet two inches. Then he sent the negro boy to his house with orders to bring a large breakfast for two. At seven o'clock the breakfast arrived, and the measurement showed four feet three inches and a half.

It is rising faster again, said Riley. Yes; the level is climbing straight up the bank now, and not spreading out as it rises, said Hamp.

At nine o'clock the depth was four feet and a half inches, and the men at the quarry had a lunch ready, and were beginning to loaf. Ten o'clock brought four feet one inch and a half. They were now seven feet five and four inches.

I have missed in a little said Hamp. I said the water would run over the dam at seven o'clock, and it has still eight inches to rise before doing that.

Well, that sort of a miss does not count, said Riley. You've worked the sun out right, anyhow, and the water's deep enough for rafting, and will assist. I'll go over the dam in two or three hours more, and I'll do what you'll do what you'll do.

even a suggestion of coolness is grateful. To make it, take half a small box of gelatin and add to it half a pint of cold water; add one pint of boiling water, one cup of sugar, and the juice and grated peel of two small lemons. Put in a dish to cool, and when stiff add the whites of two eggs very lightly beaten, and beat the mixture well. Serve with custard sauce or milk with the yolks of the eggs and half a pint of milk.

In summer it is advisable to make this dish the day before it is desired to eat it.

The use of sugar is not general in this country as it is in England. If its merits were better known it would be more popular. Put a dessertspoonful of sugar into a quart of milk, and stir it gently for a few minutes, and a greater stirring frequently; skim it and let it approach boiling and sweeten with a dessertspoonful of sugar. It may be flavored with orange if the taste is liked.

Tapioca can be made into a most delicious dish. Put a large tablespoonful to soak over night; add a pint of new milk the next morning, sweeten it, add the tapioca and the yolks of two eggs well beaten; flavor with extract of vanilla, and put in a dish to cool. Then cover the top with the whites of the eggs beaten stiff, with a little sugar and vanilla, and place it in the oven to brown slightly.

A very nice pudding may be made with eggs, half a cup of sugar, half a tablespoonful of melted butter, half a cup of milk and one cup of flour. Mix the ingredients thoroughly, and beat the mixture very light. Bake half an hour, and serve with a little simple pudding sauce. Clove, nutmeg, and chocolate making are exceedingly nice. Recipes for custard can be found in any good cookery book; so it is not worth while to repeat them here.

Foolish Once More.

Mr. Ennis.—The most of people relish a good story, provided it be a truthful one. Tales of adventure, daring heroism, dangers of the deep, battles, &c., all have their charms. Who amongst us could read the adventures of Robinson Crusoe half way through, and not have a desire to know the end of it. We confess here we do not receive our weekly newspapers to hurriedly glance through it and pick out what we consider the most important items. These are generally distinguished by their headings; but you don't catch us reading any longer to these glaring impossibilities. We could laugh at the once or twice, but to catch a fifth time is our reason for remonstrating. Two or three weeks since we got reading some of your Toronto weeklies, and towards the end it informed us about St. Jacobs Oil; we only laughed, and said nothing.

The week following we noticed another heading in How Mark Twain entertained a Visitor. Well, thinking we might have a little etiquette, in case Mark should take a fancy to send us an invitation, we read it, but by St. Patrick, if it didn't disgust us by making Mark introduce St. Jacobs Oil. Well, confound it, we exclaimed, but they have got another dose of that St. Jacobs Oil on us again, determined not to be caught so simple next time; but now, sir, I admit the corn; along comes our Toronto Mail on Thursday, we sat, and almost the first thing that caught our eye was the adventures of Capt. Paul Boyton, a story very interesting; and the old book he had hunted against sharks. Ac, it is this point we began to feel a little incredulous, because from our knowledge of those gentry they would feel the captain alive or dead, all the same. However, contented to learn something more about it, we read a little further, when—oh, well, "don't matter what we said, you said first to be any of the dictionaries. I'm dashed if the captain was still alive, and we were no further search, our curiosity was satisfied. Now, Mr. Editor, we think it will be regarded by everybody as a matter of congratulation that we possess, so easily attainable, such a reliable means for the cure of disease. Such is our view of the matter, although we are "Gods" on an average, since five times a week. If St. Jacobs oil stand it, we made up our mind to "fight it out on that line, if it came to water."

"Samantha."
At Belleville, at Mrs. Green's pleasant tea-table, it was the rare good fortune to meet Miss Hovey, better known to the reading public as "Samantha," the author of "Samantha at the Centennial," "Josiah Allen's Wife," is a lady with a pleasant, attractive face, quiet and modest, but with a frank expression, handsome ever, very friendly, elegant voice, and she is everything and all the possibilities of figure and character, that comes within the range of the quiet, sweetening glances. The dark brown hair falls in kindly little curls and pretty curls over a broad white forehead; the smile that lights up her face is a most charming display, most regular teeth, and when she speaks, just a perceptible lip, rarely perceptible, lends an elegant charm to her lower voice. "Josiah Allen's Wife" is Miss Hawley. Think of that with all her beautiful face of domestic life and incident, and stronger than all else, "Samantha" was never at the Centennial! Didn't you know her? And she knows more about it and writes more about it. Has three-fifths of the people who were there. She lives and writes on her own farm, about five miles from Belleville. She lives very quietly, is a most charming neighbor, and they seem to worship her in Belleville. The most charming neighbor, and they seem to worship her in Belleville. The most charming neighbor, and they seem to worship her in Belleville.

When I was a child, I used to read a book called "Samantha at the Centennial," and I was very much interested in it. I was very much interested in it. I was very much interested in it.

The Winnett Family. (Continued.) BY W. A. CALNEK.

In 1723 Armstrong complained to the lords of Trade and Plantations against Winnett, alleging that he possessed too great influence with the French inhabitants...

It will be remembered that ex-Governor Armstrong died very suddenly about two months ago on his way from New York to New Mexico. The ex-Governor was quite a young man, but with all his physical and mental ability undisturbed, had been engaged for nearly ten years in an effort to secure to the American heirs of the famous Hyde estate in England the sum due them out of 200,000,000 deposited in various banks of England. He had visited England, consulted lawyers and secured a large batch of the papers necessary to the prosecution of the claim, which he had placed securely fastened in a box. On returning to New York he stopped at the Metropolitan Hotel. On leaving the hotel for the West he said that he would have the papers in a safe place. He told the proprietors of the hotel that he had taken a railroad train in the afternoon and that he would be in New York in a few days. He was never seen again.

Mr. Winnett continued in trade from the frequent voyages to Boston, and the villages in Massachusetts and New York. The articles reported from the latter place in these reports to Boston were grain, fish and furs, and their return cargoes consisted of European and West India goods, which were disposed of to the French habitants. One of the letters on our archives, one of a letter from Governor Armstrong to Major Winnett, who, at the time of his departure from Annapolis, and bears date April 17th, 1728. The writer says: "We have had a very mild winter here. Your family are all well, and Mr. Winnett is in the city as usual. The visit here referred to was probably among the last made by him to the French settlements in the head of the bay. His family consisted of several children, of whom the eldest was a son, named Alexander, who married Captain, afterwards Major, Alexander Cosby, of the 4th Regiment (Philadelphia) by whom he had one child, a son, probably named Alexander, who was murdered by the Indians, near the Cape, when about thirteen years old. This event is said to have taken place during the invasion in 1745, under Meritt. The second child was also a daughter, who had the name Elizabeth, and was afterwards married to a man, whose name is not mentioned, but who, as it is stated, was a military commander superior to the operations of 1755 in the valley of the Acadia in the French wars. One of her daughters, Mary Hamilton, became the wife of John Hamilton, who was I believe a son of Major Otho Hamilton, who was later on governor of the province, and after the chief military officer at Plaquemine, where he was killed in 1728, and was the father of another daughter, who was born to Mr. Winnett in 1728, was named MARGARET, and died in 1728, and was the mother of another daughter, MARY MARGARET, the wife of the excellent but unfortunate Edward Hore, many years a member of the council, and some time Commissary of the Navy. One of the children, a son, named English, who, in 1776, and retired, or rather expelled, from the province, where he had been settled, to the revolted colonies. Another was a lieutenant in the Navy, and was afterwards a member of the council. Another son, named Joseph, was appointed a Justice in the court of Common Pleas on the 18th day of February, 1785, and, as John Ritchie, grandfather of the present Justice in Equity, was created a Baron in the office, in the following year, it is believed that he died either of old age, or of some other cause, and was succeeded by his son, who was also a Justice in the court of Common Pleas, and was afterwards a member of the council. Washington Letter.

NEW YORK'S RECEPTION AT THE WHITE HOUSE. THE FURNITURE ARRANGED BY A PARTY OF ANTIQUE BEAUTY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 10, 1882. Today there has been a grand social opening. Society, official and non-official, has been on dress parade. Of course, it is not very well known where society begins and where she leaves off, but the real fun fades into the chronicles, and especially in Washington, are the frontiers wavering and ill defined. Still, society is, as one would say, society. The climax of society is the President, and in the case of the Supreme Court, Senators and Representatives in Congress, army and naval officers, chiefs of bureau, and so on, down to the depths. Nearly everybody in Washington received this New Year's Eve. Even Guitton announced in the morning that he was at the party. I suppose Guitton is the anti-climax, if it is admissible to speak flippantly of so lofty a subject.

The President was assisted by quite a number of influential men. It has a peculiar significance when applied to any body within the court circle, and suggests a potency in politics and place. Rely upon it, neither women nor men are chosen for their intellect or character by the administration. The ladies who assisted President Arthur to receive on New Year's were Messadmes Senators Logan, Cameron, Pendleton, Miller, Jones, of Nevada, Mrs. Matthews and Mrs. Pennington. Mrs. Jones was chosen for her tact, her large Western acquaintance, and her bonhomie, or, I should say, bonamie; Mrs. Cameron was chosen for her youth and beauty; Mrs. Pendleton, because she had the option of the Democratic committee; Mrs. Miller, because she was the Pacific seceder representative; Mrs. Jones, because she talks French; and Mrs. Robinson, because she talks French with the volubility of Mrs. Matthews and Mrs. Pennington. They were accompanied with the men and women of all the legations. These were the reasons that appeared to a casual observer. There were other reasons, however, that were not so obvious. The ladies were chosen for their intellect and character by the administration. The ladies who assisted President Arthur to receive on New Year's were Messadmes Senators Logan, Cameron, Pendleton, Miller, Jones, of Nevada, Mrs. Matthews and Mrs. Pennington. And whereas certain persons who have made the last mentioned proposal have agreed to purchase the same...

Balloons for the North Pole—Commander Cheyne's Project for Booming.

Commander Cheyne, of the Royal Navy, who was an officer in three Franklin search expeditions, began a series of three illustrated lectures on voyages in Northern seas in Charleston last evening. He is a sturdy Englishman, with a square head, a resolute face, and a dignified manner in speaking. He prefaced his lecture by modestly offering to America his services in any way in search for the Northwest Passage.

At well, society is becoming very fast and loose, and there is not telling to what depths of immorality her votaries will eventually fall. They say that the men are not so chivalrous as they used to be, and I do not wonder at it. Who can blame a man for entertaining unholy thoughts of women when he sees how reckless they are of exposing their persons. Low necks, when it comes to gartering ankles and legs to the public gaze what woman's reputation is safe? Is a man likely to turn away his head when he sees a nicely-turned ankle, clad in the latest stockings, come tripping and dandling before him?

Agricultural. Diseases of the Horse Foot.

Illustrated Journal of Agriculture. Quittor is the name given to fistula which occurs at the coronet just above the horn of the hoof from which there is a discharge of pus caused by the irritation of some foreign body or diseased tissue within the hoof. It is attended by considerable swelling, lameness, and suppuration. It may occur in any horse's foot and it may be simply a single sinus in the laminae and coronet or it may communicate, with numerous sinuses running in all directions and not infrequently producing disease of the os pedis or its lateral cartilages. This latter condition proves very difficult to heal, and not infrequently becomes incurable.

F. Jones' Charge with Vengeance.—The following comes from Georgia, and its accuracy is vouched for by the stenographer who took it down: Judge — was noted for the way he got mixed in his charges to the jury. On one occasion a case was tried before him the points of which may be briefly stated thus: Smith brought suit against Jones upon a promissory note given for a horse. Jones' defense was failure of consideration, he averring that at the time of the purchase the horse had the glanders, which he died, and that Smith knew it. Smith replied that the horse did not have the glanders, but had the distemper, and that Jones knew it when he bought.
