The result shows that the cows exposed to the weather during the day ate more food that those gleen shelter in the barn, they lost in weight while the sheltered cows gained, as well as years less milk, there being a difference of $13 in favour of giving the cowshelter. The university director limitary posters printed, containing the results, which were placed in prominent places for the observation of farmers. Thise exposed cows were sheltered at a lowed outside for an hour on pleasant days.

Englacering Education.

A system of engineering, says the Electrical World, that tends to broaden the misch and thus render it capable of dealing confidently with large questions is unto only most likely to make the expiner cluented under it more respected by those with whom he comes into contact in professional life, but it gives him a wider range of reportunities and a more ambirtons scope to his strivings. Owing to the desire to start on a professional career at the entils possible moment, most technical courses are none too long for the bare purpose of teaching principles, and cit the tendency seems to be becoming greater and greater to suborlinate the theoretical grounding to "practical work." Fattern shops, smith shops, and even foundries, are becoming features of technical monocals, and testing work is carried as more with a viewing work.

Persis thought that odd, but she made no comment.

Before dinner that evening she burst suddenly into Lady Maclure's room for a minute. Bertha was dressing her lady's hair. Friends were coming to dine-samong them Sir Justin. "How do these pearls go with my complexion, Lady Maclure" Persis asked rather anxiously; for she specially wished to look her best that evening, for one of the party.

"Oh, charming!" her hostess answered, with her society smile. "Never saw anything sult you better, Persis, "Except my poor rubles!" Persis cried rather ruefully, for coloured gewgaws are dear to the savage and the roman. "I wish I could get them back! I wouder that man Gregory hasn't succeeded in finding them"

"Oh! my dear," Lady Maclure drawled out, "you may be sure by this time they're safe at Aunsterdam. That's the only place in Europe now to look for them."

the only place in Europe now to look for them.

Why to Amsterdam, my lady? Bertha Interposed suddenly, with a quick side-giance at Persis.

Lady Maciure threw her head back in surprise at so unwonted an intrusidin. "What do you want to know that for, child?" she asked, somewhat curtly. "Why, to be cut, of course. All the diamond-cut-rax in the world are concentrated in Amsardum; and the first thing a thief does when he steads big fewels is to send them across, and have them cut in new shapes so that they can't be identified."

"I shouldn't have thought." Bertha put in, calmly, "they'd have known who to send them to."

Lady Maclure turned to ber sharply. "Why, these things, she said, with a calm of knowledge. "are alfeaved done by experienced thieves, who know the ropes well, and are in league with receivers the whole world over. But Gregory has his eye on Amsterdam, I'm sure, and we'll soon hear something."

"Yes, my lady," Bortha answered, in her acquiescent tone, and relapsed into silence.

Four days later, about nine at night, that hard worked man, the posty on the neat, stood loitering outside Sir Everard Machure's house, openir defying the rules of the department, in clor conference with Bertha.

"Well, any news?" Hertha asked, trembling over n the excitement, for she was a very different person outside with her lover from the demore and imperturbable model maid who waited on my lady.

A TITTLE LOVE OF MINE

I knew a clever little maid
A I sweet who claims me for her knight.
She alika whate'er I do it right.
And I confosa. I'm bait afraid
The reason why I may not tell.
She's fre, while I am tweaty-nine,
And yet we love each other well.
I and this little love of mine.

he has a slender. Hissome form, rown eyes where trust and truth abide. Cupid's nouth where kisses swarm, ose checks where dimples deftly hide, santio she berrowed from the skies a none rare hour of summer time, that's ewed in state the little love of sume.

La reine polite, the little queen.
Serit to forgive as to command.
The dalulest monarch ever seen.
She keeps her subjects well in hand.
Their lappiness her only task.
She rules by chidhood's right divine,
Aud cher kingdom none may ask
That has this little love of mine.

The boundary of her empire lies
In house fair wails, her weith unfold,
The localization has moviers exist unfold,
The localization has moviers as the
Accessing reserve far than god
Accessing over is her cup
With love's most rare and coult wine,
And she-falle gaily drikes it up
This charming little love of mine.

Fresh be the draught. I wish the bonce May bring her what she most may prize, Soft down dawns, and fragrant flowers, And light winds calling to the skies; But it my soul might win the bliss. To beg a been from Father Time, Twould be to leave her as she is, This da try little love of mine.
