I think we are entitled to receive the assurance from the minister that he has examined the schedule and is satisfied that there is no discrimination against those corporations that will be required to go to the expense of doing all this paper work, compared with the long list of corporations in the schedule that are exempt. I am not concerned that the minister is satisfied that the reports are very much or substantially the same. I want to know about some of the onerous requirements set forth here. They are not onerous from the point of view of public information but they are onerous from the point of view of red tape and from the point of view of adding to the cost of our civil service and the expenses of corporations. I have suggested a minimum of $200 for the compilation of the information required as set forth in clause 4.

The minister has indicated that there are public reports in connection with the companies referred to in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the schedule and I am not sure whether he mentioned paragraph 6. Information concerning them is available to the public in printed reports of government departments. Let us accept that. I will ask him about paragraph 6 to which I do not think he referred. He did not make any reference to paragraphs 13 or 14. I am rather interested in paragraph 15 of the schedule which refers to those corporations that receive their charters under the Railway Act. This would include the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Bell Telephone Company and other mammoth corporations in this country in which we naturally have a great deal of pride. If it is a matter of interest whether or not there is an undue proportion of foreign ownership in these corporations, I wonder why they are particularly exempted in the bill. In the case of the Bell Telephone Company it is rather common knowledge that there is some form of pertinent and essential control of this very large Canadian corporation by the American Telegraph and Telephone Company which is, of course, a mammoth United States corporation. I am told that irrespective of share holdings there is a royalty or subsidy, or something in the nature of an over-all commission on receipts, that has to be paid by this corporation to its parent company in the United States. Is there anything in the Railway Act which provides for the giving of that information to the public, and is it available on an annual basis?

Do the Bell Telephone Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have to subscribe in every feature referred to in the next clause, clause 4, in so far as making returns, such as are specified there, available not only to the government but to the public? In other words, could I go over to the board of transport commissioners and, if I were curious about whether or not anybody owned more than 10 per cent of the Bell Telephone Company's capital stock, could I pay a dollar to find that out and be satisfied? Could I ascertain the nationality of each individual who holds stock in that company? Can I do that in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

So far as the banks are concerned, it is true they are required to submit a certain report annually to a government department, but without looking through that statute and comparing it very carefully with this document which has only been in our hands 24 hours—

Mr. Fulton: What is that?

Mr. Benidickson: This document has only been in our hands a short period.

Mr. Fulton: It has been in your hands since January 22, and if you did not read it—

Mr. Benidickson: I read it yesterday.

Mr. Fulton: That is not my fault. You have had it since January 22.

Mr. Benidickson: With the great advice available to him the minister should be able to assure us that we have not here something which is substantially the same, something which is actually the same in so far as duplication is concerned on behalf of the corporations that are referred to in the schedule. As I indicated in connection with the banks, I am familiar in a broad way with the return they make annually to parliament; but in the next section, section B, those corporations which are not exempt, such as a commercial bank, are required to provide a statement of surplus.

Now we have all heard about the inner reserves of the commercial banks of Canada. So far as I know that is an item about which a person cannot get information by paying a dollar at any government office. I hope that it is not the feeling of the minister that such a type of reserve, which is related to surplus, might not be disclosed by those corporations which, under this bill, will be required to make an annual return. These are all matters about which the minister should satisfy us because there are these subsequent paragraphs that involve not only a very particularized list of information that has to be provided, but also there are certain other public privileges involved in the bill with respect to examination of those documents.

I wonder, can the minister assure us with respect to all of these types of corporations to which I have referred, and to which he did not refer himself when he spoke about the amendment. Can he tell us whether or not these are more than just similar, but are really the same, and that the information provided by them would be a duplicate of what is required by this statute?

In so far as the amendment is concerned, I take it this deals with the type of corporation the minister has in mind in connection with paragraph 17 of the schedule.

Mr. Fulton: To deal with the last question first, we have of course no type of corporation or class of corporation in mind with respect to paragraph 17, or else we would have listed them under the preceding paragraphs. However we think there may be some classes of corporations with respect to which duplication can be avoided as experience is developed, and therefore we want the right to exempt them. As my hon. friend has claimed with a loud voice, we think we should avoid imposing unnecessary expense on corporations and trade unions and therefore we have reserved to ourselves the power to make regulations exempting classes of corporations.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River made a number of general observations, not one of which I am afraid I can recall in detail, but most of which I am sure he would not have made had he read the bill with the care he might have devoted to it in the light of the fact that it has been in his hands since January 22, and not just the last 48 hours as he suggested.

I can say to him very generally, but without reservation in answer to his observations, that the classes of corporations listed in the schedule are classes of corporations with respect to which we are satisfied that they already report, in a manner that is available not only to the government but to the public, substantially the same kind of information as this bill will call upon the balance of corporations to provide when it goes into effect. Therefore we have no hesitation in saying that those corporations listed in the schedule should be exempted from the requirement of filing duplicate returns under this bill.

Mr. Benidickson: What is the Canadian Pacific Railway required to report to the government?

Mr. Fulton: Under the Railway Act it is required to report extremely detailed information with respect to—

Mr. Benidickson: Share holdings?

Mr. Fulton: Yes; assets, liabilities, capitalization, revenues and working expenditure, and of course further extremely detailed information with respect to tariffs and rates.

Mr. Benidickson: What about the residence of the owners of the shares, and so on?

Mr. Fulton: Well, it is known under the provisions of the Railway Act that, for instance, there are certain requirements as to qualifications of residence, if I recall that act correctly.

Mr. Benidickson: But there are Britons and Americans on the board of directors.

Mr. Fulton: But their residence has to be listed. Indeed one can go and look at the annual report of the Canadian Pacific and read it. However I doubt if my hon. friend has seen it. It lists the names and addresses of the directors of the Canadian Pacific. I cannot say that the information required to be filed by the Canadian Pacific is precisely the same in every detail as the information that will be required to be filed under this bill, but if we find there are important gaps in that respect then we can always delete paragraph 15. My information is that substantially the information we are after here with respect to the extent and effects of foreign ownership of railway companies, telephone and telegraph companies, is already available under the other act.

Mr. Howard: I would like to make some comment about remarks which the minister made earlier following the introduction of the amendment. I gather that the minister said with respect to lowering the ceiling to $100,000 revenue and $50,000 assets, in so far as the returns to be filed under the amendment are concerned, that it would not appreciably affect the picture in so far as government knowledge of foreign control was involved.

Mr. Fulton: The effect of it—yes.

Mr. Howard: I gather he said it would not affect the picture one would get from assessing these returns, but it seems to me very important that yesterday the minister spent a great deal of time explaining how necessary this information was so that the government could have a clear picture.

Now he turns around and says, "We know what the picture will be, because these new or additional returns that might come in will not affect the picture". He cannot argue both ways; he cannot argue that the government wants all this statistical information on the one hand, and that is why we need the bill, and then turn around in rejecting my amendment and say, "We do not want this sort of information because it will not affect the picture we are going to get anyway".

I think this is a rather specious argument on the part of the minister in rejecting the amendment. I think the minister used the words, "We are not entirely careless about the number of returns that will be filed". If he is going to argue on that basis, he can perhaps argue with some validity, but he cannot argue two points of view at once, one yesterday on second reading and one today in rejecting the proposal we made.

The minister said a moment ago—I jotted down his words here and I think I have them correct, although my shorthand is not as good as that of the gentleman in the centre of the chamber—that in respect of these corporations named in the schedule and which under my proposed amendment would be required to file returns, namely banks, trust and loan companies and the like, not only do they make that information available to the government as required in this bill, but it is available to the public. If the information that banks, trust companies, loan companies, small loan companies, companies under the Radio Act, the Railway Act and the like, make available is the same as the government requires under this bill, and that information is made available to the public, then why the secrecy provision under section B of the bill with respect to other corporations; why the discrimination?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think there must be a misunderstanding here. I will have to check my words, but what I intended to say, and certainly what I should have said, was that the information from those corporations listed in the schedule, and certainly in the first six classes, is available without legal barrier to the government and is available in summary in statistical or report form to the public, in almost precisely the same way as the information under part B of the returns under this bill will be available in detail to the government and in report form to the public.

Mr. Howard: That clarifies that point. The minister has twice used the word "precisely". He used it once a second ago, and once in his earlier remarks. In his earlier remarks he put it the other way around and said that the information required to be filed by companies and corporations mentioned in the schedule is not precisely the same as that required under this bill. But is not this exactly the point we are trying to get at? The minister made a great to-do on second reading, and again today, about the government wanting to know everything possible in order to have the exact picture with respect to the economy.

If the Bank of Nova Scotia, for argument's sake, is required under the Bank Act to file all of the information in precisely the same detail and precisely the same form as is required for other corporations under the proposed clause 4, this answers the question; and if that information will be made available to the dominion bureau of statistics so that they can interweave it, this perhaps overcomes one of the reasons for proposing the amendment.

I would like to ask the minister a specific question. Is a bank to which the Bank Act applies required to file with the government—and if so, which branch of it—precisely all the information and details which are going to be required of other corporations under clause 4?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman, not in precisely the same form. I have made this clear, I think, on two previous occasions. The banks to which the Bank Act applies are required to file with the inspector general of banks, by virtue of the Bank Act, complete information with respect to their shareholdings, their financial operations, and so on; information as complete, although not precisely in the same form, as the returns that would be required under this bill.

Indeed, I am informed that there is a great deal more information required by the inspector general of banks than is called for under this bill. All that information, then, is available to the government; all that information is available to the dominion bureau of statistics for inclusion in or comparison with the annual report that will be published with respect to the corporations that are covered by this bill. Since, therefore, all those corporations covered in the schedule—that is to say, exempted from the requirement of reporting under this bill—report in as much or more detail, although not in precisely similar form as those which are required to report under this bill, we have felt it would be foolish, ridiculous and unnecessary repetition and an unnecessary expense and burden to require them to report under this bill.

The hon. member might say to me, "Why do you not standardize the return?" I suppose one might say, "That is a good question". But I think the committee will appreciate that we are not—certainly I am not—responsible for the form in which the Bank Act now exists, nor am I responsible for the form in which the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act exists, or the form in which the Trust Companies Act exists. They are all for different purposes; they all relate to different kinds of operations. It would be a Herculean job to go through all these acts with a fine-tooth comb and standardize the financial return that should be made under them. Indeed, I am not sure that to do it would not be a disservice to the country, because as I said they deal with different kinds of companies, with different kinds of operations, and it might very well be unwise to try to introduce a standard form for them. But we do find that as a result of the requirements in those individual acts all the information of the type that we want is available. Why, then, should we require those corporations to go through the process of filing an additional form that will not give us any more information?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the minister went on at some great length after he posed a hypothetical question that I might ask. Then he proceeded to beat down that question he thought I might ask him. He went into great length in talking about something that I would not suggest in the first place, without really answering the question I posed to him.

Could I ask the minister this question. For argument sake, is a corporation licensed under the Radio Act to establish a broadcasting station required, first to file its annuities, pensions and similar payments to or in respect of officers and directors, including former officers and directors, and, second persons holding more than 5 per cent each of the total number of issued shares of the corporation or of the total number of issued shares thereof of any class, respectively? Is a corporation under the Radio Act required to file that information?

Mr. Fulton: With respect to broadcasting companies, a summary of the requirements is that they must file certain information with the board of broadcast governors, including copies of their letters patent, initial share distribution, information as to any dealings in shares by the company or its shareholders, and an annual balance sheet and profit and loss statement. The initial share distribution is made public upon the hearing of an application for a licence, and all transfers of shares are listed in the board's annual report to parliament.

The board requires a public hearing of any application to transfer shares where the transfer would result in the shares of the corporation being held in a foreign country, and the board is prohibited from granting a licence to a licensee unless it is in effect Canadian controlled. Generally speaking, the kind of information required here is now available to the board and is known to or can be obtained by the public.

Mr. Howard: That is not an answer to the question I asked. I asked the minister whether a corporation that is licensed under the Radio Act to establish a broadcasting station is required to file information relating to annuities, pensions and similar payments to or in respect of first, officers and directors including former officers and directors, and, second, persons holding more than 5 per cent each of the total number of issued shares of the corporation or of the total number of issued shares thereof of any class, respectively. Is that information required?

Mr. Fulton: No, it is not, but it is of no interest or concern because a company holding a broadcasting licence in Canada cannot be foreign controlled.

Mr. Howard: This is the point. This is not supposed to differentiate between those companies which are foreign controlled and those which are not. The bill requires all corporations except those exempted in the schedule to file the information which I have just read out relating to annuities, pensions and similar payments whether a corporation is entirely Canadian owned or whether it is owned in Britain or in Hong Kong. That does not matter as far as the requirement in this act is concerned. Now the minister says radio companies need not file that information but others must. Well, how is one going to get a clear picture if some companies are obliged to file this information and others are not? This is precisely why I think the amendment should carry. This information should be made available to this one authority so that when we compare things we may compare the right things and not be comparing apples and oranges and saying they are the same because they are both fruit.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate the hon. member's interest in this, but what we are after here is information which will enable us to assess the extent and effects of foreign control of Canadian corporations. With respect to the other companies which will be covered by the bill we do not know in advance whether or not they are foreign controlled so we require them all to report. With respect to broadcasting companies we know by virtue of the provisions of the Broadcasting Act that they cannot be foreign controlled. We have adequate information about them already under that act and for that reason we have exempted them from the requirement to report.

Mr. Howard: Can the Canadian Pacific Railway be foreign controlled? What about a railway, telegraph, telephone or express company or a carrier by water in respect of which returns are made to the board of transport commissioners for Canada under the Railway Act? What is their position with respect to the requirement which I read out a while ago relating to annuities, pensions and similar payments?

Mr. Fulton: With respect to those companies, we have sufficient information under the terms of the Railway Act to assess the extent and the effects of such foreign control as may exist in those cases. Therefore, we do not require them to report under this bill.

Mr. Howard: Yes. Surely, what this bill should be seeking to do is precisely that, and not giving us all this mumbo-jumbo about salaries, fees and other remuneration to officers and directors and, more particularly, inquiring into the sex of union members and so on. What does that matter, if all the minister is concerned about is foreign control? Why is he concerned about management and administrative fees and charges? Why is he concerned about annuities, pensions and similar payments to officers and directors if he says with respect to these other companies mentioned in the schedule that they do not have to file this information?

Mr. Fulton: Because we know about them now.

Mr. Howard: Because the minister knows about them in some other way—by looking at a crystal ball, for instance?

Mr. Fulton: No; not the crystal ball. That went out with Mackenzie King. We know about them because of the requirements of the acts under which they operate. With respect to the other corporations which we expect to be covered by this bill, they operate under no such specific acts and therefore we have set out in this bill the kind of information which we think is necessary to give us a full picture of the extent and effects of such foreign control which may be exercised. But with respect to the companies enumerated in the schedule or the classes of companies set out in the schedule it is our view that by virtue of the acts under which they operate and under which they are already required to report we have the information which will enable us to assess the extent and effects of any foreign control which may be present.

Mr. Howard: That is not what the minister said a moment ago.

Mr. Fulton: It is precisely what I said a moment ago. It is what I have tried to say three times without success.

Mr. Howard: I directed my questions specifically to that point. I read the paragraph on page 5 of the bill about annuities, pensions and payments to directors; about persons holding more than 5 per cent of the shares, and so on. The minister stated that in each instance it was not a requirement either of the Broadcasting Act or of the Railway Act that this information should be given. Perhaps I should ask the minister whether it would be necessary to file that information if a corporation is a transcontinental air carrier which has been designated by the air transport board for financial and other reporting purposes as a group one carrier. Is a corporation of that kind required to file the information which I read out regarding annuities, pensions and similar payments? Is it required to disclose management and similar fees and charges or fees and charges for professional services showing separately fees and charges for each of the following services, namely: engineering, architectural, legal, accounting, auditing, and consulting fees and charges? Is it required to file that sort of information as well as all the other information sought in this bill?

Mr. Benidickson: While the minister is getting advice on the question just raised I wish to pursue the question I raised with respect to two of our largest corporations. They are corporations against which I have no animosity, but they are exempted in the schedule. I am sure the minister does not want to recommend a bill which is discriminatory and which will involve the smaller corporations in a lot of work which will not be required from the others.

The minister asked the question: why should there be an additional form? Surely, if this information is to go to the dominion bureau of statistics where the results are to be assessed; if the government is to examine these returns and benefit in any way from this information, then the information must be forthcoming on a comparable basis. I have referred to two of our largest corporations. They are the Bell Telephone Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which I assume are incorporated under the Railway Act. Under that act, as far as annual returns are concerned, I read section 384 and it says that every railway, telegraph, telephone and express company, and so on, shall annually prepare returns in accordance with forms and classifications for the time being required by the board of transport commissioners of their assets, liabilities, capitalization, revenues, working expenditures and traffic. Another section—

Mr. Fulton: I read that all out.

Mr. Benidickson: —section 444 refers to statistics and returns. I take it that the essence of this bill is to provide this country with information about foreign ownership. Where, with respect to the Railway Act do we get anything comparable with what we find in the provisions here which require other corporations which are not exempt, to report with regard to holdings of more than 5 per cent each of the total number of issued shares of the corporation?

Then, on page 3 of the bill appears subparagraph (vii) calling for particulars with respect to the ownership of more than 50 per cent of the shares of a subsidiary. I thought from the debate that this was of the essence of the information we were going to get in connection with our national establishments and, particularly, our corporations. If we are to exempt the big corporations, what earthly use is all this paraphernalia that is being established here? I am reminded that not only is our second largest railway, the C.P.R. exempted; there are a number of others almost equally important. In the case of the C.P.R. it may be that in its annual report—it is not obligatory, as far as I can tell, to submit it—we would be given the names of the directors. One might get a box number where they receive their mail, but I do not think there is anything in the Railway Act that makes it necessary for the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway to state not just their address—not Sir Someone in London—but actually his nationality whether British, Australian or some other nationality that might entitle him to the knighthood, and his address outside Canada.

Every other corporation has to show not only the address of the individual but the individual's nationality. Why the exemption in connection with these important corporations, where there is a substantial amount of foreign ownership?

Even the directors of the government owned railway, the C.N.R., would be exempt according to the schedule. I recall sitting on the standing committee of this house during two sessions when we examined officers of the Canadian National Railways. While I was not one who pressed for this information, two hon. members of the Conservative party pressed the officers of the railway for information as to whether or not they had obtained control of some trucking companies. It was declared that it was not in the public interest that that information should be provided even to a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Fulton: Is the hon. member alleging that the Canadian National Railways is foreign controlled?

Mr. Benidickson: No, Mr. Chairman. I was referring back to subparagraph VII and the requirement that all corporations indicate ownership of subsidiaries where their stock interest exceeds 50 per cent. It was not possible to obtain that information even in the parliamentary committee with respect to certain subsidiaries of the C.N.R.

Does the C.P.R. under the Railway Act give some government body information containing their ownership of other companies—and they own quite a number under different names—where they hold more than 50 per cent of the issued shares? I do not see that that is required under the Railway Act as it would be required of corporations under this measure.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I can only say again that with respect to these companies they have been investigated on numerous occasions by royal commissions and other organizations. I do not think there can be any question but that their corporate structure and the extent and effects of that foreign ownership or control is well understood. I think if I go on I will merely be repeating myself. Perhaps the only way to leave the matter is to let my hon. friend take responsibility for saying which of the classes of exemptions he would delete.

Mr. Pitman: This is a serious matter, Mr. Chairman. Throughout the debate the minister has said we are seeking information. There is a concern among Canadians and especially among small businessmen that they are required to complete too many forms for forwarding to the dominion bureau of statistics. Government bodies are always concerned that this information is in usable form. I often meet small businessmen and municipal authorities who wonder whether they are sending too many forms containing duplicate information to various levels of government.

Despite what the minister has said I am not convinced that the information that will be sent by the corporations in the schedule to various government bodies will find its way to the dominion bureau of statistics in usable form so that it can be compared and correlated and given some meaning and significance. I must agree with the hon. member for Skeena when he refers to the information available from insurance, trust and loan companies. The minister may say that information with respect to foreign control is available, but it is important that it be correlated so statisticians can work with it and some pattern can be achieved. I would assume we are not simply putting legislation on the statute books of this country merely to create more forms and more bother for the businessman of this nation.

Mr. Benidickson: And the unions.

Mr. Pitman: We have to justify it.

Mr. Matheson: And the unions.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, and the unions. We have to justify it to the extent that from the information we receive we can take legislative or other action to effectively organize and develop our economy so that foreign control will not increase. I am not convinced with regard to the segments of our economy referred to in the schedule that we will be able to correlate the information and obtain the kind of picture which could form the basis for the legislative action which we would hope would stem from information of this nature.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to review the entire discussion which has taken place. It proves, however, that this measure is not sufficiently clear to satisfy the committee and the country.

I think we could go along with the amendment offered by the hon. member for Skeena, but may I be permitted to suggest a change to paragraph (h). There are a large number of small companies who would be called upon to file reports if the hon. member's amendment were adopted because the figures established by the amendment are really too low when you consider the economy of this country. I suggest that $100,000 is a very low ceiling. Many companies with a gross revenue of more than $100,000 are considered small businesses. If the hon. gentleman would increase the figures so the small companies would not be subjected to the application of this measure, I think I would be very glad to support the amendment. I urge the hon. gentleman to put the ceiling a little higher.

Mr. Howard: I am the most agreeable person in the committee this evening. I do not object to raising the limit. Among the hon. member for Hull, the Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Skeena we might amicably agree on a figure of less than $500,000 and unanimously support the amendment. I am in the awkward position of being restricted by the rules from amending my own amendment and that would have to be done by someone else.

Mr. Caron: Would $300,000 suit the hon. member?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I am not in the business of auctioning.

Mr. Fulton: We might put up the hon. member for Assiniboia and the bid could be raised to $400,000.

Mr. Howard: Not as far as I am concerned.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Hull has the opportunity of placing a subamendment before the committee if he is prepared to write it out.

Mr. Caron: I will put it back to the original figure, Mr. Chairman. I move that paragraph (h) be deleted and replaced with the following which contains the original figures:

(h) any corporation, for any reporting period of the corporation in respect of which it can be established that

(a) the gross revenue of the corporation for that reporting period from the business carried on by it in Canada, determined as prescribed by the regulations, did not exceed five hundred thousand dollars, and

(b) the assets in Canada of the corporation as of the last day of that reporting period, determined as prescribed by the regulation, did not exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, except any such corporation that is one of two or more corporations that, by reason of inter-relationship of management, ownership or financial affairs, are designated by the minister to be related corporations and that would not, if considered as a single corporation, qualify as a corporation described in this item.

The Deputy Chairman: The subamendment reads that paragraph (h) be deleted and replaced by the wording the hon. member has suggested, and it goes on to change the figures from $100,000 to $500,000 in subclause (a) and from $50,000 to $250,000, in subclause (b).

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, would it not be simpler—just to show how co-operative we are here— if my friend the hon. member for Hull wishes to move an amendment, were he merely to move to delete paragraph (h) of the amendment? That would restore the original provision, I believe.

Mr. Caron: It would not.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it would, Mr. Chairman, because the original amendment strikes out the whole of the schedule so there would be nothing left then and all these corporations would be affected if the suggestion of the Minister of Justice were adopted.

I should like to say a word about the amendment moved by my hon. friend. While I can well understand in the original amendment the reason for this, I think the rather compelling observations made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River about putting an unnecessary charge upon small corporations to provide this information is something that will appeal to everybody in the committee. I think there has been unanimity almost to the point of competition, if unanimity can reach that point, to show that we in the committee are all friends of small business. No person has professed a greater interest in small business than has the leader of the N.D.P. I am sure he could just turn around to his group and suggest to them that we should not seek to penalize small business in an amendment which otherwise is seeking to make great corporations like the Bell Telephone Company and the C.P.R. subject to the law to which the middle size corporations will be subject. I think it would make it a great deal easier to get more support for the amendment if the subamendment commended itself to the leader of the N.D.P. and his followers.

Mr. Herridge: If I may interrupt the hon. gentleman for a moment, I simply wish to say that we are delighted to see what an influence we are having on the official opposition on a matter such as this one. I wish to correct him in one respect. I wish he would refer to me as parliamentary leader.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should be happy to make a bargain with the hon. gentleman since we are in the business of bargaining at the moment. If the hon. gentleman will stop referring to the Leader of the Opposition by an incorrect designation and will call him the Leader of the Opposition, I shall be very glad to call the hon. gentleman almost anything he would like to be called, except leader of the opposition.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the subamendment?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Caron) negatived: yeas, 22; nays, 41.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the subamendment lost.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may I should like to say a word before the amendment is put. Notwithstanding the fact that our subamendment has been lost because small business appears to have no friends in the Tory party any more—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —it seems to me that the major aim of the amendment to bring certain of these huge corporations under the same law as that under which ordinary business is put, is the transcendent part. We would have been happier to have it in better form. However, in the circumstances, I would hope that my friends in the chamber would join with me in supporting the amendment.

An hon. Member: You have not too many of them.

Mr. Howard: I do not know whether I was included among those to whom the hon. member referred as his friends.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not in a political sense.

Mr. Howard: That feeling is mutual, in any event. I remember reading some time ago parts out of May's Parliamentary Practice which stated that if an amendment was defeated the original thereby stands. I imagine therefore that we have now voted in favour of the $100,000 and the $50,000 and perhaps we should delete that in putting that amendment.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend by that remark indicates the same knowledge of parliamentary procedure which allowed him yesterday to attempt to mislead the house. I do not think he will succeed in misleading the committee. Now that the opening bargaining and bidding process between the members of the Liberal opposition and the members of the N.D.P. opposition is complete, perhaps we can settle the matter of the amendment on its merits.

Mr. Pickersgill: By brute force.

Mr. Fulton: By this bill we include those giant corporations which have foreign control and about the effect of whose foreign control we know nothing. We exempt only those about whose foreign control we already know.

Mr. Benidickson: You do not know about some of the big ones.

Mr. Fulton: In spite of the fact that for many years he was parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, my friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River must have occupied his time in that capacity in such a way as to give him none of the information which he could have obtained. However, I can assure him that those to whom the information is available are able to profit by it.

Mr. Benidickson: I was familiar with items 1 to 6 every year while I was there.

Mr. Fulton: Precisely. However, my hon. friend does not seem to have put his familiarization to any good purpose. The point I make is that any further explanation would only be repetition on the ears of those who are not prepared to profit by the information. I therefore suggest that we might take the sense of the committee on the amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot allow to pass without comment the reflections made by the minister on my colleague the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. From a minister who was obliged to confess earlier this evening that he had not read his speech since January and that it had egregious errors in it, it seems to me the suggestion comes with ill grace that some other hon. member has not read every document he might have read before coming into the chamber.

Mr. Howard: I would appreciate it, Mr. Chairman, if henceforth the Minister of Justice would refer to us here as the effective opposition. He would then be more nearly correct. However, I would point out this, if I could inferentially make reference to that about which the minister spoke and also to something which was attempted yesterday. My interpretation of the rules is that it succeeded. I am not one of those, as was the minister last year, who deliberately refuses to carry out his obligations under an act of parliament merely because he disagrees with what the results might be.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: yeas, 23; nays, 45.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, before you put clause 3 to a vote, I would point out that while the bill was given second reading without a division and it might therefore be said that it was supported unanimously, nevertheless it is a type of bill in which there is a mixture of goodness and badness. Members are often put in the position in dealing with bills of agreeing to second reading in the hope that in the committee stage the forcefulness of their arguments will have some effect on the minister involved from the point of view of increasing the effectiveness of the bill and improving upon it. With clause 3 as it now stands I will only say in passing that if we are unable to effect any alterations in the schedule when we are dealing with it paragraph by paragraph I am in serious doubt what my action will be on third reading. At the present moment my feeling is that I will not be able to support the bill on third reading if it reaches that stage in the same form it is now.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, when we come to clause 4 of the bill we will see—

Mr. Fulton: Are we on clause 4?

Mr. Roberge: No; I am simply referring to it in connection with the question I am going to ask. When we come to that clause we will see that there are two sections to the return that is going to be required. In the schedule there are a number of types of companies listed. Under the statutes under which these companies operate are they obliged to make returns in two parts, one part confidential and the other part not confidential?

Mr. Fulton: I think that would vary from case to case. Perhaps my hon. friend would ask me about particular cases. Generally speaking, however, the corporations enumerated in the first six paragraphs of the schedule report in very great detail. I am advised, for instance, that each insurance company reports in a great thick volume to the superintendent of insurance. The superintendent of insurance in turn, in the same way as the dominion statistician will do here with respect to part B returns, publishes his annual report summarizing the effects of the various individual reports he has had from the insurance companies in Canada. It is very much the same sort of system as will be followed under this bill.

Mr. Caron: Is there any part of the reports now being made to the transport commission or other bodies which is comparable to the section B confidential reports we are asking these other companies to make?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, indeed, Mr. Chairman. All the financial statements of the banks, insurance companies, trust companies, loan companies and so on, required to be filed with the respective officers detailed in the statutes under which they operate, are very much comparable to the financial information that will be required to be filed under this part.

Mr. Caron: Are they considered as confidential now?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I understand that the details of the returns are confidential generally speaking in the case of the officers with whom they are filed, just as the details of the returns under part B will be confidential; but an analysis is made and a report summarizing the effects of all the information received is made by, for instance, the superintendent of insurance, just as a report compiled by the dominion bureau of statistics will be made in this case.

Mr. Caron: As it stands now, the small loans companies report to the Department of Finance under the Small Loans Act. Is there a part of their reports which is now considered confidential under the statute?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that the details of financial statements, in such detail as is required under the Small Loans Act, that are filed with the Department of Finance would not be made available in detail to the public, but that there is no statutory or other bar to the revealing of that information in detail to the government in order that the government may decide upon the policy that should be followed with respect to small loans companies.

Mr. Caron: Who decides which part should be confidential and which part should not be confidential?

Mr. Fulton: That would be determined, I think, by virtue of the act under which the companies report. This bill will determine which parts of the report are confidential and which are not.

Mr. Caron: Then why are we asking more from other companies than we are asking from those included in the schedule? That is another reason why they should all be under the same act.

Mr. Fulton: Again I say I am advised that in the case of the insurance companies particularly, and most of the companies in the first six paragraphs of the schedule, they report a great deal more detail than the companies under this bill will be required to report.

Mr. Caron: But there is nothing in the law which says that part of it shall be confidential. It is only the department which decides which part shall be confidential.

Mr. Fulton: No, I have just pointed out that according to my understanding it is the respective statutes under which they report which determine what and to what extent confidentiality will be preserved.

Mr. Caron: I was told a while ago that in the case of the small loans companies the department decides what should be confidential and that there is nothing in the statute in that regard.

Mr. Roberge: If I understood correctly, the minister said earlier that the returns of those companies that are exempt under this legislation because they report somewhere else will be available to the bureau of statistics.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, yes. There is no bar whatsoever on the conveying of information within the government.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Caron: Ten o'clock.

Clause 3 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before I ask the minister what the government is going to do tomorrow, may I express my sympathy to him for the error of judgment that was made in not sending the bill we have just been considering to a special committee of the house. We would have made a lot more progress if that had been done. Perhaps the minister might consider deferring this item, which seems to be taking a long time, and getting on with something urgent. Could he indicate what the government is going to do?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the expression of opinion yesterday that the opposition wanted to get on with the business expeditiously encouraged me to recommend the bill for study today and I do the same for tomorrow, followed by the amendments to the Veterans' Land Act. The third item would be Bill No. S-19, to amend the Canada Grain Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: What else?

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

COAL

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ASSISTANCE IN MOVEMENT TO MARKETS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, authority has been provided for a continuation of assistance in the movement of Canadian coal. The previous orders in council providing this assistance expired on March 31 and have been succeeded by new orders passed on April 2.

The recent royal commission on coal, otherwise known as the Rand commission, recommended that steps be taken to assist Canadian coal, particularly in the maritimes, to find an increasing and stable market in the home area. Such a market should over a period replace the present dependence on a large scale, costly movement to Ontario. The commission made specific recommendations in respect to maritime coal which were designed to accomplish this purpose. However, the market situation has been altering rapidly and is presently in such a fluid condition that it is considered inadvisable to confine the measures of assistance by unduly restrictive provisions.

The assistance now provided is defined in the respective orders in council which are not restrictive in time. It is our intention to keep the situation under constant review and to make such changes, from time to time, in the orders in council as production and market developments may require. This flexibility will not only encourage the shift in market areas recommended by the royal commission; it will make such shift as easy as possible under the conditions as they may develop, with the lowest possible expenditure necessary to accomplish the main purpose. This purpose remains, as in the past, the maintenance of a reasonable level of employment in Canadian coal mines.

Specifically the new orders provide that the assistance to the mines in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick be widened to include payment of a subvention on all coal shipped. Provision is also made to encourage an increasing movement by rail from the mines to large consumers in Quebec and Ontario rather than by the expensive movement by water and transshipment.

In western Canada provision is made to continue the assistance on the movement of coking coal from mines in Alberta and British Columbia for export. This provision will permit a continuation of the existing export to Japan.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the areas concerned will welcome the announcement made by the minister to the effect that the assistance to the movement of coal to certain markets, both domestic and export, will be continued. As the minister said, this is in accordance with some of the recommendations of the Rand commission. The minister also said the situation was under constant review as far as production and markets are concerned.

I feel there will be some disappointment in the Cape Breton area in that the minister has made no specific announcement in connection with the proposed closing of No. 16 colliery. Furthermore, we expected at this time that the minister would make some specific announcement with regard to a national policy on coal. Such a policy is lacking. This is only a temporary measure designed to take care of an interim situation, but gives no definite or permanent relief to the area and to the industry concerned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSION ADJUSTMENT ACT

EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION TO INCLUDE PROVIDENT FUND PENSIONERS

On the order:

Mr. Creaghan, seconded by Mr. McFarlane, moved for leave to introduce a bill intituled "An act to amend the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act (to include provident fund pensioners)".

Mr. Speaker: When this motion was last called it was stood over to give hon. members who wished to do so an opportunity to consider whether they would make any representations about the character of this bill, and specifically whether it might be a money bill requiring a resolution preceding its introduction. If any hon. member feels disposed to comment on the matter I shall be glad to hear him. Otherwise I think I can only say that I have not altered the opinion which I expressed tentatively before.

Questions

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, it seems apparent from the discussion of last Thursday that Your Honour has formed the opinion that the bill I have attempted to introduce is, in your opinion, a money bill, and with the consent of the seconder I ask permission of the house to withdraw the bill. I propose later this day to introduce a resolution to the same effect.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may withdraw the bill as it has never been placed before the house. In any event I am sure the hon. member would be given unanimous consent if it were needed. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES—JOHN J. WILDERMAN

Question No. 277—Mr. Herridge:

1. Was Mr. John J. Wilderman employed as a timekeeper with the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources at Fort Smith, N.W.T.?
2. If so, is he still so employed; and, if not, why not?

Answer by: Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Mr. John J. Wilderman worked as project labourer on winter works road clearing, Pine lake to Hay camp. Part of his duties included timekeeping and grocery orders.

2. No. He was taken on strength January 8, 1962, and struck off strength February 15, 1962, because of a disagreement with the project foreman.

REFUSAL OF APPLICATIONS FOR CITIZENSHIP

Question No. 330—Mr. Herridge:

1. What is the number of applications for Canadian citizenship that were made and not granted since the enactment of the Canadian Citizenship Act in 1946?
2. What were the principal grounds for rejecting the applications?
3. Are applicants who are not granted citizenship in due course informed of grounds for withholding such grants?
4. Is membership in any lawful political, national, fraternal, or language group, a ground for not granting citizenship?
5. Is attendance at meetings, concerts, or other functions of such lawful groups, a ground for refusal of citizenship?
6. Is subscribing to a lawful political, labour, or language group newspaper or publication, a ground for refusal of citizenship?
7. Is membership in, or any activity on behalf of, any lawful trade union a ground for refusal of citizenship?
8. Are applications for citizenship refused in any case upon secret evidence?
9. What departmental procedure is employed to examine and pass upon the evidence before a decision is reached refusing citizenship?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Answer by: Mrs. Fairclough:

1. From the proclamation of the Canadian Citizenship Act on January 1, 1947, to December 31, 1961, 582,299 applications for citizenship were granted. During this period, on the basis of information available, 3,317 applications were refused. This figure includes some applications which have been refused on more than one occasion.

The foregoing totals may not be complete since it was not a requirement in the early years of the legislation that all courts file statistics relating to applications granted and refused.

2. No statistical reports are kept on the different reasons for refusal. Among the reasons are a lack of Canadian domicile, lack of residence in Canada for one year continuously prior to application, an inadequate knowledge of English or French, and an inadequate knowledge of the privileges and responsibilities of Canadian citizenship.

3. Not in all cases. Section 10 of the act provides that the grant of a certificate of citizenship is at the discretion of the minister.

4 to 6. In determining whether or not an applicant has an adequate knowledge of the privileges and responsibilities of Canadian citizenship, due consideration is given to membership in or participation in the activities of organizations concerning which there are grounds for believing that they promote or advocate the subversion, by force or other means of democratic government, institutions or processes as they are understood in Canada.

*MORTGAGE FORECLOSURES, ELLIOT LAKE, ONT.

Question No. 335—Mr. Fisher:

1. By March 1, 1962, how many mortgages had been foreclosed in Elliot Lake by (a) lenders, whose mortgages were guaranteed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and (b) by C.M.H.C. itself?
2. How much of a financial charge were these actions against the insurance fund?
3. What is the occupancy condition and ownership condition on this date for the houses on which foreclosure proceedings have been taken or which have reverted in other ways back to C.M.H.C.?
4. On this date, what was the record of empty homes at Elliot Lake?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, as this answer contains many figures I ask that it be printed in Hansard without being read.

Mr. Speaker: Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs request that the reply be printed without being read because of its length?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer above referred to is as follows:]

1. As of the 1st March, 1962 the number of properties acquired at Elliot Lake, Ontario, by the mortgage insurance fund were:

(a) from lenders whose mortgages were insured by C.M.H.C.....	657
(b) from C.M.H.C. directly	17
Total	674

These properties were acquired mainly by voluntary transfer.

2. Payments have been made out of the mortgage insurance fund totalling $4,363,604, as of March 1, 1962.

Sold to new purchasers and occupied	2
Rented	295
Unoccupied	377

4. Answered by 3 above.

C.N.R. NEGOTIATIONS WITH CANADA AND GULF TERMINAL RAILWAY

Question No. 342—Mr. Fisher:

1. Since January 1, 1961, has the Canadian National Railways been in negotiation or discussions with officers or owners of the Canada and Gulf Terminal railway regarding (a) running rights on this railroad (b) the purchase of this railroad (c) the lease of this railroad?

2. As of March 25, 1962, what is the status of arrangements and/or negotiations between the C.N.R. and the Canada and Gulf Terminal railway, relating to construction and operation of the Matane-Ste. Anne des Monts line?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes.

2. The discussions which are continuing have no relation to the construction of the Matane-Ste. Anne des Monts line.

*F. A. GAFFNEY, C.N.R. VICE PRESIDENT

Question No. 344—Mr. Fisher:

1. How long has F. A. Gaffney been vice-president, highway services, of the Canadian National Railways?

2. In summary, what are the qualifications, and what has been the experience of Mr. Gaffney for this post?

3. Did Mr. Gaffney take part in the purchases by the C.N.R. of any of these trucking firms: East-West, Midland Superior, and Husband Trucking?

Mr. Martini: Mr. Speaker, the information requested in this question is not within the knowledge of the minister. Staff appointments on the Canadian National Railways come strictly under the control of the management. It has not been the practice of the management to disclose information from personal files of officers and employees and the sessional committee on railways, air lines, and shipping has in the past supported this position. The management advise that appointments of officials are made upon a judgment evaluation of the qualifications and experience of the individuals concerned.

*L. J. MILLS, C.N.R. SENIOR OFFICER

Question No. 345—Mr. Fisher:

1. What are the educational qualifications of L. J. Mills of the Canadian National Railways senior staff?

2. How long has he held his present post?

3. Has he ever had business experience with truck lines or trucking, other than on the C.N.R.?

4. Was he called before hearings of the Quebec transportation commission in 1961 to explain the C.N.R.'s purchase of truck lines?

5. If not, did the president of the C.N.R. tell the Quebec transportation commission that Mr. Mills (as the comptroller) could explain the financing of the truck lines purchased or taken under option by the C.N.R.?

6. If so, on what date did the president refer to Mr. Mills as the comptroller?

Mr. Martini: The answer to questions 1, 2 and 3 is the same as that given to question 344. The answer to questions 4, 5 and 6 is as follows: The management advise that the evidence before the Quebec transportation commission is transcribed and is available for examination.

*CANAL CONSTRUCTION, LAKE SIMCOE—EFFECT ON FISHERIES

Question No. 352—Mr. Badanai:

Has the Department of Fisheries given any consideration to the possible effect on the fisheries, through smelt and lamprey infestation, of building a canal into lake Simcoe; and, if so, what is the result of that consideration?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes; scientists of the Department of Fisheries were asked by the Department of Transport for their opinion on this matter.

There is already an open waterway from lake Ontario into lake Simcoe but there is no evidence of lamprey or smelt entering lake Simcoe through this waterway. This does not guarantee, however, that if another all water route was established from Georgian bay, lamprey and smelt would not succeed in reaching lake Simcoe. They would, however, still have the problem of establishing themselves. If lamprey did establish themselves they would undoubtedly have an adverse effect on the lake trout. In the case of smelts, this species would compete with other fish in the lake, but it has been demonstrated that smelts can provide a profitable fishery as well as serving as food for the other species.

Questions

CIVIL ACTIONS UNDER FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Question No. 354—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. How many civil actions were initiated under the Food and Drugs Act since January 1, 1961?
2. Were there any convictions; and, if so, how many?
3. What companies were involved, and what was the amount of the fines in each case?

Answer by: Mr. Cardiff:

1. 116.

2. 87. Of the 87 convictions fines were paid in 83 cases and jail sentences imposed in 4 cases. One case of the 116 initiated was dismissed. There are 28 cases in which charges have been laid but which have not as yet been completed.

*BELLECHASSE ELECTORAL DISTRICT RETURNING OFFICER

Question No. 355—Mr. Boulanger:

1. On what date was Mr. G. Labrecque appointed returning officer for the electoral district of Bellechasse?
2. Who recommended his appointment?

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion:

1. Mr. G. Labrecque was appointed returning officer for the electoral district of Bellechasse by P.C. 1958-189 dated February 5, 1958, and was reappointed as returning officer for the same electoral district by P.C. 1960-1206 dated August 31, 1960.

2. In accordance with the terms of section 8 of the Canada Elections Act, returning officers are appointed by the governor in council. It has long been the custom that the recommendation to the governor in council is made by the Secretary of State. As to such suggestions as may be made to the Secretary of State of names for incorporation in his recommendation, these are made on a confidential basis and it has never been the practice of any government to reveal the source or identity of such suggestions as may be made.

BILL OF RIGHTS—PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 359—Mr. Matheson:

1. How many copies of the Canadian Bill of Rights have now been printed, and at what expense?
2. How many copies have been (a) sold (b) distributed free; and what is the legal authority for the free distribution?

Answer by: Mr. Dorion:

1. 20,000 copies at a cost of $6,000.

2. (a) 14,500 copies. (b) 178 individual copies to members of parliament on request; 225 copies to the press, school commissions, boards of trade, etc., for publicity purposes.

Authority for distribution to members of parliament is TB minute 477983. Distribution for publicity purposes is chargeable to the vote for that purpose of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery.

TENDERS FOR WARNING SIGNALS, HALIFAX-DARTMOUTH

Question No. 361—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Were tenders called during 1961 for the installation of 22, more or less, warning signals in the Halifax-Dartmouth, N.S., area; and, if so, on what date?
2. What was the medium, or media, used in advertising the tender call; and what are the names, with addresses, and amounts, of parties submitting tenders?
3. To whom was the contract awarded, and in what amount?

Answer by: Mr. O'Hurley:

1. Yes, on September 29, 1961, tenders were invited for the installation of twenty-two (22) attack warning sirens in the Halifax perimeter area in accordance with specifications and drawings provided by the Department of National Defence.

2. The Halifax district office of the Department of Defence Production mailed invitations to tender to thirteen (13) regional firms considered capable of handling the contract. Two tenders were received as follows:—

Arthur & Conn Limited,
P.O. Box 34, Halifax, N.S. $18,398

Canadian Comstock Co. Ltd.,
12 Queen st., Dartmouth, N.S. . $19,413

3. On October 13, 1961, the contract in the amount of $18,398 was awarded to the lower tenderer, Arthur & Conn Limited. On March 1, 1962, this contract was amended to provide for the following additional work at the prices indicated:—

(a) Supply and installation of metering facilities for twenty-two (22) sirens, $1,226.72 lot.

(b) Supply and installation of 1" x 1½" x 72" slats spaced approx. 1½" apart around poles #35, 36, 37, 42, 44, 45, 46, 48 and 52, $225.00 lot.

Questions

LOT 19, JUNCTION GORE, GLOUCESTER TOWNSHIP

Question No. 363—Mr. McIlraith:

Was an independent valuation obtained by crown assets disposal corporation of the 3.10 acres of land in lot 19, Junction gore, Gloucester township, which was sold to Principal Investments Limited, as appears in sessional paper 194, tabled February 14, 1962; and, if so, what firm or firms made the independent valuation, and what is the amount of such valuation and the date of its receipt by the department?

Answer by: Mr. O'Hurley:

1. No. Principal Investments Limited first offered to pay $10,000 per acre but after negotiations agreed to pay $15,000 per acre which, bearing in mind the limitations of the site, namely its triangular shape and the special conditions of the sale was considered in line with the current value of land in that area, as confined by consultation with officers of the national capital commission.

LIVESTOCK EXPORTS, 1960-61

Question No. 365—Mr. Rogers:

What was the quantity and value of livestock exported during the fiscal year 1960-61?

Answer by: Mr. Morris:

Quantity and value of livestock exported during the fiscal year 1960-61:

Class No. in 1960	Class No. in 1961	Description	Unit of Qty.	Quantity	Value
(2010)	(1-19)	Cattle, purebred	No.	22,738	$ 7,833,505

*VANCOUVER—PROTESTS RESPECTING RENT INCREASES FOR ELDER CITIZENS

Question No. 366—Mr. Herridge:

Has the Prime Minister received a letter dated March 23 from Mr. J. W. Chesterman, secretary of the federated legislative council, elder citizens association of Vancouver, B.C., protesting the increases in rents of the C.M.H.C.-administered housing projects in Vancouver, B.C.; and, if so, what answer has been made?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The letter was received and acknowledged. As stated therein, I brought the matter to the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible to parliament for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. My information in connection with this matter is, as I am informed by the corporation, that it has not issued any instructions to the administrators of these projects to increase the rents. These two projects are administered by a local housing authority pursuant to an agreement entered into between the local housing authority and the federal-provincial partnership.

*ABOLITION OF TOLLS, JACQUES CARTIER AND VICTORIA BRIDGES

Question No. 371—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the national harbours board made representations to the Minister of Transport within the past eighteen months asking the government to proceed with the abolition of tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges?

2. If not, has the national harbours board made representations to the Minister of Transport within the past 18 months asking the government not to proceed with the abolition of tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges?

3. Has the national harbours board given the government an estimate of the total cost to the taxpayer of the abandonment of tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges; and, if so, what is the estimate?

Mr. Martini: The answers are as follows:

1, 2 and 3. Under the long established practice of the house, departmental or interdepartmental communications are considered as privileged and in accordance with that practice it would not be proper to deal with this question.

*C.N.R. RIGHT OF WAY, VICTORIA BRIDGE, MONTREAL

Question No. 373—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the national harbours board, the Department of Transport, the Montreal harbour commission, or the Department of Finance negotiated with the Canadian National Railways for the price at which the C.N.R. is willing to relinquish its running rights or railway right of way on the Victoria bridge in Montreal, in connection with the government's announced intention of abolishing tolls on the Victoria and Jacques Cartier bridges?
2. If so, has any contribution to these negotiations or discussions been made by the city of Montreal or the province of Quebec?
3. Has the C.N.R. indicated the basis upon which it determines the money it will require to relinquish its rights and income from Victoria bridge?
4. If no negotiations have taken place by any agency with the C.N.R., how does the government intend to end the present integration of the Victoria bridge within the C.N.R. operating structure?

Mr. Martini: The answers are as follows:

1. Preliminary negotiations with Canadian National Railways do not contemplate the railway relinquishing its running rights or railway right of way on the Victoria bridge.
2. No.
3. Yes.
4. Not applicable.

FEASIBILITY SURVEY, N.B.-P.E.I. CAUSEWAY

Question No. 375—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has a survey been undertaken of the engineering feasibility of a causeway across Northumberland strait from New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island; and, if so, has it been completed, and what are its findings?
2. If the survey has not been completed, when is it expected to be completed?

Answer by: Mr. Green:

1. Yes; it has not been completed.

2. No definite date for completion can be given at this time. The duration of the survey is dependent on the outcome of investigations still underway.

NATIONAL RESEARCH MODEL STUDY, N.B.-P.E.I. CAUSEWAY

Question No. 376—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has the national research council undertaken a model study of a proposed crossing of the Northumberland strait between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island?
2. If completed, what is the result of the model study; and if not, when will it be completed?

Answer by: Mr. Green:

1. No model study has been made of a proposed crossing; two dimensional model studies of cross sections of a causeway have been carried out.

2. It has indicated a satisfactory cross section based on calculated wave heights. These results will be rechecked on the model when actual wave heights in the strait are determined. (Delay has been due to damage of equipment by ice as indicated in answer to question No. 377.)

WAVE MEASUREMENTS, NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT

Question No. 377—Mr. McWilliam:

Were wave measurements in Northumberland strait undertaken during any periods by the national research council; and, if so, what is the result of the measurements?

Answer by: Mr. Green:

Yes. However, the equipment was damaged by ice during the past winter and therefore no significant results were obtained. The equipment will be repaired and the measurements continued when the ice clears.

COLLEGE MILITAIRE ROYAL DE SAINT-JEAN—COMPLETION OF STUDIES

Question No. 380—Mr. Dupuis:

Has the government authorized Le College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean to offer to cadets attending the said institution the opportunity of completing their studies without having to go to the Royal Military College at Kingston, Ontario; and, if so, when was such decision taken; and, if not, when will the government accede to the numerous requests made to that effect?

Answer by: Mr. Chambers:

Under the present system officer cadets at the College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean and Royal Roads attend the Royal Military College at Kingston for the last two years of college training. Le College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean was established in 1952. The first group of officer cadets from College Militaire Royal graduated into the services in 1957. One of the objectives of the college was to enable French speaking cadets to commence their training in their native language. In this it has been a notable success. The program is under continuous study to see whether improvements can be made.

INQUIRY INTO RICHELIEU RIVER WATERWAY

Question No. 381—Mr. Dupuis:

Has an international commission been charged by the government to inquire into the advisability of undertaking operations to provide a deep waterway through the Richelieu river; and, if so, at what date was this done, and which commission was chosen therefor?

Answer by: Mr. Green:

Mr. Speaker, on March 8 I indicated that it was hoped that the matter would be referred to the international joint commission in the near future by means of a joint reference from the governments of Canada and the United States. Discussions are proceeding with the United States authorities regarding the terms of the reference. When the terms are settled and the reference is made, the house will be informed.

*PARTS OF MACHINES—TARIFF BOARD DEFINITION

Question No. 383—Mr. Benidickson:

In several tariff board appeals heard since April 1, 1959, involving the matter of whether the goods which were the subjects of the appeals were parts of machines or whether the goods were not parts of machines, in its decisions in these appeals, did the tariff board give a definition, test, or other determination which establishes the conditions under which goods are parts of machines and the conditions under which goods are not parts of machines; and, if so, what is the definition, test, or other determination given by the tariff board which establishes the conditions under which goods are, or are not, parts of machines?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the following declarations made by the tariff board since April 1, 1959, appear to have some relevancy to this question:

Appeal Number	Date of Decision
518	June 16, 1959
418	December 21, 1959
524	November 1, 1960
517	November 25, 1960
548	August 2, 1961
549	September 8, 1961
615	November 27, 1961
560	December 18, 1961
553	January 31, 1962

If it is the wish of the house or the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River I shall be glad to table copies of these particular decisions, but I think he will agree that as these fall within the rule that any judicial decision must speak for itself he will not expect me to venture an interpretation of these decisions.

Mr. Speaker: The minister offered to table certain documents and I am not sure whether that is requested. Does the hon. member who asked the question wish the documents to be tabled?

Mr. Benidickson: I think it would be convenient to have them in the records of the Clerk.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to the tabling of the documents offered by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSIDERATION OF TOLL ABOLITION, WELLAND CANAL

Question No. 384—Mr. Fisher:

When the Minister of Transport indicated in the house on Friday, March 23, that the government was giving serious consideration to abolishing tolls on the Welland canal, did this mean that the matter was before the Department of Transport or under consideration by the governor in council?

[Mr. Green.]

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

The position in regard to tolls on the Welland canal was clearly stated by the Minister of Transport at page 2122 of Hansard of March 23 and no elaboration is considered to be appropriate or necessary. It was also stated in the house by the minister on March 29 that if and when a decision on this matter is taken by the government it will be announced in the usual manner.

WHEAT TRANSFERS FROM 1960-61 TO 1961-62 ACCOUNT

Question No. 385—Mr. Argue:

1. How many bushels of wheat were transferred from the 1960-61 wheat account to the 1961-62 account?
2. What was the transfer price for statutory grades?
3. Was this based on the current wheat board selling price?
4. If not, then on what basis were the prices established?

Answer by: Mr. Jorgenson:

1. 199,297,606.5 bushels.

*C.M.H.C.—REJECTED APPLICATIONS FOR LIMITED DIVIDEND PROJECTS

Question No. 386—Mr. Garland:

1. How many applications for limited dividend projects have been rejected by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation since January 1, 1962?
2. How many individual units were involved in these rejected applications?

Mr. Green: The answers are as follows:

1. Three.
2. Two hundred and sixty-four units.

*JOSEPH DREAVER, MISTAWASIS INDIAN BAND

Question No. 389—Mr. Howard:

Is a Mr. Joseph Dreaver of the Mistawasis Indian band an employee of the federal government in any capacity; and, if so, when did he commence employment, at what salary, and what are his duties?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, Chief Dreaver is not a civil servant but his services have been retained on a contract basis at the rate of $25 per diem, including expenses, for a five day week since December 1, 1961. His duties require him to survey the Indians of Saskatchewan in respect of their reactions and recommendations concerning the findings of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian affairs.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration based on her answer to my earlier query with respect to Chief Joseph Dreaver. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that while he is doing the work for the department she indicated he is also organizing for the Conservative party?

Mr. Nowlan: I hope so.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know nothing of that matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether I might ask another question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. If it requires notice, perhaps she could take it as notice. Can the minister indicate whether there are any other Indians in Canada—and if so, what are their names and so on—who have been employed in the same sort of work Chief Dreaver is doing?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question is one that might properly go on the order paper. There are a good number of Indians in Canada.

*SALE OF TIMBER, TSIMPSEAN INDIAN RESERVE NO. 2

Question No. 390—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration received a resolution from the band council of the Port Simpson Indian band to the effect that the said band has agreed to accept the offer of the Beaufort Industries Ltd., tendered on February 13, 1962, for the purchase and removal of timber from the Tsimpsean Indian reserve no. 2; and, if so, what decision, if any, has been reached?

Order for Return

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, although no resolution in the formal sense has been received at headquarters, on March 14, 1962 I received a telegram from the council of the Port Simpson band indicating they were prepared to accept the offer of Beaufort Industries Ltd. This was later confirmed by letter dated March 24, 1962, signed by Chief Sampson.

As I announced in the house on Tuesday, March 13, the sale of February 13, 1962 has been cancelled and new tenders will be called. The new sale will be proceeded with only after agreement with the Port Simpson band council as to the terms and conditions to be included in the licence.

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS

Question No. 394—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total number of active claimants for unemployment insurance benefits, as of February 28, 1962?

Mr. Thrasher: The answer to this question is that information regarding the number of active claimants for unemployment insurance as of February 28, 1962 is not yet available.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. Can the hon. member advise the house when the figures for the number of active claimants for unemployment insurance benefits as of February 28, 1962 may be made available?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I understand it takes approximately two months for those figures to be compiled.

Mr. Robichaud: Is the total number of claimants so high that it is not of general interest to release them?

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

*PENSION MEDICAL ADVISER, PENSION COMMISSION

Question No. 301—Mr. Benidickson:

1. How many applications were received under competition No. 62-452 for pension medical advisers (medical officer 4) with the Canadian pension commission?
2. Who will compose the "selection board"?
3. How many applications were received from veterans with overseas service?
4. How many applicants will be invited to appear before the "selection board"?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

LOT 19, JUNCTION GORE, GLOUCESTER TOWNSHIP

Motion No. 35—Mr. McIlraith:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report declaring the land (being part of lot 19, Junction gore, Gloucester township) surplus as referred to in order for return, sessional paper 194, tabled on the 14th of February, 1962.

Motion agreed to.

AMOS-MATTAGAMI HIGHWAY, QUEBEC

Motion No. 36—Mr. Martel:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all agreements, contracts, and other documents relating to the construction, under the roads to resources program, of the Amos-Mattagami highway including a copy of the contract entered into by the province of Quebec or the department concerned and the general contractor who carried out these works; a list of names and addresses of persons who worked for the general contractor and the provincial department concerned on the construction of the said highway; a list of subcontracts given out by the general contractor in connection with these works and the names of individuals or companies having rented equipment, by the hour or on a contract basis, for the carrying out of the general contract or the subcontracts in question; a list of suppliers, and the names of those who recommended them to the general contractor or the subcontractors.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, since this subject was raised in the house last Wednesday I have had an opportunity of examining the roads to resources agreement with the province of Quebec. It seems to me that under the terms of the agreement the federal minister can ask for this information. For the purposes of audit and general examination. I am, therefore, accepting this motion subject to the province agreeing to the tabling of the information in the house.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS FIXING DUTIES ON IMPORTS

Motion No. 38—Mr. Benidickson:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of rulings, directives, regulations, and prescriptions of the Minister of National Revenue, and also orders in council issued under authority of sections 39, 40, 40A, and 40B of the Customs Act (as amended by chapter 26, Statutes of Canada 1958); and a copy of ministerial orders issued since April 17, 1961; under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties on imports.

Mr. Nowlan: The terms of this motion are wider than I would normally like to accept. I have had a discussion with my hon. friend and we have agreed upon the matters which should be included in its terms, so I accept the motion.

Mr. Benidickson: I thank the minister, and assure the house that we will have economy in the production of the papers involved.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any modification to be made in the motion? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE PROPERTY PURCHASE, COQUITLAM DISTRICT

Motion No. 40—Mr. Regier:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all tender calls issued to date, bids received as a result of such tender calls, and correspondence between individuals, organizations, corporations, and the government or any of its agencies, having to do with property bought for the Department of National Defence in the district of Coquitlam.

Mr. O'Hurley: I have met with the hon. member and we have made an agreement that, since this is a voluminous file, I will furnish him with the results of the last tender called.

Mr. Regier: That will be satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to that explanation, is it the pleasure of the house to accept the motion?

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN RESIDENTS, PORT ARTHUR FEDERAL RIDING

Motion No. 42—Mr. Fisher:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of any information in the hands of the chief electoral officer regarding the numbers and locations of Indians in the federal riding of Port Arthur and in particular, any information received from the Indian affairs branch with a view to assisting the chief electoral officer in covering this riding in the next general election.

Motion agreed to.

SALE OF TIMBER, TSIMPSEAN INDIAN RESERVE NO. 2

Motion No. 43—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all directives issued by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration or the Indian affairs branch since January 1, 1960, to any employee of the said branch, and in particular to a Mr. Paul Brett, forester, relating to the proposed sale of timber situated on the Tsimpsean Indian reserve no. 2.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion calls for the production of what are considered to be privileged papers, that is correspondence between headquarters and employees, and therefore cannot be accepted.

Mr. Howard: I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that it calls for a copy of directives issued from the ministerial level down, and it seems to me it would not fall within that class.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard the objection. Does he wish to withdraw or proceed with his motion?

Mr. Howard: I think it must be proceeded with, Mr. Speaker; there is too much cloud over this matter.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

TIMBER SURVEY, INDIAN RESERVES, B.C.

Motion No. 45—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a list of the names of each Indian reserve in British Columbia and the names of each Indian band to which each such reserve belongs which has had a timber survey conducted upon it by, or under the direction of, a Mr. Paul Brett, forester of the Indian affairs branch, along with the results of each such survey in terms of volume of timber by species and the acreage covered, and an indication as to whether or not any plans are in the offing for the sale of all or any part of the said timber and, if for a part of it, the percentage, by species and acreage, and for the details of any such plans.

Motion agreed to.

SALE OF TIMBER, TSIMPSEAN INDIAN RESERVE NO. 2

Motion No. 46—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the government or any member thereof, the Indian affairs branch or any officer or employee thereof, since January 1, 1954, and any other person, corporation, or organization relating to all proposed or actual sales of timber situated on the Tsimpsean Indian reserve no. 2.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he has any comment to make on the report in this morning's newspapers attributed to officials of the United Kingdom government, to the effect that a commonwealth prime ministers' conference is likely to be held toward the end of May or in June?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I can make no comment on that today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD NUCLEAR WEAPON POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of a report in the Ottawa Citizen of April 3 entitled "NATO Nuclear Policy will set 'guide lines' ", can the Prime Minister assure the house that the Canadian delegation at the NATO permanent council will press at the forthcoming Athens meeting for a new strategy involving progressively diminishing reliance on nuclear weapons and more and more reliance on disengagement and disarmament?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the house knows, meetings of the permanent council of NATO are not reported to the house. I could not comment on this speculative report.

[Mr. Howard.]

TELEVISION

STRANRAER, SASK.—GRANTING OF LICENCE FOR SATELLITE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. L. Hanbidge (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Transport. In view of the report in today's Globe and Mail that the Ontario court of appeal has allowed the appeal of the minister from the judgment of Chief Justice McRuer, concerning the recommendation of the board of broadcast governors for a satellite of station CFQC-TV Saskatoon at Stranraer, Saskatchewan, can the minister say whether he will now grant the licence immediately?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have also seen the report to which reference is made. I have asked the law officers of my department to peruse the reasons for judgment as soon as possible so that a licence may be granted without delay. I know that my hon. friend wants his constituents to be able to watch the hockey play-offs, and I assure him we will do everything we can to please him.

Mr. Hellyer: Undoubtedly they will enjoy the election results as well.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): A supplementary question to the previous question of the hon. member for Kindersley, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Transport if it is not customary to allow a certain period of time to elapse so that appeals may be made against decisions of the court of appeal?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, this is an expression of a legal opinion. I would not like to enter into a contest with my hon. friend on that subject. However, as I said earlier the law officers of my department will peruse the reasons for judgment and we will act accordingly.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether he is really in favour of Saskatoon or Swift Current?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I am really in favour of the public in the area receiving good television reception.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—SUPPORT PRICE FOR MILK USED FOR CHEESE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, my question was meant for the Minister of Agriculture, to whom I sent notice. In his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

In view of the great confusion which exists among farmers, could the minister give us further explanations by telling us how compensatory payments will be applied to milk to be used in the production of cheese?

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): The confusion is only in the member's mind.

(Text):

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, discussions with respect to the dairy program for the year starting May 1 are still continuing with industry groups. It will be a few days yet before an announcement can be made with respect to details.

FLOODS

MARITIME PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO APPROACH BY PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Have any of the governments of the maritime provinces been in contact with the federal government with regard to the disastrous flood that has caused extensive damage, particularly in Westmorland and Cumberland counties?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there have been such contacts, but I shall make inquiries.

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether the minister could report to the house on the serious damage to the main Canadian National Railways line in southeastern New Brunswick between the city of Moncton and the Nova Scotia border, and whether he could indicate to the house when this damage will be repaired so that transportation may be carried on?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am expecting a report from the Canadian National Railways in the very near future and will be pleased to make the contents of that report known to the house.

MANITOBA—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT ON RED RIVER CONTROL PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether a final agreement has been reached with the government of Manitoba about the Winnipeg Floodway?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Pickersgill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say whether the difficulty is that the federal government is insisting upon a ceiling on its expenditures?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say there is no difficulty at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister say whether he expects that final agreement will be reached in the very near future?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, Mr. Speaker, quite soon.

BRIDGES

JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE, MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO TOLL CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of the somewhat indefinite answer I obtained concerning the Jacques Cartier bridge. I wish to ask the minister whether negotiations are coming along successfully in regard to the relationship of the provincial and municipal governments in this toll matter?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I said last week I answered a question directed to me by the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville. As I said then a meeting had been arranged among representatives of the federal and provincial governments and the city, to be held next Monday here in Ottawa.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR EXTENSIVE USE OF CANADIAN WOOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In his absence perhaps I could direct it to the acting minister. In respect to the new building to be erected by the government to house the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of Forestry, will the minister make sure that the greatest possible use of wood will be made especially in the interior of the building, to take as full advantage as possible of the many species of wood we have in this country?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering whether we might make use of some heads around here. I shall have to take that question as notice.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

WEST INDIES—INQUIRY AS TO OFFER OF UNION WITH CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday the parliament at Westminster took final measures to dissolve the British West Indies federation. Now that that has been done is our government contemplating offering either economic or political union to the British territories in the Caribbean?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a related question. Can the minister say whether the government has given any consideration to using its good offices with a view to assisting, if possible, in the maintenance of the lesser union of Barbados, the Windward islands and the Leeward islands which I understand Sir Grantley Adams is trying hard to achieve, and which would be certainly in the interests of Canada?

Mr. Green: We are only too glad to give what help we can. There is some balance remaining of the $10 million which was allocated for help to the West Indies federation. If I remember correctly, the bulk of what remains is being spent to help the smaller islands.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may do so I should like to ask a further supplementary question. Can the minister say what disposition is now likely to be made of the ships that were made available by Canada?

Mr. Green: The ships were turned over to the West Indies federation. They are therefore not under the control of Canada in any way.

WATER RESOURCES

FURTHER STATEMENT ON EFFORTS TO OVERCOME SEA POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): On Friday last the hon. member for Lambton West inquired as to co-operation between Canada and the United States in efforts to eliminate oil pollution of waters of the great lakes. I might say that the United States refuse act is used for the prosecution of oil pollution cases in United States territorial waters in the great lakes area, and the oil pollution prevention regulations are used in Canadian territorial waters.

When cases of oil pollution occur in the great lakes area near territorial boundaries, the United States coastguard are contacted and such matters are dealt with to our mutual satisfaction. A close liaison exists between this department and the United States coastguard in this matter as in other maritime affairs.

As the house knows, both the United States and Canada are represented at the international conference on the prevention of pollution of the sea by oil now taking place at London. Both countries are signatories to the international convention of 1954.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 3, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada—Mr. Fulton—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 3—Application of part I.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Just before the clause carries may I ask whether the minister can now tell us whether under the existing law statistics are required to show the extent of foreign ownership of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. Fulton: I think the answer would be as follows, Mr. Chairman. While under the Railway Act there is no precise requirement such as that which the hon. member has mentioned, nevertheless the fact is that as a result of various royal commission inquiries and studies plus hearings of one sort or another before the board of transport commissioners and elsewhere, the facts are known as to the extent and the effects of foreign ownership as it may exist, of the two companies in question. They are fully known both, as I say, with respect to its extent and its effect.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not particularly interested in the C.P.R. as I think everybody realizes that the direction of the C.P.R. is exclusively in Canada, wherever the ownership may be. I am quite sincere in saying that. I do not think many Canadians feel the same way about the Bell Telephone Company. If the facts are known, can the minister indicate the degree of foreign ownership there is, as of the latest information available to the government, with respect to the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. Fulton: I could get that information. I am not sure that I have it here. When we come to the balance of the schedule, I shall be able to give that information and indeed with respect to any of these companies. If at that time there is a strong view or agreement here that necessary changes should be made so as to remove them from the exemption, that matter could be considered at that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Particularly in the case of telephone companies, since there will be a difference between the Bell Telephone Company and companies incorporated under provincial charter which would not come under the Railway Act, I think it would be rather unfair to make these smaller companies that are incorporated under provincial charter give a great deal of information that we may not require of the Bell Telephone Company. However, I am quite content to leave the matter until the minister comes to the schedule.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I do not know whether or not I understood the minister correctly. There was a great deal of rustling in the chamber at the time. Did I understand the minister to say that for the purpose of this bill, which is to get full information with regard to foreign domination, it would be adequate in certain fields to depend on reports of royal commissions?

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I must ask the hon. member to repeat his question. I apologize for doing so.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): As I say, I may have misunderstood the minister. There was some unrest and noise in the chamber at the time. Am I to understand the minister said that for the purpose of this bill, which is to get full and complete knowledge of foreign domination of certain companies, it would be adequate to depend on the reports of royal commissions in certain cases?

Mr. Fulton: No, I do not think I said that. What I said was that, with respect to the companies that have been named—and I was replying to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who named two companies —it is our feeling as a result of inquiries that have been made from time to time, information of which is available to us, the extent and the effect of foreign domination of those companies is well known to the government now and will continue to be known by virtue of the methods of their operation and the reporting requirements to which they are now subject. However, I also said that if it was felt that with respect to one or other of those particular companies there was a reason why it should be done, consideration might be given to their exemption or their removal from the schedule and that I should be glad to discuss that matter in detail when we come to the schedule itself.

Mr. Howard: Surely this is as good a place as any to talk about it. We spent a fair amount of time yesterday dealing with this self-same subject. It is true that it was in an all inclusive way by way of an amendment of mine. However, it was related to the schedule. I think this matter would have a bearing on what feelings might be expressed with respect to varying or substituting parts of the bill which outline in detail what information is to be required.

Mr. Peters: It seems to me that if the government are honest in their intention really to assess who owns what company and as the minister said, the extent of foreign domination, we can only assume that this is really not what he wants to do, if he will not include these other companies.

As an example, let us take a small telephone company that probably has a provincial charter. When it is able to outbid the Bell Telephone Company for franchises in various parts of the country the question arises, who owns this particular company? Is it still a Canadian company? I would think not and everybody else thinks not. One can guess who does. However, I doubt that the minister will be able to find out, and if he is not willing to find out, if he does not want to know as a matter of course, then I would think he is not being very honest in saying that the reason for the bill is to develop Canadian ownership and to know the situation exactly with regard to Canadian ownership and control of companies and unions.

He mentioned the fact that some unions with 100 members or less are exempted. These 100 members would pay at least $5 each a month for union dues, which is not the minimum by any means, and this means that in a year they will only be paying $6,000 altogether and will have assets, according to the minister, of something like $3,000. I think that the size of the company would be a fair yardstick but many of the major companies in the country are exempted, and I do not think that the minister is going to be able to stand up in the house and say that he wants to do this simply to protect Canadians and to ascertain the extent of foreign ownership and maintain Canadian domination and control over either unions or corporations.

Before I am willing to support the bill the minister will have to give a much better explanation of what he said was his prime purpose in introducing the legislation. If he does not do so, I can only assume that what he has done is to revise the bill he presented to the house last year, and that the bill now before us is not even a weak facsimile of the act that was passed in the United States on which he said the first measure he presented to the house was based. If this is what he has done, it would seem to me, after reading and agreeing with the principles of the labour management reporting and disclosure act of 1959 in the United States, that we would be much happier in this house if we accepted a bill of that kind than we would be with the one we now have before us.

I am surprised that the limits that have been applied in the exemptions set forth in the schedule are considered by the minister to be justified. If he is realistic about the matter I think he will agree that, although the information is available in some form in some department or agency of the government, this is not exactly what he wanted to accomplish by the bill, namely, to get all the information in one place where it could be examined and an over-all assessment of the Canadian economy could be made. If we have to go back to old reports made by commissions conducting investigations under the Combines Investigation Act, I think the purpose in mind will not be met. I maintain that most of the information that will be obtained under this legislation is already available in departments and agencies of the government to anyone who wants to look for it, and the only justification there is for passing this legislation is to be able to get an over-all picture. I suggest that in adopting this clause with the limitations that are set forth in the schedule we will certainly not be accomplishing what the minister says he wants to accomplish. I think this is a very good place for the minister to decide to make some amendments in order to do away with what we consider to be a very large loophole in his reasoning. This would be a very good place for him to make a start.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, there must, I think, be a fundamental misapprehension regarding the effects of the bill in the minds of the hon. members in that corner of the house, or else I am satisfied they would not say what has just been said. In the first place, to deal with the points as I remember them, both the scope and the details required under this legislation are appreciably wider as contained in the bill than they were in the bill which was introduced in the house last session. The hon. member has only to look at the requirements contained in clause 4 to see the very great extent to which the financial implications and details now required are extended beyond what would have been required under the earlier bill. He has also only to look at the definition of "corporation" and the other provisions affecting that to see that the number of companies who will now have to report is greatly enlarged compared with the number that would have been required to report under Bill No. C-70 last year.

The reason for making the exemptions contained in the schedule is that we considered it was not good practice and not necessary to make companies which are already under a very heavy burden of statistical reporting enlarge the burden by reporting under this measure if we were satisfied that the kind of information they now report to other places is (a) approximately as complete in its detail and coverage as what would be required here and (b) already available to the government. We came to the conclusion that the classes of corporations outlined in the exemptions mentioned in the schedule do qualify under these headings, namely that they report in comparatively equal detail already and that the information so reported is available to the government.

Let us take particularly, for instance, those in paragraph 15 of the schedule, to which a good deal of attention has been devoted. I am sure hon. members will agree with me that if you stop to think of it you will realize that the railway companies and the telephone company referred to are under a very heavy burden of reporting to the board of transport commissioners under the provisions of the Railway Act. Every time a rate application comes up there is a vast volume of information that is required to be filed with the board of transport commissioners. I assure my hon. friends that there is really a very heavy burden of reporting already laid upon these companies.

So we asked ourselves the question, should we add to that the burden of reporting simply for the sake of securing information under this act rather than under some other heading, having in mind especially that the information so filed already under that other heading is already available to the government? We came to the conclusion that on those grounds the class of companies in head 15 of the schedule, as well as those in the first six heads of the schedule, should not be subject to the additional burden of having to report under this legislation.

As I say, when we come to any particular heading in the schedule I will be glad to have a look at it and if we should become satisfied that we are wrong and that either the kind of information we want is not available or it is already reported but is not available to the government, then we would be prepared to reconsider our decision as reflected in the schedule. However, I do hope that when hon. members come to that point they will give due weight to the fact of the already quite considerable, indeed very considerable, burden of reporting to which these companies are already subject.

To deal with the only other point that I recall being raised, it was that by virtue of this exemption in head 15 smaller telephone companies or other telephone companies are not going to have to report and that they might well be foreign controlled to a degree or in total. That is completely misconstruing the effect of the bill and the schedule. Every company in Canada, subject only to the revenue and asset lower limits contained in the schedule, is required to report unless it is exempted by the schedule.

The only telephone companies exempted by the schedule are those in respect of which returns are made to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada in pursuance of the Railway Act. The telephone companies which report to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada are exempt from reporting because we feel information of the type we want is already available. Telephone companies which do not report to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada will be required to file returns under this act. One way or the other, therefore, we feel we will have all the information we want to have in respect of telephone companies in Canada.

Mr. Peters: I believe that, in one way or another, all this information is already available to the government.

Mr. Fulton: I can assure my hon. friend that is not the case. The telephone companies not required to report to the board of transport commissioners would only be required to make such annual returns as might be called for under the Companies Act under which they were incorporated. I can assure my hon. friend that the information contained in those annual returns is not anything like as extensive as the information we are requesting under this bill. The information, therefore, would not at the present time be available to the government.

Mr. Peters: I was not referring only to the Companies Act but I was thinking also of the Department of National Revenue, the tariff structure, and the board of transport commissioners, other segments of the government to which returns are made that are somewhat of the same nature. The government would have this information, but the general public would not. I would assume that the type of information referred to in the first part of the bill is public information which would allow the general public to make a decision, and is not secret information. This type of information, in most cases, is already available to the government.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure the hon. member knows that the government, as such, does not receive income tax returns from corporations. There are well defined provisions in the act which maintain the confidential nature of the returns which go to the Department of National Revenue only. This government, as a whole, does not receive information filed in statistical returns with the bureau of statistics under the Statistics Act. The confidentiality of it is preserved even from the government. It was for these reasons, as I said earlier, it was felt it would be undesirable to amend the Statistics Act to allow these returns to be made available to the government because an excellent and desirable reputation for confidentiality and reliability of the bureau has been built up in respect of these returns. We did not want to tamper with that.

As I explained also, we came to the conclusion the best way to achieve the purpose we had in mind was to enact this bill and make requirements for reporting all the details under this act that will be available to the government. The only class of corporations that were exempted from these new requirements were those who report already under some other statute in a manner in which that information is available to the government, such as under the Railway Act, the Bank Act or the various other statutes mentioned in the schedule.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Is this not tantamount to discrimination? As I understand the minister's explanation, we will have two different classes of corporations reporting to the government, one under the new bill and that information will be half public and half private, and the others in the present schedule that will not be required to give public information at all. Is this not a discriminatory aspect of this bill?

Mr. Fulton: We went through all this last night. I can only regret that the hon. member was not in the house when I pointed out that under other statutes, for instance, such as the Insurance Act, the insurance companies report in great detail to the superintendent of insurance. The superintendent of insurance then compiles a statistical analysis of the facts and of the returns he receives, and reports that in turn to the public. The dominion bureau of statistics, in almost the same way, will compile a statistical analysis or summary for the B returns that it receives under this act and that report will be available to the public. There is, therefore, a close parallel between the two classes of companies, the ones included in the schedule on the one hand and the companies not included on the other hand.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): This may be true, but where is the similarity between the companies under the schedule, so far as the A section of this bill is concerned? I agree that the B section will be similar.

Mr. Fulton: In order to understand this properly, I think I must go back a bit. This bill will cover all corporations, whether public or private. Private corporations do not now require to make an annual return in public of the sort that public corporations make containing lists of directors, etc. This information is not made public by private corporations at the moment. As a result of the provisions of this bill, that information will now be included in part A of the returns and will be available for inspection by any member of the public on payment of a dollar search fee.

All classes of companies listed in the schedule are public companies required to make, some of them annually, reports to their shareholders which they must release as well as filing all this statistical information with the various bodies to which I have referred. These companies listed in the schedule, therefore, already make available the information we are now requiring private companies as well as public companies to file. There will be a virtual parallel between the kind of information required to be filed and the availability of that information as between companies under the bill and companies under the schedule.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, and I am sure the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will be interested in this, I am advised that the annual report of the Bell Telephone Company for the year ended December 31, 1961 states that of the total shares outstanding, 92.2 per cent are held in Canada and in 1954 the percentage was 90 per cent.

Mr. Caron: Do they give the names of the subsidiary companies?

Mr. Fulton: I have not got that. This statement is based on a very quick glance at the report.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Caron: Could the minister get the information to see if the subsidiary companies are included in the report?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, but I think the report is as available to my hon. friend as it is to me.

Mr. Caron: You have more help than we have.

Mr. Fulton: I will have the annual report of the Bell Telephone Company here when we reach the schedule.

Mr. Pitman: We do not wish to hold up the legislation, but there seems to be some discrepancy between what the minister says and the result of this bill with which we are dealing in committee. I should like to read two or three sentences from the minister's speech when he introduced this measure. As reported on page 2401 of Hansard for April 2, 1962, the minister said:

> We are on the threshold of exciting and challenging opportunities for Canada. We have been through difficult times and decisions. We will face equally difficult times and decisions. But surely, we as Canadians, even if we are only 18 million people, are not afraid to measure up to the challenges of new opportunities and decisions affecting our economy. What better way can we measure up to new opportunities than by formulating our policies on the basis of information as to where we now stand in reality.

Surely, the criterion for this bill should not be whether or not it will be a great deal of trouble and perhaps some expense to obtain this information. If we really want to see where we now stand we should be ready, as a government, to subsidize the cost of obtaining this kind of information. Surely, we should have a full picture of what is going on in the area of insurance companies, in the area of trust companies and so on. To say that these are already reported is simply not good enough. Surely the criterion is not whether we have information in this part of government, in this division of this particular department, or some other division; that will not give us the picture as to where we now stand in reality, as the minister puts it. Surely the criterion is whether this information will be as readily available, whether it will be as easily accessible, whether it will be in a form which can be correlated and compared with the reports which will be submitted as a result of this particular legislation. That should be the criterion.

It is very easy to say that the government already has this information in other forms in other departments or various branches of various departments, but unless this is brought into one area it will not be of any use. Having in mind what the minister has said with regard to not wanting to be involved in the Statistics Act, wanting to bring these various branches together under a standardized form so that all these other areas report in the same form, that argument simply leaves me cold. If we are trying to do what the minister says we are trying to do, namely get the full picture of the entire economy in all its facets and complexity, surely this argument that it is simply too much trouble for the businessman on the one hand—who I say could be subsidized—or that we do not interfere in certain other areas, as far as the government is concerned, is not valid because I cannot see how this is going to happen.

I do not think the minister has yet indicated whether, when we do formulate our policies, we will have as easily accessible and as readily available information as we would have if all these various sections of the schedule were brought under the act and we had a definite, formulated plan under which we could bring all these areas of our economy before the scrutiny of the government.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, again I can only express regret that apparently the hon. member was not here last evening when I answered a question on all fours with that and said that I can state, without reservation, that it is our view that information with regard to the operation of all companies in the classes named in the schedule is now available, and is as readily available to the government by virtue of the present requirements for reporting that apply to those companies as will be the information from companies covered under the provisions of this bill. Information in as much detail and in a fashion as accessible to the government is already available.

Furthermore, in the case of the companies covered by the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the Loan Companies Act, the Foreign Insurance Companies Act and the Trust Companies Act, the Minister of Finance is already bound to make an annual report to parliament containing the information already passed on to him by the officers to whom those companies report. So not only do we have complete information as to their operations and structure available already to members of the public service, and thus to the government, but we already have those members of the public service reporting to the Minister of Finance the factual details derived from those reports, in summary form, and the Minister of Finance in return placing those reports before parliament.

Furthermore, take for instance insurance companies. I assure the hon. member that the superintendent of insurance can obtain from those companies at any time just whatever information he likes to ask of them. As I say, those companies make this information available. It is available, and we just did not see any reason for duplicating the requirement of reporting.

Mr. Peters: Nobody is arguing that these things are not available; we know this.

Mr. Fulton: That is precisely what the hon. member said earlier.

Mr. Peters: We also know that this act is as empty as the pages at the end of its printed section. It just does not mean anything.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, how can my hon. friend say, "It just does not mean anything" when 25,000 companies will be required to report under it who do not report this information to us at all now. Let me give examples. The General Motors Company of Canada does not report at all now; they will have to report under this act. Then there is General Electric, Westinghouse, just to name a few who now give only a fraction of what we are asking for here. I do not want to go into too much detail, but these are big companies with respect to whom we now have a dearth of information and which will be required to report under this bill. Does my hon. friend say that accomplishes nothing? That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Peters: The Gordon commission sat and examined Canadian companies, and in reading their report I found that nowhere were they unable to get the information necessary for making an economic survey of the Canadian scene. If we are going to do it in the one paper, in the one book or in the one publication, knowing full well that the Department of the Secretary of State companies branch has not functioned for many years, we are in agreement that if we are going to do this we must put it all together and we will have this information. Then if some newspaperman in Toronto wants to pick up the publication and find out who owns Canada, all he has to do is pick it up and he can find it all in the one book. I cannot see any reason why we should not make companies not now reporting come under this bill. I do not mean that we would have to have all the details of all the shareholders, and so on, of these companies, but at least we should have the full details under section A which will allow for the publication of this information.

The minister says that 25,000 companies will have to report, but perhaps 25,000 companies will not have to report. No matter what decision is made on this information, the information will be incomplete. If we are really going to find out who owns Canada, if this is our purpose, I think we can legitimately ask all companies to report. We know that you can look up an insurance company if you wish and find out many of these particulars. We know this, and we know it is a difficult process. We know that we have a great deal of difficulty in obtaining this information and putting it into relationship with other insurance companies, but we do this every time we are interested in an insurance company being incorporated in Canada. Members of parliament do this. But I am sure that the average person across Canada will get very little information out of these figures that are presented.

We are not asking—at least, I personally am not asking—that the section that cannot be disclosed to the general public be included, but at least this argument applies to the section that will give what the minister considers to be the pertinent information as to the control of Canadian companies by Canadians or the control by foreign interests, and who they are. This information could easily be gathered in one particular place, which would obviously be the new department which is being created. It could be given in the publication that would come from that department.

The minister says that the government wants this new information. The story around the country is that this is to find out about these terrific and terrible organizations, the labour unions, in Canada. I belong to several of those large organizations, and I am sure that the minister and some of his colleagues have asked for their financial statements and they have been provided without any question at all. This information is published in the daily newspapers; you can get it easily. You do not have to pass a bill to obtain it, because it is already available to everyone who wants to look it up. I think the only justification for this bill is to get this information all in one place so that it will have a relationship to other organizations with which these companies are connected. All this information would then appear in one publication.

Supposing we left out 10,000 companies; I do not think the results obtained from the other 25,000 companies would be of much value except as curiosity value, because you still would not be able to find out where the Canadian economy is going if there were a large percentage or a percentage over in left field over which you had no control at all and in regard to which you did not have this information available and had to look for it somewhere else.

The most useful way of obtaining this information would be if it were provided in the publication for which the minister is now being asked. I believe that this bill would serve no useful purpose if whoever was looking at this information had to say, "But 10 per cent of the Canadian economy is in government controlled corporations. It is in companies already incorporated under other statutes which have to say that they are Canadian controlled, and these other companies must report annually to parliament and are therefore not to be taken into consideration."

I agree with my hon. friend that this is not likely to involve a great deal of money. It is information that the auditor will have to concern himself with anyway, if he is reporting on these other agencies; so I think the minister is not being realistic when he says we shall be able to get this information from other sources, and that there is no legitimate reason for having it in this form. If there is not, I do not think there is any reason for having the other 75 per cent.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member overlooks the fact that the dominion statistician will have available all the information with respect to the companies in the schedule to which I have referred, and it will not be beyond his power to include that information in the report he makes. It will be a comprehensive report covering all the companies in Canada.

Mr. Howard: It is amazing what a good night's sleep will do. The minister says it will now be available and last night he said he was not sure.

Mr. Fulton: That is not correct. I said the same thing last night.

Mr. Howard: Well, the general public can read Hansard as we can here.

Mr. Fulton: Better, apparently.

Mr. Howard: The minister's statements are there. In any event I should like to raise another question and say that it seems to me incongruous that here we are in the Canadian House of Commons considering, at the insistence of the government, a bill which is supposed to promote some degree of Canadianism in one way or another, a bill giving some effect to our feelings as Canadians and designed, eventually, to bring some of these corporations under Canadian control; yet in all of this we find that the minister in drafting the law is using an American phrase throughout, because he knows as well as I do that the word "corporation" is a Yankee phrase for a business structure—a structure which in Canada is known almost exclusively as a company. For example, in the Companies Act the word "company" is used throughout. That is the word used in Canada to designate these organizations, yet the minister resorts to the American phrase and uses the word "corporation". If the hon. gentleman is influenced to that degree by American terminology we are bound to wonder whether he means what he says when he talks about the objects and likely effects of this bill.

Mr. Fulton: By way of comment on what has been said, I might point out that in the Interpretation Act "person" has been defined to include a corporation since 1867. The word "corporation" is well known in British and Canadian legal terminology, the hon. member's view notwithstanding. It also appears in the Companies Act and it appears as well in the titles of a great many Canadian public corporations. It occurs in the Financial Administration Act and so on.

Mr. Howard: That only indicates the degree of American influence which has infiltrated the government in drafting legislation.

Mr. Fulton: Does the hon. member suggest there was American influence in 1867?

Mr. Howard: If the minister wants to repatriate anything, why does he not repatriate the language, first of all? Look at the classifications set out here in the bill. The minister knows what the Companies Act says and to what it applies. It is true these other things exist as well, but that only shows the American influence.

Mr. Benidickson: I regret that I have not been present during this debate for the last half an hour and I do not want to duplicate this discussion in any way. There are people who will call me to order if the points I raise have already been discussed. I had other urgent business to attend to.

Since the discussion last night in which I was involved, I have found that the Railway Act contains a section in addition to that to which I referred last night—section 391, I think. But in connection with section 391 there is a suggestion, in fact there is a directive, that information provided by a company—a railway company, a telephone company, or an express company incorporated under the Railway Act—must give certain information to the board of transport commissioners. But that information is not available to the public in a way such as is contemplated—

Mr. Fulton: Nor is schedule B information here available to the public.

Mr. Benidickson: Not schedule B of this act. To sum up, I understand that financial information is not to be available to a representative of the public on payment of one dollar going to a certain minister's office. That is true, I agree, as far as the public reports are concerned. But as to the type of company referred to in the schedule which we discussed last night, items 1 to 6, about which there are published reports, it seems to me incongruous to find that all these companies do provide public information with respect to profit and loss, the very thing which has to remain secret with respect to other corporations under this bill. But these same companies do not, as I understand it, provide the public with the same accessibility on payment of one dollar as this bill makes necessary for all other corporations across Canada.

I think, as I said last night, that this is a sham—that this is a half baked measure and one which has not been properly presented by the minister. As far as banks are concerned, since our debate last night I have found that under the Bank Act, section 113, there is an obligation for the banks of our country within 30 days of the annual general meeting to transmit to the minister a return showing the name and address—I emphasize the word "address"—of each director. I referred to this yesterday in connection particularly with companies incorporated under the Railway Act. Now what does "address" mean? It means anything. I said yesterday it could involve a box number. If a wealthy man could employ a secretary in Montreal, or even have one of those recording machines to say that his address was box so and so, Montreal, he might be able to give Montreal as an address though his nationality might be other than Canadian.

I admitted yesterday that I had not looked at the Railway Act as carefully as I should have, but no member can look at all these statutes. I felt the minister last night was not as familiar with some of these statutes as he should have been. I did not refer last night to section 391 of the Railway Act. Neither did the minister. But if he looks at subsection 3 of that section he will find it might be possible for the board of transport commissioners to obtain information additional to that described, but under certain conditions. Why should our major industries such as the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Bell Telephone Company and others have an easier way of satisfying the desire on the part of the government to obtain information about foreign shareholding content than is provided in this bill?

I did not refer very much to insurance companies, and trust and loan companies last evening, but with respect to such companies I find there is executive discretion here. I observe that the minister has wide powers to obtain from such companies information on a prescribed form which he is empowered to change from year to year. All of these people might be put in the position of providing carbon copies of the type of information that other small companies across Canada are asked for under this bill, but that has not been the practice.

The chief point I wish to present to the minister is that there is discrimination here. The big companies such as insurance and trust and loan companies, railway companies, telephone companies and others that have good, efficient and, I assume, well paid accounting staffs, could provide this information; but the minister is placing an obligation upon all the other companies described in this bill for the provision of information which, as I said yesterday and as the hon. member for Skeena also said, does not relate oranges to grapefruit under any statistical form.

If I were to say this bill is insincere I would be guilty of using an unparliamentary phrase, but allow me to say that it represents something which I do not think will be proceeded with to any extent following the next election. As I said yesterday, this is window dressing. I do not see that the measure is of much advantage to the country, especially when there is no harmony in the correlation of statistical information.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I can only say, and again I think it should be on the record in view of the extraordinary statements my hon. friend has made, that what the hon. gentleman is now saying is that a bill providing for the first time in the history of this country that the federal government obtain information as to how large corporations carry on their activities is a bill that does not accomplish anything. If my hon. friends in the Liberal party are prepared to allow substantial corporations such as General Motors to continue to operate substantially in entire secrecy, not only so far as the knowledge of the Canadian people is concerned but also so far as the knowledge of the Canadian government is concerned, then I leave the hon. members of the Liberal party to their abysmal ignorance, and so will the people of Canada.

This government is intent upon obtaining information concerning the economy of Canada and concerning how companies operate in Canada, whether Canadian owned or foreign owned. All we have said and all we have provided by the schedule is that where there is already a heavy burden of reporting laid upon those companies or classes of companies and where that burden of reporting has the effect that the information is available or can be made available to the government, we do not intend to duplicate that burden of reporting.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Benidickson: Well, Mr. Chairman, the answer is obvious. The minister has gone out of his way to refer to another mammoth corporation, General Motors—

Mr. Fulton: Because you said the big companies will not have to report under this bill, and many of them will, many of them.

Mr. Benidickson: If the minister wishes to obtain information about General Motors, I am satisfied that information is already available.

Mr. Fulton: Where? May I ask my hon. friend where? Where does General Motors of Canada report in Canada?

Mr. Benidickson: To the income tax branch.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend as the former parliamentary secretary to the minister of finance is well aware of the secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act. He knows that the Minister of National Revenue is not at liberty to disclose anything with respect to income tax information that he receives.

Mr. Benidickson: I agree. I do not see any purpose in advancing the information unless the information to be obtained is more pertinent and useful than is involved in this bill.

Mr. Fulton: When we come to clause 4 perhaps we can discuss that. I shall be glad to.

Mr. Benidickson: The cat is now out of the bag. The minister is interested in General Motors.

Mr. Fulton: That was merely one example.

Mr. Benidickson: All these other companies will be required to give innocent information the reporting of which will cost each corporation between $100 and $500. Yesterday the minister mentioned 25,000 firms. I do not know why this bill should require that procedure unless we are sure that some of the larger Canadian corporations incorporated under federal statutes are equally required to supply information that can be collated and assessed so that an impression may be obtained of foreign shareholding content. I think of telephone companies. I also think of my hon. friend to my left. I will not name him, but I know he is worried about this. Under section 391 of the Railway Act the Bell Telephone Company is required to provide certain information. All its competitors are required to give the public on payment of $1 a lot of information that the Bell Telephone Company is not required to provide. There may be private railway companies in this country other than the C.P.R. affected. I imagine they are exempt from providing information as to the nationality of the owners of stock in those companies.

According to the election campaign of 1957, nationality is a big factor. There is nothing in items Nos. 1 to 6 of the schedules which requires disclosure of nationality. The items I referred to last night and particularly item No. 16 do not require disclosure of nationality. Why does the minister tell us there is a basic similiarity in the information to be provided if the biggest corporations across Canada are exempt from providing duplicate information of an identical nature?

Mr. Howard: A moment ago the minister said again—he has said this a number of times; he said it in reply to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River—that it was the desire of the government, as I gathered his words, to get information about the operation of the Canadian economy; that this was most necessary for the government in order to be able to deal with the economy; that they want the facts, the true facts, all the facts and the precise facts. This is what I understand is the desire of the government.

All we need to do is to balance that statement against the bill before us which is not designed to get all the facts but only some of the facts and which is not designed to get all of the information but only some of the information, and to balance that statement made by the minister just a moment ago against his attitude and the attitude of his government when the Combines Investigation Act was being considered by this parliament and by the banking and commerce committee. There a number of demands were made to have companies file with the director of investigation and research certain types of agreements they may have one with the other in order that he may understand the situation and in order that the government would have access to information relating to the operation of the economy. At that time when we made the suggestion with regard to agreements relating to price fixing in the export field or agreements relating to the variety of other matters contained in the Combines Investigation Act, or when we asked that this information be filed with the crown or be filed with the government in order that there might be some understanding and some assessment of these collusive price fixing arrangements, the minister then said, "No, we do not wish to know anything about that matter; we are not concerned with the detrimental effects that price fixing arrangements have upon the economy—"

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If my hon. friend continues with his misrepresentation of what I said about the Combines Investigation Act, I shall be obliged to reply. However, I suggest to you that the discussion is out of order. If my hon. friend is allowed to continue, I shall be obliged to reply, as he is completely misstating not only what I said but the effect of the whole discussion.

Mr. Howard: The effect of the whole discussion is quite clear in the statute itself, Mr. Chairman. I mentioned the matter only in passing because of the statement now made by the minister that he wishes to get that information. I say that all we have to do is to balance this statement against the bill and against what he said a couple of years ago on the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. If we do so, we shall see that they do not balance. What the minister and the government do is oftentimes quite different—and it certainly is different in this case—from what they say.

The minister made a speech to the Canadian petroleum industry on February 22, in Regina. In that speech he made reference to this particular bill. In one of his comments there—and if I may do so I will read it—he said this:

> The intent of this bill is to make known the precise degree of foreign control over Canadian corporations and unions.

He has used this word "precise" on a number of occasions. Sometimes he says "somewhat precise"; sometimes he says "almost precise" or "similar". To me there is some distinction between "precise", "almost precise" and "similar". From that I take it that he was not misleading the Canadian petroleum association meeting in Regina but that he was telling them precisely what he wanted to know, namely the precise degree of foreign control over Canadian corporations and unions. However, this is not what the bill seeks to do. The bill seeks to get some information from some companies or corporations, as they are called in the bill. It seeks to get some information by way of this bill. It seeks to get other information from other types of corporations by way of other acts which are already in existence. It is certainly not the same information. The minister says that he can relate the information statistically and come up with some information. However, when we analyse the information carefully, I think we will find that it is not designed to get an understanding of the precise degree of foreign control or to get full information as to the operation of the whole Canadian economy, as there are other matters that are certainly known. The minister also placed these statistics on record. It is true that they were given in a general way. The hon. member for Leeds made reference to them, others have made reference to them and I made reference to them. I refer to the dominion bureau of statistics figures with regard to the degree of foreign control over sections of our economy.

The dominion bureau of statistics now determines, as it has been doing for some years, what is the degree of foreign control that exists over Canadian industry in the manufacturing field. That information was placed on the record. As of 1959, it was 57 per cent and it has been increasing. They have information about the petroleum and natural gas industry. In Regina on February 22 the minister told the Canadian petroleum association that the figure was approximately 75 per cent. The dominion bureau of statistics says as far as they are concerned it is 75 per cent. Information about the mining industry has been placed on the record and an analysis by the dominion bureau of statistics of the degree of the control over the Canadian industry. There is information not only about the degree of foreign control but about the degree of foreign ownership. This gives a different figure percentagewise because it adds up different bits of information. This is information which the dominion bureau of statistics has. It is available. It is a public document. How does the dominion bureau of statistics get this information? How does d.b.s. now know this and how is it able to say and to report publicly that in 1959, with respect to the mining, petroleum and natural gas manufacturing industry, the degree of foreign control over that industry was 63 per cent. How do d.b.s. know this? How do they know that this control increased in the last two years from 61 per cent? How do they know it has increased in the last five years by some 8 per cent? How do the dominion bureau of statistics get this information? Do they guess it? Do they search through information which is filed with them? Do they look through the annual reports of various companies and then say, "This is what we discover about the degree of ownership and about the degree of control"?

I think the minister, even though he is not the Minister of Trade and Commerce, owes us an explanation as to how the dominion bureau of statistics obtain the information which allows them to make the statement that there is over certain sections of our economy at the moment this degree of control which the minister blessed by making reference to it himself in the house. I think this is some information which the committee needs to have before we can proceed to determine whether or not it is really worth while to pass the bill at present before us. If this information is knowledgeable—as apparently it is, to d.b.s.—how accurate it is, I do not know—surely that consideration may affect our decision with respect to other features of the bill as to just what type of information is required to be filed at the moment. Is this a case in which they take from public corporations any financial statements they issue or is this information which they have already gleaned in one way or another by way of statistics which are required to be filed with them?

I do not wish to be overly insistent about this matter. However, I think it is a rather important point. Apparently d.b.s. now get some statistical information. Otherwise they would not be able to come up with the statement that 63 per cent of the industry in Canada is under foreign control at the moment. We should like to know how d.b.s. get this information, what statistics are filed with them, from what sorts of corporations, or whether this is an accurate or inaccurate figure. I take it that corporations such as General Motors, which is a private company, are left outside the analysis that the bureau of statistics makes of manufacturing industries. The minister also referred to Canadian General Electric and two or three other corporations which are very large private companies that do not file information now. If these companies are outside of the area surveyed by the bureau of statistics in coming to the conclusion that the manufacturing industry of Canada is 57 per cent foreign owned, I think we are entitled to come to the conclusion that this figure is too low and should be increased in order to be more correct.

This is information which I for one would like to have from the minister so that we can assess, first, the value which we should place upon the figures already published by d.b.s. and, second, the value which we should place upon each of the provisions in section 4 asking for specific items of information. We should atempt to determine whether we really require the information requested in the bill or whether it is already being supplied in some other form. If the minister can assist the committee in this way it may help us to proceed with the consideration of the bill more speedily.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Howard: Could we have an answer from the minister?

Mr. Benidickson: —there are two or three questions I should like to address to the minister. Has he given consideration to the increase in the civil service that will be required as a result of the enactment of this legislation? Second, has he any estimate from the Department of Public Works as to what space will be required to file the reports of 25,000 companies reporting every year? How many years will these reports be kept ?

Although I am greatly alarmed by this empire building, more importantly I should like to make reference to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and the obligation under that act to file information with respect to shareholdings. It is my information that prior to world war II the government was provided every five years or so with a public document recording the shareholdings of all owners of shares in the various companies that come under this act. I understand that we have not had such a publication since the war. I think this was due to a decision of the former government made on the basis of economy.

If we are concerned about retaining Canadian ownership of this important segment of our economy, then a question arises with respect to the supplying of information as to each and every shareholder of companies of this kind, including the insurance companies and the banks. The minister accused me yesterday of not even reading the last report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which I had in my files. I should like to ask the minister now whether he has given consideration to what might happen to the economy of Canada, and with respect to increased foreign ownership, if the information involved in the bill is to be made public on payment of $1? Has the minister given consideration to what might happen with respect to the raiding of some of these companies by foreign capital?

It is true that in the schedule to the bill he has exempted certain types of corporations in Canada which I think we are all proud to know are basically owned by Canadians. I have been asking why they have been exempted from the requirement of providing information as to shareholders such as is required in the main portion of the bill. Would the minister say that, so far as the corporations referred to in items 1 to 6 of the schedule are concerned, the same information should be available to the public? Surely the minister has looked at the stock market and the financial operations of the last two or three years in an objective way, as I have, and after reading the publications that report these matters is acquainted with what I call raiders.

One knows that a raider starts by looking at a record of shareholders. Has the minister started something here the results of which will be the very reverse of what he may have been persuaded by the Prime Minister was something that would fulfil his 1957 pledge to reduce foreign ownership? I say to the minister that as a result of the publication of shareholdings beyond that required under provincial law, beyond that required by our stock exchanges and beyond that supplied confidentially to the provincial and federal governments there is a great possibility that he will encourage raiding from that larger financial force to the south of us, the United States, through take-overs that will be made possible because of the information that will be forthcoming under this legislation.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, before we go too far astray I wonder whether I might point out that, while I am anxious to co-operate with the committee and to give as much information as is relevant, the kind of speech we have heard in the last three quarters of an hour has really been the kind of speech that would be made on second or third reading when the principle of the bill is under discussion. Indeed, one hon. member used the phrase "before deciding whether or not to pass the bill I want to know" this, that or the other thing. May I point out that we are not deciding whether to pass the bill. We are dealing with the clauses of the bill because the bill was given second reading the day before yesterday. We have passed clause 1 where general discussion is by custom permitted and there was a wide ranging general discussion at that time. We are now on clause 3.

I have forborne raising this point before because I want to co-operate with the committee, but when we have the kind of speech made just now by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River then I say we are definitely engaging in a second reading type of discussion. I do not want to appear omniscient when I say this but I can assure the committee that all the points that have been raised so far were considered and that while they are all very difficult we came to the conclusion that to accomplish the object we had in mind this was the best way of doing it.

Now, with regard to the question of statistics that are compiled by the dominion bureau and published, I can refer the committee to the recent report on the Canadian balance of international payments in 1960 and the international investment position, page 62, where the bureau itself has fully set out a summary of the methods it follows in compiling these statistics and makes an assessment of their accuracy and reliability.

In so far as the question of whether or not this may open the door to raiding is concerned, I can say I certainly think it will not. It will have the opposite effect and will enable Canadians, by their increased knowledge of the affairs of these companies and the increased information available about them, more effectively to get into a position where they can participate in the direction of these companies and the benefits from them. I would remind the committee in that connection that it was this government which early in our period of responsibility, when the threat of a take-over of some quite substantial Canadian life insurance companies did develop, acted to fill the gap that had been there for so long. This provision allowed insurance companies to take steps towards mutualization which would make it impossible for these companies to be taken over.

Mr. Benidickson: Surely, the minister will agree it did not make this impossible—

Mr. Fulton: If these authorized steps were taken, it would make it impossible.

Mr. Benidickson: It made it possible to avoid that result but I am saying, by virtue of this bill, you are reversing yourself. You are making raiding more possible than it ever has been before in connection with our important insurance companies, our important trust and loan companies.

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think if my hon. friend wanted to make this point he should have made it on second reading before he voted for the bill.

Mr. Benidickson: I want to improve the bill by amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Howard: I do not want to go too far along the course the minister embarked upon when he objected to the trend of the discussion because last evening the minister participated in this debate along with other members. He answered, as best he could, the questions and objections which were raised as to whether or not certain corporations should be in or out of the schedule. I feel the minister was not serious a moment ago when he said he was rising to object to the course the discussion was taking because, as I said, he participated in the action which guided the discussion into this course.

The minister has said that all the points which have been raised have been carefully considered by the government in the preparation of this bill and that the government has come to the conclusion this is the best way to proceed. Well, I am amazed that the government has been able to come to a conclusion about something. However, under the parliamentary system which we have the government, in presenting its conclusions to parliament, has to explain, justify and satisfy the curiosity of members of parliament as well as of the general public as to whether or not the conclusions at which the government has arrived are correct in all the circumstances. This, the minister has not done. The minister has said that they studied carefully all these things and came to the conclusion that this was the best course to follow. The implication is, if you do not like it, lump it; we have a couple of hundred members who will support us no matter what we do, just as they did yesterday in blindly opposing the introduction of a bill without knowing what it was all about.

This is not the correct or decent way for a government to approach parliament. I only want to say that if the minister persists on this line of argument that the government studied everything, came to the conclusion that this was the best way to do it, without attempting to justify that conclusion or satisfy inquiries of members who have at least enough interest to ask questoins about it, then we will not get very far. The minister has an obligation to satisfy the many objections which are being raised by the small business people who say, "Heavenly day, we spend half of our time now filling out forms for the government, filing statistics for the dominion bureau of statistics and the various other sections of government concerning the size of our business, income, and so on."

Mr. Fulton: Which way do you want it, more forms or fewer forms, because you are now arguing on both sides of this question.

Mr. Howard: I should like fewer ministers of justice.

Mr. Fulton: I know you would, because then you would be able to get away with more than you are getting away with now.

Mr. Howard: Well, we will not get into the Columbia river discussion again. I am really telling the minister that he has an obligation to satisfy the complaints of the people in the business community who now say they are afraid that the government is enlarging upon the things that have to be filed. I think the government is now, by this bill, introducing another set of statistics to be filed. My approach to the problem yesterday was, if you are going to ask for this information, then let us put it all in one place. Let us not exempt the banks under the Bank Act from filing this information; let us not exempt trust and loan companies, radio corporations and so on under the Railway Act or the Aeronautics Act. Let us include them all.

In so far as the general question of too many forms to fill out is concerned, I raised that only to show that the minister has an obligation to satisfy these complaints and he has not done it. I wonder if I might call it five o'clock.

Mr. Fulton: I just point out that, as I said earlier, I am prepared to co-operate with the committee and endeavour to satisfy the committee. This is the second day the measure has been considered in committee and we are now on clause 3. I think if members will look at Hansard, they will find that I appear quite as frequently answering questions as hon. members opposite appear asking them. If they will not accept the explanations that I give, then of course that is not a matter over which I have any control. I do not think the record should be left at this point, however, without reminding the committee that I have endeavoured frequently to explain and satisfy the committee about the policy behind the bill and the conclusions to which we came. I cannot compel hon. members to accept those explanations, that is just a matter of judgment.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private bills, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, and it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

WATER RESOURCES

REQUEST FOR CREATION OF WATER POLLUTION CONTROL DIVISION

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of the creation of a water pollution control division, composed of representatives of the ten provinces, within the framework of the proposed national resources council, with powers and funds required to institute research programs, collect, collate, and analyse water control data, and to co-ordinate the water pollution control objectives for the provinces; in addition, to further the study of water pollution control problems of a national character.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in introducing this motion today I am making an appeal which has nothing to do with political beliefs or partisan convictions. The members of this party are alarmed at the sight of our industries and people polluting our waters, as it were, with their own hands from day to day. All over many parts of Canada the water table is falling, yet thousands of factories and hundreds of municipal sewer systems are discharging their wastes into our rivers and lakes with only a small fraction of our industries or municipalities giving so-called adequate treatment to this increasing flow of filth.

We all know that water is the lifeblood of any country and, while in the last 20 years we have more than tripled our former consumption, we are polluting our water and destroying the watersheds from whence it comes. We are destroying something without which we cannot survive and for which there is no substitute.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the soul of man, shaken and bruised by the ceaseless din of modern cities, which some people worship—and I am one who does not—and the relentless international and national sabre rattling, in this atmosphere more than ever, I believe, needs treeways rather than freeways, and pure waterways rather than sewerways.

However, regardless of these needs we continue to disfigure the natural landscape, erode our soils, destroy our forests and pollute our waters, in some cases almost with the zeal of a religious mission. It is because of the gruesome proof of the shortcomings of our legislation both federal and provincial, and the determination of this party to do all it can within its sphere of influence in the House of Commons and in the country to remedy this field, that I bring this resolution before the house this afternoon.

Strangely enough, Mr. Speaker, the problem of pollution has been recognized officially by both federal and provincial governments —I am speaking now of the federal parliament and the provincial government of British Columbia—since 1870, and it has been recognized that some form of legislation is required. We can even read debates of that date which clearly indicate that people were concerned about this matter in 1870. If they were concerned at that time, or at least some people were, how much more concerned should we be today? Yet since that time, except for some federal legislation of a bits and bobs nature leaving the responsibility with various departments of the federal government, and some provincial legislation of the same nature leaving the responsibility with numerous departments, in most provinces there has been little effective action, because all that has been done has been on a piecemeal basis. So that while the problem has been recognized for all these years and there has been legislation in part to meet it, we find that even a river such as the Ottawa is termed by most of the people of this city as a flowing sewer. We have heard the Prime Minister deal with the pollution of the Saskatchewan river, and I know something about the increasing pollution of the great Fraser river in British Columbia and something about the very limited but none the less real pollution occurring in the Kootenay and Columbia rivers.

I introduced this resolution, Mr. Speaker, because I believe the problem is of such a nature that only co-operation among major governments can cope with it. Many local studies and efforts have been made. I saw a reference in today's Citizen, an editorial dealing with the report of the conservation board in Ontario with respect to the pollution of Ontario waters. I shall have to read this report; I shall send for a copy as soon as I can. Efforts have been made by various provincial governments and certain local authorities in cities and municipalities, and by some industries, to give them credit; also by various volunteer groups such as conservation groups and organizations of that type. But still the problem is increasing from day to day and pollution is greater in this country with every 24 hours that pass.

What we require, in the opinion of this party, is first of all a knowledge of the situation on a national basis. Then we need an understanding of the problem, an understanding on the part of our people. Strangely enough this is a problem which is not very glamourous. It is similar to the problem of the conservation of timber or the conservation of land; it does not strike the imagination of many people and very often it does not strike the imagination of the press. I noticed that in the press today there is considerable comment on the possibility of a divorce of two prominent movie people. This matter has been given far too much space in the newspapers, and they would be far better off if they reported fully my speech this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

There has to be understanding on the part of the people and there has to be co-operation among federal and provincial governments, the local authorities and the people. This type of program is just the same as a forestry or a land conservation program; governments alone cannot give effect to it; there must be the understanding and co-operation of a large percentage of the population in the area in which the program is being implemented.

Throughout the years I have subscribed to the minutes of the British Columbia natural resources conference which is held annually in Victoria, Vancouver or somewhere else in British Columbia, to which go representatives of industry, labour, universities and government and discuss the various questions related to natural resources. In this connection I wish to quote very briefly from the sixth British Columbia natural resources conference which deals quite extensively with the question of water pollution. I wish to read one paragraph which has to do with the effectiveness of the present legislation. This is what the writer has to say:

> Considering the objectives for which they have been enacted, the various items of legislation have had considerable effect on the prevention and control of certain types of pollution. However, since the control has been carried out by separate government agencies, each with its own interest to consider, sometimes co-operating with other agencies and sometimes not,—

That is the situation today; there is duplication, overlapping.

> —the existing legislation probably has not been as effective in controlling pollution in all its aspects as it might have been.

That paragraph was written by a civil servant in British Columbia, and of course he had to place the situation before the conference in modest terms; but a lot more can be read into his words than appears on the surface. However, he goes on to deal with the various departments which have to deal with this matter. As far as British Columbia is concerned, we have these government agencies responsible for dealing with water pollution: local boards of health, the health branch of the department of health and welfare, the water rights branch of the department of lands and forests, the park service of the department of lands and forests, the fisheries department, the game commission, the attorney general's department; and we have the health act of British Columbia, the sanitary regulations of British Columbia, section 58 of the municipal act, the watershed regulations, the water act and the park regulations. They all deal with the various aspects of the pollution of waters.

As far as the federal government is concerned, we have the Department of Fisheries which administers the Fisheries Act and which deals with the pollution of waters, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources which deals with the Migratory Birds Convention Act, the national harbours board which deals with harbours by-laws, the Department of Transport dealing with the Navigable Waters Protection Act and the Canada Shipping Act, the Department of Public Works, and the local port authorities of the Department of Transport dealing with ports under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. So we have quite a body of legislation in the federal and provincial fields.

There is a good deal of legislation in both the federal and the provincial fields but in neither of these fields has there been a great deal of co-operation, and there has not been the co-ordinated approach to this problem which is necessary if we are to meet it.

This subject was the subject of a number of papers at the resources for tomorrow conference. The minister was good enough to send me a report of this conference and I found it very interesting reading when I had any spare time, though you will understand, Mr. Speaker, that I have very little time in present circumstances for meditation or for reading other than resolutions and legislation and the letters that I get from people. I get a very large fan mail. However, I took an interest in reading this report and I have read the papers on water pollution in Canada. I wish simply to quote from the concluding paragraph because it supports my contention. As a matter of fact, it prompted me to introduce this motion this afternoon in the form in which I did introduce it. On page 359 of the report, I read this—it comes at the conclusion of a lengthy paper on water pollution in Canada:

> Possibly the greatest present need is a better knowledge of pollution problems on the part of the taxpayer. So many demands are being made for increased expenditures in urban communities that sewage treatment gets little support in many areas.
> In summary, pollution problems of major significance are already evident in Canada and will become more common and more severe as industrial and urban development increases. Hence, a more complete knowledge of present conditions coupled with prompt and effective remedial action, is essential for future national development and expansion.

I am confident that this effective remedial action cannot take place unless there is a co-ordinated approach to research and study followed by co-operation between governments and government agencies to give it effect. The first essential is knowledge based on research—an over-all knowledge of the situation as it exists in Canada. We have a great body of knowledge which is already available, or would be available if it were co-ordinated and presented to a central committee such as I suggest composed of persons representing the federal and provincial governments. Then we must have co-operation between governments and co-operation between the government agencies concerned. Following that we need a redrafting of legislation. It will mean a reallocation of responsibility for dealing with certain areas of this problem and also the education of the public to support the raising of the funds which will be necessary to meet the situation. It will mean taxes in municipal areas. It will mean, possibly, some particular taxation on a provincial basis and on a national basis. I believe this should be in the nature of taxation for a specific purpose, especially in the provinces; people in the provinces should know that there is a cent, or whatever it is, of their sales tax going to meet the pollution problems in their region. I think there would then be a better understanding of the problem. Anyway, there is room for education in this respect.

I wish to give other hon. members an opportunity to speak on this subject, but before ending my remarks let me say it cannot be overemphasized that damage to the natural order is frequently final—and it has been final in a good many instances in Canada. An exterminated species cannot be revived; a stand of virgin timber can never be replaced in its virgin form, and polluted waters can never be returned to their original purity. Even though attempts have been made to do so with the application of scientific principles and the expenditure of a good deal of money, it has not been possible to return rivers or streams to their original purity.

If we wish the mightiest river, the smallest freshet, to be other than a connecting link in a national disposal system of sewage and industrial waste, we must commence the battle for restoration immediately.

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North): I should like to congratulate the leader of the New Democratic party in this house for having brought this resolution before us, and particularly for the colourful way in which he has presented his arguments this afternoon. My own remarks will be confined to the situation which exists in my own province of Manitoba.

I am sure all hon. members are aware of the fact that a large number of rivers empty into lake Manitoba and lake Winnipeg. I believe they are also aware of the fact that the Assiniboine and Red rivers join right in the heart of Winnipeg. The Red river then flows northward and bisects my constituency. The residents of Winnipeg and of the province of Manitoba generally are keenly aware of the problem of water pollution. It is ironic that last year, because of the drought, there was very little water flowing through the river and the stench from the sewage which just sat there was something which it was difficult for the citizens of that metropolis to tolerate. This year there is a danger of the river flooding, so it seems we go from one extreme to the other; one year we have too little water in the river, and in another there is a danger of flooding. This, of course, is because of the fact that the prairie in that area is very flat and the river has at no time to make much of a decline before reaching its mouth in lake Winnipeg.

Another problem which contributes to water pollution is the fact that a great many of the cities through which these rivers flow have inadequate sewage disposal facilities. Indeed, in the city of Winnipeg itself my understanding is that the sewage disposal facilities are completely inadequate and out-dated and that the method of treatment of the sewage is not what it should be today. It is difficult to realize why a great many of these cities do not avail themselves of the opportunity of borrowing money for the acquisition of efficient sewage disposal units under the program which is in effect through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I only hope as far as my own area is concerned that the metropolitan corporation of the city of Winnipeg will study this proposal and take advantage of the money which can be obtained through that corporation in order to provide an adequate sewage disposal system for an area which is growing every day of the week.

Water pollution by sewage does not, of course, confine its effects to human beings as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Nevertheless, those who own property on the river banks north of the city of Winnipeg suffer from the results of this pollution. Those who are interested in athletics, in rowing or in swimming suffer from the effects of water pollution and, of course, in the province of Manitoba the fishing is damaged as a result of the pollution of our major lakes. The hon. member believes that a council such as he proposes could do a great deal to remedy this situation. I think that one of its major purposes would be to educate the people in these metropolitan areas, or in any area where water is being polluted as a result of inadequate sewage disposal arrangements or careless industrial plants.

A program of education would show the people what pollution is doing to our natural resources and would demonstrate what could be accomplished in the method of controlling this hazard. A first step in that educational program would be to educate the public to an acceptance of the fact that only through taxation of some form, only through money provided by the people, will this problem be controlled. It will be controlled only through the construction of adequate sewage facilities and the provision of adequate policing. Only by these methods and in this manner can the problem be controlled and that, Mr. Speaker, takes money, of course.

The downstream benefits that would accrue from the control of water pollution in Manitoba would be better fishing, better facilities for those who wish to engage in rowing, sailing and boating of all forms and, of course, a better environment in which ducks could breed on the waters of lake Manitoba and lake Winnipeg which are famous duck shooting areas.

I strongly recommend to hon. members of the house that this resolution be given most serious consideration, because, as we all know, this is a growing problem about which very little is being done by municipal, provincial or federal authorities.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention a while ago to the remarks made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) in support of his resolution concerning water pollution. They were brief but complete. I am not going to repeat to the house what he has just said, but I wish to support the resolution he has introduced, because I am aware of the problem that water pollution represents throughout Canada.

The problem is becoming more and more serious throughout the country, and we must deal with it. It has even become a crucial problem in the province of Quebec. In fact, in that province, out of a population of 4,628,378 people, according to the statistics for 1960, 2,380,000 people benefit from a sewer system, but only 97,500 of them benefit from a sewer system whose waste is treated so that it will not pollute the waters in which it is emptied.

The city of Montreal alone and its suburbs, where lives more than one third of the population of the province of Quebec, are surrounded by a magnificent system of rivers, including the St. Lawrence river, the lake St. Louis basin, the beautiful Back river and the Thousand Islands river. All these could be used for the enjoyment of the people of Montreal and the surrounding area. But because all the surrounding municipalities as well as the city of Montreal itself, empty their sewage in the various rivers I have just named, not to mention the different plants in and around Montreal which throw their waste into them, the people of Montreal and the surrounding area do not take advantage of these magnificent rivers as they should.

I notice that the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages), in whose constituency these rivers run is in his seat at the moment. I know that he fully appreciates the fact that water pollution is a real problem in the metropolitan area, and more particularly in his constituency. If we did not have that problem, as I just said, the people of Montreal and of the surrounding area could take advantage of those wonderful rivers, and engage in sports such as fishing and swimming. But because of water pollution, there is a danger of spreading contagious viruses, and that is why the population of the metropolitan area cannot take advantage as they should of the wonderful surrounding rivers and streams.

The late Dr. C. A. Kirkland, former M.L.A. for Jacques Cartier, had dedicated himself to water pollution control in the province of Quebec, and particularly in the Montreal area. Until 1960, because he was in opposition, he could not exert as much influence as he would have liked in the provincial legislature, but since 1960, as a member of the provincial cabinet, he co-operated with the government in setting up a body which is commissioned to fight water pollution and to inquire into effective ways of controlling it. Unfortunately, Dr. Kirkland passed away a year ago, but Mrs. Claire Kirkland-Casgrain who, in December last, was the first lady to be elected to the provincial legislature continues the campaign that her father had undertaken to solve the problem of water pollution.

I take pleasure, in the field of jurisdiction which is ours here, to associate myself with her and to support her fight against water pollution not only in the metropolitan area of Montreal but in the whole province of Quebec.

Therefore I support wholeheartedly the motion which was so well presented by the member for Kootenay West.

(Text):

Mr. McGee: Before the hon. member resumes his seat may I put a question to him. Is the hon. member aware that in the province of Quebec loans approved or under consideration for approval under the sewage disposal legislation of the present government total nearly $15 million?

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the figures just mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, the motion submitted by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) is an excellent one as governments at all levels are worried about the serious problem of water pollution which is a menace to public health. Indeed, millions of tons of refuse are thrown into our rivers, lakes and streams.

The federal government, through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has adopted a policy which is most advantageous for all Canadian municipalities which want to take advantage of it. As a matter of fact, C.M.H.C. subsidizes the building of sewage treatment plants and, according to the statistics we have, municipalities in the province of Quebec unfortunately are not availing themselves of the provisions of an act which would enable them to remedy the situation to a certain extent.

It is true that the federal government has some responsibilities in this field, but so have the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to speak of industrial refuse and of the oil slicks left by boats using our waterways. Since 1958, the federal government has been much stricter with regard to the enforcement of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, more particularly on the St. Lawrence river. An act of the Canadian parliament has been prohibiting such practice in Canadian waters for a long time, but, since 1958, this government has appointed a patrol ship on the St. Lawrence, which is based at Sorel and constantly watches this waterway in order to prevent ships from disregarding the law during the navigation season.

It is essential that the government continue to maintain an active supervision with regard to ships letting off oil, which causes water pollution, more particularly in the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Speaker, another serious problem, over which the whole world is concerned, is pollution caused by atomic waste. This is what I read recently in a newspaper about that problem:

> Radioactive nucleus move about and act, so to speak, as mobile contamination agents. Certain forms of cancer are already becoming apparent on the cells of plants growing in the Pacific, as a result of atomic water pollution. Knowing that the plankton can concentrate 10,000 times radioactive elements from atomic waste, and that currents can transport on very long distances this plankton, which is eaten by fishes and other animals sold later on for consumption purposes, the threat caused by the radioactive fallout and atomic waste cannot be under-estimated, even if they are enclosed in lead containers and dropped at great depths in the sea.

In order to substantiate the remarks I just made on the harmful effects of radioactive fallout, I should like to quote the statement made recently by an old scientist who has explored the deep sea and the stratosphere. I refer to Professor Piccard, who passed away recently and to whom special tribute must be paid for his essential experiments and his numerous services to the world of science. This is what he said:

> The water of the globe can be affected by radioactive waste.
> He said that the recent discovery of a living fish at the bottom of the sea, around the Marianas islands, which is 37,800 feet deep, points out to the existence of vertical currents going from the surface of the sea to its deepest parts.

We can therefore draw the conclusion that radioactive matters in the sea can contaminate the water even at the greatest depths. The article goes on to say:

> Mr. Piccard was referring to the record breaking dive by the American lieutenant Walsh and his own son aboard the Trieste.

As a result of experiments, the divers were able to observe through a porthole about a hundred feet from the bottom of the sea, a foot long abyssal fish of which Professor Piccard said this:

> That animal, and everything that lives around it, absorb the oxygen released in the water which is free from carbonic acid.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this waste could be carried to the bottom by sea currents and thus contaminate the ocean from top to bottom. I wonder if there is not at present within the United Nations an agency which could carry out that research work on a world-wide basis.

In fact, I believe there is a United Nations agency which looks after health questions. I wonder if such an agency could not consider the possibility of using the Antarctic as a huge cold storage for the world's radioactive waste.

In my opinion, that would be the best way of getting rid of those materials. Instead of throwing them into the ocean, the frozen regions of the Antarctic could be bombed and if the radioactive waste were buried 70 feet deep, it could be left there for over 30,000 years.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the United Nations should consider what steps should be taken to prevent the contamination of water by those radioactive materials. In my opinion, it is high time that such studies be carried out to protect the whole of humanity.

It is unfortunate that the hon. member has not included in his motion the millions of dollars damage caused every year to agriculture by air pollution. Surveys made in the Los Angeles area in the United States have indicated that air pollution also causes losses to agriculture of $8 million a year.

This pollution which causes injury to crops is due to ozone, that is poor oil combustion, the result being, for example, the black spots appearing on tobacco leaves.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member should not get on to the subject of air pollution and take up the time of the house with something that is irrelevant, as there are other hon. members who would like to speak.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, if I ran afield, it is because I wanted to point out to the house that the hon. member's motion should have included the suggestion to establish a committee to study the damages caused by air pollution.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

I will now resume my seat so that other members might be able to express their views on this important subject.

I wanted to take this opportunity to commend the hon. member on his resolution.

(Text):

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to take one minute in which to express briefly my support of the resolution. This subject has been discussed over and over again in past sessions and I think the arguments both for and against have been very well publicized. I see no need to repeat what has been said on previous occasions or even what has been said here today. I think we are all more conscious than ever of the necessity to safeguard our resources and of the importance of safeguarding our water resources particularly as a health measure, the need of which is becoming more and more acute as we become more industrialized and as we tend to develop larger and larger communities.

As I see it, the operative section of this resolution is the consideration of the advisability of the creation of a water pollution control division. Hon. members have pointed out that we have already recognized the problem of water pollution and that steps have been taken with respect to sewage control, sewage disposal and so on. One must assume that the purpose of setting up this particular division would be to develop a program and to carry it out more efficiently than can be done with the present agencies.

In my province we are not sufficiently industrialized to have any great problem of water pollution in our rivers, although we must take steps to safeguard against it in the future. However, we have a problem of water pollution along our coast. As the hon. member who last spoke pointed out, this is a serious problem for our province. It affects wildlife around our coast, particularly bird life.

It probably has some effect on the fisheries. I realize that the Department of Transport has a certain division that does something in this respect involving the working out of agreements with other countries, but in spite of this we do not seem to be coping with the problem very well. Every year there is more and more evidence of bird life being destroyed by oil dumped outside our territorial waters which drifts in toward the shore, or in some cases by oil that is dumped within our own coastal waters.

Perhaps the establishment of an agency such as the resolution proposes would enable the government to develop another approach to the problem and possibly with more success than we have had in the past. I commend the hon. member for introducing this resolution. I think it deserves the support of all hon. members and I hope that the idea suggested in the resolution will be carried out not only with respect to our inland waters but also from the viewpoint of tackling the problem of the pollution of our coastal waters and even of the waters outside our territorial limits.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful for the opportunity to participate in the debate on the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I should like to place on the record at this point what action has been taken by the government in an effort to come to grips with this problem and to meet its responsibilities in this field. Then I should like to say something later about the activities of some private members of this house who have made such an outstanding contribution in this field in which, as the hon. member for Kootenay West acknowledges, the factor of education of the public plays such an important role in dealing with the problem. These hon. members have made an outstanding contribution in this field and I think they should be entitled to have that contribution acknowledged.

The program of the present government, introduced specifically to find a solution to this problem and to assist municipalities directly in establishing sewage disposal plants, has been one of the most successful programs introduced by the government in the last few years. Inquiries involving preliminary survey, formal applications on hand plus loans actually approved and sewage disposal plants in works make an impressive total indeed. There are no fewer than 354 applications representing municipal requests, and the total dollar value involved in these projects amounts to $120,926,000. Other inquiries have come to the government in recent months where the estimated value is unknown or it is not possible to make a reasonable assessment; so that the figure could be considerably higher than the total dollar value I mentioned.

This represents an effective response to one of the serious problems that confront our country, particularly those sections of the country where industrial development is taking place at the present time. Surely it is an intelligent approach to the problem to attempt to learn from the mistakes which have had such ghastly consequences in more settled areas, and areas where industrial development has been in progress for a number of years.

This program, with its low interest, long term loans to the municipalities, and an additional forgiveness factor to encourage construction of these plants before a certain date, makes a great deal of sense from the point of view of an answer to the pollution problem. In addition it provides a stimulus to the economy and the undertaking of many thousands of jobs which flow from activities of this kind. From my inquiries of and discussions with municipal authorities, I can say that there is no doubt in anybody's mind that if there had not been this impetus and encouragement from the government in this field only a fraction of these projects would be under way at the present time.

I mentioned that there were certain hon. members who had a distinguished history in dealing with this problem of water pollution. I should like to refer particularly to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle (Mr. Pratt) who since his earliest days, first as an alderman and later as mayor of the town of Dorval, made it his business to focus attention on this problem, to encourage public education with regard to the matter and to seek ways and means to find a solution to the problem which exists in his constituency and others in that neighbourhood.

Some hon. members may have seen a national film board short on this subject which was shown on the C.B.C. not too many months ago. I am sure those who did were as impressed as I was when the camera focused on an area littered with debris, garbage and sewage which, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle, pointed out, a very few years ago had been a sandy beach where children frolicked and played in safety and without fear of pollution or ill health. This is a dramatic example of the deterioration that has taken place and the vital necessity for action to be taken. I should like to congratulate the national film board as well for its contribution to the education of the public to the fact that the solution of this problem is terribly expensive and that taxpayers in this country at all levels have to be prepared to face the fact that the ultimate and complete solution of the problem of water pollution is one of the most expensive prospects that faces this country.

I could not mention the hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle without commenting on the significant role that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. McQuillan) played in his participation in the proceedings of the mines, forests and waters committee a few years ago. The report of that committee, one of the more sharply worded reports in the history of parliamentary committees, urged action by the government in this field. I think it is a credit to the government that action has been taken, though perhaps not surprising from a government headed by a man who as a private member gave special attention to this problem and introduced private members' bills in the house dealing with water pollution which focused public attention and concern on the problem.

The hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) in his area of western Ontario has been a continuing supporter of finding remedies for the problem. We are fortunate in the province of Ontario in that our municipalities have come forward in a very encouraging way to participate in this program. The total value of applications in work and under consideration in the province of Ontario up to a very recent date was about $82 million. This represents an important contribution by approximately 151 communities in the province of Ontario.

This work is being followed up, of course, and I presume the hon. member for Kootenay West had in mind a co-operative body involving such organizations as the Ontario water resources commission; and that these commissions or establishments, by whatever name they may be known across the country, would co-ordinate their activities, benefit from each other's experiences and proceed to make an increasing assault on this problem. I would point out, and I think the hon. member himself mentioned as well, the contribution made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) in initiating the resources for tomorrow conference. The kind of consultation which I think the hon. member has envisaged in this resolution certainly took place at that conference and will continue to receive the attention of this government.

Finally, I believe this debate provides an opportunity for me to refer to the federal grant to the metropolitan Toronto conservation authority under the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act totalling some $14 million. The effects that will flow, directly and indirectly from this, in the field of conservation, in reducing pollution and bringing our citizens into contact with the benefits of such conservation programs, will be tremendous and will increase the interest of these citizens in what, as I mentioned before, is one of the more expensive problems facing governments at the federal, provincial and municipal levels in this country.

Mr. John Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I feel that I would be rather neglectful of my duty if I did not, at this time, rise to support this resolution in principle which has been brought to our attention by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I am going to confine my remarks to pollution of the great lakes and our inland waterways, which is a very important matter to the people who live in the part of Canada from which I come. I do not believe there is any part of Canada where pollution is a more serious problem than it is in the region lying along the shores of lake Ontario and lake Erie.

This pollution comes from three main sources. There is the pollution caused by the dumping of untreated sewage or partly treated sewage into our lakes and rivers. There is also the problem of industrial waste, and then there is the problem of the pollution of our waterways by vessels which pass through these waters. I should like, in the short space of time available, to emphasize the fact that the condition in our area has reached a point where it is beyond the ability of the municipalities to correct. I should like also to say that it is not only a question confronting Canada but it is also one confronting the United States. The Niagara river, which is in my riding, receives a tremendous amount of untreated sewage and industrial waste which comes partly from the United States and partly from Canada.

We all know that along the shores of lake Erie and lake Ontario, especially the southern area, of lake Ontario, this is an area that is polluted with algae. This algae is a kind of seaweed that thrives on sewage which has been dumped into our lakes and rivers, and has become a very important matter to the municipalities in that area. I wish to congratulate the hon. member from Kootenay West for bringing it to our attention. However, before resuming my seat, I should like to say that the question of pollution caused by vessels passing through the canals and rivers is becoming greater each day. More and more ships are passing through, and the ocean-going vessels are not too careful about how they dispose of their garbage or surplus oil. I am glad to know that this matter is being considered by the Department of Transport. I am pleased to note also that so many municipalities are taking advantage of the new legislation this government introduced a year ago making possible long term loans to build sewage disposal plants and trunk sewers. I do not want to talk this measure out as I believe there are other members who would like to say a word. I shall, therefore, conclude my remarks although I could speak for a much longer time.

(Translation):

Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in the debate on this resolution. Unfortunately, my remarks will be brief, as there are only two minutes left before six o'clock.

I listened with attention, a while ago, to my colleague from Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) who, even though the problem of water pollution does not arise in his constituency, was kind enough to say a few words on that subject.

The constituency I have the honour of representing is surrounded by the Thousand Island river, the Back river, the lake of Two Mountains and the St. Lawrence river. It has a population of over 200,000 people who, unfortunately, cannot use its waterways for recreational purposes, for fishing or swimming, etc., because of pollution.

Last year, the federal government amended the National Housing Act in order to allow Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to assist municipalities in the development of sewage disposal plants.

At that time, in a speech I delivered on television, I was glad to speak only to the mayors of Laval constituency and I urged them to apply to central mortgage and housing to be able to build sewage disposal plants.

Fortunately, several towns and municipalities in my constituency took advantage of the provisions of this act and the town of Laval West is now carrying out a $3 million project. They obtained federal grants representing 25 per cent of construction costs, a loan for 75 per cent, to be paid back in 50 years at an interest rate of 5⅛ per cent. In addition, they received a grant representing 25 per cent of interest charges.

In the province of Quebec, Dr. Provost has always advocated water pollution control. His efforts have constantly been supported by the mayor of St. Rose, Mr. Payette, who worked 20 years for this cause.

In my opinion, all these projects can be carried out under the new act passed a few years ago by the present government.

Mr. Speaker, will you call it six o'clock.

(Text):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder if I could inquire from whoever is leading the house at the moment, what the business will be for tomorrow? I am looking in the direction of the Minister of Forestry, and perhaps I should inquire from him what the business is likely to be for tomorrow and Friday as well?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): The house leader did leave me a note, the contents of which he asked me to communicate to the house. It is that the No. 1 item will be interim supply—

Mr. Chevrier: That is the first item?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): The first item, yes; No. 2 will be Bill No. C-38 and No. 3 will be supplementary estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: I asked about Friday as well. Do I take it it will be a continuation of this? What is the business for Friday?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): All I have is what I have given. I think this will be the order—

Mr. Chevrier: For tomorrow?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Yes.

It being three minutes past six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGE

MR. RACINE—INACCURACY OF ANSWER BY PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning an answer given by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) in this house, as shown at page 1921 of Hansard for that day.

I have here documents which prove that the answer given concerning a parcel of land acquired for the construction of a post office in Beauceville does not agree with the facts.

I think there is here a prima facie privilege question affecting all members of the house, and I am prepared to introduce a motion to that effect.

On May 3, 1961, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works answered that no decision had been reached to proceed with the construction of a public building in Beauceville and that no option had been taken by the Department of Public Works, as shown in the 1960-61 Hansard, at page 4280.

On May 24, 1961, Mrs. Lorenzo Mathieu (nee Anne Marie Caron) and Mrs. Clement Roy (nee Laurette Bisson) sold to Mr. Paul Giguere lot 145, section 14, in St. Francois de Beauceville, for the sum of $8,000, as attested by a deed signed before Mr. Jean Luc Quirion, notary public, on May 24, 1961, and registered in the district of Beauce, on July 21, 1961, under No. 190162.

On June 21, to a question asked while the house was discussing the estimates of the Department of Public Works, the minister replied that the department now had a site, and I am referring now to page 6841 of the 1960-61 Hansard.

It is quite reasonable to assume that the parcel of land acquired on May 24 by Mr. Paul Giguere is the same one that the Department of Public Works expected to acquire as indicated in the reply given on June 21.

On September 26, 1961, by deed signed before notary Marcel Gilbert, lot 145, section 14, was sold to the government by Mr. Paul Giguere for the price of $16,000, as can be seen in the deed mentioned and registered in the Beauce district on September 29, 1961 under No. 191091.

On March 19, 1962, in answer to a question, the Minister of Public Works—

Some hon. Members: Order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member raises a question of privilege which, as nearly as I can ascertain from the interpretation of his remarks, is that the minister in answering a question was not truthful. Is that correct?

Mr. Racine: The answer from the minister was not according to the facts. I am coming to the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has gone on to demonstrate what he says. It is not necessary to demonstrate, by producing the evidence, the correctness of his allegation. If the hon. member raises as a matter of privilege and takes the responsibility for alleging that a member of the house in his capacity as minister has knowingly given the house wrong information, that would be a matter for consideration of the house, of course. In order to arrive at the substance of what the hon. member is putting forward I wish to make sure that is the position he takes, namely that there has been a deliberate misleading of the house by the minister in the statement which was made yesterday and of which he complains, and that he wishes to charge the minister with that falsehood in breach of the privileges of the house.

Mr. Racine: Mr. Speaker, I am coming to the point.

(Translation):

On March 19, 1962, in answer to a question, the Minister of Public Works stated that the department had acquired a parcel of land from Mr. Lorenzo Mathieu by a deed dated September 26, 1961 for the price of $16,000, as can be seen on page 1921 of Hansard for March 19, 1962.

Now, I have the evidence, from contracts filed with the registry office, that the person who sold that parcel of land to the Department of Public Works is—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I tried to indicate to the hon. member, it is not necessary for him to produce the evidence to prove his assertion. If he takes the responsibility of making the allegation which I have mentioned and wishes to base a motion on it or to present a motion to the house, then I will consider the matter on that basis. However, the evidence he wishes to bring is something he would naturally bring after the motion had been accepted, and he would present it to the house or whatever tribunal the house decides should hear the matter. Perhaps the hon. member would state his question of privilege again and the motion he proposes to move, and not deal with the details of the evidence which he would produce.

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: Mr. Speaker, my motion is ready. It is pursuant to the reply given on March 19, 1962 by the minister. He said then that the person involved in the transaction with the Department of Public Works was Mr. Lorenzo Mathieu, when actually, according to the evidence I obtained from the registry office and which I have here, it is Mr. Paul Giguere.

Here is the motion I am introducing as a result of that transaction which enabled the last seller to make a profit of $8,000.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge), that the matter concerning the purchase of a parcel of land for the construction of a public building in Beauceville, as well as the replies given by the Minister of Public Works or his parliamentary secretary in this respect and related documents, be submitted to the standing committee on public accounts.

Mr. Johnson: It might be advisable to obtain also information about the construction of buildings for the provincial police in Hull and look into that matter at the same time.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Public Works is not in the house. I think it would be desirable for me to review what has been said by the hon. member and deal with it tomorrow at the opening of the house rather than attempting to say anything further about it in the absence of the minister concerned. Therefore the matter will stand until the opening of the sitting tomorrow morning.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Seventh report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Howe.

Third and fourth reports of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Cathers.

Fourth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. McCleave.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST THAT CERTAIN PRIVATE BILLS BE CONSIDERED LATER THIS DAY

Mr. R. D. C. Stewart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the indulgence of the house for unanimous consent to propose a motion with respect to Bill No. S-17, standing in my name and reported back to the house today by the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stewart: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp):

> That Bill S-17, an act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and certain wholly owned subsidiaries, reported today by the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines without amendment, be placed forthwith on the order paper for consideration in the committee of the whole later this day.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is in effect a request for unanimous consent of the house to have this private bill, which has now been reported upon, placed on the order paper for consideration later this day under private members' business under the heading "Private Bills". It would require the unanimous consent of the house to have that done. I shall be glad to ask the house—I should not say I am glad to ask but I shall ask—whether it has any objection to giving the hon. member for Charlotte the consent he requests.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Then the bill will be listed for consideration at five o'clock under the heading "private members' business".

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask for similar consent with respect to Bill No. S-16, an act respecting the United Church of Canada, which stands in my name as sponsor.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to have his bill placed on the order paper for consideration today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, similarly I ask for unanimous consent to have placed on the order paper for consideration later today Bills Nos. S-9, S-10, S-14, S-15 and S-12, some of which stand in my name.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Is it permissible, at this time, to have the house informed as to the reason for this hurry?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure it is not a debatable matter, unless it is a reason that is obvious to the house and of which the house approves. I would just ask whether or not the house agrees that these several bills, Bill No. S-9, to incorporate Brock Acceptance Company; Bill No. S-10, to incorporate Gerand Acceptance Company; Bill No. S-14, respecting Canada Security Assurance Company; Bill No. S-15, respecting the Canadian Indemnity Company and the Canadian Fire Insurance Company, and Bill No. S-12, respecting the Reliance

Insurance Company of Canada, be put on the orders for today. Apart from such consent, these bills would normally come before the house on Tuesday. Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: No.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—THREATENED STRIKE OF PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Did he receive notice from the St. Lawrence pilots to the effect that they would call a special general meeting at 12 o'clock tonight, unless the Minister of Transport finds an answer to the problems they brought before him last February?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Charlevoix had sent me notice of the same question, I prepared an answer that might seem somewhat detailed, but I feel that it covers the present situation.

As the house knows, the Minister of Transport has the authority over pilotage in the four pilotage districts: the first one goes from Les Escoumins to Quebec city; the second one, from Quebec city to Montreal; the third one is Montreal harbour itself; and the fourth one goes from Montreal to Cornwall. From Cornwall to Kingston, Canadian pilots come under the Canada-United States great lakes program but they are members of the St. Lawrence pilots' federation or union none the less. A telegram I received late yesterday afternoon informed me that the pilots intend to walk off their jobs this evening probably in order to get certain financial and other advantages.

The dispute concerns the following points: the pilots of those districts work approximately nine months a year. The income from pilotage dues are divided equally among the pilots. Last year, the individual gross income of the pilots in the Les Escoumins-Quebec city district was a little over $16,300. After deduction of a rather large amount for expenses, their net income amounted to $14,700. That result is arrived at by dividing the total income by the number of pilots, after having made the proper deduction in that number to take into account absenteeism or sick leave for a period of more than ten working days. The working day over that period is established on the basis of the total number of days in the shipping season divided by the total number of pilotage hours during the season. It comes out to 4.7 hours per day.

In the Quebec-Montreal district, the gross income is slightly over $14,200 and the net income, after proper deduction for expenses, is just over $12,600 per pilot, for an average working day of 4.9 hours.

In the Montreal harbour district, the gross individual income is just over $12,200 and the net individual income amounts to just over $11,000 for an average working day of 3.1 hours.

In the Cornwall district, the gross individual income is a little over $13,000 and the net income is slightly over $12,300, the average working day being 5.3 hours.

The pilots in the Cornwall-Kingston district of the St. Lawrence river, while they are members of the same federation, come under the Canada-United States great lakes agreement. Any tariff agreement in that district is subject to the joint agreement signed with the United States. The gross income of the pilots in that group, during the last year, amounted to $15,900 and the net income to $14,900, after deducting expenses.

The principal requests made by the pilots for the present season are as follows:

With regard to the Cornwall district, an increase in full trip fees charged to the vessels, which would mean an increase of approximately 20 per cent in the pilots' income. At the Montreal harbour, an increase in fees or a transfer of certain duties from the river pilots to the harbour pilots, which would increase their income from 6 to 10 per cent. For the river group at Montreal, an increase in the number of pilots as well as a 15 per cent increase in income, which would make it necessary to increase the tariff by approximately 18 per cent. The Quebec district has not formulated any important request with regard to the tariff structure; its petition deals with questions of secondary importance.

The pilots have also indicated that they disagree on the method adopted by the department to establish the average gross revenue with regard to the number of pilots actually employed during a year, in order to calculate the average income, and they asked the department to set the average according to a method which, when the calculation is made, will show that the pilots' yearly income is lower than the above-mentioned figures.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In fact, the pilots are in a special position and their income is derived from the shipowners who, in most cases, are obliged to pay pilotage fees whether they use a pilot or not. The shipowners most interested in the matter, that is the Shipping Federation of Canada, the Dominion Marine Association and the Canadian Shipowners Association, have strongly intimated that, in their opinion, increases in pilotage fees are not justified this year.

The Shipping Federation, the main user, indicated its willingness to study with the pilots, starting with the Montreal harbour group, a new approach to the yearly problem of the pilots' income. Therefore, I wrote today to the pilots and the shipowners to propose in that respect direct talks between the two sides with a view to ascertaining whether an agreement and a new solution to the problem can be reached.

Some other less important questions are still under study by my department and we expect to submit other proposals in due course. Thus we had already agreed—and had so informed the pilots—to license a small number of new pilots in the river district at Montreal.

I want to point out further that the river about Montreal is not yet open to navigation, so soon after winter, and that the movement of ships below Montreal is still light.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Inasmuch as the pilots and the shipowners could not arrive at an agreement, does the minister intend to take whatever steps are necessary to meet the pilots and discuss with them the problems he just mentioned?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I asked the pilots and shipowners to meet again in a new effort to come to an agreement. I am awaiting a reply to my request.

Mr. Chevrier: There is not much time left.

(Text):

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): As a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, has the minister anything to report on the pilotage district from Port Weller to Sarnia?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Speaker. This pilotage district is not concerned in the stoppage of work that was announced last night.

[Mr. Balcer.]

BOXING—AMENDMENT OF LAW TO PROHIBIT PRIZE FIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. Could the minister inform the house whether he intends to amend the Criminal Code in order to allow any province, if it so desires, to prohibit boxing contests.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, by clause 81 the Criminal Code stipulates that everyone who engages in a prize fight or promotes it, is guilty of an offence. However, anyone who abides by the requirements established by law or engages in a boxing contest held under the authority of an athletic commission established by the legislature of a province, is not deemed to engage in a prize fight.

TELEVISION

STRANRAER, SASK.—GRANTING OF LICENCE FOR SATELLITE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the answer the minister gave yesterday to the hon. member for Kindersley in regard to the satellite of station CFQC-TV in Saskatoon. The minister said in part yesterday that he had asked the law officers of the department to peruse the reasons for judgment as soon as possible so that a licence might be granted without delay. I am informed today that this satellite in question went on the air yesterday afternoon at 4.30. My question to the minister is, has he granted a licence to this station and, if so, at what time?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The information I received from the law officers of the department was that an appeal in this case could only be made by leave, so that gives us the power to act at the present time according to the judgment rendered by the court.

Mr. McIntosh: I am sure the minister is aware that there is some reason for dispute between these two applicants. Knowing that the original decision handed down by the chief justice of Ontario was in favour of the Swift Current application and that the recent decision of the appeal court was in favour of Saskatoon, why did he not let the case go to the Supreme Court of Canada as I suggested yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member seems to be interested in debating an issue rather than getting information, but I think I should give the minister a chance to reply.

Mr. McIntosh: I should also like to ask the minister a further question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. One question has already—

Mr. McIntosh: Does he not feel this is a matter which is covered by the Canadian Bill of Rights?

Mr. Balcer: Any person or corporation which may feel its interests have been harmed by this judgment can always appeal; there is recourse to the courts.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the minister a factual question? Can the hon. gentleman say whether a licence was granted and, if so, at what time?

Mr. Balcer: I do not remember the date, but yesterday I was informed by my legal officers that there was a possibility of providing the people in the area with television reception. Everyone in that area was anxious to be able to look at television, and that is why I asked my legal officers if it was possible to give the permit at that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can I ask the minister if he would ascertain the date on which the licence was granted and give it to the house tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Balcer: I shall be pleased to do that.

[Later:]

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of the answer he gave yesterday to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, when the minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I am really in favour of the public in the area receiving good television reception.

I wonder whether the minister would clarify what he meant when he referred to the area receiving good reception. Did he imply that if Swift Current had received the licence they would not have received good reception?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to clear up any misunderstanding with respect to this matter. I did not wish to say anything against anybody when I made my statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Balcer: All I wish to do is point out that my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate preferred to play politics rather than to assure good television reception to the people of Canada.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister did not mean—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am raising a question of privilege. I am sure the minister did not mean to imply what he said. He suggested that an hon. member—

Mr. Pigeon: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would indicate why he rises—

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I have not concluded. The hon. member has not advised me that he is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, he did.

Mr. Speaker: If this arises out of the answer, I shall be glad to hear whether, in the hon. member's view there is a question of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the enthusiasm with which my rising was greeted evidently prevented Your Honour from hearing how I began, and perhaps if hon. gentlemen opposite could keep silent I might make my feeble voice heard.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Feeble mind.

Mr. Speaker: I agree that I have been receiving rather more assistance on the part of hon. members of the house than I require.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister of Transport in answering another hon. member made an insinuation about my motives in asking a question yesterday, an insinuation that is in no way warranted by the facts. I asked a question about a subject in which it is well known I have taken a real interest ever since the matter first came up, and I resent the imputation and hope the minister will withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think perhaps the reference by the minister was offensive but I do not think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate needs to be unduly susceptible to a minor offence of that kind having regard to some other things which have been said currently.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to Your Honour for rebuking the minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INVITATION TO RUSSIAN SCIENTISTS TO CO-OPERATE IN ICE STUDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): It is not my intention to make a speech but to abide by the rules and direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of a Canadian Press report that a proposal was made yesterday at the meeting of the Canadian committee on oceanography in Ottawa that Russian scientists be invited to observe how Canada copes with winter ice navigation to and from ports along the gulf of St. Lawrence, would the Acting Prime Minister inform the house whether consideration will be given to issuing such an invitation with a view to breaking the ice and extending peaceful contacts with the Russian people?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I had noticed that report myself, and we are looking into the situation.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—REQUEST FOR FINANCING OF EXISTING HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works or, in his absence, to the acting minister who is also Acting Prime Minister. It is based on a story in today's Globe and Mail, a statement by the former head of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. David Mansur, predicting that 10 per cent fewer homes would be started in 1962 than in 1961. He goes on to say, as reported: "I have never seen so much mortgage money pressing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the hon. member is attempting to give information. If he has a question to ask, I suggest he put his question.

Mr. Garland: With due respect, my question is based on the one statement, one sentence by Mr. Mansur:

> I've never seen so much mortgage money pressing so few mortgages in my life.

Will the government reconsider its position, in these circumstances, with regard to extending N.H.A. financing to include existing houses?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): This is really an attempt to get a statement of government policy on orders of the day. The hon. member well knows that any such statement would be made in the house in due course.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Garland: The minister realizes in view of the mounting evidence—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising to ask a supplementary question or to complain about the answer? If it is the latter he is out of order. If there is a supplementary question I will permit it, but it seems to me it would be difficult to ask a supplementary question when the hon. member has had a refusal of an answer to his question on the ground that it involves a matter of policy to be stated in due course.

Mr. Garland: In view of the urgency of this question since we are rapidly approaching the building season, the minister surely realizes that the chief road block—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will be able to find an opportunity to debate the problems of house construction. This is not the time of day when we enter into debate on these matters. If the hon. member has points to raise he will have to raise them at another time.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the budget will be brought down next week.

Mr. Churchill: Will you be here next week? You are away so much.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I think the Leader of the Opposition will not have more than eight days to wait for a complete answer.

FISHERIES

SEALING—ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN HUNTERS ON EAST COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Many of my constituents are affected by the pirates, pillagers and freebooters operating around the sealing industry on the east coast. Can the minister tell this house of any action being taken to protect these sealers and their property?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I am aware, as is my department, of activities which are alleged to be taking place in the gulf of St. Lawrence concerning at least two sealing operators, perhaps more, but I must say that none of these alleged activities fall under the jurisdiction of my department, nor are they in contravention of any acts of parliament which are administered by my department as far as I am aware. The complaints have been referred to the mounted police, and I think the police have investigated the situation.

Mr. Keays: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice? Would the Minister of Justice undertake to look into this case immediately, before the sealing season is over?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I am not sure this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice, but I shall be glad to look into it and see if there is any way in which I can be of assistance.

FINANCE

REQUEST BY CANADIAN PEACE INSTITUTE FOR FEDERAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has a request been made to the government by the Canadian peace research institute to contribute funds to its present public campaign?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Not that I am aware of.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINDSOR, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE AT SUPPER CLUB

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister advise the house whether or not an application of the principles contained in the bill of rights is involved in the strike at the Commodore supper club in Windsor?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I was not aware that such a strike was in effect. If it is it must be under provincial rather than federal jurisdiction, because it has not been brought to my attention at all.

Mr. Hellyer: In that case, does the minister not favour a constitutional amendment which would permit the enactment of a meaningful bill of rights.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will find other opportunities to inquire about the government's policy with regard to amending the constitution.

RAILWAY ENGINEERS—INQUIRY AS TO COST OF STRIKE SETTLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister yet in a position to indicate to the house the estimated cost of the settlement between the railways and the engineers?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I attempted to get to my feet two or three times but because of the circus performances of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I was unable to do so.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Laurier asked me last week whether I could ascertain what the cost would be for the railways in the settlement with the locomotive engineers. I have been advised that the estimated cost to all the railways in the recent settlement affecting locomotive engineers for the full three year term of the contract amounts to a total of $4,451,000.

The cost to the Canadian National Railways is $2,785,000 for the three years, and this cost includes a wage increase of 6½ per cent staggered over the life of the contract, improved vacation plan, a lump sum payment for loss of arbitraries, and an increase in basic rates for western passenger engineers to compensate for loss of arbitraries.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF TERRITORIAL WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister any announcement to make to the house with regard to extending the present fishing limits from the three mile limit to a twelve mile limit in order to protect our Canadian fishermen and fisheries?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a highly complicated and difficult question. When there is an announcement to make it will be made in the house in the ordinary way.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say whether there are any active negotiations going on at the present time with any other country on this subject?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister say when he hopes those negotiations will be completed?

Mr. Green: As soon as possible.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CL-41—COMMENCEMENT OF PRODUCTION BY CANADAIR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Could the minister indicate to the house whether any final decision has yet been made with regard to the CL-41 so that the workers may have some confidence that production will begin at the Canadair plant?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to announce in addition to what I announced the other day.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the house that if this work is commenced he will also find some employment for the unemployed workers of the Avro plant in Toronto?

Mr. Grafftey: One violation of the rules after another.

[Later:]

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of a question asked by the hon. member for Trinity of the Minister of Defence Production which implied unemployment in my riding. I refer to the Brampton Times and Conservator of March 29, 1962 the headline of which shows that in my area, which is Peel county, Peel's economy is booming.

Mr. Hellyer: I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member does not like to hear good things.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the hon. member wishes seriously to raise a question of privilege or whether, if so, there is a point of order. If both hon. members are content to stay seated, I am content.

Mr. Hellyer: The whole point of order is that there is no question of privilege involved. The hon. member has no question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, it further says that rising employment has been one of the brightest facets in our economic picture.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member raising a question of privilege?

Mr. Pickersgill: He is just taking up the time of the house.

Mr. Pallett: It was just on what the hon. member said.

Mr. O'Hurley: As the minister concerned, and as you, Mr. Speaker, ruled out of order the question of the hon. member for Trinity and as it was asked of me, the Minister of Defence Production, I just wish to reply politely to the hon. member for Trinity and say this. I do not think any member from the Toronto area can complain about contracts given in the Toronto area by the Department of Defence Production.

Mr. Hellyer: A rather sorry record.

FLOODS

MARITIME PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Could he bring the house up to date on the extent of the damage caused by floods in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been in receipt of reports each day on what has been going on down in those areas where the maritime marshland rehabilitation personnel are at work. As I understand it, all the highways are open except one bloc in an area not too far from Sackville that would be well known to the hon. member. I also understand the waters are receding very quickly and that there is a general feeling in the area that the floods are now over and things should soon be back to normal. I might say this is a perfect example of co-operation between local authorities in the area, both in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and the M.M.R.A. personnel which has made it possible to survive the flood without worse damage than was sustained.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary answer. I should like to expand the answer I gave yesterday in response to a question asked by my friend the hon. member for Westmorland. I am happy to say that the Canadian National Railways have advised me that normal through passenger service is expected to be resumed this afternoon.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the Minister of Justice received any letters, telegrams or other forms of communication from the attorney general of British Columbia suggesting some form of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments to deal with the unfortunate situation that has existed in the Kootenays over a period of time?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, not that I recall up to this morning, at any rate. I believe I advised the house some time ago that I had a meeting with the attorney general at which we had informal discussions of the whole problem, but I received no formal proposal that I recall and I do not think any have been made since, other than those that have been reported to the house. My hon. friend will appreciate that the situation in the Kootenays has greatly improved just recently as a result, in large part, of the very successful police operations there.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR INCREASED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of a plea by Mr. George Ball, United States under secretary of state at Bonn which has been reported in the London Times of April 3, 1962 wherein Mr. Ball spoke—and I quote from the article——of the "urgent need to give a new priority to the conventional elements in our common defence". NATO needed—

—he is reported as saying:

—"a wide spectrum of capabilities" if it was to respond to varying types of attack with appropriate forces.

My question is this. Has Canada been requested by the NATO command to increase its conventional forces?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is well known to everyone in the house that Canada is one country that has met its NATO commitments and in fact in many ways has exceeded them. We have increased our conventional forces in Europe as well as those at home, starting last autumn.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER COMMUNICATION FROM B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. I apologize for not giving him notice. My question is based on a limited exercise of guided mental telepathy. Has the minister received any communication or suggestion with respect to the development of the Columbia river from the premier of British Columbia since he held his last conversations with him in Vancouver?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall any direct communication in this period, but I should assure the hon. member that in our last conversation it was contemplated that further communications would be exchanged between us. He should not be surprised if such communications occur.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ALLEGED POLITICAL ACTIVITY OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether his attention has been drawn to an editorial in the News of the North of Thursday, March 15 of this year, entitled "Is this the way to campaign"? If his attention has been called to it, can he say anything about the allegations in that editorial of political partisan activity on the part of certain public servants in the Northwest Territories? If his attention has not been called to it, will the minister look into the matter and report to the house tomorrow? I shall be glad to send him over the paper.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this matter has not been drawn to my attention. I shall be glad to look into the matter as indicated and bring in a report.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $674,658,525.84, being the aggregate of—

(a) one sixth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $666,562,659.16;

(b) one third of the amounts of atomic energy item 5, mines and technical surveys item 125 and privy council item 25 of the said estimates, $614,700.00;

(c) one sixth of the amounts of legislation items 40 and 45, northern affairs and national resources item 125 and public works item 190 of the said estimates, $1,302,483.34;

(d) one twelfth of the amounts of national research council item 1, national revenue item 25 and trade and commerce item 20 of the said estimates, $6,178,683.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I am obliged at this time to register a protest. I have no intentions of opposing the proposal now before us. However, I believe it is timely that we recall to our minds the very origin of parliament itself, something which goes back approximately 1,000 years in the history of our democratic civilization. I believe that political democracy as we know it is being whittled away by the procedure of which this House of Commons is now being asked to approve.

I agree that incidents of this kind have happened in the past. However, the mere fact that I committed a sin some 20 years ago does not give me any licence to commit a similar sin at this time. It has always been the right of parliament to withhold funds that have been requested until parliament has been satisfied not only as to the proposed expenditure of the funds but also as to the method by which the government expects to collect the funds.

This government is asking for interim supply prior to the introduction of a budget. I feel that this is a violation of our tradition, even though I am willing to admit that such violations have happened in the past. The latest research information that I have been able to obtain is to the effect that it happened last in the year 1946.

I know that the government is able to carry on at any time under warrants issued by the governor in council. I regret very much that I did not adequately voice my opinion the last time the Financial Administration Act was amended. I believe this parliament committed a basic error at the time the last amendment was made to that Act. The government now asks for interim supply, but we members of parliament have no knowledge of how the revenues are to be collected. I feel that the introduction of a budget is basic and ought to precede any request for interim supply. We have the age old cry, "No taxation without representation". We are now asked in effect to vote money that really does not exist as parliament has not yet been asked to vote the method of collecting revenues for the current fiscal year.

I feel it is a gross breach of parliamentary tradition for us to be asked to agree to vote interim supply before we have been told how the government proposes to collect the money. I know the government can well raise the argument that there are existing taxation laws but in my opinion this is an argument that does not hold water. If it is valid for parliament to be asked annually for the approval of expenditures, it is equally valid for parliament to have the right to ask the government annually as to the manner in which it proposes to collect the revenue. I believe it has almost always been the case in Canadian parliamentary history that the government of the day has informed parliament as to how it intended to collect the revenue before asking for approval of methods of distributing that revenue. Interim supply may have been granted before the introduction of a budget, but that is no excuse for continuing this evil. We have voted interim supply after the adoption of a budget, but this is an entirely different matter. After the government has announced its intentions with respect to how it proposes to collect the money it is completely legitimate, in my opinion, for that government to ask for interim supply, but in this particular case the government has not brought forward a budget. It has not even made any announcement that we will have a budget before an election is called. We have yet to receive an assurance from the minister or the government that there is going to be a budget. Anybody can make promises, Mr. Chairman. It is very easy to make promises in an irresponsible manner. I am beginning to doubt whether there is any intention on the part of the government to introduce a budget before there is an appeal to the people.

I never expected to see happen what took place in 1958, when the government for pure political expediency resorted in an unprecedented way to the abuse of governor general's warrants in order to carry on the business of the country. We now have to face the situation that the government is asking for interim supply before giving the house any indication of how it intends to collect the necessary revenue. In my view this is unethical and unworthy of our traditions.

However, as I indicated when I began my remarks, this is a bread and butter issue. The pay cheques of thousands of people depend upon the granting of interim supply, and I do not find it in my heart to vote against the interim supply now requested by the government.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1963, the sum of $674,658,525.84 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-85, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1963.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before clause 1 carries can the minister give us the assurance that the bill is in precisely the same form as the resolution so far as sums of money and details are concerned?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. In the copy I have there was a correction of one figure in the last line on the first page. There were two figures that were reversed, "65" in place of "56". That has been corrected on the copy in the hands of the chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister also give us the customary assurance that the voting of this money will in no way diminish the rights of the committee of supply to discuss all these items, and that we will have an opportunity of exercising those rights in this session?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, I suppose that depends on whom the hon. member means by "we". The passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Regier: I wonder whether I may ask the minister when he expects to tell us how he intends to raise the money necessary to pay for these items?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In due course, and in the approved constitutional manner, Mr. Chairman.

Clauses 1 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule A agreed to.

Schedule B agreed to.

Schedule C agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall this bill be read a third time; now?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 4, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada—Mr. Fulton—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 3—Application of part I.

Mr. Howard: Before clause 3 carries I have a comment to make. This relates to a question I asked the minister yesterday about the compilation of figures by the dominion bureau of statistics. The minister replied as follows, as reported in Hansard at page 2501:

—I can refer the committee to the recent report on the Canadian balance of international payments in 1960 and the international investment position, page 62, where the bureau itself has fully set out a summary of the methods it follows in compiling these statistics and makes an assessment of their accuracy and reliability.

I obtained a copy of the particular document to which the minister referred, dominion bureau of statistics publication catalogue No. 67-201, and looked at page 62. I read the information given by the dominion bureau of statistics to indicate how they arrived at these particular figures, and I found this very interesting and enlightening statement:

Briefly, while the principal source of the bureau's estimates of the foreign investment position is the capital structure reflected on consolidated balance sheets of enterprises classified according to the principal activity pursued, the source utilized most extensively for estimating the comparable aggregate capital value of selected Canadian industries is the summation of unconsolidated balance sheets of fully tabulated companies found in taxation statistics, as compiled by the Department of National Revenue, classified according to activity of the individual company.

The dominion bureau of statistics, therefore say they compile their statistics in this booklet to which we have referred about foreign control and foreign investment from the statistics published by the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue. I assume that General Motors, to which the minister referred yesterday, is a private corporation and pays income taxes, although it may not pay as much as it should. Canadian General Electric was another company to which the minister referred.

Mr. Fulton: Canadian General Electric is a public company. I did refer to it, but it is a public company.

Mr. Howard: In any event the minister did refer to General Motors, and so did other hon. gentlemen, as being a private company. I assume that General Motors and other private companies in Canada file information with the Department of National Revenue as required by the Income Tax Act. This information, then, is used by the dominion bureau of statistics after it has been processed by the Department of National Revenue, and the bureau of statistics compile the statistics which they give us in this particular document.

May I make another reference to something in these statistics at page 58 of the same publication to which I referred, the Canadian balance of international payments in 1960 and international investment position. This is under the section dealing with foreign ownership and control of Canadian industries, in the right hand column, and reads as follows:

Perhaps the most striking feature of these series, viewed in the perspective of a third of a century,—

Remember, this is over a third of a century, 30 to 34 years, about which they are talking now.

—viewed in the perspective of a third of a century, embracing depression and boom, war and peace, is the consistency of the direction of the changes. Foreign ownership of Canadian manufacturing has inched up from 38 per cent in 1926 to 51 per cent in 1959,—

[Mr. Howard.]

I do not know that "inched up" is the appropriate term; perhaps "leaped up" would be more correct.

—and control has gone from 35 per cent to 57 per cent. Foreign ownership of mining and smelting has also reflected an almost uninterrupted growth from 37 per cent in 1926 to 59 per cent in 1959, and control has risen from 38 per cent to 61 per cent.

This document then deals with other sections of industry in the same way, using statistics which have already been placed on the record. The point is that so far as the bureau of statistics are concerned, they have been compiling this information since 1926 and are still compiling it. They are compiling it from the Department of National Revenue statistics, and as I said I assume that all companies, private and public, make returns as required by the Income Tax Act.

What has the government done about this information which it already has, and has had for the past five years? What has it done about the growth from 57 per cent to 59 per cent, an increase of two percentage points, in the foreign control of Canadian industries? Since this government took office in 1957 it has talked about the development of national unity, about our national heritage being repatriated, about developing Canadian ownership, Canadian control, Canadian distribution, and so on.

All it has done in that five year period has been to draft Bill No. C-70 last year and Bill No. C-38 this year, place them before parliament and say "Now we want to compile another bunch of statistics; the ones we have are no good." This will mean that in future years the dominion bureau of statistics will be able to bring out another publication and the government will then be in the position of again doing nothing about them. A bill of this nature is just a sham and a farce in relation to what we already know, and taking into account what could have been done about these matters.

On page 60 of its publication the dominion bureau of statistics points out that the rubber industry was 98 per cent foreign controlled in 1959, an increase in such control over the last two years. It also points out that the automobile and parts industry was 97 per cent foreign controlled, an increase of 2 per cent over 1957. It also states that the electrical apparatus section of manufacturing is 81 per cent under foreign control, an increase of 4 per cent over the last two years. The chemicals industry is 77 per cent foreign controlled, and other manufacturing is 61 per cent foreign controlled. It is the same all the way down the line, with the agricultural machinery industry being 55 per cent foreign controlled as compared with 38 per cent just two years ago.

This is information which the government already has at its fingertips. It is information compiled by the very same people whom the government will be asking to compile the same statistics under the provisions of Bill No. C-38. If it is not duplication, then what additional information does the government want? It seems to me that the government is speaking with its tongue in its cheek and is not being fully truthful and honest with parliament and the public about its desire to develop a national identity, national understanding and control of our industries.

The government has had these statistics ever since it came into office. These statistics have been compiled and built up since 1926, but now the government wants to superimpose another set of statistics on what it already has in order to get information relating to corporations and the degree of foreign control exercised over them. Detailed information in regard to the extent of foreign control and domination over unions would perhaps be of some interest to somebody, but if that is what the government wants, then why does it not bring in a separate piece of legislation stipulating that unions have to report that information?

I make that suggestion, but at the same time I contend that a separate bill is not necessary, as the information is already accessible. The minister knows that the constitutions of unions have to be filed with the Department of Labour. At least that is the case in British Columbia, where unions are required to do so under the provisions of the labour relations act before they can gain any benefit—if one could call it that—from the labour code in British Columbia.

I have not carefully examined the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, but it seems to me that, if not under that act then under some other statute, every union must file its constitution and every collective agreement between union and management with the Department of Labour. I was told so by Professor Fred Carrothers of the University of British Columbia, who has done extensive work in the field of arbitration in labour disputes and the use of injunctions in those disputes. I take his word for it because, as I say, he has done research into this matter.

If the government wants specific information about unions it should bring in a separate bill dealing with them, but it is a well known fact that every union in Canada has a set of letters attached after its name which invariably give an indication of other groups to which each individual union is affiliated. Indeed the union to which I belong, the international woodworkers union has attached to its name "(A.F.I.-C.I.O.-C.L.C.)," which means it is an international union affiliated to the A.F.L. and the C.I.O. in the United States and is also affiliated to the C.L.C. here in Canada. The international mine and smelter workers union has attached to its name "(Ind.)" indicating that the Canadian section is not under international domination. If that information were not enough, anything else required could be very easily found out.

It becomes more and more clear from the—I shall not call them evasive—answers given by the minister that he is not telling us the true story, but by questioning him the true story is gradually emerging. We now know that the dominion bureau of statistics already has this information and publishes a document about it. The department has also got information from the Department of National Revenue, so that should be proof positive that when the government says it wants to know more about the Canadian economy, it is not telling the truth to the Canadian people.

The government is not interested in knowing more about the Canadian economy. It is only interested in the period ahead of us when perhaps we shall have an election or perhaps we shall not. It is only interested in the period when we might have an election so that it will be able to engage in the same sort of political dishonesty in which the Prime Minister and his colleagues engaged in 1958, following their short term in office, and prior to that in 1957. I think it is absolutely disgraceful.

Mr. Pallett: Is the hon. member engaging in the same technique, the same type of personal attack upon the Prime Minister that the Liberal party has seen fit to commence?

Mr. Chevrier: You are an authority on that.

Mr. Howard: My friend should not tempt me to express my personal views about the Prime Minister and other members of the government.

Mr. Fulton: I am afraid that the only thing which has been a sham and a farce about this whole question has been the kind of speech which the hon. member for Skeena has just made, the same kind of speech he made yesterday and the day before. It is a sham and a farce because it is a complete misrepresentation and distortion of what this bill will accomplish. It is a complete misinterpretation and distortion of the picture with regard to the availability of statistics, and it is a misrepresentation of the objectives that this bill seeks to accomplish.

My hon. friend seems to think he has had a great secret delivered into his hands, with which he is now going to embarrass the government, because yesterday I gave him a page reference in the dominion bureau of statistics publication. He finds there that the dominion bureau of statistics relies for its information as to statistics of the balance of international payments and the international investment position, on the publication by the Department of National Revenue entitled "Taxation Statistics", in which is reflected a summation of unconsolidated balance sheets of fully tabulated companies.

The only hon. member who has just discovered that the information the dominion bureau of statistics was quoting comes from "Taxation Statistics" is the hon. member for Skeena. Everybody in the house has known for a good many years that the Department of National Revenue makes this information public, and has known that the dominion bureau of statistics has relied upon it for many years.

What the hon. member has sought to do is mislead this committee, and all those who may have the misfortune to read his speech, into believing that because the Department of National Revenue publishes a green book called "Taxation Statistics" somehow or other the dominion bureau of statistics has access to the details that are contained in income tax returns, and that the information in individual returns with respect to corporate activities, methods and payments are available to the bureau and the government at large.

It may be, indeed it is my hope, that the hon. gentleman is himself under that illusion, but I doubt it. The serious issue I take with him is, that unless he is under that illusion, he would have willingly misled the committee had his speech been allowed to stand unchallenged.

The dominion bureau of statistics does not see any individual income tax return. It does not know how General Motors of Canada, to name one company which has been named, carries on its operations. Nor does any member of the government possess any information on the basis of a tax return with the exception of the Minister of National Revenue, if he reads it; and even if he reads it he is not at liberty to tell the government about it. So no other member of the government knows what is contained in the return of General Motors or in the return of any other company which files a return.

And even if this information were available it would be nothing as compared with what we are asking for under this bill—information which includes such matters as charges for royalties and research and similar payments and charges for various services including engineering, architectural, legal, accounting and auditing services and so on, showing the fees and charges separately in each case. And there is all the other information which clause 4 would require these corporations to file.

The suggestion inherent in the hon. member's speech a moment ago is that this kind of information is available to the dominion bureau of statistics. That suggestion is just unfounded and malevolent nonsense. It is because such information is not available anywhere that we have introduced this bill and made it necessary to report this and other information which, if it were not for this measure, would never come to the knowledge of the government, the dominion bureau of statistics or anyone else.

There is another thing that the hon. member carefully omitted to point out. The dominion bureau of statistics itself—and I gave the hon. member the page reference—clearly draws attention to the fact that information in the form in which it comes to them does not enable that organization to make speedy, accurate and 100 per cent reliable statistical summaries. Here is what they say on page 62:

> In the post-war years the series has made extensive use of the condensed balance sheets published by the Department of National Revenue in the annual report on taxation statistics. As this material does not become available for a considerable period after the time to which it relates, the bureau's series involving Canadian as well as foreign investment cannot be produced as currently as statistics of international investment. The condensed balance sheet figures are not ideal for estimating the total value of selected Canadian industries comparable to the foreign investment record. Corporations are not permitted by the Department of National Revenue to file consolidated reports, while for obvious reasons consolidated balance sheets are used wherever possible in the records of international investment.

I gave the page reference of that quotation to the hon. member yesterday, but he carefully avoided drawing attention to the fact that the dominion bureau points out that it is not in a position to get accurate, up to date particulars of the kind so necessary not only if detailed knowledge is to be available but also if adequate statistical summaries are to be compiled and published.

So I could go on indicating the inadequacies, the glaring omissions, the misconstructions, the misinterpretations and the misleading effects of what the hon. member has been saying about this bill for the past three days. There is one thing I should like to suggest and that is with regard to the matter of the labour unions. I am prepared to discuss those provisions fully when we get to them, but I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that at this stage you will not permit a general discussion of the trade union position, which should be reserved until we come to that part of the bill dealing with trade unions. I make this observation now because on several occasions the hon. member for Skeena began to get into this question of unions. In my opinion the discussion is sufficiently general now; indeed, it is over-general now that we are dealing with the clauses of the bill. I suggest it would be a mistake to get into a general discussion at this time of the question of trade unions which, I suspect, the hon. member is trying to introduce.

As to the purpose of the bill, and the charges and allegations which have been made, I can only conclude by saying that such a deliberate obfuscation of the objects and intent of the bill, such a distortion of its effects, such misrepresentation as to what it does, can only give rise to the thought that the hon. member's speeches are made for political purposes. In any event, I certainly say that what is being done here now and what has been done for the past three days will, if continued, have the effect of depriving Canada of the benefits of an advantageous piece of legislation which would place the government for the first time in history in possession of full details as to how foreign owned corporations and subsidiaries in Canada carry on their affairs.

Mr. Howard: When it comes to obstruction, misinterpretation or misinforming the committee, I must bow to the superior capabilities of the minister, which were evident from his introductory remarks on second reading and from the other remarks he has made from time to time while this bill has been under consideration.

I did not know the minister had such a low regard for the dominion bureau of statistics as to practically call the statistical summary worthless. I had assumed it was of some value. Perhaps if it did have any value, and if we had a government which believed truly in all the things it says it believes in, steps would have been taken earlier to deal with this question of foreign control. That would have been done shortly after the government took office, but it was not. For general policy purposes the statistics contained in this report show that over the years since 1926 foreign control over Canadian industry has been increasing year after year. There is no question about that, and the minister cannot discount it. He cannot discount the fact that he has access to this document. Surely this would have been sufficient for policy purposes. The minister claims that information of various kinds—and he read a list from clause 4—is not now available in any way.

Mr. Fulton: To the government.

Mr. Howard: Not now available to the government.

Mr. Fulton: Nor to the public.

Mr. Howard: Never mind the public for the moment; it is the government which wants to have this information. Architects' fees, engineering fees, legal fees and so on; that is not available to the government.

Mr. Fulton: Research payments, for example.

Mr. Howard: The other day when we talked about the schedule and all the various corporations included in it, the minister said that this information relating to those corporations and companies mentioned in the schedule was available to the government. I am thinking of a bank to which the Bank Act or the Quebec Savings Banks Act applies, an insurance company registered under certain acts, a trust company licensed under the Trust Companies Act, a loan company licensed under the Loan Companies Act, a radio company licensed under the Radio Act, a transcontinental air carrier designated as a group 1 carrier, and so on. Either this information is available or it is not. The minister cannot argue both ways, though we know that is his usual course; to argue from both sides of the fence or from both points of view, as happens to suit his purpose at the moment.

The other day he said one thing and today he stated just the opposite. Which statement will we believe? Was the minister truthful on each occasion? It seems impossible. Perhaps the minister in his own mind can rationalize the process of doublethink he employs on occasions, but I do not think anyone else will accept it. On April 2 the minister quoted the splendid statements made by the Prime Minister in addressing the chamber of commerce in Great Britain. The Prime Minister said:

> We have made it clear that we expect foreign concerns operating in Canada, or Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies, to carry on operations as Canadian businesses.

That is a fine phrase, an admirable concept and policy. What has been done about it? Nothing. I continue:

> We expect them to make available a fair portion of their equity securities for purchase by Canadians—

That is also a splendid attitude. What steps have been taken in this respect? When the Prime Minister was making this speech to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Great Britain the dominion bureau of statistics figures to which I referred were available. The Minister of Trade and Commerce with his vast knowledge of everything that is going on everywhere undoubtedly knew of this. No action was taken; there was no thought of action. The attitude was to push it to one side; maybe no one will look into it; maybe people will look at the icing on the cake without examining what is underneath.

The Prime Minister went on to say it was expected that these companies would include Canadians on their boards of directors. That is an admirable approach. What happened? Nothing. The government has continued with its great expectations for five years. What has happened? The government has presented Bill No. C-38. These great expectations represent the longest pregnancy in history, and when they come to fruition we witness a miscarriage.

Mr. Winkler: You should know all about that.

Mr. Howard: The minister told us about foreign control, architectural fees, expense accounts, consulting and engineering fees and the like. This might be useful information if we could have an explanation of the use to which it will be put. The minister says this is a first step toward understanding the Canadian economy. The government should have taken the first step four or five years ago in the direction of having corporations include Canadians on their boards of directors, assuring that a fair portion of equity securities would be available for purchase by Canadians, employing competent Canadians in senior management and technical positions, having corporations conduct a fair share of their research in Canada and making purchases of their requirements in Canada, as the Prime Minister so piously said was his expectation when he addressed the chamber of commerce in England.

It boils down to this. The Prime Minister and his colleagues in the government enjoy engaging in fine phrases and the expression of pious hopes and expectations which read well and sound assuring and will be interesting for posterity to examine. We have had many such statements from the government. However, the day will come when these statements will be compared with the action that has been taken. We are told that we will be judged by our deeds. We frankly do not believe the minister and the government can be relied upon to carry out what they say they will carry out under this or any other legislation.

I am not distorting anything. I remind the committee that only after persistent questioning and digging did we learn the true purpose behind this legislation. It will be used only as a campaign gimmick to mislead the people into believing that the government will take action toward developing the national culture we all wish to see developed, but we do not believe this will happen under this government.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, yesterday I asked the minister to submit a report of the subsidiary companies appearing in the report of the Bell Telephone Company, and he undertook to do so under the appropriate portion of the schedule. When we reach that point will he also advise how many other telephone companies report to the board of transport commissioners?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I will have that information. I have been gathering fairly full information about telephone companies in anticipation of questions of that type. I hope that all such questions can be fully answered when we reach that part of the schedule.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Return to be filed with minister.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I will ask one of my colleagues, in accordance with the indication given on second reading, to move:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in line 9 on page 2 and in line 17 on page 4.

Mr. Starr: I so move.

Mr. Howard: This is an extensive clause covering several pages. Could we proceed point by point after the minister's amendment has been circulated?

Mr. Fulton: Those are the only two amendments I have to clause 4. I have no objection to taking it subparagraph by subparagraph or in whatever way the committee would like. Perhaps we could take subparagraph (a) beginning with the words "section A" under the heading "returns" first and then subparagraph (b), or it could be taken Roman numeral by Roman numeral. I do not mind at all, and suggest we proceed in whatever would be the most satisfactory and orderly method.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Howard: The latter suggestion of the minister would be an orderly way of proceeding, calling the paragraphs by Roman numeral.

The Chairman: There is a considerable portion of clause 4 at the very beginning. Perhaps it would carry and we could call out the Roman numerals after that. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall paragraph (i) of clause 4 carry?

Mr. Fulton: I take it that the introductory portion of the clause and the portion designated by the small "a" in brackets would carry and then we could proceed to the portion designated by the Roman numeral (i).

The Chairman: Shall the introductory portion of clause 4 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall subparagraph (a) carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Subparagraph agreed to.

The Chairman: Roman numeral (i).

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, in this portion there are set out a number of companies. Perhaps there is no need to read them all. What I am getting at is that those companies which are covered by parts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 13, 14, and 15 in the schedule are not required, under the respective acts, to file the corporate names of their corporations. Does this information come to the attention of the dominion statistician? If any of them do not do so, can the minister indicate which ones do not?

Mr. Fulton: I think the answer to the question, in order to be accurate or at least to keep it within the bounds of my own information, is that I do not know in detail. I imagine the same question will be asked with respect to every other item or subparagraph of the clause and I shall be obliged to give the same answer to every such question. I do not know personally whether in fact a return made by these various companies under the statutes under which they are obliged to report contains every one of these particulars. However, I have been satisfied that that information is within the knowledge of the officers; and certainly the information with respect to subparagraph (i) with which we are dealing is within the knowledge of the officers to whom the kind of companies named make their reports.

Mr. Howard: This is something the same as—

Mr. Fulton: In other words, I do not personally know whether the returns under the Bank Act, the Quebec Savings Banks Act, the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and so on contain a blank requiring the corporate name of the corporation to be shown. I rather imagine they do contain such a blank. However, what I do know with absolute certainty is that the inspector of banks, the superintendent of insurance and all the other officers know the corporate names of the corporations that report to them.

Mr. Howard: Is this not something like saying that the dominion bureau of statistics does not know in fact how much taxes, for argument's sake, or does not know in fact the engineering and architectural and accounting fees which General Motors pay but they do know in one way or another what these are because they take the taxation statistics of the Department of National Revenue? It is the same thing as saying they may not in fact know some of this particular information but they have knowledge of it because they have been compiling statistics since 1926 which have been giving the extent of foreign control that exists over Canadian industry.

The Chairman: Shall subparagraph numbered Roman numeral (i) of paragraph (a) of clause 4 carry?

Subparagraph agreed to.

On subparagraph (ii).

Mr. Howard: I do not wish to rephrase or restate the question, but I think in one way or another we should do so. My question under subparagraph (ii) is this. With respect to those companies which are under the schedule or are related under the schedule to which I referred previously, and which are exempted or will be exempted from this act once it becomes law unless changes are made in the schedule, do those companies file with dominion bureau of statistics the information which is set out in subparagraph (ii) or do they file it with somebody else and then dominion bureau of statistics have access to it?

Mr. Fulton: The answer I give is very much the same as the answer to the same question under subparagraph (i), with this addition. These questions are all matters of public knowledge, because the requirements for reporting are contained in the various statutes to which the hon. member refers and the information can be obtained by studying those statutes. I do not intend to make any statement which may be inaccurate. I do not have each one of those statutes and all the details imprinted on my mind. I am therefore not going to answer the questions beyond what I have just said. I will emphasize again, however, here and in the context of all the other subparagraphs of this clause, that with respect to this information as it applies to the first six heads of the classes of corporations mentioned in the first six heads of the schedule, there is none of this information which cannot be obtained and be made available to the government at any time and to the dominion bureau of statistics at any time it is desired by virtue of the operation of those acts. As

I have already said, most of it, if not all of it, and a great deal more besides is already available and known.

The Chairman: Shall subparagraph (ii) carry?

Subparagraph agreed to.

On subparagraph (iii).

Mr. Howard: I should like to ask the minister this question. I think it is necessary to put this on record so that whoever reads Hansard in the future will see that what the minister is saying is that in fact the corporations listed in the schedule which are exempt do not have to file precisely the same information as do other corporations which will be covered by this particular act. I ask the minister whether those companies which come under paragraphs 1 to 6 inclusive and paragraphs 13 to 15 inclusive of the schedule and which are exempted from this act are obliged to file returns or whether they have to file under these respective acts information which would show, and I quote, "the manner in which the corporation was incorporated and the date and place of its incorporation".

Mr. Fulton: I make the same answer I have already made. By way of comment on what the hon. member has said in the introductory part of this particular question, I am glad to assure him that if he looks at Hansard I am sure he will find that I have said at least half a dozen times already that I do not say it is precisely the same information. What I have already said is that it is as extensive and in many cases more extensive, and that the information and the kind of information we wish to know here is abundantly available and the ability to get it is there in the other statutes. For the rest I must ask my hon. friend to read the statutes in question.

Mr. Howard: I am sorry, but I did not catch the minister's last phrase. Would he repeat his last words? I did not hear them.

Mr. Fulton: I said that perhaps if my hon. friend is really interested in this matter he might care to read the statutes in question.

Mr. Howard: That is what I thought the minister said. Perhaps if the minister was really interested in giving the committee full information he would have had this information made available to him so that he himself would be able to properly answer questions about this bill. I think he should have done that unless, of course, he did not expect that anyone would be much interested in it and thought that he could just sneak it or slip it through the committee without too much debate.

The Chairman: Shall subparagraph (iii) carry?

Subparagraph agreed to.

On subparagraph (iv).

Mr. Howard: I would ask the minister the same question as that which I have asked him previously on subparagraphs (i), (ii) and (iii).

Mr. Fulton: I give the same reply.

The Chairman: Shall subparagraph (iv) carry?

Subparagraph agreed to.

On subparagraph (v).

Mr. Howard: I would ask the minister the same question with respect to this subparagraph (v).

Mr. Fulton: I have told the hon. gentleman that the answer to these questions is the same in every case.

Mr. Howard: Does the minister now perhaps think it would have been better for him not to have insisted on having his day in parliament, but that he should have referred the matter to a committee where we might have obtained this information?

Mr. Fulton: No, I do not think so. I also know that if I had brought in the hundreds of pages of information in order to enable me to answer this question—although that information is readily available elsewhere and easily obtained if necessary—the hon. member would have thought up hundreds of other equally unnecessary questions.

Mr. Howard: It seems most unkind of the minister to deal in this fashion with such an urgent and important matter as this, and to make reference to questions as being unnecessary. The minister may be able to satisfy his own followers in caucus by telling them that everything is all right because, after all, he is on their side, but when it comes to attempting to understand what the government is trying to do by this bill then his reference to unnecessary questions—I think I have paid too much attention to it—really indicates the attitude of the minister toward these things, that he is not prepared to go into questions relating to the bill in detail.

Subparagraph (v) agreed to.

On subparagraph (vi).

Mr. Howard: There is a reference here to particulars as described in subparagraphs (i) and (ii) in respect of each body corporate holding 10 per cent or more of the total number of issued shares of the corporation, and so on. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I am reading the wrong one. I assume that if I were to pose the question I asked with respect to paragraphs (i), (ii), (iii), (iv) and (v) I would get the same answer from the minister, that he does not know.

Subparagraph agreed to.

Subparagraph (vi) agreed to.

Subparagraph (vii) agreed to.

On subparagraph (viii).

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, the minister has said that the purpose of the government is to endeavour to get all the facts with regard to these corporations and trade unions. It is my intention to move an amendment to add a paragraph after subparagraph (viii) and I wonder whether this is the appropriate time to do so.

The Chairman: We are now engaged in the study of paragraph (viii).

Mr. Martin (Timmins): It has not been adopted?

The Chairman: It has not been adopted.

Subparagraph agreed to.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I presume I would be in order now, Mr. Chairman. The minister has said that the purpose is to gather information respecting foreign control and its effects so far as the Canadian people and economy are concerned. I should like to point out one very serious omission. In my view the political control that could be brought about by corporations and trade unions is equally as important as economic control. With that in mind I should like to move:

That immediately following subparagraph (ix) of paragraph (a) of clause 4 the following be inserted as a new subparagraph (x)—

On rechecking I find that I probably should move this amendment after paragraph (ix).

On subparagraph (ix).

The Chairman: I believe the hon. member for Megantic wishes to speak on this paragraph. If the remarks of the hon. member for Timmins apply after the paragraph has been carried I will now recognize the hon. member for Megantic.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I find it somewhat difficult to understand either the English or the French text. If I am not mistaken it means that private companies not allowed to sell shares to the public will not be obliged to report the information set out in subparagraph (ix). Is my interpretation correct?

Mr. Fulton: The words "except in the case of a corporation incorporated by or under an act or instrument by the terms of which any invitation to the public to subscribe for its shares and debentures was prohibited" have the effect of excluding private corporations.

Subparagraph agreed to.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of repeating the remarks I have already made because I do not think it is necessary. I will proceed to move the amendment. I move:

That immediately following subparagraph (ix) of paragraph (a) of clause 4 the following be inserted as a new subparagraph (x):

"(x) the names and addresses of any

(a) candidate for election as a member of the House of Commons, a member of the legislature of a province or a member of the council of the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories, and

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that we would like to move the same amendment when we come to the same point in the clauses of the bill having to do with unions.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I would advise that this amendment appears to have nothing to do with the purposes which this bill has in mind and while I do not raise it as a point of order I say that in my judgment the amendment is entirely irrelevant as an amendment to this bill. It might be relevant and have a place as an amendment to some other act but it has nothing to do with the purposes for which this bill was introduced and therefore I must oppose the amendment.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment on the statement of the minister and on the substance of the amendment itself. It is well known that when a court deals with a statute it does not pay any attention so far as the purpose of the statute is concerned to what members may have said in the course of debate or argument for or against the legislation. All the court does is to look at the law itself and come to a conclusion as to what it means. If we apply the same thing here, the minister has said that the purpose of the bill is such and such, but in fact this is not what the bill says.

I referred to the title of the bill earlier and it is "an act to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada". That is the title of the bill. I submit that within that title this amendment is quite proper because it deals with financial and other statistics relating in this instance to the affairs of corporations from the point of view of their contributions to political parties. I submit that such statistics come within the ambit of the legislation just as much as payments for advertising and payments for consultants' fees.

If it is necessary to know what the affairs of a corporation are, and a union—I only drag that in because they are both in the same bill—in respect of control over the economy, then surely the general public is entitled to know what the affairs of that corporation and that union are in respect of their control over a political party, what their contributions to a political party are. This is a simple question of justice and fairness to the people of this nation. We think this particular amendment should be supported and made a part of the legislation.

Mr. Caron: Although we have no real objection to the amendment, we have to support the opinion submitted by the minister that it would be better in the electoral law than it would be in this bill. However, we have no real opposition to the amendment.

Amendment Mr. Martin (Timmins) negativated: yeas, 11; nays, 36.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

On subparagraph (x).

Mr. Pitman: This paragraph reads:

—the name and address of each director of the corporation, and the nationality of each individual who is a director of the corporation,—

I must disagree with this word "nationality". Surely, the purpose of this bill is to ascertain the extent of foreign control. I cannot see how the nationality of a director, if I am correctly construing the word "nationality", is of any value. What value is it to know whether a director is a Ukrainian, Japanese or Chinese. I would say that this provision is contrary to the whole emphasis throughout our legislation in which we are seeking to wipe out differences of national origin. Do we not want to know what the citizenship of the director is? I would move, therefore, Mr. Chairman, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins:

That subparagraph (x) of paragraph (a) of clause 4 be amended by deleting the word "nationality" in line 36 thereof and substituting therefor the word "citizenship".

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to assure the committee that so far as the question the hon. member for Peterborough has in mind is concerned, the use of the word "nationality" in this bill for this purpose has no significance with regard to discrimination—

The Chairman: Perhaps before the minister continues I should bring the amendment before the committee. It is proposed by the hon. member for Peterborough:

That subparagraph (x) of paragraph (a) of clause 4 be amended by deleting the word "nationality" in line 36 thereof and substituting therefor the word "citizenship".

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I can make a better start this time. I appreciate and share the desire of hon. members to avoid the use of any word which has any token or suggestion of discrimination in the sense in which the hon. member for Peterborough has used that expression. There are certain technical difficulties surrounding the use of the word "citizenship", which he has suggested, instead of the word "nationality". As a descriptive word in the context of this kind of legislation, "nationality" is the apt word. For instance, one does not say a citizen of the Netherlands, one says a Dutch national. One does not normally speak of a citizen of England, but one talks about a British subject. In other words, we are not here referring to origin in the sense of race. We use the word "nationality" as an indication of the nation of which that person is a national and to which he owes allegiance.

I am advised, after discussing the matter, that the word "citizenship" of such a person would create certain technical difficulties in respect of interpretation. I have no strong views on the matter myself, but I am convinced that the use of the word "nationality" is more apt for the purpose we have in mind, which has nothing to do with discrimination but merely the establishment of the nation to which the person in question owes allegiance.

Mr. Roberge: As the minister says, this is really only a technicality. May I offer this suggestion, that this paragraph be amended by using the two words, nationality or citizenship.

Mr. Fulton: I see no objection to it if that is agreeable to the hon. member who moved the amendment. This would make it read "nationality or citizenship".

Mr. Pitman: I am quite willing to accept that amendment because then companies would be able, if they were asked for this particular information, to give the name, address and citizenship or nationality of a director. If a director were a Canadian citizen, he would not have to say he was a Ukrainian national or a Japanese national. You are using "or" and not "and". I think this is quite acceptable and the resultant information will be quite different from that which would be received if the paragraph were left unchanged. I very much appreciate the minister's remarks with regard to his desire not to be guilty of any kind of discrimination, but as matters stand now this is more in line with the minister in his other areas of activity. I am sure the minister does not want this to become a snooping bill, or have it come to be regarded as a snooping bill by directors of corporations and unions.

If a person can state he is a Canadian citizen and does not have to state he is of Japanese, Ukrainian or Chinese origin then that would be very acceptable.

Mr. Fulton: I would just point out with regard to the use of the word "nationality" that if a person were a Canadian citizen he would simply say "Canadian". He would not have to refer to his national origin, but I would be happy to accept the amendment and have added to it "or citizenship." I do not mind which comes first—citizenship or nationality.

The Chairman: In that case the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peterborough will read:

That subparagraph (x) of paragraph (a) of clause 4 be amended by adding after the word "nationality" in line 36 thereof the words "or citizenship."

Mr. Pitman: That is quite acceptable, and perhaps when we come to the next subparagraph we might do the same there.

Amendment agreed to.

Subparagraph (x) as amended, agreed to.

On subparagraph (xi).

Mr. Pitman: Perhaps the minister would be willing to accept the same change here.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Then this amendment is moved by the hon. member for Peterborough:

That subparagraph (xi) of paragraph (a) of clause 4 be amended by adding after the word "nationality" in line 38 thereof the words "or citizenship."

Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Subparagraph (xi) as amended, agreed to.

On clause 4, paragraph (a).

Mr. Peters: Since we have finished with subparagraph (xi) I believe there should be another subparagraph added as (xii) so that it would allow us the opportunity of checking between the filing of collective agreements, as provided for on page 7, and which reads "the name and address of each employer, or association of employers, resident in Canada with which the union has a collective agreement".

I suggest that we should add a new subparagraph which would read—the name and address of each union, or unions, resident in Canada with which the corporation has a collective agreement,

The reason I suggest this is because it would give us an opportunity of checking one against the other. In my opinion it is not imposing any great hardship by asking companies to do this as well as unions. For that reason I move the following amendment:

That paragraph (a) of clause 4 be amended by adding thereto the following as subparagraph (xii): "(xii) the name and address of each union, or unions, resident in Canada with which the corporation has a collective agreement, and"

Mr. Fulton: I must say that with respect to the principle of getting this information there can be no objection, but I think we are going to have all the relative information under part II of the bill, where the obligation to report the names and addresses of the employers with whom unions have agreements is imposed upon unions. I would find it difficult to conclude otherwise than that that is the logical place where the requirement should be laid. It seems to me most logical to ask for this from the unions. This information certainly has to be sought but, having asked it from the unions, I can see no point in asking it from the companies. It would add unnecessarily to what hon members opposite have already described as a considerable burden of reporting on corporations.

I want to emphasize that I see nothing wrong with the principle of getting this information but we have already arranged to get it and I cannot see any point in duplicating it. Therefore I would oppose the amendment.

Mr. Peters: But take the example of a union with less than 100 employees. Under the provisions of the act it would not have to file this information, whereas a company with less than 100 employees might come within the provisions of the bill and therefore would have to file any collective agreement with its employees. The reverse could be true, and I can see a number of cases where that information could be given by one side and not by the other. The amendment would give us a more uniform picture of the collective agreements as such. I can see very little reason for a company refusing to meet this limitation, because we are not asking the unions to assure themselves that a company is going to report under the provisions of this bill before we ask them to file their collective agreements.

On the other hand a company could file an agreement even though the union with which it was in negotiation did not have to file the agreement negotiated. As I say, I can see a number of cases where this would provide us with information that would not be available otherwise.

Amendment (Mr. Peters) negatived: Yeas, 16; Nays, 50.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-17 respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and certain wholly owned subsidiaries—Mr. Stewart—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Stewart: Perhaps I should make a few remarks in connection with this measure. By this bill the respective railways and undertakings of three wholly owned leased subsidiaries of Canadian Pacific, including all their respective powers, rights, privileges, franchises, assets, effects and properties will be vested in Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which company will assume all their liabilities, obligations and duties.

The names of the three subsidiary companies and their locations are as follows: Joliette and Brandon Railway Company, Quebec; The Saint John Bridge and Railway Extension Company, New Brunswick; and The Saint Stephen and Milltown Railway Company, New Brunswick.

The petition for the bill has been made jointly by Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the three subsidiary companies concerned, in accordance with resolutions passed by the directors and shareholders of all companies.

Joliette and Brandon Railway Company was incorporated by statutes of Quebec (1905) 5 Edward VII, chapter 56 and vested with the franchises, subventions, railway, property, privileges, easements and appurtenances of the Montreal and Lac Maskinonge Railway Company, incorporated by statutes of Quebec (1887) 50 Victoria, chapter 68; the said company was leased to Canadian Pacific Railway Company for 94 years from January 1, 1906, by an indenture of lease dated October 31, 1906.

The Saint John Bridge and Railway Extension Company was incorporated by statutes of New Brunswick (1881) 44 Victoria, chapter 44; the said company was leased to Canadian Pacific Railway Company for 999 years from December 31, 1943 by an indenture of lease dated October 31, 1943.

The Saint Stephen and Milltown Railway Company was incorporated by statutes of New Brunswick (1886) 49 Victoria, chapter 17; the said company was leased to Canadian Pacific Railway Company for 99 years from May 1, 1897 by an indenture of lease dated April 21, 1897.

All three companies are presently operated by Canadian Pacific Railway Company as part of its system under the provisions of the abovementioned long term leases. It is intended to continue to operate these companies as part of the Canadian Pacific system after the legislation comes into effect so long as economic conditions warrant their operation. The proposed legislation will not affect the public in any way.

The purpose of the bill is to effect a simplification in the corporate organization of Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It will eliminate unnecessary clerical work which is now required by reason of the existence of these subsidiary companies.

In 1958 a similar act was enacted by the parliament of Canada, vesting in Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the railways and undertakings of nine other wholly owned leased subsidiaries of Canadian Pacific Railway Company; the act in question is chapter 54 of the statutes of Canada 1958. Other similar acts vesting in Canadian Pacific Railway Company the railways and undertakings of wholly owned leased subsidiaries were enacted in the years 1955, 1956 and 1957. Altogether 35 wholly owned leased subsidiary companies have been vested to date in Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

The present bill is identical with chapter 54 of the statutes of Canada, 1958, and the other vesting acts, except that this year only three wholly owned subsidiaries of Canadian Pacific are to be vested and that no dissolution of these subsidiary companies is sought as the said three companies were incorporated by provincial legislation.

The practical effect of the ownership by Canadian Pacific of all the capital stock and bonds, where issued, of the three companies involved, combined with the leases of the companies to Canadian Pacific Railway Company is tantamount to the amalgamation of these companies with Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The act sought from the parliament of Canada will complete the matter.

Mr. Morton moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Perhaps when he closes this debate the hon. member who sponsors this bill could answer a question for me. I notice that the United Church of Canada, according to the wording of the bill, is "hereinafter called 'the corporation'". Could the hon. member tell us if he is of the opinion that this is one of those corporations which might have to report statistics under the bill we were considering before five o'clock, if it becomes law?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, April 5, 1962

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 5th April, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

EXCHEQUER COURT

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO INCLUDE DIVORCE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-40, respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I did not think this bill was going to come up this session nor did I think the necessity would arise. Your Honour will notice that I have delayed this bill and several others for some time for the specific purpose of allowing the government to make a decision on this matter.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question. What is the basis for the hon. member's last statement?

Mr. Peters: The basis for that statement is that I decided something was going to be done about this matter. I had the words of the house leader last year which gave me this indication.

Mr. Pallett: What does the hon. member mean by "delaying" the bill in terms of putting it on the order paper? I think the hon. gentleman misunderstood the question.

Mr. Peters: This is a technicality. As my hon. friend knows, when the list is made up the bills appear on the order paper. If they are not dealt with when called they drop to the bottom and then come up for a second time. I thought that by following this practice the government would be given an opportunity to take action. I therefore waived my original right with respect to the placement of the bills on the order paper. I did this because I understood negotiations were under way to solve the serious problem of parliamentary divorce.

The hon. member for Skeena and I have been interested in this matter for some time. In the last two or three sessions we acquiesced in the suggestions of the house because we thought something would happen. I was asked why we assumed this. In reply I refer hon. members to page 8865 of Hansard of September 25, 1961 where the following statement is found:

—the question of procedure with respect to parliamentary divorce is under study, and the government has hopes of being able to present to the house at the next session some proposals in this regard.

I was not aware that the government was not going to take action.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask the hon. gentleman who made that statement and the source of the quotation?

Mr. Peters: Those are the words of the Minister of Veterans Affairs speaking in his capacity as house leader as reported at page 8865 of Hansard of September 25, 1961.

A similar statement was made on other occasions. On the occasion just referred to I assumed something would be done. I was pleased with the results of negotiations that took place among hon. members of the Liberal and New Democratic parties and the hon. members for Davenport and Marquette. There seemed to be agreement that something could be done without any particular fanfare and fuss. It is our sincere desire to have this problem solved. If it can be solved through negotiations, all the better.

We are now faced with the terrific rush of private hon. members to get their bills on the order paper which indicates that dissolution may be just around the corner, and the problem has not yet been solved.

We are concerned about recent rumours about negotiations that have taken place between parties in the house. Probably this is true. The hon. member for Skeena and I have shown an interest in this matter but with the exception of the discussions with the two hon. members referred to, little discussion has taken place that would indicate a solution is in sight.

Much publicity is being given to the other place and some of the hon. members of that chamber. More attention is being paid to their need for publicity than to the need of solving the problem.

Some may say the problem cannot be, need not be or should not be solved. Certainly the method of solution is open to debate and in making the suggestion I am today I feel I am offering a proposal capable of being implemented by the government without cost which may even result in putting a few dollars in the federal treasury.

On March 22 of this year Hon. Senator Pouliot raised some questions about this matter in relation to the British North America Act. The Minister of Justice should consider that many provinces operate divorce courts under licence of the federal government. Senator Pouliot has done considerable research in the field and is under the impression that only the Exchequer Court of Canada or another federal court could handle divorce cases because provincial courts or any other courts are ultra vires of the constitution. That may be a valid point. Those divorce courts already in existence may be in conflict with the British North America Act. I have contended that the present set-up is unconstitutional.

The easy way for the government to solve the problem would be to appoint two or three additional judges to the Exchequer Court of Canada and let them handle the divorce cases there with the existing facilities. I know the Exchequer Court of Canada is not presently equipped to deal with these cases but they could be dealt with there expeditiously and economically. There is a higher appeal court over the Exchequer Court of Canada. I understand that the exchequer court now handles mainly income tax, corporation tax and other appeal cases.

I do not wish to examine all the many suggestions that have been made for solving the problem, many of which are unrealistic. The suggestion has been made that all these cases should be dealt with by the other place. The attitude taken is: Let the senators be the divorce court for parliament. It would be perfectly all right if the government were to sit down with the members of the other parties and decide what type of rules they could provide for a court which would make, in my opinion, a complete change in the Senate operation. However, first I think we should like to know what the present government's intention is in relation to Senate reform. If we are going to reform the Senate radically, I think this reform would have some effect on the divorce court that could be established in that place. I believe that at the present time there is only one man who is well enough informed in this particular field to be able to operate that divorce court. If we are going to retire the present members of the Senate at the age of 80, then this gentleman will no longer be available for that job.

I also believe that we should be obliged to set up a proctor in order to protect the rights of this house. I think we should also be obliged to make it necessary to bring back to the House of Commons a report on what happened in the other place in relation to the detective agencies that appear before it, the lawyers who appear before it, the taxation schemes that are put into effect in each of these cases, and to bring back to parliament a report indicating the desires for reform that would take place from time to time as the operation of a court in the Senate developed. I think this would have to be done before there can be any agreement.

It may be said that this is not too important a matter. However, let me read a few excerpts from some editorials which have appeared in the press. In one which appeared in the Toronto daily Star of July 16, 1960, we find this statement:

> Parliamentary divorces are the scandal of the nation. They have long cried out for reform. The government should set up the necessary preliminary study at once, possibly by a special committee of the house.
> The terms of reference must go beyond a switch of Quebec and Newfoundland divorces from parliament to a court.

It then goes on to state what other things they should do. Another editorial which appeared in the Globe and Mail of March 5, 1962, in referring to discussions we have held in this House of Commons, contained this statement:

—illuminated the farcical nature of the divorce machinery by insisting upon debating the merits of individual bills in the Commons, thus disrupting the parliamentary timetable.

Then it goes on to say this:

Parliament's first progressive move should be to hand the Newfoundland and Quebec petitions to a competent federal court. The second move, and one which should not be long delayed, should be the liberalization of the divorce laws.

Another editorial which appeared in the Star Weekly of August 5, 1961, had this to say:

—Parliament degrading its function by becoming a legislative Reno, the logical and easy move would be appointment of a royal commission to inquire into Canadian divorce procedures.

Then it goes on to say this:

But while parliament continues to seek so assiduously for revisions of present divorce procedure, it might logically recommend a commission. As yet, however, it has not chosen to do so.

It goes on further to state this:

Until this happens, however, the parliamentary divorce mess will continue to be a shame and scandal to all Canadians.

I understand that in my own particular riding some of the constituents who do not support me have said that one of the things wrong with their member of parliament is that he has continued to fight for divorce reform in Ottawa. I ask you this question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not true that in this House of Commons we pass about 550 or 650 bills a year? Five hundred of those bills are now private bills granting divorce and only 50 bills to 75 bills are related to running the business and the government of this country. Is it not now time that the house leader should stand up and say that he would be willing, as a temporary measure, to accept the exchequer court this year or now as the logical place in which to handle these cases?

I should like to point out only one other thing that I think has been a fault. We are told that the Minister of Justice will supervise the faults of our particular type of procedure on parliamentary divorce. I can read you, Mr. Speaker, a number of references to cases which I have brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice in this house and inquiries I have made about cases which have come before the miscellaneous private bills committee and in which collusion was indicated, as was widely reported by the newspapers, and in which we have asked for an investigation. In each case we have found that the Minister of Justice has almost asked that we prove it before he would even consider it. In one case I have in mind he considered it two years ago and he is still considering it. As far as I know, no decision has yet been made on that particular case. I have knowledge of other cases in which we have failed completely to give the right answer and to provide the modernization of a procedure that was outdated in most countries 50 years ago, and one from which our mother parliament many years ago extricated itself by the establishment of a proper and justified court.

I think the minister is now going to be obliged to make a decision. If he does not do so, no more divorces will be granted in this parliament. No more divorces will be granted this year. I think he now is obliged to make the decision to accept the exchequer court as the logical place as the machinery is already set up. I for one am tired of the broken promises that have been made, and the unfulfilled commitments that have been given to the house. I think the only logical—

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to take the strongest possible objection to the hon. member's threatening this house by saying that, unless certain action is taken, no more bills of a certain nature are going to be passed in this house. I do not think that is a position that can be accepted by hon. members of this house. If the merits of this bill warrant it, it will certainly be considered and passed. However, we are not going to be blackmailed and be told that we are either going to take a certain action or no more bills of a certain nature are going to be passed in this house.

Mr. Peters: That is no point of order. I am not threatening anybody.

An hon. Member: Closure.

Mr. Peters: The matter is completely open to argument. I have been promised by this particular government many things which just have not happened. I can speak only for myself. As far as I am concerned, this is a logical opportunity for the minister to accept the proposal we have made. I wish no credit for myself. He may have it. The work has been done in preparing a method of proceeding with the matter. If the minister will stand up and say that he accepts this bill, I will certainly relinquish it and we can solve this particular mess; and it certainly is a mess. Like the hon. member who stood up a few moments ago, he has done absolutely nothing through caucus action to force this government to do anything about the matter. I think there would be very few who would stand up in this country and say they wish to endorse the mess we now have and wish to perpetuate it. If this is what he says, then I think he should stand up and say so. If not, we are offering to the government a logical solution to a particularly vexing problem and one which has been recommended by many of the news media of Canada. I think it should commend itself to the support of the minister on this particular occasion. If he wishes it to be done, it would be quite possible to put this into effect for only a limited period of time and parliament could then again review the procedures if they are not working satisfactorily. However, I think very few will disagree that the procedure in use at the present time is not satisfactory. The time has therefore come for parliament itself to find a solution. The putting of our divorce bills into the exchequer court seems to me to be the easiest government operation possible and the one that will create the least opposition.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of his remarks, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) mentioned that himself and his colleague from Skeena (Mr. Howard) devoted a great deal of time during the present parliament to the study of the question of divorce. We were certainly aware of that fact, because I feel that they have taken up a considerable amount of the time of the house.

In the dying days of the present parliament, I should like to point out, if I may, that the hon. member for Timiskaming and his colleague from Skeena seemed to me very much impressed and even obsessed by problems of procedure in this respect. I think that this matter of procedure is altogether a minor one and that we should concern ourselves with the problem arising from this bill, especially from the moral and legal points of view.

I am against this bill for two main reasons:

In the first place, I am against divorce. Second, I am opposed to the illegal bill introduced by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

I am against divorce because it is the worst social evil man has ever known, in spite of his social and intellectual achievements.

A short review of the history of the world shows that divorce, this release of one's obligations under both natural and family law, has been on the upsurge not in highly moral societies but in decadent, lascivious and worn out civilizations.

The history of Rome and of France are but two examples of this.

History does show that divorce was established in Rome not when the empire was going through its period of greatness, but when it was becoming decadent.

The divorce problem suddenly appeared in France at the time of the French revolution.

Divorce creates disorder in the family. It destroys its basic element. Moreover, it defeats the objects of marriage, which are to bring children into the world and to raise them, to abate the lusts of the flesh and to provide for mutual help.

Finally, I am opposed to divorce because it kills what the Creator has instilled in us, the desire to be closer to Him and to maintain our human dignity during our whole life.

A study of the social evolution of countries where divorce has been permitted reveals that the individual who took this course headed towards his downfall and away from his human dignity. Statistics indicate that 80 per cent of the suicides involve divorced persons.

The more courts you set up to consider divorces, the more divorces you will have, and divorce cases will increase.

I think that in the Canadian context of Christian morality, one must make all possible efforts to make it more difficult to get a divorce. I do not accept the allegation made by the hon. member for Timiskaming who, at the outset of his remarks, called the attention of the house to the fact that if divorce cases were referred to the exchequer court, that would reduce the cost of obtaining divorces for Canadians.

We should leave things as they are. The fact that divorce is extremely costly is all to the good, because it will lessen this social evil which afflicts both families and individuals.

To set the record straight, I would say that the more divorce courts we have, the more divorce cases are heard, thus contributing to an increase in the number of divorces. Allow me to give you a few statistics concerning divorce throughout Canada.

In 1960, there were 38.6 divorces per 100,000 people in Canada; in British Columbia, the ratio was 100 divorces per 100,000 inhabitants. Meanwhile, the percentage in Quebec was only 9.4; in Ontario it was 46.9 and in Alberta, 74.5. Newfoundland sets the example with the lowest rate: 1.3 per cent.

These figures justify the stand taken by the two provinces which object to the establishment of divorce courts.

At present, divorce petitions in Canada are not a matter of right; it is a privilege, a favour, an exception. Consequently, if divorce petitions do not constitute a right, they cannot be referred to a federal court. Of course, some provinces have established provincial divorce courts; that is their privilege.

I respect other people's opinions, but I ask that mine be respected also. To refer divorce cases to a federal court, namely the exchequer court is, in my opinion, to give that court authority over the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland, whereas it has no jurisdiction over those provinces at present in matters of divorce. Since petitions for divorce are not a right but an exception and a privilege, I claim that they cannot as such be referred to a federal court, whether it be the exchequer court or another court which hears petitions of right not cases of privilege.

The hon. member for Timiskaming mentioned in the course of his remarks that the country's constitution, the British North America Act, would not allow the establishment of divorce courts in the provinces.

He probably had in mind section 26 of the British North America Act, which deals with the legislative authority reserved to the parliament of Canada, marriage and divorce coming under section 26.

Using the same argument, I maintain that it is contrary to the British North America Act to propose to refer to the exchequer court the matter of divorce, a matter which is necessarily related, through its ramifications, connections and consequences, to the field of civil rights. As far as the solemnization of marriage is concerned, according to section 92, subsections 12 and 13, civil rights are involved which come exclusively under provincial jurisdiction.

Indeed, the province of Quebec, of which I am a representative in this house, objects to divorce, because it is an action which is not recognized in our civil law. Quebec's hard-won civil law, which was earned through the historic events of 1763 and the Treaty of Paris when freedom of worship was meant to be conceded, with certain restrictions of course, through the Quebec Act in 1774 and particularly through the different British North America Acts, finds recognition in subsection 13 of section 92.

That is precisely one of the basic reasons why Lower Canada, that is the province of Quebec, signed that federation agreement of 1867. It was in order to safeguard its civil rights.

Exchequer Court

Section 185 of the Civil Code of the province of Quebec reads as follows:

> Marriage can only be dissolved by the natural death of one of the parties; while both live, it is indissoluble.

Because of those constitutional, legal, and historical reasons, I do not acknowledge the legality of transferring to the exchequer court a matter which would affect civil rights of the province of Quebec.

Of course, I am still considering the question. It is a very serious problem which must be considered at length. I am still wondering why, in 1867, in order to eliminate some anomalies (this is not the only one) marriage was not left under the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures?

There also exist some anomalies in the economic field, where the provinces and the federal government, due to the changes we have been experiencing in 1962, feel shackled.

We can see the lines of thought in Canada converging toward the repatriation of our constitution which will be amended with the consent of all parties concerned.

I hope this point of view we are submitting today will be duly considered.

In ending my remarks, as I want to allow other members to express their views, I declare that I do not recognize the legality of divorce.

In the province of Quebec, we do not want divorce courts, either provincial or federal.

We respect the wish of all other Canadians, and we think that those citizens who request this favour of an exceptional nature ask for a privilege which cannot be established as of right before the exchequer court.

(Text):

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I extend to the mover of this bill my congratulations. This proposal to take from the Canadian House of Commons the detailed examination of so many of these cases which have been sent here in the past has my support. There have been a lot of anomalies in connection with our practice and procedure, such as the system whereby the other place is given certain jurisdiction to entertain some of these actions, with none of the safeguards which are found in our ordinary courts; the attempt to make our standing committee an appeal body without any examination of witnesses but merely through a perusal of the transcript of evidence and without having any specific standing orders to govern us in our review. It seems to me that something should be changed, if possible.

I say this without subscribing to the views which I have heard expressed that it is a discredit to the parliament of Canada to be dealing with these matters. It is my firm opinion that we are the ultimate court of appeal and, as such, even the most humble of the citizens of this country should not be denied access to parliament if the occasion arises. I subscribe also to that view. I think the principle which the mover of this bill has in mind might well be a good one. I appreciate what the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) has in mind. He says he is opposed to divorce, and so am I. Unfortunately, sometimes circumstances do occur just as circumstances bring about the commission of a criminal offence, and they leave us with no alternative.

In considering what we can do, I should like first to express the hope that in this case the two provincial governments mentioned in the bill will take the first step of establishing domestic courts. These domestic courts should first direct their attention to trying to minimize this alarmingly high rate of divorce by exhausting all the methods of conciliation and compromise which are available. I have every reason to believe, and I say this from my own personal experience in the practice of my profession, that there are many things which could be done by provincial courts if they had complete responsibility for taking intermediate steps. However, this is probably irrelevant to the consideration of the bill.

I admire the courage of the mover of this particular bill. This is a matter which fairly bristles with difficulties, such as are bound to be involved in any matter that involves human relationships. These difficulties involve questions of jurisdiction and questions of a legal nature. For example, the bill which the hon. member has moved would purport to give jurisdiction to the exchequer court. As I pointed out when I spoke on this matter last year, the exchequer court today is a court composed of judges who, if they do not have the knowledge when they go to that court obtain it later, have knowledge of certain technical aspects of disputes covering patents, copyrights and matters of a financial nature. This proposal would involve the creation of a branch of the court and the appointment of a number of judges. When I spoke last year I mentioned that, as presently constituted, the exchequer court makes no provision for appeal. The right of appeal is limited to matters involving more than $500. If the amount involved is less than that, there must be, if my memory serves me correctly, leave obtained from a judge of the supreme court and the matter must include the study of certain technical aspects of the statutes of the provinces.

If we drove the petitioners for divorce into the exchequer court as the result of the enactment of this bill, these petitioners would be deprived of the right of appeal. Then, there is the question of alimony which arises in these issues. In all these matters, it is the innocent and unfortunate children who are often the victims. If this particular measure were enacted, the exchequer court would be charged with the responsibility of pronouncing the dissolution of the marriage, if the facts warranted it. The petitioners or respondents, whoever had the responsibility for the children, would then have to go to another court to settle the question of alimony and maintenance. This, Mr. Speaker, I believe is quite wrong. These people would be put to the expense and the difficulty of repeating the evidence because in both types of action precisely the same thing has to be proven. This, I could not accept.

I am going to limit my remarks by pointing out to the hon. member in whose name the bill stands that I have sympathy with the principle that has caused him to bring the bill forward, but I do not think it will serve the purposes which it is aimed to secure. After all, while we have an issue here which needs to be dealt with, we must examine closely the means by which the control we seek can be gained. I do not think these means are sufficient, but as I am sure there are other hon. members who wish to speak I shall not say anything more at this time. I have expressed my views and would like to hear what other hon. members may have to say.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): First of all I would like to refer to some of the remarks made by the mover concerning the negotiations that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) and myself and with the mover and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I might say that the purposes in discussion at that time were primarily an attempt to come to a solution, and I am advised that this is still the case. There have been attempts made to put the project we have in mind in legal language, and also to fit into the solution certain safeguards which were mentioned at that time.

I think in all fairness we should say that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) has given a report of progress on two different occasions and he is hopeful before coming into the house of being able to bring a measure before the house, or before the group concerned as to the arrangements now being made.

Like every new member first coming into this house I am sure we were all astounded by the incredible fact that the parliament of Canada, with all its problems, should be required to deal in detail with the increased number of these divorces. I think it is apparent that some solution should be reached.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to incorporate Evangelical Mennonite Mission Conference.

An act respecting the governing council of The Salvation Army, Canada east, and the governing council of The Salvation Army, Canada west.

An act to incorporate Polaris pipe lines.

An act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

An act to amend the Judges Act.

An act respecting The United Church of Canada.

An act respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company and certain wholly owned subsidiaries.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1963.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada—Mr. Fulton—Mr. Chown in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at five o'clock we were about to consider paragraph (b) at the bottom of page 3 of the bill.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, at five o'clock we had just passed subparagraph (xi) and it was my intention to move that a new subparagraph be added to be known as subparagraph (xii). I feel this is the proper place to move that amendment which I will now have distributed.

I move:

That paragraph (a) of clause 4 be amended by adding thereto the following as subparagraph (xii):

(xii) The name and address of each corporation or person with which the reporting corporation has an agreement or arrangement relating to one or more of the following:

(a) The exchange of statistics;
(b) The defining of product standards;
(c) The exchange of credit information;
(d) Definition of trade terms;
(e) Co-operation in research and development;
(f) Restriction of advertising;
(g) Prices;
(h) Quantity or quality of production;
(i) Markets or customers; or
(j) Channels or methods of distribution.

Perhaps I should explain to the committee what these are. All are contained in section 32 of the Combines Investigation Act. Briefly put, that section of the act generally prohibits agreements among companies for the purpose of fixing prices, limiting quantity or quality of production and engaging in restraint of trade practices. Another portion of section 32 of the Combines Investigation Act—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Is it in order to discuss the Combines Investigation Act on this bill? With respect to the amendment that has been moved I would have said it would be proper as an amendment to the Combines Investigation Act but not as an amendment to this bill. Accordingly, I must oppose the amendment in any event. But it seems to me it is out of order to get into a discussion of the Combines Investigation Act in discussing the amendment.

Mr. Howard: I am not getting into a discussion of the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member is reading the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Howard: I am not. I just read an amendment of mine. I told the minister and the committee that these points are contained in section 32 of that act; that is where I got them. I was explaining the relationship of my amendment to that act to show that I was taking the words of the minister and putting them—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. Howard: Do you mind if I speak to the point of order?

Mr. Fulton: I am speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak to the point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We have a minister and an hon. member on the floor at the same time. If the minister is rising on a point of order I should hear him out and then perhaps the hon. member for Skeena may speak to the point of order.

Mr. Howard: But the minister already rose on a point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Howard: —and now he seeks to raise another point of order.

Mr. Macdonnell: Order.

Mr. Howard: Indeed.

Mr. Macdonnell: Yes, the rules apply to you, too.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I gave the floor to the minister, who I believe rises on a point of order.

Mr. Howard: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The minister rose on a point of order earlier. He offered his point of order and sat down. I rose to comment on the point of order and then the minister rose on another point of order. He can have only one at a time. That is why I said "Indeed" to my friend the hon. member for Greenwood. I was seeking the floor to comment on the point of order.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, may I explain that the only reason I rose was because the hon. member for Skeena was on his feet at the same time Your Honour was on yours.

Mr. Howard: What about the minister?

Mr. Fulton: I am not on my feet.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The minister is not on his feet.

Mr. Howard: Like other hon. members opposite, the minister does not like the rules applied to him.

An hon. Member: Neither do you.

Mr. Howard: This is evidenced by the minister's own statements appearing in Hansard on more than one occasion. In dealing with the point of order as to the propriety of this particular amendment I say again, as I said previously, that the bill in the title says that it is an act to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada. The minister says that in his interpretation this relates to the foreign control of our economy. I am submitting that providing for the reporting of financial and other statistics this amendment is perfectly within that ambit. In one instance we want the relationship—and I will read it again—between the operations of corporations reporting, as to the exchange of statistics between them. That is statistics. We mention the defining of product standards. It could be a statistic of the financial reporting of a corporation. We mention the exchange of credit information. Certainly that is statistical, and a definite matter relating to the operation of corporations. We mention the definition of trade terms and co-operation in research and development. All of these things are related to the bill. In fact, later on in clause 4 the minister wishes to find out particular questions about engineering, architectural, legal, accounting and auditing and consulting fees and charges and he quoted the Prime Minister talking about research statistics. Prices certainly are a question of statistics and financial matters. Quantity or quality of production is affected by this too. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not only perfectly in order because it is within the ambit of the title of the bill, but that it is perfectly in order as it relates even to an expression of the minister, namely foreign control of our economy.

It is even more in order when we realize that we should be more concerned about corporate price fixing control of our economy, if we are concerned about it at all. As the minister stated on second reading and since then, the question of foreign control is one of a great deal of importance to Canadians. It is something that he wants to find out about in this particular statute. But as I say, we should be equally concerned—and the bill provides for this equal concern—about the type of control that exists either within Canada as between corporations in Canada, or between corporations in Canada and corporations outside of Canada in so far as their constrictions on competition are concerned. I submit that price fixing, collusion, the setting up of production standards quantities and qualities are the order of the day in industry rather than the question of competition.

If I may be allowed to do so I should like to relate two or three references to this matter from a book by Professor Reynolds who is an associate in political economy in Johns Hopkins University. It is entitled "The Control of Competition in Canada". He has this to say about this question of the control of our economy. I am reading from page 17 where he states:

> It is safe to say that at least fifty price fixing trade associations are operating in Canada today, and the number may be considerably higher.

The price-fixing trade association certainly has an effect upon our economy and a far greater one than it has under foreign control.

The Deputy Chairman: If I may interrupt the hon. member just momentarily I should like to say that at this stage I am having some difficulty in relating what he is saying to the subsection of the bill that is at present under consideration. I know that he is speaking to his own amendment, and I have some doubt as to its admissibility, in some of its parts though not in all of them. On the other hand I felt if he related his discussion strictly to statistics I would have some difficulty in ruling it out of order. For that reason I allowed him to continue. Knowing this, if he would endeavour to co-operate with the Chair, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Howard: Very easily, Mr. Chairman, and very delightfully.

Mr. Fulton: Do you think he can be delightful?

Mr. Howard: It comes natural with me. I do not have to force myself, as do hon. gentlemen opposite. Let me read some statistical information from Professor Reynold's book entitled "The Control of Competition in Canada". I am reading from page 72. He talks about the use that is made of statistics and states this:

> Between 1929 and 1933 the prices of the monopolized goods fell by about 10 per cent while under price agreement the decline was about 13 per cent. Agreements thus seem to be able to resist downward pressure on prices almost as effectively as monopolies. Competitive prices on the other hand, fell by 36 per cent and the prices of farm products were cut in half.

This is an indication from Professor Reynolds as to the effect upon our economy of one kind of monopolized goods during that period of recession from 1929 to 1933 as compared with the prices of commodities which had administered prices, which had prices set by price agreements and by collusive arrangements. He compares these with so-called competitive prices in which there was no agreement, and points out that they fell almost three times as much and prices of farm goods were cut in half, in order to indicate that the farmer was at the complete mercy of monopolies and oligarchies and others engaged in price fixing arrangements I say that this is the sort of information the dominion bureau of statistics should have in order to bring to the attention of the government the full type of control that exists over our economy and in order to get to know the degree of foreign control which exists. I submit that we know that already by the dominion bureau of statistics figures to which I referred earlier this afternoon and which the minister poohpoohed as being of no value whatsoever. However, they are the figures which he himself used on second reading of the bill. I say that if we really wish to get to know what is affecting the economy and damaging our economy, we should not be concerned only with foreign control of corporations in Canada but must also concern ourselves with price fixing arrangements amongst companies within the country. Whether or not they are wholly owned Canadian companies or whether they are subsidiaries of foreign corporations does not matter too much in this regard. If they enter into price fixing arrangements they are having a detrimental effect on our economy. They are having a bad effect upon the farmers, who are completely at their mercy, and they are having a detrimental effect upon the consumer because they are draining off the consumer's purchasing dollar by price fixing arrangements which keep prices unnecessarily and arbitrarily high. We have had a number of instances in past years and I do not wish to go into them except to say that practically every major group of industry in Canada has been convicted under the combines act of engaging in price fixing conspiracies and setting prices arbitrarily high.

I therefore think that if this is a government that wishes to put into effect that which it preaches or if it wishes to practise what it preaches, I should think it would fall over backwards in order to accept an amendment of this nature. If it feels there are one or two items in here that are not within what it considers to be the proper ambit of the title of the bill, I submit that view is incorrect. Nevertheless it can object to them and we can consider whether or not one or two of them may be out of order. I submit they are all in order because they all fall within the title of the bill and they are all things that the bureau of statistics should know in order that the government may have a true, proper, clear and, as the minister said, precise picture of the forces which control the economy of Canada so that we may deal with them properly.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment moved and read by the hon. member. Shall I dispense with reading it again?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: Yeas, 15; nays, 36.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

On paragraph (b).

The Deputy Chairman: Shall paragraph (b) carry?

Mr. Howard: No, Mr. Chairman. I think we had better proceed with paragraph (b) in the same way we did with (a), by taking the subparagraphs (i), (ii) and (iii).

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we consider paragraph (b) by Roman numeral reference?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On subparagraph (i).

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in (B) of subparagraph (i). In this case we are asking for a statement of income and expenditure for the reporting period, and I suggest this will give us an incomplete picture if that is all we get. I suggest that we want to know about the sales of a company within the country and also about its export sales. An example would be the Massey-Harris Company. Under the first part it would be able to say that it was a Canadian company and very likely the board of directors would be Canadian. Yet to get a clear picture of the financial position of the Massey-Harris Company it would be necessary to know the volume and amount of sales within Canada and also the amount and volume of sales outside Canada, with the amounts which would be returned in each case to the parent company. To accomplish this I move:

That part (B) of subparagraph (i) of paragraph (b) of clause 4 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(B) a statement of income and expenditure for the reporting period with such income to indicate separately the amount received as a result of sales within Canada and sales other than within Canada, and"

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Peters) negatived: Yeas, 16; nays, 42.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall subparagraph (i) carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, could we have the figures again?

[And the Clerk Assistant having repeated the result of the vote]

Mr. Pickersgill: Forty two.

Mr. Starr: Sixteen in both opposition parties.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Shall subparagraph (i) carry?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the record will show that we had more than 50 per cent of our members here.

Mr. Starr: The first time in two weeks.

Mr. Pickersgill: Fifty per cent of zero is zero.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall subparagraph (i) carry? It includes (A), (B) and (C).

Mr. Caron: In (C) there is reference to a statement of surplus made up as of the last day of the reporting period. I should think it should be "surplus or deficit", because it is worth while knowing if there is a deficit. There might be a deficit instead of a surplus.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think the word "surplus" is used in the accounting sense. Whether there was a surplus or deficit on the year's operations will be shown in the annual statement. This is what is called an internal surplus which is carried forward and therefore the total is adjusted from year to year. It does not have to do with whether there is a surplus or a loss on the year's operations. It is an accounting term.

Mr. Caron: Would it not be clearer to say "surplus or deficit"?

Mr. Fulton: I think, Mr. Chairman, there will be no doubt in the minds of those who are called upon to file these returns as to what is meant by this term, statement of surplus. You see, we have already required, under (B) the filing of a statement of income and expenditure for the reporting period. This will show whether there was an operating profit or an operating loss. Then, the third part, part (C), is a statement of surplus, and that is an accounting term which means the inner surplus carried forward from year to year. I am reminded that section 116 of the Companies Act clearly sets forth what is meant by a statement of surplus, so I do not think there will be any doubt in the minds of those who are called upon to file the return.

Subparagraph (i) agreed to.

Subparagraph (ii) agreed to.

On subparagraph (iii).

Miss LaMarsh: I do not know whether or not the committee proposes to deal with the subparagraphs, but since no one else rises I propose to rise in respect of (J) of subparagraph (iii). There is a matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister who is piloting this bill through the house, namely, the matter of insurance. If, in fact, this committee is dealing with a bill, the purpose of which is to obtain information as it appears, then surely this is not just a matter of legislative peeping-tomism. Surely our purpose is to obtain information and, thereafter, if legislation is necessary to counteract anything, new legislation will be introduced. I would assume, from the opening speech made by the minister in introducing this bill to the committee, the purpose is to ensure that those who operate within Canada operate primarily for the good of Canada. It would appear, then, that it is imperative that all members of the committee attempt to strengthen this bill and to obtain as much information as will be necessary to prove or disprove allegations which have been made in the past.

An allegation has been made to me, and I believe previously to the government in a brief submitted by the insurance company representatives in Canada, about the fact that there has been considerable financial blood letting of Canadian corporations which are foreign controlled by a peculiar device, in that where formerly these Canadian companies placed through local insurance agents or brokers insurance of various types such as life insurance, fire insurance and insurance on automobiles, not only on company fleets but on individual cars owned by individual employees, as a result of influence from United States head offices these policies have been withdrawn by gentle pressure from within the corporations. The employees in some cases have been influenced, and in other cases Canadian corporations have been influenced to place their insurance elsewhere.

In particular, without reference to the names of the corporations, which are Canadian corporations subsidiary to United States corporations, or to the insurance companies concerned, I should like to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that on at least two occasions this has happened in my own locality. Niagara Falls, as is generally known, is an industrial area and something like 2 per cent of the industries in the area are Canadian corporations. In the last few years, and I do not propose to say five years or four years or ten years, but in the last few years, this has happened. In one case, the local agents had written policies of fire insurance on local buildings and, in the process of a few months a pattern became obvious whereby the Canadian company began to cancel the insurance placed through the local agent and, in a large part, the Canadian company then began to place it through the head office. In some cases, the actual payment was not made by the Canadian subsidiary corporation to the United States head office corporation. This became a bookkeeping matter as between head office and the local office. The effect was that the Canadian insurers who had been serving these policies no longer receive the Canadian business.

In another, and much more flagrant case, the Canadian subsidiary corporation brought pressure to bear upon its employees in respect of their automobile policies on their privately owned automobiles. All of the employees were requested to cancel out their insurance, and they would receive the same benefits from a master policy which would be held by their Canadian employers. In fact, what happened was that the Canadian subsidiary placed a policy with another general insurance company which was not even licensed to practice within the province of Ontario, and those policies, as placed, cost the individual employees the same amount of money but for less coverage. As a result of the pressure within the company itself, no individual felt that he was in a position to resist. He thought as long as he got the same coverage it would be all right. In fact, all the premiums went to the United States corporation for which the United States head office, and not the Canadian subsidiary, received a very substantial reduction in its over-all fire insurance rates.

These allegations have been presented to me by a responsible officer of the association of fire and casualty agents in this country. If these allegations are correct, they might be the subject of some legislation. I noticed in going through the clauses that the department has not brought forward for the committee any suggestion in respect of insurance privileges. In the first place, I deprecate the phraseology of the motion which I have to put before the committee because I am not a drafter of legislation, but I should like to move at this stage, Mr. Chairman:

> That section 4(b) subparagraph (iii)(J) be amended by adding the words "including premiums or payments made for insurance coverage".

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is the only way in which we can ascertain whether or not the allegations which have been made are in fact correct or incorrect. If correct then, as in the case of all other information we obtain from the forms required to be filed under this statute, the committee will be in a position to prepare such legislation as may be required to alleviate the condition.

Mr. Fulton: I am grateful to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, for having brought to our attention the fact that no specific mention is made in this particular portion of the bill of charges for insurance premiums, whether life, property or other. It seems to me this subparagraph (iii) of paragraph (b), is the part where the teeth of the bill appear. It is perhaps significant that hon. members in the far corner of the committee have not bothered as yet to make any reference to this, in view of the fact they have said the bill accomplishes nothing.

Mr. Howard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Skeena rises on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: Do you really think a point of order arises, Mr. Chairman, out of anything I have said so far?

Mr. Howard: My point of order is that the minister alleges or imputes motives—

Mr. Fulton: I am not imputing motives at all, I am making a statement of fact.

Mr. Howard: —and as a matter of fact, the minister was so secretive before that we just gave up in disgust.

The Deputy Chairman: There is no point of order that I can see in anything the hon. member for Skeena has said. The point he raises is a matter of debate, and he can make his contribution in that regard later.

Mr. Howard: You are entering into debate, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): A totally improper remark.

Mr. Fulton: I was endeavouring to point out to the committee, when I was interrupted, that this is one of those parts of the bill which really has teeth in it. What does it do? It provides that corporations are required to furnish a statement—and this is the first time corporations in the history of Canada will be required to furnish such a statement —showing total amounts paid or credited by the corporation during the reporting period to persons not resident in Canada. This does not appear anywhere else in such specific form.

Let me observe also that with respect to the classes of companies mentioned in the schedule we can get at this information, but the fact remains that this is the first time it has been provided in specific form that corporations should report the amounts paid to persons not resident in Canada, as and on account of each of the following items. I am not going to read the whole list because it is before members of the committee. I think it would be interesting to those who read the report of this debate in Hansard to know in summary what we are going to require. We want to know what corporations pay to people outside of Canada on account of dividends, interest, rents on real property in Canada, rent on equipment used in connection with the business they carry on in Canada, royalties and similar payments including copyrights, patents, industrial designs and trademarks, payments for production, distribution and sales franchises, payments for advertising and sales promotion, and payments in respect of scientific research.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

We want to know what these companies pay to people outside Canada for scientific research. We want to know precisely what the situation is so that we can know what intelligent measures to introduce in order, shall I say, to encourage subsidiary companies in Canada to carry on their scientific research in Canada. We want to know how much they now pay outside Canada for that research.

We also want to know how much they pay to persons outside Canada in respect of product and process development research, how much they pay outside Canada for management and administration fees and charges, how much they pay outside Canada for salaries, fees and other remuneration to officers and directors, how much they pay outside Canada for annuities, pensions and similar payments, how much they pay outside Canada for fees and charges for professional services such as engineering, architectural, legal, accounting and auditing; because it is our view, in accordance with the statement made by the Prime Minister which I have already quoted in this house, that companies carrying on business in Canada, if they are foreign owned, or even if they are subsidiaries of foreign owned companies, should be good Canadians, and that it should be their policy to make these payments in Canada so as to encourage the development of research, management and consultant experience, architectural and engineering skills in Canada instead of paying all these sums to people outside Canada.

But before we can intelligently appreciate what is the situation and know what measures should be taken to bring about desirable changes, if it is necessary for the government to take those measures in order to accomplish that, we want to know what is the present situation and how much is paid outside. Therefore we have provided in this bill that for the first time the government in Canada will have the precise—and I do not hesitate to use that word nor do I apologize for it—the precise information as to what is going on now in these fields.

As I said at the beginning of these remarks, I appreciate what the hon. member for Niagara Falls has done in bringing to our attention that we had overlooked making specific provision that what is paid for insurance to persons outside Canada should also be required to be reported. It could perhaps be argued that it is covered incidentally under some of the other specific things we have provided for, but I do not argue that too strongly. It is acceptable to me, especially in the light of what the hon. member said, that we should make it clear that this heading, which may be a very important heading of payment to persons outside Canada, should be covered specifically because certainly we have a very excellent, adequate insurance industry in Canada, including life, fire, casualty and other forms. It would certainly be our objective to encourage companies carrying on business in Canada, and profiting by their business in Canada, to place their insurance in Canada with Canadian companies. Therefore as a first step we should know how much they are paying for insurance to companies outside Canada. Accordingly I am prepared to accept the principle of the suggestion that the hon. member has made.

I wonder if the hon. lady would permit me, without being too precise and meticulous, to suggest that the objective could be accomplished better by introducing a separate subheading, rather than by lumping insurance with heading (J), as she tentatively suggested. If it would meet with the approval of the hon. lady I would be prepared to accept an amendment from her which would add, immediately after paragraph (I) of subparagraph (iii), on page 5, a new paragraph (J) which would read "premiums and other charges for or in respect of insurance," and then renumber paragraphs (J) to (N) as paragraphs (K) to (O).

Miss LaMarsh: I shall be delighted. I move the following amendment:

That the said bill be further amended by adding thereto, immediately after clause (I) of subparagraph (iii) of paragraph (b) of section 4 thereof, the following clause:

'(J) premiums and other charges for or in respect of insurance,' and by renumbering clauses (J) to (N) of the said subparagraph (iii) as clauses (K) to (O) respectively.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the committee agree that the original amendment put forward by the hon. member for Niagara Falls was not put to the committee, and go right on as though this were the original amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 4 as amended, agreed to.

On clause 5—Relieving provision.

Mr. Fulton: I would ask one of my colleagues to move an amendment to this clause in accordance with the information I gave, to the effect that the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in lines 30 and 43 on page 5 and in line 2 on page 6. I shall ask the Minister of Defence Production to move accordingly.

Mr. O'Hurley: I move the following amendment:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in lines 30 and 43 on page 5 and in line 2 on page 6.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 5 as amended, agreed to.

On clause 6—Offence.

Mr. Fulton: There is the same amendment to this clause, to substitute "dominion statistician" in what I think is line 8.

Mr. O'Hurley: I move:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in line 8 on page 6.

6 Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 7—Demand by registered letter to officer etc. of corporation in Canada.

Mr. Fulton: The same amendment will be moved to this clause by my colleague the Minister of Defence Production with respect to lines 21 and 25.

Mr. O'Hurley: I move:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in lines 21 and 25 on page 6.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps I might point out to the minister—

Mr. Fulton: The other word "minister" in line 23 does not need to be changed. There it will refer to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

7 Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 8—Application of part II.

Mr. Howard: Now that we have begun to discuss another part of this bill, the part in which its provisions are applied to unions, I think we should make some general comments as we did with regard to the provisions affecting corporations. If we assist the minister in the future by remaining silent on one or two clauses I hope he will not accuse us, as he did earlier, completely without justification, of not paying attention.

I may say that we do not consider so-called labour unions, or trade unions, as being foreign controlled or foreign dominated in the same terms as we think of corporations, inasmuch as labour unions are free associations of employees. With respect to a corporation there is usually an importation of capital into the country to establish something in the first place, or to buy up companies in this country or to invest money in them. A trade union or a labour union begins by organizing the members or the employees of a particular company into an organization for their own protection and for the defence of their own interests as differentiated from those of the employer. So I say, as did my hon. friend from Timmins in his opening remarks on the second reading of this measure, that although these two elements in our economy, business corporations and unions, are contained in the same bill there is an essential difference between them. Any attempt to relate one to the other and to suggest they have the same impact upon our economy is not a fair and just comparison. However, they are dealt with in the same bill, and we must consider the matter in that light.

I said in my remarks on the earlier part of this bill that trade unions, as I know them, already file their collective agreements under the various labour acts which exist in the provinces and federally. They file their constitutions. These are public documents, and they enable one to see the true relationship of a local union in Canada to its parent body whether that parent body is in Canada or in the United States. We note that the Department of Labour publishes a monthly labour gazette which gives us a breakdown with regard to collective agreements and their contents. The Department of Labour also publishes annually a document called "Labour Unions in Canada" in which are set out the names of the unions, their officials, the number of locals which exist in Canada and all sorts of other relevant material about them. As I said before, we cannot think about these unions in terms of so-called foreign control; in this respect a comparison with corporations cannot be made. The autonomy of local unions—and this applies generally to all unions I know of—is far greater than the autonomy resting in any Canadian subsidiary of a United States parent corporation. The base of a corporation rests upon the authoritarianism of its managers and is related to seeking profits. The base of a labour union or a trade union—and I differentiate between the two—rests upon the individual members of that union, and these members are the controlling force. I do not know how much weight we can attach to the statement, but the Gordon royal commission recognizes this in its report. It made certain references to unions in the report and said, in effect, the same sort of thing as I have been saying. The commission found no evidence of unions in Canada which did not derive their authority from their membership. There is a vast difference between unions and corporations in this regard.

Thus I think that in this field the information which the government is likely to receive as a result of the requirements of part II of this bill will not help to achieve any object at all. It will not give the government any understanding of the forces at work in our economy. It will just give them, possibly, information which is not now readily available. One thing it would give, for example, is an indication of the sex of union members. Perhaps that is the sole purpose of the bill. Perhaps some bright person who drafted this bill said: Well, we are going to get all this other useless information so we might as well get the sex of union members, too. I cannot think what value that information will be. It may be thought that female members have more voice, more power in the affairs of unions than male members. I do not know.

I should like to quote some words by one who has been accused of being a member of the labour clique in this nation—one who, apparently, has some domination over this party. I should like to quote some comments by Mr. Bill Mahoney, national director of the United Steelworkers of America. His own words are as follows—there are a number of preliminary remarks, but he goes on to say:

> I know of no union which does not give regular and detailed financial statements to its members. Local unions, too, are constitutionally required to present financial reports and undergo periodic audits of their accounts. This can be verified by examination of union constitutions which are filed with the return referred to in paragraph (a) above.

I might as well refer to paragraph (a). It says:

> A considerable part of the data specified in section 10 (1) of the bill is already furnished annually to the Department of Labour and most of this is printed in the publication of the economics and research branch of the department, Labour Organization in Canada. The return on which this publication is based includes a list of all local unions with names and addresses of their secretaries. In addition, local unions furnish the names and addresses of their officers and the number of their members on cards circulated by the department.

Because he is the director, he talks about the united steelworkers in particular. I quote again:

> The united steelworkers of America, for example, prints twice a year the comprehensive audit report of its independent auditors, Main and Company of Pittsburgh. This report includes statements of income and expenses of the international office and the various district offices, together with a list of fees and dues received from each and every local union. Payments by and expenditures on the two Canadian districts of the union are readily ascertainable from the report. The report also lists the investments in securities and property by the international union.
> This report is distributed to every local union in the organization and is printed in our monthly newspaper, Steel Labor, which goes to every member and is available to the public. It is also released to the press. Recently we have been sending it to members of parliament.

This is the essential point:

The availability of financial statements of international unions operating in Canada has been pointed out again and again, in the press and elsewhere. Any demand for legislation on the matter has been part of a synthetic "smear labour" campaign. It is regrettable that the parliament of Canada should be made party to that campaign.

He speaks at length of other aspects of this question, but those are the salient points.

The information sought to be obtained under part II of which clauses 8 and 9 are a part will not contribute anything to the information of the government concerning control of our economy. As in the clause relating to corporations, as I pointed out earlier, the government already receives the information. I do not know why it is required in another form except perhaps to employ more statisticians. This is another indication of the uselessness of this bill.

As far as I can see, the only information the government will receive under this part relates to the sex of union members, how many are male and how many are female. I do not know of what value that would be. Perhaps someone has an interest in this question with a view to publishing statistics showing the number of male and female union members, but I cannot imagine that this would be of value in assessing the effect of foreign interests on our economy. That seems to be the only information that will be obtained under this part. I cannot become too excited in wondering why the minister desires this information.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9—Return to be filed with minister.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments to offer to this clause.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the committee agree to considering clause 9 by order of the Roman numerals rather than the lettered paragraphs? Is it agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: I would ask my colleague, the Minister of Defence Production, to move:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in line 4 on page 7.

Mr. O'Hurley: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Fulton: I would also ask my colleague the Minister of Defence Production, to move:

That subparagraph (v) of paragraph (a) of clause 9 be amended by adding after the word "nationality" the words "or citizenship" in line 22 on page 7.

Mr. O'Hurley: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Subparagraphs (i) to (v) inclusive agreed to.

On subparagraph (vi).

Mr. Howard: Under this subparagraph the government wishes to know the sex of union members. I see no reason for it although maybe someone has some interest in the matter. I wish to move an amendment which simply deletes the reference to the sex of the members.

Mr. Fulton: Is my hon. friend moving to strike out sex?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister did that years ago when he sat on this side of the house.

Mr. Fulton: I never did.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't you remember your comics?

Mr. Fulton: That was crime.

Mr. Howard: I merely wish to strike out the minister's public interest in sex.

I move:

That paragraph (a) of clause 9 be amended by deleting subparagraph (vi) therefrom and substituting therefor the following:

(vi) the name and address of each local union or branch of the union in Canada and the name and address of each officer of any such local union or branch.

The effect of this amendment is merely to delete the words, "and the number of male members and the number of female members of any such local union or branch".

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I have been provided with a copy of an amendment which would purport to amend subparagraph (v) in a manner in which we have already amended it. I understand that we are on subparagraph (vi).

Mr. Howard: I appreciate what has happened. So many flimsy copies of amendments of the minister and mine have been circulating that confusion was bound to result.

Mr. Fulton: I believe I have the point now. My hon. friend's amendment would strike out in subparagraph (vi) the words, "and the number of male members and the number of female members of any such local union or branch".

Mr. Howard: Correct.

Mr. Fulton: One could make either as much or as little of this point, Mr. Chairman, as one felt inclined. However, I do put this point before hon. members of the committee. If I understand it correctly, and I believe

I do, it is a matter not only of concern but pride in Canada generally, as well as in the union movement in Canada, that there is no discrimination in employment and that there should not be discrimination in employment on grounds of sex or on any other grounds on which discrimination would be improper.

It has been represented to us therefore that it would be a matter of satisfaction to the trade unions, in furnishing their official returns which here under section A would be open to public inspection and upon which no doubt many annual reports would probably be based, to show the extent of non-discrimination between the sexes in employment in Canada. To bring about that objective, it was necessary for us to specify that the number of male employees and the number of female employees would be shown in the returns.

It does not seem to me that that should give rise to the allegation of discrimination or of some desire to see discrimination on the part of the government which is presenting the bill to the house. All that we are doing is saying that in the return made the number of employees who are male and the number who are female will be stated so that we can see precisely what the position is.

If I were convinced that most of the people in Canada who work or are members of unions felt that this provision somehow or other indicated a desire to discriminate, then I would not attach all that importance to the provision and would be prepared to accept the amendment. However, I doubt that the hon. member has correctly stated the feeling in that regard. I do not think the workers who are members of unions will be greatly concerned because in the return the number of employees who are male and the number who are female have to be shown. I doubt that my hon. friend speaks for the workers of Canada in that regard.

In any event we think it is essential that the numbers of employees should be shown. I could not accept the amendment if only for the reason that it would have the effect of deleting the requirement that the number of employees be stated. Therefore on both grounds, Mr. Chairman, namely because with respect I do not think that the hon. member for Skeena has correctly interpreted the feeling of union members with regard to this question of whether the number of male and female employees should be stated and because his amendment would delete altogether the requirement for stating the numbers of employees, I must oppose the amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word about the hon. member's amendment. I do not think I could bring myself to support this amendment, as the Liberal party is for growth. It is obvious that in order to have adequate growth we must have both sexes and plenty of them. Speaking seriously, may I say that it seems to me that, if we are going to get this other information, there are many arguments for getting as much information as we can get, which is not going to cost anybody anything extra to provide, in order that we may have a better knowledge of our country and of all the social and economic aspects of it.

Mr. Howard: I should like to say this to the Minister of Justice when he talks about no discrimination. I may tell him that I worked in a logging camp for a few years and that I do not know of a logger in the country who would not like to have a number of female members in that organization. Perhaps this is what the minister wishes to promote. I do not know. However, the point is that some of these unions are not going to be able to ascertain this information.

The minister says that it is not a question of discrimination. If the minister says he wishes to have this provision in here in order to show that there is no discrimination, that is one thing. Perhaps what he is saying is that he wants this provision in so that statistics will show that there is no discrimination; but I do not know how he is going to get that from the loggers local of the I.W.A. which has 4,500 members to 5,000 members and when there is not a woman in a carload. Is that discrimination? How about the mining camps which may have women working there—

Mr. Fulton: If there are no women in that local, it should not be very difficult to make that return.

Mr. Howard: It should not be difficult to make a return, but is the minister going to say there is discrimination in this industry because they are not employing any women? By arguing this point so heatedly or by arguing in favour of listing male and female employees, I think what he is doing is giving us the intention or the reason for this bill, which is really a snooping one designed to pry into other people's affairs.

Mr. Peters: It is a fact that in most of these unions this provision is going to cause a bit of a quandary.

Miss LaMarsh: You mean you cannot tell the difference?

Mr. Peters: I know of no union which from a statistical point of view, is going to be able to tell this from most of the local union records. The membership card or the application in the initial stage states whether it is a male or female employee, but in relation to dues and other considerations, there is no difference in the amount. They are numbers when the matter is reduced to this statistical proposition. Unless they change their requirements, their dues books and the method used for reporting in the local and sublocal offices, I am sure they will not be in the position to do this. I represent another section of the I.W.A. in which we have both men and women as union employees. As far as I know, with the exception of the application card, there would be no relationship unless you looked over the names and somebody in each reporting period decided whether this was a female employee or a male employee. This was never a consideration. No differentiation was made whether an employee was female or male. The situation is unlike that with regard to company records where often the wages were different for male and female employees. The union membership has not made this differentiation. I think this provision will be asking for something that is beyond what is now compiled in the report of the union where they would be normally reporting their membership in a statistical manner.

Mr. Pitman: I am going to appeal to the minister from another point of view. It would seem to me that this particular section would have nothing whatsoever to do with the main purpose of the bill which is to provide information as to external control. Is this not information which would already be available to the Minister of Labour? Surely the Minister of Labour would know the number of male members and the number of female members. Indeed, one would even wonder if you had the name and the address of the officers and so on; you would have at least that much from that area. But at the same time, is this not a duplication of information or a possible duplication of forms of which we were complaining so heatedly previously when we were talking about business? I would ask the minister whether this information is not already available to the Minister of Labour and to the Department of Labour and whether it could not be very easily acquired from that area.

Mr. Fulton: I do not know. It seems to me that, in the state of emancipation which Canada has reached today, the girls would probably like to be enumerated. I think it would be an affront to the women who work in Canada if we did not divide the number of employees as between male and female. Furthermore, I am told that for years, with respect to unemployment and employment, the statistical returns have been broken down as between male and female. I therefore do not think this requirement will be unwelcome to the unions who report under this provision.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: How ridiculous this requirement can be is probably shown by the situation in the mining industry. It was mentioned that there were very few women employed in the mining industry, but I am sure the hon. member for Timmins can remember as I do stories about incidents that happened a little before my time. We remember the story of a woman working underground as a man and after a period of years becoming a machine operator. We also remember what happened when showers were installed at the Hollinger mine and it was found that several of the men who were working there were unable to take showers because it would reveal their sex. This would appear to me to be very snoopy legislation if it would produce the same result that was brought about by modernization in the mining industry.

Mr. Fulton: It appears to me quite obvious what the difference is between us on the government side and the members of the New Democratic party with respect to this question. In this matter we would have female employees at least listed as numbers while the members of the New Democratic party would make them ciphers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put one question to the minister that has been raised in my mind by the last observation by the hon. member for Timiskaming. Will the government be satisfied with a superficial differentiation so that there will be no necessity of using showers or anything of that sort in order to get these statistics?

Mr. Fulton: I can assure the committee that the government will be prepared to accept a paper return and will not do any snooping, and if any doubt should arise in our minds we will call on the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to resolve it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the Minister of Justice should have made so immoral a proposal because the minister must have read the Senate and House of Commons Act and must realize that no member of parliament can receive a place of profit under the crown and keep his seat in this house.

Mr. Fulton: I would expect the hon. member to do this for nothing.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is just an indirect device on the part of the minister to try to get me out of parliament and it is not going to work.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 52.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Howard: Vive la difference.

Subparagraph agreed to.

On subparagraph (vii).

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask the minister a question. In statements he made prior to the introduction of the bill he mentioned the fact that he had examined and given consideration to the United States legislation that applies to labour and management and the fact that it had in it a bill of rights for labour and management which had some effect on the presentation of information. If the government is sincere in wanting to know about some of the difficulties that may arise and certainly have arisen in the United States, this provision could be strengthened considerably and the provisions of the United States legislation might be applied in this instance. It would mean that there would be some guarantee against trusteeships being imposed for reasons not advantageous to the employees in a particular plant, or being imposed in a dictatorial way or for other than legitimate purposes. While the United States bill did a lot more snooping than the government appears to be interested in doing in the bill we have before us, in this instance their bill gave some protection to the employees and union members with relation to trusteeship.

In the main a trusteeship is usually justified for one or two legitimate reasons. It may be that the executive officers of the union have misspent or misused the funds of the local. In other cases the presiding body might put the local under trusteeship for failing to live up to the constitutional requirements as endorsed by the local. Then there are other abuses such as the maintenance of paper locals and so on.

In this instance the minister is asking for the name of each local union or branch of the union in Canada under a trusteeship imposed by the union, the date such trusteeship was imposed and the reasons therefor; and that is all. It would appear to me that the minister is not really interested in correcting the abuse. He wants to find out about it but to me it would seem very inappropriate to find out about the abuse and then do nothing about it. It may be that if a particular trend develops with regard to abuses in this field the minister may recommend to his colleagues or the dominion statistician may recommend to the cabinet, particularly the Minister of Labour, that there should be an amendment to the bill of rights or under some other statute to provide a remedy for some of the abuses that can take place in this field.

As well as having the name of the local union or branch of the union under trusteeship, the date that the trusteeship was imposed and the reasons therefor, I would think we should also have the names of the people who are the trustees, the amount of the remuneration they are receiving, the constitutional provisions that allow them to impose the trusteeship, the length of time the trusteeship has been in force and other pertinent information which, if it were available, would permit a certain amount of corrective action to be taken, even by the general public.

We have read about the investigations in the United States which have revealed that some unions were not operating in the interests of their membership. It was generally conceded that this was one field in which abuses were most evident and I believe the information asked for in this provision is not sufficient to alert the general public to the full ramifications of what happens under trusteeships, the purpose of trusteeships and what action the local people involved are able to take to reinstate themselves and remove the local from trusteeship or receivership, whichever it happens to be.

I am sure the Minister of Labour could assist in this regard. I suggest there is other information that would bring under public scrutiny some of the abuses that are inherent in the disallowance of constitutions and the imposition of trusteeships on locals by the executive officers of the parent body. I believe the constitutions themselves are deposited with the Minister of Labour and, in the main, they do cover some of the aspects of trusteeships. If the information were disseminated widely enough, these abuses would be brought to the attention of the general public and allow the general public to have some insight into what was happening in a particular trusteeship. I think this is in keeping with the thought behind the United States reporting bill, that protection can be given to individual employees in a particular plant where trusteeship might be imposed in a manner that was not advantageous to the employees, especially when there might not be an apparent method for getting out of the trusteeship.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate the concern of the hon. member for Timiskaming with regard to this question of trusteeship and its potential abuses. May I ask him, in turn, to bear in mind that at present the purpose of this bill is to get information concerning what is happening in order to give us the basis upon which we can act to correct abuses. I would suggest to him that the proper place to correct such abuses as there may be in the labour field would be in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, in so far as authority lies within federal jurisdiction. In the same way, the place to correct abuses such as those to which reference was made a little while ago by the hon. member for Skeena in respect of certain activities of corporations, would be in the combines act and not in this bill.

I point out also that, in many respects, the authority to correct malpractices in this field of trusteeship lies in the provincial jurisdiction and not here. If I could get this point across, I should repeat that we have not purported to apply here remedies in this legislation. This measure has as its purpose to give us information on the basis of which remedies may be devised. Certainly, it was not the purpose here to bring in any specific remedy in respect of malpractices under trusteeship. What we wanted to do was to get information as to the circumstances under which trusteeships are imposed, because we understand it is frequently a very direct way of enabling international organizations to exercise direct control over the operations of a union in Canada. We want to find out the extent to which that is being done, and the circumstances under which it is being done. This will cover actually both the provincial and federal fields. When we have the information, then if it is indicated that there are undesirable practices my colleague the Minister of Labour can take action within the sphere of federal jurisdiction and the provincial governments will have the information which will enable them to take action within their sphere of jurisdiction to eliminate these undesirable practices.

Mr. Peters: I agree that certainly this bill has not gone so far as to take corrective action. The fact that trusteeships have been imposed appears now in a publication of the Minister of Labour, "Canadian Labour Organizations in Canada". This publication indicates how many locals are under trusteeship. Trusteeship is not imposed very often. In my personal experience, I have known several locals to be put under trusteeship. In most cases the reason was the inability of the executive officers to handle the finances of the local. They got themselves into a position where their expenditures were more than their revenues. I think this is a legitimate type of receivership or trusteeship, and is one that is temporary in nature.

However, other locals have, for no particular reason, been put under trusteeship and very little corrective action can be taken by any government, by any authority or even as a result of the knowledge of the public themselves, unless the background circumstances for the trusteeship are given. I think this information should be included in this section. I am aware that the majority of unions use the trusteeship provision in a limited way, and many of them do not use it at all. Those that have used it can usually point to a constitutional clause and I think this information should be included in their return.

Mr. Fulton: May I point out to the hon. member that the clause under discussion does state that that information will be required. The provision refers to precise information as to the date such trusteeship was imposed and the reasons therefor. They will have to give us those reasons and, in this way, we will be able to amass information as to the kind of circumstances which are being relied upon, the kind of control which is being exercised, and whether it is with justification or without, whether there is a constitutional weakness or just what weaknesses, if any, give rise to an undesirable situation. I must emphasize that this information will be in the public portion of the return.

Subparagraph agreed to.

Subparagraph (viii) agreed to.

Mr. Howard: There is a point I should like to raise here in respect of adding a new subparagraph (ix). I do so not only from the point of view of being consistent with the amendment which was moved to the section dealing with companies in connection with their contributions to political parties, but because we have some interest and concern about the matter. I should like to move an amendment substantially the same as the one which was rejected earlier this afternoon. I move:

That the following be added as subparagraph (ix) of paragraph (a) of clause 9

"(ix) the names and addresses of any

(a) candidate for election as a member of the House of Commons, a member of the legislature of a province or a member of the council of the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories, and

Mr. Fulton: I am sure the committee will appreciate that there are many of us who would be interested in getting these returns. However, the hon. member for Skeena will appreciate our impartiality as well in that, having rejected this amendment when it was sought to be applied to companies, we reject the amendment when it is sought to apply it to unions. It is not appropriate in either case under this bill. It might be appropriate as an amendment to the elections act or some other statute.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I might make one comment? The minister gave himself away in respect of impartiality when he said that many of us would be interested, including himself, in seeing this. The minister would like to stick his nose into the contributions by unions, but when it comes to his pets, the corporations in Canada, oh no: he holds up his hands in horror and says, for heaven's sake, don't dig into the places from which we get our dough. We in this party are consistent and we think all these things should be brought to the attention of the public.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the amendment is voted on I would like to say that for the same reason we supported the amendment in relation to companies we shall be consistent, perhaps not intelligently in the hon. gentleman's opinion, in supporting this amendment. However I must say that I believe my hon. friend from Hull said earlier that he was not absolutely sure this was really the right legislation in which to put this, but there seems to be no good reason it should not be put in here if the committee wants it put in here.

Personally I think all this information would be very interesting to all of us in the house. Whether it would be helpful to us is another matter, but it would be interesting and would satisfy our curiosity in the case of both unions and companies. However it seems to me that all this does is illustrate how wise is the party I belong to in advocating a totally new method of financing elections instead of these antiquated methods about which hon. gentlemen are now seeking belatedly to get information.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Howard: I would only say the wiseness of the hon. gentlemen in the official opposition seems to be one that developed as of late, and only after defeat.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would advise the hon. gentleman, who is probably going to be seeking the suffrages of the electorate, that when he gets support he would be well advised to take it and not question it.

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: Yeas, 14; Nays, 34.

Paragraph (b), subparagraphs (i) and (ii) agreed to.

Clause 9, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 10—Relieving provision.

Mr. Fulton: On clause 10 there are two further amendments to be moved by my colleague, the Minister of Defence Production, to the effect that the words "dominion statistician" be substituted for the word "minister" in lines 25, 37 and 43.

Mr. O'Hurley: I move the following amendment:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in lines 25, 37 and 43 on page 8.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 10 as amended, agreed to.

On clause 11—Offence.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask my colleague to move the same amendment with respect to the word "minister" in line 1 on page 9?

Mr. O'Hurley: I move the following amendment:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in line 1 on page 9.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 11 as amended, agreed to.

On clause 12—Demand by registered letter to officer, etc. of union in Canada.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask my colleague to move a similar amendment with respect to the word "minister" in lines 23 and 29, but not on line 25?

Mr. O'Hurley: I move the following amendment:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "dominion statistician" for the word "minister" in lines 23 and 29 on page 9.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 12 as amended agreed to.

On clause 13—Information available for inspection; fee for inspection.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fulton: May I, with the permission of the hon. member, ask my colleague to move a similar amendment? This amendment would be to substitute the words "Secretary of State" for the word "minister" in line 40 and to substitute the words "Minister of Labour" for the word "minister" in line 2 on page 10.

Mr. O'Hurley: I move the following amendment:

That the said bill be further amended by substituting the words "Secretary of State" for the word "minister" in line 40 on page 9 and by substituting the words "Minister of Labour" for the word "minister" in line 2 on page 10.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall this amendment carry?

Mr. Howard: Could the minister tell us what is the effect of this amendment? What is the Secretary of State going to do?

Mr. Fulton: This is a clause based on the fact that copies of part A of the returns filed by both companies and unions with the dominion statistician will be forwarded to the Secretary of State and the Minister of Labour respectively. Under clause 13, now before us, these two ministers will designate an office in their respective departments where these returns will be kept under circumstances where they are available for inspection by any member of the public on payment of the requisite fee.

Mr. Howard: I appreciate that perhaps the government is in great need of money and would like to charge as much as it can for this information to offset the cost of getting it. The clause provides that the fee shall not exceed one dollar, but it seems to me a dollar is a rather substantial amount for someone who wants to search the records and who will find information of so little value. The minister said that 25,000 corporations would be filing returns, and I do not know how many unions there will be. Perhaps the minister has an assessment of their number, but I imagine it would be quite a substantial number.

Should a member of the public want to make a rather extensive search of this information, for some outside purpose rather than a government purpose, and was charged a dollar in each case, then obviously it would cost him $25,000 to make a complete search of all the statements filed by corporations. There would also be a considerable amount of money involved in searching the returns filed by unions. To me a dollar seems an exorbitantly high charge for the small amount of information which will be gleaned from these returns, though perhaps for a dollar charge the information gained in part (B) might be worth while, although I doubt that also. Presumably this information to be supplied under part (A) is public information, so why not make it available to the public upon request rather than soak people for a buck so that they might find out for argument sake, the number of males and the number of females within a particular union or the number of shares that might have been issued with respect to a particular company. A dollar seems far too much to charge for the information which will be available.

Mr. Fulton: I assure the committee that this amount provided here, which, it should be noted, is the maximum fee, not the prescribed fee, is not intended to enable the government to make a profit but merely to cover the cost of maintaining the necessary physical equipment plus the filing, indexing, and so on which will enable the information needed to be located when someone comes in and wishes to inspect it. I shall do my best to persuade my colleague the Minister of Finance, or whoever has the final word with respect to the regulations, to keep the fee to a minimum rather than set it at a maximum of one dollar. If we find as time goes on that there is a profit and that it is an unreasonably high amount, we can reduce it.

It is about four years, now, since I actually practised law, but certainly my recollection is that this fee compares very favourably with fees payable under any of the provincial companies acts for similar services.

Mr. Howard: Again I say it is a pretty high charge to make. Even it were ten cents it would be a high charge to make for the information that is going to be obtained.

Mr. Peters: Is it intended to have one department completely responsible for this information and for publishing statistics in connection with it? Almost every government department has a large conglomeration of information on directorships, ownership of shares and so on—I am thinking particularly of the branch concerned with the supervision of insurance companies. This information is published every year, possibly not in as much detail as we are seeking here. If we were to publish the information we hope to obtain by reason of this bill and make it available for a dollar or two dollars, it might have a certain usefulness and I believe this would be a better way of handling it than the present intention merely to make it available upon payment. If the minister is sincere in his desire to have this information as widely distributed as possible, he might consider this suggestion. We have a library here. I am sure 90 per cent of the people do not go into it, because you can bury anything in those shelves. However, this information could be made available there for scrutiny.

I would strongly recommend that we publish this information on a yearly basis. If there are 25,000 companies affected we might have a fairly heavy document of 500 pages, but it would be available by purchase for those who needed it, if this bill is to serve any purpose at all. The publications media across the country would be able to use it as background information if it were available in this way. If it is not distributed across the country, a predominance of attention is likely to be paid to it by Ottawa correspondents and other people living in Ottawa such as those connected with the universities in this area; there will not be a national distribution of this information, and I think that if the results are to be effective it should be available on a national basis.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 14—Privileged information; prohibition against communication.

Mr. Fulton: There is a substantial amendment to be moved in connection with this clause. Perhaps I could read it and distribute it now; it would then be available for consideration overnight, and discussion tomorrow—unless the hon. member for Megantic has an urgent question to ask.

Mr. Roberge: I was about to ask the chairman if the committee would be agreeable to proceeding paragraph by paragraph in the next clause. I myself will have some amendments to offer. Maybe the amendment proposed by the minister will cover the same ground.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure the hon. member will find that the amendment I propose will take care of many of the ideas he has in mind. Certainly I shall be agreeable to proceeding paragraph by paragraph as we have done in earlier clauses.

Mr. Chairman, it is one minute to ten, and perhaps the committee would consent to the amendment I shall ask my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs to move being taken as read. It would then be available to hon. members tomorrow.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that this amendment be taken as read for the purpose of having it recorded in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill moved:

That the said bill be further amended by striking out subsections (3) and (4) of section 14 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

Idem.

"(3) Subsections (1) and (2) do not apply in respect of proceedings relating to the administration or enforcement of this act.

Exception re employees of dominion bureau of statistics.

(4) An official who is an officer or other person employed in the execution of any duty under the Statistics Act or any regulation thereunder may

(a) communicate or allow to be communicated to any other such official any privileged information obtained under this act, and

(b) allow any other such official to inspect or have access to any statement or other writing containing any privileged information obtained under this act.

Exception re other persons for purpose stated.

(5) Any official or authorized person may, for any purpose relating to the determination of policy in connection with the formulation of any law of Canada or the ascertainment of any matter necessarily incidental thereto,

(a) communicate or allow to be communicated to any other such person any privileged information obtained under this act, and

(b) allow any other such person to inspect or have access to any statement or other writing containing any privileged information obtained under this act.

Use of information.

(6) Notwithstanding anything in this section, in no case shall any privileged information obtained under this act be communicated to any person for the purpose of facilitating the institution or furtherance of any proceedings brought or taken or that may be brought or taken under any law of Canada other than this act."

and by renumbering subsections (5) and (6) of section 14 thereof as subsections (7) and (8), respectively.

Clause 14 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might ask the leader of the house if in indicating the business which the government proposes for tomorrow he could also, as he sometimes does when he is in a benevolent mood, give us a bit of a preview of next week.

Mr. Churchill: I anticipated that we would have finished this bill today, plus the supplementary estimates, and I was going to call for tomorrow the resolution in the name of the Prime Minister dealing with the electoral boundaries commission. However, we shall have to carry on with the present bill, Bill No. C-38, and complete it tomorrow, followed by supplementary estimates; except that I reserve the right to call, after Bill No. C-38, the resolution in the name of the Prime Minister if, on consultation with him in the morning, it is indicated that he would like to go ahead with it. If that be the case, I will of course advise both parties.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did I understand the minister to say that will be called as the first item?

Mr. Churchill: No; this bill will be the first item, Bill No. C-38.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about next week?

Mr. Churchill: Oh, well, I am not in a benevolent mood so I cannot go into that.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 6, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—REFERENCE TO REPORT IN OTTAWA "JOURNAL"

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of an item which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of last evening, which states "Denies Liberal Protests". I am not going into it and waste the time of the house. It purports to suggest that I came out of a committee sitting in camera yesterday and disclosed what was going on in committee. I was called out of the committee, and all I said was that I did not know what the person who asked the question was talking about. I made no disclosure at any time, and I simply wished to set the record straight.

TRADE

SUMMARY OF INDIRECT BENEFITS TO CANADA FROM U.S. TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table three copies, in English and French, of a document summarizing the tariff concessions of interest to Canada arising from the United States negotiations with countries other than Canada during the GATT tariff conference. On March 7, 1962 the Minister of Finance tabled the interim agreement between Canada and the United States. At that time he indicated that in addition to the agreement with Canada the United States had concluded negotiations with several other countries, and that the details of the indirect benefits accruing to Canada from these other arrangements would be made public when the results had been analysed.

This information will be found in the document I am tabling. In addition to direct United States concessions to Canada covering $65 million of Canadian trade, the United States made concessions to other countries on items affecting $85 million of Canadian exports to the United States in 1960, mostly manufactured articles. Moreover, concessions granted to the United States by the European economic community cover approximately $140 million of Canadian trade with the community. Canada will also benefit from a number of tariff concessions granted to the United States by Finland, Norway, Portugal, Switzerland and Peru.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the document tendered by him?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN DISPUTE RESPECTING PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the disastrous effects the pilots' strike might have on the Canadian economy, does the minister intend to call them to Ottawa immediately in order to consider the grievances they brought before him?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I asked the officials of my department today to get in touch with the pilots and the shipowners so that both parties might be brought together today. As hon. members know, requests were made by the pilots to the shipowners, and the latter will have to pay the costs. That is why I think that pilots and shipowners should get together.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Under the Canada Shipping Act, it is the Minister of Transport who is the authority with respect to pilotage in Canada. Therefore, I feel it is his duty to convene the pilots to Ottawa without delay.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, that first step will be taken to begin with.

(Text):

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has the minister received any communication or protests from the United States authorities in charge of shipping with regard to the strike, and if so what answer has been given to indicate to the United States authorities the likely duration of the strike?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, when I left my office this morning I had not received any protest or any communication from United States shipping authorities.

[Later:]

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, is there any truth to the reports which appeared in this morning's papers to the effect that in order to reduce its expenses and following pressure from the treasury board, the Department of Transport has asked pilots to contribute part of their salaries to the purchase of aids to navigation for the maintenance of the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, such a request was made about a month ago. We asked the pilots to consider the possibility of contributing to the purchase of a launch to carry the pilots from the wharf at Les Escoumains to the ships which pass at that place. That craft would be for the exclusive use of pilots. Officials of my department have inquired with the pilots as to the possibility of their contributing to the purchase of such a boat which would be for their exclusive use.

Mr. Deschatelets: Did the officials of the department receive a reply from the pilots concerning that suggestion?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the suggestion was turned down by the pilots.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

HYDRAULICS DIVISION, WATER RESOURCES BRANCH, NORTHERN AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources because I have quite a number of constituents who have been waiting for this information. In view of the fact that my question No. 229, which asked for biographies and information on half a dozen members of the water resources branch of the minister's department, was passed as an order for return on March 12, as recorded on page 1694 of Hansard for that date, could the minister let me know the reasons for the delay in providing this information, and whether the apparent dam has anything to do with United States influence?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I can assure my hon. friend that very careful attention has been given to this matter. As a matter of fact the biographies of the personnel have been researched very carefully, so he can assure his constituents they will have all the necessary information. I do not believe I should comment on the latter part of the question because I do not want to create an international incident.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, which was delayed because of the intrusion of this teachers' problem. Will I get the information I seek in time to use my frank in sending it out to my constituents?

Mr. Dinsdale: I can assure the hon. member on that point. We should have it by next week, as a matter of fact.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ALLEGED POLITICAL ACTIVITY OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like to reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The hon. member drew my attention to an editorial entitled "Is This the Way to Campaign", which appeared in the March 15 issue of News of the North, a weekly paper published by one of the more prominent members of the Liberal party in the town of Yellowknife.

I have now had an opportunity to examine this editorial, and I think it is fair to say that the interpretation of the situation is a Liberal one and therefore somewhat distorted. It refers to a school teacher at Hay River and a welfare worker of my department at Fort Smith, who are seeking the Progressive Conservative nomination for the Northwest Territories. It suggests that the position of these two potential candidates would be quite different if they were seeking the Liberal nomination.

I do not want to make any obvious comment on that, and I will leave it to hon. members to draw their own conclusions. I can assure my hon. friends that my department has a single and consistent policy that is applied uniformly whenever it is found that a civil servant is engaged in partisan work. This policy is dictated by law under section 61 of the revised Civil Service Act, which provides that civil servants are not to engage in partisan work in connection with any federal or provincial election. Civil servants who are nominated or who are actively seeking nomination are asked to resign and, failing that, are subject to dismissal following a full and proper inquiry to protect them against unjust dismissal.

The civil servant in question, Mr. Eugene Rheaume, acted quite honourably and resigned of his own accord well before nomination day which, according to News of the North, has yet to be held.

The case of the school teacher, Mr. John Scott, is quite different. He is not a civil servant and therefore not subject to section 61 of the Civil Service Act. As my hon. friend knows, education in Canada is a provincial matter and teachers in the north, while recruited and paid by the federal government, are really carrying out a territorial responsibility.

There is a long established tradition in this country that school teachers in the provinces are free to seek election to federal or provincial office, and we have not wished to discriminate against territorial teachers by denying them any of the privileges enjoyed under the provincial school systems from which they are normally recruited. The house will recall that the rights of school teachers in this respect were championed in a long, uphill and eventually successful battle by a respected member of this house, the former leader of the C.C.F. party, Mr. M. J. Coldwell, one of the many school teachers who over the years have rendered distinguished service in this house.

However, Mr. Speaker, in order to be completely above suspicion I understand that the school teacher concerned in this instance is going to seek leave so that no aspersions or suspicions can be cast on his activities. I can only add, Mr. Speaker, that if either of these gentlemen is successful in obtaining the Progressive Conservative nomination—

Mr. Hellyer: He will be sorry.

Mr. Dinsdale: —he will be the next member of parliament for the Northwest Territories.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and ask the hon. lady whether the position with respect to teachers, which the minister of northern affairs has enunciated in the case of teachers in the territories, is also applicable to the teachers in the Indian schools under the hon. lady's jurisdiction.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I cannot give a definite answer to that because—

Mr. McIlraith: You sure cannot.

Mrs. Fairclough: What did the hon. member say?

Mr. McIlraith: I said you sure cannot.

Mrs. Fairclough: Perhaps the hon. member can wait until I have finished my remarks, instead of casting in his little asides. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate knows that all the teachers who teach Indian students are not employees of the department. Some of them are under the provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was only asking about those who are.

Mrs. Fairclough: But if they are civil servants they come under the regulations of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I put a supplementary question to the minister of northern affairs and ask if he could say whether a government chartered aircraft, with welfare workers aboard, is making a tour of the eastern Arctic?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, this is not a supplementary to the question under consideration, and I have no knowledge of this situation. Was this reported in News of the North too?

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, I am seeking information that has been raised as a result of the hon. gentleman's answer. I am abiding by the rules in seeking this information. Would the minister find out whether this is correct?

Mr. Speaker: Since the hon. member wishes to discuss the matter as a point of order, I agree that it was not a supplementary question. However, it has been asked, and if the minister wishes to answer it he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. Churchill: Put it on the order paper.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, my only further comment is that I was also seeking information—

Mr. McIlraith: You have no right to do so.

Mr. Dinsdale: —because I would like to know the basis for this question.

TRANSPORT

SOULANGES CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFER TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell us if he has received a reply from the provincial authorities, following the order in council passed by the federal government for the transfer of the Soulanges canal to the province of Quebec? If so, could he acquaint the house with the nature of that reply?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on February 26, I wrote a letter to the Quebec government authorities in which I included a copy of the order in council transferring to the province of Quebec the ownership and administration of the Soulanges canal.

In that letter, I requested a copy of the order in council passed by the government of the province of Quebec to authorize the acceptance of the transfer, but I have yet to receive a reply.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. How does the minister account for such negligence on the part of the provincial authorities in this matter?

Mr. Tremblay: They have no money.

Mr. Johnson: They are bankrupt.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has received an invitation from the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to a commonwealth prime ministers' conference on September 10, or some other date in September; and if so, what reply he has given to that invitation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there have been communications between the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the various prime ministers of the commonwealth asking their opinions on the subject of a date for a prime ministers' conference and also asking whether, having regard to various circumstances, and in particular to the fact that discussions with relation to the common market application of the United Kingdom will under normal circumstances not be completed before late summer, a date in September would be satisfactory.

The attitude taken by the Canadian government is that, having had from the government of the United Kingdom the assurance that no final decision in connection with their application will be determined by the United Kingdom government until such time as a commonwealth prime ministers' conference has had the opportunity of looking into the matter, considering its implications in general and hearing the views of the United Kingdom government, the date would be satisfactory.

Mr. Pearson: Does the Prime Minister not think that if the conference is to be held in September he should consult with his successor before replying to the invitation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, hope springs eternal in the breast of the opposition. My experience in the last two days has been that the hon. member's expectations are not going to be realized.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—LAY-OFFS OF MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, but before asking it perhaps the house would permit me to draw to its attention the presence in the gallery of members of the young Progressive Conservative association of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the hon. member is not spying strangers, and I shall not have to put the question.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, surely you should not permit this kind of obstruction of the work of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jones: They certainly stand between you and office, anyway.

Mr. McGrath: May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has he received a request from the acting premier of Newfoundland seeking the co-operation of the federal government in appraising the very serious situation existing at Bell island as a result of the lay-offs there by Dosco, with a view to the provision of federal assistance? If so, is the Prime Minister in a position to report at this time?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): There was a communication in that regard and Mr. Roy MacCuish, assistant director of the vocational training branch of the Department of Labour, will go to Newfoundland to discuss with officials of the government of Newfoundland possible solutions to the situation at Bell island.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN DISPUTE RESPECTING PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him what action his department is taking to bring about a settlement of the dispute between the shipping federation of Canada and the St. Lawrence river pilots?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter does not come under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

TRADE

TEXTILES—REPORTED INCREASE IN JAPANESE QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him if it is a fact that Canada has agreed to a moderate increase in the voluntary export quotas which Japan will impose on shipments of textiles to Canada this year.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, there has been no agreement yet. These matters have been under discussion for several months, and when there is a determination of the question it will be made public.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR EXTENSIVE USE OF CANADIAN WOOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wonder if I could ask the Acting Minister of Public Works if he is now in a position to answer the question I put to him on Wednesday, in which I asked that the greatest possible use of wood should be made when putting up government buildings in Ottawa.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Minister of Public Works): I thought I had dealt with that question the other day. However, the suggestion made by the hon. member has already been considered by the Department of Public Works, and I believe that Canadian wood will be used to the maximum possible extent.

[Later:]

Mr. Paul Tardif (Russell): May I direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. Did the minister take any action to satisfy the demands or the protests of the lumber industry of Canada in connection with the proposed forest products research building being built on Montreal road and designed almost entirely devoid of lumber? Would the minister assure the house and the lumber industry that this state of affairs will be rectified?

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): The representations which have been made by the lumber industry concerning the building in question have been given the utmost consideration. There are various technical features in connection with this building, however, which must also be taken into consideration by the Department of Public Works. The hon. member may be sure, though, that the representations which have been made have received the greatest degree of consideration as far as the Department of Forestry is concerned.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPHET RIVER RESERVE, B.C.—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether she has yet received a report from Indian commissioner Boys in British Columbia with respect to the situation at the Prophet river reserve north of Nelson.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): A report has not yet been received, but we are expecting one any day now.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I direct a related question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and ask if he saw a report in last night's Ottawa Journal to the effect that Dr. Cunningham, who was sent by his department to investigate this situation, had not gone on from Prophet River to Fort Nelson to inspect the records there of the doctor who had given the first assistance to the Indians who were ill on the reserve, and if he can say whether that report is correct?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I did see the report referred to. As I indicated to the house the other day, the doctor who acts on behalf of the department in the area did visit the reserve last Saturday and his report, which I gave to the house, was reassuring. Dr. Barclay, head of the Pacific region of Indian and northern health services, has been very concerned about this matter and is keeping a close watch on the situation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REPORTED EXCESS OF VITAMIN D IN FOODS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): On Tuesday last the hon. member for Skeena asked for my comments on statements attributed to Dr. William Cochrane, of Dalhousie University, concerning the amounts of vitamin D in foods. This subject has been under discussion in my department for some time, and consideration is being given to the possibility of amending the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act to limit the addition of vitamin D to certain specified foods.

In connection with the possibility of excess vitamin D being taken by individuals in foods and medicines, the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act were amended last year to reduce the amount of vitamin D in medicinal vitamin preparations to one half the previous level. In view of the concern over the indiscriminate addition of vitamin D to foods, the matter is under current discussion with the Canadian council on nutrition.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Can the minister say whether the same concern is being exhibited by his department with respect to the so-called multiple vitamins which are on sale, and which are equally detrimental?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The department is studying all these questions continuously.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED COMMENTS BY MINISTER ON ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration based on an article which appeared in the Hamilton Spectator of April 4. Was the minister correctly reported as having said that the current Immigration Act is a patchwork affair which she would like to see completely revised? If so, was she speaking personally or on behalf of the government?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): That is precisely what I said.

Mr. Hellyer: Then I wonder if the minister would explain why, if she has felt that way since at least April 22, 1959—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest the hon. member take that up when the estimates are called.

Mr. Hellyer: Could I put the question directly? Can the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member seems—

[Mr. Monteith (Perth).]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to raise a point of order with respect to my hon. friend's question. If I understand Your Honour correctly, there was a suggestion that this be taken up on the estimates. We have no assurance that there will be any opportunity to take this up on the estimates, and it is surely an urgent matter if the minister expresses the view that the law is completely unsatisfactory, as the hon. lady did in Hamilton. It is surely competent for us to ask her why, in four years, she has done nothing about it.

Mrs. Fairclough: In the first place I must take exception to the hon. member's words. I did not say the law was completely unsatisfactory.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, largely unsatisfactory. I will amend my proposition.

Mrs. Fairclough: Maybe your confrère will hand you the article so you can read it yourself. At the time I brought in the new regulations I stated that I was not satisfied with the act. I have said that on many occasions, and I have also stated that after the regulations have had an opportunity to work the act will be revised.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the minister propose to submit an amendment to the act this session?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The point of order was before the house, not the question. I expressed an opinion which, notwithstanding the views of a very experienced member of the house, I still think it is correct. This subject is more properly one for debate. If the estimates are not appropriate perhaps the hon. member for Trinity will find another suitable time to discuss the matter.

PARLIAMENT HILL

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF TUNNEL FROM WEST BLOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works or, in his absence, to the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary. Would the acting minister advise the house if the tunnel now under construction between the west block and the centre block will be completed before the dissolution of the present parliament, or before the opening of the sixth session of the twenty-fourth parliament?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Minister of Public Works): I think that depends on when parliament is dissolved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTING—OFFICIAL CONVEYANCE TO U.S. GOVERNMENT OF CANADIAN VIEWS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government has officially conveyed to the United States government the views which have recently and publicly been expressed by both my hon. friend and the Prime Minister, namely that the United States should not resume nuclear testing?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I dealt with this question in my first speech at the disarmament conference in Geneva, when I said this:

> Canada deeply regretted that the Soviet union last August broke a three year moratorium on testing, for we are opposed to all nuclear weapon tests. In this we share the view of most other countries. Indeed, the major nuclear powers themselves have stated at this very conference that they would like to see all tests stopped. However, they now find themselves unable to reach final accord owing to disagreement on inspection. Is there no alternative to another series of tests with all the harmful consequences that such action could bring? Is it not possible, within the framework of this committee, to make the further effort which is required to break the deadlock? In my opinion, such an effort must be made, for otherwise the prospects of this conference itself could be seriously threatened.

As the Leader of the Opposition will know, they are still working on this problem at the conference in Geneva.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO LICENSING OF SMALL CRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport this question now that the small boat season is upon us. Why has the Department of Transport not proceeded with the licensing and disciplining of small craft, as was indicated last session was likely?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I am sorry, but I must ask my hon. friend to repeat his question.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder why the Department of Transport has not proceeded with the policy of the licensing and disciplining of small craft as was indicated last session as likely for this year.

Mr. Balcer: We have had a small boat conference this year. It is a yearly conference. The matter was discussed with people interested in this problem and also with representatives of the provinces. The matter has been studied at length, and we are still in negotiation and discussion with the various interested parties.

Mr. Fisher: I have a supplementary question. May I ask the minister whether a public opinion poll was held at this year's conference as was done at last year's conference? If so, what was the result of the poll?

Mr. Balcer: I have not the result of the poll about which my hon. friend is talking. I am sorry, but I cannot give that result now.

TELEVISION

STRANRAER, SASK.—GRANTING OF LICENCE FOR SATELLITE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Yesterday the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked if I would ascertain the date on which a licence was granted to the satellite television station at Stranraer. A licence in the form of an authorization to operate was given by telegram on April 4, 1962. In due course this will be confirmed by a formal document.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the minister whether that telegram had been sent before the minister answered the questions in the house on that date?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED STONE CARVINGS OF MEMBERS OF PRESS GALLERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Minister of Public Works. It is based on my long campaign for the proper and permanent recognition of the role of the fourth estate in parliament and in our democracy.

In view of the fact that a new parliamentary stone carver, Miss Eleanor Milne, has recently been appointed, would the minister consider taking advantage of this opportunity to mark the new Elizabethan age by recommending the enshrinement in stone, as decorative gargoyles, of the heads of members of the fourth estate whose Celtic, Roman and Elizabethan features would be most appropriate for this purpose?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what kind of gargoyles the members of the press gallery would make. However, I am certain that my old friend the hon. member for Kootenay West would make an excellent one.

[Later:]

USE OF TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT PLANES FOR ELECTION PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Transport?

What amount is paid to the Department of Transport by the Conservative party for the use of its airplanes for election purposes?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Nothing at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caron: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there an agreement between the Conservative party and the Department of Transport concerning those flights?

Mr. Balcer: Absolutely not.

(Text):

INCOME TAX

EXAMINATION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION BY JUSTICE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he has received a copy of Bill No. C-82.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-82 is not before me.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the question I asked the minister was whether he had received it from the Clerk of the house.

Mr. Fulton: If Bill No. C-82 is the one which the hon. member attempted by ruse to get before the house the other day, I have not received it.

HEALTH INSURANCE

QUEBEC—REPORTED ADVERTISEMENTS CONCERNING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware that the Quebec provincial government, out of the taxpayers' money, is paying for advertisements in the papers and over television and radio stations under the pretext of informing the population on the operation of hospital insurance in Quebec, in such a way as to give the people the impression that the government of the province of Quebec alone is paying the cost of that joint federal-provincial program?

[Mr. Green.]

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not aware of such advertising, Mr. Speaker. However, if such advertising were being done it would be entirely incorrect, as the federal government pays approximately 50 per cent of all hospitalization costs in the province.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

The house resumed, from Thursday, April 5, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada—Mr. Fulton—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 14—Privileged information; prohibition against communication.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last night we were considering clause 14 of the bill and the amendment thereto moved by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Shall this amendment carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, before the house took recess last night, the committee had decided to study this clause, paragraph by paragraph, as it has been doing so far.

I have a few remarks to make with regard to subsection 1 of clause 14 which is one of the important clauses of this bill, because it informs us that section B of the return that the corporations or the unions must file is secret, confidential or privileged.

This clause also indicates the guarantees provided by the act to the corporations or unions which will have to divulge to the government their financial structure, in particular.

As stipulated in this clause, authorized officials are the only ones who may divulge certain details of the returns to other authorized persons or officials.

Under this clause we must guarantee adequate protection to these corporations and unions. To that effect, I feel that clause 14, subsection 1, should be amended by eliminating the word "knowingly", which is found on page 10, line 12.

Normally, under the Criminal Code, the prosecution has to prove conclusively the guilt of the accused. It is the British tradition and only in very special cases can we waive that principle under which the burden of proof rests with the prosecution.

In this case, I am very reluctant to make the suggestion I have in mind, but I feel that corporations and unions which have to file returns with the government should be given the utmost protection. If officials are in a position to communicate certain information to other people, companies must absolutely be protected.

An excellent means of protection, in addition to legal proceedings, would lighten the onus of proof or, inversely, make defence more difficult.

I do hope that the Minister of Justice has been able to follow my remarks, if not directly, then through simultaneous translation.

I also hope that he, as well as the committee, will take into consideration the amendment I am about to introduce, because I sincerely believe that it will afford still greater protection to corporations and unions which will be required to file these returns.

(Text):

I move, Mr. Chairman:

That clause 14, section 1, be amended by striking from line 12 thereof the word "knowingly".

(Translation):

The Chairman: I think the committee is now considering an amendment which was submitted last night by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill). Therefore, we should dispose of this amendment before we can entertain the amendment of the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge).

Mr. Caron: I believe the minister admitted last night—

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: May I suggest with leave of the committee that the amendment last night amends subparagraphs 3 and 4 and substistutes new subparagraphs 3, 4 and 5. I had it moved last night in order that it might be available to the committee for study and consideration. Unless you see some reason against it, sir, I personally would have no objection to dealing with subparagraphs 1 and 2 and any amendments it may be wished to move there, and when we come to subparagraph 3 perhaps we could then consider directly the amendment moved last night.

The Chairman: That would be quite all right. We will defer study of the previous amendment and will consider subclauses 1 and 2. Therefore I put before the committee the amendment that has been proposed by the hon. member for Megantic.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I find some difficulty in accepting this amendment, because it seems to me that to delete the word "knowingly" would be to remove the element of mens rea which must be proven in any charge of a criminal nature. When I say "remove" it, perhaps that is going too far, but it would certainly leave that matter open to question. We feel that by the decision to have the dominion bureau of statistics as the initial repository of all returns and the permanent repository of part B returns, plus the changes which have now been suggested in subclauses 3 and 4 of this clause, we have adequately safeguarded the confidentiality of part B returns. I should hesitate very much indeed to create an offence of this nature which would not be affected by the use of the word "knowingly". I would have very real doubts whether to do that would not take away from the person who might be accused of such an action the ordinary defences that he would have with respect to a charge of a criminal nature.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the legal knowledge of the minister, but it would seem to me that if we are going to make certain information as privileged as we are doing under section B in each part of the bill, then we certainly want to ensure that those people in the public service who have access to that privileged information have every right to protect themselves. It would seem that with the word "knowingly" we are placing a great onus upon the individual to prove his innocence rather than having the prosecution prove his guilt.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I admit that where the word "knowingly" is used the opinion, thought or intention must be proven. It is then more difficult for a civil servant to defend himself. On the other hand, we must recognize that the object of this subclause is to safeguard confidential returns filed with the department.

And because of the word "knowingly" the government's counsel position is made much more difficult. It would be just as hard to prove that it was done knowingly than to prove perjury, because you would have to prove an intention.

It is only by way of an exception that we ask that the word "knowingly" be struck out of that clause, because we sincerely think that the accused must be protected.

But in the case of officials of a department, people who have heavy responsibilities, since they have access to the returns, and who are conscious of those responsibilities, I believe that we should be more strict with such persons than with somebody from the outside.

That is why we insist on the striking out, in paragraph 1, of the word "knowingly", or "sciemment" in the French version.

(Text):

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the remarks made by the Minister of Justice when he said that the element of mens rea should be present in a criminal offence. With that I agree. This is the general principle on which our Criminal Code is based. However, I wish to reaffirm what I said before and what the hon. member for Hull has just said in French, that this bill is quite exceptional in that it more or less infringes on the liberty of companies and unions in the sense that the law is going to force these bodies to report to the government on their financial structures and this information is made confidential by virtue of clause 14.

If this were an ordinary bill I would not make such a request, but the full rights of the defence are deeply imbedded in our hearts in Canada. I feel that in this case, where people are forced by law to give this information, they must receive the fullest possible protection. I believe that in this way we will more fully protect the companies and the unions that are obliged to give this information to the government. It is in that sense that I should like the minister to think over the matter and accept the amendment to strike out the word "knowingly".

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, if I were convinced that the removal of the word "knowingly" protected the companies and the unions more fully I might be disposed, to a greater extent than I find myself at the moment, to consider the amendment favourably. After all, what is the protection we want? The protection that the companies and unions want is not to see the civil servant prosecuted; they just do not want the information communicated at all. I cannot really see that taking out the word "knowingly" would give them increased protection because frankly, Mr. Chairman, I have enough confidence in the public service that when a statute contains a clear prohibition like this, they are going to be scrupulous to see to it that they do not act in breach of that prohibition.

What we do want, however, is a provision that if one wilfully, and that is imported by the word "knowingly", does so act then he should be liable to a heavy penalty. I do not believe that the removal of the word "knowingly" is going to make the ordinary public servant much more careful. I do not believe it will deter the unscrupulous public servant, in the very rare case where he exists, whether or not we have the word "knowingly" in here. I do not know, therefore, that the removal of the word increases the protection. I think it might expose to a penalty a person who acted entirely accidentally and who had allowed this information to be communicated.

I am impressed by the fact that in none of the representations I received—and I received a number of them expressing concern with regard to the confidentiality of the information—was there a reference to the use of the word "knowingly". None of them requested the removal of the word "knowingly". I have just sent out for the Statistics Act, and it has now been placed before me. As is well known, the Statistics Act contains very strict safeguards with regard to the confidentiality of the information received under it. The bureau, under the Statistics Act, as I said before has built up an enviable reputation and an excellent relationship with those who file returns on the basis that they know the information will remain confidential. Section 39 of the Statistics Act reads:

> Every person employed under this act who (a) wilfully discloses or makes known directly or indirectly to any person not entitled under this act or any regulation to receive the same, any information obtained by him in the course of his employment—

The Statistics Act, while it does not use the word "knowingly" does use the word "wilfully". I would hope, therefore, the hon. member would consider we would be justified in leaving the word "knowingly" in here.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 9; nays, 37.

Subclause 1 of clause 14 agreed to.

Subclause 2 of clause 14 agreed to.

The Chairman: Subclause 3 is the one under which the amendment proposed last night by the Minister of Veterans Affairs may be discussed.

On subclause 3.

Mr. Howard: If this amendment carries, will it then dispose of all the clauses? Does it not delete the rest of the subclauses?

Mr. Fulton: No; the amendment does call for some renumbering. I would think, in accordance with the arrangement we have been following, when the three specific subparagraphs in the amendment have been carried, we would go on to deal with the other subparagraph separately, presently numbered 5 which would become No. 7.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I think that this clause is too wide, in that it allows too many persons to look into these confidential documents. The clause reads as follows:

(Text):

An official who is an officer or other person employed in the execution of any duty under the Statistics Act or any regulation thereunder may (a) communicate or allow to be communicated—

(Translation):

I think that is too comprehensive. Under this clause, all employees of a department, where there are thousands of them, could go through confidential returns. In this way the government puts some of them in a situation where they can use their status of employees to get the information they need. I feel that is a bit too comprehensive, and I suggest that we should strike out the words "other persons".

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: Without this amendment in new subparagraph 4 we would have a situation which would, in effect, stultify altogether the processing of the information which is being returned. We have now provided that the returns will be filed with the dominion bureau of statistics. They will be received by an official in the bureau of statistics. These returns obviously have to be processed in the bureau; they have to be passed from person to person in the bureau in order that they may be dealt with and processed. If we did not insert this provision (4)(a) which allows one official in the bureau of statistics to communicate with another official, then the return would stay in the mail clerk's hands and could not be passed along because of the operation of subparagraph 1 of this clause.

That is the simple reason. This is to avoid freezing it in one place with the person who first opened the mail. We had to provide the freedom to allow this information to be communicated from one official to another, but within the bureau the confidential parts will remain entirely confidential and will not be disclosed except in accordance with subparagraph 1 of this clause.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps the minister should accept the idea advanced with respect to this matter of communicating information. This would then leave the person who opens the mail free to dispose of the information in the wastepaper basket, which is as good a place as any for some of the useless information.

Mr. Caron: I admit that the minister is quite right, that the one who is called upon to open the mail may know of something in it, but as the clause is written it states "may communicate or allow to be communicated to an official or authorized person any privileged information obtained." It is generally the case that the one who opens the mail communicates the information. I really believe the provision is too wide for the protection of those who will be sending confidential reports to the government.

Mr. Fulton: Unfortunately, from the point of view put forward by the hon. member, we are in the position that the act of manually passing documents from one person to another is an act of communication. Communication need not only be oral, and we would be literally freezing documents in the hands of the person who first received them unless we put in this provision removing that restriction.

Amendment agreed to.

On renumbered subsection 7—Offence.

Mr. Caron: That includes subclauses 3, 4, 5, and 6, does it?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Caron: This would be the four subclauses moved last night?

Mr. Fulton: That is right.

Mr. Caron: In the other part of the bill we provided for a fine not exceeding $50, but I think in this clause we should provide for the protection of those who file confidential reports, stipulating a minimum fine and a minimum prison term. For this reason I move the following amendment:

After the word conviction in the third line "to a fine not less than one hundred dollars and not exceeding one thousand dollars or an imprisonment of a term of not less than one week and not exceeding three months, or both such fine and imprisonment."

Mr. Fulton: I regret if the necessity of opposing this amendment makes me seem indisposed to consider these matters, but personally I feel very strongly that the philosophy now prevailing against the fixing of minimum sentences and penalties is the correct philosophy. Having provided the maximum that parliament wants to set, I believe punishment should be adjusted in accordance with the seriousness of the offence at the discretion of the court. Parliament is here providing quite substantial penalties, a fine of up to $1,000 and imprisonment for up to three months. Therefore parliament is indicating that a person who knowingly communicates this information is, in our view, guilty of a potentially serious offence. I do not think we should further tie the hands of the courts in assessing all the factors that are relevant and in imposing the appropriate penalties.

I do not oppose the amendment just because it is advanced by the hon. member for Hull. It is just because I find the principle involved in the amendment contrary to what I believe is sound in regard to penalties.

Mr. Howard: I agree with the minister in his contention about minimum sentences. That should be no concern of ours. A maximum sentence should be stipulated by parliament and the courts should be left free to impose sentences up to that maximum. However, before proceeding further perhaps the minister could indicate what penalties are contained in the Statistics Act.

Mr. Fulton: The Statistics Act contains a provision that a person who wilfully discloses or uses any information for the purpose of speculating in any product or article—there are two offences here—is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or a prison term not exceeding five years, or to both. It is pretty fierce.

Mr. Howard: I am more partial to what the minister is proposing in this bill. I think the penalty provided in the Statistics Act is overstringent.

Mr. Fulton: It is pretty fierce.

Mr. Howard: Then if it is pretty fierce perhaps the minister will talk to his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and influence him with his opinions about penology matters so that we can revise the Statistics Act sometime later.

Mr. Matheson: I am sure all of us are sympathetic to what the minister said about criminology, but I wonder whether the government and the country really understand the extent to which information of a very special nature is now being placed in certain hands. A person who is able to gather highly secretive information may find it has a valuable sale value in unscrupulous areas.

Here we have the government peeking in on corporations and unions, and certain civil servants will be able to apprise themselves of many of the secrets of corporations and unions that heretofore have been in other hands. It would be a very simple and easy thing for this information to be gathered together and used in a completely unscrupulous way. As I said previously, we on this side of the house ask what is the purpose in this; because the gathering of this information in a special way is something new in our approach to legislation. Here we are no longer dealing with one or two ministers; we are really dealing with three. Now we have government with its eyes on the secret affairs of a great many corporations and unions, and it could be tremendously damaging to either for some information to be disclosed.

I wonder whether the minister cannot think of some other way in which there could be more effective teeth put in the bill to protect the secrecy, the privileged character of clause 14. Everything he has said we understand, and it makes sense, yet surely the effect of it is to permit highly confidential material to get out in a way which would damage those people interested.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please rise.

Mr. Fulton: This is subclause 7?

The Chairman: Yes, this is renumbered subclause 7 and the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Hull.

Amendment (Mr. Caron) negatived: Yeas, 11; nays, 29.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall renumbered subclause 7 carry?

Renumbered subclause 7 as amended agreed to.

On renumbered subsection 8—Definitions. "Official"—"Authorized person".

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I think this is the worst clause in the bill. We see here:

> "official" means any person employed in, or occupying a position of responsibility in, the service of Her Majesty, and includes any person formerly so employed or formerly occupying such a position,

The other paragraph of this subclause reads:

> "authorized person" means any person engaged or employed, or formerly engaged or employed, by or on behalf of Her Majesty for any purpose relating to the administration or enforcement of this act.

So the bill goes as far as saying that anybody formerly employed by any department of the government comes within the provisions of this subclause, because it does not say "formerly employed only in the department of statistics". I think this is going much too far, because most of the people in the country could come in and ask to see what there is in most of these reports, and they could see them. Therefore it is really dangerous, and I cannot understand how the Minister of Justice could let this pass without asking that the clause be rephrased so as to provide greater protection for those who submit reports.

I do not want to make a long debate of this matter, but I move that the subclause be amended as follows:

> (a) "official" means any person employed in, or occupying a position of responsibility, authorized by the minister or deputy minister.
> (b) "authorized person" means any person employed by or on behalf of Her Majesty, authorized by the minister or the deputy minister for any purpose relating to the administration or enforcement of this act.

The Chairman: Moved by the hon. member for Hull that renumbered subclause 8 be amended as follows:

> (a) "official" means any person employed in, or occupying a position of responsibility, authorized by the minister or deputy minister.

(b) "authorized person" means any person employed by or on behalf of Her Majesty, authorized by the minister or the deputy minister for any purpose relating to the administration or enforcement of this act.

The question is on the amendment.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the reason it is necessary to put in this definition subclause which we are now considering, referring to persons employed in or formerly occupying such a position, is in order to avoid the possibility that an official who received information while he was employed, and therefore being an official or person subject to the limitations as to disclosure contained in this bill, would by resigning no longer be an official and subject to the limitations contained herein and would be free to communicate that information or to use it for stock market purposes, and so on.

In other words, if we do not put in some provision such as this to ensure that the burden of secrecy shall continue to apply to a person even after he resigns from the public service, then by the mere fact of resignation such a person would be out from under the responsibility to maintain confidentiality with respect to information he received while a member of the public service. So the inclusion of the words "person formerly so employed", far from enlarging the possibility of improper disclosure, narrows that possibility by reason of the fact I have just mentioned.

You have to read this subclause in context with the operative subclauses 3, 4 and 5, which together make it clear that the only purpose for which information obtained under this act can be communicated to anyone is for a purpose relating to the determination of policy in connection with the formulation of any law of Canada or the ascertaining of any matter necessarily incidental thereto. That means that senior officials may discuss together and with members of the government information that has come to their attention and the implications thereof, and advise and consult mutually as to policies that should be devised and implemented to take care of the situations thus disclosed. That is the only purpose for which the information can be communicated even by an official or authorized person.

When such a person ceases to be a member of the public service he has no right, obviously, to disclose that information under those terms; he cannot disclose it to outside persons for such purposes. But he would no longer be subject to the limitation contained therein unless he were brought under it by the inclusion in the definition of "official" as a person formerly so employed.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I admit that it might be wise to have protection in respect of those who might leave the department after being employed by the government, but I do not think this is the way it should be done. I think there should be a special subclause dealing with those persons so employed in the past. It could easily be put in subclause 5 renumbered 7 before the word "official". This subclause would then read: "...being an ex-official or authorized person". But I think it would have been much clearer to put in a special subclause dealing specifically with those who might have been employed by the department and who had left the department to go and work for somebody else. This would have made the law much clearer, and it would have afforded greater protection for those who with confidence place their reports before the department of statistics.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, with regard to my first question to the hon. member for Hull when he moved the amendment, I thought I understood his objections to it, but listening to him just now I find that in fact he is speaking against his own amendment. You either have a prohibition in there against former officials or employees, or you do not. The amendment of the Liberal party is designed to take out that prohibition. You cannot argue both ways if you want to make any sense out of it. Keeping in mind the general concept of employer-employee relationships I feel that once a person ceases to be employed he is a free agent and on his own; I do not think we should hound such individuals with strictures once they have left their employment.

I would be prepared to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member on that basis, but not on the basis that he really does not mean this but means something altogether different. Perhaps we could find out more clearly what the Liberal party means in this regard before we go further.

Mr. Caron: When I said it could be placed in that other subsection, that was just to tell the minister we do not accept it the way it is. We are not here to try to kill the bill; we are just trying to make it better than it is. The amendment stands if they do not intend to change it. We intend to keep the amendment the way it is so that those reporting to the government will be protected.

Mr. Matheson: This is illustrative of poor drafting. This bill will be of interest to a great many people in Canada, to a great many corporations and to a great many unions with small memberships. Surely this committee should produce something which ordinary business people and ordinary labour people with ordinary lawyers can understand. It was only after discussion with his civil servants that the Minister of Justice was able to explain the significance of this clause, and even then certainly not to my satisfaction or to the satisfaction of this side. Cannot the minister do something to make intelligible and clear what is intended by this clause?

Mr. Fulton: I think it is perfectly clear now. This is a definition of officials and authorized persons. This simply says that both are persons formerly engaged or employed in the public service. I do not think other members of the committee find that difficult to understand.

Mr. Howard: The only thing which in my opinion might make it clearer is this. We talk about an authorized person as one whose activities are related to the administration or enforcement of this act, and we talk about an official being anybody else in the public service, whether he has anything to do with this particular act or not. It is my understanding that the only people who would have any knowledge of the administration or enforcement of this act would be those employed in the bureau of statistics or the Department of Trade and Commerce. If confidential information about any one company is to be disseminated far and wide among all the departments of government, this is not what we originally understood the situation to be. Perhaps the minister would care to comment on this aspect.

Mr. Fulton: I think the obvious differentiation is this. An authorized person would be, for example, an agent of the Minister of Justice who might be retained to prosecute in respect of an alleged offence rising out of the act. Such persons would be authorized persons and would be subject to the limitation of confidentiality with respect to information given to them. An official, on the other hand, would be a person engaged in the administration of the act such as a statistician in the dominion bureau of statistics or a senior official engaged in considering the information within the context of subparagraph 5; that is, the determination of policy.

Mr. Howard: Why in addition do you not say that an official is one whose duties, for any purpose, relate to the enforcements of this act?

Mr. Fulton: Because subparagraph 5 states the only situation in which this information may be communicated even as between officials. There can be communication between officials of the government only for a purpose related to the determination of policy in connection with the formulation of any law of Canada or the ascertainment of any matter necessarily incidental thereto. They cannot, for example, go gossiping among themselves saying that an interesting piece of information is contained in such and such a return.

Amendment (Mr. Caron) negatived: Yeas, 9; nays, 30.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 15—Certificate as evidence.

Mr. Fulton: On clause 15 I would ask my colleague to move an amendment affecting lines 12 and 13. The amendment would have the effect of making it clear that it is the dominion statistician who will sign the certificate as to whether or not a return has been received. This is made necessary by the fact that returns are all to be made in the first place to the dominion statistician.

Mr. Starr: I move:

That the said bill be further amended by striking out lines 12 and 13 on page 11 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

'a certificate purporting to be signed by the dominion statistician or any person authorized by him in writing in that behalf that a return was not filed with the dominion statistician by any corporation,'

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 16—Annual report.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask my colleague the Minister of Labour to move an amendment which will have the effect of striking out in lines 17 and 18 the works "Secretary of State and the" and the words "of Labour". So it will just read "the minister shall as soon as possible..."

Mr. Starr: I move:

That the said bill be further amended by striking out lines 17 and 18 on page 11 and substituting therefor the following:

'16. (1) The minister shall, as soon as possible after the end of each year,'

Amendment agreed to.

On clause 16 as amended.

Mr. Howard: On the amendment or on the clause as amended, it does not matter—

The Chairman: On the clause as amended.

Mr. Howard: —I just wish to inquire what is meant when they say "at the end of each year". Does that mean the calendar year? The minister says, "As soon as possible after the end of each year". Is that the calendar year or the fiscal year of the government?

Mr. Fulton: By virtue of the Interpretation Act that would be the calendar year.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 17—Regulations.

Mr. Howard: This is the clause which authorizes the cabinet—although it says the governor in council it is in fact the cabinet—to make regulations. In many instances I have discovered that regulations are drafted and come into effect which give perhaps a different meaning to the statute from that which was originally understood by parliament when it was dealing with the bill. For argument's sake I may say that the regulations under the Immigration Act, to which reference was made today, are a prime example of legislating by way of order in council. We are all opposed to this degree of secrecy which exists and to giving the cabinet in fact a blank cheque to play around within this sort of thing, and to work out regulations which do other than that which was intended by the bill itself.

Under clause 9 we have adopted a requirement that the unions file certain information in such form and containing such particulars and other information relating to the financial position of the union as may be prescribed by the regulations. The same is true with respect to companies. Under clause 4 companies are required to file certain financial and statistical information in such form and containing such particulars and other information relating to the financial position of the corporation as may be prescribed by the regulations.

If the draftsmen and the minister were able to place in one clause which covers almost four whole pages a great deal of detail such as numbers of shares, the amounts paid for architectural fees, dividends, interest, amounts received from royalties and so on, surely it is going a bit too far, having regard to the requirements for corporations shown on page 4, for them to come along and say they now want other information that will be contained in the regulations.

I suppose we all need regulations of sorts in order to put things into effect. However, it seems to me that what the minister is doing here is asking for a sort of blanket permission for the cabinet to adjust its requirements in order to meet its needs and desires as the occasion may demand, and so that it can set out in all sorts of fantastic detail the financial information which it requires both from corporations and from unions. It seems odd that a government could spend five years concerning itself about the economy of the nation; could in those five years prepare a bill which goes most extensively into the type of statistical information it requires, ranging all the way from accounting, auditing and consulting fees to salaries to directors, the numbers of shares and the like, scattered over some four pages; and then could come along and say "Well, we did not quite cover it all there. We want a blank cheque for the governor in council to juggle and adjust these things and to require even more information than we disclosed to parliament we really wanted".

It would perhaps have been more correct to raise this matter in the first instance when we came to it under clause 4 and again under clause 9. However, I felt that the raising of such objection should perhaps be saved until we reached the particular clause we now have before us, as this is the one which gives authority to make such requirements. It indicates again to me the relative worthlessness of the bill.

The minister says "We spent years concerning ourselves with this matter. We now wish to find out in precise detail all we can about everybody in the country, and we have been able to include this in a bill going into the minutest detail". Then he comes along and says "We really did not know what we were doing when we drafted this bill; we wish to have additional powers so that we can ask for even more information to be stacked up in the dominion bureau of statistics offices." Before we proceed much further I think the minister owes us some explanation—he will not be drafting the regulations but he will be participating in them—as to what is in his mind with respect to the type of additional statistical information required relating both to companies and to unions under this bill.

The Chairman: Shall clause 17 carry?

Mr. Matheson: If this government wished to lay the foundation for a successor that was fascist or communist, could it do better than to end up with this catch-all phrase after a bill of this kind? It is a bill that is poking its nose into the private business of labour and management to an extent that we have not seen previously, and then ending up in the way that has been suggested by the hon. member for Skeena with a new catch-all phrase that gives this government or the government of Canada power to do anything else it likes, to go into either business or management. I remember some years ago talking to a number of Italians and a number of Germans who were suggesting that there was really not a great deal of difference between fascism and democracy as it prevailed in those days in the United States. They indicated that actually fascism was only an extension of government control. We seem to think that so is socialism a case where government is going to take over, to supervise, to direct and to continue to direct piecemeal what it wishes done with respect to the business of the country.

Mr. Fulton: This bill does not give us any control at all. It merely gives us information.

Mr. Matheson: Yes, but we do not even know what information.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, yes.

Mr. Matheson: At the beginning of this matter the minister told us that this legislation was for a purpose that was very ill defined. All he could tell us was that this was stage one. He could not tell us why this bill was introduced, because he did not frankly indicate to the committee that the real problem was that foreign ownership has been increasing since this government has taken over. All he indicated was that in some sort of vague way there was a problem, that he did not quite know what it was, but in order to determine what it was he was going to find out, and this was stage one. He did not indicate what stage two and stage three were to be.

We on this side of the chamber are very much concerned about liberty and the freedom of people to run their own affairs. When we add particularly the clause which was called, namely clause 17, I wonder how any businessman or labour man can with any kind of security at all hope to proceed, to carry on and do the things which he must do secretly and privately because that is the way in which, in a competitive world, he is going to do things well. He is not going to tell his neighbour. Yet this government wish to know everything, and wish to know more than they have been able to think out in all these previous clauses of the bill. It is a bill that is hard to understand. Maybe I am not as bright as some of my friends over here from British Columbia—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Matheson:—but let me say to the committee that a lot of lawyers across the country with better training than my two friends are going to be trying to understand what all this means, and when they start to figure it out they are going to be concerned about the lack of clarity. The draftmanship is poor, and this clause is simply evidence that even at this late date in the session, right before a general election, the government has not clarified its own thinking in this matter and therefore it has included this clause in order to catch anything it has not already thought of.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. Pallett: Will the hon. member name two lawyers who could not understand this, other than himself and maybe the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Matheson: The only reply I would make—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, this furor has taken place over a relatively unimportant and certainly perfectly straightforward clause which provides that the governor in council may make regulations prescribing anything that by this act may be prescribed by the regulations. That has been described as a catch-all clause and very uncomplimentary adjectives have been applied to it, I suppose for the sake of making newspaper headlines. My hon. friends do not have any valid criticisms of the bill, but if you use certain words you can often get a newspaper headline. It does not take a Liberal very long to find that out, and the hon. member for Leeds has been under good tutelage in that regard.

What are the things we can make regulations about by virtue of this clause which is such an anathema to the hon. member for Leeds? He says that the bill is hard to understand. Apparently it is to him, because he has not appreciated that there are only three areas outlined by the bill within which regulations may be made. Those three areas are spelled out in the bill, and this clause says that we can make regulations in those areas where the bill gives us authority to make regulations. Is that a frightful catch-all clause?

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I put a simple question to the minister?

Mr. Fulton: I will finish first and perhaps the question will then be unnecessary.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no, it will not.

Mr. Fulton: The three areas where it is provided that the details will be spelled out by regulations are, first, with respect to the details of the annual financial statements to be filed by both unions and corporations, that is, that portion of the return where the annual financial statement is contained; second, the amount to be fixed as a fee for inspection, the maximum being $1, so there is not very much power in the governor in council there to hurt people very much. We can prescribe a fee up to $1. Maybe it will be 10 cents. If it was fixed in the bill at $1 there would be no power to lower it. The third area where we can prescribe by regulation is with respect to classes of companies, in addition to those named in the schedule, who will be relieved of the obligation to report under this legislation.

Those are the three areas where we may make regulations. They are all clearly spelled out in the bill. I certainly cannot see that there is anything there giving the governor in council power to do anything more than sensible persons would agree should be covered by regulations. The reason for providing that the portion of the part B return comprising the annual financial statement should be spelled out in the regulations is that there will be such a multitude of classes and types of corporations reporting. There will be loan companies, investment companies, trust companies, manufacturing companies of different types, steel fabricators, cement fabricators and so on. The service industries will be reporting. There will be as many different types and classes of companies as one can think of and as exist in the Canadian economy, all of whom, by virtue of the different kinds of operations they carry on, must of necessity make up their annual financial statements in different ways.

I think it would be quite impossible to envisage in advance the permutations and combinations that it would be necessary to write out if you were going to prescribe in the legislation the precise details that you want in the financial statement portion. I am not objecting to the physical difficulty, though I think it would certainly take a mass of pages to do it. But I do not think you could say with certainty then that you had covered every possible case. Therefore it seemed only sensible that with respect to this one area, not the whole of the legislation but just this one area, namely the annual financial statement in the section B return, we should reserve the right to prescribe by regulation the precise manner of presenting the information that it is desired to have. I do not think that the other two areas where we may make regulations need much further explanation.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, may I reply to the minister—

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, surely after the hon. member for Leeds has been attacked personally he is going to be allowed to reply.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, if he was attacked personally I would point out that he was not the only one in the line of fire, because the Minister of Labour started out by saying that we have offered no valid criticisms of the bill. That is precisely what we have been doing in the last few days, offering criticism of the bill because it is subject to criticism, and proposing alternatives.

Mr. Starr: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member did not mean to refer to the Minister of Labour. I think it was an error on his part.

Mr. Fulton: Just one of the many errors.

Mr. Howard: If I did I apologize. Perhaps I did so because the minister who has been piloting the bill through the house has done so with such inefficiency that one wonders at him being Minister of Justice. Perhaps it was just a blank spot in my mind because the actions of the Minister of Justice had led me to believe that he might have resigned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: There is a blank spot over there.

Mr. Howard: Now that we have got the chorus going, Mr. Chairman, perhaps hon. members would like to relax and have lunch. Would you call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I had almost completed my remarks at one o'clock because we made our views known when this clause was called in the first instance. I only want to say again that when the minister states there was no valid criticism offered, he is incorrect. We have been attempting throughout the committee stage of this bill to improve it and make it a worth-while piece of legislation so that it would have some value in enabling the government to obtain information upon which future legislation could be based. We have been unable to convince hon. members opposite of the justness of our case. I think, therefore, when the minister says no valid criticisms have been forthcoming, he is most inaccurate.

Mr. Matheson: I will not reply in kind to the Minister of Justice. The minister's courtesy is well known to us and I think he was somewhat testy today. I do not believe we are trying to be inflammatory or look for headlines when we point to what we regard as legitimate weaknesses in legislation that is presented at the end of a session such as this, particularly when we are dealing with legislation that has no clear purpose, no declared aims. We feel that the provisions of this legislation should be clear and unequivocal because it will affect a large segment of industry and of labour. The very fact that the government is going to see what heretofore has been of a confidential character is fresh and new. We believe, therefore, that the bill before this committee should be as easily understood by business folk and labour folk as it is possible to make it.

Many of the submissions that have been put forward by this group have not been put forward by us alone. We have sought assistance of people who have been teaching business administration and who have been specialists in the labour movement, people who are interested in good legislation in this field. With respect to the minister, therefore, who has certainly shown many courtesies to us on this side in the past by believing that we have been trying to improve rather than impede legislation, may I respectfully suggest an amendment. I move:

To strike out lines 35 and 36 and "(b) generally," in line 37.

The clause would then read:

The governor in council may make regulations for carrying into effect the purposes and provisions of this act.

Now, sir, I feel this provision is a good deal simpler. If it represents any real difference from what is now in the legislation, I would be grateful if the Minister of Justice would indicate wherein it differs.

Mr. Fulton: I have always felt a little bit sensitive on this question of regulations and the power to make regulations, both when I was on that side of the house and since I have been on this side of the house. I have tried conscientiously to carry that sensitivity into effect over here by looking carefully at provisions in statutes that we submit to the house which give the governor in council the power to make regulations. I say quite genuinely, therefore, that I appreciate the purpose the hon. member for Leeds has in mind, particularly as he puts it this afternoon.

I must say I have some reservations about what he proposes. On the basis of a quick look at his specific amendment, I think it could perhaps be accepted without too much risk. The reservation I have goes to the question of deleting subparagraph (a) of this clause 17 which says:

The governor in council may make regulations (a) prescribing anything that by this act may be prescribed by the regulations;

You will note, Mr. Chairman, that the provision at the top of page 4, for instance, where it is dealing with the form of the annual financial statement says it shall be "in such form and containing such particulars relating to the financial position of the corporation as may be prescribed by the regulations."

[Mr. Matheson.]

What I want to avoid is the risk that in the clause covering the regulation making powers we should not take sufficient power to pass regulations prescribing certain things because, if we cannot prescribe the things that are to be prescribed, then there will be serious gaps in the effectiveness of the law. However I am advised that there is an argument which can be made that if you take a general power to make regulations to carry into effect the purposes and the provisions of the act, then you could support an argument that you have power to make regulations prescribing certain things that are to be done.

You see, Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that regulation making powers are interpreted strictly, and the governor in council cannot take power or cannot do by regulation those things which are beyond the purview of the act. If the bill uses certain specific words with respect to those things to be done by regulation and then the regulation-making powers do not repeat those specific words, the question arises whether you can rely on a general power to give this necessary authority. But it is a technical argument and, as I said previously, the bill in a sense is experimental.

I would be prepared therefore, on balance, to rest content with the power in effect given in subparagraph (b), and to rely upon that for the authority to make regulations prescribing all the things which the bill says must be prescribed by regulation. If we find that it is challenged and we have deprived ourselves of that power, then of course we could amend the act. We might be challenged and then it would be a question of finding out which way the decision would fall. Should it fall against us then we would have to introduce an amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the matter is determined I wish to say that we all appreciate the spirit in which the minister has accepted the proposed amendment of my hon. friend from Leeds, but I would point out that if you leave out the words "the purposes and", then it would read "for carrying into effect the provisions of this act." The particular instance which the minister gave was precisely to carry out one of the provisions of the act, and it seems to me that unless there is some purpose in paragraph (a), which has not been exposed to us, then what the hon. member for Leeds has suggested would meet the purpose, as the minister indicated. We very much appreciate the position taken by the minister in this matter.

Mr. Fulton: I would be prepared to accept the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Howard: It is clear, whether the amendment is accepted or not, that the minister intends to carry out making the regulations as he intended in the first place.

18 Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 18—Coming into force.

Mr. Roberge: Is the minister able to give some indication to the committee as to the possible date of proclamation?

Mr. Fulton: Did the hon. member say the possible date of proclamation or prorogation? I want to be quite clear which question I am answering.

Mr. Roberge: I said proclamation.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is staying within the rules.

Mr. Fulton: The only answer I can give is that such time as will be necessary to draw up the regulations must be allowed before proclamation. It will be proclaimed as soon as possible in the light of the things we have to do in that regard. I would think it would be at least a couple of months.

Mr. Caron: If this bill is of very great importance then I think it should be implemented as fast as possible.

Mr. Fulton: It will be.

Mr. Caron: If it is important then I move the following amendment:

That clause 18 be struck out and replaced by the following: "This act shall come into effect on July 1, 1962."

Mr. Howard: An amendment which we could support would be one which would read that the act come into effect on July 1, 2062. However, in keeping with the results which are to come from the bill, if we leave it up to the governor in council to proclaim when the bill will come into force perhaps he will forget about it in the meantime and it will never come into force.

Mr. Fulton: I have explained to the hon. member for Megantic that I am not able to set a precise date as to when we shall have the regulations drawn, and therefore I am really unable to accept the deadline contained in the amendment.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment.

Mr. Fulton: If I might just complete my answer; it might be sooner than July 1, 1962, and then it would be unfortunate if we had to wait for that date.

Mr. Caron: We want to give you time enough.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the amendment is put I might say that we have learned during the last four years that "immediately," "soon," "very soon," and "in the very near future" have a very different meaning coming from the present treasury benches than they have when used by the rest of the population of the country.

Since we have taken a lot of time putting this bill through the house and giving it the most careful scrutiny, and since we are supporting the bill because we want to see whether it will do any good, even though we are rather sceptical about that, we think parliament ought to be sure that it will come into force and not be postponed like many of those other 80 promises that have not been fulfilled.

Amendment (Mr. Caron) negatived: Yeas, 11; Nays, 43.

Clause agreed to.

On the schedule.

Mr. Howard: We spent a considerable amount of time dealing with an amendment which we proposed to clause 3 of the bill, dealing with those matters contained within the schedule. We see no reason, of course, to reiterate those reasons and arguments now in any detailed way or in a formal way by way of amendment, except to say that we object strenuously to the inclusion in the schedule, and thereby the exemption, of certain corporations from reporting under this act, namely those mentioned in paragraphs Nos. 1 to 6 and 13 to 15, and in particular paragraph No. 17, which gives another blank cheque to the government to exclude any other class or group of corporations that it may desire to exclude in the future. We are opposed to this.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule carry?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, when we were discussing clause 3 it was understood that when we came to the schedule the minister might be in a position to answer my questions. My first question was this: are the subsidiary companies of the Bell Telephone Company mentioned in the annual report which they have to submit to the board of transport commissioners? My second question was: how many telephone companies report to the board of transport commissioners? Is the minister in a position to answer those questions?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I understand that a perusal of the latest annual report available from the Bell Telephone Company shows that the only subsidiary reported on formally is Northern Electric Company. I am informed, however, that this is the main subsidiary of Bell Telephone Company and that the report says that Northern Electric is owned approximately 90 per cent by Bell Telephone Company and approximately 10 per cent by Western Electric.

As I pointed out a couple of days ago at an earlier stage of this bill, the Bell Telephone Company's own figures indicate that they are owned 92 per cent by Canadians. The detailed figure is that of the 178,126 shareholders, 97 per cent reside in Canada and they own 92 per cent of the total stock. Going on from there, again, as I say, on the basis of Bell Telephone's own figures 92 per cent is owned by Canadians, who in turn own 90 per cent of Northern Electric, the main subsidiary of Bell Telephone.

Mr. Caron: This does not give the board of transport commissioners the names of the subsidiary companies. The report says that one company, Northern Electric, is included; but in their report they show subsidiary company assets of $26,815,101, so it appears that there is more than one subsidiary. They should at least report that to the board of transport commissioners, if we are to have a full report of their assets and liabilities. This is one of the reasons why we thought that some of those companies should not be exempted, because then the department would ask them for those details which they do not furnish with their report.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the subsidiaries of the Bell Telephone Company in themselves are not exempt from reporting under this bill. The only companies that are exempt are those named specifically in the schedule. When we come to this group we find that the companies that are exempted are railway, telegraph, telephone or express companies, or a carrier by water in respect of which returns are made to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada.

If the subsidiary company, then, of the Bell Telephone is not itself a telephone company which reports to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, it is not exempt from reporting under this bill that we are now considering.

Mr. Caron: Not knowing the subsidiary companies, we do not know if they have to report. We would know if we had the names of those subsidiaries. As it is, we do not know.

Mr. Fulton: I can answer that question, or the suggestion. Unless it is a telephone company which already reports to the board of transport commissioners, they must report under this bill. Therefore the Bell Telephone and all its subsidiaries will report in one place or the other. I can tell the hon. member what telephone companies are required to report to the board of transport commissioners, and from that he will know whether the subsidiaries of Bell Telephone Company are included, and I am satisfied that they are not. Therefore ipso facto those subsidiaries will be required to report under this bill that we are now considering.

The telephone companies required to report under the Railway Act to the board of transport commissioners are, first, the Bell Telephone Company operating in Ontario and Quebec; second, the B.C. Telephone Company; third, Bonaventure and Gaspe Telephone Company; fourth, the telephone operations of C.N.R.; fifth, the Yellowknife Telephone Company, a subsidiary of C.N.R. These companies are listed as I have given them in order of size.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not the Maritime Telephone Company?

Mr. Fulton: I am advised that the Maritime Telephone Company does not report to the board of transport commissioners because it is a provincial incorporation. Indeed I am advised that the telephone companies which do not report to the board of transport commissioners include the provincially owned telephone systems such as the Manitoba Telephone Company, the Avalon Telephone Company in Newfoundland, and the Quebec Telephone Company in Quebec. In some provinces there are some telephone companies which come under provincial regulatory boards; these companies are provincially incorporated and are almost invariably very small.

Mr. Caron: Could we have the number of telephone companies reporting to the board of transport commissioners, and the number which do not report? Just the number, not the names.

Mr. Fulton: I have just given the number reporting; they are five.

Mr. Caron: Five reporting?

Mr. Fulton: Five reporting. All other telephone companies do not report, and therefore unless they are provincially owned telephone companies they would be required to report under this bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the minister would not consider, since there are only five of these companies anyway, taking telephone companies out. It does seem rather ridiculous that the Bell Telephone Company should not have to report under this act and the Maritime Telephone Company, which is a very big company, should have to report. We have never been told just what it is they have to report to the board of transport commissioners, whether indeed it is precisely the same information as they have to report here. I am amazed, for example—and this is a confession of ignorance, I admit; but the minister also was ignorant until he got the report—at the suggestion that the Bell Telephone Company is mainly owned in Canada by Canadian shareholders. I think the popular impression is that there is some sort of connection between the Bell Telephone Company and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. We would like to know something about the nature of that connection, because they certainly are not independent of one another.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, this raises a point on which there has already been considerable discussion and perhaps I should restate the position so that it may be perfectly clear. The position that I have taken, as I have already informed the committee, is that the government is able to obtain, in respect of companies described under heads 1 to 6 and 13 to 15 of the schedule, information that will clearly reveal the extent of foreign ownership, if any, in these organizations and its effect. At this time I would like to assure the committee that the government intends to collate the returns to be received under this bill with the information relating to these classes of corporations in the schedule.

It is the intention, also, to make summarized information available to the public on the extent of foreign ownership both with respect to the 25,000 companies included in the bill and also the exempted categories in the schedule. On the basis of this statement of the position and of what the result will be I would hope that hon. members would not feel it necessary to take away any of the exemptions so far given with respect to telephone companies, especially in the light of the fact that they are already subject to a heavy burden of reporting to a federal authority. It is precisely because they already report to a federal authority which is able to obtain all the kinds of information that we want that, we have exempted them from the provisions of this bill in order to avoid imposing the burden of making a duplicate report. Companies which do not already report to a federal authority will have to report under this bill, so between the two we shall be in a position to obtain and analyse information from the whole field.

Mr. Regier: I wonder if the minister could tell us exactly what information the B.C. Telephone Company has to supply to the board of transport commissioners. According to my findings the board of transport commissioners, who are supposed to be responsible for supervising the activities of the B.C. Telephone Company is, in this particular regard, being a mere scapegoat, and it is the opinion of many in British Columbia that supervision of this telephone company by the board means absolutely nothing—that the board is not even equipped to handle this particular assignment. I should like to know exactly what the B.C. Telephone Company does have to report to the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Fulton: It is very extensive information. I do not want to read the whole of it into the proceedings here but I shall do my best to summarize, and I shall try to summarize fairly. Section 385 of the Railway Act says:

> Every railway, telegraph, telephone and express company and every carrier by water, if required by the board so to do, shall prepare monthly returns of its revenues, working expenditure and traffic and all other information that may be required.

Mr. Regier: If required.

Mr. Fulton: Yes. Such returns must be in acordance with the forms required by the board.

Then section 388 says that every railway, telegraph, telephone and express company and every carrier by water shall, annually, or more often if the board so requires, make a true and particular return of all accidents and casualties.

That does not seem to be very relevant to what we are discussing now.

Section 391 provides that the board may from time to time, by notice served upon a railway, telegraph, telephone or express company require a written statement showing in such detail as the board requires:

(a) the assets and liabilities of such company;

(b) the amount of its stock issued and outstanding, and the date at which any such stock was so issued;

(c) the amount and nature of the consideration received by such company for such issue—

(d) the gross earnings or receipts or expenditure by such company during any periods specified by the board, and the purposes for which such expenditure was made;

(e) the amount and nature of any bonus, gift, or subsidy, received by such company from any source whatsoever; and the source from which, and the time when, and the circumstances under which, the same was so received or given;

(f) the bonds issued at any time by such company, and what portion of the same are outstanding and what portion, if any, have been redeemed;

(g) the amount and nature of the consideration received by such company for the issue of such bonds;

(h) the character and extent of any liabilities outstanding chargeable upon the property or undertaking of such company, or any part thereof, and the consideration received by such company for any such liabilities, and the circumstances under which the same were created;

(i) the cost of construction of such company's railway or other works or any part thereof;

(j) the amount and nature of the consideration paid or given by such company for any property acquired by it;

or at any time having existed between such company and any other company or person; and

(l) generally, the extent, nature, value and particulars of the property, earnings and business of such company.

Further, the board has power to require the attendance before it of officers of the company to be examined in relation to any matter which in the opinion of the board is relevant to the returns I have enumerated.

Then, as the committee knows, every time one of these companies makes an application with respect to its rates there are extensive requirements as to the information which must be furnished. This is why there is now available, or can be made available under the acts which are mentioned in the schedule, as full information as it is desired to obtain under this bill. These companies already report to the board of transport commissioners and we did not think it would be sensible to include them under this bill. If we find, when the matter has been looked into further, that particular information we may need is not received as a matter of course by the board of transport commissioners, that omission can be taken care of under the authority already existing in the Railway Act.

I recognize that to an extent this becomes a matter of judgment. In our judgment, in view of the extensive powers that now exist with respect to the opportunity of obtaining information under the other acts, and the extensive burden already placed upon the companies named in the schedule to report to the federal authority, it would be unwise to insist that they duplicate that reporting burden.

Mr. Caron: The burden placed upon these companies will be the same as that placed on anybody else. The burden placed upon the smaller companies will be just as big as that placed on the larger companies, because the smaller companies have fewer employees to undertake this work.

Mr. Fulton: The difference is that the telephone companies, for example, already report to the board of transport commissioners while the others do not. If we required these companies to report here as well, they would have to report to two different places. That is where the duplication comes in.

Mr. Caron: But they do not necessarily give all the details which are included in this bill. We see in the report of the Bell Telephone Company for the year ending December 31, 1961 what a marked decline there has been in the number of telephone companies. We see that in 1954 there were 741 of these companies but that by 1961 the number had been reduced to 483. Some people are under the impression that a kind of combine is being created—that the small companies are being forced to sell. It would be very interesting to have statistics to show exactly what is going on in Canada in this respect. That is why I think even the Bell Telephone Company should be obliged to report as the other companies are.

Mr. Regier: I certainly would like to support the contention of the hon. member for Hull. However, if an appeal is possible, I should like to appeal to the hon. member for Hull to investigate the make-up of the B.C. Telephone Company. He would realize that the Bell Telephone of Canada is a relatively innocent operation by comparison. The B.C. Telephone Company has often been forced to admit that it is part of an international cartel in the field of telephone communications.

The minister attempted to reply to me a few minutes ago, but he did not claim that the B.C. Telephone Company makes any report whatsoever to the board of transport commissioners. He read out the regulations and I noticed that the words "if required" appeared. I noticed that he spelled out carefully that there were powers existing in the legislation under which the B.C. Telephone Company could be made to report, but he went no farther than that. I will say right now that the board of transport commissioners is not adequately equipped to handle this responsibility, namely, the supervision of the activities of telephone companies in Canada.

The minister stated that the company can be asked to report on a number of matters—and he quoted the words "if required"—by the board of transport commissioners. I would suggest to the minister that our board of transport commissioners are not equipped even to place a requirement; and even if they were so equipped, they would not know what to do with the information if it were submitted to them. He says the board may from time to time inquire as to assets and liabilities and as to earnings and expenditures. He also mentioned a few other matters. I submit to the minister that our present board of transport commissioners is basically designed to govern and control our railroads and that it is ill equipped or most inadequately equipped to meet the aims and objectives of the bill now before us. I therefore believe the hon. member for Hull is asking in a reasonable manner that telephone companies not be exempt from the provisions of this bill.

The minister also said that very extensive requirements were imposed upon the telephone companies as to changes in rates. I have had enough experience in this regard to know what a phony this is. If anyone in British Columbia complains to the board of transport commissioners about proposed changes in rates, upon receipt of a complaint from either an organization or an individual the board of transport commissioners merely orders a stenographer to type out a copy of the letter of complaint and to mail it to the head office of the B.C. Telephone Company with the accompanying memorandum, "Your comments would be appreciated". Naturally the company is able to defend itself. Then the moment the defence of the company arrives in the office of the board of transport commissioners a stenographer is again asked to type out a copy of the reply of the B.C. Telephone Company, and this is then forwarded to the complainant as the explanation of the board of transport commissioners in reply to the particular complaint.

This is a racket that ought to be ended. I see in this bill at least one means whereby the public of Canada, if the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Hull is accepted, might for once be able to explore the matter and find out exactly what is happening in the field of telephone companies who, through very devious and clever schemes, have escaped provincial jurisdiction and have managed to end up with the board of transport commissioners becoming their only supervision.

Mr. Caron: Following all this discussion, Mr. Chairman, I move:

That item 15 of the schedule be amended by striking out the word "telephone".

Mr. Fulton: I do not wish to discuss this matter all around again. With respect I think all I should say is that in our judgment it would not be sensible to impose upon these companies a duplicate burden of reporting. We think that information sufficient for the purposes is available or can be obtained. As a matter of fact, we believe there is already available information with respect to them upon which to assess the extent and effect of foreign ownership which is the purpose of this bill. If we find that this information is not available or if, when we come to ask the bureau to collate and compare the information with respect to telephone companies or any other companies with that available from the companies reporting under this bill, they find that there is a gap in their knowledge, then at that time we can amend the schedule in order to remove the exemptions in whole or in part and we would be quite prepared to do that. As I say, I wish to be co-operative. However, I must say as a fact that to date I have not been convinced by the arguments put forward.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am going to try to convince the minister in two ways. I should like the minister—who said he would have the information available at this stage, if I remember correctly—to tell us how much of the B.C. Telephone Company, not according to their balance sheet which has no validity in this House of Commons but according to the records of the board of transport commissioners, is owned outside of Canada. If the minister can give us that information and can satisfy us that the board of transport commissioners already has it in exactly the same form as it is asked for in this bill, then I think his argument would have a good deal of validity. If he cannot do so, then I say that this argument completely falls to the ground.

However, I think it falls to the ground for another and more substantial reason. We have been told that the great majority of the telephone companies of Canada will be obliged to report under this act. All of the little ones will be obliged to do so. There are a great number of these small telephone companies in Ontario and Quebec. There are only five companies that are exempt. One of them is the B.C. Telephone Company. Another is the Bell Telephone Company. Those are two of the biggest concerns in the country. It seems to me that it is a very strange argument for the Minister of Justice to be using when he suggests that the law should compel small companies to do something but that the government should retain it in its discretion to decide whether or not the large companies will be asked to do so. That is the whole gravamen of the minister's argument. He says that they are reporting now. However, he does not say they are giving the same information. In fact, we know very well that they are not giving the same information. We also know very well that there will be no legal obligation upon them to give the same information. All there will be is this. If the government of the day sees fit to cause them to be asked for it, no doubt under the Railway Act the board of transport commissioners—although I am not sure that the government could instruct them in this matter under their own statute—could ask for it. That is, however, a much different matter from the imposing of a legal obligation.

Why should Maritime Telephone Company be obliged to report under this act the precise information the government thinks it wants and it be left completely optional whether the Bell Telephone Company or the British Columbia Telephone Company reports? We know that all these five companies report. One of them, of course, is C.N.T. which would not be obliged to report anyway because it is publicly owned. Hence there are in fact only four. There are four companies, two of them great octopuses, that are being exempted, whereas all the other privately-owned telephone companies in the country are subject to the law. The situation is not the same as that with regard to express companies. There are only two express companies in the country and they are both subject to the same kind of requirements and to all practical intents and purposes they are completely controlled in Canada, wherever the ownership may be. However, the telephone companies are much different. It seems to me—and I am not trying to put this matter on any other basis than that of equity and fairness—that the same law should apply equally to these legal persons or that there should not be one law for the poor and another law for the rich even in the field of corporations. It seems to me that this amendment is going to impose no great hardship upon the Bell Telephone Company or the B.C. Telephone Company, unless they have something to hide. I therefore hope the minister could reconsider the matter and accept the very reasonable amendment of my hon. friend from Hull.

Mr. Fulton: May I make a correction in what was said because otherwise I think it might leave a wrong impression. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate suggested that I said all other telephone companies would be required to report. I do not think that could be taken from what I said. What I did say was that the only telephone companies exempt from the requirements of this act are those reporting under the Railway Act. However, this must be read subject to head 16 of the schedule which sets a size limit with respect to assets and annual revenue, which also determines whether or not there is an obligation to report. Indeed, I am informed that the great majority of the telephone companies that do not report to the board of transport commissioners are well below that size limit and therefore would not be required to report under this bill, so we are far from having one law for large corporations and another for all the small ones.

Mr. Pickersgill: I concede the minister's point but—

Mr. Fulton: For instance, in the province of Ontario there are approximately 300 small telephone companies of which some 80 per cent operate fewer than 500 telephones each, and obviously none of them would have to report by virtue of head 16 of the schedule.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister think that a telephone company with 500 telephones would not have assets of $500,000? Even one telephone costs quite a lot of money these days.

Mr. Fulton: I doubt it, and certainly I would not think they would have an annual revenue of $500,000.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. Fulton: No, I think my hon. friend is confused. It is a limit of $500,000 with respect to revenue and $250,000 with respect to assets.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, in the initial stages we expressed on clause 3 the opinion that no matter how iniquitous the bill may be it should still apply fairly and justly to all corporations, and in that sense we would support the idea of the amendment that all telephone companies be required to report. If anybody is going to report, let us make everybody report to the same organization. That was the gist of our views expressed on clause 3. I am not going into our arguments and reasons again. We are in favour of this amendment, even though it is only a small, faltering step toward the objective of bringing all of these exempt corporations under the same law.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Regier: No. The minister has pointed out that he does not want to force duplication of reporting on companies. I wonder whether he can tell the committee how much reporting the B.C. Telephone Company actually does to the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Fulton: I have placed before the committee in summary form the reporting requirements as contained in the Railway Act. I do not think I can enlighten the committee beyond that. That is where the information is found.

Mr. Regier: If I may pursue this matter for a moment, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked the minister how much of the B.C. Telephone Company is Canadian owned and the minister has not yet replied to that question. The minister now says that he has read the pertinent items in the Railway Act. However, as I recall, everything he read merely enabled the board of transport commissioners to require certain things and called upon the company to supply the information if required. I want to know whether the board of transport commissioners has ever requested a balance sheet or operational statement from the B.C. Telephone Company.

As I indicated earlier, I believe the board of transport commissioners does not have the necessary machinery to meet this need, and I believe the hon. member for Hull and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate are perfectly correct in their assertion that this provision is going to require many telephone companies to report, while on the other hand the board of transport commissioners will likely pursue its policy of doing nothing about its right to require reports with the result that reports will not be forthcoming in the future.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee should surely be aware that there is a question whether a minister piloting a bill of this sort, which is designed to enable the government to obtain information from companies, and from all companies without discrimination, should really accept an invitation to go into the details of a particular company. With regard to the Bell Telephone Company I had no hesitation because, as I stated, the information I gave was from the company's own published annual report. I do not know precisely the extent to which the B.C. Telephone Company is owned in Canada and if I did I do not think I should single out that company here and give that information.

Mr. Regier: You gave it for the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. Fulton: I gave it for Bell Telephone because Bell Telephone has published it. I told the committee where I got it from at the beginning, but I do not think I should go through the exercise in the manner suggested, as I would be doing if I accepted the invitation to tell the committee about this or that named company. I am not going to start to do so.

Our object is to place the government in a position where it will have the information. Those parts of it that can be made public in accordance with the act will be available for inspection, and the rest will be information available to the government and published in summary form.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has really put forward the most extraordinary argument we have heard in the course of the debate on this bill. He is asking us as a legislative body to exempt four companies only from the operation of this legislation under part 15 of the schedule. There were five companies, but Canadian National Telegraphs would be exempt in any event because it is government owned, so there are only four. The minister says that every other telephone company with revenue of more than half a million dollars must report, and must report its foreign ownership. But surely the only excuse the minister can have for exempting these four companies is if he knows and is able to show us by the figures that these four are already reporting their foreign ownership, not in some document that they themselves circulate to the public and may stop issuing next year, but in a public document in the possession of the board of transport commissioners. Because the only argument the minister has given for exempting them is that they do report to the board of transport commissioners. The whole point is that unless they report precisely the same things to the board of transport commissioners they should not be exempted from this legislation, and it should not be left to the government to treat them as little pets and ask for the information or not as it chooses.

It seems to me that the minister should show us that this precise information is now available, not that it will be some day in the future if the government chooses to act. We do not know how much power the government would have over the board of transport commissioners under other legislation to compel the board to ask for this information. This is a terrible way to leave the law. For the minister to say that he should not give these details is not nearly good enough. After all, we are putting a burden on all these other companies and he is saying that these four should be exempt because they are under the control of the board of transport commissioners. That does not make any difference unless they are now giving or have a legal liability to give to the board of transport commissioners precisely what we are asking other companies like the Maritime Telephone Company to give under this legislation.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I want to be fair to the minister. I do not recall his saying that the B.C. Telephone Company reports to the board of transport commissioners. My recollection is that all he said was that they may be required to report and that if requested to report they would have to do so. He was a little vague as to exactly what they would have to report. That is the whole bone of contention as far as I am concerned because I can remember that a number of years ago we had a royal commission in British Columbia to investigate the activities of the B.C. Telephone Company. After only one year of investigation, at fantastic expense to the taxpayers of our province, the royal commission threw up its hands in disgust and admitted utter defeat. They became involved with telephone and telegraph lines in Honolulu during their investigation, so this company is part of an international cartel, as the minister well knows. He knows that our board of transport commissioners has never attempted to get the background of the financial story of this company, and I submit they have the machinery to do so.

The minister now says that a little telephone company relatively speaking, will have to spend hundreds of dollars in accounting fees in order to supply the necessary information which I submit, in the main, will be completely useless so far as the announced objective of this legislation is concerned. Yet a company like the B.C. Telephone Company, which is very much involved with the announced objective of this legislation is going to be able to continue to escape public knowledge of its operations. In my opinion, this course of action borders on the height of irresponsibility. It reminds me once again of what I said a number of days ago. I am becoming more and more convinced that this whole bill is nothing more than a bunch of political eyewash, intended only for the next election campaign.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Regier: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does he not think that this problem about which he is talking, and I agree with what he has said, may be solved by that great, super-socialist, the premier of British Columbia?

Mr. Howard: He is not a socialist, he is a fascist.

Mr. Regier: The B.C. Telephone Company, in my opinion, has been permitted over the years to escape the jurisdiction of our provincial government. I am quite prepared to accept the concept that it might also be nationalized like the B.C. Electric or could be expropriated. However, unfortunately for the telephone users of British Columbia, the B.C. Telephone Company has managed to hoodwink the banking and commerce committee of this house on ever so many occasions, and by slow but sure degrees has completely escaped provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry the hon. member overlooked the information I gave the committee earlier when I was referring to the Railway Act, where I pointed out that the Bell Telephone Company, being a telephone company covered under the Railway Act, is required—not just "may be called upon" but is required—to report at least annually to the board with regard to its assets, liabilities, capitalization, revenues, etc., in accordance with the forms and classifications for the time being required by the board. Such returns must be made in duplicate under oath.

Then, I did not tell the committee, as I was going quickly in order to summarize, that a duplicate copy of such returns, dated, signed and attested in the manner aforesaid, shall be forwarded by such company to the dominion statistician within one month after the first day of February of each year. There is, therefore, already a duplicate reporting requirement and, in effect, we would be triplicating the requirements. The short answer is that this company, as well as other telephone companies referred to, are required to report such particulars and in such form as may be required by the board. Copies of their returns go to the dominion statistician where they are available for publishing in summary form.

I am satisfied, the more I consider the matter today, that what we are called upon to do in the amendment would be not really asking them to duplicate but to triplicate their reporting burden.

Mr. Pickersgill: I listened carefully to what the minister said about the reporting requirements. There was no mention of the fact the company had to report foreign ownership which, according to the minister, is the real point of this bill. This is the reason we are putting forward this amendment. It is true that they have to report all these other things, but there is not a word there as to how much of it is foreign ownership, which is the whole purpose of this legislation. Here are two great corporations, the Bell Telephone Company and the B.C. Telephone Company, and other companies, that will no longer be required, even if this bill passes, to report on foreign ownership. We say they should not be exempted from that, and it should not be done by this backhanded method, through the council chamber, by the government asking the chairman of the board of transport commissioners to change the forms. Parliament should do it. Parliament is going to make a law for the Maritime Telephone Company and that law should apply to the B.C. Telephone Company and the Bell Telephone Company. They should not be exempted.

Mr. Regier: The minister objects to the company having to make three reports instead of two. I am only a humble member of parliament but I have a secretary in my office and on ever so many occasions she has been able to type out eight copies of a report with no added expense whatever. I fail to see the terrific injustice that the minister implies would be imposed or the burden that would be imposed upon these companies if they had to make these copies available under the terms of this legislation.

There is another point that was raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The existing demands upon these companies do not call for a proper disclosure of the extent of foreign ownership. This is the whole objective of the bill, according to the introductory statement of the minister. However, he is now willing to accept as adequate, returns that do not include this information.

I can recall a number of occasions when, as a member of the banking and commerce committee, we had the officials of the B.C. Telephone Company before us. On each and every occasion when we opened our questioning by suggesting that possibly the majority of the ownership of the company rested outside of Canada, there was a great show of indignation. We were insulting them by even suggesting that it was not a bona fide Canadian company. After hours, and I can remember one occasion when it took a number of days, the officials of the company were forced, most reluctantly, to admit that the main controls of this company were vested outside of Canada. No Canadian company likes to admit it is not master of its own house, but is a mere appendage of an international cartel.

I can appreciate why the B.C. Telephone officials like to hide the real ownership and real control of the company. I believe that the amendment commends itself to the serious consideration of this house. If the members of this committee take the minister at his word and really believe that this legislation is intended to reveal to the government and to the people of Canada, the extent of foreign ownership and control of companies in Canada, then I fail to see how they can, in good conscience, oppose the amendment now before us. In my opinion if they oppose the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Hull, then they are making a liar out of the minister and they are saying that they do not believe that the minister meant what he said when he introduced this legislation in the first place.

Mr. Fulton: It is not always easy to anticipate precisely the information the committee will be wanting, and I confess not to have anticipated some of it. I had a lot of other information, some of which I have given. I have sent out for further information and I am now in a position to advise the committee that the board of transport commissioners does know the extent of foreign ownership of the telephone companies, and that every time an application is filed for a change of rates, further special returns are made reporting the percentage of their shares held in Canada and abroad. That applies to the B.C. Telephone Company and the Bell Telephone Company. I am also informed, on the basis of information provided to the board, that Canadian control has been increased in recent years.

Mr. Regier: May I ask the minister how many employees the transport board has who have any knowledge or experience in the field of telephones?

Mr. Fulton: I am sure I could not say at the present time.

Mr. Regier: I would submit that there is not one.

Mr. Fulton: That undoubtedly is the hon. member's opinion, but he is not always right.

Mr. Howard: Neither are you.

Amendment (Mr. Caron) negatived: Yeas, 18; nays, 28.

During the taking of the vote:

The Deputy Chairman: I should point out to hon. members who were not in when the vote was called that they will have to remain outside the House of Commons while the vote is being counted.

After the taking of the vote:

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Fulton: By leave now.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Before the house takes up the next order of business I wonder if I might have leave of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of acquainting the house with an announcement.

Mr. Chevrier: If the announcement is going to be what I think it is, then there will be no objection.

Mr. Pickersgill: Make it short.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Minister of Finance leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PRESENTATION ON TUESDAY, APRIL 10

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I wish to inform the house that, barring unforeseen occurrences, and if it is the pleasure of the house, I hope to introduce the budget on Tuesday evening next, April 10, at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

728. Canadian wildlife service—wildlife resources conservation and development, including administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act—further amount required, $27,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we embark on consideration of this vote I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could give the committee the information that he gave me in a letter about the role of the federal government in the supervision of race track betting. It does not seem to me that it should be given to just one hon. member. It is a matter of general interest, and I would point out that we expedited an item the other day to please the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I shall be glad to do whatever the house wishes, but I would have to have unanimous consent. I fulfilled in detail the commitment which I made to the hon. gentleman, which was that I would be glad to get any additional information for him and send it to him. I sent it to him and fulfilled that commitment. Now I am in the hands of the committee as to whether there would be unanimous consent that I should give the information on this vote.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not want to enter into a dispute about semantics with the hon. gentleman, who is always very amiable until he gets excited.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Which is very rarely.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we should make a lot more speed if he could get unanimous consent, if indeed that is really necessary.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not know to which item the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is referring. Is it an item that has been passed?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It is an item in agriculture.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the committee give unanimous consent to revert to the item referred to by the parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I hope we would not revert to the item, because the item has been carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just let us have the information.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the committee give unanimous consent for this information to be given?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is a letter dated April 3, 1962, addressed to the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario. It reads:

Dear Jack:

At page 2292 and 2293 of Hansard of March 29, 1962, I undertook to send to you further particulars of the role of the federal government in supervision of race track betting.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

I would refer you specifically to section 178 of the Criminal Code (statutes of Canada 1953-54).

Where parimutuel systems are operated upon the race course of an association, the association must be incorporated by a special act of parliament of Canada or of the legislature of a province if incorporated on or after May 19, 1947; or, if incorporated before May 19, 1947, that the association has conducted a race meeting with parimutuel betting under the supervision of the Minister of Agriculture at any time after January 1, 1938, but before May 19, 1947; or, that the Minister of Agriculture has before May 19, 1947 made a determination under this section that the provisions of sections 176 and 177 shall not extend to the operation of a parimutuel system. The Criminal Code, section 178, also specifically provides for race meetings at which there are trotting races exclusively where pool selling, betting or wagering is permitted by an association if incorporated in any manner before March 20, 1912 or incorporated after that day by special act of parliament of Canada or of the legislature of a province.

With only three exceptions, the associations have been incorporated by special act of the legislature of a province, or by provincial letters patent. Each charter approves a number of racing days per calendar year under that charter.

Under the Criminal Code, the Minister of Agriculture is responsible for the approval of the parimutuel system and for the supervision of its operation. The minister, as a first responsibility, determines whether the charters held by associations under which they have applied for race track supervision, conform to the rules above stated. The minister establishes current validity of such charters by obtaining an up to date certification from provincial governments. Further, before approving racing dates, the minister satisfies himself that all other requirements under the Criminal Code and under the regulations issued by the Minister of Agriculture under section 178 have been met. These regulations govern the requirements of the parimutuel system, the race track facilities, and the actual conduct of the racing meets.

I am advised that the particular association to which you refer has submitted five charters all issued prior to March 20, 1912 and that these appear to be currently valid in conformity with the principles I have stated. They are being studied by the Department of Agriculture, to whom further inquiry should be made.

Yours sincerely,

Dick

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. member very much.

Mr. Drysdale: The Liberals are still backing the wrong horses in the next election.

The Deputy Chairman: I might inform the house leader of the official opposition that it is recorded that item 727 was passed on March 30.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Your Honour is quite right; I have looked that up. I thought we were still on that item, but apparently it did go through. We are now on item 728, I take it. I wonder if the Minister of Finance would like to add anything to the discussion which took place last Friday concerning wildlife, when certain matters were considered having to do with the vision of the north. I wonder if the minister would care to add anything to some of the statements that were made, such as going from saloon to saloon and from saloon to mortuary.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be an authority on the subject of wildlife but I am always interested when others are interested in the subject. In a word, I think the committee is well aware of the reasons for the proposals involving the restoration of certain buildings famous in their day. This is strongly recommended in the interests of stimulating the tourist interest. There has been a very substantial tourist interest in the Yukon and it is expected that the restoration of these buildings that were very famous in their day will provide a very great tourist attraction and the expenditure will be repaid in the form of tourist outlays many times over.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to ask the minister whether the government got any objective appraisal before undertaking this rather large expenditure of nearly $500,000 which we found a good deal of difficulty in getting the government to admit. Did the government get any objective appraisal as to how many years it would take to recover this investment?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the matter originated with the historic sites and monuments board and it was they who made the proposal to the minister, having first studied the matter and satisfied themselves that this was going to be a paying investment.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question. Perhaps he can get the information here. With respect to the administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, has there ever been an instance in the administration of this act where they have discovered that a migratory bird such as an egret had come from, say North Africa to the North American continent and therefore it was legal to take the feathers from that bird?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is away in the clouds soaring high above me in this matter. I am afraid it would be unwise for me to attempt to pursue him into that realm.

Mr. Herridge: I am sorry; I understood that the officials of the wildlife branch were here.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 728 carry?

Mr. Herridge: Are there no officials able to give an answer to that question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will give the hon. member such information as has been furished to me. The field program was planned and carried out to gather information on the distribution of sandhill cranes in the Last Mountain lake area of Saskatchewan during the time crops are subject to damage and to assess the effectiveness of control methods on reducing any damage that might occur.

Because of favourable weather conditions for harvesting, the cranes did not carry out a large amount of damage. The test of observation and data collecting techniques and of damage control methods provided much useful information.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, are the officials unable to answer my question? Have there been instances of birds coming from other continents being destroyed in Canada and the feathers taken, and therefore this action being legal—I refer to birds such as egrets—because they did not come under the terms of this act?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the subject is a somewhat abstruse one. I will communicate with the division of the department concerned and ask that that information, if available, be furnished to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 728 carry?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask the minister if he could give me any indication as to the status of the eiderdown collection situation in the St. Lawrence river area at the present time. It is a matter I have been interested in for several years; I mean, seriously. The present arrangement, as I understand it, is one in which the licence is issued by the Quebec government. There was some controversy as to the right of the licensee. This was when the old administration was in charge in the province of Quebec. I am referring to the Duplessis administration. What I am curious about is as to whether there has been any change since the new government took over in Quebec in connection with this franchise, or licence, or whatever it is. I understand that the Canadian wildlife service have a certain responsibilty with regard to this matter because these are migratory birds. I would appreciate having information on this matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, sir; no change.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

Water resources branch—

729. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, this vote covers a matter which is, I think, of immediate concern to those of us who reside in the Montreal area. The minister will probably remember that last year prior to the spring freshets the level of the water in the port of Montreal was very seriously affected and—

Mr. Jones: Only four Liberals here.

Mr. Chevrier: —the reason was that the plan for the control of the downstream interests and the downstream levels at Montreal was not working out to the satisfaction of the international St. Lawrence river board of control. What I have to say is of course not in the slightest degree critical of this board because I think they and their predecessors have done very good work in an effort to protect the downstream interests as well as the upstream interests. My reason for raising the matter is to ask one or two questions upon which I hope I can get some elucidation. First, about this plan which has been in operation for some time, namely, plan 1958-A which was to have been amended by the Canadian section in co-operation with the United States section of the international St. Lawrence river board of control in order to find a better method of protecting the navigation interests, upstream as well as downstream. My question is: has the amendment to this plan been made?

While the minister is waiting for his officials, perhaps I may raise the other matter I have in mind. As a result of the difficulties which were experienced in Montreal harbour in the closing weeks of navigation in the 1960 season under plan of regulation 1958-A, the international joint commission at its April 1961 meeting gave to the board of control some discretionary authority under that plan whereby some additional storage could be accumulated on lake Ontario during the high supply months for release out of the St. Lawrence river during the low waterfall months. I am informed that under this authority the board has accumulated during the past summer 0.3 foot of storage on lake Ontario. This depth on the lake is equivalent to 104,000 cubic feet per second for one week, or sufficient to raise the level of Montreal harbour one foot for somewhat more than five weeks. The question is: has there been a greater amount of water stored in lake Ontario, not only for the protection of the downstream interests at Montreal but also for the protection of the interests on lake St. Francis and in the Cornwall area?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I must apologize to the hon. member. The official who has this information has apparently got lost between the gallery and the floor. He has not arrived.

[Mr. Fisher.]

I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to convey the answers to these questions to him.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, that would be agreeable. However, there are one or two other matters which arise. It has been found that there is not a sufficient amount of flow coming into the river following the plan which was established by the international board of control. The question arises as to whether or not there will be additional quantities of water diverted from lake Ontario into the St. Lawrence river so as to increase the flow in the low water period in order to protect navigation and, secondly, to protect power development as well.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I shall be glad to undertake that this information will be communicated to the hon. member.

Mr. Herridge: This item is in connection with professional and special services, water resources branch. I presume it has something to do with the salaries paid to the technical people upon whom this government has relied for advice in connection with the Columbia river treaty proposals.

I should like to bring to the minister's attention an item in today's Citizen which appears under the heading: "Columbia Pact —McNaughton Says Canada Sold Out". It reads in part:

> General A. G. L. McNaughton, retiring chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission, said today that the Columbia river treaty amounts to "servitude in perpetuity of our vital rights and interests."

The report goes on to say:

> The 75-year-old former wartime army leader and defence minister lashed out against the negotiators of the Columbia treaty on the grounds that they had departed from the principles based on engineering studies laid down by the I.J.C.

General McNaughton goes on to say:

> The Canadian negotiators were a house divided against itself, unskilled and uninformed in its representatives. They opened a situation for the Americans to exploit and I can't blame the Americans for doing so.

The article continues:

> At another point in an interview here prior to his return to Ottawa, General McNaughton reiterated the charge in these words: "The Americans saw we were a house divided against itself—they moved in on these people and skinned them alive.

These are very serious charges coming from a person who has had the longest acquaintance with proposals for the development of this river in various ways. There is another aspect of this question. Other people have come to me and told me they have visited the water resources branch seeking information with respect to certain aspects of this treaty but were unable to get it. I want to ask the minister if he has any comments to make on General McNaughton's charges as reported in the Citizen this afternoon.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not think it would be appropriate at this stage for me to make any extended comment on this matter. I do not think, strictly speaking, it arises on this item, which is one in respect of engineering services retained in connection with the making of a report—a report which has since been made public and with which I am sure the hon. member is familiar.

With regard to the article which the hon. member has read, I have not seen it myself, and I think, in fairness, I should not attempt to comment on it in an extended way until I have actually seen it. It is well known, I believe, that General McNaughton and the international joint commission were in touch at all times with the negotiations which led up to the treaty being signed. The view that General McNaughton held originally was one which preferred a different type of undertaking with respect to certain of the courses and reservoirs. My information is that since it was not possible to bring about agreement on the basis which General McNaughton favoured it was necessary, as so often happens, to accept something different.

Here were two governments of two sovereign countries negotiating. Neither one of them could have its own way in all matters, and in the end the particular way which General McNaughton favoured was not possible because there could never have been an agreement between the two countries on that basis. My information is that, no agreement being possible on the basis which he would have preferred, General McNaughton went along then with the proposals which were developed as a substitute. Certainly his advice was made available on that basis.

No one questions the right of General McNaughton to retain his view that something different would have been better, but the fact is that the course he favoured could not have been the subject of agreement. Various differences were made the subject of negotiation and in the end a treaty was arrived at on the only basis which proved to be possible.

Mr. Herridge: I do not wish to take up the time of the committee on this problem now because I am sure the subject will be discussed throughout the country in view of the great respect in which General McNaughton's views are held. However, I am interested in what the minister has to say because I was reliably informed that the change of direction occurred on the insistence of the government of British Columbia which wanted to build a high dam as against the sequence proposed by General McNaughton.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me clear up that question. The views of the government of British Columbia certainly entered into this. There were three governments involved all of which had views as to the optimum course. What was achieved in the end was the only basis on which agreement could be reached.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 729 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: If I may, I should like to revert for just a moment to the matter which I raised originally. I should like to commend the government. I do not do that very often. However, I should like to commend the government in connection with their decision to establish a full time office located at Cornwall, the primary duties of which are concerned with the objectives involved in the regulation of the St. Lawrence flows having in mind all of the criteria which the international joint commission and the two federal governments have laid down for the protection of the interests all the way from lake Ontario to Montreal harbour.

The minister will probably remember that the board of control was established by order of the international joint commission to supervise during construction the works of both power and navigation in the international section and also to supervise water limits and the flows from lake Ontario downstream. I have no hesitation in saying this.

Had we been in office, having established this board originally and having located the survey headquarters at Cornwall we would have wanted to set up an office to carry out the responsibilities after construction, as has been done under the circumstances. I am grateful to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who was good enough to advise me that this was being done. In fact, I understand now that it has been done and that there is an office with a staff comprised of some four or five technical personnel, with one engineer in charge, whose duties and responsibilities are to supervise water levels and the flow of water. That is a decision which is all to the good. I think it will have a great bearing and influence on the implementation of the plan which was established by the board of control, and any amended plan. The minister, of course, said he did not have his officers with him here and could not give me details of whether or not the plan had been amended. I understand that it has been amended. Perhaps, he can tell me in what manner it has been amended. I think, however, the decision to have a technical group of officers which will regulate the discharge of water is all to the good. I trust that it will have the effect of protecting the downstream interests at Montreal, the power interests at Beauharnois and the other navigation interests upstream.

Mr. Herridge: I just wish to make one other comment. I wish I could use the name of the senator to whom I shall refer. However, I discussed this question with a very well known senator in the United States and he said this to me, "Mr. Herridge, we were amazed at the developments in the negotiations. The Canadian negotiators threw General McNaughton's aces away all in the first throw".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have explained the difference in points of view on this matter. Anyone can take a particular point of view and say, "This is right". It is probably only natural for each individual to hold firmly to his own point of view. However, when you come into the field of negotiation where different interests are involved and consequently different points of view, it does not follow that the point of view of a particular individual is bound to prevail. All of these points of view were carefully considered. Canada was represented by an extremely competent negotiating team, including the highly competent officials of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and others. I must take firmly the position that Canada was ably, competently and sufficiently represented in these negotiations. The treaty itself is one which, if implementation may follow, we believe to be of definite and clear advantage to Canada. That is not to say that, had we had our own way in all respects we could not have done something a little bit different. However, the fact is that after extended negotiations, with three governments involved, the treaty represents the one basis upon which agreement could be arrived at.

Mr. Herridge: I have one more question. Before ratification occurs in the house at some future time, will the government refer the treaty to the external affairs committee? If so, will the committee, if it wishes it, have the opportunity to hear General McNaughton?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think that is a question that might more properly be asked on some other occasion. It does not relate to this particular item which, after all, is an item dealing with payment for services of a particular engineering firm who wrote the report. The hon. member will have ample opportunity to ask his question or to press his point of view on this matter.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I am really rising to say something about another matter, Mr. Chairman. However, before doing so, may I say that I think this whole business illustrates how unwise it was for the government to enter into a treaty with the United States before reaching a really ironclad undertaking with the province of British Columbia. If they had followed the excellent example given them by my hon. friend from Laurier and by the Leader of the Opposition when they were in charge of the St. Lawrence treaty, they would have had everything signed, sealed and delivered by the province before they pledged the word of Canada. I must say that for this unseemly haste and bungling at the end of this whole matter they seem to be reaping the reward that such ineptitude properly deserves.

However, it was not for that purpose I rose to speak. It was to speak about the negotiation that has been going on ever since the present government of Manitoba came into office—I was going to say ever since the present government came into office—with regard to the Winnipeg floodway. On the orders of the day I asked the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question about when this agreement is likely to be reached. I pursued the matter as far as I could pursue it on the orders of the day. I had hoped that the minister would be here because, as a Manitoban, he would probably be more familiar with the matter than would the Minister of Finance, although I think there are many people who believe that the Minister of Finance is the real log jam in this transaction. Rightly or wrongly, I believe that is the general view in Manitoba.

I have in my hand a clipping from the Winnipeg Tribune and I took it advisedly from the Tribune and not from the Free Press, containing an account of what took place in the legislature about this matter the other day. This is from the Winnipeg Tribune of March 27. I do not wish to waste much time on this matter; I just wish to get some information. This report states as follows:

> No written, final agreement has been made with Ottawa, Premier Roblin said. But he assured the house that official agreement would be wrapped up before a federal election, even if it is held in June.

I must say that it is refreshing to find how much more the premier of Manitoba knows about what this government's intentions are than does the House of Commons itself or perhaps even by this government itself. However, Mr. Roblin spoke with great conviction that agreement would be wrapped up. By "wrapped up" I presume what is meant is that it would be signed. The report goes on to state this:

> At first Mr. Roblin refused to answer opposition questions concerning a possible "upper limit" on federal cost sharing.
> He insisted details of final negotiations had to remain secret.

I must say that this business of secrecy seems to have extended into a very wide field in these days. The report continues:

> But he did have written agreement approving the cost sharing in principle.

I wonder whether the minister would tell us what this written agreement is, approving cost sharing in principle, what the principle is and whether the federal government has in fact put an upper limit on the expenditures it is prepared to make?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has spoken of two matters. With reference to his first observations, I wish to say very briefly that there was no bungling or ineptitude in relation to the treaty. The fact is that the government of British Columbia participated in all the negotiations and all of the steps leading up to the drafting of the treaty. They were parties to all of those steps and all of the agreements antecedent to the treaty. I wish to put that clearly on record in correction of the statements made by the hon. member.

With regard to the second matter he raised, may I say that there is no firm, written agreement signed yet, but it is expected that the agreement will be signed soon. The matter is a very important one and there have been discussions and negotiations over a period of time. We understand that we are close to the signing of the agreement. As to specific terms, I think it would not be appropriate for me to comment on terms until the matter emerges from the stage of negotiation and becomes a matter of a written agreement. The hon. member can be very sure that when the agreement has been entered into it will be made public.

Mr. Pickersgill: On that very point, Mr. Chairman, surely we can be told as much as Mr. Roblin told the Manitoba legislature. Mr. Roblin said, according to this statement which I am sure is accurate, that he did have a written agreement approving cost sharing in principle. Can the minister tell us what the nature of that agreement is? It is a written agreement and surely if the Manitoba legislature can be told this we can be told it. Mr. Roblin also indicated, though he did not precisely say, that there was an upper limit on the federal cost sharing. Surely the minister can tell us whether or not there is such a limit.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Obviously this is an essential term and one of the matters that has been under discussion, and it just is not appropriate to discuss terms that are under negotiation and discussion until the agreement has been concluded. I have tried to indicate that I do not think this will be long. The negotiations have reached quite an advanced stage but until the agreement has been signed I think the committee will appreciate why it is not appropriate to attempt to discuss views on particular terms.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to have taken a tremendously long time for these two Tory governments to get together about a matter that is very essential to the people of Manitoba and about which Mr. Roblin was very critical of his predecessors, who made a great deal more haste than he seems to have been able to make with his friends here in Ottawa.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister said it would not be proper to make known the terms of the agreement that the federal government has entered into with the government of the province of British Columbia and I agree that perhaps that is the right position. However, prior to the signing of the treaty between Canada and the United States there was certain information available and some sort of understanding, if there was no written agreement. If it is not possible for the minister to give the terms now, I wonder why he cannot tell the house how the agreement which is about to be signed or will be signed in the near future differs from that contained in the treaty which has not yet been ratified.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think there is some confusion here. We have been talking about two different things. My remarks, which have been paraphrased by the hon. member, related to the negotiations between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba in relation to the Winnipeg floodway system. We had been talking earlier about the Columbia treaty.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps I misunderstood the minister. Then there has been no agreement reached between the federal government and the province of British Columbia with reference to the Columbia river project.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Prior to the signing of the treaty the federal government fully understood that the government of the province was completely in accord with the terms of the treaty. The position having been taken by the government of British Columbia that they are not in accord, efforts have been made by me to arrive at an accord. That has been the aim of the federal government in the discussions I have been holding with Premier Bennett.

Mr. Chevrier: Is there likely to be an accord soon and is that what the minister said a moment ago?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, what I said in that regard was said concerning the negotiations with the government of Manitoba. When I said we look forward to an agreement soon, I was speaking of negotiations with the government of Manitoba.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the position with reference to British Columbia?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member has heard the reports I have given to the house on the series of meetings I have held with Premier Bennett and, as I repeated in the house yesterday in reply to a question from the hon. member for Kootenay West, I expect to have further meetings with Premier Bennett.

Mr. Chevrier: Is there any possibility of the minister telling the committee whether an agreement might be reached in the near future and can he say whether or not the agreement he hopes to achieve will be different from that contained in the treaty?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not know how soon agreement can be reached. I know I have been applying the best efforts of which I am capable in that direction and I have no doubt it is the wish and hope of Premier Bennett that there may be an agreement soon. But the question is, on what terms or on whose terms; and among other questions is the fundamental one as to the manner in which and the party by which the obligations to be assumed by Canada under the treaty with the United States are to be carried out.

Mr. Chevrier: I take it from what the minister has said that the agreement will be on terms different from those contained in the treaty, and that raises the question—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say that.

Mr. Chevrier: No, I am saying that arising out of what the minister said, and if I am wrong the minister can correct me. If that should be the case, and there is a probability of it, does that mean that the government will have to renegotiate the treaty with the United States?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, I do not think the hon. member has correctly interpreted what I had to say. I was pointing out that we are discussing the questions of terms and the implementation of Canadian obligations under the treaty, because these are obligations in relation to various matters which would normally be discharged by the provincial government. I have emphasized that the government of the province was a party to all negotiations leading up to the treaty and all of the decisions which were taken from time to time and which culminated in the terms of the treaty.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, did the minister's officials in the water resources branch in arriving at the cost of the High Arrow dam make allowance for $25 million which the Celgar Corporation says it will cost to put in the equipment to take their logs over the dam if it is to be automatic?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The answer is no.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word in addition to what the hon. member for Laurier said. He was obviously too modest to make this point. The minister said that there had been no bungling about this matter.

Mr. Herridge: One dam, $25 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is only a detail. Here, there is a transaction involving the good name of Canada. When my hon. friend negotiated with Ontario hydro prior to the signing to the St. Lawrence arrangement, the whole agreement with Ontario was drawn up and signed in the Prime Minister's office before the agreement with the United States was signed. There was no doubt about it. It was not some assumption resulting from civil servants taking part in negotiations with a province, that the province was going ahead with it.

Mr. Lambert: What about provincial cabinet ministers?

Mr. Pickersgill: Provincial cabinet ministers? Judging from what some of the cabinet ministers in this house say when they get out at large, I am sure the Prime Minister would hate to be committed, for example, by the Associate Minister of National Defence when he acts as secretary of state for external affairs and talks about our relations with other countries.

The right way to have done this thing would have been to have an agreement signed between British Columbia and the federal government so that the people—

Mr. Herridge: And the facts known first.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Kootenay West says, "And the facts known first". They could hardly have signed an agreement unless the facts were in it. In any event, the good name of Canada should not have been put to a treaty with the United States until there was a signed and sealed agreement with the province that would be carried out. If that had been done, it might have taken a few more weeks or a few more months, but at least when it was done it could have been proceeded with instead of having this unseemly wrangling between the provincial government and the government of Canada. This welching on our word to the United States, and this whole deplorable mess, is one of the worst bungles in the whole history of our relations with the United States and of the relations of the federal government with the provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is necessary to correct these wild statements of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. This was not a matter of some civil servants meeting together. The government of British Columbia was represented in these negotiations by two ministers, two very eminent ministers, Mr. Williston and Mr. Bonner. They participated throughout. There was no bungling and the good name of Canada has not been dishonoured in any respect. An agreement was entered into in the form of this treaty. There has been no dishonouring of an obligation at all. The good name of Canada continues to be good. The honour of Canada is unimpaired, Mr. Chairman.

Now, it is regrettable that there has been delay. This delay is due, I assure you, to no fault on the part of the federal government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Whose fault is it?

Mr. Pickersgill: You should have nailed them down in the first place.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member talks about nailing people down. It is all very well to talk about nailing people down, but that is not the way in which you proceed in negotiations with sovereign governments if you wish to achieve agreement.

We believe that the agreement that was negotiated is of advantage and benefit to Canada. Even if it may seem difficult and take a great deal of effort, we are going to persevere in our efforts to bring about a project we believe to be of very great advantage to Canada and to the people of British Columbia.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister one or two more questions in this regard? When the treaty was signed between the federal authorities and the United States authorities in Washington, did any of the British Columbia representatives go along with the Canadian delegation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I understand that none was present at the signing, although I believe they had been invited. The hon. member is aware, from previous reports that have been made to the house and correspondence that was tabled, that the letter from Premier Bennett which indicated for the first time a measure of dissent from the firm understanding which had prevailed, arrived in Ottawa while the Prime Minister, to the knowledge of the government of British Columbia, was actually en route to Washington to sign the treaty with President Eisenhower.

Mr. Chevrier: There are one or two other matters that arise out of this. The minister has said that the good name of Canada has not been affected. I will not enter into contentious debate because I admire the manner in which the minister is attempting to get his estimates through at the moment. He is not always in this non-contentious mood. I commend him for it because I think there is great progress to be obtained under those circumstances.

The point is related to the statement of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the minister's reply. The minister will, of course, remember what the secretary of the interior, Mr. Udall, said when he complained rather bitterly, and publicly, about the delay of the government of Canada in fulfilling its responsibilities and obligations in connection with the treaty. This, as the minister knows, brought a retort from the Minister of Justice who, in effect, told this United States cabinet minister to mind his own business. I bring this up because, certainly, it is not tantamount to giving Canada a good name outside of our own country. If, in fact, a treaty was signed many, many months ago, and has not been submitted to parliament, either because there was no agreement between the province and the federal government or for other reasons which we shall not discuss at the moment, does the minister not think it would have been far better to have had an agreement in writing, signed and ratified by parliament, with the province prior to the signing of the treaty in Washington?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is pleasant, Mr. Chairman, to speculate on how things might be done if one had the opportunity of creating events in the pleasantest and most suitable way. However, the fact is that there had been, as I pointed out, a complete measure of understanding between the government of British Columbia and the government of Canada right up until the day before the treaty was signed. It was in the light of that knowledge that the plans were made for the signing of the treaty, and the terms of the treaty. As I have said, the negotiations were completely known to the ministerial representatives of the province and they had been parties to all the decisions which were involved that led up to this final act.

Now, the hon. member refers to secretary Udall. I think it only fair to say that Mr. Udall felt he had been somewhat misreported in the press because he had not attempted, as he put it, or intended to convey the impression that he was trying to lecture Canada. The situation is simply this: The United States proceeded expeditiously to ratify the treaty. I give them full credit for that. They were in a position to do so. They did not have to deal with the government of a state. I think it only fair to remind the hon. member, particularly when he talks about the St. Lawrence seaway, that in that particular case a treaty entered into in 1932 was not ratified by the United States senate for over 20 years, or something like that.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was never ratified.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was never ratified and the agreement of 1941 was not ratified either; and I do not know that anyone said that this besmirched the good name of the United States. The fact is that the Columbia river treaty will not become final, in a binding sense, in Canada until ratification; and the efforts that have been made on behalf of the federal government are designed to bring about the necessary understanding and agreements with the province in order that by ratification and all other necessary steps this great beneficial project may be undertaken.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has referred to something having been said by me about the St. Lawrence seaway. I did not raise the question of the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sorry; it was the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who made reference to the part that the hon. member for Laurier had played, the course he had taken in the fulfilment of that treaty, and the steps that had been taken in negotiations with the government of the province party thereto.

Mr. Pickersgill: With great benefit to Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is in error in stating what had been done in regard to the treaties of 1932 and 1941. The minister did not say that the treaty of 1932, which was signed by Canada and the United States, was first submitted to the United States senate where it lacked the necessary two thirds majority. It was therefore never approved by the government of the United States, and so this treaty cannot be compared to it. So far as the 1941 agreement was concerned—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member permit me to point out that the comparison was in the delay on the part of one of the contracting parties in proceeding to complete ratification?

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Chevrier: I shall come to that in a moment, but I think that on reading the record one could come to no other conclusion than that I have come to. Before speaking of delay I would also remind the minister that the 1941 agreement was submitted to the United States congress in many different forms on several occasions, and it was neither rejected nor ratified by the United States congress.

So far as the delay is concerned I would point out to the minister that this project was studied by any number of international commissions and it was not until 1952 that a new approach was brought into being, namely a joint application to the international joint commission. That was submitted by the governments of Canada and the United States, and it admitted that the two governments were really seized with the problem. Also, before the joint application of Canada and the United States was submitted, an agreement had been entered into and signed between Canada and the province of Ontario and was approved of by this house.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to say briefly that I think the government of Canada acted in good faith. It accepted the word of the negotiators from British Columbia, and unfortunately accepted the advice of the water resources branch as to this being a good treaty for Canada.

Does the minister know that Premier Bennett has said that this treaty was signed by Canada when it did not even know for certain where it could build the dams? Premier Bennett has also said that it has cost him $500,000 a month for the last 10 months to determine the sites for the dams mentioned in the treaty. Does the minister know there has never been a survey or assessment made of the value of land and forests to be destroyed, or an assessment made of the compensation to be paid to industry, farmers and residents, or of the cost of rebuilding roads? None of these estimates have been made. I am quite sure the federal government was misled in this respect, and I do not blame the federal government at all.

Does the government know that other engineering firms have estimated the cost of these dams at $100 million higher than was first thought, and that for the High Arrow dam there is an estimate of $25 million capital cost for putting close to one million feet of logs over the dam every day, either $25 million in one lump sum, or $3 million to $4 million with the provincial government having to pay $500,000 a year to the companies for the cost of moving these logs? This is something the water resources branch knew nothing about.

In view of the fact that the federal government was not aware of these facts and that its officials did not know of them, how could anyone say this is a good treaty for Canada when the costs continue to climb all the time? Prominent engineers have studied this matter. I have received letters from a number of them in Ontario, Quebec and other places. I just mention this in order to say that I think the treaty was signed without a full knowledge of the facts and costs.

So far as Dr. Keenleyside is concerned, I do not know what dams he has built in the past. The minister can read an editorial about him in The Province. He has been telling people that this is a good treaty and this is what the federal government wanted, and I have had to contradict him on that point.

I am concerned with this matter. I represent a lot of people who will be affected, and I would say this stalemate provides a good opportunity for the federal government to renegotiate the treaty, to get the facts as to costs, and then proceed on a much sounder basis than we have had in the past. I also suggest that before any further negotiations are carried on, or alterations made in the treaty, we should have a firm agreement with the government of British Columbia.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister a question in connection with the incident which happened prior to the signing of the treaty? I think the minister said that a letter came from the premier of British Columbia at the time, or just about the time, that the Prime Minister was leaving to sign the treaty. The minister has mentioned this previously but I am not too clear about one point. Did that letter change the understanding with British Columbia materially in so far as the federal government was concerned?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The letter is on the record. A copy of it is on the records of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: I have not got it before me.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was tabled a long time ago and I invite the hon. member to look at it.

May I say very briefly in reply to the hon. member for Kootenay West that I do not think his appraisal of the situation is fair or accurate.

Mr. Herridge: It was admitted in evidence before the hearings on the Arrow lakes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member talks about an admission in evidence. It depends who makes the admission.

Mr. Herridge: The great Dr. Keenleyside.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Dr. Keenleyside does not represent the federal government. An admission on the part of Dr. Keenleyside is not an admission that affects the federal government. The fact is that, in the ordinary course, preliminary investigations had been made in relation to matters of an engineering nature that entered into a decision that had to be made. There is a great deal of engineering that obviously had to be undertaken by the provincial government, and that has been going on since. I can assure the hon. member that no time has been lost in that respect. I can assure him that the engineering work has been proceeding and it had to be done before any construction could be undertaken.

Mr. Herridge: We need to esimate the cost.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No time has been lost, and to give the hon. member an idea of the amount of effort put into this study, the federal government has spent something like $4 million in the studies. We do not at all accept or share the view put forward by the hon. member that the federal advisers have misled the government or have been incompetent or were misinformed. We do not agree with him in those assertions for one minute.

Mr. Herridge: A number of prominent engineers in Canada do.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All right; in a matter of this kind, where the views of experts are put forward, it is not unusual to find some differences of opinion. But we have chosen to follow advice that we think is competent and sound, and we think it has been fully supported and buttressed by engineering evidence.

Mr. Chairman, in pleading for discussion relevant to the item may I say that with regard to the report that this item is intended to pay for, the Montreal engineering firm staunchly supports the view that led the government to sign this treaty in the belief that it is one of very great potential benefit to Canada and to British Columbia.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the minister gave me a rather curt reply a minute ago.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not intentionally.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister for that. However, the minister has said, "Look it up in Hansard and you will find the letter". I suppose I could do that. I have seen it and I have to draw on my memory, but I think the letter to which the minister refers changed the terms of the understanding between the government of British Columbia and the federal government. If that is the case, as I presume it is, then why did not the government turn back, in the light of that letter, and not proceed with the signing of the treaty; because it looks to me as if the Prime Minister was most anxious and in great haste to sign this treaty with the Eisenhower government, either because the Eisenhower government was about to retire or because he was anxious to hail this as one of the greatest international projects ever signed between Canada and the United States.

In any event, the Prime Minister probably thought that he should go on with the wedding even though the bride was not there. My purpose in rising a second time is to ask the minister why the government did not, in the light of the letter which it had received, turn back and start negotiations anew with the province of British Columbia toward the end of obtaining a firm agreement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I informed the committee a few moments ago that when that letter reached Ottawa the Prime Minister was already en route to Washington for the purpose of signing that treaty in accordance with arrangements made prior to that date to the knowledge of all of the parties, including the government of British Columbia.

If the hon. member will refresh his memory by referring to the terms of that letter, I think he will concur in the view that the Canadian government took, that that letter could not be accepted as a change in the course of agreement and understanding between the governments of Canada and British Columbia which had led up to that agreement and the preparations for the signing of the treaty, understandings that had been embodied in the terms of the treaty, for the signing of which arrangements had already then been made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the minister is being very naive when he says that. Why on earth did the premier of British Columbia write this letter, obviously indicating that he was not satisfied, if he really was satisfied? It is just ridiculous.

The hon. member for Laurier said that the Prime Minister went through the wedding without the bride. That is one way of putting it. Another way is that the Prime Minister was attempting to play Hamlet without the Prince of Denmark, and what a Prince of Denmark Mr. Bennett has turned out to be.

Mr. Chevrier: There are one or two other matters that I think should engage the attention of the committee.

Mr. Grafftey: "To be, or not to be".

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, "To be, or not to be".

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to ask the minister, what is the view of the federal government with reference to the export of power?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Has the view of the federal government changed in that respect. If I remember aright statements that were made from time to time by the Minister of Justice, I believe, and perhaps by the Minister of Finance—I am not too sure—certainly outside the house, if not within the house, that there was at the beginning some serious objection being taken by the present government to the export of power. That now seems to have been amended in some respect by statements that I have seen. I wonder whether the minister would care to comment on the view of the federal government at the present time with reference to the export of power.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the view of the present government is well known and has been clearly stated. The house dealt with legislation on this very subject three years ago and it made provision, in establishing the national energy board, for review by that board of applications for permits to export various forms of energy, including electric power. Various applications under the terms of that legislation have been heard by the board and have been approved, and the governor in council has given approval to various of those applications involving the export of power.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister whether he has a secret agreement with the premier of British Columbia which will not be disclosed until after the election?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is no secret agreement that I am aware of.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there any agreement, secret or otherwise?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the federal government is applying its best efforts to achieve agreement in order to get this great and beneficial undertaking launched.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it the intention of the government, in relation to the last but one answer which the minister gave, that with reference to the export of power each application for the export of power will be dealt with on its merits?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of course, Mr. Chairman, that is the duty of the board under the statute, to deal with each application on its merits.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 729 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Herridge: Five o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a very important question; the Prime Minister said so himself.

Item stands.

The Deputy Chairman: In order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report a certain resolution and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), in whose name items Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5 of the public bills on today's order paper stand, has kindly agreed that these might stand aside without otherwise losing their places, if the house would give its unanimous consent, in order to allow item No. 4 in my name, and item No. 6 in the name of my hon. friend from Nanaimo, to now be called.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the house would also be agreeable to calling item No. 7 after items Nos. 4 and 6? My hon. friend from Timiskaming has also agreed that it should be called. I wonder if the house would consider that also.

Mr. Churchill: That is entirely different.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is suggested that by unanimous consent the order of business in connection with public bills be altered and that we should deal with the items on today's list in the following order—No. 4 standing in the name of the hon. member for Halifax, No. 6 standing in the name of the hon. member for Nanaimo, and No. 7 standing in the name of the hon. member for Port Arthur. The hon. member principally concerned has agreed. Does the house give consent to this order of business?

Mr. Churchill: It is all right for two of them. It is all right for Bill No. C-34 and Bill No. C-46, both of which are changing the names of districts.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I had better test the opinion of the house with regard to those two, first.

Mr. Chevrier: There is certainly no objection on our part to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Halifax, but it seems to me that the suggestion of the hon. member for Port Arthur is equally good, and if we are going to consent to the first two there is no valid reason why we should not approve the third.

Mr. Pallett: I would point out that there may be some question of whether Bill No. C-47 is in order, as the hon. member for Port Arthur well knows. It is not a simple representation bill as the other two are. It may give rise to a lengthy discussion. The subject has already been announced as one that is receiving the attention of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Port Arthur mind if I tested the opinion of the house on the two other measures?

Will the house give consent to the proposal of the hon. member for Halifax that these two representation bills dealing with the names of constituencies be dealt with first?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: Perhaps I could just reply to the point which the chief government whip has raised. He has suggested that this bill may not be in order. I should like to draw his attention to the fact that the bill has been on the order paper in the same form in other sessions and that it has been on the order paper since the beginning of the present session. Thus it hardly seems to me that his point that it may be out of order has any relevance at all.

Mr. Speaker: I will ask the house, equally, for the hon. member for Port Arthur, whether it will agree to the third item being order No. 7.

Mr. Pallett: Perhaps we might consult the hon. member for Port Arthur and deal with this matter after the other two have been disposed of.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes or no?

Mr. Pallett: No, for now; maybe "yes" later.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of complete agreement now I will take the matter up with the house after we have dealt with the two items on which we have agreed.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HALIFAX ELECTORAL DISTRICT

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-44 to amend the Representation Act (Halifax electoral district).

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Representation Act

On clause 1—Halifax-Dartmouth and County.

Mr. Morris: Perhaps I might make a brief statement in order to clarify the purpose of this measure. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill No. C-44 in my name is solely to change the name of the federal electoral district of "Halifax" to "Halifax-Dartmouth and County". The present bill makes no other change either in representation, dual voting or boundaries of the riding.

The present name "Halifax" has given rise in many places to the misunderstanding that the federal electoral riding, as presently defined, is confined to the great and progressive fortress and port city of Halifax. In fact, it contains the city of Halifax and also the city of Dartmouth and the whole territory encompassed by the municipality of the county of Halifax.

In 1951, the population of the riding was 162,217. Five years later, it had increased to 197,948, and the final population count arising out of the 1961 census of Canada, which has just been published, is 225,723, making it the third most populous federal riding in Canada.

Because the single word "Halifax" is the name of both the capital city of Nova Scotia and the name of a county, it is sometimes assumed that the present name of the riding applies to that historic city alone. During the last session of parliament the former town of Dartmouth, founded in 1750 and now having amalgamated with several contiguous areas, proudly achieved city status and rightfully proclaims that it is now the fastest growing city in Canada. The prime purpose of the bill is to give electoral recognition to the status of Dartmouth as a great city of Canada, and at the same time to give recognition to the fact that the federal electoral district encompasses the whole county, and not alone the city of Halifax, to which assumption the single name "Halifax" sometimes leads.

Bill No. C-44, which I am hopeful the house will now pass, has been publicly endorsed in most gracious terms by His Worship the Mayor of Dartmouth on behalf of the more than 45,000 citizens of that city, and I recommend it now to the sympathetic consideration of the house.

Mr. Fisher: Could I ask the sponsor a question arising out of figures recently issued by the dominion bureau of statistics which indicate that compared to other areas in Nova Scotia represented in this house, Halifax has a disproportionate number of electors?

I was just wondering if the hon. member might not be somewhat premature in proposing this particular title in view of the fact that the adjustment which is soon to come will quickly render the new description an inaccurate one. Maybe the hon. member could at least express his opinion on that.

Mr. Morris: I think it would be premature to do so. It is not possible to forecast what the proposed electoral boundaries commission might or might not in its wisdom and judgment decide would be the merit of delimiting the present boundaries of the dual riding of Halifax. In any event, sufficient unto the day is the need thereof, and it is my hope that the constituency, in the not hypothetical present, would take account of the misunderstanding actually arising from the single name, and I am hoping that through this bill electoral recognition will be given to Dartmouth and the rest of the country.

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. W. F. Matthews (Nanaimo) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-46, to amend the Representation Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Matthews: I should like to take a few minutes of the time of the committee to thank the hon. member for Timiskaming for his kindness and also to thank all members of the committee for allowing this bill to come forward. I might say that, as found in the explanatory note, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the electoral district of "Nanaimo" to that of "Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands". The reason for the change is that this particular part of British Columbia has grown. It is a thriving community. Other parts feel they also would like to be named as part of that very fine constituency. The name "Cowichan" goes back for 90 years in the lumbering business and it is certainly entitled to that consideration. I might say that the beautiful islands there certainly are proud to have their name included in this list. I might also mention the fact that to these islands—I refer to the gulf islands—probably come more pleasure boats and tourist boats during the tourist season than come to any place else in Canada. I should at this time like to extend an invitation to any hon. members who may wish to visit these beautiful spots. There is nothing else I wish to add except to say that this legislation will be very well received. I certainly hope the bill will be passed.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent the house could now proceed with Bill No. 7. In the absence of that consent, the next order of business would be item No. 1. Is the house prepared to give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Port Arthur?

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Speaker: Then the house will proceed with item No. 1.

DIVORCE

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY PROCTOR, REGULATION OF COSTS, ETC.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-41, to establish the office of parliamentary proctor and to regulate taxation of costs.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling on the hon. member or recognizing the hon. member, may I say that I feel it to be my duty to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this bill has some of the characteristics of a money bill or one that requires a resolution. I therefore feel that if the debate proceeds I should at least indicate the possible difficulties with a bill of this kind so that it will not be taken as a firm precedent for similar legislation.

The bill provides for the appointment of an official who is described as parliamentary proctor and who would be under the joint direction of the Speakers of the two houses and the joint committee of the two houses. It provides for the payment of a salary for this official and for the raising from suppliants for parliamentary divorce of fees from which the salary would be paid. In this act no provision is made for these fees going into the consolidated revenue fund. However, by general legislation I think they would be required to be paid into that fund. It therefore may not be possible to get them out again in order to pay the officer without specific legislative authority. As the bill stands, it would perhaps come under the heading of a bill which provides a service in response to a moderate fee commensurate with the service. On the authority of a citation from May's Parliamentary Procedure, the 16th edition, page 789, there is some precedent for such legislation without a preceding ways and means resolution. However, I am by no means satisfied that the bill comes under the exception. With that caution now, however, I feel that the debate might proceed as the case is not as clear as it might be. I recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the concern you have shown. It is certainly a concern of mine that we may have under our divorce procedure some arrangement which would allow the payment of this particular official. For this reason it was felt that the proctor's fee would be charged to the persons obtaining relief rather than coming from the general revenue. For this reason the amount of money that would be paid in would, of course, be in a fund from which his salary would come before the money was finally turned over to the general treasury. This may be a technicality. It is a technicality, of course, to which the Minister of Justice is giving consideration now. I am always sorry to note that the Minister of Justice is so overly cautious—perhaps I should not say he is too slow—with regard to decisions of any nature, even in the answering of letters. It certainly is the fact in this case that the necessity for a proctor has been indicated for some time. In my particular bill we assumed that this could be done through allocation of part of the fees paid by the petitioners themselves, as this would be done first, and that the other moneys would then be turned in to the general revenue and would be under the control of the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Speaker of the Senate. This may indicate one of the problems confronting a private member of parliament in arriving at a solution for a real problem which we as members of parliament have in no way been able to solve in the past. The office of proctor has been developed in such countries as England. The province of Ontario has now appointed a proctor.

Mr. Lambert: May I rise on a point of order for purposes of clarification? Did Your Honour reserve the question whether this bill in the name of a private member is validly before the house or was the hon. member addressing his remarks to that point which you raised? He is now embarking entirely on the merits of the bill rather than the question of whether there is an infringement of the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I did not make myself as clear as I should. I called on the hon. member to move his motion indicating that my purpose in rising was to file a caveat, if you like to put it that way, to indicate that I had doubts about the bill, but as they had not been cleared up to the extent that I felt

I should withdraw the bill from the consideration of the house, debate might proceed on the bill itself. If the hon. member felt disposed to address himself to that point it may be that I did not give him the opportunity to do so, but perhaps it is too late to do so now.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I believe that a similar bill has been introduced before. Obviously some consideration has been given to this matter and a private member in introducing a bill of this nature must follow a very circuitous route to overcome the problem. I hope we have been successful in that regard.

Obviously what we are doing in this bill is putting forward the need and reasons for a parliamentary proctor, and I think that in the very near future we will see this an accomplished fact as a result of action on the part of the government. I hope that the member who has shown concern about this matter will not be opposed when the government does this.

In the main the office of official proctor is an office established under the direction of the courts and the holder of that office investigates any factor to which the court may direct his attention and which does not come within the legislative field. The request would be made by the crown itself and for this reason this official is normally known as the Queen's proctor or King's proctor as the case may be. This official has the right to look into matters that may appear to the court to be beyond its field of investigation and yet warrant some investigation.

We are all aware of the recent C.B.C. program "Close-Up" which depicted some of the abuses of the divorce procedure in the province of Ontario. Charges were made that this was not a proper program and that things were reported that were not necessarily true. The situation even reached the stage where the attorney general of the province said that the things that were said on the program were not true and he was going to do something about it. The logical conclusion of the whole discussion was the establishment of the office of Queen's proctor in the province of Ontario, though because of the circumstances the manner in which the office was created was rather spectacular. In my opinion it would have been very fortunate if his duties had been extended to include investigation of gambling activities as well because there probably would have been less controversy at the present time.

Mr. Jones: You might have one in Saskatchewan too.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Peters: Yes, there might be one in Saskatchewan. I would recommend that a proctor be attached to each court handling divorce and I suggest that the powers of the proctor should be extended to cover a number of other fields, because in this way investigations can be conducted by an impartial official, which does not appear to me to be possible under court procedures or the procedures of a legislative body such as the Senate.

Some aspects of this problem have been brought to the attention of the House of Commons before, but I should like to refer only to one investigation which the hon. member for Skeena and I made because it certainly indicates the fault, and indicates also the need to have somebody to conduct impartial investigations. We were very concerned about the fact that many newspapers in the province of Quebec were making very strong statements about the type of detective agencies involved in parliamentary divorces. There have been quite a number of editorials along this line. I have a letter here regarding the training of investigators. It points out how these investigators are trained or rather indicates their lack of training. The letter is from E. T. Nesbitt of Quebec city and is dated August 25, 1958. I should like to read one portion.

> The key to the situation is in the lack of qualifications among the investigators, especially in cases where they investigate non-existent evidence, such as adultery which they know in advance has not been committed, or which has to be fabricated by phony witnesses and phony corespondents, in order to support the phony divorce bill. Many of the cases are something like problems in nuclear reaction being investigated by plumbers who haven't even got a plumbing licence. They are problems which might take properly qualified investigators at least six months or two years to investigate thoroughly, if the objective was to prevent the divorce bill from being presented. However, since the whole objective is purely destructive and is intended to increase the Quebec divorce rate rather than to decrease it, the objective itself is simply to destroy some 400 marriages per year, regardless of whether properly trained investigators could eliminate most of the bills.

Because we were concerned about this matter and had heard a number of statements made before the miscellaneous private bills committee that did not appear to be factual, we sent a letter on the 9th of May, 1961 to the respondents and corespondents in 242 cases. We were surprised to find that a large number of these letters were returned by the post office as not being deliverable. We checked with the post office and the post office provided an explanation in each of these cases. Out of 242 cases, 114 letters were returned and the post office gave these reasons: No such street number or post office in Montreal, respondents, 2, corespondents,

5; not in directory, unknown, respondents, 19, corespondents, 45; moved, not at that address, respondents, 16, corespondents, 18; sent to place of work and unknown, respondents, 1, corespondents, 2. That is a total of 38 respondents and 70 corespondents. Six co-respondents and respondents appeared as witnesses and therefore were not involved in our inquiry. That accounts for the 114 cases. This is the type of job that a proctor would do.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, we must give credit where credit is due. The Senate committee, itself, has made much more specific rules in relation to the sending of notice to the respondent and corespondent. We still feel, however, that we are dependant upon the province of Quebec to license the bailiffs who are handling these cases. We recall the Eccles case which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) has had under advisement for two years and about which he has failed to do anything. In this particular case the respondent had never appeared at the address shown on the form. According to the janitor who had been at that place for a number of years, there had never been anybody of that name at that particular address. I believe this is the sort of thing about which a proctor could do something; this is a field in which the proctor would serve a very valuable purpose.

If we are going to continue with the Senate divorce mill, then we are going to have to provide the same protections that a court affords the public. I believe the amount of money that is collected from these divorce petitions would warrant the maintenance of this officer who would be appointed by the governor in council. He would be paid a sufficient amount to make it unlikely that he would be involved in any of the shenanigans that currently take place, not only the Senate divorce mill but the divorce mills throughout Canada.

The second part of this bill relates to the taxation of costs. We know, and it has been widely established, that the price of a parliamentary divorce will run anywhere from $1,000 to $20,000. We feel that the proctor should have a right to decide the amount that can be charged for the various services needed at the various stages of the divorce proceedings. He would have the right, for instance, to limit the amount paid to investigators, to legal counsel and to others involved in the case. For this reason, we believe that the proctor should have some powers in the taxation field.

There is another point which I should like to make in connection with the appointment of a proctor. This term may be new to most Canadians, but I am quite sure that in the very near future there will be a public proctor attached to the parliamentary divorce petition section and that this will prove to be of advantage to all concerned. I suggest that we should ask something further of the proctor, and this will apply only if we see fit to give the Senate jurisdiction over parliamentary divorce and the power to grant a decree absolute. If this procedure were established, then in my opinion the proctor should have an obligation to report to the House of Commons through the Speaker any changes that he believes would be in the interests of the public. This divorce procedure has changed very little over the years. It is quite true that the Senate has established standing orders for the operation of the divorce committee. They have set up a red book which outlines the requirements of parliamentary divorce procedure. I feel the proctor should have an obligation to report to the house through the Speaker, when the estimates for legislation are considered, those changes that he feels should be made with regard to taxation and the method of processing the bills of this type.

I feel that the Queen's proctor would serve a very valuable purpose. He would allow those of us who are concerned about the abuses of our divorce procedure to free our minds of this worry. We would, in effect, be hiring him to act as our consciences in connection with divorce procedure.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, this seems to me to be the reverse of the coin which was exhibited during the course of the debate yesterday on the same subject matter. At that time we were seeking some alternative method of dealing with this very difficult problem which has been inflicted upon the parliament of Canada. I would take it that today this bill would indicate that parliament would have acquiesced in carrying the burden of these divorce cases. At this time, I would be reluctant to adopt that particular point of view. However, if we should have to accept this position for some time, then I want to examine this bill in the light of that situation.

It seems to me that when we look at proposed legislation we must search in detail to find what benefits we hope will accrue from it and look at what mischief it is intended to cure. I would assume that the intention of this legislation is to prevent the abuses of this procedure that we have seen in the past, the obvious abuses of the opportunity to come to parliament and obtain relief in the form of a divorce. There have been abuses, and I think that that fact has been established from time to time. In so far as the establishment of a parliamentary proctor is concerned, I think we have to go back a little farther than the hon. member did.

We have accepted, as part of our way of life, the fact that the family is the basis of our civilization, religiously, economically, socially and in all respects. It is for this reason there has been, from time to time, an evident desire to retain the family unit and make it as difficult as is reasonable to dissolve marriages. In most cases involving disputes between citizens the state does not intervene unless perjury has been established or there has been an abuse of the court. However, in respect of the dissolution of marriages, since the time of the original procedure before the ecclesiastical courts in the United Kingdom, an officer of this nature has had some function. His function has been to see that the public interest in the maintenance of the institution of the family shall not be lightly destroyed. We have, therefore, had rules which provided that domicile must be established; that there should be no collusion; that there should be no connivance; that there should be no condonation and that only within the prescribed limits shall there be a dissolution of a marriage. If there should be any indication that there has been an abuse then the proctor, the Queen's proctor or the King's proctor, would have the right to intervene. Consequently I think that the duties of any such officer as is envisaged in this bill would be precisely the same, not merely to pursue the question of abuse of the perjury per se but to make sure that if this parliament is going to be involved in this particular issue, that the same rules will apply as are applied in the courts.

This is one particular aspect of it where I think we would be in difficulty. As the hon. member pointed out there are standing rules in the other place which I think have some relationship to the rules under which the courts have established their jurisdiction. On the other hand there are no rules in this house and theoretically any captious, capricious or frivolous reason can be assigned for refusing the relief which has been asked. In other words I would think that, precedent to the establishment of this office, there must necessarily be a common set of rules under which the parliament of Canada will decide the basis on which dissolutions of marriages are going to be granted. Otherwise the result might be that the parliamentary proctor would be something in the nature of a parliamentary Perry Mason, sent out to pry into matters which may not go to the true issue which is involved.

While I am not against this principle, I think if it comes to the point where we must assume this responsibility we would have to consider it very carefully. I say that because, as I look ahead, I can see this government has a great future so far ahead as the mind of man can see, and I would not like to see its rights to bring benefits to the economy of the country defeated by having to deal with these cases. Yet, as I say, should we have to, then I would like to see it attempted on proper principles.

Consequently I make this comment that while I favour this principle I think it should be founded only a basis of rules applicable to and approved by both houses, unless of course it should turn out that we do decide to assign the sole jurisdiction to deal with these cases to the other place. In any event there should be a firm understanding as to the basis on which dissolutions of marriages are granted so that an officer of this description would know precisely what are the limits of his authority, what are the rules on which these divorces might be granted, and if he is going to intervene he should know precisely why he is going to intervene and what he is going to do about it.

Since the bill has been brought forward for discussion I may be permitted to refer to the section which has already been the subject of the verbal caveat which Your Honour uttered. I would think that, the principle having been accepted, it is in the public interest that cases of this kind should be dealt with properly, that there should be no fraud and no abuses permitted, and that it should be at public cost that such an official should be paid.

Of course I recognize that it would be impossible for a private member to introduce such a provision. Even in its present form Your Honour must have some doubts, you must be in dubitate as to whether or not it could be properly passed by the house. But, if we do accept this principle, I would urge that it be in the public interest to see that marriages are only dissolved in a proper way and subject to the proper causes, and that the cost of an official of this nature and of the office should be borne by the public at large.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): I wish to direct my preliminary remarks to the point of order that has arisen. I am in agreement with the principle that there should be some person to supervise the matter of the conduct of granting of divorces through this parliament, or through whatever method may later be devised. That principle has been recognized by many of the provinces which have appointed similar officers to supervise divorce proceedings.

I think we are here trying to do something indirectly which cannot be done directly. It is quite true that the sanction to raise the money and the expenditure of money is not directed to the government as such. It is directed to the Speakers of both houses who would act to levy a form of taxation upon applicants for divorces, and out of that money they would provide payment for an officer of both houses who would have the post of proctor.

I believe that no private member can sponsor a bill which can cause expenditure out of the consolidated fund or any public funds, or cause the government to raise money for whatever fund might be set up. I submit that this purported levy is a form of taxation, and if it were to be paid out of the consolidated fund then this would be an invalid bill put forward by a private member.

What the hon. member proposes to do is bypass the consolidated fund and set up another fund. I am not sure whether it would also be a public fund, but in effect it would be the responsibility of the government to see that the proctor was paid. For instance, what would happen if there were not enough divorce petitions to pay this officer's salary? Perhaps that does not seem practical, in view of the way in which these divorce petitions are increasing; but if a proctor is appointed and gives service, who is to be responsible for his payment? The Speakers of both houses are; but ultimately the responsibility will fall back upon the government because it is the House of Commons and the Senate which appoints the Speakers. That being so I believe this indirectly would make a charge on the consolidated fund of the country. In effect there would be a guarantee that the government would see payment was made, its authority for that being delegated for the time being to both Speakers who would collect the levy on those making petitions.

When we impose duties on goods coming into the country that is a form of taxation, but people do not have to pay it if they do not import the goods concerned. However, I ask is it right to tax an applicant in order to raise money for certain purposes? On that basis I would contend that this bill is trying to do something indirectly that we cannot do directly.

Mr. Peters: Question.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that those of us in the house who are lawyers are fully aware of the valuable services that can be rendered to the courts within the provinces, because there is in most provinces a Queen's proctor to make sure that the rules and regulations for bringing divorces before the courts, as well as the actual matters constituting divorce, are adhered to and subject to scrutiny.

I am sure that hon. members of the house have found it a trifle embarrassing to find that sometimes some of the evidence presented to the parliament of Canada to obtain a divorce seems to be a little suspicious, to say the least. While I agree with the hon. member who introduced this bill that a Queen's proctor would render much valuable assistance and would probably keep to a minimum or weed out a certain amount of what I call shady practices, I must add the note of caution that even with a Queen's proctor divorces are not always, in all the provinces, obtained according to the way in which they should be obtained.

The point, of course, is that the Queen's proctor is the individual appointed with that specific duty. While I think that our law enforcement agencies are constantly on the lookout to make sure that the laws against perjury, for instance, have not been violated, I think the reason a certain individual is delegated in most attorneys general departments to look after this matter specifically is that divorce is a subject which can easily be neglected, where there is not the light of publicity, et cetera, that would keep the ordinary officials of the department so busy and vigorous on it if someone were not given that specific responsibility.

I am not going to argue too minutely some of the provisions of this bill. We have already heard from the hon. member from Peace River who, because of his very long legal experience, and I may say very distinguished career in law, has been able to give the house the benefit of his views on this matter. I would like to back him up in his stand that this office should not be financed in the manner set out in this bill. Certainly it is a public servant performing a very valuable function and it is up to the public to pay his salary and expenses. In that connection I note that the bill itself contains the method of appointing a Queen's proctor. It puts on the Speakers of the two houses the duty, with the advice of the parliamentary committees, to select this official.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, if this official is going to play the part that he is supposed to play, and if he is going to be able to acquire the staff that would be necessary for him to effectively carry out the investigative functions of his office, there must first of all be some degree of permanency about it. The idea of making such an official the result of a political appointment seems to me to destroy that independence of movement that is necessary if he is to be able to carry out his functions in the manner required.

The hon. member for Timiskaming pointed out one of the reasons why this man should be well enough paid so that he would be free from any suggestion or taint of influence, so that he would be really free to dig into these divorces and see exactly what is going on. He pointed out the high cost of divorces in parliament. I suppose by inference he was pointing to the possibility of curbing influence being used against such an official. I find it a little contradictory that he should make these references, and very practical references too, to the sort of pressures that might exist and at the same time leave the appointment of this official on this sort of political basis which would be subject to political debate, political pressures and which would put the Speakers of both houses under a bit of fire.

Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the cost of divorce, but I did find myself a little amazed when the hon. member mentioned a price of from $1,000 to $20,000 for a divorce. Certainly I have the highest regard for the legal profession. I believe that most lawyers try to keep the fees charged for their services in line with the value of those services. I find it incredible that anyone should seriously suggest a fee of $20,000 for putting a divorce through the House of Commons, unless it was after the filibuster to keep them out of the house.

I do not believe that the Queen's proctor in the province of Alberta has anything to do with taxing solicitors' fees. That is done by the bar association. I would think that this function of the Queen's proctor in the House of Commons could be a most valuable one. Yet here again the appointment of this official should not be left open to political consideration. He should not be chosen from among the practising field from time to time, but should be an official appointed on a long term basis the same as any other public servant or civil servant, with security of tenure and reasonable pay and allowances. He should also have that degree of permanence of office that would give him the status and staff not only to be able to carry out investigative duties regarding evidence in divorce matters, but also to be able to keep in touch with trends in legal matters within this country so that his office would always have an up to date view on what was happening in legal fields, what were the fees and costs, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the house leader could give us an indication of what the government is planning to do up until the time the budget is brought down on Tuesday evening. It would certainly be very helpful to us to form some idea of the order in which to prepare for things.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, now that the budget date has been announced for which the opposition have been asking, perhaps they will move very rapidly with the following items of business. Third reading of Bill No. C-38 will be the first item on Monday. Then the first item for general discussion, of course, would be the resolution in the name of the Prime Minister on the electoral boundaries commission; second, Bill No. C-80, an act to amend the Veterans' Land Act; third, Bill No. S-19, an act to amend the Canada Grain Act; fourth, Bill No. C-79, an act to amend the Customs Act; fifth, the resolution in the name of the Secretary of State dealing with the universal copyright convention; sixth, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Transport to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act; seventh, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, and eighth, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance with regard to crown corporations. All of those items could be passed by an active house on Monday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister indicate whether, if they are not all passed on Monday, we will go on with that program on Tuesday up until the time of the budget?

Mr. Churchill: Some of those items will be called on Tuesday, but there may be other important items appearing on the order paper on Monday which the house would like to deal with on Tuesday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

728. Canadian wildlife service—wildlife resources conservation and development, including administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act—further amount required, $27,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 9, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RACINE—INACCURACY OF ANSWER BY PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: On April 5 the hon. member for Beauce raised a question involving the Minister of Public Works, who was not then present, and at my request the matter was deferred until the minister would be present. The hon. member for Beauce raised as a question of privilege the correctness of an answer given by the Minister of Public Works some days earlier in respect of the vendor of a property in Beauceville as a site for a post office, I think. Perhaps the best course would be to have the minister make a statement, if he has had an opportunity of examining Hansard; then I may dispose of the matter after hearing him.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): A question of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Beauce on April 5 during my absence from the house, concerning the site for a new post office building in the town of Beauceville East, in the province of Quebec. This is my first opportunity of replying, and I should add that I have no objection whatever to this matter or any other matter connected with my department being referred to the public accounts committee.

As early as the fiscal year 1957-58 it was noted that a need was developing for more postal accommodation in Beauceville East. Subsequently, after consultation with the post office officials, a new public project was scheduled tentatively for 1962, and meanwhile a continuing lease was arranged. In 1959 Mr. Paul Giguere, at that time mayor of Beauceville East, requested the government to construct a new federal building to benefit his community. A similar request was received during the same year and the one following from the hon. member for Beauce himself and also from the council of the municipality.

In November, 1960, as a result of its investigations, my department decided to list the project for consideration in the main estimates of 1962-63, and began actively to examine the requirements of the project including the availability and cost of a site.

The initial visit of departmental officials to Beauceville in December, 1960 disclosed only two sites priced at $20,000 and $30,000 respectively, and both poorly situated due to the flooding which occurs on the Chaudiere river at that place. Shortly thereafter Mr. Giguere, now ex-mayor, suggested a third possible site described as the Lorenzo Mathieu property and available for sale at $16,000. Subsequently Mr. Giguere informed the department that he had taken an option on the property in his name for $16,000 in order to prevent its sale to others and to assure that the government would get this site for a post office. His previous interest as mayor of Beauceville East in acquiring a new post office lent credence to his statement.

After due consideration it was found that this property was the best of the three examined, being the only one free from flooding; and, as it was centrally located adjacent to the bank and the city hall, and the most economically priced, it was clearly the most advantageous purchase available. I should add that it had approval, as to location, of the new mayor of Beauceville East, Mr. Jacques R. Renault.

Accordingly the matter was submitted to the treasury board and the purchase price of $16,000 for the Mathieu property was approved.

Obviously the hon. member was correct in his statement regarding the name of the vendor given in my answer of March 19, 1962. Some of the records in my department identified the site as the Lorenzo Mathieu property, as a result of which this name was inadvertently used by the department in the preparation of the answer to the hon. member's question and read by me to the house. I therefore request that Hansard be corrected at page 1921 for March 19, 1962, by the substitution of the name Paul Giguere for that of Lorenzo Mathieu.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that I accept the correction made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker).

However, reference to the motion I proposed last Thursday, would show that it read as follows:

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge), that the matter concerning the purchase of a parcel of land for the construction of a public building in Beauceville, as well as the reply given by the Minister of Public Works or his parliamentary secretary in this respect and related documents, be submitted to the standing committee on public accounts.

I was therefore asking the house to submit the transaction to the committee on public accounts. Another reason which prompted me to do so is that the treasury board agreed to make that payment of $16,000, as proved by the contract entered into on September 26, 1961, under its minute number 581250, dated May 18, 1961, whereas Mr. Giguere became the owner of the land on May 24 only, that is after the treasury board had accepted to pay the amount of $16,000.

Consequently, that transaction enabled Mr. Giguere to make a profit of $8,000.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beauce has raised a question relating to an answer given by the Minister of Public Works upon which the minister has had an opportunity to comment. He raises this matter as a question of privilege and submits a motion that the acquisition of the property be referred to the committee on public accounts. If there is a question of the privileges of the house involved, then the hon. member is within his rights in making a motion and insisting that the question of privilege, as must be done with any question of privilege, be disposed of at once.

If a matter of the privileges of the house is not involved then the hon. member's remedy is to give notice of his motion on the order paper, as any unofficial member of the house would do, or to take the matter to the public accounts committee and ask that committee to consider the question which he wishes them to consider.

On the last occasion the question was raised I indicated to the hon. member that I did not think a matter of privilege would arise unless he were prepared to assert, on his own responsibility, that the house had been deliberately misinformed by the minister, thereby inputing some impropriety or improper conduct to the minister which would raise a question of the privileges of the house. As he has not asserted this, I do not find that there is a question of privilege involved. The matter has been discussed, hon. members of the house can form their own conclusions and, as I stated, the hon. member has another remedy to bring his question before the public accounts committee.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Would Your Honour listen to what I have to say in connection with the matter? Your Honour has disposed of it apparently on the basis that there is just one item involved in this question, namely the error in the return to the house made by the minister; but I think Your Honour forgets the point which was raised by my hon. friend from Beauce when the matter was first raised, namely that there was a question of an option for $16,000 having been taken on a property which just prior thereto had been purchased for $8,000.

Surely that is a matter which affects the privileges of all hon. members of the house, and surely it is a matter which the public accounts committee might properly be charged with. Otherwise an hon. member would have no recourse under the circumstances if the motion were to go the bottom of the list. I simply bring to Your Honour's attention, if I may, that treasury board had approved on the 18th day of May—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member need not go into the facts. I take the view that in the absence of some charge against the minister which would necessarily involve the privileges of the house, the other facts, while they may disclose something which deserves inquiry and attention, are not of the order of those situations which involve the conduct of a minister vis-à-vis the house. Therefore they must be inquired into in the usual way, either on the estimates of the minister's department, by bringing the matter before the public accounts committee, or by the other remedies and opportunities that are available to private members to bring to the attention of the house or its committees matters which they feel deserve that attention.

I think it would be very dangerous to set the precedent that any hon. member of the house could rise in his place at any time without notice and move that certain matters be considered by the house or by committees of the house, unless they genuinely involve known and established privileges of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to make two points in connection with what Your Honour has said. The first has to do with the matter which the minister himself has raised, namely that he said at the outset that he had absolutely no objection to the matter being referred to the public accounts committee. I should think the minister would be the first to want to clear this up in so far as the particular individual in question, Mr. Giguere, is concerned. The next point is that Your Honour has suggested this matter might well be disposed of on another occasion when the estimates of the Department of Public Works are up for consideration. There is certainly at this time, under these circumstances, no knowledge in so far as we are concerned that these will ever be reached, and it seems to me that under those circumstances the hon. member's point is well taken in making the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have given the hon. member full opportunity to express his views. I believe he will find that the opinion I have expressed is correct, and I do not propose to hear further representations on it.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege affecting the routine measures before the house, the hon. member for Laurier is trying to create the impression here, and thereby is misinforming the house, that the estimates of the Department of Public Works might never be reached. They have already been before the house for two days this session—

Mr. Pearson: In the further supplementary estimates.

Mr. Churchill: —and might well be reached again if the opposition would get on quickly with the tasks in front of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Denis: Very funny.

THE BUDGET

TABLING OF BUDGET PAPERS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I table the budget white paper and say that it will be available to all hon. members this afternoon in the distribution office. I am tabling copies in English and French.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Another deficit.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Perhaps for the convenience of hon. members, and as well subscribers to the records of the house, it would be well to follow the usual practice, and in keeping with that practice I move that the white paper be printed as an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings and also to tomorrow's Hansard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Another deficit; almost $800 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Have all hon. members heard the motion? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SPORTS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCIAL PROGRAMS AND GRANTS TO ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of announcements to make with respect to the fitness and amateur sport program.

First of all, I am today writing the provincial governments informing them of our intention to set aside $2,500,000 of the $5,000,000 authorized for the fiscal year 1962-63 to assist provincial programs designed to encourage, promote and develop fitness and amateur sport. This division of the fund underlines the important role which the dominion government feels the provinces can play in the new program. By channelling a considerable part of our annual expenditures through the provinces we hope to stimulate activity at the community level. At the same time, sufficient funds should be available for the dominion government to assist the work of national organizations and projects of national interest, including encouragement to national and international competitions, support for fitness research, production of technical informational material, and other aspects which can best be carried out at the federal level.

The house may be interested in knowing how the $2,500,000 will be divided among the provinces. A flat rate of $50,000 is proposed for each province signing an agreement, with the balance being provided on a per capita basis.

In addition to these grants, the dominion government is proposing as an interim measure to provide immediate assistance totalling $250,000 to the provinces for planning and organizational purposes. As we are most anxious to assist the provinces in preparing for a comprehensive nation-wide co-operative effort, and since we feel that the necessary funds can be effectively utilized for this purpose while federal-provincial negotiation of agreements for larger sums is being completed, we have decided to press forward through the provision of these interim grants.

I might say that all these grants are closely in line with the views expressed by the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport and by provincial ministers at the special meetings which were held in February on this subject. I believe they will go on a long way toward encouraging the kind of provincial and community participation which is so essential to a well rounded and effective national effort. The provinces have so far shown a keen and enthusiastic interest in the new fitness and amateur sport program, and I am optimistic about their reaction to the arrangements which I am now submitting for their agreement and approval.

The final announcement I would like to make has to do with further grants to various national organizations. The house will recall that some $15,000 has already gone out to three organizations with emergency needs. I now have the pleasure of indicating federal approval of grants totalling $142,800 to provide urgently required assistance in connection with various national and international competitions as well as other projects in the field of fitness and amateur sport. These are also being made available on an ad hoc basis on the recommendation of the national advisory council pending the final working out by the council of suitable criteria for the making of such grants.

They will be charged to the program's allocation for 1961-62, as will the $30,000 grant which has been provided to assist the British Empire and commonwealth games association in sending a Canadian team to the games in Perth, Australia, later this year. Also charged to the program's initial allocation is the $35,000 grant to the Calgary Olympic development association which I announced in the house last week. Taken together, these various expenditures add up to some $473,000 in assistance made available during 1961-62, which I believe represents very substantial progress for a program of such recent origin and complexity.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY PRODUCTS—FURTHER ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING SUPPORT PRICES

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on March 22 the Acting Minister of Agriculture announced the dairy support program for 1962-63. The house will remember that the acting minister said there would be consultations among the officials of the government, producers and processing organizations. Since that time consultations have been held with the producer and processing groups concerned with the production and handling of dairy products. There was general agreement on the wisdom of the government policy aimed at increasing consumption on the one hand and decreasing production on the other. However, the fluid milk producers and cheese producers asked for modification of the program in so far as it affected their groups.

The cheese producers asked that the support price of last year be retained and, therefore, it would not be necessary to pay them extra compensatory payments. The fluid milk producers asked for a year's postponement before the compensatory payments were denied to their surplus milk.

Since Ontario and Quebec are the main dairy provinces, I asked their ministers of agriculture and their staffs to meet with me. It had been agreed since last spring that because of the divided jurisdiction between provincial and federal governments relating to dairy products, there should be joint planning and action. The agricultural ministers of the other provinces know that I have been consulting with Quebec and Ontario during the last 12 months.

Following a full discussion with the two provincial government representatives last Wednesday, the federal government has decided to authorize the agricultural stabilization board (1) to buy butter at 64 cents per pound as last year and resell at 52 cents per pound; this is to give an incentive to consumption; and (2) to leave cheese at the same level as last year.

Thus the support levels and the agricultural stabilization board's purchase prices for dairy products will be retained at the same level as during 1961-62. In addition the compensatory payment of 25 cents per hundred for milk for manufacturing purpose, exclusive of surplus milk from fluid producers, will continue to be paid. This policy should maintain returns to all segments of producers at the same level as during the current year.

The fluid milk producers of Ontario are giving us written assurance that their association will work with the provincial government of that province and other producers of milk to set up an integrated milk marketing plan for Ontario this year. The representatives of the provincial government of Quebec have indicated that there will be provincial legislation this session to allow for setting up of a producers' board in that province.

The significance of this will be appreciated by milk producers everywhere. It means that if Ontario and Quebec set up producer controlled milk boards then a tremendous step forward will have been taken toward the time when producers will have a greater say in their industry. Needless to say, the federal government will be glad to see this movement spread across Canada. The milk industry of British Columbia is a good example of producers handling their own business successfully. We feel that the whole country benefits when producers co-operate democratically to solve problems of supply and price. For that reason the fluid milk operators will get the year's postponement requested, with the understanding that the federal government will not support the price on their surplus milk after April 30, 1963.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is not the hon. member for Essex East going to say something?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I imagine the milk producers will be very much pleased to hear the announcement made by the minister. The country also will be pleased to know that serious consultation is taking place among the government, the agricultural stabilization board and the dairy industry. The minister has not yet indicated—or at least if he did so I failed to get the point—that the problem has been solved with regard to the butter producers, particularly in view of the overrun. The fact is that assistance is now paid on a butterfat price and that from every 100 pounds of butterfat 120 pounds of butter can be made.

The dairy industry has requested an additional 2½ cents so that creamery butter will be produced at the guaranteed price of 66½ cents, while the producer will get 64 cents for his butter and the consumer will be giving 52 cents. The 2½ cents has been requested by the dairy industry.

I believe this must be done to keep the program on a realistic basis. I also believe that something should be done in this connection for the unpasteurized cheese producers. The problem is such that the butter price establishes the cheese price on the export market. The raise in the price will mean an additional cost to the export market for cheese. At the present some assistance could be given to unpasteurized cheese because of the fact that Britain is in a position to buy 6 million or 8 million pounds of cheese that we have not produced.

I hope this consultation with the dairy industry will continue. I believe there must be a much better relationship with the whole dairy industry than is possible at the present time.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): After listening to the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Timiskaming, it just remains for me to observe that the farmers have not yet received from this government all that they have asked for.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And it took the hon. member 10 minutes to think up that poor comeback.

FEED CORN—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ASSISTANCE ON SHIPMENTS TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have another announcement to make.

As a result of the drought in western Canada there is a shortage of high energy feeds in the Atlantic provinces. Corn has been made available as a substitute in Ontario and Quebec, but because of the distance involved there has not been the same opportunity for its use farther east. In order to sustain the livestock and poultry industry in the Atlantic provinces, cabinet has authorized an assistance of $5 per ton on corn shipped to the area by rail or boat up until October 1, 1962.

This program is distinct from the national program of freight assistance on western feed grains. It is designed as a temporary measure of assistance until the fall, when high energy grains are normally available from western Canada.

Details concerning the assistance are presently being developed and will be announced shortly.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this belated announcement by the minister will be much welcomed by those people who almost two months ago came to the minister and made this request. The only thing is that it is unfortunate that two months have been lost.

Mr. Pigeon: Twenty two years of inaction and arrogance.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): We welcome the extension of freight assistance on feeds for eastern Canada. The fact that a subsidy of $5 a ton will be paid to corn producers we hope will move all the corn that is available, giving eastern agriculture the opportunity to take advantage of it. Because of this necessity at this time we believe the government should give much more consideration to greater equalization of the feed situation across Canada than is now possible under present circumstances.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DIVORCE BILLS TO APPEAR ON APRIL 10 ORDER PAPER

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Pursuant to an agreement made in the House of Commons the other day, I hereby give notice that the divorce bills will be on the order paper in their proper place tomorrow.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO RETIREMENT OF SENATORS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-86, to amend the British North America Act, 1867, with respect to the Senate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The amendment which will be brought before the house will be restricted to retirement at the age of 75 years of all members now in the other place, as well as those who may thereafter be appointed. Provision will be made for a retirement pension for all who are now in the Senate. A resolution to that effect will be placed on the order paper today. I think I should also make it clear now that in the event that this amendment is passed, no appointment of successors to vacancies resulting from the compulsory retirement of senators under this legislation will be made until after the next general election.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the right hon. gentleman shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would defer his request until this motion has been dealt with. The first motion is for leave to introduce the bill, which motion I now put. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I must say on behalf of this group—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows this is not a debatable motion.

Mr. Brunsden: No, he does not.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Diefenbaker moved that the said bill be now read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, without any comment on the principle or purpose of the bill I should like to say that this group cannot agree to first reading because—

Mr. Speaker: The question will then be put.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Diefenbaker) which was agreed to on the following division:

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I ask leave, Mr. Speaker, to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the statement by the Canadian chairman of the international joint commission that Canada's interests were sacrificed by the government in signing the treaty for the development of the Columbia river. May I speak to this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I would be interested in hearing the Leader of the Opposition, who asks for leave, on the question of the urgency of debate on the subject matter which is proposed, which I see to be the statement of the Canadian chairman of the international joint commission that Canada's interests were sacrificed by the government in signing the treaty for the development of the Columbia river. I take it that what the Leader of the Opposition is asking leave to debate is that statement.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the argument governing this matter of urgency and importance is to be found—and it has often been quoted in this house—in Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 100, paragraph 3, which reads:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

It seems to me that the circumstances under which this motion is being moved are similar in many ways to those which existed when the motion was moved last June for the adjournment of the house to discuss the dismissal of the governor of the Bank of Canada, and at that time, Mr. Speaker, you agreed to that motion.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in present circumstances there are no ordinary opportunities to discuss this subject, and I believe that the subject is of such great importance that it should be discussed at once.

Leaving aside the circumstances of the dismissal of a man who has served Canada with such distinction in war and peace—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pearson: I believe, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a statement which goes beyond what he is asking the house to discuss.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And there was no dismissal.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a matter of debate.

Mr. Speaker: The urgency of debate is related to the matter which is set out in the hon. member's motion, namely the statement of the chairman that Canada's interests were sacrificed.

Mr. Pearson: The urgency of the matter is related, I submit, to the importance of the statements made by General McNaughton and the contradiction of those statements by the government, statements which are of great national and, indeed, international significance; because when a man in General McNaughton's position says that Canada was sold out and that the Columbia river treaty amounts to servitude in perpetuity of our vital rights and interests, surely when a statement of that kind is made—

An hon. Member: By a Liberal.

Mr. Pearson: —that statement should be debated in the house at once, particularly as that statement, and other statements which I could have mentioned, have been denied and contradicted by the government. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, surely this is a subject for immediate debate in order to get this matter of both national and international importance cleared up.

So far as the opportunity of debating this matter in the ordinary way is concerned, there are eight or nine items that have been listed by the house leader as the business of the house for today and they, of course, do not provide any opportunity for discussing this matter. Second, Mr. Speaker, there is no item listed on the order paper, especially under government orders, that would provide an opportunity to debate this subject.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, because of the uncertainty created by the Prime Minister's utterances, as recently as Saturday night, about the early dissolution of this parliament, there is no assurance that this matter can be discussed in the house. In view of this uncertainty we may not be here after tomorrow night. Therefore, in view of this uncertainty which has been created by the Prime Minister and members of the government, in view of the importance of this matter both nationally and internationally, and in view of the statements which have been made and contradicted, surely the government will be only too anxious to have it debated at once, and that is the purpose of this motion.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Pugh: Which he will never be able to answer.

Mr. Speaker: —which might help to clarify the situation. As I see the importance of the statement of the Canadian chairman of the international joint commission, it is in relation to the Columbia treaty; and that treaty, as hon. members of the house know, has been signed but has not yet been ratified. As I recall the questions asked and statements made in this house about ratification, it is in my mind that the house was assured that no ratification would take place before the house had been asked to debate the treaty. Now, if that is the case, what does the Leader of the Opposition say as to the urgency of debate, if no action is to be taken with respect to the subject matter of the chairman's statement until the house has an opportunity to debate the treaty?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, surely the importance of the statements and the requirement for immediate discussion of them are not the same as the discussion which is required of the whole treaty. The Prime Minister has already stated this session that there will be no such discussion of this treaty in this house until all arrangements are made and agreement reached with the government of British Columbia. The importance of having an immediate discussion on this matter attaches to statements made by General McNaughton in respect of the policy of this government and the procedure of this government in relation to this treaty. When statements of this kind are made, irrespective of the merits or demerits of the treaty itself, surely that should be discussed immediately as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Nugent: It is because of his age; he is 75.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question comes under my jurisdiction as the minister responsible for the Canadian section of the international joint commission. I may add that throughout my whole term as Secretary of State for External Affairs, General McNaughton and I have worked together in a thoroughly friendly and co-operative way. His retirement from the commission results solely from the fact that he has passed the age of 75 years.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: You said he was dismissed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I trust that the minister will not discuss the question of the termination of the employment of the chairman, because that is not the matter which the house is asked to debate, but rather a statement made by the chairman. I would not think it relevant, as I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, to discuss the circumstances of his employment or his position as chairman unless the request for leave to debate this matter were broader.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, may I point out to you that the Leader of the Opposition charged today that General McNaughton has been dismissed.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: And they say, "Hear, hear" now. Surely Your Honour is not going to hold that I cannot say anything about that.

Mr. Pickersgill: If leave is granted, you can.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I certainly would not think of preventing the minister from responding to that statement, but I rose as soon as the statement was made to check further comment on that line, and I trust the minister will limit himself to dealing with the question raised.

Mr. Green: That is what I intend to do, Mr. Speaker. This statement was made, the Liberal party have shouted, "Hear, hear" and that has gone on the record. I wish to deal with that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then let us have a debate.

Mr. Green: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that his retirement from the commission results solely from the fact that he has passed the age of 75 years, and has nothing whatever to do with the Columbia river issue or any other issue with which the commission has dealt.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) has risen on a point of order.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs will agree that he has had an opportunity to deny the statement in the remarks which Your Honour has allowed him to make with regard to the circumstances of dismissal.

Mr. Jones: What arrogance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The issue before the house is a simple one, whether or not under our rules and practices this question is of such urgency that it requires immediate debate. If we decide it is, as I respectfully believe we should, we would then have an opportunity to hear from the Secretary of State for External Affairs in great detail on the point he is making and on other aspects of the question. But the motion before the house now is whether this is a question of urgent national importance that requires immediate debate. The Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that generally speaking the hon. member for Essex East expresses the correct view, that what we are trying to determine is whether there is urgency of debate, and not to go into the issue surrounding the circumstances in which the statement was made and all the details which might be appropriate if debate were allowed.

Mr. Green: With effect from the year 1956, Mr. Speaker, all appointments to the Canadian section of the international joint commission have been renewed annually—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Green: —and that was when the Leader of the Opposition was the secretary of state for external affairs—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is persisting.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have heard the point of order. I would think that in view of the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition an answer to the allegation that the chairman was dismissed or discharged must be appropriate, even though that statement was irrelevant to the main issue.

Mr. Hellyer: The question is the urgency of debate.

Mr. Pearson: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I made a statement quoting what General McNaughton himself had said—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: —and I said that the government itself had already denied that statement. Now the Secretary of State for External Affairs rises and denies it again. But General McNaughton has denied what the minister has said; he has said that he was dismissed by the arbitrary decision of a dictator.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition has had his turn, and I would like to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I consider it permissible for him to indicate the disagreement with the view expressed by the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: In General McNaughton's case provision has been made each year since his 65th birthday, in 1952, when the Leader of the Opposition was secretary of state for external affairs—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Green: —to provide for continuation of his employment in the public service by means of an annual extension prior to his birthday.

As the house is aware, all Canadian judges retire at the age of 75. In the Canadian section of the international joint commission—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member's point is well taken. It is not permissible to debate the issue. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs would confine himself to the facts of termination, if it has come about, of the chairman's employment and not debate it, I would consider it relevant.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, in the international joint commission Mr. Lucien Dansereau's term expired last year shortly after he reached the age of 75 years—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: A flagrant violation of the rules.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member feels aggrieved that the comment is broader than it should have been and is not correct, perhaps I would be prepared to allow him to make an explanation to correct it, but I cannot find the Secretary of State for External Affairs out of order from phrase to phrase.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jones: What arrogance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, what the Secretary of State for External Affairs is doing is seeking to deal with the circumstances of the retirement of General McNaughton, which is not in issue. When I raised this as a point of order a few moments ago Your Honour said that I was justified, in other words indicating to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he was out of order. The issue before us is clear; is it a matter that requires urgency of debate? That is the only issue before the house now. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs wishes to bring himself in order he should address himself to that question and to no other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs disagrees with the statement made, perhaps he would indicate what he thinks is the scope of his contribution at this time, and then I could deal with it.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I disagree with nearly everything the hon. member for Essex East says. His trouble is that he just cannot take his medicine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benidickson: That is no answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I say, in an effort to clarify the extent of the discussion, that I am trying to obtain the assistance of the house in the decision which I have to make as to the urgency of debate regarding the matter which the Leader of the Opposition has asked leave to debate. It is only because the Leader of the Opposition made a statement which, as I indicated at the time, was not relevant to that issue—I refer to the statement with respect to the dismissal of the chairman—that I have allowed the contradiction to take place. I trust that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will hasten to deal with that part of the question and get on to the issue of urgency of debate.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, in the case of General McNaughton the term was extended for approximately two months—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Surely this is not relevant.

Mr. Green: —in order to enable him to attend the fiftieth anniversary meeting of the commission—

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the same point of order?

Mr. Pearson: My point of order is that when I rose I said, "leaving aside the circumstances surrounding General McNaughton's dismissal", and Your Honour stopped me. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is now attempting to debate those circumstances. Surely he is not going to be permitted to go into the details of the matter without Your Honour giving me the same opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: I would think it would be highly improper to spend time at this stage debating the circumstances of the termination or the present employment of the chairman of the international joint commission, and even if the leave which is asked for were given I would consider it out of order to debate that issue. I feel that if the Secretary of State for External Affairs makes a simple denial of the statement that was volunteered we should drop the matter there and proceed to determine whether the house wishes to debate this issue.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, statements have been made to the effect that prior to the signing of the so-called Columbia river treaty General McNaughton had dissociated himself from that treaty and had advised against signing it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are nearing the dissolution of parliament is no justification for any minister of the crown to so flagrantly violate the rules which has been done here today. Four times the Secretary of State for External Affairs was called to order but he continues to introduce material which is not relevant to the issue before us.

Mr. Benidickson: He is reading every word of a prepared statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would state specifically what he complains of.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am complaining that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, contrary to the ruling which Your Honour has stated three times—

An hon. Member: Four times.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —has gone on to discuss circumstances having to do with the retirement of General McNaughton from the chairmanship of the international joint commission. I repeat, Mr. Speaker—and I do this knowing how much we are in Your Honour's debt for the way in which you have adjudicated over our proceedings—that the only issue before us is whether we are entitled to debate this as a matter of urgency. Obviously the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not addressing himself to this point. With great respect I say that the minister ought to be told that unless he does address himself to this one point, Your Honour does not propose to allow him to continue. That is the course which Your Honour took with regard to the Leader of the Opposition, and quite properly so. The one issue before us is, is this matter one of urgency? Is it of the same category, for instance, as the Coyne-Fleming dispute? I believe it is and—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have heard the hon. member for Essex East. Again I think perhaps this is the same point of order. I was under the impression—and I may be mistaken—that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has dropped the issue of the employment of the chairman of the international joint commission—

Mr. Pickersgill: No; he is reading from the same statement.

Mr. Speaker: —and had proceeded to address himself to the question which I raised myself and which is raised by this request, as to whether it is urgent to debate the statement made by the chairman of the international joint commission.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I was trying to do.

Miss LaMarsh: You are reading the same speech.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, statements have been made to the effect that prior to the signing of the so-called Columbia river treaty General McNaughton—

Mr. Benidickson: The minister has not turned the page of the statement he is reading.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The minister, I believe, is referring to statements made by the chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Which have nothing to do with the question before us.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I have not heard enough of what the hon. gentleman is saying to determine. Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs would advise me whether he considers this a matter of urgency of debate, and that would settle the matter.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, if the opposition would just let me proceed this would be through in a minute.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; the minister should not proceed to read a statement written outside the house.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Green: While certain features of the treaty did not appeal to General McNaughton he did not advise against signing.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

An hon. Member: They do not like it.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is this. It is now quite obvious that the minister has before him a statement which has been prepared by someone outside the house, and he is insisting on reading it despite the ruling Your Honour has made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Whether the statement was prepared outside or by the minister makes no difference. He is now trying to place on record this prepared statement contrary to the rules of the house and I submit, with deference, that he should not be allowed to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I feel that the minister is making statements that are related to the issue for which leave is requested. The views of General McNaughton are what the Leader of the Opposition wishes to debate as expressed in the statement which he has made.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: It is not permissible, in determining whether there should be debate, to debate those views. I feel that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is getting into the substance of the debate which would take place if the house gave leave.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is now asking permission to adjourn the business of this house to spend a day debating a statement made in another country, made in Washington—

Mr. Pearson: Made in Ottawa.

Mr. Green: —by a public servant who is still a public servant, in which that public servant, a former Liberal minister—

An hon. Member: Candidate.

Mr. Green: —attacked his own government. Surely that is not a proper basis for a motion to adjourn the house. If Your Honour rules in favour of the Leader of the Opposition it will mean that any public servant can go out on the street in any country and attack his government and then have his friends in the House of Commons, for political purposes, rise and ask leave to adjourn the house to spend a day discussing the statement.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Green: In my view, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will hear the Leader of the Opposition on a point of order.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, when I rose to move this motion I had before me a text. I read the first line of that text and I said,

"Leaving aside the circumstances of the dismissal of a man," and Your Honour stopped me and I stopped, although I had before me another page dealing with those circumstances.

Mr. Starr: Who wrote the statement? Was it written by someone outside or inside the house?

Mr. Pearson: The Secretary of State for External Affairs is now asking Your Honour for permission to do exactly what Your Honour would not permit me to do. If he is to be granted that permission I hope Your Honour will give me the same opportunity to reply to what he is now saying, which has nothing to do with the question of the urgency of debating this matter, according to your own decision.

Mr. Green: If I may conclude, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to Your Honour and to the house and to the people of Canada that the action of the Leader of the Opposition today is an example of irresponsibility at its worst.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise and deal with the question of urgency, and I think I can stay in order. The motion has been moved by the Leader of the Opposition because of statements made by General McNaughton. In our opinion there is urgency of debate because these statements have rocked the country and they are rocking this government. They are in contradiction to statements made by the Prime Minister,—

Mr. Grafftey: You are already out of order.

Mr. Herridge: —the Minister of Justice, Premier Bennett of British Columbia, the attorney general of British Columbia and officials in the United States. Because of early dissolution we believe the house will have no other opportunity under the rules to discuss this question, and that the people of Canada are entitled to know the facts. This house should have an opportunity to debate this question now. On that account we claim debate is urgent on this important matter.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point in connection with the subject of urgency of debate. The Leader of the Opposition has said that the statement attributed to General McNaughton is such that it should be debated at once. The Leader of the Opposition is just three days late. This subject was debated in this house on April 6. It was debated by the hon. member for Kootenay West as well, as he was the one who introduced it.

Mr. Herridge: I asked questions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If this motion were accepted it would just be a duplication of a debate that has already occurred. The Leader of the Opposition was not in the chamber on Friday. The hon. member for Essex East was not in the chamber on Friday. They may not know what went on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This matter was debated.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East raises a point of order with respect to what?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am raising a question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: Sit down.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance says I was not in the house on Friday.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Friday afternoon.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the minister will consult the records of the house he will find that, once again, he is wrong. I was here on Friday.

Mr. Speaker: That is scarcely a point of order. Can the minister give the citation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Essex East was not in the house on Friday afternoon when this matter was discussed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was so in the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the debates of last Friday afternoon, April 6, commencing at page 2586. The house was in committee of supply on an item in relation to a payment of $50,000 for engineers' fees in connection with the Columbia river. On that occasion the hon. member for Kootenay West chose to introduce into the discussion the very statement which is the basis of the motion introduced this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition. The afternoon newspaper had just carried the statement so the hon. member for Kootenay West, as found at page 2586, in the second column, read the entire statement into the record. He then proceeded to discuss it, and he did not stop there. After certain observations the hon. member for Laurier entered the act, and he spoke at considerable length. He raised questions and kept the debate going. Then, of course, Bonavista-Twillingate could not sit back, so the member for that riding got into the act. You will find, Mr. Speaker, that he contributed his usual—

An hon. Member: Five cents.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Whatever it may be. That may be found at page 2589. Then the hon. member for Laurier came back again and again. Then the hon. member for Kootenay West came back. Then the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate came back. Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker, I observe that the hon. member for Essex East did come in. I beg his pardon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He came in.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is wrong again.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I apologize to the house for saying that the hon. member for Essex East was not here. He did come in at that particular point. That reference will be found at page 2591. He made probably the greatest utterance he has ever made in the house. He said, "Whose fault is it?"

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: And General McNaughton gave the answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate came in and the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Kootenay West. He went over the whole story. They kept the debate going until the hour of five o'clock.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order. I regret being obliged to rise so often, but today we have had provocation. What the hon. gentleman is now doing is not addressing himself to the question of urgency. Whether there has been another discussion on certain aspects of the matter has nothing whatsoever to do with the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition, namely that this matter in its present context presents urgency of debate. That is the only issue before us. These ministers today, in these dying hours of this session, have been allowed, Mr. Speaker, to make irrelevant and improper remarks. The question is the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that the statement made by General McNaughton late Friday, and over the week end constitutes within our rules justification for urgency of debate. That is the only issue before us. These red herrings drawn in by the minister who had to do with the Coyne affair should not be allowed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I give the citation?

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps I might save the minister some time by indicating—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have lots of time.

Mr. Speaker: —that the rules specifically prevent debate on a matter which has been discussed earlier in the session. Perhaps I had better read the rule. It is the sixth paragraph of rule 26, which I shall be obliged to consider:

> The right to move the adjournment of the house for the above purposes—

That is to discuss an urgent matter.

> —is subject to the following restrictions:
> —(c) the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session;

I am not deciding that this matter has been discussed.

Mr. Pearson: May I say a word, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is relevant to argue that it has been discussed. I therefore consider that the Minister of Finance is quite in order in the argument he is proposing.

Mr. Pearson: On the point raised by the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I proceed?

Mr. Speaker: Is the Leader of the Opposition raising a further point of order?

Mr. Pearson: I should like to comment.

Mr. Speaker: I will give the hon. member an opportunity if he disagrees with any statement that is made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the Leader of the Opposition wishes to make a comment, may I conclude as briefly as possible my submission on this point. I was about to read the citation which evidently had escaped the knowledge of the hon. member for Essex East. The rule is quite clear that a motion for the adjournment of the house in the manner proposed by the Leader of the Opposition cannot be tolerated under the rule if the motion will revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that nothing could be clearer than that not only has the same matter been discussed at the present session, but it was discussed only three days ago. What is the subject matter? The Leader of the Opposition wishes to discuss a statement by the Canadian chairman of the international joint commission that Canada's interests were sacrificed, and so on. That is the very statement that was read into the record on Friday afternoon by the leader of the new party down there in the corner of the chamber. It was then debated and discussed, and that discussion is not completed. Under the rules of the house that discussion is still current.

With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I submit that there could not be a clearer case in which a motion of this nature could not possibly be entertained under the rules of this house. The statement is there. It is on the record. It was put there last Friday. It was debated by hon. members opposite who now say this matter should be debated. It was debated and, that debate is not concluded. There can be no possibility, Mr. Speaker, of entertaining a motion of this kind which would not only be a violation of the rules under citation 26 but, in my respectful submission, would be a complete duplication of a debate already held.

Mr. Pearson: As usual, Mr. Speaker, the minister is articulate without being logical. The minister said that this matter was debated last Friday. You yourself, Mr. Speaker, gave the impression that this matter had not only been debated but perhaps concluded last Friday. The item under which this short discussion took place—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): An hour and a quarter.

Mr. Pearson: —was introduced last Friday, but the minister has very conveniently forgotten that the discussion ended at five o'clock. It was only in respect of the statements purported to have been made by General McNaughton in Washington, statements made according to the Secretary of State for External Affairs outside the country, and therefore not debatable in this house because they were made outside the country. But that evening, Mr. Speaker, General McNaughton returned to Ottawa and made some devastating statements which, as the hon. member to my right has said, have rocked the country and the government.

It is those statements that we surely have the right to debate as a matter of urgency. As you suggested a little while ago, Mr. Speaker, perhaps this matter might have gone to a committee and we might have had a chance to debate it there, but on January 19, 1962, at the very beginning of this session I asked the Prime Minister this question, as found on page 16 of Hansard:

> May I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to submit the Columbia river treaty to a committee of the house for an examination during the present session of parliament?

The Prime Minister said:

> There is no intention of submitting the treaty to a committee of the house for examination.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

That is in Hansard. As a matter of urgency, Mr. Speaker, we ask the right to discuss the statements made by General McNaughton last Friday, Friday evening and, over the week end, the comments on those statements and the contradictions by the minister. This matter should be cleared up and it should be cleared up now.

If the Prime Minister will give us the assurance that this particular item of the estimates will be reintroduced immediately this afternoon, we could do so then. If he will not give us that assurance, we have no reason to believe that this item will ever come before the house again and therefore, Mr. Speaker, we will have to persist in our motion.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman forgets that a further question was asked on March 21, 1962, to which I replied, as found on page 2020 of Hansard:

> —I think the hon. gentleman is fully aware of the fact that ratification by this house is necessary.

On the question of urgency of debate may I say that there has been no conclusion of the discussion of the supplementary item in question that was before the house on Friday. The opposition are not yet determining the course of the government, and I know it will be a long, long time before they will. We have been trying for 19 days to get the supplementary estimates through. If the opposition will deal with the legislative matters that are before the house and that have to be dealt with we will call supplementary estimates at the earliest possible date and they will have every opportunity to continue the discussion which they started last Friday.

We have nothing to conceal whatsoever. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, and in answer to the hon. gentleman, I would simply point out what was the general view across Canada in October, 1960, as evidenced by an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of October 21 which stated that great credit is given to General McNaughton for having achieved agreement for the treaty, and that it was a victory for General McNaughton.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have now had the assistance of a good many members of the house in determining whether leave should be given, and unless there is some erroneous argument or proposition that it is felt necessary to correct I propose to discharge my responsibility. The Leader of the Opposition indicated he may have felt there were statements made that went beyond the scope of the argument, and I would not want to dispose of the matter now if he feels he should have the opportunity to comment, but only in the limited context that there is something erroneous before the Chair.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are you the leader of the opposition?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —does Your Honour feel that you want to hear further argument in support of the motion made by the Leader of the Opposition? If Your Honour feels that is not necessary, I readily accede; but if it is necessary, then I should like to reply to the argument of the Minister of Finance and that of the Prime Minister. Only one argument has been put forward on this side on behalf of the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition, but we are in Your Honour's hands as to the necessity of further argument.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Essex East disagrees with the proposition that this matter has been discussed and is still open for discussion, I would hear him on that subject but not on anything else.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure Your Honour does not mean exactly that. That would mean that Your Honour would have given the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Finance the opportunity of dealing with the merits of the proposal put forward by the Leader of the Opposition. I am prepared to support the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition in establishing that under our rules there is urgency of debate and to deal as well with the proposition of the Minister of Finance that the discussion on Friday precludes this matter being raised again.

I address myself on the merits that there is urgency of debate. If I wanted evidence to prove this position there is the statement just made by the Prime Minister that he does not propose to enable us to discuss this matter under another item. If the Prime Minister would now agree to revert to the particular supplementary item that was under discussion on Friday we could have a full discussion, but the Prime Minister said no, that he does not propose to have the opposition determine the business of the house. In my judgment that reply is sufficient answer.

The question of urgency arises in a number of ways, as the Leader of the Opposition has indicated. It arises first of all out of the fact that we are not now in a position to say, as Your Honour did on another occasion, that we may assume that the business of the house will continue in the normal way; because on Saturday last the Prime Minister, who is indulging in a game called the mystique of elections, said—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East is retreading what has already been fairly amply dealt with. I was interested in the question whether the discussion last Friday could be said to have been a discussion of this statement. Certainly the statement of the chairman was quoted, referred to and discussed in the committee last Friday. With respect to that point, if the hon. member for Essex East wishes to argue that that was not a prior discussion of the matter presented by the Leader of the Opposition today, I think he might usefully make a contribution there. Otherwise, as I have said to him, I feel that there must be a limit to the discussion of the preliminary question or we might better go on with the debate. So I ask him to address himself to that and then leave the matter to me.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member had better make way for "Pick". He could not do worse.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I assume from your last remarks that subject to the argument made by the Minister of Finance as to the relevancy of last Friday's discussion, Your Honour is of the view that the Leader of the Opposition has established a prima facie case for urgency of debate—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and it is only because of that that I accede. Otherwise, surely Your Honour is not going to deny to a second speaker from the opposition the right to argue that this matter is one that does present urgency of debate. It is only because of the assumption I make that Your Honour believes that the Leader of the Opposition has properly established urgency of debate that I address myself to the question raised by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: If the Leader of the Opposition feels that any point has not been fully presented, then he is entitled to consideration. I would indicate to him that the point raised by the Minister of Finance and the question I asked the Leader of the Opposition as to the urgency and importance of debating this matter at this time, when ratification of the treaty has to come before the house for debate at some other time, are the two points that seem to me to be relevant. If he has anything further to add on those points I will hear him. Otherwise I suggest that I deal with the matter.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, you have asked me if I have anything to say on those two points, and of course I have. On the first point regarding the argument that this matter was disposed of in discussion last Friday I have already stated, notwithstanding the long harangue of the Minister of Finance, that this matter was not discussed or disposed of last Friday, except in reference to the statement that General McNaughton made in Washington. General McNaughton came back to Canada Friday evening after the house had risen and at that time, according to the press, General McNaughton said, and I read from the press report:

General Andrew McNaughton, stoking more fuel on his charge of a power sell-out to the United States over the Columbia river has said Prime Minister Diefenbaker is a "dictator"—

That statement has been denied, but that was not mentioned in the House of Commons because it had not been made when the committee was sitting.

Mr. Harkness: It is too ridiculous to be mentioned.

Mr. Pearson: It might not be ridiculous in the country.

The other point was that the Prime Minister had indicated that ratification has to be discussed in the House of Commons. Well, of course, that is not true. The Prime Minister ought to know that ratification is an executive act and has nothing whatever to do with the House of Commons. As the Prime Minister, who is an old parliamentarian, should know, ratification is not a matter for decision in the House of Commons. It has become a convention of our constitution that the House of Commons should examine and approve matters of importance which require ratification by the government. When I asked the Prime Minister if these matters would be considered and approved in the House of Commons during this session before ratification, the Prime Minister said no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no.

Mr. Pearson: I asked him if these matters would be submitted to a committee for consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this treaty, before ratification, should go before the committee on external affairs. If it is not considered by a committee—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What treaties, when you were in office, did you send before a committee?

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister, who is afraid to look at the present or the future, begins to look far back. I tell the Prime Minister that the committee on external affairs considered every important treaty while we were in office.

Mr. Jones: The Liberals are running from the past.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Some hon. Members: Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister has said this treaty will not go to the House of Commons during this session; that is one matter relevant to the necessity for discussing this subject right now. The Minister of Finance also said that all these matters were discussed last Friday, irrespective of what General McNaughton said when he returned Friday evening and irrespective of the comments over the week end. The argument of the Minister of Finance is nonsense under the circumstances.

I am satisfied, therefore, you will appreciate that this is a reasonable motion and it should be admitted that we should discuss this matter now as a matter of grave importance.

Mr. Speaker: Reference has been made to the bringing before this house of the Columbia river treaty. The Leader of the Opposition has mentioned referring the question to the committee on external affairs. The Prime Minister referred to a question which appears at page 2020 of Hansard for March 21, 1962, which I take it is an assurance by the Prime Minister that the ratification of this house is considered necessary by the government before the treaty will be ratified.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That's right.

Mr. Speaker: Now, that may not be legally necessary, but I take it that is the statement. In order that the statement will be on the record I shall read the question and answer:

Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister, in view of certain statements that have been made in recent days, whether he can give the house an assurance that the Columbia river development treaty with the United States will not be ratified until it has been discussed and approved in this house?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is fully aware of the fact that ratification by this house is necessary.

The Leader of the Opposition properly indicates that ratification, in law, may be made by the government without consideration by the house. However, I took the statement—and I have the Prime Minister's assurance that that is what he intends—to mean that the treaty will not be ratified without being brought before the house.

I approach the problem with that in my mind. In so far as the statement the Minister of Finance made is concerned that there had been discussion, I would not like to base a decision on that earlier discussion because, although it involved the same statement that creates the issue today, that discussion was on an item of northern affairs which did not involve the Columbia treaty directly. What

I consider to be the matter of public importance that is now raised is the wisdom or desirability of the present treaty on the Columbia. The statement that the Leader of the Opposition asked to debate was the statement that Canada's interests were sacrificed in the treaty which has been signed by Canada and the United States with respect to Columbia power.

Now, the urgency of debate on that matter, to my mind, has to be determined not on the fact that the chairman of the international commission made a statement last week, but on whether there is an opportunity for the house to deal with the matter before the consequences of the treaty become effective. The treaty cannot become effective until it has been ratified, and the house is assured that it will not be ratified until the house has had an opportunity of debating it.

We are therefore faced with this proposition; that before any harm to Canada's interests can arise, the house will have an opportunity to debate this issue. It seems to me that takes care of the argument about the urgency of debate. This treaty was signed something in the neighbourhood of a year ago and has been discussed from time to time, and I recall that another motion was made under this same rule to debate this same treaty about a year ago.

The contrary argument to that which I have been accepting is that there is something in the statement which General McNaughton made which is of urgent public importance in itself. I cannot see how it can be important except in relation to the treaty which he is discussing. As I have said, the treaty cannot be implemented until it has been debated.

Mr. Hellyer: Would Your Honour listen to one point on this particular question?

Some hon. Members: Order. Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member if he has something to say. It seems to me that to ask to interrupt the important business which is on the order paper under this rule is unwarranted.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): The point you have just made, sir, is that the question of urgency revolves around the question of the consequences of the treaty being signed or not signed at this particular time. May I just call to Your Honour's attention the following statement by the Minister of Justice in Vancouver last year as reported on July 25:

> The United States will not wait forever . . . if it's not settled in a matter of months, we are in danger of losing the whole thing.

Surely there are consequences implied here which can be either way, consequences if the treaty is ratified and consequences if the treaty is not ratified, and it seems to me a matter of urgency that we have a discussion of the facts so that we shall know these consequences.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that the matter may be looked at in different ways, but I have a clear view that the matter of urgent debate must be one of public importance and significance, and that is public importance arising out of the importance of the treaty itself and its consequences. To my mind no public interest will suffer if this is not debated today, and there will be plenty of opportunity to deal with other aspects of the statement made by the chairman of the joint commission.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHEVRIER—CONTROL OF EXPENDITURES BY HOUSE

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I rise on a question of privilege. The question of privilege that I wish to discuss has to do with the right of the House of Commons to vote the expenditures of public moneys by the Queen's ministers. The House of Commons has the right to control these expenditures; and after the discussion we have just had, and particularly having regard to the statements made by the Prime Minister and others, I say there is a clear right on the part of the house to discuss expenditures.

We have before us in the house at the moment in further supplementary estimates No. 4 a commitment to spend $138 million. That money has not yet been voted. Notwithstanding the fact that these matters have been before the house from time to time, March 31, which is the end of the fiscal year, has gone by and there has been no complete opportunity on the part of the house to dispose of this matter.

I say to you with respect, sir, that the government has a constitutional obligation to pass these supplementary estimates before dissolution. This is a fundamental right which the elected members of parliament have, but instead of that, on Friday the house leader chose to announce hypothetical legislation for today and I say, with respect, that the government has delayed consideration of these estimates although we have asked for them repeatedly.

I also say to you, sir, with respect that the Speaker has a responsibility, and a very serious one, in this matter. The Speaker is an officer of the house, and he has the responsibility to uphold the rights of the elected representatives in the House of Commons.

There is, and there has been, a denial of our right to discuss these further supplementary estimates. I also say, having regard to the statement made by the Prime Minister, that we will not be given the immediate opportunity to discuss a matter which has been before the house quite recently, and I say too that the government cannot pay this $138 million until an appropriation bill has passed through this house.

If we are to have responsible government in this country the government should bring the supplementary estimates before the house. That is our fundamental right, and the government should explain—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member has not finished, but I find difficulty in seeing that the point of privilege which he raises has yet arisen. It seems to me he is anticipating. What basically is involved is the right of the government to order its business in the way it thinks appropriate. No one will disagree with the proposition that the government of Canada cannot spend money without the concurrence of parliament, but what I am concerned about is whether the hon. member can relate his question of privilege to something that has occurred, or is he entirely anticipating something that will occur?

Mr. Churchill: It is a bogus question of privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. There is this fact that nine days have elapsed since the fiscal year ended, and from statements made by the Prime Minister outside this house, and from the statement which the Prime Minister has made this afternoon, it is quite clear that we are not going to be given an opportunity to deal with this matter now.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is asking me to make the assumption that the government will not behave in a constitutional way. I cannot make that assumption in advance; therefore I see no substance in the argument at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I had not completed my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps I should let the hon. member conclude, but I have told him I see no substance in his argument.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to conclude.

Mr. Speaker: When the hon. member has concluded I shall hear the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: I thought I had laid the basis for a motion which I intended to make. I now move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, that the house do now proceed to item No. 16 of government orders for the purpose of exercising the time-honoured and fundamental right to control the expenditures of the Queen's ministers in accordance with the principles of responsible government.

Mr. Jones: An abuse of the English language.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The moving of that motion, Mr. Speaker, just indicates the limits to which the opposition will go. They realize full well—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: The motion has not been put.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the hon. member for Laurier make a proposal which he claims raises a question of privilege, and I dare say the Prime Minister would wish to comment on it, which he is entitled to do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member rises on what he calls a question of privilege. Then he proceeds to make statements that are without basis in fact, and he ends up with a motion that is entirely out of order. Motions have to be moved in the proper way, and so far as his present allegation is concerned, no government has ever been obstructed in the manner in which this government has been and is being obstructed by the opposition on supplementary estimates. Outside the House of Commons these hon. gentlemen are forever challenging an election, but inside the House of Commons they are sitting in fear.

Mr. Chevrier: It is certainly not fear of you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Over and over again—

Mr. Hellyer: Tell us another good joke.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Over and over again they have had the opportunity to deal with supplementary estimates. They covered the estimates in general. Then the supplementary estimates were introduced and we had 19 days on the earlier supplementary estimates and we have had four days on the present ones. We have allowed them to go on and on.

Mr. Pickersgill: Allowed them? The dictators.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was not the kind of treatment the opposition got when those gentlemen were over here. They introduced the closure of debate. They trampled on the opposition. We have allowed them—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are getting a little far afield when we get on to closure. Would the Prime Minister deal with the question of the supplementary estimates and the alleged matter of privilege?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I surely have the right to answer these hon. gentlemen who speak of dictators. These were the petty dictators of those days. These are they.

Mr. Chevrier: You are the dictator.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The same old bunch. I submit that the motion is out of order. It is obviously an intended subterfuge on their part. They have had 23 days to discuss supplementary estimates, and now the hon. gentleman has the colossal nerve to stand there and say these things should have been put through by March 31.

Mr. Chevrier: Why didn't you bring them on before? We waited for weeks before they were brought on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we waited for weeks and weeks and the hon. gentlemen, while their leader was travelling around, were talking.

Mr. Chevrier: Where have you been?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We will be travelling more, too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —hon. gentlemen opposite have been talking and talking. I asked them to pass the supplementary estimates and I said, "Let us get the legislation through and then we will have the opportunity of answering to the Canadian people", and I know what the result will be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pigeon: They have no leader; they are not ready to face an election.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might have an opportunity to comment on some of the gratuitous and characteristically personal references made by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has accused us on this side of the house of being petty dictators. That phrase might be applied to hon. gentlemen opposite without the word "petty" before it. The Prime Minister has also accused me of travelling instead of remaining in the house and presumably obstructing the legislation. The Prime Minister cannot have it both ways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister should be the last person in Canada to talk about travelling. The sky is full of government aeroplanes these days going to political meetings.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: They have no leader.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am very loth to interrupt such an interesting debate, but I have heard the argument pro and con on this motion which, if it stands, must stand as a motion based on privilege. In my opinion it does not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of the motion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —I would hope I could be heard before Your Honour makes a decision.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I could be assured by the hon. member that he will direct his remarks to that issue and not join in the debate which I feel would be more appropriate on another occasion, I will hear what he has to say. The motion is to order government business. If there is a question of privilege to found the motion on, that is the only consideration that would be relevant. I can see none. I will give the hon. member a brief opportunity to speak.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will address myself very strictly and narrowly to the question of privilege involved. The question of privilege is the prior right of the House of Commons to vote supply before proceeding with the Queen's business.

Mr. Hellyer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is what Simon de Montfort asserted; this is what William Lyon Mackenzie asserted—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Here we have $138 million in the supplementary estimates that have not yet been voted. They relate to the last fiscal year, not the present fiscal year, a fiscal year that ended nine days ago. Except for one hour last week the government did not bring forward these supplementary estimates, notwithstanding the fact that they had committed the name of Canada to the spending of this money. I suggest that the most fundamental and elementary of all the rights of the House of Commons is to vote supply before going on with the business of the government. These ministers forget they are ministers; they forget that the House of Commons is supreme.

I say, sir, that the fiscal year having ended, no other business should or properly could be taken up in the house until the accounts of the previous year are settled and until the government—which have no right to take this for granted—are satisfied by a vote on these matters that a majority of the members of parliament still have confidence in them. That is what parliament is about, in case the right hon. gentleman has forgotten. That is why I am asserting—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: Obstruction.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate the hon. member's argument on the basic right of parliament to vote supply before the money is spent. If governments do not comply with that basic right of the House of Commons, then they are open to criticism and censure. But the ordering of the business of the government is its own responsibility. It is when the expenditure is made without authority that a constitutional issue arises. I think hon. members have anticipated that there will be some unconstitutional act, rather than demonstrating one; therefore I do not propose to accept the motion.

Mr. Hellyer: Control by an irresponsible government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A babbling brook over there.

Mr. Starr: They have wasted 2½ hours this afternoon.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

AIRSTRIP, STEEP ROCK IRON MINES, ATIKOKAN

Question No. 336—Mr. Fisher:

Up to March 23, 1962, had the Department of Transport been asked by any person, association, or municipality to take over the airstrip at Steep Rock Iron Mines, Atikokan; and, if so, who or what were they; on what dates, and by what means, did they approach DOT; and to what effect were the representations?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

Yes: by letter of July 2, 1958 from Mr. W. M. Benidickson, M.P., and by further letter of June 12, 1961, forwarding a letter from Mr. Baswick, reeve of Atikokan. These representations requested the department to look into the possibility of taking over the maintenance and operation of the Atikokan airport.

Investigations indicated that the present strip was a small one and because of its location could only be expanded and developed at high cost; and that the airport did not fall within the category for which the federal government normally assumed responsibility but fell within the category where further development would require a cost-sharing program with local interests and is of a standard and type which, under normal federal policy, is operated by local interests rather than by the federal government.

PORT ARTHUR SHIPBUILDING LTD.

Question No. 337—Mr. Fisher:

Has the Canadian maritime commission, the records of annual expenditure for both shipbuilding and ship repairing in each of the shipbuilding yards in Canada; and, if so, what are the annual figures in each case for Port Arthur Shipbuilding Limited, since 1955, with a breakdown which distinguishes government craft and naval craft?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

The information provided by Canadian shipyards to the Canadian maritime commission concerning annual expenditures on repairs and conversions is supplied to the commission on a confidential basis and is, therefore, not available for release. With regard to government construction contracts at the shipyard of Port Arthur Shipbuilding Limited there is official record as follows:

(a) Government naval minesweeper, delivered in 1957, cost $4,416,000.

(b) Government icebreaker, Alexander Henry, delivered in 1959, cost $2,795,000.

*PORT ARTHUR SHIPBUILDING—VESSEL CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

Question No. 338—Mr. Fisher:

1. On March 23, 1962, did the Department of Transport or the Canadian maritime commission have any information to indicate that Port Arthur Shipbuilding Limited, had at hand or would have at hand in 1962, any vessel construction contracts under the subsidy arrangement announced on May 12, 1961?

2. If not, has either the commission or the Minister of Transport received any communications from the parent company of Port Arthur Shipbuilding Limited, the Canadian Shipbuilding Company, which indicate any reasons why such contracts have not been assigned by the parent company to the Port Arthur yard; and, if so, what are the reasons?

3. Has the Canadian maritime commission any information which would indicate that Port Arthur Shipbuilding Limited might be given a contract in 1962 to build a government vessel or that it was bidding for the right to build such vessel or vessels; and, if so, what are the details?

Mr. Martini:

1. No application has been received from Port Arthur Shipbuilding Limited.

2. No.

3. The Canadian maritime commission has no information that an order will be placed.

RADIO AND T.V. STATIONS, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 353—Mr. Creaghan:

1. How many English language radio and television stations are there in the maritime provinces owned by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and where are they located?

2. How many news rooms are maintained for the same, and what is the total estimated annual cost to the corporation?

3. How many French language radio and television stations are there in the maritime provinces owned by Radio Canada, and where are they located?

4. How many news rooms are maintained for the same, and what is the total estimated annual cost to Radio Canada?

Answer by: Mr. Lambert:

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Three English language radio stations and four low power radio transmitters. The stations are situated at Halifax and Sydney, N.S. and at Sackville, N.B. The low power transmitters are located at Edmunston, Grand Falls, Plaster Rock, N.B., and Barrington, N.S.

One English language television station at Halifax, N.S. plus three T.V. rebroadcasting stations, which carry the Halifax station service, located at Liverpool, Shelburne and Yarmouth, N.S.

2. One English language news room located in Halifax, serving both radio and television operations in the maritimes. The operations cost annually is estimated to run to about $175,000, which includes television film stock, film processing, freelance cameramen's fees, etc.

3. The corporation has one French language radio station and one French language televison station at Moncton, N.B. In addition there are six low power radio transmitters located at Digby, Weymouth, Meteghan, Yarmouth in Nova Scotia, and Kedgwick and St. Quinton, N.B. carrying the French network service.

4. The corporation does not maintain a French language news room in the maritimes. The stations carry the news broadcasts of the French network originating from Montreal. The radio station in Moncton provides a local news service through an arrangement made with the French language newspaper L'Evangeline. It is not considered to be in the public interest to disclose details of such contractual arrangements, as it would affect the position of the corporation in a competitive business in negotiating for services.

*CASES DECIDED ON BILL OF RIGHTS

Question No. 358—Mr. Matheson:

Has any case, in which the Department of Justice was involved, been decided on the basis of the Canadian Bill of Rights; and, if so, which case or cases?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): There are four decided cases in which the Department of Justice was represented and in which a provision of the Canadian Bill of Rights was in issue or was raised in argument. These cases and their citations are as follows:

Sun v. Attorney General for Canada, 1961 S.C.R. 70; Rebrin v. Bird and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, 1961 S.C.R. 376; Walsh and Jordan, 1962 O.W.N. 88; Lafleur v. Guay and the Minister of National Revenue, 61 D.T.C. 1059.

*GRAIN CARRIED UNDER CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Question No. 374—Mr. Fisher:

Has the government been provided, in the last two years, with any estimate of the difference between income and revenue to the railways from grain carried under the Crownsnest pass rates; and, if so, what agency provided the figures, how detailed were the studies, what official authority was given to determine these figures, and what use, if any, does the government plan to make with them?

Mr. Martini: Special studies and submissions on the cost of moving grain at statutory and related rates were presented by Canadian National Railways, Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba and the grain trade to the royal commission on transportation which was appointed pursuant to order in council P.C. 1959-577, dated May 13, 1959.

The commission made an independent assessment of the studies and submissions and alternative figures arrived at by experts retained by the commission. Certain conclusions and estimates of the commission are contained in volume 1 of its report. The commission has also reported that special studies will be included in volume 3 which has not yet been received by the government. No other estimates of the cost of moving such grain have been provided to the government during the past two years.

WINDOW CLEANING CONTRACTS, MILITARY COLLEGE AND R.C.A.F. STATION, QUE.

Question No. 382—Mr. Dupuis:

1. Since March 1957, has the government awarded any window cleaning contracts with respect to Le Collège Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean, and the R.C.A.F. station in the same city, province of Quebec?

2. If so, when were such contracts awarded, and what are the names of the tenderers for each of the abovementioned contracts, the amount of each tender, and the names of the tenderers to whom the contract was awarded in each case?

Answer by: Mr. O'Hurley:

1. Because of the tremendous volume of files processed in the district offices of the Department of Defence Production and the limited storage space available, files are kept for a period of three years only. Therefore it is not possible to provide the information requested from March, 1957. Information is, however, available from March, 1959 to the present time.

Questions

Two contracts were placed by the Montreal district office of this department for window cleaning at R.C.A.F. station St. Jean, P.Q., and College Militaire Royal, St. Jean, P.Q., during the latter period.

2. On September 16, 1959, a contract in the amount of $560 was awarded to Lussier Window Cleaning, 466 St. Jacques st., St. Jean' P.Q. for the exterior cleaning of approximately 1,400 second storey windows at R.C.A.F. station St. Jean, P.Q. Tenders were not invited in this instance because Lussier Window Cleaning was the only known firm in the area at that time that was interested in, and capable of, providing this service.

On June 7, 1961, a contract in the amount of $3,070 was awarded to Astor Window Cleaning Co., 3634 Drolet st., Montreal, P.Q. for the exterior cleaning of approximately 3,264 windows on the first storey, 1,282 windows on the second storey and 741 windows on the third storey of various buildings at R.C.A.F. station St. Jean and College Militaire Royal, St. Jean, P.Q. the dates for cleaning were June and September 1961.

Firm	Tender Response June cleaning	Sept. cleaning
Affiliated Building Services Co., 1500 St. Catherine st. West, Montreal 25, P.Q.	$1,057.40	$1,057.40
Astor Window Cleaning Co., 3634 Drolet st., Montreal, P.Q.	1,575.00	1,495.00
Quick Window Cleaning Co., 4981 Barclay ave., Montreal, P.Q.	1,615.05	1,615.05
Fire Prevention Service Co., 1500 St. Catherine st. west, Montreal, P.Q.	1,823.00	1,823.00
Lussier Window Cleaning Enrg., 466 St. Jacques st., St. Jean, P.Q.	1,850.90	1,850.90
Service De Lavage General, 80 rue Olivier, Victoriaville, P.Q.	2,095.00	1,995.00
Imperial Building Maintenance, 9255 St. Michel blvd., Montreal 38, P.Q.	2,325.00	2,331.00

The lowest tenderer, Affiliated Building Services Co. was not accepted, as a post tender investigation disclosed the fact that, at the time, this firm lacked the necessary resources to successfully execute the work.

CONSTRUCTION SUBSIDY ON FOREIGN OWNED SHIPS

Question No. 388—Mr. Broome:

Do the regulations governing ship construction subsidy, allow subsidy to be paid to foreign owned ships built in Canadian yards; and, if so, has the Department of Transport or the maritime commission any knowledge as to whether other countries, giving a similar subsidy, follow this same procedure?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

No. The applicable paragraphs of the regulations read as follows:

2. (i) "shipbuilders" means a Canadian citizen or a corporation incorporated under the laws of Canada, or any province of Canada that is engaged in the business of shipbuilding;

(j) "shipowner" means a Canadian citizen, a corporation incorporated under the laws of Canada or of any province, or Her Majesty in right of any province.

APPLICATIONS FOR APPROVAL OF PARIMUTUEL BETTING

Question No. 403—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Are any applications from racing associations for approval of parimutuel betting, pursuant to section 178 of the Criminal Code, pending before the Minister of Agriculture?

2. How many of such applications have been approved, and how many have been rejected since January 1, 1961?

3. What are the names of the associations whose applications have been approved since January 1, 1961?

Answer by: Mr. Jorgenson:

1. Yes.

2. Nineteen (19) new applications approved, fifteen (15) new applications rejected.

3. 1. High River Agricultural Society. 2. Lake McGregor Memorial Park Association. 3. Millarville Racing and Sports Association. 4. Calgary Trotting and Pacing Association. 5. Northern Alberta Trotting and Pacing Association. 6. Kirkfield Park Jockey Club. 7. Western Fair Association. 8. Central Canada Exhibition Association. 9. Alviston Driving Club. 10. Grimsby Recreation Company Limited. 11. Prince County Horsemens Club. 12. Osnabruk Racing and Driving Association. 13. Williamstown Driving Park Association Limited. 14. Ottawa Valley Driving Club. 15. Tillsonburg Driving Park Association. 16. Grimsby Driving Park and Athletic Association Limited. 17. Mount Royal Jockey Club Incorporated. 18. King Edward Park and Amusement Company. 19. Montreal Jockey Club.

OTTAWA VALLEY DRIVING CLUB

Question No. 404—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Has Ottawa Valley Driving Club Ltd. ever conducted race meetings under the supervision of the Minister of Agriculture; and, if so, where, and on what dates?

2. Has the said club applied since January 1, 1961, for approval of parimutuel betting; and, if so, what disposition has been made of such application?

3. Who are the directors of the club?

Answer by: Mr. Jorgenson:

1. No.

2. Yes, The Ottawa Valley Driving Club Limited has been granted tentative approval for racing dates subject to the provision of a proper race track with proper parimutuel wagering equipment and facilities and all other pertinent requirements.

3. J. W. Baskin, Paul Hudson, Gordon McDougal, Warren Armstrong, H. J. Patterson, M. Wright, L. Armstrong.

TILLSONBURG DRIVING PARK ASSOCIATION

Question No. 405—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Has the Tillsonburg Driving Park Association Ltd. ever conducted race meetings under the supervision of the Minister of Agriculture; and, if so, where, and on what dates?

2. Has the said association applied since January 1, 1961, for approval of parimutuel betting; and, if so, what disposition has been made of such application?

3. Who are the directors of the association?

Answer by: Mr. Jorgenson:

1. No.

2. Yes. The Tillsonburg Driving Park Association Limited has been granted tentative approval for racing dates subject to the provision of a proper race track with proper parimutuel wagering equipment and facilities and all other pertinent requirements.

3. Scott Merrill, J. W. Baskin, Warren Armstrong, E. L. H. Burpee, L. Armstrong.

NATHAN LEWIS, R.C.A.F. STATION, TORBAY, NFLD.

Question No. 407—Mr. Regier:

1. Was a Mr. Nathan Lewis employed as a civilian employee at the R.C.A.F. station at Torbay, Newfoundland; and, if so, what were his responsibilities, and for what period or periods was he so employed?

2. Has Mr. Lewis been suspended from his duties; and, if so, for what reason, and on what date?

3. Where, and in what manner, is the suspension to be terminated?

4. Has Mr. Lewis been given a hearing regarding his suspension, and will he be given a hearing before the suspension is terminated?

5. What is regarded as the normal period of keeping a worker under suspension in cases of this kind?

Answer by: Mr. Chambers:

1. Mr. Nathan Lewis was hired on December 5, 1958 as a cleaning service man at R.C.A.F. station Torbay. Mr. Lewis was employed in this position until October 16, 1961.

2. On October 16, 1961, Mr. Lewis was suspended from his duties pending approval of a recommendation from the commanding officer, R.C.A.F. station Torbay, that he be dismissed because of unsatisfactory service, including tardiness, absenteeism, disregard of regulations and instructions, and a complete lack of responsibility and dependability.

3. Under P.C. 1962-6/463, dated April 5, 1962, Mr. Lewis was dismissed from the government service.

4. Early last year, Mr. Lewis was warned of his shortcomings and placed on probation. When no improvement was forthcoming, Mr. Lewis was advised that he was being placed on suspension pending approval for his dismissal. At that time, he was informed of his right under the civil service regulations to present his side of the case to a senior officer of the department. A hearing by the commanding officer, R.C.A.F. station Torbay, was arranged for November 17, 1961. Mr. Lewis was informed of the hearing by registered mail, but did not appear. In January, 1962, Mr. Lewis came to Ottawa and was interviewed by the R.C.A.F.'s director of civilian personnel.

5. There is no "normal" period of keeping under suspension employees recommended for dismissal, since each case is treated as an individual matter in accordance with all the circumstances surrounding it.

EDMONTON POST OFFICE

Question No. 408—Mr. Matheson:

1. When did the government announce its intention to construct a new Edmonton post office?

2. When was real estate purchased for this purpose?

3. When were architectural plans commissioned?

4. When does the government intend to call for tenders?

Answer by: Mr. Walker:

1. There is no intention to construct a new post office in Edmonton. It is assumed that the reference is to additions and alterations planned for postal terminal A, an existing building. No announcement has been made concerning this project but the information was published in the estimates of the Department of Public Works for the fiscal year 1960-1961.

2. The land was expropriated May 13, 1960.

3. April 23, 1959.

4. As soon as plans and specifications are completed.

*REMOVAL OF DYNAMITE BLASTING POWDER FROM STRATEGIC LIST

Question No. 409—Mr. Morton:

When was dynamite blasting powder removed from the list of strategic materials?

Mr. Morris: Dynamite was deleted from the Canadian export control list with the revision of the list under order in council P.C. 1954-1226 of August 18, 1954. This action followed the deletion of dynamite from the international strategic control list.

Questions

*RADIO STATION LICENCES, SPECIAL BAND

Question No. 419—Mr. Deschatelets:

1. Has the Minister of Transport announced by way of a press release dated May 10, 1961, that new licences for radio stations operating on a special band would be issued on April 1, 1962?

2. Have such licences been issued, as promised, on April 1, 1962; and, if not, for what reason were those licences not issued, and for what period of time is the issue of such licences being postponed?

3. How many manufacturers have informed the department that they were ready to operate as of April 1, 1962?

4. How many manufacturers had their radio stations approved prior to April 1, 1962, according to the departmental specifications?

5. Does the government intend to compensate the manufacturers, the distributors, and the retailers who have invested large sums of money, following the press release issued by the Minister of Transport on May 10, 1961, for failing to issue licences for such radio stations?

Mr. Martini: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the five parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Sixty-two pieces of equipment from manufacturers and distributors have been processed by the Department of Transport prior to April 1, 1962; of those, 22 have been approved.

4. No radio station, as such, was approved prior to April 1, 1962.

5. Answered by 2.

*TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING GRADUATES

Question No. 420—Mr. Pitman:

1. What has been the total number of graduates from all courses for unemployed persons sponsored under schedule M to the agreements under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act as of the latest date for which figures are available?

2. What has been the total number of graduates from all courses for unemployed persons sponsored thereunder in Ontario as of the latest date for which figures are available?

3. Does the Department of Labour have information regarding the number of these course-graduates who have found employment; and, if so, how many have become re-employed?

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Speaker, the answers to the three parts of this question are as follows:

1. Total number of graduates in all courses from January 1, 1961 to February 28, 1962 is 9,183.

2. Total number of graduates in Ontario for the same period is 1,453.

3. No.

*N.H.A.—LOANS FOR FALL-OUT SHELTERS, OTTAWA

Question No. 421—Mr. Pitman:

How many in the city of Ottawa have received loans for fall-out shelters under the National Housing Act loans for new houses and under the home-improvement loan provision of the N.H.A.?

[Mr. Morris.]

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question, in tabulated form, is as follows:

Number of fall-out shelters built in the Ottawa area under the provisions of the National Housing Act to January 31, 1962.

UNEMPLOYED TAKING TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING

Question No. 423—Mr. Pitman:

1. How many unemployed persons were taking training under schedule M to the agreements under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act in Canada in each month during the year 1961?

2. How many unemployed were taking training thereunder in Ontario in each month during the year 1961?

Answer by: Mr. Thrasher:

Mr. Speaker, the answers to the two parts of this question, in tabulated form, are as follows:

1. Number of persons given training each month for the period January 1, 1961 to December 31, 1961

Month	No.
January	2,535
February	3,093
March	4,151
April	3,297
May	2,894

*N.H.A. LOANS, SUDBURY AND NICKEL BELT CONSTITUENCIES

Question No. 426—Mr. Mitchell:

1. How many National Housing Act approved loans and N.H.A. direct loans have been placed in the Sudbury and Nickel Belt constituencies since January 1, 1961?

2. What was the total amount of legal fees paid in connection with the above loans, and the names of the legal firms receiving these fees?

3. What amount was paid and remains to be paid to each of the above named firms?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, this is a long answer. I would ask leave of the house to have it printed in Hansard without being read.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1.

N.H.A. loans approved in 1961

Constituency	Approved Lenders	C.M.H.C. Direct	Total
Sudbury	80	318	398
Nickel Belt	12	436	448
Total	92	754	846

2. Legal firms engaged for legal services in the constituencies of Sudbury and Nickel Belt by C.M.H.C. in 1961.

(The legal firms listed below were engaged for work relating to title search and preparation of mortgages covering direct loans made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under the National Housing Act. The corporation follows the customary mortgage practice under which legal fees are paid by the borrower. The corporation has no record of the amount of these fees.)

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY—FREIGHT MOVEMENT

Question No. 379—Mr. Nielsen:

1. What are the tons and ton miles of freight moved on equipment owned by Northern Transportation Company Ltd., and licensed by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, during the years 1959, 1960, and 1961, tabulated as follows: (a) total from and to all points within the company system northbound (b) total from and to all points within the company system southbound (c) from Fort Smith, N.W.T., to all points within the Northwest Territories (d) from Hay River, N.W.T., to all points within the Northwest Territories (e) from Hay River, N.W.T., and Fort Smith, N.W.T., destined for distant early warning station sites (f) from Norman Wells N.W.T., destined for the distant early warning station sites (g) from Norman Wells to all other points within the Northwest Territories?

2. Of the total tonnage and ton miles moved within the Northwest Territories, what percentage of each of these totals was moved for (a) crown corporations (b) Canadian government departments (c) distant early warning station sites (d) consignees other than above?

3. What gross revenue was earned by N.T.C.L., in each year, 1959, 1960, and 1961, from the carriage of goods within the N.W.T., tabulated as follows: (a) goods carried for crown corporations (b) goods carried for Canadian government departments (c) goods carried to distant early warning station sites (d) goods carried for consignees other than (a), (b), or (c)?

4. Of the total tonnage provided for carriage by the Northern Transportation Company Ltd., what tonnage was allocated to Canadian (private enterprise) carriers, licensed by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, by the N.T.C.L., for movement within the N.W.T., during the years 1959, 1960, and 1961?

5. What sources of revenue has Northern Transportation other than by the carriage of goods by water?

6. Other than transportation operations, what business activities are carried on by Northern Transportation Company Ltd.?

7. What is the yearly statement of income and expenditures, in tabulated form, in totals and in cents per ton mile, for the years, 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, and 1961, of yearly (a) freight earnings (b) miscellaneous earnings, other than freight revenue (c) operating expenses (d) administrative expenses (e) depreciation (f) operating profit (g) income tax paid (h) net profit?

MEDICAL SERVICES, ETC., INDIAN RESERVES, B.C.

Question No. 406—Mr. Matheson:

1. What medical services are available to the Indians on (a) Halfway reserve (b) Blueberry reserve (c) Prophet river reserve (d) Doig river reserve?

2. What transportation facilities are available to and from the above reserves?

3. How often and for how long has the Indian agent at Fort St. John visited each of the above reserves during the year 1961?

VETERANS AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT LEGAL FEES, N.B. AND N.S.

Question No. 412—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total amount of legal fees paid by the veterans affairs department from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1962, in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and what were the names and addresses of the recipients of such fees, and the amount received in each case?

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT, LEGAL FEES, N.B. AND N.S.

Question No. 413—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total amount of legal fees paid by the Department of Public Works from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1962, in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and what were the names and addresses of the recipients of such fees, and the amount received in each case?

NATIONAL DEFENCE DEPARTMENT, LEGAL FEES, N.B. AND N.S.

Question No. 414—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total amount of legal fees paid by the Department of National Defence from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1962, in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and what were the names and addresses of the recipients of such fees, and the amount received in each case?

FISHERIES DEPARTMENT LEGAL FEES, N.B. AND N.S.

Question No. 415—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total amount of legal fees paid by the Department of Fisheries from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1962, in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and what were the names and addresses of the recipients of such fees, and the amount received in each case?

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT LEGAL FEES, N.B. AND N.S.

Question No. 416—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total amount of legal fees paid by the Department of Transport from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1962, in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and what were the names and addresses of the recipients of such fees, and the amount received in each case?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS LEGAL FEES, N.B. AND N.S.

Question No. 417—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total amount of legal fees paid by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1962, in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and what were the names and addresses of the recipients of such fees, and the amount received in each case?

NATIONAL REVENUE DEPARTMENT LEGAL FEES, N.B. AND N.S.

Question No. 418—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total amount of legal fees paid by the Department of National Revenue from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1962, in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and what were the names and addresses of the recipients of such fees, and the amount received in each case?

CANADIAN HOSPITAL STATISTICS

Question No. 431—Mr. Macnaughton:

1. What is the annual wage bill for all hospital employees in Canada (a) general hospitals (b) mental hospitals?

[Mr. Robichaud.]

2. What is the total number of employees working in hospitals in Canada (a) general hospitals (b) mental hospitals?

3. What is the number of employees per bed working in hospitals in Canada (a) general hospitals (b) mental hospitals?

4. What was the estimated amount being spent in 1959, 1960, and 1961, on the construction of hospitals (a) general hospitals (b) mental hospitals; and, how much of this was contributed by the federal government?

5. How does the average hourly rate for general employees in hospitals compare with the average hourly rate in the transportation industry, the primary and secondary industries?

6. What is the comparison of wages paid to (a) nurses (b) social workers (c) psychologists (d) nursing assistants (e) cleaners (f) kitchen staff, in federal hospitals as compared with community hospitals?

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN DISPUTE RESPECTING PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) or to his parliamentary secretary.

Since the minister stated in the house last Friday that he has asked his officials to bring together the pilots and the shipowners and since the pilots claim that neither the shipowners nor departmental officials got in touch with them, has the minister no comment to make in this respect and can he explain this situation?

(Text):

Mr. Q. A. Martini (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

(Translation):

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, could the parliamentary secretary also take as notice the following question?

Why does the minister insist that the pilots go back to work before their grievances are settled since the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) did not lay down such conditions in other disputes such as, for example, the one involving C.N.R. employees?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order.

(Translation):

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary could also consider it as notice.

In what way is that strike illegal, as the minister claimed in his telegram of last April 6?

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour a question arising out of those which have just been asked. Can the minister tell us whether the strike that is now going on between the pilots and the shipping federation of Canada is a legal strike?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, before I answer that question I shall have to look closely at the three questions that were asked previously.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF MEMBERS OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I do so as a member of this house and as honorary president of the Kootenay Battalion association, a battalion in which many trade unionists and some socialists served Canada in world war I. I can hardly contain my indignation.

Have instructions been sent by the minister or army headquarters to militia units ordering that militiamen, temporarily called out with special militia training units, must resign from membership in the New Democratic party, and provide proof in writing to the officer commanding of their resignations, and abstain from all political activity on behalf of that party during their off duty hours?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not sent any instructions to militia units, or to any other destination, concerning membership in the New Democratic party or on any other subject pertaining to that group; nor has army headquarters sent any such instructions. I do not know the source of the information on which the hon. member bases his question, but it would seem to have some destructive intent as far as the armed services are concerned.

Mr. Winch: We have proof of it.

Mr. Harkness: The situation with regard to the armed services is quite well known. Members of the regular forces are forbidden by Queen's regulations to take part in political activity. That is definite and well understood. No such prohibition exists with respect to militiamen. However, neither officers nor men of the militia or regular forces are permitted to carry on political activities in government armouries or in other military enclaves.

Proposed Vancouver-Sea Island Tunnel

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I say before I proceed that I resent the implication in the minister's answer.

Mr. Harkness: I resent the question.

Mr. Herridge: Does the minister know that the C.O., Lieutenant Colonel Reynolds, and Major Lee, officer commanding the 17th field squadron of the 8th field regiment R.C.E. (militia), demanded that a captain and two N.C.O.'s resign their membership in the New Democratic party and submit proof of their resignations to him in writing? Does the minister know that the captain in question, while proud to serve with this unit, severed an enjoyable association in protest against this infrigement of his civil rights and a Canadian citizen?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I know absolutely nothing about anything along that line.

Mr. Peters: You know nothing, period; just leave it there.

Mr. Harkness: I can only say that if such a request was made I should think it would have been made because political activity was being carried on in the armouries or in the unit contrary to regulations.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question. Does the minister know—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

TRANSPORT

VANCOUVER-SEA ISLAND—SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE OR TUNNEL

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the federal government should give consideration to the advisability of constructing a bridge or tunnel across the north arm of the Fraser river between the city of Vancouver and Sea island in the municipality of Richmond.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house will give unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to move down where we can hear him.

Mr. Speaker: I hear no objection. I take it that the hon. member, if he wishes to take a more central seat, is at liberty to do so for this time only.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, again I should like to thank the house for its courtesy on this occasion in allowing me to move to the central part of the chamber in order to bring before the house what I personally consider is a matter of urgent importance to the city of Vancouver and the entire greater Vancouver area. Notice of motion No. 19, which I have introduced today, reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the federal government should give consideration to the advisability of constructing a bridge or tunnel across the north arm of the Fraser river between the city of Vancouver and Sea island in the municipality of Richmond.

In presenting the background underlying the importance and necessity of this resolution I wish to draw to the attention of the house the population figures for the greater Vancouver area. The population of the greater Vancouver area for 1961 is estimated at 769,900 by the dominion bureau of statistics. The population of the whole of British Columbia is estimated at 1,631,000. The British Columbia research council predicts that by 1971 the population of the greater Vancouver area will be 1,076,200, and that the population of the entire province will be 2,316,900. It is pointed out by the industrial development commission of greater Vancouver that this area includes 309,257 acres of land and embraces ten municipalities. This indicates that this important area is Canada's third largest industrial area. I provide this background information in order to indicate the importance of the problem I am trying to raise.

Sea island which is in the municipality of Richmond within my riding is in the mouth of the Fraser river. The island is surrounded by the north arm of the Fraser river which functions as a barrier between the city of Vancouver and Sea island. The other part of Sea island is surrounded by Moray channel. Sea island itself contains some 4,050 acres and is noted primarily for the fact that it is Vancouver's international airport.

I should point out to hon. members that at the present time the Vancouver international airport is being acquired by the federal government. It is hoped that in the very near future we shall be able to see construction started on a terminal the cost of which would amount to perhaps more than $20 million. The majority of Sea island is owned by the Department of Transport. A fairly small portion is owned by the Department of National Defence. From talking to the town planners in Richmond I understand it is hoped eventually that the whole of Sea island—the whole 4,050 acres—will eventually become zoned for airport use. At the present time there are some 3,000 people living on Sea island.

The point I am trying to make with this resolution is the fact that at the present time there is no—and I emphasize the word "no"—direct access to the city of Vancouver from Sea island. The only access at present is a two lane swing span bridge over the Moray channel. This swing span bridge connects Sea island with Lulu island. From Lulu island it is necessary to go over the Oak street bridge which is a $9 million provincial government toll bridge. Previously there was direct access to Vancouver international airport through the old Marpole bridge which was also a swing span bridge. I think many of the people in the former government will remember the many times tugs and tows forced the opening of that bridge, with delays from 45 minutes up to an hour. However, eventually the Marpole bridge was removed by the provincial government.

There is in existence another bridge called Eburne bridge which connects Sea island and Lulu island. The Eburne bridge is a wooden structure which has come to be in a very dilapidated condition, with the result that there was forced closure of this bridge some time last March. Since that time in March 1961, the only communication between Sea island which is Vancouver's international airport and the lower mainland of Vancouver has been the swing span bridge of two lanes. Anybody knowing the idiosyncrasies of bridges will understand when I say that on several occasions this particular bridge has either closed and failed to open, an occurrence which has tied up the water traffic, or else the reverse procedure has taken place, namely it has opened and failed to close, something which has caused a great deal of difficulty.

It seems to me to be idiotic, to say the least—and that is a rather strong word—that this very important airport, one of Canada's most important, is completely dependant on this two lane swing span bridge. Perhaps to my friends who are not familiar with that area in Burnaby-Richmond I might say that they could get the same analogy if they consider what the situation would be if they had only one access road, for instance to Malton airport or to Dorval airport, and this particular access road were subject to closure without notice. I think it would be fairly easy to imagine the difficulties that situation would produce with respect to traffic tie ups. On a couple of recent occasions last year the bridge failed to close for a period of two or three hours and traffic has been backed right up over the Oak street bridge into Vancouver, a distance of from one and a half to two miles. It has also been backed up into the Richmond area, also another two miles.

I think this will indicate to the house the necessity, as I have indicated in the resolution, for the construction of either a bridge or tunnel. While I mention the alternatives of a bridge or tunnel, in my opinion the only practical method of providing communication between the city of Vancouver and Sea island would be to establish a four lane tunnel, I would suggest that the most suitable location—and this suggestion has been made on previous occasions—would be a continuation of Granville street, which is one of the main arterial highways in the city of Vancouver, over to Sea island with the four lane tunnel. There have been varying estimates as to the cost of this tunnel. I think it has been suggested that possibly an amount of $10 million would be adequate for the tunnel. I would point out that this would mean an additional saving in the distance to the downtown Vancouver area. As a matter of fact, it would be some 2.6 miles less to Vancouver. If the distance was measured from the Oak street bridge, the distance saved would be a minimum of 1.3 miles. Hence from the distance point of view we have 1.3 and 2.6 miles. We would have the added benefit of continuous access rather than this haphazard basis we now have as, under the rules of navigation, the tugs and tows of course have the right to go through and it is the automobile traffic which is forced to wait. I myself had the experience of being over on the Sea island side of the bridge and having the bridge open while one little tugboat went through. It took about 15 minutes. Out of curiosity I counted approximately 60 cars that were tied up on each side. You can imagine the awkward situation that would have resulted if ambulance service had been required or if the necessity had arisen to get fire engines either over to the Sea island side, as they are based on the Lulu island side of Richmond, or if you had the alternative situation where the fire engines come over, as I believe they do once a week, and if the bridge stuck. If there was a fire back on the Lulu island side, it would be impossible to give adequate fire servicing.

I should like to point out to the house the passenger traffic at the Vancouver international airport has been progressively increasing. In 1950 there were some 397,000 passengers; in 1957, some 794,000; and in 1961, some 938,000.

Looking at the situation from the constitutional aspect, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that under the British North America Act of 1867, section 91(10), navigation and shipping are, of course, under the jurisdiction of the federal government. Under section 92(10), which deals with provincial rights, the following statement is made:

> 10. Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes:—
> —(c) Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

For the assistance of the house I would point out that the water area surrounding Sea island comes within the jurisdiction of the north Fraser harbour commissioners, a board that was established in 1913. I should also be obliged to point out to the house, however, that in 1924 some six harbours within the Vancouver area were made public works. Unfortunately one of those harbours was not that of the north Fraser harbour commissioners. The result is that we have the provincial government as the owner of the foreshore and the bed of the river. However, in 1951 the provincial government granted a 21 year lease of the foreshore of the harbour with the result that we have the north Fraser harbour commissioners in effect acting as agents of the provincial government on a purely administrative basis.

While I am on the legal aspect I would also draw to the attention of the committee that under the Navigable Waters Protection Act I think there would be a requirement of federal approval for such a bridge or tunnel. I should like to point out to the house that although the Moray channel bridge, which I have spoken about previously, was constructed by the provincial government, there was a grant of some $400,000 to the provincial government in order to make it a toll free bridge.

At that time the city of Vancouver was the owner of the Vancouver international airport and one other necessity in considering this particular bridge was the provision of adequate access to federal government properties, namely those of the Department of Transport and those of the Department of National Defence. So we see, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government through the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence owns nearly all of Sea island at the present time and this is a change in factors from what we had under the previous situation. The federal government will be building an airport terminal at a cost of $20 million and it is a very simple and obvious proposition that for such a gigantic undertaking one of the minimum requirements is the assurance of continued access.

In fairness I feel I should point out that it is my personal view that the provincial government has not assumed its responsibility under the present situation, because I will admit quite freely that I think that primarily the matter is the responsibility of the provincial government. However, under the circumstances I feel it is necessary for the federal government to take the leadership, and I suggest that it consider having an engineering survey made now to study the construction of such a bridge or a tunnel, and that it communicate with the provincial government with a view to solving the very urgent problem of providing adequate access.

I have discussed this matter with many of the people in the lower mainland area. The simplicity of the problem has made it rather difficult to argue, but the important fact is that construction should be commencing very soon on the terminal. As I have indicated by reference to the tremendous increase in the population of the lower mainland and the volume of business being done at the Vancouver international airport, it is urgent now that the federal and provincial governments get together and assure that a bridge or tunnel will be constructed so that adequate access to the Vancouver international airport will be provided.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will be grateful to the hon. member who has introduced this resolution which concerns a problem of acute importance, I am sure, to those who live in the great metropolis of Vancouver. The resolution invites the federal government to give consideration to the advisability of constructing either a bridge or a tunnel across the north arm of the Fraser river between the city of Vancouver and Sea island in the municipality of Richmond, which municipality I take it forms part of the hon. member's constituency.

I have no hesitation in saying at once that we on this side of the house will support this resolution, but perhaps the hon. member will allow me to take the liberty of making one or two suggestions. It seems to me that when members of this house are considering the very vital problems of transportation in our country today we should at once be willing to give consideration at least, if not action, to any measure that is desirable from the point of view of improving traffic conditions in a metropolitan area such as Vancouver.

The other thing I should like to say is this. The resolution speaks only of consideration, and toward the end of the hon. member's remarks he said something about an engineering survey. However I should like to make this suggestion. I think that an engineering survey is not enough because, if I understand what he has in mind, an engineering survey is normally made by the engineers of the Department of Public Works. My memory of a number of engineering surveys made either by the Department of Public Works alone or jointly with the Department of Transport leads me to say that it takes quite a long time before there is any result. If there is going to be any action in connection with a resolution such as this one, it would strike me that a committee or commission of engineers independent of either of the two departments should be established.

We have, for instance, the question of the Richelieu waterway. First, the Department of Transport gave that matter consideration and then the Department of Public Works gave it consideration, as well as a committee of officials of the two departments. After two years had gone by the matter was finally submitted jointly by the two governments to the international joint commission. I make these observations because a great deal of time was lost in that regard.

That is why it would strike me that a committee of engineers or perhaps a committee comprised of an economist and two engineers might study the desirability of (a) building a bridge, (b) building a tunnel as well as (c) the question of cost and (d) the location and any other matters that the government would want to submit to such a body. I only make these suggestions in an attempt to be helpful because I have found that a great deal of time has been lost in making many of these surveys in the past.

The hon. member referred to the constitutional problem. While I have not given it any study, offhand I believe it is one that might perhaps come within the sections to which he has referred. If not, the Navigable Waters Protection Act is a statute that might be called into play in a project of this nature. As the hon. member knows, that statute comes partly under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport and partly under the Department of Public Works, but for the purposes that the hon. member has in mind it seems to me that the matter is one which would fall under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works.

In order not to delay the resolution and also to give others an opportunity to speak, I will sum up my remarks by saying that, first, the opposition is favourable to any project of a transportation nature such as this which will improve traffic conditions in any great metropolitan area such as Vancouver and, second, in order to bring the matter to a head quickly it strikes me that not only should consideration be given as requested in the resolution but action should be taken upon the resolution by the appointment of a board of engineers to study the various aspects of what we think is a laudable project.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): I have a good deal of pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in supporting the motion introduced to the house today by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Drysdale). It states:

That, in the opinion of this house, the federal government should give consideration to the advisability of constructing a bridge or tunnel across the north arm of the Fraser river between the city of Vancouver and Sea island in the municipality of Richmond.

As the hon. member has pointed out, at the moment access to Sea island is by means of the Oak street bridge, a new bridge constructed by the provincial government. This replaces the old Marpole bridge. Then, in order to cross the Moray channel there is a two lane swing span before you enter Sea island proper. It is this particular span that has proven to be the bottleneck. In any consideration of the over-all planning for the Vancouver airport, which has recently been turned over by the city of Vancouver to the federal government and where the Department of Transport is planning new passenger facilities, the question of access to this airport is of the utmost importance. It is not only access to the airport which must be considered, but it is access to a major national defence air force establishment. This access, of course, is limited by the fact that you simply have the Oak street bridge and the Moray channel bridge.

The resolution refers to a bridge or tunnel. There has been a rather sketchy engineering survey made which indicates that a tunnel would be superior to a bridge. In so far as a bridge is concerned, of course you either have to have a low span bridge, in which case you get interference with the traffic on the north arm of the Fraser river, or you have a high level crossing over the north arm and which would be located somewhat westerly of the present Oak street bridge, and this might interfere with zoning regulations and flightway plans. On the other hand, the tunnel would have the advantage that it would not interfere with other river development considerations and it would not infringe upon the necessary restrictions of air traffic control. It would provide direct and immediate access for emergency defence purposes, independent of other traffic facilities in the area. A tunnel would be less vulnerable than a ground traffic structure in the event of hostilities.

The hon. member has mentioned the growth in the population of Vancouver. The growth in his own area of Richmond has been equally startling from a percentage point of view. For instance, from approximately 20,000 in 1954 the population of Richmond has risen to 42,000 in 1962 and it is expected to be 80,000 by 1969.

I know that members of this house are apt to view with scepticism the claims made by members coming from the west coast. They think that we have a pretty good province but we are inclined to gild the lily by claiming advantages beyond those about which we can brag. The fact is that we have the fastest growing area in Canada. We have an economy based upon natural resource development and our natural resources have only just been touched. These figures do seem to be unrealistic when compared with the rather lethargic growth in the east, but they can be considered to be very conservative estimates when you consider what the growth on the Pacific coast will be.

It is quite true that the problem of access to the airport is a matter for the provincial government. At the same time, however, the federal government has its responsibility. The federal government will be spending something in the neighbourhood of $12 million on airport facilities. As the hon. member has pointed out, although the number of flights from the airport are decreasing the number of passengers is increasing. I believe the figures he gave indicated that almost one million passengers passed through the Vancouver international airport last year. These figures will continue to grow, and they will grow very fast. The problem of moving these passengers to and from the airport is going to be a matter which must be considered by the Department of Transport, and the people who are associated with the department on the west coast in developing the facilities there.

I have great pleasure therefore, Mr. Speaker, in seconding this motion and urging the house to give support to it. The question of a location of the tunnel, whether it is at the foot of Granville street or whether it is at the foot of Hudson street is something for properly qualified technical people to decide. It would necessarily be somewhere in that area and would have the additional advantage of rejuvenating a section of the city which was cut off from the flow of traffic when the old Marpole bridge was abandoned and the new Oak street bridge constructed. It will only be justice if the development of a tunnel, such as is envisaged by this resolution, results in the Marpole business area regaining some of its former prosperity.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the opportunity to support this motion introduced by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Drysdale). The crossing proposed in this resolution would join the city of Vancouver with Sea island, and is certainly something that should command the attention of the federal government because of the huge investment they now have at Sea island as a result of the acquisition of the Vancouver international airport and the defence installations. For these reasons, it is of the utmost importance that we have access to the island.

There is no direct access, of course, at the present time from the city of Vancouver to Sea island. One of my main concerns in relation to this matter is the generally recognized fact that with the growth of traffic there a new crossing is going to have to be built by someone. I think it is true that the initiative should have come from the provincial government. Unfortunately, it has not come from that quarter so I think the matter has been properly raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. At the time the Oak street bridge was constructed, the city of Vancouver felt it was very badly discriminated against in the matter of sharing the cost of the approaches to the bridge. This view was expressed by the city council at that time, and they protested very strenuously to the provincial government. Representing as I do the people of Vancouver-Kingsway who will be concerned with any costs arising from a project of this nature, I want to make sure that they get a better deal than they did on the last occasion a crossing was built. I believe there have already been some studies made regarding the possibility of a crossing by C.B.A. Engineers Limited. I do not know how detailed the studies were, but I believe they concern a crossing at the foot of Granville street where we formerly had a bridge which is no longer in use. I might remark that with the growth of traffic now developing we should not be doing away with bridges already in existence.

The federal government should take this matter up at once because it is quite evident that the provincial government is not going to go ahead, as it should. As I said, along with other members taking part in this debate, while in the normal course of events it may not have been a direct responsibility of the federal government, the fact is now that the federal government is in possession of the larger part of Sea island, has huge defence establishments and this, along with the importance of Vancouver international airport, indicates it should give immediate attention to the question and see what can be done about it.

Mr. J. R. Taylor (Vancouver-Burrard): I should like to commend the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Drysdale) for introducing this most worth-while resolution. It is one which I feel all hon. members from the province of British Columbia should support, and its sponsor has again indicated most progressive thinking in regard to a very worthy public project. He has made it very clear that we have no direct access between the city of Vancouver and Sea island, and that we must have direct access in order to cope with the great amount of traffic now prevalent and which is expected to increase.

[Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

The hon. member has pointed out that he does not want any bottleneck between the city of Vancouver and his own progressive constituency. He has long been an advocate of a more modern and up to date international terminal and has played a large part in the planning of what we all feel will be the most modern international airport in this country, if not on this continent. As he pointed out, we are about to spend $20 million, and before the terminal is completed we may have to spend $30 million. At the present time there is a substantial investment there in airplanes and airport works, and it does seem foolish to have this very large capital investment and at the same time have no direct access to the place where it is located.

All of us who make periodic visits to the terminal have to consider whether the bridge referred to by the hon. member will be open or not. If it is not, then there is a considerable waste of time. Leaving aside the matter as to who should pay for the tunnel or bridge, and I for one feel a tunnel would be more appropriate, the main consideration we must have is that of getting access to the area. Again leaving aside the matter of who should pay for the tunnel or bridge, I believe it would be most wise for the federal government to give consideration to the project, as suggested by the resolution.

I also hope that the co-operation of public officials in the municipality of Richmond and the city of Vancouver, together with that of the appropriate minister in Victoria, will be sought and secured.

It is common knowledge that the present day trend is towards rapid transportation. By air it is only four hours from Vancouver to Toronto, and an hour from Vancouver to Calgary. As a sidelight I may relate that on a recent trip from Vancouver to Toronto, the stewardess asked a passenger at Vancouver if she could help him off with his overcoat and he said: "No thanks, I am getting off at Winnipeg." That is an indication of how fast we now move between some of the major centres in this country.

The trend is toward speed, and at Vancouver airport we are giving consideration to the provision of larger customs facilities. We are also considering the American system of handling customs and immigration. It is a system I have advocated in this house and elsewhere. Airport passengers travelling north should be cleared through Canadian customs and immigration at Seattle. The Americans have co-operated by establishing appropriate customs and immigration stations in Vancouver for passengers travelling south. This system saves time.

In order to cope with the problem of transportation between the city of Vancouver and the airport we are considering transporting passengers by helicopter. Some people are also advocating the establishment of a monorail service between the air terminal and downtown Vancouver, but I feel that if we can be assured of having a tunnel or bridge constructed we shall have less need for a helicopter or monorail service.

It is foolish to increase speed and efficiency in the air only to meet with delays getting to and from the air terminals. In fact it is a common expression, that "if you have time to spare travel by air". Another version of it put out by the C.N.R. and C.P.R. is that if you "travel by train you avoid the strain". People who want to use air transportation in the Vancouver area ought to be able to avoid the strain by having proper access to the air terminal. At the present time there is need for a further access road and in the near future that need will be much greater.

I have referred to a helicopter site in the city of Vancouver, and I have a letter here which the Minister of Transport wrote to me about the matter. In his letter the minister said that, as regards the location of a heliport, his department considers it would be advisable if the site were removed from built up or congested areas, and if possible it were placed immediately adjacent to water courses where approaches and departures may be safely made without the necessity of flying over built up areas. In this connection we have given consideration to access routes by water into the False creek area.

At the present time the construction of the Chignecto canal is being advocated in the maritimes at a cost of $90 million, but what the hon. member proposes in order to link up his area with the city of Vancouver will be much less expensive, and it must be borne in mind that it will serve a greater population. Late in 1959 an editorial appeared in the Vancouver Sun which urged the city officials to promote Vancouver's status as a world travel centre by supporting the construction of a waterfront access road, and this administration has done that.

The article also emphasized the need for expanded port facilities, including small aircraft accommodation. The present administration has done that also. The editorial also pointed out the need to improve other access routes, and the airport was mentioned. I also noticed that in the Vancouver Province there was a similar editorial which advocated opening up the waterfront and our access routes to the international airport. Therefore it is with pleasure that I join my colleague the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Drysdale) in advocating careful consideration by the federal government of this most important matter.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, although I am a representative of a Vancouver constituency I deliberately held back from speaking on this motion until I had heard what other hon. members had to say as to the reason for placing such particular importance on this one proposition which is before the house, namely the building of a bridge or tunnel to act as an access road between the city of Vancouver and Sea island. As a resident in and a representative of Vancouver, I naturally support anything that is going to be of assistance in solving our transportation problem in that city and its environs. We are without doubt in a very peculiar and particular situation in the metropolitan area of Vancouver, the third largest city in Canada. As far as the airport is concerned, from my home I can get to the airport without paying a toll because I go over the Frasel river bridge, which is toll free.

Mr. Drysdale: It is not open.

Mr. Winch: In all the years I have been travelling between the airport and my home I have never yet been held up on the Fraser river bridge.

Mr. Drysdale: You are lucky.

Mr. Winch: Moreover, since the opening of the bridge we have been hearing so much about, this two lane, swing span bridge over the Moray channel, I have never yet been held up on that bridge and this is the first time I have heard of anybody being held up on it. This may be just a peculiar circumstance, but that has been my experience.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could direct a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Winch: Just a moment. Apart from the Fraser river bridge there is no other way of getting to the airport from Vancouver except by going over the Oak street toll bridge owned by the provincial government and then going over the two lane, swing bridge of the Moray channel, which is not a toll bridge because the federal government made a contribution of 50 per cent of its cost.

Mr. Drysdale: Four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Winch: Therefore it had to be a toll free bridge. Mr. Speaker, I was most interested, as I have said, to hear some of the facts and factors mentioned by previous speakers with regard to just what is the purpose of this new bridge or tunnel. I gather from the remarks of the hon. member who moved this motion that he anticipates the time will come in the not too distant future when Sea island will be almost completely of an airport nature, either a civil international airport, which it is today, or tied in with the R.C.A.F. Some 3,000 people reside there at the present time, as I believe the hon. member said. That number will undoubtedly not increase; perhaps it will decrease. Therefore on the basis of the hon. member's presentation we now have before us for consideration an access road from the city of Vancouver to what is going to be wholly or solely an airport area.

I certainly agree with and support the idea of a tunnel which I believe will cut off a distance of almost two miles and thus reduce travelling time if you go over the Oak street bridge and the Moray channel, or about three and a half miles if you go over the Fraser river bridge and then over the Moray channel bridge. But if the intention behind this resolution is to provide airport access, I cannot see the necessity for a four lane tunnel. For that purpose I think two lanes would be sufficient under all circumstances, unless of course the idea is that there would not only be access from the city of Vancouver with its hundreds of thousands of people, but also access over the Moray channel bridge into Lulu island, through Lulu island and via Deas island tunnel into Ladner and then to the international border. If that is the idea, then most certainly it should be a four lane tunnel.

But that brings in the fact that we have this new Oak street bridge, which is a four lane bridge and feeds not only the airport but Lulu island, Ladner and south through to the international border, where they will be completing, I think this year, perhaps one of the most modern highways in Canada.

I am from Vancouver and I will support anything that is in the interests of Vancouver; but I believe this matter is of such importance that it just cannot be discussed or concluded on the basis of one bridge, one tunnel or one purpose, excellent as that may be. I believe that when we are asking for this amount of federal money to be spent, it should be on the over-all picture of Vancouver, Burnaby, New Westminster, the Fraser valley, Richmond, Lulu island, Sea island, the airport, freeways and highways. My hon. friend's estimate, which I think is low, is $11 million to serve an airport where we are going to build a $22 million air service station.

I believe that the interests of the hon. member's constituency, the constituency of my hon. friend on my right from Burnaby-Coquitlam and all hon. members from Vancouver, New Westminster and the Fraser valley, would best be served—although I believe this to be an excellent idea in principle —by tying this scheme in with federal assistance in connection with an over-all transportation plan for metropolitan Vancouver, and the first money to be spent should be where the engineers say it is going to do the most good.

Mr. W. A. McLennan (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support this resolution I want to congratulate the hon. member from Burnaby-Richmond for bringing it forward. I think that with such an important international airport as we have on Sea island it is rather incredible that we have only one access to it, and actually not a direct one at that.

We have seen many cases of swing spans such as that which crosses over the Moray channel from Lulu island to Sea island getting stuck, being hit by a barge or developing some mechanical failure, and if that should happen it could take several hours to repair.

I support wholeheartedly the resolution my hon. friend has introduced. I am not going to speak on it at great length and go over the details which have already been given to this house, but I can assure the hon. member that it is a credit to him to bring in a resolution of this kind, and it has my wholehearted support.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is with some trepidation that I as a member from the central or eastern part of Canada, however it may be designated, rise to become involved in a friendly discussion among hon. members from Vancouver island. I employ as a precedent the intervention of the hon. member for Laurier who pointed out that the principle involved concerns other than merely hon. members from Vancouver city.

It will be recalled that last year a request was made on behalf of the city of Toronto for assistance in constructing the Toronto subway. I believe the federal government was also approached by the city of Montreal concerning assistance for the proposed subway in that municipality. These requests would come under what the hon. member for Laurier designated as assistance for the construction of transportation facilities across Canada.

Although I do not know the details of the problem that was so ably presented here this afternoon, the discussion of this notice of motion raises a burning question that is facing all municipalities. This question comes about by the rapid growth of our municipalities and the problem they face because of the huge capital expenditures created by the need of transportation facilities, sewage facilities and other construction requirements to provide the amenities we wish to enjoy. The questions raised are: How can this construction be financed within the limited budgets of the municipalities or, perhaps, the provinces? How can they obtain money for the development of these projects at reasonable rates of interest?

Interest rates have been increasing. It is increasingly expensive for municipalities to obtain money in the market. A consideration of this subject involves consideration of the problem of making loans available to municipalities with the consent of the provinces.

A step in this direction was taken by the present government in making loans available to municipalities for the construction of sewage facilities. These loans are available under the National Housing Act as an extension of the national housing program. The problem might be approached on the basis that municipalities having certain transportation problems could obtain loans under this or some other measure. That would be one method of solving the problem. Under such a program the municipalities of Toronto and Montreal would qualify for assistance in the construction of their subways.

It is important in considering this matter to establish a principle so that we do not deal with one project at a time. If each project were examined individually the federal government would tend to say it is a local problem that should be dealt with by the municipality or the province concerned.

Our national development is somewhat hampered in the over-all picture when our municipalities face these huge expenditures. As some have said, perhaps the time has come for the establishment of a financial institution somewhat similar to the Bank of Canada through which the municipalities, with the consent of the provinces, could obtain loans for the construction of projects of the nature to which reference is made in this motion. There could be established a municipal loan bank for the whole of Canada or it could be handled on a provincial basis. The details would have to be worked out. Certainly valid arguments could be made for both proposals.

Those who adhere to the doctrine that constitutionally the provinces should control the municipalities prefer that an institution of this type be established on a provincial basis. The argument is also raised that not all the provinces are equally endowed with wealth and resources and they would have difficulty providing services to some municipalities whose needs are relatively as great as those of metropolitan areas such as Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. As our municipalities develop they require the same type of financial assistance.

Although I do not think the house could approve of an individual project, as such, the notice of motion before us today points up to the federal and provincial governments the need of reassessing the problems of our municipalities in attempting to finance large projects of this nature. It is necessary that this problem be considered to assist in the development of important projects the financing of which represents a heavy burden to municipalities all across the country.

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member for Davenport has touched upon a crucial question raised in this notice of motion, which in itself is laudable. The hon. member who sponsors this resolution has clearly demonstrated the value of a bridge or tunnel to meet a transportation problem in the city of Vancouver. On examination it becomes clear that in the resolution the people of Canada are asked to assist financially in the construction of a transportation facility that would be of purely local benefit, and I would think—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman in the middle of a breath, but it being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: The house will resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

Mr. Chevrier: Where are the ministers?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The ministers are not here yet.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR AN ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROCEDURE AFTER PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is not easy to ask questions of ministers who are not here. While some of them are arriving perhaps I might ask the Prime Minister or the house leader whether he could give, if not at this moment, then when the house adjourns tonight, an assurance with regard to the business of the house during this week after the budget speech tomorrow night. Shall we be proceeding with the budget debate on Wednesday or, if not, shall we be dealing with some other business? If so, can the Prime Minister indicate what it might be?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): When the house leader comes the house will be made aware of what the business will be on Wednesday.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, now that the house leader is in his place I wonder whether the Prime Minister would permit him to answer the question I asked the Prime Minister a few minutes ago and which he said would be answered when the house leader arrived?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think perhaps it would be preferable to follow the usual course and deal with the business of the house at the conclusion of the sitting. If the house leader wishes to outline it now I have no objection but it is more customary to disclose the order of government business at the conclusion of the day's sitting.

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM BEFORE EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or the house leader? I should like to ask either one of them what the business of the house will be on Wednesday of this week?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): That question will be answered as usual at the conclusion of the business today.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It has been the practice from time to time prior to the Easter recess to ask the following question and I ask it now of the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister, either now or tomorrow if he wishes, give the house some indication of what the business is likely to be and what legislation is likely to come up between now and the Easter recess?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think a perusal of the order paper will give a pretty good answer to the hon. gentleman. There may be some additional matters. Naturally matters arise that must be brought before the house, but the order paper has sufficient on it to use up the time of the house.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the acting leader of the house on the government side was not in the house when the Prime Minister replied to the question of the Leader of the Opposition. The Leader of the Opposition asked the Prime Minister about the order of the business on Wednesday.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member would be well advised to bring the matter of Wednesday's business, if that is what he is inquiring into, before the house at the end of today's sitting.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, I prefer to deal with it now on orders of the day. The procedure of the house at this time of the session is that this kind of matter is usually discussed between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Hees: Stop trying to take the place of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —on the orders of the day. I have a right to ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps I anticipated the wrong question. A question was asked of the Prime Minister who answered it and if the hon. member's question is supplementary to that it will be in order to ask it.

Mr. Hees: Don't try to take the place of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, I shall be glad to hear what the hon. member's question is, but I take the opportunity to caution him that if it relates to tomorrow's business he should ask it later today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the leader of the house, in view of the statement by the Prime Minister to the Leader of the Opposition as to the business of the house on Wednesday—

Mr. Hees: Let the Leader of the Opposition speak for himself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —is he in a position to indicate to the house what the procedure will be tomorrow night after the Minister of Finance has given his budget, and what will be the order of business for Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: At the appropriate time I will do that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Just the opposite of what the Prime Minister said; the Prime Minister has lost his authority.

DIVORCE BILLS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs a question in his capacity as house leader. As to the announcement earlier today made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), the chairman of the miscellaneous private bills committee, to the effect that divorce bills will be placed on the order paper as of tomorrow for proceeding thereon, does this indicate that the government has no intention of meeting its commitment made to the house last session about parliamentary procedure on this matter?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I will examine in Hansard the hon. member's lengthy question and ascertain whether it requires an answer tomorrow.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN DISPUTE RESPECTING PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I see the Minister of Labour is in his seat. I wonder whether, in the time that has expired since this afternoon, the minister has had an opportunity of looking at the questions that were put to him as to whether or not the strike between the pilots and the shipping federation of Canada was a legal one?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity of having Hansard, or whatever you call it, at my disposal with respect to these questions.

Mr. Chevrier: Then may I ask a supplementary question arising out of this same matter. Does the minister think that an appropriate thing to do in connection with a dispute of this nature, to tell the pilots that before their grievances can be considered they must go back to work? Is that the policy which the Minister of Labour follows in other disputes such as for instance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's comment is not in order.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works said, "Don't answer that; to hell with him". That is a very nice method and manner of interrupting a question and passing remarks when those of us who sit on this side of the house ask questions and have a perfect right to do so.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier, for whose opinion I have no regard in any event, has no business putting words into my mouth.

Mr. Chevrier: That is what you said.

Mr. Walker: You are wrong.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier has taken exception to a remark which he alleges was made and which I did not personally hear. Is his question of privilege relating to that matter?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is this. While I was putting the question to the Minister of Labour I heard the Minister of Public Works make the following remark and I make this statement on my responsibility as a member of parliament. The statement was, "Don't answer that question; let him go to hell".

Mr. Walker: That is completely wrong.

Mr. Pearson: What did you say?

Mr. Walker: It is none of your business what I said.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Laurier has made an assertion which has been denied by the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister did not deny it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is obliged to accept the statement of the minister involved whose knowledge would encompass what he had said.

Mr. Starr: In reply, may I say that this question asked just now is no different from the other one. I shall be obliged to look at the notes.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the Minister of Labour whether he saw in the report that his colleague the Minister of Transport had informed the pilots that this was an illegal strike? Does the minister not know what his colleague knows?

Mr. Starr: That was a really smart question.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a very smart government.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CAPE BRETON, N.S.—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the Minister of Labour received a letter dated April 5 from Mr. Malcolm MacInnis, secretary of the industrial Cape Breton committee on unemployment, pointing out all the efforts being made on the local level to solve this problem or at least ameliorate the conditions and asking that unemployment insurance benefits be extended and, if so, could the minister inform the house of the nature of his reply?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I received a letter on Friday from a gentleman by the name of Malcolm MacInnis who since Saturday last is a candidate for the New Democratic party. We have not yet replied to his letter.

(Translation):

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PAYMENTS TO PAUL LACOSTE AND NORMAN HUDON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue.

Could he give the house the fantastic amounts paid by the C.B.C. to Messrs. Paul Lacoste and Norman Hudon, one of whom is recognized as anticonfessional and the other is a Liberal fanatic?

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that, as a matter of policy, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation does not give any information about fees, contracts or amounts paid to the performers or employees who work for it.

(Text):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY CONCERNING STATUS OF CONSTITUENCY OF KAMLOOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Justice but, in his absence, perhaps the Prime Minister can answer it. Would the Prime Minister care to comment on a headline contained in a well known Conservative newspaper to the effect that Kamloops is now considered to be a Liberal riding?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question does not relate to the official responsibility of the Prime Minister.

TRADE

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce could perhaps now confirm the statement made by the parliamentary secretary some weeks ago to the effect that the uranium contract with the United Kingdom would be signed during the month of April?

[Mr. Herridge.]

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement he made was that he hoped the uranium contract will be signed before the end of April. That is a statement I made in the house when I was asked next day what my comments on the situation were.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—VISIT OF PRESIDENT OF COMMUNITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether Professor Hallstein, who is, I believe, president of the council of the European economic community and who is now in Washington discussing relations between the United States and the community, will be visiting Ottawa during the course of his visit to North America?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether he will but if he does I am very happy to be able to assure the house that I will be very glad to see him if he would like to see me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Finance say if it is a fact that he has indicated to Professor Hallstein that there would be no good purpose in the latter coming to Canada at this time?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. The guess and conjecture of the hon. member for Essex East are as wild as usual.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question. In view of the fact that Professor Hallstein is discussing matters having to do with the relationship between the United States and the European economic community, does the minister not think that the government of Canada should take the step of inviting Professor Hallstein to come here and discuss matters that are now being discussed with the President of the United States, who is giving some leadership in this matter?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, Professor Hallstein has visited Ottawa before—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Years ago.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not many years ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Two years ago.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): About a year and a half or two years ago, and there have been other meetings with Professor Hallstein. I have seen Professor Hallstein at various meetings in Paris since that time. The hon. member does not need to think that there are not meetings going on from time to time. Things can happen without his knowledge. We find a great many things happening without his knowledge.

Mr. Hees: And most things do. He is in a complete fog most of the time.

Mr. Chevrier: Who, the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Hees: No, the member for Essex East.

Mr. Pearson: A supplementary question. Is it a fact that Professor Hallstein can come to Ottawa if he invites himself?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is perhaps hypothetical.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, this question is just about on a par so far as responsibility is concerned with the question just asked by the hon. member for Essex East. Professor Hallstein will, of course, always be welcome in Ottawa any time he wishes to come.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, if the minister's esprit d'escalier is completed perhaps I could ask him if it is true that the British government has intimated to the government of Canada that if they are not successful in joining the common market they intend to renew the free trade offer to Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, sir. Another wild conjecture.

[And the Clerk Assistant having called the first order of business]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the Clerk Assistant seems very enthusiastic this evening. I should like to ask—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He wants to get on with the business.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, perhaps the Prime Minister, to use his own words, would allow us a few minutes to ask questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not necessary for the hon. member to comment. If he will put his question, I am sure the house will hear him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SPORTS

GUELPH, ONT.—ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL TRAINING COLLEGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I wish to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question arising out of comments he made this afternoon concerning the funds to be spent in connection with the act to promote fitness and amateur sports. Has any arrangement been made to establish a national training college or a centre for coaches at Guelph?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, I think all I can say at the moment is that the matter is certainly under consideration. When a decision is reached, of course, an announcement will be made.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the serious charges made against the conduct of this government by General McNaughton, one who has dedicated himself to the public service of our country and who was appointed by a Conservative government—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, in view of the fact that he is in charge of this matter, as he himself said today, he would agree to have the external affairs committee set up forthwith under our procedure so that General McNaughton could make the charges, as he has requested, before that committee, and give the House of Commons an opportunity of examining into the nature and the validity of those charges.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has already given the assurance that before the treaty is ratified it will be referred to the standing committee on external affairs, and at that time I would hope that General McNaughton could be called and give whatever evidence he wishes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the hon. gentleman expect that would take place before the dissolution of parliament?

Mr. Green: The hon. member for Essex East can make as good a guess about that as I can.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government does not want this matter to be exposed.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the question I was going to put was a question to the Secretary of State. I was going to ask the Secretary of State if he would be good enough to furnish the house with a list of those orders for returns to which returns have not yet been made. In particular, would the minister do his utmost to have a return made to question No. 123 which was made an order for return on February 14? It was a question by the hon. member for Gatineau.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will make an inquiry and try to answer the question of the hon. member as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I should like to address a question to the parliamentary secretary. It arises out of the answer given on March 8, 1962, to this question:

What is the age of the oldest butter now in storage?

The answer given was "August, 1960". Would the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture advise the house whether the government intends to place this butter, produced in August, 1960, on the market?

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this question as notice in order to be able to understand it better. I could not hear the hon. member.

FORESTRY

CANADA CORNER—INQUIRY AS TO CONTRIBUTION OF CANADIAN TREES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Forestry. My question is based on an article which appeared in today's Globe and Mail reporting a 38 acre woodland project on the island of Canvey in the Thames estuary, which is being developed to contain species of every tree that grows in Canada and which is to be called Canada Corner. Is the minister aware of this plan and if so has the government made any contribution of Canadian trees towards it? If not, would the minister consider giving some tangible encouragement to this worthy project?

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): I have a copy of the hon. member's question, for which I thank him. I have not seen the article to which he refers and we have received no formal letter in connection with it. I assure him that if we do it will have the utmost consideration.

THE BUDGET

BUDGET PAPERS—INCLUSION OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I may ask the Minister of Finance if he is in a position to tell the house whether the final supplementary estimates amounting to $138 million for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, are included in his estimates of expenditures contained in the white paper issued today and amounting to $6,563 million?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before they have been voted by the house?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have heard the observation offered by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate from a seated position, Mr. Speaker. Let me say that if they had not been included he would be the first in the house to be shrieking and yelling and putting on another phony make-believe act, as he and his colleagues have been doing all day.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman, in reply to a perfectly proper, straightforward question, chose to make an utterly uncalled for personal attack upon my motives and upon my conduct in the house. It seems to me, sir, that if the hon. gentleman had done his duty properly in the house and brought the estimates before us as he should, I would have had no occasion to ask this question at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, if questions were addressed about the business of the house and not for the purpose of obstructing there would be no need for such answers.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

EFFECT ON TOURIST INDUSTRY OF CANADA'S TRADE WITH CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources but perhaps in his absence I might direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the approaching tourist season what action, if any, is the government taking to offset the unfavourable public reaction developing in the United States against Canada because of the government's policy in respect to trade with Cuba?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, I would say that the assumption upon which the hon. member has based his question is completely false. There is no adverse effect in the United States so far as Canada is concerned. In fact, just the reverse is the case and we expect tourist traffic in the coming year will be the highest on record.

Mr. Garland: May I ask the minister a supplementary question? Does he ever read any United States newspapers?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): That is all you read.

Mr. Harkness: Perhaps I might comment briefly on that. Unlike some hon. members opposite, I can read.

Mr. Garland: Tory sarcasm.

Mr. Speaker: I did not see the hon. member for Leeds. If he has a question that he feels must be put I shall be glad to entertain it.

Mr. Matheson: I would ask the Minister of National Defence whether or not he has read in the Sunday Times of London that Canada is lonely and disillusioned, and that Canada's golden dream is at an end. This latter is from the Manchester Guardian.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member perhaps would reserve his comments for the appropriate time.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (for the Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to make some short comments on the third reading of this bill. I think we can perhaps liken it to the ride Lady Godiva took in Coventry. We do not know whether the government just wants to peek or whether it knows what it is going to find out after it peeks. I feel that all this peeping and prying into other people's business will show exactly what the government has known for many months, as was illustrated by the discussion in committee about the dominion bureau of statistics publications relating to the control of Canadian industry by foreign corporations. The bill could be referred to as Fulton's false front more than as anything worth while.

We in the New Democratic party supported this measure at second reading. We took the Minister of Justice at his word. We knew that there were things which were good and bad in the bill, but we took the minister's word that the bill had a worth-while objective and that was to assist in the development of a Canadian culture, a Canadian understanding and Canadian control of our economy so that we would have Canadianism rather than Americanism running things in the country. We were prepared, after second reading, to try to deal with the less desirable features of the bill at the committee stage. We moved a number of amendments and we raised a number of objections. All but a minor one or two of them were brushed aside.

However, during the committee stage we asked the Minister of Justice, who piloted the bill on behalf of the government, for information. The further we inquired into the matter, the more amendments we proposed, the more we became convinced, just as the Liberal party did, that this bill is just a sham and a farce. It is not designed to do anything else but give talking points to the government during some expected national event that might take place this summer. In this way, the Tories hope to attempt to mislead the Canadian people into thinking that this government is doing something about our economy. Like so many things, this bill rests upon political expediency and is in the same category as the national productivity council, the Columbia treaty and all the royal commissions we have running around the country. We feel, Mr. Speaker, that it became quite evident at the committee stage the government had knowledge, as former governments have had, of the extent of foreign control over Canadian industry since 1926.

Because there have been increases in foreign control of Canadian industry and the Canadian economy during the last two years, and because this government has done absolutely nothing about that, we cannot support or approve the bill on third reading due to its fraudulent character.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): On third reading of the bill I feel that one or two remarks made by the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: I think before I recognize the parliamentary secretary I should ask the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) to reconsider his last phrase. It seems to me it is not appropriate in debate to refer to bills as having a fraudulent character. I think he would probably wish to modify that expression.

Mr. Howard: I did not realize that was an objectionable phrase to attach to a piece of legislation. Perhaps I should speak kindly about the bill and say it is a bill which does not appear to be what it purports to be.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This bill, Mr. Speaker, was given frank and full discussion. I have totted up the time and I find we spent 13 hours on it from April 2 to April 6. Many amendments were made, and the official opposition moved two amendments that were accepted by the government. However, during all the time the bill was under discussion the C.C.F.-N.D.P. party were away off base. They had no constructive criticism to make. They did not even understand the legislation. They said that in some instances there was not enough bureaucracy, and at other times they said there was too much. On other occasions they said there were not enough facts, and yet at other times they said too many facts were being requested.

I suggested they were embarrassed by the bill and that they did not take the time even to read or look at it in detail. This is important legislation. There is some urgency for it and I suggest we get on with the business. We certainly are not going to support any hoisting amendment.

Mr. Howard: Would my hon. friend permit a question before he concludes? I wonder what the hon. member would think about the phrase that "if the government wishes to lay a foundation for a fascist or communist successor they would not do better than to end up with the catch-all phrase"—the words used by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson).

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That is the same nonsense the hon. member put on Hansard for the last four or five days.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Pickersgill: In view of the rather offensive intervention of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert I think one might ask members of the government, when they are talking about people neglecting their parliamentary duties, why the Minister of Justice is not here when this bill is before the house?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the establishment of an electoral boundaries commission for the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons; to provide that certain members of the commission may be paid such per diem allowance as may be fixed by the governor in council; to provide for the payment of reasonable travelling and living expenses for the members of the commission; and to provide also that the commission may engage the services of such technical advisers and other staff, including a person to act as secretary to the commission, as it deems necessary.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After the vicissitudes of the day, Mr. Chairman, we come now to a matter on which I hope there will be a reasonable degree of agreement. I would have wished to have placed the bill before the committee. That would have permitted a fuller and more complete examination of the matters relevant to this resolution. However, that opportunity is denied. I shall therefore proceed to outline in a general way something of the history of redistribution in Canada and the views expressed in other years by various prime ministers of this country. I shall, as well, place before the committee, without that detail I would have hoped would have been possible, the general purport of the bill which will be presented to the house.

In the speech from the throne on January 18 the following appeared:

My government will ask you to take steps to ensure that the forthcoming redistribution of electoral districts is made in an equitable manner upon an objective basis. To this end you will be asked to approve for the first time in our history a measure to create an independent commission to recommend the changes required in the electoral districts as a result of the decennial census.

Shortly put, the objective we have in mind in the bill that will be presented is to place redistribution in the hands of a non-partisan commission in order to remove and eliminate the abuses of the past. I do not intend to go into any detail regarding some abuses that took place in recent redistributions, although I have some personal knowledge of what was done.

Indeed, I doubt whether I could have ever become Prime Minister if it had not been for the operations performed on two successive occasions on the constituency I represented. Therefore, I can be extremely objective and most appreciative of what was done. However, I realize that there was a need for a change to be made in what had become a decennial or semi-decennial opportunity for the majority in the House of Commons to so carve up constituencies as to—it was hoped—inure to the benefit of the government of the day.

We dealt with this matter on a number of occasions. It was dealt with in this house in 1947 and again in 1952. On both occasions we placed before the house the suggestion that the antiquated system of endeavouring to make redistribution a means whereby the will of the people might be circumvented in certain cases, or political opponents whose presence in the house was not desired by the government of the day could be eliminated, should be altered. We said there should be set up a commission that would objectively study this question. That, too, was an undertaking given during the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958.

We all know that from 1867 on, the decennial exhibition that parliament gave was not such as was in keeping with the preservation of democratic representation through reasonable equalization of representation by population. That principle, of course, cannot be adopted. There must be some exception. The adoption of this principle without any qualification would mean that, as the urban population of Canada increases and as the tremendous surge continues from the rural parts into the cities and in particular to the suburbs of cities, the rural areas would have an almost negligible representation.

The same problem was faced in the United States by its supreme court in a judgment that was rendered some three weeks ago in the case of Baker v. Carr in which that court dealt with the situation in Tennessee where, as the result of following principles other than those which all of us intend and expect should be followed, a very small proportion of the population was able in that state to control the outcome of the election in that state. We undertook to see to it that never again would redistribution be made an objective of party policy directed by a government. We did so because we believe that the will of the people should not be thwarted or diminished by crude efforts, in some cases, or the redrawing of maps of peculiar shape and form in order to remove those whose presence in this chamber would be regarded by a government with a large majority as inimical to the quietude of the soul of that government.

Political parties throughout the years have often advocated that some change be made and have been strong in this matter in opposition but weak in implementation. As far back as 1920 the late Mr. Mackenzie King said that something should be done. He was in opposition then. In 1944 he made a declaration that everything possible should be done to assure a fair degree of equal opportunity in all parts of the country. In 1933 he spoke in terms of deep conviction in favour of the assurance of fairness in redistribution. When he took office this matter was among those promises not implemented. A special committee on elections was appointed in 1936 and it carried on until 1939. A comprehensive report was made but it was never published. The whole problem of redistribution was considered again and studies were made prior to the acts of 1947 and 1952.

I shall refer to some of these questions a little later on. However, having mentioned the objective we have in mind, the purpose and the aim to make democracy work and to ensure that the people shall not have their will subverted by improper conduct in this regard, I think I should now set out in some detail the reason for redistribution. I shall quote fully the appropriate sections. The British North America Act, section 51, subsection 1, states as follows:

(1) Subject as hereinafter provided, the number of members of the House of Commons shall be two hundred and sixty three and the representation of the provinces therein shall forthwith upon the coming into force of this section and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides subject and according to the following rules:

1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members computed by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and sixty one and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, disregarding, except as hereinafter in this section provided, the remainder, if any, after the said process of division.

2. If the total number of members assigned to all the provinces pursuant to rule 1 is less than two hundred and sixty one, additional members shall be assigned to the provinces (one to a province) having remainders in the computation under rule 1 commencing with the province having the largest remainder and continuing with the other provinces in the order of the magnitude of their respective remainders until the total number of members assigned is two hundred and sixty one.

Then, of course, in subsection 3 there is provision that, the number of members to be assigned to a province being less than the number of senators representing the said province, rules 1 and 2 shall cease to apply. Then I might refer to paragraph 5 which states:

5. On any such readjustment the number of members for any province shall not be reduced by more than fifteen per cent below the representation to which such province was entitled under rules 1 to 4 of this subsection at the last preceding readjustment of the representation of that province, and there shall be no reduction in the representation of any province as a result of which that province would have a smaller number of members than any other province that according to the results of the then last decennial census did not have a larger population.

Then it refers to the Yukon territory and so on. Provision is also made—and I underline this—that the redistribution is to be proceeded with after the completion of the census. I am not going to deal with this matter at the moment. There are no cases in Canada on the meaning of those words although in the United States there have been judicial interpretations of similar words.

There is no general statute providing for the representation of the provinces and the boundaries of the electoral districts. In the past a representation act has been enacted upon the completion of the decennial census, the most recent being the Representation Act of 1952, chapter 334. The practice has been to introduce a bill in the House of Commons prescribing the number of members for each province but leaving the schedules of electoral districts blank for a committee to insert the boundaries and descriptions of electoral districts. After receiving that consideration by the committee the bill has been returned to the house and upon passing the house and the other place and receiving royal assent has become law.

Under this resolution I propose that an independent commission should be set up. Parliament's rights would not thereby be lost. While the commission would settle the electoral districts, parliamentary approval would be required before this action became effective. The experience in other countries has been that parliamentary control must be maintained but I know of no case, except with regard to slight amendments or comparatively small changes, where any parliament has seen fit not to follow the recommendations made by a commission which has gone into the matter fully.

I mentioned a moment ago that there had been various suggestions made over the years. In 1903 it was suggested in the house that the principle of a reference to a judicial committee should be adopted, that county boundaries should not be laid down as a principle except subject to certain conditions, that a commission should be set up composed of the chief justices of the highest courts of judicature in each of the provinces of Canada for the purpose of fixing boundaries, and that such a commission in so doing should consider the distribution of population and the public interest and convenience. That was the viewpoint placed before the house by the Conservative party of that day.

I am not going back to deal with the discussions that took place in successive redistributions. They have always been noted for warmth and acerbity and have not been of a nature as to elevate parliament in the thinking of the people. In 1947 a bill was brought in by the then prime minister, Right Hon. Mackenzie King, and the Progressive Conservative party took the stand then that there should be a non-partisan redistribution. During the course of my remarks in the house on July 15, 1947, I pointed out that Mr. Mackenzie King when he was in opposition in 1933 had stated: "Above all, there should be fairness in the matter of redistribution".

I might also point out that Mr. King stated this when speaking in the house in 1932:

I believe that the only true method of securing a representative parliament is by a system of proportional representation properly worked out with regard to the dominion as a whole. The reform should commence with the cities and the larger municipalities in our country. When the Liberal government was in office we introduced into this house a measure of proportional representation in connection with city constituencies. It was fought for some little time, there was considerable opposition from the then opposition and the measure was not proceeded with.

Then he stated:

It was not reintroduced because the government of the day had not a majority in the other chamber which would ensure its enactment, and there were more pressing matters requiring attention. I might add the late Liberal government did not have a majority in the Senate all the time it was in office. If we had had a majority in the other house upon which we could have relied we would have proceeded with our proportional representation measure.

That is just an observation of interest and of particular interest, of course, to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who, being engaged in writing Mr. King's memoirs, will find that a very interesting interlude. I also bring these words of Mr. King to the hon. member's attention and I do so in that spirit that is evidenced here this evening. I emphasize these words of Mr. King to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who has only recently been on a tour d'horizon to find out about election promises. He stopped that, though, when he got so many answers showing how many had been carried out.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the Prime Minister wish to extend the scope of the debate to that subject?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I notice that the hon. gentleman has not said anything about it since he got the answers. I want to bring these words of Mr. King to his attention:

If we are ever returned to power—

He was returned in 1935.

—a proportional representation measure will be a feature of the Liberal platform and program of legislation.

The hon. gentleman might add that to his list. To return once more from rather general remarks to the subject matter of the resolution, I stated on June 28, 1952, as found on page 3928 of Hansard:

The only reason we would want to retain it—

A system under which an independent commission would not be appointed.

—would be the political advantage of the party with the majority at the time. After all, the setting up of a commission will not remove from parliament the right and duty to determine the question once and for all. But, Mr. Speaker, the experience in Britain and elsewhere has been that when an independent commission speaks no parliament anywhere within this commonwealth has ever dared to alter the boundary lines of any constituency in a way which would have the result of liquidating a political opponent. In other words the commission system would provide a scientific means whereby redistribution would be determined on the only basis on which it should be determined, namely the question of population, subject of course in every case to these peculiar exigencies that occur in various constituencies where, by reason of the industrialization, the urban nature of a constituency, the rural nature of another, there has been recognized at all times the principle that population shall not be equal in all constituencies.

Now, sir, in 1952 we endeavoured to bring this about and not only did the Progressive Conservatives take this stand but the antecedents of the New Democratic party combined, without success, to press for the postponement of passage of the bill brought before the house until an independent commission had an opportunity to make the necessary reallocation of seats. The then leader of the opposition, the Hon. George Drew, said this as reported at page 3828 of Hansard for June 27, 1952:

—I am suggesting that the government consider introducing another bill—

That is, another after the bill to which I made reference earlier.

—which would set up a commission to carry out redistribution which then could be dealt with when this house reconvenes.

This did not receive any support from the members of the government of that day. Professor Robert MacGregor Dawson discussed in his book some of the proposals to give the power of redistribution to some more impartial body than a committee of parliament. He says this:

Thus Mr. Mackenzie King, in 1933 suggested a commission of six judges from different provinces—

Then, he describes the nature of the recommendations, and says that the Hon. C. G. Power disclosed in 1947 that the government had had a bill prepared in 1940 to set up a commission composed of a superior court judge as chairman, assisted by two commissioners appointed from each province in turn as its constituencies came under consideration.

I mentioned a moment ago that there has been experience in this regard in the United Kingdom, Australia and South Africa. All of these countries have had a system similar in nature, but differing in particulars because each country has its own peculiar problems. Each is designed however, to remove as far as is practical and possible, the question of redistribution from a purely party matter. In the United Kingdom, the redistribution of seats is provided for by the House of Commons redistribution of seats act, 1949 and 1958. There is a continuous review of the distribution of seats. It is carried on by four permanent boundary commissions, one for England, one for Scotland, one for Wales and one for Northern Ireland. Each boundary commission consists of four members, and in determining the redistribution of seats must take into account local interests. It is required to give persons in the constituency that may be affected by a change in redistribution the opportunity of making representations.

There is parliamentary control; for as soon as possible after a report is made by the boundary commission to the secretary of state, that minister must lay the report before parliament. If changes have been recommended by the boundary commission, there must accompany the reports laid before parliament draft orders in council which are to show how effect is proposed to be given to the recommendations of the boundary commission. If each house of parliament, by resolution, approves the draft orders they are submitted to Her Majesty. If the draft orders in council are not so approved by resolution by each house of parliament, amended drafts may be laid before parliament.

In South Africa, when it was a member of the commonwealth, the redistribution of seats was provided for under the South Africa act, 1909. There, a commission of judges is appointed. In Australia redistribution is dealt with by the commonwealth electoral act, 1918. The number of members to be elected is ascertained by dividing the population of the commonwealth by twice the number of senators. The distribution of each state into an electoral division is carried out by three distribution commissioners appointed by the governor general. One of the distribution commissioners must be the chief electoral officer or an officer having similar qualifications, and one must be the surveyor general of the state or an officer having similar qualifications. Now, without revealing in any way what is in the bill, I think it would be generally agreed that the electoral officer, occupying as he does a completely independent position, should be one of the members of this commission.

I return to the point I was dealing with a moment ago, the reference to the Hon. C. G. Power, now a member of the other place. In 1952, he set out certain general principles as to redistribution. He said that we must start afresh; that parliament should maintain its control and responsibility over the action it takes with respect to redistribution and that we must lay down some set of rules and regulations upon which we can base future redistribution. Then, as reported at page 3183 of Hansard for 1952, after referring to the need for a brand new redistribution, he said:

> —it should be taken out of the responsibility of members of the house.

He did emphasize, however, the need for parliamentary responsibility.

When I spoke of the functions of a boundary commission in July, 1947, I said this:

> That commission is one which is above partisanship. Parliament still rules; parliament still controls; but parliament would not act unfairly against a political opponent.
> If the recommendation of this committee—

And I am referring to an independent committee.

> —were to the effect that a certain change should be made, it would adopt it even though it might be helpful to an opponent.

Now, sir, this whole question was discussed at length in the United States case to which I referred earlier, Baker v. Carr, which I think all hon. members could read with benefit to themselves. It deals with the urbanization of the United States and the degree to which a major portion of the population was finding itself more and more concentrated in certain areas.

I come now to the question of what would happen in the event that we maintain the present number of seats in the house, having regard to the changes that have taken place in population. Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island would continue with the same representation. Nova Scotia would lose one seat. New Brunswick would have the same; Quebec would have the same; Ontario would gain three; Manitoba would lose one; Saskatchewan would lose four; Alberta would gain two and British Columbia would gain one.

There have been some suggestions made that there should be an increase in the number of members in the house. What would be the effect of an increase in the number of members? If the total number of members were 283 the result would be that Nova Scotia would still lose one; Manitoba would have the same number; Saskatchewan would lose three; Alberta would gain four; British Columbia would gain three; Quebec would gain five and Ontario would gain 10. On the other hand if the total number of seats increased to 293 the result would be that Nova Scotia would have 12 and Newfoundland seven; Quebec would gain eight; Ontario would gain 14; Manitoba would have the same; Saskatchewan would lose two; Alberta would gain four; British Columbia would gain four and the others would be the same. That indicates some of the difficulties that are most apparent.

I have often thought that with a membership of 263 in the House of Commons the number of members is sufficient. Indeed the view has often been expressed that this chamber might be very considerably reduced in size, that the removal of the desks would make a tremendous difference in the quality of debate and make for a closeness between members of the government and the opposition—I am referring to propinquity. It has also been suggested that it would contribute to the informality that characterizes the British House of Commons. However the same distance would still be between us.

It is very interesting to recall that the distance between government and opposition was fixed in the reign of James I to be the distance that would just permit adversaries to touch the points of their swords. That distance between government and opposition has since remained, even though the reason for the distance has long since ceased to exist.

We feel that this commission, when set up, would proceed with its work on the basis of the present law relating to the total number of members in the House of Commons. It should have the power to advise re-allocation of seats in accordance with section 51 of the British North America Act, taking the last census into account in order to bring about equitable results. We would expect it to bring this to the attention of parliament and to recommend such change in the total membership of the house that would make a just and equitable re-allocation of seats without serious dislocation or hardship arising from its recommendations on the number of seats in any one province. When that recommendation had been made to the government, it would then consider asking parliament to make the necessary changes in the law to implement the recommendation.

In summary, therefore, what we are endeavouring to do by this resolution is to take redistribution out of partisan politics. The experience of the past has been, except in a very few cases, that the gerrymandering of constituencies for political purposes has not been successful as an operation once the people have had their first opportunity to speak afterwards. This is a serious endeavour made by this government, after the fullest study of the matter, to eliminate the abuses of the past, to make the House of Commons truly representative, and at the same time give this commission certain ground rules and directions from parliament as to the principles that it should accept. It is an endeavour at the same time to grant flexibility in the interest of fairness in order to assure that the considerations that have always been in the minds of governments since 1867 shall be maintained.

It must also be pointed out to the commission that rural ridings must necessarily, in the experience of the past, have less population in general than urban ridings, and that there are other considerations such as geographical lines, rivers, county lines and the like which must be taken into account. But all these considerations shall be based on the assurance that an independent commission will bring about a redistribution that is fair, just and reasonable; one that will be determined not on the basis of the frailties of human nature, which all of us have, but on a basic principle that the political advantage of the government or a majority in the house shall not be one of the considerations to be taken into account or given any attention. In other words, as I said a moment ago, we want to follow the lead that has been taken by almost every nation—certainly by the commonwealth nations, as well as by the mother of parliaments—that membership in parliament shall be determined fairly by the people and it shall not be dependant in any way on the course followed by Governor Gerry which gave to this operation the name "gerrymandering". That course which has been followed throughout the years since confederation shall no longer be followed in this nation.

This was our view when we were in opposition; it is our view today in government. This is another step forward in the carrying out of those promises which will make parliament more effective, stronger and more representative of the people as a whole.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have not had the advantage, or the disadvantage—and I suppose that depends on your point of view —of taking part in any redistribution in any parliament, because the last redistribution took place before I became a member of parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the hon. member is given credit for being one of the architects of the 15 per cent.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that any credit I am given in that respect is for something that was achieved, and not merely a promise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: With regard to the 15 per cent that perhaps kept the hon. gentleman in the House of Commons, I have no objection to taking any credit that the hon. gentleman wishes to give me. But that is not really very germane to the point. In the few minutes I have left to me this evening I will try to deal with the principle that the Prime Minister has put forward.

I may say at once that the principle underlying the proposal is completely acceptable to the official opposition in this house. It is not only acceptable, but a resolution to that effect was formally adopted by the national council of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): When was that—in 1917?

Mr. Pigeon: You have changed your view.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; I had no view to change. I have explained to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Fifteen per cent responsibility last time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I explained to the hon. members that I have had no direct experience of this matter in the past. Here is the position taken by the Liberal party.

> The Liberal party believes that redistribution of membership in the House of Commons should be carried out by a non-partisan commission.
> Until now, this has been done only—

This is so far as Canada is concerned:

> —in the province of Manitoba, where the commission was established by a Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may continue:

> Redistribution means redrawing the boundaries of constituencies according to population. It is required every ten years, after each census. The present government, with characteristic delay, has not arranged for redistribution, based on the 1961 census, in time for the present election. As a result, some parts of the country will be denied the representation in the next parliament to which they are entitled under the constitution of Canada.
> A new Liberal government will promptly give effect to the principle of redistribution by a non-partisan commission.

An hon. Member: What happened to the old Liberals?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

An hon. Member: Is that signed by Mackenzie King?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend this evening to spend any time on the highly selective history and the rather spotty history to which the Prime Minister treated us, nor on the tour around the world that the Prime Minister took, which I have never had the benefit of doing either.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Ask Paul.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think everybody on this side of the chamber listened attentively and quietly to the Prime Minister, and I would hope that in a matter of this sort, when the Prime Minister professes to be seeking to elevate the tone of parliament on this subject, I might be listened to with the same attention that the Prime Minister received.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: It was not elevated when you got up.

Mr. Pickersgill: When the Minister of Labour has finished his interjection, perhaps I could continue. It seems to me that there are certain conditions that will have to be fulfilled in any bill to make it acceptable, I would hope to either side of the house but certainly to us in the official opposition. The commissioners must be appointed by the act; they must be named in the bill. We are certainly not going to agree to take redistribution out of the House of Commons and put it in the hands of the governor in council; I can assure hon. gentlemen of that. We are certainly not going to approve any measure that sets up a commission comparable in any way to the board of broadcast governors. We have had enough of that kind of impartiality in the last few years.

This is not a business for the government. Though the Prime Minister, as the leader of the house, has a certain responsibility to bring the matter before us, in respect of the representation in the house there is no government and there is no opposition; there are simply members of parliament who should, according to the scheme of 1867, represent roughly the same number of constituents, having regard to certain other considerations, some of which the Prime Minister mentioned and all of which certainly have to be taken into account.

It seems to me that the commission cannot be expected to make its own rules. That is our responsibility here in parliament. We will have to specify in the bill the maxima and the minima of population. We will have to lay down rules so that the commission will know what it is expected to do, because a commission without rules of that kind would simply be at sea in making any attempt at redistribution.

I would commend to hon. gentlemen a careful reading of the speech to which the Prime Minister referred, made by the Hon. C. G. Power in 1947, where Mr. Power pointed out, with a little more time at his disposal than I have now, some of the difficulties that would be inherent in a commission doing this for the first time. I think once it has been done a first time it will probably be relatively easy in the future because it will be merely a matter of rearranging boundaries to take account of any change in population. But the original redistribution, if it is to be done on a new and scientific basis, is going to be a very formidable task indeed, because we can all give all kinds of examples of what a patchwork quilt there is in every province as a result of taking into account all sorts of special factors.

I might say here that perhaps, having had no personal experience in this matter, I may take a somewhat more objective and a less subjective view than that taken by the Prime Minister. I do not believe there has been much conscious attempt to be unfair in any redistribution I have seen anything of. Sir John A. Macdonald did boast about hiving the Grits in 1882; but certainly in the twentieth century I do not think there has been any wholesale gerrymandering, although I know it is the fashion for oppositions to make that claim and it has been done by both parties as Mr. Drew so fairly pointed out in 1947. But I do not believe that is true at all.

It seems to me that another thing that must be prescribed in addition to the maximum and minimum are what geographical, what historical and what other conditions the commission is to take account of, and what exceptional provisions are to be made. They must not be left to do this thing capriciously or without rules; that is our responsibility here.

Then I say the bill should prescribe that the report of the commission would take the form of a representation bill and that the government would have the duty of presenting that bill, unchanged, to the house. That does not mean that members of the government could not move to amend the measure. It would not be a government measure. The government would not be expected to stand or fall on it at all; if it is an independent commission it would not be fair to the government to ask it to. However, the report should be presented in the form of a representation bill by the commission so that we would have the benefit of the views of the commission. I think the Prime Minister will find that, in the first redistribution after world war II, when the United Kingdom commission there did make a report, the report was not accepted by the government of the day and very substantial changes were made in the measure which they brought in. That was not in 1949; it was earlier than that. I have not looked up the details but I think it will be found that that was the case.

I do not think that should be allowed to happen. If we are to appoint the kind of commission there ought to be—and I say "we" advisedly because this is not a matter for the government or the opposition but is one for the house as a house to do—and if we are to appoint a commission in which we all would have confidence, their report should be here for us to deal with in the form of a bill. After that bill has been presented if the government then is not satisfied or if the opposition or any hon. member is not satisfied they can move to amend it; but parliament should be sure that it has the views of the commission in that form. I say that is another consideration.

I have very little time this evening, and of course in these days we never know what is to come on the next day, if anything. I shall try therefore to get as much said as I can this evening. The Prime Minister referred to the section of the British North America Act governing redistribution, and the important words there are, "on completion of the census 'representation' shall be readjusted".

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not wish to break in on the hon. member's speech and I am prepared to recommend that he be granted extra time if the committee will agree. A moment ago the hon. member said we delayed unnecessarily in this matter. Would the hon. gentleman explain how we could have brought this about until the census was completed?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is precisely what I am going to explain to the Prime Minister. I hope the committee will agree to grant me a few extra minutes as the Prime Minister suggested in order that I may complete my remarks this evening.

Since confederation there has been no election ever held without complying with that constitutional provision; no election after a census has been held, except in 1945. In that case, as the Prime Minister will remember, a constitutional amendment was secured from Westminster postponing redistribution until after the war, so that the constitution was complied with.

Electoral Boundaries Commission

In 1872 the redistribution act was passed on June 14. In those days they were not in any hurry about elections. The voting started on July 20 and concluded on October 12.

In 1882 the redistribution act was passed on May 17 and the election was held on June 20. There had been a Liberal government intervene which fixed elections on a single day, instead of running them over a period of three months as was previously done.

In 1911 the census was not completed when the election was called. I did not have time to look up the actual date of the calling of the election, but the election was held on September 21, so one would assume it was called sometime in July, and it is quite obvious that the census would not have been completed at that time. In 1872 and in 1882 the redistribution was done before there was an election. Communications are much better today than they were in those years. There would have been no difficulty whatever about having the redistribution this year. It could have been in progress now if the government had taken the course that it should have taken, the course recommended by the hon. member for Port Arthur in every session of parliament, to the best of my recollection, since we have been here.

The government did not need to wait for the census in order to provide for the commission. If the government had been serious about carrying out its promise, this measure would have been brought in in 1960. It would have been left on the table for a year so that it could be studied by all hon. members and other interested persons, as is usually done with legislation of this fundamental importance. In 1961 it could have been reintroduced with whatever improvements commended themselves, and passed. The commission could have been in existence from last October. It could have got everything organized so that the moment the census returns were available it could have started to work the next day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The census is not yet completed.

Mr. Pickersgill: It does not matter whether or not the census is completed. The commission could have been set up. I predict that under the course we are following the actual business of redrawing the boundaries will not begin for two years at the very least. I have very good reason for making that statement. Mr. Harris in 1951 discussed this matter with a good many authorities on the subject including the chief electoral officer. The difficulties in the way of doing this by independent commission are very formidable and the time required is very great. If the government had been genuinely anxious to carry out this promise which was made at Carman, Manitoba, on May 15, 1957 by the Prime Minister this legislation would have been brought into the house in 1960, at the latest, and there is no reason on earth why it should not have been done, except that this government is never able to do anything when it should be done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is going to be able to do something very shortly.

Mr. Pickersgill: I observe that Your Honour is on his feet. I understood, sir, the committee was going to be good enough to allow me a few extra minutes.

The Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, in the light of the questions that were asked earlier on the orders of the day, I hope the house leader will now outline to the house what the business will be for the rest of the week. More particularly, I should like to ask him the following questions: What will be the business tomorrow prior to eight o'clock? What will be the business on Wednesday? Earlier today the house leader indicated that he would announce the business for Wednesday. What opportunity will there be to discuss the budget? And finally, when will the further supplementary estimates be called?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the great difficulty in dealing with the business of the house is to know what progress is going to be made from day to day. On Friday when I outlined in the house nine items of legislation, it was only reasonable to expect that some of those items would be passed through the house today. However, we have had only third reading of one bill. This makes the situation very difficult indeed. However, our intention tomorrow is to proceed with the study of this resolution, and until it is passed we cannot have a bill in front of us. That will be followed by the bill respecting the amendment to the British North America Act with regard to the Senate, which is eagerly awaited. Then we shall take the other legislative items that I outlined on Friday including the Veterans' Land Act, The Canada Grain Act and so on.

Mr. Chevrier: In that order?

Mr. Churchill: Yes; the same order that I indicated on Friday. It would be helpful to continue on Wednesday with legislation if we make progress tomorrow. However, I have no means of knowing what the house intends to do. Consequently I cannot forecast just what we should do on Thursday and Friday. For tomorrow I have one suggestion to make which the house might consider. In view of the importance of the budget speech which commences at eight o'clock tomorrow night and the fact that the chief spokesman of the opposition likes to reply, it is suggested that the house might now determine that it will sit past 10 o'clock tomorrow night in order that there may be opportunity for that type of reply without any interruption, and that we adjourn say at 10.30 or earlier if the spokesman for the opposition moves the adjournment of the debate before 10.30 p.m.

Mr. Chevrier: Will there be no opportunity to discuss the budget on Wednesday on the part of the Leader of the Opposition and any other member who may wish to speak on it in the prescribed order?

Mr. Churchill: There is going to be plenty of opportunity for discussion, whether it is Wednesday or not. On some occasions the opposition has asked for two intervening days for consideration.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just put this suggestion to the house leader without wishing to get into an argument. The practice has been to allow someone to speak on behalf of the opposition. However, the Minister of Finance as a rule completes his budget presentation about a quarter to ten. It is not fair to ask anyone on the part of the opposition to speak for 10 minutes only and then not go on with the budget the next day. That is the point I am making. That was the point I wished to put to the house leader in inquiring whether or not there will be an opportunity to discuss the budget on Wednesday.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member says it is not fair to go on with the budget the next day. However, that has been the practice over the years. The hon. member for Greenwood is the one who can give evidence to the fact that there always was an intervening day. Sometimes the Easter recess intervened.

Mr. Chevrier: It was the practice when the debate was continued on the next day. I grant that. But if there is not going to be a continuation of the debate on Wednesday, then the question I asked the house leader was this: What opportunity would there be for the opposition to debate the budget?

Mr. Macdonnell: May I say one word as I think there is confusion as to what was the practice for many years on the night of the budget. After the Minister of Finance spoke I, who was the then financial critic, was allowed to follow and I was left a good deal of discretion as to the time occupied; but the practice which I followed in all those years was to speak for not more than 10, 15 or 20 minutes and then to adjourn the debate. Never, I think, did the discussion continue the day following. Usually several days intervened.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the Prime Minister whether there will be full opportunity to continue the budget debate?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I find it difficult to understand the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition. Day after day I read reports saying, "Fiery Leader of the Opposition says 'bring on the election'." I now find him running for cover.

Mr. Pearson: As is customary, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's observations are both irrelevant and offensive. I am asking the Prime Minister whether he proposes to choke off the budget debate after the Minister of Finance has made his statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The house leader has stated that the opposition will have an opportunity tomorrow evening. We will extend the time if the house will agree. Then the determination as to the business for Wednesday will be announced tomorrow night.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Talk about closure and the rights of parliament.

Mr. Chevrier: I have another question. I had asked the house leader whether there was any disposition on the part of the government to bring on the supplementary estimates. Before he answers that question may I put this proposition to him. It has been the practice in the past—and I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood would confirm this—to do what has been suggested now by agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: Always in advance.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, always in advance; but not now, of course.

Mr. Speaker: The one matter which appears to have been suggested and which stands for consideration and for decision of the house was that, if necessary, the time might be extended, in order to permit a preliminary reply after the Minister of Finance has finished his budget speech. Is it agreed that is the wish of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. There can be no agreement on that matter. What we are being asked to do now by the government is to listen to the Minister of Finance for two hours or two and a half hours and immediately thereafter take up our time to reply to the minister without any intervening period at all, even of one day. The Prime Minister knows perfectly well that has never been done in the past.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member for Greenwood knows that when the budget debate was postponed after he made a short reply, that was done by agreement. We asked that the government follow the same course this time. I am sure my hon. friend will agree with me that was the course that was followed in the past.

Mr. Macdonnell: I said previously this evening that the practice when I acted as financial critic was that I followed the minister of finance and that I used such time as I wished that same evening, usually not more than 15 minutes.

Mr. Chevrier: That is right.

Mr. Macdonnell: Then I adjourned the debate and it was not resumed usually for several days.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But you were, of course, allowed to make your speech.

Mr. Pearson: Was it not done by agreement? Is it not the case that the debate was resumed, with his knowledge and approval by agreement? I ask the hon. member whether that is not the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. member for Greenwood answer the question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand that a question has been asked and I have no objection to its being answered. However, if the house is not in agreement, nothing can be accomplished by debate.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member should be given an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Speaker: The only course to be followed is to deal with the situation when it arises. As far as I can see, there is no agreement about what may be done at ten o'clock tomorrow night. The house will have to decide that matter then. It being ten o'clock this house stands adjourned until 2.30 p.m. tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Arrogance.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I raised this question on the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker. You had suggested that the appropriate moment to raise this order of business—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If Your Honour will permit me to say so, when I raised this matter on the orders of the day you had suggested that the appropriate time at which to raise it was at this hour. That has been done. We are now discussing the procedure. There has been no agreement. On the eve of the dissolution of parliament we are trying to see to it that at the least, one privilege is given to the opposition, namely that the Leader of the Opposition not only be allowed to begin his speech tomorrow but that, before this house is dissolved, he be given the opportunity to complete his statement with regard to the budget brought in by this government. To deny us this right will be something that the people of Canada will observe.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thought it was ten o'clock. However, I would say to the hon. gentleman that he should recall January of 1940 when he starts telling us what should be done. He should remember what was done then. It is ten o'clock.

Mr. Pearson: I think it should be recorded that when I made—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Another form of closure.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the Leader of the Opposition resume his seat. If the house is concerned about making an arrangement I am content to hear more, but I do not think I can allow a debate to continue which is not leading somewhere in the discussion of the business of the house. It was proposed, as I understood it, to allow sufficient time that the opposition could make an interim reply after tomorrow night's budget speech, and if the house is prepared to agree to a time of 20 minutes or half an hour beyond the conclusion of the budget address the matter can be dealt with. Otherwise it will have to be dealt with tomorrow when the occasion arises.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am merely suggesting that the ordinary, normal, courteous course be followed which was followed by the hon. member for Greenwood, and when I outlined what that course was he nodded his head in assent. I hope it will be followed on this occasion.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): It is always followed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The courteous course will always be followed and always has been.

Mr. Chevrier: It has not been tonight.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we have pointed out what the ordinary course is. Tomorrow evening they will have their opportunity. If they want extra time it will be given if the house agrees. If they do not, then they must make their own decision.

Some hon. Members: Shame. Shame.

Some hon. Members: Closure. Closure.

Mr. Pickersgill: The rights of parliament torn to pieces.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What a Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What a future leader of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member speaking for his party? As I understand the situation, at this stage it has been proposed that there be time for reply and the house has agreed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, there has not been agreement.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, all I want to say is that with all this talk of courtesy and decency I hope it will be remembered that there is a group in this corner of the house that would like to have an opportunity to say something.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of any agreement I have no course but to observe the rules of the house. It being ten o'clock, this house stands adjourned until 2.30 tomorrow afternoon.

It being fifteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 10, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STANDING ORDERS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber) presented the first report of the standing committee on standing orders, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEDURE—FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the house that the committee on procedure has its first report in the course of preparation, in English and in French. I had hoped to be able to present it to the house now. If it should be ready in the course of the afternoon, would the house permit me to present it when it is ready?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to present in English and French the unanimous first report of the special committee appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of the house. This is done pursuant to leave given earlier today. The report will be printed in Votes and Proceedings.

TRADE

WHEAT—TABLING OF TEXT OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I wish to table the text of the 1962 international wheat agreement in its original version, which is in English. I am also tabling a French translation. For the convenience of hon. members I ask leave to have the text of the agreemeent published as an appendix to today's Hansard. Following the usual practice, both houses of parliament will be asked to approve by resolution Canada's ratification of the agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the document tendered just now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: And has the minister leave to have it printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to above, see appendix to Hansard for Wednesday, April 11, 1962.]

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: May I have leave to present a further problem. The Minister of Agriculture presented today, and got leave of the house to have printed as a schedule to Hansard, a very lengthy document. Hansard today will be lengthy enough without the addition of a further 50 pages and, subject to the approval of the house, I have taken the liberty of having this document printed as an appendix to tomorrow's Hansard rather than today's. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF CANADIAN SECTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the house is aware there is a vacancy on the international joint commission. I wish to announce that the governor in council has today appointed Mr. Arnold D. P. Heeney, presently our ambassador to the United States, to that position. His appointment becomes effective on the 15th of this month.

Mr. Heeney will remain for a few days as ambassador in Washington before returning to Ottawa. Naturally I am very pleased that Mr. Heeney has accepted this position. The house is fully aware of his distinguished record and qualifications. As a student and teacher of international legal matters, as one time secretary to the cabinet, as former under secretary of state for external affairs and as ambassador to the United States, he has for many years been concerned with those matters which will come under his interest and consideration in this new position.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the house will have heard with some interest the announcement which the Prime Minister has made. This announcement gives us on this side of the house an opportunity to pay tribute to the work that General McNaughton has done on the international joint commission and to his distinguished service to Canada in war--from the first world war—and in peace. General McNaughton is a man whose integrity, honesty and honour are above reproach and are recognized on all sides.

As he is leaving the international joint commission I cannot think of anybody better equipped for that position than the man who has been mentioned by the Prime Minister as the new chairman of the Canadian section. Mr. Heeney, as the Prime Minister has said, is also a very distinguished public servant. He has filled many important posts, and he has filled them all with great distinction. I am sure he will fill this one with great distinction too.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I and the members of this group wholeheartedly join with the leader of the official opposition in paying tribute to General McNaughton and the great service he has rendered to Canada, in world war I and world war II, as president of the national research council, as a member of the joint Canadian-American committee on defence, and in other organizations, and particularly during the last 10 years as chairman of the international joint commission. In that regard, Mr. Speaker, he was fully qualified to occupy the position because of his capabilities as a scientist, an engineer and an administrator.

With respect to the announcement made by the Prime Minister, I must frankly say that while we in this group recognize the record of the gentleman who has been appointed, in the Department of External Affairs, as an ambassador and in other posts, we say most emphatically that this position requires a man of at least equal ability with respect to scientific and engineering knowledge, and as an administrator, to General McNaughton, and we are of the opinion that Mr. Heeney does not fulfil those requirements.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—STATEMENT ON STRIKE OF PILOTS

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, certain questions were asked yesterday about the work stoppage of the St. Lawrence pilots and as to the legality of that stoppage. When those questions were being asked, I was having separate talks with the shipowners and the representatives of the pilots.

From a legal point of view, pilots are not party to individual or collective contracts, but hold positions which under the government certificate constitute a monopoly. The government collects fees from the shipowners, which are afterwards handed over to the pilots to be divided among themselves. Section 329 of the Canada Shipping Act and pilotage regulations enacted by order in council under that section specifically provide that pilots must carry out their pilotage duties; their present refusal to do so is therefore illegal.

Yesterday I met with representatives of the Shipping Federation of Canada and of the Canadian Shipowners Association; meanwhile, officials of my department were in touch with the Dominion Marine Association. Those associations represent all the shipowners involved. They claim that since the work stoppage is illegal, they would greatly jeopardize their future situation if they were to enter into direct negotiations with the pilots before there is any indication that the stoppage is nearly over. They stated that they have had a lot of trouble with the pilots in that connection these past few years; in their opinion, the consequences of such steps taken by the pilots in recent years are so serious that the situation calls for a public investigation.

They informed me that, under the circumstances, they will do everything they can to continue the operation of their ships without the help of pilots, even though that may cause some delay; in their opinion, such action will not interfere with shipping. They stated that, in their opinion, the situation has reached the point where they have to accept a continuous suspension of work, if need be, in their own long-term interest. As for me, I asked them not to take an unyielding attitude in this matter and I expressed the hope that they would agree to another meeting with the pilots.

I then met the pilots' federation representatives from the main pilotage districts of Quebec, Montreal, Montreal harbour, Cornwall and Kingston. I explained the shipowners' stand to them and I gave them to understand that they were violating the clauses of the Canada Shipping Act and the pilotage regulations established thereunder in refusing to perform their duties, adding that I greatly regretted that they had seen fit to take that step on a short twenty-four hours' notice. I also conveyed to them my feeling that the shipowners no doubt firmly intended to see that the ships' movement was not interrupted.

In view of the fact that the pilots had mentioned certain delays and difficulties in connection with their working conditions, we looked into the background in that regard and I pointed out to them that out of the five main points concerning working conditions which, in their opinion, were pending, we had already accepted two and agreed in principle to two more by undertaking to work out the details of their application, and that we also had decided to pursue with them the consideration of the fifth point. I also pointed out to them that there had been no undue delay in the consideration of those matters, that, in fact, the pilots had submitted their brief less than two months ago and that several meetings and interviews had taken place since then.

We found that the main issue the pilots wished to settle concerned their income and the increase asked for by three pilotage districts. I informed them that in view of the present level of income and working conditions, their requests in that respect had seemed exaggerated, not only to the shipowners but to myself, and I asked them to meet my officials in order to study these requests in greater detail and to see if they could be modified. The requested increase in fees to be paid by the vessels came to approximately 18 per cent in the Cornwall and Montreal districts, and it remained practically the same during the following discussions, although it seemed that an adjustment could be made with regard to Montreal harbour. No important issue concerning income was involved in the Quebec and Kingston districts.

I asked the pilots to put an end to their work stoppage, in view of the fact that the pilots' federation had assured me that in such a case the shipping federation would be willing to meet immediately the pilots' representatives to study new propositions with regard to the whole question and the income the shipping federation is willing to give the pilots. Up to now the pilots' representatives have not indicated they were willing to change the requests I have mentioned or to put an end to the work stoppage.

I regret that situation because I firmly believe that the shipowners intention not to stop the ships movement can only be damaging to the pilots. I should like to add also that I believe the time has come to undertake a general investigation on all questions relating to pilotage, and I expect to submit later some proposals to be examined by the government. However, I will continue to seek a solution to this problem, and after studying further the results of yesterday's meetings I will continue to keep in touch with the various agencies involved.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious, considering what the minister just said, that he was not successful in his effort to get the pilots and ship owners together with a view to settling the dispute. It is also apparent that, notwithstanding what the minister said, namely that the pilots have held meetings with only 24 hours notice is not true, because, according to the pilots themselves they have been discussing the matter with the department since February last. Any way, Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that this dispute is very prejudicial to the Canadian economy, as well as to the passengers who are now on the Empress of Britain quite apart from being a menace to navigation, of which the department is certainly aware.

There were already two ships, the Consuelo and another one, the name of which I forget—

(Text):

Mr. Tremblay: The "Pearson Boat"!

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: —which ran aground, causing considerable damage, because of the absence of a St. Lawrence pilot.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, there is at this time a ship carrying flammable goods sailing up the St. Lawrence. I wonder whether the Department of Transport gave some consideration to the menace this represents for the communities and towns past which this vessel will sail.

Another most important point is that the minister, after having, through his officials, invited both parties to meet, did not ask the pilots to go to Montreal to discuss the situation with the shipowners.

I know that yesterday he asked them to come here, because both parties had apparently not succeeded in arranging a meeting. Now, when they arrived here, the minister told them that the strike was illegal, that they should go back to work and free the Empress of Britain, adding that their claims were excessive and suggesting that they review their requests.

Everybody knows that the main points under dispute are rather serious and significant, and that the main point concerns a rate increase. But what the minister seems to forget is that the tonnage of St. Lawrence vessels has developed considerably, whereas the pilots' rates have scarcely been raised. Now, it is true that on the St. Lawrence seaway ships of 2,500 to 3,000 tons have largely disappeared, so that today pilots have to steer vessels of 20,000, 25,000 and under certain circumstances, even 28,000 tons.

That is one of the main reasons why they complain of not having benefited from a rate increase proportionate to the expansion of tonnage. I am more particularly thinking of the Montreal and Cornwall pilots. I notice that my hon. friend from Stormont (Mr. Campbell) is not in his seat—

Mr. Johnson: Neither are you in your seat, I mean in Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: —because, when the question of pilots was raised last year, the hon. member for Stormont stated that there were none in his constituency. Yet, Mr. Speaker —

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I seem to hear more voices than one. Perhaps I am mistaken, but I think not.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: However, Mr. Speaker, the cost of pilotage in that district decreased by 300 per cent, if we take into account the increase in tonnage, and those figures bear no resemblance whatsoever to those given by the minister.

Now, according to the minister, an increase of 16 per cent is sought by the pilots travelling between Montreal and Quebec. And—I am not sure whether the minister mentioned it in the statement he just made—I understand the pilots pledged the minister their word that they would sign an agreement for a period of three years, under the provision that the tariffs be increased, and they have agreed to give full consideration to the whole issue of pilotage during that period of three years.

I need not tell the house, Mr. Speaker, that the course followed for the settlement of this dispute is completely outmoded.

I appreciate that the minister is subject to the clauses of the Canada Shipping Act and that, as the authority over pilotage, he must comply with the law. But this dispute should be settled in the same way as all others.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The discussion is rather unusual. The subject is complicated, it is true, and the hon. member for Laurier is discussing it in considerable detail and going somewhat beyond the statement made by the minister. I have not interfered, but I feel that the hon. member should keep his comments within as narrow a compass as he reasonably can, and that he should also be prepared to agree, with respect to the new matter he has raised, that the minister, if he wishes to do so, is free to comment on that matter.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: I shall try to abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but it should not be forgotten that the minister made a long statement, obviously prepared by his officials and dealing with the circumstances of the interview he had with the pilots.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Under the circumstances it should not be forgotten that the opposition has the right to reply to certain allegations made by the minister. He said, for instance, that the pilots had only given 24-hour notice before holding their meetings, which is incorrect, for the pilots have been requesting since last February to meet with the officials of the transport department and to have an interview with the minister himself, because they were unable to come to an agreement with the shipowners.

Now, in short, Mr. Speaker, the minister was arrogant with the pilots yesterday. He—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's comment goes beyond the ordinary comment that is permissible on ministerial statements, and I would ask him not to make a debate of this matter. It is true that the circumstances recounted by the minister in his statement constituted a narrative of some length and complication, and that if one commented on everything he said it might take considerable time, but that does not make this an opportunity for a debate. I would ask the hon. member for Laurier, who has had very full time, in fact more time than the minister himself took, to bring his remarks to a close.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the minister would indicate why he is rising.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: I rise on a point of order. I do not object to my hon. friend commenting on my statement and explaining in this house the opposition's stand concerning pilotage. But when he states that this or that statement is false and that I showed arrogance etc., I submit that it has nothing to do with the statement I just made, and I feel that the hon. member for Laurier is out of order.

He can comment upon my statement; but he has raised three or four points which are absolutely false, or at least do not give a true picture of what has happened.

However, I should like to have the privilege of answering him so that the house may not be left under a false impression and faced with certain allegations which are not borne out by the facts.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I accept the minister's view. As a matter of fact I had risen to indicate to the hon. member for Laurier that I too felt he had gone too far and I have also indicated to the hon. member for Laurier that I feel it would be proper to permit the Minister of Transport to comment when the hon. member finishes.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order at all. The minister evidently is not aware of the rules—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would complete his statement. The point of order has been disposed of.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are three important points which are apparent from the minister's statement. First, pilots and shipowners—

Mr. Speaker, may I ask you to call the hon. members to order? It seems to me—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. No contribution is being made to the conduct of the affairs of the house if hon. members make it difficult for the member who has the floor to carry on his remarks.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house have listened closely to the minister's statement and I think—

An hon. Member: Because it made sense.

Mr. Chevrier: I think it is only proper that a member speaking on behalf of the opposition should be listened to in the same way.

In conclusion, I should like to say that three points of capital importance are involved in this dispute. First of all, this strike is greatly prejudicial to the Canadian economy; second, it is a cause of serious inconvenience to travellers; and last, but most important, this dispute endangers the safety of navigation on the St. Lawrence.

I say, with all due respect to the minister, and I think he will agree, that he failed to take those three points into account when he met with the parties.

In view of what has been said, I urge him to bring once again the pilots and shipowners together so that they may reach an agreement.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Would the minister wish to comment now or to wait until I have heard the member for Port Arthur?

Mr. Balcer: I can comment now, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier raised three points about which I am in full agreement with him. That is why I met the shipowners and the pilots yesterday. I asked the pilots to return to work and I asked the owners to be more flexible and try to understand the situation.

I should now like to reply to the statement made by the hon. member for Laurier, to the effect that I treated the pilots with arrogance. I do not think there has ever been a minister of transport as patient with the pilots as I have been and I should add that the pilots have never been so well treated as they have been these last three years.

Yesterday I had the opportunity of listing about 60 items of things we have done for the pilots. I think my predecessor and myself have always treated the pilots with fairness.

The only point I represented to the pilots yesterday is that they will be the first to suffer from the strike, which is illegal; they are doing damage to themselves. I think they exaggerate.

I asked them to reconsider the situation, to modify their claims to make them reasonable, and to try to reduce them to a minimum, taking into account not only their personal interest but that of the public at large. On that we parted. My officials met the pilots and discussed with them. As far as I am concerned I am prepared to meet them anytime. I asked them to consider that point.

As far as the 24-hour notice is concerned, I received word from the pilots that the strike was scheduled to begin Thursday night. Now, I received their telegram Wednesday night, and the shipowners received a similar telegram at 5.15 p.m.

This is too short a notice and I submit that in view of that short notice, several people have suffered a great deal of inconvenience, which they would not have had to suffer if notice had been given earlier.

I sincerely believe that the owners and the pilots should consider the problem calmly and try to reach an agreement in order to contribute their share to maintaining that feeling of optimism which now prevails in the economy of the country, and thus work together for the prosperity of Canada.

(Text):

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, it is very apparent that the co-operation the minister seeks has been made somewhat more difficult by the fact that he has given an indication that the strike is illegal. It seems to me it would follow that if it is an illegal strike he should be suggesting not so much that there is going to be a general investigation into pilotage but what particular steps he intends to take to make sure that the river is opened again to traffic.

I never anticipated that I would be sympathetic to the shipping federation of Canada in a situation, but it does seem to me that in this particular case the pilots gave inadequate indication both as to their grievances and as to the time involved. I certainly have a great deal of sympathy with the Department of Transport in its general pilotage problem as reflected by the situation in this part of the river.

The minister probably knows that there are at least four different systems of pilotage on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence seaway, and one of the idiosyncrasies is that the particular group on strike at the present time seems to be a traditional or almost a family group. I can only say that their approach, in either union terms or terms of their work, is unique and unlike the pattern of the rest of the system. If the minister is indicating he is going to hold an inquiry that is to be all-embracing, to investigate pilotage on the whole system, I think we on the upper lakes would be interested, as would everyone else. I believe there is a certain anachronism in the step-up that exists on the river system. I hope this could be cleared up before we are left with a very bad situation to start the shipping season.

It seems to me that responsibility for that solution finally must devolve upon the minister. I suggest to him that in this particular area he get the people from the Canada labour relations board to work immediately, even in an unofficial way, in order to get some kind of settlement going rather than continue with this indefinite basis under which we have an illegal strike indicated, and at the same time a rather pious hope by the minister that the strikers and the companies will get together.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the dispute mentioned a moment ago, does the minister intend to afford any protection to the riparian localities from the hazard of ships carrying flammable and explosive material?

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Transport continues to assume responsibility for shipping in the St. Lawrence river. We intend to maintain all navigational aids and to enforce all regulations presently in force in that section of Canada's navigable waters.

[Later:]

DAMAGE TO TELEPHONE CABLE

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question. Have the officials of the Department of Transport carried out an investigation in the breakage of a telephone cable by the steamship Consuelo, near Quebec city, and can the minister report to the house on that matter?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to report. I could not say at this time whether it will be officials of my department who will investigate the breakage of that cable.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM BEFORE EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would follow the course normally followed at this time of the session by him and his predecessors, and inform the house as to the date of the beginning of the Easter recess and the measures which the government hopes to have passed before that recess, as well as the order of priority attached to those measures.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I will give consideration to that question, Mr. Speaker. I will look over the order paper and endeavour to give a general outline of some of the matters that would be brought before the house.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. It is a great convenience to western members to know the date of the Easter recess. When the Prime Minister is giving the other information, will he tell us when the Easter recess will commence?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the Easter recess generally commences some days in advance of Good Friday.

FISHERIES

MARITIME PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR EARLIER OPENING OF LOBSTER SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Since the lobster fishermen of district 7B in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island lost the first three weeks of the 1961 fishing season because of abnormal ice conditions, would the minister consider advancing the opening date for the district concerned for this year from May 1 to April 24 or April 25, in order to provide these fishermen with an opportunity to resume their fishing operations at an earlier date?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, my department has considered this possibility. As the hon. member will recall, although lobster fishing in district 7B opened late last year it also continued a few days later than normal, with the result that the average fisherman had a normal year. There were a few areas which were exceptions to this rule. We have considered the possibility the hon. member has suggested, but have found that it would not be practical because full advantage could not be taken of such an early opening in all districts and this would unfairly spread the advantage, if any, which might accrue from an early opening.

It is expected, therefore, that the season in district 7B will open on May 1, which is the normal time.

SEALING—ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN HUNTERS ON EAST COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice or, in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary. Would the minister please advise if he is in a position to report on the complaints received by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police from Captain Moss, of the sealing ship North Star, that his men had been attacked by pirates who took rifles from his men and stole their seal pelts? Will he comment also on an article in this morning's Globe and Mail to the effect that Captain James Gillette of the Arctic Sealer reported that five helicopters spent three days last week taking pelts belonging to his ship?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): I am not sure of these allegations, but this matter is under active consideration by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. When the investigation has made sufficient progress I shall be pleased to see that a report is given to the house.

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Fisheries be prepared to comment on the hon. member's question?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I could add, in reply, that the officers of my department have also gone by helicopter to the area from which these allegations arose to investigate the possibility of cancelling licences for sealing operations, if such a course should be advisable.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

BOOKS BANNED ENTRY INTO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. On February 7, as recorded at page 631 of Hansard, my question No. 124 concerning books banned or prohibited entry into Canada by the Department of National Revenue was passed as an order for return. I know the minister has been checking over this list for me, but time is growing short. Is the minister now in a position to comply with the order of the house?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I will check on this order and advise the house in a short time.

(Translation):

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH CIVIC REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Can he tell the house if the meeting between the representatives of his department and those of the provincial government of Quebec and the city of Montreal in regard to the abolition of tolls on bridges was held yesterday, and if so what were the results of these talks?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) advised me of his intention to ask such a question. I want to tell him and also the hon. member for St. Ann that following a conversation between the premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, and myself, it was agreed that the meeting which was to be held yesterday be postponed to Wednesday afternoon in Ottawa.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Could the Minister of Transport tell the house if the delay by the provincial government of Quebec in accepting the conditions is due to the very important problems facing the government of Quebec and the failure of its policy?

(Text):

HOUSING

C.M.H.C. CHECK ON FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF CONTRACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. I should like to ask him what precautions, if any, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation takes to ensure that building contractors getting the benefits of N.H.A. lending are financially responsible, thereby giving some assurance that innocent home builders will not lose their deposit money.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): It would seem to be quite a detailed question, and I would be very happy to accept it as notice.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HOCKEY—REQUEST FOR TELEVISION COVERAGE OF ALLAN CUP GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Since for the first time in 20 years the Allan cup final will be contested between a western team and a team from the province of Quebec, the powerful Montreal Olympics, and that the final series will be played entirely in the west, will the minister ask the C.B.C. to give T.V. coverage for these games of national interest?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I shall take that matter up with the C.B.C. but in view of the fact that another important series is starting tonight and may run on for two weeks, I am not sure whether the C.B.C. will be able to make commitments with respect to alternative programs, but I shall advise the house in due course.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Montreal Olympics are not the eastern champions. A team from northern Ontario is still fighting in the series.

[Mr. Balcer.]

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid hon. members will be asking us to place bets if this goes on.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

BROCKVILLE, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF TENDER CALL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister indicate the proposed date of the tender call for construction of the new federal building in Brockville?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The answer is today.

(Translation):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

QUALIFICATIONS OF MINISTER OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. According to the Conservateur Canadien —

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Denis: Do you hear, Mr. Speaker? You know that voice.

According to the Conservateur Canadien, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn) was a lawyer and a local attorney for the wartime prices and trade board. If such was the case, does the Prime Minister think of his Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys as one of those wartime bureaucrats that he criticized lately, and for similar reasons? May I expect an answer?

An hon. Member: He does not understand French very well.

Mr. Johnson: You do not understand French very well yourself.

(Text):

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely the Prime Minister will answer that.

Mr. Walker: Not even the translators can.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question. I am not responsible for seeing that he gets a reply.

Mr. Pigeon: It is not an intelligent question.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville wishes to speak, he will take the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): It is a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I was just taking up a remark by an hon. member of the opposition which was a rather unethical reflection on the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Well, the hon. member has now taken the proper course, and if he wishes to pursue the matter I shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. Pearson: Go ahead.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, there had to be among the Liberal members a wise guy to mention the Prime Minister's ability to speak French. I should like to make sure, first, whether the hon. member speaks French correctly himself.

Mr. Fortin: That is easy—he knows neither French nor English.

[Later:]

USE OF TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT PLANES FOR ELECTION PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): May I ask the Minister of Transport a question? Could he tell us whether, since he took over the department, any person or organization has undertaken to pay or indeed has paid for the use of government planes for any purpose? If so, which persons or organizations?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I think another question for the order paper is indicated.

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING TO HOUSE CONVICTED DOUKHOBORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, and ask whether plans have been completed, tenders called and contracts let for the construction of a building to confine Doukhobors in the Agassiz area, convicted under the Criminal Code?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I would be very happy to accept this question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice—may I say that I am glad the Minister of Public Works is here—or in the minister's absence could I direct my question to the Acting Minister of Justice or the parliamentary secretary. Could I ask on what basis, in view of the emergency, an award has been made for the construction of the Doukhobor restraining building in the area of Agassiz, not through the Department of Public Works on contract but by a t.m. plus profit contract through the department.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think questions about contracts, and so on, might very well go on the order paper rather than taking up the time of the house.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BELLECHASSE CONSTITUENCY—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice. Can the acting minister give us a report about the inquiry of the R.C.M.P. in the constituency of Bellechasse, which was announced by the Secretary of State on March 26 as having top priority?

Hon. W. J. Browne (Acting Minister of Justice): I shall take that question as notice.

AIR TRANSPORT

ADDITIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL SERVICE BY C.P.A.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether the government intends to grant an additional transcontinental air service to C.P.A., as reported in Saturday's edition of the Financial Post?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Whenever any decision is made with regard to such a matter it will be brought to the attention of the house. It will not be announced through the medium of speculative stories in any newspaper.

Mr. Chevrier: As a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, has an application been made to the cabinet under the Aeronautics Act for the purpose I have mentioned, namely to give additional transcontinental air services to C.P.A.?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer is no.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNUAL HOLIDAYS FOR GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Labour, or to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that many people working on a commission basis now receive annual holidays with pay, is the minister in a position to explain why Canadian government annuities representatives are not in receipt of annual holidays with pay?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): I shall take that question as notice.

COAL

MARITIME PROVINCES—FURTHER UTILIZATION BY LOCAL INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether he has received representations from Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia and Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick with regard to further utilization of maritime coal by local industries? If so, will the Prime Minister advise the house what action, if any, has been taken to implement the suggestions or recommendations submitted in the premiers' brief?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I shall take that question as notice.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Since he is in the Prime Minister's confidence—

Mr. Tremblay: Order.

Mr. Denis: —does the minister feel he will be able to explain to the house the deficit of over $4 million shown by his department?

Mr. Tremblay: Order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but for some time I have heard interruptions from the far end of the chamber which I think are not in the best interests of the dignity and conduct of business of this house and I would ask hon. members, without mentioning any names, who feel that the cap fits, to better observe the proprieties. I make no apology for rising because, if hon. members will reflect on the course of our proceedings during the past few days, I think they will agree that we have a dignity to maintain in the eyes of the country, and also we have work to do.

[Mr. Regier.]

(Translation):

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the comments you have just made.

I should like to inform you, with all due respect, that I was the one who objected to the question that the hon. member for St. Denis was about to ask, because, knowing the kind of questions he has been asking for four years, I was sure that, as usual, it would be an insignificant one designed simply to waste the time of the house and its members.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I shall always be glad to hear a point of order from the hon. member, but I can scarcely make the assumption in advance that a point of order will arise.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, now that we have silence in the house, may I repeat my question to the Postmaster General? Since he is in the Prime Minister's confidence, does he feel he will be able to explain to the house—

Mr. Tremblay: Order.

Mr. Denis: —before the end of the session the deficit of more than $4 million shown by his department?

Mr. Tremblay: Order.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Roberval was right.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister would permit me to say that questions of that kind relating to financial affairs are normally dealt with on the estimates and in the budget. The invitation to deal with the finances of a department in general on the orders of the day is quite improper and out of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Denis: I think it should be done before dissolution of parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. member's anxiety to get on with it, but he is out of order.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—ARREST OF PORTERS CARRYING BAGGAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the light of a telegram I have received from the president of the professional Sky-Caps I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. My question is this.

Is it a fact that the president of the professional Sky-Caps, who has been a porter at Dorval airport for some eight or nine years, and 14 of his fellow porters have been arrested by the R.C.M.P. for carrying passengers' bags at the terminal? If so, can the minister give the reason for this arrest, and did the minister notify the president that he could no longer work at Dorval without his written permission?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Did the hon. member give notice of the question?

Mr. Balcer: I think, Mr. Speaker, I can answer the question simply. I would like to state that following the great deal of trouble we had at Dorval airport the department decided to bring porters under the civil service commission. In so doing the department invited all the porters engaged in the carrying of bags at Dorval airport to submit applications. Over 40 of the Sky-Caps have submitted those applications and they have been hired; another three refused to take up this offer of the department, and another four or five insisted on certain other conditions and refused to accept the positions offered to them.

This group of professional Sky-Caps kept on working at the airport while a decision was being obtained from the court on a writ of injunction. Pending the decision the department did not do anything as far as these porters were concerned. However, now that a decision on the writ has been rendered, these porters have been notified that they should not carry on their activities at the airport as they have refused the positions offered to them by the department.

I do not know about the arrest of these porters. I just wanted to give the situation to the house and make it very clear that we have offered jobs to all the porters who were working at the airport during the last year.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question arising out of the statement the minister has made. It is said that a writ of prohibition has been issued by the superior court against the Department of Transport, I understand. Does the minister not think that pending the decision of the court those 14 men who have not accepted the proposal of the minister should be allowed to carry bags at the airport?

Mr. Balcer: As I said, Mr. Speaker, a decision has been rendered, and following that decision these people were told they had no business working there.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

STUDY OF SUBMISSIONS OF EUROPEAN TRADE UNION ECONOMISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour, in the absence of the minister. Is the Department of Labour studying the submissions of the trade union economists from The Netherlands, Sweden, France and the United Kingdom who met recently at Niagara Falls and discussed the methods whereby labour, management and government in Europe have contrived to co-operate more effectively in the public interest?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member poses a very interesting question in general terms, but perhaps it would be more appropriately raised in debate.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday on the orders of the day the hon. member for Leeds asked the following question:

> —I should like to address a question to the parliamentary secretary. It arises out of the answer given on March 8, 1962 to this question:
>
> What is the age of the oldest butter now in storage?
> The answer given was "August, 1960". Would the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture advise the house whether the government intends to place this butter, produced in August, 1960, on the market?

The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no, not as butter. At the present time the butter being offered for sale was manufactured in 1961 or later. All butter manufactured prior to 1961 has been or is in the process of being converted to butter oil.

PIPE LINES

NORTHERN ONTARIO CORPORATION—EFFECT OF MUNICIPAL TAXATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister responsible for Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation a question which stems from the recent legislation passed by the Ontario legislature giving municipalities the right to tax pipe lines. I wish to ask the minister what effect this legislation has upon the revenues of Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest the question might go on the order paper. I do not expect that the hon. member really looked for an answer off the cuff.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN B.C.—ALLEGED LACK OF MEDICAL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I wonder if I could direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and ask the minister whether his attention has been drawn to a news item in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen emanating from Fort Nelson, British Columbia, which indicates that a Dr. Raymond March said yesterday that several children died on remote northern Indian reserves this winter because a doctor could not reach them in time. Has the minister any comment to make thereon?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen this article and as a consequence have no comment to make. However, the house will recall that the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate have taken up with me on previous occasions the alleged problems of the Indians of the Prophet river reserve in British Columbia. This morning I received the following further report in my capacity as Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

The report from the British Columbia Indian commissioner was received by the department this morning. The commissioner reports that as of March 30, the day he visited the Prophet river community, there was no sickness in the community itself and only two of the 59 Indians living there were still in the Fort Nelson hospital.

The commissioner questioned each of the families living at Prophet river as to conditions prevailing on the week end of March 17, when the epidemic of sickness occurred. Two families are on permanent assistance, three heads of families have trap lines, and five others have been employed at a saw mill a short distance from where they live. All heads of families confirmed that they had not been suffering from any shortage of food prior to the time when they were taken ill.

The agency superintendent or his representative has visited the community each month, except for December, since last October. The provincial public health nurse visited early in March and reported nothing usual. In addition, a school teacher has lived with the Indians in the community at Prophet river throughout the winter, and has been in a position to report any health or welfare conditions requiring attention. Unfortunately she was absent from Prophet river on week-end leave Saturday, March 17, when the epidemic developed. The Indians therefore telephoned the doctor in Fort Nelson, Dr. March, who visited Prophet river, taking along with him the editor of the Fort Nelson newspaper.

Dr. March deserves a great deal of credit for the prompt action he took in coping with the situation which he found on arrival at Prophet river on March 18. His prompt and effective action undoubtedly was responsible for the rapid recovery of the Indians who were overtaken by illness.

At the same time it seems clear from reports received from the commissioner, from the provincial health authorities and from other independent sources that charges of malnutrition among this group of Indians, and accusations of neglect on the part of responsible officials, were not justified.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION

The house resumed, from Monday, April 9, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Diefenbaker—Mr. Martineau in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the establishment of an electoral boundaries commission for the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons; to provide that certain members of the commission may be paid such per diem allowance as may be fixed by the governor in council; to provide for the payment of reasonable travelling and living expenses for the members of the commission; and to provide also that the commission may engage the services of such technical advisers and other staff, including a person to act as secretary to the commission, as it deems necessary.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not intend to traverse today any of the ground I covered last evening except to repeat the final point I made, because unless I do so I think what I have to say would lack continuity.

I had pointed out that in almost every case since confederation, except in 1945 when a constitutional amendment had been made so that the constitution could be set aside until after the war, after the completion of the census there has been no election without first of all a redistribution. The only years in which an election came soon after the year for the taking of the census were 1872, 1882 and, of course, 1911, if one regards the taking of the census as being merely the day on which the information is collected from the population. If the date was June 1, as it is nowadays, that would presumably have been done before the election was held; I have not checked to see. However, I think it is clear that in the 1911 case the census had not been completed.

I pointed out last night that if the government had been seriously concerned about carrying out the pledge made by the Prime Minister in 1957, this legislation would have been introduced for the first time at least two years ago. I say this because when one is altering the pattern of 90 years and dealing with one of the most fundamental features of our constitution, the composition of this house, it is evident that no hasty action ought to be taken at a time which a lot of people may regard—though I have never said so—as being somewhere near the end of this parliament. These steps should have been taken in such time as to allow plenty of opportunity for appropriate consideration not only by the house but also by the public, whose servants we are, of this bill by virtue of which a fundamental and important departure is to be made.

The right course would have been to have introduced this legislation in 1960 at the latest, though not to have attempted to pass it in that year. As has been done with regard to many other important bills, it should have been left on the table for a year so the public might have given proper consideration to it. Then the government could have introduced the bill again in the following year, almost certainly in an amended form, and the matter could have been disposed of by this house and the other place.

I also pointed out that though of course the government has to take the initiative in this matter, first because the Prime Minister is the leader of the house and, second, because the expenditure of money is involved in connection with payment to a commission, the bill nevertheless should in no other respects be regarded as a government measure. We are dealing with a measure which is of no more concern, or should be of no more concern, to the government than it is to anyone else in the house. I am sure the Prime Minister will agree with that proposition, though he may not agree with many other of the things I say.

I maintain, therefore, that this resolution on which the proposed bill is to be founded should either have been introduced two years ago or, if it is to be introduced at this late date, that we should have an assurance from the Prime Minister that it is going to be effective and that unless some unforeseen crisis occurs it will be put into operation and the constitution complied with before a general election takes place. Otherwise the time of parliament is being taken wantonly and unnecessarily in an attempt hastily to put legislation on the statute books which cannot come into operation until after there has been a general election, and which properly should be considered by a new parliament with a fresh mandate, not by a parliament in the kind of atmosphere which unfortunately has characterized far too much of this session.

An hon. Member: You want to go to the people now.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman seems to be very concerned about going to the people. I suggest we were sent here to do the business of the country in this house, and if we would spend our time doing the business of the country in this house in the way we have been sent to do it, instead of having all this agitation outside the house about an election, it would be very much more profitable. It would also be much more in accord with the correct way to conduct parliament.

Mr. Jones: Two flags and two election dates.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member says "Two flags and two election dates". What we have had for the last three months is the spectacle of the Prime Minister of this country like a little girl among the flowers in a meadow in the summer picking the petals from a flower and saying "He loves me, he loves me not—shall we have an election, or shall we not?" For three months that performance has been going on all over Canada while the business of the country has been neglected.

I would draw the attention of the hon. member for Saskatoon to the fact that he provoked that irrelevant observation by his intervention.

Mr. Jones: I might tell the hon. member that he seems to have plenty of irrelevancies without my provoking them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest, then, that if the hon. gentleman is worried about the number of my irrelevancies he should not provoke more. However, that is an aside. I want to go on and deal with this measure. Either this legislation is going to take effect and become operative, in which case I have no criticism to put forward, though I maintain it is being brought forward too late to be done properly, or the time of this parliament is being taken up unnecessarily with something that should be left over to the next parliament because it is not in fact going to come into operation during the life of this parliament and we have been told that urgent matters are being held up by the opposition. This is not the first measure of a hypothetical nature that has been brought in; we had one last week which was hypothetical when it was introduced.

I say if there is urgent business—and I think there is; I think there is very urgent business that should be before us—it is not expedient, to employ the language of the motion, to be debating something that can have no effect upon the course of events for several years to come, because it is now too late in the life of this parliament for it to have any effect.

It may be that the reason this is being done is in an attempt to create an impression upon the public for another general election, I do not know; but before we decide the basic question as to whether it is expedient to have a bill we are entitled to be told what the government envisages will happen in connection with it. We are also entitled to be told why it is being brought in now at this particular time in this particular session.

I said last night I am sure that unless an attempt is made to put undue pressure on the commission to make it work in a hasty and slipshod fashion it will be impossible for the work of any commission of this kind to be brought to completion within two years from the date of the passing of the legislation. If in fact the legislation had been enacted even as late as last year, and if the organizational work had all been completed so that on the day the census returns became available the job of redrawing the boundaries could have begun the next day—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The returns are not yet completed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I know that. If I have time to do so I will shortly say something about that or perhaps later in the afternoon when I speak again.

In 1882 they were completed in time for the redistribution to be completed by parliament on May 17. In 1872, notwithstanding the nature of communications in this country at that time, they were able to complete the redistribution and have royal assent to the act on June 14.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): What about the population?

Mr. Pickersgill: The population has grown, but so have the electronic devices for dealing with these matters promptly.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The population has also grown.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that if the bureau of statistics had been told that the work of gathering the basic data required for the redistribution, which does not involve counting all the cattle in the country or processing all the data about other things but only involves getting the population statistics and nothing else for each constituency, should be expedited; if it had been given priority, there is no reason on earth why this information should not have been ready on April 10. I am not charging that they were told to have a deliberate slowdown, but it would require quite a lot to convince me that they had been asked to expedite it. I do not believe they have.

I suppose because I have been around a long time and have taken a certain amount of interest in these things I was asked more than a year ago what I envisaged about this matter, whether I thought there would be a redistribution or not before the next election, whenever it was, and I said, "Well, you know, I am not one to predict or to try to read the right hon. gentleman's mind—"

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the hon. gentleman a crystal ball, too?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I have not. I think the right hon. gentleman's mind is something I ought not to try to read, and I do not try to read it; unlike many other people in the press gallery and elsewhere, whose reading of the right hon. gentleman's mind seems to be still pretty uninstructed, I simply do not try. I think it is too difficult. What I do say is that I did what I am sure every hon. member did. I made my own prediction. I am sure all hon. members did this, because we were all interested in whether our constituencies were going to be changed, and we were all interested in whether there would be a redistribution.

I said, "I know what will happen. It will be like everything else. It will be left to the last minute. At the last minute we will be told we must not have a conventional redistribution but that we must have a new kind, and then it will be too late; it will be mentioned in the speech from the throne in 1962." I made this prediction over a year ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where did the hon. gentleman make this revelation?

Mr. Pickersgill: I could produce the witnesses. When the bill goes to the committee on privileges and elections, as all these bills always do, I shall be glad, if the Prime Minister is interested, to bring two or three witnesses to whom I made this statement. I do not think it would be very profitable to do so, and I am sure the right hon. gentleman does not doubt my word in this matter.

I made the prediction that it would be mentioned in the speech from the throne, that it would be at least three months or nearly three months after the speech from the throne was read before this urgent legislation was ever introduced into parliament, that it would take some considerable time for it to pass, and that even if the election were not held until 1963 it would be easy to have sufficient delay so the redistribution could not be completed during the life of this parliament. I do not think that prediction will prove to have been wrong.

Of course there are circumstances in which an election would be justified after a census without a redistribution, if there were some critical situation, if the government lost the confidence of the house and wished to test the confidence of the country, if there were some great emergency of some kind and there was some doubt in the government's mind about whether or not it had the support of the country; but in times which we are told are tranquil, when we are told everything is going so well in the country, and when the government still has what appears to be a rather large majority, there seems to be no valid reason for the government not having taken every precaution in good time to ensure that this constitutional obligation would be carried out as the fathers of confederation intended it to be carried out. And that, sir, has not been done.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired.

Mr. Chevrier: Carry on.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall have an opportunity to speak later.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would agree to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate carrying on, but I think he intends to do so later in any event.

Any pleasure we may have experienced at the introduction of this resolution is tempered by disappointment arising from its lateness and the realization that an injustice, although it may be an abstract one, is going to be done to a great many voters in Canada because the commission has not been made effective at an earlier date, and because we will not have a redistribution, apparently, before the election.

The remarks of the Prime Minister last evening were quite disappointing to me as one who for several sessions has introduced a measure that had the same intent as this, although as a private member I was limited in the extent to which I could spell out the intention. My disappointment stems from the very apparent fact that the Prime Minister has not fully thought out the kind of instruction that ought to be given to the electoral commission that draws up the boundaries and this, it seems to me, is one of the key points. What is the use of making the general statement that representation by population is not to be the over-all principle, that some account must be taken of traditional boundaries and so on, without some indication as to the—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman but that is the reason I suggested last night that it would be helpful to pass the resolution so that we could have the bill before us. I cannot go into detail, as the hon. member knows, but the bill has in it directions and guides for the commission. If we could hasten the passing of the resolution to the bill would be before the house, the fullest consideration could then be given to the bill. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member except for the purpose of making that very clear.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I suppose I should have got in touch with Jackson of the Journal; maybe I could have found out something about the situation and what is planned. It does seem to me there is no point in going ahead with a commission unless full guiding lines are to be laid down as to how it is to operate in this regard. I will apologize to the Prime Minister if it is later revealed that I have done him an injustice, but I thought he was very indefinite on that particular score.

There is another point he did not touch on at all that I thought he would almost be forced to deal with. The fact is that at least in the province of Quebec there is a very strong body of opinion that has had its voice in this house during this parliament and also found a voice in the Tremblay report several years ago. That body of opinion has indicated that the whole question of representation in the federal parliament by its very nature, as intended by the fathers of confederation, was meant to be on the basis of provincial representatives within the federal chamber rather than national representatives from particular areas of Canada.

I disagree with this point of view, but it has immense consequences if it is going to be accepted. Though it is a delicate matter, it seems to me it is one that needs to be faced because in my view the Canadian parliament at any time has to be completely in charge of the whole conception. I would point out to the Prime Minister and to other hon. members that because of the Senate floor that now keeps Prince Edward Island at four seats, New Brunswick at ten, Newfoundland at seven and will probably keep Nova Scotia at ten for the next one or two redistributions, these provinces are now guaranteed a representation which it seems to me lends some support or even some sovereignty to the idea that the provinces in themselves, that is as organizations of their own, have a right to a certain measure of representation at all times.

This point is an important one to me in view of the information that the Prime Minister brought out. He dealt with the projection as to what would be the effect on the house of an increase in the membership to 293, and he showed very effectively, as I had demonstrated to me a couple of years ago by the chief electoral officer, that this really would not do much good for Saskatchewan, which in the short run tends to be the province that is going to lose the most so far as the number of seats is concerned. But I wonder how much longer we can go on carving down provinces such as Saskatchewan and Manitoba while leaving the maritime provinces protected by the Senate floor, when in the name of equity and having regard to population figures it is quite apparent that Saskatchewan and Manitoba in relation to the maritime provinces are being cut down below their respective weights in the chamber.

This is an extremely touchy and delicate point, and in considering the question of adding more seats I wonder whether a more pragmatic approach has not been considered by the Prime Minister or by his adviser, who I assume was the chief electoral officer in this case. That approach would be to freeze at this stage, in 1962, the present representation in the House of Commons. Why should Saskatchewan and Manitoba suffer because of the fact that constitutionally they have not been protected in the same way the maritime provinces have? If you were to work from the basis of freezing the membership at a minimum as at the present time and then making adjustments upward in those parts of the country where the population is moving up, it would at least remove the factor of the Senate floor, and limit the disadvantage to those provinces that are going to suffer at the present time. Since the Prime Minister comes from Saskatchewan I would have thought that he would be interested in that kind of approach.

With regard to his comments about the chamber, the number of members in it and the need for more intimacy, if he really feels as strongly about this matter as he has indicated on several occasions I think he should plan to proceed with it in the next parliament. I have said in the past that I am no great respecter of the British House of Commons in terms of what it accomplishes. I suppose I have watched it in session as much as most Canadian members of parliament, and I think the reasons for the different calibre of the debates there stem from factors other than the make-up of the actual chamber or the lack of desks. I should like to make one point here. I do not think the attendance of the members of the British House of Commons, compared with the attendance of members in the Canadian House of Commons, is quite as good when it is considered that they are so much handier to Westminster than we are to Ottawa. There are hardly any British members of parliament who have to come from a great distance away, as many of our members do, and who are in London for such long periods of time as many of our members are stuck in Ottawa, if one may put it that way. So far as this house is concerned, I am thinking particularly of the western and eastern members who in my view have always tended to carry the burden of attendance in this chamber so much of the time.

I should like to move on to another point in relation to redistribution. I do not know what is in store with regard to who will be on the commission, but as the Prime Minister is a lawyer I have anticipated that it may be heavily weighted with judges, and if more than one judge pops up on this commission I will be quite disappointed. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate made the point that the members of the commission should be named in the bill. I agree with him, and I think one of the people named should be a demographer. I think all members know that a demographer is a special kind of geographer who is trained in population studies and who has rather expert knowledge, as most of them I have encountered have, of trends, shifts and changes in population. Canada happens to be fairly well supplied with such people, and I think it would not be very difficult to find one distinguished professionally to take part in the work of this commission.

An indication was given that the chief electoral officer would probably be a member of the commission. I have tried to look at this both from the point of view of the office and the present incumbent, and I cannot particularly quarrel with the idea. From my experience with the present chief electoral officer it always seems to me that he is the most articulate man in Canada. I can only think of one person who approaches him, and that is Professor Cohen of McGill University.

The difficulty that I and other people, I suppose, have always found with regard to the chief electoral officer is that most of the arguments that we may put before him tend to founder on the very knowledge and brilliance that he brings to his job. One point about the chief electoral officer which the Prime Minister did not touch on and which is germane to the position I want to advance is that in his expressed opinions about redistribution I have found in him a tendency to fairness and a knowledge that I think are unique. But I have never been able to make any headway, I will acknowledge frankly, in the recognition of the problems of rural ridings and the old distinction between urban and rural constituencies. In this sense the chief electoral officer tends to be what I might call a traditionalist. If there is any formula developed, I am sure he would be interested in an urban-rural formula or ratio.

I insist that this is not sophisticated enough, not practical enough, in the Canadian situation. I think I can show it to a degree, not only by reference to my own constituency but to several others. I have insisted for several years that we have four kinds of constituencies in Canada. I think I might label them as urban, suburban, rural and frontier or hinterland. Naturally, since Port Arthur is a hinterland constituency, it interests me the most. There are a number of others like this, and I should like to put on the record the ten largest constituencies in Canada with their present populations. They are Mackenzie River with 527,490 square miles and a population of 14,895; Saguenay with an area of 374,950 square miles and a population of 81,097; Yukon with 207,076 square miles and a population of only 14,628; Churchill with 170,827 square miles of area and a population of 54,952; Port Arthur, with an area of 148,482 square miles and a population of 87,977. This is the largest in terms of population for these very large constituencies. Then constituency No. 6 is Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, with an area of 125,710 square miles and a population of 82,433. In my view this is probably the most difficult constituency in Canada. Then there is Skeena with an area of 125,641 square miles and a population of 58,740; Cariboo with an area of 120,544 square miles and a population of 82,173; Meadow Lake, with an area of 96,327 square miles and a population of 37,937; Chapleau, with an area of 83,640 square miles and a population of 71,394.

Now I should like to draw to the attention of hon. members that of those ten largest constituencies in area, perhaps those which have shown rather exceptional growth are Saguenay, because of mineral developments there, Port Arthur, Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, again because of mineral developments. Then Cariboo has grown amazingly in the last ten years, and the Peace River constituency has shown considerable growth. I add that one, and it is No. 11 in size.

The traditionalists argue that rural areas—it seems to me the Prime Minister was being a traditionalist last night—deserve what is in effect better representation. Well, we have so many anomalies. What is the difference between Port Arthur and Fort William in terms of background? Yet a voter in Fort William has just about twice as much effect as a voter in Port Arthur in terms of the relationship to population. We have a situation where my hon. friend from Timmins is right in the centre of a group of huge constituencies. I kid him about it and say he has a little pocket borough that he can drive around in an hour. It is very small and has a population of about 25,000. Then we have an example of a big suburban constituency such as the one the hon. member for York-Scarborough represents. I think we all know something about the problems he has, and these problems are shared by the hon. member for York Centre and the hon. member for York West. There is the problem of tremendous boom development and an inordinate number of people to look after.

Then we look at the other constituencies in Ontario such as Dufferin-Simcoe and Grey-Bruce, which have a population much below the median. Then we run into this argument that they are rural constituencies. I wanted to put on the record the most compact review of this particular point that I have encountered. It is an article written by J. B. McGeachy on redistribution which appeared in the Financial Post of August 20, 1960. The article outlines the arguments advanced in favour of these rural constituencies. The arguments advanced are as follows:

1. The farming or food producing interest has a special value to the community and deserves special protection in parliament.

2. The farmers are lusty yeomen, the salt of the earth, splendid fellows, etc., and heaven forbid this superior racial breed should be permitted to die out.

This is the argument I believe Mr. Frost has used in the past.

3. The farmer is less alert and vigorous mentally, less well educated than the city man, more likely to be taken in, hornswoggled and otherwise put upon. He needs some protection against his natural dumbness.

4. The city man has the press, boards of trade, chambers of commerce and other agencies to speak for him directly to government. The farmer has none of these.

Then Mr. McGeachy has put in brackets:

(Though the farm associations seem to do very well when it comes to extracting subsidies).

5. Many rural ridings are represented by city men whereas the reverse almost never happens. Thus the Toronto area, e.g., really has more m.p.'s than the 17 elected in the greater Toronto seats.

6. There must be a limit to the size of rural constituencies. A city man who represents only ten square miles can walk around it in a day but a rural m.p. may speak for the inhabitants of thousands of square miles.

But this surely means nothing at all in the motor car age—except, of course, in a few vast north country areas like Saguenay, Port Arthur, etc., which can't be helped by redistribution anyway.

I assure the reader that I have not invented any of these arguments for making urban ridings more populous than rural ones. I have found them all in the writings of distinguished students of the subject; and, on balance, I think very little of them indeed.

I tend to find very little in them, indeed, myself. I believe that the overriding principle in representation should be representation by population. I should like to point to the example of Saskatchewan. I say this despite the criticism suggested by the Prime Minister last night. I think the province of Saskatchewan is the most fairly proportioned of all the provinces at the present time in terms of the median of population and some kind of median in terms of the size of the constituency. I know that both Saskatoon and Regina are out of line, and I feel they should be reduced in population terms by adding either to the adjoining constituencies or by creating other constituencies. It seems to me that in Saskatchewan, and to a lesser degree in Manitoba, we come closer to representation by population than in any of the other provinces. It seems to me that this is the goal we should really put forward as the first, overriding principle, to our electoral boundary commission.

The last thing I really wanted to touch upon stemming from the Prime Minister's remarks was his suggestion that county lines, and I would assume municipal lines, are to be considered to a certain extent by the electoral commission. This is a traditional argument, for example, that has held sway for a very long time in the province of Quebec and to a degree in rural Ontario. The argument is that it would be wrong to break up these traditional ridings and constituencies. People worry a great deal about traditional boundaries of municipalities and townships and, as the Prime Minister indicated, they even worry about the courses taken by rivers.

However, as I look at the situation faced by the hon. member for Mackenzie, the hon. member for Yukon, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and myself, I cannot help laughing at this. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador has a part of Newfoundland and a chunk of Labrador in his electoral area. I received word in a sessional paper yesterday that I have some 1,400 Indians in my constituency at a place called Trout lake, which I have never seen. To get there I would have to go 200 miles to Sioux Lookout, and there charter an airplane to make another flight of 280 miles in order to locate them. Is it any wonder that when I look at problems like those which hon. members for these big Ontario ridings face, I cannot help but chuckle ironically at the fuss made over old lines in the redistribution of urban constituencies, particularly in Ontario and Quebec.

I see that the hon. member for York-Scarborough is giving me an unsolicited accompaniment—

Mr. McGee: A crying towel.

Mr. Fisher: I hope he will take the opportunity to participate in this debate. The hon. member has said something about a crying towel. In that connection I would point out that in my area the Progressive Conservative candidate and the president of the Liberal association have met with me and we have looked at this particular problem as it affects the constituency. We have come to a firm agreement that when the commission is set up we will make a joint submission to it and point out the difficulties that face a constituency such as ours. It is quite apparent that we cannot get the best kind of thorough representation when we are faced with a problem of so much population scattered over so very wide an area.

The story contained in the population figures given by the census of Canada is a fairly easy one to write. Indeed, it seems to me that most of the gentlemen in the press gallery have had no trouble in pointing out the inequality between Iles-de-la-Madeleine and Mercier, where in one case the population is above 200,000 while in the case of Iles-de-la-Madeleine it only takes 12,000 voters to elect a member of parliament. However it is foolish under the present situation to compare Iles-de-la-Madeleine with York-Scarborough. What we have to do is compare, within the provincial framework, York-Scarborough with Grey-Bruce and Dufferin-Simcoe and ask ourselves why during the last five or six years the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has been worth approximately six times in basic voting terms what the hon. member for York-Scarborough is worth.

It is quite apparent that you cannot work out the division even to 1,000 or 2,000, but it does seem to me that we need a formula or approach that will allow for a leeway of a ratio of seven to five between constituencies. I notice some people are enthusiastic about the ratio arrived at in Manitoba, but I cannot see why the Manitoba ratio should be applicable to the rest of Canada, because Manitoba has a rather unique urban-rural situation. Winnipeg has relatively so much larger a population, taken in comparison with other parts of the province which have mostly a farming population.

The principle that I believe should be put to the electoral commission is that they seek not to have equal representation, but that they allow for a ratio of between seven and five to make adjustments that take care of the area factor, and second to take care of the location of cities and towns that may throw the matter awry.

The Prime Minister seems to have given an indication that the reason he personally was prepared to take the lead with regard to redistribution was related to his own experience. I have gone through the old debates, and I expect he remembers very clearly the debate which took place in July, 1947 when he, Mr. Tucker, and Mr. Wright from Saskatchewan got so deeply involved in what was in effect a public quarrel about the way Saskatchewan was being divided up. For the sake of those people who read Hansard I want to put on the record a comment made by Mr. Wright, who was a third member of the Saskatchewan committee on redistribution. As recorded at page 5668 of Hansard for July 15, 1947 he stated:

> As the member for Rosthern has said, the member for Lake Centre—

He is now the Prime Minister.

> —did not appear to be very much interested in any other part of Saskatchewan than his own constituency. In the proceedings in the committee he raised only one point that I can remember with regard to any other constituency and that was with reference to Melville, adding an area south of Qu'Appelle valley to that constituency.
> If that is the basis on which we are to deal with redistribution, the personal interest and personal preserves of individual members, I do not think we can ever reach fair decisions, and that apparently was the basis on which this matter was considered.

I place that on the record, Mr. Chairman, because although I do not want to reduce the nobility of the Prime Minister's motives I think it might be somewhat of an antidote to the general conception a stranger might get on looking at Hansard, that the Prime Minister is a complete St. George destroying the dragon.

Mr. Lambert: He was just defending himself.

Mr. Fisher: Did the hon. member make a comment?

Mr. Lambert: He was just defending himself. He was "the target for tonight".

Mr. Fisher: That may be, but it seemed to me that last night he was crediting himself with more noble motives than that. Surely, it is not unkind to reduce a man to a politician.

Mr. Jones: They were trying to carve up his constituency. That was the whole object of that redistribution.

Mr. Fisher: I would advise the hon. member to read the debates. If he did it would put a new perspective on matters.

Mr. Pickersgill: It certainly would.

Mr. Jones: I read the debate.

Mr. Fisher: When the Prime Minister introduced this measure last night he made reference to the situation in the United States, where a new decision of the supreme court has given great hope to people affected there. The situation in the United States, so far as the intervention of the jurists was concerned, was dealt with in a judgment made some years ago by Justice Frankfurter, who said:

> Courts ought not to enter this political thicket. The remedy for unfairness in districting is to secure state legislatures that will apportion properly, or to invoke the ample powers of congress.

This is an example of juristic attitude which I take to say that under its present constitution congress should take the leadership in invoking powers and straightening out malapportionment. I would say that the reasons with which the Prime Minister introduced this argument, pointing out how serious is the problem, are applicable in Canada, and I have to agree that we have not handled this whole question with any fairness and we very much need the kind of solution he is advancing at this time.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. Does the committee wish the hon. member to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: I shall only be a few more minutes, Mr. Chairman. I was talking about the relationship of malapportionment to the Canadian situation. I was approached the other day by a lawyer who wanted to know about this, and I thought it was worth while going ahead and trying to watch what action in Canada might lead to the same result that was obtained in the United States. I do not know enough about the jurisdiction of the courts in this country, but it does seem to me that this would be a very nice issue for some public-minded person in the country to take up at the present time, perhaps under the bill of rights. I refer to taking up this question that was brought before the supreme court in the United States; that is, whether there is a legal right to have your vote count with some means of equality with other citizens in the country.

It seems to me it would still be important and relevant in this country to have such a decision, because all the pieties that we may utter here about the need for fairness in this regard will tend to fall away if the instruction is not very, very clear as to what are the principles under which this new commission is to operate.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate put forward the point that the commission should bring its report into the house in the form of a bill, with the boundaries already drawn up. It seems to me this is the only sensible way it can be done. I would only hope that some kind of tradition develops in so far as this particular measure may be concerned and that the party line, as the hon. member suggested, will not be in effect when this particular bill is before the committee that considers it, other than the fact that the members of the committee will, I assume, be apportioned on some kind of basis relative to the party standing in the house.

The other point in relation to the bill as it may be laid before the house, it would seem to me, is the amount of preliminary opportunity that will be given to local groups to make their presentations before the bill is made up. That is, I hope it would be considered practical for the commission to have one or two members move across the country at regular intervals, getting the feel in the various areas about what their needs and wishes are with regard to representation, and that at no time would a substantial change be made in any district without representatives having the opportunity, if possible, on the local scene to make their representations about the way the constituency should be divided.

The measure is one that we would be very happy to support, despite our doubts as to its really being effective in the short run, particularly for the voters in the approaching election.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, all of us of course are sympathetic to the principle enunciated in this bill. We regret that a reading of the remarks of the Prime Minister do not appear to indicate any clear answer to complicated problems involved. We find it difficult to understand why, in what appears to be the last hours of this parliament, we are addressing ourselves to one of the most complex matters ever laid before the House of Commons of Canada. Perhaps in the next parliament, with people of the competence of Dr. Pauline Jewett, we might be able to do rather better.

May I refer to some comments of Sir Richard J. Cartwright in his book entitled "Reminiscences". Answering certain questions put to him by a reporter at that time and referring to the classic case of gerrymandering in the election of 1882, he said:

> Under pretence of adding four seats to the representation of Ontario they—

[Mr. Fisher.]

That is, Sir John A. Macdonald:

> —changed the boundaries of 54 constituencies so that while the Liberal party in Ontario almost exactly divided the popular vote in 1882 and 1887, and had a decisive majority in 1891, they were placed in a large minority in 1882 and 1887 and even in 1891 were kept still in a minority, though, of course, not so large a one. That there may be no possibility of dispute, I give the figures for 1891 from the published statement of Mr. George Johnson, the dominion statistician and a strong Conservative. Mr. Johnson stated the total Liberal vote in Ontario in 1891 to have been 178,871 and the total Conservative vote 171,595, giving a majority of the whole vote of 7,276 in favour of the Liberal party. The result in number of seats was that the Liberals, with a popular majority of 7,276, got 44 seats and the Conservatives, who were in a minority of 7,276, obtained 48. How grave a thing this was can be best understood from the fact that the total Conservative majority in Ontario in 1878 was 7,000, when they carried 59 seats to the Liberals' 29 out of the 88 seats Ontario then possessed.

Mr. Grafftey: Tell us about St. Antoine-Westmount.

Mr. Matheson: Sir Richard indicated that this gerrymander—and I shall not be distracted by the intervention of my hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi—began in 1882 and it was not done away with until the election of 1904, owing to the refusal of the Senate to alter the constituencies until after the census had been taken.

Mr. Grafftey: Tell us about St. Antoine-Westmount, Moose Jaw-Lake Centre and all those places.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. member really want to know about Moose Jaw-Lake Centre? I would not advise him to ask about that.

Mr. Matheson: Sir Richard continues:

> As the Conservatives had a decided majority in the Senate at that time, we had no alternative but to submit. This meant that for five successive elections, in 1882, 1887, 1891, 1896 and 1900, the Liberal party in Ontario were deprived of their fair share in the representation.

A few hours ago I took the occasion—

Mr. Grafftey: Tell us about St. Antoine-Westmount.

Mr. Matheson: It is difficult to continue with these interventions from my giggling friend from Brome-Missisquoi who is in his seat. May I simply say that as we look back over the records no party can feel more indignant about the whole question of gerrymandering than the Liberal party, and they themselves at different times have learned from these things—

Mr. Grafftey: You are reading history with your blinkers on.

Mr. Matheson: —which were introduced into the history of Canada so effectively by the master gerrymanderer of them all, that wily, very clever and attractive personality, Sir John A. Macdonald. Certainly the 1882 gerrymander becomes the classic case in Canada and one that presents a great deal of amusement and interest to people who can now look back at history and perhaps not be as concerned about its evil consequences.

This bill poses a real problem. It is a matter which calls for earnest consideration with respect to principle. Now it would seem to have no chance of adequate consideration and debate. We do not want to be in the position, at this stage of the session, of impeding the government in any of their proper undertakings.

I have read with some care the Diefenbaker promises of 1957 and on this matter of redistribution it would seem that as early as the fall of 1956, the man who now presides over the government of Canada had very clear ideas about redistribution; at least, one would have thought he had.

In the addresses given yesterday one can find words and a good deal of talk on generalities almost as vague as some of the other recommendations which have been brought to this house. We have heard two addresses, one from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and one from the hon. member for Port Arthur which will indicate to the people of Canada something of the complexity of this problem.

I represent a riding which in population, I have no doubt, is below national average. When there was discussion of redistribution in recent months there was immediate consideration of what this would do to certain seats. The effects will be felt by a number of Liberals in this house. We should like to know what the governing principle here shall be.

It was my pleasure in recent days to spend some time in the Cariboo and to see something of the complications of this vast riding, and of the adjacent Skeena riding which has been referred to by the hon. member for Port Arthur. Does it make sense that we should depart from the area concept? I cannot find myself subscribing to the principle which I think is inherent in the speech of the hon. member for Port Arthur with respect to the special sovereign interests of provinces. I doubt whether it represents a true interpretation of the constitutional situation but it is certainly one which has been advanced by some able constitutional lawyers and particularly by some scholars in the province of Quebec. All this illustrates how unwise would be too speedy a disposition of a matter so fundamental to democratic rights.

I subscribe to the idea of an independent council and we know of the high qualifications and character of the chief electoral officer. Here is a person something like the chairman of the Bank of Canada whose office renders him somewhat independent of the government; a person who has a high judicial function, and we are fortunate at this time that we have this kind of person to preside when this matter is to be raised.

I read some days ago a number of clippings with respect to the suggestion of reform. When we read those clippings we realize how very complex this matter is, almost too complex to involve us at this stage when we shall not have time to debate the basic considerations. We have been waiting week after week to go into specific matters such as the exchange fund which we thought would have been discussed three or four weeks ago.

Mr. Grafftey: Whose fault is that?

Mr. Matheson: The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is again intervening. I may tell him that some of us have gone away from this place in order to meet people who are qualified to give helpful advice on this subject which we thought was of urgent importance. We thought this exchange legislation was the kind of thing which could not be left over. We did not think it was possible for this mint and exchange bill proposed by the Minister of Finance to be delayed. We thought this was something to which we would have to address ourselves. I remember flying here so as to be able to make some modest contribution to a subject which was highly complex and upon which we had to seek the best possible advice in a hurry. Over a week ago I spoke to a person on the west coast who is regarded as one of the highest authorities on this subject. But we did not have time for that legislation.

Now we have before us one of the most complicated and sophisticated problems in the Canadian economy. I would just ask that the committee should consider a statement which appeared in the London Free Press of December 5, 1961. The editorial states:

> When confederation was established a clause of the British North America Act provided that after every decennial census there should be a redistribution of House of Commons seats. As a protection for Quebec that province was given 65 seats and 65 divided into the Quebec population was the quota for the rest of Canada.

Have we time, now, seriously and earnestly to consider any really meritorious contribution to redistribution? I submit that at this stage that is asking this committee to do the impossible.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I was hoping that the Prime Minister would deal with some of the points which have been raised, particularly with the question of the fundamental conditions which it seems to me ought to be observed with regard to this bill, above all, whether this parliament is going to decide on the commissioners or whether the government has any thought that the commissioners are to be appointed by an order in council which, I think, would be completely unacceptable.

There is really no reason why this scheme of the bill should not be exposed at this stage. There is no sanctity about this. I can remember that being done on many occasions when the right hon. gentleman was on this side of the house. Sometimes it was resisted by the government, and they gave way afterwards. I thought it was a foolish point to make in the past, though sometimes it was done because the bill was not quite ready, even under the previous government. If this bill is ready, I hope the Prime Minister can indicate, as I say, whether parliament will decide who the commissioners are going to be or whether the government has in mind to do this by order in council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I would simply say this: the rules are that I cannot deal with the bill in the committee stage of the resolution. We have heard the views of hon. gentlemen on the subject and if they would allow the resolution to pass now we would make great progress, because the bill would be before the house and the country immediately and be available for consideration in detail. Each hon. member would then have the fullest opportunity to make his suggestions.

I have listened with much interest to the various statements which have been made, and the views expressed, but the principle before us now is the setting up of an independent commission, and from what I gather from the opinions expressed by representatives of all the parties, that principle is accepted. This being so, in order to expedite consideration of the various questions which have arisen I hope there may be acceptance of the resolution. When that is done we shall immediately table the bill. First reading will be given at once and in that way an answer to a number of doubts expressed will, I think, be forthcoming.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to enter into a sterile argument about whether or not the right hon. gentleman can tell us what the scheme of the bill is. We have had that point over and over again in the house. Even if there were some technical objection, if everyone wanted it there would be no harm in doing it. I am not insisting on that point nor will I waste any time on it.

[The Chairman.]

The Prime Minister said the principle we were to settle was whether there would be an independent commission. That, of course, is not correct. What we are determining here in accordance with the government's request is whether it is expedient to introduce a measure. The principle of a bill is determined on the second reading of the bill, not on the resolution. The question we are asked to settle here is whether it is expedient to introduce this bill. I think it would have been expedient to introduce a bill of this kind in 1960, as I indicated when I spoke earlier. I think it would have been excusable and perhaps expedient to do it in 1961. I do not think it is expedient to do it in 1962 unless we have an assurance from the government that it intends to proceed with the implementing of the redistribution itself; unless, in other words, we are assured that this legislation is going to come into immediate operation and that the constitutional obligation to redistribute is going to be carried out during the lifetime of this parliament. Otherwise it seems to me it would be more expedient to be dealing with urgent legislation that obviously has to be passed before there can be an election.

If we are not going to implement this in any way, if it is not going to have any effect upon the next election, then there does not seem to me, using the word "expedient" in its ordinary sense, to be any kind of urgency; and since urgency has been stressed so much by the government in recent weeks I do not feel we should proceed with this measure now. If the session goes on longer and the supply which is urgent business is voted, supply to pay bills that were contracted in the last fiscal year the passing of which is our fundamental job in parliament—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to give an answer to these various matters immediately.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To begin with I would say we could not set up a commission in advance in order to assure that redistribution would be proceeded with any faster than will now be the case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Redistribution cannot be proceeded with until the census is completed, and the census is not completed yet. To have set up a commission for the purpose of giving consideration to what it would do after the census was completed would have been idle and futile, so that the question as to whether it should have been introduced in 1960 or 1961 is, I think, an academic argument.

The hon. gentleman says there are matters of urgency. I should point out that this is the 59th sitting day. During that period we have spent 22 days on supplementary estimates, two days on main estimates, eight days on the speech from the throne, two days on a supply motion and only 23 days on legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which is a lot of time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A most unusual situation has developed. We have had arguments over and over again on the question of supply, not original supply but supplementary.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the Prime Minister permit me to put a question about this?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the Prime Minister would not say that the $40 million acreage payment was not an original piece of supply or that the emergency assistance for the fishermen of Newfoundland was not an original piece of supply? A lot of the supply was not supplementary in the ordinary sense, but was new business.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is still business of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, very little time was taken on the question of the $40 million grant. We have spent 22 days on supplementary estimates. As I have said on a number of occasions we used to be criticized when we sat in opposition for holding up progress, but in a period of five years we spent only nine days on supplementary estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the supplementaries of this government are as much this year as in that full five year period.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman again interrupts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I gave the figures the other day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman is merely engaging in an exercise in futility. I am pointing out this fact. I was trying to be helpful. I thought if this resolution passed we could then have the legislation before us. However, I am in the hands of the house. If we are not going to be able to pass the resolution and get the legislation before us then, of course, the responsibility is not that of the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is exactly where the responsibility lies. The responsibility rests with the government, not with the opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Chairman, if one looks at the record—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do not lose your temper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would say to the hon. gentleman that he is frustrated.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do not make these charges.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me say to the hon. member for Essex East that his entire attitude in recent weeks has been one of deep frustration over the fact that he does not occupy the position he would like to.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is a question of privilege; a personal attack.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order. I notice at the present time that the clock says five o'clock. According to the rules of the house, so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rose on a question of privilege and a question of privilege is always heard forthwith.

The Chairman: Order. I am afraid the hon. member will either have to raise his question of privilege when the Speaker is in the chair or else raise it when the committee sits again; but at the moment I must report progress.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege which also involves a point of order—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am not seeking to interrupt the hon. member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rose on a question of privilege. If I cannot speak, the Prime Minister cannot. Surely he must not be given a preference. The Prime Minister has made a statement—

Mr. Jones: The Prime Minister is endeavouring to help the hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am rising to give assistance to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am attempting to allow the hon. member to raise this imaginary question of privilege of his.

Electoral Boundaries Commission

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I am rising to request that you insist on enforcing the rules governing our procedure. It is now five o'clock and we should now proceed to the next order of business.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East, may I say I appreciate the hon. gentleman's attempt—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. gentleman has just mentioned that he is now speaking to a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, no.

The Chairman: As this is a different matter I regret that I must inform the hon. gentleman that I am required to report progress.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I was rising on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East. Under the rules of the house a question of privilege must be heard forthwith. If I wanted any better authority, it is the statement of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Grafftey: Under what rule must a question of privilege be heard forthwith?

The Chairman: Order. The hon. gentleman stated that he had a question of privilege. He was given an opportunity to state it and now he rises on a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With deference, Mr. Chairman, that is not correct.

Mr. Nowlan: Order.

The Chairman: If the hon. gentleman has a question of privilege which he can state succinctly I am willing to hear him, and then I shall report to the Speaker.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I point out that at two minutes after five no one can raise a question of privilege or a point of order under our rules.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Winch: It is not allowed under the rules.

The Chairman: Order. I will hear the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I simply wish to say to the Prime Minister with regard to the matter he has raised and which has provoked this question of privilege, this is the second time—

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The Chairman: Order. I asked the hon. gentleman to state his question of privilege but I do not feel that at this time, it being past five o'clock, he may engage in a debate, and obviously he was beginning to engage in a debate in addressing his remarks to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to consider carefully what you have just said. My question of privilege arises out of what the right hon. gentleman has said and I cannot begin to state my question of privilege unless I address myself to what the Prime Minister said. The Prime Minister for the second time showed that remarkable sense of the dignity of his high office by once again making a personal aspersion. I simply—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I finish?

The Chairman: Order. Will the hon. gentleman please resume his seat while the chairman is on his feet. I am satisfied that the matter that the hon. gentleman has just raised, interesting as it may be, is not a matter of privilege that must be taken up at this instant and I feel—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You just said a moment ago that I could.

The Chairman: —that according to the rules I must interrupt this sitting at this time so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, and I accordingly do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You just said a moment ago that I could.

Progress reported.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARTIN, ESSEX EAST—REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF PRIME MINISTER IN DEBATE

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, just before five o'clock and before Your Honour took the chair the Prime Minister made what can only be regarded as a reflection involving my person and my attitude toward public questions in this house. At that time Mr. Deputy Speaker thought that I would have to raise the question of privilege after five o'clock and that I am now doing. To deal with the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry but I am not empowered to deal with a matter which arises in committee and on which the committee has not reported to me.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we are in this amazing situation. Under our rules a question of privilege must be raised forthwith at the earliest opportunity and if I had not raised it at the time I would have been precluded under our rules and practices from dealing with it later. The Deputy Speaker said that I could not raise it because we had reached the hour of five o'clock and that I would have to wait until Your Honour was in the chair. Therefore I am now raising it. We are put in the position where an hon. member has been attacked by no less a person than the Prime Minister, and I would simply say to the Prime Minister if Your Honour will permit, and this will bring the matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is proceeding to deal with the matter. It may be that there is an hiatus in the rules. The hon. member would be able to raise his question of privilege, I think, when the committee sat again. I am sorry, but I am not empowered to take under consideration or to bring before the consideration of the house matters which arise in committee unless the committee has reported them to me.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister has been saved by a technicality.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

House in committee on Bill S-9, an act to incorporate Brock Acceptance Company. (Without amendment).—Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North).

Mr. Speaker: As there are a number of private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole, is it agreed that in accordance with section 1 of standing order 54 they be referred to committee of the whole on one motion?

Mr. Winch: Are you referring now to Bill No. S-9, Bill No. S-10 down to Bill No. S-12? If so, I should like them taken individually.

Mr. Speaker: The first five items. Does the hon. member wish them to be referred to the committee separately?

Mr. Winch: Bill No. S-9, Bill No. S-10, Bill No. S-14, Bill No. S-15 and Bill No. S-12.

Mr. Speaker: They would be considered separately in committee. What I suggested was that they be referred to the committee at one time so that the committee could deal with them one after another rather than reporting back after each bill. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BROCK ACCEPTANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-9, to incorporate Brock Acceptance Company—Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North)—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Private Bills

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Winch: Could we have an explanation from the sponsor of the bill?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to add to the statement I made on second reading of the bill. It is a bill to incorporate a small loans company under part II of the Small Loans Act to be known as Brock Acceptance Company. The bill was referred to the standing committee and, as hon. members will note, was reported back to the house without amendment.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Provisional directors.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, on clause 2 I should like to propose an idea which I have mentioned previously to the hon. member for Winnipeg North, the sponsor of the bill. I have no knowledge yet of his reaction to the proposal I want to make. Clause 2 provides that the persons named in section 1 shall be the provisional directors of the company. When we were considering a bill respecting Aurora Pipe Line Company last year the committee started upon a course of action to provide that the directors should be Canadian citizens. Another bill passed earlier this session involving another pipe line company contains a similar principle. We agree with this principle and we think that parliament should give expression to it in the incorporation of companies through private bills. Perhaps the government will subsequently see its way clear to follow this practice with respect to companies incorporated under the Companies Act. Therefore I should like to move an amendment to clause 2.

That clause 2 be renumbered as subclause (1) and the following be added as a new subclause (2):

(2) All the directors of the company shall at all times be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada.

This is the wording, Mr. Chairman, that is contained in the act incorporating Aurora Pipe Line Company which was passed at the last session.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): It was brought out in the banking and commerce committee and in the Senate committee that this is a family company being set up by the mother, father and their eldest son. There is in existence an acceptance company known as Brock Acceptance Company, and this bill would merely empower that company to make small loans under part II of the Small Loans Act. The history of small loan companies in Manitoba, as I am sure all hon. members are aware, is that they can be incorporated by special act of the provincial legislature or by obtaining letters patent from the provincial legislature. However, the history in Manitoba is somewhat different. The policing of these companies in this field, as a result of an unfortunate incident many years ago, has been by the director of insurance under the federal authorities. The Manitoba government, therefore, discourages the incorporation of these companies on a provincial basis. They take the view that if these companies are going to be policed by the federal authorities, then they should be incorporated by the federal authorities. This is the main reason incorporation is sought by an act of parliament at this time.

There are a great many companies operating in this field, but only five are incorporated by an act of parliament. If this bill is passed, and the next one on the order paper, there would be seven such companies. In view of the fact that Winnipeg is one of the more progressive areas in Canada, and in view of the fact I have not had an opportunity of determining exactly the effect of this amendment on the operations of this company, as well as the fact that this is a family corporation and in all likelihood will remain so for years to come, I do not feel this amendment is necessary. However, since this is a private bill and I do not wish to waste the time of the house as did the incomparable member for Essex East, if the majority of the members of the committee feel this amendment is necessary then I am sure that those who seek incorporation would be willing to accept it. However, I would point out to the committee that if the situation of this company changes in subsequent years it will be necessary to amend the act to allow for directors other than those covered by this amendment.

Mr. Winch: I find myself in a very peculiar position because I was a member of the banking and commerce committee which studied these bills. The circumstances surrounding these bills are so strange that I have never come up against them before. I would ask the sponsor of this bill, and the following bill, to make a very emphatic declaration in this House of Commons. Strangely enough, Mr. Chairman, it is not possible to refer to the one bill without making some reference to the other because we have an extraordinary situation which came to light as a result of the reference of these bills to the banking and commerce committee.

Upon investigation in the committee we found that the incorporators of this small loan company were named Schwartz, Schwartz and Schwartz, that is, a husband, wife and son, and the incorporators of the other company which will be before us will be engaged in exactly the same business and are related by marriage. I did my best in the committee to find out what the interrelationship was. I am sorry, sir, but I find I am in a position where I cannot understand why two private bills come before this house, both from the same city, both for the same purpose and the incorporators of these companies are interrelated by marriage. Certain affirmations were made in the committee but, in my opinion, it is just too coincidental that this should occur.

There is no transcript of the proceedings of the banking and commerce committee. I do not know the reason for this, but there is no transcript available. Because there is this interrelationship between the two bills in so far as the type of business is concerned and the relationship by marriage of the incorporators, I feel there should be a statement made in this house to assure hon. members that there is no collusion and no business relationship and to explain why we should have these two bills from Winnipeg at the same time. I agreed in committee that the bills should be sent forward to this house, and I think the hon. member will understand why. I ask that the explanation be given here, because there was no transcript of the committee proceedings.

Mr. Aiken: I was a member of the committee which examined this bill and the other bill. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East that we examined these bills very closely, and the hon. member asked a good many questions about the relationship of these parties and their intentions. The principle of this amendment is not one to which I could object, because it is desirable that so far as possible directors of companies should be Canadian residents. However our present difficulty is that we have already passed the bill in committee and the problem was not raised there.

Now at the last moment we are asked to consider an amendment which we have not had time to study fully. There was a question of law raised in connection with the other bill, but I understand we now have an answer to it and can proceed with that bill. However in regard to this bill there is the difficulty that if we incorporate the amendment that is proposed, even if we incorporate it in both bills, it would be a matter of discrimination against the people to whom these two bills apply, discrimination which does not apply in the case of many other private bills now on our statute books.

I believe the proper approach would be a general amendment to bring all private companies under an identical type of restrictive legislation. I believe it would be unfair to introduce it into these two bills now, and I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. Macdonnell: I should like to associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I also was on the committee which had the advantage of hearing a report from the very able superintendent of insurance who had looked into the whole situation. I think everything said by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is true.

Why should we now, without any valid reason that I have heard, introduce this restriction which surely in effect will be discriminatory, as described by the last speaker? For that reason I should like to echo what the last speaker has said, and unless there is a sound answer to that it seems to me it would be utterly impossible for us to accept this amendment.

Mr. Winch: Here is another fact for consideration. It is most unfortunate that we have no record of the proceedings in the committee on banking and commerce. There is no transcript. I do not know why, but there is none. Therefore I think I should put certain matters on record.

I should like to ask a question which I asked in the committee, a question which the hon. member for Greenwood knows I asked. Since this company intends to operate only in Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, why has it felt it necessary to ask for a bill of this kind through the House of Commons and not get a bill through the provincial legislature of Manitoba? In asking that, I realize Manitoba is one of the provinces which will not issue any licence of this kind by letters patent, but from my reading of the bill the people concerned do not intend to operate outside Manitoba whatsoever. But if Manitoba does not issue letters patent, it can issue a bill through the provincial legislature; and I ask why these people ask for a private bill from the House of Commons when they could get the same thing in Manitoba? I repeat that I only ask this question now because there is no transcript of the proceedings in the committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): The hon. member has raised two points, first with regard to the family connection and second, with regard to the procedure involved in incorporating this company. I am sure the hon. member will recall that the procedure for incorporation of companies of this nature in the province of Manitoba was explained quite fully in the committee by Mr. MacGregor, the superintendent of insurance.

Some years ago the province of Manitoba had an unfortunate experience with regard to companies of this nature and companies of other natures in this field, acceptance companies and so on, which had to be wound up and which resulted in a substantial loss to a great many citizens in the province. I do not know if it was due to inadequate policing or inadequate regulations, but I do know that since that time the province of Manitoba has asked, as I said earlier, to have federal inspection of companies operating in this field within the province even though they are not subject to federal inspection. Also since that time the government of Manitoba has been very reluctant to incorporate companies in this field, either by letters patent or by private act of the provincial legislature, because they have taken the view that if these companies are subjected to federal inspection then they should be incorporated by federal act of parliament.

There is also the point that even though at present a company intends to operate only in Winnipeg it may find in the not too distant future that it wishes to operate in other provinces such as Ontario and Saskatchewan. Because of the difficulty of incorporating in Manitoba they must incorporate in the Dominion of Canada, and this not only gives them a wider field of operations but it also gives them the prestige of being dominion companies.

With regard to the family tie up, I do not think I need to go into that in any detail. I do not think my brother and I are in the same business, and even if we were I do not think anyone could tell me I was running his affairs or he was running mine. The sponsor and petitioners in each bill are interrelated by marriage, but it is also true that they are outstanding families. The Schwartzs and the Arkins are outstanding families in the city of Winnipeg, and from their common start they have branched out into their own businesses. They have each set up acceptance companies in order to facilitate their transacting business in various fields; and now each of them, at the same time, is applying for a licence under part 2 of the Small Loans Act to incorporate a small loans company.

I discussed this with the department of insurance as I was quite sure that hon. members who knew of the family relationship would wonder why they were doing this simultaneously. The department of insurance informed me they had the same thought in mind, and made a very thorough investigation in order to determine whether or not there was anything being done that should not be done. Having concluded their investigations, and I am sure all hon. members will agree on the efficiency of the department, they saw nothing wrong. They saw no objections which they could raise in the committee of the other place or in the banking and commerce committee of the House of Commons. No objection was raised there. In the banking and commerce committee of the House of Commons this question was raised repeatedly. We were told about the investigations that had been conducted and we were given the assurance of the superintendent of insurance that there was nothing that had not been disclosed or uncovered to prevent the two from applying for a licence at the same time.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I am not too much concerned about the interrelationship of the two families here. In fact I did not know it existed until that fact was mentioned just now. Not being a member of the banking and commerce committee, wherein this matter was gone into thoroughly, I would not have the opportunity of knowing it unless I inquired of our members on that committee what had been discussed.

However, the point of the amendment is that all the directors of the company shall at all times be Canadian citizens, following the practice we started last year with respect to Aurora pipe lines. The hon. member for Greenwood said this amendment has come in at this stage with no valid reason. That is what I understood from his words. Therefore, he said, we should not accept it.

There is a very valid reason for the amendment. It is a simple, uncomplicated reason. It is that we desire corporations which exist and operate within Canada to have boards of directors consisting of Canadian citizens. That is a valid enough reason. The reasoning behind the amendment, if one wants to go further into it, can be found in various speeches made by the Prime Minister before he reached the exalted position that he now holds. This was one of his key arguments and expressions throughout the country, that there should be Canadian ownership of industry and the like. We have just spent two or three days dealing with the same subject matter in part with respect to a bill introduced by the Minister of Justice regarding statistical information from corporations and trade unions.

The reasons are simple, and I think they are also valid. The hon. member for Winnipeg North who sponsored the bill has indicated that this is a family corporation. But it may not always be that way. I have not the faintest idea what is the situation here. I know of other family corporations which have got into difficulty and in order to obtain financial support to expand the business have had to sell out the corporation to United States interests. This is one of the reasons why there is increasing United States control and ownership of Canadian industry. The reason is that private companies find it necessary to go to that market in order to get money, thereby selling the corporation in the process.

The hon. member who sponsored the bill, as I understood him, said that if there is a subsequent change in this regard the bill would have to come back to parliament for alteration. I think this is not the case, because clause 1, which we have already passed, reads as follows:

> Beatrice Harriet Cohen, spinster, Arthur John Arkin, manager, and Jack Isaac Arkin, manager, all of the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, together with such other persons as become shareholders in the company, are incorporated—

Therefore the way is open now for other people, once this bill becomes law, to become shareholders, and for those shareholders at some subsequent time, without coming back to parliament and without asking for an alteration to the bill, to participate in electing members to the board of directors. It could then very easily be that those members might not be Canadian citizens, depending upon what activity takes place within the company after its incorporation.

For this reason I think the sponsor of the bill is in error when he says that a change in the directorship of the company must be effected by way of amending legislation in a future session. That is not so. What may take place is contained in the bill at the moment, the same as with all companies. I agree with the contention of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka that a better course to follow would be to do this by way of general legislation which would apply equally to all companies incorporated in this fashion. I think, as I said earlier, that there should be an extension of this principle to companies which are incorporated not only by way of private act but under the Companies Act.

However, we do not have that sort of general legislation. If the Prime Minister really believed what he stated on a number of occasions before the last general election, then perhaps general legislation would have been introduced in this parliament to put into practice and effect the principles which he espoused and which he said were part of the Conservative program. But we have not any general legislation; we have not any indication from the government that it really believes in this sort of approach.

At the last session of parliament after long, long debate and disagreement, and some hard feelings perhaps—which I hope have now gone—we established this principle with respect to the Aurora Pipe Line Company.

That amendment, which is exactly the same as this, was accepted by the committee. This year a similar bill has been passed with respect to Polaris pipe lines, I believe sponsored by the hon. member for Peace River. The bill with respect to that company contains a provision akin to that which is before the committee at the moment.

I think the amendment would not cause hardship to anyone. I am sure the people named in clause 1 of the bill, who will be the corporation itself, would not object one bit to this amendment. The hon. member for Winnipeg North has said that they are outstanding, fine citizens in the community of Winnipeg. There is no question in my mind that they would say, "Yes, we welcome such an amendment to this bill, because that is what we believe in as Canadian citizens; we believe that the corporate structure in Canada should be that way".

I have heard no real, valid reason why we should not proceed with this particular amendment. If there were valid reasons, surely they would have been put forward and propounded when we moved a similar amendment with respect to the incorporation of Aurora pipe lines, which of course was not a family company in any sense of the word. But there was no objection last year; the committee unanimously said, "Yes, this is a fine principle to have established with respect to Aurora pipe lines". If it is a fine principle, why do we not now adopt with respect to Brock Acceptance Limited and other companies which are incorporated in the future in similar fashion? Why do we not now accept this principle, in the hope that the government itself will come along with legislation of a general nature so that we will have the principle established and will not have to go through this process bill after bill after bill and remind the government that we are attempting to put its promises into effect; promises, incidentally, which coincide with our concepts and ideas.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just one or two words about the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena for whom I have a very high regard. As I pointed out at the beginning of my remarks, I wanted to hear comments from other hon. members of the house, and I thank the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) for giving very valid reasons as to why this amendment should not be accepted.

I would also like to point out that were we to amend this bill by putting this restriction in it, we could expect that governments in other countries would include the same type of restriction in bills with regard to Canadian companies doing business in those countries. I would point out to the house that in respect of item No. 4 on today's order paper—which is a bill I am also sponsoring—with regard to another company, that company does the majority of its business in the United States of America. It would be rather difficult for us to pass this bill with the amendment and say all these directors must be Canadians, and then come down to item No. 4 and say, "Well, here we have the reverse; therefore we should put in a provision that all directors should be Americans". I think we would find ourselves in a position that could not at anytime be maintained.

I should also like to say in closing that I should like to see the hon. member bring forward some form of bill with regard to directorships of unions operating in Canada affecting directors who are not Canadian citizens and who do not reside in this country.

Mr. Winch: I find it difficult to understand why there should be this opposition to the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Skeena. He is saying that all directors of companies shall at all times be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. I cannot understand why there should be any objection to that. I sat through every meeting of the committee on banking and commerce in connection with this matter and as I pointed out at that time, and point out again, I found it most extraordinary that we had before us at one time four private bills, all from Winnipeg. Two of them were completely tied together, the bill which is now before us, Bill No. S-9, and Bill No. S-10. I hope you will allow me to refer to them both for a few moments, Mr. Chairman.

If we take Bill No. S-9 and Bill No. S-10 we shall find that they have identical wording except where they deal with incorporation, and that differs only in the names of the incorporators. In Bill No. S-10 it is Schwartz, Schwartz and Schwartz. In Bill No. S-9 which we are now discussing it is Cohen, Arkin and Arkin. According to the information given to us in the committee this is a combination of family and business completely. Why there should not have been just one bill brought in on a combination of family businesses I do not know. However, this I do know: that on my questioning in the committee on banking and commerce—and the hon. member for Greenwood was there—there was no intention of any outside Canadian control of Canadian investment and there was no collusion on the basis of operation between the two families, one, Schwartz, Schwartz and Schwartz and the other of Arkin. Surely, therefore, I suggest to the hon. member for Greenwood through you, Mr. Chairman, in view of what he heard in the committee and in view of this most strange coincidence of these two bills coming in from the same city, dealing with the same business and the same family, there ought not to be any objection to a clause which says that all directors of the companies shall be Canadian citizens.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Vancouver East insists on discussing in connection with this bill another bill which has not yet been introduced in the house and I respectfully suggest that in so doing he is completely out of order.

Mr. Winch: I respectfully suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that when we have a bill before us, and one which is to follow identical in terms and having to do with the same business and the same family, changing only the names, I am completely in order in saying that in discussing the one bill we are at liberty to consider how it is related to the other.

The Chairman: On that point of order, I believe the hon. member for Vancouver East is using Bill No. S-10 only as a basis for comparison for discussing matters which come under the amendment being considered. As long as he does not get into the principle or the details of the other bill I think he would be in order.

Mr. Pitman: I should like to say a few words on this amendment. It seems to me that we have spent a great deal of time in the last few days talking about ownership. The whole tenor of the argument used by the Minister of Justice was that we were seeking to secure information and that as a result of obtaining this information we would be able to ascertain the extent of foreign control over the various business enterprises which we have in Canada. Although this is not the kind of company which would come under the disclosure bill which we have passed, and which this group vigorously opposed at some points, the Minister of Justice indicated nevertheless that this kind of information would be sought from companies which came under other types of legislation, banks, transportation companies and so on. The whole intent was to convince this house that this was an important first step toward understanding the nature of our economy in order that no more foreign control would take place.

I was interested in the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North when he said that if we voted for this kind of amendment whereby we tried to determine that Canadian directors would be in control of this particular company this would be a very dangerous thing, because possibly the United States would demand that the same thing be done. If we follow this argument logically it completely destroys the proposition which the Minister of Justice was putting before us last week during the discussion of the disclosure bill. He gave us to believe that legislation would follow this bill and that once we had determined the extent of this control we would take measures to try to handle it. If we follow the reasoning put forward in the discussion of this bill it negates every concept which the Minister of Justice was putting before us last week.

We are not trying to be perverse in the discussion of this seemingly small and unimportant piece of legislation, in the eyes of many members of the house. We are trying to adopt the principle which this government has placed before us and which we agree with. Our whole attitude toward the disclosure bill was not that this was undesirable in itself but that the bill would not do what it purported to do—that it was not going far enough. Most of the speeches we made during the discussion of that bill in committee were to the effect that we already had a tremendous amount of information from the dominion bureau of statistics as to the extent of foreign control over our enterprises—92 per cent over the rubber industry, 65 per cent in certain areas of secondary manufacturing, and so on. The whole suggestion was that once we had more information under this bill we would do something about it. We said we already had information over some 30 years and unless the government was going to prove by some piece of action that it was going to do something we were unconvinced.

Last year there was a long and rigorous discussion having to do with Aurora pipe lines before it was finally incorporated, and we tried to encourage Canadian ownership and Canadian directors there. I wonder if the hon. member for Winnipeg North would be willing to accept another kind of amendment, an amendment which stated that the majority of the directors of the Brock Acceptance Company should be Canadian. This, surely, is not one which could possibly be looked upon with disfavour by anyone. We in this corner believe implicitly in what the hon. member said, that this is a respectable and forward-looking group in Winnipeg which is going to do something for the financial stature of that community. We accept this. But surely he would not be unwilling to agree that the majority of the directors of the firm should be Canadians.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that this amendment is brought forward at this date. No matter how valid the general premise may be or how worthy the general principle may be, this amendment in application to this company is discriminatory. If the group who have brought in the amendment were sincere in this request they would have raised the matter in committee. Certain questions were raised but not with respect to all the directors. At that time the sponsor would have been able to provide an answer concerning whether or not there would be objection. He is now unable to obtain that information and is not in a position to give an answer.

Mr. Winch: Will they object to this?

Mr. Morton: I assure the hon. gentleman I have no objection to the general principle but I object to this attempt to discriminate against one company that happens to come before the house at a particular time. I believe it is wrong to apply against one company a general principle not applicable to all similar companies. I do not think the committee should be put in the unreasonable position of acting in the arbitrary fashion suggested.

Mr. Winch: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Morton: Certainly.

Mr. Winch: This company has to come before the House of Commons to get this authority. Am I not correct in saying they could have gone before the legislature of Manitoba and obtained the same authority?

Mr. Morton: If the hon. gentleman will recall the answer that was given, it was a matter of policy that they should be required to come before parliament in order that there should be more control over companies of this type. I think the company has every right to come to the house and be given the same treatment as any other company that comes before us.

Mr. Winch: Could they not have obtained the same authority under an act of the Manitoba legislature?

Mr. Morton: Technically, no. They could have obtained authority to act within the province of Manitoba but if they wish to go outside the province, as they may wish to do, they would require a federal charter.

Mr. Winch: Where is authority for that statement to be found?

Mr. Morton: It is a matter of jurisdiction.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I believe the hon. member for Peterborough, who can correct me if I am wrong, mentioned something to the effect that this amendment would ensure Canadian control of this company and that these people would desire this amendment. May I say to the hon. gentleman that these people are, have been and always will be Canadians. Anything they can do in this business will be, and anything they have done in any other business has been for the benefit not only of the city of Winnipeg and province of Manitoba but every Canadian in this country; and this will continue to be so. The hon. member need have no worry about that.

Mr. Howard: The emotionalism exhibited by the hon. member for Davenport and the sponsor of the bill indicates they are on the wrong track. This amendment has nothing to do with the individuals concerned.

Mr. McCleave: It is anti-Semitism.

Mr. Howard: The sponsor said they are Canadians, which is fine and dandy. We are concerned with the principle that the directors at all times should be Canadian citizens.

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the hon. member not agree that the principle of the amendment has everything to do with them?

Mr. Howard: It would if they were not Canadian citizens. It would mean they could not be on the board of directors. These are the directors of the company. They are fine, outstanding Canadian citizens and there is no argument about that at all. We say that the directors at all times should be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. It will apply to these directors as long as they are directors, and it will also apply to the company and future directors. The emotionalism displayed by the two hon. gentlemen about the individuals concerned reveals they are on the wrong track. This is not a discriminatory approach as the hon. member for Davenport indicated.

We have only one bill before us, which is all we can deal with. We draw a distinction between this bill and the next with respect to which we propose to move exactly the same amendment. We can deal only with the bill before us. If that is discrimination, every hon. member discriminates when he participates in any debate on the measure then before the house.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North did not answer the question of the hon. member for Peterborough. Would he be prepared to accept an amendment which would say the majority of directors shall be Canadian citizens if the present amendment is so objectionable?

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: Yeas, 4; nays, 30.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we believe this is an important principle.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is now six o'clock.

It being six o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. McCleave: You fellows hate Quebec, don't you?

Clause 2 stands.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this evening I present my sixth budget. There were as well the financial proposals introduced on December 6, 1957. Each has been designed to serve a long range goal; each has been fashioned also to meet the needs and conditions of its own time. The goal I defined in these words:

The abiding goal of our fiscal policy is the maintenance of a sustainable rate of growth in terms of employment, development of resources, and a sound dollar.

Budgets are normally annual. The fiscal program for the year must be adapted to existing economic conditions. These in an open dynamic and sensitive economy like Canada's are always changing. Flexibility must therefore characterize our financial programs. Adaptation has marked our annual budget programs in these past five years, adaptation to conditions, adaptation to change.

Je suis heureux de signaler que les circonstances dans lesquelles se présente ce budget du Canada sont une prospérité grandissante, un nombre accru d'emplois, de plus grandes possibilités et une rapide croissance économique. La politique énoncée dans ce budget demeurera expansionniste, adaptée à la conjoncture économique nationale. Telle est la note dominante de mon discours.

I am happy to report that the circumstances attending this Canadian budget are rising prosperity, more jobs, greater opportunities, and rapid economic growth. The policy expressed in this budget will continue to be expansionist, suited to our national economic circumstances. This is my keynote.

[The Chairman.]

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1961-62

The financial transactions of the government for the fiscal year which ended on March 31 are set forth and analysed in detail in the white paper which was tabled and published yesterday. I need therefore refer to them only briefly this evening. The figures presently available are, of course, subject to some changes, since many payments must still be made and the final figures will not be available until the accounts for the year have been closed and audited.

In my last previous budget ten months ago I forecast revenues for the fiscal year ended March 31 at $5,765 million. Our current estimate is $5,772 million, an increase of $7 million, within one eighth of one per cent of the forecast. Expenditures which were forecast at $6,415 million have turned out to be $6,563 million, an increase of $148 million, or 2¼ per cent. More than four fifths of this excess is due, however, to events and policy decisions which could not have been foreseen when the earlier budget was presented. There has been an increase of $40 million in defence expenditures resulting from policy decisions made and announced at the time of the Berlin crisis last August, and the abnormally low crop yields on the prairies required an increase of $40 million in statutory disbursements under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and resulted in the decision in this present session to provide further payments of $42 million to western grain producers. Apart from these three items expenditures for the past year were about $25 million, or two fifths of one per cent higher than originally forecast.

The budgetary deficit for the year just ended is thus $791 million, or $141 million greater than last June's estimate, due to the cost of the unforeseen events to which I have just referred. These additional costs received the unanimous approval of the house, except perhaps for certain hon. members who argued that they should have been considerably greater.

Our non-budgetary receipts and disbursements have differed considerably from the figures I put forward in June, but it will be recalled that my June budget statement explicitly excluded any forecast of unpredictable changes in the exchange fund. Last June I expected an over-all cash requirement of $980 million. It now appears that our over-all cash deficit has been only $479 million. This reduction of $500 million in our cash requirements is largely the result of repayments of more than $240 million from earlier advances to the exchange fund, a reduction of about $40 million in the advances anticipated under the National Housing Act due to market sales by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of over $40 million of existing mortgages, a decrease in loans to Canadian National Railways of some $40 million, and the repayment of $67 million of advances to the unemployment insurance commission. As a result of the reorganization of the unemployment insurance fund to which I referred last June we have replaced cash advances to the unemployment insurance commission by the purchase of its former portfolio and by redemptions from its holdings of non-marketable bonds.

In conformity with the Old Age Security Act I should also report to the house the current position of the old age security fund. Details of this are set forth on pages 2805 and 2806 of the white paper. In brief, the revenues of the fund under the statute for the past year have been $649 million, the pension payments including the increase to $65 a month effective February 1, 1962, have totalled $625 million resulting in a surplus for the year of $24 million. There was, however, an outstanding loan to the fund by the Minister of Finance of $17 million a year ago. This was repaid, leaving a surplus of $7 million.

For the new fiscal year, 1962-63, total benefit payments under the Old Age Security Act will be about $736 million, revenues under the act will be about $672 million which will result in a deficit for the year of $64 million and an accumulated deficit of $57 million. We shall be giving this subject further consideration in the light of future policy decisions regarding social welfare pension plans following the present consultation with the provinces as to a constitutional amendment to permit parliament to legislate a contributory plan with survivors' benefits. Studies in relation to portability of pensions also are being actively pursued.

ECONOMIC REVIEW

It is a source of satisfaction to be able to report to the house, first, that the Canadian economy is experiencing healthy expansion; second, that this expansion is considerably more rapid than in the last similar period and that our international trade and payments are in better balance than they have been for many years; third, that measures taken by this government are contributing constructively and decisively to these developments; and fourth, that given continuation and adaptation of these measures this new fiscal year, we have good reason to expect substantial further economic growth and prosperity.

The increase in levels of economic activity during the course of 1961 has indeed been impressive. The gross national product, expressed at annual rates, increased from the first quarter of the year to the fourth quarter by $2.4 billion, a gain of 7 per cent. From March to December 1961, the index of industrial output rose by more than 9 per cent. By the year end it was nearly 5 per cent higher than it had ever been before. Particularly sharp advances were achieved in the output of certain types of heavy industry. For example, production of steel ingots in 1961 was 12 per cent greater than in 1960, and reached a record high of almost 6½ million tons. Over the past five years output of this basic product has increased by 23 per cent, and the capacity of the entire industry has been expanded, broadened and diversified. Today this industry is meeting more of our domestic needs. In 1956 Canadian producers supplied 70 per cent of our steel requirements; since then this proportion has risen to approximately 80 per cent. A wide range of primary and secondary steel products previously supplied from abroad, such as heavy steel shapes and large diameter pipe, is now being produced in Canadian mills. Our exports of steel products have also been higher. This is but one example of the many industries in Canada which have been progressing and developing notwithstanding the changing world economic environment.

Mining output, too, has reached new peaks, rising sharply in the course of the past year. The largest increases have been in the production of nickel, asbestos, natural gas and petroleum.

Exports of Canadian goods rose sharply in 1961, and in the fourth quarter of 1961 reached a level of $6,256 million, seasonally adjusted at annual rates, 19 per cent above the level achieved in the fourth quarter of 1960. The house is well aware of the success which has crowned our efforts to expand sales of agricultural products, especially wheat. But the house may not be fully aware of the substantial increases which have taken place in sales abroad of other Canadian products such as livestock, cotton textiles, industrial machinery, electrical apparatus, petroleum, nickel, basic plastics, asbestos and chemicals. The increases in the exports of these products in 1961 over 1960 have exceeded $150 million.

In response to the quickened tempo of economic activity in 1961, employment increased substantially. In 1960, when all of the gain in employment took place in the service industries, women accounted for most of the increase, but in 1961 increased employment in manufacturing was particularly significant and it involved a substantial growth in male employment. In February 1962 there were 196,000 more people employed in Canada than a year earlier, and of these 164,000 were men. Accordingly there was a significant drop in the rate of unemployment, particularly among men.

Largely as a result of this increase in employment labour income increased markedly during 1961. Over the eight months from April to December 1961, the increase in labour income equalled that of the 15 preceding months. Business profits increased sharply as well, and by the fourth quarter of 1961 had reached a new peak of $3.8 billion, 4 per cent higher than ever before.

Increased incomes encouraged increased consumer spending which rose by over $800 million during 1961. By the end of 1961, the level of consumer spending was nearly 8 per cent higher than it had been at the previous peak of business activity.

This acceleration in the tempo of our economy is highly gratifying. The rate of expansion during the last nine months of 1961 was more rapid than in comparable stages of the preceding cyclical advance in 1958. During the first nine months of the previous expansion the volume of non-farm output increased by only about 3 per cent. During the first nine months of the present expansion, the increase has been almost 5 per cent. The expansion which we have enjoyed in 1961 has already taken the volume of non-farm output to a level 4 per cent higher than the previous peak. By a similar point in the previous expansion the volume of non-farm output was about 1½ per cent above its previous peak.

All too often in the past a resurgence in economic activity has been accompanied by substantial increase in prices. Happily, this has not been our experience in 1961. During the last nine months of 1961 the consumer price index increased by only half of 1 per cent, while in the comparable period of the previous advance it went up by 1½ per cent. Having in mind our very proper concern over the dangers of inflation I am sure the house and the people of Canada will welcome such striking evidence of price stability.

A little earlier, Mr. Speaker, I outlined the substantial growth in exports which was achieved in 1961. Imports of goods increased in 1961 by 3 per cent amounting to $5,717 million with most of the increase occurring in the later months of the year. A substantial increase in imports is quite normal during a business upturn. But contrary to previous experience, exports have increased much more rapidly than imports. As a result we were able to achieve a sizeable trading surplus on merchandise account totalling $179 million. This is the first favourable balance of trade of any consequence that this country has achieved in the last ten years and is in contrast to a record deficit on merchandise account of $728 million in 1956. This improvement in our trade position was more than sufficient to offset an increase in our deficit on non-merchandise account. Consequently the total current account deficit in the balance of payments was reduced to $989 million in 1961. This represents a 19 per cent reduction from the deficit in 1960 and a 28 per cent reduction from the deficit in 1956. In fact the deficit in 1961 was the lowest since 1955.

The growth of our economy in recent years has revealed itself in a number of other ways besides the improvement in our balance of payments. In fact, Mr. Speaker, key economic statistics adjusted for normal seasonal trends show that our record is better than that of either of our major trading partners, Great Britain and the United States. From 1957 to the end of 1961 industrial production in the United States increased by 15 per cent, while in Great Britain it increased by 12 per cent; in Canada it grew by more than 16 per cent. During this same period total British exports rose less than 8 per cent and total United States exports less than 6 per cent; Canadian exports in the same period surged forward by more than 30 per cent. Employment in both Great Britain and the United States increased by about 3 per cent; employment in Canada grew by almost 8 per cent. At the same time prices increased less in Canada than in either Great Britain or the United States.

This marked improvement in our economic situation has not happened by chance. In my budget speech last June I said that the cyclical recovery which was beginning to appear at that time was likely to be weak and unsatisfactory unless there was some positive government stimulus. I affirmed that an appropriate blending of fiscal, financial and commercial policies was required to impart an impetus to the economy, to employ unused productive capacity, to stimulate growth, to increase trade and thus to expand employment opportunities for our people. Since then we have witnessed a major expansion. The vigour of the expansion that has occurred is due in no small measure to the blend of sound, strong policies we have introduced. While many of these policies have been directed towards particular situations of a specific nature, they have been part of a coherent and co-ordinated approach to the broad objective of improving the performance of the Canadian economy in both the short run and the long run.

In the short run we had as our objective the expansion of domestic demand to take up the slack in the productive resources of the country. To this end we planned and incurred a substantial fiscal deficit. As I explained to the house in my last budget speech, by means of such a deficit the government places in the hands of the public more purchasing power than it draws from it. The increased demand thus generated encourages higher levels of production and employment.

A deficit appropriate in size to economic circumstances such as we have confronted may result from a variety of fiscal measures. Tax cuts, increases in direct expenditures by the government on goods and services, and increases in transfer payments to persons or to other levels of government, may be used singly or in combination. This government has, as you know, made significant tax cuts in order to stimulate consumer demand. Generally speaking there have been only moderate increases in total direct government expenditures on goods and services. Total expenditures on goods and services by the federal government have been a smaller proportion of gross national expenditure in 1961 than they were in 1956. Our most important contribution to the expansion of purchasing power, demand and economic growth, throughout the length and breadth of the country has been through increases in welfare payments and in transfer payments to provinces and municipalities. We have greatly increased payments to meet the needs of old persons, of veterans, of the unemployed. We have consistently chosen to augment the incomes of these people. We have also provided large sums of money for the income maintenance of both farmers and fishermen. Similarly, this government has greatly aided provincial and municipal governments in finding the funds to provide adequate services in their areas of responsibility. Consequently we have given priority to their needs over increases in our own direct federal expenditures. Payments out of the federal treasury to individuals increased by 65 per cent from 1,224 million in 1956 to 2,014 million in 1961. Payments out of the federal treasury to provincial and municipal governments rose over 130 per cent from 485 million in 1956 to 1,123 million in 1961. These increased payments provided a significant stimulus to the whole economy as well as enormous assistance to the other two levels of government in this country.

The stimulation of demand is a desirable objective when there are pools of unused productive resources in the country. But in the long run more is required than mere expansion of demand. People must steadily become more skilled and versatile in order to compete in this increasingly complex world of technological revolution. And they must have at their disposal modern plants and equipment, efficient transportation, abundant fuel and power, all provided at reasonable cost. Our policies have been designed to meet these requirements. In co-operation with the provinces we have encouraged and heavily financed basic and advanced training in technical and vocational schools. We have greatly increased our financial assistance to universities in support of higher education for a greater proportion of our young people. During the fiscal year ended March 31 we have spent on these programs alone about $80 million, four times more than was spent five years ago. As already announced, we shall be adding substantially to these contributions in the new fiscal year.

Parallel to this policy of improving the technical skills of our people, we have encouraged the modernization and diversification of our industry. Special capital cost allowances for re-equipment and modernization and double depreciation allowances for products new to Canada or new to designated areas of surplus manpower were introduced in the last two budgets to stimulate expenditures on plant and equipment. The establishment of a productivity council and the introduction last year of special incentives to private research are improving the output of Canadian industry. Later this evening I shall be making further proposals to stimulate technological research and development.

The government has pursued a vigorous policy of developing Canadian resources in all parts of the country. The national oil policy has, by providing markets for oil at home and abroad, brought about a substantial increase in production of this important source of energy. In recent weeks we have taken the initiative in exploring in co-operation with the provinces the technical problems of long distance, high voltage transmission systems for electric power.

The establishment of a new federal Department of Forestry reflects the interest of the government in this valuable Canadian resource and its determination to help in ensuring that Canadians will benefit to the maximum extent possible from the future growth of world markets in wood and wood products. Action has been taken to push the frontiers northward and to improve the opportunities for exploiting the riches, particularly the mineral resources, in our more remote areas. The roads to resources program and the recent legislation for the construction of the Pine Point, Gaspe and northern Manitoba-Optic lake railways are striking examples of the government's vigorous effort in this field.

In addition to these and many other projects which are already under way, the government has taken action which holds the promise that an extensive but well-balanced program for the development of Canadian resources will continue apace in the future. In October of last year, the resources for tomorrow conference held in Montreal provided a unique opportunity for an intensive survey and study of the potential for Canadian development of renewable resources. The benefits from this broad assessment of opportunities and challenges will be felt increasingly in years to come as Canadians bend to the task of managing our land, water and forest resources. As a first step in the government's comprehensive approach, the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act was designed to make the most effective use of our land, to raise the productivity of our agricultural resources, and to provide for rural adjustment and better income opportunities in rural areas.

Measures related to the functioning of our capital markets have assisted Canadian business to find from domestic sources the capital necessary to expand both production and exports. The wide expansion of activities by the Industrial Development Bank is now providing capital to small and medium sized business at the rate of $100 million a year. In the 1957 fiscal year the bank approved 401 loans totalling $30 million; in the 1961 fiscal year the bank approved 1,364 loans amounting to $71 million. In the past three years ten new branches have been opened and the bank now has 16 regional offices doing business across the country. The new policy of guaranteeing term loans to small businesses by the chartered banks is rapidly achieving results. Export Credits Insurance Corporation has experienced a fourfold expansion of business over the past few years. These are some of the results that testify to the vigour of the government's measures.

In addition, improvements in the field of debt management, combined with a policy of monetary expansion pursued by the Bank of Canada, have improved our capital markets. In spite of a large increase in the total demands on our capital markets last year, and in spite of a reduction in the inflow of foreign capital to supplement our own financial resources, interest rates in this country are now lower than they were a year ago. The spread between interest rates in Canada and those in the United States has narrowed. Consequently the incentive to capital inflows has been considerably reduced. Later this evening I shall discuss in some detail our exchange rate policy and the beneficial results it is achieving. At this point I shall say only that, largely as a result of the reduction in the external value of the Canadian dollar, prices of Canadian goods are more competitive at home and abroad, and Canadian production is being effectively stimulated.

In connection with these financial developments I should like to express my warm appreciation of the assistance I have received from the Bank of Canada. At the time of Mr. Rasminsky's appointment as governor last July he and I, in separate statements, agreed that a judicious and co-ordinated combination of monetary, fiscal and debt management policies was needed for the promotion of national economic growth and prosperity. We both emphasized the importance of regular and close consultation in order to achieve that co-ordination of policies. Since his appointment the governor and I have held regular meetings at least once a week, and I have profited greatly from our exchange of views and information.

Let me turn to the future, Mr. Speaker. Recent economic developments have been encouraging, but we must not be complacent. We still have unused capacity in our industry; seasonally adjusted unemployment fell from 7.8 per cent in February 1961 to 6.0 per cent in February 1962, but this gratifying reduction must be carried much further; and our balance of payments position needs to be still further improved. The economic upswing which we are enjoying is strong, but we must not be content to assume that it will automatically carry forward to the point where our productive capacity is fully utilized. The co-ordinated policies announced last summer were good and our resulting progress has been vigorous. However, that progress has not yet reached a point where a fundamental change in approach is required, we must be careful to avoid a premature dampening down of the upswing which is under way. Fiscal policy must continue to provide stimulus to the economy and further specific measures must be introduced to improve the quality and quantity of our industrial output, thereby stimulating employment and income. These are matters to which I shall return a little later.

The momentum of the upswing now under way, reinforced by the measures already introduced and by others to be announced tonight, will carry the level of economic activity in Canada to record heights. Assuming normal crops and no unforeseen adverse events, I expect that the growth in gross national product from 1961 to 1962 will be about 7 per cent. An increase of this magnitude has been exceeded only twice in the last ten years.

Mr. Speaker, I had expected at this point to say something at length on the subject of international economic developments, but unless the house is prepared to extend the time of this evening's sitting there will not be time for that chapter.

MANAGEMENT OF THE PUBLIC DEBT

During the past fiscal year we have introduced a number of significant changes in the management of the public debt which have lent strength and stability to the bond market. The fluctuations in market yields of government securities have been quite moderate, the trend of interest rates has been downward and the differential between yields on United States and Canadian government securities has been substantially narrowed. The results have been very beneficial to the Canadian economy.

In the past 12 months total sales of new issues of government bonds have amounted to $3,451 million, of which $2,233 million were market issues and $1,218 million were non-market issues, mostly Canada savings bonds. On the other hand $549 million of market bonds matured and were paid off, $883 million were retired by advance refunding, $486 million were acquired and cancelled prior to maturity, and $676 million of non-market bonds were encashed. The net result is that the outstanding amount of market bonds increased by $315 million and of non-market bonds by $542 million. Mr. Speaker, the table which I should ask leave to have printed in Hansard at this point contains the more detailed statistics of these issues and retirements.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to incorporate the table just referred to at this point in his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

Mr. Speaker: Having regard to past experience there may be other tables, and there might be an economy of time if the house would concur now in the incorporation of such other tables as the minister may introduce. Agreed?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker, I think we should see these tables.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me say very simply, Mr. Speaker, that in the matter of economy of time the speech I have prepared, as I have indicated, could not be completed unless the house were prepared to extend the time of sitting, as I wish to make it a firm rule that there should be a reasonable time left for reply by the opposition tonight.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): On that point, Mr. Speaker, the minister will know that we have already agreed to the extension of his time on this subject. When we talk about tables not being printed automatically in Hansard, of course if they are long tables they should go in, but if they are short ones naturally the minister would like to read them.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say on behalf of this group that we will agree to the minister's time being extended provided he agrees on behalf of the government to permit this budget debate to be continued tomorrow, and continued without interruption for six days as provided by the rules.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In my budget speech last June I said that in order to avoid congestion in the long term bond market we would for at least several months confine new federal issues to short term bonds. During the past nine months we have issued no long term bonds; $375 million ranging in term from 5¼ to 6 years were placed directly with the Bank of Canada, and the terms of all other market issues in no case exceeded 3½ years. This policy of not issuing long term bonds has rendered important assistance to the provinces and municipalities and to corporations in meeting their long term capital requirements. We intend to continue a debt management program that will promote a sound and orderly investment market and investor confidence.

As announced in the June budget, we purchased last September at their book value all bonds held in the unemployment insurance fund and out of these proceeds, plus its net revenues in October and November, the unemployment insurance commission repaid to the treasury the $67 million of cash advances previously made to the fund and purchased $162 million of non-marketable bonds redeemable at par at any time on 30 days' notice. Of these non-marketable bonds $109 million have since been encashed.

The June budget also announced that we would establish a purchase fund to provide for the orderly retirement of government debt and at the same time contribute to the stability of the longer term bond market. The initial amount made available to the purchase fund was $100 million, and in September the house was informed that we would not limit our purchase fund operations to this amount. To date the purchase fund has acquired $166 million par value of long term bonds in the market at a cost of $157 million, and all these bonds have been cancelled. I propose to continue to operate the purchase fund during the coming year.

I should like to refer to the increasing popularity and effectiveness of our Canada savings bond issues. In recent years individuals of moderate incomes have shown increasing interest in investing a substantial amount of their savings in Canada savings bonds. At the end of 1957 the outstanding amount of Canada savings bonds was $2,649 million, which was about $100 million greater than a year earlier. During 1958 the holdings of Canada savings bonds increased by $250 million, in 1959 by $300 million, in 1960 by almost $400 million and in 1961 by nearly $500 million. The total holdings of Canada savings bonds on December 31, 1961 was $4,080 million, a net increase of $1,539 million in five years.

Interest rates on government securities have declined during the past year. The average interest rate on three month treasury bills during March, 1962 was 3.09 per cent, or one eighth per cent below the rate in March, 1961. Between the same periods the yields on two to ten year bonds have dropped by about three quarter per cent, and on over ten year bonds by one quarter to one half per cent. Of even greater significance has been the narrowing of the spread between interest yields on United States and Canadian government issues. The spread between average Canadian and American treasury bill yields during March, 1961 was 0.83 per cent, during the past month it has been 0.36 per cent. In the long term bond area the spread during the first half of 1961 was between 1.25 and 1.40 per cent; from July to September the spread was around 1.00 per cent and during the past month it has averaged 0.89 per cent.

The total net government debt is now $13.2 billion. This amounts to $712 per capita as compared with $685 a year ago, $701 in 1956 and $774 in 1952. As a percentage of gross national product our net debt now stands at 35.9 per cent as compared with 34.6 per cent a year ago, 41.6 per cent in 1956 and 52.8 per cent in 1952.

The net interest cost of our net debt in the current year has been 3.77 per cent, a decline from 3.80 per cent a year ago and 4.10 per cent two years ago. The average term of our outstanding debt, excluding Canada savings bonds and perpetuals, was 8.3 years on December 31, 1961. In 1960 it was 9.4 years, in 1956 6.6 years and in 1952 6.8 years.

Mr. Speaker, may I insert here in Hansard three tables showing details of the figures in regard to debt.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to the insertion of these tables?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The tables referred to above are as follows:]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I continue:

EXCHANGE RATE AND EXCHANGE FUND

At this point it is appropriate to review government policy towards the exchange rate against the background of our balance of international payments and our relations with the International Monetary Fund.

Canada's international economic relations are, I believe, more complex and, in relation to our size, more extensive and pervasive than those of any other country. I have in mind such facts as these. On a per capita basis Canada's trade is the highest among the major trading nations of the world; we have been heavy importers of capital from abroad, which has involved us in a network of international associations and transactions that is unique; and finally, we are geographically very close to, and financially closely linked with, the world's largest and most active capital market—New York.

Because of such factors as these our international financial relations have, throughout our history, presented special problems and special challenges. Canada might be regarded as a classic example of a country for which, because of the diversity of our international interests and obligations, it is extremely difficult to devise and pursue an exchange rate policy that may be regarded as completely satisfactory from every point of view.

In this connection it is relevant to recall actual Canadian experience over the past 40 years. During that time, and apart from the period of wartime controls from 1939 to 1950 there were only about half a dozen years during which the Canadian dollar was securely and effectively fixed in value despite international efforts to introduce general exchange rate stability. Going back to the inter-war period, it will be recalled that Britain led the world back to a gold standard regime of fixed exchange rates in 1925. It was less than four years after that when, as a result of an outflow of capital to the great stock market boom in New York, the Canadian dollar was driven below the maximum discount under the gold standard rules. After Britain and other countries were driven off the gold standard in 1931, the Canadian dollar floated rather unsteadily and unevenly between sterling and the U.S. dollar. Many hon. members will recall that, in December 1931, Canadians had to pay a premium exceeding 20 per cent on the United States dollar, while we could buy sterling at a discount of about the same amount. With the outbreak of war, in September 1939, major currencies including the Canadian dollar were brought under control and stabilized.

During the war period from 1939 to 1945 the Canadian exchange rate was fixed at a level 10 per cent below the U.S. dollar. This period was, however, exceptional not only for Canada, but for other countries. In Canada, as elsewhere, the stability of our currency in relation to other currencies required the support of a complex system of foreign exchange controls and import controls as well.

During the next five years, from 1945 to 1950, Canada continued to pursue a policy of fixing its exchange rate but it could hardly be claimed that this policy was an unqualified success. In the first place, the system of foreign exchange controls was continued and for part of the period a system of import controls was also needed. In the second place, while the official rate was at no time during those years allowed to fluctuate on the basis of market forces, there was, during much of the period, an "outside" or "unofficial" market, available to investors and tourists abroad, where a fluctuating rate acted as a sort of safety valve in relation to controlled dealings at the official rate. In the third place, it was found necessary during that period to alter the official exchange rate on no fewer than three occasions. In 1946 the government of the day removed the 10 per cent premium that had been established on the United States dollar at the outbreak of war; in 1949 it restored the premium of 10 per cent on the U.S. dollar at the same time that Britain and certain other countries depreciated the value of their currencies by 30 per cent; in 1950 the government of the day found itself unable to counteract the inflationary impact of a rapid inflow of capital, based in part on the conviction in many quarters that the rate chosen by the government in 1949 was proving too low, and the Canadian exchange rate was allowed to float free, to find its own level. Within two years, the last vestige of foreign exchange control was abolished.

Continuously since 1950 the Canadian exchange rate has been basically determined by the market forces of supply and demand, as represented in our international transactions on current and capital account. It should be noted that throughout this period the Canadian exchange rate has in fact been much more stable than it was during the preceding five years. Since 1950 the government, using the exchange fund which was set up in 1935, has operated to restrain and smooth out the more rapid movements of the rate in one direction or the other. At no time, throughout the whole period, have the resources of the exchange fund been used aggressively, to push the exchange rate in one direction or the other against market forces.

In my last budget speech, on June 20, 1961, I expressed the desire of the government to see the Canadian dollar move to a lower level as a means of stimulating Canadian production and employment and of lessening our very heavy international deficit. In some quarters my statement was misinterpreted to mean that we were embarking on an aggressive policy in the market designed to drive our exchange rate down. This, as events made clear, was not the case. Actually, as I explained last June and previously, the essential means by which the exchange rate was to be moved to a lower level was to lessen upward pressures that had been exerted by the inflow of certain types of capital.

In this regard our efforts have been successful; I refer in particular to the various actions announced in the budget last June in the field of interest rates, international interest spreads, and debt management, to the measures taken in the interim budget of December 1960 to eliminate special incentives to capital imports, and to the warning which I issued in my budget of March 31, 1960 regarding the risks associated with capital imports. As a result of the removal of excessive pressures, the exchange value of our dollar fell to a lower level after my last budget, and since that time its fluctuations have been relatively narrow. This movement, combined with the other movements which followed my two earlier budgets, has relieved Canadian producers of a competitive handicap in markets both at home and abroad.

At the same time—and despite certain pessimistic predictions uttered both inside and outside this house—the Canadian cost of living has remained remarkably stable. The confidence of the government that, in the prevailing economic circumstances, a significant movement of the exchange rate could take place without inflation has been fully justified by events.

The government has not hesitated, and will not hesitate in the future, to deploy a substantial volume of funds, on one side of the market or the other, in order to prevent sudden or erratic movements in our exchange rate. In pursuit of this goal we made substantial purchases of United States dollars in the autumn, and we made substantial sales in the early part of this year. The total of our official reserves of gold and United States dollars has risen and fallen by several hundred million dollars. There may well be similar movements in the future; from time to time our cumulative purchases will no doubt substantially exceed our cumulative sales, and vice versa. It may be of interest to the house to know that since my supplementary budget of December 1960, the published figures show that our market sales and purchases have come within $70 million of balancing each other.

The changed level of the exchange rate has unquestionably been an important factor contributing to the improvement of our international current account during 1961, including the emergence of a favourable trade balance after nearly a decade of deficits. In this situation we can take satisfaction; but it would be a mistake to allow satisfaction to develop into over-confidence. Unquestionably, with the changed exchange rate, our imports have risen less in physical volume, and our exports have risen more, than they would otherwise have done. Unquestionably, the lower exchange rate has yet to exert its full effect on our trade balance, our balance of tourist expenditures, and other items in our current balance of payments. Nevertheless our over-all current deficit is larger than it ought to be, even during the upswing of the business cycle. This must remain a matter of concern. And in this context I would renew my appeal to all Canadians, to management and to labour, to keep Canada competitive; to work together in a spirit of partnership; to hold costs down; to develop our skills and improve our technology; to meet foreign competition at home and abroad with efficient and well designed products of our own manufacture; and to persevere in the drive to expand exports. It is in these fields that the continued reduction of our balance of payment deficits must be sought.

In order to complete this review of the exchange rate and the balance of payments, Mr. Speaker, I should add a few words in regard to the International Monetary Fund and our relations with it. Canada was a founding member of the fund. The Canadian delegation to the Bretton Woods conference in 1944 played an effective and influential part and, ever since the fund opened for business in 1946, Canada has been an active participant and vigorous supporter. Any country with such widespread and diverse international interests as Canada must, in pursuit of its national objectives, support an organization dedicated to expansion of trade and payments on a multilateral basis, and elimination of restrictions.

It was in 1950, as I have already explained that the Canadian government found itself unable to comply with article IV of the fund agreement under which members are required to maintain fixed exchange rates, subject only to alteration in consultation with the fund if a fundamental disequilibrium develops. At that time when Canada moved from a fixed to a floating exchange rate, and from time to time thereafter, the hope has been expressed by the fund authorities that Canada might find it practicable to rejoin the ranks of those that are in full conformity with this particular article. As was to be expected, this view has been reiterated in our most recent consultations with the fund.

At the same time, it has always been recognized, in recent fund discussions as in earlier ones, that Canada's international economic relations are very complex. The fund is fully aware of the nature of our official operations in the exchange market: that we have responded to and moderated market pressures and that no actions prejudicial to the interest of other countries have been taken.

Moreover, we have played a very active part in making resources available to the fund. When there was a general increase in contributions in 1959 we accepted a higher proportion than most countries; when there was a special call for credits to support sterling last summer we promptly contributed our share; when a new stand-by arrangement for supplementary resources was announced last January, again Canada was found amongst the ten leading industrial countries which participated.

Against such a background of general co-operation, Mr. Speaker, the house will understand why the fund, while naturally and properly retaining the ultimate objective of having Canada declare a fixed exchange rate, has not been disposed to press us into any hasty action which might prove to be premature or impossible to sustain. We on our part would wish the prospects of success to be more assured than they were when the Canadian government made its ill-starred attempts to maintain fixed rates during the years from 1946 to 1950.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to make a statement to the house concerning dominion-provincial relations, but in view of the statement which has been made with regard to unwillingness to extend the hours of sitting I shall have to forgo that and content myself simply by saying that whereas when the government took office—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Finance if this document has been given to the press?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The usual arrangements with respect to the press have been observed—those which have been prevailing for many years, long years before I came to office as a minister of the crown, the same arrangements as prevailed when the hon. member was a minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Whereas when this government took office the provinces received a tax rental equal to 10 per cent of the federal income tax, this rental was raised to 13 per cent commencing in the fiscal year 1958-59.

The new arrangements provide for a reduction in federal personal income tax of 16 per cent in the first year of the arrangements, rising by 1 per cent each year to 20 per cent in 1966-67. Thus the provinces without imposing any additional burden of taxation will by the last year of the new arrangements be receiving double the share they received when this government took office in 1957.

At the same time the new system of fiscal arrangements provides for a broader and more realistic system of equalization. The result of the new fiscal arrangements will be to increase very substantially the contributions to the provinces by way of unconditional grants or tax abatements. The estimated value of these unconditional grants and abatements to the provinces for 1962-63 is $980 million, an increase of $122 million over last year and of $428 million over 1956-57.

Although the increase in unconditional grants to the provinces since 1956-57 has been large, the increase in conditional grants has been even more rapid. I should like at this point to insert in Hansard a table showing the amount of the federal contributions to the provinces and certain payments to institutions in the provinces for the fiscal years 1956-57 to 1961-62 together with the estimated amount for the years 1962-63. Table 5, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Total	689.3	837.1	1,037.9	1,264.2	1,333.1	1,542.7	1,793.9

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It will be seen that the total of all these payments and abatements, conditional and unconditional, is estimated at $1,794 million for 1962-63, more than two and one half times as great as the total of $689 million in 1956-57. Conditional grants as estimated for 1962-63 at $749 million are not far short of seven times the total of $111 million for the fiscal year 1956-57.

This enormous increase in the contributions to the provinces has assisted them directly and indirectly in the provision of essential services and has placed them in a better position to assist their municipalities. It has greatly added to federal financial burdens and has given rise to federal budgetary deficits. In fact, the cumulative increase in these contributions to the provinces over the past five years has been greater than the cumulative budgetary deficits for that period by no less than $376 million. I should like at this point to place in Hansard a table which compares the budgetary deficits of the dominion government for the period 1957-58 to 1961-62 with the increase in contributions to or for the benefit of the provinces. Table 6, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave?

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1962-63

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I turn now to our budget prospects for this new fiscal year. The main estimates for 1962-63 which were tabled on February 12 provide for authorized expenditures of $6,276 million. Since the main estimates were printed the government has announced a number of important additional spending programs. The largest single item is the $110 million increase in old age security benefits which, however, are non-budgetary expenditures. Of the enlarged budgetary expenditures the most important are increases of $12 million in welfare payments to the elderly, the blind and the disabled, of about $38 million in benefits and support to farmers, and $70 million related to the extension of the Freight Rates Reduction Act and the recommendation of the royal commission on transportation. Further supplementaries will have to include in due course the Canadian National and the Trans-Canada Air Lines deficits which are expected to exceed $50 million, and also provision for a renewed winter works program which is likely to cost not less than $35 million. Other costs which are likely to emerge, less probable lapsings, will bring our total budgetary expenditures for 1962-63 to about $6,525 million. This, I am glad to report, is $38 million less than in the year just ended.

The shifts in the pattern of expenditures over the past several years have been significant and highly constructive. The increase in controllable expenditures over the past four years has been firmly restricted. But at the same time many important development programs of expenditure have shown very large increases. For example, in the coming year we are providing $15.5 million for research work in universities, compared with $3.9 million five years ago; a fourfold increase. In addition there will be grants in various areas totalling $8 million specifically provided for direct assistance in industrial research and development, whereas five years ago such provisions did not exist. We are providing $105 million of assistance to technical and vocational training as compared with only $5 million in 1957-58. Appropriations for the development of the north will amount to $41 million, more than double the expenditure of five years ago. The essential development and expansion of air flight safety systems and of efficient airports will cost $126 million in 1962-63 as compared with $68 million in 1957-58. Again, the construction element of our new penal reform program requires over $10 million in 1962-63 compared with less than $1 million in 1957-58. We are providing $54 million, compared with $28 million in 1957-58, for the care of Indians; $37 million, compared with $16 million, for university grants; $51 million, compared with $38 million, for general health and hospital construction grants; $50 million, compared with $35 million, for the Colombo plan; $10 million for assistance to ship construction, whereas no such provision existed in 1957-58; and $17 million for the development and care of our forest resources compared with $10 million in 1957-58. Finally, about $206 million will be provided in 1962-63 for the promotion of agriculture, including the net budgetary cost of the recently announced changes relating to dairy products, compared with $129 million in 1957-58. Last, but by no means least, in the five years ending next March 31 the federal government will have paid to the provinces and relieved all the families and individuals in Canada of their onerous hospital and medical expenses to the extent of over $1,000 million.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members will agree that in the face of such necessary and highly constructive increases the fact that we have held our total controllable expenditures to an average annual increase of approximately 4 per cent is quite a remarkable achievement and reflects the policy of rigorous examination and control by the treasury board of all items of expenditure.

I should like to add a further word on the size of staff in the public service. Including all civil servants, all prevailing rate and casual employees, and all employees of those crown corporations whose staffs are subject to treasury board control, the rate of growth in the number of employees in the public service during the past four years has been less than half of what it was in the period 1952 to 1956. The numerical increase at December 31, 1956 over 1952 was 23,700, an increase of 3½ per cent per annum. From 1957 to 1961 the total increase has been 11,600 or a growth of only 1½ per cent per annum.

While the size of the public service has been effectively controlled, conditions of service have been steadily improved. The new Civil Service Act came into force on April 1. This legislation confers on staff associations the right to be consulted on pay and conditions of employment. It confers on civil servants the right of entitlement to pay and provides for appeals against administrative actions and the creation of grievance procedures. Since 1957-58 there have been two major adjustments in salaries for all classes of the public service amounting to 22 per cent, and prevailing wages have, of course, continued to be adjusted in accordance with conditions in comparable trades and occupations in outside industry. A rotational pay review system has been developed which will ensure a periodic examination of all classes. Under this system, a third review of salaries is in process with the results for the first group recently announced.

During this period also significant changes were made in the Public Service Superannuation Act to grant pensions on a six-year rather than a ten-year average and a medical insurance plan for public servants, their dependants and members of the regular forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was put into effect. The government as employer pays 50 per cent of the premium cost of this latter provision.

In other words, the improvement in efficiency and economy in government administration and conditions of service since we took office presents a record of which parliament may be justly proud.

On the revenue side we have made the usual careful appraisal of economic trends during the coming year and their effects upon the inflow of budgetary revenues. On the basis of the present tax structure and the economic prospects to which I have already referred I expect that our budgetary revenues in 1962-63 will be $5,830 million which is $58 million greater than in 1961-62. This estimate reflects reductions of $307 million in tax revenues due to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act of 1961 under which all provinces are now imposing their own income taxes. While we shall be acting as a collecting agent for nine provinces in respect of personal income taxes and eight provinces in respect of corporation income taxes, the provincial revenues that we collect will not in any way appear in our budgetary accounts. All the provinces are now imposing these taxes at rates not less than, and in several provinces at rates higher than our scale of reductions.

May I here insert in Hansard a table showing our actual revenues for 1960-61, our estimated revenues for 1961-62 and our forecast of revenues for 1962-63.

Table 7, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With revenues forecast at $5,830 million and expenditures expected to be $6,525 million there would be a budgetary deficit of $695 million if there were no amendments to our present tax structure. I shall, however, be introducing certain tax changes of economic importance which will modify this figure.

TAX POLICY

We are in a period of substantial and healthy expansion, and our fiscal policy must neither put the brakes on the momentum of our expansion nor invite the danger of inflation.

Much of our progress is due to the vigour and skill of our people—farmers, workers and management. Credit is also due to the government's policies of the past 4½ years as reflected both in constructive spending and improvements in our tax laws.

Six out of seven individual income-tax payers in Canada are better off under the present tax rates than they were five years ago. On the basis of the latest statistics I would estimate that out of a total of 5,100,000 taxpayers no fewer than 4,400,000, or 85 per cent, pay less income tax under the present rates than they would have paid under the rates in force before this government came into office. This is quite apart from the 16 per cent abatement in personal income taxes which is provided from the beginning of this year under the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. Single taxpayers with incomes up to $4,000 now pay less federal income tax, including old age security tax, than they did on the same amount of income in 1957. Married taxpayers without dependants with incomes up to $5,000 now pay less federal income tax, including old age security tax, than they did on the same amount of income in 1957. Married taxpayers supporting two children eligible for family allowances with annual incomes up to $7,500 now pay less federal income tax, including old age security tax, than they paid on the same income in 1957. Thus our policies have brought tax relief to persons of lower and medium incomes.

Since 1957 numerous changes have been made to provide more generous deductions from income on account of medical expenses. The definition of medical expenses has been greatly enlarged by the addition of amounts paid for prescribed drugs and medicines, and numerous medical services and appliances. Formerly there were restrictive upper limits on the amounts deductible as medical expenses, $1,500 for a single person, $2,000 for a married couple and $500 for each dependant. Since 1957 these limitations were abolished.

Since 1957 university students and their parents have been assisted by provisions for the deduction of tuition fees. Amendments have been enacted to allow a student in full time attendance at a university, if he is proceeding towards a degree, to deduct his tuition fees when computing his taxable income. In addition the parent has been allowed to deduct the amount of the university tuition fee from the student's income in determining whether the student qualifies as a dependant. If the student's income after deduction of his fees falls below $950 the parent is now entitled to the $500 exemption.

Since 1957 an amendment has been enacted to encourage corporations to make larger donations to educational institutions and other charitable organizations, by allowing them to deduct up to 10 per cent of their income for such donations in place of the previous 5 per cent.

Since 1957 the new Estate Tax Act has been introduced. This provides for a simplified form of tax and a reduced burden of death duties, particularly on smaller estates, a result which followed mainly from the generous exemptions. When a husband dies leaving a widow, there is a deductible exemption of $60,000 and there is an additional exemption of $10,000 for each dependant child.

Since 1957 important measures of relief have been introduced to minimize or avoid any combined impact of income tax and estate tax. An individual receiving income in the form of a pension or a pension benefit under a registered retirement savings plan or a payment of a death benefit by an employer upon the death of an employee is now allowed to make a deduction from such payments for income tax purposes if the asset represented by the payments has been subject to estate tax or provincial succession duties.

Since 1957 estate tax relief has been granted where the value of a pension or annuity that was part of an estate is reduced because of marriage or death of the recipient within the four year period normally allowed for reassessment.

Since 1957 an important new departure has been made in connection with gift taxes. In addition to the existing exemptions, an individual is now permitted to make a tax free gift once during his lifetime of up to $10,000 to his wife in the form of ownership of their home or of a farm to his child.

Since 1957, as hon. members are well aware, the special excise tax on automobiles, which was formerly 10 per cent has been repealed. In effect this has relieved taxpayers of a burden of about $90 million per year.

Since 1957 assistance has been given to municipalities by providing them with exemptions from sales taxes on many of their important purchases. These include the materials used in sewage and drainage systems, culverts, chassis for fire trucks, fire hose, structural aluminum and laminated timber for bridges and diesel fuel for use in generating electricity.

Since 1957, in addition, exemptions from sales taxes have been granted in respect of certain materials used in the construction industry, certain equipment purchased by educational institutions, certain machinery used on farms and certain articles needed by disabled persons.

Since 1957 the first bracket of corporation taxable income which is subject to a low rate of tax has been enlarged on two occasions to benefit a large number of small and medium sized companies. This bracket of income was increased from $20,000 to $25,000 in 1958 and to $35,000 in 1961. It is estimated that, on account of these successive enlargements of the lower bracket, some 12,000 companies now pay less tax than they would have paid on the same income in 1957.

Since 1957 the surtax of 4 per cent on investment income has been repealed as applied to income from Canadian sources, in order to encourage investment and to ensure more efficient application of the savings of the Canadian people.

Provision was made last year for a re-equipment and modernization allowance which was designed to assist industry and to stimulate expansion. This is in the form of a 50 per cent increase in the first year in the rate of capital cost allowance in respect of new assets acquired for use in Canada in the period from June 21, 1961 to March 31, 1963.

Employment has been rising rapidly and unemployment falling, but we still have more unemployment than is consistent with our national objectives. Capital investment is picking up sharply, but we need still more. It is important, therefore, not to apply any fiscal brakes at this time by abruptly closing the gap between revenues and expenditures.

On the other hand, prices have been very stable during the past year, and indeed during the past several years. One of my duties as Minister of Finance is the avoidance of inflation with its attendant damage and injustice, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I shall not neglect that duty. But at the present time, with a good deal of surplus capacity still in our economy and increasingly keen competition in both domestic and external markets, there appears to be little current risk of inflation. It seems to me, therefore, that the deficit I am presently forecasting will provide a sound degree of economic stimulus and at the same time will not endanger the price level during the coming year.

The encouragement of economic growth has been one of the main objectives of the government and it is the central purpose of this budget. One of the new measures is expressly designed as an incentive for further industrial expansion and increased employment. Another is intended to give a significant stimulus to scientific research in industry. Because of their economic nature these measures will offer benefits to industry. They will constitute an important addition to the structure of tax changes which I have brought to this house in recent years. Encouragement and incentive are thus being given to private industry under several related headings, to increase its efficiency, to expand employment, to improve Canada's competitive position and to keep current with the most advanced technical and scientific methods.

I shall also put before you, Mr. Speaker, a fairly large number of particular tax proposals. To some extent these are of a technical nature. A number of them result from probing into the deficiencies of the tax system in a continuing effort to overcome obstacles to progress and to achieve greater equity among taxpayers.

ESTATE TAX

I have not received many representations asking for changes in the estate tax. This indicates that the Estate Tax Act, sponsored by this government in 1958, is continuing to work well. As is usual, however, experience has revealed the need for a few changes to give relief, to block loopholes or to provide clarification. I am glad to say that of the few amendments I am proposing most are designed to afford relief. I should like to comment on one that is of general interest.

The Estate Tax Act contains provisions for assuring collection of the tax. Where real property situated in Canada is concerned this security is obtained by a provision imposing a lien in respect of tax payable by the successor to the property. This has caused difficulties in certifying that the title to a particular property is clear, especially in those provinces where the Torrens system of land titles is in effect. If the provincial authorities would not permit the registration of the transfer of real property until they were satisfied that the Minister of National Revenue had given his consent to the transfer, for purposes of the estate tax, the provision for imposing the lien would no longer be necessary. I am accordingly proposing that where a federal-provincial agreement to this effect has been entered into, the lien provision shall not apply. The authorities of some provinces have already been acting in the manner intended by an agreement of the kind proposed and I am hopeful that eventually all provinces may wish to co-operate in solving the problem in this way. In the meantime, however, I have come to the conclusion that the existing provision for the lien can be restricted so as to cause much less difficulty in practice.

I am proposing therefore that the cases to which the lien is to apply shall be only those where the records of the land titles or the land registry office concerned show that the deceased person had an interest in the property.

SALES AND EXCISE TAX CHANGES

The changes I am proposing in the sales tax are intended to extend and clarify some existing exemptions and take account of technological changes. In the 1958 budget the list of exemptions for municipalities was extended to include materials used in sewage and drainage systems. Since then the trend has been for municipalities to require subdividers and contractors to install these services. Accordingly, I am proposing that this exemption be extended to include all sewage and drainage materials. The proposed specific exemption for several items used in the fishing industry will clarify the tax exempt status of these articles and extend the exemption to goods used in their manufacture.

It is estimated that these amendments in sales taxes will reduce revenues by $2 million per year.

I referred in my budget speech last year to the increasing tendency on the part of non-resident corporations carrying on business in Canada, and also Canadian corporations which are controlled outside of Canada, to arrange their fire and casualty insurance in respect of risks in Canada through agents or brokers located outside Canada. Certain amendments to the Excise Tax Act were proposed at that time respecting insurance placed with insurers which are not authorized to transact the business of insurance in Canada and such amendments were subsequently made. I also stated at that time that the practice of arranging insurance of risks in Canada through non-resident agents and brokers was being studied and that further steps might be taken, if necessary, to curb this undesirable practice.

Surveys that have recently been made indicate that the practice referred to continues in substantial volume. Since this practice results in loss of taxes otherwise payable in Canada, as well as loss of business, employment and income for persons in Canada, and since the laws and regulations of some other jurisdictions require that insurance covering risks in those jurisdictions be placed only through agents or brokers who are licensed therein, it is proposed to amend the Excise Tax Act further so as to extend the application of the present tax of 10 per cent levied on premiums paid to unauthorized insurers by Canadian residents. The proposed amendment would extend the tax to premiums paid to insurers authorized to transact business in Canada where insurance covering risks in Canada is effected or renewed through an agent or broker or other representative of the insurer outside Canada, subject to certain exceptions. As in the case of the present tax on insurance placed with unauthorized insurers, the new tax will not apply to certain classes of insurance, namely life insurance, personal accident and sickness insurance, marine insurance, and, to the extent that such insurance is not available in Canada, insurance against nuclear risks.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

On budget night last June I tabled, on behalf of the Prime Minister, a report prepared by Professor V. W. Bladen on the problems of the Canadian automotive industry. At that time I announced that, in accordance with Professor Bladen's recommendations, the special excise tax of 7½ per cent on passenger cars would be removed, effective immediately.

Professor Bladen's other recommendations included a far reaching proposal under which exports of particular parts or vehicles from Canada to other countries would earn, for a manufacturer, free entry for other parts or vehicles. Thus, it was argued, the Canadian industry could be more effectively integrated with industry abroad, and the economies of longer runs and greater output made available here.

I should like to repeat now part of what I said last June about this proposal:

> The government warmly approves these objectives, and it is grateful to Professor Bladen for the constructive and imaginative suggestions that are embodied in his report. Nevertheless, his recommendations relating to tariffs are complex and sweeping, and would require extensive readjustments in the industry. It is essential that those concerned, both management and unions, should have an opportunity to assess not merely the objectives but the desirability and practicability of the means by which these objectives are to be obtained.

The response to our invitation for those concerned to submit detailed comments on Professor Bladen's tariff proposals has been quite extensive, and it is still continuing. Many constructive and helpful comments have been received. They have brought to light a number of practical problems which require further examination. For this reason, and also because the implementation of the remaining recommendations would require extensive modifications of Canada's existing international commitments respecting automobiles and parts, no further action on the Bladen report is being proposed in this budget. Indeed, I am not proposing any changes whatsoever in the automotive schedule at this time, pending completion of our review of the whole problem.

The resolutions which I shall table at the conclusion of my remarks will, however, include proposals for a number of tariff changes. All of them are in a downward direction. In some cases the effect of the proposed amendment is to remove an existing duty; in others, it is to extend the duration of an existing free entry provision which otherwise would expire during the current year.

I am proposing that existing duties be removed from certain preparations used for medical purposes, and from certain materials imported by religious or educational institutions or societies. I am proposing also that several existing free entry provisions having statutory expiry dates of July 1, 1962, be extended. The most important of these items relate to aircraft and aircraft engines of types or sizes not made in Canada. Others relate to uranium and heavy water; conductive shoes for use in hospitals; and sodium borate for use as a fire retardant in combating forest fires.

Before leaving the subject of tariffs, I should like to refer briefly to tariff board reports which were received during the past year, and to two new tariff board references which are contemplated. During 1961 the tariff board completed its work on reference 125 relating to textiles, and submitted the final three reports thereon. These related to coated or impregnated fabrics, miscellaneous textiles, and hats and caps, respectively. The tariff amendments recommended by the board in these reports would affect items which are bound under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. Negotiations now are in progress looking toward securing adjustments in our present international commitments so as to permit the implementation of these recommendations, subject to some minor modifications which are deemed advisable in the light of representations which have been received, subsequent to the hearings. If the negotiations in question should be completed before tonight's resolutions are disposed of by parliament, consideration will be given to the possibility of introducing supplementary resolutions to implement the results.

Of the two new tariff board references which are contemplated, one relates to wire and wire fencing. The other relates to machinery and apparatus used by the Canadian printing industry, including printing presses, engraving machines, bookbinding machines, and printing plates of all kinds. If any interested parties should wish to submit views regarding the scope of either of these proposed references, they are invited to do so.

INCOME TAX CHANGES

I now come to changes in the Income Tax Act.

Personal Income Tax

The first of my proposals pertains to personal income tax. Hon. members will recall that the first fiscal measures I was privileged to place before this house, in December, 1957, included an increase in the amount deductible for dependants. At that time I announced that the deduction for children eligible for family allowances and for other dependants would be increased by $100. I am now proposing a further increase to $300 on account of a child qualified for family allowance. This is twice the amount of the deduction of $150 in force before 1957. For other dependants the new deduction will be $550. This compares with $400 allowed before 1957.

This further increase in deductions will free completely from income tax about 80,000 taxpayers and will bring a modest tax reduction to all remaining taxpayers who support dependants. Taxpayers who support children over age 16 who are attending school or university will be able to deduct $550 in respect of each dependant child and, as I have previously explained, the amendment introduced last year permits tuition fees to be deducted in determining if a child qualifies as a dependant. This tax relief will reduce budgetary revenue by $26 million in this fiscal year and by $35 million next year. There will also be a reduction in old age security tax revenue of $4 million in this fiscal year and $5 million next year.

Production Incentive

As I have already said, one of the continuing objectives of government policy is economic growth. I am bringing forward in this budget a plan to use tax incentives to induce increased production and employment. This will provide encouragement for private industry in its search for new and expanding markets. A benefit will be allowed to a company in the form of a reduction in tax on profits derived from increased sales. Since larger sales will involve more production and more employment for our citizens, this new incentive will bring benefits to the community at large in substantial addition to those which will accrue directly to the successful enterprises.

The benefit, which will be available to companies engaged in manufacturing or processing, will consist of cancellation of 50 per cent of the tax on the first $50,000 of taxable income arising from increased sales and cancellation of 25 per cent of the tax on any additional income arising from increased sales. In the first year the plan is in operation the amount of taxable income to be attributed to the increased sales will be calculated by reference to the amount, if any, by which gross sales in the current tax year exceed the gross sales of the immediately preceding year. The ratio of this excess to sales in the current year will be applied to taxable income to determine the amount of taxable income to be attributed to increased sales.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

In the second year of the plan the amount by which sales have increased in the current year will be determined on the basis of average sales in the two preceding years.

In the third year of the plan, and thereafter, the amount by which sales have increased will be determined on the basis of average sales in the three preceding years.

In this way the gradual extension of the base to the average gross sales of the preceding three years will provide as time goes on for the continuing effectiveness of this new measure and for the increasing stability of its operation.

The proceeds of disposal of a company's capital assets will not, of course, be included in gross sales for the purposes of the tax concession.

The cancellation of half the tax on as much as $50,000 of taxable income arising from increased sales is sufficiently generous to allow the great majority of eligible companies to obtain the full 50 per cent cancellation of tax on all income arising from increased sales. For example, a company which increases its sales by 10 per cent, thus bringing its total taxable income to over half a million dollars, will pay tax on only half its taxable income arising from the increase in its sales.

Small companies whose taxable income is wholly or largely within the first bracket of $35,000, and therefore subject to the lower rate of corporation income tax, will be able to claim the reduction of 50 per cent on all of their taxable income attributed to increased sales, both the amounts normally taxed at 12 per cent and any amounts normally taxed at 41 per cent.

It is the policy of the government to promote by every practical means the further development of processing and manufacturing in Canada. In existing economic circumstances, furthermore, the greatest opportunities for increased employment are to be found in the industries which manufacture and process. The benefits of the new plan are to be made available, therefore, in these large areas of industry where they can do the most good by having the greatest effect.

More concretely, the benefit is to be made available to companies whose principal business is manufacturing or processing of goods for sale. Companies will be excluded whose principle business is shipbuilding, oil or gas wells or mines benefiting from percentage depletion. A company whose principal business is processing will be able to qualify whether it be crushing and concentrating ore, refining petroleum or freezing and canning foodstuffs.

The new plan will not be extended to unincorporated businesses in which the earnings are subject to taxation at the graduated rates of individual income tax. The large majority of unincorporated businesses are in any event in the fields other than the manufacturing and processing of goods for sale. As for the others, it has been found after careful technical study that a benefit comparable to the one being extended to corporations would be both inequitable and far too complicated.

New companies will be allowed to claim the tax credit provided they have at least one full year of sales experience, prior to the current tax year, on which to base their claims.

The bill to be put before the house will contain some special rules to deal with cases in which an extensive corporate reorganization of some sort has taken place including amalgamations, mergers, purchase of assets, transfers of sales contracts and so forth. In each case the purpose will be to establish, if possible, a total of gross sales during the preceding year which can be compared with gross sales in the current year.

The plan to induce increased production and employment is to take effect as from the beginning of this month. Taxpayers will be allowed to claim the benefit in respect of their current taxation year, a portion of which will already have expired in most cases. In this first taxation year the taxpayer will calculate the full amount of tax credit according to the formula and will then reduce this amount by the proportion of his taxation year which had expired by April 1.

In summary, by means of this plan to induce increased production and employment the large majority of processing and manufacturing companies which increase their sales will be allowed to retain half the taxes they would otherwise be required to pay on their additional income. The effect on revenue of this plan is very difficult to estimate because the extent of sales increases cannot be precisely estimated in advance. It is believed that the amount of tax cancelled under the plan in a full year will be at least $50 million and it may be considerably more. The tax that is given up will be offset in some measure by compensating benefits including increased revenue on other income. Although the plan is expected to exert an immediate stimulus the reduction in corporation income tax revenue in this fiscal year will not be great because in a period of rising profits most companies base their interim monthly payments of estimated tax on their previous year's actual income.

Double Depreciation

In the supplementary budget of December 20, 1960 I introduced the program of double depreciation for investment in assets acquired to manufacture products new in Canada or new in designated surplus manpower areas. This program was designed to encourage the production in Canada of goods not hitherto produced here and to stimulate industrial development in surplus manpower areas. In the June budget speech I informed the house that an increasing amount of interest was being shown in this program on the part of Canadian industries. Up to the present, assets certified under the plan have reached a total of $112,000,000 and a steady stream of applications is still being received and processed. This program was introduced initially for a period of two years extending to January 1, 1963. However, manufacturers whose plans for additional investment may require a longer time for completion are already beginning to make inquiries concerning continuation for a further period. I am pleased to announce, therefore, that this program of double depreciation is to be extended for another calendar year, that is until January 1, 1964.

The extension of this program will not substantially affect revenues in 1962-63 but, it will, of course, extend the revenue effects of the program, originally estimated to be about $25 million a year, for an additional 12 months.

Scientific Research in Industry

The government gives a high priority to encouraging and assisting scientific research in Canada of all kinds. There has been steady and substantial expansion in the areas where the federal government directly supports research through Atomic Energy of Canada, the Defence Research Board, the National Research Council and various other agencies. If Canada is to maintain and extend its place in the world continuous advances must be made in industrial research and in the development of new methods and new products.

In the 1961 budget I expressed the view that Canadian industries, particularly the subsidiaries of foreign companies, have developed an excessive dependence on research done abroad. To stimulate increased industrial research in this country I announced important tax changes at that time, providing for acceleration of the rate at which capital expenditures on research could be written off as expenses. These amendments have apparently given rise to very constructive results in the limited time they have been in operation.

As announced in the speech from the throne, the government has this year introduced a program of direct financial aid to research in industry. Under this plan, administered through the National Research Council, financial assistance for applied research and development will be given on a matching basis, with the government contributing up to as much as 50 per cent of the cost of some projects. It is believed that this program will be of far reaching assistance in building up new research and development in industry, and in expanding existing efforts.

Unprecedented opportunities exist today for the enhanced co-operation of science and industry. The great need is for industry itself to grasp the vital importance of more research if it is to forge ahead. I now propose a new and powerful incentive to corporate taxpayers who undertake increased industrial research in Canada.

Commencing in 1962 such taxpayers will be permitted to deduct 150 per cent of their increased expenditures on scientific research for industrial purposes when computing income for tax purposes. This deduction will apply in each year to current as well as capital expenditures on research to the extent that these exceed similar expenditures by the taxpayer in his latest tax year which ended before tonight. The use in this way of a fixed base period will provide taxpayers with scope to earn substantial tax benefits through increased research. Because there will be need to reconsider the formula after a few years the plan will be introduced initially for a five year period. This will provide time for taxpayers to put comprehensive programs into operation.

This amendment to allow taxpayers to deduct 50 per cent more than the amount actually spent will make it necessary to review carefully what should qualify under the heading of scientific research.

A definition of eligible research must, of course, rule out programs for which taxpayers receive payments from governments as well as expenditures related to sales promotion, such as market research and surveys of customer acceptance. It is intended that payments should qualify which are made to universities and approved institutions and associations in Canada to have research carried out. In administering this tax concession my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, will have the assistance of the National Research Council.

I should add that this new measure is not intended to serve as a precedent to encourage taxpayers to seek the right to deduct more than they spend in other fields.

Here also the effect of the proposed incentive upon revenue is very difficult to forecast because it will depend upon the extent to which taxpayers avail themselves of the potential benefits. Moreover, it is expected that the revenue cost will increase over the next several years as new research programs proceed. The revenue given up may easily be $20 million in a full year after the plan has been in operation for one or two years. The loss of revenue in fiscal year 1962-63 is expected to be about $8 million.

Oil and Gas Industry

The government has given much study to the position of the oil industry. Numerous proposals by representatives of the industry and others have been received and considered. The measures I am including in this budget have been selected on the basis that they are responsive to requests received from the oil industry and particularly from those known as independents, that their cost to the treasury in terms of tax revenues can be justified and that they will contribute constructively to the attainment of national objectives.

The petroleum and natural gas industries have developed at an increasing pace during the past year. These industries are in a much healthier condition than before this government took office. The improvement which has taken place is due in no small measure to the policies the government has pursued and, in particular, to the national oil policy. The natural gas industry is consolidating its position in the Canadian markets to which it has access and it has penetrated very large United States markets under the export policies implemented by this government. The response of the oil industry to the new policies has been commendable, particularly since some of the readjustments involved are, at least in the short term, expensive for the companies concerned.

Representatives of the petroleum industry have expressed a strong desire, which is shared by the government, to secure a more substantial and widespread participation in the oil industry by persons normally operating in other fields of industry and by Canadian investors. They have sought tax concessions to this end.

Although surplus productive capacity for oil still exists the prospects for the petroleum and natural gas industries are very good in the long run. There is growing concern, which the government shares, that the pace of exploration for hydrocarbons is not sufficient to maintain reserves of oil adequate to meet anticipated demands.

After careful consideration of all the circumstances I am putting before the house three new proposals:

1. That individuals be granted the right to charge petroleum preproduction expenses against income earned from oil and gas production;

2. That all companies including those not normally engaged in petroleum or in mining be granted the right to charge petroleum preproduction expenses against income earned from oil and gas production; and

3. That expenditures involved in the acquisition after April 10 of rights to explore or drill for oil or gas or to extract oil or gas be deductible under section 83A of the Income Tax Act along with other drilling and exploration expenses and proceeds from sales of such rights be taken into income by all taxpayers including individuals.

When these amendments have been implemented oil companies will be in a position to deduct without limit of time, in computing income, all of their preproduction expenses including the costs of acquiring rights, the costs of exploration and the costs of drilling. In addition, they will continue to enjoy the benefits of depletion calculated at 33⅓ per cent of income. To the extent of the income earned in the oil and gas industry, individuals and companies outside the industry will henceforth be allowed full access to the special tax benefits associated with oil and gas.

As with the other proposed incentive measures the effect of these amendments upon revenue will be dependant upon the extent to which they are used by taxpayers. In a full year the revenue loss may be $15 million. The loss of revenues in 1962-63 will be about $7 million.

Iron Ore

In 1960 when the additional 15 per cent tax was imposed on income earned in Canada by branches of non-resident corporations it was decided to exempt certain classes of companies from the tax. These exemptions granted recognition to the fact that companies sometimes have no real alternative to the branch office form of organization when operating abroad. I am now proposing that non-resident companies whose principal business is mining iron ore be added to the group of companies which are excluded from this special tax. It has been found that such enterprises which require tremendous amounts of capital normally involve joint participation by Canadian interests and foreign users of iron ore. This kind of venture does not readily lend itself to the formation of a subsidiary company in Canada and logically it should be included in the group of companies which are relieved of this tax.

Logging Tax

At the dominion-provincial conference of February 23-24, 1961, the Prime Minister referred to heavier taxation borne by corporations engaged in the forest industries as a result of the fact that successive fiscal arrangements entered into by Canada and the provinces since 1947 have permitted the provinces to impose a tax on logging profits which is deductible as an expense in computing federal income tax. The Prime Minister stated:

> During the period covered by the current agreements, companies engaged in the forest industries in British Columbia and Ontario have borne a considerably higher burden of tax rates than other industries. This is because of the combined effect of federal income taxes and provincial logging taxes... It is proposed that... the federal government and the provinces in question should seek agreement by which each will make a concession in the interest of resolving this problem.

The Prime Minister made a more specific statement on this matter in his letter of June 16, 1961, to the provincial premiers in which he made the following generous proposal:

> Subject to reaching agreement on this matter of the definition of logging income, the federal government is prepared as a means of relieving the tax burden on the forest industry to offer a tax credit equal to two thirds of the logging tax up to a maximum rate of 10 per cent, provided the province gives a tax credit equal to the remaining one third of such logging tax.

With a view to reaching agreement on this matter in order that any new arrangement might apply to the 1962 taxation year, I wrote on January 4 to the treasurer of Ontario, the minister of finance of British Columbia, who is also the premier of the province, and to the presidents of the Ontario Forest Industries Association, the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia, and the Canadian Lumbermen's Association proposing that technical discussions be held in Ottawa at an early date. However, owing to the position taken by British Columbia it was not possible to choose a date for the proposed meeting which was satisfactory to all the parties concerned.

Notwithstanding the fact that it has been impossible to hold the proposed discussions and to reach complete agreement on the concessions to be made by the two levels of government, I propose to remove discrimination in the taxation of logging income so far as the federal government is concerned. In order to accomplish this objective I am recommending to parliament that the Income Tax Act be amended so that a federal tax credit will be allowed equal to two thirds of a provincial logging tax up to a maximum rate of tax of 10 per cent on the basis of the existing definition of logging income, that is, the definition contained in the 1957 tax rental agreements. This action will go a long way toward removing the existing tax discrimination of forest industry corporations irrespective of any action which the provinces may take. Moreover, if the provinces imposing a logging tax supplement our tax credit with a credit of their own equal to one third of the logging tax, as it is to be hoped they will, the discrimination will be removed completely. The reason for proposing that the federal government should bear two thirds of the full tax credit is that the federal income tax is approximately twice as large as the provincial income tax and logging tax combined in provinces which now impose a tax on income from logging. This proposal constitutes a unique concession inasmuch as no other provincial tax is allowed as a tax credit under the Income Tax Act.

It is estimated that this concession may reduce revenues by $3 million net in a full year and $1½ million in 1962-63.

University Grants

Commencing in the year 1962-63 federal grants to universities will be increased by one third, that is from $1.50 per capita for the population of each province to $2.00 per capita. Before 1960 these grants were paid to the National Conference of Canadian Universities (later succeeded by the Canadian Universities Foundation) for distribution to the universities of each province in proportion to student enrolment. However, in 1960 this government introduced legislation to provide an alternative arrangement for a province wishing to administer its own grants. This was done to meet the long standing difficulty with respect to university grants in the province of Quebec. Under section 9A of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act it is provided that a province may be prescribed if it has not entered into a tax rental agreement with Canada under which it agrees to refrain from levying corporation income taxes and if satisfactory arrangements exist in that province for the payment of university grants of at least $1.50 per capita in addition to grants to universities made as part of the ordinary expenditure of the province. In a province thus prescribed an additional abatement of 1 per cent in the rate of corporation income tax was provided under Section 40 of the Income Tax Act for taxation years 1960 and 1961.

In order that there should be equity in treatment as between provinces section 9A also provided that where the value of the additional abatement of 1 per cent in the rate of corporation income tax in a prescribed province was less than $1.50 per capita an additional payment would be made to the province to bring it to that level and where it exceeded $1.50 per capita the excess would be recovered from the province. The Prime Minister has received assurance that the government of the province of Quebec desires a continuation of the alternative arrangements for the payment of university grants. Accordingly provision will be made to continue this additional abatement of 1 per cent in the rate of corporation tax in a prescribed province.

In addition, it is necessary to provide for the increase in the level of university grants from $1.50 to $2.00 per capita. This will be done by amendment to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act which it is proposed to introduce subsequently.

SUMMARY

I can now summarize the net budgetary cost of all the proposed tax changes. The major reductions in revenues will occur in personal and corporation income taxes. The benefits to individuals will amount to about $30 million in this fiscal year and about $40 million in a full year. Of these amounts $4 million in this fiscal year and $5 million in a full year will be reductions in contributions to the old age security fund, and the remainders will be reductions in budgetary revenues. The business incentives will cost about $22 million in 1962-63 and $88 million in a full year. The sales tax reductions will amount to about $2 million. Total benefits resulting from these tax changes will be about $54 million in this fiscal year and $130 million on a full year basis.

I should like to place in Hansard at this point the revised table of revenues for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. minister leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

TABLE 8

Estimated budgetary revenues, 1962-63

(millions of dollars)

Personal Income Tax	$1,784
Corporation Income Tax	1,168
Non-Resident Tax	120
Estate Tax	90
Customs Duties	550
Sales Tax	813
Other Duties and Taxes	630
Total Taxes	5,155
Non-tax revenues	625
Total revenues	5,780

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Total budgetary revenues in 1962-63 will thus be reduced to an estimated $5,780 million, and since expenditures are expected to be $6,525 million our estimated budgetary deficit will be about $745 million. Any forecast covering a full year ahead is, of course, subject to some degree of uncertainty and a deviation of as little as 1 per cent in either revenues or expenditures can mean a difference of $60 million.

Our non-budgetary cash requirements during this year, excluding as has always been done in the past any increases or decreases in the exchange fund account, appear likely to be about $295 million. Our non-budgetary cash receipts will be about $280 million, and our net loans, investments and advances will be about $575 million. The main components of our non-budgetary cash outlays are $230 million for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, $80 million for financing export credits, $68 million of advances to the old age security fund and $60 million to the Farm Credit Corporation. Loans to the Canadian National Railways, which include the capital requirements of Trans-Canada Air Lines, will amount to only $20 million.

Statistically, our net cash requirements for 1962-63, including both budgetary and non-budgetary accounts, will be about $1,040 million; but as I said in the early part of my speech this evening, while our net cash requirements in 1961-62 turned out to be $479 million, the net increase in outstanding bond issues during the past year was $857 million. Consequently our cash balances at the end of the fiscal year were about $400 million greater than on March 31, 1961 and stood at $762 million. Subject to unpredictable changes in our exchange fund, the use of surplus cash balances now held will reduce our borrowing requirements in 1962-63 to a level below those of 1961-62.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Speaker, it is with grateful satisfaction that we survey in Canada today the unchallengeable evidences of rising prosperity, increased employment, greater opportunities and rapid economic expansion.

Mr. Speaker, it is with grateful satisfaction that we survey in Canada today the unchallengeable evidences of rising prosperity, increased employment, greater opportunities and rapid economic expansion. Many new records have attested to the strength and extent of our economic growth. Policies and programs set out in previous budgets have contributed effectively to these tsriking achievements.

Many new records have attested to the strength and extent of our economic growth. Policies and programs set out in previous budgets have contributed effectively to these striking achievements.

But we must not be complacent. We must not rest. This budget is designed to continue and to extend those policies which have contributed so much to dynamic growth in Canadian economy and to the creation of 200,000 new jobs in Canada in the last year. It is also designed to stimulate Canadian enterprise to new effort and new peaks of achievement. It offers tangible incentives to Canadian producers to seek out more markets, to take more risks, to breast the keen competition of the trading world with new confidence and resolve, and with the highest standard of efficiency. It summons all members of the great Canadian family to work together in the spirit of partnership for the attainment of national goals beneficial to all. It asks all to face realistically the challenges of our national and international responsibilities. It calls for effort, confidence and achievement in keeping with our resources, our high position in the free world, and the incomparable destiny of the Canadian nation.

RESOLUTIONS

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

(1) That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years the amount deductible in computing taxable income in respect of a child qualified for family allowance be increased to $300 and the amount deductible in respect of other dependants be increased to $550 each.

(2) That with respect to income earned after March 31, 1962 a corporation whose principal business is manufacturing or processing (not including a corporation whose principal business is shipbuilding, mining, logging or the operation of oil or gas wells) be allowed to deduct from its tax otherwise payable an amount equal to 50 per cent of the tax on the first $50,000 of its taxable income attributable to increased sales and an amount equal to 25 per cent of the tax on the remainder of its taxable income so attributable.

(3) That with respect to its first taxation year ending after April 10, 1962 and the next succeeding four taxation years a corporation be permitted to deduct in computing income 150 per cent of the amount by which expenditures of a current and capital nature on scientific research in Canada incurred by it in the year exceed expenditures of a current and capital nature on scientific research in Canada incurred by it in its last taxation year ending on or before April 10, 1962.

(4) That for the 1962 to 1966 taxation years both inclusive the deduction from tax allowed to corporations in respect of taxable income earned in a province be increased from 9 per cent to 10 per cent in a prescribed province in which arrangements exist for the replacement of federal grants to universities by additional provincial grants in accordance with the proposed amendments to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

(5) That with respect to taxation years commencing in 1962 a taxpayer be allowed a deduction from tax of an amount equal to the lesser of two thirds of the amount payable for the year to a province as a tax on income from logging operations or two thirds of ten per cent of the taxpayer's income from logging operations in the province, and the right to deduct in computing income amounts paid to a province as a tax on income from logging operations be repealed.

(6) With respect to expenses incurred after April 10, 1962 any corporation be allowed to deduct in computing income the drilling and exploration expenses, including all general geological and geophysical expenses, incurred by it on or in respect of exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas in Canada and the prospecting, exploration and development expenses incurred by it in searching for minerals in Canada not exceeding its income for the year from oil or gas wells in Canada.

(7) That with respect to expenses incurred after April 10, 1962 an individual be allowed to deduct in computing income the drilling and exploration expenses, including all general geological and geophysical expenses, incurred by him on or in respect of exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas in Canada not exceeding his income for the year from oil or gas wells in Canada.

(8) That with respect to acquisitions after April 10, 1962 amounts paid by

(a) a corporation whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum, petroleum products or natural gas, or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas, or mining or exploring for minerals,

(b) an association, partnership or syndicate formed for the purpose of exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas,

(c) a corporation (other than a corporation that qualifies under (a), or

(d) an individual

for a right, licence or privilege to explore for, drill for or take petroleum or natural gas in Canada shall be classed as drilling or exploration expenses for purposes of computing deductions from income.

(9) That with respect to sales of property acquired after April 10, 1962 there shall be included in the income of a taxpayer any amount received as consideration for the disposition of a right, licence or privilege to explore for, drill for or take petroleum or natural gas except where the right, licence or privilege was acquired by inheritance or bequest.

(10) That the right of a successor corporation to deduct drilling, exploration, prospecting and development expenses incurred by a predecessor corporation from the income of the successor corporation attributable to the production of petroleum or natural gas from wells, or the production of minerals from mines, situated on property acquired from the predecessor corporation shall not be lost by reason of the fact that the successor corporation assumed liabilities of the predecessor corporation.

(11) That a joint exploration corporation may renounce an appropriate share of the drilling, exploration, prospecting and development expenses incurred by it after 1956 in searching for oil, gas or minerals in Canada in favour of a shareholder corporation whose principal business is

(a) production, refining or marketing of petroleum, petroleum products or natural gas, or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas,

(b) mining or exploring for minerals,

(c) processing mineral ores for the purpose of recovering metals therefrom,

(d) a combination of

(i) processing mineral ores for the purpose of recovering metals therefrom, and

(ii) processing metals recovered from the ores so processed, or

(e) fabricating metals,

and in such case the expenses renounced shall be deductible by the shareholder corporation and not by the joint exploration corporation.

(12) That the right of a successor corporation to deduct drilling, exploration, prospecting and development expenses incurred by a predecessor corporation from the income of the successor corporation attributable to the production of petroleum or natural gas from wells, or the production of minerals from mines, situated on property acquired from the predecessor corporation be extended to a second successor corporation which has acquired the property from a predecessor corporation which was itself a successor corporation.

(13) That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years income earned in Canada by a non-resident corporation whose principal business is mining iron ore in Canada, be exempt from the additional 15 per cent tax imposed by part IIIA on profits earned in Canada by non-resident corporations.

(14) That where an employee who is a member of one deferred profit sharing plan becomes a member of another deferred profit sharing plan the amount to his credit in the first mentioned plan may be transferred to his credit in the second mentioned plan without attracting tax on the amount so transferred.

(15) That the amount to the credit of an annuitant under a registered retirement savings plan may be transferred at any time before the maturity of the plan to another registered retirement savings plan or to a registered pension fund or plan without attracting tax on the amount so transferred.

ESTATE TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Estate Tax Act and to provide among other things:

(1) That the lien in respect of tax payable by a successor to real property situated in Canada of a deceased person shall be applicable only where it appears from the records of the appropriate land titles or land registry office or where it can be established from any document or other writing of which notice is given in those records that the deceased person had an estate or interest in that real property, but no such lien shall be applicable where the real property is situated in a province whose government has entered into an agreement with the government of Canada whereby no transfer of an estate or interest in the real property may be registered until the consent of the Minister of National Revenue to the transfer has been obtained.

(2) That for purposes of the deduction from aggregate net value allowed for the value of a gift made to a charitable organization in Canada, such an organization shall include not only one that devotes its resources to the making of gifts to other such organizations in Canada, but also one that devotes part of all of its resources to the making of gifts to Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province, a Canadian municipality or a municipal or other public body in Canada performing a function of government.

(3) That the tax applicable in respect of the property of a person dying domiciled outside of Canada shall not apply to the property situated in Canada of an officer or servant of an organization as defined for the purpose of section 3 of the Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act, where the property was acquired during his lifetime for or incident to his residence in Canada as such an officer or servant whose duties required him to reside in Canada at the time of his death.

(4) That any enactment founded on paragraphs (1) and (3) shall apply in respect of deaths occurring after December 31, 1958.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide among other things:

(1) That the present exemption from sales tax for "Books, printed and bound, that contain no advertising and are solely for educational, technical, cultural or literary purposes," be changed to read "Printed books that contain no advertising and are solely for educational, technical, cultural or literary purposes,".

(2) That audio tapes and materials used in the manufacture thereof, authorized by the department of education of any province in Canada for instruction in the English and the French language, be exempt from sales tax.

(3) That baler twine and materials used in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax, regardless of use.

(4) That barrels and boxes for fish, lobster crates, lobster pots, lobster traps, scallop bags, and materials used in the manuafacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

(5) That drums or cans for honey and materials used in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

(6) That goods for use in sewerage and drainage systems and materials used in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

(7) That the present liability for sales tax on motor vehicles, tractors and machines and tools operated by such vehicles or tractors, that are diverted from an exempt use to a taxable use, be limited to five years from the time of the first sale by a person who would have been required to pay sales tax if the sale had not been for an exempt use, and where motor vehicles, tractors and machines and tools operated by such vehicles or tractors were imported or sold by a manufacturer or licensed wholesaler and sales tax was not payable or was refunded by reason of the intended use of the goods, any person who within five years of such importation or sale applies the goods to any other use (other than of a casual nature) for which the goods could not originally have been purchased exempt from sales tax, and the person from whom he purchased or rented the goods including the importer, manufacturer or licensed wholesaler, shall be jointly and severally liable for payment of sales tax on the fair market value of the goods at the time they are applied to that other use.

(8) That the present tax of 10 per cent on net premiums in respect of insurance against risks in Canada paid or payable by Canadian residents to an insurer not authorized under the laws of Canada or any province to transact the business of insurance, be extended to apply to net premiums in respect of any such insurance paid or payable by or on behalf of Canadian residents, where such insurance is entered into or renewed through a broker or agent outside Canada with an insurer that at the time the contract is entered into or renewed is authorized under the laws of Canada or any province to transact the business of insurance.

(9) That any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 to 7 of this resolution be deemed to have come into force on April 11, 1962 and that any enactment founded on paragraph 8 of this resolution be applicable in respect of contracts of insurance entered into or renewed after April 10, 1962.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. Resolved, that Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 206b, 237a, 296g, 409f, 431h, 440m, 440n, 611a(4) and 696(1), and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of these items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

[See also budget papers pages 2721 to 2834]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the minister on the speed of his delivery and the eloquence of his peroration. I doubt very much whether I shall be able to congratulate him on anything else which occurred in his budget speech this evening.

There was, of course, one feature of this speech which is altogether unprecedented. The minister circulated a copy of his speech to me as I came into the house and no doubt he has done this earlier in the case of members of the press gallery. He omitted a great deal of his speech which, presumably, will now appear in public but which has not been given to the House of Commons.

At a Young Conservative convention last Saturday night a song was dedicated to the minister with the title "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime". The minister has indicated tonight, by the figures that he has put on record, that dimes are going to be scarce to be spared in Canada, because he has told us—he told us yesterday—that the deficit for the previous year is $790 millions, which is $150 millions more than he estimated nine months ago. He told us this evening that the deficit for the current year, on the basis of a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product, on that exaggerated basis, will be $745 millions.

This is the sixth of the hon. gentleman's budgets. It is the sixth deficit. With the one he has given us tonight—and it will probably be higher than is estimated—the total budgetary deficits during the minister's regime now amount to about three billion dollars.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps, as it is on the eve of an election, this particular budget might be described as "Vote now, pay later".

The minister began his statement tonight by reading the objective of his financial policy and that of his government over these five years of unrelieved deficits. He quoted that objective as follows:

> The abiding goal of our fiscal policy is the maintenance of a sustainable rate of growth in terms of employment, development of resources, and a sound dollar.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

The minister's own statement and the record of the policies of this government show that that goal has not been achieved as we come to the end of this parliament. The record shows that the volume of production per person in this country is now lower than it was in 1956, that unemployment since that year has increased, averaging 7.2 per cent in 1961 higher than any year between 1945 and 1957. The record shows that the volume of investment declined by 13 per cent since 1957. So far as the dollar is concerned, the minister has spent from the exchange fund in the first three months of this year about $350 million, not for the purpose for which he said it would be used some months ago, that of getting the dollar down, but for the purpose of keeping the dollar from going down too far. So if this is the goal the minister set out at the beginning of his speech, it has not been achieved in any single respect he mentioned this evening.

Of course, with all these deficits, the minister has included in his budget speech some proposals which presumably are designed to stimulate the economy. They involve the expenditure of money. It was interesting to note, as the minister put these on the record, that some of these proposals we urged on the government three and four years ago. If some of these things had been done, and done more effectively at that time, we would not be confronted today with a deficit of $745 million and at the same time massive and chronic unemployment.

The individual benefits about which the minister speaks amount to $40 million, according to his figures. There are 18 million people in this country and if you divide 18 million into $40 million—and I hope my arithmetic is correct—you get $2.22 per person. "222" is the name of a well known headache tablet. The taxpayer of this country is going to need a headache tablet when he is confronted this year with another deficit of $745 million. Because deficits are debts and debts are charges on the future, and the men, women and children of the future will have to pay this $3 billion of budgetary deficits.

The minister made great play with his accurate estimates of this and that tonight in his budget speech; but the minister must know, I am sure he does know, that in every year since he has been Minister of Finance he has forecast a gross national product increase for that year which has been wrong. And he has always been wrong in the one direction. He has always estimated a growth that did not occur. He now estimates a 7 per cent growth for next year. It is not likely to occur on the basis of his own record as a prophet and if it does not occur there will be a much higher deficit than $745 million. And remember, Mr. Speaker, we are facing these deficits and difficulties at a time when the minister says we are in the midst of a period of prosperity and expansion. The Prime Minister keeps talking about being in a period of prosperity and expansion.

Last year in his budget speech when the minister was dealing with this prosperity and expansion he gave us a very optimistic report on the economic prospects for 1962. The minister as reported at page 6642 of Hansard of June 20, 1961 had this to say:

> When employment and incomes have reached satisfactorily high levels and the rate of economic growth is strong, a sound budget and tax structure should generate sufficient revenues not only to cover current expenditures but also to provide funds for the orderly retirement of debt—

The minister has now denied his own words of nine months ago. He said at that time that in the situation he claims we face in this country today we should have not only a balanced budget but should be putting aside money to pay off the national debt. That is the kind of thing we used to do in our day, when we were in periods of expansion. Not only did we balance the budget but we paid off $2 billion of the national debt.

As reported at page 6665 of Hansard of June 20, 1961 the minister also said:

> On the basis of the present situation—

That is the situation we are now in.

> —and anticipated trends—

Those are the trends the minister anticipated:

> —it is not unreasonable to expect that the current flows of revenue and expenditures will be approaching a balance by the end of 1962.

Now he tells us that by March 31, 1963 on the basis of the highest increase in gross national production since they took office, of 7 per cent, we will have not a balanced budget but another deficit of $745 million.

This is the minister's budget. This is the way the minister manages the financial affairs of this country. The minister condemns himself by his own words and the country will soon condemn his government by their votes.

On motion of Mr. Pearson the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the house leader what the business of the house will be tomorrow? I hope the house leader will be able to indicate the business for Thursday and Friday as well.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the first item will be Bill No. C-80, an act to amend the Veterans' Land Act; the second item will be Bill No. S-19, an act to amend the Canada Grain Act; the third item will be Bill No. C-79, an act to amend the Customs Act.

Mr. Hellyer: What about the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Tardif: What about the budget?

Mr. Chevrier: Can the house leader give any indication of the business for the following day?

Mr. Churchill: If the opposition will tell me that they will pass these three bills tomorrow I shall then be very glad to announce further business for the week.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

BUDGET PAPERS

presented by the Honourable Donald M. Fleming, M.P.,

for the information of Parliament in connection with the Budget of 1962-1963

FOREWORD

The purpose of these Papers is twofold:

1. to present a general economic review of 1961, bringing together in one place and in convenient form some of the more comprehensive indicators of economic conditions prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Bank of Canada and other Government Agencies, together with brief comments;

2. to present a preliminary review of the Government Accounts for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962.

ECONOMIC REVIEW OF 1961

GENERAL

1961 was a year of expansion in the Canadian economy. In the midst of a wide variety of economic forces which influenced Canadian developments, some of which will continue to be of importance in the years ahead, the economy responded to policies undertaken during 1961. Then too, the external environment, one of the more basic elements determining Canada's economic well-being, was, on the whole, favourable to the course of expansion.

In the 1960 Budget Papers reference was made to the unusual conjuncture of economic forces, special, cyclical and longer term that were having adverse effects on the Canadian economy. This condition lasted into the early months of 1961, and by March 1961 the index of industrial production was 4 per cent below the peak level reached at the beginning of 1960. Unemployment was high, being close to 8 per cent of the labour force, after allowing for normal seasonal movements. The deficit on international current account was running at an annual rate of $1.2 billion, or the equivalent of about 3½ per cent of the Gross National Product. This represented, in effect, the net importation of resources from abroad which, given the extent of unused capacity in Canada at that time, was at a level clearly inappropriate to Canada's economic circumstances. These relatively unfavourable conditions do not, of course, tell the entire story: employment and incomes had continued to rise throughout 1960 and prices had risen scarcely at all.

It was against this very briefly sketched background that Canada entered the spring months of 1961. At that time economic conditions in the United States began to improve and, as the earlier American deterioration there had imparted a downward influence on Canada's economic activity, so did the subsequent business upswing impart a more favourable influence. At the same time the expansion of exports to other countries was reinforced by some additional large grain sales, helping to improve Canada's external position.

The wide range of economic and financial policies followed by the federal government in 1960 and 1961 was designed to facilitate the flow of Canadian savings to Canadian borrowers and reduce excessive capital inflows from abroad. In the event, these policies resulted in a reduction of upward pressures on Canada's exchange rate and reduced the deficit on international current account. At the same time, the size of the budget deficit was increased to enlarge the flow of purchasing power to the general public, in a period when there was a considerable amount of unused economic capacity.

From March to December 1961, (the month of the latest available data) the index of industrial production rose by 9.1 per cent, bringing it to a level 4.7 per cent above the previous cyclical peak of January 1960. The most comprehensive measurement of economic activity, the Gross National Product, increased from its first quarter low to the fourth quarter by $2.4 billion, or by 7 per cent, and at year end was about 3 per cent above the average of 1961 as a whole. Employment responded to the improved pace of economic activity and rose at a more rapid rate than in 1960 and the rate of unemployment began to fall. By August 1961, the numbers of unemployed were below those experienced one year earlier and, by year end, the rate of unemployment (after allowance for normal seasonal movements) had fallen from the cyclical peak of 7.8 per cent at the beginning of the year to 6.1 per cent of the labour force.

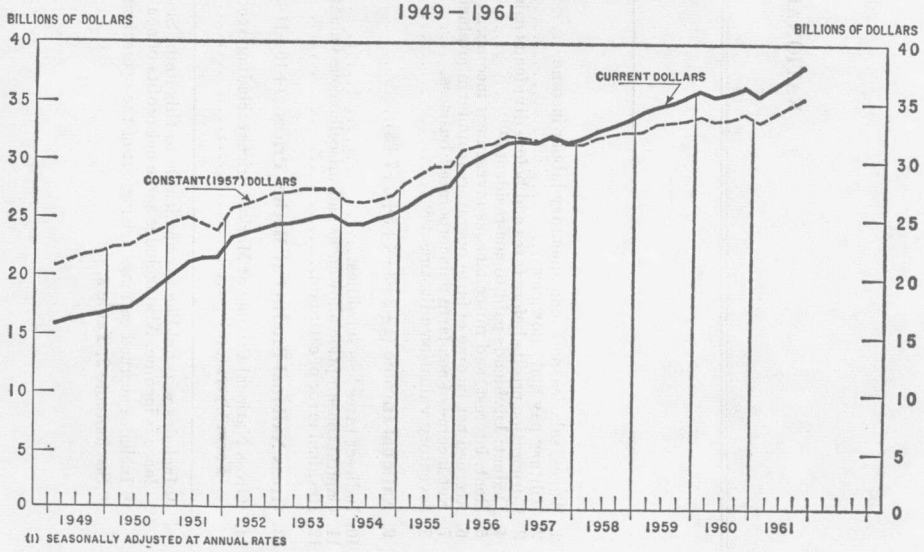
On the financial side, interest rates declined generally after mid-year, and the spread between Canadian and United States interest rates narrowed appreciably. Liquidity increased in the economy and a larger share of total borrowing was financed in Canada. This was reflected in the decline in the capital inflow from abroad and the reduction of the external price of the Canadian dollar. The international current account deficit was accordingly reduced in 1961.



The economic expansion of 1961 was achieved without disturbance to the relative stability of prices. A variety of price indexes, including the consumer price index and the price index applicable to Gross National Product, averaged less than 1 per cent higher in 1961 than in 1960. These and other developments are discussed more fully below.

THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

National Income and Product

As indicated above, the Gross National Product rose substantially throughout the last nine months of 1961. By contrast, the movement within 1960 had been irregular, falling from the first to the second quarter, then increasing to the fourth quarter before declining again at the beginning of 1961. The irregularity of the movement of G.N.P. throughout 1960 and into the first quarter of 1961 makes less meaningful a comparison of the annual averages of these two years; indeed such a comparison masks the significant strengthening in economic activity which took place throughout 1961. Further, the measurement of Gross National Product includes the value of farm production and the annual figures for 1961 reflect the sharp decline in farm inventories which resulted from the drought in western Canada as well as enlarged grain exports. The 1961 grain crop turned out to be only about three-fifths of its average value in recent years, and the increase in G.N.P. was correspondingly reduced by about $400 million, or about 1 per cent. (It should be noted, however, that farm cash income was maintained at peak levels, with sales made possible out of previously accumulated stocks.) The net result of all these factors was that

(1) SEASONALLY ADJUSTED AT ANNUAL RATES

G.N.P. in 1961 rose to about $36.8 billion, 2.5 per cent above the average of 1960. With prices relatively stable, about four-fifths of this increase in yearly averages represented a gain in real volume.

As was previously pointed out, the G.N.P. seasonally adjusted in the fourth quarter of 1961 was already about 3 per cent above the average of the year as a whole, and 7 per cent above the first quarter of 1961. This compares favourably with the increases during the early phases of previous upswings.

The following table and accompanying chart illustrate this point. They show changes in the value and volume of non-farm output during the downswing and early phases of the upswing in 1953–54, 1957–58 and 1960–61. The purpose of making comparisons with the low point of activity is, of course, to show the relative strength of the upturn. However, this type of comparison has only a limited meaning by itself, since an upturn is more likely to be strong after a steep than after a mild decline. For this reason, it is useful also to compare the current level of activity with that prevailing before the declines took place, i.e. at the previous peak, in terms of both the value and the physical volume of output at these points. This shows that the recent gain (late 1961) in real terms was larger than the expansion in the immediately preceding upturn (1958) in which the value increase contained substantial elements of price.

Output of the services-producing industries of the economy rose during 1961, reflecting a continuation of the almost uninterrupted longer run movement, and reached new peaks, both in total and for each major service industry. For the year as a whole, output in services averaged about 3 per cent above the level of 1960.

The goods-producing sector of the economy produced a less even picture, as might be expected. This is typical of the goods sector, which is more subject to varying demands, including shifts in inventories and in fixed investment within the country, and changes in foreign demand for goods including, again, shifts in inventories and fixed investment in foreign markets. The greater volatility of output in this sector, relative to services, is associated with wider swings in employment, particularly of males, who predominate in goods-producing industries.

[1] The data in this table and in the accompanying chart exclude farm output and interest and dividend payments to and from abroad, and thus differ somewhat from the measurement of gross national product. The value of farm production has been deducted since, for statistical reasons, the seasonally adjusted value of the grain crop for the calendar year is allocated evenly throughout the four calendar quarters, complicating comparisons between quarters of different years. The interest and dividend adjustment has been made to the value figures in order to make them comparable to the volume figures, which measure output on a gross domestic basis, i.e. of goods and services physically produced in Canada. It should also be noted that price comparisons cannot be derived with precision from the value and volume indexes in this table. For purposes of price comparison, the deflators of Gross National Expenditure are more accurate.

Data prepared in Department of Finance.

In 1961 the volume of total agricultural output declined because of drought conditions in western Canada, the drop in grain output more than offsetting increases in the remainder of the agricultural sector. Apart from agriculture, output in the rest of the goods sector showed a yearly average gain. Manufacturing output, which had declined during 1960, rose throughout 1961 and at December was somewhat above the previous peak level of January 1960. This reflected, in the main, movements in durable goods production, since output of non-durable goods had been relatively flat in 1960 and rose significantly in 1961. Developments in durable manufacturing were more volatile. From January 1960 to January 1961, output in durable manufacturing declined by 11 per cent, then increased and by December 1961, was almost back to the level of January 1960.

Mining output reached new peaks in 1961, rising sharply in the course of the year. There were gains in some metals including nickel and copper, but the larger increases came from the output of non-metals and fuels, especially asbestos, natural gas and petroleum, the latter groups enjoying larger markets both at home and abroad.

The output and distribution of electric power and gas utilities continued its steady rise and increased by 7 per cent over 1960.

In the construction industry, there was an increase of about 3 per cent in the yearly average due to the increase in the non-residential component. During the year as a whole forestry output declined but fishing and trapping showed increases.

Considering developments in the labour force in 1961, which will be discussed more fully in a later section, four main points stand out: the recent sharp increases in the labour force slackened; there were significant increases in employment; employment of males rose substantially for the first time in about two years; and the level of unemployment declined in the course of the year. By December 1961, the labour force was 1 per cent, or 65,000 higher than a year earlier, and total employment was up 3 per cent, or 180,000, of which 125,000 were males and 55,000 females. Unemployment declined by 115,000 persons from December 1960 to December 1961.

[2] The book value of inventories is deflated to remove the effect of price changes and the derived "physical" change is then valued at average prices of the current period to obtain the value of physical change. The difference between this value of physical change and the change in book value is called the inventory valuation adjustment (see line 7, Table 1).

Turning to the flow of incomes in 1961, the major components showed increases from the first quarter of the year. By the fourth quarter, national income was running at an annual rate of $28.8 billion, compared with $26.6 billion in the first quarter of the year and $27.2 billion in the first quarter of 1960.

The sharpest gain within 1961 took place in corporation profits, which had, however, shown the sharpest decline during 1960 and early 1961. During 1961 corporation profits increased from the first to the fourth quarter by 30 per cent. This brought profits to a new peak rate of about $3.8 billion in the fourth quarter, surpassing the previous peak of the fourth quarter of 1959 by about 4 per cent. The increase in profits during 1961 reflected the sharp pickup in production and the relative steadiness of costs.

Labour income rose by 5 per cent from the first to the fourth quarter of the year. During the same period the number of paid workers and average hourly earnings rose significantly while there was also a modest rise in the length of the average work week. The rise in personal disposable income paralleled that of labour income. Taking into account the stability in consumer prices and the estimated rise in population, there was a significant gain in per capita real disposable income from the beginning to the end of 1961.

Rent, interest and miscellaneous investment income increased about 6 per cent from 1960 to 1961. The level of farm income in 1961 was reduced from 1960 due to the drought and subsequent decline in grain production in western Canada. Cash income was maintained at record levels, however, due to increasing export and domestic sales of grains and other farm commodities, requirements of grain being met out of previously held stocks.

Net income of "other unincorporated business" rose somewhat in 1961.

National Expenditure

Between the beginning and end of 1961 all of the components of demand on a seasonally adjusted basis increased thus providing the support for the upward movement in the economy. Over the period as a whole, gains in consumer spending and exports were the largest elements in the rise, with increases in government spending on goods and services being next in magnitude. Business investment in fixed plant and equipment and in non-farm inventories also increased significantly from the first to the fourth quarter. In total, demand, both domestic and foreign, rose by about $2.6 billion over the period, and was met by increases in domestic production of $2.1 billion and additional imports totalling $0.5 billion.

As between the first quarter of 1960 (the preceding peak) and the fourth quarter of 1961, the change in the composition in total demand was substantially different from that which took place from the beginning to the end of 1961. Between the first quarter of 1960 and the fourth quarter of 1961, farm inventories and grain in commercial channels declined by about $700 million, reflecting both the lower grain crop in 1961 and higher export sales. At the same time the accumulation of non-farm business inventories was smaller by $188 million, reflecting the reaction to the post-U.S. steel strike inventory accumulation in early 1960. Total business fixed investment was also at a lower level in the fourth quarter of 1961. Offsetting these influences were larger increases in consumer and government spending, the two sectors rising in total by $2.6 billion over the seven quarters.

During 1961 consumer spending increased steadily from the first to the fourth quarter. Increases in government spending on goods and services were fairly steady throughout the year. Housing outlays were higher in the second half of the year as were outlays on business plant and equipment. Exports rose very sharply in the third quarter and more than maintained the rate in the last quarter of the year. Liquidation of farm inventories was very heavy throughout the year, reflecting large grain sales and a much reduced crop. The accumulation of non-farm business inventories was small during the first three quarters of the year, but moved up significantly in the last quarter. In contrast with previous upswings, inventories have so far played a more modest role in the expansion of demand reflecting different fundamental conditions including ample supply and steady prices.

Turning to expenditure items in more detail, consumer spending rose throughout 1961 after having shown a fractional decline in the first quarter of the year. In the last three quarters of 1961 consumer spending increased by about 3½ per cent and by the end of 1961 was 8 per cent above the rate in the previous peak in general business activity in the first quarter of 1960. Prices of consumer goods and services changed very little in the course of 1961, so that the value increases in spending represented gains in real terms.

Purchases of durable goods seasonally adjusted rose by more than 14 per cent within 1961. The gains were concentrated in purchases of new cars which after declining in the first quarter of the year reached a level in the fourth quarter about 10 per cent above the level of a year earlier. Prices of durable goods, particularly automobiles, declined in 1961, compared with 1960, so that the increases in real terms were even greater than the gains in value terms.

Consumer spending on non-durable goods rose steadily until the fourth quarter of the year when it declined slightly but was still more than one per cent above the level of the first quarter. Consumer spending on services continued its long term rise throughout 1961, increasing from the first to the fourth quarter by about 3 per cent, of which nearly 2 per cent represented increases in real terms. The main part of the value increase was accounted for by spending on medical services and on rents (paid or imputed on owner-occupied dwellings).

Government spending on goods and services rose from the first to the fourth quarter by 7 per cent. More than one-half of the increase in this period took place at the provincial and municipal levels. For the year as a whole, government spending on goods and services rose by $500 million, of which about $45 million reflected increased capital outlays.

Business fixed capital formation rose in the second half of 1961, after declining in the earlier part of the year and by the fourth quarter of 1961 had surpassed the level achieved one year earlier. Movements were diverse throughout the year. During the first quarter of the year housing starts were at a very high rate carrying forward the upward movement begun in the last quarter of 1960. This increase in starts was not reflected in housing completions until the third quarter of the year. Starts declined from the very high rate in the first quarter, and then increased irregularly until the closing months of the year. For 1961 as a whole starts totalled about 125,000 units, some 15 per cent above the previous year, while completions were 116,000 units, 7 per cent below 1960. In November 1961 the N.H.A. maximum interest rate was lowered from 6¾ per cent to 6½ per cent.

Business investment in new plant and equipment is described more fully in the section on Investment and Capital Expenditure. In broad terms, outlays for both plant and equipment were somewhat below the levels of 1960, although within 1961 itself there was a firm upward trend during the second half of the year. For the first time in seven years there was a relative stability in costs of non-residential construction.

During 1961 there was a net liquidation of inventories in Canada. This liquidation was more than accounted for by a reduction in grain inventories which arose from a combination of increased marketings (notably exports) of grains and a much reduced grain crop in western Canada. On the other hand, there were some increased livestock inventories on farms. As against the net depletion of farm stocks there was an increase in holdings of non-farm business inventories of $209 million, with the largest increase taking place in the fourth quarter of 1961.

During 1961, manufacturers, especially of durable goods, continued to draw down stocks well after the pickup in general business activity, and it was not until the fourth quarter that significant accumulation of inventories took place in that sector. Other non-farm business sectors tended to accumulate inventories hesitantly and erratically in the course of the year. Over the year as a whole the buildup was small in relation to previous upswings and in the manufacturing sector the rate of increase in stocks was less than in shipments, so that at year end the ratio of stocks to sales was somewhat below that of the previous year.

Some indication of the modest increase in inventories may be given by measuring the "swing" in non-farm business inventories for the three quarters from the low point in general business activity for 1961 and 1958.

The moderate nature so far of the inventory upswing reflects, as has been previously noted, conditions of more ample supply and rapid delivery as well as more cost consciousness and a decline in the fear of the possibility of inflation. The lower rate of inventory accumulation in this upswing compared with the last may have had some bearing on the demand for financial resources and the lesser increase in interest rates as compared with the preceding upswing in 1958.

Exports of goods and services rose in 1961 more rapidly than imports, so that the deficit on current account narrowed, compared with 1960. The increase in exports was generally maintained throughout the year and was concentrated in commodity exports which rose to a new peak. There were, in addition, other significant developments which are discussed more fully in a subsequent section. For the first time since 1954, there was a surplus on merchandise trade account (adjusted to conform with balance of payments definitions).

Personal Income and Its Disposition

Personal income fell slightly from the fourth quarter of 1960 to the first quarter of 1961, but subsequently rose to $28.8 billion in the fourth quarter of 1961, a 5.6 per cent increase over the first quarter.

Among the components of personal income, wages, salaries, and supplementary labour income rose throughout the year; farm income itself, while lower for the year as a whole due to the smaller grain crop, was higher in the latter half of 1961. Income of unincorporated businesses rose during the second half of the year due to improvements in trade and construction. Interest and dividend payments to persons, along with net rental incomes, rose 5 per cent during the year. The increase throughout 1961 in transfer payments from Government (excluding interest) was the reflection of a regular growth in family allowances and old age security payments, as well as payments to farmers under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. These increases were offset to some extent by lower unemployment insurance benefit payments as the numbers of unemployed declined during the year.

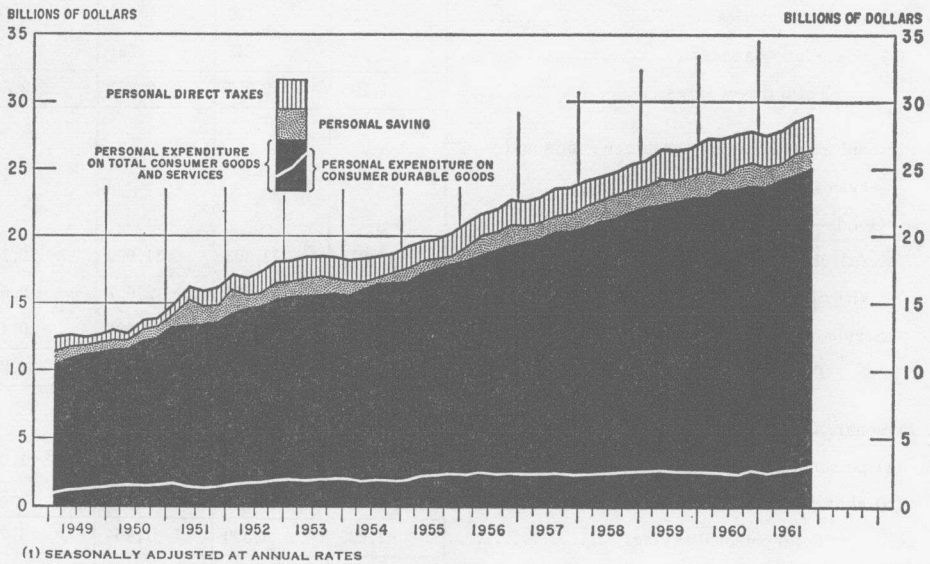
Personal disposable income followed somewhat the same pattern as personal income and increased by about 3 per cent over 1960. Personal direct taxes (including, in addition to personal income taxes, succession duties, motor vehicle licence fees, hospital insurance premiums, etc.) rose from the first to the third quarter but moderated during the rest of the year. Total payments increased by 6.2 per cent over 1960 to a total of $2,504 million. Personal income tax payments rose by 8.7 per cent from the first to the fourth quarter of 1961.



The trend of personal saving, i.e., personal disposable income less personal spending, was generally upward during the year.

DISPOSITION OF PERSONAL INCOME[1]

For 1961 as a whole, personal saving amounted to 5.1 per cent of personal disposable income. Excluding change in farm inventories the percentage was 6.3 per cent, slightly higher than in four of the preceding five years.

Source and Disposition of Saving

Total saving declined in the first quarter of 1961 but rose steadily during the remainder of the year. As noted in last year's Budget White Paper and as illustrated in the accompanying chart, total national saving tends to follow closely the movements of general business activity.

Despite the increase during the year, total saving for 1961 as a whole was below the average for 1960 as a whole. Most of this decline was due to the smaller grain crop which had the effect of reducing both personal saving (by lowering farm net income) and inventories. Apart from this, business saving rebounded from the first quarter decline as profits rose sharply in the remainder of the year. After payment of dividends, undistributed corporation profits by the fourth quarter of 1961 reached the highest level in three years. The total of capital consumption allowances rose slightly in 1961. The combination of rising capital consumption allowances and the increase in undistributed profits raised the rate of gross business saving in the fourth quarter of 1961 to a new dollar peak. The significance of this along with the rates of business investment in fixed capital and inventories is analyzed in the section on financial developments.

third quarter of 1960 through to the second quarter of 1961, and then declined. The government deficit at the federal level rose for the year as a whole from $251 million to $446 million, while the provincial and municipal deficits combined rose from $397 million to $447 million. The deficit, on a national accounts basis, at the federal and provincial and municipal levels was somewhat reduced in the second half of 1961.

NATIONAL SAVING, BY QUARTERS, 1950-1961[1]

[1] SEASONALLY ADJUSTED AT ANNUAL RATES

Investment and Capital Expenditure

Private and public capital expenditure totalled $8,109 million in 1961, about 2% below the level of 1960. The entire decline was accounted for by private investment, which for the full year was below 1960, but which rose in the last half of 1961 and contributed to the upswing in the economy. By the fourth quarter seasonally adjusted business investment was 4% above the level of the first quarter of 1961, which marked the end of the previous downswing in general economic activity.

In Canada capital expenditures in 1961 constituted 22.0% of Gross National Expenditure, a figure which is high by international comparison but below the levels and proportions of the period of the mid-1950's.

In the first decade after World War II there was an unusual conjuncture of factors which led to very large "bunching" of investments. This phenomenon of "bunching" has been typical of Canadian development, but each period has been marked by different circumstances. At the end of the War there existed a vast accumulation of unsatisfied demand for consumer, social and industrial capital which had been running down ever since the end of the 1920's through the depression and war years. On top of these needs were the obvious requirements of European reconstruction and the related absence of foreign competition, which provided an additional stimulus to investment in Canadian facilities. While these factors were at work a number of other developments were taking place which gave additional emphasis to investments in Canada. For example, world political developments at that time made Canada a safe source of essential raw materials for U.S. defence needs. At the same time the associated boom in world commodity prices, along with large scale stockpiling programmes, led to sharp increases in capital outlays, especially in resource industries. At this time too, there was a general view that demands in the United States for certain industrial materials would soon exceed their domestic supplies. This added an air of urgency to the normal pace of exploration and development of sources of raw materials.

Since investments by modern large-scale enterprise are often made with a very long time horizon, because of the "lumpy" nature of many investments and the financial capabilities of large corporations, it is not surprising that, over short periods of time, some major classes of investment should tend to outstrip demand. In part, this was due to the over-optimism of some investors, at least in the short run. Historically, too, Canada has tended to "grow up" to its facilities so that from time to time some excess capacity exists temporarily. This has been the case over the past few years. Expectations have not been completely fulfilled as prices of primary products have receded and alternative sources of supply have been developed by other countries. At the same time, during recent years, a shift occurred in the strategic concepts underlying western defence, which brought about a virtual end to military stockpiling and a reduction in the materials content of military hardware. In these altered circumstances, the stimulus to develop Canadian sources of supply in the resource industries decreased. At the same time, in manufacturing, the rate of expansion in facilities was adversely affected by strong international competition and by slower growth in total domestic demand.

The result of all of these trends was a falling off in certain types of investment and, thus, a decline in the proportion of G.N.P. devoted to investment. This is a situation, of course, which calls for a shifting of resources, both human and material, either into other areas of investment, where demands are more immediately pressing, or into other sectors of the economy. These transfers of resources require high degrees of flexibility and mobility in the economy generally, especially of the labour force, if the slack in the economy is to be taken up.

Turning to 1961, total private and public investment was down about 2% from 1960 although there was increased investment in such sectors as mining, chemicals, oil and gas pipelines, universities, hospitals, and government departments. Increases in the above sectors were slightly more than offset by decreased fixed investment in agriculture, primary metals, petroleum refining, telephone utilities, and other industries. Capital expenditures by private business enterprises, apart from institutional investment, declined by 4 per cent in 1961 compared with 1960.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

Of the sectors where investment rose significantly, one of the larger gains was the 13% or $51 million increase for mining, quarrying and oil wells. This reflected additional iron ore development in the Quebec-Labrador boundary area. A sharp gain was registered in oil and gas pipeline construction in western Canada. The higher level of capital spending in institutional services includes a $25 million rise in hospital construction and equipment and a $15 million rise in construction in universities,which have started to accommodate the larger number of teenagers born in the mid-forties and seeking higher education. The increase in investment by government departments largely reflects a $42 million increase in federal capital expenditures.

In the manufacturing sector, investment in the chemical and chemical products industry rose $17 million. There were no marked changes in capital spending in such industries as food and beverages, leather, clothing and primary textiles, wood and paper, printing, machinery, and electrical equipment. The only noticeable declines occurred in transportation equipment, non-metallic minerals (asbestos, abrasives, cement, etc.), oil refining, and primary metals. The latter reflected the completion in the preceding year of the large nickel refinery in Thompson, Manitoba.

Capital expenditures in the transportation, storage and communications sector fell sharply. Increases in pipeline construction were more than offset by a $29 million decline in telephone utilities and a $115 million drop in railroad construction. The latter reflected the completion of railroads serving new iron ore mines in the Quebec-Labrador region.

Revenue and Expenditure of All Governments

Computed on the basis of the National Accounts definitions, expenditures in 1961 by all levels of government increased by approximately 8% over comparable expenditures in 1960. Since revenues for the year as a whole did not rise by the same proportion, the deficit for all levels of government increased by rather more than a third to an amount of $893 million.[1]

Total	11,464	12,112	648	12,132	13,025	893

In 1961, government expenditures on goods and services (excluding transfer expenditures) represented 19.5% of Gross National Expenditure. By way of comparison, expenditures of this type by all levels of government in 1952 after the rearmament programme stemming from the Korean conflict amounted to 17.8% of G.N.E. Over the past nine years, therefore, goods and services outlays by government have grown at a rate which is only slightly above that of the increase in Gross National Expenditure.

[1] The following section discusses only those government transactions relevant to the National Accounts. As a result the statistics differ from those shown in Public Accounts. Table 16 indicates the reconciliation between federal deficit or surplus for purposes of the National Accounts and the comparable figures appearing in the Public Accounts. In particular, federal corporate income taxes have been adjusted to an accrual basis. On a National Accounts basis, this adjustment decreased revenues in 1960 by $100 million and increased revenues in 1961 by $31 million.

Within the overall total, there have been divergent movements at the various levels of government. Expenditures on goods and services by the federal government in 1961 represented a smaller share of Gross National Expenditure than in 1952, while the proportion at the combined provincial and municipal levels was appreciably higher.

While the term "goods and services" bears the connotation of expenditures for consumable goods and for current administrative services, it should be noted that the definition of goods and services in the government sector of Gross

National Expenditure includes outlays by all levels of government on construction and capital equipment. Items of this type, which are of the nature of capital investment, include a wide variety of projects: housing, hospitals, schools, marine engineering projects, highways, transportation facilities and others. Over the past several years expenditures by government on construction, machinery and equipment have represented a relatively constant share, approaching one-quarter, of all government outlays on goods and services.

Turning to the revenue side, it has already been indicated that the year-to-year increase in government revenues in 1961 was less than the corresponding increase in expenditures. In 1961 revenues of all levels of government (excluding inter-governmental transfers) amounted to $11,009 million, an increase of 5% over revenues in 1960. However, the year-to-year comparison masks the significant change in government revenues, calculated on the National Accounts basis, which occurred between the first and last quarters of 1961. The table below indicates the nature of such changes and compares them with the record of earlier recovery periods.

Revenues of all levels of government reached an annual rate by the fourth quarter of 1961, 9% above that of the first quarter, the low point in business activity. The gain in revenues was largely due to the increases in indirect tax receipts and accruals of corporation income taxes as the pace of economic activity quickened. By comparison, there were smaller proportionate increases in accrued government revenues in the first nine months of the upswings in economic activity in 1954 and in 1958.

[1] These figures exclude investment expenditure by government business enterprises which is included in the national accounts item for business capital formation.

[2] Preliminary.

Total expenditure at all levels of government includes not only expenditures on goods and services, but also outlays for transfer payments to persons, interest on the public debt and subsidies. Calculated in this manner, total expenditures by all levels of government (excluding inter-governmental transfers) in 1961 were $11,902 million, an increase of 7% over expenditures in 1960. This figure indicates the gross effect of government operations on the economy, since it includes transfer payments to individuals which in turn may be used for expenditures on goods and services. The proportion of total government outlays represented by the categories of expenditure cited above is indicated in the table below.

TABLE 19

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION OF TOTAL EXPENDITURES
ALL LEVELS OF GOVERNMENT

(Excluding inter-governmental transfers)

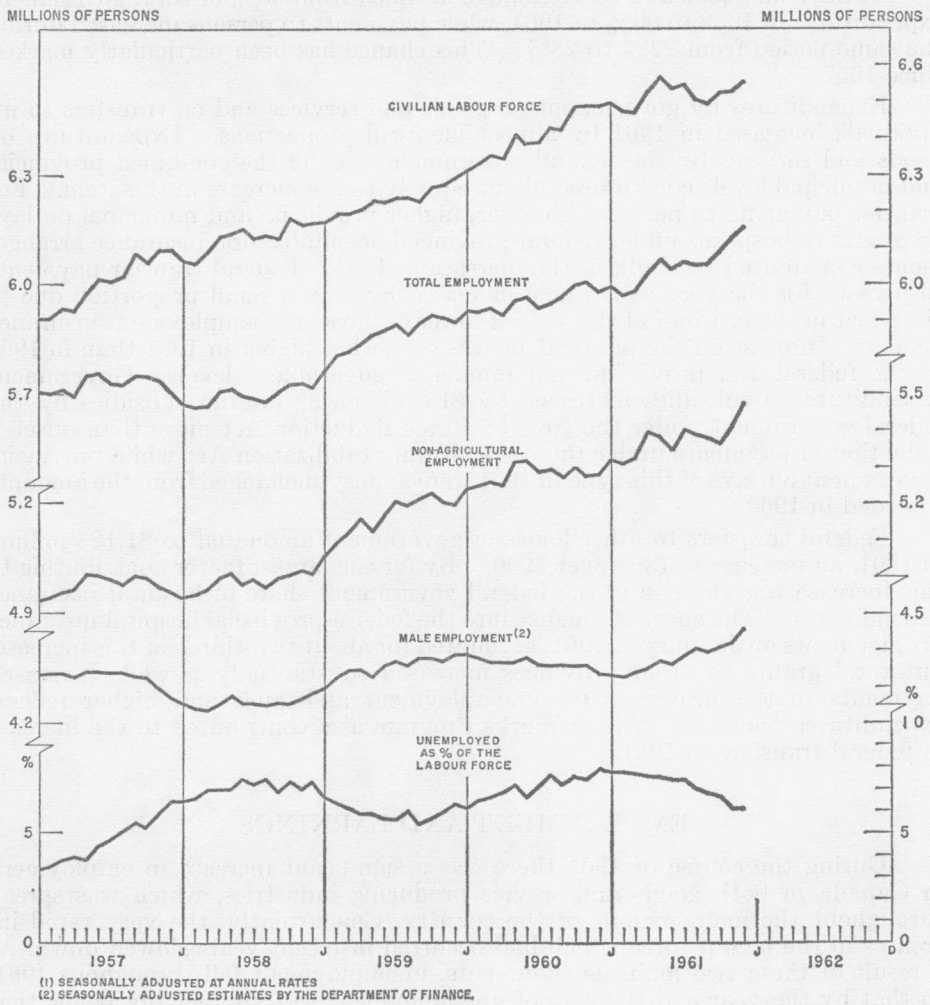
Subsidies	1.6	1.4	2.1	2.1
	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0

Outlays on goods and services have declined from 68% of total government expenditures in 1952 to 60% in 1961, while payments to persons increased during the same period from 22% to 28%. This change has been particularly marked since 1957.

Expenditures by government on goods and services and on transfers to individuals increased in 1961 by almost identical proportions. Expenditures on goods and services by the federal government and by the combined provincial and municipal levels contributed about equally to the increase in this item. For transfer payments to persons, however, higher provincial and municipal outlays on grants to hospitals under federal-provincial hospitalization insurance arrangements contributed the bulk of the increase in 1961. Federal transfer payments to persons for the year as a whole increased by only a small proportion due to the effect in the last half of the year of lower outlays on unemployment insurance benefits. Interest on the public debt was somewhat higher in 1961 than in 1960 at the federal and provincial and municipal government levels. Government expenditure on subsidies increased by $15 million as interim subsidies by the federal government under the Freight Rates Reduction Act more than offset a reduction in payments under the Agricultural Stabilization Act while provincial government outlays of this type in 1961 were almost unchanged from the amounts recorded in 1960.

Federal transfers to other levels of government amounted to $1,123 million in 1961, an increase of 13% over 1960. By far the largest factor contributing to this increase was the rise in the federal government share of hospital insurance expenditures. The entry of Quebec into the federal-provincial hospital insurance arrangements on January 1, 1961, accounted for about two-thirds of this increase, but total grants to other provinces increased substantially as well. Increased payments to the provinces for unemployment assistance and higher federal expenditures under the Winter Works Program also contributed to the increase in federal transfers in 1961.



EMPLOYMENT AND EARNINGS

During the course of 1961 there was a significant increase in employment in Canada in both goods and service producing industries, which was spread throughout the main regions of the country. Concurrently, the very rapid increases in the labour force which had occurred in recent years slowed down. As a result of these two main developments, unemployment fell throughout 1961, so that by the year end the rate of unemployment was appreciably below that at the beginning of 1961, seasonal factors apart. The greater share of the increase in employment during 1961 occurred among male wage earners, in marked contrast with the experience of the recent past, and reflected the upswing in production in the commodity-producing industries which took place during this period.

The increase in employment began about April, after allowing for normal seasonal movements, and from then until year end there was an increase in total employment of more than 3 per cent. By December 1961 there were 180,000 more people employed in Canada than a year earlier of which 125,000 were men and 55,000 women. The gain in female employment marked a continuation of the upward trend observed over the past decade when increasing numbers of women were finding employment in a wide variety of industries, notably the service industries. The gains in male employment, however, marked a change from the relative stability prevailing since 1956.

THE LABOUR FORCE[1]

(1) SEASONALLY ADJUSTED AT ANNUAL RATES
(2) SEASONALLY ADJUSTED ESTIMATES BY THE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE.

The increases in employment were all accounted for in the non-agricultural sectors. More than half of the gains were in Quebec and Ontario, but employment in the Prairies, Atlantic provinces and British Columbia also rose significantly and the percentage increases in all regions were of the order of 2 to 4 per cent from the end of 1960 to the end of 1961. Employment in the goods-producing industries rose somewhat more than in the service-producing industries. The gain in the latter sector constituted a continuation of the post-war increases, whereas the rise in employment in the former sector was the first in about two years. The manufacturing and construction industries accounted for almost all of the gain in the goods-producing industries.

The rate of increase in the labour force slowed down in 1961, compared with very rapid rates of growth in recent years. As noted in last year's Budget White Paper, rates of increase in Canada's labour force over the past decade or so had been two or three times those of other industrialized countries. The phenomenon of deceleration in the rate of growth of the labour force occurs from time to time and is the result of a variety of factors. There was a particularly sharp drop in the labour force participation rates (which measure the percentage of any group working or seeking work) in the male age groups 14-19 and 20-24, reflecting the larger number of males in these age groups remaining in school and receiving fuller training. It will be recalled that the unemployment rate of young males is very much higher than that of the rest of the labour force and the average level of skills and education among these unemployed is quite low. There was very little change in the participation rate of the group of prime working age, 25-64.

The participation rate of females continued its long-term rise, although the increase moderated. This was the net result of two conflicting movements: the youngest female age group, 14-19, showed a decline, though not as large as in the corresponding male age group. On the other hand, participation rates of women in the 20-64 age bracket continued to increase. Much of this rise was accounted for by employment of married women. In December 1961, almost one-half of employed females were married, compared with one-third only eight years ago.

During 1961 the rate of unemployment declined from 7.8 per cent of the labour force in January to 6.1 per cent in December, after allowing for seasonal elements. Almost all of the decline was in the male unemployed and took place mainly in Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia.

The improvement in the unemployment rate during 1961 contrasts with the experience of the past two upswings in business activity. The following table shows the unemployment rates (seasonally adjusted) at the low point in activity and the rates after three quarters of upswing.

Trough	Unemployment Rate	Three Quarters after trough	Unemployment Rate	Change
1Q 1961	7.8	4Q 1961	6.3	−1.5
1Q 1958	6.7	4Q 1958	7.2	+0.5
2Q 1954	4.6	1Q 1955	4.8	+0.2

Labour income responded to the increased pace of employment during 1961. The increase in labour income began to accelerate after April, and between the eight months of April and December 1961 the increase in labour income was as large as in the preceding 15 months. In the last three quarters of 1961 there were substantial gains in labour income in the goods-producing industries, in contrast to declines in the immediately preceding period, and continued increases in labour income in the service-producing industries.

Total labour income rose by more than 5 per cent from the first to the fourth quarter of 1961. During this period average hours worked per week in manufacturing increased about 1 per cent and average hourly earnings between 2 per cent and 3 per cent. The rise in employment was about 2½ per cent. With consumer prices rising by less than 1 per cent during 1961 there was an increase in per capita real earnings in the order of 2 to 3 per cent.

PRICE TRENDS

Prices of goods and services produced in Canada rose only fractionally in the aggregate in 1961 compared with 1960. This is in contrast to the experience of many industrialized countries in Europe where prices rose more rapidly than in North America. While world prices of commodities generally have not increased in the recent past, pressures of other costs in Europe have been upward. Price increases in Canada in almost every major sector were smaller in 1961 than in the previous year, which in itself was a period of relative price stability. The one exception was in international trade, where prices of both imports and, to a lesser extent, exports rose in response to the lower level of the Canadian exchange rate.

The smaller rise in 1961 in the price of capital goods relative to 1960 was the result of very little increase in residential and non-residential building costs offset to some extent by a larger increase for new machinery and equipment which has a substantial import content. Residential construction costs in the fourth quarter of 1961 were at about the same level as in the final quarter of 1960.

[1] Price indexes of these sectors are measured mainly by elements entering into costs (materials and labour purchased) rather than final selling prices, and generally it has not been possible to allow for changes in productivity. Over short periods of time, these cost indexes are not likely to vary to any extent from indexes of actual selling prices. Over longer periods, it may be that these cost deflators overstate price increases.

The consumer price index for 1961 averaged 129.2 compared with 128.0 for 1960, an increase of just under one per cent. This fractional increase in 1961 marks the second successive year in which over-all consumer prices demonstrated comparative stability in contrast to average annual increases of more than 2 per cent in the previous five years.

Period	Total Percentage Change over the Period
1955–1957	+4.7

The consumer price index declined from 129.2 in January, 1961 to 129.0 in March where it remained until August. In August and September, the index was 129.1. Successive monthly increases in the final quarter of the year, associated mainly with seasonal movements in food prices and to some extent reflecting the introduction of the Ontario Sales Tax, raised the index to 129.8 in December, 1961, fractionally above the level of 129.6 in December, 1960.

The following table shows that the increase in consumer prices in the last quarter of 1961 over the last quarter of the preceding year was due to higher costs in the services component. The index for total services rose 1.2 per cent while the index for total goods was virtually unchanged. The stability in the total goods component was the result of an increase of about one-half of one per cent in non-durable prices and a decline of nearly two per cent in durable prices, the latter reflecting lower prices for electrical household appliances and new automobiles. The federal excise tax of 7½ per cent on new automobiles was removed on June 21, 1961.

The much smaller increase in the price of services is of some significance. In part, this is due to lesser increases in shelter costs. In the last five years or so, as housing construction has filled the pressing backlogs of housing needs, the pressure on shelter costs, particularly rent, has been eased. General increases throughout all other components have been more responsible for recent increases in the services index. The largest increases have occurred in health care, public transportation and vehicle operating costs.

The wholesale price index, which is heavily weighted with export and import goods, prices of which are generally affected by changes in the value of foreign currency, rose on average in 1961 by 1 per cent, with somewhat larger increases taking place in the second half of the year as the exchange rate declined. The largest increases appeared in prices of raw and partly manufactured goods, industrial materials and iron and non-ferrous metals and products. The building materials price index, both residential and non-residential, declined during the course of the year and were lower on average in 1961 than in 1960.

It is of interest to compare the behaviour of prices over the course of the business upswing in 1961 with that of 1958. The following table shows changes in price levels from the low point in activity in the first quarter of 1961 and from the previous peak in the first quarter of 1960 to the fourth quarter of 1961. It makes similar comparisons with the preceding upswing in 1958.

The table shows clearly that price movements in the current upswing have been much less than in the one preceding. This is particularly apparent in the case of the consumer price index and the overall price deflator of Gross National Expenditure. In the 1958 upswing, while commodity prices in general did not increase, as seen by the movement of the Wholesale Price Index, the other indexes which measure a wider range of final goods and services continued to move up. In part, this was due to significant increases in service and other costs which are added to the cost of materials. These cost increases had their roots in the inflationary conditions of the mid-1950's and reflected a delayed reaction to events at that time.

CANADIAN WHOLESALE AND CONSUMER PRICE INDEX

During the current upswing, while wholesale prices have risen somewhat, as explained previously, because of exchange rate movements, their effect on final prices of goods and services has been very slight. The smaller increases in service prices reflect a much different environment, including less intense pressure on and greater availability of resources.

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

There was a significant improvement in Canada's balance of payments in 1961 as the deficit on current account was reduced to $989 million from $1,217 million in 1960 and $1,504 million in 1959. This improvement was made possible by a surplus on merchandise trade account which (aside from a minor amount in 1954) was the first such surplus since 1952. The improvement arising from merchandise trade more than offset a further increase in the deficit on non-merchandise account, which did not, however, rise as rapidly as in most years of the past decade. At the same time, there was a substantial reduction in the inflow of long-term capital to the lowest level since 1955, and an increase in the inflow of other forms of capital.

Important changes occurred in the capital account over the past few years. In 1961, the inward net capital movement was reduced substantially and was at the lowest level since 1955.

A summary of capital movements for the past four years is given in table 25.

The amount of inflow for direct investment was lower in 1961 than in 1960 or 1959 and was at the same level as 1958. In part, the decline reflected a reduction in transactions related to take-overs of existing enterprises, which had been more important in 1960. In part, the decline was related to the phasing-out of some major projects. As in 1960, a substantial proportion of direct investment was related to the petroleum, natural gas and mining industries. In 1961, direct investment abroad totalled $110 million, an increase of $25 million above 1960.

Net inflows from security transactions were somewhat higher in 1961 than in 1960, but well below the levels of the preceding four years.

In 1961 the composition of inflows from security transactions changed substantially from earlier years. Provincial government net new issues acquired by non-residents declined sharply from 1959 to 1960 and declined further in 1961. Municipal government net new issues acquired by non-residents declined moderately from 1959 to 1960. In 1961 there was a small net retirement of municipal bonds held by non-residents. Thus, net new issues of provincial and municipal governments held by non-residents fell very sharply over the period 1959 to 1961. On the other hand, net new issues of corporate securities rose sharply in 1961, following two years of relatively small amounts of financing from abroad. Important among the corporate securities purchased by non-residents in 1961 were securities of petroleum and natural gas corporations, real estate investment corporations, some financial institutions and the pulp and paper industry. In some cases it would appear that sales of corporate securities to non-residents are arranged for apart from considerations of interest rates or exchange rates and may take into account other factors including, for example, special relationships between borrower and lender and relative ease of placement of large issues.

While the data show a considerable decline in total capital inflow in 1961, a more detailed analysis by quarters is of considerable interest.

During the course of 1961 while actual deliveries of Canadian securities to non-residents (which measure the capital inflow) did not decline, there was a significant decline in contracts in the latter half of the year.

The decline in net capital inflow from security transactions of provincial and municipal governments in 1961, as a whole, and the decline throughout 1961 in new issues contracted for sale to non-residents were undoubtedly related in part to the narrowing of the differential between Canadian and U.S. interest rates, to the reduction in the level of Canadian interest rates and the greater availability of long-term funds in the Canadian capital market, and to amendments in the withholding tax in December, 1960.

NOTE: Figures may not add due to rounding.

Turning to short-term capital flows, these reflect a variety of elements moving in both directions and responding to diverse factors including seasonal elements associated with the financing of trade, short-term interest rate differentials, both hedged and unhedged, the views of Canadian residents regarding holdings of foreign assets and non-residents regarding holdings of Canadian assets.

During 1961, non-resident holdings of Canadian treasury bills, which had been increasing for three consecutive quarters until the middle of 1961, were reduced in June and in the third quarter by more than $100 million, following a significant narrowing of the hedged differential between Canadian and United States treasury bill rates. This outflow was offset to some extent in the third quarter by an increase in non-resident holdings of Canadian dollar deposits, some of which were interest-bearing, in chartered banks amounting to $33 million. In the fourth quarter of 1961 there was some increase in non-resident holdings of treasury bills as well as some further accumulation of Canadian dollar deposits.

Another component of short-term capital which showed sharp movements in 1961 was private and banking holdings of foreign exchange. In the first half of 1961 these holdings, some of which originate from commercial transactions, were reduced by $182 million, but in the third quarter there was an increase of $140 million. In the final quarter of 1961, most of this increase was repatriated. All other components of short-term capital in total showed an inward movement throughout the four quarters of 1961.

Another factor which is assuming a more important role in the capital account is the extension of export credit facilities. The provision of export credits does not, of course, in itself always imply a net extension of credit from Canadian sources. Many of the claims are receivable in United States funds and may, in effect, be discounted outside Canada. However, aside from this, there have been net extensions of export credit of various kinds. Canada's Export Credits Insurance Corporation has long made available insurance to Canadian exporters of goods and services to protect them against non-payment by foreign buyers due to the various risks involved in foreign trade. In the spring of 1960 the Chartered Banks of Canada joined in setting up the Export Finance Corporation of Canada Ltd. to finance insured exports of capital goods through the provision of medium-term credit ranging up to five years.

Complementing these medium-term arrangements, the guarantee facilities of the Export Credits Insurance Act were extended to longer-term credit and the Government Agency, the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, was authorized to buy guaranteed instruments for direct financing of export sales. Commitments to extend credit to foreign purchasers of capital equipment in Canada have already begun to be made, but the resultant capital outflows will only arise as and when disbursements take place. For the year 1961, such outflows were negligible.

Apart from these facilities the Government has guaranteed substantial credits for the Canadian Wheat Board to conclude sales of wheat and barley to Communist China on a short-term credit basis.

In August, 1961, arrangements were made for the drawing by the United Kingdom of U.S. $1,500 million from the International Monetary Fund. Canadian participation in this drawing had the net effect of reducing both Canadian liabilities to the International Monetary Fund by $52 million and gold and foreign exchange holdings by about the same amount during the third quarter of 1961.

During 1961, total Canadian merchandise exports rose by 9.2 per cent compared with a 5 per cent increase in 1960. Imports rose by 3.1 per cent during this same period. As a result, trade data for 1961, adjusted for balance of payments, showed a surplus of $179 million in contrast to a deficit of $145 million for 1960.

TABLE 29

Merchandise exports	5,400	5,896	+9.2
Merchandise imports	5,545	5,717	+3.1
Trade balance	−145	+179

Within 1961 itself, exports of goods moved generally upwards while imports, which had moved downward irregularly from the beginning of 1960, increased in the latter half of the year. In the fourth quarter of 1961, the volume of imports, seasonally adjusted, was at about the same level as in the first quarter of 1960, although the value was higher. Movements of both exports and imports in 1961 were strongly affected by the business upturn in North America.

The value of merchandise exports amounted to $5,896 million for 1961, a new record, compared with $5,400 million during the previous year; increases in exports of agricultural products represented the largest share of the increase from the 1960 level. Exports of grain, forest products, nickel and petroleum increased substantially and there was some decline in exports of iron ore, copper and uranium. Larger export credit facilities and a more favourable exchange rate explain some of these increases. At the same time, the increase in economic activity in the United States and the maintenance of high levels of activity abroad helped provide a more expansionary environment for exports.

The value of merchandise imports for 1961 was $5,717 million; this was somewhat higher than in 1960. The growth in imports in 1961 was widely distributed among various items although there were somewhat larger than average increases in imports of machinery and equipment from the United States.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF MERCHANDISE

The improvement in the trade balance was widespread on a geographical basis. The trading deficit with the United States was reduced, while the surplus with the United Kingdom rose slightly. The sharpest improvement took place with all other countries.

The deficit in non-merchandise transactions increased by $96 million in 1961 over 1960, compared with relative stability for 1960 over 1959, but the rate of increase was well below the average annual increase of the last decade.

There were a number of interesting developments on the non-merchandise account. The travel account showed a significant improvement, with receipts in 1961 rising by $53 million while payments rose by only $6 million. At the same time there was a gain of $18 million from receipts of dividends, in contrast to a $4 million decline in the preceding year. Payments of interest and dividends rose by $102 million in comparison with the $2 million decrease in 1960, but this rise masks a very unusual shift between the fourth quarter of 1960 and the first quarter of 1961, as some payments of dividends were made in the first quarter of 1961, rather than in the last quarter of 1960, in contrast to past experience. The result of this shift was that the figures for 1960 were somewhat lower than usual and those for 1961 were correspondingly higher.

Official Canadian holdings of gold and foreign exchange varied somewhat in the course of 1961. Holdings at December 31, 1960 were $1,829 million and at the end of May, 1961, the last month end prior to the June budget, were $1,949 million. After moving both up and down throughout the remaining months of 1961, official holdings at February 28, 1962 (the latest available month) were $1,747 million. Apart from an advance of U.S. $50 million in connection with the United Kingdom drawing from the International Monetary Fund, there was thus a reduction of $32 million between the beginning of 1961 and the end of February, 1962.

The exchange value of the Canadian dollar declined during 1961. The average noon rate for the United States dollar, in terms of the Canadian dollar, was 99.29 in January; it moved from a low of 98.66 for June to 103.50 at June 30, to 104.31 at the end of December, 1961 and was 104.97 at the end of February, 1962.

FINANCIAL DEVELOPMENTS

Credit Conditions

Monetary conditions in 1961 were relatively easy. Interest rates were appreciably below the peaks reached in the last upswing in the economy and the spread between interest rates in Canada and the United States narrowed. The spread between average long-term yields on United States and Canadian Government bonds was 1.40 per cent at the end of May 1961, 0.87 per cent at the end of October, and 0.84 per cent at the end of February, 1962. After following a fairly flat trend from January to May, security yields in Canada fell sharply in June and resumed a relatively stable trend from that point. The decline in interest rates in 1961 during the first year of the recovery is in contrast to an increase in interest rates in the corresponding phase of the 1958–59 upswing.

The demand for new funds rose in 1961. New money raised by Canadian borrowers in 1961 from the securities markets and chartered bank loans increased by some 25% above the level of 1960. The increase stemmed entirely from federal and provincial government financing since, for the year as a whole, municipal and non-governmental borrowing was slightly below the levels of 1960. However, after the first quarter of 1961, corporate and other private financing rose in response to the upswing in the economy.

Despite the increasing demand for funds, and the resumption of economic expansion during the last three quarters of 1961, the trend of interest rates was downward for the better part of the year. As the following table indicates, this decline is in contrast to the increases in interest rates which occurred in 1958 during the first three quarters of the economic upswing which was also taking place at that time.

Bank loans seasonally adjusted resumed their upward trend in the second half of 1960 and continued to increase during 1961. Most of the increase occurred in personal and business loans of less than $1 million. The rate of growth in these two categories accelerated after May. Farm loans continued to rise steadily in 1961.

Total assets of the banking system expanded by 9.8% during 1961, compared with 5.9% during the previous year, a slight decline in 1959, and a 10.8% climb during 1958. At the same time, the liquidity of the banking system also increased. The proportion of total bank assets held in the form of government securities, day-to-day loans, cash, and other liquid assets rose fairly steadily from 32% in September 1959 to 37% in early 1962. This is below the peak ratios in recent years of 43% in 1958 and 49% in 1955.

Although complete data are not yet available, total assets of some major non-banking financial institutions (instalment finance companies, credit unions, trust companies, mortgage loan companies) probably rose by a substantial percentage during 1961. Assets in these institutions have been growing at an annual rate of 10% and more in recent years.

The public's holdings of financial assets rose in 1961 and a greater share of the increased holdings was in liquid forms. During 1961 currency and deposits in the hands of the public rose 8.7%.

Among the more liquid assets, there was a sharp gain in corporate notice deposits at the banks. This appears to have been associated with the practice adopted by the banks at the beginning of 1961 of paying interest rates on these deposits higher than the comparable treasury bill yields. The public's holdings of Canada Savings Bonds were $4,075 million on February 28, 1962, $491 million higher than a year ago; by a wide margin the largest annual increase in the past decade. The general increase in the supply of liquid assets responded to an increase in the liquidity preference of the public.

Federal Debt Management

Policies concerning the management of the public debt by the federal government are influenced by a number of objectives and considerations including: the interest of the government in minimizing its costs of borrowing; the preferences of potential investors for particular types of securities; the desirability of maintaining levels of interest rates and liquidity appropriate to the general state of business activity. Another objective in debt management has been to narrow the spread in interest rates between Canadian and U.S. securities and lessen the incentive to obtain certain types of capital from abroad so as to lessen upward pressure on the exchange rate.

Following an announcement in the June Budget, the government has been reducing the so-called "overhang" of long-term Canada bonds in order to foster confidence in the capital market and to allow more room in the capital market for other long-term borrowers. The government has reduced this "overhang" in three ways. It has confined new bond issues to the "short end" of the market leaving the long-term financing market available to the provinces, municipalities and private business. It has converted the bond holdings of the Unemployment Insurance Fund totalling $237 million into non-marketable bonds redeemable on 30 days' notice. The federal government also established a Purchase Fund to assist in the orderly management of the public debt.

During 1961 the federal government continued the practice of advance refunding with the Bank of Canada. This means of reducing the weight of nearby maturities contributed to orderly debt management.

From late 1959 through 1960 the average term to maturity of Government of Canada and C.N.R. market securities remained almost unchanged at about 9½ years. It was shortened to 9 years by the end of June, 1961 and just under 8½ years by the end of the year.

Federal Government Financing

In calendar year 1961 the Government of Canada raised $1.1 billion from net new security issues in the capital market and from net sales of securities held by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and other Government accounts. This total exceeded the $0.7 billion raised from direct and guaranteed securities in 1960, approximated that raised in 1959 and was less than the $1.4 billion obtained in 1958.

Of the $1.1 billion in new funds in 1961, $674 million came from issues of marketable bonds. Retirement of treasury bills held outside government accounts exceeded new issues by about $50 million. Net new issues of Canada Savings Bonds in the fourth quarter and for the year as a whole (at $486 million), were about $100 million higher than in the previous year.

Provincial and Municipal Financing

Net new funds raised by provincial governments from security issues and chartered bank loans, which had been between $500 million and $600 million annually since 1956, exceeded $800 million last year. However $205 million represented issues of guaranteed bonds by one of the provinces to finance the expropriation of a privately-owned utility company.

Since 1956 net new municipal financing has ranged between $270 million and $350 million annually. In 1961 it fell to $283 million as compared with $305 million in 1960.

In the fourth quarter of 1961 net new provincial and municipal financing was at its heaviest for that quarter since 1957.

Non-Farm Business Financing

The rapid upswing since early 1961 in industrial production, employment and corporate profits was accompanied in the third quarter by higher outlays on plant and equipment and in the fourth quarter by a significant rise in non-farm business inventories. As economic activity expanded, the funds obtained by non-farm business from the security markets, banks, retained corporate earnings, and other sources began to exceed those raised in the corresponding quarters of 1960, despite the drop in net direct foreign investment in Canada.

Corporate earnings retained after payment of taxes and dividends, which had declined in the preceding year and a half, turned above the levels of the previous year in the second quarter of 1961. Depreciation allowances moved slightly above year-earlier levels in the third quarter.

Corporate bond and stock issues, net of retirements, totalled $460 million in 1961 compared to $523 million in 1960. Bank loans to non-farm business moved above the levels of a year earlier in the second and third quarters of 1961 and for the year as a whole to $303 million compared to $137 million in 1960.

Net new corporate financing from securities issues and bank loans moved above the level of a year earlier in the second and third quarters. During 1961, as has been the case for several years now, the high level of common stock prices, in relation to earnings and dividends, continued to make financing through the sale of stock attractive to corporations. The net retirement of corporate stocks in the last half of 1961 reflects the distribution of $86 million to the shareholders of a utility taken over by a provincial government and the exchange of $104 million of preferred stock for bonds guaranteed by that province.

Housing Finance

Total expenditures on new housing declined from $1,825 million in 1958 to $1,472 million in 1960 and were $1,485 million in 1961.

In late 1960 the government amended the terms under which it would guarantee N.H.A. housing loans by financial institutions. Amongst other things the amendments provided for higher mortgage loans and lower down payments. The supply of mortgage funds in the hands of lending institutions appeared to be quite substantial at that time.

In 1961 the mortgage loans made under N.H.A.–guarantee by financial institutions rose to $388 million as compared with $177 million in 1960, the highest amount since 1958. This type of housing finance came almost completely from life insurance companies and trust and loan companies. The proportion of all housing funds supplied by N.H.A.–approved lending institutions rose from 12% in 1960 to 26% in 1961.

(1) These include equities of owners or builders on dwellings being financed with mortgages from public funds or from institutional lenders. Also includes equities on dwellings financed with mortgage loans from non-institutional lenders or by loans other than mortgages, or equities on dwellings fully financed by their owners.

(2) Differs slightly from public and private expenditures on housing in Table 13, which includes major alterations to buildings but not the cost of land. Table 38 includes the cost of land but not major alterations to buildings.

Conventional mortgage loans by lending institutions declined from $294 million in 1960 to $250 million in 1961. Financing in the form of equity and other non-mortgage payments by home owners fell from $692 million in 1960 to $547 million in 1961. This decline reflected the 8% decline in housing completions and the lower down payments permitted under the National Housing Act.

New housing financed directly by C.M.H.C. and other public funds fell from $384 million in 1958 to $308 million in 1960 and to $300 million in 1961, and from a 21% share of all new housing finance in 1958 to one of 20% in 1961. In June, 1961 Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation inaugurated a series of auctions of insured mortgages from its portfolio to promote a secondary market in mortgages. Sale from three auctions in 1961 totalled $41 million.

In line with the lower level of long-term interest rates the government reduced the interest rate on N.H.A. mortgages from 6¾% to 6½% in November, 1961.

CONSUMER CREDIT

The rate of growth in short-term consumer debt slowed somewhat further last year. Credit extended to consumers from finance companies, retail stores, and unsecured personal loans from banks, increased by about 6% or $185 million compared to $270 million or 9% in 1960 and $341 million or 14% in 1959.

Consumer credit extended by retail stores rose $46 million in 1961 compared to $45 million in 1960 and that provided by instalment finance and small loan companies fell $34 million in 1961 compared to a rise of $87 million in 1960.

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS

1961–62

1. INTRODUCTION

The figures presented in this Part for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962 are preliminary and subject to revision. The fiscal year of the government ended on March 31 but the books must remain open for several weeks after that date to record various adjusting entries and to take into account all payments up to and including April 30 made on account of expenditures originating in and properly chargeable to the fiscal year 1961–62. The figures used in this White Paper are based on eleven months actual and one month estimated. The final figures when they become available next July or August will vary to some extent from those given in the following pages.

2. HIGHLIGHTS OF GOVERNMENTAL FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING 1961–62

The following table summarizes the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions for the fiscal year and indicates how the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions, including changes in unmatured debt, affected the government's cash balances. More detailed explanations of these transactions are given in subsequent sections of this Part.

Budgetary transactions

The revenues and expenditures as forecast in the budget speech of June 20, 1961 and the actual figures as now estimated are shown in the following table:

TABLE 2

(in millions of dollars)

Budgetary Transactions for Fiscal Year 1961-62	Budget forecast June 20, 1961	Actual (estimated)	Increase or decrease (−) compared with forecast of June 20, 1961

Revenues	5,765.0	5,772.0	7.0	0.12
Expenditures	−6,415.0	−6,563.4	148.4	2.31
Surplus or deficit (−)	−650.0	−791.4	141.4

Revenues

The revenues of the government for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962 amounted to $5,772 million. This is $7 million or approximately one-tenth of one per cent more than the total of $5,765 million forecast in the budget speech of June 20, 1961, and approximately $154 million or about 3 per cent more than the total of $5,618 million collected in the fiscal year 1960–61.

Of the increase of $154 million over 1960–61 revenues, $141 million was due to tax revenues and $13 million to non-tax revenues. Personal income tax receipts accounted for most of the increase in tax revenues and were $89 million more than in the preceding year, reflecting the higher level of incomes during the year. Corporation income tax collections were $72 million less than the preceding year due to lower corporate profits in 1960.

The increase of $13 million in non-tax revenues was due to increases of $21 million in return on investments, $6 million in net post office revenue and a reduction of $14 million in other non-tax revenues.

Expenditures

Government expenditures at $6,563 million were $148 million or approximately 2.3 per cent more than forecast on June 20, 1961, and $605 million or 10 per cent more than total expenditures in 1960–61. Almost all of the increase of $148 million has been due to events that were not foreseen last June. An increase of approximately $40 million in defence expenditures has resulted from certain changes in policy made last August, and the abnormally low crop yields in the prairie provinces have produced an unexpected increase of about $40 million in statutory payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and also resulted in the recent decision to make further payments of $42 million to western grain producers.

Expenditures for defence again constituted the largest item and amounted to $1,647 million or 25 per cent of total expenditures, compared with $1,538 million or 26 per cent in 1960–61.

Civil or non-defence expenditures were $4,916 million, an increase of $496 million over the corresponding total for the previous fiscal year. The main items were increases of $150 million in expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare (including increases of $95 million in the government's contribution under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, $37 million in unemployment assistance and $15 million in family allowances), $80 million in expenditures of the Department of Transport (including $50 million in interim payments related to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Railway Problems), $67 million in the expenditures of the Department of Labour (including increases of $46 million in payments to provinces authorized by the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and $15 million under the municipal winter works incentive program), $52 million in expenditures of the Department of Finance (including $42 million for higher public debt charges) and $42 million in expenditures of the Department of Veterans Affairs (including increases of $27 million for pensions for disability or death and $16 million in war veterans allowances and other benefits).

More detailed explanations of budgetary revenues by source and expenditures by classification and department are given in Section 3 of this Part.

Deficit

On the basis of these figures the deficit for the fiscal year 1961–62 was $791 million compared with the deficit of $650 million as forecast on June 20, 1961, and the deficit of $340 million in 1960–61.

Non-budgetary transactions

A net amount of $312 million was available during the fiscal year from non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions). Non-budgetary disbursements and charges totalled $492 million and receipts and credits, $804 million. Sums totalling $478 million were required for loans, investments and working capital advances, and $14 million for other non-budgetary purposes. On the other hand, of the total of $804 million available from various non-budgetary receipts and credits, $384 million was available from the repayment of loans, investments and working capital advances, $304 million from the net receipts from various government annuity, insurance and pension accounts, and $116 million from other non-budgetary sources.

Old age security fund

During 1961–62 pension payments from the old age security fund were $625 million compared with $592 million in the previous fiscal year. Accounting for approximately $20 million of the increase was the increased rate of payment (from $55 to $65 per month) effective February 1, 1962. Tax receipts credited to the fund were $649 million for the year. The excess of $24 million in receipts over payments was applied to repay the temporary loans made by the Minister of Finance to the fund. These loans amounted to $17 million at March 31, 1961. The fund reflected a credit balance of $7 million as at March 31, 1962.

The transactions in the account during 1961–62 compared with those for the previous fiscal year are as follows:

	Fiscal year ended March 31
	1962 (estimated)	1961
	(in millions of dollars)
Pension payments	625	592
Tax receipts	649	603
Excess of receipts over payments applied in part to the repayment of temporary loans from the Minister of Finance	24	11
Temporary loans outstanding at fiscal year-end		17
Balance in fund at fiscal year-end	7

Debt transactions

During 1961–62 the government issued securities amounting to $3,451 million (excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature weekly) and redeemed or converted issues in the amount of $2,594 million, resulting in an increase of $857 million in unmatured debt. However, as other liabilities increased by $407 million the government's gross public debt increased by $1,264 million to $22,867 million at March 31, 1962. During the same period the government's net assets increased by $473 million to $9,638 million. As a result, the government's net debt was $13,229 million at March 31, 1962, the increase of $791 million being equivalent to the budgetary deficit for the fiscal year.

Cash position

Receiver General balances were $401 million more at March 31, 1962, than they were at March 31, 1961. This is the amount by which the increase of $880 million in unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public, plus the net amount of $312 million available from non-budgetary transactions, exceeded the budgetary deficit of $791 million.

3. THE BUDGETARY ACCOUNTS

Total revenues were $5,772 million for 1961-62, $154 million more than the total for the previous year. Total expenditures were $6,563 million, an increase of $605 million over the total for 1960–61. The deficit for the fiscal year 1961–62 was $791 million compared with $340 million for the previous year.

A. REVENUES

Budgetary revenues totalled $5,772 million in 1961–62 compared with $5,618 million in 1960–61, an increase of $154 million or 3 per cent. Tax revenues of $5,157 million accounted for 89 per cent of the total for the current fiscal year and non-tax revenues of $615 million accounted for 11 per cent.

(1) TAX REVENUES

Tax on personal incomes

In 1961–62 the largest source of government revenue was again the personal income tax. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) was $1,800 million or 31 per cent of all budgetary revenue. The increase of $89 million or 5 per cent over 1960–61 collections was due principally to the higher level of personal incomes during the fiscal year.

The tax on personal incomes levied under the Old Age Security Act in the amount of $259 million was credited to the old age security fund.

Corporation income tax

The corporation income tax (excluding the old age security tax) was $1,205 million or 21 per cent of government revenue for 1961–62 and was the second largest source of revenue. Collections under this category were approximately $72 million or 6 per cent less than the comparable total of $1,277 million for 1960–61. This decrease was due mainly to lower corporate profits for the calendar year 1960 which in turn were reflected by lower corporation income tax collections during 1961–62.

In addition the tax on incomes of corporations levied under the Old Age Security Act in the amount of $100 million was credited to the old age security fund.

Taxes on dividends, interest, etc., going abroad

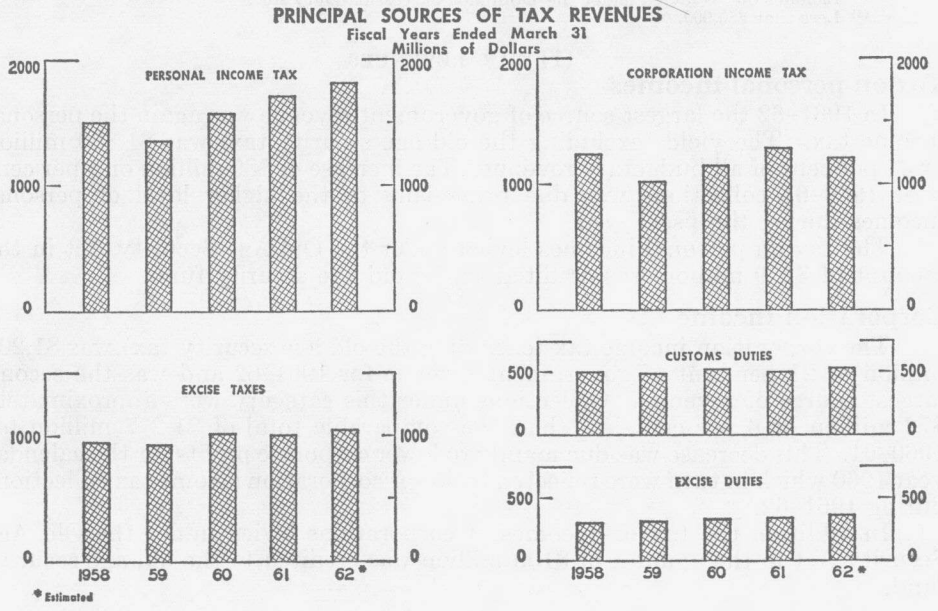
Revenue included in this category is derived from taxes withheld on payments of dividends, interest, rents, royalties, alimony and income from estates and trusts made to non-residents. Collections in 1961–62 were $115 million, an increase of $27 million over the comparable total for 1960–61. This reflects the removal of exemptions and the increased rate on certain interest and dividend payments, to non-residents, introduced in December 1960.

Excise taxes

Included under this heading are the revenues from the general sales tax and other special excise taxes.

From a revenue standpoint the most important tax levied under the Excise Tax Act is the sales tax. Receipts from this tax (excluding the old age security tax) were $774 million, $53 million or 7 per cent higher than in the previous fiscal year.

The tax on sales, levied under the Old Age Security Act, in the amount of $290 million was credited to the old age security fund.



Excise taxes levied under the Excise Tax Act, other than the general sales tax, were $276 million, a decrease of $15 million from the 1960–61 total of $291 million. Receipts from the excise tax levied on the sale of automobiles were $34 million less than corresponding receipts for 1960–61 due to the repeal of such tax effective June 21, 1961.

Customs import duties

Customs import duties totalled $539 million for 1961–62, an increase of $40 million over the comparable figure for 1960–61.

Excise duties

Excise duties are levied on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. (Additional taxes on tobacco products are levied under the Excise Tax Act referred to above.) Gross receipts in 1961-62 from taxes on alcoholic beverages were $209 million and from taxes on tobacco products were $158 million, compared with $200 million and $150 million respectively in 1960–61.

Estate tax

Revenue from this source amounted to $85 million in 1961–62, approximately the same as the total for the previous fiscal year.

Other taxes

Revenue under this heading was less than $50 thousand in 1961–62, approximately the same as for 1960–61.

(2) NON-TAX REVENUES

Non-tax revenues totalled $615 million in 1961–62, an increase of $13 million or 2 per cent over the 1960–61 total of $602 million.

Return on investments

Receipts in this category amounted to $305 million for the fiscal year 1961–62 compared with the 1960–61 total of $284 million.

Payments from Crown corporations amounted to $206 million in 1961–62, an increase of $12 million over the previous year's total. The main increases of $18 million in Bank of Canada profits and $12 million in receipts from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation were offset partly by a decrease of $4 million in returns from the Canadian National Railways and by the fact that there was no comparable receipt in the current fiscal year to the $13 million received from The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority in 1960–61.

It should also be noted that in accordance with Order-in-Council P.C. 1961–1863 dated December 29, 1961, interest of $14 million payable on December 31, 1961 by The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, as well as interest payable on December 31, 1962 has been deferred until December 31, 1963. On December 31, 1963 the total amount of interest so deferred together with the interest payable on December 31, 1963, will be computed as a single sum and is to be repaid in equal annual instalments calculated by amortizing the said sum, including interest at rates determined by the Minister of Finance, over a period of forty-six years.

Other loans and investments yielded $99 million compared with $89 million in 1960–61. Receipts of $8 million from the purchase fund which was established during 1961-62 to assist in the management of the public debt in accordance with the announcement by the Minister of Finance in the budget speech of June 20, 1961, together with increases of $3 million in receipts from the securities investment account, $3 million in interest received from the Unemployment Insurance Commission and $1 million in interest on loans to national governments were offset partly by decreases of $3 million in interest on Receiver General deposits with the chartered banks and $2 million in the yield from the sinking fund held for retirement of unmatured debt.

Post office revenue

In 1961–62 gross post office receipts totalled $210 million but authorized disbursements from revenue for salaries and rent allowances at semi-staff and revenue offices, commissions at sub-offices, transit charges on Canadian mail forwarded through or delivered in foreign countries, etc., in the amount of $30 million, brought net revenue to $180 million. In 1960–61 gross receipts were $202 million, authorized disbursements were $28 million and net revenue was $174 million.

As costs of operating the Post Office Department during 1961–62 (excluding the $30 million charged to revenue) were $189 million, net expenditure exceeded net revenue by $9 million. However, in making this comparison, it is to be noted that the total shown for post office revenue does not reflect any payment for the franking privilege covering parliamentary and departmental mail or for certain miscellaneous services provided for other government departments and agencies, nor does the total shown for operating expenses reflect any charges for premises occupied by the Post Office Department or for certain accounting and miscellaneous services provided by other departments.

Refunds of previous years' expenditures

Refunds in 1961–62 of expenditures made in prior years totalled $27 million, a decrease of $14 million from the comparable total for 1960–61. Included in this category is an amount of $12 million received by the Department of National Defence, consisting of refunds of $3 million from the United States Government, $1 million in respect of advances to Canadian Vickers Limited, $1 million from the defence production revolving fund and $7 million from miscellaneous sources. In addition, the unexpended balance of parliamentary grants as at March 31, 1961, amounting to $3 million was refunded by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Services and service fees

Collections in 1961–62 for services and service fees amounted to $42 million, an increase of $2 million over the total for 1960–61.

Revenue in this category includes: $12 million received by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, mainly for police services to certain provinces and municipalities; $14 million received by the Department of Transport of which $7 million was in respect of aircraft landing fees and $3 million from marine steamers' earnings; $7 million by the Department of Agriculture including $5 million for services in connection with the inspection, weighing, storage and elevation of grain, and $1 million in respect of race track supervision; and $4 million by the Department of National Health and Welfare due mainly to reimbursement by the provinces for treatment of Indians in federal government hospitals.

Proceeds from sales

Receipts from this source totalled $23 million compared with $24 million in 1960–61.

Included in this category are: $9 million by the Department of Defence Production of which $8 million represents amounts from the sale of surplus Crown assets (after deducting certain agency fees and transfers) and $1 million under agreements of sale of Crown assets; $5 million by the Department of Public Works representing the proceeds of the sales of properties by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; and $4 million by the Department of National Defence of which $2 million is in respect of the sales of stores to the United Nations.

Privileges, licences and permits

Revenue of $23 million for the fiscal year 1961–62 on account of privileges, licences and permits was $1 million more than was received in 1960–61.

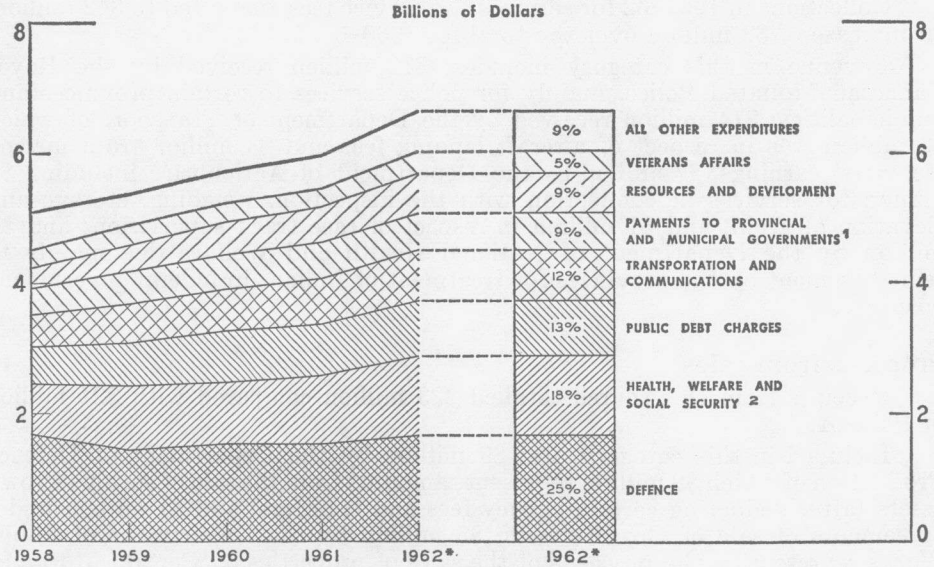
Included in this revenue are amounts of $9 million received from the Department of Transport representing rentals, concessions and radio licence fees and $4 million from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources including $1 million in respect of bonuses, exploratory permits, fees, leases and royalties from oil and gas.

Bullion and coinage

Revenues in this category were derived from the operations of the Royal Canadian Mint and consist mainly of $7 million from a net gain on coinage. Small amounts were also obtained from gold refining charges, handling charges and gain on gold refining.

Premium, discount and exchange

In the current fiscal year premium, discount and exchange transactions resulted in a net credit of $1 million, approximately the same as for 1960–61.



Other non-tax revenues

Revenues, other than tax revenues, not dealt with in preceding sections totalled $7 million for 1961–62, a decrease of $1 million from the 1960–61 total.

B. Expenditures

Budgetary expenditures for 1961–62 amounted to $6,563 million, an increase of $605 million over the 1960–61 total of $5,958 million.

(1) DEFENCE EXPENDITURES

Defence expenditures which consist of expenditures of the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production were again the largest category of government budgetary expenditures. The total of $1,647 million for 1961–62 was approximately 25 per cent of the aggregate budgetary expenditures of the government for the year and was $109 million more than the total of $1,538 million for 1960–61.

National Defence

Expenditures of the Department of National Defence were $1,622 million in 1961–62. In 1960–61 expenditures were $1,518 million.

Expenditures for naval, army and air services amounted to $1,489 million, $90 million more than the 1960–61 total. Of this increase, $17 million was attributable to naval services, $46 million to army services and $27 million to air services.

Direct charges to mutual aid amounted to $10 million during 1961–62 compared with $15 million in 1960–61 and consisted of procurement of equipment for mutual aid and Canada's share of NATO military budgets and infra-structure costs.

Expenditures for defence research and development were $43 million compared with $42 million in 1960–61.

The government's contribution to the Canadian forces superannuation account of an amount equal to $1\frac{2}{3}$ times the contributions by permanent services personnel was $56 million, an increase of $16 million over the total for the previous year. The increase resulted from a provision of the new act which became effective March 1, 1960 and which authorized the crediting to the superannuation account quarterly, in each fiscal year, such amount, in relation to the total amount paid into the said account during the preceding quarter by way of contributions in respect of current services and past services by contributors, as is specified by the Minister of Finance. The contribution for 1960–61 therefore, was based on a nine-month period from April 1, 1960 to December 31, 1960, inclusive, compared with the contribution for 1961–62 which was based on a twelve-month period from January 1, 1961 to December 31, 1961, inclusive.

Administration and general costs were $24 million in 1961–62, an increase of $2 million over the 1960–61 total.

Defence Production

The total expenditure of $25 million in 1961–62 for the Department of Defence Production was $4 million more than in 1960–61.

Outlays of $5 million in connection with the government program instituted in 1959–60 of supporting selected defence development programs in order to sustain technological capability in Canadian industry were $2 million more than in 1960–61. Expenditures of $2 million in respect of the procurement of capital assistance by Canadian Arsenals Limited and the programs under which assistance for the establishment of production capacity and capital assistance is given to private contractors, Crown plants operated on a management-fee basis and Crown corporations undertaking contracts essential to the defence program were approximately $1 million more than corresponding expenditures in the previous fiscal year.

Administration and general costs amounted to $18 million in 1961–62 compared with $16 million in 1960–61.

Cash outlays for defence

In addition to these budgetary expenditures for defence, there are certain other cash outlays which must be considered in assessing the full effect of the defence program on the economy of Canada.

Section 11 of the National Defence Act provides that materiel, not immediately required for the use of the Canadian defence forces or the Defence Research Board, may be sold to such countries and upon such terms as the Governor in Council may determine. The proceeds of such sales in 1961–62 amounting to $3 million were credited to a special account to be used for the procurement of materiel. Cash outlays of $6 million from this account during 1961–62 resulted in a balance of $2 million at March 31, 1962.

The Department of Defence Production also makes cash disbursements for the procurement of materials for use in the manufacture of defence equipment which are not recorded as budgetary expenditures. For purposes of accounting and control, these amounts are charged to the defence production revolving fund and are treated as assets on the books of the government until they are billed to the Department of National Defence or sold to defence contractors for use in the manufacture of defence equipment. As a result of the transactions during 1961–62 purchases exceeded proceeds from sales by $18 million and the assets of the fund increased by an equivalent amount, leaving a balance of $33 million in the account at March 31, 1962.

The following table summarizes the cash outlays for defence for the past two fiscal years:

(2) NON-DEFENCE EXPENDITURES

Agriculture

Expenditures of the Department of Agriculture were $289 million for 1961–62 compared with $265 million for 1960–61.

Increases of $40 million in expenditures to cover the deficit in the prairie farm emergency fund and $6 million in outlays for rehabilitation and reclamation projects were offset partly by the decrease of $30 million in the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board.

The 1961–62 net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board was $23 million compared with $53 million in 1960–61.

Advances of $49 million made by the Minister of Finance to the prairie farm emergency fund to cover the year's deficit have been charged to budgetary expenditures. The comparable amount in 1960–61 was $9 million.

Atomic Energy

Expenditures of the Atomic Energy Control Board and payments to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited were $35 million compared with $39 million in 1960–61, a decrease of $4 million.

Administration expenses of the Atomic Energy Control Board and grants for research and investigations with respect to atomic energy totalled $1 million, approximately the same as for the previous fiscal year.

During the year under review approximately $34 million was paid to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for its research program, $4 million less than in the previous fiscal year. Of the total, $26 million was for current operations and maintenance and $8 million for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Payments of $77 million have been made by the government to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation during 1961–62, an increase of $10 million over the total for 1960–61.

Grants for capital requirements including the replacement of existing capital assets of the radio and television services increased by $1 million during 1961–62, while grants in respect of the net operating requirements of the radio and television services were $9 million higher than in the previous fiscal year.

Outlays for the international shortwave broadcasting service were approximately the same as for 1960–61.

Citizenship and Immigration

Expenditures of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration were $66 million in 1961–62, an increase of $5 million over the total for 1960–61.

Outlays for the Indian affairs branch increased by $5 million during 1961–62 due principally to increases of $2 million in expenditures for Indian education, $1 million in outlays for Indian welfare, $1 million in costs of Indian agencies and $1 million in expenditures for economic development of Indians.

Expenditures of the immigration branch and the citizenship and citizenship registration branches were approximately the same as for the previous fiscal year.

External Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of External Affairs totalled $95 million in 1961–62, a decrease of $8 million from the previous year's total.

The principal changes in expenditure as compared with 1960–61 were decreases of $7 million in contributions to international organizations and $4 million in assistance to other countries and increases of $2 million in costs of representation abroad and $1 million in expenditures for administration and general.

Contributions to international organizations decreased by $7 million during the year due mainly to the fact that 1960–61 expenditures included the following items for which there was no comparable expenditure in 1961–62: (a) $6 million for the purchase and transfer of wheat flour to assist in the establishment of strategic stock piles of food supplies in member states of NATO; (b) $2 million for the reimbursement of the agricultural commodities stabilization account for canned pork donated to international relief agencies; and (c) $2 million to reimburse the agricultural products board account for whole milk powder donated for international relief purposes.

Finance

Expenditures of the Department of Finance amounted to $1,512 million in 1961–62, an increase of $52 million over the corresponding total of $1,460 million in 1960–61.

The main changes were increases of $42 million in public debt charges, $5 million in the government's contribution to the public service superannuation account, $3 million in tax-sharing, subsidy and other payments to provinces, $2 million in administration expenses of the Comptroller of the Treasury, and $2 million in the government's share of medical-surgical insurance premiums and a decrease of $2 million in administration and general costs.

Government's contribution to the public service superannuation account

In 1961–62 the government's contribution to the public service superannuation account amounted to $47 million, an increase of $5 million over the comparable figure for 1960–61.

Public debt charges

In 1961–62 public debt charges were again the second largest item of budgetary expenditure. These charges, which consist of interest on public debt, the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions, the cost of issuing new loans and other costs incurred in servicing the public debt, totalled $840 million in 1961–62 or 13 per cent of all budgetary expenditure, compared with $798 million or 13 per cent in 1960–61.

Interest on public debt in 1961–62 amounted to $804 million, an increase of $47 million over the 1960–61 total of $757 million. Interest of $643 million on unmatured debt was $30 million higher than in 1960–61 reflecting the increase in unmatured debt; interest of $161 million on other liabilities was $17 million higher due to the increase of $17 million in interest on annuity, insurance and pension accounts, including increases of $10 million in respect of the public service superannuation account and $5 million in respect of the Canadian forces superannuation account.

Other public debt charges amounted to $36 million compared with $41 million in 1960–61. The decrease of $5 million was due to a reduction in the cost of annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions.

When considering the magnitude of these public debt charges and the burden they place upon the public treasury, it must be borne in mind that a substantial portion of the debt is attributable to, or is invested in, productive or earning assets. Therefore, in calculating the net burden of the government's annual interest charges, the income derived from loans, investments and other productive assets must be taken into account. For 1961–62 this income totalled $305 million as shown in the non-tax revenue section under the heading "Return on investments". This amount deducted from the gross total of $804 million for interest as shown in the above table leaves a net amount of $499 million compared with a net of $473 million in 1960–61. Measured as a percentage of the net debt the burden of the net annual interest charges was 3.77 per cent in 1961–62 compared with 3.80 per cent in 1960–61.

Tax-sharing, subsidy and other payments to provinces

Payments to the provinces during 1961–62 for statutory subsidies, payments under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, additional grants to Newfoundland and the transfer of a portion of income tax receipts from certain public utility companies were $541 million compared with $538 million in 1960–61.

Charges to budgetary expenditures in 1961–62 under the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements, including adjustments made on account of previous years, were $2 million less than in 1960–61. The decrease was due to an increase in the relative proportion of personal and corporation income tax attributable to provinces other than Ontario and British Columbia which had the effect of reducing the equalization payments payable with respect to 1961–62 as well as substantially lowering the adjusting payments necessitated by the final calculation of the tax-sharing arrangements payments for 1960–61 which were required to be made by December 31, 1961.

Payments of $503 million to the provinces under the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements in 1961–62 were adjusted by deducting a total of $1 million from the tax-sharing entitlements of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, making a net disbursement to the provinces of $502 million. These deductions represented recovery of one-fifth of the overpayments made to those provinces under the 1952 tax rental agreements on account of an over-estimation of their population as revealed by the 1956 census. By Memoranda of Agreement with the provinces concerned, the 1952 tax rental agreements were amended to authorize the recovery of the overpayments in equal monthly deductions from the tax-sharing payments to those provinces over the five-year life of the new arrangements.

Statutory subsidies at $24 million for 1961–62 were $3 million more than in the previous year, on account of adjustments arising out of the results of the decennial census.

Information in regard to the tax collection agreements with the provinces is given under the liability category "Deposit and trust accounts".

The amount of public utility tax receipts for transfer to the provinces in 1961–62 was $6 million, an increase of $2 million over the 1960–61 total. The 1961–62 payments represent the transferable portion of the income tax received from corporations whose main business was the distribution to, or the generation for distribution to, the public of electrical energy, gas or steam for the taxation year 1959.

Fisheries

Expenditures of the Department of Fisheries amounted to $24 million in 1961–62, $5 million more than in 1960–61.

Increases of $2 million in outlays for field services, $2 million in expenditures of the Fisheries Research Board of Canada and $1 million in administration and general costs were the main factors contributing to the increase.

Forestry

Expenditures of the Department of Forestry totalled $15 million for 1961–62, an increase of $5 million over the 1960–61 total of $10 million.

Contributions to the provinces for assistance in establishing forest access roads and trails during 1961–62 were $3 million over the comparable expenditure for 1960–61, while outlays for forest research, and administration and general costs were each $1 million more.

Labour

Expenditures of the Department of Labour totalled $188 million in 1961–62, an increase of $67 million over the total for 1960–61.

Payments to provinces under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act of $54 million for the year were $46 million more than comparable expenditures in 1960–61. This act, which received Royal Assent on December 20, 1960, superseded the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act. The purpose of the act is to provide financial assistance to vocational and technical schools, and training under youth training projects.

Payments to provinces and in respect of Indian bands by the Government of Canada, of amounts not exceeding one-half of the cost of labour engaged on winter work projects in the amount of $24 million were $15 million more than in 1960–61.

Unemployment Insurance Act administration and government's contribution

Expenditures in 1961–62 relating to the act (excluding the government's payment as an employer which is included in the expenditures of the Department of Finance) totalled $103 million compared with $97 million in 1960–61.

Unemployment insurance benefit payments are not charged to budgetary expenditures but are paid from the unemployment insurance fund which is financed by equal contributions from employees and employers, by interest earned on investments, and by the government's contribution of an amount equal to one-fifth of the combined employee-employer contributions. Further information in regard to the unemployment insurance fund is given under the liability category "Annuity, insurance and pension accounts".

The government's contribution to the fund for 1961–62 was $57 million and administrative costs were $46 million; the corresponding amounts for 1960–61 were $55 million and $42 million respectively.

Mines and Technical Surveys

Expenditures of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys amounted to $69 million in 1961–62, an increase of $10 million over the total for 1960–61.

Increases in expenditures include $6 million in higher outlays for surveys and mapping, $1 million in the expenditures of the geological survey of Canada, $1 million in costs of the Dominion Coal Board and $1 million for administration and general expenses.

National Health and Welfare

Expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare during 1961–62 were $1,037 million, an increase of $150 million over the total for 1960–61.

Outlays for the national health branch were $368 million in 1961–62, an increase of $98 million over the previous year's total. The increase was due primarily to the increase of $95 million in the government's contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

During 1961–62 expenditures of the welfare branch increased by $51 million to $663 million mainly as the result of increases of $36 million for unemployment assistance and $15 million for family allowances.

Government's contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act

The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, Statutes of 1957, authorized contributions by Canada in respect of programs administered by the provinces, providing hospital insurance and laboratory and other services in aid of diagnosis. In 1961–62 payments were $284 million compared with $189 million in 1960–61. The increase of $95 million was due partly to the fact that during 1961–62 all provinces and territories were participating under the agreements for the full fiscal year, whereas during 1960–61 the Province of Quebec and the Yukon Territory participated under the agreements for only three months and nine months respectively.

The effective date of each agreement is as follows:—July 1, 1958 for Newfoundland, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia; January 1, 1959 for Nova Scotia and Ontario; July 1, 1959 for New Brunswick; October 1, 1959 for Prince Edward Island; April 1, 1960 for the Northwest Territories; July 1, 1960 for the Yukon Territory; and January 1, 1961 for Quebec.

Family allowances

Family allowances are payable in respect of all children under sixteen years of age, resident in Canada, with minor exceptions such as in the case of children of immigrants who must reside in Canada one year before an allowance is payable. The monthly allowance is $6 if the child is under 10 years and $8 in the age group 10 to 15. Children of immigrants receive family assistance of $5 per month during their first year of residence in Canada from the Department of Citizenship and Immigration if during that period they are under sixteen years of age.

Family allowance payments in 1961–62 totalled $521 million and represented 8 per cent of total expenditures. The increase of $15 million over the previous year reflects the increase in the number of children in the eligible age groups.

Old age assistance, disabled persons allowances, blind persons allowances and unemployment assistance

Under the Old Age Assistance Act, the federal government reimburses the provinces by paying 50 per cent of the lesser of $65 monthly or the amount of assistance given by the provinces in the form of monthly pensions to eligible persons in need who are in the age group 65 to 69. (Under the Old Age Security Act, all persons 70 years and over who satisfy the residence requirements of the act may receive a pension of $65 per month from the federal government out of the old age security fund.) Similarly, the federal government reimburses the provinces under the Blind Persons Act for allowances of not more than $65 per month to blind persons in need 18 years of age or over by paying 75 per cent of the total payments, and under the Disabled Persons Act by paying 50 per cent of not more than $65 per month for allowances to disabled persons in need 18 years of age or over. In 1961–62 payments of $31 million for old age assistance, $16 million in respect of disabled persons allowances and $4 million for blind persons allowances were approximately the same as for 1960–61.

Amendments to the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act raised the maximum pension towards which the federal government would contribute from $55 to $65 per month, effective February 1, 1962. As increased payments are dependent on individual action by each province they will not affect expenditures in the 1961–62 fiscal year. A similar increase was authorized in old age security payments, effective on the same date, through an amendment to the Old Age Security Act.

Under the Unemployment Assistance Act the federal government contributes up to 50 per cent of the cost of unemployment assistance paid by the provinces, subject to certain deductions as set out in the act. All provinces have signed agreements with the federal government. There was an increase of $37 million in contributions for 1961–62 over those for the previous year.

The following table presents a distribution of these payments to provinces for 1961–62:

National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council

Expenditures of the National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council amounted to $39 million for 1961–62, $4 million higher than for 1960–61. Increases of $2 million in expenditures for administration and general and $2 million in outlays for scholarships and grants in aid of research were the main factors contributing to this increase.

National Revenue

Expenditures of the Department of National Revenue totalled $76 million for 1961–62, $3 million more than in 1960–61, due mainly to increases of $2 million in expenditures of the taxation division and $1 million in outlays of the customs and excise divisions.

Northern Affairs and National Resources

Expenditures of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in the fiscal year 1961–62 amounted to $87 million, an increase of $12 million over the comparable total for 1960–61.

The main changes were increases of $5 million in expenditures of the national parks branch, $5 million in outlays of the northern administration branch and $2 million in the expenses of the water resources branch and a decrease of $1 million in administration and general costs.

Post Office

Gross expenditures of the Post Office Department for 1961–62 totalled $219 million, an increase of $12 million over the 1960–61 outlay of $207 million.

Remuneration of postmasters and staffs at revenue and semi-staff offices and certain other authorized disbursements are paid from revenue. These payments, included in the total of $219 million, were $30 million for 1961–62, an increase of $2 million over the comparable total for 1960–61.

Public Works

Expenditures of the Department of Public Works for 1961–62 amounted to $193 million, a decrease of $8 million from the 1960–61 total of $201 million.

Increases in expenditures of $3 million for housing, $3 million in payments to the National Capital Commission, $2 million for harbours and rivers engineering services and $1 million in administration and general costs were more than offset by decreases in expenditures of $9 million in development engineering services and $6 million in outlays for "Public buildings—construction and services".

The decrease of $9 million in expenditures of the development engineering services was due mainly to the reduction of $7 million in contributions to the provinces under the terms of the Trans-Canada Highway Act and the decrease of $3 million in costs of construction of the Trans-Canada highway through national parks, offset in part by the increase of $1 million in outlays for the installation of a water supply system at Churchill, Manitoba.

Expenditures for "Public buildings—construction and services" were approximately $6 million less than the comparable figure for the previous fiscal year, due to the decrease in costs of acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Expenditures for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police amounted to $61 million for 1961–62, an increase of $5 million over the 1960–61 total of $56 million.

Payments as shown in the table represent gross expenditures; payments received from the provinces and municipalities for police services at $11 million have been credited to revenue.

Increases in expenditures of $5 million for the land, air and training divisions and $1 million in higher outlays for headquarters administration and national police services were offset partly by the decrease of $1 million in the government's contribution to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account.

The decrease of $1 million in the government's contribution to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account was due to the fact that the government's contribution during 1961–62 was based on the amount paid into the account by contributors for the twelve-month period ending March 31, 1961, whereas in the previous fiscal year it was based on the twelve-month period ending March 31, 1960 as well as a nine-month period April 1 to December 31, 1960, inclusive, in accordance with the provisions of the new Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, 1960.

Trade and Commerce

Expenditures of the Department of Trade and Commerce were $40 million for 1961–62, compared with the 1960–61 total of $22 million.

The increase of $18 million in expenditure for 1961–62 was due mainly to increases of $3 million in administration and general costs and $15 million in outlays of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics mainly on account of the 1961 Decennial Census of Canada.

Transport

Expenditures of the Department of Transport totalled $416 million for 1961–62, compared with the 1960–61 total of $336 million.

Outlays for air services reflected an increase of $18 million over the previous year due mainly to increased expenditures of $8 million by the civil aviation branch, $6 million by the telecommunications and electronics branch and $3 million by the meteorological branch.

Expenditures of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada increased by $45 million due in large part to interim payments of $50 million related to recommendations of the Royal Commission on Railway Problems, pending its complete report, to companies as defined in the Freight Rates Reduction Act. A decrease of $5 million in the government's contribution to the railway grade crossing fund occurred during 1961–62.

Increases in expenditures amounting to $4 million by the Canadian Maritime Commission in 1961–62 were attributable to the increase of $1 million in steamship subventions for coastal services and to the outlay of $3 million for capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels for which there was no comparable expenditure in the previous fiscal year.

Marine services expenditures amounting to $50 million were $3 million greater than in 1960–61; outlays for railway and steamship services, including charges to expenditures in respect of deficits of government-owned enterprises, were approximately the same as for the previous fiscal year; the deficit of Trans-Canada Air Lines charged to budgetary expenditure in 1961–62 was $7 million compared with $3 million in 1960–61; and non-active advances to the National Harbours Board were $4 million greater than in the previous year.

Veterans Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of Veterans Affairs amounted to $334 million for 1961–62, an increase of $42 million over the 1960–61 total of $292 million.

Pensions for disability or death totalled $178 million during the current year as compared with $151 million in 1960–61, and outlays for war veterans allowances and other benefits increased by $16 million to $81 million for 1961–62. These increases were mainly the result of increased rates of pensions during the year over those in effect during 1960–61.

All Other Departments

Expenditures of the departments not dealt with in preceding sections amounted to $38 million, an increase of $5 million over the total for 1960–61.

The most significant changes in expenditures for 1961–62 were increases of $3 million in outlays of the Privy Council Office (of which $2 million pertained to the expenses of the Royal Commission on Government Organization), $1 million in the expenditures of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery and $1 million in higher costs of the Civil Service Commission.

A. CHANGES IN PRINCIPAL LIABILITY CLASSIFICATIONS DURING 1961–62

The gross liabilities of the government increased by $1,264 million during the fiscal year due mainly to increases of $857 million in unmatured debt, $305 million in annuity, insurance and pension accounts, $73 million in current and demand liabilities, and $28 million in deposit and trust accounts.

Current and demand liabilities

This category consists of obligations of the government payable currently or on demand.

The net increase of $73 million was due mainly to increases of $28 million in interest due and outstanding, $28 million in accrued interest, $19 million in accounts payable, $15 million in matured debt outstanding, and $14 million in outstanding treasury cheques offset partly by decreases of $21 million in non-interest bearing notes and $10 million in the revaluation adjustment of the Canadian dollar balance in the international monetary fund.

Deposit and trust accounts

Sundry funds deposited with, or held in trust by, the Receiver General of Canada for various purposes are recorded in these accounts.

The change during the year was an increase of $28 million. The main items constituting this increase were $38 million in the provincial tax collection agreements account and a decrease of $29 million in the United States of America deposit account.

Under the 1957 tax rental agreements, the obligation on the renting provinces to abstain from the imposition of personal and corporation income taxes was to lapse on December 31, 1961. As the Government of Canada did not offer to renew tax rental agreements, the former renting provinces have all imposed personal and corporation income taxes effective January 1, 1962. The Government of Canada, in place of the tax rental agreements, offered to enter into tax collection agreements with the provinces whereby Canada would undertake to collect without charge the provincial personal and corporation income taxes at rates determined by the provinces provided that the provincial personal income tax was expressed as a percentage of the federal personal income tax payable and the provincial corporation income tax employed a definition of corporate taxable income identical with the federal definition. To make room for the imposition of provincial income taxes, the Income Tax Act was amended in the 1961 session of Parliament to (1) reduce the federal income tax payable by individuals resident in the provinces by 16 per cent in 1962 and by a further one per cent in each subsequent year until the deduction amounts to 20 per cent in 1966, and (2) reduce the federal tax rate on the taxable income of corporations earned in the provinces by 9 percentage points. Canada will be collecting the personal income tax for nine provinces (Quebec excepted) and the corporation income tax for eight provinces (Quebec and Ontario excepted). With the exception of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the provinces which have entered into tax collection agreements have imposed personal and corporation income taxes equivalent to the federal withdrawal. The aforementioned provinces have imposed personal income taxes at 22 per cent rather than 16 per cent of the federal tax payable and 10 per cent rather than 9 per cent of the taxable income of corporations.

Annuity, insurance and pension accounts

In this category are recorded the amounts to the credit of the various annuity, insurance and pension accounts.

(1) Includes loan of $67 million from the Minister of Finance.

Unemployment insurance fund

The total benefits paid out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund in the 1961–62 fiscal year were $466 million, its total revenues $340 million, and its deficit $126 million. This compares with 1960–61 figures of benefit payments of $514 million, revenues of $333 million and a deficit of $181 million. In addition the fund has repaid in full its advances from the Minister of Finance in the net amount of $67 million, resulting in a total reduction in the fund's assets of $193 million.

Government annuities account

The government annuities account increased by $37 million during the year reflecting the amount by which premium receipts of $45 million and interest of $46 million credited to the account by the government exceeded payments of $54 million to annuitants and beneficiaries.

Public service superannuation account

The increase of $120 million in the public service superannuation account was due mainly to the government's contribution of $47 million (equal to the estimated current and prior service payments of individuals in 1960–61), and interest of $61 million credited to the account. The remainder of the increase was due to the excess of employees' current and prior service contributions and miscellaneous receipts over benefit payments.

Canadian forces superannuation account

The Canadian forces superannuation account increased by $124 million. The increase reflected the government's contribution of $56 million which was made at the rate of one and two-thirds times the current and prior service contributions, interest of $48 million credited to the account, and the amount of $20 million by which contributions by permanent services personnel for current and prior years' service exceeded benefit payments from the account.

Old age security fund

Under the Old Age Security Act pensions at $55 per month (increased to $65 per month effective February 1, 1962) are paid, without a means test, from the old age security fund to all eligible persons seventy years of age or over. Credits of $649 million consisting of $290 million from the 3 per cent sales tax, $259 million from the 3 per cent tax on personal incomes (maximum tax $90) and $100 million from the 3 per cent tax on corporation profits exceeded payments of $625 million by $24 million. Temporary loans of $17 million as at March 31, 1961 have been repaid resulting in a credit balance in the fund of $7 million. In 1960–61 receipts of $603 million exceeded payments of $592 million by $11 million and a $28 million deficit (covered by temporary loans from the Minister of Finance) was brought forward from 1959–60.

Undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts

This category records the undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts for which moneys have been appropriated by Parliament and from which disbursements may be made for authorized purposes in periods subsequent to that in which the appropriation was made. There was an increase of $4 million during the fiscal year bringing the balance as at March 31, 1962 to $109 million.

TABLE 47

Other	0.1	0.1
	108.5	104.5	4.0

The increase of $8 million in the Colombo plan fund resulted from a credit thereto of $50 million, the offsetting debit being to budgetary expenditures, and charges of $42 million to cover disbursements.

The railway grade crossing fund showed a decrease of approximately $4 million during the year representing disbursements of $14 million from the fund less an amount of $10 million credited thereto and charged to expenditures.

Deferred credits

This category records amounts due the government in respect of which payment has been deferred. These are contra accounts to corresponding items under the following asset categories: "Cash in blocked currencies", "Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations", "Loans to national governments" and "Other loans and investments".

(1) Less than $50,000.

Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets are set up as contra accounts to corresponding items under "Other loans and investments". During the year receipts amounted to $1 million on outstanding agreements.

The government's equity in the agency account of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is a contra account to a corresponding item under "Other loans and investments". This equity increased by $1 million during the year.

There was no change during the year in deferred interest of $44 million on loans made under the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, and of $19 million on loans made to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. These are contra accounts to corresponding items under "Loans to national governments" and "Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations" respectively.

Suspense accounts

These consist of balances where some uncertainty as to disposition exists.

The replacement of materiel account, established by section 11 of the National Defence Act, is credited with amounts realized from the sale of materiel that has not been declared surplus to requirements but has been authorized by the Governor in Council to be sold to other countries. The account is debited with disbursements representing amounts paid for the procurement of replacement materiel. During 1961–62 disbursements exceeded credits by $3 million.

The unclaimed cheques account is credited with the amount of treasury cheques (except those drawn on asset and liability accounts) which remain undelivered for certain specified periods subsequent to date of issue, pending claims therefor.

Unmatured debt

The unmatured debt of Canada as at March 31, 1962 amounted to $16,925 million as compared with $16,068 million at March 31, 1961. The increase of $857 million applied to debt payable in Canada.

The details of the various loan issues, redemptions and conversions resulting in the net increase are described more fully in section 6, "The Public Debt".

In the year under review, unmatured debt obligations payable in London are stated in Canadian dollars converted at the rate of $2.80 for the pound sterling and that payable in New York at par for the U.S. dollar.

B. Changes in Principal Asset Classifications During 1961–62

The total assets increased by $473 million during 1961–62. The principal changes were increases of $436 million in current assets and $368 million in loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations and decreases of $241 million in advances to the exchange fund account, $48 million in other loans and investments, $38 million in loans to national governments and $6 million in deferrred charges.

Current assets

Total current assets at the close of the 1961–62 fiscal year amounted to $1,220 million, an increase of $436 million from the balance of $784 million at the close of 1960–61. This increase was due mainly to increases of $401 million in cash in current and special deposits and $54 million in departmental working capital advances and revolving funds (including increases of $39 million in the agricultural commodities stabilization account and $18 million in the defence production revolving fund) offset in part by a decrease of $24 million in the securities investment account.

The decrease in the securities investment account was due to the cancellation of $320 million of the holdings therein of the government's own issues, offset in part by the net result of other transactions in the account in the amount of $296 million.

It should also be noted that in accordance with the announcement by the Minister of Finance in the Budget Speech of June 20, 1961 a Purchase Fund was established to assist in the management of the public debt. During the fiscal year issues totalling $166 million were purchased and the securities cancelled prior to the fiscal year-end.

Advances to the exchange fund account

The balance of $1,783 million in the exchange fund account was $241 million less than the 1960–61 total of $2,024 million.

Sinking fund held for retirement of unmatured debt

The balance of $18 million in this category at March 31, 1961 was approximately $1 million higher than the balance at the previous fiscal year-end.

Advances to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, to be covered by obligations or shares of the company, were $64 million at March 31, 1962, an increase of $3 million during the year.

During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962, the government advanced to the Canadian National Railway Company $68 million for capital purposes and retirement of debt in the hands of the public. Of this amount $37 million was advanced under the Refunding Act, 1955, for the refunding of various trust certificates, $28 million for capital purposes and $3 million for the company's purchase fund which is operated under the terms of Canadian National Railway Company bonds, guaranteed by the Government of Canada, issued on May 15, 1959, December 15, 1959, January 1, 1960 and October 1, 1960. During the fiscal year $11 million was repaid by the company on current and prior years' advances.

In addition, to assist the company to finance further capital expenditure during the fiscal year, the government purchased $21 million of four per cent preferred stock of the company. This stock is issued under the authority of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, 1952, in an amount equal to three per cent of the gross revenue of the company.

Also in the year ended March 31, 1962, the government provided the company with temporary loans of $64 million in respect of its 1961 income deficit. This amount plus temporary loans of $2 million made on the same account in the previous fiscal year brought the total loans on account of the 1961 deficit to $66 million. It should be noted that the total 1961 deficit of $67 million, of which $66 million was covered by temporary loans by the government and the remainder paid from company funds, was charged to budgetary expenditure.

In summary, the total amount made available to the company during the fiscal year was $153 million and repayments including the charge to budgetary expenditure were $77 million. The amount of advances to the company outstanding at March 31, 1962 increased by $76 million.

At March 31, 1961, temporary loans of $5 million were outstanding to the Trans-Canada Air Lines in respect of its 1961 income deficit. During 1961–62 further advances of $2 million were made for this purpose. The amount of $7 million was repaid or credited during the year. However, the government made advances of $3 million on account of the air lines 1962 income deficit which is still outstanding.

Loans during the year to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation amounted to $246 million, of which $237 million was for direct loans by the corporation and $9 million in respect of loans for federal-provincial housing projects. Repayments were $48 million, of which $43 million was in respect of direct loans, $2 million in respect of loans for federal-provincial housing projects and $3 million in respect of loans for housing projects. The net increase of $198 million for the year brought the total loans to $1,709 million at March 31, 1962.

Loans to the Farm Credit Corporation amounted to $56 million and investment in the capital of the corporation to $1 million during the year. Repayments by the corporation of $3 million brought the outstanding advances to $210 million at March 31, 1962.

Advances to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority during the year amounted to $10 million bringing the total loans to $331 million. In addition, deferred interest on these loans was $19 million at the year-end, unchanged from the total at March 31, 1961. A contra item for this deferred interest is included in the liability catagory "Deferred credits".

It should also be noted that in accordance with Order-in-Council P.C. 1961–1863 dated December 29, 1961, interest of $14 million payable on December 31, 1961 by The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, as well as interest payable on December 31, 1962, has been deferred until December 31, 1963. On December 31, 1963 the total amount of interest so deferred together with the interest payable December 31, 1963, will be computed as a single sum and is to be repaid in equal annual instalments calculated by amortizing the said sum, including interest at rates determined by the Minister of Finance, over a period of forty-six years.

Other changes in this category include increases of $9 million in loans to the National Capital Commission, $8 million in loans to the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, $7 million in loans to the National Harbours Board, $5 million in loans to the Northern Canada Power Commission, $3 million in loans to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation and a decrease of $3 million in loans to the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.

Loans to national governments

These loans decreased by $38 million during the year leaving a balance of $1,340 million at March 31, 1962.

The United Kingdom government repaid $17 million of the $1,185 million loan made under the $1,250 million credit authorized by the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, reducing the principal to $1,030 million at March 31, 1962.

Advances under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act to Belgium, France and The Netherlands to assist them in purchasing goods in Canada have been reduced by repayments of $15 million during the year leaving a balance of $237 million outstanding.

Special loans to Colombo plan countries to finance the purchase of wheat and flour from Canada amounted to $27 million at March 31, 1962, $5 million less than at March 31, 1961.

Other loans and investments

The balance in this category was $975 million at March 31, 1962, a decrease of $48 million during the fiscal year 1961–62.

Canada's subscriptions to the capital of international organizations increased by $29 million during the year due mainly to a further subscription of $8 million to the international development association and revaluation adjustments of $19 million in the Canadian dollar balance in the international monetary fund.

Loans to provincial governments decreased by $8 million. The balance at March 31, 1961 of $1 million for overpayments to provinces arising out of the 1952 tax rental agreements was settled during the year.

The Veterans Land Act advances account less the reserve for conditional benefits increased by $12 million.

Miscellaneous loans and investments were $81 million lower than the total for the previous year, more than accounted for by the repayment of $67 million by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the repayment of $17 million of temporary loans in respect of the old age security fund.

Securities held in trust

This category records the security holdings of various deposit and trust, and annuity, insurance and pension accounts. Bonds and certified cheques held in connection with contractors' securities included in the deposit and trust category are also recorded under this heading. The balance at March 31, 1962 amounted to $31 million, $1 million higher than the previous year-end balance.

Deferred charges

This category consists of the unamortized portions of actuarial deficiencies in the Canadian forces superannuation account, the public service superannuation account, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account, and the outstanding balance of unamortized loan flotation costs. There was a decrease of $6 million in this category during the year, bringing the balance at March 31, 1962 to $727 million.

Unamortized portions of actuarial deficiencies

This category records the unamortized portions of the actuarial deficiencies in the public service, the Canadian forces, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation accounts which have been set up as deferred charges to be written off to budgetary expenditure upon parliamentary approval.

The deficiencies in the public service superannuation account, the Canadian forces superannuation account and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account are based on actuarial valuations made as at December 31, 1957, March 31, 1958 and December 31, 1961, respectively.

Unamortized loan flotation costs

This account records the residual balances of discounts, commissions, redemption bonuses and conversion premiums on loan flotations that have not been charged to budgetary expenditure. The balance at March 31, 1962 totalled $121 million, a decrease of $10 million from the previous year-end balance.

Cost of new loans issued during 1961–62 and charged to the account amounted to $41 million, of which $10 was in respect of treasury bill discounts which will be charged to interest on public debt in 1962–63. Credits to the account were $51 million of which $34 million was a charge to the budgetary expenditure item "Annual amortization costs", $11 million, representing discount on treasury bills sold in 1960–61, was a charge to the budgetary item "Interest on public debt" and $6 million was an adjustment due to cancellation of unmatured loans prior to their maturity date.

Suspense accounts

The only item in this category is the cheque adjustment suspense account which reflects unadjusted balances resulting from the reconciliation of payments for redemption of paid cheques with the amount of those cheques as subsequently determined in adjustment of the outstanding cheque account.

Capital assets

Assets of the government such as land, buildings, works and equipment, etc., that are charged to budgetary expenditure at the time of acquisition or construction, are included in this category and are shown on the statement of assets and liabilities at a nominal value of $1.

Inactive loans and investments

Loans and investments which are not currently revenue-producing or realizable are recorded in this category. Included are the loan of $49 million to China under the Export Credits Insurance Act, loans of $24 million and $7 million made to Roumania and Greece in 1919–20 and 1920–21 and advances of $15 million in respect of the implementation of guarantees (Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited).

Reserve for losses on realization of assets

There is no change in this reserve during the year, the balance at March 31, 1962 being $546 million, unchanged from the end of the previous year.

C. Increase in Net Debt

The deficit for the fiscal year of $791 million resulted in a corresponding increase in the net debt of Canada which at March 31, 1962, was $13,229 million.

5. THE CASH POSITION

The government's cash position is affected not only by the budgetary transactions but also by changes in the government's outstanding unmatured debt and by other non-budgetary transactions. In 1961–62 there was an increase of $401 million in the government's bank balances. This increase is the result of the budgetary deficit of $791 million, being more than offset by an increase of $880 million in outstanding unmatured debt (after taking into account transactions in the purchase fund, securities investment and sinking fund accounts) and the net receipts of $312 million from other non-budgetary transactions. It should be noted that in accordance with the announcement by the Minister of Finance in the Budget Speech of June 20, 1961 a Purchase Fund was established to assist in the management of the public debt. During the fiscal year issues totalling $166 million were purchased and the securities subsequently cancelled.

Non-budgetary receipts and disbursements relate to transactions which result in increases or decreases in the government's assets and liabilities and do not appear in what might be called the government's income account for the fiscal year nor do they enter into the calculation of the annual budgetary surplus or deficit. However, in considering the full scope of the government's financial operations and in measuring their effect on the government's cash position and their impact on the economy, non-budgetary as well as budgetary transactions must be taken into account.

The increases or decreases in the government's assets and liabilities have been described in detail in the section entitled "Statement of Assets and Liabilities of Canada". On the assets side the non-budgetary transactions consist, for the most part, of loans and advances to, and repayments by, Crown corporations and other government agencies and funds (including the old age security fund), national, provincial and municipal governments, international organizations, veterans and other borrowers. On the liabilities side they relate mainly to receipts and payments in connection with the many deposit and trust accounts, and annuity, insurance and pension funds held or administered by the government.

The preceding table summarizes both the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions for 1961–62 and indicates how they affected the government's cash position. For purposes of comparison the corresponding figures for 1960–61 are also shown.

As the table shows, non-budgetary receipts and credits for 1961–62 (excluding unmatured debt transactions) totalled $804 million while non-budgetary disbursements and charges (also excluding unmatured debt transactions) were $492 million, resulting in a net receipt of $312 million. As the budgetary deficit was $791 million, $479 million required financing by an increase in unmatured debt or a decrease in cash balances. In 1960–61 there was a net receipt of $46 million from non-budgetary transactions and a budgetary deficit of $340 million resulting in $294 million having to be financed by an increase in unmatured debt or a decrease in cash balances.

Non-budgetary receipts and credits

Non-budgetary receipts and credits, as already indicated, amounted to $804 million in 1961–62 as shown in the following table:

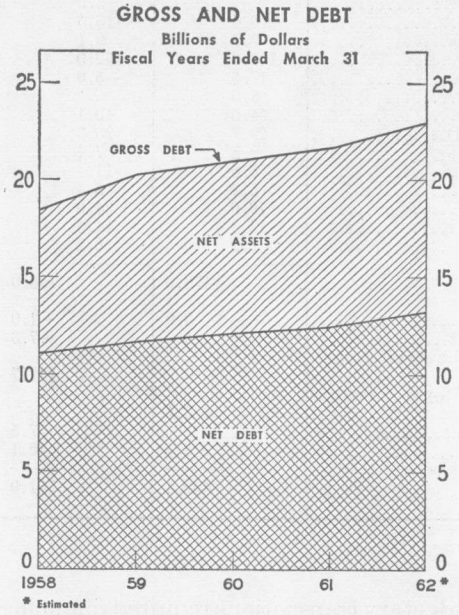
Summary



In summary, as budgetary and non-budgetary transactions required financing in the amount of $479 million, and unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public (after taking into account transactions in the purchase fund, securities investment and sinking fund accounts) increased by $880 million, cash balances on deposit with the banks increased by $401 million.

6. THE PUBLIC DEBT

Gross and net debt

The gross debt of Canada amounted to $22,867 million as at March 31, 1962. Unmatured debt, including treasury bills, in the amount of $16,925 million accounted for approximately 74 per cent of the total. The remaining liabilities, consisting of current and demand liabilities, deposit and trust accounts, annuity, insurance and pension accounts, undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts, deferred credits and sundry suspense accounts, aggregated $5,942 million or approximately 26 per cent of the total debt.

The net debt of Canada was $13,229 million as at March 31, 1962, an increase of $791 million over the net debt at March 31, 1961. Total liabilities increased by $1,264 million to $22,867 million and net assets by $473 million to $9,638 million at March 31, 1962.

Unmatured debt

The total unmatured debt of Canada at March 31, 1962 totalled $16,925 million, $857 million more than at the end of the previous fiscal year. The government's holdings of its own securities were $95 million, comprised of $77 million in the securities investment account and $18 million in the sinking fund account. This was a decrease of $23 million over the comparable figure at March 31, 1961 when holdings were $101 million in the securities investment account and $17 million in the sinking fund account.

The decrease in the securities investment account was due to the cancellation of $320 million of the holdings therein of the government's own issues, offset in part by the net result of other transactions in the account in the amount of $296 million.

In accordance with the announcement by the Minister of Finance in the budget speech of June 20, 1961, a purchase fund was established during the fiscal year to assist in the management of the public debt. Purchases of securities were:

$11 million 4¼ per cent bonds due September 1, 1972;
$53 million 5½ per cent bonds due October 1, 1975;
$7 million 3¼ per cent bonds due June 1, 1976;
$8 million 3¾ per cent bonds due January 15, 1978;
$15 million 3¼ per cent bonds due October 1, 1979;
$70 million 4½ per cent bonds due September 1, 1983 and
$2 million 3¾ per cent bonds due March 15, 1998.

Of these securities, $61 million were cancelled in November, 1961 and the balance of $105 million cancelled prior to the fiscal year-end and unmatured debt reduced by similar amounts.

Of the total unmatured debt, $16,795 million or more than 99 per cent was payable in Canada, $98 million in New York and $32 million in London.

Summary of security issues and maturities, redemptions, conversions or cancellations

During the year ended March 31, 1962 the government issued securities payable in Canada in the principal amount of $3,451 million (excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature weekly) and redeemed, converted or cancelled issues payable in Canada in the amount of $2,594 million.

Indirect debt or contingent liabilities

In addition to the direct debt set out in the statement of assets and liabilities, the government has assumed certain indirect or contingent obligations. These consist of securities of the Canadian National Railways, guaranteed as to principal and interest or as to interest only, and a number of miscellaneous guarantees, the chief of which are the guarantee of insured loans made by chartered banks and other approved lending institutions under the National Housing Act, 1954, deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada, bank advances to the Canadian Wheat Board, advances under the Export Credits Insurance Act and bank loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

The government's liability under its guarantee of loans under the National Housing Act, 1954 was $3,562 million at December 31, 1961 compared with $3,025 million at December 31, 1960.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION AND PROCUREMENT PROGRAM

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement concerning a new naval shipbuilding program. Approval has been given for the construction of eight warships of advanced design and the procurement of three modern submarines for the Royal Canadian Navy. These ships will replace existing ships as they reach the end of their useful lives in the next few years.

The warships will be built in Canadian shipyards, the first one being laid down late next year and the others to follow progressively. These ships are being designed by R.C.N. technical staffs and will be known as general purpose frigates, because they will be equipped and armed for a variety of tasks. They will be slightly larger in size than the present destroyer escorts and will perform essentially the same function as the Tribal class destroyers have performed in the past. The ships will have submarine detection equipment and antisubmarine armament of the most modern type, guided missile systems for air defence, and a gun armament for surface to surface action and shore bombardment. The general purpose frigate will thus have a first class antisubmarine capability and also be able to perform a variety of other duties.

Subject to satisfactory completion of negotiations with the British government, the three submarines will be of the Oberon class built in Britain. The Oberon class is the latest type of conventional submarine to be built for the Royal navy. The first of the class was commissioned in November, 1960, the second has since been completed and another nine are under construction for the Royal navy. The cost of these three submarines will be about the same as one of the warships to be built in Canada.

In the training of antisubmarine units constant practice with submarines is necessary to achieve and maintain a high degree of efficiency. The navy at the present time has one submarine, H.M.C.S. Grilse, on the west coast, and in addition on the east coast there are three submarines on loan from the Royal navy for training purposes. The three modern submarines to be procured will make a significant contribution to the training of antisubmarine forces both in the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force. The effectiveness of the submarine itself in the antisubmarine role has been greatly enhanced in recent years by the development of new types of armament and detection equipment. The Oberon class submarine is equipped with modern armament and technical equipment for the antisubmarine role. In addition to the training role the submarines will be a valuable complement to the surface fleet and aircraft in undertaking their antisubmarine defensive tasks.

In considering the acquisition of submarines for the Royal Canadian Navy, detailed studies have been made of the possibility of procuring various types of submarines including those propelled by nuclear power. Mainly because of their high cost, but also because of the time required for their construction, nuclear powered submarines were not considered practicable at the present time for the purposes for which submarines are required in the Royal Canadian Navy.

Arrangements have been made for the Royal Canadian Navy to continue its studies of submarine development, in order to keep abreast of technological advances which may make it practicable and desirable to undertake a future program of submarine construction in Canada.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members in the house listened with interest to this proposed new construction program for the Royal Canadian Navy. All I wish to say is that in view of the new features involved in this program and the expense, I hope the house will have the opportunity to discuss the matter and ask questions under item No. 724 of the supplementary estimates, "Operation and maintenance, Royal Canadian Navy".

Mr. Chevrier: Don't be too sure.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Following the statement he made earlier concerning the naval construction program may I ask him whether the cost of this naval construction program, or any part thereof, is contained in the main estimates which have been tabled in this house for 1962-63.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The long lead items for the first of these general purpose frigates, which will be laid down next year, are contained in the estimates for the coming fiscal year, the year we are now in.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister say what amount that covers?

Mr. Harkness: I could not say without consulting the estimates and the details backing them up, which I think the hon. member probably realizes.

THE SENATE

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF RETIREMENT ANNUITY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund, to any person who was a member of the Senate on April 6, 1962, but who ceases to be a member at the age of seventy five years or more by reason of an amendment to section 29 of the British North America Act, 1867, of a lifetime retirement annuity equivalent to three quarters of the amount per annum of the sessional allowance he was receiving under the Senate and House of Commons Act at the time when he ceased to be a member.

Motion agreed to.

*FEDERAL NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBECAIR LIMITED

Question No. 372—Mr. Fisher:

Has the government been negotiating through the Minister of Transport with Quebecair Limited; and, if so, in these negotiations, has the government considered it necessary to obtain a report on the officials and the shareholding of Quebecair Limited; and, who are the directors of this company?

Mr. Balcer: When the supplementary estimates were before the house on March 23 I indicated that the air transport board had made a detailed investigation of the economic position and operations of Quebecair. This of course required full access to all matters pertaining to the organization and operation of this company, but the information provided in this connection was made available to the air transport board on a confidential basis.

*U.S. CURRENCY IN FOREIGN EXCHANGE FUND

Question No. 393—Mr. Benidickson:

1. What was the value of U.S. dollars and gold in our foreign exchange fund as of March 31, 1962?

2. What claims contracts and/or other obligations, with a term of 6 months or less, for future deliveries of gold or foreign currencies exist against our exchange reserves?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton):

1. As indicated in the figures published in the Canada Gazette of April 7, 1962, Canada's official holdings of gold and U.S. dollars as of March 31, 1962 amounted to $1,709.4 million in terms of U.S. dollars.

2. The annual reports tabled by the Minister of Finance under the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act since 1953 have provided figures of the over-all position of the exchange fund account from which it is possible to deduce the net amount of forward exchange contracts and overnight contracts outstanding as at the end of each month of the preceding year. It has not been the practice to publish this information on a more current basis.

*SECTION 96A(2), INDIAN ACT—REFERENDA

Question No. 402—Mr. Howard:

1. Since September 29, 1961, has any referendum been held among the electors of any Indian band in British Columbia respecting the bringing into force of section 96A(2) of the Indian Act; and, if so, what is the name of each such band, and the results, by ayes and nays, of the referendum therein?

2. What action has been taken, or is planned, with respect to the results of the said referenda?

Mrs. Fairclough: Since the answer to this question involves some two pages of information and statistics, could I have permission to have it printed in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

Questions

*LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Question No. 422—Mr. Pitman:

How many loans were made under the Small Businesses Loans Act (Bill C-40 of last session) in the year 1961, in the following amounts: (a) up to $500 (b) $500 to $1,000 (c) $1,000 to $5,000 (d) $5,000 to $10,000 (e) $10,000 to $15,000 (f) $15,000 to $20,000 (g) $20,000 to $25,000?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The answer is as follows: (a) nil; (b) 119; (c) 1,191; (d) 893; (e) 298; (f) 178; (g) 298.

*INDIANS EMPLOYED IN SURVEYS OF RESERVES

Question No. 425—Mr. Howard:

Are any Indians, other than Mr. Joseph Dreaver, employed to survey the Indians of any part of Canada in respect of their reactions and recommendations concerning the findings of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian affairs; and, if so, with respect to each such person what is (a) his name and address (b) the date of the commencement of his employment (c) the terms of his employment (d) his salary (e) his obligation to report his findings both as to content and time (f) his length of employment either actual or estimated (g) the names of the reserves which he has visited during the course of his survey, and the dates upon which he visited each such reserve (h) the procedures and systems which he uses in the conduct of the survey with an indication as to who developed them, and (i) his position, if any, within the Indian community?

Mrs. Fairclough: The answer to the first part of this question is no. The remaining parts are therefore not applicable.

COMMERCIAL COAL SURVEY

Question No. 433—Mr. Morris:

1. Is a commercial coal survey being conducted by the fuels and mining practice division of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys; and, if so, does it involve regular sampling of the commercial products from (a) all Canadian coal mines (b) imported Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia bituminous coals?

2. Do the size designations of the coals in the survey conform with specifications incorporated in the Canadian government specifications board guide for federal government purchasing departments in publication 18-GP-1A?

3. Are the results of the sampling made known to (a) federal government purchasing departments (b) the general public?

Answer by: Mr. Flynn:

1. (a) Yes.
(b) No.

2. The commercial coal survey includes all commercial products produced at the mines (with screens of various sizes and types) whether or not the sizes relate to CGSB specification 18-GP-1A.

3. (a) Yes.
(b) Yes.

*ORDER IN COUNCIL COVERING PRINTING OF BILL OF RIGHTS

Question No. 436—Mr. Matheson:

By what order in council did the queen's printer cause to be printed and published 20,000 copies of the illuminated document headed the Canadian Bill of Rights containing part I only of chapter 44, statutes of Canada 1960, 8-9 Elizabeth II, together with a signed quotation from a speech of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker delivered in the House of Commons debates on July 1, 1960?

Mr. Dorion: No order in council authorized, or was necessary to authorize, the printing and publication of the document in question.

MINIMUM WAGE RATE, GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS, RED DEER AREA, ALTA.

Question No. 437—Mr. Herridge:

Has the Minister of Labour received a communication from a representative of Burns and Dutton-Poole-Oland advocating an upward revision in the minimum wage rate of labourers on government contract construction work in the Red Deer area, Alberta; and, if so, what were the details of the communication, and what reply has been made by the minister?

Answer by: Mr. Starr:

No such communication has been received from a representative of Burns and Dutton-Poole-Oland.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

*DOLLAR VALUE OF EXPORTS VIA U.S.

Question No. 434—Mr. Morris:

What was the total dollar value of exports of Canadian produce to all overseas countries via the United States in each of the years 1952 to 1959 inclusive?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

JOHN PAPALIA—RELEASE FROM PRISON

Motion No. 41—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence and memoranda between the Department of Justice and any other government department or agency, provincial government or provincial government agency, or any other person, regarding the release of John Papalia.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We are prepared to accept this motion subject to the reservation that correspondence of a private and confidential nature should not be produced. Documents and correspondence exchanged between a department or an agency or branch thereof and any other department, branch or agency have always been regarded as privileged and should not be produced. When contacted, the province of Ontario did not express any wish against the tabling of the correspondence subject to the above mentioned reservations.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations expressed, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

SALE OF TIMBER, TSIMPSEAN INDIAN RESERVE NO. 2

Motion No. 44—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents, other than directives, exchanged between the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration or the Indian affairs branch and any employee or officer of the Indian affairs branch since January 1, 1954, relating to all proposed or actual sales of timber situated on the Tsimpsean Indian reserve no. 2.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, since these are privileged documents I am sorry I am unable to comply with the request.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member prepared to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Howard: No. It is most necessary to indicate the attitude of the house in this regard.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING PRINTING OF BILL OF RIGHTS

Motion No. 49—Mr. Matheson:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all instructions given to the queen's printer and to the draftswoman, Yvonne Diceman, for the preparation and printing of the illuminated document headed "The Canadian Bill of Rights".

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, no written instructions were given to the draftswoman for the preparation of the document in question. The plans she submitted were accepted by a committee of officials of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. Since the papers requested by the hon. member to be produced do not exist, perhaps he would be agreeable to withdrawing the motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CASTLE HILL RESTORATION, PLACENTIA, NFLD.

Motion No. 51—Mr. Carter:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the provincial government of Newfoundland and the historic sites and monuments board of Canada since January 1, 1961, with reference to the restoration of Castle Hill at Placentia, Newfoundland, as a national historic site.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I have had a talk with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and he has agreed to accept all this correspondence directly, rather than go through the formality of an address to His Excellency. In the circumstances I would ask that the motion be withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM BEFORE EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask if the Prime Minister is in a position at this time to deal with the question I asked him yesterday about the order of business and the Easter recess.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I would say to the hon. gentleman in answer to his question of yesterday, as to whether I would follow the normal course at this time of the session and inform the house what measures the government hopes to have passed before the Easter recess, as well as their order of priority, that for today, as the house knows, there are three items, Nos. 1, 2 and 3 on the order paper. After having dealt with them we intend to cover the additional list of legislative measures on the order paper.

As to the question of priority—and I am saying this without desire to be in any way provocative—I regret the slow progress being made. After the business announced for today is disposed of, we will deal with the redistribution and Senate measures. Then, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate pointed out, the supplementary estimates and appropriation bill have to have attention. We shall then be in a position to resume the budget debate.

So far as the business for next week is concerned, that will be announced in due course. At the moment it is proposed that the pre-Easter session, in any event, should conclude on April 19. I am most anxious to secure attention for the items I have mentioned, particularly the redistribution measure and the Senate measure, and then of course the supplementary estimates.

I might add that the Leader of the Opposition asked whether there was anything else to come before the house. Two resolutions will be placed on the order paper in respect of certain recommendations made by the O'Leary commission. They will be under the name of the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Pearson: In thanking the Prime Minister for his information might I ask him when he expects the house to resume after the Easter recess?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, time will tell.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): As a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, does he intend to put the usual motion on the order paper for the Easter recess?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can only say to the hon. gentleman that when we have concluded the matters to which I have referred I think we should have sufficient time to make any motion that will be appropriate, having regard to all the circumstances.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NATION-WIDE USE OF BILINGUAL CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger Parizeau (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Could he inform us whether, following representations made by Conservative members, the Canadian National Railways intend to issue bilingual cheques throughout this country, thus following the example set by the government of Canada?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, knowing the untiring interest of the hon. member for Lake St. John in the cause of bilingualism, it gives me great pleasure to inform the house that at my suggestion, the C.N.R. will in future, issue all their cheques in both languages.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF MEMBERS OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): On Monday, April 9 the hon. member for Kootenay West made certain allegations in the guise of a question in the following form:

> Does the minister know that the C.O., Lieutenant Colonel Reynolds, and Major Lee, officer commanding the 17th field squadron of the 8th field regiment R.C.E. (militia), demanded that a captain and two N.C.O.'s resign their membership in the New Democratic party and submit proof of their resignations to him in writing?

I have now had a report in connection with this matter, and the facts are not just as they may have been made to appear by the question. The situation is as follows. The officer referred to is a chaplain who is attached to the 17th field squadron and who happens to be the local federal candidate for the N.D.P. The only request made to him was that he should refrain from political activity in the armoury. That was all. Such activity, as I stated in the house on Monday, is not permitted on any property occupied by a military unit. I understand that the C.O. has since received a written request from this officer to resign from the militia.

The two N.C.O.'s in question are both on full time call-out duty relating to the special militia training courses. A report was received late in March by the C.O. that some effort was being made prior to a military parade to influence other members of the militia unit in favour of the N.D.P. This was considered by the C.O. as being contrary to regulations. It was also drawn to the attention of the C.O. that the senior of the two N.C.O.'s had been elected president of a newly formed New Democratic party club, and that the other N.C.O. had been made chairman of the membership committee in the same club.

In view of these circumstances both men were given the option of ceasing their political activities or withdrawing from their duties in the militia. Both have since withdrawn from their active offices in the N.D.P.

I think I should make it clear that service regulations forbidding active participation in the affairs of any political organization or party apply to all members of the regular forces whether on or off military establishments. The regulations with respect to members of the reserve forces apply to such activities on service establishments or when engaged in strictly military duties.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the minister's report, and I do not believe it is a true report—

Mr. Grafftey: Question.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has probably temporarily overlooked the rule of the house that the answers which are given to oral questions are not subject to comment. They may be elucidated by further questions, but they cannot be commented upon.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Herridge: I was coming to that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite out of order in making a flat statement of that kind which relates to the report the minister gave to the house. It may be a matter for question or debate at the appropriate time, but certainly not on orders of the day.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw any implication that the minister gave me an untrue answer consciously. I should say, to correct my approach to this question, that I believe the minister's answer is based on false information. My question of two days ago was based on a letter from the chaplain, who is the Anglican vicar of the Kootenay lakes in Creston. Does the minister think he does not tell the truth

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is seeking to argue about the information rather than to get more information, which is not appropriate at this time.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has cast a serious implication on the officers of this unit and of western command in the statements he has made, and I think he should withdraw—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Harkness: —the implication that he has cast on their honesty. I think it is most unfair that any member of this house should say that officers in Her Majesty's service have given false reports, as the hon. member has done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister know that this lieutenant colonel—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has put the proposition to the hon. member for Kootenay West that what he has said is unfair, and has asked the hon. member to withdraw the implication of his statement. I will give the hon. member the floor to indicate what he wishes to do.

Mr. Herridge: I refuse to withdraw. I believe that the information I have received is correct and true. I have had other experiences in this regard.

Mr. Grafftey: You can't back out.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister to withdraw his aspersions against a member of the clergy.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think it was absolutely clear from what I said that I cast no aspersions on any member of the clergy. I gave a factual report of what was the exact situation, and it is the hon. member for Kootenay West who has been casting aspersions on the honesty of other people involved.

Mr. Grafftey: Demagogic nonsense.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

QUEBEC—REPORTED THREAT TO CEASE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of the fact that, in the last few days, people in my constituency have been getting anonymous telephone calls warning them that the Quebec government intends to interrupt payment of the allowances they are receiving under the federal-provincial unemployment assistance program or to conduct closer investigations in this regard, should these people support the Conservative government in the next election?

Could the minister reassure the people concerned in this matter?

An hon. Member: The culprits are Union Nationale supporters.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, certainly I have never heard of any such action, and actually no such action would be taken.

REQUEST FOR NUMBER OF CLAIMANTS RECEIVING BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. My question is based on the reply which I received to a starred question on April 4, as reported at page 2485 of Hansard. My question was:

What was the total number of active claimants for unemployment insurance benefits, as of February 28, 1962?

I was told by the parliamentary secretary to the minister that the information was not then available. I now wish to ask the minister whether he or his office staff have made any attempt to secure the figures, which normally are available within three or four weeks after the last day of each month.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how accurate that last statement is, but to the first part of the question the answer is no.

Mr. Robichaud: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister confirm or deny that the total number of active claimants at that date exceeded 700,000?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member gets these figures—

Mr. McIlraith: Why don't you give them?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask—

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is willing to defer, I will hear the supplementary question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour, in view of the fact that this parliament is going to be dissolved shortly, as the Prime Minister indicated—

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —if he will arrange to give us this information within the course of the next few days.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the first part of the statement made by the hon. member for Essex East is news to me, but if he wants any information of that nature which involves statistics, all he has to do is put a question on the order paper—

[Mr. Tremblay.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: —and the answer, if available, will be given, as has always been the practice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Seven hundred and eighteen thousand.

TRANSPORT

PARRY SOUND, ONT.—CHANGE IN LOCATION OF MARINE AGENCY HEADQUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister's department considering any change in the location of the headquarters of the Parry Sound marine agency?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no basis for this suggestion. The agency at Parry Sound is going to stay there, and there is no intention on the part of the department to move the agency from there.

RICHELIEU WATERWAY—REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister tell the house whether the Richelieu waterway inquiry has now been referred to the international joint commission?

Mr. Chevrier: The minister answered that.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has submitted a proposal that is now under consideration by the United States department of state. I hope agreement will be reached very shortly. This joint submission will then be submitted to the commission.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that if he had referred the survey for that important project as early as 1958 as we suggested, he could now give the results of such a survey, instead of hoping to be able to submit the proposal to an international commission?

Mr. Pigeon: It could also have been referred to it ten years ago.

An hon. Member: It could have been twenty years ago.

(Text):

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN DISPUTE RESPECTING PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask the minister whether he has had an opportunity of looking at the questions which were put to him the day before yesterday concerning the work stoppage and the dispute between the pilots and the shipping federation. Is the minister now in a position to state whether or not that work stoppage is legal?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has fully explained the situation in so far as the pilots are concerned. I have nothing to add to his explanation. This matter does not come under the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. The pilots, being under certificate from the government, hold a relationship with the shipping people and the government through the Department of Transport. This is not the ordinary relationship of employer and employee. The precise nature of the relationship has been described by the Minister of Transport. It is not a matter to be elucidated under the industrial relations act.

As to whether or not this stoppage constitutes a strike within the legal definition of the term, or whether or not this is a legal strike, I certainly do not intend to give a ruling at this time. In fact, in putting his question the hon. member is asking me to give a legal opinion, which I suggest would be most improper for me to do.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question.

Has the minister any report to make to the house with regard to progress made in the settlement of the pilots' strike?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this morning I met the three pilot spokesmen. We discussed the situation for several hours. I am having another meeting with them this afternoon. I must say that we did make some progress; we reviewed the position, and I am confident that the issue will soon be settled to the advantage of all parties concerned and of the public in general.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Could the minister tell us what the situation is regarding the investigation on all questions relating to pilotage, which he mentioned yesterday and which was to be discussed by the shipowners, the pilots and the minister's colleagues?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be proper to give any detailed information regarding the talks we had this morning. I do not believe it would be in the public interest to give particulars on any point raised during that discussion. All I can say at this time is that we started negotiations and are pursuing them.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I have another question—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking a supplementary question?

Mr. Johnson: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Springfield.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF INDIANS VOTING IN FEDERAL ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the concern expressed by a number of Indian bands in Manitoba as to the effect of voting in any federal election on the rights of Indians under treaty and on their status as Indians under the Indian Act, could the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration give an unqualified assurance that the status and rights of Indians will not in any way be affected if they exercise the right to vote conferred on them by the legislation passed in this house in 1960?

Mr. Speaker: The question is, strictly speaking, not in order because it asks the minister to interpret legislation. However, this may be a matter on which the minister's view is desired to be known, and I would not stand in the way on a technicality.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I am reasonably sure that most members of this house would wish to have placed on the record such an assurance as the hon. member seeks, because we do not want the Indians to be under any misapprehension as to their rights and the protection of those rights. I have prepared a short answer to the hon. member's question, of which he gave me notice, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall read it.

I am glad to be able to give the assurance asked for by the hon. member without qualification or reservation of any kind. As a matter of fact, that assurance has already been given in writing to a number of Indians who have written in to inquire about the matter. I should like to state for the record, so there will be no possibility of misunderstanding on the point, that the rights of Indians under treaty and the rights of Indians not under treaty are not in any way diminished or affected by the legislation passed in 1960, which conferred on persons of Indian status the right to vote in federal elections. The legislation in question takes nothing at all away from the Indians; instead, it confers an additional right or benefit, the right to vote in exactly the same way as any other citizen of Canada.

I shall be glad to provide a written assurance along these lines to any chief or band council who desires to have this official assurance; and if any hon. members wish a letter to this effect I shall gladly provide them with a letter also.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

WEST BLOCK—COMPLETION OF RENOVATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Jean Casselman (Grenville-Dundas): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister tell the house how soon the west block will be completed and whether it would have been cheaper to have torn it down and rebuilt it, rather than carrying out the renovations presently under way?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The west block will be completed by the end of 1963. The estimated cost of tearing down and rebuilding the structure would have been approximately $7,390,000, whereas the amount of the contract for the work presently being carried out is $5,088,000. So the present undertaking is, of course, $2,300,000 cheaper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CANADAIR—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him if he is aware that, as announced in the morning press, some 1,200 workers are going to be laid off at the Canadair plant. Would the minister tell us what steps he proposes to take to avert these lay-offs?

Mr. Churchill: In 1963.

An hon. Member: Try next year.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I have not seen this report. Of course I shall have to look into the situation and see what the circumstances are. Certainly we shall do everything possible to alleviate any hardships which may occur.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Defence Production.

Could the minister inform us whether he sees some prospect of contracts for CL-44 aircraft, built by Canadair, to avoid the lay-off of those 1,200 workers?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, there are some possibilities of selling further CL-44 aircraft. As a matter of fact, discussions are going on in various places, more particularly in the United States and in three European countries. We hope that before too long other sales of CL-44 aircraft will be concluded, which will necessitate further construction work and prevent the lay-off of several hundred workers for some time to come.

ANNUAL HOLIDAYS FOR GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yesterday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam stated that many people working on a commission basis now receive annual holidays with pay. He asked for an explanation why Canadian government annuities representatives are not in receipt of annual holidays with pay.

While some persons paid on a commission basis may receive an annual vacation with pay in some form, I cannot state with certainty that the practice is as widespread as the question of the hon. member would indicate. Detailed information in this matter is not available from the regular annual survey conducted by the Department of Labour. The annuities agents employed under the provisions of the Government Annuities Act are not employees and hence do not come under the Annual Vacations Act. They conduct their work on their own time and are, in effect, in business for themselves. Arrangements are made for their vacations from time to time to suit their own convenience.

TRANSPORT

SOULANGES CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFER TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): Could the Minister of Transport tell us whether he has received any answer from the government of the province of Quebec about the Soulanges canal?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: They are not in any rush.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BELLECHASSE CONSTITUENCY—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Justice if he is in a position to reply to the question I put to him yesterday.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Acting Minister of Justice): I have made inquiries and I find that no report has yet been received. The investigation is still continuing.

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH CIVIC RESPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister tell the house the result of the discussions that were to take place this morning between representatives of the federal and provincial governments about the abolition of the toll charges on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a meeting was held this morning at eleven o'clock between the representatives of the federal government, namely the vice-chairman of the national harbours board, the assistant deputy minister of the Department of Transport, and the delegate from the provincial government, namely the deputy minister of highways, and the representative from the city of Montreal, Mr. Gerry Snyder, member of the executive council. That meeting was held at eleven o'clock and I have not yet received any report about the discussions.

[Later]

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I forgot to say that a representative of the treasury board also attended that meeting.

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING TO HOUSE CONVICTED DOUKHOBORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member—

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Garland: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you would see the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: I shall be glad to try to fulfil both intentions at once. The minister has been very patient.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for seeing me. This has been better than the 5BX exercises.

I am always anxious to answer quickly the questions asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East. In reply to the question he put to me yesterday I would point out that drawings for a camp in the Agassiz area to confine Doukhobors convicted under the Criminal Code are under way. The housing units which will provide the bulk of the accommodation are prefabricated huts obtained on loan from the Department of National Defence.

The erection of the huts and the provision of services together with a perimeter security fence, are being undertaken on a day labour basis, with materials being obtained under the local tender call system and subcontracts for specialized work, such as heating, being awarded following competitive bidding.

AIR TRANSPORT

REVISION OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING CHARTER AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask whether the government proposes to change the regulations relating to charter aircraft and more particularly to reimpose controls on licensing of class IVB aircraft? Perhaps I should have put the question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that I have given the minister only a short notice, he may wish to take this as notice.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question. In answer I wish to say that we are keeping all our regulations, both under the air transport board and in the department, under continuous review. If any changes are made they will be announced in the usual fashion in due course.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR PORTIONS OF SPEECH NOT DELIVERED IN HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I trust I will not add to the sadness of the Minister of Finance if I ask him to give to the members of the house, privately at any rate, those portions of his budget speech which he did not deliver last night.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to furnish the hon. member for his necessary instruction and enlightenment a copy of those portions of the speech prepared for delivery last night which there was not time or opportunity to deliver.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C. CHECK ON FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF CONTRACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Public Works is in a position today to reply to the question I put to him yesterday.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS TO EXTEND QUALIFICATION PERIOD, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-80, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 1—Persons deemed honourably discharged.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I have already commended the minister for bringing in this legislation. I now wish to take the opportunity of thanking him for sending the bill to the standing committee on veterans affairs. The study of the bill in committee served two useful purposes. The resolution foreshadowed a great many changes in the legislation. The examination of the bill in committee gave us an opportunity to realize that these changes were more far reaching and, in some cases, more beneficial than would appear from a reading of the measure.

The second purpose served by the study of the bill in committee was to refresh once again our memories as to the excellent work that is being done by the Veterans' Land Act administration. Those who come from provinces where there are only a few veterans taking advantage of this legislation do not have much opportunity of finding out exactly what work is being done. It was beneficial for me and I am sure for all hon. members of the committee to have the officials before us and to have explained certain phases of the splendid work the Veterans' Land Act administration is doing.

This bill received an exhaustive study in the committee. Officials of the administration who were present, explained every clause and answered every question very painstakingly and in great detail. I think practically all the questions that could be asked were asked in the committee and the answers were recorded in the committee report which has now been available to members of the committee for several days. Therefore I do not think it should be necessary to take a great deal of the time of this committee going over that ground again.

I shall conclude these few brief remarks by saying I presume this bill will receive fairly swift passage through committee of the whole.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I shall make a few brief remarks before we start to deal with the various clauses of the bill. As the previous speaker said, the measure was sent to the standing committee on veterans affairs which gave it a good review and examination. The director and the officials of the Veterans' Land Act administration gave excellent explanations and answers to any questions asked by hon. members of the committee. It was a highly satisfactory committee meeting.

I wish to take this opportunity of paying a tribute to Brigadier Rutherford who, according to an announcement made by the Minister of Agriculture on April 6, resigned from the Farm Credit Corporation a few days ago. I mention his name this afternoon because he was responsible for the development of certain policies with respect to the Veterans' Land Act administration.

All large organizations or companies and even the civil service develop some apple polishers and some Charlie McCarthy's, but Brigadier Rutherford was not of that type. He was a man of ideas and purpose, a forceful personality who left his mark on the administration. I see that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs is commenting on my remarks to the officials before him.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, may I say I am taking no objection whatever to the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West; in fact, I welcome them.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, I am sure you do. This type of civil servant should not be allowed to go out to pasture quietly without an opportunity for hon. members of the house to say a few words of tribute relative to his service to the country.

Brigadier Rutherford had an excellent record in world wars I and II, and between wars he farmed. He then took over the administration of the Veterans' Land Act in 1946, if I remember correctly. On one occasion I remember he was generous enough to say that the administration was not as bad as it was supposed to be. At that time I believe there were some unfortunate incidents. To quite an extent I think they were occasioned by the tremendous rapidity with which land had to be purchased and development had to take place before the organization had really become settled down. But when he became director of the organization he threw his experience into the position and was always a very interesting witness before the standing committee on veterans affairs. He produced new ideas. He was not afraid to talk to the Legion organizations and veterans organizations and to seek their support. I think he was primarily responsible for getting the government of the day to accept the principle of counselling so far as credit was concerned. He not only wished the Veterans' Land Act administration to accept this principle but he also suggested that other persons seeking farm credit from governments should have the same opportunity or that the same principles should be carried forward and be available to all the citizens of this country who wished to farm or to undertake agricultural development. It was in that connection he produced this famous book.

I think it is to the credit of Brigadier Rutherford that he produced this farming book which has to do with proposals for counselling on farming. His thesis was proved to be correct by the Veterans' Land Act administration and finally was accepted by the government. Even the Canadian Legion passed a resolution urging that the principles of the Veterans' Land Act in this respect be applied to farm credit generally. This government passed the Farm Credit Corporation legislation and it has been a great success. Brigadier Rutherford was transferred from the Veterans' Land Act administration to the Farm Credit Corporation and to date, without a doubt, it has been a great success because of these principles which are incorporated in the act. We are all pleased to know that Brigadier Rutherford has been succeeded by a very capable director who has equal enthusiasm and zest for the position.

Before taking my seat I wish to bring to the attention of the committee a very excellent article which appeared in the Family Herald of March 8 of this year and which I suggest should be read by anyone who is interested in Brigadier Rutherford's achievements with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation and the Veterans' Land Act administration. I shall just mention one or two things which are of interest. It quotes Brigadier Rutherford to this effect:

> Rutherford's army experience left him with a well-tested ability to judge men and a profound respect for teamwork.
> "By himself a man can do little," he said recently, "but there is little he can't do if he has the right organization behind him."

The veterans have had the right organization behind them in the Veterans' Land Act administration throughout the years. This article goes on to say this and I quote one paragraph briefly:

> Undoubtedly Rutherford's success in building a competent staff is the main reason for V.L.A.'s good reputation.

He said:

> "Our first job was to establish these men on the land, but we always had it in mind that they might well become pilot models for future developments which were bound to take place."
> Rutherford lobbied openly for a civilian counterpart to V.L.A. He approached the farm organizations to solicit their support. On his urging the Canadian Legion several years ago asked the federal government to expand V.L.A. into a general farm credit organization. In 1954, using V.L.A. as a springboard, Rutherford wrote a lengthy exposition on supervised credit obviously intended to arouse support for his ideas.

And so on. I wished to take this opportunity, without appearing to be out of order, to pay a tribute to the foundation that Brigadier Rutherford has laid and also to pay a tribute to the director and his officials who are obviously carrying on the good work by proposing the amendments which are included in the present bill and which, without a doubt, arise out of experience and have been proved to be necessary. We are pleased indeed that the government has introduced this amending bill which will make the Veterans' Land Act administration more useful than ever to the veterans who seek its service.

Miss LaMarsh: I think this is the first opportunity I have taken in the House of Commons to speak with respect to any of the veterans legislation. The point I wish to raise for the consideration of the minister and his department is the extension of the benefits of this legislation and of the other legislation which, as has been so often said, was put on the books in Canada by a country grateful to those who had served her. Everyone in the committee realizes that this was a part of Canada's desire to show those who had risked life and limb or who were willing to risk life and limb that the country was grateful for those efforts. It has, however, in the years since the original passage of the veterans legislation and the other similar legislation, overlooked a not very large but rather important group of men. These men have formed an association among themselves. They call themselves the corps of civilian firefighters. These were the men who at the request of the Canadian government under General LaFleche formed themselves into a group and went to Britain offering their services both for the United Kingdom and for the continent. They were in fact never taken to the continent but they saw service during the worst part of the buzz bombing in Great Britain. These people volunteered to go to the United Kingdom and to aid in the defence of Britain and also volunteered in the spring of 1944 to go anywhere on any battlefield to assist the liberation armies.

Their purpose, of course, was not to carry on in the normal sense. Their arms were firehose and equipment of that kind which were to protect the mother country and the United Kingdom. The fact that they performed these services well has often been mentioned. They were credited in great part for the saving of not only property but life in the United Kingdom. I think the committee should recall that people of this kind, although in the title described as civilian, were not really civilians. They offered their lives, their limbs and their health. Their term of duty was for the war's duration and they were required to wear uniforms just as were the armed forces. They had comparable ranks and pay and the same allowances for their wives and families. They received the same treatment in respect of medical examination and medical care, pensions, discipline, clothing, feeding, training, right down to such small items as carrying a Canadian army card with their photographs and fingerprints. They received similar discharge certificates on their discharge. Three of these men actually died on active service while they were in the United Kingdom. As to those who remained at the end of the war, who had been advised by General LaFleche when they first enlisted, it was expected that they would be treated the same as other Canadians who had been repatriated following their service. In fact they have not been classed as individuals who had served on active service and thus have had none of the benefits in any way in the public service or the benefits of the other legislation which was passed for veterans.

They have sought repeatedly in representations to the committee—I have reference to the veterans committee of this house—some consideration with respect to a number of matters and have been granted a great many of these. They were finally, after their own representations were heard, granted the $100 clothing allowance. They were given free travel home. There was compulsory re-employment. If they were hurt in the corps while overseas they were granted pensions. They were also given hospital treatment for any injury sustained while they were overseas. They received rehabilitation grants. They were able to participate in veterans insurance if they had been overseas. If they chose, they might receive vocational training. They received $15 allowance for every 30 days spent overseas. Later they received unemployment insurance generally, but they did not receive the benefits with respect to the Veterans' Land Act. Since the passage of this act this class of veterans, civilian although they may have been in name, have been permitted access to the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act only if they were pensioners. However, to the great majority of them the benefits of this act have not been extended. They have requested and still seek from the minister and from the department full recognition as veterans. They have asked for a number of things and one of the things for which they have asked is to be entitled to re-establish themselves as veterans under the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act.

I had the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, of raising this matter very briefly in the veterans affairs committee with a representative of the department. He admitted that this matter has been raised many times. He declined, however, to say what discussions might have been held with the minister, other than the fact that he had made recommendations to the minister in respect of this group. I could not allow the discussion of the general principle of the bill under clause 1 to pass without having attempted to raise my voice and add it to the voices of those who were concerned about these people who may easily be forgotten as the years pass by, since the last hostilities. Certainly, many people in the United Kingdom, who were the front line of our forces for a long time, believe that these qualified, trained men who fought fires and kept their homes and their factories in existence, and who helped to keep the status quo, were in fact front line soldiers. I wish, Mr. Chairman, once again to appeal to the minister to consider the acceptance of this class as a class of veterans entitled to consideration under the Veterans' Land Act as amended.

Mr. Peters: I should like, very briefly, to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Niagara Falls and add my voice to hers in support of the admittance of these veterans, the Canadian corps of firefighters, to the benefits of the Veterans' Land Act. Over the years we have all heard representations from the corps, particularly as a result of our personal experience in the last four years, and we are pleased that the government has given certain recognition to the corps which had been previously denied. The final extension of the rights of these veterans, and certainly they should be classed as such, should be to make the Veterans' Land Act applicable to them.

If these men are in a position to be in receipt of war veterans allowance or war veterans pensions, then they are entitled to the benefits of the Veterans' Land Act. I believe that those who are not in receipt of pensions also should be in a position to take advantage of the Veterans' Land Act.

Now, Mr. Chairman, many hon. members will be very surprised to know the number of these veterans who served in this particular corps. At a recent zone meeting of the Canadian Legion in my area I mentioned the fact that the C.C.F. and New Democratic party had supported this idea over the years, but that we had not done this on the basis that it affected anybody particularly in that area. We had done so on the basis of its being a good thing. I was surprised to be told that in the zone of the Canadian Legion covering the riding of Timiskaming there were 15 or 20 veterans who had served in the Canadian corps of firefighters. I was told there was also a number of members of the Canadian corps of firefighters from the zone representing northern Ontario who had not come back and who had paid the supreme sacrifice for the service they rendered.

I believe the minister would not find the house unsympathetic if he were to suggest now that this further amendment will be implemented, to allow the Canadian corps of firefighter veterans the privileges of the Veterans' Land Act. In passing, I should like to endorse the comments of my leader in tribute to Brigadier Rutherford. I believe that the Canadian public have in the Veterans' Land Act, as a result of the services Brigadier Rutherford rendered the country, a better credit arrangement for all rural agriculture than would have been possible without the experience and leadership of a man like Brigadier Rutherford. It has always been questionable whether or not governments, in giving credit, should supervise that credit. There has been resentment on the part of agriculturists, who are first and foremost individualists, at submitting to any type of credit supervision. I think the pioneer work done by Brigadier Rutherford, and the conscientious method he used in making the credit facilities of the Veterans' Land Act fully understood by those taking advantage of them, went a long way towards making the Veterans' Land Act and the Canadian Farm Loan Act acceptable to these people. I hope the government will retain the services of Brigadier Rutherford for consultation on legislation of this nature. The ideas that he still has would deserve consideration and would be advantageous if implemented. I strongly urge that the government continue to use the services of Brigadier Rutherford in an advisory capacity if in no other way.

Mr. Montgomery: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up much time or repeat the things that have been said by other hon. members who have spoken. However, I should like to join with them in the compliments they have paid to the officials of the Veterans' Land Act and of the veterans department generally. I think that the amendments contained in this bill are very important. As the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo said, the farther we went into the amendments, into the clauses, and as explanations were given, the greater the benefits we discovered in them.

It was not possible, as we were told, for all veterans to be re-established at the same time, that is shortly after the war. There were various reasons for this, one of which was that the costs at that time seemed high. However, as time has gone by costs have risen. This is the reason, as I understand it, the recommendation has come forward and been accepted, to permit all veterans to be re-established if they wish to be.

I suppose that we should not pay too much attention to current rumours, but as chairman of the veterans committee I should like to take this opportunity of thanking all the members of the committee. I do this now in case there is nothing else referred to the committee. I wish to thank the members for their co-operation during this session and in the discussion of this bill. Every member of the committee was exceptionally co-operative. We worked under difficulties at times, but I should like all members to know that I greatly appreciated the co-operation they gave.

I should like also to add to the compliments paid to the area superintendent of the maritimes, who happens to be a friend of mine. A lot of good things have been said about Brigadier Rutherford, the head of the board. I do not want to take anything away from Brigadier Rutherford but I believe he was fortunate in having a lot of good officials associated with him, men who had experience in connection with soldier settlement and the purchase of lands. One of the most outstanding of these is Mr. Scott and I could not let this occasion pass without paying a compliment to my old friend, Charles Scott, for the good work he has done and the guidance he has given in the maritimes.

I am sure that were one to travel across the country from province to province and district to district he would discover that a lot of good men had something to do with the administration of this act. As a matter of fact it is interesting, and I do not think it would be out of place for me to mention, that we have an hon. member of the House of Commons, Mr. Rogers, the hon. member for Red Deer, who formerly had a lot to do with the administration of this act. Members of the house who have not been members of the veterans affairs committee may not realize what a great help he has been to that committee during the last four years in explaining lots of little things that we sometimes did not inquire about when the officials appeared before that committee.

The director and officials who appeared before the committee on this occasion certainly gave us explanations that seemed to satisfy everybody. I do not want to hold up passage of the bill, but there was one statement made by the hon. member for Niagara Falls which I did not get clearly. I rose to ask her a question but she did not notice me. I wonder has she read the evidence given before the veterans affairs committee some three years ago concerning the firefighters? As I understand it, she said that these gentlemen volunteered to fight anywhere in Europe.

Miss LaMarsh: Fight fires.

Mr. Montgomery: I am glad the hon. member has straightened that out because these men did not volunteer to fight with the armed forces in Europe. According to the evidence we got they decided to take another course.

One of the things which they particularly asked for when they appeared before the committee was granting of the right to wear a service ribbon, but the granting of this right did not come within the power of that committee. That is something which has to be decided somewhere else. We cannot grant them that, even though it was the main thing they sought. I understand the great majority of these men are now members of fire brigades and they would appreciate wearing that ribbon. I have nothing to say against their being given that right but, as I say, it is beyond the power of the veterans affairs committee to do so.

Mr. Carter: I just want to reciprocate the kindly sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and to pay tribute to him for his work as chairman of the veterans affairs committee. He has referred to rumours, but there have been other rumours which indicate the hon. member may not be with us at future sessions. Therefore I would not want this opportunity to pass without paying tribute to the fair and impartial way in which he has presided over that committee. It has been a real privilege for me to serve under him, and I know when I say that I am also expressing the sentiments of all other members of the committee.

I should also like to join with him in his tribute to Mr. Charles Scott, whom I have had the pleasure of knowing for a great many years. I associate myself with the hon. member's remarks in paying tribute to his interest in veterans and the good work he is doing for them in the maritimes.

Mr. Jones: I should like to thank the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo on behalf of all other members in the committee for his very gracious tribute to the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. It was a tribute well deserved and one in which we join with great enthusiasm. Our work together in the veterans affairs committee has been happy work.

Discussions on this bill in the veterans affairs committee were very detailed. I think we would all agree with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and the hon. member for Kootenay West, who said that very extensive consideration was given to each clause in the bill. Therefore perhaps it will not be necessary for us to labour too long here today as the points have already been covered.

I should also like to commend the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West who paid tribute to the work of Brigadier Rutherford, who did a fine job in the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. He also did a fine job in the Farm Credit Corporation. I have known him for many years and worked with him. As a matter of fact, before becoming a member of parliament I was one of those who produced papers urging the type of credit arrangement which has since been made by the Farm Credit Corporation and is now in effect.

The general supervision which has been provided for veterans under the Veterans' Land Act has proven to be most welcome and has been most helpful in getting the veterans concerned re-established. Although supervision under the Farm Credit Corporation is compulsory only with respect to certain loans, nevertheless those who desire to have the augmented loans, and hence must accept the supervision, have experienced with satisfaction the assistance of the experienced personnel who have been recruited to that organization, many of whom worked in the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. They have performed a real service to the country under the V.L.A. and they are now performing a real service to the country in the Farm Credit Corporation. We are all indebted to them for the job they are doing and for the leadership they are giving to veterans.

This help which they give means a lot to those faced with the operation of farms in this very different world of 1962, where such great technological changes have taken place during the last 15 years and where there has been a great increase in the cost of land and machinery. These factors have made decisions in respect to the operation of farms more critical than ever before.

I should like to conclude by saying that the views expressed by hon. members today will continue to be given consideration, as was the case in the past, and I thank all hon. members of the committee for the attention they have given to this bill, both here and in the committee on veterans affairs. Finally, I commend again the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton on the very fine job of work he has done over the years in the veterans affairs committee.

Mr. Matheson: I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant a question, and I hope I may do so in no contentious way. I might preface my question by saying that for a number of years since 1949 it has been my experience to process a good many Veterans' Land Act loans and to see the work done under this act at the very lowest echelon among the people of the area in which I reside. Many hundreds of these loans have been made, and while there was always a little complaining that it took time, there was ultimately great satisfaction in these people who had never before owned land and had started out in a proprietorial way in life by learning what it was to meet their obligations with the assistance of V.L.A. When we look at the history of the Veterans' Land Act and what it has done in, say the years 1948 to 1958, we know how beneficial this measure has been. I have in my hand the report "A decade of in-service staff training, 1948-58; the story of 'Operation good earth'," compiled by Mr. S. O. Robinson of the V.L.A. staff training program.

Am I not being fair in concluding that perhaps V.L.A. is moving in the opposite direction to A.R.D.A.? Perhaps this is necessary; perhaps there may be advantages in responsible young men coming out of the services and going on to what appear to be essentially marginal farmlands of perhaps 100 to 300 acres, with a valuation of something like $10,000 or perhaps up to $20,000. I ask the parliamentary secretary, is there really any close co-ordination between the work of this very important department, so important to our veterans and so beneficial to them, and the over-all plans that would appear to have been enunciated by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the A.R.D.A. program?

Mr. Jones: I thank the hon. member for his question. The Veterans' Land Act will not work against A.R.D.A. Far from it; it will complement, help to support or be one of the components of the general over-all picture of the A.R.D.A. program. The A.R.D.A. program, as the hon. member knows—I do not want to go into a great deal of detail in regard to that matter on this occasion, as I would be out of order—is agricultural rehabilitation and development. Under that act projects which contribute to that end can be organized with the assistance of the provinces and the communities concerned. They use all the facilities at their disposal for rehabilitating areas and people from those areas. Involved in that program is not only farming, in the sense that we know it, but reforestation, pasturage, conservation matters, tourism, and so on. The Veterans' Land Act program would be a useful tool in the total A.R.D.A. concept.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to take the opportunity of joining with those who earlier paid tribute to Brigadier Rutherford. I do so not only because I became familiar with his very excellent work in V.L.A. several years ago and continued to follow it with a great deal of interest over the years, and have also been aware of his work with the Farm Credit Corporation; but in addition to that I have had a much closer association with him than perhaps other hon. members here today because I was an officer in his brigade in Canada and over in England for some considerable time. If this were the time for reminiscing I could tell some stories about Brigadier Rutherford in which the committee might be interested. But as a brigadier, as a soldier, as a director of the Veterans' Land Act and subsequently the Farm Credit Corporation, Brigadier Rutherford has given very distinguished service to his country and I for one would like to thank him for what he has done.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MUSTARD SEED AND RAPESEED

Hon. Gordon Churchill (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-19, to amend the Canada Grain Act.

Canada Grain Act

He said: Mr. Speaker, in bringing this bill before the house I think a short statement would be desirable. There are three things designed in the bill; giving statutory effect to the transfer of responsibility for the board of grain commissioners to the Minister of Agriculture; second, establishing statutory grades for mustard seed; and third, redefining the statutory grades for rapeseed.

The production of rapeseed and domestic mustard seed in western Canada has become so well established and has achieved such success in recent years that it is considered advisable to establish a comprehensive range of statutory grades for each of these seeds. A range of grades that are properly related to the commercial requirements of the users will facilitate the handling of and trading in these products, to the greater benefit of the producers and the trade at large.

Commercial grades, as provided for in the Canada Grain Act, are established by the grain standards committee and may be changed by the committee at any time. Conversely, statutory grades are not subject to change, except by act of parliament. It is through the constancy of our statutory definitions that the international status of our grades is so high, coupled with the reputation for our grading system. As the board of grain commissioners has had several years of experience in the handling of mustard seed and rapeseed, a full range of permanent grades for these oilseeds may now be established and given the status of statutory grades.

As regards mustard seed, at the present time only commercial grades have been established; this is, there are no statutory grades. These commercial grades have been in effect since 1947 without any revisions. Through experience it has been found that these grades could work to the detriment of the Canadian producers, by comparison with mustard seed grading standards used by producers elsewhere.

In revising the definitions of grades it is considered appropriate to introduce statutory definitions, thus giving to this seed the acceptance and recognition afforded in world markets to other Canadian grains for which statutory grades have been established and which are now well known and trusted.

In the case of domestic mustard seed, the committee on western grain standards established a complete range of commercial grades, from extra No. 1 to No. 3 Canada western, plus a sample grade and a grade to include mixed classes of mustard seed. The committee did this in 1947, and has continued to re-establish these grades each year since then. There is no reason to doubt that domestic mustard seed will continue to be produced in western Canada, so it follows naturally that grades should be established permanently, by statute.

In the case of rapeseed, the present statutory grades are Canada rapeseed and sample Canada rapeseed. That is, there is no No. 1 grade. It is felt that the stature of the product would be improved by the establishment of a No. 1 grade. Commercial grades known as No. 2 grade and No. 3 grade rapeseed have been in effect since 1957 when a committee was established to make recommendations with regard to this question. The amendment would establish three statutory grades clearly defined so that the buyer would know what he is getting and the producer would be paid accordingly.

I think the bill itself indicates, in the schedules, the alterations which I have outlined with regard to these two oilseeds.

(Translation):

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair to congratulate the government for transferring the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada to the Department of Agriculture, since it concerns the Minister of Agriculture rather than the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In the second paragraph of the explanatory notes of this bill we read the following:

> The purpose of this amendment is to establish statutory grades of domestic mustard seed.

In section 2 of the bill, we read the following:

> Schedule one to the said act is amended by adding thereto, immediately before the heading "Rapeseed".

I would ask the minister how it is that in the explanatory notes reference is made to "mustard seed", while in section 2 of the bill reference is made to "rapeseed". Is it a case of misinterpretation or is it because "mustard seed" and "rapeseed" are one and the same thing?

(Text):

Mr. Churchill: If the hon. member would raise that question during the committee stage, perhaps we shall have the answer.

(Translation):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member would do well to wait until the committee considers the bill in detail to put his question.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, it is indispensable that we know exactly the definition of each term. In my opinion we should know what we are talking about before considering the bill in committee.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is, I believe, a point of order which arises here. If the minister speaks he will close the debate. He may wish to defer his answer until the other speakers have been heard, or the matter can be discussed in committee.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, it is important we should know the exact meaning of each term in the bill.

If we refer to the bill, we note that in the explanatory notes reference is made to "mustard seed", while in section 2 of the bill reference is made to "rapeseed".

I do not know whether "rapeseed" means "mustard seed", and I should like to know what is the difference between the two.

(Text):

Mr. Churchill: I am not closing the debate—just answering a question. I did suggest that it would be more appropriate to ask this question during the committee stage, but the hon. member persists in raising it on second reading. If he would look at the act as it now stands and read the amendment as it is given here, I think he would understand what is intended. We end up in clause 3 by striking out the heading "rapeseed" and substituting two schedules, schedule A dealing with domestic mustard seed and schedule B dealing with rapeseed. So the situation is perfectly clear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Clear as mud.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to be the last man to delay the passing of this bill, because as early as 1960 I was trying to get a similar bill through the house. Only on January 22 a similar bill of mine received second reading here, but since the hour for voting expired at six o'clock it never came to a vote.

Mr. Peters: It was a lot better bill, too. It made more sense.

Mr. Rapp: This bill was one of the three rapeseed bills I have introduced to the house since I came down here in 1958 and it is also the third bill which the government and the House of Commons have approved. The bill before us this afternoon is an important one because its purpose is to revise the statutory grades of mustard seed and rapeseed. It is in conformity with the suggestions of the board of grain commissioners and also in conformity with the recommendations of the chief grain inspector of that board. As I said at that time, Canada is well known in the world for its high quality of grain, and having this bill will keep the grades of rapeseed pure and clean. We shall now have these grains for which, in due time, Canada will gain an enviable reputation abroad. I am pleased that this bill has received the approval of the other members of the house and it is my hope that the approval of parliament will speedily be given to it.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I believe the government would have been well advised to accept the bill introduced by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale which would have accomplished in a clearer way what the government seeks to accomplish by this bill. It may be a case of a private member having more time to work on it and a better understanding of what is required than the government has in its position.

In examining the schedule I am wondering if any consideration had been given to the fact that, although rapeseed has been highly developed both in western and eastern Canada, mustard seed in eastern Canada is considered a noxious weed difficult to eradicate. Where mustard seed is grown on a commercial basis, what will be done to protect those areas where it is designated as a weed, one difficult to control?

In the explanatory notes to the bill I see no requirement to take out seeds similar to mustard seed. These may be part of the screenings we are handling in eastern Canada. This may be an important factor in eastern Canada with respect to poultry feed.

A few weeks ago in this house we had discussions concerning the fact that rapeseed and mustard seed could not be brought under the terms of the wheat board for sale purposes because these classifications are not contained in the Canada Grain Act. Will these commodities now be brought under the terms of the Canadian wheat board for sale and export?

Mr. Churchill: The answer to that is that this is for grading purposes under the board of grain commissioners.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it remains to make but a few observations on this bill, because when a similar bill was brought in on other occasions by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale I said I felt the proposal should be supported on its merits. As the hon. gentleman has previously attested, he received support for his proposal from hon. members of the Liberal party.

It will be recalled when the matter was last before us under that hon. gentleman's auspices we urged the government then to accept the responsibility which it is now belatedly assuming. The government has finally brought forward a bill, not on its own initiative but as a result of the prodding from members of the Liberal party who urged the government to put in statutory form what had been recommended by one of its own supporters, and which was actually embodied in one of the measures before us.

The Acting Minister of Justice (Mr. Browne) seems to be displeased by that statement, but that is the fact. If he will look at Hansard he will find that it is the case, as will be attested to by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale.

We pointed out on earlier occasions that the board of grain commissioners had investigated the situation and had recommended what is now before the house. We said that in those circumstances the government could not escape responsibility of either accepting or rejecting those recommendations. In the former case it would be clear, we said, that the government should bring in legislation rather than leave the responsibility to a private member.

The government now comes forward with a bill which was introduced in the Senate on March 28. This bill comes as a result, first of all, of the example set by a private member of the government party, and particularly as a result of the prodding given the government by the Liberal party in urging hon. gentlemen opposite to take an initiative which they should have taken in the first instance.

When the bill was discussed on one other occasion some hon. members supporting the minister took the position that it was undesirable to add mustard seed to the wheat board bill. Certainly that should not be done, it was argued, until such time as the schedule to the grain act had been modified in accordance with what is being done today. We now have the situation that mustard seed is being put in the Canada Grain Act as well as in the Canadian Wheat Board Act where it was put some few weeks ago. It seems to me that those hon. gentlemen who took that position previously did a disservice to the mustard seed growers of Canada as a result of the attitude they adopted.

I have risen primarily at this moment for the purpose of reminding the government of something that has grieved the Acting Minister of Justice. I have risen to say that the government is now doing what the opposition urged it should do and what the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale took the initiative in doing. The action of the government in deciding to have the board of grain commissioners look into the matter, and the board having made its recommendation, placed an obligation on the shoulders of the government to itself bring in this legislation, and it has done so, belatedly.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, will the minister explain why reference is made to mustard seed in the explanation of the bill and to rapeseed in the bill itself?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I can explain that. I have in my hand volume 1 of the 1952 statutes. Schedule 1 begins on page 61 and runs over to page 74. It is amended on page 74 by adding the heading and grade requirements set forth in schedule A to this bill. This means that in advance of the reference to rapeseed and the schedule now appearing on page 74 would come reference to domestic mustard seed, schedule A, and that would be followed by schedule B which relates to rapeseed.

I grant that it is a little confusing as paragraphs 2 and 3 presently read, but what it amounts to is striking out rapeseed on the small schedule that is there now and inserting the new schedules A and B relating to mustard seed and rapeseed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3.

Mr. Peters: Is any consideration being given to this problem of the difference in the maintaining of the planting of this grain and of the seed, particularly mustard seed, and the effect it will have in some parts of Canada? With the designation of mustard as a weed, the conflict will be apparent. Is there protection taken where this conflict arises? In other words, the screenings being brought into certain areas will contain a certain amount of mustard seed which will be domestic, whether it is one of the classifications of oriental, Canada western, Canada western yellow or one of the other designations. In other words, certain types of seeds to which we refer are domesticated, or I presume they are domesticated. Is this control also to be over the other ones that are not domesticated? Is any protection given, or is any consideration being given, to the situation in which there could be a conflict between the wild varieties and the domesticated varieties?

Mr. Churchill: This has been going on for some time. I refer to the production of mustard seed. I have the figures here for 1957 and up to 1962. Any conflict that may appear in the mind of the hon. member now must have arisen in the past. I would consider that the board of grain commissioners would use their customary discretion and caution in seeing that the mustard seed which is delivered to them or which might come into their possession for sampling would be carefully looked after and not dispersed. The mustard seed which goes into commercial use would be treated in the same way as are other seeds which go into commercial use. I grant that in some areas of Canada mustard is a noxious weed and that people are much more concerned with getting rid of it than with increasing the production of it. The number of acres seeded to mustard in 1961-62 is 142,000 acres. It is not a very large number of acres when you consider the millions of acres that are seeded to wheat, oats and barley.

Mr. Peters: I was just inquiring. There must be a section of the Canada Grain Act, as it is a national act, which gives consideration to the provincial weed laws and the interprovincial movement of grain and which obviously would not be in the section we are discussing at the present time. I was concerned only with the conflict that may arise because of the fact that this is probably the first really commercialized product which could be classified as Canadian grown and which would have this particular feature. Others that may be put in eventually would be such things as poppy seed or something of that nature that may have a similar application. There may be provisions already that would not be contrary to or in conflict with provincial restrictions of movement. By putting this matter under the Canada Grain Act we may upset that. I am not asking the minister to give a decision on it now. I would trust that this matter be given consideration. It may be that a regulation would be satisfactory prohibiting the text of the Canada Grain Act, which we want, from working an undue hardship on some of the provinces that are trying to control this weed in its wild state.

Mr. Rapp: In order to help the hon. member for Timiskaming, may I say that the schedule here deals with tame mustard. If he wishes to come over here I could show him samples of it. What he is worried about is wild mustard. Wild mustard is classified as a weed in the Canada Grain Act. But in schedule A domestic mustard means tame mustard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You had better send those samples over to the hon. member.

Mr. Peters: My point here is that tame mustard will be as bad a weed in eastern Canada as is wild mustard if it is growing in places in which you do not want it to grow. It will not make any difference what the grade happens to be. I believe the minister understands the problem to which I have reference. It is only with regard to protection where it would interfere with provincial weed control in certain areas where this matter has been a problem.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent, Mr. Churchill, seconded by Mr. Nowlan, moves—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Churchill: There is no amendment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

HEALTH INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF INSURANCE AND DIAGNOSTIC SERVICE BENEFITS

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins) moved:

That in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of introducing a comprehensive system of national health insurance, more particularly to give consideration to the advisability of: (a) amending the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to provide benefits on behalf of patients in tuberculosis sanitaria and patients confined to mental institutions; (b) introducing legislation to provide medical, dental and optical insurance.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am highly pleased once more to have the opportunity of bringing this matter before the House of Commons. Either I or other members of my party over the years have consistently raised this matter year after year. It is pleasing that, as a result, at least to some extent, of the continual pressure that has been brought to bear by the party to which I belong, we now find that more and more across the country the public are becoming aware of this problem and of the necessity of embarking on some sort of scheme such as that suggested in this resolution.

If we follow this subject in our newspapers we also find that the urgency is increasing as well. The resolution deals with the bringing of tuberculosis patients under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. We find that tuberculosis incidence in this country is not only on the increase as far as actual cases are concerned but that, in addition, tuberculosis germs seem to be developing a resistance to the drugs in current use. There is a need for greater research in this field if we do not wish to find that we are slipping in our control of the dread disease tuberculosis in this country. It also contains the idea of bringing mental patients within the confines of our hospital insurance act. It is probably not necessary but I think it might be worth while to remind the house once more that our hospital insurance act is only 50 per cent an act, because 50 per cent of the hospital beds in this country are still taken up by mental patients who do not come under the provisions of this act. This is one of the things this government has failed or neglected to do, in spite of what they said when they were members of the opposition some five years ago.

At the moment, we have a royal commission which is sitting and hearing briefs presented by the various interested groups. It is rather interesting, Mr. Speaker, to check the score in connection with this matter and ascertain who is supporting the idea of national health insurance and who is opposed to it. For example, amongst the people who are supporting this idea we find the 85,000 members of the civil service federation; the 400,000 members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and the one and a quarter million members of the Canadian Labour Congress. These three organizations alone represent a total of approximately 1,735,000 people. So far as I am aware at the moment, and I have followed this matter very closely, we find on the opposition side the 150,000 businessmen in the Canadian Chamber of Commerce; the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company and the Great West Life Insurance Company—possibly they were speaking for other insurance companies, I do not know. I did read excerpts from the brief they presented to this commission. We can add to this number, certainly, the majority of the doctors represented by their organizations across the country, although not all. There is some controversy so far as the doctors themselves are concerned, and some of them favour the idea while others do not.

In the limited time at our disposal, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with some of the reasons for embarking upon this suggested program. I will not speak too long because I am sure there are other interested members who would like to say something on this very important subject. Many of these reasons have been repeated many times in this house, so I do not believe there is any necessity for going into them again. They are a matter of record and have been set forth on more than one occasion. From time to time, however, new evidence is presented and I think this should be added to what is already on the record.

For example, I have here an article from the Windsor Star of March 19, 1962, which is entitled, "Health Good; Costs High, Almost Everyone Sad." This article reads in part:

> Everyone is unhappy with the nationalized British health service—except, perhaps the patients.

The doctors, the nurses and the druggists are unhappy.

> The drug companies are unhappy—the health service has taken a lot of old remedies off its lists as less effective than other medicines.
> The dentists and the opticians are unhappy because they complain they are not making enough money—
>
> But a spokesman for the ministry of health emphasized today that despite the tribulations of the scheme, most of them due to the government policy of refusing pay increases, the state of the nation's health was never better.
> When the health plan was introduced in 1948 the British death rate was 12.8 per thousand. In 1960, the last year for which statistics are available, it was 11.6 per thousand, an improvement of nearly ten per cent.

I should like also to put on the record a few remarks made by Kenneth O. Bardwell, federal government electronics engineer. This gentleman was the only individual who presented a brief to the royal commission looking into health insurance. According to this report, he spent approximately six months in preparing this brief. I quote from the article:

> As a Canadian—"I flinch each time some foreign news medium carries a deservedly disparaging article on suffering brought about by medical costs to uninsured or under-insured Canadians."
> As the husband of a multiple sclerosis sufferer—"I have spent months of evenings at a local hospital and have met many people whose worst problem is not their illness but the cost of it."

He goes on to criticize the doctors, and he said:

> Their spokesmen tell us no Canadian suffers through inability to pay . . . that there is something essential about our right to be unable to pay the doctor or druggist.

Then, the article goes on:

> He attacked voluntary health agencies. Many of them are self-perpetuating and can be relied upon to oppose any national plan, he said. Often they duplicate resources but will not allow their facilities to be used by a person suffering from another disease.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, these are the views expressed by people who favour the implementation of a national health insurance plan. Now, in order to be fair, I should like to refer to some of the reasons advanced by persons who are opposed to this plan. We have the submission of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which states that socialized medicine is not only undesirable but would damage the freedom of Canadians and the already burdened Canadian economy. Then, they go on to say:

> Income tax regulations should be amended to provide some measure of assistance in mitigating catastrophic illness expenses faced by normally self-supporting persons.

I wonder just how much income tax adjustment would be necessary to offset, to use their own words, the catastrophic costs of illness. In my opinion, the argument seems to be without merit whatever. We also have a reference to the representations made by the two insurance companies to which I referred earlier, the Metropolitan Life and the Great West Life. In a joint brief to the commission currently considering Canada's health needs, these two companies indicated their opposition to any government controlled national health insurance plan. Some of their reasons for their opposition are as follows:

> The right to choose the proper plan from a very wide range designed to meet every type of need—or to reject them all.
> Freedom to select the insurer and the method of financing.
> The opportunity to reap benefits accruing from competition between insurers.

Then, they spoil their whole argument by their reply to a question asked by one of the members of the commission, and I quote the article as follows:

> In reply to the commission, David E. Kilgour, president of Great West Life agreed some employers require a proportion of new employees to join schemes they operate jointly with insurance companies.
> "And you call that voluntary?" asked commission member Dr. O. J. Firestone.

It seems obvious that the interest of these two companies is not the health and welfare of the public but the fact that they would like to run a very profitable business involving the nation's health. We have also complaints from doctors, and we find that most of these complaints are based more on theory than they are on actual fact. If the facts are given, they are very carefully slanted a certain way so that only one side of the picture is seen. For example, I should like to refer to a report appearing in the Globe and Mail of March 19, 1962. The headline reads, "Figures Suggest Third of Doctors Leave U.K." The article reads in part:

> Figures suggesting that one third of all doctors trained in British and Irish medical schools emigrate after they have qualified have been published in the British Medical Journal.

Then, the article goes on to say:

> —there are no records to show the number of medical students from overseas who come here for their training. A number undoubtedly do arrive and most of them intend, from the start, to return to practise in their homelands.

I do not know why it is said these figures could not be found because I had no difficulty in finding the figures. I found them in a matter of 20 minutes. We find, for example, that in 1961 out of 12,314 students in British medical schools 2,193 were foreign students. So, the information was not difficult to find.

In addition to that I recall that just a matter of a year or two ago I placed on record in this house the report of a royal commission which sat in Britain, which looked into this matter very completely, and into the opinions expressed by the medical profession in regard to health insurance. One of these opinions was that it would drive doctors out of that field and result in a shortage of doctors. However, the conclusion arrived at by the royal commission was that by 1961 medical schools in Britain would have to cut down by at least 10 per cent the number of students entering them in order to avoid widespread unemployment among doctors in Britain. These are not my words, they are the words of the royal commission and, as I said, I placed them on record in this house a matter of a year or two ago.

Another complaint frequently made with regard to a health insurance plan is that it would interfere with the relationship between doctor and patient. It is never explained very clearly how this would come about, but I am just suspicious enough to wonder if that is not the interference about which at least a number of members of the medical profession are concerned. For example, within the last month or two I saw a report of a case where officers of the income tax division of the Department of National Revenue told a magistrate that a certain doctor had failed to report a total of $51,891.55 from 1953 to 1960. It was stated that, over the years included in the charge, the doctor had been deliberately keeping two sets of books, one set for the auditing firm which compiled his income tax return and one for himself in which he accurately recorded his true income. Certainly such a thing could never happen, or would be much more difficult to accomplish, were a health plan implemented. Indeed I cannot help wondering if that is not one of the major fears with regard to interference.

I also wonder what kind of wonderful relationship would be built up between doctor and patient in the light of another report, which reads as follows:

> About 100 Toronto doctors who have turned their new accounts over to a firm for collection will come under the scrutiny of the Ontario college of physicians and surgeons—
>
> The doctors turn all their bookkeeping and billing over to Professional Services Associates of Wilson ave., who buy the doctors' bills at a 14 per cent discount.
> P.S.A. then sends the bill on a printed note headed with "Dear patient" and signed, "Cordially, your doctor". It does not mention the fact the doctor has sold the account at a discounted rate to the agency.

As I say, I do not know what wonderful doctor-patient relationship can be built up under circumstances such as those.

I should like to give another example of something which, in my opinion, is the wrong way to build up a proper doctor-patient relationship. I quote from the Camp Borden Citizen of February 7, 1962, where there is an advertisement headed as follows:

Dr. John B. Scott
Dentist

Circled Pine Shopping Centre, Camp Borden, Ontario

Due to the increasingly large number—

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure what the hon. member proposes to read, but while I did not comment on his argument which seemed to be a bit remote from the resolution involving as it did criticism of the medical profession and its accounting, I think he should not bring names of individuals into the debate on this resolution. It really has nothing to do with the medical profession in general but has to do with the establishment of public services. I may have misapprehended what the hon. member was going to do, but I am sure he will not mind my indicating my view.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I would like to apologize for using the name. It was not my intention to use this doctor's name. The advertisement reads as follows:

Due to the increasingly large number of delinquent accounts in this office it has become necessary to enforce the following policy with regard to dental treatment. Effective immediately all dental treatment performed in the office ... in Camp Borden will be on a cash basis only as treatment is rendered. This does not apply to treatment of an emergency nature which if necessary will be allowed thirty days for payment. Will those who now have dental appointments and who feel that they will be unable to comply with the above condition please phone the dental office and cancel the appointments.

Please do not ask for treatment on any other basis as this cannot any longer be considered.

I think that points to a very deplorable condition in our country today.

I see my time is just about up but I should like to close with one final complaint which is often expressed whenever one speaks of health insurance. Immediately the hue and cry is raised about the terrible expenses involved. Well, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the house that when a health insurance plan is implemented it does not create very much of a new expense. It may transfer expenses, which are now paid in certain ways, to some other way, but we must keep in mind the fact that health insurance, protecting and maintaining the health of our citizens, costs a lot of money whether it is handled privately or publicly, semi-privately or semi-publicly, or whatever manner it is handled under the myriad of plans we have at the present time.

It will still cost money but there is no additional new expense involved by handling this thing publicly, trying to do it efficiently, and trying to ensure that the health of the nation is not based on the size of one's pocketbook.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Certainly.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): In his proposal would he maintain that the cost of this plan be taken out of general revenues or be met by contributions of the citizens of this country?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I am glad the hon. member asked that question. I do not believe in the policy of a health insurance plan paid for completely out of the public treasury. It promotes the theory that I object to so much in our society today, the theory that you can get something for nothing. There is no such thing as something for nothing in this country and it is about time the people were told so. I believe the plan should be based on a premium that can be afforded by practically the whole of society. If that premium is not sufficient, then the balance can be taken up in various other ways; but I believe that everyone who has health insurance should pay a premium so that he realizes that what he is getting he is paying for.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in his seat. In view of the limitation of time, if I thought that by giving way to him we could have from him a statement of policy on this important medical care insurance proposal I would readily give way. But I would not give way unless I had been assured by the minister that he is prepared now to announce something that the government said four and a half years ago it was prepared to give the Canadian people.

Mr. Pascoe: Twenty two years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister give us that assurance?

Mr. Cathers: What kind of horse trade is that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Somebody asked, "What kind of horse trade is that?" We are going to have an election very soon and as this is going to be one of the issues in the election it would be very interesting to have a statement of policy from the government. The Minister of National Health and Welfare now has an opportunity to state that policy.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I would be very happy to listen to you, Paul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the government has no policy with regard to this matter. All we can do, therefore, is to try and urge the government to give consideration, even at this late date, to matters about which it said it had such an intense interest over a year and a quarter ago.

In discussing this resolution introduced by the hon. member for Timmins we will perhaps want to recall the circumstances of the statement made by the Prime Minister in 1958 with regard to the kind of program the government had in connection with health insurance. It will also be interesting to recall the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to paragraph (a) of this resolution, which calls for:

> (a) amending the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to provide benefits on behalf of patients in tuberculosis sanitaria and patients confined to mental institutions;

With regard to the former provision, the Canadian people were led to believe that once this government came into office it would provide, in co-operation with the provinces, a system of medical care insurance. With regard to this matter no progress at all has been made by this government. A year and a quarter ago, following the national Liberal rally which was held in this city and at which was discussed a proposal in the field of medical care insurance put forward by the members attending that rally, the Prime Minister one day, anticipating that discussion, rose in this house and announced the appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the whole matter of medical care insurance. He said he was not in a position then to give the personnel of the royal commission, but the house could be assured that the government was going to appoint the members of that commission with dispatch and the study was going to take place immediately. The implication left was that action would be forthcoming from the government.

What are the facts? The royal commission personnel were not designated until March, some 4½ months after the announcement of the royal commission by the Prime Minister. The chief justice of Saskatchewan was selected as chairman of the royal commission, but a long interval elapsed between his appointment and the appointment of other members of the commission. The royal commission is now on tour; it was on tour with many other royal commissions of this government, such as the recent Bladen commission, about which, by the way, no action was taken by the government in last night's budget.

The royal commission on health services under the direction of Chief Justice Hall has gone from one end of Canada to the other listening to representations from the Canadian Dental Association, the nurses association, and so on. But what we ought to note is that this is another device by this government to postpone consideration of something which it told the Canadian people, when it last appealed to them, it was prepared to undertake.

We will be told by the Prime Minister during the course of the coming election campaign, make no mistake about it, "We are giving consideration to this whole question of medical care insurance. Have we not appointed a royal commission? Do we not now have in existence in this country a group of men under the chairmanship of the chief justice of the province of Saskatchewan who are examining this problem?" The Prime Minister will seek to convey to the Canadian people the great interest of this government in this particular problem, when the fact is that this royal commission, like so many other devices of this government, is nothing but a technique to divert the people from recalling the promise made by this government with regard to medical care insurance, the matter that in principle is now proposed in the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Timmins.

I say that the device of the Hall commission is nothing more than the well known technique of the present Prime Minister to convey to the people of Canada something which is not in accord with the facts and is not in accord with what he told the people of Canada he and his government would do. Yet he talks about having fulfilled his promises, telling the young Conservatives last Saturday night, "We have fulfilled all our promises; did not Peter Newman say so?"

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the hon. member permit a question? Will the Prime Minister in the course of these discussions not be able to say that this government has spent many tens of millions of dollars in redeeming promises of the previous government?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman asks, "Will this government not be able to say that it has been doing a great deal in other fields?" I am not talking about other fields right now, nor has this resolution anything to do with other fields. This resolution has to do with medical care insurance and I am now dealing with a promise made to the Canadian people by this government. I am pointing out that this government has resorted to its well known technique of introducing a red herring, a diversionary tactic, by the appointment of a royal commission; and there is no one who should deplore that more than the hon. member for Greenwood, for whom I have the greatest respect and who I know regards a political promise as something that should be observed.

Let us examine another promise made by this government which arises out of this resolution. The Minister of National Health and Welfare will recall how the present Minister of Finance in particular urged upon the previous administration an amendment to the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to provide for the inclusion under the act of patients suffering from tuberculosis and mental illness.

In response to that request it was indicated that, following a conference held with the provinces it was agreed by the latter that, as the great percentage of tuberculosis and mental illness costs were borne by the provinces, and since the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act was intended to provide assistance to individuals and not to relieve provincial governments of their accepted obligations, it was not valid to argue that these two particular illnesses should be included in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. But that was what the present government urged when in opposition; they urged that mental illness and tuberculosis should be included in the act. How they can resist this resolution in the face of that stand is very difficult indeed to appreciate.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Would the hon. member permit a question? Can I take it from his remarks that the Liberal party is still of the opinion that they held at the time the present government was urging this change?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will recall what I said about this matter two years ago he will appreciate that the situation has changed considerably.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, it has. Hon. gentlemen laugh, but their laughter only indicates their lack of comprehension of the facts. The financial situation between the federal government and the provinces has changed greatly. The province of Ontario has entered this field. The province of Ontario is now imposing a 25 cent contribution with regard to tuberculosis patients. The situation is altogether different. But the federal government, notwithstanding that fact, continues to take a position which they urged earlier should have been taken by the previous administration. This government now, because of that fact and because of the promises made by the Prime Minister, again, with regard to this matter, cannot resist the inclusion of mental illness and tuberculosis in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

That is another promise which has gone unfulfilled. In spite of that, the Prime Minister went before the young Conservatives in Ottawa last Saturday and said, "Look at all the promises we have fulfilled", forgetting that here are two, among many others, which he and his government have not even touched.

An hon. Member: He is already out making more.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Somebody says he is out making more, and I suppose that is true. What we must remember is that this subject is one which is of the greatest interest to the Canadian people. They do expect governments on a senior level to take some action with regard to medical care costs.

The Canadian people now have a hospital insurance scheme which runs across this country and which is proving its worth. They are now expecting governments at both senior levels to take action with regard to this matter. We in the Liberal party, having taken the initiative with regard to hospital insurance, having placed that act on the statute books of this country, having obtained the consent of the required number of provinces, which was a fact just before the change of government, can now say that we are prepared to embark on a further stage, in light of the fact that we have placed the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act on the statute books.

Here again we find the Prime Minister boasting about what he and his government have done in the field of social welfare. Let it not be forgotten that the additional expenditures in that field which the Prime Minister mentioned on Saturday night included the moneys paid out of the unemployment insurance fund. It was those disbursements which caused the present social welfare expenditures to reach the level indicated by the Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman forgot, of course, that the moneys paid into the unemployment insurance fund do not represent moneys under the control of the federal government but are moneys paid in by the employers and employees, the main contributors to the fund.

We believe the time has come when the government of Canada, in co-operation with the provinces, should provide a system of responsible medical care insurance so that no individual in this country shall go without such care on the mere ground of financial incapacity. We have put forward in our contributory old age scheme a plan which meets part of this objective. With regard to the discussion which is particularly current in the United States, with regard to medical care for the aged, we say that not only should we provide financial assistance to the aged but we should also be making provision for the payment of their medical expenditures. Under our contributory plan, which could be put into effect under the present amendment to the British North America Act, we would provide for the medical care of the aged who are not now provided for under provincial or municipal arrangements. There are over a million people now receiving pensions from the federal government under the old age security scheme. There is also a lesser number—though it is considerable—receiving payments under the old age assistance plan. Many of these people cannot meet their medical care costs. Under the contributory plan which we have put forward, such individuals would be covered.

There is another aspect of this problem which was not touched on by the hon. gentleman, and it concerns sickness insurance which should be built into a medical care insurance plan. An individual who is out of work because his employers lack work to give him can draw unemployment insurance benefits if he is qualified to do so; but if such person loses work because of illness he cannot qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. We feel this is one aspect of the problem which should be taken care of. Indeed, I have a resolution on the order paper referring to this very matter. It is one of the reforms which will have come about and which is part of the social security program already announced by the leader of the Liberal party. Under that plan we guarantee to individuals an ability to meet the cost of medical care, as has been stated by the Leader of the Opposition in speeches which have been made during the past few weeks from one end of Canada to the other, and which will be increasingly made.

We have indicated that we recognize the importance of the doctor-patient relationship. The doctor must be free to use the form of treatment he believes in the circumstances, and the patient must be free to consult the doctor of his choice. There is no suggestion of interfering in any way with the traditional doctor-patient relationship which must prevail. We recognize the contribution which has been made by the medical profession. We recognize the contribution being made in the field of medical research. What we want to do, while preserving the integrity of the medical profession, is to bring to a maximum number of people in our country the opportunity of sharing in the discoveries of medical science. That is the idea behind the plan which we have put forward—a plan which would create a scheme which would attract an increasing number of able people to the practice and study of medicine.

We recognize that the plan will require machinery, that it will require administration. We recognize the position of the doctor with regard to his income. Where there is collaboration between the medical profession and the provincial and federal governments with regard to this plan, there need be no difficulty in working out some kind of program which would guarantee the security which we feel, in this day and age, individuals living in a country such as ours should have, without in any way interfering with freedoms which we recognize as part of our tradition and without in any way interfering with constitutional arrangements which we believe are implicit in the British North America Act. We feel that those who can afford to do so should pay a small part of their doctors' bills up to a low annual maximum. This, we believe, would afford the safeguard against the making of unreasonable demands for attention.

We do believe that to postpone this problem, as the government is doing, is to place the whole question in jeopardy. All the information now being gathered by the royal commission on health services is valuable, no one questions that. But all that material is now available to the government in the Department of National Health and Welfare. All the submissions being made by the labour bodies, by the federation of agriculture, by the various business organizations, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the chambers of commerce, the Canadian Medical Association, the dental association and similar bodies are familiar to the minister. His department has that information and it should not be difficult for him and his advisors to recommend to his colleagues the kind of program which should be put forward for acceptance by the Canadian people. The government has let four years elapse without taking any concrete steps in this field, as it failed to take any concrete steps in the field of a contributory pension scheme that would provide a basic national pension of $75 a month. We now have fifteen minutes left in which to discuss this matter. I call upon the minister to deal with this question and outline the program of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Health Insurance

Mr. G. C. Fairfield (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the house. I do not intend to advance arguments relating to anything other than that part of the motion which calls upon the government to give consideration to the advisability of introducing a comprehensive system of national health insurance.

Hon. members of the opposition must realize that there has been appointed a royal commission to carefully examine existing health services throughout the nation and to recommend in what way these services may be improved. The hon. member for Essex East has stated that this information is already available to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Having assisted with the briefs of some of the medical associations I can tell the hon. gentleman that the information is very voluminous. This matter should not be rushed into as was done when the United Kingdom government established national health insurance, which has led to the medical crisis that presently exists there, whether or not the hon. member for Timmins agrees with that statement.

I wish to talk about the supply of doctors we could make available under any plan this government might recommend as a result of the information gleaned from the investigation of the royal commission on health services. I do not know whether hon. members realize that in Canada we have the capability of graduating about 900 doctors per year. During the past few years only 800 students have graduated yearly from medical schools. It will be understood that many of these graduates come from the United States, Jamaica and other foreign lands and of course do not remain in Canada. I do not know what the people of Canada would have done since 1945 if it had not been for immigrant professionals from Europe and England. Since that time some 4,500 immigrant doctors came to Canada and helped out in this pinch.

The hon. member for Timmins said this question should be approached properly and sensibly. I feel it should be approached not only from the point of view of health services but also from the point of view of Great Britain being the only country in the free world which has a national health insurance scheme.

In the March 26, issue of U.S. News and World Report there is a splendid article with the provocative title "Disappearing Doctors: New Crisis in Britain" which examines the scheme in the United Kingdom. The shortage of recruits to the medical profession is not new knowledge to us. It may be to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the farm unions and other groups; but this condition has been known to the Canadian medical profession and this government, if to no one else, for some time. For the past five years it has been a certainty that the number of people going into medicine is decreasing from year to year. In Great Britain with a population of approximately 50 million there are approximately 1,600 graduates per year in the medical field. The entire tenor of the article represents a gloomy forecast. We do not wish to encounter the same difficulty experienced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he mean there are only 1,600 graduates out of the 12,000 students?

Mr. Fairfield: It will be understood that a student spends eight years in the study of medicine. I am not a good mathematician but 12,000 students must be divided by eight years. There are roughly 1,600 graduates a year in Great Britain and 800 a year in Canada. In Canada there are probably 6,000 to 6,500 students in medicine but only 800 graduate each year from the eight year course of study.

Let me read an excerpt from the article to which I referred:

> Why is British medicine under nationalization said to be in "a mess"? Why are hundreds of young doctors deserting socialized medicine to practise in countries free of government control? The answers that you get from independent authorities are: Working conditions imposed by the government as a monopoly employer of doctors are proving to be more and more intolerable. One result has been a decline in the number of people choosing medicine as a career. Among those who study medicine, a steadily increasing number are refusing to work here.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Would the hon. gentleman permit another question? Would the hon. gentleman not agree that the present unrest in Great Britain is not confined to the medical profession but arises as a result of the government wage freeze?

Mr. Fairfield: Mr. Speaker, this motion is confined to a specific recommendation. I will not yield to the temptation of engaging in a discussion of doctor-patient relationships and other facets of this subject. I shall confine my remarks strictly to the question of the introduction of legislation to establish a comprehensive system of national health insurance as referred to in the terms of the motion.

I have spoken to many medical doctors who have emigrated to Canada from the United Kingdom. A great many resident surgeons and interns in hospitals in Great Britain are from India and other former colonial nations who are now taking over the actual practice of medicine in the hospitals in that country.

Lord Taylor, a socialist spokesman on medical problems in the House of Lords, is reported in this article to have said:

> I cannot honestly recommend you to go into such hospitals as a casualty. In many cases, there is no casualty officer. A house surgeon will have to leave the operating theater when he can treat you. His experience will be far less than that of your general medical practitioner. When he comes, he will probably not be a British graduate, and he may well have difficulty in understanding what you say. This is at a time when speed and efficiency may be literally lifesaving.

These are important facets of this question. Speaking politically they could perhaps be ignored. But this government intends to study the question thoroughly. It must be approached on a reasonable basis. We wish to avoid the crisis that has arisen in the United Kingdom.

I have spoken to many practitioners who left the United Kingdom and came to Canada. They speak of the vast number of patients who daily appear in the office of the ordinary general practitioner. With sometimes as many as 60 or 80 patients a day the patients receive little care. This is quite understandable because a doctor has only a limited time to devote to his patients. It was said that all those patients with a similar complaint are asked to stand up and they are given pink pills. I use that merely as an illustration.

This type of treatment has created a demand among ordinary citizens for private practitioners. As a result of this a great number of doctors who previously worked under the national health scheme have established a private practice and dissociated themselves from the scheme. This has created a still greater shortage in the medical profession. This is having a snowball effect and it will continue to do so, according to the investigations overseas. I quote from this article as follows:

> General practitioners, most of whom are burdened with a steadily increasing work load, are being forced to give less and less time to their patients.

Dr. Seale, who is a Harvard-trained medical economist in Great Britain, predicts that this growing shortage of doctors and the increasing demands for medical care will eventually force into private practice more and more of those doctors who are burdened with this type of practice. Whether or not this can be swallowed holus-bolus, I do not know. One quotation here is very interesting. It evidently comes from the same type of official and need not be taken as gospel. However, this man had this to say:

> "If we had a chance to do it again," one high ranking official says, "I think that we would favour some form of compulsory medical insurance, supplemented by tax funds together with subsidies to hospitals to keep down costs. We would also act to limit the cost of drugs. In short, the state would insure that everyone had access to medical care at a reasonable cost, but without nationalizing the entire system and putting all doctors on the government payroll."

You may say it is a very great political expedient to go to the country and say, "We are going to make all doctors work for a salary, as they do in the United Kingdom, of about $6,700 a year; there would be no time limit to the amount that they work; there is no such thing as a 40 hour work week; and they will be happy with it". I can warn you now that they are not happy with it in the United Kingdom and they have not been happy with it. The results are now coming to the fore in that unfortunate kingdom. The end of the article is particularly worthy of note, and I quote it as follows:

> Whatever is done, one thing is clear in Britain: After 14 years of socialized medicine, a growing number of experts are coming to the conclusion that something is wrong with the system—and they are speaking out for the first time.
> The alarm bell has been touched off by the realization that Britain is the only advanced industrial nation that is losing many of its best young physicians through emigration at a time when there is an acute shortage of doctors at home.

I therefore must warn not only our own government but the members of the opposition that if they go ahead without the concurrence of the doctors and, roughshod, push them into some form of compulsory work, they will bring about the same results as those now being observed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. In view of what he said, will the hon. member in this House of Commons, as a worthy member of the medical profession, recite for us the Hippocratic oath?

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, in the few brief minutes allowed to me it gives me a great deal of pleasure to speak on this motion introduced by the hon. member for Timmins. One of the things I think I might point out is that the need for beds for tuberculosis patients is becoming less year after year, and we are glad this is true. It is due to better prevention, antibiotics and the use of new drugs which allow some of these people to be treated in their own homes. It is a paradox that we find just the opposite situation in our active treatment hospitals where we are short of surgical beds and medical beds by the thousands. As has been pointed out by the hon. member who has just spoken, we are today seriously short of doctors in this country. Not only are we short of doctors but we are short of nurses and of dentists. Any plan that would be put into effect would have to take into consideration those problems of shortages.

What is the reason for those shortages? This shortage situation is something that has been going on since early in the 50's. Governments and medical schools have noted it. The situation has progressed until today we have practising in this country some 4,500 doctors who are a gift from the United Kingdom. If we did not have those doctors, I just wonder how we would man our hospitals today, how we would practise medicine and look after the people in this country. That indicates the shortage we have today in the trained personnel required to operate these hospitals and to supply these services that we are asking for in this motion. As the hon. member has stated, it takes some years to graduate a doctor. We now are obliged to wait for those eight years required for training and there is no relief in sight from larger classes. In other words, we must get more students from our schools into our medical faculties. How are we going to do that?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Rynard: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): From what the hon. member has said, would he not agree that the doctor problem in this country is identical with the one in Great Britain, namely that of shortage?

Mr. Rynard: I should like to state to the hon. member for Timmins that we have been taking some of that shortage. Maybe we are responsible for some of that shortage because, as has been pointed out, we have 4,500 of those doctors operating in Canada. What I am trying to say to you, Mr. Speaker, is this. If those people had not come here, how would we operate today? How would we look after the sick? How would we look after the surgical cases? How would we do all this if we had not had that gift from the United Kingdom and other countries.

This shortage must be alleviated. I see that my time is just about up. I am hoping that the royal commission will bring in recommendations which will point the way to alleviating that shortage and will give to the Canadian people the best medical care in the world, which they have received over the last few years. We have on this continent the highest standard of medical care in existence anywhere in the world. Let us not horse trade in that matter. We must keep that standard up. I see that my time is up.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire of the house leader what the business will be for tomorrow? I hope it will also be possible for him to give some indication of what it will be for Friday.

Mr. Churchill: For tomorrow, we shall take any third readings that are on the order paper, and then the following items—and I shall name nine of them. Most of them have been before the house earlier and I presume everyone is ready to discuss them. If the order is to be altered, both parties on the other side will be informed in good time tomorrow morning. Tentatively, however, I put them in this order: 1, the resolution on the electoral boundaries commission, which has already been discussed; 2, Bill No. C-86, the amendment to the British North America Act concerning the Senate; 3, the resolution which appeared today dealing with retirement annuities for senators; 4, Bill No. C-79, the Customs Act amendment; 5, the copyright convention in the name of the Secretary of State; 6, the resolution concerning the Freight Rates Reduction Act; 7, the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act; 8, the resolution dealing with crown corporations; and 9, the supplementary estimates. Just to repeat, may I say if that order is to be altered early notice will be given tomorrow morning to the opposite side.

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire if we will follow that procedure both Thursday and Friday?

Mr. Churchill: That I cannot be sure of at the moment; it depends on the progress that is made.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the house leader indicate whether or not we will return to the budget?

Mr. Churchill: I express the hope we will return to the budget.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX A

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT, 1962

as adopted at the final plenary session held at Geneva on 10 March 1962

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT, 1962

The governments signatory to this agreement,

Considering that the international wheat agreement, 1949 was revised and renewed in 1953, 1956 and 1959, and

Considering that the international wheat agreement, 1959 expires on 31 July 1962 and that it is desirable to conclude a new agreement for a further period,-

Have agreed as follows:

PART I.—GENERAL

ARTICLE 1

Objectives

The objectives of this agreement are:

(a) To assure supplies of wheat and wheat flour to importing countries and markets for wheat and wheat flour to exporting countries at equitable and stable prices;

(b) To promote the expansion of the international trade in wheat and wheat flour and to secure the freest possible flow of this trade in the interests of both exporting and importing countries, and thus contribute to the development of countries, the economies of which depend on commercial sales of wheat;

(c) To overcome the serious hardship caused to producers and consumers by burdensome surpluses and critical shortages of wheat;

(d) To encourage the use and consumption of wheat and wheat flour generally, and in particular in developing countries, so as to improve health and nutrition in those countries and thus to assist in their development; and

(e) In general to further international cooperation in connection with world wheat problems, recognizing the relationship of the trade in wheat to the economic stability of markets for other agricultural products.

ARTICLE 2

Definitions

(1) For the purposes of this agreement:

(a) "Advisory committee on price equivalents" means the committee established under Article 31;

(b) "Balance of commitment" means the amount of wheat which an exporting country is obliged to make available at not greater than the maximum price under Article 5, that is, the amount by which its datum quantity with respect to importing countries exceeds the actual commercial purchases from it by those countries in the crop year at the relevant time;

(c) "Balance of entitlement" means the amount of wheat which an importing country is entitled to purchase at not greater than the maximum price under Article 5; that is, the amount by which its datum quantity with respect to the exporting country or countries concerned, as the context requires, exceeds its actual commercial purchases from those countries in the crop year at the relevant time;

(d) "Bushel" means 60 pounds avoirdupois or 27.2155.. kilogrammes;

(e) "Carrying charges" means the costs incurred for storage, interest and insurance in holding wheat;

(f) "Certified seed wheat" means wheat which has been officially certified according to the custom of the country of origin and which conforms to recognized specification standards for seed wheat in that country;

(g) "C. & f." means cost and freight;

(h) "Council" means the international wheat council established by the international wheat agreement, 1949 and continued in being by Article 25;

(i) "Crop year" means the period from 1 August to 31 July;

(j) "Datum quantity" means:

(i) In the case of an exporting country the average annual commercial purchases from that country by importing countries during the years determined under Article 15;

(ii) In the case of an importing country the average annual commercial purchases from exporting countries or from a particular exporting country, as the context requires, during the years determined under Article 15;

(k) "Executive committee" means the committee established under Article 30;

(l) "Exporting country" means, as the context requires either;

(i) the government of a country listed in annex B which has accepted or acceded to this agreement and has not withdrawn therefrom; or

(ii) that country itself and the territories in respect of which the rights and obligations of its government under this agreement apply.

(m) "F.a.q." means fair average quality;

(n) "F.o.b." means free on board ocean vessel or sea-going vessel, as the case may be, and in the case of French wheat delivered at a Rhine port, free on board river craft;

(o) "Importing country" means, as the context requires, either:

(i) the government of a country listed in annex C which has accepted or acceded to this agreement and has not withdrawn therefrom; or

(ii) that country itself and the territories in respect of which the rights and obligations of its government under this agreement apply;

(p) "Marketing costs" means all usual charges incurred in marketing, chartering, and forwarding;

(q) "Maximum price" means the maximum prices specified in or determined under Articles 6 or 7 or one of those prices, as the context requires;

(r) "Maximum price declaration" means a declaration made in accordance with Article 13;

(s) "Metric ton", or 1,000 kilogrammes, means 36.74371 bushels;

(t) "Minimum price" means the minimum prices specified in or determined under Articles 6 or 7 or one of those prices, as the context requires;

(u) "Price range" means prices between the minimum and maximum prices specified in or determined under Articles 6 or 7, including the minimum prices but excluding the maximum prices;

(v) "Purchase" means a purchase for import of wheat exported or to be exported from an exporting country or from other than an exporting country, as the case may be, or the quantity of such wheat so purchased, as the context requires. Where reference is made in this agreement to a purchase, it shall be understood to refer not only to purchases concluded between the governments concerned but also to purchases concluded between private traders and to purchases concluded between a private trader and the government concerned. In this definition "government" shall be deemed to include the government of any territory in respect of which the rights and obligations of any government accepting or acceding to this agreement apply under Article 37;

(w) "Territory" in relation to an exporting or importing country includes any territory in respect of which the rights and obligations under this agreement of the government of that country apply under Article 37;

(x) "Wheat" includes wheat grain of any description, class, type, grade or quality and, except in Article 6, wheat flour.

(2) All calculations of the wheat equivalent of purchases of wheat flour shall be made on the basis of the rate of extraction indicated by the contract between the buyer and the seller. If no such rate is indicated, 72 units by weight of wheat flour shall, for the purpose of such calculations, be deemed to be equivalent to 100 units by weight of wheat grain unless the council decides otherwise.

Article 3

Commercial Purchases and Special Transactions

(1) A commercial purchase for the purposes of this agreement is a purchase as defined in Article 2 which conforms to the usual commercial practices in international trade and which does not include those transactions referred to in paragraph (2) of this article.

(2) A special transaction for the purposes of this agreement is one which, whether or not within the price range, includes features introduced by the government of a country concerned which do not conform with usual commercial practices. Special transactions include the following:

(a) Sales on credit in which, as a result of government intervention, the interest rate, period of payment, or other related terms do not conform with the commercial rates, periods or terms prevailing in the world market;

(b) Sales in which the funds for the purchase of wheat are obtained under a loan from the government of the exporting country tied to the purchase of wheat;

(c) Sales for currency of the importing country which is not transferable or convertible into currency or goods for use in the exporting country;

(d) Sales under trade agreements with special payments arrangements which include clearing accounts for settling credit balances bilaterally through the exchange of goods, except where the exporting country and the importing country concerned agree that the sale shall be regarded as commercial;

(e) Barter transactions

(i) which result from the intervention of governments where wheat is exchanged at other than prevailing world prices, or

(ii) which involve sponsorship under a government purchase program except where the purchase of wheat results from a barter transaction in which the country of final destination was not named in the original barter contract;

(f) A gift of wheat or a purchase of wheat out of a monetary grant by the exporting country made for that specific purpose;

(g) Any other categories of transactions that include features introduced by the government of a country concerned which do not conform with usual commercial practices, as the council may prescribe.

(3) Any question raised by the executive secretary or by any exporting or importing country as to whether a transaction is a commercial purchase as defined in paragraph (1) of this article or a special transaction as defined in paragraph (2) of this article shall be decided by the council.

PART II.—RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS

ARTICLE 4

Purchases within the Price Range

(1) Each importing country undertakes that not less than the percentage specified for that country in annex A of its total commercial purchases of wheat in any crop year shall be purchased from exporting countries at prices within the price range and that any additional commercial purchases of wheat from exporting countries shall also be at prices within the price range, except when a maximum price declaration is in effect in respect of any exporting country in which case the provisions of Article 5 shall apply.

(2) Exporting countries undertake, in association with one another, that wheat from their countries shall be made available for purchase by importing countries in any crop year at prices within the price range in quantities sufficient to satisfy the commercial requirements of those countries, except when a maximum price declaration is in effect in respect of an exporting country, in which case the provisions of Article 5 shall apply to that country.

(3) For the purposes of this agreement, except as provided in Article 5, any wheat purchased from an importing country by a second importing country which originated during that crop year from an exporting country shall be deemed to have been purchased from that exporting country by the second importing country. Subject to the provisions of Article 19, this paragraph shall apply to wheat flour only if the wheat flour originated from the exporting country concerned.

ARTICLE 5

Purchases at the Maximum Price

(2) If the council makes a maximum price declaration in respect of all exporting countries, each importing country shall be entitled, while the declaration is in effect,

(a) To purchase from exporting countries at prices not greater than the maximum price its balance of entitlement with respect to all exporting countries; and

(b) To purchase wheat from any source without being regarded as committing any breach of paragraph (1) of Article 4.

(3) If the council makes a maximum price declaration in respect of one of more exporting countries, but not all of them, each importing country shall be entitled while the declaration is in effect,

(a) To make purchases under paragraph (1) of this article from such one or more exporting countries and to purchase the balance of its commercial requirements within the price range from the other exporting countries, and

(b) To purchase wheat from any source without being regarded as committing any breach of paragraph (1) of Article 4 to the extent of its balance of entitlement with respect to such one or more exporting countries as at the effective date of the declaration, provided such balance is not larger than its balance of entitlement with respect to all exporting countries.

(4) Purchases by any importing country from an exporting country in excess of the balance of entitlement of that importing country with respect to all exporting countries shall not reduce the obligation of that exporting country under this article. The provisions of paragraph (3) of Article 4 shall apply also to this article provided the balance of entitlement of any importing country with respect to all exporting countries is not thereby exceeded.

(5) In determining whether it has fulfilled its required percentage under paragraph (1) of Article 4, purchases made by any importing country while a maximum price declaration is in effect, subject to the limitations in paragraphs (2) (b) and (3) (b) of this article,

(a) shall be taken into account if those purchases were made from any exporting country, including an exporting country in respect of which the declaration was made, and

(b) shall be entirely disregarded if those purchases were made from a country other than an exporting country.

ARTICLE 6

Prices of Wheat

(1)—(a) The basic minimum and maximum prices for the duration of this agreement shall be:

Minimum $1.62½
Maximum $2.02½

Canadian currency per bushel at the parity for the Canadian dollar, determined for the purposes of the international monetary fund as at 1 March 1949, for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur. The basic minimum and maximum prices, and the equivalents thereof hereafter referred to, shall exclude such carrying charges and marketing costs as may be agreed between the buyer and the seller.

(b) Durum wheat and certified seed wheat are excluded from the provisions relating to maximum prices.

(c) Carrying charges as agreed between the buyer and seller may accrue for the buyer's account only after an agreed date specified in the contract under which the wheat is sold.

(2) The equivalent maximum price for bulk wheat for:

(a) No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in store Vancouver shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article;

(b) No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat f.o.b. Port Churchill, Manitoba, shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates;

(c) Argentine wheat in store ocean ports shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, converted into Argentine currency at the prevailing rate of exchange, making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(d) f.a.q. Australian wheat in store ocean ports shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in store graph (1) of this article, converted into Australian currency at the prevailing rate of exchange, making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(e) French wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. French ports or at the French border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination, or the c. & f. price at an appropriate port for delivery to the country of destination, of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this Article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(f) Italian wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Italian ports or at the Italian border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination, or the c. & f. price at an appropriate port for delivery to the country of destination, of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(g) (i) Mexican wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Mexican gulf ports or at the Mexican border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(ii) Mexican wheat on sample or on description in store Mexican Pacific ports shall be the maximum price for No. 1

Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, converted into Mexican currency at the prevailing rate of exchange, making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(h) Spanish wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Spanish ports or at the Spanish border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination, or the c. & f. price at an appropriate port for delivery to the country of destination, of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(i) Swedish wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Swedish ports between Stockholm and Gothenburg, both included, shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the country of destination of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(j) No. 1 heavy dark northern spring wheat in store Duluth/Superior shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using the prevailing rate of exchange and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(k) No. 1 hard winter wheat f.o.b. gulf/Atlantic ports of the United States of America shall be the price equivalent to the c. & f. price in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(l) No. 1 soft white wheat or No. 1 hard winter wheat in store Pacific ports of the United States of America shall be the maximum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using the prevailing rate of exchange and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned;

(m) Soviet south winter wheat f.o.b. Black sea ports or Baltic ports or at U.S.S.R. border (whichever is applicable) shall be the price equivalent to the c. and f. price in the country of destination for the maximum price of No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned.

(3) The equivalent minimum price for bulk wheat for:

(a) No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat f.o.b. Vancouver,

(b) No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat f.o.b. Port Churchill, Manitoba,

(c) Argentine wheat f.o.b. Argentina,

(d) f.a.q. wheat f.o.b. Australia,

(e) Mexican wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Mexican ports, or at the Mexican border (whichever is applicable),

(f) No. 1 hard winter wheat f.o.b. gulf/Atlantic ports of the United States of America, and

(g) No. 1 soft white wheat or No. 1 hard winter wheat f.o.b. Pacific ports of the United States of America,

(h) Soviet south winter wheat f.o.b. Black sea ports or Baltic ports or at U.S.S.R. border (whichever is applicable), shall be respectively:

the f.o.b. price Vancouver, Port Churchill, Argentina, Australia, Mexican ports, United States of America gulf/Atlantic ports, United States of America Pacific ports and the Black sea ports and Baltic ports of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics equivalent to the c. and f. price in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of the minimum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned,

(i) No. 1 heavy dark northern spring wheat in store Duluth/Superior shall be the minimum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using the prevailing rate of exchange and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting and the importing country concerned,

(j) French wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. French ports, or at the French border (whichever is applicable),

(k) Italian wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Italian ports, or at the Italian border (whichever is applicable),

(l) Spanish wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Spanish ports, or at the Spanish border (whichever is applicable),

(m) Swedish wheat on sample or on description f.o.b. Swedish ports between Stockholm and Gothenburg, both included, shall be:
the price equivalent to the c. and f. price in the country of destination, or the c. and f. price at an appropriate port for delivery to the country of destination, of the minimum price for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur specified in paragraph (1) of this article, computed by using currently prevailing transportation costs and exchange rates and by making such allowance for difference in quality as may be agreed between the exporting country and the importing country concerned.

(4) For the period of closed navigation between Fort William/Port Arthur and the Canadian Atlantic ports, equivalent maximum and minimum prices shall be determined by references only to the lake and rail movement of wheat from Fort William/Port Arthur to Canadian winter ports.

(5) The executive committee may in consultation with the advisory committee on price equivalents, determine the minimum and maximum price equivalents for wheat at points other than those specified above and may also designate any description, class, type, grade or quality of wheat other than those specified in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this article and determine the minimum and maximum price equivalents thereof; provided that, in the case of any other wheat the price equivalent of which has not yet been determined, the minimum and maximum prices for the time being shall be derived from the minimum and maximum prices of the description, class, type, grade or quality of wheat specified in this article, or subsequently designated by the executive committee in consultation with the advisory committee on price equivalents, which is most closely comparable to such other wheat by the addition of an appropriate premium or by the deduction of an appropriate discount.

(6) If any exporting or importing country represents to the executive committee that any price equivalent established under paragraph (2), (3) or (5) of this article, is, in the light of current transportation or exchange rates or market premiums or discounts, no longer fair, the executive committee shall consider the matter and may, in consultation with the advisory committee on price equivalents, make such adjustments as it considers desirable.

(7) In establishing equivalent minimum and maximum prices under paragraphs (2), (3), (5) or (6) of this article and subject to the provisions of Article 16 relating to Durum wheat and certified seed wheat, no allowance for difference in quality shall be made which would result in the equivalent minimum and maximum price of any wheat being fixed at a level higher than the basic minimum or maximum price, respectively, specified in paragraph (1).

(8) If a dispute arises as to what premium or discount is appropriate for the purposes of paragraphs (5) and (6) of this article in respect of any description of wheat specified in paragraph (2) or (3) or designated under paragraph (5) the executive committee, in consultation with the advisory committee on price equivalents, shall on the request of the exporting or importing country concerned decide the issue.

(9) All decisions of the executive committee under paragraphs (5), (6) and (8) of this article shall be binding on all exporting and importing countries, provided that any of those countries which considers that any such decision is disadvantageous to it may ask the council to review that decision.

ARTICLE 7

Prices of Wheat Flour

(1) Commercial purchases of wheat flour will be deemed to be at prices consistent with the prices for wheat specified in or determined under Article 6 unless a statement to the contrary, with supporting information, is received by the council from any exporting or importing country, in which case the council shall, with the assistance of any countries concerned, consider the matter and decide whether the price is so consistent.

(2) The council may in co-operation with any exporting and importing countries carry out studies of the prices of wheat flour in relation to the prices of wheat.

ARTICLE 8

Countries which both export and import wheat

(1) For the duration of this agreement and for the purposes of its application, a country listed in annex B shall be regarded as an exporting country and a country listed in annex C shall be regarded as an importing country.

(2) Any country listed in annex C which makes wheat available for purchase by any exporting or importing country shall do so at prices consistent with the price range, except in the case of denatured feed wheat, and in making such wheat available for purchase shall avoid taking any action which would be prejudicial to the operation of this agreement.

(3) Any country listed in annex B which desires to purchase wheat shall endeavour so far as possible to purchase its requirements from exporting countries at prices within the price range and, in meeting its requirements, to avoid taking any action which would be prejudicial to the operation of this agreement.

PART III.—ADJUSTMENTS

ARTICLE 9

Adjustment in Case of Short Crop

(1) Any exporting country which fears that it may be prevented by a short crop from carrying out its obligations under this agreement in respect of a particular crop year shall report the matter to the council at the earliest possible date and apply to the council to be relieved of a part or the whole of its obligations for that crop year. An application made to the council pursuant to this paragraph shall be heard without delay.

(2) The council shall, in dealing with a request for relief under this article, review the exporting country's supply situation and the extent to which the exporting country has observed the principle that it should, to the maximum extent feasible, make wheat available for purchase to meet its obligations under this agreement.

(3) The council shall also, in dealing with a request for relief under this article, have regard to the importance of the exporting country's maintaining the principles stated in paragraph (2) of this article.

(4) If the council finds that the country's representations are well founded, it shall decide to what extent and on what conditions that country shall be relieved of its obligations for the crop year concerned. The council shall inform the exporting country of its decision.

(5) If the council decides that the exporting country shall be relieved of the whole or part of its obligations under Article 5 for the crop year concerned, the council shall increase the commitments as represented by the datum quantities of the other exporting countries to the extent agreed by each of them. If such increases do not offset the relief granted under paragraph (4) of this article, it shall reduce by the amount necessary the entitlements, as represented by the datum quantities of the importing countries to the extent agreed by each of them.

(6) If the relief granted under paragraph (4) of this article cannot be entirely offset by measures taken under paragraph (5), the council shall reduce pro rata the entitlement as represented by the datum quantities of the importing countries, account being taken of any reductions under paragraph (5).

(7) If the commitment as represented by the datum quantity of an exporting country is reduced under paragraph (4) of this article, the amount of such reduction shall be regarded for the purpose of establishing its datum quantity and that of all other exporting countries in subsequent crop years as having been purchased from that exporting country in the crop year concerned. In the light of the circumstances, the council shall determine whether any adjustment shall be made, and if so in what manner, for the purpose of establishing the datum quantities of importing countries in such subsequent crop years as a result of the operation of this paragraph.

ARTICLE 10

Adjustment in Case of Necessity to Safeguard Balance of Payments or Monetary Reserves

(1) Any importing country which fears that it may be prevented by the necessity to safeguard its balance of payments or monetary reserves from carrying out its obligations under this agreement in respect of a particular crop year shall report the matter to the council at the earliest possible date and apply to the council to be relieved of a part or the whole of its obligations for that crop year. An application made to the council pursuant to this paragraph shall be heard without delay.

(2) If an application is made under paragraph (1) of this article, the council shall seek and take into account, together with all facts which it considers relevant, the opinion of the international monetary fund, as far as the matter concerns a country which is a member of the fund, on the existence and extent of the necessity referred to in paragraph (1).

(3) The council shall, in dealing with a request for relief under this article, have regard to the importance of the importing country's maintaining the principle that it should to the maximum extent feasible make purchases to meet its obligations under this agreement.

(4) If the council finds that the representations of the importing country concerned are well founded, it shall decide to what extent and on what conditions that country shall be relieved of its obligations for the crop year concerned. The council shall inform the importing country of its decision.

ARTICLE 11

Adjustments and Additional Purchases In Case of Critical Need

(1) If a critical need has arisen or threatens to arise in its territory, an importing country may appeal to the council for assistance in obtaining supplies of wheat. With a view to relieving the emergency created by the critical need, the council shall give urgent consideration to the appeal and shall make appropriate recommendations to exporting and importing countries regarding the action to be taken by them.

(2) In deciding what recommendation should be made in respect of an appeal by an importing country under the preceding paragraph, the council shall have regard to its actual commercial purchases from exporting countries or to the extent of its obligations under Article 4, as may appear appropriate in the circumstances.

(3) No action taken by an exporting or importing country pursuant to a recommendation made under paragraph (1) of this article shall affect the datum quantity of any exporting or importing country in subsequent crop years.

ARTICLE 12

Other Adjustments

(1) An exporting country may transfer part of its balance of commitment to another exporting country, and an importing country may transfer part of its balance of entitlement to another importing country for a crop year, subject to approval by the council by a majority of the votes cast by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes cast by the importing countries.

(2) Any importing country may at any time, by written notification to the council, increase its percentage undertaking referred to in paragraph (1) of Article 4 and such increase shall become effective from the date of receipt of the notification.

(3) Any importing country which considers that its interests in respect of its percentage undertaking under paragraph (1) of Article 4 and annex A is seriously prejudiced by the non-participation in or withdrawal from this agreement of any country listed in annex B holding not less than 5 per cent of the votes distributed in annex B may, by written notification to the council, apply for a reduction in its percentage undertaking. In such a case, the council shall reduce that importing country's percentage undertaking by the proportion that its maximum annual commercial purchases during the years determined under Article 15 with respect to the non-participating or withdrawing country bears to its datum quantity with respect to all countries listed in annex B and shall then further reduce such revised percentage undertaking by subtracting two and one half.

(4) The datum quantity of any country acceding under paragraph 4 of Article 35 shall be offset, if necessary, by appropriate adjustments by way of increase or decrease in the datum quantities of one or more exporting or importing countries, as the case may be. Such adjustments shall not be approved unless each exporting or importing country whose datum quantity is thereby changed has consented.

PART IV.—ADMINISTRATION OF RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS

ARTICLE 13

Maximum Price Declarations

(1) As soon as any of its wheat other than Durum wheat or certified seed wheat is made available for purchase by importing countries at prices not less than the maximum price, an exporting country shall notify the council to that effect. On receipt of such notification the executive secretary acting on behalf of the council shall except as otherwise provided in paragraph (4) of this article and paragraph (4) of Article 16, make a declaration accordingly, referred to in this agreement as a maximum price declaration. The executive secretary shall communicate that maximum price declaration to all exporting and importing countries as soon as possible after it has been made.

(2) As soon as all of its wheat which has been made available at not less than the maximum price, other than Durum wheat or certified seed wheat, is again made available for purchase by importing countries at prices less than the maximum price, an exporting country shall notify the council to that effect. Thereupon, the executive secretary, acting on behalf of the council, shall terminate the maximum price declaration in respect of that country by making a further declaration accordingly. He shall communicate such further declaration to all exporting and importing countries as soon as possible after it has been made.

(3) The council shall, in its rules of procedure, prescribe regulations to give effect to paragraphs (1) and (2) of this article, including regulations determining the effective date of any declaration made under this article.

(4) If at any time in the opinion of the executive secretary an exporting country has failed to make a notification under paragraph (1) or (2) of this article, or has made an incorrect notification, he shall, without prejudice in the latter case to the provisions of paragraph (1) or (2), convene a meeting of the advisory committee on price equivalents. If at any time in the opinion of the executive secretary an exporting country has made a notification under paragraph (1) but the facts relating thereto do not warrant a maximum price declaration, he shall not make such a declaration but shall refer the matter to the advisory committee. If the advisory committee advises either under this paragraph or in accordance with Article 31 that a declaration under paragraph (1) or (2) should be or should not be made or is incorrect, as the case may be, the executive committee acting on behalf of the council may make or refrain from making a declaration accordingly, or cancel any declaration then in effect, whichever may be appropriate. The executive secretary shall communicate any such declaration or cancellation to all exporting and importing countries as soon as possible.

(5) Any declaration made under this article shall specify the crop year or crop years to which it relates, and this agreement shall apply accordingly.

(6) If any exporting or importing country considers that a declaration under this article should be or should not have been made, as the case may be, it may refer the matter to the council. If the council finds that the representations of the country concerned are well founded, it shall make or cancel a declaration accordingly.

(7) Any declaration made under paragraphs (1), (2) or (4) of this article which is cancelled in accordance with this article shall be regarded as having full force and effect until the date of its cancellation, and such cancellation shall not affect the validity of anything done under the declaration prior to its cancellation.

ARTICLE 14

Action at or approaching the Minimum Price

(1) If any exporting or importing country is making wheat available for purchase by exporting or importing countries at not greater than the minimum price, or if such a situation appears likely to arise, the executive secretary shall, after bringing the matter to the attention of the advisory committee on price equivalents and communicating as that committee may advise with the country concerned, report the situation to the executive committee.

(2) If the executive committee, after studying the matter in the light of the advice which the advisory committee shall give under paragraph (1) of this article or under Article 31, considers that the country concerned may be failing to carry out its obligations under the agreement with respect to the minimum price, it shall so notify the country concerned and may require that such country furnish a statement respecting the matter for the committee's further consideration. If, after taking into account any explanation offered by the country concerned, the executive committee is of the view that such country is failing to perform its obligations with respect to the minimum price, it shall so inform the chairman of the council.

(3) Upon receiving such information from the executive committee, the chairman of the council shall convene a session of the council as soon as possible to consider the matter. The council may make such recommendations to exporting and importing countries as it considers necessary to meet the situation.

(4) If the advisory committee on price equivalents, in the course of its continuous review of market conditions under Article 31, is of the opinion that, by reason of a serious fall in the price of any wheat, a situation has arisen, or threatens immediately to arise, which appears likely to jeopardize the objectives of the agreement with regard to the minimum price, or if such a situation is called to the advisory committee's attention by the executive secretary on his own initiative or at the request of any exporting or importing country, it shall immediately inform the executive committee of the facts concerned. The advisory committee shall in so informing the executive committee give particular regard to circumstances which have brought about, or threaten to bring about, a serious fall in the price in any market of wheat in relation to the minimum price. The executive committee shall, if it considers appropriate, inform the chairman of the council who may convene a session of the council to consider the matter. The council may make such recommendations to exporting and importing countries as it considers necessary to meet the situation.

(5) In advising and informing the executive committee under paragraphs (2) and (4) of this article the advisory committee shall include advice of any action with regard to the determination of allowances for differences of quality which it considers might suitably be taken to meet the situation.

ARTICLE 15

Establishment of Datum Quantities

(1) Datum quantities as defined in Article 2 shall be established for each crop year on the basis of average annual commercial purchases during the first four of the immediately preceding five crop years.

(2) Before the beginning of each crop year, the council shall establish for that crop year the datum quantity of each exporting country with respect to all importing countries and the datum quantity of each importing country with respect to all exporting countries and to each such country.

(3) The datum quantities established in accordance with the preceding paragraph shall be re-established whenever a change in the membership of this agreement occurs, regard being had where appropriate to any conditions of accession prescribed by the council under Article 35.

ARTICLE 16

Recording

(1) For the purposes of the operation of this agreement, the council shall keep records for each crop year of all commercial purchases made by importing countries from all sources and of all such purchases made from exporting countries.

(2) The council shall also keep records so that at all times during a crop year a statement of the balance of commitment of each exporting country with respect to all importing countries and of the balance of entitlement of each importing country with respect to all exporting countries and to each such country is maintained. Statements of such balances shall, at intervals prescribed by the council, be circulated to all exporting and importing countries.

(3) For the purposes of paragraph (2) of this article and of paragraph (1) of Article 4, commercial purchases by an importing country from an exporting country entered in the council's records shall also be entered as against the obligations of exporting and importing countries under Articles 4 and 5, or those obligations as adjusted under other articles of this agreement, if the loading period falls within the crop year and

(a) in the case of importing countries, the purchases are at prices not less than the minimum price, and

(b) in the case of exporting countries, the purchases are at prices within the price range including, for the purposes of Article 5, the maximum price.

Commercial purchases of wheat flour entered in the council's records shall also be entered as against the obligations of exporting and importing countries under the same conditions, provided that the price of such wheat flour is consistent with a price for wheat in accordance with Article 7.

(4) If an importing country and a country making wheat available for purchase so agree, purchases at prices above the maximum price shall not be regarded as a breach of Articles 4, 5, or paragraph (2) of Article 8, and shall be entered as against the obligations, if any, of the countries concerned. No maximum price declaration shall be made in respect of such purchases from an exporting country, nor shall they in any way affect the obligations of the exporting country concerned to other importing countries under Article 4.

(5) In the case of Durum wheat and certified seed wheat, a purchase entered in the council's records shall also be entered as against the obligations of exporting and importing countries under the same conditions whether or not the price is above the maximum price.

(6) Provided that the conditions prescribed in paragraph (3) of this article are satisfied, the council may authorize purchases to be recorded for a crop year if

(a) the loading period involved is within a reasonable time up to one month, to be decided by the council, before the beginning or after the end of that crop year, and

(b) the exporting and importing country concerned so agree.

(7) For the period of closed navigation between Fort William/Port Arthur and the Canadian Atlantic ports, a purchase shall, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (4) of

Article 6, be eligible for entry in the council's records against the obligations of the exporting country and the importing country concerned in accordance with this article if it relates to

(a) Canadian wheat which is moved by an all-rail route from Fort William/Port Arthur to Canadian Atlantic ports, or

(b) United States wheat which, except for conditions beyond the control of the buyer and the seller, would be moved by lake and rail to United States Atlantic ports and which, because it cannot be so moved, is moved by an all-rail route to United States Atlantic ports, provided that payment of the extra transportation cost thereby incurred is agreed between the buyer and the seller.

(8) The council shall prescribe rules of procedure for the reporting and recording of all commercial purchases and special transactions. In those rules it shall prescribe the frequency and the manner in which those purchases and transactions shall be reported and shall prescribe the duties of exporting and importing countries with regard thereto. The council shall also make provision for the amendment of any records or statements maintained by it, including provision for the settlement of any dispute arising in connection therewith.

(9) Each exporting country and each importing country may be permitted, in the fulfilment of its obligations, a degree of tolerance to be prescribed by the council for that country on the basis of the extent of those obligations and other relevant factors.

(10) In order that as complete records as possible may be maintained and for the purposes of Article 23, the council shall also keep separate records for each crop year of all special transactions entered into by any exporting or importing country.

ARTICLE 17

Estimates of Requirements and Availability of Wheat

(1) By 1 October in the case of northern hemisphere countries and 1 February in the case of southern hemisphere countries, each importing country shall notify the council of its estimate of its commercial requirements of wheat from exporting countries in that crop year. Any importing country may thereafter notify the council of any changes it may desire to make in its estimate.

(2) By 1 October in the case of northern hemisphere countries and 1 February in the case of southern hemisphere countries, each exporting country shall notify the council of its estimate of the wheat it will have available for export in that crop year. Any exporting country may thereafter notify the council of any changes it may desire to make in its estimate.

(3) All estimates notified to the council shall be used for the purpose of the administration of the agreement and may only be made available to exporting and importing countries on such conditions as the council may prescribe. Estimates submitted in accordance with this article shall in no way be binding.

(4) Exporting and importing countries shall be free to fulfil their obligations under this agreement through private trade channels or otherwise. Nothing in this agreement shall be construed to exempt any private trader from any laws or regulations to which he is otherwise subject.

(5) The council may, at its discretion, require exporting and importing countries to co-operate together to ensure than an amount of wheat equal to not less than 10 per cent of the datum quantities of exporting countries for any crop year shall be available for purchase by importing countries under this agreement after 31 January of that crop year.

ARTICLE 18

Consultations

(1) In order to assist an exporting country in assessing the extent of its commitments if a maximum price declaration should be made and without prejudice to the rights enjoyed by any importing country, an exporting country may consult with an importing country regarding the extent to which the rights of that importing country under Articles 4 and 5 will be taken up in any crop year.

(2) Any exporting or importing country experiencing difficulty in making sales or purchases of wheat under Article 4 may refer the matter to the council. In such a case the council, with a view to the satisfactory settlement of the matter, shall consult with any exporting or importing country concerned and may make such recommendations as it considers appropriate.

(3) If an importing country should find difficulty in obtaining its balance of entitlement in a crop year at prices not greater than the maximum price while a maximum price declaration is in effect, it may refer the matter to the council. In such a case the council shall investigate the situation and shall consult with exporting countries regarding the manner in which their obligations shall be carried out.

ARTICLE 19

Performance under Articles 4 and 5

(1) The council shall as soon as practicable after the end of each crop year review the performance of exporting and importing countries in relation to their obligations under Articles 4 and 5 during that crop year.

(2) For the purposes of this review the tolerances as specified by the council under paragraph (9) of Article 16 shall apply.

(3) Upon application by an importing country in respect of the performance of its obligations in the crop year, the council may take into account the wheat equivalent of flour purchased by it from another importing country provided it can be shown to the satisfaction of the council that such flour was wholly milled from wheat purchased within the agreement from exporting countries.

(4) In considering the performance of any importing country in relation to its obligations in the crop year:

(a) the council shall disregard any exceptional importation of wheat from other than exporting countries provided that it can be shown to the satisfaction of the council that such wheat has been or will be used only as feed and that such importation was not at the expense of quantities normally purchased by that importing country from exporting countries. Any decision under this subparagraph shall be by a majority of the votes held by exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by importing countries.

(b) the council shall disregard any importation from other than exporting countries of wheat which has been denatured for use as feed in a manner acceptable to the council.

(5) In considering the performance of any importing country in relation to its obligations in the crop year the council may also disregard any purchases by the country concerned of Durum wheat from other importing countries which are traditional exporters of Durum wheat.

ARTICLE 20

Defaults under Article 4 or 5

(1) If, on the basis of the review made under Article 19, any country appears to be in default of its obligations under Article 4 or 5, the council shall decide what action should be taken.

(2) Before reaching a decision under this article, the council shall give any exporting or importing country concerned the opportunity to present any facts which it considers relevant.

(3) If the council finds by a majority of the votes held by exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by importing countries that an exporting country or an importing country is in default under Article 4 or 5, it may by a similar vote deprive the country concerned of its voting rights for such period as the council may determine, reduce the other rights of that country to the extent which it considers commensurate with the default, or expel that country from participation in the agreement.

(4) No action taken by the council under this article shall in any way reduce the obligation of the country concerned in respect of its financial contributions to the council unless that country is expelled from participation in the agreement.

ARTICLE 21

Action in Cases of Serious Prejudice

(1) Any exporting or importing country which considers that its interests as a party to this agreement have been seriously prejudiced by actions of any one or more exporting or importing countries affecting the operation of the agreement may bring the matter before the council. In such a case, the council shall immediately consult with the countries concerned in order to resolve the matter.

(2) If the matter is not resolved through such consultations, the council may refer the matter to the executive committee or the advisory committee on price equivalents for urgent investigation and report. On receipt of any such report, the council shall consider the matter further and, by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries, may make recommendations to the countries concerned.

(3) If, after action has or has not been taken, as the case may be, under paragraph (2) of this article, the country concerned is not satisfied that the matter has been satisfactorily dealt with, it may apply to the council for relief. The council may, if it deems appropriate, relieve that country of part of its obligations for the crop year in question. Two thirds of the votes held by the exporting countries and two thirds of the votes held by the importing countries shall be required for a decision granting relief.

(4) If no relief is granted by the council under paragraph (3) of this article and the country concerned still considers that its interests as a party to this agreement have suffered serious prejudice, it may withdraw from the agreement at the end of the crop year by giving written notice to the government of the United States of America. If the matter was brought before the council in one crop year and the council's consideration of the application for relief was concluded in the subsequent crop year the withdrawal of the country concerned may be effected within 30 days of such conclusion by giving similar notice.

ARTICLE 22

Disputes and Complaints

(1) Any dispute concerning the interpretation or application of this agreement other than a dispute under Articles 19 and 20 which is not settled by negotiation shall, at the request of any country party to the dispute, be referred to the council for decision.

(2) In any case where a dispute has been referred to the council under paragraph (1) of this article, a majority of countries, or any countries holding not less than one third of the total votes, may require the council, after full discussion, to seek the opinion of the advisory panel referred to in paragraph (3) on the issues in dispute before giving its decision.

(3)(a) Unless the council unanimously agrees otherwise, the panel shall consist of:

(i) Two persons, one having wide experience in matters of the kind in dispute and the other having legal standing and experience, nominated by the exporting countries;

(ii) Two such persons nominated by the importing countries; and

(iii) A chairman selected unanimously by the four persons nominated under (i) and (ii) or, if they fail to agree, by the chairman of the council.

(b) Persons from countries whose governments are parties to this agreement shall be eligible to serve on the advisory panel. Persons appointed to the advisory panel shall act in their personal capacities and without instructions from any government.

(c) The expenses of the advisory panel shall be paid by the council.

(4) The opinion of the advisory panel and the reasons therefor shall be submitted to the council which, after considering all the relevant information, shall decide the dispute.

(5) Any complaint that any exporting or importing country has failed to fulfil its obligations under this agreement shall, at the request of the country making the complaint, be referred to the council, which shall make a decision on the matter.

(6) Subject to the provisions of Article 20, no exporting or importing country shall be found to have committed a breach of this agreement except by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries. Any finding that an exporting or importing country is in breach of this agreement shall specify the nature of the breach and if the breach involves default by that country in its obligations under Article 4 or 5, the extent of such default.

(7) Subject to the provisions of Article 20, if the council finds that an exporting country or an importing country has committed a breach of this agreement it may, by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries, deprive the country concerned of its voting rights until it fulfils its obligations or expel that country from participation in the agreement.

PART V.—ANNUAL REVIEW AND CONSUMPTION AND UTILIZATION OF WHEAT

ARTICLE 23

Annual Review of World Wheat Situation

(1) (a) Guided by the objectives of this agreement as set forth in Article 1, the council shall annually review the world wheat situation and shall inform exporting and importing countries of the effects upon the international trade in wheat of any of the facts which emerge from the review, in order that these effects be kept in mind by those countries in determining and administering their internal agricultural and price policies.

(b) The review shall be carried out in the light of information obtainable in relation to national production, stocks, prices, trade, including disposals of excess wheat supplies and special transactions, consumption and any other facts which may appear relevant. To facilitate this review the council may supplement such information by studies conducted in co-operation with any exporting or importing country.

(c) To assist it in its review of disposals of excess wheat supplies, exporting and importing countries shall inform the council of the measures taken by them to secure compliance with the principles that the solution to the problems involved in such disposals should be sought, wherever possible, through efforts to increase consumption, and that such disposals should take place in an orderly manner, and that where excess wheat supplies are made available on special terms, such arrangements should be made without harmful interference with normal patterns of production and international commercial trade.

(d) Any exporting or importing country may for the purpose of the annual review submit to the council any information which it considers relevant to the attainment of the objectives of this agreement. Information so submitted shall be taken into account as appropriate by the council in carrying out the annual review.

(2) For the purposes of this article and those of Article 24, the council shall pay due regard to work done by the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations, in order in particular to avoid duplication of work, and may, without prejudice to the generality of paragraph (1) of Article 34, make such arrangements regarding co-operation in any of its activities as it considers desirable with such intergovernmental organizations and also with any governments of members of the United Nations or the specialized agencies not parties to this agreement which have a substantial interest in the international trade in wheat.

(3) Nothing in this article shall prejudice the complete liberty of action of any exporting or importing country in the determination and administration of its internal agricultural and price policies.

ARTICLE 24

Consumption and Utilization of Wheat

(1) As appropriate, the council shall consider and inform exporting and importing countries of means through which the consumption of wheat may be increased. To this end the council may undertake, in co-operation with exporting and importing countries, studies of such matters as:

(a) factors affecting the consumption of wheat in various countries; and

(b) means of achieving increased consumption, particularly in countries where the possibility of increased consumption is found to exist.

Any exporting or importing country may submit to the council information which it considers relevant to the attainment of this purpose.

(2) Exporting and importing countries, recognizing the special problems of developing countries, shall pay due regard to the principle that excess wheat supplies should, where possible, be effectively utilized in raising levels of consumption and in assisting in general economic and market development in developing countries with low levels of individual income. Where such wheat is made available on special terms, the exporting and importing countries concerned undertake that such arrangements will be made without harmful interference with normal patterns of production and international commercial trade.

(3) Any exporting or importing country which makes excess wheat supplies available on special terms under a government assisted program undertakes to provide the council promptly with detailed information relating to such agreements entered into and to report regularly shipments made under such agreements.

PART VI.—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION

ARTICLE 25

Constitution of the Council

(1) The international wheat council, established by the international wheat agreement 1949, shall continue in being for the purpose of administering this agreement, with the membership, powers and functions provided in this agreement.

(2) Each exporting country and each importing country shall be a voting member of the council and may be represented at its meetings by one delegate, alternates, and advisers.

(3) Such intergovernmental organizations as the council may decide to invite to any of its meetings may each have one non-voting representative in attendance at those meetings.

(4) The council shall elect a chairman and a vice-chairman who shall hold office for one crop year. The chairman shall have no vote and the vice chairman shall have no vote while acting as chairman.

(5) The council shall have in the territory of each exporting and importing country, to the extent consistent with its laws, such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions under this agreement.

ARTICLE 26

Powers and Functions of the Council

(1) The council shall establish its rules of procedure.

(2) The council shall keep such records as are required by the terms of this agreement and may keep such other records as it considers desirable.

(3) The council shall publish an annual report and may also publish any other information (including, in particular, its annual review or any part or summary thereof) concerning matters within the scope of this agreement.

(4) In addition to the powers and functions specified in this agreement, the council shall have such other powers and perform such other functions as are necessary to carry out the terms of this agreement.

(5) The council may, by two thirds of the votes cast by the exporting countries and two thirds of the votes cast by the importing countries, delegate the exercise of any of its powers or functions. The council may at any time revoke such delegation by a majority of the votes cast. Subject to the provisions of Article 13, any decision made under any powers or functions delegated by the council in accordance with this paragraph shall be subject to review by the council at the request of any exporting or importing country made within a period which the council shall prescribe. Any decision, in respect of which no request for review has been made within the prescribed period, shall be binding on all exporting and importing countries.

(6) In order to enable the council to discharge its functions under this agreement, the exporting and importing countries undertake to make available and supply such statistics and information as are necessary for this purpose.

ARTICLE 27

Votes

(1) The votes to be exercised by the respective delegations of exporting countries on the council shall be those specified in annex B.

(2) The votes to be exercised by the respective delegations of importing countries on the council shall be those specified in annex C.

(3) Any exporting country may authorize any other exporting country, and any importing country may authorize any other importing country, to represent its interests and to exercise its votes at any meeting or meetings of the council. Satisfactory evidence of such authorization shall be submitted to the council.

(4) If at any meeting of the council an importing country or an exporting country is not represented by an accredited delegate and has not authorized another country to exercise its votes in accordance with paragraph (3) of this article, and if at the date of any meeting any country has forfeited, has been deprived of, or has recovered its votes under any provisions of this agreement, the total votes to be exercised by the exporting countries shall be adjusted to a figure equal to the total of votes to be exercised at that meeting by the importing countries and redistributed among exporting countries in proportion to their votes.

(5) Whenever any country becomes or ceases to be a party to this agreement, the council shall redistribute the votes within either annex B or annex C as the case may be, proportionally to the number of votes held by each country listed in that annex.

(6) No exporting or importing country shall have less than one vote and there shall be no fractional votes.

ARTICLE 28

Seat, Sessions and Quorum

(1) The seat of the council shall be London unless the council decides otherwise by a majority of the votes cast by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes cast by the importing countries.

(2) The council shall meet at least once during each half of each crop year and at such other times as the chairman may decide.

(3) The chairman shall convene a session of the council if so requested by (a) five countries or (b) one or more countries holding a total of not less than 10 per cent of the total votes or (c) the executive committee.

(4) The presence of delegates with a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries prior to any adjustment of votes under Article 27 shall be necessary to constitute a quorum at any meeting of the council.

ARTICLE 29

Decisions

(1) Except where otherwise specified in this agreement, decisions of the council shall be by a majority of the total votes cast.

(2) Each exporting and importing country undertakes to accept as binding all decisions of the council under the provisions of this agreement.

ARTICLE 30

Executive Committee

(1) The council shall establish an executive committee. The members of the executive committee shall be not more than four exporting countries elected annually by the exporting countries and not more than eight importing countries elected annually by the importing countries. The council shall appoint the chairman of the executive committee and may appoint a vice chairman.

(2) The executive committee shall be responsible to and work under the general direction of the council. It shall have such powers and functions as are expressly assigned to it under this agreement and such other powers and functions as the council may delegate to it under paragraph (5) of Article 26.

(3) The exporting countries on the executive committee shall have the same total number of votes as the importing countries. The votes of the exporting countries on the executive committee shall be divided among them as they shall decide, provided that no such exporting country shall have more than 40 per cent of the total votes of those exporting countries. The votes of the importing countries on the executive committee shall be divided among them as they shall decide, provided that no such importing country shall have more than 40 per cent of the total votes of those importing countries.

(4) The council shall prescribe rules of procedure regarding voting in the executive committee and may make such other provision regarding rules of procedure in the executive committee as it thinks fit. A decision of the executive committee shall require the same majority of votes as this agreement prescribes for the council when making a decision on a similar matter.

(5) Any exporting or importing country which is not a member of the executive committee may participate, without voting, in the discussion of any question before the executive committee whenever the latter considers that the interests of that country are affected.

ARTICLE 31

Advisory Committee on Price Equivalents

(1) The council shall establish an advisory committee on price equivalents consisting of representatives of not more than four exporting countries and of not more than four importing countries. The chairman of the advisory committee shall be appointed by the council.

(2) The advisory committee shall keep under continuous review current market conditions, including in particular the movement of prices for wheat and shall immediately inform the executive committee whenever in its opinion a maximum price declaration should be made under Article 13 or a situation of the type described in paragraph (1) or (4) of Article 14 has arisen or appears likely to arise. The advisory committee shall, in the exercise of its functions under this paragraph take into account any representations made by any exporting or importing country.

(3) The advisory committee shall advise in accordance with the relevant articles of this agreement and on such other matters as the council or the executive committee may refer to it.

ARTICLE 32

The Secretariat

(1) The council shall have a secretariat consisting of an executive secretary, who shall be its chief administrative officer, and such staff as may be required for the work of the council and its committees.

(2) The council shall appoint the executive secretary who shall be responsible for the performance of the duties devolving upon the secretariat in the administration of this agreement and for the performance of such other duties as are assigned to him by the council and its committees.

(3) The staff shall be appointed by the executive secretary in accordance with regulations established by the council.

(4) It shall be a condition of employment of the executive secretary and of the staff that they do not hold or shall cease to hold financial interest in the trade in wheat and that they shall not seek or receive instructions regarding their duties under this agreement from any government or from any other authority external to the council.

ARTICLE 33

Finance

(1) The expenses of delegations to the council, of representatives on the executive committee, and of representatives on the advisory committee on price equivalents shall be met by their respective governments. The other expenses necessary for the administration of this agreement shall be met by annual contributions from the exporting and importing countries. The contribution of each such country for each crop year shall be in the proportion which the number of its votes bears to the total of the votes of the exporting and importing countries at the beginning of that crop year.

(2) At its first session after this agreement comes into force, the council shall approve its budget for the period ending 31 July 1963 and assess the contribution to be paid by each exporting and importing country.

(3) The council shall, at a session during the second half of each crop year, approve its budget for the following crop year and assess the contribution to be paid by each exporting and importing country for that crop year.

(4) The initial contribution of any exporting or importing country acceding to this agreement under paragraph (4) of Article 35 shall be assessed by the council on the basis of the votes to be distributed to it and the period remaining in the current crop year, but the assessments made upon other exporting and importing countries for the current crop year shall not be altered.

(5) Contributions shall be payable immediately upon assessment. Any exporting or importing country failing to pay its contribution within one year of its assessment shall forfeit its voting rights until its contribution is paid, but shall not be relieved of its obligations under this agreement, nor shall it be deprived of any of its rights under this agreement unless the council so decides by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries.

(6) The council shall, each crop year, publish an audited statment of its receipts and expenditures in the previous crop year.

(7) The government of the country where the seat of the council is situated shall grant exemption from taxation on the salaries paid by the council to its employees except that such exemption need not apply to the nationals of that country. It shall also grant exemption from taxation on the assets, income and other property of the council.

(8) The council shall, prior to its dissolution, provide for the settlement of its liabilities and the disposal of its records and assets.

ARTICLE 34

Co-operation with other Intergovernmental Organizations

(1) The council may make whatever arrangements are desirable for consultation and co-operation with the appropriate organs of the United Nations and its specialized agencies and with other intergovernmental organizations.

(2) If the council finds that any terms of this agreement are materially inconsistent with such requirements as may be laid down by the United Nations or through its appropriate organs and specialized agencies regarding intergovernmental commodity agreements, the inconsistency shall be deemed to be a circumstance affecting adversely the operation of this agreement and the procedure prescribed in paragraphs (3), (4) and (5) of Article 36 shall be applied.

PART VII.—FINAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 35

Signature, Acceptance, Accession and Entry into Force

(1) This agreement shall remain open for signature in Washington from 19 April 1962 until and including 15 May 1962 by the governments of the countries listed in annexes B and C.

(2) This agreement shall be subject to acceptance by the signatory governments in accordance with their respective constitutional procedures. Subject to the provisions of paragraph (8) of this article, instruments of acceptance shall be deposited with the government of the United States of America not later than 16 July 1962.

(3) This agreement shall be open for accession by any government of a country listed in annexes B or C. Subject to the provisions of paragraph (8) of this article, instruments of accession shall be deposited with the government of the United States of America not later than 16 July 1962. However, any such government may, if it is not granted an extension of time under paragraph (8), and in any event after 16 July 1963, accede to this agreement in accordance with paragraph (4).

(4) The council may, by two thirds of the votes cast by exporting countries and by two thirds of the votes cast by importing countries, approve accession to this agreement by the government of any member of the United Nations or the specialized agencies or by any government invited to the United Nations wheat conference, 1962, and prescribe conditions for such accession, and in such a case the council shall establish the relevant datum quantities in accordance with Articles 12 and 15. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the government of the United States of America.

(5) Part I and parts III to VII of this agreement shall enter into force on 16 July 1962 in part II on 1 August 1962 between those governments which have by that date deposited instruments of acceptance or accession under paragraph (2) or (3) of this article, provided that such governments hold not less than two thirds of the votes of exporting countries and not less than two thirds of the votes of importing countries, in accordance with the distribution established in annexes B and C. It shall enter into force for any government which subsequently deposits an instrument of acceptance or accession on the date of such deposit.

(6) For the purposes of the entry into force of this agreement in accordance with paragraph (5) of this article, a notification by any signatory government or by any government entitled to accede to this agreement under paragraph (3) containing an undertaking to seek acceptance or accession to this agreement in accordance with constitutional procedures as rapidly as possible which is received by the government of the United States of America not later than 16 July 1962, shall be regarded as equal in effect to an instrument of acceptance or accession. It is understood that a government which gives such a notification will provisionally apply the agreement and be provisionally regarded as a party thereto until either it deposits its instrument of acceptance or accession in accordance with paragraph (2) or (3) or until the expiry of the period within which such instrument should have been deposited.

(7) If by 16 July 1962 the conditions laid down in the preceding paragraphs for the entry into force of this agreement are not fulfilled, the governments of those countries which by that date have accepted or acceded to this agreement in accordance with paragraph (2) or (3) of this article may decide by mutual consent that it shall enter into force among them, or they may take whatever other action they consider the situation requires.

(8) Any government which has not accepted or acceded to this agreement by 16 July 1962 in accordance with paragraph (2) or (3) of this article may be granted by the council an extension of time for depositing its instrument of acceptance or accession for any period until and including 16 July 1963.

(9) Where, for the purposes of the operation of this agreement, reference is made to countries listed in annexes B or C, any country the government of which has acceded to this agreement on conditions prescribed by the council in accordance with paragraph (4) of this article, shall be deemed to be listed in the appropriate annex.

(10) The government of the United States of America will notify all signatory and acceding governments of each signature, acceptance of an accession to this agreement and of all notifications made in accordance with paragraph (6) of this article.

ARTICLE 36

Duration, Amendment, and Withdrawal

(1) This agreement shall remain in force until and including 31 July 1965.

(2) The council shall, at such time as it considers appropriate, communicate to the exporting and importing countries its recommendations regarding renewal or replacement of this agreement. The council may invite any government of a member of the United Nations or the specialized agencies not party to this agreement which has a substantial interest in the international trade in wheat to participate in any of its discussions under this paragraph.

(3) The council may, by a majority of the votes held by the exporting countries and a majority of the votes held by the importing countries, recommend an amendment of this agreement to the exporting and importing countries.

(4) The council may fix a time within which each exporting and importing country shall notify the government of the United States of America whether or not it accepts the amendment. The amendment shall become effective upon its acceptance by exporting countries which hold two thirds of the votes of the exporting countries and by importing countries which hold two thirds of the votes of the importing countries.

(5) Any exporting or importing country which has not notified the government of the United States of America of its acceptance of an amendment by the date on which such amendment becomes effective may, after giving such written notice of withdrawal to the government of the United States of America as the council may require in each case, withdraw from this agreement at the end of the current crop year, but shall not thereby be released from any obligations under this agreement which have not been discharged by the end of that crop year. Any such withdrawing country shall not be bound by the provisions of the amendment occasioning its withdrawal.

(6) Any exporting country which considers its interests to be seriously prejudiced by the non-participation in this agreement of any country listed in annex C holding not less than 5 per cent of the votes distributed in that annex, or any importing country which considers its interests to be seriously prejudiced by the non-participation in the agreement of any country listed in annex B holding not less than 5 per cent of the votes distributed in that annex, may withdraw from this agreement by giving written notice of withdrawal to the government of the United States of America before 1 August 1962. If an extension of time has been granted by the council under paragraph (8) of Article 35, notice of withdrawal in accordance with this paragraph may be given before the expiry of 14 days after the extension granted.

(7) Any exporting or importing country which considers its national security to be endangered by the outbreak of hostilities may withdraw from this agreement by giving 30 days' written notice of withdrawal to the government of the United States of America or may apply in the first instance to the council for the suspension of any or all of its obligations under this agreement.

(8) Any exporting country which considers its interests to be seriously prejudiced by the withdrawal from this agreement of any country listed in annex C holding not less than 5 per cent of the votes distributed in that annex or any importing country which considers its interests to be seriously prejudiced by the withdrawal from the agreement of any country listed in annex B holding not less than 5 per cent of the votes distributed in that annex may withdraw from this agreement by giving written notice of withdrawal to the government of the United States of America before the expiry of 14 days from the withdrawal of the country which is considered to cause such serious prejudice.

(9) The government of the United States of America will inform all signatory and acceding governments of each notification and notice received under this article.

ARTICLE 37

Territorial Application

(1) Any government may, at the time of signature or acceptance of or accession to this agreement, declare that its rights and obligations under this agreement shall not apply in respect of all or any of the non-metropolitan territories for the international relations of which it is responsible.

(2) With the exception of territories in respect of which a declaration has been made in accordance with paragraph (1) of this article, the rights and obligations of any government under this agreement shall apply in respect of all non-metropolitan territories for the international relations of which that government is responsible.

(3) Any government may, at any time after its acceptance of or accession to this agreement, by notification to the government of the United States of America, declare that its rights and obligations under the agreement shall apply in respect of all or any of the non-metropolitan territories regarding which it has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph (1) of this article.

(4) Any government may, by giving notification of withdrawal to the government of the United States of America, withdraw from this agreement separately in respect of all or any of the non-metropolitan territories for whose international relations it is responsible.

(5) For the purposes of the establishment of datum quantities under Article 15 and the redistribution of votes under Article 27, any change in the application of this agreement in accordance with this article shall be regarded as a change in participation in this agreement in such manner as may be appropriate to the circumstances.

(6) The government of the United States of America will inform all signatory and acceding governments of any declaration or notification made under this article.

In witness whereof the undersigned, having been duly authorized to this effect by their respective governments, have signed this agreement on the dates appearing opposite their signature.

The texts of this agreement in the English, French, Russian and Spanish languages shall all be equally authentic. The originals shall be deposited in the archives of the government of the United States of America, which shall transmit certified copies thereof to each signatory and acceding government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 12, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Fifth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Cathers.

STANDING ORDERS—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber) presented the second report of the standing committee on standing orders, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEDURE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the first report of the special committee appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of this house, presented Tuesday, April 10, 1962, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

ENGINEERS' PLANS, ETC.—TABLING OF TARIFF BOARD REPORT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I wish to table a report which I have received from the tariff board. This is the board's report on reference No. 128 relating to engineers' and architects' plans, drawings and blueprints. I am tabling copies of the report in English and French, and also a transcript of the evidence taken at the public hearings.

This report contains recommendations relating both to rates of duty and to the method of determining the value for duty of plans, drawings, and blueprints. The report is being carefully studied.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF WELFARE GRANTS FOR RESEARCH, ETC.—ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL WELFARE COUNCIL

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have an announcement to make which I believe represents a new breakthrough in Canada's welfare system.

I have today written provincial ministers informing them of the government's intention to initiate a new program of welfare grants designed to assist in overcoming major deficiencies in our present nation-wide network of welfare services. By 1967 these grants will result in the channelling of $2,500,000 annually in federal funds into the fields of general welfare, professional training, and research. Nothing like this has ever been done in Canada before, and I hope there will be discussions with provincial authorities in the near future with a view to obtaining their full co-operation in an endeavour which I believe will strengthen tremendously Canada's welfare efforts.

There are two separate grants involved. The one pertaining to general welfare and professional training will commence at a level of $450,000 for 1962-63 and increase at the rate of $450,000 annually for five years, reaching $2,250,000 by 1966-67. The other grant respecting welfare research will begin at a level of $50,000 in 1962-63 and increase at the rate of $50,000 annually for five years, reaching an amount of $250,000 in 1966-67. Funds for the current fiscal year will be provided through a supplementary estimate.

This new program will be complemented by the establishment of a national council of welfare, as announced in the speech from the throne. I hope to make a statement very shortly indicating the membership of the council, one of whose first tasks will be to assist in working out the details of the new grants system. As I have indicated previously, I would also like the council to consider a number of other important social security matters such as the development of a new and integrated approach to public assistance, and the need for an increase in the level of benefits under family allowances along with the question of raising the age limit at which such allowances are paid in the case of children who are still attending school.

In taking these historic initiatives in relation to welfare, the government is anxious to furnish a balance to the emphasis which has long been placed on the provision of cash benefits. Income maintenance payments such as old age assistance, blindness and disability allowances, and unemployment assistance are vitally important, but in many instances their effectiveness has been reduced to some extent by the shortage of human resources necessary to implement them fully. The welfare grants and the new council will, we believe, go a long way toward giving a more positive impact to these measures.

As far as the welfare research grant is concerned, we have seen the benefits which have accrued from scientific research in many fields, including health. We feel that similar gains may well be registered as a result of concentrated and organized study of human problems such as long term dependency and juvenile delinquency. A good deal of work is, of course, already being done in such areas and it is our hope that federal assistance will provide the necessary added impetus to these efforts.

The welfare research grant will be made available on a non-matching basis, while the general welfare and professional training grant will be on a matching basis with the provinces except for two of its aspects, scholarships and fellowships, including travel costs, and teaching and field instruction grants. Neither grant will be allocated among the provinces but both will be held in a central pool similar to the method followed for public health research under the national health grants program.

Projects relating to the field of corrections of concern to the Department of Justice will also be covered by this program through cooperation between our two departments.

Mr. Speaker, the government has received many representations calling for the kind of program we are now initiating. As the Prime Minister told the annual meeting of the Canadian Welfare Council in May, 1961, we have also had a frank exchange of views with representatives of welfare organizations about what should be done. As a result, the government is particularly aware of the many serious problems being encountered in the welfare field and has come to the conclusion that a national system of welfare grants affords the best approach to their solution.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister of National Health and Welfare will accept in the spirit in which I say it, that we are all very happy to see this eruption to life on the part of the minister. The program he has announced, of course, must be examined in the light of the recommendations made to the government not in 1960, as the minister implied, but late in 1958, when the Canadian Welfare Council recommended the establishment of a program embodying some of the features which the minister announced today.

The grants to which the minister referred are positive matters to pursue, but as the minister so well knows they do not represent a new effort on the part of the government of Canada. It would be regrettable, however, if the minister were to use the appointment of the new council, the personnel of which has not yet been named, as a device to delay extending family allowance payments to school children up to age 18, as we in the Liberal party have proposed. That need not wait. Likewise we would hope that the establishment of this program would not in any way serve as a device to stand in the way of establishing for Canadians a national minimum pension of $75 a month on a contributory basis, as proposed by the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is the party that said $46 a month was enough.

Mr. Hees: Remember the six bucks?

Mr. Pickersgill: Are we hearing from two buck Fleming?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure whether or not the house has reconciled itself to hearing the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, members of this group always welcome any improvement in our social welfare program, however microscopic. We hope these decisions have not been timed to correspond with the urgent necessities of coming events.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Elections are the only things that move this government, in any event.

GRAIN

ANNOUNCEMENT OF OPEN QUOTA FOR ALL DELIVERY POINTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in a decade all grain delivery points in western Canada have been placed on open quota. This marks the end of the longest period of elevator congestion in the history of Canada's grain trade. For ten years in succession restrictions on deliveries have had to be applied, so that grain producers who started farming since 1952 have never known a time of unrestricted deliveries.

The 1961 grain crop was a short one but of high quality and relatively few grades. This took the pressure off storage requirements. Coupled with this was the increased world demand for Canadian wheat that emptied elevator bins at an almost unprecedented rate.

Mr. Speaker, the end came today, when all delivery points were put on open quota by the wheat board.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the country will welcome the fact that we are about to have a general election, as that is the only way by which we can get this government to do the things which have been urged for some time. What the Minister of Agriculture has announced was urged in this house two years ago—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —not only by members of the Liberal party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to attempt to obtain the hearing which his remarks deserve.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure you would agree, Mr. Speaker, that they deserve serious attention. As I said, it is a good thing we are having an election as this is the only way in which we have been able to get this government to do anything positive for those sections of the people who have been asking for attention. Notwithstanding what hon. gentlemen may say now by way of intervention, what the minister has announced today was urged by members of the Liberal party during the past two years—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —on behalf of certain sections of agriculture. We are glad that at long last coming events have joined with what we have urged in order to bring the government to some decision.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Brunsden: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is introducing his supplement too soon. I recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): The New Democratic party also welcomes the announcement of the minister. In fairness to the farmers themselves I think it should be pointed out that the removal of quotas is desired as a long term program. However, it should be remembered that part of the reason this has been accomplished has been the sales ability of the wheat board, and part the drought condition last year. However, we welcome this announcement also and hope that the farmers who have some grain on hand are able to dispose of it now.

An hon. Member: Sour grapes.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of his very welcome announcement of open grain quotas across the prairies, and with particular reference to the remarks on his statement made by the deputy farm leader of the opposition. Is it not true that there was an election in 1957, at which time the grain elevators across Canada were plugged with wheat?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the facts which the hon. member is seeking to elicit are known to all hon. members in the house.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTING—REPRESENTATIONS BY MEMBERS OF GENEVA DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of reports to the effect that certain members of the Geneva disarmament conference have made representations to the governments of the United States and the Soviet union to the effect that there should be no resumption of tests while that conference is sitting. May I ask whether the Canadian government has associated itself with those representations?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our representatives have had discussions both in Washington and in London about the whole situation at the Geneva conference, including the question of a possible nuclear test ban. These discussions have taken place within the last few days and are quite apart from any representations made by the eight unaligned countries.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it a fact that Canada is not included in those representations from the eight unaligned countries?

Mr. Green: I have not seen the report with regard to the representations by the eight. I am doubtful whether that report is accurate. Canada made her own representations.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF MEMBERS OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. My question is based on a telegram addressed to me which I received this morning. "Mundy—"

Mr. Speaker: Order. I question whether the hon. member is entitled to read a telegram addressed to himself as the basis of a question. It is rather unprecedented. Perhaps he would indicate what his question is.

Mr. Herridge: I want to ask a question based on a telegram I received this morning from Creston in which certain members of a militia unit who were accused of political activity deny such activity, as does the chaplain. The telegram also urges the Minister of National Defence—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Herridge: —to make his statements outside the house. Will he kindly oblige?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the statement I made yesterday was in effect a report for which the hon. member had asked with regard to the circumstances of the allegations he had made, and which were proved to be incorrect as far as the unit at Creston is concerned. I have no objection, of course, to giving this report outside the house or anywhere else.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question. The minister claimed that the chaplain and his associates carried on political activities during hours when the men were on duty. Will he make that statement outside the house?

Mr. Harkness: I made a statement in the house yesterday which the hon. member can read. I stand by that statement.

Mr. Fisher: Make it outside the house.

Mr. Harkness: I have confidence in the information I was given.

Mr. Herridge: Make it outside the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address another question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the minister's statement yesterday that service regulations forbidding active participation in the affairs of any political organization apply to members of the reserve forces only in regard to political activities on service establishments or when engaged in strictly military duties, has the minister instructed Lieutenant Colonel Reynolds, commanding officer of the 8th field regiment, R.C.E. to rescind his order to Sergeant McSeveney and Corporal Nichol to resign from the Creston New Democratic party club?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday the situation was as reported. I have no information that, as alleged by the hon. member on April 9, the chaplain of the regiment and the two N.C.O.'s were asked to resign their membership in the New Democratic party. The allegation made by the hon. gentleman is completely incorrect. The chaplain was asked only to refrain from engaging in political activities in the armouries and among personnel when in uniform. The two N.C.O.'s were asked to stop their political activities while they were on call out serving full time with the Canadian army.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question. As the minister is incompletely and inaccurately informed would he further investigate this matter?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think the situation is that the hon. member has been unmasked in attempting to make political capital out of an incident which occurred and he does not have sufficient good judgment now to keep quiet.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think both hon. members would do well not to lecture each other.

Mr. Herridge: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question of privilege I shall hear him.

Mr. Herridge: The minister has no right to say that I am making political capital out of this incident. I wish to see justice done to Canadian citizens and their rights preserved. No one in the militia should be given an order like that by a colonel of another political persuasion.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

EAST BLOCK—USE OF BILINGUAL SIGNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. V. F. Dubois (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question.

Is the minister aware that the vast majority of posters, inscriptions, etc. in the east block are printed in one language only?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe that on March 22 last, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) addressed a letter to me pointing out that anomaly.

Following that letter, I gave necessary instructions to have all inscriptions replaced by bilingual ones.

(Text):

[Later:]

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I should like to inquire whether provision is being made in the renovation of the west block or elsewhere for the use of a lounge by hon. members' secretaries, as we are making streetwalkers of these—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hicks: —pardon me; I did not mean it that way.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member communicate with the Speaker.

Mr. Hicks: I apologize for that expression, Mr. Speaker. I meant of course that they have to walk in the streets instead of having a place to rest during the noon hour.

Mr. Walker: While this matter is being inquired into, perhaps they could use the room of the hon. member.

COAL

MARITIME PROVINCES—FURTHER UTILIZATION BY LOCAL INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, April 10 the hon. member for Gloucester asked me if I had received a brief from Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia and Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick with regard to further utilization of maritime coal. Such a brief has been received and the representations are under study.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): A supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister advise the house on what date the brief was received, and whether it has been brought to the attention of the ministers or departments concerned?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, briefs are always brought to the attention of the ministers concerned.

[Later:]

Mr. Robichaud: I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister advise the house whether he will agree to table the brief presented to him on March 7 by Premier Stanfield and Premier Robichaud on outlets for maritime coal? My reason for asking the question is that it appears now that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and the officials of the dominion coal board have not been made aware of that brief.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently the hon. gentleman is not looking for information; he is giving information. As to the words in the earlier part of his alleged question, I shall give consideration to them.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN DISPUTE RESPECTING PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What steps does the minister intend to take, following the statement made by the shipowners to the effect that they will operate their ships without the help of the pilots who are now holding meetings?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, about that work stoppage of the St. Lawrence pilots, as I said yesterday, I met them and they have submitted new requests, much more moderate than their previous ones, which are now being discussed with the representatives of the Shipping Federation.

I intend to convene both groups again about those requests today, and I am confident that they will come to an agreement before very long, in the interest of both groups and of the public at large.

As for the question asked by my hon. friend, I have nothing to add to what I said the other day, that is that the minister and the Department of Transport are responsible for shipping operations on the St. Lawrence and, according to the requirements of the act, have to provide the necessary aids to navigation on the St. Lawrence. We intend to abide by the provisions of the act.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Has the minister informed the shipowners that their action, in the case of the question that has been asked, would be illegal, as he indicated to the pilots that their strike was illegal?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the Shipping Act provides that any ship going up the St. Lawrence has to pay a pilot's fee, whether there is a pilot or not operating her.

As far as our department is concerned, all it can require of a ship plying the St. Lawrence is that she pays the pilot's fee.

If the ship in question is plying up or down the St. Lawrence without a pilot, well, it is a decision for the ship to take; our department cannot take that decision.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister aware of section 375B of the Merchant Marine Act, which says that shipowners must have a pilot from St. Regis up?

An hon. Member: St. Regis—

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether, in his view of the fact that the parties to the dispute between the pilots and the shipping federation have not been successful in getting together, and in view of the further fact that there is a grave danger to navigation if ships are moved without pilots, he will lend his good offices and those of his departmental officers in order to bring these parties together.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the great many questions that the hon. member for Laurier has directed to the Minister of Transport and myself with respect to this dispute. I am sure the hon. member is just as anxious as we are, or should be, that this dispute be settled. I am also sure he is aware of the fact that the Minister of Transport is devoting a great deal of time and energy to bringing about a settlement between these two parties. Consequently I think all this barrage of questions is not doing this dispute any good at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have no intention of being lectured on what my responsibilities are by the Minister of Labour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Don't be so touchy.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: The fact is that the Minister of Labour, who refused yesterday to reply to a question as to whether this was a legal or an illegal strike, notwithstanding the fact that his colleague had said it was an illegal strike, should be—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Orders of the day.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I was on a question of privilege, and I submit to you—

Mr. Speaker: I heard the hon. member's question of privilege. It seems to me that it is a point of order. I agree that the hon. member should not be lectured on the questions that he asks; it is his perfect right to ask questions. As the hon. member has raised the point, I consider the matter disposed of.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I had not completed what I intended to say.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member did not complete what he intended to say because he departed into some irregular utterances himself, which prompted me to intervene.

Mr. Chevrier: But the minister was going on to lecture a member of the opposition on a matter concerning which he says he has absolutely nothing to do, and I am trying to say to the minister now—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There will be opportunity for debate if we can get to the orders of the day. The hon. member for St. Mary.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I raise a question—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I just recognized the hon. member for St. Mary. I will hear the hon. member as soon as I have heard him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rose on a question of privilege affecting the rights of the opposition in this house.

Mr. Harkness: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is entitled to rise on a question of privilege when he gets the floor, if it arises out of something that has been said by the hon.—

Mr. Pickersgill: It does arise out of the incident which just ended.

Mr. Speaker: —member who has the floor, or if the hon. member for St. Mary defers.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I do not have much chance to ask a question, with the four members of the Liberal party. I have a question to ask the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will hear the hon. member for St. Mary. I did recognize him before the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate rose, and therefore I think he has the floor.

Mr. Valade: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving a lesson on procedure to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I have a question to ask the Minister of Transport.

[Later:]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the rights of the opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —arising out of the exchange between the Minister of Labour and my hon. friend from Laurier. My point is this, that we on this side of the house listened politely and without interruption—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —politely and without interruption to the lecture delivered by the Minister of Labour, which was totally out of order and a gratuitous reflection upon the conduct of a senior member of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: When that senior member of the opposition rose on a question of privilege he was interrupted, just as I am being interrupted now, by the catcalls of the majority in this house. I submit to Your Honour that the opposition is being put in an intolerable position—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —by this constant barrage that takes place when any hon. member on this side gets up to reply to these gratuitous observations made by ministers of the crown which are listened to in silence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, just so the record will be clear I simply say that what the hon. gentleman has said is not in accordance with the facts, and apparently—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who is interrupting now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Ricard: Pious Paul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —what the Prime Minister has said—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —is not in order, and I would ask him—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You continue to defy the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member's point of order arises out of what the Prime Minister said, perhaps he is justified in interrupting.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, that is obviously what I was doing. What the Prime Minister was about to do was clearly out of order. I am asking Your Honour, with great respect, to remind the Prime Minister that he has no right to speak on the matter or discuss it, as he is now doing. He is clearly out of order and he should be so told.

Mr. Speaker: I thought the Prime Minister was commenting on the matter which was raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I considered that the statement made by the hon. member, having put the issue, was open to comment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I say to the hon. member for Essex East, in words which Mr. Churchill once used, that he is generating such an amount of explosive material internally that I worry about his condition.

He mentioned a moment ago an eruption to life. The statements made, allegedly on a question of privilege, by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate are not in accordance with the facts. This is simply placing on record by way of exculpation in advance a state of affairs which is not correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would permit me to say this. He may feel there is something to be corrected, but statements have been made about the attention given by one side of the house to the other. Hon. members know what the situation is, and there is no need to debate it. I consider we would make better progress by proceeding with the order of business rather than by pursuing the matter. It is quite improper, of course, for either side of the house to barrack —I think that word was used—or interrupt vociferously in a manner which makes it difficult, if not impossible at times, for the member who has the floor to speak. But I certainly should not want to single out as a matter of privilege the conduct of any individual in the circumstances which exist at this time when it seems to me there is more than the usual exuberance in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a further question of privilege arising out of what the Prime Minister has said. The Prime Minister has said that I made a statement which is not in accordance with the facts. That amounts to saying I knowingly made a statement which is untrue, which is contrary to the rules of the house. I am not going to ask the Prime Minister to withdraw. The facts are well known; they have been observed by everyone here this afternoon, and they can be judged by the record.

An hon. Member: They will be.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members interpret statements in their own way sometimes. In any event, I trust that the house is satisfied to proceed.

PIPE LINES

NORTHERN ONTARIO CORPORATION—EFFECT OF MUNICIPAL TAXATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): On Tuesday the hon. member for Port Arthur asked me a question regarding the effect of the Ontario legislation in respect to municipal taxation of pipe lines on the revenues of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. I have been advised by the president of the corporation that it is a provision of the agreement between this corporation and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, covering the lease of the northern Ontario section, that Trans-Canada will pay all taxes, rates, duties and assessments of every kind. Accordingly the legislation referred to by the hon. member has no effect on the revenues of the corporation.

BRIDGES

JACQUES CARTIER AND VICTORIA BRIDGES, MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO TOLL CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question.

Is the minister now in a position to acquaint the house with the results of yesterday's meeting between federal and provincial authorities in connection with the removal of tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the discussions that took place here in Ottawa between representatives of the three administrations concerned were at the level of the officials of those various governments. Each representative must report to his own government, and after those reports have been received the governments will get in touch. In brief, that means that as soon as we have received those reports, we shall inform the house.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Is the minister in a position to tell if, prior to March 31, 1958, representations had been made to the Department of Transport in order to abolish the tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the toll issue on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges is another one of those questions left unsolved by our predecessors during the 22 years they were in office. This is, I believe, what my hon. friend wanted to know.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

ROLPHTON, ONT.—OPERATION OF NEW PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. Robinson (Bruce): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs through whose department Atomic Energy of Canada is handled. Has the nuclear power plant at Rolphton gone into operation?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The nuclear power plant at Rolphton, Ontario, became critical as the scientific term expresses it, at 2.40 a.m. yesterday, and considerable attention has been paid to this important event by the press of the country. The power station will not be fully effective, that is it will not be generating steam and transferring electricity into the Ontario grid until sometime later this year because of tests which must now be carried on to make sure that the reactor is working properly, but it is an important advance in the development of power from atomic sources.

The N.D.P. station has cost $33 million. It is a co-operative project among Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Ontario hydro and the Canadian General Electric Company. It will have an electricity output of 20,000 kilowatts, and is the prototype for larger plants such as the 200,000 kilowatt Douglas point nuclear power station which is now under construction near the shore of lake Huron.

[Later:]

Mr. Robinson: May I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Can the minister advise the house of the progress which is being made in the construction of the large Candu nuclear power plant in Bruce county?

Mr. Churchill: Progress is going on according to plan, and that very large nuclear power plant is expected to be in operation in 1964.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

RESEARCH INTO NON-NUCLEAR USES OF URANIUM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Can he confirm a statement reported to have been made the other day in Elliot Lake by the chief of research for his department, Dr. John Convey, that in two years the department's research into non-military uses of uranium could approach a state at which sufficient uranium could be needed to keep all mines at Elliot Lake in production?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I shall take the hon. member's question as notice.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NANAIMO, B.C.—REPRESENTATIONS OF NATIVE BROTHERHOOD RESPECTING TIMBER SALE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can the minister, as the result of representations made to her by Rev. Dr. Peter Kelly of the native brotherhood of British Columbia, on behalf of the Fort Simpson band in respect of the sale of timber on the Tsimpsean reserve No. 2, make an announcement to the house with regard to whatever decision has been reached?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I think the hon. member is under some misapprehension. There is no decision to be made. I announced in the house that new tenders would be called, and they will be called as soon as the specifications are drawn.

DOIG RIVER, B.C.—REPORTED CLOSING OF SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder whether the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has seen two articles which appeared in the Alaska Highway News of April 5 which indicate that the school of the Doig river Indians in British Columbia is once more closed, and that conditions among the Indians do not appear to be satisfactory. If the hon. lady has not seen the clipping I will be pleased to send it to her. Perhaps she would be good enough to have the matter looked into.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am fully acquainted with the situation. The hon. member may recall that I said previously these people are not living on a reservation. They left the reservation and went to a crossroads because there was a store there. The store has now been closed and they are in the wilderness, so to speak. Efforts are being made to have them return to the reserve, where there is a school which will take care of them.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are certain other conditions referred to in the article. I wonder whether the hon. lady would look into it and report at a later date.

FISHERIES

LONDON, ONT.—CHANGE IN LOCATION OF RESEARCH STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has any decision been reached regarding the erection of a permanent building for the fishery research station now located in London and, if so, where is it to be built? Further, if a new location is contemplated, would the ideal area in Grey North, bordering on Georgian bay, be given serious consideration?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is one appropriate for the order paper. If the minister is able and willing to answer, I do not object.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I can say that the lease on the present accommodation in London does not expire for a number of years yet, I think in 1966. Therefore no decision has yet been taken as to when or where permanent accommodation might be built, but careful consideration will be given to all the pertinent factors before any permanent location is selected.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Could I ask the minister a supplementary question. Could the minister say whether any steps have been taken to improve the accommodation of the Department of Fisheries with a new permanent building in St. John's.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I am not clear on the hon. member's question. Did he refer to the research board?

Mr. Pickersgill: For the activities of the Department of Fisheries generally, including the research board, in St. John's.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): This is a matter that has been under constant review. The situation has improved considerably. I think it was two years ago that accommodation occupied by the provincial government in the research board building eventually became available to the board, which relieved the situation somewhat. But the general problem of suitable accommodation in the St. John's area is under review.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST THAT HOUSE SHOULD NOT SIT ON APRIL 19

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him if he does not think his decision to sit on April 19 should be amended, in view of the fact that it is a holy day and for some of us it would be a matter of some inconvenience.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was unaware of that fact when I mentioned the date yesterday. I certainly would not do anything to have the house sit on a holy day.

SECRETARY OF STATE

DOCUMENTS ISSUED IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Can the minister tell us how many posters, forms, signs or other documents are now, as a result of his initiative, issued or published in the two official languages of the country—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tremblay: —thus showing the progress made in the field of bilingualism during the last four or five years?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Tremblay: Could the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Tremblay: —if a request is put forward to him in the appropriate way, produce a list of such documents?

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I did not hear all the question because of interruptions. What I did hear inclined me to the view that the question is properly one which should go on the order paper. If the hon. member wishes to repeat his question, and the house will permit me to hear it—

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

(Translation):

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to produce the list the hon. member is asking for.

(Text):

AIR TRANSPORT

C.P.A.—APPROVAL OF FLIGHTS FROM WESTERN CANADA TO LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In the light of his statement made in this house some eight months ago that the government had decided to grant an international air service route to C.P.A. from Calgary-Edmonton to London, may I ask the minister if landing rights have yet been authorized by the United Kingdom government at London?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): As I have said earlier, we are in communication with the minister of civil aviation of Great Britain and a meeting is being set up between senior officials of his department and my department. According to the latest correspondence from Right Hon. Peter Thorneycroft, this meeting will take place late in May.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Why did the minister make the announcement eight months ago when the authorization to land in London had not been granted?

Mr. Balcer: I imagine the hon. member for Laurier does not know that we had a meeting here between Mr. Thorneycroft and myself, and certain events have taken place in the last eight months. The hon. member should go back and read the papers, and he will get his answer.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

QUEBEC—REPORTED NON-PAYMENT OF SUPPLEMENTARY ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister seen a copy of a form letter sent out by the social allowances commission in Quebec to old age pensioners who were receiving supplementary allowances? If so, can he explain why the recipients have only now been informed that they are being paid for the last few months of last year and that they were no longer eligible for the supplementary allowances as from February 1, 1962?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): This situation seems to have been caused by the fact that the Quebec social allowances commission did not process until quite recently some applications they had received from pensioners for special assistance of this type. Welfare matters such as this are administered by the provinces, though my department pays one half the cost under the Unemployment Assistance Act. Under this act the provinces are free to grant whatever aid is required on the basis of individual need.

The Quebec commission seems to consider that on this basis some people at least do not require more than $65 per month. Thus the pensioners whose income was raised to that level by supplementary allowances are now receiving only federal old age security, which means that my department is paying all the extra cost instead of one half of it. Of course if the commission feels that in individual cases a higher payment is warranted, we would still be prepared to share the added cost under unemployment assistance.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wonder if the minister could tell us what has been the reaction from British Columbia in regard to this cost sharing program.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): We have had no word whatsoever from the province of British Columbia, it being the only province from which we have not heard. We have no indication whether or not they intend to participate in the welfare increases.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

ALLOCATION OF CONTRACTS UNDER CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising from yesterday's announcement by the Minister of National Defence regarding the building of eight warships in Canadian yards. Can the minister indicate whether the maritime commission is working with Defence Construction Limited to see that contract tenders are shared by the maritimes, Quebec, the great lakes and the Pacific coast areas when these ships are being constructed?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): The maritime commission allocates these ships. In some cases a tender is called; in others it is a question of a negotiated price. Every effort is made to distribute the shipbuilding work in as equitable a manner as possible among the yards in Canada which are capable of carrying on this type of construction.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the minister could indicate whether there has recently been a reappraisal of the yards in order to find out which ones are capable of doing this work. I ask this question because in recent years contracts have tended to go to only two yards.

Mr. Harkness: The allegation which has just been made is completely inaccurate. At the present time there are six destroyer escorts under construction, and they are at six different yards.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

EAST ANGUS, QUE.—SALE OF POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. According to an article in La Tribune of April 5 the government is about to sell the post office building at East Angus. It is reported that the Tory candidate in Compton-Frontenac, Mr. Bill Clifford, is responsible for the sale of that building at a reduced price. If that report is correct can the minister assure the house that the public interest will be well protected?

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret that as a backbencher I have to rise and call the attention of hon. members to the rules of the house. I refer to citation 177 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which refers to the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may raise a point of order with respect to some incident that has happened, but if he wishes to raise a point of order in general with respect to the entire opposition, I am afraid that would be rather novel.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I refer to the question just asked by the hon. member for St. Denis.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): We have a Speaker, by the way.

Mr. Valade: I think there is an important lesson here which may be presented by backbenchers. I refer to citation 177 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which states in part:

> Reading telegrams, letters or extracts from newspapers as an opening to a question when the orders of the day are called is an abuse of the rules of the house.

Further along it says:

> It is the member's duty to ascertain the truth of any statement before he brings it to the attention of parliament.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Was the hon. member here in 1956?

Mr. Valade: Before the question was answered I merely wished to direct the attention of the hon. member for St. Denis to this rule.

Mr. Speaker: Of course the question has been disposed of and answered now, and it may be that the point is taken too late to be effective in this case; but there is a precedent for requiring an hon. member to take the responsibility for the truth of the facts on which he founds a question. I think perhaps unfortunately this has been overlooked a good deal in our practice. In any event, I think the point has perhaps now passed its usefulness.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say a word on the point of order. I wish to inform the house that I did not read a word of the newspaper clipping. The words I used were mine, and I take responsibility for them. I merely wished to inform the house that the Tory candidate is trying to sell a public building for almost nothing, and I feel the public interest should be protected.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is taking advantage of the floor to make statements that certainly are not in order.

Mr. Chevrier: Government members do that repeatedly, sir.

FLAGS

INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF MODEL DESIGNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State if he has received designs of the various flags recommended by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson)? If so, what are they?

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Lapointe is asking a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm may I point out I did not accept the previous question.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State if his department still has the flag design proposed by the Prime Minister—

[Mr. Valade.]

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did not consider that the question was a proper one to be asked on orders of the day, and I believe it was not answered.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was allowed to be asked, Mr. Speaker. That is the point.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I please direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State?

Mr. Speaker: May I inquire whether the Secretary of State answered the question?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I had not allowed the question. If the hon. member has a question that is his own I would be glad to hear him, but I will not entertain a supplementary question to a question that I did not consider to be in order.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The first question was allowed; it is now on the record. While the Secretary of State did not rise to reply to it, surely the hon. member for Lapointe has the right to ask a similar or a supplementary question, since the other question was not ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry that I cannot agree with the hon. member. If the question was such as to raise the privileges of the house or of the hon. member or a point of order, then the hon. member should address himself to the Chair; but if no such point is involved in the question I consider that a supplementary question to a question that is not in order would also not be in order.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Then, Mr. Speaker, I do not have a supplementary question to ask of the Secretary of State; I simply have a question to ask of him.

Mr. Valade: Is it in order?

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): We have a Speaker here in the house.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to ask the Secretary of State if he has received the flag design proposed, in 1945, by the Prime Minister of Canada?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The question is of the same category as the question to which it was supplementary.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Two-flag Jack.

(Translation):

An hon. Member: Two flags.

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): If I correctly apprehended the question it was of an entirely different order. It asked the Secretary of State whether he had received the design of a certain flag. It has been the custom over the years for the secretary of state to receive the designs which are sent to the government from time to time, and to file them in his department. I know this because I was once secretary of state. It therefore seems to me the question comes within the accepted ambit of the functions of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member has a point. What design was it that the question related to?

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, all those who have read the minutes of proceedings of the committee entrusted with the study of the various flag designs in 1945 know it very well. I put again the question to the Secretary of State. In 1945 the hon. member who is now the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) suggested a national flag, which was in no way of a distinctive nature. I want to ask him if he has this flag design in his files.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in 1945 I had not yet entered the field of federal politics.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MUSTARD SEED AND RAPESEED

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture) moved the third reading of Bill No. S-19, to amend the Canada Grain Act.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Agriculture whether any consideration has been given to the matter we raised yesterday. I refer to an apparent conflict between the terms of the Canada Grain Act, which is now being changed to include mustard seed and rapeseed, and the provincial laws relating to noxious weeds. Many of the provinces consider that mustard falls into this category. I was wondering whether any consideration has been given since yesterday to this particular matter and whether some protection can be given in the matter of differentiation in the new Canada Grain Act and the provincial acts—I refer to differentiation in the matter of mustard seed—which also class this as a weed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I assume that if I speak I will close the debate. Is that the situation?

Mr. Speaker: No. As to whether the minister has a right to speak, by leave of the house he might answer the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we wish to preserve the rules of the house. I do not wish to prevent the minister from speaking. However, it should be done only by unanimous consent. By moving third reading the minister has exhausted his right to speak. Your Honour, of course, has often made that decision. However, I should hope there would be unanimous consent to allow him to reply.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister may answer the question without closing the debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The question asked by the hon. member for Timiskaming is one to which it is extremely difficult to give a precise answer. There has been a great deal of discussion in the western provinces as to a clear distinction between the various types of mustard seed. In some provinces they are considered noxious and in others they are a crop. As I understand the situation, mustard is grown for commercial purposes. It is clearly defined in the Canada Grain Act and in the new regulations. It is different from the mustard that is commonly known in western Canada as a noxious weed.

I do not foresee any great difficulty in putting this in the Canada Grain Act. However, I will speak to the board of grain commissioners about this matter to ascertain if they will carry on discussions with the three governments in western Canada in order to see whether anything can be done to make this matter any clearer than it is today.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Northern administration branch—education division—

730. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, and it is this. We were not on this item when the estimates were last discussed in this chamber. As a matter of fact we were on item 729. While we on this side of the chamber welcome the decision of the government to deal with supplementary estimates, in the light of what has taken place I think I should review briefly what has happened outside the House of Commons and here in the House of Commons concerning the manner in which the estimates have been brought before us. On Friday, March 23—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, you called item 730. The hon. member wishes now to precipitate a debate on broader questions. There can be such a debate if it is sought. However, it is not proper to have it in this committee on item 730.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not attempting to precipitate a debate, Mr. Chairman. I was rising on a question of privilege, as I have a right to do. When we were last on these estimates we dealt with item 729 and we did not pass it. We are therefore still on item 729 unless and until the government gives some indication of a change. The government has given that indication, but it gave it a very short time ago. That is the matter that I suggest is a question of privilege. I wish to make a statement and I do not wish to enter into a debate. I think I have a perfect right so to do. My statement is this—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On this question of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not a question of order; it is a question of privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: It is a question of privilege, not a question of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): So far as privilege is concerned, Mr. Chairman, this being a day for government business and the chosen item of government business having been called—

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege. I had the floor on a question of privilege and the minister interrupted me. No interruption is allowed on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order. I believe only one question of privilege can be taken up at a time. The hon. member for Laurier has raised a question of privilege. I understood the Minister of Finance to be replying to the question raised by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not get started.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to discuss the question of privilege?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I do. I wish to discuss it as calmly as I can. I hope the minister will not rise and interrupt me repeatedly, as it is his practice to do. I was stating that on Friday, March 23 the house concluded consideration of the third set of supplementary estimates and passed the appropriation bill. Then we embarked upon the fourth set of supplementary estimates, commencing with the Department of Agriculture, about five minutes before five o'clock. On Monday, March 26, instead of continuing the supplementaries, as the government should have done and as the opposition asked, they were not called again until Wednesday, March 28. If they had been called at the beginning of that week they could easily have been concluded by March 30 and probably by March 29, particularly as items in nine various departments were passed on March 30.

Having failed to do that, the government should have called the supplementaries on April 2, and they could have been concluded at the latest by April 3. Instead they were held off until Friday, April 6, about one hour before five o'clock, by which time General McNaughton's interview was in the press. In other words the committee was given no consecutive opportunity to dispose of this business.

If one looks at the order of business one will find 10 items were given last night by the house leader as the business for today, the first item having to do with the electoral boundaries commission, and the next having to do with a measure concerning the Senate. I will not go over them all, as they can be found at page 2864 of Hansard. Then this morning about 11.30 the house leader advised that supplementary estimates were coming on.

As I said earlier, we on this side of the house have no objection whatsoever to the calling of these supplementary estimates, but what we on this side of the house to object to is that statements are being made outside of the house, particularly on television last night by the Prime Minister, that we on this side of the house are obstructing and delaying the business of the house. That, sir, is not the fact.

Mr. Montgomery: It is true.

Mr. Chevrier: The facts are as I have clearly indicated them, and I have done so as calmly as I could under the circumstances. If there is any delay, if there is any hold-up in the business of the house, it is because of the confusion that exists on the other side of the house. It is because of the fact that there is no orderly decision as to what the business shall be. One day we are on legislation and the next we take supplementary estimates. Again we are on legislation and later back again to supplementary estimates. If the supplementary estimates had been continued as they should have been without interruption, then in my opinion we would have been beyond them a long time ago.

I conclude my question of privilege by saying this. Before we agree to postpone consideration of item 729 we are entitled to an assurance that the committee will dispose of last year's supplementary estimates, the ones we are now on, before going on with other business.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to express our complete approval and support of the remarks made by the hon. member for Laurier. I also wish to bring to the minister's attention the fact that when we concluded discussion of these estimates previously we were on item 729, and it is obvious that the officials thought we were going to proceed with that item because the gallery is flooded with all these great engineers from the water resources branch. There is no branch in any department of the government whose officials spend more time in the gallery than those of the water resources branch. They are all here this afternoon, so it is obvious they expected that the government would proceed with item 729. I trust we will.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this is a pretty far fetched question of privilege. I had hoped that all hon. members would address themselves to making some progress with these items instead of threshing straw that has already been well threshed. Furthermore, let me make it very clear that in other years final supplementary estimates have usually been dispatched in about two days, because final supplementaries are usually of a uniform character. They are usually simply further amounts required for purposes that have already been approved by parliament in adopting the main estimates. That is the character of most of the items.

This year, apart from the short commencement that was made on March 23, three days were set aside for these final supplementary estimates; Wednesday, March 28, Thursday, March 29 and Friday, March 30. Those three days fell far short of being enough for the carrying of these items. Indeed, only a minority of the items were disposed of then. This, I think, is not an indication that the committee proceeded to deal with these items at normal speed.

There is other business of the house that has to be done, and some attempt has to be made to advance business that there is some hope of advancing when it is quite clear that the committee has been bogged down on items in the estimates. We brought these estimates back again last Friday, April 6, and we passed one item in an hour and a quarter.

There is no ground for complaint about our calling item 730 today, because it was made very clear to hon. members this morning why that course was being proposed. It remains with the government, when the government is introducing estimates as its business on a government day, to call the particular items that it is asking the committee to pass. We did not complete the discussion of item 729 last Friday, April 6, or at least the item was not passed, and as certain hon. members had indicated on Monday of this week that they wished to discuss a subject that had been raised in the debate on item 729 it seemed to me we would be affording them a better opportunity for debate by proceeding in the manner that is now indicated, that is to say, by proceeding with item 730 and disposing of it and the balance of the items, and then returning to those items that have been held over, namely the items on external affairs and item 729, and have an orderly debate on those.

I think it would impress hon. members as a grave waste of manpower to have those officials who must be in attendance in connection with the many items that still remain to be considered sitting around waiting if we are to have an extended debate on item 729 or on the items pertaining to external affairs. My suggestion, which was communicated to hon. members opposite this morning and was not objected to by them, was simply that in the interests of orderly procedure we would start with item 730, dispose of the balance of the items, and then return to the items which had been held over, namely the external affairs items and item 729. That proposal was made and this course is put before the committee in the hope of an orderly and expeditious procedure. I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that we could proceed. The sooner we dispose of these other items, the sooner we will be able to have a debate on item 729 and the external affairs items.

Mr. Herridge: In reply I should like to ask the minister this question. If that was the government's intention it is a sign of poor planning again, because why were these very highly paid and most expensive members of the water resources branch, whose time is most valuable, all brought here to sit in the gallery?

An hon. Member: Are they?

Mr. Herridge: Why is their time to be wasted here when the government had other intentions?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister, of course, has gone far beyond the point raised by the hon. member for Laurier, and I should like to deal with some of the points he has raised. The minister talked about his desire to facilitate orderly procedure, in the light of what we were told last night was going to be discussed today and the fact that at 11.30 this morning the government for its own reasons changed the order of discussion completely, presumably without telling some of the departments that it had been changed.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: I would ask the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway to defer his point of order until the Leader of the Opposition has completed his remarks.

Mr. Pearson: Having changed the order of business without informing the opposition, who were told last night what the order was to be, until 11.30 this morning, the minister talks about facilitating orderly procedure. The minister says that discussion of the further supplementary estimates bogged down. There were hundreds of millions of dollars involved, but discussion bogged down because the government saw fit to introduce legislation which was of no great urgency at all one item of which could not be effective during this parliament. So our discussion of the supplementary estimates was stopped though we should have tried our best to get them through before the end of the financial year. We stopped discussion of the supplementary estimates before the end of the year.

However, when we were discussing these estimates last we were discussing item 729. That item was not adjourned and when we are coming back to supplementary estimates surely that is the item we should begin with. We know perfectly well why the government do not want to discuss item 729. They are afraid to discuss this whole question of General McNaughton—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: —and in order to avoid that discussion they are trying to postpone consideration of this item.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Opposition, of course, has imputed motives and that is the plainest kind of breach of the rules of the house. I had hoped that in response to a proposal that was made with a view to effecting the orderly dispatch of the business of the house we might have had a constructive response. The Leader of the Opposition is basing his remarks now, as did the hon. member for Kootenay West, on a statement that is completely wrong. It just is not true.

Mr. Herridge: You have the officials all here.

Mr. Pearson: I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, and the minister interrupted me.

An hon. Member: He is on a point of order.

Mr. Pearson: What is the point of order?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The point of order is that the Leader of the Opposition has broken the rules of the house by imputing motives. That is completely out of order, as he well knows. I have given the reason and he has no right to impute motives. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, there is no fear on the part of the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are scared to death.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let us have an orderly discussion on item No. 729, and not misleading statements of the kind made by the hon. member for Kootenay West, which are now concurred in by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: I agree with the minister; let us have an orderly discussion of item No. 729. That is the item we were discussing when we adjourned consideration of the estimates. Let us be orderly and continue to discuss what was under consideration at that time. That would be the orderly and proper way of getting the estimates through. The minister says he is anxious to be orderly. Therefore let us be orderly and start where we left off with item No. 729.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Kootenay West several times this afternoon has made the statement that the gallery was filled with officials from the water resources branch of the department of northern affairs—

Mr. Herridge: And there they are.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there are exactly two officials, only two officials from that branch.

Mr. Pugh: It shows how much he knows about the subject.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member must realize how completely misleading was his statement. The government has the right to call the business of the day. The business that has been appointed for today is supplementary estimates, commencing with item No. 730. I trust we shall be able to dispose of these remaining items and return quickly to whatever debate is desired on item No. 729 and on the external affairs items which were stood over at the request of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Pearson: Would the minister repeat the reason we cannot go on with item No. 729 now?

Mr. Pugh: Read Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you rule, Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise a technical point. When you reported progress last Friday we were engaged in the discussion of item No. 729. That item has not been postponed by the committee. That item was before the committee, and I submit it cannot be postponed just because one member of the committee, and he the suppliant, says it should be postponed. It can only be postponed by a vote of the committee. That was the point up to which we had made progress and we were granted leave to sit again to go on from where we left off. I submit that this item cannot be postponed except by agreement.

In all the time I have been in this house I have never heard of a government trying arbitrarily on its own, without the consent of the committee, to change the item under discussion. On several occasions when we asked to have it done it was stated that it was inconvenient for the government to have the items changed. That happened on many occasions.

I say that if the minister wants this item postponed it is the committee which is in charge, and if the committee wants to vote by a majority to postpone discussion of item 729 then it can do so. The Minister of Finance is not the committee, but he has become so arrogant that he thinks he is.

Mr. Pugh: Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: As we were on this item and it was neither passed nor postponed, then we can continue with it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The memory of the hon. member is not yet the substitute for the rules of the house. Whether or not his memory is failing in recalling a similar situation, it is a fact that the government appoints the business for the day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes; these supplementary estimates.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We are on a different day from Friday last, and the item appointed for commencing today is No. 730 and, as I have said concerning No. 729, I hope we shall get back to it soon after disposing of the other items.

Mr. Caron: I have something to say on this point. If you read standing order No. 7 you will find it says:

> At the ordinary time of adjournment of the house, unless otherwise provided, the proceedings shall be interrupted and the business under consideration at the termination of the sitting shall stand over until the next sitting day when it will be taken up at the same stage where its progress was interrupted.

Therefore it is clear the government cannot change the item when discussion was started on it.

Mr. Howard: I do not know whether this is the relevant citation in Beauchesne which has application to the point, but I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to give consideration to citation 242, which reads as follows:

> The procedure of the committee of supply follows the ordinary usage of a committee of the whole house. No amendment can be moved which is not relevant to the grant under consideration. The votes should be considered in the order in which they stand on the paper distributed to the members of the house; but any vote may be passed over and not moved.

Then there is the following sentence:

> Once it is moved a motion to postpone it cannot be entertained. Each resolution for a grant forms a distinct motion which can only be dealt with by being agreed to, reduced, negatived, superseded or withdrawn.

Whatever other hon. gentlemen say, I submit this covers the item which was before the committee on the last occasion, No. 729, which deals with the water resources branch.

The Chairman: I thank hon. members for their contributions to this point. I notice it was raised first of all as a matter of privilege, and then some hon. members referred to it as a point of order. In any event standing order 18, paragraph 2 reads as follows:

> Except as provided in standing order 56, government orders may be called in such sequence as the government may think fit.

Standing order 59 (1) reads as follows:

> The standing orders of the house shall be observed in the committees of the whole house so far as may be applicable, except the standing orders as to the seconding of motions limiting the number of times of speaking —and so on. When the house adjourned on Friday, April 6, only a certain resolution was reported, as recorded in Votes and Proceedings for that day:

> The said resolution was reported and concurred in, and the committee of supply obtained leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

There is no mention there of the item then in progress, and the rules must be interpreted according to the authorities, one of which is May's sixteenth edition, to which reference has often been made in the house. I should like to read an extract from page 731 of May's sixteenth edition, which to my mind is very relevant to the matter before the committee:

> Motions for a grant may be submitted to the committee in the order selected by the mover, and so arranged on the notice paper, without regard to the order and arrangement of the estimates (d), or to any motion which was before the committee at a previous sitting and was not disposed of.

I believe this confirms the rule I mentioned a few moments ago, rule 18, paragraph 2, which states that it does not matter whether or not a previous resolution had been disposed of. So far as the order of business is concerned, I am in the hands of the government—

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like, Mr. Chairman, before you make a final ruling, to draw your attention to the fact that the notice paper for the supplementary estimates, which I have in my hand and which May appears to refer to, does set out these votes in a certain order. We had no notice given in the house under the rules that this order was to be changed, whatever dictate may have been passed down from the government outside the hours of sitting. The notice paper for the proceedings in committee lists the further supplementary estimates No. 4, and the items are 727, 728—which, as Your Honour indicated, was passed and reported to the house —and we had entered upon the consideration of item 729. According to May, that order having been given on the notice paper it cannot be changed arbitrarily by the government; it must be followed, because this is the notice paper for these supplementary estimates, the only one we have.

That taken in conjunction with the citation given by the hon. member for Hull, that once one of these items is entered upon it cannot be postponed but must be dealt with, would seem to me to deal conclusively with the point. I was seeking, before Your Honour went on to make a ruling, to draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that all there is on the order paper of the house is "House again in committee of supply", which gives us no guidance. The notice paper we have for dealing with the supplementary estimates is the one I hold in my hand, and the government cannot arbitrarily change this.

The Chairman: Well—

Mr. Howard: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if before you proceed I could draw Your Honour's attention to another citation in Beauchesne which makes it even clearer. I refer to citation 242 (4), which says:

> A proposed resolution may be allowed to stand over with general consent until another occasion, but if it has been regularly proposed from the Chair and discussed—

And item 729 has been discussed:

> —no motion for its postponement is regular because there is no period to which it can be postponed.

Then it gives as a reference page 426 of Bourinot's fourth edition.

The Chairman: I agree with that citation, but the point at the moment is that there is no motion for postponement. Item 729 was discussed until the end of business that day. Today is another day. With regard to standing order No. 7, which was quoted by the hon. member for Hull, if we were to interpret that in the sense that any business commenced on one day if not terminated must be continued the following day, the government would never have any choice as to the business with which it wished to proceed.

The committee must go along with the order that is before it. The order is No. 13, "House again in committee of supply", which is the general order. That is the notice paper to which May refers. To my mind this document mentioned by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not, by any stretch of the imagination, a notice paper; it is simply a list of supplementary estimates. They must be listed in some order. I cannot see how they impose upon the government an obligation to proceed in that order, because in fact that order is very often deviated from for various reasons. Again I say that I must conform to the resolutions that are before me as chairman in the order in which they appear, unless the government wishes to change that order or unless the committee gives unanimous consent to so doing.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, is your argument based on your statement—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not an argument.

Mr. Pearson: —that the record of the previous day should be blotted out? Because Your Honour said that the record of the previous day does not apply; you start with a new record. There was once strong criticism about this.

The Chairman: I certainly did not say that the record of the previous day should be blotted out, because it stands on its own merits. What I did say was that when we come to the next sitting and it is a government day, we must proceed with government orders as they are indicated to the Chair by the government leader. This we are doing today, and I cannot see how we can deviate from that procedure.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say finally that this is a most unusual and, in our opinion, irregular procedure. I cannot remember it happening before. We should discuss this—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Herridge: —because it is obvious that the government is unwilling to proceed with a debate on the Columbia because the water resources branch, as I have been told a number of times, has not got the answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, that is utterly untrue. If the hon. member will co-operate in the business called we will go back to item 729 when these other items are disposed of. You have made a decision, as I understand it, that item 730 is before the committee, and I trust we can proceed with our business.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether he is giving us an assurance that we will now continue right through the supplementary estimates and there will be no further alteration in the order of business; that we will go right through the supplementary estimates until they are completed?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, we have now reached a position where we know that the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate feel they should be running this country with or without the consent of the voters. They have done that before in this house, and we know what happened. That is what they are doing right now.

Mr. Pearson: I ask the minister, that is all.

The Chairman: Order. The first point has now been ruled on, and the committee is engaged in the discussion of item 730.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to appeal your ruling.

Mr. Drysdale: More wasted time.

Mr. Pearson: You should have been around in 1956.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Constant squabbling and bickering.

Mr. Pickersgill: Tearing the page out of Hansard.

Mr. Drysdale: There were only four Liberals on Friday talking it out.

Mr. Chevrier: Co-operation with arrogance.

Mr. Drysdale: Opposition filibuster. They hate to see government progress.

Division

Mr. Pallett: They hate to face the facts, that is their problem.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In committee of supply when vote No. 730 of the further supplementary estimates (4) 1961-62 was called for consideration, a point of order was raised to the effect that as vote No. 729 was under consideration at the termination of the committee's last sitting, it was irregular to proceed with vote No. 730.

The chairman ruled that in accordance with section 2 of standing order 18 and May's sixteenth edition, page 731, the government could call its business in such order as it deemed expedient without regard to any proceeding in a prior sitting of the committee. Whereupon the hon. member for Kootenay West appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question before the house is an appeal from a ruling given by the chairman of the committee of supply.

In committee of supply when vote No. 730 of the further supplementary estimates (4) 1961-62 was called for consideration a point of order was raised to the effect that as vote No. 729 was under consideration at the termination of the committee's last sitting, it was irregular to proceed with vote No. 730.

The chairman ruled that, in accordance with section 2 of standing order 18 and May's sixteenth edition, page 731, the government could call its business in such order as it deemed expedient without regard to any proceeding in a prior sitting of the committee. Whereupon the hon. member for Kootenay West appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the ruling confirmed.

And the house having resumed in committee:

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

The Chairman: Shall item 730 carry?

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Welfare and industrial divisions—

731. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $202,000.

Mr. Granger: I should like to refer briefly to the matter of assistance to Eskimos in Labrador. In 1954, I believe it was, a grant was made by the federal government to assist in various projects for Eskimos and Indians in Labrador. Eskimos generally throughout Canada are looked upon as being a federal responsibility. When Newfoundland entered confederation it was agreed that Eskimo affairs would be administered through the government of the province. Subsequently it was agreed that a substantial sum—some $200,000, I believe—would be granted by the federal government toward assistance to Eskimos in Labrador. The province administers Eskimo affairs. In addition to what the province may spend, the federal government agreed to make its own contribution. As I said, the contribution was to be made to the government for the benefit of these Eskimos.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think I should point out to the hon. member that there is in this item nothing that has anything at all to do with the Eskimos in Labrador. His remarks are not related to this item or to anything in this item.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point that has been raised by the minister may I say that this item does have to do with Eskimos. What my friend the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador is seeking to present to the committee very briefly is the fact that Eskimos are treated differently in one part of the country from the way in which they are treated in another part of the country. When we are asked to spend this money for one part of the country it seems to me that would be a relevant point to make. I do not think the hon. gentleman has any intention of doing any more than make the point briefly.

Mr. Granger: That is so, Mr. Chairman. I really thought they were related inasmuch as Eskimos are looked upon generally as a federal responsibility and that in the past Eskimos in Labrador were looked upon as being in part a responsibility of the federal government. As this item has to do with funds to be spent on Eskimos on the mainland of Canada, or that part of Canada, shall I say, other than the province of Newfoundland, and as Labrador is of course, a part of the mainland, I thought I should bring to the attention of the minister the fact that after that first grant was spent, no other grants have been made toward the assistance of Labrador Eskimos. Recently in a letter from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources I gathered that it was not the intention or—and perhaps I should put it this way—that the government looked upon what had been done as fulfilling completely the obligations the federal government had toward the Eskimos in Labrador. I want to express my disagreement in that regard very briefly. The Eskimos are a federal responsibility. At one time the Eskimos in Labrador were looked upon as being partially a federal responsibility. I should like to express the hope that the minister will assess the situation and make assistance available to the Eskimos in Labrador through the provincial government as was done heretofore, because such assistance has not been forthcoming for well over a year now.

Item agreed to.

732. Yukon Territory—operation and maintenance —to extend the purposes of vote 302 of the main estimates for 1961-62 to include the contributions detailed in these estimates, $51,020.

Mr. McMillan: I should like to ask the minister if this vote has anything to do with the celebration of the Yukon gold rush. The government has admitted spending $385,000 on Arizona Charlie's, two saloons, and a mortuary. I am wondering what the total amount is for this celebration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Item 732 has nothing to do with any celebration of any anniversary in the Yukon.

Mr. McMillan: It is for picnic grounds, and I wondered if that had anything to do with it.

Item agreed to.

National museum of Canada—

734. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. McIlraith: I have one or two questions I should like to ask about this item. I am sorry, I have risen on the wrong item.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to know the details of this expenditure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is a sum made up of sundries. The main estimates provided $855,972 and this additional sum was found to be required to enable purchases to be undertaken for the establishment by 1967 of suitable exhibits. It relates to the Canadian historical museum to be ready for opening by July 1, 1967, and to include the human history branch of the present museum, the Canadian war museum and suitable other items to be acquired in the course of the next five years to ensure that exhibits will be available to cover the essential features of Canada's development.

Mr. Fisher: Will this projected plan for 1967 require the taking on of any personnel to work in this particular area?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am informed it will require some personnel to be added before 1967.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the supplementary estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Next is privy council, vote No. 735.

PRIVY COUNCIL

735. Expenses of the royal commission on railway problems—further amount required, $34,462.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, you said that we had completed the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I do not think that is correct. Surely the supplementary estimates indicate that northern affairs is one item or one subject, and we ought now to proceed to item 729 and certainly not have the committee misled with the suggestion that this department has been completed.

Mr. Peters: They would like it to be.

Mr. Pickersgill: They would love it to be. They are so frightened.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are you calling 735, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: The item before the Chair is vote No. 735. When I stated, "This completes the items of northern affairs and national resources", I meant that we had completed the series at present before the Chair.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the Chair wants the statement, "This completes the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources" left on the record in that way. There is one item still outstanding.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of course there is still an item outstanding. I think that is well understood. May we proceed with 735?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it is understood, that Your Honour in ruling, ruled that the proceedings on a preceding day were to be blotted out entirely. Therefore, according to the decision recently rendered, there is no record because the proceedings were blotted out. There is no record that 729 was before us and we are now going to have it recorded in Hansard that this department is completed. It seems to me that should be formally changed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it is quite obvious that it was a mere slip of the tongue on the part of the Chair. Item 729 has not been adopted yet and we are simply going on from 734 to 735.

Mr. Pickersgill: Because you are afraid to go on with 729.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There you have another breach of the rules of the house, a member making an assertion that amounts to the attribution of motives. There is nobody on this side of the house who is afraid of anything.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are all afraid.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All we are asking is that hon. members opposite conduct themselves in such a manner—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —that the business of parliament may be transacted, and on the completion of these other items we may then return to item 729 and the items of external affairs.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Essex East on a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, in the brief time that the minister has left me to make an observation, may I say it is most extraordinary that having finished one whole department we should leave standing one item in that department. There can be only one conclusion, that the government does not want this house to discuss General McNaughton's complaints against the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Closure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There can be only one conclusion and that is that the hon. member and his colleagues simply wish to obstruct instead of trying to get on with the business of the house. If they really want to deal with item 729, Mr. Chairman, the straightforward way to get to it is to dispose of these other items and then we will go to 729 very quickly. I do not think they want to go to it at all. They just wish to talk as if they did.

Mr. Chevrier: I want to say a word in connection with the point of order. The minister says that the quickest way to get to 729 is to get rid of these other items.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say "get rid of".

Mr. Chevrier: The experience we have had at the hands of the Minister of Finance and the leader of the house is that when we do get through with a matter we do not then get what the minister has told us will be put before us. I am going to say now that if we do get through with these other items tonight we will not return to 729 because the government will call something else, as they have been doing in the last two or three weeks.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You were afraid of Coyne and you are afraid of General McNaughton.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a false assertion.

The Chairman: Order. The item before the committee at the present time, according to the order established, is 735. Before we proceed to the discussion of that item and the other items I must interrupt the proceedings at this time. As it is five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion (papers), private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the house to give unanimous consent to placing order No. 191, Bill No. S-9, which is now at the bottom of the list, at the top in order that it may be considered in committee of the whole together with Bills Nos. S-10, S-14, S-15 and S-12 which are already before the committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asks that a private bill which appears as order No. 191, being at the end of all the divorce bills, be raised to fifth place and referred to the committee of the whole with the other bills.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): It is before the committee now and I was wondering whether it could not be considered with the other bills in order No. 1 which are already referred to the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: There will be no objection so far as we are concerned.

Mr. Howard: Certainly not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed then that Bill No. S-9 be considered in committee of the whole with the four bills now before the committee of the whole but in fifth place.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GERAND ACCEPTANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill S-10, to incorporate Gerand Acceptance Company—Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North)—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Provisional directors.

Mr. Peters: In conjunction with the discussion that took place on the previous bill, No. S-9, which indicated a great deal of similarity, we believe this bill should also contain a provision that all directors of this company should at all times be Canadian citizens, ordinarily resident in Canada. This seems to be the stated policy of the Prime Minister and it appears to be in the interests of Canada. The sponsor has stated that the executive officers of this company are Canadians, ordinarily resident in Canada, and I wonder has he authority from the company to accept an amendment that all the directors of the company should at all times be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Since discussion occurred last Tuesday on the previous bill I have secured some information for the committee which I think will probably satisfy the hon. members who raised this matter on the previous bill and who are now raising it on this one.

I am not prepared to accept an amendment which would require that all the directors of the company be Canadians, as the hon. member has suggested. I would point out that section 13 of the Small Loans Act states that all of the provisions of the Loan Companies Act shall apply in a case such as this. This company is being incorporated under the Small Loans Act and therefore all the provisions of that act will apply to this company. Section 19 of the Loan Companies Act reads as follows:

> The majority of the directors of the company shall at all times be persons resident in Canada and subjects of Her Majesty by birth or naturalization.

Therefore in effect the majority of the directors of this company will by law, be Canadian citizens. I would not be prepared to accept the restriction that all the directors be Canadians since it is stated that the majority of them must be Canadian citizens.

Mr. Peters: I am aware of the fact that there is that section in the Loan Companies Act, but that act was passed many years ago by a government that had the foresight to see that some advantage would accrue to the Canadian public and some benefit would be secured in providing that the majority of the directors should be resident in Canada. However I believe we have now progressed to the stage that we should see that all directors of such companies should be Canadian citizens. I can see very little objection to that.

We are not seeking that the shareholders of this company be limited only to Canadian citizens. That I believe would be non-advantageous and it would not be in the company's interest in the matter of raising money, as it is to be noted that this company will have $250,000 capital, $100,000 of which is to be raised before the company goes into operation. Some of this money of necessity may come from people not normally resident in Canada. We have no objection to that, but we do say that all the officers who will be responsible for the operations of the company should be citizens of Canada normally resident in Canada. I do not see why a provision of this nature should not be applied to this company which has the avowed purpose of extending beyond provincial jurisdiction but not necessarily into international jurisdiction. Other companies which have accepted this type of provision have found no particular hardship in it.

The sponsor has stated that most of the shareholders are expected to be Canadian residents. In fact they are expected to be the members of a particular family. I would hope the committee would give consideration to incorporating such a provision in the bill in the interest of developing Canadian ownership and Canadian control of purely Canadian companies.

CANADA SECURITY ASSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-14, respecting the Canada Security Assurance Company—Mr. Stefanson—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5.

Mr. Howard: It is stated that the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act shall apply to this company. If it is not already known I believe it should be pointed out that the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act contains a provision that the majority of directors shall be Canadians. I do not think it is necessary to go any further into our reasoning which has been placed on the record with respect to the other two bills.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. S-15, respecting The Canadian Indemnity Company and the Canadian Fire Insurance Company—Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North)

Bill No. S-12, respecting Reliance Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North).

BROCK ACCEPTANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-9, to incorporate Brock Acceptance Company—Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North)—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 2—Provisional directors.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could say something on clause 2. This matter did not, unfortunately, come to my attention during the debate we had the other day; I did not hear the remark to which I shall refer. However, this is perhaps because the hon. member to whom it is attributed, if it is correctly attributed to him, sits closer to the Hansard reporters than I, which would mean that he could speak in a lower tone of voice and have his remark picked up by the reporter.

I refer to page 2687 of Hansard, where I begin my remarks by saying:

> The emotionalism exhibited by the hon. member for Davenport and the sponsor of the bill indicates they are on the wrong track. This amendment has nothing to do with the individuals concerned.

Then follows this remark:

> It is anti-Semitism.

I do not know whether that remark is correctly attributed to the hon. member for Halifax. If he did make that statement and I had heard it the other day, I would have commented upon it. I only wish to say now that if the remark is correctly attributed to the hon. member for Halifax, it is most incorrect.

MADELEINE FRANCOISE HANKOWSKI

On the order:

> Second reading of Bill No. SD-1, for the relief of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, if it pleases the house, perhaps the Senate divorce bills could all be put together for second reading.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I think it would be more appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to consider them in the order in which they appear on the order paper.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved the second reading of Bill No. SD-1, for the relief of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, will you please put the yeas and nays.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. McCleave) which was agreed to on the following division:

BRUCE REID CAMPBELL

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved the second reading of Bill SD-2 for the relief of Bruce Reid Campbell.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the privileges of all hon. members of this house and the rights of individual Canadians concerning a matter which denies Canadians their constitutional rights. I wish to refer to page 2537 of Hansard of April 5, 1962 where it is reported that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) informed the House of Commons that if it did not pass a bill proposed by him at that time no more divorce bills would be passed by this parliament. It is therefore quite obvious—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am afraid the hon. member is now embarking on a matter that is not relevant to the business before the house and which does not in my opinion involve a matter of privilege. I would hope therefore the hon. gentleman would not insist upon pursuing the matter.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this was a threat made by the hon. member for Timiskaming. I suggested at that time the threat was made—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I also note that a division has been called. There is a rule which provides that a division cannot be interrupted even for the hearing of a matter of privilege. We must first of all proceed with the division. Call in the members.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I had arisen before the division was called.

Mr. Peters: Do you not believe in parliamentary procedure?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: You are the greatest abuser of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed the members are in?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, immediately before the vote was taken I had raised a question of privilege regarding a threat which had been made to the members of this house by the hon. member for Timiskaming, as found at page 2437 of Hansard. As I pointed out and informed the house at that time, the threat was that if we did not pass the bill then before us, no more divorces would pass parliament this session. I suggest that is an attempt to deny individual Canadians their rights under the constitution of this country and I suggest that it is the responsibility of members of parliament to protect those rights.

Mr. Speaker: The incident with regard to which the hon. member raises a question of privilege took place some time ago. Unless he has ascertained that hon. members now, by asking for a vote on second reading of a bill, are infringing the privileges of the house, I fail to see how any current question of privilege is involved.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I suggest that it is an obvious attempt to carry out the threat which was made at that time and that it is the responsibility of the members of this house to see to it that this right is not denied to these people in the provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec who since confederation have had the constitutional right to have divorce bills passed by this house. They are now being denied this right by certain members. I suggest the situation should not be allowed to continue.

An hon. Member: We are voting on it and so are you.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid it is beyond the competence of the Chair or the rules of the house to determine what is in a man's mind. When he exercises his privileges under the rules he is doing so in accordance with the rules. I therefore can see no question of privilege arising at this time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Pursuant to standing order 105 the said bill stands referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

WILLIAM METCALFE WATT

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved the second reading of Bill No. SD-3, for the relief of William Metcalfe Watt.

Mr. Broome: Before the inevitable vote comes, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we will expedite the business of the house if the members on this side reduce the number to a bare quorum.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members. Is it agreed that the members are called in?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GIOVANNI PALLOTTA

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved the second reading of Bill No. SD-4, for the relief of Giovanni Pallotta.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, in view of the unusual situation—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Is this another threat?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —that has developed—

Mr. Brunsden: Who developed it?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —would it not simplify matters if the government would live up to its commitment?

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, at last I have—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must inform the house that if the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, there are several facts I must now make public because of the statement just made by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin). I do so with reluctance but none the less I have a responsibility to the people whose divorce petitions I am sponsoring. Until five minutes to six p.m. last Thursday, Mr. Speaker, I had no reason to suspect that we would not be able to achieve harmony in this house, even at this difficult period, with regard to the solution of the problem of divorce cases. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) has quoted a statement which shows where the fault lies for this harmony not being reached. The measure that had been put forward to solve this problem was discussed in the committee the other day. No member of the New Democratic party was present at that meeting.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McCleave: These are public facts. There are two private facts that I shall not divulge until the end of this session of parliament. I hope I will not be put in the position of having to divulge them then but if there is going to be disgraceful behaviour I do have to do my best to protect these people from Quebec and Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please rise.

[And the Second Clerk Assistant having proceeded to call members' names]:

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps I am at fault. I am afraid I did not ask for the yeas and nays. By leave of the house I will put the motion in accordance with the rules. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay. In my opinion the yeas have it.

Mr. Peters: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

MILDRED DAWSON MEAKINS

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved the second reading of Bill No. SD-5, for the relief of Mildred Dawson Meakins.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, speaking on this particular bill I should like to say that I do not know what these private facts are to which the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) has referred—

An hon. Member: You will find out.

Mr. Howard: —but we all know he has a great propensity for disclosing private or privileged information to suit his own purposes. What he will do in this regard—

Mr. Speaker: Order. On the last bill there was a debate which to my mind was irrelevant. It got started before I appreciated what was being said. I would think that what would be relevant at this time would be a discussion of Bill No. SD-5.

Mr. Howard: With respect to Bill No. SD-5, it is a bill which seeks to dissolve the marriage between Mildred Dawson Meakins and Jonathan Meakins. We regret very much that we are going to have to oppose this bill on the ground that we think it is a most degrading way to treat parliament to force these individuals to come here to supplicate and pray for relief of their difficulties when the government out of its own mouth last year promised faithfully that it would alter this procedure. It is unfortunate that the government has placed these individuals in this position.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is getting into the general problem of parliamentary divorce.

Mr. Peters: We are all involved in that.

Mr. Speaker: In my view what would be relevant would be the consideration that would relate to the authorizing of the dissolution of the marriage of Mildred Dawson Meakins, and not marriage in general.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena not be very pertinent to the principle of this bill which we are now in the process of supporting or otherwise?

Mr. Speaker: I have already expressed my view and I am sorry I cannot agree with the proposition advanced by the hon. member for Timmins. In my mind there is a distinction between the constitutional problem or the question of the jurisdiction of parliament over divorce and the exercise of that jurisdiction, and the question that arises on a particular bill designed to dissolve a specific marriage. It seems to me that on an individual bill the question of the general problem of procedure in divorce matters does not arise.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

Before I leave the chair, may I ask the house to revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

PRIVY COUNCIL

735. Expenses of the royal commission on railway problems—further amount required, $34,462.

Mr. Chevrier: This is a matter of importance to the committee and the country. It has to do with the expenses of the royal commission on railway problems and is for a further amount of $34,462. Could the minister tell us what is the total amount of expenses, fees, emoluments, costs, disbursements and the like up to the present time covering the commissioners in the hearings they have held across Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The total is $564,534.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister, but I think there are some other points arising out of this upon which the minister could enlighten us. The minister will remember that during the discussion of the matter concerning the dispute some two years ago between railway operators and the non-operative groups the Prime Minister indicated the procedure to be adopted in so far as freight rates were concerned just as soon as the report of the royal commission was handed down.

Volume No. 1 of the royal commission's report was given to the house last session and volume No. 2 was tabled just about the time the house met in January of this year, but we still have no indication of what the government intends to do. I and others from this side have inquired of the ministry what the government intends to do with reference to these matters, and there has been no indication, other than the time honoured formula that when the policy of the government has been determined it will be announced in due course. Of course that can go on for months and years—

An hon. Member: Twenty two years.

Mr. Chevrier: I hear one enlightened voice say 22 years and in reply I say that when the Turgeon royal commission brought down its recommendations we acted at once. We did not wait two years. We brought in all the recommendations by way of legislation and implemented them by way of legislation in the house, save one or two. However I do not want to get away from my question. Could the minister give some indication what the intentions of the government are, having regard to the statement of the Prime Minister and the recommendations of the commission?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is, of course, a subject of very great importance. As the hon. member has said, volume 1 of the report of the royal commission came down in 1961 and volume 2 earlier this present year. Volume 1 contains far reaching recommendations affecting the operation of branch lines, unremunerative lines and passenger services, as well as several other features of the burdens borne by the railways.

That volume examined the fundamental position of the railways and the change which has come over the nature of railway operations in recent years. It took account of the fact that our railway legislation and our system of regulation carried out through the board of transport commissioners was adapted to a period when the railways enjoyed a virtual monopoly in the field of transportation, but that that situation has very greatly changed. In gist, this was the purport of volume 1.

In volume 2 the royal commission examines the fundamental question as to the basis of railway rate making, and again speaking very briefly, the commission has recommended some fundamental and far reaching changes in the whole basis of railway rate making. It is not going too far to say that the recommendations of the royal commission in this respect contemplate a radical departure from the basis of rate making as provided for in the present provisions of the Railway Act. As the hon. member is well aware, those provisions in the Railway Act have been unchanged in their substance for many years.

The two combined volumes of the report offer and would involve a fundamental reconstruction of much of our railway legislation, particularly on the financial and regulatory side, and these recommendations cannot be slurred over quickly. Because of their far reaching nature they require the most intensive study and they are receiving that study.

There have already been meetings with the presidents of the two transcontinental railways in regard to this subject. It is being actively pursued but I think I would be less than fair to the hon. member's inquiry and to the subject if I did not lay stress on the fact that this is one of the most important, far reaching recommendations that has come before a government from a royal commission for many a day and it will require, both on the part of government and in due course on the part of parliament, the most intensive study possible. I know the hon. member will not expect legislation based on the report to be coming before parliament at an early date.

In the meantime the government has asked parliament to make the necessary provision for the period during which the study is proceeding. We have on the order paper now a resolution in the name of the Minister of Transport contemplating an amendment of the Freight Rates Reduction Act to extend, but not beyond April 30, 1963, the period during which the revised rates under that act shall be applicable, and to increase the authorized expenditure under the act by an additional $15 million.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, parliament will be asked to appropriate a subsidy in the same sum as in 1961, namely $50 million, on terms similar to those attaching to the $50 million appropriation in 1961. This will meet the requirements of the railways, at least in part. In the meantime the action that parliament may see fit to take in due course on the report can take account of the necessity, if any, of dating the revisions made on behalf of the railways to suit the needs of the situation, taking into account at the same time these two provisions that parliament is being asked to make for this intervening period.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two matters I should like to discuss in connection with this, but before doing so I should like to ask the minister whether the $50 million payment that he referred to as being renewed this year, as originated last year, is in the main estimates.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, it is not in the main estimates because, of course, they were compiled before volume 2 of the report of the royal commission was received. It will be in the supplementary estimates for 1962-63.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it contained in the budget matters?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman, the figures I gave in the budget two nights ago take account of that additional $50 million.

Mr. Chevrier: What I did want to bring to the attention of the minister—he dealt with volumes 1 and 2 of the report—were some of the recommendations contained in volume 1 which the Prime Minister clearly and definitely stated would be implemented. I refer to the subsidies recommended in the first volume of the report, which can be summed up very briefly as follows. In respect of passenger services, Canadian Pacific Railway, $22 million; Canadian National Railways, $40 million; a total of $62 million for passenger subsidies. Then in respect of light density lines to provide compensation for losses actually incurred in the operation of lines which the railways are prepared to abandon; C.P.R. and C.N.R., $13 million. Then there are the following: Export grain traffic, Crowsnest pass rates; C.P.R. contribution to variable costs, $2 million; contribution to constant costs, $9 million. There is also the Canadian National Railways contribution to variable costs, $4 million; contribution to constant costs, $7,300,000. That is a total $22,300,000, making a grand total of the subsidies recommended in volume 1 of $97,300,000 distributed over a period of years but beginning at a fairly large amount and then tapering down. Roughly speaking this amounts to $100 million. This report, volume 1, was brought down last year; therefore I think the committee is entitled to know why that portion of the report was not implemented because volume 2 discusses a different matter entirely.

The minister did say that there was legislation on the order paper having to do with the Freight Rates Reduction Act and there would also be included in a further supplementary estimate, which I take it will be at the next session of parliament—am I right in assuming that it will be taken at the next session of parliament, and not this session?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That will depend entirely on how long this session continues, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: I think I can take it for granted that the $50 million payment the Minister of Finance has in mind will not be brought down at this session of parliament. Then there are other matters which arise. I asked the Minister of Labour the other day what was the amount of the settlement made between the railways and the engineers. It took him a long time to find out what it was, but finally he did come up with the reply that it was $6 million. How is that going to be paid? Is the Minister of Finance going to bring down a further supplementary estimate to cover that amount, because the Canadian National Railways certainly cannot pay for it; they have a deficit of $67 million, which we will be discussing in a moment or two.

Then the all-important matter is the settlement that Canadian National Railways will make with the non-ops arising out of the negotiations taking place at the present time. What will that amount to? If it is at all in the nature of what the conciliation board recommended in the Milvain report last year, it may well run into a substantial amount; it may well run into $50 million. What provision is being made for that?

Those are two matters I should like to put to the minister—why the undertaking of the Prime Minister to carry out these recommendations in volume 1 was not carried out; and how will the money be found to deal with these two additional items over and above the $50 million which the minister is going to repeat in further supplementaries?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I think I must say at once that the hon. member has attributed to the Prime Minister a statement which the Prime Minister did not make. The Prime Minister did not say that the recommendations contained in volume 1 of the report of the royal commission would be carried out. He did say, as I well recall, that they would be given very serious consideration. Having regard to the quality of the study being given to this subject by the royal commission, and the competence of the royal commission itself, as well as the importance of the subject, nothing less than very serious consideration would be due to those recommendations.

The hon. member asks why they were not carried out. The fact is that it would have been, I think, very unwise to attempt to deal with the recommendations in volume 1 without waiting for volume 2, because this—as I warned the committee in my earlier remarks this evening—is going to involve a very far reaching revision of some very important provisions of the Railway Act. I think it would have been regarded by hon. members as folly to have made two bites of the cherry, to have undertaken such a revision as would have been required to implement the recommendations in volume 1 while we were still unaware of what the royal commission would recommend in volume 2.

I think the proper course has been followed; that is, having received the recommendations in volume 1, to wait for volume 2 and then to undertake the comprehensive study that they call for. I also remind the hon. member that there will be a volume 3. Volume 3 is expected to contain the special studies that were conducted under the auspices of the royal commission.

There is one other observation I must offer, Mr. Chairman, by way of correction of a remark made by the hon. member. He spoke about the cost of the recent wage settlement as involving $6 million. The figures given by my colleague the Minister of Labour were a cost of $4½ million over a three year period, and that covers all railways.

The hon. member asks what provision has been made to meet deficits, particularly if the railways incur further obligations in the course of settlements pending wage discussions. Well, they will be met in the way railway obligations have been customarily met, namely the C.P.R. will make its payments out of its funds; and as far as Canadian National Railways is concerned, subject to the rule that its officers and directors are responsible for internal management, if there are deficits we shall have to ask parliament to make provision for them, as has been done for many a year. As to the provision which is proposed to cover the interim period until parliament is able to deal with legislation which will take account of the recommendations in the two volumes, I have indicated that the provision which was made last year will be continued in similar amounts and on similar terms during the present year. This will assure reasonable provision to assist the railways without precluding in any form such consideration as parliament may choose to give to the recommendations of the royal commission or such action as it sees fit to take on those recommendations in this respect, principally those in volume 1.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to put on record in Hansard exactly what the Prime Minister did say. Apparently the minister has taken objection to what I said earlier. I made the statement, and I stand by it, that we were never told at any time there would be two bites at the cherry. At no time was there any indication that we would proceed by stages in this matter. We were told that the recommendations would be brought down and that the house would act on them. Here is what the Prime Minister said as reported at page 359 of Hansard, November 30, 1960 dealing with the dispute which had arisen between the railways and the men. He said this, and I quote:

> The reason we say we are waiting for the report of the royal commission is this. It will make its report as to the means whereby these discriminatory rates may be avoided. Legislation will then be introduced in order to equalize opportunity across Canada. The companies may then make an application to the board of transport commissioners to raise the freight rates and to take into consideration the agreements now in existence between the employers and the unions back to January 1, 1960.

I asked the Prime Minister if he realized that this was bound to take some time; I had had some experience of these matters with the Turgeon commission. If hon. members will look at Hansard they will find the Prime Minister said the recommendations would be acted upon promptly. As the minister has said, the recommendations contained in volume 1 are of entirely different nature to those contained in volume 2. So it is difficult to understand why that statement or promise which was made by the Prime Minister was not implemented. After all, it was made almost two years ago. The Prime Minister surely knew the situation. He must have been in discussion with the members of the royal commission.

In so far as volume 3 is concerned, the minister knows better than I do that there will be no recommendations contained in that volume. At least, we have been told that that is the case. I believe the royal commission itself has made that clear in a press release. The third volume deals with technical matters, as the minister said, and is there to support either the first volume, or the second, or both volumes. So it is difficult to understand why it was not possible to implement the first part of the report.

A great deal was said by the Prime Minister about the effect of horizontal freight rates and how they were having a detrimental effect on the economy generally. I think there has always been general agreement on that. The only point which was at issue in that connection was how to do away with the unfavourable effect of the horizontal rates. The board of transport commissioners laid down several rulings in cases made public. The question is now whether volume 2 disagrees with what has been decided in those cases by the board of transport commissioners. I am not able to say, but I presume that the object of the first volume was to give these subsidies to the railways with that in mind. However, when I look at Hansard and at the statement made by the Prime Minister, which is to the effect that the moment the royal commission has made its report legislation will follow, the freeze will be lifted and the railways will be able to make their applications to the board of transport commissioners, I am not so sure. In these circumstances I think the minister will understand at once that it is not an easy matter for those of us who sit on this side to understand what is the view of the government.

Coming to the $6 million which I mentioned earlier, the minister is right. I was in error. I was calling on my memory. In any event, it is $4,500,000 and it is still a substantial amount which will have to be found. True, it is over a period of three years. Then there is the additional amount which will be required if a settlement is brought about between the railways and the non-operative employees. These payments to which the minister has referred will not suffice. The $50 million he is going to bring down in a supplementary estimate, the portion of the $4,500,000 which he will be required to bring down for the C.N.R. in the same sort of estimate, will not cover the amount required in the event of a settlement of the dispute between the railways and the non-operative employees. The question arises: how are these capital sums to be found?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did deal with that. I said they would be found in the way in which they have been found in the past and in the light of such provision as parliament may choose to make having in mind the recommendations of the royal commission.

Volume 3 of the report is not expected to contain any further recommendations but it is expected to contain studies which will throw more light on the recommendations contained in the previous two volumes.

On the matter of horizontal increases, it will be recalled that parliament took action at the request of the government two years ago to put a stop to such increases. As a matter of fact not only was a freeze placed on further applications to the board of transport commissioners in respect of further horizontal increases in railway freight rates, but parliament was asked to make provision —and it did—with a view to preventing a horizontal increase which was then about to be made in pursuance of leave granted by the board of transport commissioners.

It was on that account that parliament enacted the Freight Rates Reduction Act. It is due to the terms of that act that the last horizontal increase ordered by the board of transport commissioners was not carried into effect. In the light of the freeze put on by the board in respect of further applications to the board for horizontal increases parliament last year, after it was aware of the terms of volume 1 of the report of the royal commission, made available $50 million for payment to the railways, and a similar provision, as I have indicated, is going to be asked of parliament now without prejudice to whatever decision parliament may make in the light of the recommendations of the report or the date of the effect of such provisions as parliament may choose to make, particularly in regard to those matters that are dealt with in volume 1 of the report.

Mr. Chevrier: What was the $50 million to which the minister referred?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was provided last year in estimates for payment to the railways on terms to be determined by the board of transport commissioners. The board determined the distribution of that amount. My recollection is that approximately $29 million went to the Canadian National Railways and approximately $21 million went to the Canadian Pacific Railway. There was an item in last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. Chevrier: Was this to carry out the recommendations of volume 1 of the report to which I referred earlier?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. member will look at the statement made by my colleague the Minister of Transport at that time he will appreciate that parliament was asked to vote the sum with knowledge of the recommendations made in the report of the royal commission and also of the fact that the freeze on any further horizontal increase in railway freight rates was being extended; and generally with regard to the position of the railways. The sum was not associated specifically with the several recommendations contained in volume 1.

Mr. Chevrier: I have just now succeeded in locating item 590. The minister has it and can follow. Item 590—and I hope the minister is following me—reads as follows:

> Interim payments, related to recommendations of the royal commission on railway problems pending its complete report—

This would indicate it is in part performance of the recommendations contained in volume 1. I continue:

> —to companies as defined in the Freight Rates Reduction Act of an aggregate amount in respect of the calendar year 1961 of $50 million, to be paid in instalments at such times and in accordance with such method of allocation as may be determined by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, as compensation to such companies for the maintenance of their rates on freight traffic at reduced levels as provided for in the said act—

The act there referred to had already been passed. Under that measure $15 million had been given to the railways in reduction of their freight rates. The minister referred to the Freight Rates Reduction Act amendment which is now on the order paper. Similarly there was an amendment to the act last year which reduced freight rates to the extent of $15 million or $20 million, I have forgotten which.

As I read it, the $50 million is apparently partially in performance of the recommendations contained in volume 1. It is partially in performance of the reduction in freight rates as already mentioned in the Freight Rates Reduction Act. It is very difficult to understand this item of $50 million unless you look at it from the point of view that it is to fulfil the recommendations of the Milvain report with which the minister is perhaps more familiar than I am. Is that a correct assumption?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think not, Mr. Chairman. Each of us can interpret the terms of the appropriation act of last session as he sees fit. The fact is that item 590 speaks of interim payments related to recommendations of the royal commission on railway problems pending its complete report.

Now, parliament did not say that it was approving those recommendations in their entirety. Parliament took note of those recommendations and with that knowledge apparently saw sufficient merit in them to regard it as desirable to make some specific provision for payment to the railways, and the method of allocation of that $50 million among the various railways was chosen simply in the light of the provisions of the Freight Rates Reduction Act. The railways and the method or terms of allocation are the same. That is the significance of the reference to the Freight Rates Reduction Act in item 590.

Mr. Chevrier: There is one other point I wish to make. The minister has been endeavouring to answer my questions and I do not wish to pursue this matter unduly but there is another point I feel I should bring to the attention of the minister arising out of the payment of $50 million. I feel I should severely criticize the fact that payments are made to United States railways under this legislation. Under the Freight Rates Reduction Act—that is, the one that is on the order paper and the previous one that was on the order paper last session—there are a number of United States railways which are receiving payments out of the $20 million for reducing their rates by 9 per cent as required by the order of the board of transport commissioners. It is understood that the $50 million subsidy we have been discussing is being divided among the carriers in the same manner as the $20 million subsidy. I ask my hon. friend to look at the royal commission report very carefully. There is nothing in the report of the MacPherson royal commission that recommends subsidies to the United States carriers. Their recommendations refer only to the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways. The United States railways such as the New York Central in Ontario and Quebec, the Chesapeake and Ohio in Ontario, the Great Northern on the Pacific coast and the Midland Railway in Manitoba did not complain to the royal commission about losses on passenger service. So far as is known they do not have any unremunerative branch lines in Canada, except one of them, the Midland Railway of Manitoba, to a very small degree in the Crowsnest pass rates.

Bearing in mind that vote No. 590 we have been discussing refers to interim payments related to recommendations of the royal commission on railway problems pending its complete report, it is clear that none of the money covered by this vote should be paid to the United States carriers except perhaps a very small sum to the Midland Railway of Manitoba, as I have said, for participating in the Crowsnest pass rates.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has risen several times this evening. I have been attempting to deal with the matters the hon. member for Laurier has raised. I can be very brief about this one.

The so-called United States carriers the hon. member for Laurier referred to only enter into this discussion in so far as they are Canadian operators; that is to say, as they are operating in Canada. Some of these so-called United States railways are operated in connection with the Canadian transcontinental systems.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which one?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Grand Trunk Western is one.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Grand Trunk Western is owned by the people of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, isn't this remarkable?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it is. It is remarkable evidence of ignorance on the part of the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me say again that some of the so-called United States carriers are actually operated by the two Canadian transcontinental systems as part of their systems. This applies to some of the operations across the border. The United States railways or United States carriers that are referred to in any of these statutes or the regulations under them are included simply to the extent that they are operating in Canada. So far as the provisions of the Freight Rate Reductions Act are concerned, the benefits of that act are extended only to those railways which were denied the benefit of the horizontal increase in freight rates to which they became entitled under the order of the board of transport commissioners. Obviously any from whom the benefit provided by that order was withdrawn in the Freight Rates Reduction Act were entitled to share in the provision that parliament made to compensate the railways for the loss of expectation of benefit under that order of the board of transport commissioners.

With reference to the sharing of the $50 million, may I say these factors are all taken into account by the board of transport commissioners. This was the intent of parliament. This is the provision that parliament made in relation to item 590. We may be very sure that the board of transport commissioners has not been handing out benefits to any railway that is not entitled to them.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may be allowed just one word, I should just like to say this. My hon. friend seems to be under the mistaken apprehension that these moneys are going to United States railways operating in Canada. The point is that the United States railways operating in Canada did not seek from the board of transport commissioners or from the royal commission on transportation benefits for unprofitable or unremunerative lines, nor were they granted the same. The royal commission on transportation made no recommendations giving the United States lines in Canada subsidies. That is the point that I am making. As to vote 590 to which the minister has referred, he stated that was in part to carry out and to implement the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation. I am saying here that some of this $50 million has gone to these railways notwithstanding the fact that they never asked for it and notwithstanding the fact that no recommendations to this effect were made by the royal commission on transportation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will repeat my statement, I hope for the last time as I do not wish to see the committee detained unnecessarily. The $50 million was not provided to implement the report of the royal commission.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not what the minister said a while ago.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is the fundamental error in the reasoning and approach of the hon. member, if he will permit me to say so.

Mr. Chevrier: Then why refer to it at all?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will give the wording of item 590:

> Interim payments, related to recommendations ... on railway problems—

In other words, parliament took into account that recommendation. But it also had before it the fact that there was a freeze on freight rates and there had been a withdrawal of the benefits that railways might have expected to receive under the last previous general increase in freight rates permitted by the board of transport commissioners. These were all taken into account. I think that is the answer to the hon. member's observation.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I just wanted to say that I was very pleased to hear the minister's statement that it was not the intention of the government to rush into any legislation arising out of the royal commission report.

Mr. Pickersgill: They do not rush into anything.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I think it is obvious that volume 3 that we have coming from the royal commmission contains much of the supporting material on which their conclusions contained in volumes 1 and 2 were arrived at. It would seem to me that for the government to bring forward legislation and face the transportation agencies in Canada with it before that material is available would put them in a very unfair position. I am quite surprised indeed that the hon. member for Laurier should be urging that the government take quick action in this regard. I feel quite certain that the various transportation agencies in Canada have not even begun to be able to assess all of the implications of the far reaching proposals that have been made in the royal commission report. I was certainly pleased to hear the minister's assurance that it is not the intention of the government to place the transportation agencies in that unfair position by rushing into any hasty legislation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 735 carry?

Mr. Fisher: No, Mr. Chairman. There are a couple of questions that I should like to ask the minister. One of the things that puzzle me about the royal commission on transportation is this. I understood or interpreted from statements made in this house by the Prime Minister over several years, and under repeated questioning, that the royal commission on transportation would have nothing to say about the Crowsnest pass rates, which I myself thought was an oversight and should have fallen within their terms of reference. Yet this matter was specifically ruled out. Nevertheless, the other day, in answer to a question that I had on the order paper namely question 374 we discover as follows:

> The commission made an independent assessment of the studies and submissions and alternative figures arrived at by experts retained by the commission. Certain conclusions and estimates of the commission are contained in volume 1 of its report. The commission has also reported that special studies will be included in volume 3 which has not yet been received by the government. No other estimates of the cost of moving such grain have been provided to the government during the past two years.

There are two oddities about this to me. One is that we have on the way this information from the royal commission about the Crowsnest pass rates when the Prime Minister specifically ruled out the possibility of any alterations or changes in the Crowsnest pass rates. I understand his words went along the line of phrases such as "sacred covenant" and something that was part of the tradition or almost the birthright of the western farmer.

Mr. Rapp: And rightly so.

An hon. Member: The Magna Carta.

Mr. Rapp: And rightly so.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, the Magna Carta; and the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale says "rightly so". If this is the case, what was this study of the Crowsnest rates so important for? Probably the reason we are still waiting for this volume 3 is this. I understand all the experts of the commission have been dispersed, and the commissioners. We know Mr. Mann now has a job heading up the national harbours board. I understand Mr. Anderson, the secretary, is back out west. What is the point of this study of the Crowsnest pass rates, especially in view of the Prime Minister's commitment that this matter was not going to be touched. I understand we are now going to have from this study what is considered to be the exact expert figure of the burden that the railways are carrying in terms of loss between the revenue they get from the grain traffic and the actual cost of carrying it. This is most interesting information, that this is in hand. But I should like to have some explanation as to why the commission, it seems to me almost in defiance of the line set out by the Prime Minister, should get involved in this particular case.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question.

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it not a fact that while the Prime Minister said in the house on one occasion that the Crowsnest pass rates would not be involved, the terms of reference to the commission were not consistent with the assurance given by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Fisher: I quite agree with the hon. member for Essex East. However, there is a related factor coming in here. On the very first day on which the commission met there was a long discussion as to its terms of reference and the whole question was introduced as to whether it could go into labour matters. I am sure the minister probably knows that after some discussion and some submissions it was assumed, on the basis of statements of the Prime Minister to parliament to quite an extent, that the whole question of railway labour was not to be touched on by this commission. I was at the first couple of hearings and I think my memory is correct that this was one of the main reasons why the whole problem of railway labour, which in many people's minds has been central to the predicament of the railways, was not considered, because there had been indications in the house that, though the matter was not strictly within the terms of reference of the commission to rule one way or the other, this was not the intention of the government. Yet we have the situation where this royal commission has bumbled its way into the Crowsnest pass rates picture and has come up with what I am sure will be claimed to be a solid figure showing the difference between the come and the go.

There is one other aspect of the recommendations of the royal commission that I find very ironical, and I wonder whether the minister has seen the irony. I should like to have his comments upon it. Certain newspapers have also picked up this point. I refer to the fact that by the time one has finished reading volume 2 of the commission's report it is apparent that the idea is that the railways are going to be freed at last to get out and compete. Subsidies are going to be wiped out. They are going to do away with the bridge subsidy which is a very real measure of help to the area from which I come. That kind of thing is an anachronism to me. They are not going to fiddle with all these subsidies in this new era of transportation into which we are moving. I know this found wide appeal, particularly in the newspapers of Canada which tend to be great free enterprise organs.

But here is the irony. How is this revolution going to be achieved? It is going to be achieved by more subsidies. We are going to wipe out the bridge subsidy which is designed to remunerate both railways and shippers of goods from eastern Canada to western Canada. The wiping out of that subsidy is something that is certainly going to affect traffic that moves through our area but according to the commission it has got to go. This is the anachronism. How are we going to get this new era under way? We are going to start handing out subsidies. The hon. member for Laurier referred to the total, almost $100 million. That is the great free competition and free enterprise of this new era. As the minister is the one who, in the short range picture at least, has to come up with these new subsidies, I am wondering whether he is aware that there is a certain paradox in the recommendations of the commission. I should like to have his views on this matter.

There is another thing I should like to point out to the minister that I find ironical. Aside from the submission of the British Columbia government, it is almost impossible for me at least to find in the hearings any evidence upon which these thinkers on the royal commission base this whole new era of free enterprise and competition that is to be opened up for the railways. I have very grave doubts whether the commissioners really listened to the people who came to the hearings. I am making the assumption here that several people on the commission and probably one or two of the professional help theorized that what was needed in the railway picture was the opening up of competition and the freeing of the railways so that they could get into the fight and hold their own against the truckers and all other forms of transportation, and consequently they did not really pay any attention to the briefs that were presented.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise a point of order. I do not claim to know too much about the rules but it does seem to me that we seem to be discussing is the report of the commission, which will be open to discussion at another time. It also seems that certain assumptions are being made that the commissioners did not listen to some of the briefs presented to them. I would suggest that we are getting rather far afield.

Mr. Fisher: On the point of order, we may be getting far afield but I suggest to the hon. member for Greenwood that the discussion started a few minutes after eight o'clock and for 35 minutes thereafter it ranged quite widely. I think it will be acknowledged that the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Laurier went into topics very much like this one, so I do not feel I am out of place in making these remarks. Really what I am doing is repeating an appeal to the Minister of Finance. Does he not think there is something bizarre in this whole theme of opening things up to competition and wiping out all these subsidies including the cutting down of some of the maritime subsidies that exist at the present time? The idea is that we are going to get back to competition, and yet at the same time the commissioners turn around and they are going to give the railways new kinds of handouts such as passenger subsidies for a time, branch line abandonment subsidies and so on. To me this is completely inconsistent, almost as inconsistent as the supposedly accurate study of the Crowsnest pass rates.

The other point I want to come back to is the question of the bridge subsidy. I should like to make the point to the minister that if this subsidy disappears it will be quite obvious that the very strong representations made by groups from our area at the hearings at Port Arthur completely failed to impress the commission. One of the factors that is central to defending our position and maintaining the link between eastern Canada and western Canada is the bridge subsidy or a subsidy of that kind; but that is to go out of the window.

As one of our local authorities on transportation matters, Mr. Charnock of the Fort William chamber of commerce, pointed out, this dream of competition is wonderful where you have competition in terms of traffic and in terms of carriers but in an area such as ours this kind of competition is very tenuous. What we are afraid of is something that is actually taking place at the present time in that a great deal of the automobile production of eastern Canada that is being shipped to western Canada, particularly to British Columbia, is being driven across the border, loaded on American rail carriers and shipped through to British Columbia rather than being transported the Canadian way. Will this removal of the bridge subsidy be another sample of the kind of steps that make us even less able to compete? While most of us are pleased at the present time to have the kind of competition that exists to a degree between the truckers and the railroaders from the point of view of giving shippers an alternative, in our part of the country we still think that kind of competition in a transcontinental way is a pretty shadowy and insubstantial thing at the present time and that to think of opening it up is fantastic.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Another point I should like to make to the minister about the royal commission on railway problems has to do with the assumption it makes throughout that trucking is a mode of transportation in which it is very easy to get started because it does not require very much capital. All I know is that the C.N.R. has gone through about $15 million in the last couple of years getting into it. We do not know how much the C.P.R. has spent but it is a considerable sum of money. So we have these two big railway organizations going deeply into trucking and being encouraged now to go into it even more deeply, and we are led to believe that this is going to lead to a more and more competitive situation. I fail to see how it possibly can. I fail to see how a small or medium size public carrier on the highways can really compete in the long haul with what must be a monopolistic tendency on the part of the railways as they move into this field. It seems to me an encouragement to the railways that they have certainly welcomed.

I know a great many of the employees have welcomed the idea that at last they are going to be able to get in and compete with truckers, but I wonder if this is the way to do it. Are the trucking lines associated with the railways going to be required to pay income tax? Are Husband, East-West, Kingsway and all these lines now associated with the C.N.R. going to pay income tax? If they are not, then it is quite obvious that they have a competitive advantage over trucking lines that are not associated with the C.N.R.

To me it seems that the royal commission has raised almost as many problems as it solved, and it is for that reason I disagree with the hon. member for Laurier in his plea for urgency in tackling its recommendations. I hope the government proceeds slowly in regard to them, slowly enough so that we can bring a very strong case against the removal of the bridge subsidy until we can see there is some kind of salvation for this in the so-called competitive milieu that is going to be opened up.

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, for being carried away into areas detached from the specific question with which I started. I shall just repeat—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Perhaps I can save the hon. member the trouble. I do not intend to make any comment on the acceptability or validity of any recommendation the commission has made. The discussion earlier was on broad aspects of the report, and it would be entirely premature and inappropriate while this whole question is under study for a minister to make any comment whatever on the acceptability of any particular recommendation.

Mr. Fisher: Aside from the acceptability of recommendations, what about the fact that this commission is coming up in volume 3 with figures on the loss pattern in the grain rates? Does the minister not consider this a contradiction of the statements that were made by the Prime Minister over a period of several years? The railways will now claim this to be an accurate picture of the losses they suffer in carrying grain under the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Prime Minister has stated government policy in clear and unmistakable terms, and that is that as long as this government is in office the grain growers of western Canada are going to retain the full benefit of the Crowsnest pass rates. That is fundamental in the policy of the government.

The railways asked for determinations as to what they regarded as the loss they were incurring in carrying grain under the Crowsnest pass rates and the royal commission, at least in a divided report in this respect, made certain findings and certain recommendations as to how the alleged loss should be borne. But the statement of the Prime Minister is clear and abiding, that no thought will be given at any time to depriving the grain growers of western Canada of their rights in respect of the Crowsnest pass rates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to give an assurance on behalf of the party which will form the next government of Canada—and that probably quite soon—that the Crowsnest pass rates will be retained, as they were restored by a Liberal government after the first world war when they were torpedoed by the Tories.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I appreciate that the minister finds it difficult to deal with particular recommendations of the royal commission at this time. I also assume he would find it difficult to deal with omissions in the royal commission report with regard to representations made by communities about unfair, discriminatory rates, as they saw them, in so far as their competitive position is concerned in relation to other areas.

The community from which I come was joined by farm and labour organizations in the county of Essex and all through southwestern Ontario with regard to the inequitable freight rate structure which prevails in this area, as compared with other sections in the province of Ontario, notably the area that originates in Toronto eastwards.

The average freight rates between Windsor and Toronto are 25 per cent higher than those paid in the area from Toronto as far as Montreal. This imposes a heavy burden, not only on secondary industry in my section of the province, but also in the farming community. It is possible to ship a bushel of corn from Chicago to Montreal more cheaply than it is to ship a bushel of grain from Windsor to Montreal.

Having in mind the conditions prevailing in southwestern Ontario at the present time, particularly in the city of Windsor with regard to secondary industry and the consequential problem of unemployment that flows therefrom, it would seem to me, as it does to the Windsor industrial commission, to the chamber of commerce, to the labour organizations and others who have made recommendations to the effect that if the government is anxious to do something about these areas that are suffering from heavy unemployment, consideration ought to be given to alleviation of the inequitable freight rate structure which prevails in respect of the communities I have mentioned as compared to other sections of the province of Ontario and elsewhere.

The minister may say he cannot deal with this sort of thing at this time but the executive arm undoubtedly has the power of providing for a removal of these inequities.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the past the executive has acted.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says no but I beg to differ. In the past the executive has taken action to remove these inequities. One example of that was given in the statement made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with regard to the Crowsnest pass rates. The traditional attitude taken with regard to that arises out of executive action, confirmed by various royal commissions, and reflected in the statement of policy enunciated by the minister just now. I do not quarrel with that. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said, the Liberal party, when in office, took a position with regard to that. What I am now saying is that if the complaint which has been registered by the area from which I come is valid —and I believe it is—it is within the power of the government of Canada, the executive arm of government, to take action to remove these inequities. The minister has that power. This parliament has the power—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Parliament has, but not the executive.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When I say the executive I mean the executive has power to make recommendations which, in the form of legislative enactment, can rectify a situation which is felt to be unfair. If the government wants to do something about this grievance, and I believe there is a crying need, it has that power. I am not saying that the minister should tell us tonight what it proposes to do, but in the unhappy event that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues should ever be in power in the future, and that we greatly doubt, all I am saying to them now is that this is a matter in which the city of Windsor and southwestern Ontario generally are vitally interested. The brief that was presented by the Windsor industrial commission was supported not only by the city of Windsor and other communities in the county of Essex, but by communities all the way to London. This is a matter about which there is keen, and I think understandable, interest. I raise it tonight so that the minister can be forewarned once again of the position taken by these communities.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, if we are going to go into the complaints about the existing freight rates structure from individual communities in Canada, then we are certainly not going to reach item 729 tonight.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That does not alter the fact that a legitimate grievance can be mentioned.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The fact is that for those who will take the trouble to read the Railway Act—and I doubt that the hon. member has for some time—they will find there provisions giving to the board of transport commissioners power to relieve in cases where they find undue and unjust discrimination in freight rates. That is the rule of the act, and anybody, any community or any shipper who feels he is being called upon to pay rates that are discriminatory can go to the board of transport commissioners with his complaint.

I am a little surprised at the hon. member's statement tonight that the railway freight rate on a bushel of corn from Chicago to Toronto is lower than the freight rate on a bushel of grain from Windsor to Toronto.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit me to make a correction. I did say Toronto; I meant to say a bushel of corn from Chicago to Montreal.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What is the hon. member comparing it with now?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am comparing it with the rate for shipping a similar amount of corn from Windsor to Montreal.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think that on examination it will be found that the determining factor there undoubtedly will be the rates by water transportation. These are elements that enter into the determination of the board of transport commissioners constantly in cases of alleged freight rate discrimination. But this is something that is a far cry from the matter now under discussion, which is the report of the royal commission. These are matters to be considered when parliament is called upon to deal with legislation in the light of the report of the royal commission some time in the future.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there is one question I would like to ask the minister. I am sure that he, as the minister responsible for finding funds, will remember that a few weeks ago we passed a measure relating to a new line in the Gaspe area requiring the raising of a minimum of $14 million. I wonder if at the time it was being considered by the government any discussions or conversations were held between the minister or any other member of the cabinet and some of the experts or commissioners of this royal commission on transportation before they dispersed, to see whether this line met with the approval of the commissioners, particularly since their recommendations were so strong and so stark against embarking upon any more railway building unless it could be shown that the line was competitive and stood a very good chance of making a reasonable return on its investment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not aware of any such discussion, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

736. Expenses of the royal commission on Canadian magazines and other periodicals—further amount required, $22,800.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, one wonders why we should be voting this money at all. The left hand of the government obviously does not know what the right hand is doing, if indeed they can tell their right hand from their left hand. We read, for example, in last night's Toronto Telegram—which is the sort of Pravda or Izvestia, I am not quite sure which, of this government—an editorial entitled "No action on magazines", which says:

The Minister of Finance will receive high marks—

And I am sure he will be delighted to hear this; he does not get many compliments these days;

—for his decision not to proceed with the O'Leary plan to destroy by an oppressive tax measure U.S. magazines located in Canada.

I might say that this is in a newspaper published by a prominent Tory candidate in Toronto, a favourite of the government who was handed a television charter over all his competitors as a special favour and now is apparently seeking to consolidate his hold on that part of the public domain by becoming a member of this house; but apparently they forgot to tell him what they were doing. His paper pours all this saliva on the Minister of Finance. I think perhaps I ought to read it again just in case every hon. member did not get it:

The Minister of Finance will receive high marks for his decision not to proceed with the O'Leary plan to destroy by an oppressive tax measure U.S. magazines located in Canada.

If that is Pravda, I suppose the Ottawa Journal is Izvestia. It is too bad the government could not keep the two of them in line, but they seem to have terrible difficulty in doing so, though they were completely in line about wanting to end the proceedings of this parliament, in some premature editorials which appeared in both of them in almost identical terms not so long ago. You will remember that too, sir.

My reason for raising this is that there is on the notice paper—it is not yet on the orders of the day, so I am not transgressing any rule of the house by referring to it; and if someone has a copy I could take a look at it—notice in the name of a colleague of the Minister of Finance that these things the minister was congratulated in Pravda for not doing are going, at the bidding of Izvestia, to be done by one of the minister's colleagues.

It has always been a tradition of parliament, one of the most fundamental of our traditions, that the budget is put before this country and tax changes are proposed by the Minister of Finance, and not by some other minister a couple of days after the budget in some back door fashion. I suggest that no minister of finance since confederation would have endured this humiliation that is being heaped by his colleagues upon the Minister of Finance, two days after the budget, when another minister introduces tax changes to correct the mistakes of the Minister of Finance in his budget, or the deficiencies, or the oversights, or perhaps the pages that the minister had that he did not get time to read. Perhaps that is the explanation of it. I apologize to the minister for not being here, but I understand that he even had a deficit in his budget speech as well as the deficit in the budget of the country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Two of them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I say that the minister should not be here at all. He should not be in this house at all after being humiliated in this fashion, having another minister substituted for him in proposing tax changes. His resignation should be on the Prime Minister's desk and he should not be before us. I would like the minister to explain how it comes about—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Here are the two missing parts of the budget.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh. Well perhaps they are not strictly relevant.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Read them well.

Mr. Drysdale: You would not let them get on the record.

Mr. Pickersgill: I find here in Hansard for April 11, the same date as this newspaper which was not tipped off properly or adequately, a statement by the Prime Minister. This appears to have been made early in the afternoon, at about the same time this paper was on the streets:

I might add that the Leader of the Opposition asked whether there was anything else to come before the house. Two resolutions will be placed on the order paper in respect of certain recommendations made by the O'Leary commission. They will be under the name of the Minister of National Revenue.

I do not know whether they are actually on the notice paper.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, they are not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Apparently they are not even there yet, so I certainly am not out of order. It is perhaps premature to ask the minister to resign, and perhaps what the Prime Minister promised in the house will not be implemented. It would not be new for the Prime Minister to make these airy-fairy promises and then for nothing else to happen. There are 80 outstanding and I can give the minister a list of them, if he would like them, neatly mimeographed and set out with proper references. So perhaps this matter will never come before the house and perhaps the minister will not have to resign until it does. Or perhaps the minister can get a lot of his friends to send telegrams from all over the country and once more save him from the axe as happened last December. Perhaps we shall have another pilgrimage to Quebec and another dealing of the cards and another joker.

An hon. Member: Perhaps.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly it is extraordinary that we should have a budget brought down, presumably giving all the tax changes for the year, and then on the next day the Prime Minister should come in and humiliate the Minister of Finance by announcing that another minister is going to introduce some other tax measures. It is unprecedented. It is clear that we have no more collective responsibility. It means a complete collapse of government in this country, and for that reason I move that this item be reduced to $1.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not too early in the evening to observe that the hon. member is talking through his hat. He was not here to listen to the budget speech but he is discussing now with the semblance of great authority a subject of which he knows little, if anything. It is typical of him that he should talk so freely about subjects he knows little or nothing about.

The hon. member is about 48 hours late in raising comment on this matter. I was asked about this question on Tuesday night.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the house?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, not in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Parliament is not told, but you tell people outside.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, I do reserve the right to talk outside the house as well as inside. I was asked about the O'Leary report and I said then, as I am prepared to say now, that this was a large subject in itself and it was more appropriate that it should be dealt with separately from the budget. That is why the Prime Minister said what was indicated in the course of yesterday's review of matters to come before the house. The house will have a better opportunity of dealing with this important and far reaching subject in the way proposed by the government than if it were submerged with many other subjects in the course of a general budget discussion.

When the hon. member portrays with mock grief and sympathy the humiliation which he sees heaped upon the Minister of Finance, let me say at once that I reject his miserable crocodile tears. I want no sympathy from any shedder of crocodile tears. The government has proceeded in a way which is beyond the understanding of those who had their governmental experience in dictatorial days. The hon. member simply does not understand why a government should attempt to follow a course which would give parliament the most effective and fullest opportunity to discuss a subject which is of great national importance.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot allow the statement made by the minister and the aspersions cast by the minister to go without reply. However, the reply will be brief, if the minister can contain his impatience, and then the question can be put. The only thing I can find to agree with in what the minister said was his use of the word "submerge" with respect to his budget. He said the government did not want the O'Leary recommendations submerged with the budget. I suggest that that is exactly what the government has in mind—submerging this budget, drowning it without a trace, and they wish they could do it, having heard what the public has to say about it. Perhaps the Prime Minister knowing how badly the budget was going to be received, wanted to associate the recommendations having to do with the O'Leary report with some other minister rather than the Minister of Finance. At no time that I can recall since confederation—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Have you been here since confederation? Who do you think you are?

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest to the minister that he can make his reply when I have concluded and when I can hear what he has to say.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, my lord.

Mr. Pickersgill: Instead of doing the muttering he is doing from his seat—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was standing up.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a direct quote from the minister. As I was saying when the minister began muttering, at no time that I can recall has any minister of finance since confederation been humiliated the day after the budget by having the Prime Minister announce that something had been overlooked, or not dealt with, and that some other minister rather than the Minister of Finance was going to introduce tax changes. It is a profound humiliation. I do not say it is an undeserved humiliation, but it is a humiliation which no self-respecting minister of finance would endure for an instant. But we know of the humiliations which the minister has endured in that quarter, and having endured so many others, this, perhaps, is one more cross that he has decided to bear until those many crosses are made on the ballots which will put the minister out of his misery.

An hon. Member: Are you going to lose?

Mr. Pickersgill: I say this is a shocking way to treat parliament. The minister talks about other governments being dictatorial. No government since confederation has ever gone on 12 days after the end of the fiscal year without getting its supply voted for the previous year. And why?

Some hon. Members: Obstruction.

Mr. Pickersgill: Notwithstanding the biggest majority in history the Prime Minister goes on the air weeping crocodile tears and saying that he cannot control the House of Commons—that he cannot carry on the government; that he is paralysed by a handful of people in the opposition. That is the kind of self-confessed incompetence with which we have to deal, boasted about on the radio and on the television. If the Prime Minister believes he is incapable of getting the business of the country done, the sooner he ceases to try the better it will be for Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I shall be brief in my comment on this latest hysterical outburst. The hon. member speaks with great authority on things which have happened or have not happened since confederation. This, I suggest, is just one more of his indulgences in an arrogant type of boasting, but I will follow him in this—that I am sure that since confederation this chamber has not heard a more crocodile speech than that one.

We have an opportunity, now, to judge the earnestness, the genuineness, the sincerity of those protestations that we hear from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and others among his colleagues as to their eagerness to get on and debate item No. 729. This was the important item, they said, and they could not get to it fast enough. But you see what has happened, Mr. Chairman? We have been debating tonight for one and a half hours and we have passed one item. And here is the hon. gentleman prolonging this discussion by inviting a vote when he knows perfectly well that what is at stake here is whether the expenses incurred in the appointment and inquiries of the royal commission should be paid. This is what he is now proposing, that these expenses should not be paid. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that no crocodile could propose anything more irresponsible.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am suggesting to you, sir, that this royal commission was totally and completely unnecessary, that any government that had even the most elementary capacity for decision would not have required any royal commission to go into this matter—

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): You would have done nothing; just like the Liberal party.

Mr. Pickersgill: This government has done nothing and it will do nothing. If the rumours that still float around this town are correct, there will be nothing whatever done by this parliament about the recommendations of the royal commission except to put things on the order paper that will never be implemented unless this session is going on a lot longer than most of the backbenchers supporting the government want it to. As the hon. gentleman said, nothing will be done about this matter.

Mr. Drysdale: Irresponsible opposition.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no earthly reason why many thousands of dollars should have been spent on this royal commission. The problem is a simple, obvious problem. It was dealt with by the previous government in a definite manner. Speaking of crocodile tears, I have never seen a crocodile shedding tears—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We have, tonight.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but there never was such a flood of phony tears shed about anything as was shed by the hon. member for Eglinton when he was sitting over here denouncing a government that did something about Canadian magazines, instead of appointing expensive royal commissions to write reports about them that are ignored. Therefore it seems to me we might as well salvage a little out of this by not paying this bill.

Mr. Fisher: I am very hesitant to speak at this time for fear the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will accuse me of being Ilya Ehrenburg or some other Russian figure.

An hon. Member: He is a great authority on Russians, too.

Mr. Fisher: With respect to the hon. member's amendment let me say we do not lightly introduce amendments, and since support of this amendment would indicate that the commission and its recommendations are completely in disfavour with our party, which is not the case, we will vote against it.

Amendment (Mr. Pickersgill) negatived: Yeas, 15; nays, 56.

Mr. Fisher: I put a question on the order paper last week concerning the loss of production in paper mills arising out of the recommendations of this commission. The reply I received was that no loss of production has been anticipated. I feel this is a valid question on this item. By that answer is it meant that the government has considered the possibility of loss of production in Canadian paper mills and has concluded that there will be no loss?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, that would depend entirely on the direction in which the consequences flow. It has been contended by at least one publisher in Canada of a so-called Canadian edition of a foreign periodical that there would be a reduction in the requirement for coated paper. This is on the theory that any withdrawal from their circulation would not flow to the advantage of Canadian periodicals and be reflected in increased purchases of coated paper on their part.

The correctness of the view of the publisher that I referred to again depends on whether he is right in saying that the result would flow to the advantage of different media of communication. That is the question. This is a matter that will have to be discussed in due time when this house takes up the proposals that arise out of the study made by the royal commission. I do not think we can pursue it here in this committee at this time.

Mr. Fisher: On an item such as this I dislike bringing up an issue that involves my riding, but the Provincial Paper Mill in Port Arthur is the mill that provides paper not only for Reader's Digest and Time but also for most Maclean-Hunter publications. The minister is probably aware that the unions in that plant supported by other related groups have made representations to the government with regard to the likelihood of a loss of a minimum of 75 or up to 120 days work in a very busy mill.

The dilemma is this, and I wish to present it to the minister for a bit more information. If the recommendations of the O'Leary commission are not carried out we have an indication from Maclean-Hunter and other Canadian publishers that they will be forced to fold Canadian magazines such as Maclean's and Chatelaine and therefore out would go that part of the production of Provincial Paper Mills. On the other hand Reader's Digest and Time say that if the government proceeds with the legislation they will have to withdraw to the United States and out will go that part.

In a small way we have a problem for Solomon here. No matter which way the thing moves there is the likelihood that this particular paper mill, which is the largest producer in Canada of coated papers, is going to get it in the neck. I am sure the minister will appreciate why I am so anxious to know, as the representative of the people of that area, what negotiations the government has carried on with the various people involved so as to obtain some idea how much truth there is in the threat of Reader's Digest and Time that they are going to go back to the United States. For this reason I shall be very interested in the legislation when it is introduced to see to what extent it will come to bear on these companies.

I know the minister really cannot give much more information than he has but I wish to ask him whether negotiations or discussions have taken place recently—by that I mean within the last three or four weeks—with the representatives of Reader's Digest and Time as to their likely course of action should the government implement the recommendations of the O'Leary report.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, questions as to what action may be taken on the report are, I think, quite extraneous to the item now before us. The item is related to an amount required to pay the expenses incurred by the royal commission. As to what is proper discussion in relation to action to be taken on the report, of course, that will come before parliament in due course. The question is perhaps quite understandably anticipating discussion of that kind and I think it would be altogether premature.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Finance a question. I listened to what he had to say a few moments ago rather heatedly in reply to the interesting observations made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. My recollection is that when the minister spoke outside of this chamber over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television facilities and perhaps also over the private television facilities, with regard to the question as to why the O'Leary commission recommendations were not included in the budget he said not what he indicated a few moments ago but that there was no intention to deal with them and he gave no indication that the government was going to bring in legislation dealing with those recommendations in another form. Certainly so far as my memory serves me the minister—and I wish to be fair to him—that night indicated that there was no intention to deal with the O'Leary commission recommendations and that there was not anything unusual about that matter; that it was the government's policy; and that if it had been otherwise, it would have been provided for in the budget.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is entirely mistaken. I did not say whether the government was going to take action or was not going to take action. That was not the question that was put to me. The question was in relation to there not being any reference to that subject in the budget. I made the response that I indicated here earlier this evening, namely, that the subject was such that it would be much better that it be dealt with by itself rather than be included in a budget with a great many other subjects.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is not the real fact that the government had decided not to deal with the O'Leary recommendations and that this decision was represented by no reference to the O'Leary commission in the budget report, but that the next morning the Prime Minister received a delegation of certain proprietors of certain periodicals and that it was as a result of the representations made there, in the light of coming events having to do with a general election, that the government changed its mind and the minister was put in the humiliating position in which he found himself the next morning?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman. There is not one word or tittle or trace of truth in what the hon. member has just said. That is a piece of Martinian conjecture from start to finish and there is no truth in it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the minister say I was justified in saying that there was a certain representation from certain proprietors of certain periodicals—certain instruments of mass media of the written word—the next morning that called on the Prime Minister? Or perhaps it is a fact that the Prime Minister did not advise the Minister of Finance that there was such a delegation that called on him the day after the budget had been delivered. Is that a fact?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman. Apparently the hon. member does not know what facts are.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Has the hon. gentleman the exact words of what he said on television? Has he the text there? This matter may prove to be very important.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have in my office the text of the answers given on the French television.

Mr. Chevrier: That was wonderful.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you very much.

Mr. Chevrier: Boy, was that good.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it would be very helpful, and I am seeking to be helpful—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —if the minister would do this. I should not want to hold up the item now that my amendment has been defeated. However, I think it would be helpful if the minister would undertake to get the exact words as there would have been a tape recording made for reference purposes of what the minister said, and we know how much attached this government is to tape recordings. Would the minister give us the precise words that he used outside the house to the public about the omission from his budget speech—on television in English—of any reference to the O'Leary report?

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This was a statement to the press in the press conference which the Minister of Finance always has the honour of having with the press gallery after the delivery of the budget.

An hon. Member: They always misquote him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is very mysterious.

Mr. Fisher: I just wanted—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Essex East is very mysterious himself most of the time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister is getting angry.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, the minister is not getting angry. The fact is that I just cannot bear cant and humbug.

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Fisher: I wish to take up the point raised by the hon. member for Essex East and perhaps phrase it a little bit differently. Will the minister not agree that, if we do not have before this house dissolves the legislation indicated by the Prime Minister in his statement yesterday morning there will be a natural restriction or at least a very human restriction upon the editorial comment in the coming election campaign, in view of the fact that the whole matter will be up in the air and not only these United States publications which have their influence but also all Canadian publications that have a self-interest in this measure will be walking a very careful line?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 736 carry?

Mr. Fisher: Since the minister was so extensive in his answer to the hon. member for Essex East, I wonder whether he would answer my question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Extensive but not altogether complimentary.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have respect for the freedom of the press and of views expressed in it. However, I do not think that the hon. member in making his conjecture expects me to agree with him. I certainly do not agree with him.

Mr. Pickersgill: We have just had another remarkable example of cabinet solidarity. We know that the Prime Minister refers to the press as the servile press. We now have the minister boasting about our having a free press. Which of the heads of government speaks for the government?

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY—
SECRETARY OF STATE

739. Distribution of official documents—further amount required, $35,500.

Mr. Matheson: I will try not to be long. I should like to comment briefly on this vote. Recently members received the publication "Canada and the United Nations, 1960". It is published by the Queen's printer under the auspices of the Department of External Affairs. This is the kind of document which has the story of the development of the United Nations and particularly Canada's part therein within recent years. At the beginning of this booklet there is a picture in which I think all Canadians will take pride. It is that of the Prime Minister of Canada addressing the 15th regular session of the United Nations general assembly. There is also an attractive portrait of Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs presiding over a plenary meeting of the general assembly as one of the vice presidents of the general assembly. We all recognize the fact that a government in power will be publishing this kind of material. We welcome this kind of publication as being a part of their responsibility and adding to our knowledge of what its various departments are doing. Now, by way of contrast, I wish to mention something that has been disturbing a number of people.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Matheson: I have been asked by an hon. member in his seat to name them. I shall mention one person by name who brought this matter to my attention very recently. It was Dr. C. P. Wright who is British, who holds a Ph.D. degree and who has scholarly background in juridical matters and British constitutional procedure. Some time ago I placed on the order paper question 359 relating to the printing and the distribution of the bill of rights or the so-called bill of rights, since, when we examine the document in question of which 20,000 copies have been distributed all over Canada, we find that it really is not the bill of rights at all but is only a part of the bill of rights.

It actually appears to be part I but it is not that alone. The art work is of the finest. It is a tribute to the abilities of the artists on the staff of the Queen's printer, particularly Yvonne Diceman. If we take the answers given by the Secretary of State the other day it would appear that the idea was that of Yvonne Diceman and the Queen's printer alone.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Here is a document which has gone all over the country in volume. It has gone to many schools and many areas where there are new Canadians and people with very limited knowledge of legal and constitutional matters and civil liberties. Here we have a part of the act with the most beautiful art work possible. The heraldic work is excellent. But with part I of the act there is also an extract from the speech of the Prime Minister, with the words underneath, "The Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, Prime Minister of Canada, House of Commons Debates, July 1, 1960". In ink of another colour is the signature of the Prime Minister and it would appear as though he had signed each individual copy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I thank the supporters of the government for their applause but I think there is a principle involved here and we have to have courage enough to stand up and say that under these circumstances this is not a proper expenditure of the public printing and stationery branch. I would ask hon. gentlemen in this house, and we are all gentlemen—

Mr. Martel: Except the ladies.

Mr. Matheson: Yes, except the more beautiful and talented members of the house—to consider what they would think if, for example, when old age pensions were introduced or the veterans charter or legislation relating to NATO or family allowances or the St. Lawrence seaway, the Queen's printer and the heraldic artist had produced a document of this kind over the signature of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent or the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King. There would have been outcry from coast to coast.

Mr. McIlraith: And properly so.

Mr. Matheson: Actually many lawyers were concerned about the bill of rights. We know that the dominion council of the Canadian bar association urged the Minister of Justice to withhold the legislation because it was in many respects misleading and because it was not clear what liberties if any it was intended to alter or enlarge. I do not intend to touch on that aspect but I do intend to touch on the fact that this particular document with all this art work which has been distributed at public expense has been used deliberately to convey the false impression that this country has received new liberties and that these are the gift of the gentleman who now presides as Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

740. Printing and binding official publications for sale and distribution to departments and the public —further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. Matheson: I would refer to a recent issue of the Toronto Telegram—

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, surely the business of the house at the present time does not justify the hon. member getting up and arguing against the bill of rights which was properly passed by this house and badly needed by the country after the Liberal administration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is dealing with a particular publication. I would be very pleased to have the opportunity of commenting on his remarks but I must observe that the item now under discussion has nothing to do with the matter he is discussing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Distribution of official documents.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This item has to do with several specific matters. There is an increase of $20,000 required to meet the cost of extra charges resulting from the establishment of Queen's printers bookshops in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa, an item of $10,000 which represents an additional commitment authority on advertising to promote the sale of books printed in this fiscal year, and an item of $5,500 for freight, express, cartage and postage.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, there have been a number of questions asked of the ministry concerning the matter that my hon. friend is discussing now, more particularly of the Secretary of State who answered some in part and did not answer others. I submit that under the title "Public Printing and Stationery, Distribution of Official Documents" the hon. member is surely entitled to make the points he is making. Perhaps the point has been raised by the Minister of Finance because he is so sensitive about what is being said that he does not like the argument that is being made. I suggest that the hon. member is perfectly in order.

The Deputy Chairman: If I may intercede for a moment, may I say I would feel a little more comfortable if the hon. member for Leeds would discuss what he is bringing to the attention of the committee under the next item which has to do with printing and binding official publications for sale and distribution to departments and the public. Perhaps if we could pass this particular item we could go on from there.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to belabour the point I have been making and I do not wish to speak at length. I think I have made my point. It is one which is rather important to some people. May I summarize my remarks by saying that any act passed by the House of Commons is an act of the parliament of Canada and if any person is to sign such a document surely it should be the Governor General.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Have you never heard of King John?

An hon. Member: We have heard of Mackenzie King.

Mr. Drysdale: That is why we needed a bill of rights.

Mr. Matheson: Before bringing this matter forward, I followed the suggestion of this gentleman who taught political economy at British universities and I did a little research on the matter. As a result I think I can say with confidence that never before has a document of this character been published by a Canadian government and I believe this is a misuse of public funds.

Mr. Drysdale: We never had any rights under the Liberals.

Mr. Matheson: I think I can say with authority that never before has there been a prime minister who has used his office in this particular way. In my opinion the answers that have been given by the government and their failure to answer other questions indicates their acknowledgment that really this document should have been published as Progressive Conservative party literature. If we are going to have a bill of rights in which all Canadians take pride as something resulting from the deliberations of parliament, then I believe we should think of it in that capacity only and not in a political sense.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to make this observation with regard to the bill of rights. This was something which was introduced into this house by the Prime Minister. It was a cause in which he led the fight for years and the bill was passed in the face of derision from hon. members opposite.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not true at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the bill of rights was not passed with derision—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is a continuation of the same kind of sabotage.

Business of the House

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, since you allowed the minister to go on may I complete my sentence?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have a sentence or two to complete myself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The bill of rights was improved as a result of suggestions made by members of the Liberal party and over the opposition of the Conservatives.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will you allow me to say this—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Item stands.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire from the acting house leader, the sub-acting house leader, what the business will be for tomorrow and, while he is stating it, could he direct his attention to next week as well?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, with the speed we made tonight I do not think there is much necessity of dealing with next week. We had better deal with the business from minute to minute and hour to hour. The business for tomorrow will be continuation of the debate on the supplementary estimates which we have been considering this evening. When that is concluded we shall proceed with the legislative items which were announced by my colleague, the house leader, last evening. If by any chance there should be any change in the order with which they are to be dealt with tomorrow, I am sure there will be sufficient time in the morning to announce such change so that all hon. members—who are perfectly conversant with the items because they have been on the order paper day after day and week after week—will know about it.

Mr. Chevrier: I am very grateful to the acting house leader for his enlightening remarks but I wonder could I ask him if, during the course of the time that will elapse from now until the hour we meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock, the government does change its mind, he would at least have the courtesy to advise us half an hour before the house meets.

Mr. Nowlan: I have sat in opposition for nine years and no opposition has ever been treated with the courtesy which the present opposition has received.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow that remark to go unchallenged because that is not a fact. It is not a fact simply because this government has not been able to make up its mind with reference to the orderly conduct of business, and has had to change it on several occasions—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: I have not had a chance to conclude.

Mr. Nowlan: There is no semblance of order on the part of the opposition.

Mr. Chevrier: I was trying—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think further debate would not add to the clarity of the situation—

Mr. Chevrier: It is foreclosure.

Mr. Speaker: —and I declare that this house stands adjourned until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 13, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGES IN PENSION PLAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport is meeting this morning with representatives of the shipping federation in connection with the pilots' strike, and in his absence I wish to make an announcement having to do with the Canadian National Railways pension plan.

Your Honour will recall that extensive changes were made in 1959 in connection with the pension plan. Further changes have now been made. I should like to refer to those changes and then, with the leave of the house, table the order in council approving them.

Over the last few years the government has been receiving representations concerning alleged anomalies in respect to pension benefits on the C.N.R. with reference particularly to the calculation of allowable service for pension purposes. Questions have arisen with respect to the period in the 1930's when the severe economic depression caused a reduction in railway traffic resulting in lay-offs of employees. There were many aspects of this question which related to the service record of employees and the basis upon which pension benefits were calculated.

After many meetings and much discussion on the subject with interested parties, the question was included in the terms of reference of the 1961 sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government. During the hearings of that committee there was discussion on the subject, and witnesses from the Canadian National Railways gave detailed evidence and presented much factual information. However, under date July 7, 1961, following the hearings, the committee reported no recommendation—and I quote "because of its limited capabilities in terms of time and research assistance".

Following a special study which was made the government concluded that no specific action could be taken in respect of any particular group which would not violate the basic principle of a contributory pension plan and create a discrimination which could have far reaching implications. This view coincided with the views of Canadian National management in that service allowed for pension calculation should be based only on paid service rendered. Moreover, it became clear to the government that a departure from this principle was unworkable and would create a precedent that could have a serious impact on all pension funds operated by industrial and other employers. However, we continued to press for further consideration.

As a consequence of the intensive exploration and discussion which has taken place on this general subject, I am now able to inform the house that Canadian National management in discussion with the government and through the Canadian National pension board, which included contact with representatives of labour, has decided to amend its pension by-laws to improve the calculation of pension for the early service of existing employees. The present by-law stipulates a pension of 1 per cent for each of the first 20 years service, 1¼ per cent for the next 10 years and 1½ per cent for each year of service thereafter. After careful consideration of all factors, Canadian National management is now of the view that an increase in pension from 1 per cent to 1¼ per cent for the first 20 years service, to come into force with an increase in the contribution rate from 5 per cent to 5½ per cent, would be the improved benefit that would be most welcomed by all concerned and meet most effectively the changing conditions of railway employment.

Furthermore, while the amendment would be of general application to all employees now in service, it will have a further effect in that on the average it will produce a larger pension than would have resulted from the making of a special concession to those affected by the 1930 lay-offs or indeed lay-offs in any past period. This amendment of the Canadian National pension by-law has been submitted for the approval of the governor in council and approved effective from April 1, 1962.

When taken in conjunction with the changes that were made in 1959 I believe these changes will to a very considerable degree remove the fears expressed so often by Canadian National Railways employees that all was not being done that should be done to meet their legitimate pension claims.

With the leave of the house, Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the order in council with by-law No. 54 attached, which sets forth the various proposals.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave of the house to table the documents referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will welcome the statement made by the Prime Minister with reference to the betterment of pension conditions for employees of the Canadian National Railways.

The Prime Minister correctly said that in 1959 there were important financial changes made with reference to the Canadian National Railways pension plan, as there were in a previous period, the date of which escapes me at the moment, when the predecessor of the present government was in office.

The Prime Minister was also right in saying that these matters are disposed of first and foremost by the Canadian National Railways pension plan board. This group comprises people who deal with the actuarial soundness of the pension plan of the Canadian National Railways. Unless my memory fails me at the moment there are approximately 15 or 20 members representative of the various railway unions and of the various divisions of the operating branches of the Canadian National Railways.

The Prime Minister was also quite right in saying that the matter had been submitted to the sessional committee on air lines and other agencies owned and operated by the government, which committee had heard evidence on the matter. I am sure the house will remember also that representations had been made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) to the committee and the house on many occasions with reference to the betterment of conditions concerning this pension plan.

While I have no right to introduce a contentious note, and have no intention of doing so, I would remind the house and the Prime Minister that these matters might well have been disposed of a long time ago. It could well have been done by the sessional committee or on recommendation from them. It might well have been done much earlier in the session by a bylaw passed by the Canadian National Railways, which is now tabled. This government has been in office now over 4½ years and could have done it at a prior time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What about the previous 22 years?

Mr. Chevrier: However, that does not derogate from the fact that these recommendations as put forward to the Prime Minister by the Canadian National Railways pension board are excellent and commendable, and the house and the country I am sure will accept them with satisfaction. However, I would add this comment. It is unfortunate that the government has not thought of coming to the assistance of the railway workers, some 25,000 of them, who have been put out of work by the policies of the present government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is departing from the subject matter of the announcement. I recognize the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, everybody seems to be a lion this morning for the poor railway worker. It seems to me, if I correctly caught the Prime Minister's phrasing that this announcement applies only to existing employees rather than to existing employees and existing pensioners. If that is the case there will be considerable disappointment. If he reviews the proceedings of our committee last year, he may remember that the main impetus for a review came from the people who were presently on pension. This organization is centred in Winnipeg. The hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown) had arranged for them to speak at the committee hearing. They made their presentation to all of us. I know that, even as the Prime Minister suggests, there will be considerable disappointment, and this notwithstanding the fact that the present employees of the Canadian National Railways will be delighted from their point of view. If I am wrong in this assumption I hope the Prime Minister will correct me.

However, it seems to me there is almost an unexpected turn here in view of the opinion expressed last year by the president of the C.N.R. before our committee that it was most unlikely that the pension board or the management could see their way clear to improve the pensions. The question, of course, that will remain in our minds extends not only toward the existing pensioners but also toward the fact that the very same conditions that created a poor pension period for the workers on the Canadian National Railway also apply to the other giant railway.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister which arises from the very welcome statement he made this morning regarding railway pensions. Would the Prime Minister be good enough to tell the house how reconsideration of this question came about, and whether or not there is any application to the Canadian Pacific?

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the latter part of the question would be in order, but the invitation to the Prime Minister to elaborate on his statement would not seem to me to be the urgent type of matter that is dealt with on orders of the day.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CONFORM TO TAX-SHARING ACT AND INCREASE PAYMENT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act to provide an arrangement with respect to fiscal years commencing on or after April 1, 1962 similar to that provided in the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act with respect to previous fiscal years; to provide also in the said amendment for an increase of one third in the amount of the payment, from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars per capita.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTS—REPORTED REPRESENTATIONS BY CANADA TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can tell us whether, as reported in today's press, Canada has made formal representations to the government of the United States regarding its decision to resume nuclear tests. The minister mentioned discussions yesterday, but the press today reports that there were formal discussions, involving a two hour conference between our ambassador in Washington and the secretary of state of the United States. The story goes on to report that the representations Canada made were to the effect that these tests should not be resumed whether or not the United States was able to reach agreement with the Soviet union in the matter.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with that matter yesterday in my answer to a question by the Leader of the Opposition. I saw the article to which the hon. member is referring but I think there was quite a bit of speculation in that article.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the importance of this matter, does the minister think that he could advise the house as to the nature of the representations Canada made?

Mr. Green: I think the hon. member will realize that where there are exchanges such as I described yesterday it would not be wise for me to try to put a title on those exchanges.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED STATEMENT BY JUSTICE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question based on a press dispatch in the Gazette this morning headed, "Fulton Backs McNaughton Treaty Plan", and reading in part as follows:

Hanna, Alta.—Canada would have been better off with a Columbia river treaty drawn according to General A. G. L. McNaughton's wishes, justice minister Davie Fulton said here.

If this press report is correct, does this represent the general opinion of the Canadian government?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should not place such reliance on a heading of a newspaper article. The heading in fact does not fully fit the report and the report itself is only a partial one. I think the hon. member would be quite unwise to count too much on this article.

MANITOBA

NEW SITE FOR TOWN OF CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works whether the federal government has made an offer to the government of Manitoba to pay two thirds of the cost of moving the town of Churchill to a new site and, if so, whether that offer has been accepted or is being considered?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I will accept that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Doesn't the minister know?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REPORTED STATEMENT BY PREMIER RESPECTING DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will he comment on the statement of the premier of Quebec that encroachment by the central government on the provincial taxing authority has caused Quebec's large deficit?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it would be improper to invite the Minister of Finance to comment on a statement made in a provincial legislature which relates to the financial affairs of that province. If hon. members do not accept that view, I will be glad to hear the minister.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): With respect, Mr. Speaker, the report in question is one in which the premier of Quebec is reported to have laid on the shoulders of the federal government responsibility for his own deficit, and therefore I think it is a matter of concern to this house and to the federal authority.

Mr. Speaker: The premier of Quebec was expressing an opinion, and if the question is allowed it will involve asking the Minister of Finance to express an opinion. In essence it will introduce a controversial debate rather than a search for information, and I would consider that sort of question improper at this time in the house. It should be taken up in a debate in the house or in committee, where the pros and cons can be dealt with.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chevrier: The Speaker has decided.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —to meet the point you have made and on which you have expressed some concern about expression of opinions, perhaps it would meet the needs of the situation if, instead of my offering any comment, the house were to give me leave to put on the record the figures of payments out of the federal treasury to the province of Quebec—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —commencing with the fiscal year 1956-57.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must ask the house to observe the proprieties. It is impossible to know what the Minister of Finance is saying if everybody seeks to settle the question before it has been fully placed before the Chair. I understand that the minister suggests that, by leave, some document should be placed on the record. I understand that leave is not available, so I will consider the matter closed.

[Later:]

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Finance. Due to the serious financial difficulties which the government of Quebec has got itself into, could the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Mr. Keays.]

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): —give us comparable figures of federal grants to the province over the last eight years to assist Quebec—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have regretfully—perhaps not regretfully—to inform the hon. member for Stormont that the finances of the province of Quebec have not yet become the responsibility of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are two hon. members on their feet. I am not sure, but I think the Leader of the Opposition rose first and I will hear what he has to say.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you if it is not improper to allow debate on the budget of Quebec when we are not allowed to debate the federal budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: That is a home run.

An hon. Member: That is a knockout.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have my own point of order, Mr. Speaker, and then I wish to comment on the observation of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. McIlraith: You are not entitled to do that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My own point of order is this. While the financial affairs of the province of Quebec are its responsibility, and are immediately the responsibility of its own minister of finance who is the premier of the province, nevertheless the payments out of the federal treasury to the province of Quebec are a matter of federal concern. As I understood the question of the hon. member for Stormont, he was asking me about the payments out of the federal treasury to or for the benefit of that province. This I should take to be a proper question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: No; I am sorry, but I cannot—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have an observation I wish to make also on the point of order of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can deal with this point of order and then hear the minister again.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order?

Mr. Speaker: I think that is unnecessary. I am quite clearly of the view that federal payments to the province of Quebec is information equally available to all hon. members of the house, and this is not a proper subject for an inquiry on the orders of the day. I will now hear the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition, under the guise of raising a point of order, has made a statement upon which I think it only right that comment and rejoinder should be made from this side of the house. He has sought to leave the impression that the federal government is in some way denying to the house an opportunity for debate on the budget.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not the fact. The facts are all against the Leader of the Opposition, as they so often are.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The fact is this, that some of his supporters, notably the voluble member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the member for Laurier and others, have been screaming for days that we should get on with the supplementary estimates, and we were told that we should be diverted to the discussion of a particular debate that those opposite sought to introduce into the house on Monday. Only one debate at a time can proceed—

An hon. Member: Then sit down and we will get on with the business.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and I suggest very respectfully that the sincerity and earnestness of protestations like this can best be judged by the actions of those who make those statements—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and we have faced nothing but obstruction from them. We have had nothing but obstruction for days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Denis: Get your flag.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I agree that hon. members are capable of forming their own conclusions about the conduct of the house and that we should not spend time debating matters that convey certain things to some minds, and other things to others.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to allow the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: —to make that statement—

Mr. Drysdale: We have a new Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. While I appreciate that the hon. member may be aroused by what has been said, I think no good purpose would be served in continuing the discussion. We have had one speaker from each side. It is true that the Leader of the Opposition was relatively brief, but I am not going to hear any more discussion on this point.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I am not going to hear the hon. member say—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Chevrier: The statement made by the Minister of Finance was—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: —wholly inaccurate.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Each will deny the other's view, and I see no point in continuing the discussion.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question which I am now soliciting from the Minister of Finance is of the utmost importance to the residents of the province of Quebec—

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, you have decided that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member adverting to the question he asked some time ago?

Mr. Keays: No, I think it is a little different, and I would like to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Keays: —ask the minister whether federal payments to Quebec have been reduced, in view of the fact that the premier of Quebec claims that the provincial deficit was caused by federal action.

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a fair question, too.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Grafftey: Running from a fight.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did not understand the significance of the question; would the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine mind repeating his question?

Mr. Drysdale: The Grits are running scared.

Mr. Keays: I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether federal payments to the province of Quebec have been reduced, in view of the fact that the premier of Quebec claims that the provincial deficit has been caused by federal action.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Drysdale: That is a good question.

Mr. Hees: Yes, very fair.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is showing persistence, but payments to the province are voted by this house—

Mr. Drysdale: It is federal money.

Mr. Speaker: —and information about the payments to the provinces is equally available to all hon. members. In those circumstances it is not customary to take the time of the house to ask about those matters.

Mr. Drysdale: It is a reflection on the federal government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I point out that while on previous occasions the house has been given the figures year by year showing repeated increases in the payments to the province of Quebec, the house has not yet been given the estimate for the payments in the present fiscal year 1962-63 to that province.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We will have that in the budget debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it the house will have the opportunity to deal with those matters in due course.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When we have the budget debate.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that there is no urgency in a matter which the house has eventually to decide.

Mr. O'Hurley: You don't want it, eh?

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Can the Minister of Finance tell the house the amounts paid to the provinces since 1956-57, including those paid to the province of Quebec?

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that this question and all similar ones be put on the order paper.

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, with all this confusion I will not say to which minister I will direct my question; I will let the Speaker decide. Is it not a fact that the Quebec deficit in the amount of $140 million—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Johnson: —would amount to close to $400 million had not the Quebec government—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Johnson: —decided to collect close to $250 million from the federal government?

[Mr. Keays.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member has got his argument on Hansard by now, but I must tell him that he is strictly not in order.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION IN DISPUTE RESPECTING PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour in the absence of the Minister of Transport. Is the Minister of Labour able to say what the result has been of the meeting which the Minister of Transport has called between the pilots and the shipping federation?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The Prime Minister has advised the house that the Minister of Transport is even now in discussion with the interested parties to this dispute. Consequently I am not able to give any report. If there is any report I think it only proper that the Minister of Transport should give it.

Mr. Chevrier: What prompted my question was the fact that yesterday, in answer to a question, the minister said he had a meeting with them yesterday and I wanted to know what the result had been. However, I have a supplementary question, and it is this. In view of the fact that the pilots of Vancouver and the pilots of Saint John, as well as the stevedores in some national port, have said that unless there is a settlement reached they will support the strikers, and the stevedores are under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Labour, what action has the minister taken to bring the parties together?

Mr. Starr: The situation to which the hon. member for Laurier refers is, at the moment, hypothetical.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER RECESS OR DISSOLUTION?

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I address a question to the Prime Minister, and ask his courtesy and consideration for those of us in the House of Commons who represent ridings from 1,000 to 3,000 miles away from the seat of government. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will indicate to those of us in this position whether we should arrange our office affairs and transportation on the basis of an Easter recess or dissolution of the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I will be in a position early in the week to make a full statement on this question, so that hon. members may do that which the hon. member suggests they should do. I hope, early in the week to be able to make a statement that will answer the question in the fullest detail.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

FEDERAL CO-OPERATION IN FIGHT AGAINST ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): In the absence of the Minister of Justice may I direct my question to the Solicitor General. Following a press report emanating from Washington to the effect that the United States and Ontario will co-operate in the fight against organized crime, may I ask if the federal Department of Justice will now co-operate actively with the province of Ontario in this field. If so, how does it intend to proceed?

Hon. W. J. Browne (Solicitor General): I think that question asks what the policy of the government is going to be, and I do not think it is a suitable question for orders of the day.

Mr. Deschatelets: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the federal Department of Justice now join with the United States and the province of Ontario to fight organized crime in this country?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I still think that is a question of policy, but the Department of Justice is endeavouring to fight organized crime all the time, and is not waiting for the initiative of anyone else.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice if he is now in a position to table the documents which this house voted the other day with regard to the decision of the Attorney General of Canada to allow the extradition of one John Papalia, a possible witness in connection with the crime probe now being conducted in Ontario.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we hope to be able to do that the beginning of next week.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before the commission disbands, I hope.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): On Friday last I asked the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question concerning an order for return which had to do with the biographies of certain officials of the water resources branch. I wonder if the hon. gentleman can now indicate when this information will be available.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker; it is being tabled this week.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CANADIAN FIGURE SKATERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, to introduce a happy note into this house, I am sure all hon. members will be interested in knowing that we have two young Canadians, of whom we are all proud, visiting the House of Commons. I refer to Donald Jackson, the men's world champion figure skater, and Wendy Griner, who was runner up in the ladies' division. These two young people have brought great honour to Canada. They are accompanied by their mothers, Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Griner.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the opposition may I join in the welcome which the minister has given on behalf of the house to two of our most outstanding and distinguished international athletes. Not many of us got a chance to attend the world skating championships in Prague but most of us had the opportunity of seeing the performance on television. It was magnificent, and if it had not been for one unfortunate little slip and a fall we would have had two gold medals instead of one.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): On behalf of the members of this party I wish to join with the Minister of Labour and the leader of the official opposition in extending a welcome to these Canadians who have brought such honour to Canada. I trust their efforts in this field will spur the federal government to a realization that it has to do more with regard to assisting this type of sport.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ARCTIC PATROL OF WELFARE WORKERS IN CHARTERED AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): On April 6 the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate inquired whether a government chartered aircraft was touring the eastern Arctic with welfare workers aboard. This matter has been investigated carefully and the answer is no. Transportation in the eastern Arctic does depend on charter aircraft, but there has been no such flight during the past few weeks.

TRADE

AIR LIFT OF U.S. EXECUTIVES TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question relating to what has become popularly known as the Hees air lift. I wonder if he can give us any details as the reason for his department air lifting United States executives to Canada. Could the hon. gentleman give us a general explanation of the plan?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This government has made efforts over the past years to generate trade for Canada and Canadian producers in every part of the world. The United States is a very large and lucrative market which we want to penetrate as much as we can. We have made tremendous efforts to penetrate that market by sending trade missions to the United States and encouraging individual businessmen to go there and sell their products. This is just one further example of the effort of this government to help sell Canadian products for Canadian producers. In this case we are bringing United States buyers to Canada in quite large numbers so they can see for themselves the fine products which Canada produces for them to use in their own country.

Mr. Fisher: I just want to ask the minister if he could comment on the report that in order to achieve this he had to threaten to pay for having these people up here himself.

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): A supplementary question. Is the minister sending an air lift to Cuba as well?

Mr. Hees: I think that question deserves the kind of answer which it will not receive.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

SECRETARY OF STATE

Public Printing and Stationery—

740. Printing and binding official publications for sale and distribution to departments and the public—further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. Pitman: Last night before the committee rose there was some discussion which had to be cut off with regard to the work being done by the queen's printer in connection with the printing and distribution of the Canadian Bill of Rights. We in this party feel that the bill of rights was probably one of the proudest achievements which parliament has been able to carry out over the past century. However, I think the worst thing which could be done is to associate this achievement with any particular party or prime minister.

Some hon. Members: Nonsense.

Mr. Walker: On a point of order, would the hon. member indicate if it is not our Prime Minister and the Conservative party who should be given any credit for it? The Liberals opposed it for 22 years.

The Chairman: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Pitman: It is obvious that what the minister has said is right. This is something which was introduced into this house by the Prime Minister, but surely it was passed by this parliament and endorsed by all the members of the other parties. When such a document is being published at public expense I think it would be better understood if it were not partisan.

This is by no means the first bill of rights which has been drawn up. There is, for example, the constitution of the United States of America. The reason this receives the respect of all people is that it is non-political; no political party has made it a special area of concern.

Mr. Slogan: I wonder if the hon. member would feel that the children in the United States reciting the Gettysburg address are participating in a partisan activity?

Mr. Pitman: Surely not; but I have no knowledge that the government of the United States produces copies of the Gettysburg address at the public expense and sends them out to the school children.

Mr. Slogan: They do.

Mr. Pitman: This document must surely be looked upon with approval by Liberals and by members of the New Democratic party. It must be capable of being hung in the homes of all people. It must be capable of being hung in school rooms and looked upon with pride by people belonging to all parties and of all persuasions. I would hope, therefore, that the queen's printer would change the format which has been used.

Some days ago I placed a question on the order paper in relation to the use which is being made of the bill of rights. In one supermarket in Toronto copies were being dispensed as part of a promotion campaign for selling toothpaste. I am not going to blame the government for this, and I am not sure that the format used by the queen's printer was being used in this instance. Surely if we want this document to receive the respect of people of all political persuasions we do not want the name of any political personage on it. That should be the rule of thumb with regard to all such documents when they are produced at public expense.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Last night we heard a statement from the hon. member for Leeds concerning a particular document published by the queen's printer bearing the signature of the Prime Minister in relation to the enactment by parliament of the bill of rights. The hon. member for Peterborough has proceeded this morning to add his contribution to the most extraordinary statement made last evening by the hon. member for Leeds. The hon. member for Leeds is new and he may be very gullible but he should not, I think, attempt to go very much further in his political career making the kind of statement he made last night unless he has checked his facts first. The hon. member will find it is a good practice to check facts before assertions are made in this House of Commons, and I commend the same advice to the hon. member for Peterborough.

I wish to make two points in relation to this matter. We are speaking here of a document printed by the queen's printer and made available by him to the public. I wish to speak first of all of the commercial aspects of the matter; then I wish to deal specifically with the objections taken by these hon. members to the use of the signature of the Prime Minister on a government publication.

The first fact that I think is worthy of the attention of the committee is that this is not a publication that is costing the taxpayers of Canada so much as one cent. The hon. member for Leeds put this matter before the committee last evening as though public funds were being used in an improper manner with a view to publicizing the photograph and signature of the Prime Minister. Surely the hon. member does not object to the assertion that the Prime Minister introduced the bill of rights in this house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With the help of parliament.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With no help from the Liberal opposition, Mr. Chairman; none whatever. Of course it was parliament that enacted the bill of rights; only parliament could. During 22 years in office hon. members opposite had not only made no effort to introduce a bill of rights but they had opposed efforts made by the present Prime Minister when he was in opposition to introduce and enact a bill of rights. When the Prime Minister in 1960 introduced the measure to enact the bill of rights in this country, was there any assistance from hon. members opposite? No, there was not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There was opposition; there was derision; there was obstruction.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't talk nonsense, utter nonsense.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If hon. members opposite are prepared to admit that the records of this house are correct in indicating that the Prime Minister introduced the bill to enact the Canadian Bill of Rights, then perhaps we may now move on to consider the question whether public funds are being used at all in this matter, let alone used in some improper way to give currency to the photograph or signature of the Prime Minister in some manner that is not proper. The fact is that the treasury is making money on this publication; it is a best seller. It costs 30 cents to print every copy of this publication, and we are selling it at $1 a copy. We are not giving it away. We are not imposing a burden on the treasury. We are selling this publication and making a handsome profit on every sale.

An hon. Member: Profiteers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): When I say it is a best seller I mean exactly that. Twenty thousand copies were printed, 14,500 have already been sold and more orders are coming in. I think one may take satisfaction in the fact that this document is paying dividends to the federal treasury. I wish we had more documents of that kind.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It would help offset your deficit of $791 million.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Turning now to point No. 2, is there something extraordinary about the use of the signature or photograph of the Prime Minister on a publication? To listen to the hon. member for Peterborough talk, any document that bears the name of a minister in office obviously is immediately disqualified because he is a political figure.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is going to have to revolutionize the practice that has existed here in parliament for many and many a year, because documents issued under the authority of a minister must be so described. They do not just come out without some authorization and it is customary, of course, on all these documents to name the source of authority. If that were not given, of course, hon. members opposite like the hon. member for Peterborough would be screaming about there being no shown source of authorization.

What are the facts here? It was a new member who was chosen by the Liberal party to make such a foolish, uninformed and misleading statement last evening. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who always rises and tells us he does not remember something being done since confederation, always leaving the impression that he has been here since confederation and knows everything that has gone on here and everything that was ever done in the house, was present in this chamber last evening, but he did not call on his memory, such as it is, to rebuke or correct the hon. member for Leeds.

What are some of the facts the hon. member for Leeds evidently was not aware of and had not taken the trouble to find out, and which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had either forgotten or did not choose at the time to bring to the attention of the hon. member for Leeds before that hon. gentleman got himself any further into the posture of putting his foot in his mouth?

Mr. Drysdale: A Liberal tradition.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What are the facts? Let me turn up just a few publications. The hon. member for Leeds is a Liberal; he was elected as a Liberal. I have before me a government publication entitled "Canada—1949". This is a government publication issued when the Liberals were in office. What do I find? Here is an insert entitled "A Message from the Prime Minister of Canada".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A dignified prime minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This message was printed, Mr. Chairman, and it bears the signature "Louis S. St. Laurent, Prime Minister". The document is dated January 1, 1949. Fifty thousand copies of this document were printed. I suppose those 50,000 signatures must be a very great burden upon the soul and conscience of the hon. member for Leeds. They have been in existence for the last 13 years. The publication contains a message from the prime minister of that day. He tells the story of the entry of Newfoundland into confederation. I suppose on the theory that he was a political figure the hon. members for Leeds and Peterborough would say it is highly improper that a message of this kind accompanying a government publication should have borne the signature of the prime minister of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A different situation altogether.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have dealt with one publication, but let us not stop there, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Would the Minister of Finance permit a question? Am I correct in assuming that that particular publication would have been printed at public expense, unlike the document that is presently being discussed?

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, it was printed at public expense. There was a small charge for the sale of that document, I think 25 cents. It did not sell for the substantial price at which the document bearing the signature of the present Prime Minister is sold.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Two different situations altogether.

Mr. Howard: A pox on both your houses.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Leeds may perhaps draw a distinction between documents bearing the signature of a prime minister and documents bearing a photograph of a prime minister. Let us see what we have here. I have in my hand another publication entitled "Canada—1948".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who is holding up the estimates now?

Mr. Matheson: Filibuster.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Turning over the cover of this document we find a photograph of the then prime minister, Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King. It is quite an impressive photograph, too; it is the famous Karsh photograph, and it is in colour, a very expensive colour printing job.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Would Your Honour consider me in order if I were now to ask you to point out to the Minister of Finance that he is holding up the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Drysdale: Nonsense. Who started this?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East has just shown that what irks and pains him very much is to be obliged now to hear the truth.

I have shown this photograph to the committee and pointed out that it is a very expensive printing job because it is all in colour. Anyone who knows anything about printing knows that the addition of colour makes a printing job very much more expensive. Although much additional money was spent on printing that photograph in colour, this publication still sold at the same low price of 25 cents.

But suppose the hon. member for Leeds still says there is a difference; after all, it may be that there is some difference here between a prime minister's photograph in colour or a signature of a prime minister on a document, on the one hand, and the signature of the present Prime Minister on a document on the other hand.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What a spectacle the Minister of Finance is making.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Essex East is leaving the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drysdale: Run for your life; the Minister of Finance is coming.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What about the content of the message? It may be significant in testing whether there is any political aspect to such a publication or political advantage to the prime minister of the day if we examine the printed matter that accompanied this handsome coloured reproduction of the photograph of the prime minister in 1948. What this is all about is not an announcement of Newfoundland entering confederation. It is not an announcement of the enactment of a very important constitutional document on the government of Canada. This printed matter contains, if you please, the record in office of the then prime minister, in 1948, namely Mr. King. It purports to tell the story—of course in the same glowing terms—of the length of time he had been in office, and it compares him with some other lesser prime ministers who had not survived in office quite so long. If this has no political aspect to it, or if there was no political value accruing therefrom to the prime minister of the day or to the party he led at the time, then I am a very innocent person indeed. However, I must confess to having not only the deep suspicion but the profound conviction that this particular page appearing in this publication opposite the photograph of the prime minister had the effect of painting his record in glowing terms, just as did his photograph appearing in colour.

However, that is not all, Mr. Chairman. If the committee wishes more I can give it more. There are other publications. There is nothing new about this procedure. One might expect the armed forces not to be overlooked in the matter of government publications. Here is the bound volume containing the monthly issues of Current Affairs of the Canadian forces for 1955. Here is the issue for June 15, 1955, volume 8, No. 12, containing a foreword bearing the signature of Ralph Campney, minister of national defence.

It would not do, Mr. Chairman, to overlook some other hon. members opposite. I produce another publication entitled "Canada and the United Nations, 1956-57". This document, if you please, has an extensive foreword—it is a three page foreword—which bears the signature "L. B. Pearson, secretary of state for external affairs, Ottawa, May, 1957". Does that date of May, 1957, recall anything to your mind, Mr. Chairman? Of course it does. I just thought of it. That was the month prior to the election, was it not? I am sure that it was by the purest—and I emphasize the word "purest"—chance, the merest coincidence, that this particular publication came out at that time bearing the signature of one L. B. Pearson, secretary of state for external affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Canada's next prime minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; Canada's former secretary of state for external affairs. This was not an isolated example. Of course, apparently when you have an idea—this will be the theory of the hon. member for Leeds—you keep it up. I refer to the advertising theory. Here is the same publication, namely Current Affairs for January, 1956. It contains another foreword bearing the signature of Ralph Campney, minister of national defence. Here is Current Affairs for October 15, 1952, which has a foreword bearing the signature of the late lamented Brooke Claxton, minister of national defence. Here is another one, Current Affairs of the Canadian forces, January 1, 1957. Again there is a foreword bearing the signature of Ralph Campney, minister of national defence. One could go on and on, Mr. Chairman. However, perhaps I have said enough—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —to indicate that when the hon. member for Leeds spoke last night and splattered all over the record some of the most misleading statements that have probably been heard by this House of Commons in its lifetime, he did no service to himself or to the standards of public life.

Mr. Matheson: Every word in Hansard speaks for itself, as does the document itself. I certainly am not going to be a party to this filibuster and hold up this item.

An hon. Member: Who started it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: He should withdraw the statement he made last night.

Mr. Winch: Over the years in this House of Commons I have heard a great deal of histrionics and have seen much of dramatics, but I have seen nothing which quite compares with what we have seen and heard in this last 10 minutes from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Chevrier: Twenty five minutes.

Mr. Winch: No, I am referring to his last 10 minutes. I am not quite certain whether he is to be compared in respect of dramatics with Hamlet or Mark Antony in the death of Caesar. I do not mean Mark Antony of Rome; I mean Mark Antony in the death of Caesar.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do you not think he reminds you of Falstaff?

An hon. Member: How about some facts?

Mr. Winch: If anybody at this session has been guilty of politicking and histrionics, it is the Minister of Finance right here and now.

Mr. Drysdale: Who raised the matter?

Mr. Winch: He went over issue after issue of previous publications by the queen's printer in which there were pictures and introductions by other prime ministers or other ministers in the cabinet. That is not the question before this committee at this time whatsoever.

Mr. Johnson: What about the Saskatchewan News?

Mr. Winch: It is the extraordinary situation of a statute of the House of Commons and of the other place being issued by the queen's printer with a photograph and a signature. It is just about the lowest guttersnipe type of campaigning that could be done.

An hon. Member: What do you want?

Mr. Winch: I will give you just one reason.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There was no photograph of the Prime Minister. The hon. member has not seen the document.

Mr. Winch: Have I not?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member produce it?

Mr. Chevrier: Don't talk so much.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would ask the hon. member if he will produce it here. I refer to the photograph of the Prime Minister to which he has just referred. Will he produce it? I can tell him that the Prime Minister's photograph was not published.

Mr. Winch: Or his signature. I said "or signature".

Mr. Chevrier: The Minister of Finance is too sensitive.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sensitive about misstatements.

Mr. Winch: I said "or signature" on a statute of the House of Commons and of the other place, and it must be of both. It is "An act for the recognition and protection of humany rights and fundamental freedoms", statutes of Canada, 1960, 8-9 Elizabeth II, chapter 44, assented to August 10, 1960. The Minister of Finance in the documents produced did not and to the best of my knowledge—I will put it in that way—cannot produce a statute of Canada issued by the queen's printer over the photograph or the—

Mr. Slogan: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: —signature of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Slogan: You do not want a question, do you?

Mr. Winch: I say this is the question, not the way it has been presented to us now by the Minister of Finance. I say it is strictly politics; because if the Minister of Finance was not politicking he would have referred this house—

Mr. Slogan: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Winch: —to the fight and the work of the late J. S. Woodsworth for a bill of rights for Canada.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Slogan: Yes, Mr. Chairman. My point of order is that the hon. member is trying to mislead the committee by suggesting that the Prime Minister signed the act, whereas on this illuminated copy of the bill of rights the Prime Minister's signature appears under a quotation and not under the act.

The Chairman: Order. I am afraid the hon. member is engaging in debate and not raising a point of order.

Mr. Winch: I do not quite understand why the hon. member rose, but because of the point he mentioned I am going to ask this question. Do hon. members think that in any publication of the statute we should have not only the statute but a quotation from Hansard and the document signed by the prime minister of a Conservative government or any other government?

An hon. Member: Is it signed in the statute book?

Mr. Winch: This is a most unusual procedure. I say this is not a matter of putting forward the principles of the bill of rights. It is strictly a campaign approach, and I say that it brings this House of Commons and the other place into disrespect that this kind of thing should be used for political purposes and should not be a matter of principle and of right acceptable to all parties and all people, as the Prime Minister told us it would be when he introduced the bill of rights.

I want to come back to what I was saying when I was interrupted. If this document has been produced in the form it has been because of the great principles embodied in the bill of rights, I say it is very peculiar that the Minister of Finance did not see fit to go beyond stating that this was a matter which had been deep in the heart of the present Prime Minister ever since he entered the House of Commons as a member of the opposition and mention also that over 30 years ago Rev. J. S. Woodsworth fought for a bill of rights from the very day he entered this house, and so did M. J. Coldwell, who is no longer with us. Neither the Liberals nor the Tories would accept a bill of rights when it was demanded over 30 years ago, but we are very happy that finally they did repent.

Mr. Drysdale: You mean the Liberals.

Mr. Winch: My only regret is that the bill of rights now on the statute books of Canada is being used for political purposes and not as a statute of principles. I also regret that it was not made an irrevocable part of the constitution of Canada, the British North America Act, whether that act remains a statute of the British parliament or whether our constitution is brought home to Canada where it belongs. The bill of rights is something that should mean a great deal to all citizens, and it should not be used for political expediency by a government that does not know how to be elected except by using misleading propaganda and misusing a statute of the people of Canada.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, much has been made of this signature on the bill of rights, but what I am proud of and pleased about is that this name of Diefenbaker is not only on the bill of rights but is inscribed in the hearts of the members of every ethnic group in Canada.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I just want to say this. When we hear the hon. member for Vancouver East stand up here and talk about the rights of people, after his party used a technical procedure of the house yesterday to deprive individuals of rights that they are guaranteed under the laws of this country, I do not think it goes down very well.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member's remarks were out of order and irrelevant to the debate.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, would you ask the hon. member to retract his remarks? He made the statement that we have misused the procedures of parliament.

An hon. Member: You certainly did.

Mr. Winch: We abide by the procedures of parliament at all times and exercise our rights as laid down by a democratic parliamentary institution. If hon. members on the government side do not believe in that, that is their business, not ours.

Mr. Drysdale: Hansard speaks for itself. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the committee too much, and I am going to turn from this matter which is relatively controversial. I would ask the Minister of Finance to draw the attention of the queen's printer to the importance of expediting the printing of the statutes of Canada. I have checked on this matter and in the past it has sometimes taken four, five or six months or perhaps a little longer before the statutes of Canada have been printed. Since there is a great deal of reliance placed on them by lawyers and judges throughout Canada, I think it is particularly important that they be printed as soon as possible.

There is one other relatively non-controversial matter I should like to raise and which I think comes under publications issued by the queen's printer. I refer to the Hansard free list, under which Hansard is circulated to the various provinces and to provincial libraries. Perhaps consideration could be given at the next session to seeing that at least one copy is airmailed to each provincial government. I have had requests from some of the British Columbia provincial members that this be done, and I think it would perhaps have the additional value of raising the standard of debate in the provincial legislatures.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, we will all agree as to the desirability of the earliest possible publication in bound form of the annual statutes enacted by parliament. It is desirable in the public interest, and I think it is a matter of general satisfaction that so far as 1961 is concerned there was a very great improvement in this respect. Although parliament sat until the end of September the bound volumes were available in both English and French early in December, and I think this must be a record having regard to the very ample size of that volume. I am told that the bound volumes were available two months earlier than has been customary in other years.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say much on this item until the neo-fascist member for Vancouver-Kingsway rose in his place.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a question of privilege Mr. Chairman, this is a slur cast upon a member of the house, and it is a plain breach of the rules of the house. No member can call another member by an offensive name of that kind without defiance of the rules and I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to require the hon. member to withdraw that most unparliamentary and offensive term.

Mr. Peters: If it is unparliamentary I will withdraw it. I will refer to him only as one who uses fascist tactics.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That expression is no better. It is equally an offence against the rules of parliament to say that an hon. member uses fascist tactics.

Mr. Peters: I would be prepared to defend the word "fascist" as being a parliamentary term.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It cannot be applied to an hon. member of the house. It is quite clear that it is unparliamentary and I ask you, sir, to require the hon. member to withdraw it.

The Chairman: To my mind the term is unparliamentary, and I am sure the hon. member would not want to persist in using it.

Mr. Peters: I think the tactics are such, but I will be pleased to withdraw it if it offends the Chair.

We were discussing the printing of the bill of rights the other night, and I believe the minister failed to mention something that should be mentioned in this regard. I believe all Canadians are pleased that this particular document has been put out and that there is a bill of rights, although we all know the act does not go far enough. We also know that by putting in this signed statement from Hansard a complete false impression is being given. If this statement from Hansard had been separated from the extract from the bill there would be some justification for it.

I believe that Canadian students across the country are going to be more interested in this than anyone else. However, the document does not contain the whole of the bill of rights. The bill of rights has two parts, and it might be of interest to hon. members to know what the other part of the bill of rights says because it might have some bearing upon whether or not the statement by the Prime Minister is applicable. Section 5 (2) of part II reads as follows:

> The expression "law of Canada" in part I means an act of the parliament of Canada enacted before or after the coming into force of this act, any order, rule or regulation thereunder, and any law in force in Canada or in any part of Canada at the commencement of this act that is subject to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the parliament of Canada.

Obviously this section gives to the parliament of Canada responsibility for the administration of this act, not the prime minister of the country. The third paragraph of section 5 reads:

> The provisions of part I shall be construed as extending only to matters coming within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

The following section refers to the War Measures Act, and the remainder of the act occupies almost as much space as the printed document to which I referred. At the end of the act we find the words "The Queen's Printer and Controller of Stationery, Ottawa, 1960." This act, as contained in the statute books, is not signed by the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance, I was surprised to hear, said this was a very good piece of literature to be distributed by the queen's printer because it cost 30 cents and sold for $1. Well, sin pays too, but we do not necessarily sell it merely because one can make a profit on it. I do not think this is a reason for having this document printed and sent out. I feel that the complete bill of rights should be sent to the children of this country simply because we want them to learn what is contained in the bill of rights, and what protection is afforded by it.

It would have been far better, therefore, if the Prime Minister had the whole act printed. Perhaps this would have stimulated a desire on the part of the children to extend the bill of rights and make it constitutional rather than the statutory type of act which it is now. This is not a constitutional document and is not in the same category as the bill of rights of the United States. I believe this document is being misinterpreted when it is published in this manner. This scorn should not be heaped on the opposition because we want to be more factual—

Mr. Drysdale: That will be a change.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Certainly.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is he not aware that it is the first part of the statute that is known as the bill of rights, and is so described in the statute itself?

Mr. Peters: Chapter 44 starts out with the preamble to which we have already referred. Part I is the bill of rights, and part II has no designation at all, it is just headed "Part II".

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What is the last section, at the end?

Mr. Peters: Section 4 reads:

> The provisions of this part shall be known as the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: Here are these lawyers arguing about something that is really not correct. I grant that the short title for this part I is "The Canadian Bill of Rights", but part II is not separated in any way from part I. I suppose there is a technicality here, but I am not a lawyer. Both hon. members who are questioning this are lawyers. Would they consider this to be a legal document? Could a layman look at this and say "This is my bill of rights and I am going to take this document into court with me"? This document cannot be presented in court. Is this not true? I ask the Minister of Finance, who is a qualified lawyer, if this document has any legal status in court?

Mr. Drysdale: Who said it had?

Mr. Peters: Nobody said it had; I am just asking the question.

Mr. Drysdale: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Is anyone going to say that I can take this document into court and present it as the bill of rights? If I took this into court, I would be thrown out.

Mr. Drysdale: True.

Mr. Peters: It only becomes propaganda, therefore, and it is this to which we are objecting. If the complete act had been printed it would have covered only one more column in this illuminated document and then I could take this document into court, even with the illumination. It is the propaganda aspect of the matter to which we are objecting.

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to speak to the point raised by the hon. member. I suggest that even if the complete bill of rights were reprinted, as he has suggested, on a piece of paper it would still not be recognized by courts of law. He would have to produce the statutes of Canada in court, and they would be recognized. There has been a practice of reprinting excerpts of statutes, such as Magna Carta, but when you go into a court of law you rely on the complete statute. Nobody is being misled. There is a reference at the top to the statutes of Canada, and if the school children are as interested as the hon. member thinks, then it is quite easy for them to get a copy of the statute and read the whole thing.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this particular subject because I think there is a basic principle involved here that has been completely overlooked, not only in this particular incident but in a lot of other incidents that have been occurring recently. The Prime Minister of this country is the head of a political party, and he always has been. When the opposition comes along and says that because the name of the Prime Minister is appended to a certain document it is therefore a political document, they are just quibbling and quibbling shamefully. I can assure hon. gentlemen that there are a good many people in this country—and in fact they will soon learn they are a majority of the people of this country—who regard the prime minister—our present Prime Minister—as the leader and head of this country. They believe that the Prime Minister and the office of prime minister deserve the respect of the people of this country.

I feel that this principle has been bypassed for the sake of political expediency and an effort has been made to bring down the Prime Minister of this country to a level to which he should not be brought down. The Minister of Finance gave many examples of this type of thing. It is absolutely impossible to say that this government is not run by political figures, because they are and we all know it.

There have been a good many examples of this sort of thing in the last two years. I refer to trying to drag down the head of this country, and the government in general as far as that goes, for political purposes in order to attempt to degrade this government and this country in the eyes of other people.

I say this is not the feeling of the people of Canada. The people of Canada want to respect, and they do respect, the Prime Minister of the country while he holds office. I think it will be shown very shortly that the present Prime Minister does hold the respect and confidence of the people as prime minister of this country. I think all the things that have been said in this debate have been directed at one thing only. The opposition say this is a political document. If there is any vestige of truth in that statement it is not one tenth the amount of political dragging down that has been carried out in regard to this particular issue.

We are all proud of the bill of rights. I have gone into schools and have been shown the bill of rights hanging up, with the Prime Minister's signature on it. It was held in more respect because there was a signature to it. There is a living person, the Prime Minister, attesting to this document; it is not just a cold statute of Canada. The people of this country know, as has already been said today, that this has been a project of the Prime Minister for a long time. I say there is nothing more than a political effort and a great deal of quibbling in this whole argument. I think it does not help the position of parliament to raise this matter in a political manner in an effort to discredit the Prime Minister.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a very few words on this subject. To allege that the document the hon. member has on his desk is a political document is, in my view, the same as alleging that any reproduction of the Gettysburg address by Abraham Lincoln amounts to a political document in support of the Republican party in the country to the south.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka in everything he said. I think we all have respect for our Prime Minister as prime minister, and this has to be kept on a level where it is respect for the head of the country, no matter who the particular head may be. I think it is very difficult to keep this idea separated in Canada. We know this. We have to elect our prime minister, in our political set-up; therefore it becomes more and more difficult to make the separation.

I am very concerned about this matter of the Canadian Bill of Rights. When we went to school as children I am sure everybody in this country felt we should have something more, because of the fact that we were only a dominion to start with, to which we could tie our Canadian citizenship. For this reason I believe the hon. member will agree with me that regarding the Canadian Bill of Rights, while you can put in one corner the illumination that is already there, it should be in the form of illumination and the bill of rights itself should be complete so it may be the charter of Canadian citizenship, the rights of Canadians as Canadians. There is no objection to the fact that the present Prime Minister introduced this bill of rights, and we all give him credit for having been interested in it for a long time; but when we have the queen's printer printing it, it should be in terms of illumination rather than just a part of the document. This is my point.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to prolong the debate unduly but as a man of study I am interested in this discussion which reminds me of La Fontaine's fable "The plague-stricken animals" in which at one point the ass is denounced as having grazed a mouthful of grass. So, when I hear the opposition criticize what they call irregularities in the use of public funds and especially of the facilities offered by the queen's printer, I am reminded that our opponents instead of raising such points might do well to look into what happens within their own ranks when they are in power.

I will give but two examples. First, the Liberal members who are so scrupulous when they are in the opposition do not hesitate, as soon as they are in power, to use the government and all the facilities provided by the budget to make their own propaganda at the expense of the taxpayers.

I am going to give another example; it has to do with hospital insurance in the province of Quebec. Public announcements appear in the newspapers, at public expense.

The Chairman: I believe that the hon. member is getting far afield from the item which is before the house, and I shall ask him to keep his remarks within the scope of this item.

Mr. Johnson: Now to the second point, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the supporters of the New Democratic party that they look up that publication of the Saskatchewan government, the Saskatchewan News; they will find in it propaganda in favour of the government now in office.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Marine services—
Marine regulations including pilotage and marine reporting services—
748. Administration, operation and maintenance —to extend the purposes of vote 412, main estimates, 1961-62, to include the payment of expenses, including excepted expenses, incurred in respect of Canadian distressed seamen, $1.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, there are just one or two brief statements I should like to make in connection with this matter. In view of the fact that the parties to the dispute between the pilots and the shipping federation of Canada are now meeting, I will make my remarks as brief as possible.

I would like to make several points rapidly; first, the importance of settling this dispute as quickly as possible because of the damage it has caused and will cause to the Canadian economy if it is allowed to go on much longer; second, because of the inconvenience it is causing to the travelling public; and last but not least, the danger to the safety of navigation. This danger to navigation has been demonstrated by the ship Eskimo which got into difficulties a few miles outside the port of Montreal because it was navigating without a pilot, and also by the Consuelo, a British ship which tangled with an anchor in the port of Quebec; the anchor hooked up the cables telecommunication services and caused substantial damage.

It is also important that this strike be not allowed to go on because of the fact that navigation is opening on the St. Lawrence seaway; that is, upstream from Montreal. This opening has been announced for April 15. If settlement is not forthcoming by that time, tremendous damage will ensue. In that area ships must have pilots. Pilotage is compulsory in accordance with section 375(b) of an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act, though much to my surprise yesterday, when I told the Minister of Transport that from St. Regis in the province of Quebec upstream there was an obligation on the part of shipping to have compulsory pilotage, his reply was that St. Regis was not on the St. Lawrence river. Of course, to anyone who knows the St. Lawrence there is no doubt that it is.

Then again, there is the reasonable suggestion which has been put forward from time to time that a public inquiry should be undertaken. Five grievances of the pilots have been submitted to the minister, two of which have already been granted. It seems to me that the remaining three points could be settled were an undertaking given by the ministry of transport that a public inquiry would be held to consider the whole subject of pilotage.

I appreciate that there are difficult problems which arise in the Department of Transport in connection with these matters. It has been my feeling all along that while under the Canada Shipping Act the pilots are subject to the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, when a dispute of this kind arises it might be determined not by the Minister of Transport but by the minister whose responsibility it is to deal with such matters, namely the Minister of Labour. I make that suggestion without the slightest reflection on the Minister of Transport. When I was in the Department of Transport I often wondered why it was that the Minister of Transport as the pilotage authority should have the responsibility for settling stoppages of this kind. I am wondering if the Canada Shipping Act should not be amended so that when there is a dispute of this kind, or when pilots holding meetings and the federation refusing to meet with them, the Minister of Labour should enter the picture.

I hope there will a settlement of the dispute, and I trust that the parties will agree to a public inquiry under the direction of the government so that all aspects of this pilotage question may be explored insofar as they concern the pilots, the ship owners and the ship operators. If this were done a great service would be rendered to an important branch of our economy.

Railway and steamship services—

752. Canadian National Railways deficit, 1961—amount required to provide for payment to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made by the national company to the Minister of Finance, and to be applied by the national company in payment of the system deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) arising in the calendar year 1961, subject to recovery therefrom of accountable advances made to the national company from the consolidated revenue fund, $68,172,716.

Mr. Chevrier: Here I think we should ask for some explanation from the minister. This concerns the deficit of the Canadian National Railways for the financial year, 1961, and which amounts to more than $68 million.

There are a number of questions which come to my mind in this connection. Yesterday we had an opportunity of discussing many of the matters which arise in connection with freight rates which normally would come under this item, and I do not intend to go into that subject again. However, there is a number of other questions which arise. First I think we should know how much has been paid by way of subsidies to the Canadian National Railways in respect of freight rates. This is a matter which was not discussed last evening. I think the minister should give the committee the total amount and then the breakdown. There is another important matter concerning the deficit—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. member prefer that I endeavour to answer his questions one at a time as he goes along?

Mr. Chevrier: No; I would rather go on, if I may. There is another matter, and that concerns the recapitalization of the Canadian National Railways. The C.N.R., as the committee knows, was originally a collection of a large number of bankrupt lines, and over the years the company has been obliged to carry on these lines at tremendous cost. Unfortunately it has not been possible, because of the tremendous capital costs involved and the deficitory operation of many of these lines, for the railway to show a profit except in some years. As we know, the railways in the United States, in the United Kingdom and, to some extent, on the continent are all in difficult circumstances because of competition. I am not going to enter into that aspect of the subject in order to keep away from a contentious field, but I think the minister should give us some indication of what the intentions of the government are with reference to these tremendous fixed charges borne by the C.N.R.

The former government, as the minister knows, brought legislation into the house which was a sequel to a recommendation made by the Turgeon commission. This legislation had to do with wiping out a number of fixed charges of the C.N.R. But because of the manner in which this is operated, and while the president of the C.N.R. has, I believe, no fault to find with the operation of the act, nevertheless, because of changed conditions in the field of railways and railway operations, the fixed charges of the C.N.R. have been increasing over the years.

It seems to me there is one thing which the royal commission on transportation might well have done and which it did not do. There were terms of reference; and while I take it the royal commission on transportation had the responsibility of following the terms of reference, it did not do so. As was pointed out to us last night by the hon. member for Port Arthur, the royal commission on transportation decided of its own volition, notwithstanding a statement in the house by the Prime Minister, to look into certain aspects of the Crowsnest rates. It strikes me that the royal commission might well have gone into the circumstances surrounding the fact that the operation of the C.N.R. produces almost every year a tremendous deficit, whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway makes a profit. I do not wish to make an invidious comparison, but here is a field where I think the royal commission could have been of great assistance to the Canadian National Railways, to the government and to the country for that matter. If this had been done it strikes me the commission would have rendered a real service to the railways of Canada.

I come back to the question of recapitalization. Is it the intention of the government to give consideration to that in the future? Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation to reduce the tremendous burden which the Canadian National Railways has to carry? If the government does not look with favour upon this suggestion which has been made from time to time, what is the alternative?

Although there are other matters I wish to discuss relative to this item I believe I have said sufficient for the moment, and I will stop here.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member has raised two questions, Mr. Chairman. One relates to the share received by Canadian National Railways of the $50 million appropriation made by parliament last year and the second, broadly speaking, concerns the question of recapitalization of Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt, Mr. Chairman. The minister dealt with the first point last night. I did not have that in mind. I had in mind the total amount of subsidies paid to Canadian National Railways by the government either for freight rates or other purposes. I now ask the minister whether he can give me the total, together with a breakdown.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The annual report of Canadian National Railways shows that in 1961 the system received the following subsidy payments: Freight Rates Reduction Act, $10.7 million; Maritime Freight Rates Act, $10 million; east-west bridge subsidy, $3.5 million interim payments—that is, out of the $50 million—$27.9 million; Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island steamship services, $14.6 million, for a total of $66.7 million.

On the question of recapitalization I can assure hon. members that this is a subject that is under very intensive study at the present time, and discussions between Canadian National Railways management and the government have been held for some time. This is something that will be submitted to parliament in due course.

The hon. member has drawn attention to the heavy burden of fixed charges borne by Canadian National Railways. Just to look at the figures for the last two years, in 1960 in its operating results Canadian National Railways showed net railway income available for fixed charges of $6,473,732. The total of fixed charges amounted to $69,088,803. For 1961 I give the corresponding figures. The net railway income available for fixed charges was $4,831,862. The total fixed charges amounted to $72,987,242. I should point out that with respect to the total fixed charges in each case, a sum of money was received from Trans-Canada Air Lines which had the effect of reducing the net fixed charges to these figures: for 1960: $61,023,045; for 1961, $62,475,910.

Mr. Chevrier: By the figures he has placed on the record the minister has certainly borne out the gravity of the situation. In 1960 the net railway income in round figures was $6.4 million with which to pay fixed charges, and the fixed charges amounted to more than $69 million. In 1961 the position was even worse. The net railway income in that year was $4.8 million and the fixed charges amounted to almost $73 million. The position has worsened in 1961 vis-à-vis fixed charges.

I do not wish the minister to rise and say that this is a matter of government policy and government decision which will be announced in due course. That is the customary declaration by ministers. In view of the gravity of the matter I feel the minister should pause for a moment to analyse, as I feel he could do in two or three minutes, the serious situation in which Canadian National Railways finds itself in relation to the other railway. I had thought that in answer to the points I raised the minister would comment on this matter. I am sure he and his officers have studied the problem. No doubt it has engaged the attention of the officers of the Department of Finance, because here is one field wherein the expenditures could be substantially reduced if careful attention were given to the problem.

It seems to me that the recapitalization act of the C.N.R. provided for a study or re-examination of the facts after a certain number of years. I understand that time has expired. I think the Minister of Finance said in the house one day the matter was under consideration and that in due course a statement would be made to the house. I am now inviting the minister not to make a declaration of policy but to give some indication of the thinking of himself and his officers with respect to this serious problem.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I believe I can be brief in dealing with the gravity of the problem of fixed charges. I think the figures I have placed on record speak for themselves.

As to what may be the thinking of the government on this matter, I feel it would be altogether premature to attempt to outline any views on this question at this time. It is a subject which will come before the house at the proper time, because to take any steps with regard to this problem would necessarily involve legislation and that would be the time, after the discussions with Canadian National Railways have been concluded, to make the type of statement the hon. member has invited.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 752 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: I have just two short questions. The first one has to do with employment on the Canadian National Railways. It has been said, and I think authoritatively, by the Canadian Labour Congress and its affiliates that within the last five years there has been a diminution in the employment of railway workers across Canada of some 25,000 or 5,000 per year. Is the government contemplating any measure or has the government taken measures to deal with this problem? I am not thinking now of the budgetary aspects to which the minister could refer. I am thinking of direct assistance to those in the railways who have lost their employment. The former minister of transport and the present Minister of Transport to a lesser degree have said that men are not laid off the railways until it is absolutely necessary so to do—and that statement I believe—but that as soon as work increases these men will be given an opportunity to come back. That is perhaps a fact, but none the less it does not derogate from the situation that, according to the information I have, about 5,000 men a year have been laid off from the railways. I am wondering whether the government has anything in contemplation with respect to these men.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a known fact that employment on the railways has been declining. Broadly speaking, I think there are two reasons for this fact. One is growing competition from other forms of transport and the other is growing automation on the railways themselves. The decline has been gradual and I believe the problem has been met by the railways, not by retirement on any material scale but simply by not recruiting new employees. If the situation called for any specific measures or if the government were proposing any new measures, they would, of course, be submitted to the house in the usual way.

Mr. Chevrier: The other question and the last one is this. I should like to get the views of the minister on amalgamation of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Is the minister in favour of amalgamation? Does the minister support the views of his colleague in the house, namely the hon. member for Stormont who in a debate in the house and then outside the house has declared himself to be in favour of the amalgamation of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway, notwithstanding the fact that in his own constituency of Stormont—there is a divisional point of the Canadian National Railways—which employs a number of men and which for them would mean loss of employment. I was wondering whether the Minister of Finance is in accord with the views of his colleague the hon. member for Stormont.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the policy of the government is well known in this respect, Mr. Chairman. It is reflected in the existing fact and that fact is competition. The government believes that competition is a good thing.

Mr. Carter: I should like to take just one minute of the time of the committee to speak on this item. While we all deplore the deficit of the C.N.R. and all hope that the financial situation will improve during the coming year, I wish to say a word of commendation to Mr. Donald Gordon and the management of the Canadian National Railways for their decision to reduce the passenger fares within the maritime provinces. In making that statement I couple it with the hope that the reduction in fares will not result in a deterioration in the quality of service which the railway proposes to offer. If we can maintain or even improve the service along with the reduced fares, I believe that will help materially to improve the revenue to the C.N.R. from passenger traffic by making it more competitive with other forms of transportation.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and other benefits—

753. Supplemental pension allowances to former employees of Newfoundland railways, steamships and telecommunication services transferred to Canadian National Railways—further amount required, $6,546.

Mr. Carter: I just wish to ask one question of the minister as to this group of employees. Are they the people who transferred from the Newfoundland railway in 1949 when Newfoundland became a part of Canada? Is this the particular group that had no contributory pension plan at all?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These are the group to whom the hon. member refers and who were transferred at the time of confederation from the Newfoundland railways, steamships and telecommunications to Canadian National Railways on April 1, 1949. I am told that it is not correct to say they had no pension plan previously. However, the plan they had and the rights they had have been merged now under the general scheme of employees of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Carter: What I was trying to get at was whether this vote was to supplement their existing plan or whether it was to increase the pensions for those employees who had no contributory plan at all but who on retirement have received I think the nominal sum of about $30 a month.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This provision which is being included in the supplementary estimate is designed to provide supplements for the pensions that would otherwise have been payable. It is an increase of $6,546 over the amount provided in the main estimates owing to a larger number of employees retiring during 1961 than was anticipated when the main estimates were prepared.

Item agreed to.

General—

754. Trans-Canada Air Lines deficit, 1961—amount required to provide for payment to Trans-Canada Air Lines (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made by the company to the Minister of Finance, and to be applied by the company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the company) arising in the calendar year 1961, subject to recovery therefrom of accountable advances made to the company from the consolidated revenue fund, $6,450,082.

[Mr. Carter.]

Mr. Chevrier: I shall try to be as brief as possible on this item, Mr. Chairman. However the minister gave me an entrée to discuss it when a moment ago on item No. 752 he said that the policy of the government is that of competition.

I take it he meant competition in the field of transportation generally as well as in the field of aviation. The minister will remember that it is this policy of competition in the field of aviation which is causing the industry such concern. I am sorry that the Minister of Transport is not in his seat at the moment because this is a matter which concerns him and more particularly his predecessor, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is responsible for much of the chaos in the field of aviation.

When the members of the government were on this side of the house they seized every opportunity at their command to demand competition and when they got into office they certainly went further than they intended to go with respect to competition in the field of aviation. The first thing the government did was to ask a British expert, Mr. Wheatcroft, to make a report on air line competition in Canada. I hold his report in my hand and I would point out that in this excellent report Mr. Wheatcroft recommended against competition in certain fields. Notwithstanding that fact, the government decided to grant a transcontinental air service to Canadian Pacific Airlines. According to many experts in the field, that policy and other policies of the government which I will deal with in a moment are responsible for the item which we have before us today to provide $6½ million for the deficit of Trans-Canada Air Lines. In addition, Canadian Pacific Airlines had an equally high deficit in 1961 amounting to approximately $4 million.

The policy of the government has never been announced in the house for some reason or other, except piecemeal through an answer to a question or by a statement made by a minister outside the house, and to my mind this is very strange conduct on the part of the government. However, just prior to the election of 1958 the former minister of transport made a statement on aviation in which he said:

It is not intended to place T.C.A. or other Canadian air lines in competition with each other in the international field. International routes are set up by reciprocal agreement with other foreign countries, and provide rights for foreign air lines to operate over the same or equivalent routes. Therefore, plenty of competition already exists in the international field without the duplication which would result if Canadian air lines were made directly competitive over the same international routes.

That statement by the former minister of transport is quite clear, that there should be no competition between C.P.A. and T.C.A. on the international routes. But what did the government do? In the latter part of 1961 the government authorized Canadian Pacific Airlines to operate a route from Vancouver-Edmonton to London. This was not only in contradiction of Canada's own policy in the field of international aviation but also in contradiction of the bilateral air agreement between Canada and the United States. Although Canadian Pacific Airlines announced in October of 1961 that it was going to start the new service from Vancouver-Edmonton to London and advertised the fact that these flights to London would originate in Vancouver and Edmonton, the company has not yet obtained permission so to do.

I have put many questions to the present Minister of Transport but he has evaded them continually and repeatedly by stating that conversations are going on between Mr. Peter Thorneycroft, minister of aviation of the United Kingdom, and the minister's officials. To those of us who sit on this side of the house it seems strange, having regard to the fact that it was first stated by the government that there would be effective competition and then later that there would be no competition in the field of international aviation, that the government, having announced a competitive international route, is not able to obtain permission for C.P.A. to land in London.

When told in the house that the government was out to destroy Trans-Canada Air Lines, as I stated, the present minister replied that competition on this route would be negligible and would not affect the government owned air line.

That is not what the minister said in a speech at Vancouver on December 4, 1961. At that time he stated that because of competition in world aviation the best interests of T.C.A. and C.P.A. would not be served in competing with each other and that there should be co-operation between the two. So we have this anomalous position. First, according to the former minister of transport, there should be no competition between T.C.A. and C.P.A. in international fields. Next, the present Minister of Transport announced in the house a new service for C.P.A. in the international field on the run Vancouver-Edmonton-London. Then the present minister stated in the house that this would not in any way affect T.C.A. and that the competition would be negligible. Three months later competition on international routes has suddenly become serious and there should be greater co-operation between C.P.A. and T.C.A.

The question arises in the minds of those who are interested in the field of aviation, what is the policy of the government? Need I talk about the decontrol of class B aircraft announced by the former minister of transport which has caused such chaos among the small operators to the extent that there have been a large number of bankruptcies. Now it is being stated that it is the intention of the government, so the industry has been advised, to drop decontrol and put the situation back where it was before.

I think the government should make up its mind what its policy is going to be in the field of civil aviation. Is there going to be competition in the domestic services, is there going to be competition in the international services, or is the field going to be divided? I think the government should inform the members of the industry, who I know are totally and wholly dissatisfied with the manner in which the government has outlined its policy from time to time.

I just want to say one further word because I do not want to hold up these estimates unduly. It has to do with Quebecair. Last year and the year before Quebecair was in very difficult circumstances and asked for assistance. The Minister of Transport stated that the air transport board would consider the position. The board did so and made several recommendations to the government. I understand that five recommendations were made including (a) a subsidy, (b) an operations payment during the winter and (c) a joint winter operations payment and a subsidy, but that treasury board on each and every occasion turned them down.

I know, of course, that the Minister of Finance will deny this but it is common knowledge in Rimouski that the person who held up this matter was none other than the Minister of Finance himself. It was common knowledge when I was down there not so long ago that, notwithstanding the recommendations of the air transport board and the desire of his colleague, the Minister of Transport, that a subsidy should be granted, the Minister of Finance was the one who held it up and decided against it. The minister will be free to deny that statement if he wishes to do so.

Then there is the other point, that the Minister of Transport told Quebecair in unequivocal and clear language that the government had decided to give that corporation exclusive air routes on the north shore of the St. Lawrence and, by inference, to take them away from T.C.A. Of that there can be no doubt. The Minister of Transport went a step further and said that such an announcement would be made by the government at a future time. There is no doubt about that; that is known all over the trade and in Quebecair offices. It is known in the air transport and industries association and it is known in Trans-Canada Air Lines. It is known from one end of the industry to the other that that statement was made.

What happened was that the Prime Minister asked that the matter be held over—this was in the press—until such time as he returned from his trip to Japan. The Prime Minister returned from Japan, but nothing was done, other than, I take it, the Minister of Transport was slapped down because Quebecair is still waiting for its assistance. I need not tell the Minister of Finance that Quebecair needs the assistance. Quebecair is now under new management, and has had a total reorganization of its capital structure. There are new people at the head of the corporation. I am sure that they can do an excellent job. I ask the minister to give serious consideration to the recommendations that I know have been made, (a) by the Minister of Transport to the government and (b) by the air transport board to the minister.

One other thing I should like to mention and it is this. Quebecair asked the government to assist it in taking over one of the larger aircraft it had purchased from Canadair. This aircraft had been purchased at great cost. It was impossible at the time, several months ago, for Quebecair to use this aircraft profitably. I am informed that, notwithstanding the representations of Quebecair to the government to assist them in taking over that plane, either by representations to Canadair—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I rise on a point of order? The point is that Quebecair is not a matter to be dealt with on the vote before us. We are not dealing generally with matters of licensing and we are not dealing with general civil aviation policy. We are dealing with Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, may I say that this subject has everything to do with the item and I will tell the minister why. Trans-Canada Air Lines was asked to withdraw from this field on the north shore. That is known by everybody; and they refused to do so, notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of Transport had given his undertaking that Quebecair would get exclusive rights on the north shore. I am, therefore, four-square within this item.

Now then, continuing, I should like to say Quebecair had made representations that this large plane be taken back by Canadair or be used by the R.C.A.F. I am informed, rightly or wrongly, by those who live in the Rimouski area where I was, that notwithstanding the representations made to the government by the Minister of Transport, the Minister of National Defence stood up and said that under no consideration would he accept this second hand plane for the R.C.A.F. It was only after a full and complete consideration of the whole matter that I believe a final arrangement was arrived at. I thought I would put that on Hansard. I ask the minister to come to the assistance of this company which is trying to do a good job on the north shore of the Rimouski area of the province of Quebec. I hope that the Minister of Finance will convey to the Minister of Transport the statement I made, that he should not have intervened in the way he did with T.C.A. and he should not have made the statement that he did, namely that Quebecair be given exclusive rights in that field, until and unless it had received approval of the government of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can assure the hon. member at once that he is away out on his facts all the way through his speech. Let me begin with what he had to say about the deficit of Trans-Canada Air Lines. He has ascribed this to some aspect of competition and he complained about competition. Well, I would think the best authority on the reason for the Trans-Canada Air Lines deficit in the year 1961 would be the president of T.C.A. Here is what he said in his report, in explaining the deficit for 1961:

> This was a paradoxical period of air line operations in which record traffic volume was accompanied by the largest deficit in the company's history. A new domestic fare structure proved immensely popular and there was a heavy increase in passenger business. Simultaneously, however, passenger demand shifted so emphatically towards economy class service that there was a pronounced deteriorating effect on the company's average revenue realized per passenger mile, this declining from 6.25 cents in 1960 to 5.81 cents in 1961. While 44 per cent of the company's passenger traffic had been economy class in the previous year, and an increase to 69 per cent had been forecast, the actual figure rose to 79 per cent. This revolution in travelling habits more than offset the company's achievement of substantial economies as evidenced by a very satisfactory reduction in operating cost per available ton mile from 36.72 cents to 31.30 cents. Obviously, this discrepancy between revenues and expenses requires remedial action.
> This year's deficit amounted to $6,450,082.

Then the president goes on in his report to speak about the acquisition of new equipment, the cost of which of course is rising all the time. So, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, in what he had to say about the reason for this deficit is completely at odds with the president of the T.C.A. himself.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I much prefer the reasoning advanced by the president of T.C.A.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister permit a question? Is the minister aware of the proceedings of the sessional committee on airlines and shipping, owned and operated by the government, at which evidence was given last year concerning the deficit of Trans-Canada Air Lines, in that competition was in large measure the answer?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The committee has not sat during this session. I am giving the statement of the president of T.C.A. because he outlined in his report the reason for this record deficit in the operations of the company in 1961. It should not be thought, Mr. Chairman, that this was the only time that Trans-Canada Air Lines had a deficit. It had deficits, smaller of course, in 1937, 1938, 1939, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950 and 1960. These deficits could hardly be ascribed to competition, so I think the hon. member is quite wrong in his conclusions on this subject.

Now, he goes on to use this item to discuss a question with regard to the licensing operations of the air transport board. This discussion, Mr. Chairman, is quite irrelevant to the subject with which we are dealing here, the operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines. Trans-Canada Air Lines is not the air transport board. The air transport board is given jurisdiction by this parliament in respect of licensing of air carriers. I suggest, therefore, that the subject be properly deferred to an occasion when it will be in order.

Now, the hon. member makes a strong plea for Quebecair. He has made what I think was about as strong a case of special pleading for a particular, privately owned company as I have ever heard in this house.

Mr. Chevrier: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I just question, Mr. Chairman, whether under these conditions any hon. member is justified in making so strong a plea on behalf of a particular private company. Let me make it very clear that what he had to say about this, and what he had to say about communications passing between ministers, about the opinions expressed by these ministers, is just a compound of gossip he has gathered. It is a lot of nonsensical speculation, most of which I do not believe I will dignify by any detailed statement. I think it was out of order, and I do not like to see the time of this house occupied in dealing with gossip and speculation.

Mr. Chevrier: Did you turn it down?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member desist for one little moment in pursuing his gossip?

Mr. Chevrier: For two little moments.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We are sent here, Mr. Chairman, to be responsible members and not to be old gossips. In this matter this particular company evidently overstretched itself in its operations—quite overstretched itself—and then comes the government asking for special assistance, at the expense of the treasury, to relieve it of some of the difficulties into which it has gotten itself.

Mr. Chairman, in this situation the concern of the government must be for the public interest and not for the interest of some particular private company. I can assure the committee that in its relationship to this situation and any action that may be taken at any time in regard to it, it is the public interest that will guide the government and not the interest of any particular private company.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the minister did not answer my question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not intend to, in view of the gossip.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it a fact that the Minister of Finance is the one who held up at treasury board the recommendation made in favour of a subsidy to Quebecair?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this is just a sample of utter irresponsibility on the part of an hon. member. The hon. member knows perfectly well that what happens in treasury board is secret, and he as a privy councillor knows what is the oath of office. He has just invited one minister to break the oath of office in order to comment on this silly gossip in which he has been indulging and with which he has been larding up the record this afternoon. I do not intend to accept his invitation to indulge in gossip.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has referred to gossip; he has referred to irresponsible statements. The statements were not irresponsible, and it is not gossip. Those are facts that are well known in aviation quarters, and I am not—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They are not facts.

Mr. Chevrier: —going to embarrass the minister, as I well could, by putting statement on the record right now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You cannot embarrass me with the truth.

Mr. Chevrier: But I am going to send over to the minister a statement that is a complete denial of what he has said, and a complete confirmation of the statements I have made. I do not want to put them on the record and thereby embarrass others, and more particularly the Minister of Transport. I asked for production of the documents; I was not able to get production of the documents. One of the documents was not even confidential; but months after they had been sent, they were made confidential. For that reason it is not possible for me to use them and I have no intention so to do, but I can tell the minister that the information upon which I have based the statements I have made is accurate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I can tell the hon. member that he is misinformed. If he is purporting to say that he has statements that support the gossip which characterized his earlier statement, then I have to tell him that he is misinformed and his gossip is not the truth.

Mr. Chevrier: It is not gossip; it is fact.

Mr. Grafftey: Factual gossip.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I will only be a couple of minutes. I am not at all interested in gossip or rumours of any kind. However, I would like to ask the minister this question. Having regard to the five years the present government has been in office, what is his policy approach to crown corporations such as Trans-Canada Air Lines when they are initiated in the public interest and have done a terriffic job on behalf of Canada?

I can only say from my own point of view that after following five years of this government's policies and operations it does appear to me that their general policy is, if it affects a crown corporation, crash or smash, because only in the five years this government has been in office have we even heard talk of hurting crown corporations and turning them over to private enterprise by sale or competition, whether it be Eldorado, Polymer, or instituting measures that hit very hard at initiating services such as the C.B.C. and now T.C.A.

This matter can be discussed under this item. I think we have to honour the initiation of T.C.A., the pioneering it did, the service which it rendered. When it comes to a major transportation policy and difficulties arise, this government, instead of assisting, brings in completely unnecessary competition against a crown corporation which did the pioneering and was financed by the people. When it reaches a stage of major development, the government exercises a competitive policy.

I will not go any further than that, sir. I would like to ask the minister whether he can give us just a straightforward statement as to government policy with regard to crown corporations such as T.C.A.; whether it is crash or smash, and why bring in competition at the expense of the Canadian people?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, Trans-Canada Air Lines has received at the hands of this government the fairest and indeed most generous consideration. The company has been provided with what it required to keep itself equipped with aeroplanes of the latest design and manufacture; indeed, enormous sums have been provided and expended in the equipment of the company for all its operations.

The action of the air transport board in the licensing of Canadian Pacific Airlines for a transcontinental flight daily to connect with overseas operations I presume, was based on the board's view that the time had come when Trans-Canada Air Lines was so fully established and so strong that it could face a measure of modest competition. But on this subject I really see no profit in getting into some doctrinaire discussion. The hon. member, according to his views, favours state monopoly in these matters. Some of the other hon. members of this chamber take a different view. I think we are not likely to harmonize those views this afternoon on this supplementary estimate.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I think I must rise after the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver East, because in the province of British Columbia we have Canadian Pacific Airlines employing about 2,500 people; in fact, it provides one of the largest payrolls in the province of British Columbia. I rather gathered from the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver East that he felt Trans-Canada Air Lines should have a complete monopoly in air transportation. I certainly could not support any such view.

In so far as pioneering is concerned, the polar route to Europe was pioneered by Canadian Pacific Airlines and they have provided a good deal of the service and a lot of jobs for people in British Columbia. They provide a large amount in taxes to the treasury of this country. Any suggestion that T.C.A. should have a complete monopoly certainly would not be supported by the people of my riding.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I made no such suggestion. My reference was only to the competition brought in by this government in the past few years on nation-wide business, which the C.P.A. was never in until this government took office, and my hon. friend knows it.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall vote 729 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: What about 766?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It was carried.

Mr. Chevrier: I had intended to say something on vote 766.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We have passed it.

An hon. Member: We can revert to it.

The Chairman: The Chair is quite disposed to revert to vote 766.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I would have no objection.

St. Lawrence seaway authority—

766. Loans to the St. Lawrence seaway authority in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve —further amount required, $4,125,000.

Mr. Chevrier: I simply wanted to ask the parliamentary secretary if he is satisfied that this sum of $4,125,000 is properly required and is a proper vote, or expenditure, as far as the seaway authority is concerned. My only purpose in asking this question arises from the fact that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance had some qualms about these expenditures some time ago and I do not want him to think there is anything the matter with them now, since he is piloting these estimates.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have examined the financial statement involved here and I believe these are proper expenditures. The circumstances to which the hon. member for Laurier refers are somewhat different from those which now arise on this vote. They related to another part of the St. Lawrence seaway. On an earlier occasion the hon. gentleman and I had an interesting argument—it remains one of the interesting experiences I have had in the house. I had my opinions and he had his. I do not imagine he has changed his. I have not changed mine. However, I think this is not the occasion to revert to that difference.

Mr. Chevrier: I am delighted that the parliamentary secretary who is now piloting these estimates through the committee feels that this is a proper expenditure. Otherwise I am sure he would not recommend it.

There is another matter. I am glad the hon. member for Stormont is in his seat, or near his seat. The other day my hon. friend from Welland was discussing a certain matter and in the course of those remarks he stated that there was a great deal of unemployment in Cornwall. The hon. member for Stormont rose and said: "Ask your colleague the hon. member for Laurier, because he is the one who is responsible for putting the locks on the other side; he is the one who is responsible for all this unemployment."

I thought I would put on the record what the facts are in this connection, because the hon. member for Stormont has repeatedly made the statement in the house that with the locks going on the United States side there has been a great deal of unemployment in Cornwall. I have obtained figures which indicate what the total amount of employment in the Department of Transport or in the St. Lawrence seaway authority was in the constituency of Stormont from 1950 to 1962. These figures indicate that in 1950 there were 236 employees of the Department of Transport in Cornwall. In 1951 there were 185; in 1952, 229; in 1953, 195; in 1954, 267; and after the seaway got started in 1954 there were more employees in the Department of Transport and with the St. Lawrence seaway authority than prior thereto. I say this because the figures indicate that in 1955 there were 264 employees, in 1956, 258; in 1957, 316; in 1958, 309; in 1959, 293; in 1960, 334; in 1961, 252; and in 1962, 271. Thus, in so far as employment in the offices of the Department of Transport and the St. Lawrence seaway authority is concerned—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Has the hon. member included the head of the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the various executives, the counsel, the solicitors and the accountants? Is he comparing those with the working men and tradesmen formerly employed on the Cornwall canal, which is now virtually abandoned except for a half a dozen boats a year coming up to service one industry? If he wants to compare employment let him compare the Eisenhower and Snell locks.

Mr. Chevrier: I am comparing all the employees which were formerly with the Department of Transport in Stormont with all the employees which the St. Lawrence seaway authority has now in 1962. There are far more today than there were then. The reason is that the former Liberal administration had the good sense to establish the St. Lawrence seaway headquarters office in Cornwall, and that alone accounts for 150 of those employees.

I would ask permission to table the comparison of figures of those employed in the Department of Transport prior to the opening of the seaway.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): By whom were those figures prepared?

Mr. Chevrier: By the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

The Chairman: I understand that it is not customary to table documents at the committee stage. There could be an exception made if unanimous consent is given.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have no objection. Perhaps it could be agreed that when the Speaker resumes the chair he could ask permission formally.

The Chairman: That would be the idea.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I should like to have a look at those figures beforehand to substantiate them, especially as the hon. member is noted for his facility at suppressio veri and suggestio falsi.

Mr. Chevrier: There is another matter. The hon. member for Stormont has repeatedly stated that cessation of work after the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway has been responsible for the unemployment in the Cornwall area. I intend to disprove that by putting on the record the following figures. The St. Lawrence seaway authority was responsible for a good deal of employment during the construction of the seaway but nothing compared with what the hon. member had in mind. The seaway was started in July, 1954, or, at least, the administration was authorized to begin its operations then. However, no work was done in Cornwall in 1954 or 1955. In 1956 there were 180 men employed from Fraser point on lake St. Francis to the west end of Stormont county. In 1957, there were 513 men employed. In 1958, there were 635; in 1959, 457 and in 1960, when the work was completed, there were 258. This clearly indicates that if the seaway was placed on the other side of the line, that was not responsible for unemployment which followed after the discontinuance of the seaway work. What actually happened was that during the period since 1957 when this government took office—and I do not say this in order to enter into a contentious aspect of this matter—three cotton textile mills closed down.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I ask the the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Chevrier: After I am through. These mills were responsible for the employment of 2,500 people and there are today according to the statistics which I have been able to obtain from the Cornwall Standard-Freeholder, of March 23, 1962, 4,294 people seeking employment. Then again it is clear, as I have said on another occasion, that shipping on the Cornwall canal was small in the year prior to the construction of the seaway as compared with the shipping in other ports. As a matter of fact it increased after the opening of the seaway; so if there has been an increase in employment in that area it is not due (a) to a diminution of the number of employees in the Department of Transport or (b) the St. Lawrence seaway authority, or (c) to the fact that the canal is on the other side of the line. It is certainly not due to the fact that those employees on the canal ceased to work, because there were a small number employed there compared with the 4,258 people who are now out of employment.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member knows that every effort made by this government to assist the textile industry in providing tariff assistance was consistently, persistently and bitterly fought and opposed by the hon. member's own colleagues, and the most recent episode is that of the Senate turning down the class or kind legislation. The hon. gentleman also knows that the textile industry is now in a better condition than it has been for the past 20 years.

Mr. Chevrier: In Cornwall?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): No, not in Cornwall, because due to the neglect of the previous government the situation there was already too far gone to revive. In the same year that Cornwall Cottons declined Dominion Textiles made one of the highest profits it made for many years.

As far as the Cornwall seaway is concerned, the people of Cornwall know that it was locating the locks on the United States side that ruined Cornwall. Just ask the people of Cornwall about this. I suggest they will have an opportunity to give their answer very shortly and their answer will be found by the hon. member to be very pointed indeed. I would be delighted if the hon. gentleman were to come to Cornwall and oppose me in the constituency of Stormont. I would be delighted indeed if he were to do so.

An hon. Member: He is afraid.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Of course he is.

Mr. Chevrier: Afraid of an oddball?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Does the hon. gentleman think that the Eisenhower and Snell locks on the United States side run themselves and that no one is employed on them? If they were located on the Canadian side in Cornwall they would certainly provide employment in that area.

I have several times contended—and I contend here and now—that the hon. member by his actions and by his neglect of the interests of this country and his former constituency—his former home town—has made it impossible for there ever to be an all Canadian seaway in Canada. I say that for this reason. As we know the volume of traffic in the St. Lawrence seaway has been extremely disappointing but if for any reason it should ever increase perceptibly so that it becomes a threat to the New York port authority, you can be assured that all the vested interests centred in the New York port authority, the financial and railway interests there, will insist that the Welland canal be bypassed by enlarging the Erie canal system so that not only will Cornwall be left high and dry as it now is—after Cornwall had been on the Cornwall canal for 120 years—but the whole St. Lawrence seaway including the port of Montreal will be bypassed by the new Erie canal. The new canal will bypass the Welland canal instead of twinning it, and traffic will be directed from the upper lakes and the interior of this continent down to New York with the result that the entire St. Lawrence system plus, to a degree, Halifax and Saint John will be bypassed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): There was only one occasion on which we could have assured there being an all-Canadian seaway and that was at the time of the original construction when the hon. gentleman sold out to the United States. One of the most monumental blunders in the history of Canada was the error made by the hon. gentleman in relation to the failure to twin the Welland canal which was already reaching full capacity. It was as elementary a fallacy as to endeavour to increase the size of a bottle without increasing the neck.

These are the two fundamental errors the responsibility for which my predecessor, despite his canniness, evasiveness and agility with words has never been able to completely evade, and he has not convinced the people of Stormont. If he thinks he has, let me tell the hon. gentleman that the proof will be in the pudding and the opportunity to taste the pudding may come very shortly indeed.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, one word in relation to what was said by the hon. member. Not a word was said by him in connection with the statements I have made, which are a complete answer—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I must examine those figures before commenting on them and learn the source of them.

Mr. Chevrier: —which are a complete answer to the charges he has made in this house for the last five years.

May I point out that the hon. gentleman commenced his speech by saying he wished to ask me a question; but he forgot all about the question because he started ranting about everything under the sun. I simply wish to conclude my remarks by saying that no member from the constituency of Stormont since that constituency has existed has done more harm to his constituency than the present hon. member for Stormont.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Will the hon. member not agree that he sold out the interests of that constituency to the United States?

Mr. Chevrier: I say that for the following reasons, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman has said repeatedly that there are no pilots in the constituency when in fact there are at least 35 of them. He has said repeatedly there should be an amalgamation—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; what I said was that there were in the Cornwall area no native born pilots, no people born in Cornwall. There are pilots there who have simply moved in and located there overnight.

The Chairman: Order. That is a question of debate.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. gentleman has repeatedly said there should be an amalgamation of the C.N.R. and C.P.R. employees, thus putting out of work a large number of people in the Cornwall area which is a divisional centre of the C.N.R.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): How many people are employed on the C.N.R. in Cornwall?

Mr. Chevrier: Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, on more than one occasion the hon. gentleman has said that a great deal of harm was constituted by the fact that Cornwall was not a seaway city. The other day the mayor of Cornwall celebrated the fact that Cornwall is now a seaway city. Notwithstanding the fact that the mayor of Cornwall and the industrial development corporation of Cornwall have repeatedly stated that Cornwall is a seaway city, the hon. member for Stormont insists that Cornwall is not on the seaway but is on high and dry land.

The hon. gentleman has emphatically stated and repeated that I am the one who is responsible for having effected the situation which exists today and he complains of there being no 27-foot facilities opposite Cornwall. The hon. gentleman does not know the facts. In point of fact, 27-foot facilities exist over a distance of three miles from Grace creek right up to the head of the locks at Cornwall. The hon. gentleman does not know that. As the member of parliament for the constituency of Stormont he should acquaint himself with at least the elementary situation obtaining in that area and cease to chase industry away; but no, notwithstanding the fact that the people of Cornwall are clamouring for industry to locate in that area the hon. member for Stormont insists on stating publicly that the seaway is on the other side of the line which in effect is tantamount to telling industry not to come to Cornwall because there are no deep water facilities. Let me emphasize that the facilities are all there. If the hon. member for Stormont will only cooperate with the mayor of the city, the city council and the Cornwall industrial development corporation, industry will come to Cornwall.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, if there are facilities in Cornwall it is because of the fact that this government has spent over half a million dollars creating a port, which was done at the instigation of the present hon. member for Stormont. These 27-foot facilities now exist to intercept traffic before it goes south into the United States and to direct it back to Canada from the United States after proceeding through the Eisenhower and Snell locks. If there are facilities in Cornwall it is because of the efforts of the present hon. member for Stormont in persuading this government to attempt to retrieve some portion of the traffic we formerly had.

Furthermore, if my predecessor from this constituency produced so much benefit for Stormont, why did he abandon it, like a shepherd leaving his flock at the mercy of the wolves? The hon. gentleman abandoned that constituency. If he feels he did not abandon it I would be delighted if he were to return and oppose me in that constituency.

Mr. Chevrier: I would certainly fix you if I ever came back.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Come back. I urge the hon. gentleman to come back. If the hon. member requires proof of my statements I urge him to take advantage of the opportunity of returning to that constituency as my opponent.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Fisher: If you want to get through you will have to let me ask one question.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): A refugee from the seaway.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Fisher: I thank hon. gentlemen for the prompting. I wish to ask one question. Is the government aware that the United States corps of engineers has received a substantial grant from congress this year in order to carry out immediate study and planning for a United States canal that will save United States traffic going through the Welland canal? If so, what effect does the government think such a project, if proceeded with, will have on the prospects of the Welland canal and the adjacent area?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the government is well aware of that to which the hon. member has referred. The St. Lawrence seaway authority is embarking on studies in respect of the twinning of the locks but to endeavour to forecast at this time just what the outcome might be of any action such as has been suggested would, I think, be speculating more than I would like at this stage.

Mr. Fisher: The point about which I wish to find out is whether the government is prepared to move very quickly if the United States engineers come up with a recommendation that would lead to a unilateral move on the part of the United States for a canal completely within the United States; that is to say one could foresee where this might take no notice of the St. Lawrence seaway authority at all. It is for that reason that I think we would all have considerable concern and would appreciate something a little bit more definitive about the position of the Canadian government.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think the hon. member is well aware of the rapidity with which the government is prepared to move at all times. However, in respect of this particular matter I should not like to speculate as to what the situation might be after some hypothetical action on the part of the United States government.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Water resources branch—

729. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Under this item I think it is in the national interest that we should come back to a matter of great importance, and one that has to do with a fundamental difference between an important official of the government of Canada and the government itself. It is a difference which, in principle, is not unlike the difference that arose and shook the foundations of government in Canada last summer in the dispute between the governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): They are as different as are day and night.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I refer, of course, to the serious charge made by one of Canada's most distinguished sons. I refer to General McNaughton who said that the Columbia river treaty represented a sell out on the part of those who negotiated that treaty for Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Does the hon. member believe that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the question. Whether I believe it or not is not the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I am saying is that a distinguished Canadian who has spent the greatest part of his life in the public service of this country has said that Canada was sold out by those who negotiated that treaty.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): If the hon. gentleman does not believe this, why does he repeat it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That charge having been made, it should have come to parliament through the proper procedure for assessment as to validity. General McNaughton asked that his charge be aired before a parliamentary committee of this House of Commons where we would have had an opportunity of examining him as to the nature of the indictment and where we would have had at the same time an opportunity of hearing from the ministers responsible, and the officials in order to determine the validity of this charge. Notwithstanding the requests made by the Leader of the Opposition and by other hon. members in this house, including the hon. member for Kootenay West, this government has delayed the opportunity of our discussing this matter in the way in which the matter is now about to be discussed.

This is not, of course, a new procedure for this government. It will be recalled that for many months we sought to bring before a committee of the House of Commons the former governor of the Bank of Canada so that that unfortunate dispute—bludgeoned by the action of the Minister of Finance—between that official and himself, could properly have been assessed by a committee of this house.

An hon. Member: That is an old song.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Notwithstanding the reluctance of the Minister of Finance to have the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada discussed by the banking and commerce committee and notwithstanding the reluctance of the government to allow the governor to come before that committee and discuss that report, we know that the governor was able to state his case in the other place before a committee of the non-elected members of this parliament.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And a poor case it was.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As a result of the disclosures made this government, if it had confronted the Canadian people, would certainly not be sitting on the treasury benches today, as everywhere throughout this country—

An hon. Member: That is what you think.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —there was disquietude, dissatisfaction and disgust—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —with the way in which the Minister of Finance had sought to prosecute the dispute between himself and the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not accurate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That dispute is now a matter of record. However, it will be recalled in the days and weeks to come. It will be discussed on the hustings, in the general elections about which we are soon to have an announcement. Let no one make any mistake about this. The people of Canada will indict this government for what they did and the manner in which they dealt with the Coyne affair. We now have a second Coyne affair which arises out of the charges made by General McNaughton.

An hon. Member: Another Liberal.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says he is a Liberal. Surely that is not an offence in this country. Since when was it an offence? Let me tell my hon. friend that General McNaughton was a distinguished soldier in the first world war and was commander of the Canadian forces in the second world war. He was appointed to his first responsible office under the government of Canada when he was made chairman of the national research council by the government of which Right Hon. R. B. Bennett was prime minister. It was a Conservative appointment. He began his public service as an appointee of a Conservative government. From that time on he has rendered distinguished service to his country. No one can take that away from this distinguished Canadian. He has asked that he be allowed to come before a committee of this House of Commons so that he can make these serious charges. The Minister of Finance is not in his seat at the moment. This important matter is apparently being conducted now by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, although the Secretary of State for External Affairs apparently is now here holding a watching brief, whatever that may or may not be. The fact is that General McNaughton has made a serious charge. That charge should be heard. As he is not a member of this house, he cannot speak in this House of Commons. Consequently, he should be afforded the opportunity of going before a parliamentary committee.

If there was ever any doubt about the justifications for his request to have this matter placed before a parliamentary committee, we now have in justification a statement made by no less a person than the Minister of Justice who, according to a Canadian Press dispatch in this morning's paper is quoted as having said the following at Hanna, Alberta. I quote from a report of the Canadian Press which appears in this morning's Montreal Gazette, page 4.

> Canada would have been better off with a Columbia river treaty drawn according to General A. G. L. McNaughton's wishes, Justice Minister Davie Fulton said here.
> Mr. Fulton said in an interview that it was not possible to draw the treaty in the manner Gen. McNaughton desired without treading on British Columbia's toes.

If General McNaughton had said nothing, this statement of the Minister of Justice would have been ample justification for our discussing this important matter. But coming on the heel of, or right after, or within a few days of the indictment levelled against this government by General McNaughton, this statement of the Minister of Justice now offers strong supporting justification for our request that a committee, namely the committee on external affairs, be set up forthwith—tonight, if necessary—so that there may be no delay in the government's plans with regard to dissolution. We can sit all day tomorrow; we can sit all night tonight, and determine whether or not there is validity in the indictment made against this treaty and against this government by General McNaughton. If the government refuses the request I am making today in support of that made by General McNaughton, then let the government stand in proper perspective in relation to the bill of rights about which the Minister of Finance spoke so vigorously two or three hours ago in this house.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And so eloquently.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): General McNaughton has made a charge. Under our bill of rights he should be given the opportunity of presenting his case before the highest court in the land, this parliament, through one of its committees. To deny General McNaughton that right on the eve of the dissolution of parliament will be an admission by this government that the charges made by General McNaughton and now supported by the Minister of Justice are justified.

The issue before us now is a simple one. It is not the merits of the treaty. It is the right of one who was in a position to know. It is a question of examining the charges he has made with regard to the way in which the treaty was negotiated, a treaty which he says is not only contrary to our interests but with regard to which he says the Canadian people have been sold out by the government. In the face of these charges, serious charges supported by the Minister of Justice, this government will stand in contempt of parliament, in contempt of the Canadian people, if it denies the request I am making, that the external affairs committee be set up now. Set it up at six o'clock and we will sit throughout the hours to determine the validity of the serious charges made.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise on behalf of this party to support the request made by the hon. member for Essex East. I think he outlined very eloquently and properly General McNaughton's services to this nation, his contributions and his stature. He indicated that General McNaughton's first interest is to protect the interests of Canadian people and not go along with people in the United States because it is easier on occasions.

As far as the Columbia is concerned, Canada has come off second best for the second time in Canadian history. In 1846 the government of Great Britain signed the Oregon treaty and in return for the surrender of the land south of the 49th parallel and west of the Columbia river British subjects were guaranteed free access and navigation to the sea along the Columbia river in perpetuity under article 2 of the treaty. Many years later that treaty was followed by the building of dams by the United States government on the Columbia river. I do not blame the United States government but there was not a single protest from any agency of this government. I have had the record checked and not even the water resources branch was sufficiently alert to the position to warn the government that this was happening.

The former secretary of state for external affairs and present Leader of the Opposition had the records of the government searched at that time.

Mr. Green: That was under the former government.

Mr. Herridge: I am trying to be quite fair. That is quite right; it was under the former government. I think it was a great omission that Canada's interests were not protected because I have talked to officials of various United States agencies who were amazed that we permitted these dams to be built without any protest in view of the impediment to navigation, the fact that there was no longer access to the sea from the upper Columbia, the damage to our fishing interests and so on.

Now we come to this second occasion, the Columbia river treaty. General McNaughton has rendered great service to Canada and I am not going to repeat the many things that were said by the hon. member for Essex East. I was very disappointed, as I think many members of the house were, by the treatment of this gentleman who has given such great service to Canada in the first and second world wars. In fact, he was serving Canada before some of the advisers were born. The announcement of his retirement was through a short and, I thought, very inadequate press release. I must bring it to the attention of the committee that a goodly number of lesser lights have had their retirements mentioned by way of announcement in this house. Personally I thought this was a rather shabby procedure on the retirement of a person who had rendered such great service to Canada. Mind you, that is not the attitude of the Canadian people or the Canadian press. I am already in receipt of sufficient telegrams and correspondence to realize what large sections of the Canadian people think of General McNaughton. However, to clinch that and to save time I am simply going to quote an editorial that appeared in the Vancouver Sun of December 18, 1959 under the heading "All Honour to Andy". It reads as follows:

General Andrew McNaughton has the stuff that makes great Canadians. He deserves official recognition for his outstanding victory in getting Canada a fair share of Columbia river downstream benefits. This feat will stand as a great achievement in the history of Canadian international bargaining. And as a landmark in Canadian economic development. It sets a precedent for future Canada-U.S. water control issues.

General McNaughton endured much uninformed and unfair political criticism on both sides of the border. But he knew his objective. He ignored all the irrelevancies. He developed a long-headed strategy. He stuck to it, to Canada's lasting benefit.

It is true he started from a position of strength. But he succeeded in making the other side recognize reasonably quickly that it had lost the battle. That avoided needless economic bloodshed by averting prolonged delay in coming to terms.

The five year climactic struggle began from what McNaughton described as a U.S. position of contending "with all the forces at its disposal" that Canada wasn't entitled to anything from the U.S. for controlling the Columbia. McNaughton was privately determined Canada would get 50 per cent of all the U.S. power gained. And get it in value holding electricity, not inflation vulnerable dollars.

His masterstroke was to refuse to truckle in any way to U.S. arrogance.

That is a very different attitude to some people I could mention.

He proposed diverting extra Columbia waters into the all-Canadian Fraser, thus depriving the U.S. of all benefits from Canadian control. He had international precedent. But the Americans thought he was bluffing. Then he ordered engineering studies of this gargantuan scheme. That might have been a big bluff. But the U.S. either overlooked it or couldn't nerve itself to call it.

Forces which preserve the Fraser for salmon could have blocked McNaughton's hydro scheme just as they've blocked all other hydro prospects there. A threat from late 1957 that Wenner-Gren development of the Peace river might jeopardize developing of the Canadian Columbia probably helped the Americans to see things General McNaughton's way sooner than they might have. But it can't account for the bonus he won in the settlement. Not only does Canada get 50 per cent of extra U.S. power, but the percentage is calculated on the gross increase, not the smaller net. And in 35 to 50 years Canada can still divert Columbia waters into the Fraser if that still makes hydroelectric sense.

I read that editorial because I think it outlines clearly what Canada owes to General McNaughton in one vast achievement which as a result of his tenacity and determination can mean in any future settlement millions of dollars in power value annually to Canadians for years to come.

I quite agree with the hon. member for Essex East that there have been so many contradictory statements made by persons of prominence on both sides of this issue and by both the federal and provincial governments that this gives greater reason for General McNaughton having the opportunity to be heard. General McNaughton has remained in office as a public servant since the treaty was signed. Because he was a public servant his lips were sealed. He was waiting week after week to have the opportunity to present his case before the external affairs committee, and I am quite sure he would soon knock the arguments of the water resources branch into a cocked hat. He waited week after week but without the opportunity being afforded.

Now he has the right to speak because he is no longer a public servant. General McNaughton does not bring this issue forward because of any interest in partisan politics. He takes this stand because of his strong conviction that Canada has received a poor deal in the Columbia river treaty. I recognize the fact that this treaty was, shall I say, forced or the terms of it were dictated to meet the wishes of the provincial government. But the situation is such that it never can be clarified in the minds of Canadians unless we have General McNaughton before the external affairs committee. The members of this party agree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Essex East, that we will sit here tonight and tomorrow or as long as is required to complete this business.

Then, in addition to that, the government has promised all the chambers of commerce, farmers institutes and other organizations in the Kootenays, the Arrow lakes, the water resources committees, that they will be advised when this committee is to sit and given an opportunity to present their case. We will even continue in session long enough for them to get to Ottawa and present their case in connection with certain aspects of this treaty.

I mentioned that there were a great many contradictions, and I want to deal with them briefly. When the Prime Minister signed the treaty he made a few brief remarks, and I quote one paragraph:

In conclusion, the treaty that is being signed today is without precedent in the relations between nations. It represents a new level of co-operation for mutual advantage. Without the proposed agreement neither country could secure benefits for its people equal to those that can be realized through the action that the treaty contemplates.

Now, that is what the Prime Minister said on that occasion. Then, what did the Minister of Justice say in an address to the Canadian club in Montreal on February 13, 1961? He said:

I would like to stress at this point that the government of British Columbia was closely associated with these negotiations and gave wholehearted approval to the plans unfolded in the treaty negotiations.

I am quite confident that is an accurate statement on the part of the Minister of Justice. What does Mr. Bennett say when he refuses to go along with the terms of this treaty? A recent statement made by the Minister of Justice indicates that the federal government bowed to the wishes of the province of British Columbia. What does Mr. Bennett have to say? I have a copy of his address made at Prince George on September 16, 1961. He was kind enough to send me this copy from his office. I quote:

Well, as you know, the United States and Canada have signed a treaty. It has been ratified by the congress of the United States but not by the parliament of Canada. As you know, too, British Columbia has agreed to the general engineering principles outlined, but has never agreed to the financial proposals put forth by the government of Canada.

The reason we have not agreed to those proposals is very simple: We want at-site power on our Columbia river installation as soon as possible. And to bring that about, we must dispose of our surplus power at a fair and equitable price.

It might be asked, "Well, what of it? Look at how much you're getting and how little you're giving away".

All right—let's look. But let's not even look through my eyes, because after all, I may be prejudiced. Let's look instead through the eyes of the secretary of the interior of the United States of America, Mr. Stewart L. Udall.

Mr. Udall is the member of President Kennedy's cabinet who has the direct responsibility of seeing that the Columbia river treaty is carried out by the United States. Recently, he issued a statement on the treaty. I have a copy of the statement with me tonight, and because it is so extremely important that we understand clearly what the treaty implies, I am going to quote rather fully from his remarks.

In any event, Mr. Udall goes on to discuss the effect of the Canadian storage at the Arrow lakes, Duncan and Mica creek. Then, he says:

As each of the Canadian storages become operable, the resulting improvement in flows can be utilized by generators already installed in the existing U.S. projects. Most of the U.S. projects were originally constructed with additional generators for reasons of economy of construction, anticipation of load growth and the subsequent availability of additional storage.

Then, Mr. Bennett said:

I quote again from Mr. Udall's statement: "To provide flood control and power benefits equivalent to those provided by the Canadian storage as of 1970 entirely from projects in the United States would require an investment in the United States of about $710 million over the next nine years. To realize these benefits through Canadian storage, on the other hand, the costs in the United States over that period are estimated at not over $150 million."

That is point No. 3, and it needs no further comment from me. Here is point No. 4:

"Because of the relatively small new incremental investment required on our part, Canadian storage yields power quickly and at an extremely low cost to the United States. The delivered cost . . . is less than one half the present basic wholesale power rate of the Bonneville power administration."

Again, no further comment is needed from me.

There is a great deal more in Mr. Udall's statement, and I would be glad to have you look at it. But for the sake of illustrating what we give and what we get from the treaty, I believe the examples I have quoted will suffice.

And so here, to summarize, is what we are giving:

Canada will provide one natural resource, our water, and surrender another, our land which will be flooded forever.

Canada must finance, pay for, engineer, construct and maintain forever all the storage dams.

By carrying out the development, Canada will give the United States 50 per cent more storage—which means the power of another Grand Coulee dam, plus flood control, plus irrigation benefits, plus navigation control—all at a fraction of the amount it would cost the United States to realize these benefits if it were to carry out the work on its own side of the boundary.

And over and above all this, the Columbia treaty gives the United States the right to build the Libby dam in Montana, a dam which they have wanted to build for many years, and one which will yield them great benefits.

That is the "little bit" which Canada is giving under terms of this treaty.

And what are we getting?

Sixty four million dollars in compensation for our flooded land, plus half of the so-called "downstream benefits".

This is the package the government of Canada has been pressing British Columbia to accept. This is the deal which the zealous—and in my opinion, extremely naive—chief Canadian negotiator, the Honourable E. Davie Fulton, wants British Columbia to buy.

We say this is not good enough, either for British Columbia, which has the most to lose, or for Canada. We agree that the treaty can be made to work, but only if the potential benefits to Canada are brought back into balance with the certain sacrifices of Canada.

Then, after Mr. Bennett makes that statement, we had the minister of lands and forests in British Columbia saying what a wonderful treaty this is. Can you understand the confusion in the minds of the public when we have these various statements? Then, we have the Minister of Justice speaking to the Prince George chamber of commerce, when he outlined very clearly that this treaty was signed with the United States and he criticized Mr. Bennett very strongly for his statement. I quote:

> The Bennett juggernaut even tried to roll over the treaty itself—to discredit the terms Bennett's own minister, the Honourable Ray Williston had worked out with us during a year of hard work and splendid co-operation. You are told we are trying to ram this treaty down the throats of an unwilling British Columbia. What a monstrous proposition. The B.C. government helped make the treaty. The B.C. government endorsed the treaty. The B.C. government is primarily responsible for many of its most important terms. Why the abrupt change about the treaty? Why did the Bennett government cast out its own creation?

Then, later on we had this statement from the Minister of Justice, to which reference has already been made, to the effect that Canada would have been better off with a Columbia treaty drawn according to General McNaughton. In view of these contradictory statements, and in view of the great confusion in the public mind, we wholeheartedly support the proposal for bringing General McNaughton immediately before the external affairs committee.

With regard to this treaty I think the federal government received very poor advice from its water resources branch. The officials of this branch just look at things in terms of power and kilowatts; they do not look at things in terms of land, natural resources and values of that sort. The treaty was signed by this government with no definite knowledge of where the site would be for the High Arrow or Duncan dams. Premier Bennett has said the provincial government has spent $500,000 a month for the last eight months in order to determine whether they could build dams on these sites. The locations of the dams have been decided without any regard to the land to be flooded, the damage to agriculture, to the forest industry or the detriment that will be caused to the fishing resources. The damage caused will cost millions of dollars to restore, according to the wildlife service of British Columbia. This government has not considered the compensation that will be required because of the destruction of beaches, wharves, roads and ferries.

In addition to that, until recently the water resources branch did not know anything about the cost of moving logs from one side of the dam to the other. I have been told by prominent engineers attached to a large corporation that it will cost $25 million to build the equipment to lift nearly one million feet of logs a day over the High Arrow dam.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is nonsense.

Mr. Herridge: The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance says, "Nonsense". Does the parliamentary secretary think he has better knowledge than at least three top-notch engineers in Canada who were employed by this company and spent weeks studying this question? They have said it will cost $25 million to install the equipment to move the logs over this dam automatically. That is not provided for in the estimates of cost at all. Or, I am informed, the government will have to pay this company $500,000 a year in perpetuity, if equipment costing two or three million dollars is installed.

I am not blaming the federal government for this; I think they were very poorly advised by some of their own officials. How can you say that a treaty is a satisfactory one if you do not know what your costs will be, and other engineering firms have indicated that the cost of these dams is underestimated by over $100 million. I am not blaming the government for these figures, but I do say that the situation is such that General McNaughton, with his known capacity in this field and with his knowledge and experience from which the house and the public can be properly informed on this situation, should be called before the external affairs committee to tell his story. I am sure when that story is told he will convince his most caustic critics that he is the man who has the answers.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this problem is a very good example of people, with the best intentions, getting into a great deal of difficulty. I happen to be a native of the Columbia watershed; in fact, I was born about the centre of that portion of the Columbia watershed which is in Canada. My people were pioneers in that whole district. One was a member of parliament for Kootenay and then for many years a senator for Kootenay; so I have been particularly close to this picture from the time it first came before the standing committee on external affairs, which must be ten years ago. I can assure hon. members that I have never had the slightest intention of allowing that portion of my native province to be subjected to any deal which was unfair, and that is still my intention today.

I am afraid the hon. member for Essex East has overlooked the answer I gave to a question asked by him on April 9 which will be found at page 2641 of Hansard. He asked that General McNaughton be allowed to appear before the external affairs committee and my answer, speaking for the government, was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has already given the assurance that before the treaty is ratified it will be referred to the standing committee on external affairs, and at that time I would hope that General McNaughton could be called and give whatever evidence he wishes.

The treaty has not yet been ratified. There is no intention of ratifying it without putting it before the standing committee on external affairs. Personally I would be delighted to see General McNaughton, the residents in my old home district and anybody else appear before that committee, because the one thing in which I am interested is seeing that the treaty is a proper one and that the Columbia is developed in the best interests of the Canadian people.

Let us not hear any more of this idea that the government is trying to rush this thing through without giving General McNaughton a chance to appear, because that is not the case at all. Hon. members have had the assurance of the government that before this treaty is ratified it will be submitted to the standing committee on external affairs.

Mr. Chevrier: Can we rely on that assurance?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the point; it may never be ratified.

Mr. Green: I know that the hon. member for Laurier, who is a very old friend of mine, would not wish to intimate that my word is not good.

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Chairman; could I tell the minister at once that that would be the last thing in my mind. But I was thinking of the business of the house and assurances that we have received that certain business would be brought forward, and it never was.

Mr. Pallett: That is not right; that is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. Green: I would be very doubtful that this matter could be dealt with before Easter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Green: There is one other point, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Regier: You are too honest to be a politician.

Mr. Green: Some comment has been made about the statement reported to have been made in Alberta by the Minister of Justice yesterday or the day before. Like myself, the Minister of Justice is a native of British Columbia and his people have a longer record than my own in the public life of that province; they have a very distinguished record. He has stated, which is the fact, that originally we negotiated with the United States on the basis of a dam being put in the east Kootenays on the Kootenay river.

There must be a dam go in on that river either in Canada or in the United States in order to stop the flooding. With the consent of the government of British Columbia and with their approval we got the Americans to agree that that dam could be put in east Kootenay in Canada. I think that was very much to the surprise of the government of British Columbia. But then they turned right around and changed their minds completely and said "We will not stand for a dam in east Kootenay", and the result was that the term of the agreement had to be that the dam would be at Libby in Montana.

General McNaughton wanted the dam in Canada; so did the Canadian negotiators. The Minister of Justice quite properly stated that in his speech which is reported in the papers this morning. He is not to be condemned for that. The fact is that all through the conference General McNaughton was kept right in the picture, and kept in by me because he came under me as the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I wanted him in there to see that everything was as it should be. When it came to the final question as to whether the treaty should be recommended, the general did not like some of the features of it; he said, "I cannot oppose it. I cannot recommend it, but I cannot oppose it".

That was his position a week or so before the treaty was signed. Now, apparently, he is a great deal more antagonistic toward the treaty. In the intervening months I think he has been filled by the conviction that the treaty is very much worse than it appeared to him to be at that time. I do not want to be critical of General McNaughton but I can only repeat the leading paragraph on an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press of April 11—and everybody knows that the Winnipeg Free Press is one of the strongest supporters of the Liberal party in Canada. It says:

General McNaughton's attack on the Columbia river treaty, which he helped to negotiate, comes very late. If he believed that the treaty was a bad bargain he should have opposed it before it was signed by the Canadian government, when a better version might have been arranged.

Indeed, if he felt, as he now says, that the treaty "sold Canada down the river," he should have resigned as Canadian chairman of the international joint commission, a step which would certainly have made any government hesitate to approve the scheme. Instead, according to the government, he accepted the treaty as the best obtainable, though it was known that he had urged a somewhat different engineering design. Now, when he is being retired from his office, he suddenly tries to lock the barn door while the horse is a long way down the road.

I am pleased today that there is not the same emphasis on General McNaughton having been dismissed, or having been removed, as we heard in this chamber on Monday. I do not want to go over the discussion which took place at that time but I would point out again that General McNaughton has been under my jurisdiction. He was not dismissed; he was not removed. His retirement came just by reason of years—he had reached the age of 75 years. There was Mr. Dansereau, who had long service on the international joint commission, reaching that same age last year and he was not reappointed. It was simply and solely because of age that General McNaughton was not appointed again. He had been appointed on a year to year basis by the former government when the present Leader of the Opposition was Secretary of State for External Affairs and there was not the slightest idea of taking any action against General McNaughton because of the Columbia river problem or because of any other problem. It was solely a matter of age.

Here again I have an editorial from another leading Liberal newspaper—in fact, these two papers are the two toughest Liberal papers in Canada—This one is the Toronto Star and it said on April 9:

> As for his charge that he has been fired by a "dictator", the general has, in our view, no reasonable cause for complaint. The fact is that he has more than completed his 12-year term as Canadian chief on the international joint commission and the government chose not to renew his appointment.

They are incorrect in referring to a 12-year term because there is no such animal. The General was appointed each year. The article continues:

> His statement that he is an international civil servant does not hold water. As a Canadian appointee, heading the Canadian section of the commission, he was responsible to the Canadian government. And the government was perfectly entitled to retire him if it wished.

I would suggest that further criticism along these lines would be unfair not only to the government but also to General McNaughton himself, because it is going to do something to injure his splendid reputation and I can only ask for that fact to be kept in mind. I repeat that before the treaty is ratified it will be possible for the standing committee on external affairs to consider this question, and whatever evidence is brought before it can be heard. Then we can perhaps all agree on a treaty which is in the best interests of Canada.

I must say in conclusion that I think a good deal of the criticism should be directed west, out to the Pacific, rather than here to Ottawa. We have certainly done the best we could for Canada. We have not done any changing of our minds or pulling out of rugs as has been done by some of the others involved in this complicated problem and I really do not think it is fair that very much of the blame should be directed to Ottawa.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask the minister a question. I have just received notice from the press that Mr. Bennett called a press conference this morning and asked the Canadian government to ratify the Columbia treaty immediately.

Mr. Green: I am not sure whether the hon. member is trying to get on the same side as Premier Bennett or not. He seems to be in an awful hurry to get the external affairs committee to meet. I do not know whether he wants to get the treaty ratified or not. But Premier Bennett is not running the Canadian government yet.

Mr. Herridge: I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I might be permitted to say a few words in the light of what the minister has said on this matter. I am sorry I was not here to listen to my hon. friend from Essex East, but I understand he did not deal with the merits of the Columbia treaty itself. At this particular moment it is not the matter at issue, though it would lend itself to an interesting discussion if the opportunity should arise. I understand, also, that my hon. friend did not deal with the dismissal of General McNaughton as such but that he was asking for an investigation into the statements made by General McNaughton as a member of the Canadian section of the international joint commission—statements made by him regarding his dismissal and statements made regarding the nature of the treaty which we have mentioned. That is the issue as we have raised it at this time.

Surely, since the Coyne affair there has never been a matter which has cried more loudly for examination and investigation than this one does. The minister said that General McNaughton had not been dismissed, and he quoted some sources which were completely satisfactory to him on this matter. General McNaughton, he said, had not been dismissed; he had merely been allowed to retire at the end of the year's period of extension which had characterized for some years his position as chairman of the international joint commission. In other words, he was holding that office from year to year. That may be the attitude taken by the minister, but I should like to quote an authority which will be equally respectable in the eyes of the hon. gentleman—the Toronto Telegram, which everyone knows is very close to the government in this and other matters.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government's conscience.

Mr. Pearson: The Toronto Telegram had this to say on Monday, April 9:

> General McNaughton's blast against government policy on the Columbia river is typical of this embittered old man—

I must say that is a rather ungenerous comment concerning a man who has served Canada as General McNaughton has served, but we will let that pass. The editorial then goes on to say:

> He has been fired from his job as chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission—

Then there was the statement made by General McNaughton himself. If, however, the situation is as the minister states it, then surely this is one reason—and it is only one reason and perhaps not the most important—why there should be a chance to reconcile the conflicting statements in regard to this question of his dismissal. That could be done very simply by asking General McNaughton to appear before the committee on external affairs of this house.

There are other statements made by General McNaughton which have also been contradicted by spokesmen of the government. Surely it is a matter of great interest and importance to have these contradictions resolved for the sake of everybody concerned, including the government.

On April 3 the Prime Minister announced the general's retirement. He announced it outside the house in a press statement in which he said that he wished to take the opportunity of expressing the government's appreciation of the distinguished service General McNaughton rendered to Canada over so long a period of time and in so many important fields, a tribute which I think most hon. members of this committee would echo.

It would be very interesting to know, and perhaps the minister will be able to tell us, the circumstances surrounding the issue of the statement of April 3. Was General McNaughton formally apprised of the fact that his position was not to be continued, that he was going to be dropped at the end of this year's extension, if I may use that expression?

Mr. Green: I can clear that up at once, Mr. Chairman. I spoke to General McNaughton myself some weeks before this announcement. We had a perfectly amicable discussion and arrangement.

Mr. Pearson: On April 6, three days after the statement was made, which, according to the minister was the result of a very amicable arrangement made between him and the general—apparently the general did not consider it exactly in this light—the general made a statement in Washington which has been given a good deal of publicity. In that statement he said he had been removed and he was quite emphatic as to what had happened.

As I said, that is perhaps the least important aspect of this unhappy episode. The general, having said that his retirement was due to an arbitrary decision—and he went on to say of a dictator—on the same day also expressed very serious reservations about the treaty. Perhaps he felt free to express those reservations only after he had been informed—or the country had been informed—by a press release from Ottawa that he was about to vacate his post. That being the case, General McNaughton might have felt free to say things he could not have said while occupying his position. I need not repeat what he said on that occasion about the treaty because it has already been placed on the record. On April 7, the next day, the Minister of Justice took issue, as I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs also did, with the statement made by the general in respect of this treaty, and whether or not it was in the best interests of Canada.

The general in his turn has taken issue with some of the statements made by representatives of the government. He said on April 7 that he informed the government at the time that he would not associate himself with the treaty and he made it clear to the full federal technical committee that he would speak his mind when the opportunity arose. The opportunity arose after the general was told his term of office was over. Surely this is the kind of thing that should be investigated by the committee on external affairs of this house. If ever there was an important issue to submit to this committee, such a vital subject, this is it. I should have thought the government would have been the first to desire that this matter be looked into by a committee of this house in that way.

Another reason for having such a committee meet at once arises from the statement made yesterday, and an explanation of which was offered today to the effect, according to the Canadian Press, that the plan submitted by General McNaughton at the time was a better one than that which was actually signed in relation to the Columbia, but that it was impossible and impracticable to bring it about at that time.

Another reason for investigating this matter arises from the statement issued by the general this afternoon and from the press conference held by the premier of British Columbia this morning. All these matters have thrown this whole question into confusion and indeed into disarray. Surely the committee on external affairs, while parliament is sitting, is the place where some of this confusion we would hope could be removed and where we could be given the opportunity of finding out what actually has happened, not only in connection with General McNaughton's charges against the government and the negotiation of this treaty but also in connection with the treaty itself. In this way we might have an opportunity before this parliament ends of looking into the treaty. I do not quarrel with anything the minister said with respect to the treaty being submitted to the committee on external affairs before ratification. That, of course, is the convention and the custom under our constitution, that parliamentary approval should be given to every international engagement or treaty which imposes any commitments or obligations on this government, this country or this parliament. That is the normal course of events. That is what happens. These matters do not always go first to the committee on external affairs, although it has been the practice to submit conventions and treaties first to that committee, and then they are referred back to the full House of Commons.

Ever since this treaty was signed—and it was signed in circumstances which made it very doubtful indeed whether ratification would be easy and early because of the attitude taken by the province of British Columbia in connection with it—

Mr. Green: After it was signed that attitude was taken.

Mr. Pearson: That attitude became pretty clear in the letter sent by the premier of British Columbia to the Minister of Finance on, I believe, January 13, 1961, only a day or so, I admit, before the signature.

Mr. Green: In that respect may I point out that perhaps the Leader of the Opposition is unaware that ministers from British Columbia and their officials had been sitting in all the way through and had agreed to every word of the treaty.

Mr. Pearson: I am indeed aware of that, Mr. Chairman. I am aware of the fact that representatives of British Columbia took part in the negotiations. I assure the minister that I am not disposed any more than he is to give any particular credit to the government of British Columbia for the way it has handled this matter. Nevertheless before the treaty was actually signed, and notwithstanding the fact that representatives of the government of British Columbia sat in on the negotiations, the premier of British Columbia sent a letter to the Minister of Finance in which he expressed very grave doubts about the implementation of this treaty, especially on the financial side.

It was not too late even then, in view of the doubts on the part of British Columbia as expressed by the premier, to have waited until those last minute doubts were removed. Surely this made it desirable that this treaty should go to some committee of the House of Commons at the earliest possible date, especially in the light of the difference that had arisen between the province of British Columbia and the federal government.

If those differences could not be resolved there was no possibility, as I see it, of the federal government carrying through its signature to ratification. It would be idle to ratify or give parliamentary approval to an international treaty if that treaty could not be implemented through the co-operation of the province which was essential to its implementation. This was surely the time when we should have had an opportunity to examine this treaty before the committee during those months.

Over the past months I have put a good many questions to the government in regard to this matter. On March 24, 1961 as reported at page 3304 of Hansard I asked the Prime Minister whether we could expect that this treaty would be submitted to this parliament shortly for consideration. In replying the Prime Minister said:

> I wish to make it clear that it will be submitted but the date when it will be submitted still remains to be considered.

Then I said a little later on that, while recognizing the difficulties of discussing a treaty in a committee before these difficulties had been resolved with the province, nevertheless we hope these difficulties can be resolved without delay, at least to the point where we can examine this treaty in parliament.

The Minister of Justice said that he agreed that the proper place to do that was before the committee on external affairs, when there would be the fullest discussion and fullest vindication of the terms of this treaty.

An entirely new situation has now arisen. If that situation had not arisen, perhaps we would not be justified in requesting consideration before this committee of this treaty in the dying days of a parliamentary session. However, this is an entirely new situation now, when the chairman of the international joint commission who has so much to do with the negotiations of this treaty makes with regard to it certain statements which are, to say the least, important and which have been contradicted by the government itself. We still have some days in this parliament. No one knows how many. However, we have enough in which to ask for the committee to be convened at once and to ask General McNaughton to appear before this committee and to tell this House of Commons what he means when he says that Canada was sold down the river when this treaty was signed. The government owes that consideration, in justice to itself as well as to parliament. While statements remain unchallenged, except by statements made on the other side by ministers, this is the time to resolve the differences. The ministers say one thing. General McNaughton says something else. Premier Bennett says something else out in British Columbia. The Minister of Justice says one thing in Ottawa and something else out in Alberta. If there was ever a time when a situation was confused and was dangerous in its confusion, and if there ever was a time when that kind of situation should be cleared up, surely this is it. Surely the minister will realize the advisability of calling this committee together at once, not for the reasons about which we have been talking in the past, namely to go into all the articles of the treaty, although that would be desirable, but to get this single problem solved: Who is right with regard to statements made about this treaty?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is another Coyne affair.

Mr. Pugh: Two sides to the coin; two flags.

Mr. Winch: As a member of this House of Commons from British Columbia speaking on this most important issue now before us, may I say that I am not interested in saying anything about the retirement, whether forced or otherwise, of General McNaughton. I am interested in only one thing. I refer to a situation which, because of misunderstandings, charges and countercharges and a tirade of abuse between governments, has resulted in no action over the years in the development of hydro power resources in my province, with particular reference to development in the Columbia river basin.

I wish to say that in the years during which I have had the honour of being a representative of British Columbia I have never before known of a situation which was so heartbreaking as that relating to the power potentiality and development in British Columbia. I think there has been a great deal of misunderstanding. I think there has been far too much politicking, with the result that the general public do not know who is telling the truth and who is lying. A further result has been that development, which should have started a long time ago, is still to come, perhaps some time in the distant future. If the story were fully known, I believe it would make one of the most fantastic stories in the history of Canada. We have as the premier of British Columbia one who regards himself as a king maker, himself to be king with a British Columbia empire.

From my knowledge of British Columbia I feel absolutely safe in saying, without fear of any honest contradiction, that several years ago the government of British Columbia made some kind of backhand agreement with a corporate power in the United States for a certain development on the Columbia. From what I know, and as far as I can know, of that backhand arrangement, I have no hesitation in saying that had it not been for the action taken by the present government there might have been the greatest sellout ever known in Canada on the Columbia and its power potential. Because action was taken by this government to prevent that sellout, we then had a northern vision, not of this government but of the premier of British Columbia, wherein once again there was an agreement—the full details of which I maintain are not known and perhaps never will be known—as to the development of the power on the Peace river. Hence between politics, and the egotism, ambitions and desires of the premier of British Columbia we have had develop that extraordinary situation of a great deal of talk, charges, countercharges, abuse, and passing of the buck, and no development, be it on the Columbia river or on the Peace river.

We have in British Columbia this terrific potential power both in the south and in the north. Its development can be determined only by the two responsible governments getting together for the purpose of co-operating in the interests of British Columbia and of Canada. The matter is never going to be resolved by the continuation of what we have now and what we have had in the past between the two governments. Moreover, I feel quite safe in saying that the development of these two potentials, namely the Columbia and the Peace, cannot come to fulfilment without complete provincial and federal co-operation, as the hydro potential of the two put together is so great that it can be utilized only by a national power grid system if both are to proceed at the same time.

However, Mr. Chairman, our main and perhaps only concern at this moment is the Columbia river basin and its development by arrangement between the federal government and the government of the United States, and between the federal government and that of the province of British Columbia. I believe that the spirit of co-operation and compromise has been missing over the years. I believe that two reasonable and sensible governments, although they have failed to get together in the past, owe it to the people of British Columbia and of Canada generally to resolve their difficulties and to do so very quickly; but they can only resolve their difficulties by complete honesty and a full statement of the facts.

I agree entirely with the statement of our house leader, the hon. member for Kootenay West, and the statement of the Leader of the Opposition, that the way to arrive at the facts and an understanding of the true situation so as to be able to pinpoint what is the best thing to do and how to proceed in the future is to have all those concerned, the federal government, the provincial government, the United States authorities and General McNaughton, appear before a committee of this house with that committee having absolute authority to call for persons and papers.

I think the government must accept a great deal of responsibility for the situation which has arisen. With their knowledge of the situation, I believe they should have been in a position to have the committee meet a long time ago and thereby clear the air. I believe that the government, perhaps unwittingly, though it is hard to say, has allowed itself to be made the stooge of the premier of British Columbia and has been made to play his game whereby as a result of the trading of abuse and the lack of action, he has been able to say that he cannot proceed because of the federal government.

This is the senior government and as such it has complete control of licensing on international rivers and waters. Having that in mind, the federal government should have been in a position to put Premier Bennett on the spot and make him put up or shut up, prove or disprove. I regret that a firm attitude of this sort has not been adopted by the federal government up till now.

I also want to say that I believe the statements made by General McNaughton are such that they cannot be ignored by the government. The government owes it to the people of Canada in general and the people of British Columbia in particular to make provision as speedily as possible so that General McNaughton, with his ten years of study and knowledge in this field, may be able to present his facts in perspective, and to give the reasons why he has made his recent charges, which I think have been confirmed by the recent statement of the Minister of Justice in Hanna, Alberta, as quoted by the hon. member for Kootenay West. If the newspaper report is correct this is something which the senior government cannot ignore. The minister has said that a Columbia river treaty drawn according to General A. G. L. McNaughton's wishes would have been better for Canada, but that it was not possible to draft a treaty in the manner suggested by General McNaughton without treading on British Columbia's toes. I do not think he meant British Columbia's toes but rather the toes of Premier Bennett with his aspirations of kingship in British Columbia.

I say that under the British North America Act and having regard to the powers of the federal government one man should not be allowed to dictate something which is against the best interests of his own province and the people of Canada. In view of the statement made by the minister as reported by Canadian Press, I say it is the duty and responsibility of the government and an immediate necessity to have this matter clarified without delay. I wish to emphasize that I believe it would not be in the interests of Canada and I know it would not be in the interests of British Columbia for the matter of the Columbia river basin development to be made a political issue in the federal election. This matter transcends politics. It transcends speeches on the hustings. It concerns the development of the hydro potential of British Columbia and is a matter which should be discussed and decided away from the field of politics by reasonable men and women, whether they be in the provincial legislature or the House of Commons. Although the time may now be very short before the dissolution of the 24th parliament of Canada, it is my sincere hope that some method will be found immediately to have this matter clarified and settled while we are still here.

I must conclude now but I want to repeat what I said in beginning my remarks. This is not a matter of the federal government saving face, of Premier Bennett and the Social Credit government of British Columbia saving face or of General McNaughton saving face. Development of the Columbia river is a matter of great importance and something that is essential to British Columbia. In all fairness I must say that it is also of importance to the states south of the British Columbia border.

I hope that viewpoint will be recognized and appreciated and that some way will be found by immediate negotiation with the province of British Columbia to bring this matter to a reasonable conclusion, so that a start can be made very soon on the development and so that we may bring to an end the trading of abuse and charge and countercharge. We have a greater responsibility than to deal with this matter in the way it has been dealt with up to now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have done our best. A second Coyne affair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

695. Official hospitality—further amount required, $6,500.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister give an explanation of this item?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before the minister speaks, may I just raise a matter? We were engaged in the discussion of other matters, and while we have agreed to let this other item through, we inadvertently were unaware that item 692 had been called.

Mr. Green: This is the item for official hospitality—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not believe the minister has understood my observation. I was just pointing out, as a matter of courtesy to the committee that item 692 had been called when we were unaware that it had been called. We do not want to take up much of the time of the committee, but we have some questions on this item.

The Deputy Chairman: Item 692 was called and passed. It was one of the earlier ones. Perhaps we could continue on item 695 and I am sure the minister will co-operate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All right.

Mr. Green: This is the item for official hospitality. We have had heavy expenditures for official hospitality during the last fiscal year. One reason for this has been the number of visitors from other countries. For example, during the fiscal year we had visits from President Kennedy; the President of Iceland and his party; the Prime Minister of Greece; the President of Israel; the President of Finland; Prime Minister Macmillan; the President of Tunisia and the President of Argentina. This outline, of course, does not cover all the expenditures included in this vote. However, it has been necessary to spend more for official hospitality than the treasury board thought we should when the original estimate was passed.

Item agreed to.

696. Canadian representation at international conferences—further amount required, $115,000.

Mr. Pearson: This item 696 deals with Canadian representation at international conferences and so, perhaps, will give me an opportunity of asking a question which I might have asked earlier under 692 regarding the disarmament conference at Geneva. I am particularly interested in statements that have been made within the last day or two about the possibility of the resumption of nuclear tests and the possibility of postponing these tests as the result of some kind of interim agreement. There is a report, and I am paraphrasing it, to the effect that the Canadian government—the minister referred to this this morning—made what were called representations to Washington; and that certain delegations to this conference from the so-called uncommitted countries have also made representations, to the effect that the United States should not resume tests even though there is no satisfactory or, indeed, any agreement about control or inspection. I wonder if the minister feels he could tell us something about the thinking of the government in connection with this matter? I ask this question, not in any controversial or critical sense, but because the matter is of such tremendous importance. If the minister could give any clarification of the position of the government, I think it would be helpful.

Mr. Green: A day or two ago, in answer to a question by the Leader of the Opposition, I read from my first speech in Geneva to indicate the stand we had taken at that time about the tests. Of course that is still the Canadian position and is very clearly understood by all the nations concerned. Attempts are still being made in the conference in Geneva to work out some agreement between the nuclear powers which will result in a test ban treaty. It is impossible to say whether or not these efforts will be successful.

While there may not be agreement reached on a treaty which would provide for no more tests, I think there is also an intermediate position which is that tests should be postponed in the hope that something can be worked out. We are doing the best we can, but at the moment I cannot give the house any assurance as to what the final result will be.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I listened to a report from Washington at one o'clock which gave certain information with regard to Canadian representations which the minister was not able to give us this morning. I am not quarrelling with this because the minister says these discussions are going on, and when diplomatic discussions are going on it is not desirable, in certain circumstances at least, to give out all the details regarding these representations. However, this particular report was very detailed with regard to the nature of the Canadian representation and emphasized the fact that our government had criticized the United States government for taking a position which was too rigid in respect of the kind of control and inspection which was required, and that there would be a greater possibility for agreement if the necessity for control and inspection were reduced somewhat by the United States.

Mr. Green: Well, the big controversy between the nuclear powers is as to the type of verification there must be. The Soviet union claims that all the verification necessary can be obtained by the national systems of the western countries. The United States and the United Kingdom maintain there must be some international verification in each of the nuclear countries. Now, the dividing line is not entirely clear. I think there is some scope in there for bargaining. The parties on each side may have been taking a more rigid position than they would adopt as a final position.

Scientific matters are also involved in the question of what can be verified. I think it has been generally agreed that they have been verifying explosions in the atmosphere. The whole dispute is about explosions underground. One of the questions is whether or not there would have to be posts in the Soviet union and the United States, international posts, or whether it would be sufficient to send in inspection teams after there had been seismic disturbances which had not been definitely identified. Now, I believe there is some scope in that field for the two sides to get together. In any event, that is Canada's hope.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I take it the hon. gentleman believes that verification inside the Soviet union is not essential. The minister would even go one step further, and the Prime Minister too, according to a statement made in Montreal the other day, and hope that there would be no resumption of tests at all whether or not an agreement is arrived at between the Soviet union and the United States. This is clearly the position of the government of Canada at the present time. I assume that the representations which Canadian spokesmen have made to the government of the United States are along these lines.

Mr. Green: Any representations—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but we have gone past the hour of five o'clock, so I must rise—

Mr. Chevrier: May I suggest that we pass the remaining items?

The Deputy Chairman: It would be necessary to have unanimous consent to do that. If it were satisfactory to all members of the committee, there are only a few items, and it may be desirable to have them passed if unanimous consent could be obtained. I must advise the committee that the proper procedure is to get leave after the committee rises.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Do it now; it will only take two minutes.

Mr. Chevrier: It will only take a minute.

Mr. McCleave: The Chairman does not have to see the clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee wish to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

An hon. Member: Stop the clock.

Mr. Green: We can try to help work these things out. We do not ourselves take rigid stands like that. We are simply trying to help arrive at some provision which will be satisfactory to the nuclear powers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a word on this question. It is a vital matter. I know the minister is concerned about it. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, our discussion on this matter is in no way political. All we are seeking to do is make a contribution toward the solution of one of the vital problems which faces mankind at the present time.

As I understand the situation, the government of the United States has said through its president that it must resume tests; that this resumption is necessary because of the inability of the United States and the Soviet union to agree on a program for the cessation of nuclear tests under conditions which the United States believes would not prejudice its security.

The Soviet union detonated some very major nuclear weapons last fall. The suggestion is that as a result of such explosions the Soviet union acquired information with regard to problems having to do with anti-missile operations. All I am now saying is what one reads in publications. Indeed, the leader of the Labour party in the United Kingdom has gone so far as to express the view that the Soviet union may have acquired information as a result of these latter explosions which, while not adding to the deterrent strength of the Soviet union, nevertheless gives that country some information in that particular field which may not be open at this time to the United States. It is suggested that this is one of the reasons why the President of the United States has decided to resume tests. The leader of the Labour party in England, Mr. Gaitskell, in a public speech in his country indicated that he would favour the resumption of tests because of these conditions and circumstances which are alleged to have followed the explosions by the Soviet union.

This is the background. I am assuming that notwithstanding this situation, the view of the government of Canada is that the United States should not resume tests, whether or not it is able to reach an agreement at Geneva with regard to the resumption of such tests. I understand further that the position of the Canadian government is as stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on a number of occasions, namely that the Canadian government believes that it is not in the interests of the present generation that these tests be resumed, whether or not there is a system of control agreed on.

On other occasions I thought the view stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was unequivocal, but that the position taken by the government through the Prime Minister was equivocal. The statement made by the Prime Minister to a gathering last week in Montreal was to the effect that Canada favoured no resumption of tests, whether or not there was an agreement with the Soviet union. Notwithstanding what may have been achieved by the Soviet union as a result of the explosions of last fall, the view of the government of Canada is that there should not be any resumption of tests by the United States. This is a matter of vital importance. I take it that this is the policy of the government of Canada.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to again interrupt the hon. minister. We are now well past five o'clock and I think I should report progress. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Item stands.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

MR. CHEVRIER—TABLING OF EMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, while you were chairman in committee of the whole I moved to table certain documents. I wonder if I could get permission to do so now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) leave to table certain documents?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

MARION RUTH CATHERINE SLATTERY

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. SD-6, an act for the relief of Marion Ruth Catherine Slattery—Mr. McCleave.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, if the house is agreeable and there is unanimous consent I would ask that the divorce bills standing in my name be given second reading now so that they may be studied in committee on Monday morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the request of the hon. member?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is the wish of this party that the procedure of the house be according to the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see there is not unanimous consent.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-42, to provide for minimum wages for employees.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a relatively simple bill and is applicable to a very small number of employees; in fact, it applies only to employees under the jurisdiction of federal fields of endeavour. It covers persons involved in such undertakings as the operation of ships, transportation by ships in Canada, maritime fields, telegraph, railway transportation, aerodromes, broadcasting, banking and such other works within the provinces as come under the general statutes of the federal government.

Therefore the number of employees who would be affected by this bill is limited. This problem has affected all the provinces and the federal government because of the very nature of our constitution. The British North America Act has the capacity of a constitution which makes it mandatory for the Canadian government to have limited legislation and federal jurisdiction over these people. Each of the provinces has its own jurisdiction of a similar nature where that jurisdiction applies. We are asking in this bill only for a basic minimum of $1.25 an hour.

Many members have asked me in the last few weeks if I did not feel that $1.25 an hour was a ridiculously low figure, particularly when the prevailing rates applying to most contracts handled by the federal government where day to day workers are employed is set at a level higher than the minimum for which we are asking here. However, we feel there should be a minimum rate and that it should not be a detrimental hiring rate in areas where industry will be following the lead given by the federal minimum wages. We feel that in some cases employers who are not favourable to establishing reasonable rates and who often use the minimum rate as their maximum rate also will be influenced by this.

According to a review undertaken by the legislative branch of the Department of Labour, all the provinces now have minimum wage laws in operation. Prince Edward Island was the last province to enact such legislation. In the province of Ontario we have to date a minimum wage law affecting women only and the amount varies according to the zones in which they work. There are minimum wages in some of the provinces which are set as low as 44 cents an hour for workers under the age of 18. Unfortunately, most of the provincial legislation regarding minimum wages has set rates which are ridiculously low, and even those rates have been criticized by some employers because it was maintained that they did harm to their hiring rates.

We are introducing this measure in the hope that this legislation will give leadership to the provinces and encourage them to enact laws providing for a minimum rate as high as this minimum is. In Ontario the minimum rate for women is disgracefully low and that is true with regard to most of the other provinces. It is true that $1.25 is a very low figure in most areas in which the federal government is hiring people at a minimum rate of $1.65. In Port Arthur and the surrounding area I understand the rate is $1.85. However, our figure is considerably higher than the provincial prevailing rate in Ontario and in many other provinces.

We hope the minimum rate set out here will be taken as such. We hope it will protect workers in areas where abuses might otherwise take place, but that it will not necessarily be considered an acceptable rate for any particular area. It will be something to work from.

Some of the Conservative members on the eve of an election would probably like to refer to the fact that in 1935 Mr. R. B. Bennett, a former prime minister of this country, introduced legislation which would have provided certain minimum labour conditions in accordance with a labour code in keeping with the recommendations of the Geneva labour convention at that time. However, the legislation was ruled ultra vires under the terms of the British North America Act. Since that time very little federal labour legislation has been enacted of a kind which would give leadership to the provinces in this field. Considerable discussion could take place as to the reasons why it has been necessary to establish minimum wages and regulate working conditions in the provincial as well as the federal field. It might also be interesting to consider why the federal government has not developed a federal labour code of which a minimum wage would be part, so as to give leadership to the various provincial departments of labour across the country. This was the wish of Mr. R. B. Bennett in 1935. It is still, in my opinion, the wish of most labour organizations, of most employers organizations and also, I think, of this country in general, that we should find a way of putting into effect the recommendations which have been made over the years by the Geneva conventions as a means of protecting the rights of those in the labour field who are not in a position to bargain for themselves.

Of course, there are no unions across the country which would be asking for a minimum in the fields in which the federal government has jurisdiction; but an act such as we propose would give the leadership for which this country has been looking for many years. The present Minister of Labour is concerned with this matter and he has shown an understanding of the need for a national labour code, as well as of the need for improvement in many of the aspects of labour legislation. In addition, the government over the years has endorsed the decisions of the Geneva conventions affecting labour; so perhaps there has been an indication from Canada that there is a desire to see at least a basic federal labour code established which would include among other things a minimum wage for all employees.

Before I sit down I should like to point out that while we are debating a proposal for a minimum wage we would certainly wish to protect those rights which are enjoyed by employees, and that we would not wish the provision of a minimum wage to take away from any employee under federal jurisdiction any of the rights he now possesses.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): The hon. member who introduced this measure stated that it is a simple bill. It is not too simple. It contains 19 clauses and some 50 subclauses. However, the principle of the bill is simple. It is to set a realistic minimum wage and I think that is a principle of which most members of this house will approve.

I thank the hon. member for having given credit to a former Conservative prime minister, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, for having introduced in his new deal legislation in 1935 the principle of a minimum wage. This was referred to when this bill was first introduced in this house, I believe on November 28, 1957, by Mr. Stanley Knowles. As far as I can make out, the only difference between this bill and the bill introduced by Mr. Knowles is that Mr. Knowles' bill set one dollar an hour as the minimum wage whereas this bill sets a rate of $1.25.

In the debate on the bill in 1957 as reported at page 1619 of Hansard, Mr. Knowles went on to point out that the Bennett proposal had been ruled ultra vires in that it had been established by the courts by that time that labour-management matters came in part under federal jurisdiction and in part under provincial jurisdiction and therefore it was not competent for the federal parliament to pass a minimum wage act applicable to all wage earners in Canada. As reported at page 1619 of Hansard of November 28, 1957, Mr. Knowles went on to say:

> I think it is fair to say that Mr. Bennett, the eminent lawyer that he was, knew of this difficulty and he tried to meet it by a rather lengthy and interesting preamble which can be found in chapter 44 of the statutes of 1935. The gist of that preamble was that Canada, having agreed to an international convention regarding the establishment of certain labour standards, including minimum wages, was obligated by that treaty arrangement to put such legislation on the statute books of the country.

Nevertheless that was not supported by the courts. This bill, dealing only with labour coming under federal jurisdiction, certainly is one with which parliament can deal. In previous debates the objection was raised that bills of this nature are money bills representing increased costs to the federal government. That argument cannot be sustained. I refer again to Mr. Knowles' statement on this question as reported at page 1623 of the date to which I have referred:

> A bill, which does not involve a direct expenditure but merely confers upon the government a power for the exercise of which public money will have to be voted by parliament, is not a money bill and no resolution is necessary as a condition precedent to its introduction.

Those are not the words of Mr. Knowles. He was citing the headnote of a decision which appears at page 457 of Beauchesne's third edition.

In other words, if parliament passes this bill the costs, if there are any increased costs as a result of its passage, would still have to be approved by parliament when the estimates are considered.

As the sponsor of this bill said in his opening remarks the rate established by the bill of $1.25 an hour is much less than the rate set through collective bargaining negotiations with the various labour bodies who speak for practically all federal government workers in regard to wages. If this bill passes I am concerned that in some areas the minimum might become the maximum, which certainly would not be a very good thing.

There is a minimum wage law in the United States. I believe a proposal is currently being discussed to establish there a minimum wage of $1.25, which seems to be a reasonable figure although it is considerably above what Mr. Knowles in 1957 thought was reasonable.

I was interested in checking the rates specified in similar acts in the various provinces.

I cannot resist pointing out that in Saskatchewan, where one would think the thinking would be akin to that of the hon. member, the minimum wage is $30 a week for cities and the 15 larger towns within a five mile radius and $29 a week for the rest of the province. This applies to workers over 18 years of age. For those under age 18 the minimum is $2 less; that is, $28 in the larger towns and $27 in the rest of the province. This works out to something in the neighbourhood of 75 cents an hour, or if you wish to take the lower figure of $28 for someone under age 18 who is not employed in the 15 larger towns and cities it is 70 cents an hour. I am wondering why it is that that minimum wage level has been adopted by a province that has a government which is supposed to be a leader in social legislation.

As I said, the minimum wage was first introduced in parliament by a Conservative government, just as a Conservative government introduced hospital insurance, unemployment insurance and other legislation of benefit to the people of Canada. Therefore, there is nothing in the philosophy of this bill that a member on the government side would not consider worthy of consideration.

When we reach a clause by clause consideration of the bill various questions may arise. In some clauses of the bill the hon. member has gone a little far afield. I do not wish to discuss in detail the clauses of the bill but the hon. gentleman set specific limits on board and lodging. I am wondering whether those limits are the same in cases where the employer pays more than the minimum wage. I wonder whether the hon. member intends to set a rate of 50 cents for a meal and 75 cents for lodging in cases where the employer is paying as high as $2.50 an hour for labour. The provisions of the bill are vague in some respects and unrealistic in the light of present day costs, and these matters would have to be discussed when we reach detailed consideration of the bill.

The bill covers all federal employees. As I have said, most of these are fully covered by union agreements arranged through collective bargaining between the employer and the employee. I think of employees such as those engaged on railways, air lines and in communications. In paragraph (g) of clause 3 of the bill reference is made to employment in banks and banking. I am wondering whether employees in this field should be included in a measure of this kind. Questions of this sort would have to be examined by any committee considering the bill.

The hon. member proposes that records must be kept. I do not know the background of this recommendation but the records proposed appear rather elaborate and would, I fear, become onerous. Perhaps modification is required here.

The hon. member has said this is a simple bill to provide a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour. I agree it is simple in its basic philosophy but not in any other respect. Before this bill was passed by parliament it would have to be thoroughly examined in committee. I am wondering, on the basis of indications in the last week, whether there would be sufficient time for the bill to receive the intensive checking in committee that would be necessary. I am in general agreement with the concept behind the bill but feel it requires thorough examination. I suppose the banking and commerce committee would be the appropriate place to which to refer the bill so that representatives of industry and labour could appear before the committee and state their views.

Mr. Peters: Before the hon. member resumes his seat perhaps I may be permitted to ask him a question. The only figures available for comparison on a national basis are those relating to female workers. Is the hon. member aware that in 1960 there was a minimum wage of $32 a week in Saskatchewan for women, the highest minimum wage for women in Canada?

Mr. Broome: I did not know that. The table from which I was quoting was the one which was filed by the hon. member. As far as I can make out, it made no distinction with regard to male and female labour, but simply with regard to the location of that labour, whether they were working in cities or in small towns and villages. Even if the hon. member is right, at $32 a week this is 80 cents an hour and he is still 66⅔ per cent under what he is proposing here on a federal basis.

Mr. Peters: It is very low.

Mr. Broome: There was one point I wished to make, however, and I thought the hon. member might have made it himself as an argument for the bill, namely that the federal government could very well be a good example for the provinces. This is a point which the hon. member could have made and I think it is an argument for his bill.

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Timiskaming is to be congratulated at least on his tenacity, for this bill has the look of an old friend. We have heard a good deal about it in the last few years. I should like to say that I am quite sure that, regardless of where he sits, every member of this house will subscribe to the principle that the worker is worthy of his hire. Underlying the presentation of this bill I presume there is that wish to see that the worker receives due reward for the energy he expends. Yet at the same time I find it very hard to reconcile certain statements made by the hon. member who introduced this bill, and certain phases of the bill, with the progress that my hon. friend hopes may be made when the bill is passed.

I am particularly concerned at the moment with clause 2(b) which states that "employee" means a person of any age. It is conceivable that in certain departments or in certain avenues of work juniors would be preferable. I can think of a great many young persons in my own community to whom I certainly would not wish to pay $1.25 an hour. Mention was made of the fact that in one area the minimum wage is 48 cents an hour. I am not saying that is a proper wage. However, I believe that we are imposing a handicap when we say to any employer, "You will pay $1.25 an hour for labour regardless of sex and regardless of age". A young man, possibly of the age of 16 years, having left school and receiving $1.25 an hour for a seven hour day, would receive $8.75 a day. If he worked five days a week he would receive $43.75. That amount may not appear to be excessive. Perhaps it is not excessive. However, I say that it represents a figure which may be out of balance with the wages received by the older person. A young man 25 years of age I think would automatically consider that, if his younger brother of fifteen years or sixteen years can receive $43.75 a week, he is being underpaid at $60 or $65. I find it extremely difficult to embrace this bill in the broad terms in which it has been outlined.

A moment ago I said that the worker is worthy of his hire. We all subscribe to this principle. However, how does one determine worthiness? That point seems to be the key to the matter. If this provision was to apply to a specially trained group, a group with certain known qualifications, or if it was to apply to certain specialized work, there might be more justification for that particular clause than there is now. However, you cannot get qualification and you certainly cannot get experience in a young head and a young body. I believe there should be some amendment to this bill—and I am not going to propose it—which would take out of the bill itself this question of sex and age and which would put the bill on a firm basis with respect to the type of labour for which it is intended.

I agree with many of the things said by my colleague the hon. member who last spoke. We are in sympathy with this type of legislation. We wish to see the people of this country obtain a decent living. Regardless of where we sit in the house, I am quite sure that all of us would applaud any forward looking step which would place the extremely low salaried worker—particularly the more adult worker —on a basis of comfort and equality consistent, of course, with services rendered. However, times change. I can remember, Mr. Chairman, when my father came to this country in the early part of this century, when I was a very small boy. He worked for a dollar a day and he was glad to be able to work. I myself can remember working for 50 cents a day and working long hours. It is true that the dollar or the 50 cents meant a great deal more then than it does today. I will grant that fact. However, those were the days of competition for work. We were obliged to get out and find our own jobs. Many of us worked on farms in western Canada for $25 or $30 and our board a month, and we were the better for it as we learned that it was necessary for us to produce something in the way of constructive labour in order to enjoy the advantages of a wage at all.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, with all kindness and with all respect for the mover of this bill I say that the hon. member might be well advised to take a second look at it and to bring into it some clarification as to the persons to whom it basically should apply.

I am sure there are many other members of the house who would like to speak on this bill. It is an important one. We are all interested in workers. Most of us are workers ourselves. I do not intend to monopolize the time of the house. In closing let me say this. Regardless of party, experience, or outlook and particularly regardless of economic position, I am sure there is not a man or lady in this house who will not endorse the basic principle of this bill.

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to make any comments on this bill, even though it has been before this house in previous sessions. However, I have read the contributions of hon. members from all sides of the house in previous debates. The thing that struck me from the beginning was that while everyone is in agreement with the basic principle outlined in this bill, there may not be agreement as to the amount and there may not be agreement as to various clauses and subsections of the bill. The situation therefore is one in which everyone wishes to achieve the same end but differs as to the method of going about it.

Another thing that struck me was the need for the introduction of a bill like this. We all know from past history, of course, of instances in which labour was exploited by employers. We have come a long way since then. However, the fact that we have a bill like this before us would indicate that there is still the isolated instance in this country where labour is being exploited. Coming as I do from the city of Winnipeg may I say this. We had there an experience about which I am sure all members of the house have heard and read. I am, of course, referring to the 1919 Winnipeg general strike. Following that strike the trade union movement grew up and bargained with employers for wages. I think the way our unions have conducted themselves in the past and are conducting themselves at the present time is a credit to Canadian labour. Personally I feel it is a pity that in some instances we do not have 100 per cent Canadian unions and that some of them are still controlled by our neighbour to the south. I also think it is a pity that in some cases there is apathy among some of the union members themselves so that power is concentrated in one or two at the top without in some instances the sanction of the rank and file. But by and large the history of unions in Canada and what they have accomplished for the workers of this country is very commendable indeed.

Previous speakers have pointed out that in this sprawling land of ours—and some consider it is a miracle that it has remained together as long as it has—our lines of geographical barriers run north and south and our economic lines run north and south. Across this country there are various standards of living and various bases of economic stability. Therefore what may be regarded as a minimum wage in accordance with the standard of living in one part of the country may be far too high in the light of the standard of living in another part of the country.

When one looks at the type of workers who would be covered by this kind of legislation he cannot help asking the question, is there a real need for a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour? I would be interested in the production of figures before a committee to which this bill might be referred, to determine the number of employees in these various categories who are in fact being paid less than $1.25 an hour; and if there should be a substantial number I would be interested in the category of work, the age and education of the employees in the various groups. In that regard I agree with my colleague, the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who pointed out that there are types of work which would not require a wage of $1.25 an hour or whatever the figure might be.

I am also interested in the points that have been brought out with regard to the minimum wage legislation in the various provinces of this country. I would think that the result we are seeking could probably be better achieved by working through the provinces, either through a provincial conference with respect to conformity of legislation or through the various labour groups approaching the province in which they are active and in which they are aware of the economic conditions and circumstances, the standard of living and all of the other factors that go into determining a principle such as this. I think it could probably be done better on a local provincial basis rather than through the House of Commons. That has been pointed out by previous speakers when they mentioned that legislation passed in 1935 was disallowed by the Supreme Court of Canada, and therefore we are confined to workers falling under federal jurisdiction.

The arguments I have tried to present and the arguments that others have presented indicate to me that while we want to achieve a certain result, a great deal of discussion must be done in committee on the various clauses of the bill. There is a great deal of information required and a great deal of time must be spent on the matter in order to achieve that result with which all members of the house will be in agreement. I commend the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) for introducing the bill and I hope that other members will express their views on it. I would be particularly interested in hearing from a member of the Liberal party, of whom there are few in the house this afternoon. I think they have something to offer as private members, as well as a party, and I would hope that before the hour ends we would hear from one of the two who are in the chamber this afternoon.

Mr. Habel: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I tell the hon. member that if Liberal members are not more numerous in the house it is because they are working on something else. Not knowing what next week may bring upon us, we have some work to do and we are working at it.

Mr. Drysdale: What have they got to do?

Mr. Habel: We are getting ready. In fact we are ready.

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that on one occasion this afternoon no member of his party was present and those who are here now are very busy reading newspapers in the back row.

Mr. Batten: What are you doing over there?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think enough has been said on that subject.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, after this short interruption I should like to go ahead and say a few words about Bill No. C-42 introduced by the hon. member for Timiskaming, which we are now discussing. In general terms I approve of the principle of a minimum wage law for federal employees. Historically I think one of the disgraces of our social system has been the unfair wages paid to those who offer their services. We can think back a good many years and realize that originally the worst exploitation was of child labour and of women who were employed in work that normally should have been done by men. But they were not the only victims of exploitation. For many years men have also been exploited in the services they have to offer to employers.

We know that out of this situation have arisen the labour unions in Canada, North America and throughout the world. I think no one will deny that the labour unions have done a great deal toward raising the standard of wages throughout the world and in that way they have served a very good and useful purpose. Prior to the time labour unions became strong enough to exert influence against employers who were oppressing workmen, it was difficult for anyone to buck the employers and the big corporations.

I think it is also fair to say that there are some people who now believe that perhaps the labour unions have at last reached the same level of power as management, or have perhaps gone beyond that and have overplayed their hand. This appeared to be the situation a few years ago, but I think it is now coming back to normal and there seems now to be a fair distribution in our social system between the powers of large corporations and those of the labour unions. We have just seen an instance this week in the neighbouring country to the south of the power that management is still able to wield. We do realize that it is necessary not only for the workers of the country but also for the government to maintain their strength at this particular moment.

In so far as this bill is concerned, I may say that for many years there have been technical problems in connection with the setting of minimum wages for federal employees. We can think back to the days of the late R. B. Bennett when there was an effort made to pass a minimum wage law for Canada. As hon. members know, this law was declared ultra vires of the federal parliament. I think the reason for this was made obvious in that the act was an effort to legislate in connection with wage standards across Canada. It became clear that this was beyond the power of the parliament of Canada because it invaded a provincial sphere and for that reason the legislation was declared ultra vires.

However, I think this bill makes an effort to overcome that problem. I am not sure whether or not it accomplishes this purpose, but it certainly makes an effort to get around the difficulty because the effect of it purports to apply only to those who are federal employees or employees of corporations under the control of the federal government. It is very interesting to recall that when the minimum wage legislation was before the Supreme Court of Canada some 25 years ago, the supreme court divided evenly, three judges to three judges. One wonders why the court would have been so composed as to allow such a possibility, but apparently only six judges sat on the case and three felt it was ultra vires while three felt it was not. As a result, the legislation then went to the privy council which held that it was ultra vires and the legislation thereupon became ineffective.

The decision reached at that time is very interesting in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada is now the final appeal body in Canada, and one could speculate as to what the decision of that court might be today in a similar case. A portion of the judgment which held that the legislation was intra vires reads as follows:

> From two main considerations, the conclusion follows that legislative authority in respect of international agreements is, as regards Canada, vested exclusively in the parliament of Canada. First, by virtue of section 132 of the British North America Act, jurisdiction, legislative and executive, for the purpose of giving effect to any treaty obligation imposed upon Canada, or any one of the provinces of Canada, by force of a treaty between the British Empire and a foreign country, is committed to the parliament and government of Canada. This jurisdiction of the dominion the privy council held, in the aeronautics case and in the radio case is exclusive; and consequently, under the British North America Act, the provinces have no power and never had power to legislate for the purpose of giving effect to an international agreement: That, as a subject of legislation, is excluded from the jurisdiction envisaged by section 92.

There was a great deal more of the judgment that might be read. However, I believe it is fair to say that, as a result of the judgment, the legislation was abandoned.

In so far as Bill No. C-42 is concerned, I have looked at it carefully in an effort to see whether or not it does get around the difficulties that were inherent in the legislation declared ultra vires previously. There are one or two clauses that might be considered ultra vires. However, since it is not the custom on second reading to go into bills section by section, I would prefer not to do so now. I merely say that the bill sets forth a useful purpose and is worthy of consideration. I would hope that the difficulties of the past in connection with wages would be met and that the government would eventually give consideration to this type of legislation.

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, it would appear from the clock that I do not have too much time to discuss this bill. At this time, I should like to congratulate the hon. member who sponsored it. I am glad to see that he has returned to his seat and that the New Democratic party finally has some representation in the house. For a while, I was wondering how he expected to get support for his bill.

Mr. Peters: I was out trying to round it up.

Mr. MacInnis: There were no members of his party present. At this time I should like also to express disappointment in the fact that the champion of labour from Essex East (Mr. Martin) has not been present to add his two cents worth. In fact, his whole party was absent at one point and the house took on the appearance of a Conservative caucus.

Mr. Chevrier: Where have you been for the last few weeks?

Mr. MacInnis: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask—I am looking to the east and I am looking to the west—oh, I see the acting house leader now—for the three days which I presume we will be sitting next week, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, what the business will be?

Mr. Nowlan: I am only the acting house leader, so I would not want to exceed my terms of authority, which run only until Monday when the house leader will be back. During Monday, we will continue to deal with the supplementary estimates and the bill, of course, ensuing therefrom. Then, we would take up item No. 12 on today's order paper, which is a resolution on redistribution standing in the name of the Prime Minister. These two are firm, Mr. Speaker. We will deal with supplementary estimates first and then we will take up item No. 12. I do not want, at the moment, to commit myself definitely to the order for the rest of the day, but I would expect that we would then deal with No. 2, a bill dealing with an amendment to the British North America Act; then item No. 14, which is a resolution dealing with a charge on the consolidated revenue fund for the payment of a lifetime annuity to those who may be retiring under the bill which I have just mentioned. It may be that, at the same time, we may deal with item No. 1 on the order paper today, an amendment to the Customs Act.

As I said, I do not want to commit myself about the order of the latter three, although the first two are firm, namely the supplementary estimates and then the bill with respect to redistribution.

It being two minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PRIVATE BILLS

Fifth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. McCleave.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO MEMBER FOR QUEBEC EAST ON RECOVERY FROM ILLNESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to extend the most heartfelt welcome to the hon. member for Quebec East, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tassé).

Last fall, the hon. member for Quebec East was the victim of a street accident, which kept him away from his office for several months. I know I am expressing the feeling of all in extending to him the most heartfelt welcome and wishing him full recovery at the earliest possible date.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot in extending the most heartfelt welcome to the hon. member for Quebec East on his return among us. With my colleagues, I wish him excellent health. With regard to impending events, I wish him good luck, but not too much, however.

Mr. Pigeon: He is dangerously well.

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): May I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to express my thanks to those members who have been the spokesmen of their colleagues of both sides of the house and to tell them how I am touched by their gesture.

RAILWAY CROSSING SIGNALS, ST. JEAN, QUE.

Question No. 410—Mr. Dupuis:

1. Since March 1957, how many signal systems have been installed at railway crossings within the boundaries of the town of St. Jean, Quebec; and, what was the cost of each of these installations?

2. Are further installations contemplated; and, if so, at which crossings, when will they be in operation, and at what cost?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

1. Automatic protection has been installed at the following seven crossings in the city of St. Jean, P.Q. since March 1957 at a total cost as indicated opposite each listed street:

Frontenac street	$14,852.94
Laurier street	14,959.55
Cousins street	9,011.91
Mercier street	11,988.70
St. Jacques street	4,570.62
Bouthillier street	8,493.06
Boveri street	9,971.05

2. Applications for the installation of automatic protection at Collin, Champlain, and Mercier streets in the town of St. Jean, P.Q. are presently being processed by the board of transport commissioners. The estimated costs of these installations are—for Champlain street $14,500 and for Mercier street $12,275. An estimate of the cost of installing protection at Collin street has not yet been developed. It is not possible to precisely estimate when approval of these applications will be granted.

RAILWAY CROSSING SIGNAL, ST. JEAN D'IBERVILLE

Question No. 411—Mr. Dupuis:

Have requests been made to the board of transport commissioners for the installation of an adequate signal system at the crossing of Champlain street and the Canadian Pacific Railway line at St. Jean d'Iberville; and, if so (a) by whom, and on what date were such requests made (b) what decision was arrived at with respect thereto?

Questions

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

1. Please see answer to part 2 of question No. 410 with respect to the installation of automatic protection at Champlain street in the city of St. Jean, P.Q. This application was submitted to the board by the city of St. Jean under date of February 1, 1961 and has been under study in conjunction with possible changes at this crossing, and adjacent crossings, including a change in the railway from a double track main line to a single track main line which, it is considered, will result in less expensive installation of protection.

AMENDMENT, INTERCOLONIAL AND P.E.I. PROVIDENT FUND ACT

Question No. 435—Mr. Michaud:

1. Has an order in council been passed amending section 2 of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees' Provident Fund Act, chapter 5, 19-20 George V, and; if so, on what date, and what is the extent of the amendment?

2. Under, or by virtue of, the said act or any amendment made thereto, is an employee entitled to receive the difference between his present amount of retirement and the amount he would have received had he remained until the age of 70?

Answer by: Mr. Martini:

1. Pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of chapter 5 of the statutes of Canada, 1929, being an act to further amend the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Employees' Provident Fund Act, the following orders in council were passed:

(a) Order in council P.C. 1447 dated August 7, 1929, closed the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways employees' fund to new entrants and also provided that employees of the Canadian government railways in the service upon or after such closing of the fund who are not members of the fund be subject to the rules and regulations for pension allowances as are or may be in effect from time to time and applicable to Canadian National Railways employees under the Canadian National Railways' pension act.

(b) Order in council P.C. 1956-29/353 dated March 8, 1956 authorized any employee who on January 1, 1956 is a contributing member of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways employees' provident fund to elect to withdraw from the provident fund and transfer to either part 1 or part 2 of the Canadian National Railways' pension plan under terms and conditions as set out in the said order. The privilege of making such an election expired on December 31, 1956.

(c) Order in council P.C. 1958-47/1680 dated December 12, 1958, authorized any employee who on January 1, 1959 is a contributing member of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways employees' provident fund to elect to withdraw from the provident fund and transfer to the revised part 2, Canadian National Railways' pension plan under terms and conditions as set out in the said order. This order in council passed to enable contributing members of the provident fund to transfer to the revised Canadian National Railways' pension plan if they desired. The privilege of making such an election expired on December 31, 1959.

2. No—pensions are calculated on service to date of retirement.

[Mr. Dupuis.]

*COUNTY COURT JUDGES' ASSOCIATION REPORT, 1961-62 TERM

Question No. 438—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the Minister of Justice receive a copy of the report of the president (Judge J. M. Cooper) of the county and district court judges' association for the 1961-62 term; and, if so, (a) has the minister made any comments to the issue of salaries raised in this report, or (b) has he been in touch with the Canadian Bar Association on the matter?

2. What is the gist, if any, to the minister's replies or comments in either of these two situations?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The answer is as follows:

1. Yes.

(a) Yes.

(b) No.

2. The matter is being seriously considered.

"HANSARD" DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 439—Mr. Drysdale:

1. What are the total number of Hansards mailed out by the Queen's printer?

2. What is the total revenue received by the Queen's printer from Hansard subscribers?

3. How many Hansards are mailed out to members of legislative assemblies, members of parliament, and provincial governments?

4. What would the additional cost be to airmail Hansard to the M.L.A.'s, M.P.'s, and provincial government libraries?

Answer by: Mr. Dorion:

1. English—8,196; French—1,811; 10,007 daily issues.

2. $11,826 for current session, to date.

3. Fifty-seven (57) daily, on a free basis, to provincial ministers, provincial and legislative libraries. M.L.A.'s who are not in the ministry do not receive free service.

4. The average additional cost per issue, per day, would be 17 cents. Daily air mail charge for one copy to each member of each legislative assembly (583 copies) would be $99.11. The daily air mail charge to the ten (10) legislative libraries would total $1.70.

COMMODITY EXPORTS AND IMPORTS, ETC.

Question No. 441—Mr. Broome:

By years, from 1955 to 1961 inclusive, what have been the total commodity exports, total commodity imports, and total deficit or surplus?

Answer by: Mr. Morris:

Total commodity exports, total commodity imports, and total deficit or surplus, years 1955 to 1961, were as follows:

Year	Total Commodity Exports	Total Commodity Imports	Surplus (+) or Deficit (—)
	(millions of dollars)
1955	4,327.8	4,567.8	—240.0
1956	4,833.8	5,547.0	—713.2
1957	4,884.1	5,473.3	—589.2
1958	4,894.3	5,050.5	—156.1
1959	5,140.3	5,508.9	—368.6
1960	5,386.8	5,492.3	—105.6
1961	5,895.7	5,784.0*	+111.7*

* revised preliminary total

Note: Figures may not add due to rounding.

* UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE RECIPIENTS

Question No. 451—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total number of recipients of unemployment insurance benefits as of February 28, 1962?

Mr. Starr: The total number of recipients of unemployment insurance benefits as of February 28, 1962, is not available.

* UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS

Question No. 452—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total number of active claimants for unemployment insurance benefits as of February 28, 1962?

Mr. Starr: The total number of active claimants for unemployment insurance benefits as of February 28, 1962 was 718,668.

CANADA-U.S. TRADE AGREEMENT DISCUSSIONS

Question No. 457—Mr. Matheson:

1. Is this government currently in consultation with the United States government with respect to the proposed major changes in the Trade Agreements Act which expires June 30, 1962?

2. Is this government currently in consultation with Dr. Walter Hallstein or members of the administration commission of the common market bloc with respect to partnership discussions?

Answer by: Mr. Green:

1. Mr. Speaker, our embassy in Washington has been keeping the government closely informed of developments relating to the trade expansion bill, which the United States administration has proposed should replace the existing United States trade agreements act when this legislation expires on June 30. Also, Canadian ministers had a full discussion of the proposed legislation at the time of the meeting last January of the joint Canada-United States committee on trade and economic affairs. Hon. members of the house will no doubt recall the communique which was issued following that meeting.

2. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian embassy in Brussels is accredited to the European economic communities and through our embassy we are kept constantly informed of the activities of the commission. However, no proposals have been made for any new type of formal partnership between Canada and the European economic community and no discussions to this particular end are taking place.

REQUESTS TO JOIN ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

Question No. 459—Mr. Matheson:

1. Has Canada received any communications from any Latin American states since March 31, 1958, urging this country to join the organization of American states; and, if so, from which countries, and when?

2. Is Canada currently consulting with any Latin American authorities respecting the formation of a new Latin American trading bloc?

Answer by: Mr. Green:

The answers are as follows:

1. No official communications have been received from any Latin American states since March 31, 1958, urging Canada to join the organization of American states.

2. The Canadian government is following closely the negotiations concerned with the formation of the Latin American free trade area through the economic commission for Latin America, of which Canada is a member. ECLA played an important role in the formation of LAFTA and continues to provide guidance for the LAFTA members in the negotiations. Our mission in Montevideo, where the LAFTA headquarters are located, is maintaining close contact with the secretariat there. Moreover, our Latin American missions report regularly on these developments. Finally, we have a chance to examine these questions in GATT where the LAFTA negotiations are subject to review.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PREVAILING RATES, NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 391—Mr. Robichaud:

1. How is the compensation for prevailing rates employees in (a) the national parks (b) the national historic parks, established?

2. What are the present hourly rates for each classification of these employees in (a) each of the national parks of Canada (b) each of the national historic parks of Canada?

Mr. Dinsdale: Tabled herewith.

Orders for Returns

REVELSTOKE NATIONAL PARK PERSONNEL

Question No. 429—Mr. Herridge:

1. What are the names, annual salaries, and expenses of the superintendent and administrative staff of Revelstoke national park for the fiscal year 1960-61?

2. Were houses built for the superintendent and administrative staff; and, if so, (a) what is their number (b) what is the average size in floor space (c) what was their average cost per square foot of floor space (d) what was the cost of landscaping per house (e) what was the cost in the fiscal year 1960-61 of providing for each house; (i) oil (ii) coal (iii) wood (iv) gas (v) light and water? (Answers for (b) to (e) are required broken down into (1) superintendent (2) other administrative staff.)

3. What is the size of the paving blocks from the superintendent's house to the street, and what was the cost per block?

4. How many passenger cars and other vehicles were used by the superintendent and staff in Revelstoke park in the fiscal year 1960-61?

5. What was the cost of operation per vehicle in the fiscal year 1960-61?

6. What were the regulations for use of vehicles by the staff in off-duty hours in the fiscal year 1960-61?

7. What was the inventory of the road and other machinery located and used in Revelstoke park in the fiscal year 1960-61?

8. What was the cost of repairs and fuel for these vehicles for operation of the machinery during the fiscal year 1960-61?

9. Have any of the park employees been employed on projects undertaken by contracts in the fiscal year 1960-61?

PAYMENT FOR USE OF GOVERNMENT PLANES

Question No. 440—Mr. Caron:

Since the Minister of Transport has assumed office, has any person or organization paid or agreed to pay for the use of government planes for any purpose whatsoever; and, if so, what are the names of such persons or organizations?

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION MANAGEMENT SURVEYS

Question No. 447—Mr. McGee:

Were there any requests made by departments of government or other emanations of the crown to the management analysis division of the civil service commission in the year 1961; and, if so, (a) which departments were involved (b) in each case, how many surveys were requested (c) in each case, how many surveys were completed (d) how many are still in progress (e) what were the dates that the results were forwarded to the departments concerned (f) what, if any, were the estimated annual savings in each case?

USE OF PRIVATE MANAGEMENT CONSULTATION FIRMS

Question No. 448—Mr. McGee:

Is any department in the government of Canada or any crown corporation employing private management consultation firms, in the interest of greater efficiency; and, if so, which government departments are involved, and what are the names of the organizations which have been hired?

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED STATEMENT BY JUSTICE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can comment on a statement reported to have been made by the Minister of Justice in Kamloops over the week end, wherein he revealed that British Columbia has made new Columbia river proposals which seem to represent a significant modification of the government's previous position.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I dealt with this question on Friday, and there is nothing further I can add today.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, would the minister comment on the statement of the premier of British Columbia to the effect that the treaty should now be ratified; and will this desire on the part of the premier of British Columbia, coupled with the statement made by the Minister of Justice, modify the government's position in any way regarding parliamentary discussion and approval before ratification?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTING—CANADIAN SUPPORT FOR COMPROMISE PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of a report in the Globe and Mail today that Brazil intends to submit today a new compromise plan backed by Burma, India, Sweden, Ethiopia, the United Arab Republic, Nigeria and Mexico to break the nuclear test ban deadlock at the 17-country disarmament conference, would the minister assure the house that Canada will join with its commonwealth partners, India and Nigeria, in backing this plan?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the eight non-aligned countries tabled a suggestion in the disarmament conference this morning. I have not yet had a report giving the details, although we know just about what was in the proposal. I understand that the three nuclear powers are now taking this suggestion into consideration but as yet no one of the three of them has made any comment on the particular proposal. The head of the Canadian delegation, General Burns, dealt with the question on April 12 and, if hon. members wish, it might be helpful to have a copy of his statement printed in Hansard. I have a copy here, and I would be very pleased to have it printed in Hansard should members so desire.

Mr. Herridge: Excellent.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question. Is the minister in a position to say whether the representations made by Canada last week to the United States government were in any way inconsistent with the proposals made by the eight power neutral bloc at Geneva?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for me to try to answer a question of that type. We had general discussions in Washington and London and there have been various other discussions in addition, of course, but it is almost impossible to compare those discussions now with the proposal made by the eight unaligned nations, particularly as I do not have in detail the suggestions made by those nations.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreed that the statement of General Burns referred to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs be printed as an appendix to Hansard today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of statement referred to above, see appendix.]

INDUSTRY

PINCHER CREEK, ALTA.—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF HEAVY WATER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who reports to the house on matters pertaining to atomic energy. In view of the enormous quantities of cheap, metallurgical strip coal available in the Crowsnest pass and the almost unlimited quantities of hydrogen sulphide and other natural gases available in southwestern Alberta, has the minister anything to report to the house and to the country on the progress being made in establishing a heavy water industry at Pincher Creek in southwestern Alberta?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is in the field of commercial enterprise. I understand that several companies are investigating the possibility of getting a site to establish a plant to produce heavy water. No definite information has reached me yet as to what site might be chosen or when work might start. We hope there will be a good demand for heavy water in the near future if the success of the atomic energy program in Canada proves to be as great as is expected at the moment, now that the N.P.D. station has become established at Rolphton, Ontario and will be assuring a supply of electric power for the grid within a few months' time, and when the development of the great Candu station near Kincardine, Ontario is completed within two years' time. The means for making it are well known, and commercial enterprises are interesting themselves in the possibility of doing something along that line in Canada.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether, to his knowledge, any consideration is being given to the establishment of such a plant in Nova Scotia, particularly in Cape Breton?

Mr. Churchill: Well, I understand that more than one area in Canada has been making representations to the various commercial firms to consider their area for this purpose. I think similar suggestions have come from the coal fields in Saskatchewan and also in British Columbia.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister a further supplementary question. Can he say whether the capital grants commission, which the government promised in 1957 to set up, would consider assisting a project of this kind in Cape Breton?

Mr. Churchill: I have no knowledge of that particular problem at the moment.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact a former government sold a heavy water plant in Canada for a song because there was no future in heavy water manufacture in Canada, and in view of the interest now in the establishment of a new one, would the minister say this was another indication of lack of planning by a capitalist society?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member appears to be anxious for a debate. The quickest way of achieving that would be to ask no questions.

CANADIAN WESTINGHOUSE—REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE AIR BRAKE DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): I have a question to address to the Prime Minister. In his absence perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could take it as notice.

Has the government received a petition from local 504 of the united electrical, radio and machine workers of America demanding pressure with regard to the decision of Canadian Westinghouse to close its air brake division, and could the Acting Prime Minister indicate whether any action is contemplated?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I will have to take that question as notice.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

RESEARCH INTO NON-NUCLEAR USES OF URANIUM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether he has had an opportunity yet of obtaining a reply to a question I asked him on April 12 regarding a statement made by Dr. John Convey of his department on the non-military uses of uranium?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I hope to be able to give an answer to the Leader of the Opposition tomorrow.

TELEVISION

MAGDALEN ISLANDS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FRENCH NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue, who answers to parliament for the C.B.C. Since the French television services have been extended now as far as Moncton on the east coast, when can the people of the Magdalen islands hope to have this service extended to them?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The hon. member and many others have been urging that television facilities be extended. I have asked for a report from the C.B.C. in respect of plans which I know they have under study at the moment for the extension of this service. I am not in a position to give him a definitive answer this afternoon, but I will attempt to do so tomorrow.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance relating to the urgent requests by wire received from superannuated civil servants' organizations requesting consideration of an increase in their pensions. I have sent the minister notice of this question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the question put by the hon. member, the hon. member for Fraser Valley also indicated to me that he was interested in this problem and proposed to ask me about it. There has been and there is currently, I think, a great deal of misapprehension on this subject. The fact is that there is no surplus available in the superannuation account for the payment of any enlarged superannuation pensions to persons who have been retired.

There was an increase provided in 1958 under an item in the estimates, and again by statute in 1959, for persons who had previously retired. Legislation is to be found on the subject in the pensions adjustment act of 1959, and the provisions made by parliament for those additional or supplementary pensions under that legislation are entirely from unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund, and none comes out of the superannuation account.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADA-ITALY—EXCHANGE OF INSTRUMENTS OF RATIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to the Minister of Transport, arising out of a press release that an exchange of instruments of ratification took place on Friday between Italy and Canada with reference to a bilateral air agreement signed in November, 1959. My question is, why did it take two years to exchange the ratification notes of an agreement signed in 1959, and why is it that Alitalia is given non-stop or onward rights from Montreal to Chicago and from Montreal to Los Angeles, yet no Canadian air carrier has similar rights in the United States?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I am not in a position to say why it took that much time. I understood that it was the practice that the actual signing of documents in such treaties takes a certain amount of time. This air agreement was signed at the time to provide a certain advantage for Canadian carriers in exchange for certain advantages granted to Italian carriers. Rome is an extremely important air centre and Canada had to offer important advantages in order to get rights there. As my hon. friend knows, the discussions that take place at the time of signing such agreements are of a give and take nature. In exchange for the advantages Alitalia got, our carriers also secured a very good advantage.

Mr. Chevrier: As a supplementary question, could the onward rights from Montreal to Chicago and Los Angeles not have been held up in the same way that the rights to London were held up on behalf of C.P.A.?

Mr. Balcer: At the time Canadian carriers were pressing to get this advantage for themselves. We were interested in getting into Rome and we also secured some fifth freedom rights between Paris and Rome, even though those rights have not been exercised yet. With regard to the service between Montreal, Chicago and Los Angeles, my department has already made strong representations to the United States government on the matter. Canada's stand was expressed in very clear fashion at the meeting which took place last June, and we hope to have more discussions with the Americans on the subject.

Mr. Chevrier: You have been at it for a year, now.

TRADE

POTATOES—POSSIBLE ENTRY INTO U.K. MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister report on the prospects and possibilities of gaining entry to the British market for Prince Edward Island potatoes?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I anticipated that this question might possibly be asked today. For the past several years the British government has prohibited the importation of table stock potatoes from North America for plant protection reasons. Throughout the present potato shortage in northwest Europe, including Britain, the officers of my department in both London and Ottawa have impressed on British authorities the high quality of Canadian table stock potatoes, and have sought the most sympathetic consideration.

We have been advised that the British ministry of food and agriculture is giving the closest consideration to these representations, running back over several weeks. While we are hopeful that the strong representations we have made will be favourably received, it must be borne in mind that the decision is one for the determination of the United Kingdom government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COTTON TEXTILES—SHIPMENTS FROM HONG KONG VIA UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Smith (Lincoln): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I have sent a notice of my intention to ask it. My question arises from an announcement made by President Kennedy on March 19, 1962 that large shipments of cotton textiles en route to the United States from Hong Kong, if landed in the United States would be placed in bond for transshipment to other countries.

Would the minister advise the house what steps are being taken to prevent large shipments of Hong Kong textiles, landed in bond in the United States, being transshipped into Canada, circumventing the Canada-Hong Kong quotas and flooding the Canadian market?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): As my hon. friend has said, he sent me notice of this question a short time ago. I can only answer briefly that having been advised that the government of the United States contemplated this action, my officials notified all collectors of customs throughout Canada that any entries from Hong Kong should be taken subject to amendment. I think that was on March 21. Then on March 25 they were advised that with regard to any entries which were accepted the rates of duty would be imposed as if they came from the intermediate country, which in this case would be the United States, and that the fair market value would be that of the intermediate country instead of the country of origin. Then a little later on, I think it was around April 1, we notified the collectors with regard to certain specific items on which fixed values for duty would be imposed in addition to any other steps which might be taken.

I think the department has therefore taken such action as is necessary or feasible or permissible to protect the industry in this country.

FLOODS

MANITOBA—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT ON RED RIVER CONTROL PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I may ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether an agreement has yet been signed with the government of Manitoba for the construction of the Winnipeg floodway, which the premier of Manitoba assured the legislature would be signed before the dissolution of this parliament.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): There are so many activities going on in my department that we have to consider them one at a time. I can assure the hon. member that this has high priority and will be settled quite soon.

MANITOBA

NEW SITE FOR TOWN OF CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): In reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on April 13, may I say that no effort has been made to move the town of Churchill. The federal government has, however, made known its willingness to contribute two thirds of the cost of servicing a new town site. Negotiations are being carried on with the province of Manitoba on this basis.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): A supplementary question. Is the minister aware that as long as this question remains unsettled there is a great deal of uncertainty among the population; and would the minister endeavour, therefore, to expedite a decision?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SPECIAL ALLOWANCES FOR SERVICE PERSONNEL ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the hon. gentleman completed the survey to which he referred on January 26, and is he now in a position to announce an adjustment in pay and allowances for members of the armed forces serving overseas which will restore their purchasing power to the level enjoyed before the devaluation of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Action has been taken in that regard. Troops serving in Germany will receive an increased allowance to compensate for the change in the value of the Canadian dollar as compared with the deutschmark. In addition, allowances will be provided to all troops serving overseas in lieu of family allowances and at the same rate as family allowances are paid in Canada.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has a similar arrangement been made with regard to civilians employed in the government service of Canada abroad?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think provision had previously been made for the officials of the Department of External Affairs.

(Translation):

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—END OF STRIKE OF PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Lahaye (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell the house whether he has advised the hon. member for Laurier that the pilots' strike is over?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that the hon. member for Laurier has not asked me any question about that.

AIR TRANSPORT

MAGDALEN ISLANDS—REQUEST FOR IMPROVED SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. This might also facilitate the transportation of potatoes from Prince Edward Island to the Magdalen islands.

Could the minister inform the house whether we may expect that the air service to the Magdalen islands will be improved?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, being aware of my hon. friend's concern in an improved air service between Magdalen islands and the mainland, I am pleased to tell him that I have just been informed that starting at midsummer, Maritime Central Airways will make available to travellers an aircraft which will be able to carry 52 passengers and fly at 316 miles an hour. That will be a marked improvement; my hon. friend who has worked so hard to get that improvement for his constituents will no doubt be glad to hear the good news.

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us whether that air service will be inaugurated before, during or after the electoral campaign?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, we never bother about such things.

Mr. Pigeon: It will not take 22 years.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

GANANOQUE, ONT.—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): May I address a question to the Minister of Labour, of which he has notice. Is the government giving consideration to the request of the Gananoque board of education for the construction of vocational training facilities?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, we are, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ARCTIC PATROL OF WELFARE WORKERS IN CHARTERED AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the minister of northern affairs whether in between his many other preoccupations he has been able to find an answer to the question I put to him on April 6, as to whether a government or government chartered aircraft was carrying welfare officials around the northwest territories and, if so, what the purpose of this voyage was?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The question was answered the other day. The answer was no.

TRANSPORT

PORT ARTHUR—OPENING OF NEW SEAWAY TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to ask the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Public Works a question. It is parochial, but it is creating deep interest at the lakehead. I should like to know when the official opening of the new $8 million seaway terminal at Port Arthur is to take place.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I shall be happy to look into that matter and arrange a time suitable to the Prime Minister and to the hon. gentleman.

AIRPORTS

MALTON—INCREASE IN PARKING CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the fact that parking charges at Malton airport have been increased from $1 to $1.50 a day? If so, would he advise the house how the 50 per cent increase is justified in view of the fact that there has been no improvement in the service?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I was not aware of this increase. I imagine there must be some excellent reason behind it, but I will inquire.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the minister take the same forthright action in this respect as President Kennedy took with respect to United States Steel?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ST. LAWRENCE UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister to which I have not supplied him with an answer. I would draw to his attention and the attention of the house the presence in the rear gallery of members of the political science classes of St. Lawrence University in Canton, New York, with their distinguished professor, Professor Willoughby, who are making their annual visit to Canada.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—INQUIRY AS TO REHABILITATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the announcement in the press that the Minister of Justice intends to visit Trail to discuss the question of a long term approach to the terrorism and rehabilitation of the Sons of Freedom with the Kootenay boundary committee on Doukhobor and Canadian affairs, has the Canadian government decided to accept some responsibility in respect to the long term rehabilitation of these people?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to agree that either this government or the one before it had not accepted any responsibility for the Doukhobor problem. I think this has been a great worry for governments of Canada for quite a long time. The hon. member's question is posed in such general terms that I can make no definite statement on it today. When there is an announcement to be made it will be made in the usual manner.

SHIPPING

UPPER NIAGARA RIVER—SAFETY MEASURES FOR SMALL BOATS

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the small boat season is almost upon us, and in view of the fact that in the upper Niagara river last year there were several fatalities in the use of small boats, can the minister advise the house whether the consultations among municipal councils, international bodies and his own department have resulted in any steps being taken by his department to ensure safety in the upper Niagara river?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the three groups mentioned by my hon. friend have succeeded in agreeing on some recommendations which have been sent to Washington by the United States corps of army engineers. A copy of the recommendations has also been sent to Ottawa. We expect both governments to approve these recommendations, so that we should be in a position to put them into force very early in the spring season.

COMBINES

RAW FISH AND DRUGS—REPORTS OF INQUIRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice. Perhaps my question could be taken as notice. Could the house be informed of the position of the litigation with respect to the proposed restrictive trade practices commission hearing into the production, distribution and sale of raw fish in British Columbia? At the same time could an indication be given as to when we may expect a report from the commission on its inquiry into the pharmaceutical industry?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will see that a report is given with respect to the first part of the hon. member's question. I will also check into the latter portion of his query.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

A—Department—

696. Canadian representation at international conferences—further amount required, $115,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, last Friday afternoon I sought certain clarifications with respect to Canada's policy on the cessation of nuclear tests. The minister seemed to indicate that he wished to make a statement. I do not wish to proceed if he now wishes to make a statement. At that time we were called to order because it was five o'clock. Does the minister wish to comment?

Mr. Green: Perhaps the hon. member would repeat his question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister will remember that at nearly five o'clock, for purposes of clarification, I had asked certain questions more in the form of a commentary than interrogation, to ascertain the position of the government in the matter of nuclear tests. The minister was about to rise, but then the presiding officer reminded us that it was five o'clock. I have some other observations to make, but I now wish to give the minister an opportunity to speak if he wishes to comment on what I said.

Mr. Green: Please proceed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On Friday I had indicated that the government of the United States had announced its intention to resume nuclear tests notwithstanding the fact that certain governments attending the disarmament conference, including Canada, have publicly indicated their opposition to such tests. I had inquired of the government whether in the representations it had made it had taken into consideration facts about which there has been public comment, namely that the Soviet union has acquired, if not additional power to its deterrent strength, additional information with regard to antimissile missile operations. I indicated that important personalities in the United Kingdom had felt that notwithstanding their earlier views, the United States was now in a stronger position to resume tests because of this declared fact.

I also went on to indicate that I had understood that the government's position as stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs from time to time was that the government was of the view that there should be no resumption of tests whether or not a system of control was agreed on between the two main powers, the Soviet union and the United States. I suggested if that was still the case, as I understood it was, that position was different from some positions now being taken by political groups in the United Kingdom other than those now in office.

Since Friday a further development has taken place. While there were some questions asked on orders of the day, all we are given the opportunity to do under that procedure is to ask the minister certain questions to which he may give a reply, but there is no opportunity of commenting on the reply. It seems to us in this party that in view of the importance of this matter, and in view of the fact that we are about to dissolve, we should have a more definitive statement of the government's position with regard to these tests.

The minister is now reinforced in his view by the assertion made by the Prime Minister a few days ago in Montreal that the government's policy was that there should not be a resumption of tests whether or not an agreement was reached with the Soviet union. The positions of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs on that point are identical. Is that the position of the government? If it is we are entitled to have it affirmed, particularly in the light of the different view taken by the eight countries whose representatives are attending the Geneva conference, together with Canada and the great powers.

In today's press and in yesterday's United States press we are told that the eight nation neutral bloc is putting forward proposals in order to try to bring about a compromise between the positions taken by the Soviet union and the United States. We are told that the plan of these neutralist nations provides a form of inspection and control somewhat less than the more comprehensive plan originally put forward. Nevertheless, they have put forward a plan for some type of control. The position of Canada with regard to the eight nation bloc is that she has not formally associated herself with those eight nations which propose a system of controls.

What I think the country would like to know from the minister—and I ask this question not for political purposes but for purposes of information—is whether Canada takes the position that there should be no resumption of nuclear tests whether or not an agreement is reached with the Soviet union, or whether or not we have a system of control. Can we not say first of all that we support the position taken by these neutral nations? Surely the government would not be taking an inconsistent position if that stand were taken, and if we assert that there should not be a resumption of tests whether or not controls are agreed on. The minister undoubtedly must have had good reasons for wishing to make representations to the United States alone, as it is reported the government did through the head of our mission in Washington last week or the week previous. I think, however, that the House of Commons and the country are entitled to have from the minister a more detailed statement than we have had from him thus far on this extremely important matter.

Then when the minister is replying I think he ought to give us some indication as to what are the prospects of the disarmament conference. How long is this conference likely to go on? What will be the consequences if the resumption of tests by the government of the United States takes place as indicated by the President? On the order for motions we had a report from the minister when he returned from Geneva two weeks ago last Friday. However, we have not had the opportunity of an across the floor discussion with regard to what has gone on at the disarmament conference since that time, or indeed since the conference began.

I understand the Prime Minister spoke in Montreal today. While I have not before me the full text of what he said, I understand that the Prime Minister did say that the developments in Geneva were such as not to offer any cause for optimism. The minister has certainly taken issue with that view. I am not quarrelling with the minister. However, before the conference began the minister said that he was optimistic as to the results; and during the conference from time to time, in answer to interrogations put to him by newspaper men, he continued to sound an optimistic note. I always felt that the realities of the situation, however, warranted a tempering of the minister's optimism. While it is desirable that we should pursue relentlessly our objective of comprehensive disarmament or of arms control, we should not be blind to the difficulties involved. It seems to me that the optimism of the minister in this regard is not shared in the appraisal made of the conference to date by the secretary of state for foreign affairs, Mr. Rusk, and the statement of Lord Home following the return of these two gentlemen from the conference in Geneva. I think the minister would serve a useful purpose today if he indicated exactly what his appraisal is of the situation.

Having said that I thought the minister ought to temper his optimism with an appreciation that was realistic, I should not wish to give him the opportunity, which his ingenuity sometimes affords of saying that he is for disarmament, thus giving the impression that only he is for it. Everybody in this house is for disarmament provided we have present the conditions of control that will not prejudice the security of this country or of other countries. However, I believe the minister cannot satisfy the feeling that many people have on this matter if he simply says that he is optimistic and that we must keep negotiating and trying to bring about an agreement on disarmament. Of course we must do that. We applaud the minister fully in his efforts to see to it that there is the fullest discussion and that this present conference exhausts every opportunity of trying to bring about an accord with the Soviet union on disarmament. We applaud that course fully. However, having said that, we are entitled to have from the government a mature statement as to what is really involved and what are the prospects.

The United States certainly has not given any indication that would warrant the assurance the minister has given, nor has the United Kingdom. The minister has not indicated what is the position of France. A few days ago he said that he hoped that France would return to the conference table. The fact is that France has not returned to the conference table. France is carrying on nuclear testing. The Soviet union has not denied that, in the absence of certain settlements of a political character, it sees no opportunity of reaching an agreement in the field of disarmament.

Is that the situation? If that is the situation, do we now take the position that the best we can get is some form of arms control? If we take that position, what are the possibilities of an agreement on the limited aspect of arms control? On one occasion the minister said that he was not interested in arms control but that what he was interested in was disarmament. I applauded him at the time.

Mr. Green: I do not think I ever said that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend looks back at the records he will find that last session he did say that. I asked him whether it was the policy of the government not to pursue disarmament comprehensively but to recognize that the most we could get was a form of arms control. I refer to arms control based upon the concepts that we have had outlined for us by authorities in the United States such as Kissinger, Otto Kahn and the like. These are matters that I think are of great concern to the minister and to all who are interested in these matters. We would like to feel that we are not simply engaging in an emotional outburst whose objective is not going to be realized. I say again, we believe that we should have disarmament; we believe that we should pursue that course relentlessly.

Some will wonder whether or not Canada is pursuing that course when we refuse to become formally associated—there may be good reasons for not doing so, which the minister will indicate—with those countries in the eight nation neutral bloc which in their effort to break the deadlock between east and west are proposing a modified form of control. It seems to us that Canada, taking the position that there should be no resumption of tests with or without controls, should not have found it difficult to associate itself at the conference with those countries which are trying to bring about some agreement along these lines. These are some of the questions that are in our minds and as to which I think we should ask the minister to give further clarification at this time.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I have often been reprimanded for endorsing the attitudes taken by our Secretary of State for External Affairs on international matters. However, I have no apologies to make in this regard. If the New Democratic party must lose the riding of Vancouver Quadra in the interests of world peace, we will do so happily. I endorse the attitude and the approach taken over the years by our Secretary of State for External Affairs, and place them above and beyond all political considerations, and I believe that the bulk of the membership of the party to which I belong will agree with the basic approach I am taking.

I believe that the interests of world peace are paramount at this time, and that in the main the Canadian people, regardless of politics, are very proud of the positions that have been taken publicly not only here but abroad by our Secretary of State for External Affairs on the really important issues that are facing mankind. I fail to understand the continued questioning and the aspersions of doubt cast upon our Secretary of State for External Affairs by the Liberal party. I fail to appreciate what their attitude is on world affairs. It still seems like the old Pearson attitude, one step forward and two steps back.

I have had the very great privilege, one that has been accorded to very few members of parliament, of being attached to the Canadian delegation to the United Nations for the past five years. I believe only the leader of the official opposition has an equal record in this regard. I have noted the growing prestige of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs in the councils of the world. Whether other nations agree or disagree with the opinions he expresses, they welcome this breath of fresh air founded on that basic honesty which is so much needed in the world today.

I listened for some time to the hon. member for Essex East. I failed to note in his remarks any expression of opinion, but I believe that over the years those responsible for the welfare of the world have heard honest expressions of opinion from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This is most refreshing, both to them and to the Canadian people.

At this time I should like to express only one opinion. I am not too sure that the minister is in the proper place at the present time. I think he should be in Geneva, because I feel he could make a useful contribution. When he was last there I was on the point of sending him a telegram to plead with him to remain at the task and not to return to Canada, because he would serve the interests of Canada and of all mankind more by remaining in Geneva than by returning to the, relatively speaking, rather doubtful political debates in the Canadian House of Commons.

At this time I should like to make a submission to the minister. I do so in all humility, and I also plead a good deal of ignorance. I am not too sure but that the bulk of the leadership in the Canadian civil service are more interested in the return of the Liberal party to office than they are devoted to serving the interests of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is a slur on the civil service. Shame.

Miss LaMarsh: Shame.

Mr. Regier: It may be a slam against the civil service, but I should like to inquire from the minister whether he is convinced that those who represent us in the international field really represent the attitudes and approaches of the minister or whether they represent the former regime. I have had cries of "shame" thrown at me. I accept them realizing the source from which they came. I am making this appeal to the government of the day because the issues are so crucial. I believe that at least 90 per cent of the Canadian people are deeply appreciative of the attitudes taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs both at the United Nations and at other international conferences, and I would hate to think he was receiving anything less than the wholehearted support of all those who represent him in his absence and who advise him when he is present at these international gatherings.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, first may I thank the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam for his very kind words in reference to my work as Secretary of State for External Affairs. They are probably a little biased because we both come from the west coast and have been friends for a long time. In any event they are very encouraging. I have had encouraging messages also from hundreds of people in all parts of Canada with regard to my efforts to further the cause of disarmament and to ensure peace. I could not agree more heartily with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam than when he says this question of world peace is all important. It is the one vital issue today, because if we get into a nuclear war there is not going to be any world left. I think it is just that important that the representatives of every country should do their utmost to see that this utter folly of nuclear war does not come to pass.

The hon. member has made some reference to the officials of my department. May I say that it would have been impossible for a minister to have had finer co-operation than I have had from the foreign service officers and from those in the department who do not come within the foreign service officer grade. These men and women, I have found, are devoted servants of the country. I think they do an excellent job. One of the outstanding diplomats from abroad told me a year or two ago that man for man there was no foreign service in the world to equal that of the Canadian foreign service. In my experience I have found the representatives of no other country to be any better, and I think none of them were as good. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, therefore, should not worry about that particular aspect of our foreign affairs situation.

In so far as the hon. member for Essex East is concerned, he should know, and I am sure he will know eventually, that anyone who was 22 years in opposition and who managed to survive, is not easily discouraged. By the time I have had the privilege of sitting over here watching the hon. member for Essex East across the way for 22 years he will be a lot less ready to give in than he seems to be today on the question of disarmament or on any other question.

The disarmament conference in Geneva is working on three fronts. One is negotiation on a disarmament treaty. The United States do not like to have it called a treaty because they have a problem with congress in connection with treaties. They call it a basic understanding, or some such thing. In any event, the plenary session is working on the terms of the disarmament agreement and some progress is being made. My dispatches this morning indicate a statement from one of the Soviet negotiators that he thought there was real progress being made in the plenary session on this question of a disarmament agreement. The United States and Russia, with quite a lot of prompting from everybody else, have almost reached agreement on the terms of the preamble. Now the main work on the first part of that disarmament treaty is being undertaken.

On the second front an attempt is being made to reach agreement on collateral measures, namely the prohibition of war propaganda. Hon. members will recall that I pointed out that while the disarmament agreement was being considered in the plenary session the group, sitting as a committee of the whole, was going to consider parallel measures which would not necessarily be written into a disarmament agreement. The United States and Russia agreed that the first subject would be war propaganda. Canada asked that the first subject be outer space, but we did not get our point and we have not got it yet. However, we are still pressing to have outer space considered in that committee. I hope one of these days it will be, because I think it is extremely important to agree on a declaration that outer space will not be used for the launching of weapons of mass destruction. On the question of war propaganda this committee of the whole has had several meetings and has reached agreement on part of a declaration about war propaganda. They have not yet, however, reached complete agreement.

Then on the third front there has been a subcommittee of the three nuclear powers dealing with the question of a nuclear test ban treaty. As yet there has been no agreement. I suggested that some of the eight unaligned nations should be added to that subcommittee of three, but the three nuclear powers would not agree to it. They are carrying on in that subcommittee and reporting regularly to the conference as a whole. The difficulty, as I pointed out, has to do with verification. The United States have said that it will not have any more nuclear tests if agreement can be reached on the question of verification. Russia has said she does not want verification if it involves sending anybody on Russian territory, and all of us have been trying to bridge that gap. Not only the eight unaligned countries but Canada as well have been doing their best. We are one of the four western powers represented at the conference, so we are in a position to talk to the representatives of Britain and the United States. There have been various suggestions made.

The suggestion made today by the eight unaligned countries is one which we hope will be very carefully considered by the three nuclear powers. As yet it has not been rejected, and I think it would have been a great mistake to reject that proposal out of hand. I am very glad that was not done in the conference at Geneva, because if by any chance it brings about a meeting of minds among the three nuclear powers, then certainly the conference will be over a very big hurdle and this may make all the difference between the success and failure of the conference. If a series of nuclear tests is started now no one knows where it will end, and no one knows what the effect will be on the conference itself.

From the start Canada has tried to keep attention focused on the issues that matter. We stipulated seven different fields in which we thought is would be fairly easy to reach agreement between the Russians and the Americans.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Regier: Would the minister advise us what is the latest proposal that he hopes will not be dismissed out of hand?

Mr. Green: I have not got the final details of the proposal, but it involves the use of the national detection facilities of all the nuclear powers and of any other countries which wish to participate, under the control of scientists rather than the military. The idea is to set up a scientific group which would be able to check on blasts. If necessary it would be under centralized control so that scientific teams could be dispatched to find out whether a seismic disturbance had been an atomic blast or an earthquake or had been caused by some other phenomenon. Generally speaking, it is proposed to use the scientists rather than other regular national bodies, and the thinking behind this is that the scientists in the east and the west have co-operated much more fully than other groups in those respective areas.

No one can say whether this proposal will meet the wishes of the Russians, Americans and British but, as I said, it is a proposal that deserves the most careful consideration.

In addition to these three fronts there is another front right outside the disarmament conference, and that is the question of Berlin. While I was in Geneva there were extensive consultations among the foreign ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet union on the problem of Berlin. Many hours were taken up in these discussions, and today in Washington the United States secretary of state begins talks on Berlin with the Soviet ambassador to the United States, these being a continuation of the talks which took place in Geneva. It may be that the first break will come on the question of Berlin, and it may be that there will be an agreement which would involve Berlin and nuclear tests. I do not know, but I think it is hopeful that these talks are proceeding both in Washington and at the disarmament conference in Geneva. Looking back to last September one must realize that at that time nobody was talking and everybody was threatening. It is very clear that the situation today is much more promising than it was at that time.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has suggested that I should have stayed in Geneva, but there is a practical difficulty involved in following such a course. There is not much sense in one foreign minister staying in Geneva. If the others stayed then it would be a different matter, but for one foreign minister to stay would not mean any progress. He would quickly use up any effectiveness he had were he to follow that course. I would have preferred to see all the foreign ministers stay there until they would reach agreement on something. In fact I think they would have reached it much more quickly than the delegates now remaining there. That is another good argument in favour of having a heads of state meeting in Geneva, but the danger in that is that they might disagree. That would be much worse than if they did not go there because, should they disagree, then that is the optimum in disagreement. However, I am prepared to go back to Geneva the first minute I think it will do any good.

I am afraid I can never cheer up the hon. member for Essex East about the disarmament situation, but I have not been blindly optimistic nor do I ignore the difficulties. I do not suppose any Canadian secretary of state for external affairs ever faced more difficulties on one issue but, though I am not certain what results we will achieve, there is one thing I am sure of and that is that we are going to keep on trying. Nobody will be able to say that the present government did not realize the seriousness of the world situation in 1962, and that it did not do everything it could to bring sanity back into this crazy world.

When one thinks of great nations threatening each other, and that were the threats carried out it would mean practical extinction with the survivors going back to live in trees or like muskrats in mud banks, then one wonders how much sense there is in human beings. However, I do not believe the people of the world want any of this nonsense. They want to be able to live in peace, to bring up their families in peace and let their children make a worth-while contribution in the world. Certainly that is the desire of every Canadian and of those who carry the burden in all nations of the world. For our part we shall do our best to see that they get a chance.

Mr. Macdonnell: I want to make just one or two brief comments on the speech made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I greatly admired the first part of his speech, in which he expressed a wholehearted and unselfish desire for the success of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, even to the political injury of himself, but I greatly deprecate what he said about the civil service. I shall not say any more about that, as the minister has answered that part of his speech better than anybody else could.

As regards the remarks of the hon. member for Essex East, he seems to fear that perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs is inclined to be unduly optimistic and perhaps even a bit of a visionary. The hon. member is old enough to remember the first world war, and I am sure he remembers what was said about Lloyd George by one of his colleagues; that he was "the only man among us who never lost heart". Certainly Lloyd George had many faults but his courage made up for them, and of course Sir James Barrie has reminded us that courage is the lovely virtue. Therefore we must be thankful that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is a courageous and hopeful man, and we trust he will go on displaying his courage and optimism. When fighting was the order of the day he was in the front rank, and now when peacemaking is the order of the day he is in the front rank for that too.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I regret, Mr. Chairman, to have contrasted the minister's optimism with what I think is the realistic position. I do hope the hon. member for Greenwood, who has devoted a long life to the study of international problems, appreciates that I was not in any way criticizing the minister's optimism or his fortitude or his patience. What I was trying to do was to get for this parliament an assessment by the minister of the facts involved in the current situation.

We all applaud the minister's patience. We all want disarmament, and I think I can say there is no one in this chamber at this moment who has worked toward that objective as persistently as I have myself. I was a member of the United Nations disarmament commission for three years. I think I know something of the frustration involved in this matter. Let the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and all the rest of us acknowledge the good intentions of the minister as well as the good intentions of the government in the field of disarmament, but let us not for a moment conclude that the realities of the situation are such as to warrant the view that there is any immediate prospect of agreement at Geneva.

This is not borne out by the statements of the foreign ministers of the United States, of the Soviet union or of the United Kingdom. It certainly is not borne out by the head of the disarmament operation in the United States, Mr. John McCloy. Hon. members who wish to indulge in an emotional sort of tribute to the minister might read what Mr. McCloy has to say about this situation. He does not offer the sanguine conclusion that is contained in these panegyrics to my worthy and esteemed friend whose objectives in the field of disarmament we all applaud. We are a parliament representing the nation. We are engaged in the discussion of a very serious problem. We should bring to this matter the maturity of expression which I think it warrants.

Mr. McCloy—and his position in this matter cannot be underestimated—has stated in a recent issue of Foreign Affairs that there are very strong blocks standing in the way of immediate agreement not only with regard to disarmament but with regard to arms control, which is far removed from disarmament. He points out as contributing factors the failure of the test ban negotiations to which the shifting position of the Soviet union has contributed much. He mentions the disappointing attitude of the non-aligned nations at Belgrade and at the United Nations last fall. Some of these nations are represented in the 17-power discussions in Geneva. He also pointed out that another obstacle is the stated intention of his own government to resume atmosphere testing in the wake of the Soviet tests last fall. Another factor mentioned was the continued Berlin crisis. He might well have added the other unresolved major political problems which at this time divide east and west.

I believe Canada can make a contribution to this discussion, but I do not think we shall make that contribution if we simply go on saying that we are optimistic, that we believe we shall get disarmament at some date and if we unwarrantedly affirm to the people of Canada after these conferences take place and, indeed, concurrently with them, that progress is being made. Of real progress at this moment there is no evidence before us, and I do not think we serve the cause of disarmament by indulging in panegyrics which suggest the contrary to be the case.

I hope no one who follows me will suggest that I am in any way unappreciative of the good intentions of the minister. I am taking what I believe to be a realistic position. I recognize that when the hon. gentleman went to Geneva he had a difficult assignment. I have already indicated that I think he served a useful purpose at that conference by indicating the points of agreement between the Soviet union and the United States in particular. That was a constructive act on the part of the minister. I applaud him for it, as I did on another occasion. But this in itself does not indicate that we have made any progress in the matter.

What is the situation? The minister talks now about the possibility of an agreement on a preamble to what might become a document, a convention perhaps, to distinguish it from a treaty so as to bring it outside the compass of the Senate foreign relations committee or the congress of the United States. Surely, however, this will not mark real progress. Surely we are not going to believe that because we can agree on a form of words which does not have any operational effect, we have succeeded—

Mr. Green: There is also the first part of a treaty, the key to it.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would say that is worth while, but it would be nothing more than what the United States and the Soviet union agreed on September 20 last.

Mr. Green: Oh yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They agreed then on a statement of principles, the kind of principles on which agreement is essential if there is to be comprehensive disarmament. The United States and the Soviet union agreed on those principles, and to the extent that an agreement of this kind is helpful, that may be regarded as an achievement. I know, too, that these principles have formed the basis of a United Nations resolution at the general assembly, and I applaud that, too. But all this is far away from anything which could be characterized as an advance in the field of disarmament. When we talk about advances in this field we should think in terms of an agreement on the limitation of forces, or an agreement to destroy nuclear weapons, or an agreement not to use nuclear power for anything but peaceful purposes. That is what we mean by substantial agreement.

I hope the hon. member for Kootenay West, for whom I have the highest regard and who is taking copious notes and whose interest in this matter is well known, is not going to rise again and say that the hon. member for Essex East is expressing a pessimistic note while indulging, on his own part, in a eulogy of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as if the latter had just died.

Mr. Herridge: You are certainly being pessimistic.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not a pessimist. I am a realist. I am saying that much as we all wish to achieve disarmament it is wrong to convey the impression that a great deal has been done when in fact little has been achieved, notwithstanding the good intentions of civilized men such as the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We are not making any contribution to disarmament if we convey the wrong impression. I compliment the secretary of state for having taken the initiative he did in striving to indicate the areas of agreement. What the hon. gentleman might well have done is what Mr. McCloy did in this article to which I referred a few moments ago. He might have indicated not only the areas where there was agreement but as well areas where there were common interests, as well as areas where there are divergent interests. I am not going to mention them, but I think those assessments by Mr. McCloy are worth while and deserve careful consideration by all of us who at this time are considering this problem.

There is one point in Mr. McCloy's assessment of what are common interests that I have not heard the minister comment on at any time and which I feel deserves mention at this time. Mr. McCloy says that one of the common interests is the recognition by all parties of the necessity for the prevention of nuclear war by accident, miscalculation or failure of communication in another area of mutual interest. He pointed out that the Soviet union has indicated a growing awareness of the dangers of constantly increasing stockpiles of nuclear weapons and systems for their delivery. This, he indicates, represents a real problem of concern to both the Soviet union and the United States; not only the danger of war by miscalculation but the danger of destruction by the very existence of these constantly increasing stockpiles of nuclear weapons.

If we wanted any inducement for the minister's efforts and the efforts of other people in the field of disarmament we have it more strongly in this fact, as Mr. McCloy pointed out, than in any other. This, of course, is reason for the minister's concern, but it does not alter the fact that despite our concern, aroused and heightened by this circumstance and other facts, there is little evidence that progress is being made in this field at this time. We must work toward this end relentlessly.

I think the minister was right in the view he took about his own attendance at the disarmament conference. One has to judge the effectiveness of a personality at a given moment. I do not know what the circumstances were but I can readily appreciate what the minister said. We now have to have from the minister a statement about the government's policy concerning nuclear testing. Thus far today the minister has not given us a statement in this respect. I would not have pressed for this but for the fact that I have in my hand a Canadian Press story of today's date reporting a statement made by the Prime Minister on Saturday which is a contradiction of what the Prime Minister said a few days ago in Montreal. I believe it is also a contradiction of declared government policy.

I stated my own interpretation of the policy of this government on Friday last when I said, as reported at page 2971 of Hansard:

> I am assuming that notwithstanding this situation, the view of the government of Canada is that the United States should not resume tests, whether or not it is able to reach an agreement at Geneva with regard to the resumption of such tests. I understand further that the position of the Canadian government is as stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on a number of occasions, namely that the Canadian government believes that it is not in the interests of the present generation that these tests be resumed, whether or not there is a system of control agreed on.

That, I believe, is the government's policy. I take it that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, because he did not contradict my comment and because he has answered affirmatively on this point before, would agree that what I said is an accurate statement of government policy. I went on to say:

> On other occasions I thought the view stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was unequivocal, but that the position taken by the government through the Prime Minister was equivocal. The statement made by the Prime Minister to a gathering last week in Montreal was to the effect that Canada favoured no resumption of tests, whether or not there was an agreement with the Soviet union. Notwithstanding what may have been achieved by the Soviet union as a result of the explosions of last fall, the view of the government of Canada is that there should not be any resumption of tests by the United States.

I hope the hon. member for Kootenay West is listening to this, because he will follow me in this debate and I know of his interest in this vital matter. In other words the Prime Minister has said, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, there should not be a resumption of tests whether or not there is a system of control. That is the position as we understood it on Friday last.

Today's Ottawa Journal carries under the heading "Policed A-Test Ban Must—P.M." the following Canadian Press dispatch:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker has endorsed the western view that Russia's word cannot be trusted in a nuclear test ban without international control and inspection.
>
> "Any unpoliced test ban treaty would be dangerous to the survival of the western world", he said.
> "It would be a reliance upon the word of the U.S.S.R. without there being means to assure that their undertakings were being carried out."

That is the reported statement of the Prime Minister made on Saturday last. If true, it is in contradiction to the statement made by the Prime Minister a few days ago in Montreal. It is also contradictory to what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has continually said is the policy of the government of Canada, namely that this government believes there should be no resumption of tests whether or not there is a system of control agreed on. The Prime Minister stands today, in the face of this statement, in contradiction to the position stated on behalf of the government by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and which was characterized in the words I used in expressing my view of what the government's policy was.

This is a fundamental and important matter. It is the kind of matter about which the various delegations that have been calling on the government and opposition parties have been concerned. This is involved in the great debate in the British Labour party in England. This is an expression of disagreement with the position taken by Mr. Hugh Gaitskell. The position taken by the Prime Minister as reported today is like the amended statement of Mr. Gaitskell the leader of Labour party in England. The decision to resume tests by the United States now may be based on a military claim arising out of the knowledge the Soviet union may have acquired following detonations of last fall.

I think the minister owes to the house at once a statement explaining this reported statement by the Prime Minister. We are entitled to know from the government if its policy is that there should be no resumption of tests by the United States or by any country whether or not there is an agreed system of control. Is that the policy of the government? We were told it was the policy of the government and it was not denied on Friday last. I am sure it represents the policy of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but it is not the reported policy of the Prime Minister, who has reverted to the position he took in Washington two years ago when he met with General Eisenhower, then president of the United States. They joined in a communique in which both affirmed that there should be a cessation of tests within a system of controls.

Following that communique I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs if there was any change in government policy, and I was told that government policy continued to be that the Canadian government was opposed to the resumption of tests with or without controls. While the minister ingeniously sought to explain away the difference between the announced policy and the policy contained in the joint communique, it nevertheless remained for many people to feel that there was a difference of opinion not only between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence but also between the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said we expressed no opinion. We have expressed our opinion. Our opinion is that there should not be a resumption of tests. We did not, however, lay down absolutely the view that we could have an understanding of that kind endlessly without some form of agreement with the Soviet union. The Leader of the Opposition had proposed a moratorium notwithstanding whatever agreement might later have been made with regard to explosions in the atmosphere, in the laboratory or underground.

This is a vital matter, and as I have indicated a conflict of opinion appears to exist.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

We are entitled to have now from the Secretary of State for External Affairs a clear and unmistakable statement as to what is the position of the government. Is this later statement as reported in tonight's paper the position of the government of Canada, namely that we cannot accept Russia's word in a nuclear test ban without international control or inspection? I am not saying that is a wrong position. However, I am saying that is not the position which this government has been affirming through its Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Herridge: I am very sorry I was called out of the chamber for five or ten minutes while the hon. member for Essex East was speaking. However, since my return I have listened with interest to his remarks.

We cannot agree with his suggestion that there has been no progress to date. From our point of view we simply compare the international atmosphere now with the tension that existed some months ago. We believe that even to keep talking is progress in this very dangerous world situation.

There is one thing that can be said, Mr. Chairman, even though the hon. member for Essex East may not agree. We have enjoyed peace during this period. To us that is a measure of progress. Because we believe that time is on our side, as Churchill said to keep talking is the main thing. The situation may be very frustrating and very discouraging on occasion. However, if the Secretary of State for External Affairs and others associated with him at Geneva and other places can keep talking and keep the peace in the meantime, we think time is on our side and that common sense will prevail because of the growing awareness of people in all countries on both sides of the curtain, as you might put it, and the people in Canada particularly that, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said on numerous occasions, war is international suicide.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We all agree on that matter.

Mr. Herridge: We give the secretary of state full credit in this respect for his efforts. I suppose he will reply to the criticisms made by the hon. member for Essex East with respect to the recent statement of the Prime Minister. Actually, however, we are more concerned with the differences of opinion between the policies expressed by the secretary of state and the Minister of National Defence. They appear to represent two points of view.

We are not the only ones who recognize this fact. There are a great many groups in Canada who do so. I can tell you that we are doing all we can to assist the Secretary of State for External Affairs to prevail and for his view to win the day in the long run. He knows there are large groups of good women in Canada who belong to various parties; I am speaking of the Voice of Women, and we have two or three quite active groups in my own constituency. I have no hesitation in saying that the members of the Voice of Women movement and the members of nuclear disarmament groups, those people have done more than any other organized groups in Canada in the last year to present their views to the Canadian people and to promote concern about world conditions and indicate the willingness of certain people to do something about them.

I think it is quite fair to say that the Liberal party has been a bit shifty with respect to its policies concerning international affairs. We all know that the leader of the official opposition not long ago made statements that indicated a policy of not necessarily nuclear weapons but nuclear weapons if necessary. Then he gave an interview, and he was very clear cut with regard to his policy of no nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit a question.

Mr. Herridge: Yes; I wish to be quite fair.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that in these matters the Liberal party had perhaps shifted its position, and he thereby implied that its general contribution with regard to this problem had been negligible. I am sure my hon. friend has not forgotten that the Leader of the Opposition, who was an exponent of Liberal policy in this field for such a long time, is the only Canadian ever to have been awarded the Nobel peace prize.

Mr. McGee: Will the hon. member permit me to ask a question for clarification? Would he not think it a fair assumption that the Liberal party themselves announced they had no policy, but that they might have one if an election was called?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am certainly not going to enter into politics on this matter.

Mr. Herridge: I have every respect for what the Leader of the Opposition has done in this respect. However, my criticism would be that the Liberal party's policy is inclined to be too much on a day to day basis. They have an ear to the ground, and as they comprehend this swelling tide of opposition in Canada to nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, of support for disarmament and so on, they become bolder and they respond to it. As the days go by—and this is not a partisan matter —I trust their policies will be as clear cut as are the policies of the party for which I am speaking at the present time.

Mr. McGee: Which party is that?

Mr. Herridge: I do not wish to speak at great length. However, I think this is a proper opportunity to be quite clearcut about this matter in view of certain events which must be faced in the future. I therefore wish to place on record our policies, and to make a few comments as I go along. This policy was designed months ago. We have not shifted our ground. This is what we have to say with respect to international affairs, disarmament and defence:

> The New Democratic party believes that the extension of nuclear weapons to any further states and alliances threatens disaster to the world.

I am sure we can all agree on that statement.

> It therefore opposes Canada's troops being supplied with such weapons at home or abroad. At present, except for those nations which have independently developed atomic capacity, neither NATO itself nor its members individually possess or control nuclear warheads. Should they do so, Canada must make it clear that it cannot remain in the alliance.

That is in the NATO alliance, if NATO is supplied with nuclear warheads.

> To relieve tensions, Canada should press for a demilitarized zone in central Europe and for the simultaneous disbandment of the Warsaw and NATO pacts.

On that policy we stand.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What would be the position of his party if NATO acquired or if there was an agreement to give NATO the nuclear deterrent? What would be the position of my hon. friend's party with regard to Canadian participation in that alliance?

Mr. Herridge: The resolution passed at our founding convention was to this effect. If Canadian troops in the NATO alliance were supplied with nuclear weapons, we would oppose the continued presence of Canadian troops in that alliance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In other words you would leave NATO?

Mr. Herridge: We would leave NATO on those grounds.

Mr. Hellyer: You would disband the defence of the free world.

Mr. Herridge: To continue:

> The rising importance of Latin America and the mutual economic and cultural benefits which would accrue to all from closer association require that Canada increase and broaden its relationships with the nations of Latin America.

In that respect I think the minister is trying to do his very best. While there are some at this time who are suggesting that we should hasten to join the organization of American states, may I say it is my personal opinion that at this time we are in a position to do the most to promote the development of a state of affairs to the greatest advantage of the greatest number by being in a position to deal with the United States, with the South American countries and with Cuba from possibly a more objective viewpoint than would be the case if we were in the organization of American states at the present time. However, that does not mean to say there will not come a time when it will be possible for Canada to join. I give credit to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and those associated with him. We have taken a very constructive view with respect to Cuba under very difficult circumstances in the last year.

We now come to our disarmament policy:

The revolution in weapons technology makes two facts obvious to reasonable men. First, annihilation is now a physical possibility. Second, there is no known direct defence against nuclear missiles. Policy must be based on these realities.

The more we know of the potentially destructive power of nuclear weapons and the lack of a genuine defence against them, the more that paragraph in our program is emphasized. You have only to read technological and scientific magazines or a recent issue of Maclean's magazine to realize that there are increasingly solid grounds for that point of view.

The New Democratic government will make a general and searching reappraisal of Canada's defence role. Much of the money which Canada now allocates to defence could better be spent on providing such conventional troops and civilian personnel as the United Nations may require, and on aiding underdeveloped countries.

I can say quite frankly that we look forward to the time when we will cease spending between $550 and $600 million on maintaining troops in Europe and will use that money to extend long term credits to the underdeveloped nations of the world so that they may purchase our industrial products, our agricultural products and so on.

It is questionable whether NORAD ever made any significant contribution to the defence of Canada and in any case it has outlived its usefulness.

We are opposed to Canadian participation in NORAD as we have stated on a number of occasions.

Furthermore, there is every danger that the Bomarcs will be equipped with nuclear warheads. The NORAD agreements should therefore be terminated.

[Mr. Herridge.]

That is the point of view of the party I represent.

The New Democratic party demands an immediate ban on nuclear tests, both to avoid the dangerous effects of fallout and as a first step toward nuclear disarmament. The New Democratic government will propose a treaty to establish a non-nuclear club of nations pledged not to manufacture, store or permit nuclear weapons on their soil nor to use such weapons at any time.

We quite willingly give credit with regard to the work being done in this direction by the Secretary of State for External Affairs along the lines of the principles outlined in that paragraph. This is the concluding paragraph on this very important question:

In the nuclear age effective disarmament has become a condition of survival. Canada must play a much more dynamic role in the promotion of universal disarmament.

In that respect I say on behalf of our party that that dynamic role will only be exercised when the government of Canada is willing to get 100 per cent behind the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the advancement of the policies he has advocated in respect of nuclear testing, disarmament, disengagement and so on.

Any agreement on disarmament will require adequate inspection and control. An independent peace research institute will be established by the New Democratic government and staffed by nuclear scientists and other experts to give continuous study to the problems involved in disarmament and the underlying tensions which threaten the peace of the world.

Just before concluding my few brief remarks, I want to say I am conscious of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs or any single group of persons cannot build up the climate and atmosphere in Canada that are necessary if we are going to have the cessation of all tests, nuclear disarmament and the developments toward peace we are all seeking. Trade union leaders in this country have a responsibility to inform their members of the situation that exists in the world today and they should do so not only at the convention level but at the union local level. Women's organizations have a responsibility, and I say once again that we owe a debt of gratitude to certain women's groups in Canada for the very effective work they have done in directing public attention to these very important questions.

All of us must accept some responsibility. It is very easy to get up and criticize the government but the people of Canada who are working in various organizations across the country must accept their responsibility so that the members of these organizations will understand the seriousness of the world situation and will be willing to study the question and to support constructive and sound proposals to meet the situation that faces mankind at the present time. I am sure that if responsible leaders in all fields in Canada would accept that responsibility it would not be long before the great majority of Canadians would be willing to accept their personal responsibility for speaking with one voice so that the policies of the government that will represent Canada after the election, whether that government be Conservative, Liberal or New Democratic, will be dynamic and even more fruitful in the councils of the world.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs is going to deal in particular with the reported statement of the Prime Minister, who now says that there cannot be any agreement to the cessation of tests unless there is an adequate system of controls. The statement went on to say that Canada could not accept blindly an undertaking of the Soviet union in this regard.

The minister's position as stated on behalf of the government is that there should not be a resumption of tests whether or not there is an agreement on system of controls. That statement is at variance with the reported statement of the Prime Minister which appears in tonight's Ottawa Journal, and I am asking the minister to explain whether the Prime Minister has been misquoted or whether there has been a change in government policy in the meantime.

Mr. Green: I think the hon. member will find that the Prime Minister did not advocate further nuclear tests, and there has been no change in government policy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My question was not whether the Prime Minister had indicated that there should not be any further nuclear tests. The Prime Minister is reported as having said that there should not be any cessation of tests in the absence of a system of controls because the governments of the west could not accept blindly an assurance given by the Soviet union. That statement is to be contrasted with the statement made by the minister that the policy of the government of Canada is that there should be no resumption of nuclear tests with or without nuclear controls. Those statements are diametrically opposed to one another. Is the Prime Minister stating new government policy or does this reflect once again a statement made by the head of the government in contradiction of his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs; or are we to conclude that the Prime Minister is now agreeing with the position which has been taken by the Minister of National Defence? Are we back again to the position where there is a divided cabinet opinion on a matter of such importance? We are entitled to have a clear and unequivocal statement from the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is what you got.

Mr. Hellyer: While the minister is deciding on the reply he wishes to give the committee in answer to the question raised by the hon. member for Essex East, I should like to draw the minister's attention to a booklet called "News From Cuba" which has been circulated in the mails. Perhaps this would not be out of the ordinary if it were not for the fact that it has been distributed by use of the franking privilege which is extended to embassies in this country, with the result that Canadian taxpayers are picking up the charge for the postage required to distribute propaganda of this kind. I understand from friends of mine in Toronto of various ethnic origins that other embassies representing countries which are in fact Soviet satellites of one kind or another have also been availing themselves of this franking privilege for the purpose of distributing political propaganda through the mails, some of which is quite offensive to Canadian citizens, particularly to some people who are constituents of mine and are also taxpayers.

I think we should hear from the minister with respect to this policy of allowing embassies to send out to Canadian citizens, who in many cases do not wish to receive this material, propaganda praising the communist heaven in their particular parts of the world. The minister should tell us why Canadian taxpayers should be called upon to subsidize this activity by paying for the mailing of this material.

Mr. Green: I think this is a policy which was adopted by the government of which the hon. member was a member. There has been no change in policy. Embassies are free to distribute material here and Canada is free to distribute material in Russia.

Mr. Hellyer: Is it a fact, Mr. Chairman, that we do have a reciprocal posting privilege in Russia? If so, do we take advantage of it and distribute information there which would be beneficial to the people who do not have access to otherwise accurate information about what is going on in other parts of the world?

Mr. Green: I do not know much about the franking privileges in Russia because apparently Canada has never sent out any material in Russia.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister inquire into this, because unless we do have some reciprocal privilege, it would seem unfair advantage is being taken of the Canadian taxpayer for propaganda purposes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I had asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to comment on a statement made by the Prime Minister but he has not done so. When I last put the question to him I was paraphrasing the report of the Prime Minister contained in tonight's Ottawa Journal.

An hon. Member: You should not have paraphrased.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I had paraphrased a statement of the Prime Minister's which appears in today's Ottawa Journal. However, so there will not be any doubt about it I will read precisely what the Ottawa Journal attributes to the Prime Minister in this regard. The article reads, in part, as follows:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker has endorsed the western view that Russia's word cannot be trusted in a nuclear test ban without international control and inspection.
>
> "Any unpoliced test ban treaty would be dangerous to the survival of the western world," he said.
>
> "It would be a reliance upon the word of the U.S.S.R. without there being means to assure that their undertakings were being carried out."

Those words are all in quotation marks, and then the article continues:

> He made the statement as he went to preside at a Saturday cabinet meeting.

This statement appears in tonight's Ottawa Journal at page 7.

Mr. Hellyer: What newspaper?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Ottawa Journal, and the Ottawa Journal is known as a newspaper which, particularly on the eve of an election, blindly supports this administration or any administration with a similar ideological content. I would not object if the Secretary of State for External Affairs asked for an opportunity to deal with this matter later, but the statement of the Prime Minister calls into question at once the declared policy of the government of Canada in this respect. Just before he went to the disarmament conference in Geneva, Mr. Chairman, in answer to a question which I put to him, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the government continued to affirm as its policy the fact that there should be a cessation of nuclear tests, whether or not there was an agreed system of control. This statement was made without any qualification by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I noted that he had made it on other occasions.

Then, about six days ago the Prime Minister, speaking in Montreal, expressed a view consistent with this statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs as to the policy of the government with regard to this subject. On Friday last I mentioned the fact that the view of the Prime Minister, as reported in his speech in Montreal, was now in agreement with the view expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There was no issue taken with my statement of the government's position. I have repeated several times this afternoon that the government's declared policy was that there should be a cessation of tests whether or not a system of controls was agreed upon. This was the statement of government policy, and I have just repeated it.

Now we have a statement attributed to the Prime Minister which contradicts that statement of policy. These matters are now being discussed in Geneva. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been praised for his work at the disarmament conference and no one has sought in any way to fail to appreciate the contribution made by the hon. gentleman or his objectives, with which we are all in agreement. In the face of this statement of objectives, in the face of what the Secretary of State for External Affairs reported he did in Geneva, he cannot sit idly in his seat without explaining this statement by the Prime Minister which is in direct contradiction to the policy which he has affirmed from time to time. It is significant that the statement by the Prime Minister was made just as he was going into a cabinet meeting.

Has government policy in this regard changed as of Saturday last? Was there a cabinet meeting which dealt with this matter? The Prime Minister, according to this report, said that an unpoliced test ban treaty would be dangerous to the survival of the western countries. This is not the position this government has taken, but it has been the position of the United States throughout. It is a position from which this government did not hesitate to dissociate itself. We are discussing these supplementary estimates for external affairs, and this is a matter of vital importance affecting not only our own foreign policy but affecting the attitude Canada takes with regard to the position of its neighbour on the resumption of tests. This statement by the Prime Minister contradicts in every way the statement of policy given to this parliament by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Green: May I merely say that the statements the hon. member has been reading do not contradict the policy of the government. Canadian policy remains the same; we are against nuclear weapons tests.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My friend says the policy of the government is against tests, with or without controls; is that the situation?

Mr. Green: I have explained it; we are against tests, period.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Now, perhaps we are getting the facts. My hon. friend says we are now against the resumption of tests. Formerly, the Secretary of State for External Affairs never hesitated to add, whether or not we had a system of controls.

Mr. Green: Do not put words into my mouth.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend deny he said in this house repeatedly that this government was against the resumption of tests, whether or not a system of controls was agreed upon? This was the position taken by my hon. friend in Geneva as well as in this house. When we come back to a discussion of this matter at a later date, we will have to confront the Secretary of State for External Affairs with his words, in view of the fact that obviously there has been a change in policy now, a change in policy which is announced by the Prime Minister in this statement which he made as he went into a cabinet meeting on Saturday last. If there was a change of policy, one could understand perhaps that there were good reasons for it. Surely, this house is entitled to know those reasons, and that is what we are not getting from the minister at this time.

Mr. Regier: What is Liberal policy?

Mr. Pearson: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that this is the policy of the government: we are against tests, period. The Prime Minister is reported to have said on Saturday, we are against test bans unless there are suitable measures for control and inspection. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs not think there is any contradiction between those two statements?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Chairman. In view of the importance of this matter we shall simply have to be given the opportunity of presenting the minister with the statements that he has made on the subject from time to time and to ascertain from him why there has been a change, if indeed there has been a change, so that he can tell the country and parliament.

There may be good reasons for a change. The minister is in a better position than anyone else to know, because of the post he holds and because of his discussions with certain powers. There may be every justification for the changed position; but we are entitled to have more from the minister than a statement which seeks to suggest that there is no change in government policy, and that he himself has never affirmed that there should be a cessation of tests whether or not a system of controls was agreed on.

While one of my colleagues is looking up the precise statement, I would invite the minister—

Mr. Pickersgill: Here is the statement.

Mr. Pigeon: No second leader.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is your first leader?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is a matter of very great importance—

Mr. Hees: You don't like what you read, Paul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): One would not want to make references to the wrong context, but my hon. friend will remember that before he went to Geneva I asked him a specific question on this very subject. He clearly indicated then that there had been no change of policy and that the government was against the resumption of tests whether or not there was any agreement to provide for a system of control. He said that repeatedly during the last year and a half in this house. I say that the Prime Minister, who is here now, contradicted that statement of the secretary of state by his reported statement.

Perhaps the Prime Minister has not seen this statement. I understand he has been in Montreal discussing disarmament and perhaps he can tell us whether he said what he is reported to have said. Here is what the Prime Minister is reported in tonight's Ottawa Journal, at page 7, as having said:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker has endorsed the western view that Russia's word cannot be trusted in a nuclear test ban without international control and inspection.
>
> "Any unpoliced test ban treaty would be dangerous to the survival of the western world," he said.
>
> "It would be a reliance upon the word of the U.S.S.R. without there being means to assure that their undertakings were being carried out."
> He made the statement as he went to preside at a Saturday cabinet meeting.

The matter under discussion between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself is: that statement of the Prime Minister is inconsistent with the declared policy of the government of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not in any way.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, all right. The Prime Minister says "not in any way." Perhaps he will explain to us how he can reconcile these words with the repeated declaration of policy by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the Canadian government was opposed to nuclear testing whether or not there was a system of control. How can my right hon. friend say that there has been no change of policy? How could he say this is consistent with the declaration of the Secretary of State for External Affairs? The two are absolutely contradictory.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the one hand you cannot say that you do not trust the Soviet union, or you cannot say you must have a system of control and also agree with the Secretary of State for External Affairs who said there should not be a resumption of tests whether or not there was an agreed system of control. These two statements stand in contradiction to one another.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister may nod his head all he wants but he will stand in condemnation by the Canadian people unless—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —unless he explains this away without delay. He has embarrassed his own Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Green: Rubbish.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He has put himself in a position at odds with one of his own ministers; but we all recognize of course that this has not occurred for the first time. The Prime Minister may think this is a laughing matter—

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is the hon. gentleman's interpretation I am laughing at.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not interpreting the Prime Minister's statement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are misinterpreting it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He said:

> Any unpoliced test ban treaty would be dangerous to the survival of the western world.

Mr. Hellyer: Maybe he was misquoted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is that the same as the policy declared by the government of Canada? The Prime Minister nods his head. All I can say is that by that act the Prime Minister has indicated without any doubt he does not accept the appreciation of the importance of this matter, and that lack of appreciation will be noted by the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if a proposal were made at the conference in Geneva for the banning of nuclear tests, which was not accompanied by measures for international control and inspection, would the Canadian delegation be in favour of it?

Mr. Green: There is no point in answering hypothetical questions like that. Our position has been perfectly clear. We are against nuclear tests. Apparently the Liberal party is in favour of them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have reached the hour of five o'clock. Does my hon. friend not think that in a matter of this kind where we seek to submerge our political differences that he should unequivocally state the position?

Mr. Diefenbaker: When did the submergence begin?

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to private members' business under section 3 of standing order 15.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I wonder, before proceeding with private members' business, would the house consider a slight alteration, commencing at eight o'clock tonight at which time I suggest, in order that the other house may deal with the matter as well, that we consider item No. 3 on today's order paper.

Mr. Habel: Changing their minds once more.

Mr. Churchill: It will be consideration of the universal copyright convention, No. 3 on today's order paper. On our side there will be just one speaker, the Secretary of State.

Mr. Pickersgill: So far as we are concerned in the official opposition we are quite agreeable to the suggestion made by the house leader, on the understanding that the moment this matter is concluded we resume the business that was set out for today and that we were on at five o'clock. I think if the house leader could give us that assurance, then we would be very glad to co-operate with the government in this matter.

Mr. Herridge: The members of this party are quite agreeable to the procedure suggested by the house leader, knowing the importance of the question to a great number of Canadians.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it quite understood?

Mr. Churchill: That arrangement is satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed by the house, then, that the business interrupted at five o'clock will continue interrupted at eight o'clock to allow for consideration of item 3, and that it will be resumed after item 3 has been disposed of?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT TO PROMOTE AND ASSIST MANUFACTURING

Mr. W. G. Beech (York South) moved:

That in the opinion of this house, the government should take under consideration the setting up of a department of industry for the purpose of promoting and assisting the manufacturing industry in Canada.

He said: I introduce this resolution in the sincere belief that the setting up of a department of industry within the government is absolutely necessary if our economy is to reach its full potential. Without in any way belittling the efforts of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue in that area, we would be naive indeed to believe that these efforts are satisfactory. Any hon. members who have accompanied their constituents in search of information or help with their problems in connection with matters pertaining to manufacturing or processing will know of the peregrinations from one department to another and the difficulty in obtaining definitive answers.

I draw to the attention of the house the matter I raised in the house on February 22 as reported on page 1174 of Hansard. Over two years ago, the Canadian boiler society, supported by the chief boiler inspectors of most of the provinces, made certain representations to the Department of Trade and Commerce. After some discussions these representations were referred to the Department of Finance. The delegates were told it was a tariff matter and would have to wait until the budget was brought down, even though no tariff changes were involved. When the budget appeared there was no mention of the problem. The group then made the suggestion that perhaps it could be taken care of by the Department of National Revenue.

After another year of talks it was decided by the Department of National Revenue it could not deal with the matter and that it could only be settled by an amendment to the tariff and so would have to wait for the budget. Well, another year has gone by, and so has the budget, without any mention of the problem. I asked what had happened about this problem and was informed that it was impossible to do anything about it, and was referred back to the Department of National Revenue for the answer.

Suggested Assistance to Industry

I cite this as the type of treatment accorded some well known and responsible representatives of industries, simply because the people in these departments are not familiar with the problems of industry, or have not the authority to make decisions. If a fisherman comes to Ottawa with a problem he goes to the Department of Fisheries, a farmer to the Department of Agriculture, a working man to the Department of Labour, a logger to the Department of Forestry, a miner to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. Surely with the ever growing importance of industry to our economy it should not be necessary to send its representatives from pillar to post in search of an answer.

All other phases of our economy have direct representation in the cabinet, but industry has to depend on the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has other responsibilities, some of which may well be in competition with industry. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, in a brief presented to the Prime Minister's conference on employment in October 1960, said the following:

Manufacturing has not kept pace with the economic growth of Canada over the post-war years because its problems and its needs failed to receive government attention commensurate with its stature and potential as an employer of Canadians. To ensure that these matters receive their proper emphasis in the formulation of future government policy, manufacturing should have definite representation in the cabinet.

Then again in December 1961:

In view of the problems of establishing a satisfactory level of employment at the present time and of assuring a complete fulfilment of the nation's potential in the years ahead, we believe that an urgent need exists for more attention to be given at cabinet level to the difficulties and the growth potential of the manufacturing industry.

Manufacturing provides employment for one out of four members of the labour force; it accounts for somewhat more than one quarter of the gross domestic product. Considerably more Canadians work in manufacturing than in agriculture, mining, forestry and fisheries combined. When only wage and salary earners are considered, manufacturing is responsible for about 30 per cent of all jobs. Even this rather understates the case, since experience has shown that 100 new jobs in manufacturing lead to at least 100 new jobs in service industries.

All levels of government derive a large part of their revenues from manufacturing.

Suggested Assistance to Industry

Approximately half of all taxes on corporation income are paid by manufacturers. While it is not possible to cite a figure, it is obvious that the largest single share of personal income taxes, in terms of industrial origin, is paid by Canadians employed in manufacturing. The keen interest of most sizeable municipalities in securing new factories is testimony to the difference which manufacturing makes to municipal revenues, as well as to local income and business turnover.

One half of corporation profits, the wellspring of so much of the funds used for expanding production and living standards, are earned in manufacturing. Although manufacturing is our nation's chief source of actual and potential economic strength, it is correspondingly capable of providing a serious problem area when employment shows weakness. In 1958, a recession year, about one third of all unemployment insurance claimants were from the manufacturing industries. The welfare of manufacturing means the welfare of Canada, and any impairment of the prosperity of manufacturing means a serious impairment of the Canadian economy.

It has recently been calculated that non-farm employment must be expanded 18 to 20 per cent in the next five years if the growth of the labour force, the continuing contraction of employment in agriculture and the above normal component of present unemployment are to be absorbed. This growth would involve the provision of an average annual increment of about 150,000 jobs and a total requirement for new jobs of about one million over the period. These figures point dramatically to the necessity to channel Canadian development into production with the highest possible potential in terms of gainful employment manufacturing.

One of the chief problems facing Canada is finding means to bring about the processing within our borders of more of our raw material exports. That this problem has persisted despite years of discussion at various levels of the community indicates that it requires a more concerted attack with all the tools of both technical and policy making research that can be brought to bear upon it. Its solution is a challenge worthy of the highest efforts of both government and business, but the achievement of real progress in this direction requires purposeful direction and co-ordination at the cabinet level.

It is evident that we cannot afford indecision or delay in laying the soundest foundation possible for manufacturing expansion. Such a foundation can be built surely and swiftly only if the central policy-making body at the national level, the cabinet, includes a minister whose clearly designated responsibility is to understand and cope with the problems of growth in the manufacturing industries.

The necessity of providing a healthy environment for manufacturing presents government with quite a different set of problems from those of its relationships with other industries. This is especially so in the increasingly competitive world of today, when the prospect is for closer and more complex contacts with the economic forces of other nations. For that reason the effects of broad economic trends and of government policies need to be assessed with particular reference to manufacturing to determine their effect upon it. Such an assessment can best be made by a minister who concentrates his attention on manufacturing and has special knowledge of it.

It is an old saying, but a basic truth, that "What is everybody's business is nobody's business". While manufacturing is not in this extreme situation as regards its recognition in the structure of the cabinet, the diffusion of responsibility for matters relating to it cannot help but lead to a dilution of the quality of judgment, the knowledgeability and the initiative brought to bear upon government problems relating to manufacturing. The future of Canada and the necessity of expanding employment over the years ahead make manufacturing much too important for either government or industry to be content with anything less than distinct and definite cabinet representation.

The facts presented above suggest that there ought to be a separate minister and department of manufacturing but in view of the necessity for economy and compactness in government organizations, we believe as already indicated that appropriate representation can be accomplished through the minister and Department of Trade and Commerce, and that due recognition of this role should be given by their redesignation as the minister and department of industry and commerce. The alteration in emphasis of duties and responsibilities to which we have earlier referred would be largely a matter of giving greater effect and recognition to certain welcome structural changes which have recently taken place within the department.

These are the considered opinions of those who are in daily touch with the problems confronting industry in this country.

The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) had this to say in the house on February 20 last as reported at page 1065 of Hansard:

While other important countries were encouraging industrial developments by tax relief, accelerated depreciation, special allowances for research bonuses, special freight rates, credit and guaranteed payments for exports, our secondary industries were left to grow up like Topsy. Industry is playing a much more important part than it ever has in the history of this dominion. However we have lagged far behind, and as an example, I cite our great textile plants. During the last ten years of the former administration, in this cold country where we use so many textiles, 80 plants closed down and 22,000 people lost their jobs. In so far as heavy industries, chemicals and electrical appliances are concerned, 50 per cent more of our requirements were imported during that period. This was the result of other countries encouraging their secondary industries which were able to export their surpluses. They were alive and alert to a situation.

After complimenting the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce for their efforts on behalf of industry, the hon. member concluded by saying:

I urge the government, and I say this with all sincerity although I know I may be on ticklish ground in so doing, to give serious consideration in the near future to the establishment of a governmental department of industry to act in co-ordination with the respective departments of industrial development in the provinces. I feel this is of paramount importance, to co-ordinate all the efforts. I compliment the government for the steps it has taken, for the new concept that it has demonstrated, but I urge the government that the time is overdue when we should have a department of industry to accelerate the development that is so vital to our future.

Mr. W. F. Lougheed in the preface of his book "Secondary Manufacturing Industry in the Canadian Economy" states:

For some time now I have been urging the creation of a federal department of industry. This study has strengthened my views concerning the need for industrial representation in the cabinet. Fishing has a spokesman in the councils of government, so, too, should secondary manufacturing industry.

And so it goes. Time will not permit me to cite figures to support my arguments, although they are readily available. I cannot stress too highly the need for concerted action, if Canada is to stand up to the ever-increasing threat to our economy from outside competition. The newly formed productivity council is a step in the right direction but the necessary results can only be achieved by the utmost co-operation between industry, labour and capital. This can only be brought about by government action.

There are those who will oppose this resolution on the grounds that it would only impose more government interference on our free enterprise system; but when the vital need for specialization and standardization is considered, if we are to successfully compete in the markets of the world, it is difficult to see how this can be accomplished without assistance from government.

Despite the attempts of the opposition to belittle the efforts of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the results of those efforts are now showing up and there can be no doubt they are responsible for the present upswing in our economy. That the government is aware of the growing importance of industry, particularly secondary industry, to our economy, is shown by the new measures introduced by the Minister of Finance in the present budget, especially as they relate to research.

This is one of the most important needs of industry in Canada, as we have far too long been dependant on the research organizations of our competitors. I will close my necessarily confined remarks in connection with our research people with the admonition that their hearts may conceive and their minds devise in vain if industry is not prompt to execute the design; and this can only be done with assistance from the government at the highest level.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the motion proposed by the hon. member for York South reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take under consideration the setting up of a department of industry for the purpose of promoting and assisting the manufacturing industry in Canada.

This is a motion which I am sure commends itself to all hon. members. In considering this whole broad subject matter I wish to remind the house that in the last year or two various suggestions have been put forward on this or related subjects. One suggestion was that a ministry of economic affairs should be established. Of course, there is an obvious objection to that proposal because no minister in any government could reasonably be asked to accept the proposition that another minister should have a superior position to him and that he should be under the direction of another minister. It will readily be seen that by its very nature such a proposition is bad and unacceptable. However, the fact that this suggestion has been made indicates the growing feeling in this country that there is a serious gap in the treatment of this subject, and that some action is required on the part of the government.

The need for such a department is a new one which has come about because of a combination of circumstances; but the fact of the matter is that before the change of government we had in the then minister of trade and commerce a minister to whom all the persons in the country concerned with the subject of industry generally, and the manufacturing industry in particular, could come with their problems—problems similar to the one mentioned by the hon. member for York South in the opening part of his remarks—and indeed all relevant problems. They could lay their problems before him to be brought before the cabinet for decision by the cabinet. I well know that over a period of years the leaders of labour, industry and other organizations having a direct concern, did come regularly and in numbers to the then minister and spell out their problems. I think all hon. members will agree that that situation obtained, and that the person filling the position of minister of trade and commerce at that time understood that type of problem. Since that minister has gone from us and there has been a new one, the need for this new department has been indicated and has shown itself. I am not suggesting that it is likely or indeed probable that we shall ever again have a man of the capacity in this field of the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe. Those things happen infrequently. I do not think anyone in the ministry would particularly quarrel with that statement. Ministers come and go but it is not often that you have one possessing the undoubted capacity and understanding of the problems as they affect industry, and the manufacturing industry in particular, to the extent those qualities were possessed by Right Hon. C. D. Howe. It is not often that event occurs in the life of succeeding governments.

There is one other factor that enters into this matter. The Department of Trade and Commerce is materially handicapped in dealing wiht this problem under its present organization. Unless it is going to be reorganized, it is necessary to set up a department such as the one indicated. To indicate what I mean when I say that the Department of Trade and Commerce would require to be reorganized, I would point out that it has now become a truncated department. The authority taken away from it under the present minister by the present government is something that restricts it to dealing with only part of what was formerly considered to be the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I do not know why that was done. I am not proposing to argue the matter now, but I point it out in considering this motion. I would point out that the discontinuance of the preparation and the publication of the Economic Outlook each year and the liquidation of the branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce which did the work in preparing that document are something that has materially handicapped the present government in dealing with problems confronting industry.

Mr. Pallett: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Pallett: Do I understand him to say that there has been a reduction in the number of persons preparing statistics on the economic position of the country?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, that is one of the things which bothers me a great deal. We have now simply wiped out that organization. It was a superb organization. When that branch was set up after the war it was headed by an outstanding man who left the department to become the principal of Queen's University. If you take into consideration the succession of heads of the branch, you will see that is the kind of treatment they received. The work that branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce did in assembling the statistical information on the projected undertakings in the economy of Canada for use of a government in considering and arriving at policy was a very great contribution. It is my opinion that it is one of the factors that helped to create the prosperity we had in those post-war years.

Mr. Pallett: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Pallett: Is the hon. member suggesting that the people who are there now are not as good as the ones who were there previously?

Mr. McIlraith: I am suggesting that this branch of the department is virtually liquidated. That is what I am suggesting. I had an opportunity of working rather closely with that department and I can say frankly to the hon. member who asked the question that I think that this government made a great mistake. I will not ask him to agree with me about the circus performance in publishing that report on the Economic Outlook but I will ask him to agree with me that he should examine into the problem of just what has been done to the branch which prepared that kind of information for a ministry. A ministry cannot work without that kind of information. This government is materially handicapped in not having that kind of information in developing policy. That is the point I wish to make.

Then there is one other thing I wish to mention. By that action and others they have lost the kind of co-ordination that existed between labour, industry—I refer to the industrial leaders—and governments. The three must co-operate in order to get effective industrial production of a higher order. There is a role for each of the three. That co-ordination did take place, in fact, under the former minister of trade and commerce. As I say, it is a matter of regret that it does not take place now owing to a number of circumstances.

In order to show the need for the kind of department proposed by the hon. member for York South, perhaps a good illustration will be found in the situation in which some of the secondary manufacturing industry—and at the moment I am thinking about the automobile industry—found itself about two or three years ago. That problem was not grappled with by the government, and the kind of decision that was required to be taken then was not taken because, in my view—possibly other hon. members will have quite different views—the government simply did not have the kind of organization that was capable of understanding the kind of problem confronting the industry and the effect, beneficial or otherwise, that certain proposed changes would have. That is a good example indicating the need.

If anyone has any doubt about the importance of the manufacturing industry in providing employment, he has only to examine the statistics on the subject. It is absolutely essential in this country that we keep the manufacturing industry and the secondary industries developing at a rate sufficient to provide the employment that will take care of the increase in the labour force that becomes available each year. That is the nub of the problem. It is interesting to note this fact. When you examine this subject you will find that there was sufficient development in Canada to more than take care of the increase in the labour force every year since the end of the war up to and including 1957, but that from 1958 on the increase in the labour force each year has been greater than has been the increase in jobs provided and available for them. That is the situation in which this country finds itself today.

In the last figures available it will be found that some 278,000 fewer jobs were made available through the development of the country than were required to meet the increase in the labour force. I will not give statistics on the subject. There are several that can be given showing the percentage increase in the gross national product and showing the percentage increase in terms of dollars and so on. Those figures are fairly well known. However, the thing works out in this way. The increase in the gross national product over the years 1945 to 1957 averaged out at about 4.6 per cent per year, and from 1958 to 1961 it averaged out at 1.5 per cent per year while the annual increase in the labour force over the whole period is about 2.5 per cent. If you take the gross national product and break it down in terms of what part of it comes—

Mr. Pallett: When you say 2.5 per cent—

Mr. McIlraith: Just a moment—from the manufacturing industry, and then take the number of jobs made available from this large segment of the factors going into the gross national product, you will find that the manufacturing industry is quite important from the point of view of making employment available. I am sorry I cut off the hon. member for Peel. He had a question.

Mr. Pallett: You said the increase in the labour force was 2.5 per cent. Over what period?

Mr. McIlraith: From 1945 to 1961.

Mr. Pallett: Your figures are wrong.

Mr. McIlraith: No, I think not. You can check carefully and you will find that those figures indicate the problem.

Mr. Pallett: Half a million new jobs in four years would be more than that.

Mr. McIlraith: I would be glad to hear the hon. member for Peel speak, but the facts on this subject are perfectly clear and there can be no controversy about them. There is a very slight increase in employment but not an increase equal to the increase in the number of persons entering the labour force. Surely there cannot be a failure to recognize the problem created by that situation.

There are other factors to this problem. A department of industry would provide a ministry to which those persons in Canada directly concerned with the problem could go for the purpose of making representations, and bringing forward problems which they thought should be dealt with. Since the ministry would be devoted to this subject, it could build up the proper background of information required to make the proper kind of forecasts that are necessary in dealing with this difficult problem. It is not an easy or simple problem and I am not one to suggest that the solution is easy.

I am not saying that the officials of such a department would be infallible by any means, but the department could examine the method of procurement of defence requirements now being followed, which it seems to me has fallen badly by the wayside, and ascertain what are the implications of the method now being followed by the Department of Defence Production, that of merely procuring end of run goods from other countries instead of examining carefully the impact defencewise, from the point of view of industrial preparedness and the keeping of an industrial complex in Canada in healthy condition by procuring these articles in this country. With respect to some defence procurement there is no direct association between procurement of the articles in Canada and the indirect effect of doing so from the point of view of keeping defence industrial know-how alive and at work in a segment of our industry, so that that part of the industrial complex can make its contribution in ordinary peacetime activies.

Mr. Pallett: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether the hon. member would wait. That is something that has slipped badly by the board, and I think innocently so far as the government is concerned. I am not suggesting that the government had any improper motives in that regard but I am suggesting they have fallen into the position where that kind of problem has not been getting sufficient attention. I think it is essential that it receive sufficient attention and I think a department of industry is one means whereby he problem might tend to receive sufficient attention.

It can be argued, of course, that possibly the Department of Defence Production should develop some of its facilities a bit more, though I am not suggesting that now. I am simply willing to grant that there are other means.

Mr. Macdonnell: What is this new department going to do that the Department of Trade and Commerce cannot do?

Mr. McIlraith: That was the point of my remarks. Such a department was quite unnecessary until the change of government. Formerly this work was all done in the Department of Trade and Commerce; but now that department has been so truncated the job is not being done at all. If that department is not going to be restored to its role in this and other related fields, then the government should give consideration to setting up a separate department. In any event, the problem has to be considered. The hon. member for Peel had a question.

Mr. Pallett: I wonder whether the hon. member recalls that the government which he supported cancelled the going into production of the first Canadian commercial jet transport?

Mr. McIlraith: If the hon. member for Peel wants to debate the subject of the production of aircraft, may I remind him that one of the hardest blows to any industry in Canada was the liquidation of the absolutely outstanding team of scientific specialists, technicians and engineers that had been gathered together in the Arrow project in his riding. The impact of the cancellation of that contract in the arbitrary way it was cancelled, without examining into the effect on the industry of the liquidation of that team of engineers, scientists and technicians—

Mr. Grafftey: You put them to work on an obsolete aircraft.

Mr. McIlraith: —has been very severe and has contributed to the depression of the last three years. If any competence had been exercised in considering the cancellation of that contract, it could have been done in a way that would not have had such a harmful effect on the economy of Canada. It could have been done properly in a way that would not have damaged the country and the industry of Canada to nearly the same extent.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a pleasure to support the motion moved by the hon. member for York South. However, before indicating areas of agreement I should like to suggest that clarification of the motion would perhaps be of some value because it envisages the setting up of a department of industry. The problem there, of course, is that the word "industry" is used in such a broad way. I listened to the hon. member's remarks as carefully as I could and I felt that he really meant secondary industry. He talked about the fishing industry, the lumbering industry and various forms of industry which I am sure he would wish to keep outside such a department, as these primary industries have departments of their own. I take it what the hon. member wishes to see done is for a department to be set up which would be particularly concerned with secondary manufacturing, and it is in this way that I interpret the resolution that he has placed upon the order paper.

I think the resolution is an excellent one and I believe we must give some emphasis to something that is becoming more and more important in the economic life of our nation. In my view the organization of government as we have it today reflects the kind of economic organization which largely supported our nation at one time. Therefore the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and so on were very necessary and still are. But if in the structural organization of our government we are going to reflect the kind of economy that motivates our nation today we certainly need a department of secondary industry as our economy becomes more and more sophisticated. I do not think we want to burden a department which has, in a sense, become rather a hodgepodge already, that is our Department of Trade and Commerce. This department already deals with the bureau of statistics and several other branches. Certainly I do not believe it would be of advantage to burden that department with an industrial branch to look after secondary manufacturing. I feel it would be far better to have a separate department established with its own minister.

I think the hon. member for York South indicated some of the major reasons for my suggestion. Secondary industry is going to provide us with employment in the future. One of the professors at Queen's has indicated that over the next five years we in Canada will have to provide 5,000 jobs a week. These jobs are going to have to be largely provided by secondary manufacturing. As has already been indicated, this area of manufacturing today supports more workers than any other area of our economy. Canada, over the past number of years, has become a major industrial nation. Certainly, I think we must recognize the fact that such a department has become a necessity. I do not disparage in any way the efforts that have been made by the Department of Trade and Commerce in this particular field. However, I am sure that all would recognize the need for some new organization in this particular area.

I believe we would agree that there are some very great developments that are taking place which merit the special attention of a minister and a departmental organization. There is, for instance, the problem of the combination of our industries and the fact that some of our industries are too small to compete. We are going to have to take a look at secondary manufacturing to see whether or not the units are sufficiently large to be able to compete on world markets. Then, too, we will have to look at some of our legislation, such as the Combines Investigation Act and other aspects of our legislation, to ascertain whether we can reorganize, reorient and redirect our efforts dealing with secondary manufacturing.

During the past few years we have been talking about the problem of United States control of secondary manufacturing. The bureau of statistics indicates to us that foreign ownership of secondary manufacturing has inched up from 38 per cent in 1926 to 57 per cent in 1959 and control has gone from 35 per cent to 57 per cent. This indicates the seriousness of the problem, particularly in the area of secondary manufacturing. Of course, we have seen this problem in the area of primary industry as well. This is a problem which can be dealt with, I believe, by a department particularly concerned with the problems of secondary industry.

We have to consider the problem of capital assistance to secondary industry because it is not needed in the same way or on the same terms as it is needed for primary industry.

I think, too, we have to take into account these nuances, these changes. We must not base our thinking upon primary industry. We have been talking a great deal about the relocation of industry. We have been talking about some of the problems of areas in our nation that have not been able to achieve the same level of development and prosperity as other areas. We have been talking about the possibility of relocating secondary industry. There are particular problems in connection with this suggestion which do not exist in connection with primary industry. I feel that a department such as the one suggested by the hon. member for York South would indeed be a valuable addition in dealing with the problems of relocating secondary industry.

We have been talking, too, a great deal about the problems of training and about apprenticeship schemes. I feel it would be of value to have this department which could give advice and statistics to indicate trends to the Department of Labour when setting up new courses or new apprenticeship schemes. I think that during this period of transition through which Canada is going the value of a department of industry would be readily seen. This department could look into the whole problem of the structure of our secondary industry. So often we tend to cram industry into one single area. I think this department could very well deal with that problem, just as it could with tariffs and the tax structure as they affect secondary industry. It has become almost a platitude over the past number of years to say that we have been exporting low employment content goods and importing high employment content goods. I am sure the government is concerned with this situation because it is one which we, as a nation, have to study. I think such a department could be a spur to activity in that area.

I know there are other members who wish to speak on this resolution, so I shall just close by commending the hon. member for introducing this motion this afternoon.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): The proposal put forward by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Beech) is an intriguing one. It has a particular interest for me. If for a moment therefore I might become at least regional, if not parochial, I might mention that we in the Atlantic provinces, of which Newfoundland is one, have a particular interest in industrial development. Throughout our entire history we have had a great interest in trade. Perhaps some hon. members can remember the days when, comparatively speaking, the importance of some parts of the Atlantic provinces industrially was greater than it is now. We feel, and I think in this I express the sentiments of most people from the eastern seaboard, that a greater emphasis on industrial development could improve our lot considerably.

Actually, sir, the proposal that there should be a minister of industry is one which offers considerable possibilities. I would not, for a moment, suggest that this in itself will solve all our problems because government, although it has a great effect in these modern days upon industrial development, is not the whole answer. I think the hon. member himself suggested that there has to be co-ordination between government and private enterprise so that the co-operative effort of one can be supplemented by the know-how of another. In this way, real prosperity can be achieved.

Before I go any farther, I should like to make one comment upon a remark made by the hon. member when he was making a comparison with the last ten years of the former administration. I think in fairness I could hardly be blamed for making a remark to the effect that if the past four years are to be regarded as the yardstick of prosperity, then the Tory yardstick is somewhat different in length from the Liberal yardstick.

To return to the suggestion that a ministry should be created and that it should give attention to the development of secondary industry, I would point out that big industries are essential and basic to Canadian industrial prosperity, but there are gaps in between them which have to be filled by smaller industries. Every additional small industry created will provide additional jobs and more jobs are needed to meet the demands of our rapidly growing population. Helping to create these industries and these jobs would be the concern of such a ministry.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): In the short length of time available to me I should like to say a few words on this motion proposed by the hon. member for York South. At first glance it may appear that a movement to set up a department of industry for the purpose of promoting and assisting the manufacturing industry in Canada would be a good one, but there are various matters I believe would have to be taken into consideration before finally deciding that such department would be most advantageous for manufacturing industry throughout the country.

The hon. member for Ottawa West spoke about how things went along under the former minister of trade and commerce, and he also pointed out that under the defence production department we were getting more goods from other countries instead of keeping our industrial complex.

Mr. McIlraith: That was not what I said.

Mr. MacEwan: That was not what you said?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not want to be misinterpreted.

Mr. MacEwan: The Minister of Defence Production visited my area as well as that of the hon. member for Halifax. I would like to point out a move which has been made by this government, particularly in the defence production department, regarding the production of the variable depth sonar and anti-submarine device. This was developed by our own scientists in the defence department, with the help of defence production officials. While the minister was in the province of Nova Scotia he saw the electronic equipment for it being made by Cossor Limited at Halifax. He also saw parts being made by Fairey Aviation in the constituency of Halifax, and he saw the housing for this equipment being made under subcontract in my area. That is one example of the things being done by this government in order to provide employment.

I would point out that other steps have also been taken by our Minister of Trade and Commerce in other fields, especially in the export credit field. I have talked about this with various manufacturers. Important officials in various industries have pointed out that domestically we cannot hope to use up all the products of our manufacturing operations and our heavy steel industry, and that we must try for exports.

The report of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, presented by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, shows what has been done in this regard, and among the results achieved are some which are pertinent to the province of Nova Scotia. We have received export orders for rails to Mexico and various other things for South American countries. With the help of Industrial Estates Limited, a Nova Scotia crown corporation set up by the provincial government, and with co-operation between it and the federal Department of Trade and Commerce, a large industrial secondary industry complex has been established in the Halifax area.

In addition various other projects have been carried out to assist industry, as shown in the maritime provinces power development act, by which cheaper power is supplied for our industries. I do not submit this evening that all projects have been completed. I shall deal, however, with the province of Nova Scotia, as is better known to me and I do not have a full knowledge of other parts of the country.

The hon. member for Ottawa West pointed out how powerful was the former minister of trade and commerce. What he says is so and was recognized by the Canadian people; but I submit that the present minister, together with the other ministers in this government, have shown themselves not only sympathetic to Nova Scotia but to other parts of the maritimes. Not only are they sympathetic but they are taking concrete steps to help stimulate manufacturing industry in that area.

No doubt plans will probably be announced by hon. gentlemen across the way, saying they are going to do a lot for the maritimes, but it is a little late for them to start that kind of thing now. They should have started many years ago.

It might be a good thing if a department of industry were set up to act as an agency for all other departments in helping to stimulate industry. Manufacturers from my area who now have to visit various government departments could then visit one central agency and transact their business. The idea contained in the motion is a good one and deserves further study. No doubt if it is the proper course to take it will be taken by this government. May I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

APPROVAL OF GENEVA CONVENTION, 1952

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State) moved:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament approve the universal copyright convention signed by Canada in Geneva in 1952 and protocol 3 thereto, and that this house do approve the same.

He said:

(Translation):

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think that in introducing this resolution before the house, it would be appropriate for me, as the minister responsible for copyright affairs, to state the government's motives.

The universal copyright convention, copies of which have been tabled, was signed at Geneva on September 6, 1952, by 86 countries, including Canada. Canada has not, however, ratified the convention. As a signatory, Canada has the right, under articles VIII and IX, to ratify the convention, as long as Canada is in a position, under its domestic law, to give effect to the terms of the convention—this condition being a requirement of article X. The resolution presently before the house recommends that Canada do now ratify this convention.

The convention came into being, and continues to exist, under the auspices of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The member states as of this date—that is, the states which currently adhere, through ratification, acceptance or accession—number 39, and include the United Kingdom, the United States, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and a number of South and Central American republics.

Canada's international copyright relations presently consist of membership, dating back to 1896, in the international union for the protection of intellectual property (the Berne union), Canada being presently bound by the Rome revision (1928) thereof, and several bilateral arrangements made under the Canadian Copyright Act, with the United States, Sarawak and North Borneo. I shall refer again to the Berne union and to the arrangement with the United States. What membership in the Berne union and these several arrangements mean is that works of Canadian origin receive copyright protection in the member countries and in the countries with whom the arrangements exist, in return for reciprocate protection in Canada.

The universal copyright convention, in very general terms, assures to an author who is a national of a member state, or who first publishes in that state, national treatment in each other member state (by "national treatment" I mean such treatment as is accorded nationals of the state concerned under the domestic law of that state). The convention sets forth the types of works to which member states will guarantee protection, and stipulates the minimum periods for which such protection will be granted (i.e., the "term" of protection). The convention provides that any member state which, under its domestic law, requires certain formalities (including printing in that state, registration, deposit, etc.) as a condition of copyright will regard such requirements satisfied with respect to the works protected by the convention first published outside its territory and the author of which is not one of its nationals. The only condition is that a simple formality be observed, namely that all copies bear a symbol (the letter "C" in a circle) and carry the name of the copyright owner and the year of first publication of the work.

The principal advantage to Canada of ratification of this convention bears on the effect of such ratification on Canada's copyright relations with the United States, but there are certain other minor advantages. The minor advantages lie in the wider international copyright affiliations which Canada would thus bring about (particularly within the western hemisphere), resulting in the protection of Canadian works in those member states to which Canada is not already bound by treaty or arrangement (and, of course, a reciprocate obligation on the part of Canada to grant protection to the works of authors of those states or works first published therein), and, to a great extent, in the easing of requirements in those states whose domestic laws may contain more stringent demands in this respect.

The major advantage in ratification has to do with our copyright relations with the United States. In 1923 Canada issued a notice, under its act, to the effect that the United States:

> —is a country which grants or has undertaken to grant either by treaty, convention, agreement or law, to citizens of Canada, the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens or copyright protection substantially equal to that conferred by the said act.

Henceforth, that country would be treated as if it were a country to which the Canadian Copyright Act extended, and the United States, in a reciprocal proclamation at the same time agreed to protect the works of Canadian authors, but such protection was to be conditional upon compliance with the requirements and formalities prescribed by the copyright laws of the United States. The United States have had, since 1891, certain printing (or "manufacturing", as they are usually called) provisions in their act, and from 1909 their law provided specifically that the owner of the copyright in a book or periodical first published outside the United States in the English language could obtain copyright protection in the United States (called ad interim protection) for five years from first publication.

However, if he imported into the United States more than 1500 copies of the work during that period, his United States copyright ceased. Canada, in 1923, amended its act by inserting therein certain manufacturing or printing clauses of its own, presumably to compensate for those in the United States law, but, due to the limitations in taking such action which were represented by Canada's membership in the Berne union, the Canadian clauses were operative only at the discretion of the minister and were, in reality, compulsory licensing provisions which did not take away the copyright (as the United States clauses did), but only required the copyright owner to permit publication, under certain circumstances, by others, on application and on payment of royalties. The United States manufacturing clause, on the other hand, is a mandatory requirement of the U.S. law, abolishes copyright protection on non-compliance, and has resulted in compelling the owners of copyright works in English to print them in the United States as a condition of enjoying copyright protection in that country.

The effect of these requirements of United States law on the Canadian printing and publishing industry is readily apparent. Any Canadian author writing in the English language, who anticipates an appreciable sale of his work in the United States must have his work published in that country to assure his copyright protection there. He could, of course, publish the work simultaneously in Canada and in the United States, but such action is not economically practicable. The Canadian printing and publishing industry is thus denied this business. Canadian authors, for their part, must compete with their American fellows for the attention and favour of American publishers, may be required to accept contracts on less favourable terms than they might secure from a rejuvenated Canadian publishing industry, and are in some danger of losing their identity as Canadian writers. In the interests, therefore, of Canadian literature, of Canadian authors, and of the Canadian printing and publishing industry it is obviously essential that measures be taken to make the manufacturing clauses of the United States copyright law inoperative so far as Canadian authors are concerned.

In that respect, I would refer hon. members to the very appropriate comments made by the royal commission on publications. I will not quote them here so as to be as brief as possible.

We suggested to the United States government, some months ago, through diplomatic channels, that that government free Canadian authors and authors first publishing in Canada from the requirements of the manufacturing clause, in return for a guarantee by Canada that we would not exercise our compulsory licensing provisions against American copyright owners. The reply was that compliance with this request on the part of the United States was not possible without amendment to the United States law, and that the way was already open to us to secure our object by ratification of the universal copyright convention.

We were already aware, of course, that ratification of the convention would solve this particular problem. This is because the United States as a member nation will no longer be able to invoke the "manufacturing clause" of its law with respect to works published in another member nation, since this is a type of formality which, under the terms of the convention, is satisfied simply by compliance with the minimum of formalities required by the convention, which I mentioned earlier.

The present United States law so provides; that is, a subsection specifies that works of the nationals of member countries, or works first published in such countries are exempt from certain provisions of the United States law—including the manufacturing requirement, and also requirements relating to deposit, mechanical rights, import prohibitions, etc.—as long as copies of the work bear the "C-in-a circle" symbol, the name of the copyright proprietor and year of first publication, in other words, comply with the convention requirement.

It may be wondered, under the circumstances, why action towards ratification of the convention has been delayed. There are various reasons. The Ilsley commission on patents, copyright and industrial designs recommend, in its report on copyright, ratification of the convention, but only after other recommendations which it made—relating particularly to the term of copyright, and also to removal of our printing clauses —should be given legislative effect by a new copyright act. I will make brief mention of this report and the activity which has taken place with respect to it. The report was tabled in 1958, and contained recommendations for a wholesale amendment of the Copyright Act. The subject of copyright is an extremely involved one, as anyone who undertakes a serious investigation of it soon realizes. The recommendations of the Ilsley report on this subject, the comments made with respect to the report and on all aspects of the subject have been under very active study for over two years in my department by a committee of officials to whom the task has been assigned.

That means that the legislation we propose to introduce will not necessarily implement the conclusions contained in the Ilsley report. Of course, it is the government and not royal commission which is responsible for legislation. For the time being, I could say that we may depart from certain of the report's conclusions. At any rate, when the legislation is introduced in the house, hon. members will have every opportunity to discuss its provisions and to make their own suggestions.

Specifically with respect to the Ilsley commission's recommendation that the universal copyright convention be ratified only after the Copyright Act is amended, in accordance with the commission's recommendations, I wish to point out that, under article IV of the convention, it will not be possible to make any amendment concerning the term of copyright after the convention has been ratified. Article IV states, in part, that the term of protection for works protected under the convention shall be not less than life of the author and 25 years after his death, but if a contracting state, on the effective date of the convention in that state, has limited the term for certain classes of works to a period computed from the first publication of the works, such a state will be permitted to continue to do so. The Ilsley commission recommended a term based on publication; thus, we would have to include the term in a new copyright act before ratification could be undertaken. I do not propose to go into detail at this time with respect to the pros and cons of the Ilsley commission recommendation as to a term of 56 years from date of publication, as indeed is the case in the United States, but it is not the intention of the government to accept that recommendation at present.

We are of the view that there is no great advantage to be gained by shortening our present term of life of the author plus 50 years to bring it into line with the United States term of 56 years from publication, and consider that any advantage to be so gained would have to be very real to justify departing from the term which has been in effect in this country for many years, or from the basis of determining such a term—i.e., life of the author—which prevails not only in Canada but in the overwhelming majority of countries granting copyright protection. We readily admit, that the vast majority of works in copyright lose most, if not all of their monetary value long before the expiration of their copyright term.

Nevertheless, for that minority of works which are of lasting cultural value we are of the opinion that both the public's and the author's interest require that the copyright protection of such works be such as to ensure to the authors such financial reward as would encourage further production.

With respect to the possible claim of unfairness arising from a longer term of protection in Canada than in the United States, a remedy would seem to lie in the adoption of a provision, possible under the conventions, under which the term of protection in Canada for non-Canadian works should never exceed that of the country of origin—rather than the adoption of a shorter term for Canadian works.

Finally, I might say that there is understood to be in the United States—one of the last (if not the last) bastions of the term from publication—a substantial body of opinion developing in favour of a longer United States term. At any rate, convinced as we are that the term should be based upon the life of the author, and that it should be one which is at least 25 years after his death (as required by the universal copyright convention), there is no need to await amendment of the copyright act before ratifying the convention.

Another fact which gave us pause was the existence of the compulsory licensing provisions in our present act. These we were at first (as the Ilsley commission apparently also was) disposed to regard as incompatible with the requirements of the convention. We are now, however, of the view that our licensing clauses affect only the "content" of copyright—that is, the extent of the protection—but do not remove copyright. Since the "content" of copyright is nowhere defined in the convention (except with respect to term and to translations), it now appears—and we have an opinion of the deputy attorney general to corroborate our view in this respect—that the provisions of our present act are, indeed, such as will permit our giving effect to the terms of the convention.

The way ahead to ratification at this time therefore seems clear. There are three protocols attached to the convention, and the question arises as to the ratification of these as well. The first protocol would assimilate, for purposes of the convention, stateless persons and refugees habitually residing in member states with nationals of that state; the second protocol provides for protection of the works of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and the organization of American states; the third concerns the effective date of instruments of ratification or acceptance of, or accession to, the convention. Although it may in the future be desirable that all of these protocols be ratified (as the Ilsley Commission recommends), the first two could not be implemented before our legislation is amended. The third protocol's purpose appears to be to provide a suitable procedure permitting any country to condition the entry into force of its ratification, acceptance or accession upon the United States' becoming a party to the convention, but to achieve this without saying so in the convention or protocol. Ratification of this protocol is not affected by our legislation and can do no harm, and we propose ratification of protocol three of the convention.

There is one final consideration—namely, the means by which, under our present act, the extension of protection to universal copyright convention member states can in fact be implemented. Subsection 2 of section 4 of the Copyright Act provides, in effect, that the provisions of the act may be extended to or in respect of the citizens of a non-Berne union foreign country if that foreign country has granted or undertaken to grant by treaty, convention, agreement or law, to citizens of Canada the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens. A country which has ratified the convention has undertaken, by virtue of article II of the convention, to give to Canada, once Canada itself ratifies the convention, the benefit of copyright on the same basis as to its own citizens. The minister, may, through notice in the Canada Gazette, under authority of the abovementioned subsection, certify that any universal copyright convention country which is not a Berne union country (Canada already being affiliated with the Berne union members) is to be treated as one to which the Canadian Copyright Act extends.

I think that that about covers the background of this move by the government toward ratification of the universal copyright convention.

In conclusion, I wish to suggest that since the government has not yet drawn up the text of the new Copyright Act, the whole subject of copyright revision be not opened up at this time, nor that there be any discussion raised with respect to such questions as are not relevant to the motion before the house, that is, ratification of the universal copyright convention.

(Text):

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say at the outset that I am quite prepared to follow the minister's suggestion not to go into the intricacies of the question of a new copyright act at this time, since I assume the house is ready and anxious to speed on with its business to the termination of consideration of the supplementary estimates. However, I should like to make a few remarks with respect to the resolution before the house and I apologize to the house for the fact that I have found it necessary to make some rather extensive notes respecting this matter since otherwise I find it very difficult to remember dates and particular details.

Since coming to parliament, Mr. Speaker, I have taken a considerable interest in the subject of copyright and have this year, as I did last year, introduced a private bill to amend the present outmoded Copyright Act—that is, our domestic legislation—and also to ratify the convention which is under discussion and the protocols, with one of which this resolution also deals. In the past year I have widely distributed my modest offering and have requested and in many cases received some very constructive suggestions and criticism with respect to it. That bill was designed partly to bring the government to the point of this action and partly to give those people interested in the public at large specific draft legislation upon which to comment. I am delighted, Mr. Speaker, that it may well be that my modest effort has reached at least part of its objective in bringing this convention before the house for ratification.

Last year I frequently asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) when a resolution such as this might be brought before the house and when the government might be expected to introduce a new copyright act. After all, a royal commission set up in 1957 under the distinguished chairmanship of the Hon. J. L. Ilsley, to which the minister has referred, recommended the taking of such a step, and the recent royal commission on publications under the chairmanship of Mr. O'Leary did the same. As well, the Canadian authors association has presented a brief to the minister and the graphic arts industries association has repeatedly urged such action upon the government. In fact, I assume that in the change of business this matter has been brought before the house as a result of a meeting of publishers in Toronto within the past 10 days and a number of wires and representations made both to the government and to the opposition, including a letter which appeared in this morning's Montreal Gazette signed by Mr. Marsh Jeanneret, director of the University of Toronto press, which pointed out the great disability that would occur and the unfairness to Canadian publishers and authors if in fact this resolution were not ratified by this parliament.

In January, 1961, Mr. Speaker, the Ottawa Citizen in its issue of the 18th of that month reported that the Secretary of State had "labelled a redress of the present copyright situation imperative". I note the word "imperative", although that was January of 1961. He is also quoted in the same article as having said that he would "probe the practicality of having Canada adhere to the 1952 Geneva universal copyright convention". The minister was further reported in the Globe and Mail of March 8, 1961, as having written the president of the Canadian authors association as follows:

> I hope that it will be possible to introduce a bill to revise the Copyright Act at the next session of parliament.

True to his word at least in part, we have before us a resolution to ratify the convention, although not a new Copyright Act. This encouraged all those interested, whether in the literary or artistic fields or in the printing and publishing lines, to believe that finally this legislation might be receiving a thorough overhaul. It was indeed a disappointment then to find in the speech from the throne this year no reference to a new act but only to the implementation of this treaty and, for the reasons explained by the minister, of only one of its three protocols.

Hon. members might well ask why the question of implementing this treaty is considered of sufficient importance to be included as a paragraph in the speech from the throne and as a matter of urgency at this time. There is, of course, the immediate problem which received considerable publicity last year when the chairman of the royal commission on publications learned to his obvious surprise of what is called the manufacturing clause, to which the minister has referred, in United States copyright legislation and its adverse effects upon our literary, printing and publishing people.

It is true that many writers have ventured the opinion that we might solve our problems and assist our own people simply by ratification of what is called the U.C.C., the treaty which is before us; but the so-called manufacturing clause has long been a part of United States copyright law, since 1909, in fact, and has frequently been the subject of heated debate in the United States congress. The convention has already received study in the other place and approval at least in committee; but will the assent of this house to this resolution solve the problem, as suggested by the minister, of the adverse effect upon Canadians of the American domestic legislation, much less make less urgent the need to amend our own copyright law? I think not. But in order to answer the question properly it is necessary to make a quick survey of the history of our copyright law in Canada, its purpose and the extension of these rights elsewhere in the world by means of our treaties with other nations.

Copyright laws do not protect ideas as patent laws do, but merely expressions of ideas. The report of the Ilsley royal commission explains, and I quote:

> Copyright is in effect a right to prevent the appropriation of the expressed results of the labours of an author by other persons. That an author should have this right, at least for a limited period, is generally recognized—on the ground of justice, expediency or both.

A nation may, of course, legislate with respect to protection of such rights only as they may extend within its own territorial boundaries. The same rights are only extended to other countries and the nationals of other countries by reciprocal treaty.

In 1886 a group of countries signed an international treaty or convention by which each country signing agreed to give certain rights in respect of works of its nationals to the nationals of the other signatory countries. This came to be called the Berne union, and Canada signed by Britain upon the British government's initiative. Subsequently, in the same way, in 1896 Canada became the only North American country to sign what was called the Paris amendment to the Berne union convention. Later Great Britain adhered in 1923 at our request to another revision drawn at Berlin in 1908. Canada also became a party to the Rome revision of 1928, which fact, in the words of the Ilsley report, "places important limits upon Canada's freedom of action in legislating" in this field, with the result that "Canada is morally obligated in passing legislation to respect the Rome convention". In 1948 the latest revision of the Berne union took place at Brussels, which Canada signed but to which she has never acceded.

Our Copyright Act, that is our domestic legislation, was passed in 1921 and proclaimed in force in 1924. It was modelled upon the imperial act of 1911 and both were framed to accord as nearly as possible with the Berne union convention, to which we were a signatory. The United States, however, has never been a Berne union country. The United States, which has protected copyright since 1891 by its domestic laws, has been an adherent to another international convention, the Buenos Aires convention, which included most of the South American countries except Brazil. In addition, the United States has, by a series of presidential proclamations provided for in its own copyright act, extended U.S. copyright to the nationals of other nations on a reciprocal basis.

These two groups have almost diametrically opposed theories of copyright. I am indebted to an article entitled "International Copyright Control, A Canadian Viewpoint", by Messrs. Sterling and MacLeod for this short comparison which may be of assistance to members of the house:

> The continental concept expressed by the Berne union, views copyright as the primary and natural right of an author to tangible and intangible property in his work. From the primary right there may be derived particular rights which can be expanded or redefined as circumstances demand but, under this concept, the author has no obligation to comply with any formalities such as notice or registration of ownership. His right arises ab initio. The opposing theory, endorsed by the United States and Latin American countries, among others, postulates that copyright is a privilege conferred by the state to encourage creation and to ensure the fullest use of intellectual works. It emphasizes the need to balance the author's rights and the interests of society. To accomplish this, the state defines copyright and then prescribes necessary formalities by which copyright protection can be secured—

Now, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty is attempting to reconcile these two opposed views, and an attempt to do so was made in the universal copyright convention with which this resolution deals. This convention was promulgated in 1952 pursuant to article 27 of the universal declaration of human rights. It was an attempt, not to set up a rival to the Berne convention but rather to form a compromise solution for the union and non-union countries to secure so far as possible a truly universal copyright union.

This convention was signed on September 6, 1952, as the minister has said, at Geneva by some 86 countries including Canada and the United States, and it was subsequently signed by another four countries. The United States thereupon undertook a study of its copyright act and, in order to comply with the terms of the Geneva convention, undertook a fairly substantial modification of its own domestic legislation. Having done so it then, in 1955, ratified the universal copyright convention. The United Kingdom followed the same course. They set up a committee appointed by the president of the board of trade as early as April, 1951, and that was called the Gregory committee. Subsequently, as a result of its report, the United Kingdom parliament adopted a new piece of domestic legislation, the copyright act of 1956, whereupon the United Kingdom then also ratified the universal copyright convention.

Canada started along this path as well. After signing the universal copyright convention in 1952, in order to review all of its commercial legislation which had, as stated earlier, been framed to accord with the Berne union convention and which had not been substantially altered in almost 40 years, Canada constituted a royal commission, which has been already referred to, under the distinguished chairmanship of the Hon. J. L. Ilsley on June 10, 1954. Its terms of reference may be of interest to hon. members of the house, many of whom were not here at that time, and I quote:

> —to inquire as to whether federal legislation relating in any way to patents of invention, industrial designs, copyright and trade marks affords reasonable incentive to invention and research, to the development of literary and artistic talents, to creativeness, and to making available to the Canadian public scientific, technical, literary and artistic creations and other applications, adaptations and uses, in a manner and on terms adequately safeguarded the paramount public interest, the whole in the light of present day economic conditions, scientific, technical and industrial developments, trade practices and any other relevant factors or circumstances, including practices under or related to the said legislation and any relevant international convention to which Canada is a party.

In brief, the commission was set up to bring our commercial legislation into the late fifties or into the sixties. This commission, Mr. Speaker, made a series of separate reports on the various fields which it had studied, the first of which was submitted on August 1, 1957. On page 7 of the report the commissioners comment as follows:

> Copyright seems somewhat more urgent—

I again call to the attention of the house the fact that this statement was made on August 1, 1957.

> Copyright seems somewhat more urgent than patents, trade marks or industrial designs, chiefly because Canada has signed two international conventions but has delayed adherence to those conventions pending, as we understand it, our report on copyright.

The commission, of course, received many representations, discussed the matter with many experts in the field and had great benefit from the report of the Gregory committee in the United Kingdom and the discussions in both houses of the British parliament, together with the new United Kingdom act of 1956. In addition, two members of the commission visited Washington, London, Paris, Berne and the Hague to discuss problems with foreign experts. The obvious course intended to be followed was to establish principles for a new act, to give protection to our citizens and to conform to these international treaties.

In fact, during the almost five years since the report was made, no attempt whatever, so far as the public is aware, has been made to draft a new act which would, in advance, conform to the treaty which we are being asked by resolution to adopt. This treaty has been prepared upon the basis of a markedly different philosophy of copyright from that upon which our domestic legislation is based. It was only, Mr. Speaker, when the other place, in its standing committee on external relations, had before it certain representatives of the minister's department that it became public knowledge that over a period of years there had been a committee set up by the Department of the Secretary of State to study this problem. The committee was composed of Mr. Charles Stein, the former undersecretary of state, Mr. Harris Arbique, general executive assistant, Department of the Secretary of State, and Mr. Michel, commissioner of patents, and they had been discussing the possibility of drafting legislation for a new copyright act. One can only assume that now that the former under secretary of state has been replaced by another appointee, this committee will again get back to studying the legislation so that we can look forward to further amendments or to a whole new domestic act.

It is surely transparently clear, Mr. Speaker, from a reading of the Ilsley report and a perusal of the conduct followed in both the United States and the United Kingdom, that the proper course and the one that was intended that Canada would follow is to clear up our own legislative problems first in this field rather than to compound them by ratifying the treaty first. But what of the problem arising from the so-called United States manufacturing clause? Will, in fact, this problem disappear if we at once ratify the universal copyright convention? I should like to make a rather extensive reference to a very clear statement on the matter contained in a paper written by Marsh Jeanneret, director of the University of Toronto press, and himself a lawyer, as it appears in the September-October 1961 issue of Quill and Quire, pages

2, 3 and 4, and which has been issued as a reprint. Mr. Jeanneret says this in discussing this problem, and its effect on Canada:

We are simply concerned with the mutuality of copyright, or lack of it, between this country and the United States on ordinary books written in English.

Just as an aside, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it is rather a shame when we have a Secretary of State who is a native, French speaking member of the house, that this could not have dealt with French publications as well, but in fact it deals only with English publications.

What is the situation?

The Canadian Copyright Act of 1921 provided that the protection it afforded Canadian citizens was to be extended automatically to citizens of countries that adhered to the Berne convention. The United States was not and is not an adherent to the Berne convention. But the Canadian act went on to provide that the minister might certify that even a country which has not adhered to the Berne convention could be brought under the Canadian copyright blanket if the minister decided that such a country had granted to Canadian citizens the benefit of copyright protection on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens.

The United States copyright act of 1909 had already stated that where a foreign nation extends to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens, United States copyright may be extended "by presidential proclamation" to the works of proprietors who are citizens of such a foreign nation. But the apparent reasonableness of this provision in the American act is shattered by the further conditions normally imposed on such foreign works by section 16 of the American act—usually referred to as the "manufacturing clause." Here is the actual wording of the relevant phrases of the discriminatory legislation:

"—The text of all copies accorded protection ... shall be printed from type set within the limits of the United States, either by hand or by the aid of any kind of typesetting machine, or from plates made within the limits of the United States from type set therein, or, if the text be produced by lithographic process, or photoengraving process, then by a process wholly performed within the limits of the United States, and the printing of the text and binding of the said book shall be performed within the limits of the United States ... provided, however, that said requirements shall not apply to works in raised characters for the use of the blind, or to books or periodicals of foreign origin in a language or languages other than English," etc.

The same section contains provisions for foreign author or copyright owner to procure ad interim copyright protection in the United States by registering his foreign-produced edition within six months; in such cases the U.S. manufacturing provisions need not be complied with for a period of five years, provided that not more than 1,500 copies in all of such a book may be imported into the United States during the period of such ad interim copyright protection. In practice, if more than 1,500 copies are imported into the United States, the holder of the ad interim copyright is called upon to abandon formally his claim to any U.S. copyright protection.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

It is clear from what precedes that the "manufacturing clause" in the United States act distinguishes the latter legislation completely from its Canadian counterpart. Nevertheless, on December 26, 1923, Canada issued a declaration whereby the rights conferred by the Canadian act were to be extended to works of U.S. origin. As a result of this certification, the President of the United States on the next day issued a proclamation extending the benefits of the United States act to citizens of Canada. At first glance this must have appeared as a happy and reasonable reciprocal arrangement. Let it be clearly noted, however, that the extension of the United States act to works of Canadian ciitzens applied only to works manufactured in compliance with the provisions of the manufacturing clause quoted above.

In 1955, the United States ratified the universal copyright convention, from which Canada still stands aloof—notwithstanding the recommendations of the Ilsley commission in favour of Canadian ratification. Among other countries which have long since ratified this new convention is the United Kingdom. By the terms of the universal copyright convention, adherent countries are required to give protection without formality. The United States therefore was obliged to suspend the manufacturing provisions vis-à-vis the works written by the citizens of other convention countries. However, it is of the greatest importance to note that (a) the manufacturing provisions still stand with respect to the works of citizens of countries which are not members of the universal copyright convention; and (b) the same provisions still deprive a United States author of the right to American copyright even if he publishes in another universal copyright convention country but does not observe the American manufacturing requirements. This last point is of real significance to Canada, even if this country does ratify the universal copyright convention.

The problem is not as simple as the minister has suggested. The ratification of the U.C.C. will not relieve from the manufacturing clause.

As Mr. Jeanneret said last fall, this is an action which could not be deferred much longer; but while Canadian authors would be offered some protection if they published first in the United States, American authors who publish first in Canada will be deprived of their rights at home.

In conclusion, the real question is not "how often do American publishers pirate Canadian copyrights" The important question is, "how often are Canadian publishers not commissioned to publish a work of American authorship"? The unreciprocal copyright protection existing today between Canada and the United States masquerades under the so-called reciprocal agreement, referred to earlier. Ratification by Canada of the universal copyright convention will only partially relieve the problem.

It was this, the manufacturing clause which when it came to the notice of the chairman of the royal commission on publications, Mr. O'Leary, led him to include, in his report under section 8, a reference to the advisability of ratifying this convention, although he did not seem to appreciate that ratification would be far from curing all ills complained of.

It was said that two royal commissions have recommended immediate ratification. What did interested members of the public and press think of it? I have already referred to the article "International Copyright Control"—a Canadian viewpoint—wherein the authors recommended ratification. Last year the Canadian authors association presented a brief to the Secretary of State called "The Authors Bill of Rights" which included these remarks:

> We ask for Canada's adherence to the universal copyright convention, an action enabling Canadian authors to receive automatic protection in all 35 countries now members... The Canadian authors association is convinced that this country should enact a new, fully modern copyright law as expeditiously as possible.

The graphic arts industries association, in a brief circulated to all members of parliament dated February 5, 1962, dealing with the royal commission on publications, says in part:

> A second step would be ratification by parliament of the universal copyright convention, which would have the effect, among other things, of partially offsetting the vicious restrictions of the U.S. copyright act, which have severely restricted Canadian book publishing and printing for nearly 40 years.

According to the same brief:

> The printing, publishing and allied trades employ more than 74,000 persons—more than any other manufacturing industry, including more talented and skilled people than any other industry.

Of the public press, Mr. J. B. McGeachy writing in the Financial Post, the late Miss Judith Robinson, in two columns in the Toronto Telegram, and editorials in the Winnipeg Free Press and the Toronto Globe and Mail have indicated support for both ratification of this treaty and amendment to our domestic copyright legislation.

One might ask why then the delay of nearly five years from the time of the Ilsley report. There has been obvious urgency for providing more employment opportunities in Canada, and there is and will be a necessity to provide more and more opportunity for our skilled workers in such fields. There was only one reason expressed by the Ilsley report which would require a policy decision, other of course than preparing and passing new domestic legislation first—which was the whole purpose of the report—and that other reason was that if the U.C.C. were ratified first it would not be possible to make, if thought advisable, as in fact the commission recommended, any change in the term of years through which copyright would exist.

Under our present legislation copyright protection is extended to an author for his lifetime plus 25 years after, with a right for an additional 25 years to his representatives to collect royalities, but not to prevent copying. This is not the term of "life plus 50 years" which has been requested by the authors and to which Canada is already morally bound to adhere by the terms of the Rome convention of the Berne union, when all parties to that convention so enact.

The Ilsley commission recommended commencing the term of copyright at the time of publication of the work, to run for 56 years from the time of publication, or at the author's death. Four reasons were given for this recommendation, one being that it would bring the term more in line with that extended in the United States. The United States term is 28 years from publication plus an additional renewal for 20 years, and thereafter the work passes into the public domain.

The royal commission's recommendation in this regard has been very controversial, as the minister said. Debate is hot and heavy among those interested as to whether the term should be shorter or longer. Perhaps the difference in attitude is shown when one remembers that in the past year, when Verdi's copyright with respect to his works was about to expire the government of Italy gave in to popular pressure and extended the term, perhaps because the proceeds go to a retired musicians' home. Yet when the same problem arose in England with respect to the copyright in Gilbert and Sullivan's operettas, the government refused to extend copyright and let them go into public domain.

The Berne union countries generally have a term of life plus 50 years. It is most interesting to note that just last year the United States register of copyrights made a submission to the house committee on the judiciary of the U.C. congress, dealing with general revision of the United States copyright law, and at page 58, recommended amending the U.S. term to be reasonably close to the usual European term of the author's life plus 50 years, suggesting that there should be a maximum term of 76 years from first public dissemination. Yet Canada, in almost five years, seems incapable of making up her mind as to the length of term which should be adopted, and therefore abandons all those who might hope to see legislation in this field brought in line with that in the rest of the world, and leaves our authors with 25 years after life, with some other limited rights.

Is there still urgency about ratifying this convention? Of course it will be of some assistance in relieving against the United States manufacturing clause. It will allow our authors to sell their books and dispense with registration formalities. But its passage should not be allowed to dispel the urgency of new domestic legislation to meet the needs of the times. And its passage will prevent a needed change in term of copyright.

It may be that even the need for urgency is almost passed. If the government continues to drag its feet to the very end of its term in office, in fact our neighbours to the south may yet solve the problem, as so often this government has left it to them to do. For in the same report of the United States register of copyright, to which I earlier referred, which has been disseminated to all those interested for comment, leading to a bill to be presented to congress, is the following recommendation:

> The copyright office does not believe, in principle, that the rights accorded to authors should be dependant upon the employment of domestic printers. The office therefore recommends that the new law contain no provision requiring the manufacture of works in the United States nor any provision requiring the securing of ad interim copyright. It also believes there should be no provision in the copyright law limiting importation to 1500 copies.

So, in effect, had we waited six months the United States government might have cured the problem on its own.

In any event, we are once again being asked to put the cart before the horse—to give approval to a convention now ratified by some 39 of the 90 signatory countries which signed in 1952 or later. Again we are making a stab at the immediate problem, without dealing with the heart of the matter.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding I should like to mention briefly one other matter. This resolution asks only for approval of protocol 3. It appears to be the opinion of the government, as expressed in the debate in the other place by the government leader, that the other two protocols require legislation. I take it then that the government intends to ratify by means of order in council only, since protocol No. 3 deals only with effective date, and that no legislation is at the moment planned with respect to protocols 1 and 2 which respectively deal with the application of copyright to stateless persons, refugees, and to works first published by the United Nations or its agencies or by the organization of American states. It is greatly to be regretted that the conclusion that must inevitably be drawn from the fact of the announcement in the speech from the throne and the hasty bringing up of this motion on what might be the third, or second, or last day of this parliament is that Canada must await the return to responsibility of a Liberal government which is prepared to deal with this, as with so many other problems, without delay.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Perhaps it is a matter of concern to us all that this resolution should be brought before this house in its last days when time is of the essence. It is a matter of concern that we could not have put things in their right order; we could have cleaned up all the complexities and cleaned up our act of parliament before we went off on this ratification.

None the less, the government is to be congratulated for turning to this matter and doing justice to those who are our authors and artists in this country in the last days of the session. I was interested to hear the hon. lady who represents Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) mention a Canadian authors' bill of rights. In a sense this is very close to being a bill of rights as far as Canadian authors and artists are concerned, because in any democracy a basic freedom is surely the sanctity of property. Throughout the history of democracy in Britain there has been concern about the security of a man's possessions and their defence against authoritarian rule. We have seen in the desultory attitude in the U.S.S.R. and other satellite countries an attitude toward this particular aspect of a man's property which would lead us to believe that they are not very concerned with what we would call political democracy.

Some men's property is in buildings, goods and property of various kinds. Others use their imagination and produce literature, music, poetry and so on. Both kinds of property, whether material or of the imagination require protection. The Ilsley report states in this regard: "Nothing is more certainly a man's property than the fruit of his brain". That, I think, indicates the concern of all of us in this house. This legislation will, we hope, protect and give advantages to our authors and artists with regard to the property which emanates from the mind and imagination of gifted men and women in Canada. The resolution therefore commends itself to us.

Both the minister and the hon. member for Niagara Falls have given long accounts of the stages by which Canada has moved since 1896. I do not wish to repeat what has been said already. We do know that in the interim period this has been hanging fire since 1952 when Canada and 85 other countries signed this convention, 39 of those countries having already ratified the convention. It is remarkable to note in passing that this is another example of the work of the United Nations, particularly of UNESCO. We should not forget these organizations associated with the United Nations which do such good work. This convention was said to be appropriate to all the nations in the world. Canada thus joins a large number of countries which are seeking to protect their authors and artists.

Since 1896, since Canada was a member of the Berne convention, we have seen a number of revisions and we have also had a bilateral agreement with the United States. As both the minister and the hon. member for Niagara Falls have stated, the main problem has been the manufacturing clause in the United States legislation. The Canadian authors association has for many years sought to give arguments and reasons why we must advance in this area, and advance quickly. The royal commission pointed out the problems which were faced by our authors, and the O'Leary commission has now brought us to the point where we are ready to put this through before we leave for our constituencies. The advantages are many. Canada will be in a co-operative affiliation with many other nations. This will protect our authors. We shall be joining in an international agreement which is a progressive and forward-looking agreement which will, we hope, provide an impetus to our own arts and literature.

The immediate problem has been that of our association with our neighbour, the United States. It is always a difficult thing to live beside a giant. Although, in connection with the manufacturing clause we can, in a sense, reciprocate and keep out United States publications, it is obvious that United States facilities for Americans in Canada are not to be compared with the advantages which Canadians can secure in the United States market. The situation has been detrimental to the Canadian publishing and printing industry. A great deal of employment which would have come to Canada has gone by the way for the past number of years.

I hope that other artists will soon be brought under the Canadian legislation. As we know, there have been tremendous changes since the Canadian legislation was put through. I do not want to discuss them tonight because, as the minister said, we are not dealing with the act itself. I think we should express the position of this party, however, and say that we hope to deal with this matter as soon as possible. We in this chamber are concerned with the economic development of Canada but if we are to secure any kind of nationhood we must be equally concerned about artistic development, which is really the basis and the bond of nationhood in this nation of ours.

The royal commission dealt with more than just copyright. It dealt with patents, trade marks and industrial design. These were dealt with in separate reports and, of course, we cannot enter upon that field of discussion now. I will simply say that here nothing has been done in these other areas and it is a matter of great concern in Canada that we should be using legislation which is entirely and completely out of date in these other areas. An example I could give is the Industrial Design and Union Label Act. It is so out of date in its present form as to be completely unworkable. It does not even cover shape in terms of the design of particular articles. It appears that in our concern over securing economic progress we have allowed this problem to go unheeded and surely we have now come to the point when we must take definite action. In this parliament we have seen the sands of time run out and we must now adopt a hodgepodge solution to it. We must take stopgap measures in the hope that the problem will temporarily be dealt with until we return to this chamber once again.

I congratulate the government on taking this initiative and express the hope that the government will soon introduce other legislation that will be of benefit to our authors and artists, with whose problems I trust this chamber will concern itself more in the future.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now resume the business that was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

696. Canadian representation at international conferences—further amount required, $115,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the minister not going to be here?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, he is on his way. I suggest that the hon. member proceed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think we had better wait until the minister is present.

Mr. Churchill: We may as well pass the items now. There was a full discussion before five o'clock, was there not?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I shall place on the record the references to the observations of the minister on the point we were discussing before the debate was interrupted. These are observations made by the minister in this connection in answer to certain questions. These may be found on the following pages of Hansard for the dates cited. The first is to be found at page 2563 of Hansard of April 6, 1962; a statement that was not contested by the minister will be found at page 2335 of Hansard of March 30, 1962; at page 1593, of March 8, 1962; at page 761, of February 12, 1962; at page 2549 of volume 3 for the session of 1960 and at pages 4534-5 of volume 4 for the session of 1960.

These statements in connection with the government's policy on the resumption of tests, with regard to the attitudes taken by the Canadian government in connection therewith and with regard to the question of controls or no controls, speak for themselves. They are to be contrasted with the statement of the government's policy of the minister and with the statement attributed to the Prime Minister on Saturday last from which statement I have already quoted.

Mr. Pearson: Before this vote carries, Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a question about reported arrangements—if that is not too strong a word—or reported negotiations between the United States and the U.S.S.R. which appear to have leaked in Germany and which deal, among other things, with an understanding which is under discussion, at least according to this report, between these two powers to the effect that neither will make available to any third country nuclear weapons or information concerning the manufacture and use of nuclear weapons. The press reports concerning these negotiations which emanated from Bonn and which have all the earmarks of a calculated leak in the Bonn are in very considerable detail. While I do not propose to go into the reports generally, because they deal with arrangements covering Berlin and access to Berlin and questions of that nature which we all hope will be worked out satisfactorily, nevertheless they cover the point that these two powers will refuse to make available nuclear weapons to any third power.

If this report is accurate it of course has a very important bearing on the whole question of the extension of nuclear weapons to a third power. In view of the great publicity given to this report over the week end, could the minister say anything about it?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Chairman. I have no comment to make on that question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether he has any comment to make on the report in today's Globe and Mail in which the Minister of Justice is quoted as having revealed that British Columbia has made new Columbia river proposals that seem to represent a significant modification of the government's previous position. This comment was contained in a statement issued in the minister's home constituency of Kamloops where he was visiting during the week end.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this has nothing to do with the item under consideration.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I understood, Mr. Chairman, that under this item we would have a general discussion such as would normally have taken place under the departmental item, No. 692.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Chairman. I just made an observation. It was understood we would have a general discussion under this item rather than under item No. 692.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this is not an item under which hon. members are entitled to ask any question having to do with external affairs. I suggest the hon. member should adhere to the item under consideration. As a matter of fact I answered this same question this afternoon.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the minister answered it, that is a satisfactory reply, but it certainly is proper in my submission to ask this question. That was the agreement reached the other night.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, General Burns in Geneva on April 12 in his statement to the disarmament conference said among other things:

> We are opposed to all nuclear weapon tests.

He then went on to refer to the proposal put forward by the non-aligned powers there in an effort to break what he referred to as a deadlock. It does seem to be a deadlock. He went on to say when speaking for the Canadian delegation, and I quote from his statement:

> The Canadian delegation has heard with the greatest of interest and sympathy statements made by the eight non-engaged members of this committee. We would like particularly to support the appeal of the representative of Mexico which, if I understand it correctly, was that the nuclear powers should submit again to their governments, with great seriousness, the possibility for some agreement, based on a move in their present positions, which has been submitted to them over the past few weeks, and particularly the last week or so, by the non-engaged states.

General Burns referred to these proposals. His statement has been made public. Can the minister give us any indication what these proposals are to which General Burns has given the agreement of his government?

Mr. Green: From time to time as this subject was up for discussion in the conference, proposals were made by the various non-aligned countries and also, of course, by Canada. I think the Leader of the Opposition can take it that the proposals of the unaligned countries were summed up in the submission which was made today on behalf of the eight.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister give us any indication of what those proposals are? I am thinking particularly of the reports that they have put forward proposals for inspection and control in the hope that their proposals will end this deadlock. The reports I read are to the effect that they are supporting a kind of inspection and control which would be concentrated in what they call neutral hands, perhaps under United Nations auspices and also that this inspection and control—and this is a very important matter—could perhaps—and I may be wrong about this because I am only quoting from a report—be carried on outside of the boundaries of the great powers such as the Soviet union, for instance.

Mr. Green: I dealt with that matter this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. There is one other feature about the proposal and that was that the checking should be done by scientists of the different countries rather than by political bodies in the different countries.

Mr. Pearson: I apologize if the minister dealt with the matter this afternoon when I was not here. But as to this checking by scientists which is suggested in this proposal—and this may be a very imaginative and important proposal—is it to be done by scientists who will not require to be in the territory of a country where an explosion might take place?

Mr. Green: Yes, but there is also the suggestion that there should be a co-ordinating group which could send in scientists to check in order to ascertain whether there had been an atomic blast in a country about which there was a complaint or about which there was any doubt.

Mr. Pearson: Does the minister consider this kind of international inspection and control satisfactory as a possible way out of this deadlock?

Mr. Green: I am not sufficient of a scientist to be able to say that. These proposals will be accepted or otherwise depending, I presume, on the opinions of the scientists of the Soviet union, the United States and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the minister in a position to inform the house whether or not the prospects for a meeting of the heads of government or of the heads of state may take place before the conclusion of the present conference in Geneva, as was envisaged some weeks ago? The minister will recall saying, in answer to a question, that there was a possibility that there would be such a meeting and that it would not be confined to the great powers. Has the situation developed sufficiently to warrant a statement by the minister in that context?

Mr. Green: There has been no suggestion recently that a meeting of the heads of state is imminent.

Item agreed.

697. Grant to defray a portion of the costs of Canadian participation in the first session of the Atlantic convention, $6,000.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask the minister a question with reference to this grant to defray a portion of the costs of Canadian participation in the first session of the Atlantic convention. Would the minister mind explaining to the committee what the Atlantic convention actually did and how the persons who attended it were appointed?

Mr. Green: On October 2 last year approval in principle was given to participation in an international citizens commission on NATO. This idea was originated by Mr. Christian Herter, former secretary of state of the United States. He and Will Clayton, a distinguished democrat, were named by the United States as the two heads to act for the United States in this meeting. Canada after giving full consideration to the plan, and having ascertained that various other members of NATO were participating, sent delegates over to a preparatory commission which met in Paris in December. At the final meeting there were seven Canadians. They were nominated by the government. They were picked from the different parties in Canada. For instance, Mr. Alistair Stewart of Winnipeg was one of those chosen.

Mr. Herridge: He was chosen by the government?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Item agreed to.

698. Contribution towards the furnishing of Marlborough House, London, England, in an amount of £310, notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1962, which is, $915.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was wondering what kind of furniture could be bought for Marlborough House for $915. Perhaps the minister could explain what this is really all about.

Mr. Green: In 1959 the British government indicated their willingness to provide a building in London for commonwealth activities and in particular for the use of bodies concerned with commonwealth consultation on economic affairs. Her Majesty the Queen made Marlborough House available for this purpose. At the fourth meeting of the commonwealth economic consultative council, the Canadian representative proposed that it would be of value as a symbol if each country were given the opportunity to participate in the furnishing of Marlborough House. Subsequenty, each commonwealth country agreed to present six chairs for use in the conference rooms. That is the reason for this vote.

Item agreed to.

Special aid programs—

699. Expenses in connection with Canada's participation in the world refugee year, for the completion of the tuberculous refugee program—further amount required, $64,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister will recall that on January 29, 1962, certain questions were asked of the government with regard to the situation of Tibetan refugees, particularly those who are destitute and who are in the territory outside the jurisdiction of the government of India, particularly in the northern valleys of Nepal. Has any change taken place in the policy of the government toward assisting these unfortunate individuals who apparently are the victims of aggression perpetrated against them and their country.

Mr. Green: This vote has to do only with the tuberculous refugees who were brought in from Europe. That program worked out extremely well. There is no provision for aid to the refugees in Nepal to whom the hon. member for Essex East refers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say whether refugees still are being brought to Canada under this program or whether this vote is just to pay for the completion of a program that has been completed?

Mr. Green: Apparently there are still 10 persons in sanatoria, 131 persons on full subsistence and 48 persons on partial subsistence. In addition to the funds provided for under the Department of External Affairs 1961-62 appropriations, accounts amounting to $40,000 have been paid by the immigration branch from their vote "Transportation and other assistance for immigrants and settlers". The approximate monthly expenditure is running at $12,000.

In order to reimburse the Department of Citizenship and Immigration for the $40,000 expenditure already made and to provide for normal expenditures of $12,000 per month for February and March of this year, a further $64,000 is required; and that, of course, is the vote which is now being considered.

Commencing with the 1962-63 fiscal year and subsequently thereafter, all expenses will be borne by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I take it there are no more new people being admitted to Canada. That is the point I was making.

Mr. Green: That is correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are there none left in the camps?

Mr. Green: I made inquiries about that when I was in Geneva and I think the problem of the refugees in Europe can be considered as largely settled. The tubercular refugee program was one of the finest features which led to the settling of the problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can certainly agree with the minister about that. After all, we started admitting these people at the time of the Hungarian difficulty and that was what encouraged us to feel that rehabilitation was possible. It is one of the few things I really commend this government for continuing that we started.

Mr. Green: The tubercular refugee program was ours completely. You had nothing to do with it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is completely and utterly wrong. There were at least as many tubercular people admitted by the previous government among the Hungarian refugees as have been admitted subsequently under this other program, and if it had not been for that earlier experience I doubt very much that this government would have embarked on this program.

Mr. McGee: I wonder whether the minister can tell us if any other countries followed Canada's lead in this field. As I recall, our contribution to world refugee year was the lead we established in this field. Was our program followed by any other countries? Was it emulated by any other countries?

Mr. Green: Some other countries did take tubercular refugees as well, but I have not got the details this evening.

Mr. Pearson: I know the minister is right when he says this has nothing to do with the Tibetan refugees, but in view of the fact that some of us have been getting some correspondence on this matter as to what Canada may be able to do, and perhaps the minister has too—I have had some from British Columbia—can the minister give us any indication, even though the matter may not come under this item, whether requests have been made to the Canadian government to help these people and if any consideration is being given to the matter?

Mr. Green: One or two suggestions have been received with regard to these unfortunate people but there are many complications involved in trying to help them.

Item agreed to.

700. To reimburse the agricultural stabilization board for skim milk powder donated to international relief agencies, $114,282.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, this is a vote to reimburse the agricultural stabilization board for skim milk powder donated to international relief agencies. Has any consideration been given to using some of our butter surplus for similar purposes? I do not know whether this is feasible or practical but the matter has been raised in correspondence with me on a number of occasions.

Mr. Green: I understand it is not feasible to dispose of butter in this way.

Item agreed to.

701. Assessments for membership in the international (including commonwealth) organizations that are detailed in the estimates, including authority to pay such assessments in the amounts and in the currencies in which they are levied—further amount required in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1962, $471,976.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the minister wish to take advantage of this item to say anything about the organization of American states, about which he spoke so eloquently some time ago but about which we have heard nothing since?

Mr. Green: This vote has to do with the organization for economic co-operation and development in Europe.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thought I would give the minister a chance to talk about other things.

Item agreed to.

704. Assessment for the United Nations Congo ad hoc account for 1961—to extend the purposes of vote 516 of the supplementary estimates, 1961-62, to provide for payment of the assessment for the said account for 1962 and to provide a further amount of $2,493,376 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars; the amount required in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1962, is, $2,612,591.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the minister wish to say anything about the position now with regard to the supplementary fund to take care of the Congo operation? I recognize, of course, that this refers to the normal assessment imposed on members of the United Nations with regard to the United Nations Congo ad hoc account, but the United States congress has now decided to act on the recommendation of the president to provide $100 million by way of credit. Can the minister say what the situation is now with regard to this further assistance to the United Nations to enable it to carry on?

Mr. Green: The latest figures I have with regard to the United Nations bond issue show that a total of $50,215,000 has been subscribed. That is in addition, of course, to United States purchases. So the bond sales are coming along fairly well. If I remember correctly, some offers have been made since April 2, which is about two weeks ago.

Item agreed to.

706. Canada's share of the costs incurred by the United Nations of the Geneva conference on the settlement of the Laotian question, $11,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister say whether or not the Geneva conference is still in session even though there may not actually be any current meetings? Will there be further expenditures which Canada will have to bear in connection with this conference? This would be the appropriate item for the minister to indicate whether or not the objective of establishing a truly neutral government has succeeded. In that connection, what is the position now with regard to the truce commission of which Canada is a member? Is that commission continuing to work toward fulfilling the objectives? Is there in fact a cease-fire, has a truly independent government been established, and when will the work assigned to the commission by the Geneva conference terminate?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the conference at Geneva in effect has finished its work and reached agreement but there remains the job of setting up a government in Laos. As the hon. member knows, there are three different factions in that unfortunate country, one friendly to the west, one friendly to the communists and one which is a so-called neutral. Each of them is headed by a prince. These three princes have met on various occasions in an effort to form a coalition government but so far they have not reached an agreement.

The prince who heads the neutral group is in Europe at the present time. He is the one designated by the west and the east as prime minister. They are all supporting him. But out in the field in Laos it has been impossible to bring about agreement so that the conference in effect is in suspension until the princes agree. Originally Mr. Ronning, our high commissioner to India, headed our delegation and he was assisted by Mr. Bridle our ambassador to Turkey and also by senior officers of the Department of National Defence. At the present time we are keeping a middle grade foreign service officer in Geneva who is responsible for keeping in touch with the other representatives. As soon as agreement on the government is reached in Laos the whole work can be finished.

That is the situation at the present time. The commission in Laos is functioning under Mr. Mayrand who is in charge of the Canadian delegation to the international control commission. They have not been able to move about very much, but I think the very fact they have been in the country has helped reduce the fighting. There has been some skirmishing going on, but no serious fighting. It would appear that both sides are anxious to prevent a general war breaking out, and that is the position at the moment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is a case where the minister's optimism has only been partially justified.

Mr. McMillan: I should like to ask one question. Does this vote, and the other votes that have to do with foreign payments, take into consideration the depreciated value of our dollar? The reason I ask is that I see the previous vote speaks about $300,000 and gives the amount as $315,067. I was wondering if all these votes take into consideration the fact our dollar is depreciated from that of the United States dollar?

Mr. Green: In each case the amount voted is the Canadian equivalent of the moneys required to meet the payments.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, the sum of $138,416,981, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I realize that it is not usual to have a debate at this stage in our proceedings leading up to a supply bill. But the very fact that the rules do provide for a debate in committee of ways and means is conclusive evidence that a debate at this stage is in order and, in the present circumstances, I feel it is required. The purpose of a debate in committee of supply is to maintain the control of the house over the expenditures of the government. The purpose of a debate in committee of ways and means is to maintain the control of the house over the raising of money to meet expenditures of the government which may have been voted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, including this set of further supplementary estimates for 1961-62, with which we have been dealing, the government has asked for $341 million in a single fiscal year as compared with a total of $357 million in further supplementary estimates for the five years ending March 31, 1957. This $341 million is not far short of half the total deficit for the fiscal year that has just ended. Since these estimates were brought before us we were told the government anticipates a deficit in the current year of $745 million which, based on the record of the past, is likely to be an underestimate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we on this side have no assurance of any kind, though we thought we had received such an assurance some days ago, that the house will be given the normal opportunity which falls to the house to debate the conditions of the nation's finances and the disturbing disclosures made in the white paper which has been tabled and which deals with our financial and economic situation. We feel, therefore, in the official opposition that we have a duty to decide whether or not to concur in the committee's request, and before doing that to review the nation's finances and the relationship that these huge expenditures which are now before us and which the government is asking authority to make, bear to the general economic and financial policy of the government, as well as the record of the government in this field. If we had any assurance that before this house adjourns for the Easter recess there would be an opportunity to debate this vitally important matter in the normal way, or even after the Easter recess, we would not have to fall back on this procedure in order to bring this matter to the attention of the house.

If the government had been able to convince us that there were matters on the order paper which were of great importance to the country to have passed at once, naturally we would want to give that request the consideration it deserves, just as we gave such consideration to the government this afternoon when they asked for an alteration in the business of the house so that the copyright resolution, which up until this afternoon had not been put forward as a matter of very great urgency, could be dealt with. We felt, since we had been pressing for this, that this was a matter of importance and should be dealt with before the Easter recess. We do not consider some of the items on the order paper have this measure of urgency attached to them. They are not urgently important, although they may be important in the long run. For instance, there are two matters on the order paper which may be of far reaching, long range importance but which, even if they were passed in this session, could not come into immediate effect. One of these is the redistribution measure and the other is the Senate measure, the bill for which provides that it shall not come into effect immediately.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we feel that the state of the nation's finances is the most urgent problem before us in this house at this time. The upholding of the principle of control of expenditure and taxation is a fundamental right and a fundamental duty of the representatives of the people in parliament, and as this may be the only opportunity that we shall have to discharge that duty and exercise that right, we propose to take advantage of this opportunity.

As I say, if we had been given any indication of the plan of the government in respect of the budget debate, if we had been given any indication up to this Monday of the plans of the government with regard to the business of this parliament during this session it might not have been, and indeed would not have been necessary to adopt this procedure to bring about a debate which we consider to be of very great importance. But that has not been the practice followed by this government.

It would have been open to the government to have told us before now that this house will adjourn this session and that there will not be a session after Easter. In other words, it would have been possible for the government to have indicated, at least in a general way, the length of time this session would take and how much business we could expect to get through during that time, or it would have been possible for the government to have indicated during the last day or two that we will be coming back after Easter and that we will have an opportunity after Easter to deal with the business on the order paper and any additional business the government cares to bring forward.

The government has not followed either of these courses. The Prime Minister has preferred to keep parliament and the country in suspense, to play this cat and mouse game, this monkey-shine as it has been called, right up to the last minute, right up to today. Perhaps it is not of very great importance whether the opposition or indeed government members are kept in suspense in this unprecedented way, but it is of some importance to the country to be kept in suspense in this way. It is of some importance to the business of the country to be kept in suspense in this way and to have these contrived and manufactured election crises brought about and then removed, and then others brought about in their place. It seems to be a game which the Prime Minister delights in playing, perhaps because of some advantage he may think is in it for himself; but it is certainly to the country's disadvantage.

I would say that by this time the country has become heartily sick, as indeed some of the government's own supporters are, at the performance of the Prime Minister and his colleagues in this matter since January 18.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The country is disgusted with the obstructionist tactics of the opposition doing everything to prevent proper debate. The budget would have been debated long ago but for that.

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Finance once again talks about the obstructionist tactics of the opposition. Every day the government puts something new on the order paper and asks us to pass it in a couple of hours—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no.

Mr. Pearson: —without telling us whether we shall have an opportunity to debate these matters after Easter. Just today the government changed its mind and decided that the copyright bill was of the first importance and ought to be considered tonight.

We do not know what may be on the order paper tomorrow. We do not know whether we will be here after Wednesday. We do not know what is going to happen because the government prefers to keep the house and the country in the dark and by doing that, as I said Mr. Chairman, is making the people of the country sick at this monkey-shine.

Mr. Flynn: Has the hon. member not assumed that he will not even get back where he is after the election?

Mr. Pearson: The minister is perfectly right. I will not come back here after the election; I will be coming back over there.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister and the Prime Minister alone can bring this unsettling condition to an end. We were led to believe last week that he was going to do it today, that he was going to get up in the house and make a full statement. We have not heard about it today and it is high time we and the country were told what the plans of the government are, if they have any plans, with regard to the business of this session and the business of this parliament.

In view of the fact that we cannot get information on that, in view of the fact that we are not told we will be given an opportunity to debate the nation's business at this time, we propose to take advantage of this opportunity to do just that.

The Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock I must rise to report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of this house.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the house leader could indicate what next item of business will be dealt with tomorrow, after we have completed the supply bill?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, in order to get through some of the business before the Easter adjournment we will start off with No. 12 on the order paper, the resolution dealing with the electoral boundaries commission, and then the motion in the name of the Minister of Agriculture concerning the international wheat agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is of the utmost importance.

Mr. Churchill: We will then have the second reading of Bill C-79, to amend the Customs Act, and the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with provincial taxes and fees of crown corporations. We will then deal with the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Everything but the budget.

Mr. Churchill: We will then deal with the resolution in the name of the Minister of Transport dealing with the Freight Rates Reduction Act, the second reading of Bill C-86 concerning the British North America Act, and the resolution in the name of the Prime Minister concerning retiring allowances for senators. Tomorrow is a long day but the house could expeditiously get through most of that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister insult the house by suggesting that we are not going to deal with supply, which is our primary business? It is an outrage.

Mr. Churchill: The opposition has spent half this session dealing with supplementary estimates. The appropriation bill could pass in ten seconds, and after we have passed those other items we shall call that for tomorrow. I reserve the right to change the order of business I have announced tonight.

An hon. Member: You do it, anyway.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

TEXT OF STATEMENT DELIVERED BY E. L. M. BURNS AT GENEVA CONFERENCE ON DISARMAMENT IN PLENARY SESSION, APRIL 12, 1962

I should like now to make a few remarks in my capacity as representative of Canada. We feel that we cannot remain silent in this very important meeting today, a meeting in which the statements made have reached a very high level of responsibility. The subject which is being discussed is one which is perhaps crucial to the opinion which the outside world will hold of our activities here and of the chances of success in our major task of obtaining general and complete disarmament.

In the matter of an agreement on the cessation of nuclear tests, we are, as representatives have made clear, somewhat at an eleventh hour, but the Canadian delegation feels that it is not too late, though it is very late. I should like to read into the record once more what the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada said in this regard at our fourth meeting on March 19. He said:

> We are opposed to all nuclear weapon tests. In this we share the view of most other countries. Indeed, the major nuclear powers themselves have stated at this very conference that they would like to see all tests stopped. However, they now find themselves unable to reach final accord owing to disagreement on inspection. Is there, then, no alternative to another series of tests with all the harmful consequences that such action would bring? Is it not possible, within the framework of this committee, to make the further effort which is required to break the deadlock. In my opinion, such an effort must be made, for otherwise the prospects of this conference itself could be seriously threatened.

He concluded by saying:

> In the minds of the public, the impression has been created, because of disagreement in these nuclear test talks, that this conference is going to be a failure. This, I submit, is a very bad situation and one which I hope will be clarified. Countries which do not possess nuclear weapons cannot put a stop to these tests. However, we can and do appeal to the nuclear states to do everything in their power to see that a solution is not further delayed.

The Canadian delegation has heard with the greatest of interest and sympathy statements made by the eight non-engaged members of this committee. We would like particularly to support the appeal of the representative of Mexico which, if I understand it correctly, was that the nuclear powers should submit again to their governments, with great seriousness, the possibility for some agreement, based on a move in their present positions, which has been submitted to them over the past few weeks, and particularly the last week or so, by the non-engaged states. We are very sympathetic to the efforts which these states have made to try to find some ground where views of the two sides could meet.

We were also impressed with what was said by the representative of Nigeria, when he summarized statements made by the Soviet union on the one side and the U.K. on the other side as to the support which they believe their positions have from non-engaged nations. I think he wanted to draw attention to what the non-engaged nations really want, and that is a cessation of tests and a feeling that there should be some effective measure of international control, associated with any agreement.

But, basically, after listening to the speeches this morning, it seems to me that all those nations which are not members of one alliance or another here want an agreement, and that means that there must be a reconsideration of positions.

We heard with interest, the representative of the U.S.S.R. who, as I heard him, said he was ready to think through all suggestions and ponder all possibilities. We heard a similar statement from the U.S.A. representative that these things had been considered and would continue to be considered.

We can see, through developments in this nuclear testing situation, that action creates reaction, and so it goes on. Cannot a stop be put to this? Cannot this thing be stopped somewhere? It seems to us that the representatives of nuclear powers here, in their arguments, are something like men wrestling on the edge of a precipice. Cannot they break loose, stand back, and think of the precipice that lies before them? We do not think, even if nuclear tests take place, that that should end the possibility of general and complete disarmament, but it certainly would have a grave effect on the proceedings of this conference and on the possibility of reaching an early agreement.

I felt it my duty, as representative of Canada, to put these views on record at this meeting.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 17, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRANSPORT

N.B.-P.E.I. CAUSEWAY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have two or three announcements I wish to make today. The first has to do with the Northumberland strait causeway. As the house knows, comprehensive studies were authorized by the government in January, 1958, as to the whole question of the building of this causeway. The government has now decided that a causeway will be built between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Studies to date have involved several government departments, consulting engineers and the national research council. An important part of the work was the construction of a scale model of the area by the national research council. The purpose of the studies undertaken has been to determine whether the project would be feasible from an engineering point of view and justified from an economic point of view. The answer in both cases is in the affirmative. The most economical crossing for road and rail traffic appears to be a combination causeway with navigation locks and a bridge between Jourimain island, New Brunswick, and Borden point, Prince Edward Island. The estimated cost is $105 million.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the house on the eve of the election will have welcomed—

Mr. Hees: Except the Liberal party.

Mr. Pearson: —the announcement of the Prime Minister in regard to the causeway, something that was promised by this government during the last election. It is to be hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of this causeway and other great national undertakings in the future will not have to be paid out of increasing deficits.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that there is an urgent cause for the causeway.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT ON LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DISSOLUTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I come now to another matter of general interest to hon. members. It has to do with the current session of parliament, the program as yet uncompleted, and the viewpoint of the government in this connection. I held the view generally that an election might take place in September and I had in mind September 12, the date fixed for the by-elections some weeks ago. However, any person who has witnessed the delaying tactics—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and the measure of obstruction practised by the official opposition during the present session—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —will recognize, as I think Canadians generally do, that it has become almost impossible to proceed with the business of the house.

Miss LaMarsh: A broken record.

Mr. Hellyer: The Pagliacci of the opera house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I find these interruptions and babblings quite interesting. I am trying to make a completely objective report.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In asking for careful attention perhaps it would be well for me to indicate that this period is not one in which debate normally takes place and that depending on the nature of the statement of the Prime Minister the house, I am sure, would be prepared to accept comment of the same character. I say this so that we shall understand where we are proceeding at this stage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am sure anything I have said up till now will not be debatable. When I look at the summary of the business of the house as of April 17, the 63rd day, I find that 25 days have been utilized on supplementary estimates, 2 days on the main estimates, 8 days on the speech from the throne and 2 days on a supply motion, with only 25 days being utilized for legislation.

I summarize what I was endeavouring to say to my hon. friends opposite before the interruptions by saying that there has been no real effort to deal with parliament's essential business. We have had it on the order paper, but there has been only a pretence of dealing with it. Therefore, the only course open for the government is for me, as first minister, to go to His Excellency the Governor General, request an early dissolution—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and invite the people to choose a new House of Commons.

Parliament will be asked, however, before we terminate to deal with the following measures; first, the resolution on redistribution, so that the bill may be brought before the house. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, on April 10, stated in effect that the measure to set up a redistribution commission, under all the circumstances, should be left over to the next parliament. It was, of course, not possible to bring it in earlier because if the commission had been set up it would not have been able to operate for the reason that the census is not yet complete.

The second measure that will come before the house today, I hope, is the ratification of the international wheat agreement. The third will be the Customs Act, and the fourth the appropriation bill. Then finally tomorrow, in the event that we proceed to complete the items in question, an application will be made for interim supply for a period of five months. If these matters are completed by tomorrow afternoon then the house, in the regular way, may adjourn, and later in the week I shall see the Governor General. We had also hoped to be able to come back to a consideration of the budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but the Leader of the Opposition will have every opportunity to deliver the speech he would have delivered when we come to consideration of the appropriation bill. The opposition frequently suggested an election, but at all times said that a proper accounting beforehand should be given, and that accounting has now been given.

There is one measure dealing with the other place which I had hoped to have passed, but it would take a very considerable period of time in the House of Commons and also in the other place. This issue, naturally, can be one of those that will be dealt with by the people during the course of the coming election. It is obvious that if we tried to complete the legislative program we would have months ahead, and I think it has generally been agreed by hon. members that the people expect an early election.

There is one matter to which I should like to make reference and that has to do with a problem with which I have not dealt on previous occasions, namely divorce. I realize there are strong feelings on this subject, but I would hope that those who have expended their money in order to get their bills before the house, those bills having been passed by the other place following examination, might well expect that their measures would be brought before this house and passed. Therefore, sir, without going into any details or becoming in any way provocative, tomorrow night, or if it becomes necessary on Thursday, this house will, as I said a moment ago, be adjourned.

So far as sitting Thursday is concerned, I find that while the hon. member for Laurier asked me the other day if I realized that it was a holy day, I find that I think it was 1953, when the hon. member was a member of the government of prime minister St. Laurent, the house did sit on the Thursday before Good Friday.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall recommend to His Excellency the dissolution of this house and the holding of the election on June 18.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): We on this side, Mr. Speaker, are delighted that the Prime Minister at long last has put an end to the contrived uncertainty surrounding the date of the election. We are delighted that the Prime Minister has once again changed his mind and has moved the date forward from September 12 to June 18.

The Prime Minister has given as the reason for this the obstruction that the government has encountered from the opposition in the discharge of its duties. The Prime Minister, in effect, has said that it was impossible for a government with 207 members in this house to get through its legislative program unless the opposition gave up the exercise of its cherished rights—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of obstruction.

Mr. Pearson: —in carrying out its duties. The Prime Minister, being a student of both history and music, will recall the words of the queen in Gilbert and Sullivan's "Iolanthe", speaking about a prime minister of that time in the nineteenth century. The queen, speaking through music, had this to say:

> Every bill and every measure
> That may gratify his pleasure,
> Though your fury it arouses,
> Shall be passed by both your houses.

The Prime Minister and his colleagues, however, were not sufficiently strong to prevent us from doing our duty in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Deliberate obstruction.

Mr. Pearson: The Prime Minister has now agreed, and we are delighted to get the announcement, that the election should be held at the earliest possible date. The country will be glad to get this announcement; not perhaps as glad as the official opposition, but it is high time this announcement were made. The country will in due course declare its verdict on the record of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party are extremely glad that the Prime Minister has at last terminated the state of uncertainty that has existed in this house and in the country for some months. We are also confident that this announcement will be welcomed by the Canadian people. As the leader of a party in this house—

An hon. Member: Acting leader.

Mr. Herridge: —which has an unblemished record—

Mr. Drysdale: You have not done anything.

Mr. Herridge: —we look forward to the verdict of the Canadian people on election day.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Fortin (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the house leader. Would the house leader make sure that a few seats, possibly four or five, are reserved to the left of the Speaker so that just in case a few Liberal members are returned after the next election they may be assured of space in this house?

Mr. Hellyer: Such arrogance.

UNITED NATIONS

ELECTION OF CANADA TO COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Canada was today elected to the commission on human rights, one of the functional commissions of the economic and social council of the United Nations. The commission, which was established early in 1946, now consists of 21 members elected by the council for a period of three years. Canada will begin its term on January 1, 1963.

Inquiries of the Ministry

This is the first time Canada has been elected to the commission on human rights. It is a source of satisfaction not only to the government but, I am sure, to all Canadians that Canada will now have the opportunity to participate directly in this important international endeavour to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all mankind, such as we have promoted within our own country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTING—REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT KENNEDY ON CANADIAN POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he cares to comment on a press report of a statement made in Washington this morning by President Kennedy, in which he expressed gratification with a statement made by the Prime Minister of Canada opposing an indefinite, unpoliced moratorium on nuclear testing.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister never at any time took such a stand.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister's stand is the stand taken by this government throughout. We are opposed to nuclear testing—

Mr. Peters: This is Tuesday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —but in so far as what is going on in Geneva is concerned, where they are gathered for the purpose of endeavouring to end this situation for all time by agreement, that is a matter quite aside from our general stand. We believe that any agreement between the U.S.S.R. and the west, any agreement effective with regard to the world, would only be effective and assured of being carried out provided there were reasonable means of verification.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. What steps does he propose to take to clear up this misunderstanding in the mind of President Kennedy?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure there is no misunderstanding in so far as the President is concerned. As far as the opposition is concerned, I have tried for four years to clear up misunderstandings, without success. I cannot furnish intelligence.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT ARCHAEOLOGICAL RESEARCH BE CARRIED ON IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I am sorry that apparently he had short notice of the question. In view of the importance of carrying out archaeological research in Canada, and in view of the many fruitful fields at present unexplored, would the minister assure the house that the senior archaeologist of the national museum, Dr. R. S. MacNeish, will be asked to carry out his research in Canada instead of going to Mexico and other countries at public expense for exploration and visits?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I understand that Dr. MacNeish is on leave of absence. He is engaged in archaeological research, endeavouring to get information on the origins of agriculture on this continent. I am sure the hon. member will agree that in matters of fundamental research scientists are no respecters of international boundaries.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister aware of the large sums of money spent by the United States government on research into the history of agriculture in Mexico?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Not one of the more urgent questions.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

SELECTION OF SHIPYARDS TO CARRY OUT CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Smith (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the government selected the shipyards in which the new general purpose frigates will be built; and if so, what are these shipyards? If not, has the government decided on the method by which the shipyards will be selected?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, the shipyards have not been selected. As I indicated a few days ago, the first of these ships will not be laid down until next year, and in consequence it will be some time before shipyards for this building program can possibly be designated. As I stated at the same time, on April 12, I believe, the Canadian maritime commission is charged with recommending where naval ships should be built, and the responsibility of awarding contracts for their construction rests with the Department of Defence Production. All shipyards in Canada capable of building ships of this class will be given the opportunity to bid on contract specifications to be issued by the Department of Defence Production.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—RAILWAY CHANGE FROM NARROW GAUGE TO STANDARD GAUGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he expects to be in a position tomorrow to announce the beginning of the transformation of the railway in Newfoundland from narrow gauge to standard gauge, which he promised on his visit to Newfoundland five years ago.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has become a kind of Christopher Columbus recently and has gone out attempting to ascertain what promises we had made. When he got his answer he discontinued his search, because he found we carried out our promises.

With respect to the narrow gauge railway in Newfoundland, that matter, I said, would receive consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Is the Prime Minister aware that there are only four seats in Prince Edward Island and seven in Newfoundland?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is the finest revelation of Liberal mentality I have ever heard.

Mr. Hees: Any other questions?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is cold blooded Liberal expediency.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I have several more.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

WELLAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO ABOLITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the government come to any decision as to the abolition of tolls on the Welland canal?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter is still under study.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HOCKEY—REQUEST FOR TELEVISION COVERAGE OF ALLAN CUP GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Since the Olympics of Montreal will represent eastern Canada against the western champions for the Allan cup, is the minister in a position to say whether these games, which are of national interest, will be televised in the east?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there are so many games being played around this place at the moment that I have not had time to concentrate on deciding in my own mind which is the most important. However, I shall give the matter due consideration and will consult with the corporation. In due time, if the hon. member still has more than an academic interest in the matter, I shall bring forward the answer.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—REQUEST FOR SATELLITE FACILITIES AT JOLIETTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport.

Does the minister intend to deal with the petition submitted to him by the city of Joliette and the junior chamber of commerce in the same city, to the effect that a satellite airport of the international airport of Montreal be built in Joliette?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my department is now making a full examination of the possibility of building a satellite airport for the airport at Dorval. Considering the proximity of the Joliette area and also the determination shown by its distinguished representative, I want to assure the hon. member that Joliette will be considered when this question is studied.

Mr. Pigeon: Thank you.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SERVICE TO SHERBROOKE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could the minister tell the house whether it is his intention, following the desire recently expressed to him by his worship the mayor of Sherbrooke, to invite Trans-Canada Air Lines authorities to inaugurate an air service at the Sherbrooke municipal airport within the next few weeks, which would give several members opposite the opportunity to make a last and quick political trip in my area before June 18?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, following the representations of my hon. friend from Sherbrooke and of the mayor of that city, I got in touch with Trans-Canada Air Lines authorities and asked them to conduct, as quickly as possible, a full inquiry as to the economic feasibility of an air service in Sherbrooke. I also asked officials of the air transport board to conduct a full economic inquiry into this project within the shortest possible time. I should receive the results of these two inquiries any day now.

TRADE

MILAN—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN FAIR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question is based on a report in the Times of London of April 13 to the effect that 80 nations are taking part in the Milan trade fair, which is considered the largest Italian trade fair. Could the minister inform the house whether Canada is going to be represented and, if so, could he tell us what principal Canadian exhibits will be shown?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that is a proper question for the order paper.

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he expects to be able to announce during this session of parliament the signing of the uranium agreement with the United Kingdom?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have every hope that the negotiations are drawing to a close. We hope to reach a conclusion very soon.

Inquiries of the Ministry

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

RESEARCH INTO NON-NUCLEAR USES OF URANIUM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the Leader of the Opposition asked whether I could confirm a statement reported to have been made the other day in Elliot Lake by the chief of research for my department, Dr. John Convey, to the effect that in two years the department's research into non-nuclear uses of uranium could approach a state at which sufficient uranium could be needed to keep all mines at Elliot Lake in production.

My answer is as follows. On April 5, 1962 Dr. John Convey, director of the mines branch, was guest speaker at the annual banquet of the chamber of commerce in Elliot Lake, at which time he discussed the research work of the mines branch in the development of non-nuclear uses of uranium. As my hon. friend possibly knows, this research program began in 1959 in co-operation with the Eldorado Mining and Refining Company Limited. During the past year, 1961, the Canadian uranium producing companies have contributed toward the support of the program.

In reporting on the results of this experimental work on the use of uranium as an alloying element in ferrous materials, Dr. Convey mentioned that several of the fields of study had shown promising possible uses. He suggested that the program should be more vigorously pursued by both government and industry. Such a vigorously pursued co-ordinated program, he intimated, might possibly provide results within two years which could prove of real assistance to the Canadian uranium industry. From there to state that sufficient uranium could be needed within two years "to keep all mines at Elliot Lake in production" is pure speculation; and I am informed that no such specific statement was made by Dr. Convey.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he can inform the house what steps are being taken to get in touch with the steel companies to encourage them to use this process in the manufacture of steel by hardening through uranium, to which the hon. gentleman referred.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Speaker, I could not describe in detail this program which has been going on for two years. However, I may say we have received full co-operation from the industry. As I said earlier, the results of the research program to date have been highly encouraging, although we cannot draw any definite conclusions as yet.

[Mr. Hees.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO RECRUITING PROGRAM FOR ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise the house whether there is any particular reason why the army and navy have been unable to recruit the additional men authorized last fall, and whether he expects they will be able to come up to their new limits soon?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, both the army and navy have been recruiting men at the rate at which they anticipated getting them. The recruiting has been going very well indeed. The navy has had a definite quota of men. The maximum they would take in any monthly period has been met.

The army, as I said, has been recruiting men at about the rate they expected to recruit them. They have recruited sufficient men, as a matter of fact, to overtax the training depots.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PATRONAGE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State stemming from a report in today's Globe and Mail to the effect that the head of the civil service commission, Hon. S. H. S. Hughes, Q.C., is reported to have expressed the view that the reform movement in patronage may have gone too far. My question is, could the Secretary of State indicate whether the government has also revised its views on patronage along the same line?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article to which the hon. gentleman referred. I shall examine it and endeavour to bring in an answer tomorrow.

FISHERIES

SEALING—ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN HUNTERS ON EAST COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, but in his absence may I direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Is the parliamentary secretary now in a position to answer the question which I put to him on April 10, to be found in Hansard at page 2663, about the complaint that helicopters have been used in the theft of seal pelts from Canadian sealing ships?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): We are still waiting for a full formal report on this matter. For information purposes, however, I might say that the 3,000 pelts seized at Souris, P.E.I. by the R.C.M.P. are being kept in cold storage under expert care.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State? Can the minister tell the house whether the investigation by the R.C.M.P. into the activities of his executive assistant and the electoral officer for Bellechasse has been completed? If so, could he report to the house on the result of same?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon I asked the chief electoral officer whether he had received any report, and he replied that he had not, as yet. Should he get that report today my good friend will be informed and I shall consequently make a statement in the house.

(Text):

Mr. Denis: May I address a question to the Postmaster General?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Sherbrooke.

CHARGE FOR USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT BY MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Transport whether his department has made any charge for the use of government aircraft by the Prime Minister or other ministers of the crown when attending political meetings?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a similar question was put on the order paper, and at the time my parliamentary secretary asked in the house that this question be made an order for return. As soon as the return is ready we will table it.

Mr. Hellyer: Stalling until after the election.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister facilitate that return so it may be available while this parliament is still alive?

Mr. Balcer: I am doing my very best.

BRIDGES

JACQUES CARTIER AND VICTORIA BRIDGES, MONTREAL—ABOLITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question. Can he tell the house whether he expects soon to announce the exact date when tolls will be abolished on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges?

An hon. Member: June 17.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, our discussions with the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal are still going on and providing the federal government's proposals are accepted, tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges will be abolished next June 1.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

MANUFACTURE OF LIFT TRUCKS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I might ask the Minister of National Revenue whether it would be possible for him to facilitate the return to a question which was made an order for return on March 5, having to do with power lift trucks?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I will check on that matter and advise the house tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be desirable if the minister could do so before tomorrow.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

REPORTED USE OF STAFF TO SEND OUT CAMPAIGN LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works. Has his attention been drawn to the rumours which are being circulated very widely, and which have resulted in many phone calls coming to me, indicating that the staff of the trans-Canada highway branch are being employed in sending out campaign literature and not on public work?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The only helpful contribution I have ever received from the hon. member for Ottawa West was the retailing of rumours. Unless he can come up with something better than rumours I do not intend to investigate.

Mr. McIlraith: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister check into the matter and ascertain whether these employees who are being paid out of public funds are spending their time on public work or on election campaign work?

Mr. Walker: If the hon. member can produce any proof with regard to these rumours, I should be very happy to do so. My office is always open for such information.

SOULANGES CANAL— INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFER TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell us if he has received a reply from the Quebec minister of game and fisheries concerning the Soulanges canal?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I have received no reply yet.

Mr. Ricard: They are in no hurry.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DOIG RIVER, B.C.—REPORTED CLOSING OF SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I might ask whoever is Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether there is yet available an answer to the question I put on Thursday of last week about the Doig river Indians.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to have this matter looked into.

Mr. Pickersgill: And have an answer for tomorrow?

Mr. Hees: We are always ready to do our best.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 10, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Diefenbaker—Mr. Martineau in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the establishment of an electoral boundaries commission for the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons; to provide that certain members of the commission may be paid such per diem allowance as may be fixed by the governor in council; to provide for the payment of reasonable travelling and living expenses for the members of the commission; and to provide also that the commission may engage the services of such technical advisers and other staff, including a person to act as secretary to the commission, as it deems necessary.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman; there are a few more observations that I should like to make about this resolution. I realize that anything I may say now is very much of an anticlimax after the announcements made on the orders of the day, but perhaps those hon. members who are not interested in listening to the proceedings of the house might find some other way to occupy their time; because we are dealing with a pretty serious matter.

The Chairman: I would ask all hon. members to listen very attentively to the remarks that are made.

Mr. Pickersgill: While you are very flattering, Mr. Chairman, in suggesting that all hon. members should listen attentively, I would not ask that at all. All I ask is that I be allowed to make myself heard by those who want to hear.

In the course of the statement the Prime Minister made announcing the forthcoming general election, he did participate in this debate and made an observation about this measure which I simply do not think can be allowed to go unchallenged. He made the statement that this commission could not be set up until the census was completed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not be operative.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not be operative. In my view that statement is not a correct view of the situation if this commission is to do its work seriously; because long before it can possibly hope to start redrawing the boundaries on the basis of the latest census returns, it will have a tremendous amount of preparatory work to do. As I indicated the other afternoon, I think it was, the second time this matter was before the committee, when Mr. Harris explored the subject with the chief electoral officer in 1950 and 1951 the conclusion he reached, and I remember this very well, was that one to two years' work by the commission would be required before it could possibly begin to delimit the boundaries. When Senator Power was in this chamber he spoke on this subject in 1947, and gave the same kind of indication as to the length of time that would be required for the preliminary work in connection with this matter.

It is perfectly obvious that this would be the case to anyone who looks at the map of Canada, to anyone who considers for a moment the disparity in geographical circumstances, the disparity in population between one part of Canada and another, the natural features that bound the provinces and, particularly in the case of the first redistribution to be done by such a commission, the historical background of the whole matter; because I cannot conceive that any commission could ever bring in a report that would be acceptable to this house unless some account was taken of the historical background. Mr. Power, as he then was, gave a similar indication in this house as recorded on page 700 of Hansard for February 21, 1947. I am only going to give one or two brief quotations because I do not want to take a lot of time:

> —I would think, without having inquired into the matter from anyone, that parliament would be loathe to give to any commission or any committee the right simply to bring in an electoral map for the whole of Canada which would have to be accepted willy-nilly by the members of the house. I do not believe that any democratic house would so abandon its rights and privileges as to allow itself to become only a rubber stamp for any commission.
> Given that, I fear that the report of a commission would take a considerable time in its preparation and a considerable number of years before it would be adopted. We had all these things in mind, and we had one other thing in mind.

He was talking about some studies he had made before the second world war.

> We believe that there would be time enough before another election to unscramble and level off any difficulties. That was the position in 1940. The election took place in March, 1940, and it was proposed to introduce a redistribution bill in May, 1940.

I draw that to the attention of the right hon. gentleman. Mr. Power, who had made a very great study of this matter, suggested that it had been the intention to introduce a bill in May, 1940, which is precisely parallel to what I suggested the other evening; that if this matter was to be proceeded with in a proper and orderly fashion it should have been introduced in 1960 in order to provide adequate time, so that when the census returns did become available the months and months of preparatory work would have been done and the commission could then start immediately upon the actual work of delimiting the boundaries.

We know that the Prime Minister is not naive, especially about these matters, but I am sure no one in this house is so naive as to think that one can appoint a commission on Tuesday and expect it to start drawing these boundaries on Thursday. Even to suggest such a thing is quite ridiculous. The people who will be appointed to this commission, with the possible exception of the chief electoral officer, are unlikely to be people who have had any previous experience. I believe there are only three people in the country who have had any experience in this field, and they are the three members of the commission in the province of Manitoba. Unless those three people were to be appointed, the members, however great their other capacities, would be people who would be quite inexperienced and who would have a very big task to undertake before they came to the final job of drawing boundaries.

That is why I say again, as I said the other day, that if the government had any really serious intention of making this reform and making it effective at an early date after the census of 1961, the legislation would have been brought forward long before this. But having been brought forward at the time and in the circumstances it has been, I am glad that the government has abandoned the idea of attempting to rush it through at the very end of a parliament. I agree that it is a good idea to see the bill, because we will then see what is envisaged by the government. Those who are particularly interested outside the house, as well as the 260-odd members of the house, who I am sure will be very greatly interested, will have an opportunity of studying it; and in another parliament, in an atmosphere which may be calmer and less "obstructive," especially if it is done early in the new parliament as it will be done if there is the change of government we all anticipate, it should be possible to deal with the matter in an atmosphere as conducive to objective study as is ever reasonably likely to be achieved in a parliament in which partisan activity is the essence of the life of parliament. I have never made the slightest apology for being partisan. If I were not, I would not be in parliament.

I come now to the other point that I think needs to be emphasized once more. It is that the members of this commission, if it is to be satisfactory to us on this side of the house, must be named in the bill, and when substitutions are made those substitutions must be made by parliament. We on this side of the house are not content to trust any prime minister or any government, of our own party or any other, to make these appointments by order in council. Even if the wisest of appointments were made they would be open to imputation; and, the power being in a statute, no one can say what a future government might do in substituting one for another. Therefore I say what should be done is that all the members and, if necessary, alternates should be named in the legislation itself by this parliament and not by order in council.

I think that is a most important point, because however pure the motives might be, however good the appointments might be, politics being what it is I am sure the imputation would be made that these appointments were being made from a partisan point of view. If they are made by parliament, any member of parliament could get up and object by moving that such appointment should be struck out. Then at least, there would be a debate about it and these matters would be aired in the open.

This brings up another matter for consideration. This commission is going to be charged with the task of determining these boundaries about which after every redistribution in the past there have been charges of partisanship, favouritism, gerrymandering, and so on, whether or not they have been deserved. I cannot believe that these charges will not be made in connection with any report made by any commission. There will be suggestions, no matter who the commissioners are, human nature being what it is. I would hope such charges would not be made from the front benches or in the house, but they will be made. I have not the slightest doubt about this; therefore I question the wisdom of having the commission composed of judges. It might be desirable to have a judge preside over the commission, but to have a commission composed exclusively of judges would be to drag judges into politics. We would run that risk. I am sure there would be a tendency, in the heat of party conflict, for such charges to be made, whether or not the charges were fair. I would hope that other persons with independent and objective minds and in other occupations would be chosen, as for example in Manitoba, where the president of the university was one of the commissioners. We must beware lest we bring the courts into politics in this endeavour to do something which, in itself, is very worthy.

With these observations, sir, I have relatively little more to say about the measure at this stage except to express regret that in this case, as in nearly every other case in the past four years, it has seemed to be impossible for the government to address itself to the business of the country at the time it should have been done. The more one looks back over the record of these past five years, the more one is struck with the fact that it has been progress from one blunder to another. This is not a major blunder but is more an omission than a blunder.

I was struck the other day, sir, by the extraordinary parallel between the situation in the last five years and the situation in the two years preceding the election of 1896. I ran across a reference in Sir Joseph Pope's diary to those days which confirmed the parallel, and which I am sure it would be unfair of me not to share with hon. members.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is one of relevancy. I am sure we are all fascinated by the hon. member's anecdotes, but there are others who would like to say a few words on this measure as well as other measures that might come before us. Perhaps the hon. member might be reminded that he is away out of order at this point.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order, which I am sure Your Honour—

Mr. Diefenbaker: We would not want to deprive the house of this gem found by the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister is quite right in describing this as a gem; that was exactly my reaction to it when I found it. This paragraph describes the advent on the political scene of Mr. Mackenzie Bowell, one of the great Conservative prime ministers of this country and one of this Prime Minister's predecessors. There are only two sentences I wish to quote, sir, so the hon. member for York-Scarborough will soon be in a position to start obstructing, to use a word I would not use but a word the Prime Minister uses in describing speeches in the house by members who are not on the treasury benches.

Sir Joseph Pope was, I believe, assistant clerk of the privy council at this particular time and describes those days. This was after Senator Mackenzie Bowell, as he then was, became prime minister of Canada. A lot of people do not realize that in those days senators could aspire to be prime minister and not to sudden and unexpected retirement. Senator Bowell became prime minister, and Sir Joseph Pope describes what happened in these words:

> Then followed days which I never recall without a blush, days of weak and incompetent administration by a cabinet presided over by a man whose sudden and unlooked for elevation had visibly turned his head, a ministry without unity or cohesion of any kind, a prey to internal dissensions until they became a spectacle to the world, to angels and to men.

This, sir, was before the pilgrimage to Quebec at the end of 1961.

> At one period during the summer of 1895, I remember it was almost impossible to get public business transacted at Ottawa.

How like 1961.

> The session sat late. As soon as parliament rose, the ministers scattered.

History seems to repeat itself. The description in this paragraph seems to epitomize this progress from blunder to blunder which has characterized the past five years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to answer several points raised by the hon. gentleman. The first was that this commission should have been appointed a long time ago because, in his opinion, it would take a year or two before it would be sufficiently cognizant of the history of Canada and of redistribution to enable it to commence the actual work. He also stated on an earlier occasion that it would take two years before this commission could bring in a report. Whether this commission was set up or not, it would still take approximately two years' work in order to bring about redistribution. As the hon. gentleman knows, under the law our redistribution cannot start until the census has been completed.

The second point that he made was in connection with appointments. He wants a completely unbiased commission. He wants the commission named in the statute, and he does not want more than one judge on this commission. Well, if one judge would be proper for the commission, then his argument that several judges would be improper fails, because one judge would be regarded similarly as improper if there were any suggestion raised of a political nature in connection with the commission.

Indeed, I cannot believe it would be possible to bring about a more independent commission in order to ensure that the kind of gerrymandering which took place twice during the administration of the previous government will no longer be tolerated in this country.

When the hon. gentleman speaks of the traditions of parliament, of how parliament should operate and what consideration should be given to members, it is of great interest to recall that Mr. Power stated it was the intention of the then Liberal government to set up some kind of independent body in May, 1940. That brings to mind the cavalier treatment accorded parliament in the last days of January, 1940, when Mr. Mackenzie King, in pursuance of his promise that there would be another session of parliament, called parliament together. The speech from the throne was read by his Excellency the Governor General. There was a bit of debate in the house for an hour or so, and then Mr. King made a pilgrimage, not to Quebec but to Rideau Hall. The same day members commenced work was the day they left here without any opportunity to deal with the affairs of the nation.

That is something which should be recalled. At that time the hon. gentleman occupied a position of some responsibility.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was a third secretary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I recall that when the hon. gentleman was appointed to the cabinet, Mr. St. Laurent said of him that in his position as clerk of the privy council "he has not been able to assist me in many of the things I would like to be assisted in, to the degree I would like". That is my interpretation of his words. Therefore he appointed him a minister so that he would be able to carry on and do all the things he said he would like to do. I shall not go into particulars because I know there are things the hon. gentleman would not want me to refer to at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no objection.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He also said he was going to keep judges out of politics. I wonder when he developed such a solicitude for the bench. I recall the days of the appointment of the chief justice of Canada to the Hong Kong commission. I recall very well some of the debates that took place at that time, debates of a very political and partisan kind. The government of Mackenzie King appointed the chief justice of Canada, and apparently the views of the hon. gentleman did not receive any more attention then than they are receiving today.

I shall not enter into any discussion regarding obstructions. We have dealt with that already, but I was interested in the hon. gentleman's reference to Mackenzie Bowell. That matter, of course, is known to all of us, and the quotation is not something that has not been heard before.

I simply rest my case by saying that the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs promised over and over again when in opposition that a non-political body would be set up to look after redistribution but, as conveniently as it was possible, the members of that party forgot their undertaking whenever they were in office. We gave this undertaking, and we do not endeavour to secure the support of the people of Canada on the basis of principles that were accepted as appropriate in the past. We have given leadership and have given hope to the country of a scientific redistribution that will not deny the maintenance of the principles of the past, so far as population and the like are concerned, but which will ensure that a map for electoral representation shall be created based on fairness and justice.

I do not think there is anything more I need add. The hon. gentleman has said that when the bill is forthcoming an examination can be made of it. That is so, but I can say to him that the names of those to be appointed do not appear in the bill. I know of no example in history where such a practice has ever been followed. However, we intend to disclose who the appointees will be. We intend to place their names before this house, and our present purpose is to see to it that four of them will be superior court judges and one the electoral commissioner. We hope that one of the judges will be a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. Another will be a chief justice of a province, a man who in years past participated in public affairs. Another member will also be a chief justice who has participated in public affairs, and two others will be chief justices who have not participated in either parliament or legislature. We want to ensure that when their work is done no one will be able to say that there has been domination in any way. Indeed, so far as the appointment of the judges is concerned, some of them will be judges who were appointed by the previous government and some will be judges who were appointed by this government. When men go on the bench they forget their partisanship, no matter how strongly they may have contended during the days they represented their areas in parliament or legislature.

We are trying to assure that there will be fairness, responsibility and justice. That is the purpose of this measure, and I hope the house will accept it so that the bill may be seen. Then after the bill has received consideration and after suggestions have been made by interested people across Canada, I am sure changes will be made in keeping with the representations that may be made.

It has been very difficult to draw this bill. We have not had any experience in the past of anything like it. It has been difficult to apply the principles followed in the United Kingdom and Australia, but what we have tried to do, as in all our administration, has been what is honest and fair.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the Prime Minister a question. From what he has just said, is it his intention when the bill comes forward to announce the names of the appointees and then leave them on the hook during the long election period?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a rather novel way of putting it, but if hon. gentlemen feel that under the circumstances the names should not be made available now, and that is the general feeling of the house, then I certainly do not want anybody left on the hook.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Habel: Although I did not have any intention to take part in this debate—

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The Chairman: I wonder if the hon. member for York-Scarborough would give way. The previous speaker was a government speaker.

Mr. McGee: Certainly.

Mr. Habel: The Prime Minister referred to the dissolution in 1940 and, although I had not intended to take part in this debate, I believe the whole story should be told. I understand that in 1940 dissolution took place not long after the reading of the speech from the throne by the Governor General. Hon. members will remember that just a few days previously a motion of censure was passed in the Ontario legislature condemning the government of the day for its war efforts. In fact, at the same time there was a committee of 200 campaigning from one end of the country to another and stating that we needed a national government to carry on the war effort. The very night before the prime minister dissolved parliament—

Mr. Nowlan: Which government were you supporting?

Mr. Habel: Wait just a minute and I will tell you. Just be patient and you will learn something you may not know yet.

Mr. McIlraith: He made it very clear.

Mr. Habel: In fact, the night before dissolution of the house the premier of Ontario, who at the time was Hon. Mr. Drew, went to Hamilton—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Habel: I should say the leader of the opposition in the Ontario house, who was at the time Mr. Drew, went to Hamilton and made a daring speech challenging the federal government to call an election on this issue. The prime minister of the day, Mr. King, accepted the challenge. On that motion of censure, for the information of the Minister of National Revenue, I must say that I was one of the 10 who voted against it, and I am proud of it.

This is to explain to the committee that in fact there was a very good reason for the then prime minister having a swift dissolution of parliament, and in fact he did call an election. Members of the actual government got their answer in March, 1940, when the Liberal government was returned with a very substantial majority.

Mr. Pallett: That will happen this time, too.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make my remarks on this subject as brief as possible. It seems extraordinary to me that I should rise in this house, representing the number of people I do, and be accused in advance by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate of some form of obstruction. The fact of the matter is that this country is about to make a selection between two parties and examine the relative records of those two parties in a number of matters. When the matter of redistribution and the record of this government and the previous government are examined, the record of the previous government being one of bungling and political jiggery-pokery and the record of this government being progressive action and promises kept in this field, there is no doubt what the decision will be as far as this particular matter is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, the sole point I wish to make at this stage in the discussion of this resolution has to do with matters which have been raised by hon. members, to their credit in a very non-partisan way, and with the relationship between urban and rural representation. There have been cases put before this house, notably one by the hon. member for Port Arthur, who nearly had us all in tears describing the difficulties which he encountered in making and keeping contact with his constituency, involving as it does a large geographical area. The problem confronted by the rural constituencies generally has been placed before this house.

I have sympathy and consideration for the dilemma of these hon. members, but I would direct these remarks to the members of this commission and suggest that before they become too sympathetic about the remote areas and the rural constituencies they should give consideration to the people who consistently have been most abused as a result of redistribution in any form whatsoever. I have reference to the suburban dweller, particularly in the last decade and particularly surrounding the larger cities in this country. A quick look at the population figures produced a short time ago shows clearly that the growth in the perimeter of these cities has been spectacular. It was something that should have been considered and anticipated by the Liberal government which took responsibility for the redistribution bill that they placed before this house.

I suggest to the committee that the problem of the suburban voter in this country was callously ignored by that government. The fact of the matter is that as at the present time, at the time of the previous redistribution there were figures, zoning plans and anticipated areas of development which everybody else concerned with the problems of dealing with people had taken cognizance of in terms of industrial development and in terms of the various service industries in this country. Plans had been laid out at that time to expand into the shopping centre type of operation, and the major companies in this country dealing in retail merchandising had purchased land and made plans to move into these areas, when in fact at that moment of time the population had not developed as it did later on.

I suggest, again, that ignoring these clear and unmistakable signs at that time and bringing in the kind of bill which they did dealing with redistribution was a flagrant abuse of the democratic processes in this country. I suggest that the commission should address itself to the problem and recognize the fact that there has been and will continue to be a movement from the urban areas into the major cities in this country, and when they are setting up a population base in the perimeter ridings consideration should be given to the obvious areas of growth and expansion and not, as they did in York-Scarborough in 1950, add bits and pieces to that constituency, obviously designed for the political advantage of the Liberal party and coming up with a figure of 72,000, I think it was, for one of the largest constituencies in this country with potentially the largest and greatest expansion area. The suburban voter, I repeat, in every redistribution through the last 25 or 30 years has been penalized and has lost the effectiveness of his vote and representation in this house.

I submit again that this is the major problem and consideration which the commission should bear in mind in designating the boundaries in future. It is manifestly unfair by any standard or criterion one may attempt to apply to expect a single member in this House of Commons to perform, or attempt to perform, the job of representing, in the case of York-Scarborough, some 267,000 people as at last June. If the annual increase carries on in the way in which it has developed in the past five years, with a consistent increase of 20,000 people a year, the number of persons in the constituency of York-Scarborough will be closer to 280,000. This is unfair.

I suggested some years ago in my maiden speech, and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will remember giving me an assist at that time, that the constituency of York-Scarborough was not adequately represented in this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree.

Mr. McGee: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has just said, "Hear, hear" with another meaning in mind than the one I intended. The fact of the matter is that we have to find some practical, long term method of removing this kind of disparity or preventing it developing in the future. I urge the commission and the commissioners to address themselves to this problem, and I wish them well with one of the most important tasks undertaken by any commission in the history of parliamentary government in this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few very brief observations to make about the remarks of the Prime Minister. I do not wish to introduce any new subject. I regret that the Prime Minister's other duties have prevented him from being here to hear my observations. First on the question of judges, I think the Prime Minister and the committee will find when they examine my words that I said I had my doubts about the wisdom of appointing judges. I did not say judges should not be appointed, but I have the completest doubt about the wisdom of having judges appointed by order in council. If the names of the judges are in the bill, if it is debated here and agreed to on both sides of the house, that is one thing; then nobody has any complaint.

But if the government is given a blank cheque that is something else, even if it states which judges it is going to appoint in the first instance, judges are not immortal and governments are not immortal either, as this one is soon going to find. We do not know who the next appointments will be. This statute will not be just for one time only; it will be a permanent thing.

Whatever government brings forward the bill that is passed—and I do not think it will be this government—and whoever the members are, be they judges or anyone else, I hope they will be specified. Possibly it will be necessary to specify one or two alternates. However, they should be appointed by parliament and replaced only by parliament, because this is not the government's business but the business of parliament.

In the past it has been complained that the government used its majority to influence these things. It would be far worse to let the government do this without even the support of its majority. It may well be that some of the appointments will have to be judges, and I do not rule that out. If we could find other independent and objective persons about whom there would be agreement, I say that would be preferable. I do not go beyond that. I feel that a real search should be made to see whether we need to take the risks with the courts; and there are many risks involved. The Prime Minister himself indicated that when he referred to Chief Justice Duff and the Hong Kong inquiry. I was rather surprised that the Prime Minister should have referred to that, because a bitter and partisan attack was made on Chief Justice Duff by the Prime Minister's erstwhile leader, Mr. Drew, in my opinion a totally unjustified attack. We wish to avoid the occasion for that kind of thing happening to judges as much as possible. In fact I thought the Prime Minister gave the strongest support to my contention in that very example he cited.

The Prime Minister wished to contrast his record in this matter with that of the Liberal party. It is quite true that it was a part of the program of Mr. Mackenzie King at one time to establish a commission such as this, and he did not do it. I admit that at once. It was also a promise made by the right hon. gentleman in Carman, Manitoba, in May 1957, and he is now going into his third election not having done it. He has no more kept his promise than Mr. King kept his. Both of them introduced legislation which was not passed; that is all that happened. In other words, the right hon. gentleman is going to try to use this promise for a third election, because until the statute is there it is only a promise; and should the Prime Minister be returned—and we say he will not be—if his performance in another parliament is at the snail's pace it was in this one, this may be used for a fourth election.

As a matter of fact the Prime Minister made a number of promises about changes in parliament. He promised to call a dominion-provincial conference to discuss Senate reform. Five years have passed and nothing has been done about that conference; it has not even been suggested. He promised legislation to reduce the length of election campaigns. We never heard about that once the promise was made and the election was over. I have in my hand a list of all the promises. He also promised to make the Senate more independent of the government. How does he propose to do that? By removing Liberals so he can appoint Tories. But he has not even done that. He has not carried out any of these promises; they are still promises.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I did not introduce this question of promises; it was the Prime Minister who did. I said nothing about them until the right hon. gentleman brought up the subject.

Mr. Pallett: He referred to only one.

Mr. Pickersgill: He referred to something in Mr. Mackenzie King's program. I am just pointing out that there are at least five or six promises—indeed there are seven promises—which the Prime Minister made with respect to parliamentary reform not one of which has yet been carried out, and we are told that tomorrow is to be the last day of this parliament. In this one narrow field alone, the field of parliamentary reform, that is the record of promises kept. As I say, I do not think that is strictly germane to the point, but since the Prime Minister chose to introduce the subject it seemed to me it should be replied to.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment for one moment on the remarks made by my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He has talked about the third election in which the Prime Minister has made promises which, in the contention of the hon. member, have not been carried out despite the fact that this is the third election. When was the first election? The first election was when the right hon. gentleman was leader of the opposition.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not dealt with the promises he made then.

Mr. Nowlan: I know that the government of which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was a member was weak, impotent, doubtful, shuffling, ineffective, vague and all the other adjectives which could be applied; but be that as it may, surely it could not be expected that the then leader of the opposition, now Prime Minister, could have implemented legislation, so the fact of the first election has nothing to do with implementing his promise.

How many months intervened between the first and second elections? I remind the committee that we were in a minority position all the way through. Does anyone suggest that in that minority position we should have brought in legislation establishing an electoral boundaries commission? That disposes of the second election.

The third election, as the Prime Minister said this afternoon, is in the very near offing; I think he said it would be some time within the next few weeks.

Mr. Pickersgill: He said June 18.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the Minister of National Revenue not know the date of the next election?

Mr. Nowlan: Well, there have been so many prophecies made by other people—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister announced it.

Mr. Hellyer: Has the Prime Minister not told the cabinet yet?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely the Prime Minister takes the Minister of National Revenue into his confidence.

Mr. Nowlan: Shuffling Paul has become so exhausted that he now sits at the rear of the chamber and interrupts from his seat instead of rising to his feet.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Having returned to my place and standing on my feet let me say to my amiable hon. friend surely he knows that the Prime Minister has already decided on the election date. Surely the Prime Minister discussed that with all his cabinet colleagues before he came into parliament.

Mr. Nowlan: Again my hon. friend in his usual rude way is speaking out of order and without any justification whatever; but that is neither here nor there.

Something has been said about the fact that this bill is being introduced too late. My friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate admitted that a measure of this kind was in a program of his leader Mr. Mackenzie King at one time. Of course that right hon. gentleman had so many programs at one time and another I am not sure which was what. In 1951 I believe Mr. St. Laurent was prime minister. Let us suppose that he had brought in a redistribution bill at that time, following the decennial census. Let us suppose that parliament had enacted it and it had become the law of the land. What would be the situation today? The commissioners who might have been named in the bill or appointed by the government of the day at the time of the census would not have been able to start operations because the census returns would not yet have come down. It is all right for my hon. friend to talk about preliminary measures and preparatory steps. Surely these are taken. As my hon. friend knows very well, the electoral officer has maps for every constituency in Canada; but they can be of little practical use until such time as the census returns are in and the commission has been set up. I say again that if this legislation had been passed ten years ago and was on the statute books, and a redistribution commission had been appointed following the decennial census of 1951, the commission would not be in any better position to carry out redistribution than will be the commission that is to be created under this legislation.

Due to the exigencies of the occasion it may be that this commission will not be appointed and will not be able to start operations in the immediate future; that depends upon parliament and the time that is left to parliament to consider the various matters with which we are confronted. But whatever the time may be, and whatever the exigencies of the present moment may be, it is idle to say that this measure should have been brought in last year or the year before, or to say that one parliament has gone by or two have gone by without action having been taken.

I do not wish to trespass on the time of the committee. I suggest we have spent considerable time discussing this matter. I think this is now a sort of shadow-boxing affair. I believe that every hon. member who has participated in this debate, including the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Port Arthur, has spoken in favour of the principle. All we have in the resolution before us is a principle approving the establishment of a commission. I suggest we defer further debate on the matter. There is a delightful degree of unanimity among us concerning the establishment of a commission. That being the case, let us see the terms of the bill.

I will tell my hon. friend this immediately, as I think the Prime Minister did. There are no persons named in the bill. There are persons designated, such as the chief electoral officer. Speaking of making—and I do not think I need to refresh my memory on this; my hon. friend can correct me if I am wrong —I doubt whether the act which sets up the office of chief electoral officer, the chief officer of this parliament, names Mr. Nelson Castonguay as the chief electoral officer. I should like to know when we have had an act which named officials or designated their names. We do not propose to name the commissioners in this act. I am perhaps violating the rules in saying this. Unnamed but designated is the chief electoral officer, who is to be one of the commissioners because of his experience as an officer of the House of Commons.

So I would say again that, if we did name them, as time intervened what happens, even if we named alternatives? That would be rather a loose way of dealing with a situation such as this. I think it is much better to have the government of the day come forward and say that if enacted it proposes to name Mr. A, Mr. B, Mr. C, Mr. D, and Mr. E, that these are the gentlemen they propose to name and to have parliament then act, rather than to incorporate their names in a bill and then possibly having delays, possibly with the bill being delayed in passing or, possibly, death, illness or sickness intervening in the meantime. Then what do you do? Do you have the matter stultified? Do you go on with a minority commission? You could name three or four commissioners and then as the result of a motor accident they might be killed overnight and the whole thing comes to a stop and you have to start all over again.

These are all possibilities. When the bill is before the house or before the committee I think you will find there may be points to criticize it in; there may be legitimate matters of criticism. However, I suggest that the time has come when the committee should approve the resolution in order that the bill may be introduced, so that it may be read by hon. members of the house, and consideration may be given thereafter.

Mr. McIlraith: There is one brief remark I should like to make arising out of the remarks of the Minister of National Revenue. The point at issue and the suggestion being made was that the persons to be appointed to this commission be appointed by parliament as opposed to cabinet appointment or government appointment. In his references to the chief electoral officer the minister indicated that the name was not given in the act. I believe that to be the case. However, his argument fails from that point on. As I understand it the chief electoral officer is not appointed by order in council. He is appointed by a resolution of this House of Commons. In other words it is perfectly clear that he is appointed by parliament and is an officer of parliament. The argument made earlier in this debate was that appointment to this commission should come from parliament as opposed to being a cabinet appointment, and not that the surname and the first name of the individual should necessarily be included in the act. I think that is the distinction. I am sure the minister would not wish the matter to be left without clarification.

Mr. Nowlan: I agree with the hon. gentleman and I would make this suggestion to him; I think he will agree with me. In general let us suppose, as the Prime Minister said, the bill receives second reading and when it is in committee stage following reading, the government says "We are going to name A, B, C, D, and E to be members". I will go further. If in moving second reading the government announces it is going to name A, B, C, D, E and F, then if parliament, having heard the names not incorporated in the bill but having been announced to parliament by the Prime Minister, subsequently proceeds to enact the legislation, then certainly parliament is passing the legislation knowing the names of the commissioners and actually as well as tacitly approving of the persons who are to be named to the commission. If by some accident or some intervention changes must be made in the personnel afterward, as a result of accident, death or illness, then you certainly have more flexibility by dealing with it in that way than by naming them specifically in the bill.

Mr. McIlraith: At the resolution stage we are dealing with the question of whether the government should have permission to present the legislation. I think the point is being made that they should only have permission to introduce the legislation on the premise that the appointment of the personnel remains with parliament as opposed to being transferred to the cabinet. I think that is the point. I do not wish to pursue the subject further, but I thought it should be clarified.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to say just one word, as I think the hon. member for Port Arthur is being unduly modest. Every year the hon. member for Port Arthur gave the Prime Minister an opportunity to carry out his promise. After all, this parliament has gone on for four years. If the Prime Minister had been genuinely anxious to establish this commission and not merely to use it as another promise for a third election, this legislation would have been introduced in plenty of time to be passed and not at the last moment when it was sure not to be passed. That is why I say this promise has not been kept. The mere introduction of legislation and the making of excuses are not keeping promises.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fisher: I am going to accept the argument of the Minister of National Revenue and allow this resolution to move on. However, I wish to say that there has been a great deal of hogwash in this debate, including a bit from the Prime Minister. For the benefit of anyone who reads Hansard I should just like to put on record the statement that at the next stage of the legislation I hope to take up some of these points that seem to me to be rather nonsensical.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Nowlan (for the Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-87, respecting the establishment of an electoral boundaries commission for the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Next parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

TRADE

APPROVAL OF INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

International Wheat Agreement

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the international wheat agreement to be opened for signature at Washington, D.C., on April 19, 1962, and that this house do approve the same.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on March 12 the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill), acting on my behalf, announced to the house the successful conclusion of negotiations in Geneva for a new international wheat agreement. The new agreement is to be opened for signature in Washington from April 19 to May 15. The other house has already approved this resolution, and if this house also approves the agreement the Canadian ambassador to the United States, Mr. Heeney, will be signing the agreement on behalf of Canada and will formally deposit Canada's instrument of acceptance in accordance with the terms of the agreement.

There are only a few points that perhaps I should make at this time. The first is that the agreement has the support of the heads of all the producer organizations in western Canada who, as members of the advisory committee to the Canadian wheat board, were part of the Canadian delegation to the wheat conference. I think it would be appropriate for me to list once again the names of these producer advisers: Mr. A. W. Runciman, president, United Grain Growers Limited, Winnipeg; Mr. J. S. Stevens, director, United Grain Growers Limited, Winnipeg; Mr. G. W. Gibbings, president, Saskatchewan wheat pool, Regina; Mr. A. P. Gleave, president, Saskatchewan farmer's union, Saskatoon; Mr. Gordon L. Harrold, chairman, Alberta wheat pool, Calgary; Mr. W. J. Parker, president, Manitoba wheat pool, Winnipeg.

I should like to say that from the Canadian point of view the 1962 agreement represents an improvement over the 1959 agreement by reason of the higher price range, the maximum being $2.02½ to a minimum of $1.62½ compared with $1.90 and $1.50 respectively in U.S. currency per bushel. Another reason for considering it an improvement is the heavier obligations of the importing countries and the improved safeguards for commercial marketings. In addition, there is the prospect that the U.S.S.R. will ratify the agreement and widen the membership to cover all important exporting countries.

Perhaps I might emphasize here the significance of the current discount on the Canadian dollar as far as producer wheat prices are concerned. In Canadian currency the new maximum and minimum prices will be almost $2.14 and $1.71½.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution will go through expeditiously so that we can be one of the first countries to affix its signature in Washington to this very important agreement.

International Wheat Agreement

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I think the house will bear with me if at the outset of my remarks I express pleasure at the minister being able to pilot this resolution through the house. I believe it is the first major item of house business that he has undertaken since his illness, and I think I express the feeling of all here when I wish him a continued rapid recovery and good health.

The minister has expressed the hope that the resolution will not take an undue length of time in view of the government's wish that Canada should be one of the first countries to accede to the agreement. I for one think that is a very proper request because of the tremendous interest Canada has in this agreement. It is most appropriate that we should do so, and for my part I do not propose to take any considerable time in dealing with this matter. However, I must say quite frankly that if it had not been for the interesting announcement of the Prime Minister earlier today on motions, in which he made it perfectly clear that we are on the eve of the dissolution of parliament, I should have liked to ask that this agreement go before one of the standing committees or a special committee of the house for examination.

There is a tremendous amount of information about the agreement itself and with respect to developments since the four previous agreements were signed, the changes throughout the intervening years and the prospects for the future in the world wheat trade that should be made available to and examined by a committee of the house. However, I will put hon. members at their ease at once by saying that in the light of the Prime Minister's announcement earlier today about the imminence of dissolution I have no intention of making such a request now. Notwithstanding the fact that the house will have approved of this agreement, I do express the hope that in another year it will be possible to have the agreement examined, perhaps when the report of the board of grain commissioners is under study. It has been suggested to me that I should give such an undertaking. I would be quite happy to do so but it might be that some hon. members on the other side would not want to accept such an undertaking. In any event, I think this is a subject that deserves study by a committee.

The bringing of an ever larger proportion of the international trade in wheat under this agreement has been a most interesting development since the first agreement was entered into in 1949. Under each of the five agreements since then the percentage of wheat traded under the agreement has increased. I have no means of verifying the estimate I have been given, but I have been informed there is a good expectation that 85 per cent of all wheat traded will come under this agreement, whereas under the agreement now current the figure is 65 per cent.

There have been some other interesting developments as each agreement has been succeeded by a fresh one. In 1959 quite a change was made, in that machinery was set up to provide for an annual review of the trading in wheat. These annual reviews have been of great benefit and have provided the kind of information that has improved conditions in the international wheat trade. They have, indeed, provided the kind of current background information that in my view is necessary if the objectives of the agreement are to be carried out.

In listening to the speech of the minister I noticed that he did not put the objectives on Hansard. I should like to take a moment to do so. They are contained in article 1, which reads as follows:

> The objectives of this agreement are:
>
> (a) To assure supplies of wheat and wheat flour to importing countries and markets for wheat and wheat flour to exporting countries at equitable and stable prices;
> (b) To promote the expansion of the international trade in wheat and wheat flour and to secure the freest possible flow of this trade in the interests of both exporting and importing countries, and thus contribute to the development of countries, the economies of which depend on commercial sales of wheat;
>
> (c) To overcome the serious hardship caused to producers and consumers by burdensome surpluses and critical shortages of wheat;
>
> (d) To encourage the use and consumption of wheat and wheat flour generally, and in particular in developing countries, so as to improve health and nutrition in those countries and thus to assist in their development; and
> (e) In general to further international co-operation in connection with world wheat problems, recognizing the relationship of the trade in wheat to the economic stability of markets for other agricultural products.

Those are objectives that I think will commend themselves to the house. Indeed, I think I should say that as nearly as I can find out, all producer and farm organizations in this country concerned with wheat production have indicated their approval in the main of this agreement, and that is the general atmosphere in which we are considering this matter today. The information being built up by the wheat council is of a continuing nature, and the distribution of it is being made to an ever increasing number of participating countries. When you look at the list of participating countries you can readily see the extent of the interest in this matter throughout the world. As a matter of fact, an indication of the importance of this subject is the fact that it is one of the few areas in which there is every indication the U.S.S.R. will be participating in the ordinary way, as it now does in the postal field but in very few other fields today. This is of some significance.

It is regrettable that since this wheat meeting took place under the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations that communist China is not a participant in the discussion. The magnitude of the recent sales to that country indicates that it is quite a factor in international wheat trading. It is regrettable that the circumstances are such that they have not participated in the discussions on this subject. Perhaps it is idle to foretell what the future holds in this case, but if that volume of wheat was included under the agreement it would make a very material change and would mean the wheat agreement would be more nearly all-embracing than anyone thought possible at the time the first agreement was entered into.

There are other minor improvements in the articles of the agreement. Perhaps it is not germane to deal with them here. Perhaps they are of a nature which would enable us to deal more properly with them in committee. Since they are not controversial so far as I am concerned, there is no need to develop the discussion of them at this point. There is one part of the agreement that I should perhaps mention. Article 3 deals with commercial purchases and special transactions, and provides a better definition, greater clarity in defining what is a commercial purchase and in delineating between commercial purchases and special transactions. This is a very useful thing and it is fortunate that so much agreement has been achieved on this point because for a period, particularly under the current agreement, there was great concern over special transactions of one kind or another, sometimes referred to as surplus disposal programs, particularly by one of the major exporting nations of the world. These programs were upsetting the possibility of getting any stability in this international wheat trade. The improvement in article 3 will, I think, help to remove this fear, and the provisions of the agreement give the wheat council a degree of control on this point that can only be helpful in solving the whole problem.

Since we are in accord generally that this agreement should be signed by this country, Mr. Speaker, and since the smaller points are not controversial but are of a nature that could be dealt with better in a committee, and since this is not practical in view of the Prime Minister's indication of imminent dissolution, the appropriate thing to do is to indicate our concurrence in the resolution and not pursue the matter further at this stage.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to join with the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) in wishing good health —I was going to say good luck to the minister but I do not know that he may need it —to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton). Any agreement about wheat has to be of some interest to any member from Port Arthur, since it is very easy to make the claim, which is a truthful one, that there is more wheat in the constituency of Port Arthur for most of the year than in any other place in Canada. This statement is certainly true at the moment because the elevators are coming close to the full position as we wait for the opening of the shipping season.

It is of interest to note, in connection with the agreement before us, that I just happened to be looking at the Searle Grain Company bulletin the other day. This bulletin notes that the agreement has been variously hailed in Canada on the one hand as a necessary and desirable measure to ensure equitable and stable wheat prices to both exporters and importers and, on the other, as more or less a meaningless pact, so much window dressing. Our party, with its roots for so many years in western Canada, has always put to the fore the idea that anything that will improve and increase the price and orderly marketing of wheat is of importance. As I look at the agreement, and at the comments that have been made about it, it is certainly questionable just how effective this agreement will be, just as it is questionable how effective the last one was. Since it is an attempt in the international field to obtain recognition of the fact there must be orderly marketing and some kind of stable pricing mechanism, maximum and minimum prices, to afford some kind of security to the farmers of the world, we think it is an excellent move, and without any great contradictions or criticisms or suggestions we intend to support it.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PROCEDURAL CHANGES AND EXTENSION OF TIME FOR APPEALS

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-79, to amend the Customs Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister not going to give us a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. Nowlan: I gave an explanation of this bill when it was introduced for first reading. There is very little more I can say at this time in addition to what I said on that occasion. This bill deals with various sections of the Customs Act in so far as procedure is concerned. It extends the time for various steps to be taken under the Customs Act, and I believe that the individual matters dealt with in each section would be easier to deal with when we are in committee than when we are in the house.

All I can say about the general principle of the bill is that it is a relieving measure. In every case it increases the time given to importers for taking certain steps which are necessary under the Customs Act, and this has been requested in briefs submitted to the government over the past several years by various associations such as the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Bar Association and others. We have adopted certain of these proposals and are asking that the times mentioned in individual sections of the present act be extended to the times set forth in the bill.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I think I am justified in saying that the Minister of National Revenue is in a most conciliatory humour this afternoon.

Mr. Nowlan: Surely he is always?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not know as I would agree on that point. In any event, perhaps it is due to the announcement made earlier this afternoon by the Prime Minister and, if it is, then it is all to the good. I might add that the announcement was most welcome to me. I hope the minister's conciliatory mood is contagious and will influence his hon. colleague on his immediate right at the moment.

Mr. Nowlan: He is influencing me.

Mr. McIlraith: I would say at once to that, heaven forbid. Dealing with the bill, it is not my intention to develop an argument at length on the second reading. There are some particular questions I wish to ask the minister about different clauses in it and about different representations that have been made, and I can properly do that on committee stage. This is simply an amending bill changing the periods of time stipulated in certain sections of the act within which either importers or the departments may do certain things.

It is very difficult to discuss a question of principle on a bill of this kind because basically it is not a matter of principle that is involved. Rather, it is basically a matter of administrative practice. The principle has already been dealt with, that there should be certain rights of appeal and so on, and certain rights to refund overpayments and that sort of thing. Therefore the principle is not really in issue, but I believe it is fair to say with regard to these extensions of time and the changes in the periods of time allotted, that there has been a great deal of friction between importers and the departmental staff. Indeed, if it is fair to use the term, I would say there has probably been more friction and more difference of opinion on that than on any other matter contained in the act. I believe I am justified in going that far.

As I recall it, this matter was debated very strenuously some six or seven years ago.

Mr. Nowlan: 1955.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, and I recall in that debate the Minister of National Revenue was his amiable self but some of his colleagues, who have since been promoted to ministerial rank, were anything but amiable. Indeed, on reading the debates it would seem they went to extraordinary lengths in attacking the government of the day for what it was seeking to do. The government was seeking to improve the act as it then stood, and to improve it in the same general direction as the minister is now seeking to improve it. However I must say those debates were anything but helpful and I hope any remarks I make on second reading or on committee stage may prove to be more helpful than they were. The remarks made at that time were certainly notable for their severity but were not so notable for their real appreciation of the problems and how they should be handled.

During the few minutes at my disposal today I was able to turn up some of the representations made by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in 1959, and I shall read a paragraph from them to indicate the nature of the problem. It reads:

> It will be noted particularly that the time allowed an importer in which to apply for refund of duty overpaid under an erroneous construction of the law has been reduced to sixty days from three years previous to 1951, and from two years between 1951 and 1955. Sixty days is considered to be entirely inadequate for companies whose business is conducted on a national scale and whose customs transactions are reviewed at head office. Moreover, if through an error in interpreting the very complex customs tariff law, or from lack of knowledge of a departmental ruling or a tariff board finding, an importer overpays duty, it would seem only equitable that he should be allowed a reasonable length of time in which to recover the amount overpaid.
> The association believes that this period should not be less than six months.

I take it that the bill before us provides 90 days, one half the time they requested. Their representation continues:

> There is another serious objection to the provisions contained in the new Section 43. This is that only dominion customs appraisers can make a redetermination of tariff classification or a reappraisal of value.

There are many instances in which the port appraiser can adequately deal with refund claims due to errors in rates of duty or valuation. Therefore, the necessity of referring all such cases to a dominion customs appraiser is not apparent, particularly in view of the fact that all refund claims are subject to departmental scrutiny before payment is finally authorized. Referring every such case to a dominion customs appraiser no matter how simple the problem involved or how small the amount of refund claimed, must result in a tremendous volume of unnecessary paperwork and in delays in the payment of refund claims. Of no less importance is the fact that much of the time of dominion customs appraisers is now spent in the review of refund claims which should never have been submitted in the first place.

I put that on record to indicate the nature of the problem, and perhaps I do not need to develop the subject further because we can take each clause and deal with the point raised in it, in committee. The minister may reply that the former government made similar changes in the time allowed to apply for a refund of overpayment, but the proposal here that the time limit should only be limited number of days has to be examined in the light of the fact that these matters are dealt with all over the country at customs ports, but the claims for refunds have finally to come to the head office for decision. From the point of view of an importer, that presents all kinds of administrative problems and works hardship on him.

I should like the minister at the earliest possible stage in committee to indicate why, in the light of the claim of the manufacturers' association that the period of time for the refund should be six months, he arrived at the period of 90 days in which a refund could be claimed, and similarly with other points in the other clauses of the bill.

As I say, I do not propose to deal with this at length. I think I have made the point that is concerning me. At least I hope I have made it reasonably clear so that it can be adequately dealt with later. There are perhaps a good many other things about the submissions which have been made from time to time. I happen to have the 1959 one readily available. I assume there are later ones and there may indeed be changes in them; I simply have not checked that point through. If I have not been up to date in referring to the representations, I wish the minister would correct that in his closing remarks.

There is one other matter, and perhaps this is the place where I can appropriately raise it. I have always felt that the customs head office here was probably as inadequately housed as any of the working departments, bearing in mind the nature of the business it has to do and the fact that these various officials, customs appraisers and others having to do with value for duty purposes, and so on, have to interview clients or importers about very technical matters on occasion which, if disclosed to competitors, would be of real significance. The accommodation has not been adequate. I am aware of some improvements in it, but I still feel that bearing in mind they are the ones who have to conduct this type of interview about information that is of real significance to a competitor, they should be much more adequately housed for their tasks.

I hope this point will be borne in mind by succeeding governments and that adequate provision will be made in this regard. In wartime it simply was not possible to set aside money for the development of this kind of public works, but I would hope that now succeeding governments would see to it that there is adequate provision so these customs appraisers and other officials of the department having to do with the administration of this bill could have accommodation more suitable to their task. I should imagine the minister would agree with me on that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. It is my duty to inform the house that if the minister chooses to speak now he will close the debate. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: We all hope the minister will speak.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): All these matters come under the clauses of the bill. I do not know how long the house would like me to deal with them. I can deal in committee with them under the clauses.

All I want to say at this stage is that I appreciate the objective manner in which the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) has discussed this matter. I quite agree with him that our accommodation has been very crowded, but I think there has been a substantial improvement therein. As he says, when businessmen from across Canada come to consult appraisers they do not want to be sitting almost in the veritable laps of their competitors who are discussing the matter with the adjoining customs appraiser at the next desk. We have tried, and succeeded to a substantial extent, I think, to ameliorate this problem. I will be prepared to deal with matters of time when we deal with the clauses of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Customs Act

On clause 1—Finality of classification or appraisal.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister could now deal with the questions I asked.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I think I would agree that clause 1 is the most important clause in the bill. It deals with appeal procedures and, as the hon. member for Ottawa West said a moment ago when we were in debate on second reading, the present section was introduced in 1955. There had been a two year period from 1951 to 1955. In 1951 the preceding government reduced the period to two years, and in 1955 they changed the section entirely and brought in the 60 day procedure. That bill caused a great deal of discussion among importers. I would not argue either side of the case, but the fact is that the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue, so I am told, took great exception to the provision in the preceding bill which was in effect up until 1955. It was provided that an importer could revive a claim and ask for a refund on goods which he had imported four or five years before. I think the popular term was that there were conventional gravediggers who would undertake an appeal to the fullest extent allowed and would go back through the records of scores and scores of claims involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the treasury was involved in terrific drains.

Then the new procedure was provided for and 60 days was established. Importers raised rather emphatic protests and asked that the time be extended. It is true that they asked for six months, but my officials think that with modern methods of communication, telecommunication, air mail and so on, 60 days would cover the great majority of cases and is probably as long a period, speaking comparatively, as a few months would have been 10 years ago. Having reviewed this matter with my officials, we felt that a satisfactory compromise would be in extending the time as we are proposing in the bill and that would meet any reasonable requirement. That is why we are amending the bill to this extent.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I think I should point out to the Minister of National Revenue that the reason he has given for the reduction in the period of time is the same reason as was given by his predecessor in office. His colleague, now the hon. member for Greenwood, in answer to that went on to say:

> I suggest that the minister has given very inadequate reasons. In the first place I repudiate the idea that this section is being passed in order to prevent sharp practice, or something almost worse than sharp practice, on the part of certain businessmen. That seemed to be the argument.

And so the hon. member goes on. I could take a great deal of time of the committee in pointing out similar remarks by others of the minister's present colleagues on this point. Perhaps I am not at the moment permitted to do so because of the hour; but it would at least be entertaining. I am afraid I cannot say much more; at least, to be truthful I cannot say much more for them. They did not seem to have any real appreciation of dealing with the problem.

Mr. Nowlan: I have been told that by my officials.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I am in the hands of the committee. I wonder what the attitude would be if a few more minutes were permitted.

Mr. Pickersgill: I really believe that the business today is of a very important character. We will not be long.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed with the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

GREYMAC MORTGAGE CORPORATION

The house in committee on Bill No. S-18, to incorporate Greymac Mortgage Corporation—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, through you I wish to pose a question to the sponsor of the bill. In my file I have two bills numbered S-18 both entitled "an act to incorporate Greymac Mortgage Corporation" but one bearing the legend "read a first time Tuesday, March 20, 1962" and the other bearing the legend "as passed by the Senate, March 28, 1962". I have read hurriedly through them and can see no difference. Can the sponsor advise which bill we are considering, whether there is a difference and of what it consists?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, this is the first time this has been drawn to my attention. I presume the bill before Your Honour is the one passed by the Senate. I believe there was no change in the one passed by the Senate but I cannot really assist the hon. gentleman because this comes as a surprise to me.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, can the hon. member enlighten us as to which bill we are dealing with?

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has no way of definitely ascertaining that because we deal with these bills only after they are passed by the other place. I shall be glad to show the hon. gentleman the bill I have before me if he wishes to make a quick comparison.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, I have only one copy of the bill in my file, the one referred to by Your Honour bearing the legend "as passed by the Senate, March 28, 1962". There is no other copy on my file.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Provisional directors.

Mr. Peters: Under the loan company legislation the majority of the directors of a company must be Canadians ordinarily resident in Canada. It is of advantage to Canada and the development of the country if all directors are Canadians. Can the sponsor say whether any consideration has been given to that matter in relation to this company on the basis of the problem having been discussed in the house on a number of occasions in relation to other bills?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I believe the question referred to by the hon. gentleman is covered by section 19 of the act to which he referred. From talking to the incorporators it is my understanding that all the share capital will be held in Canada and that all the directors will be Canadians. It is true that this company hopes to influence foreign capital to move into Canada to help in housing development but none the less the intention of the company is to remain an all Canadian operation. Is that what my hon. friend wants to know?

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We are aware that under the terms of the small loans legislation it is mandatory that the majority be Canadians ordinarily resident in Canada.

My question is this. Has the sponsor any indication from those applying for incorporation that they would be willing to amend this clause to provide that all directors be Canadians ordinarily resident in Canada?

Mr. McCleave: I have not taken up that matter with the incorporators. This bill was before the banking and commerce committee the other day and the matter was not raised there. I do not think it would be possible for me to contact the incorporators this afternoon to determine whether that change would be acceptable, but I believe I can assure the hon. gentleman that this will be an all Canadian show and that I know of no reason why that should be changed.

The main funds the company will be using will be placed by various people in its hands and it would be operated similarly to, let us say, mortgage corporations such as Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, Eastern Canada Savings and Loan Company, and Eastern Trust Company. It is not necessary to alter the share structure of the company to achieve these aims.

Mr. Peters: I thank the sponsor for that information. I raised the question because I believe we should bend our efforts toward assuring that the majority, at least, if not all directors of these companies seeking incorporation should be Canadians ordinarily resident in Canada. This should be brought to the attention of those applying for incorporation.

Mr. McCleave: I agree with the objective expressed by the hon. gentleman but I do not think it has been the custom to single out particular companies in an effort to carry it out. I believe the best approach would be to change the overriding act governing such companies to ensure that this objective, with which I agree, is carried out.

Mr. Howard: Undoubtedly the best course would be to introduce general legislation or to amend existing legislation to provide that the majority if not all directors of the company are Canadians ordinarily resident in Canada.

Pipe line companies are required to be incorporated by way of petition for a private act. To my knowledge there is no general overriding legislation. Perhaps the National Energy Board Act would be the proper place for an amended provision governing directors. If there were general legislation in existence I am sure that it would have come to the attention of the government when the Aurora Pipe Line Company was singled out last year as was another earlier this year.

The sponsor of this bill and I are in agreement about the desirability of there being general legislation or a public statute. We must appreciate that the government has control of the order paper and should introduce the required amendments or overriding legislation. We all know what happens to public bills introduced by private members. Invariably they do not come to a vote to determine whether or not the house endorses the principle.

The government should take the initiative in this field thus helping to ensure that we maintain control of our own economy by requiring that at least the majority if not all directors of such companies be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house prepared to group the four bills which stand for consideration in committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: I would suggest that they be taken separately.

MADELEINE FRANCOISE HANKOWSKI

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-1, for the relief of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski.

On clause 1.

Mr. Howard: We do not have with us, and I do not think we have ever had, the bill itself as a separate document before us. However, the reproduction of it is contained in the report of the committee on divorce which contains the evidence received by the committee of the other place. This is what is before us at the moment. Clause 1 of it reads in the following terms:

> The said marriage is hereby dissolved, and shall be henceforth null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

I believe that at the last session in September—I cannot remember the date right off hand but I believe it was September 25—we had great hopes, as I am sure had everybody in this house of parliament and in the country that, upon the promise given, there would be introduced into the house some legislation which would make arrangements whereby the necessity would not arise for our having to deal again or in the future with divorce bills as we are obliged to do at the present time. As I say, it is regrettable that we are obliged to do so. If the government had applied itself fully and properly to this particular question I am quite sure that it could have come up with a simple solution to the problem and that we might have had before us, and have already considered and passed some proposal to deal more expeditiously with these particular divorce bills instead of finding ourselves in the position of being obliged to go into all the details with regard to the marital difficulties of the individuals concerned and thus to carry on the tradition which has been in existence in this parliament for many years.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard: We still live in hopes.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member said that had a bill been introduced he felt sure it would have been discussed and passed in this house by now. What is the reason for his assurance, on a problem as difficult as this one, that any bill introduced at any session would be sure of passage? Why does he make that statement now?

Mr. Howard: I must apologize, Mr. Chairman. I should have known better than to attribute anything to this particular government. I just assumed that if the Minister of Veterans Affairs had carried out his promise made to the house last year and if he had conscientiously tried to reach agreement on a bill and to introduce it that would have been the result. I myself feel sure that the house would have given passage to it for the purpose of dealing with this particular question.

Mr. Churchill: You are certain that no conscientious effort was made to deal with this matter?

Mr. Howard: I beg the minister's pardon?

Mr. Churchill: Are you so certain that no conscientious effort was made to deal with this matter? You are making some wild statements this afternoon.

Mr. Howard: So far as the Minister of Veterans Affairs is concerned, I am never sure about anything he says or does, particularly after his promise of last last session which he has not kept. So far as I am concerned, on the occasions on which I have asked him publicly in the house about the matter, he has made no comment. The last time I asked him about it he made a very offhanded and, I thought, rather undignified remark, namely that he would study the question and that if it was one that he thought should be answered, he would probably do it the next day. We have heard nothing more about it. I do not wish to get into a cross argument with the Minister of Veterans Affairs with respect to the breaking of the promise which he gave during the last session and which is to be found in Hansard. I only state, as a matter of my own personal feeling on this matter, that it is regrettable that the government did not get around to introducing that which it promised at the last session to introduce at this session so that we might be in a position to deal with this matter in a better manner. We all know that this is not the forum in which we should deal with these questions.

The Chairman: I think the hon. member will admit that we are at the committee stage of this bill on clause 1 and that, in order to be in order, he must discuss clause 1 as it is and that he must not get into a discussion of procedure and other matters that are widely outside the range of the clause.

Mr. Howard: That is quite correct, Mr. Chairman. I apologize for wandering astray there. However, I was only attempting fully to answer the question or series of questions posed by the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Churchill: You raised the whole thing yourself.

Mr. Howard: It needs to be raised. It is obvious that you are not going to do anything about it. It is obvious that your whole concern is to carry on in degrading parliament day after day with this sordid business.

Mr. Churchill: You are making false statements.

Mr. Howard: For two or three years now this government has promised action on this particular question. Last year it made that promise publicly; and promptly, as with so many other promises, forgot about it. That is why we are in this present situation.

Mr. Churchill: That is a false statement.

Mr. Howard: The minister is a false minister if he says that.

Mr. Churchill: You had better withdraw that statement.

Mr. McCleave: That is shameful.

Mr. Churchill: You have not enough courage to withdraw that last statement.

Mr. Howard: Which last statement? The statement that you are a false minister?

The Chairman: Order. I think this discussion is going a little bit too far afield. It would probably assist matters if the hon. gentleman would address his remarks to the Chair and would also address himself to clause No. 1.

Mr. Howard: I have enough guts to withdraw that statement or that reference to the minister being a false minister. I hope he has enough intestinal fortitude to withdraw the accusation that the things I said were false also. However, this is perhaps too much to expect in this situation.

Mr. Churchill: Continue your filibuster.

Mr. Howard: I beg the minister's pardon?

Mr. Churchill: Continue your filibuster.

Mr. Howard: Oh, yes; this is the sole contribution the government has offered to make with regard to this very vexing problem, namely to sit back and to make snide remarks in an attempt to cover up their deficiency in refusing to carry out conscientiously the promise they made last year.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Howard: If I may, without these other interruptions, get on with the subject before us which is clause 1 of the bill, I shall do so.

An hon. Member: It is about time.

Mr. Howard: I have been interrupted again, Mr. Chairman. I would appreciate it, Mr. Chairman, if you would tell hon. members that they may participate in the debate in the proper way so that these interruptions will not continue. Clause 1 of the bill provides that the said marriage is hereby dissolved. I think we are entitled to find out whether or not there was a marriage to dissolve in the first instance. The petition is reproduced here and it shows that on the 15th day of October, 1955 the petitioner, giving the name of the petitioner, of Montreal, province of Quebec, was lawfully married to—and then it gives the name of the husband or respondent in this instance.

I refrain from mentioning these names, Mr. Chairman, because I think it is bad enough that we have to search through these things without giving the names of the individuals and scattering them all over Hansard. The testimony was given on January 29 and the testimony of the petitioner given under oath is found on page 9. She was asked certain questions by the clerk of the committee. Those questions had to do with her name, her age, her domicile and her occupation. Then this question was asked:

Q. Are you married, and if so to whom?

Her answer given under oath was:

I am, to—

Then she gives the name of her husband.

Q. When were you married?
A. October 15, 1955.
Q. Where were you married?
A. Montreal.
Q. By whom?

Then there is an indication of the religion.

Q. I show you a document. Do you recognize it?
A. Yes, it is my marriage certificate.

She says that the names and dates are correct and the certificate is filed as exhibit No. 1. So we can take it that she was married in the first place and proceed to determine now whether or not it is desirable that this committee should dissolve the marriage and, if so, for what reason. The ground upon which the petition asks for dissolution of the marriage is contained in paragraph No. 7 of the petition which reads as follows:

That on or about the 8th day of March, 1961, at room—

Then there is a room number and a street number in Montreal, province of Quebec.

—the said—

It recites the name of the husband or respondent.

—committed adultery with—

It gives the name of another person, the corespondent, and her address. They are all of Montreal in the province of Quebec. To proceed not to the preliminaries, such as the marital relationships before the alleged adultery, in which the committee of the other place invariably becomes involved, but rather to the question of the adultery itself, we find that certain evidence is given by a person by the name of Roger Ferland. He gives his age as 38 and his occupation as investigator, as shown at the bottom of page 12 and continuing on page 13. There is a point I should like to make here. I assume it is the duty of the clerk of the committee to elicit general information about the status of the individual who is going to give evidence and it is then the duty of the lawyer representing the petitioner to bring out other evidence. The clerk of the committee asks four questions, his name, age, where he lives and his occupation, and they are answered as I indicated before. The occupation given is that of investigator.

Before we proceed further I think we might, on the basis of general principles as they have been outlined to me, wonder about the status of this person as an investigator and whether in fact he is an investigator licensed as such under the relevant statute of the province of Quebec or whether, as happens in many instances, he is someone who merely labels himself as an investigator but is in fact not such under the applicable legislation in the province of Quebec.

I have here a photostatic copy of certain information with reference to the private detectives act of Ontario. The information is taken from 1961 Ontario Weekly Notes and I read from page 15 in the case of LaMarche v. LaMarche in which Mr. Justice Spence said:

A rather startling situation was disclosed at the trial. Four persons gave evidence, one for the husband and three for the defendant, and all four were carrying on the business of private detectives, or, in one case, the assistant to a private detective, without the licence required by the private investigators act.

Then he proceeds to give other references to show what reliance the courts can place upon evidence given by people who classify themselves as private detectives but in fact are not licensed as such and who are in one sense looked upon as paid witnesses. He makes reference here to Latey on Divorce, 13th edition, page 69, and quotes these words:

Evidence by paid witnesses, formerly called testes lupanares,—

They would be persons not licensed under the relevant act of the province.

—private detectives or inquiry agents, and women of evil repute, is subject to special scrutiny.

Then Mr. Justice Spence goes on to say:

It is my view that an extra degree of scrutiny must be accorded to those who perform such services without complying with the provisions of the statute requiring that they be licensed and bonded despite the fact, and I find it as a fact, that all three of the principals were quite cognizant of the requirements of the statute. I am not ready to accept such testimony unless it is fully and strongly corroborated and the defence fails to adduce convincing evidence to refute the charges.

In this instance Mr. Justice Spence said in effect that if a person is a private investigator or private detective and wishes to have full weight given to his testimony he should be licensed as a private investigator or detective under the applicable statute. On January 25, 1962, my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming, and I wrote Senator A. W. Roebuck, chairman of the Senate divorce committee and pointed out to him the material I have just read from the decision of Mr. Justice Spence. I quote part of the letter which we wrote to him on January 25 of this year:

In reviewing the evidence in past divorce cases heard by the committee under your chairmanship we find that no attempt has been made to determine whether or not those witnesses who appeared and classified themselves as investigators or private detectives were in fact licensed as such under the private detectives act of Quebec.

We went on to suggest that perhaps in the future this course should be followed.

The hon. senator replied under date of January 29 to myself and the hon. member for Timiskaming as follows:

Dear Sirs:

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your joint letter of the 25th instant.

We thought, from the discussions we have had with people in the legal profession, that this would be the proper course to follow. You should determine whether or not those individuals who classify themselves as investigators were, in fact, licensed as such under the private detectives act of Quebec or whether they were nothing more than paid witnesses.

Mr. Crestohl: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mr. Crestohl: Does the hon. member pretend there is something in the Senate act that makes it compulsory for a witness to be a licensed investigator?

Mr. Howard: I do not know to what Senate act my friend is referring.

Mr. Crestohl: The act under which these divorces are dealt with by the committee.

Mr. Howard: No, I do not know if there is anything in the Senate rules governing this particular matter. I would assume if there is anything in the Senate rules relating to the divorce committee it would be followed and this information would be elicited. I can only assume that there is no requirement in the Senate rules which says that a private investigator must be licensed as such under whatever statute happens to exist in the province.

Mr. Crestohl: Then why does the hon. member belabour the point that these witnesses were not qualified because they were not licensed, apparently?

Mr. Howard: I gather my friend is a member of the legal profession and perhaps is able to answer that question better than I am. I have been told by a number of gentlemen in this chamber that we are, in fact, a court dealing with these matters. I disagreed with that contention, but people in parliament do insist that this is a court for dealing with these matters, regardless of how incompetent we might be as a court. I assume that, such being the case, we should follow the normal procedure of these courts.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a question of privilege to answer statements made by the hon. member for Skeena a little while ago. He accused me of making a promise to the House of Commons last year which he said was not kept. Then, he accused me of not making any attempt to solve the problem which has confronted us with regard to divorce. I said that his statement was false, and I repeat it. I will give the evidence now from Hansard at page 8865, September 25, 1961. At that time I asked permission of the house to make a statement concerning the question of divorce, and my statement was as follows:

> The house has before it a number of divorce bills which could perhaps be dealt with promptly within the next two days if we take certain action now.
> This has been a difficult problem for parliament to resolve, that is, the method of dealing with divorce bills, and over the last two years a great deal of time has been spent in attempting to reach a solution. On some occasions we seem to have come very close to doing so, but not with the unanimity that is desirable. However, in view of the fact that the people who have made application for divorces have done so bona fide as far as we know and have complied with the law of the land it might seem wise to the house to deal with these bills this year and to continue to search for what some people consider would be a better solution to this entire problem. I am prepared to make this statement for the record which, if agreed to by other parties in the house, might permit us to proceed with the divorce bills on this occasion. I should like to make this statement: the question of procedure with respect to parliamentary divorce is under study, and the government has hopes of being able to present to the house at the next session some proposals in this regard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that was my statement in September, 1961. I did not say that the government was going to bring forward a bill at this session in order to solve this particular problem. I did say that we had hoped to be able to present to the house, at the next session, some proposals in this regard. This is precisely the situation: we had hopes. I entertained hopes until yesterday that we would have something to place before the houses of parliament in regard to divorce legislation. The hon. member for Halifax will confirm the fact that hundreds of hours have been spent attempting to reach a solution to this problem. The hon. member for Skeena, and others of his party, have been apprised of the difficulties that have faced us in this regard. The Minister of Justice and members of his department, colleagues of mine within the cabinet have given attention to this particular problem. We have consulted members of the other place concerning this matter.

What more could be done? It is one of the most difficult problems of solution that faces the people of this country, and for the hon. member for Skeena to carelessly get up in this house and accuse me falsely of having made a promise which I did not make, of having broken a promise which I did not make, then accuse the government of failing, knowing all the time of the difficult circumstances, indicates to this house his lack of appreciation of the problems of government and his unsuitability to be a member of the House of Commons. He is treating lightly one of the most difficult problems that faces Canada. He is deliberately preventing action under the law in respect of 293 persons and their spouses who are asking for divorce proceedings. He is doing this deliberately, taking advantage of these people, because the two houses of parliament have failed to reach agreement with regard to this problem. I think it is most unfair. I think that in the first instance the hon. gentleman should withdraw his remarks concerning myself, and in the second instance I think he should apologize to the house and he should let the committee pass these divorces.

Mr. Peters: You should withdraw your remarks.

Mr. Howard: I am not going to accept—

Mr. McCleave: You scuttled it, Peters; you scuttled it good. Perhaps I might speak on this question of privilege—

Mr. Howard: There is already one question of privilege before the chairman, and I should like to comment on it if I may. I am not going to accept the invitation of the Minister of Veterans Affairs to engage in gutter type accusations such as those in which he has engaged. I am prevented from engaging publicly in a discussion of that sort with the Minister of Veterans Affairs because it would necessitate revealing private discussions, and I do not feel I should do that. As I took down the words used by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, he said that we were apprised of the difficulties. What he meant by being apprised of the difficulties, I cannot say. Earlier this session, I do not know the date, I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs what was being done towards meeting his promise of last year. He said then, after consultation with the Minister of Justice, that I would be advised of that and he thought I had been consulted about it, which I had not.

Following that, there was one informal meeting, this was about two months ago, between the member for Timiskaming and myself—he does not mind my mentioning this—and two other private members of the government whose names I am not going to mention at the moment. We went over a proposal point by point and the hon. member for Timiskaming and myself suggested additions to it which we felt would make the proposal work better to protect the interests of the people petitioning. We made those suggestions to the two government backbenchers, private members who came to see us, but we heard nothing more about them. We did not receive one single, solitary word by telephone call, personal discussion or anything else.

That was two months ago and that is as far as I care to go in dealing with the accusation of the minister.

Mr. McCleave: Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Howard: Certainly, when I conclude.

Mr. McCleave: It is logical at this point.

Mr. Howard: This is as far as I intend to go in dealing with the minister's gutter type of accusation, and I have no intention of apologizing to the Minister of Veterans Affairs or of withdrawing any of my remarks. The hon. member for Timiskaming has just turned up a question which I put to the Minister of Veterans Affairs on April 9, as recorded at page 2638 of Hansard for that date. It reads:

> I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs a question in his capacity as house leader. As to the announcement earlier today made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), the chairman of the miscellaneous private bills committee, to the effect that divorce bills will be placed on the order paper as of tomorrow for proceeding thereon, does this indicate that the government has no intention of meeting its commitment made to the house last session about parliamentary procedure on this matter?

The Minister of Veterans Affairs, in his usual way, said:

> I will examine in Hansard the hon. member's lengthy question and ascertain whether it requires an answer tomorrow.

That was the end of it.

Mr. McCleave: Would the hon. member permit a question before he takes his seat? Did the hon. member for Timiskaming not ask him about a meeting between the two of those gentlemen and myself about three weeks ago today? If I may refresh his mind, the hon. member for Skeena had been out in his riding, he had returned, and was there not a suggestion made to him at that time by the hon. member for Timiskaming?

Mr. Howard: A suggestion?

Mr. McCleave: About a meeting among the three of us.

Mr. Howard: A suggestion made to me by the hon. member for Timiskaming about a meeting?

Mr. McCleave: Among the three of us.

Mr. Howard: No.

Mr. McCleave: Then, Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I am not going to deal with the behind scenes negotiations, but I can assure the house that I have personally spent more than 100 hours this session trying to get a bill together until we had that most unfortunate debate in this house, dealing with the exchequer court which is totally unacceptable to Quebec. Until we had that debate there was no indication that the procedure would fail.

This is a procedural question that deals with the fate of all these people here, some of whom have children who will never be legitimated if we do not pass these bills before parliament adjourns. I just want to make this point, without getting into a lot of recrimination, that the debate on the exchequer court was a most unfortunate thing because the atmosphere suddenly changed from one of reasonable optimism. I think I am perhaps the most incurable optimist in the world on this matter, although I may yet have to apologize to the people of Quebec and Newfoundland for being an incurable optimist and for not having brought these bills before parliament earlier.

Had I thought we were not going to succeed we would have started with Bill SD-1 in January and we would have had a very lively session going through them all. However, the unfortunate effect of the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming—though he may have meant them with all good intentions and I am not going to quarrel with his intentions—had the unfortunate effect that afterwards negotiation on the proposed bill became completely impossible. One could not talk to members of any other party because suspicion was rampant.

I regret having to report that to the house, and I feel that perhaps in a way I failed in my own responsibility. I should have known that at a time like this we could not get a procedural bill through to streamline things, and that we would wind up with more than 200 people who have paid their $210 to parliament for petitions, and who have spent on an average $1,200 to $1,500 on other expenses, without getting their bills through.

There is only one final point I wish to make on this question of privilege. I do not want to cast recriminations at anybody. I am just asking that the heart of the House of Commons show itself.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: I feel we have an obligation to discuss these matters. I too was of the opinion that something could be done and I still think the answer is very simple. In fact I think the suggestion was made to me by some people higher placed than the Minister of Veterans Affairs during the last few days. I agree that our obligation is great to these people, but the suggestion is that a royal commission be established to go into the whole matter of divorce, both parliamentary and otherwise.

I feel we are not unreasonable. We dealt with some hon. members very reasonably. Some of them were not difficult to deal with but some of them were, and we did not always know who we were dealing with.

In relation to this particular bill we do not expect that there will be the eleventh hour pardon which people sometimes receive in penitentiaries but we do feel that the Prime Minister could very easily come into the house and make an announcement establishing a royal commission to inquire into the whole question of divorce. Unless that happens, then we have an obligation to see that the measures brought before us are handled and scrutinized in the same way as any other bill.

It is surprising that we have spent all our time discussing some 30 or 40 bills and that now, in the dying days of parliament, we should be asked to pass 200 odd bills without knowing the intricacies of each of them. It has often been said that where one individual is concerned more scrutiny should be given to his rights and wishes than should be given even where a great deal of money is involved.

So far as this bill is concerned there is only one person with whom we have to deal.

Mr. McCleave: It is the headline writer in the Montreal paper. That is the person you are concerned with.

Mr. Howard: Look who is talking.

Mr. Peters: I would be surprised if it makes any difference in the next few months what the Montreal papers write about Arnold Peters, or Bob McCleave for that matter. I think there will be other papers in other areas more concerned with our activities, and with which we will be more concerned.

In this particular field we have an obligation to the plaintiff, and second, to the respondent and co-respondent. In many of these cases we have found that the corespondent and respondent who are named as having committed an offence—certainly a social offence—have not been given the opportunity to appear. That is not true in this particular case, but it leads to another surprising point, that the respondent indicated he wished to appear and that he subsequently changed his mind. The committee will note the evidence of the clerk of the committee on page 9, where he says:

> In this case, Mr. Chairman, personal service was effected by the bailiff on the respondent and the corespondent—

In passing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the work done in the last two or three years by the miscellaneous private bills committee of this house and the investigations they have made have resulted in personal service by reputable people in most cases. To continue:

> —personal service was effected by the bailiff on the respondent and the corespondent, but we have not heard from the corespondent since. We sent out the registered letter informing her that the petition was filed in our office. Subsequently, a notice of trial was sent out and that was not delivered.

This of course raises the problem in my mind as to why it was not delivered and how it came about in the first place that if the bailiff was able to locate the respondent and the corespondent, notice of trial was not deliverable. It does not say it was returned, or why it was returned, but just that it was not delivered. I continue:

The Chairman: Did the respondent get the notice of trial?

The Clerk of the Committee: Yes, the respondent registered a notice of opposition, and subsequently withdrew it.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder and I think the committee should wonder why a notice of opposition should be implemented by the respondent and then subsequently the opposition was not proceeded with and, in fact, in this case there was the overt act of withdrawing it and the withdrawal was registered with the clerk of the committee. I think this would immediately bring one to the point raised by the hon. member from Skeena a few moments ago as to what was the evidence of adultery in this case, and how was it obtained? In considering this one has to check and see who in this particular case handled the investigation for the petitioner. We find that the people who carried out the investigation were Roger Ferland, aged 38, Montreal, Quebec; and Gabriel Ferland, aged 33, Montreal, Quebec. They described themselves as investigators. I would presume, and it is only a presumption, that these people are man and wife. This in itself would raise a particular problem in my mind because, Mr. Chairman, you may or may not be aware that there was a case not long ago in Ottawa which was instigated by a corporal of the R.C.M.P., in which two of the investigators who were appearing regularly before the Senate—

Mr. McCleave: Order.

Mr. Peters: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is not dealing with the case under discussion. I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has only four minutes to go. He can talk the case out, but he is going to talk this case out and he is not going to raise extraneous matters.

Mr. Peters: I do not know whether this is the place in which the chairman should rise and say, "Objection sustained" or "Objection overruled". I am not sure of the procedure in this particular case.

The Chairman: I want to reassure the hon. member that I will listen to him, but he will have to confine his remarks to clause 1 of this bill.

Mr. Peters: I am trying to do that, Mr. Chairman. All I am doing is questioning the actions of these particular detectives and saying why I am questioning them. The committee is not, nor is the house or the Senate in a position to verify, guarantee or in any way certify these particular investigators as to their reliability, because we are not even sure whether they are licensed or who administers the licence. The point I am making is that in another case a well known investigator who appeared regularly before the Senate was tried for perjury in a court—

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is referring to matters which are not contained in the petition of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski for relief from this honourable house. I therefore submit that he should be brought back to order and should confine himself, if he knows the rules, to proper debate.

The Chairman: I of course agree with the point of order. The discussion must be directed to clause 1 and to the bill as set out in the preamble.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Timiskaming raised a very interesting point that makes me wonder just what sort of validity we should place upon the evidence before us in this case. Reading from page 13, the evidence of Roger Ferland, we find half way down, when he is almost through his evidence and just before they had discovered the relationship relating to adultery:

Then around one o'clock I called my assistant and they came and met me about half an hour later in the lobby and we went up to that room.

That is, they went to a particular room in an hotel. Then the chairman asked a question. I cannot find out quickly who the chairman was, but it does not matter anyway. The chairman of the committee asked:

What time was this?

A. It was around 1.30. I knocked at the door and said, "I am the house detective".

Then he goes on to give the name of the respondent; he said he was there and opened the door:

—he was wearing a pair of pants, that is all he had on. I said it is for an investigation. While I was talking to him there was a girl sitting on the bed and she ran into the bathroom and she locked herself in.

Then the chairman asked:

What was she wearing?

A. Nothing at all. She locked herself in the bathroom.

Let us consider this situation.

Mr. Matthews: You would.

Mr. Howard: I am asking hon. members to put themselves in this situation and just consider this. This is what happened: a complete stranger, a private detective, knocks on an hotel room door; the respondent opens it, and while he opens it the girl sits naked on the bed so everyone can see her, and then she runs into the bathroom.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. McCleave: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, we now know that N.D.P. stands for "no divorces permitted".

Mr. Howard: We stand for "no deceit" also, which is what some people are involved in.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, that by unanimous consent we sit through the six to eight supper recess and from ten o'clock thereafter until these divorces have been proceeded with.

The Chairman: The committee has not jurisdiction to rule on that motion. The hour for private members' business having expired, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. R. M. T. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, before you call it six o'clock I would ask you to put my motion, seconded by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, that by unanimous consent this house sit from six till eight, and from ten o'clock thereafter until the 293 divorce bills have been agreed upon.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the hon. member has not given notice of the motion, and furthermore it is six o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: If the house give unanimous consent to accepting the motion and prolonging its sitting beyond six o'clock, I could entertain it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps the best course would be to put that motion tomorrow.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I am putting it now and asking for unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: I hear dissent.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I ask from what corner the dissent came.

Mr. Howard: I will soon tell you.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CUSTOMS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PROCEDURAL CHANGES AND EXTENSION OF TIME FOR APPEALS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-79, to amend the Customs Act—Mr. Nowlan—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 1—Finality of classification or appraisal.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the minister was going to give some explanation of why, in the face of what I understand to be continuous or repeated requests on the part of some organizations, for a period of six months, as indicated in clause 1 of the bill the time has been increased only to 90 days.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is correct. When the committee rose at five o'clock I said I would refer this matter when the committee resumed at eight. As I said earlier in the afternoon, I believe, at one time under the other procedure there was a longer time permitted, something like two years. All sorts of difficulties arose out of the administration of that provision. The government which was responsible for the administration of affairs in 1955 changed the procedure and brought in a 60 day period in which one could appeal to the deputy minister from a decision of a dominion customs appraiser.

It is perfectly true, as I said, that since then various pressures have been brought on the department to extend the period beyond the 60 days prescribed in 1955. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I think my departmental officials feel that in the average case—as a matter of fact in 95 per cent of cases which would arise—the 60 day period is probably sufficient; but with the multiplicity of branches across this country and with the vast diversification of business, it is appreciated that sometimes a hardship might ensue by strictly adhering to the 60 day period. Therefore, after considering the matter and having read the brief which my hon. friend read this afternoon and which, I may say, is simply a copy of various briefs we have received over a period of years, at least since I have been minister—I am not sure what date the hon. member ascribed to the brief but I have seen similar briefs of the same tenor—in consultation with my officers we concluded that extending the period from 60 to 90 days would meet all the cases that would normally arise. There is no doubt that the brief referred to by the hon. gentleman contains the arguments which have been addressed to the department.

It was felt the 90 day provision represented a fair compromise between the 60 days we now have and the six month period originally requested. I point out that a six month period was requested following an interval during which there was a two year period. Naturally 60 days as compared with two years looks very short, but the whole procedure has been changed.

I do not think I am divulging a confidence. I do not have the communication before me but perhaps the committee will allow me to say that within the last few days I received a letter from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association from whose brief the hon. member for Ottawa West read this afternoon commending the government, or me, I am not sure which, for having at last relaxed the period to this extent. I think it will prove reasonably satisfactory and, of course, as always, the department is prompt to meet the views of the taxpaying public and the importers. Should it develop that further extensions are necessary consideration will be given to those at a later date. After the period of five years from 1957 to 1962 this is the first time we felt it advisable to relax the period and I feel the degree of relaxation is sufficient.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I have ever heard a more enthusiastic encomium of a bill than this one. When you think that apart from the provision of supply this is the last act of this parliament, this bill which the minister thinks is really unnecessary but that apparently he has to put through to please the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, it certainly appears that this parliament is ending with a whimper. The minister said he thinks that in 95 per cent of the cases the 60 days would be sufficient, so that for 5 per cent of the cases this house is being denied an opportunity to debate the budget. That perhaps is a pretty accurate appraisal of the government's view of the budget—they are so anxious not to have it debated.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hear an hon. member obstructing me by calling out "order". I use the term "obstructing", of course, in the sense in which the Prime Minister uses it and not in the normal sense of the word. We know that the double-speak the Prime Minister has introduced into politics is something new in this country.

Perhaps the minister could tell me whether my understanding is correct. I understand that what in fact has happened over recent years is that in the difficult cases the deputy minister has taken the view that although the law says the determination made by the appraiser is final and conclusive, if in his opinion there seems to be an obvious injustice he ought to do something about it. It seems to me if that has been the case—and I have the highest regard for the deputy minister as I am sure every hon. member has—it would still be desirable to bring the law into conformity with the facts. Perhaps the minister could tell us whether that is the case.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, Mr. Chairman, after this political diatribe on the part of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, with his twisted political mind, perhaps I could say this. Hon. gentlemen opposite assured me at six o'clock they wanted only two minutes to discuss this matter and put it through, but apparently since that time there has been a change of tactics. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition is not now ready to give the budget address which he seemed ready to give. I am not sure of his tactics. However if hon. gentlemen opposite wish to treat this as a political matter we are prepared to discuss it on that basis. There is no hurry; there is no hurry whatsoever. We will discuss it on that basis if that is the wish of hon. gentlemen opposite.

As I have said, these matters which we are bringing forward, whether we have brought them forward covering 5 per cent of the cases or 95 per cent of the cases as the hon. member mentioned, have been considered by the department. We are rectifying to some extent some of the complaints which have been expressed to me as minister following the changes in the legislation in 1955. No legislation can be completely perfect. No legislation will please everyone. However, as I said at the opening, I think this legislation on this particular section—and this is only one of various sections which are in the bill—meets the requests of the people who are importing goods into this country. As I mentioned a moment ago, they have written in expressing their satisfaction at the fact that the government is rectifying some of the difficulties which were created by the legislation brought in by the preceding government. We think this bill in this particular section will go a long way toward meeting the complaints.

Mr. McIlraith: I have one matter I wish to clarify. As I understand the practice now the deputy minister in fact, under the authority of section 43 (4) (d) of the act, has been making his reappraisal or has been re-examining these cases where an appeal has been taken to the dominion customs appraiser and refunds have been sought. In other words, he has in fact been examining the cases that were appealed under section 43 (1) of the act. Does this amendment envisage that the practice of having the deputy minister examine cases appealed under section 43 (4) (d) will be discontinued if this amendment carries and with the longer period of time?

Mr. Nowlan: No, I would not think that practice would necessarily be discontinued. I think what happens as a matter of practice is that the customs brokers, when they are entering an appeal from the dominion customs appraiser, almost automatically do so, so I am told. After all, it costs only a 5 cent stamp to get a decision. Hence you get an appeal automatically entered to the deputy minister and the deputy minister is obliged to pass on practically every matter which has been referred to the dominion customs appraiser. In this section there is nothing which would preclude appeals to the deputy minister.

Mr. McIlraith: As I understand the matter, it should lessen the appeals to the deputy minister because of the more adequate time for appeal to the dominion customs appraiser.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the hope.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Now, by leave.

Mr. Nowlan moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before third reading of this last ordinary bill in this parliament I think we should draw attention to this extremely urgent and important matter that has been obstructed for so long by the opposition.

Mr. Nowlan: The last voice, that of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee has before it for consideration the following resolution:

Ways and Means

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, the sum of $138,416,981, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I am taking advantage of this motion to continue the statement which I began last evening on financial and economic matters. I regret that in a matter of such great importance I shall not have the benefit of the Prime Minister's presence in the chamber this evening, which may be the last one of our session. According to the press he is in Toronto tonight drumming up provincial Conservative support for the forthcoming election. No doubt for some of those to whom he will be speaking it will be a welcome relief from their preoccupation with crime and other matters.

I do not apologize to the committee for taking up a good deal of time this evening. After all, I suppose it will be the last opportunity I shall have to speak from this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Walker: Or from any side.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member had better be careful.

Mr. Pearson: Of course, if I get these friendly interruptions it is going to take me even longer than I expected it would. I hope I shall not be blamed for the extra time taken.

An hon. Member: We cannot blame you for anything.

Mr. Pearson: The other evening we heard at some length from the Minister of Finance. He presented to us our financial and economic picture. In this regard he played on an uncertain trumpet but he performed with pizzicato speed. Even though he was not able to get in all the things he wished to say, I appreciate the courtesy he extended to me in cutting out some of these things so that I could have 10 minutes at the end of the evening. He told us a good deal about economic and financial matters and we have managed to read those parts of his speech which he was not able to give in the house. From the minister's statement of the position, it was clear that the financial affairs of this country are in a morass from which the government is unable to retreat with grace or emerge with credit. It became quite clear and indeed it has been clear for some time, Mr. Chairman, that the government has not been able to make any new approach to the new problems that are confronting this country. Indeed, as the Montreal Star put it on April 7 in an editorial:

> What is distressing about the Canadian scene is that no new approach is being made, nothing is being done. Temporary upturns mean little. These come and go. But Mr. Diefenbaker and his colleagues have, since 1957, done nothing new.

The reason for that is, I think, quite clear. It is because this government has no appreciation of the fundamental character of these new problems. So the remedies that have been put forward within the last week or so in the budget really can be characterized as a little more of the same. Problems have been piling up and are still piling up but the government feels that these problems can be solved by papering over the cracks.

Some of the measures that have been put forward recently by the government will be helpful to the business community. They will be welcomed as far as they go; but it is permissible, Mr. Chairman, to point out that these proposals for incentives to business expansion come about four and a half years too late, and, as is customary with the policies of this government, they are not only too late but too little. When we on this side of the house put forward proposals for business incentives session after session since 1957 they were without exception rejected by the government. Some of these business proposals of the government need clarification, and if we had had an opportunity for a normal debate on this important aspect of our economic and financial affairs perhaps the minister would have been able to give that clarification.

Take, for instance, his proposal for a tax reduction on profits of business from increased sales. It is not clear whether or not that reduction would apply to increased sales which are the result of increased prices; and if it would then, of course, there is a very considerable temptation to take advantage of this by increasing prices in order to qualify. We also note that there is no time limit placed on this particular proposal.

It is also very noticeable that the proposals that have been made have not been focused on the areas where help is needed most, the area of excessive unemployment and areas that should have been helped by special measures, which we have not had, which might provide for the introduction of new industries and new jobs.

The tax relief granted to individuals, as has been mentioned before, is, of course, marginal and minimum. No doubt the minister found it impossible to do any more because of the enormous deficits of the past and the enormous proposed deficit for the forthcoming year, which is the sixth straight deficit put forward by the minister since he first became Minister of Finance, and this sixth and enormous last deficit he is putting forward in a period which he and the Prime Minister call one of great and exciting expansion.

The minister makes certain estimates, predictions and forecasts in his white paper and we, of course, will judge those predictions in the light of his accuracy in predicting in the past. We remember how he used to boast that he would keep expenditures down; and yet expenditures year after year since he has been Minister of Finance have always been higher than estimated. That is why we have had half a billion dollars in supplementary estimates for the last fiscal year and, as we saw it, this had some bearing on the necessity of dealing with these hundreds of millions of supplementary estimates by giving them the kind of consideration which they deserve, especially as it has now been shown that the subjects with which they were concerned would not have received any other consideration in the main estimates for this year during this parliament.

In the last Liberal year the expenditures of the government were $4.8 billion. In 1961 that figure was up by 40 per cent with this government of economy to $6.6 billion, and in 1962-63 who knows how much above $7 billion they are likely to be? Where is that curbing of waste and extravagance? It has gone with Arizona Charlie; it has gone along with the Beauceville post office site; it has gone along with the balanced budget and with "no one will suffer from unemployment".

It is important to analyse the minister's record with regard to predictions and, as I say, we will judge the predictions and estimates he makes in the light of his record in the past. As a matter of fact, perhaps it may be said of the minister, as was once said in another context about the value of statistics, that they should be used like a drunken man uses a lamp post, for support rather than illumination. The minister certainly qualifies in that regard. Yet, Mr. Chairman, it is hard not to sympathize with the Minister of Finance. If he is searching for fiscal sanity, which in certain quarters is attributed to him, if he is searching, however unavailingly, for a balanced budget, he has the political sword of John Damocles suspended over his head, and I should think that must be a little unnerving to the Minister of Finance.

In any event, let us look at the record of his forecasting. The story of this government's economic forecasting must go back to January 20, 1958, just before the last general election when the Prime Minister produced in this house, in circumstances of deceit, the secret report entitled "The Canadian Economic Outlook for 1957". In abusing the confidential character of this document—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not true.

Mr. Pearson: —he made two specific accusations against the former Liberal government. He claimed that this report had been deliberately hidden by the Liberals and he clearly implied that such reports should be tabled in the House of Commons.

Second, he accused the previous finance minister of not having used this document to give in his budget speech a detailed forecast of the true situation of the Canadian economy. We will see later how successful this Minister of Finance has been in giving the Canadian people a true picture of the Canadian economy in his forecast. We know, in so far as that earlier accusation is concerned, from the evidence produced since that time that both these accusations were false. This was the first and most unscrupulous distortion of the record of the past.

Let us see what the record has been since in so far as economic forecasting is concerned. The government was embarrassed by demands from this side that subsequent editions of this secret economic outlook report should be tabled, a report which has been prepared every year since 1946. After all, the government had produced one in 1958 when the Prime Minister violated its confidential character and quoted selected passages from it. Embarrassed by subsequent requests that this procedure be repeated in 1960, the then minister of trade and commerce, when we asked for the same treatment to be given to these reports subsequent to 1958 as was given to the one to which I have referred, told the house that this annual forecast which had previously been useful in the preparation of the budget had been discontinued. This report which, according to the Prime Minister should have been released in 1957, had become not only hidden but buried and sunk without a trace. Since 1958 therefore the minister, and I think it is very fortunate for him, has not had to produce any official evidence which, if it had been produced, I am sure would have made nonsense of his extravagantly over-optimistic forecasts.

On March 31, 1960, when the Minister of Finance presented his budget, another recession had started. But the preparation of the secret economic outlook report had been discontinued, so the minister felt free to fall back on his natural economic exuberance. He said, as reported on page 2669 of Hansard for March 31, 1960:

> We can look forward optimistically to another year of solid expansion and balanced growth.

Remember, he estimated at that time a 6 per cent increase in the gross national product and a small budget surplus, and the Tory cheers on that occasion almost shook the roof of this chamber. During the debate which followed, I warned the minister about the recession, that he was being over-optimistic in his predictions. Of course, all we got for that was the charge that we were the prophets of doom and gloom.

What were the actual figures, then, in 1960? The increase in our gross national product was not 6 per cent, it was 2 per cent. Who was wrong? The estimated small surplus turned out to be a deficit of $345 million. Who was wrong? The minister failed in 1960 to warn the Canadian people about the difficulties that were ahead, let alone do anything about them. It was only when the recession was over that he recognized that it had existed because in his budget speech of June 20, 1961, he finally admitted that something had gone wrong. This was in June, 1961, Mr. Chairman, when he said, and I quote again from Hansard, page 6640:

> —the economic outlook in the United States and Canada, which had been most encouraging at the beginning of 1960, had rather unexpectedly reversed itself, resulting in a disappointing slow down during the last three quarters of 1960.

Then, when the minister came to make his forecast for 1961-62, he was a little more cautious than he had been in the previous years. However, he was wrong again. I should like to quote now from page 6665 of the same volume of Hansard, where the minister is reported to have said:

> —in the absence of any changes in the current economic outlook or of any additional stimulus we might anticipate this year—

That is, the year we have just gone through.

> —an increase of about 3 per cent in our levels of economic activity.
> As a result of the policy statements and legislative proposals I have now made I would expect a significant improvement in our economic prospects.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, that was only a little more than nine months ago and surely when he held his budget until towards the end of June we might have expected a little more accuracy in his predictions. What happened? Well, he was wrong in his forecasts of expenditures and he was wrong in his estimate of the gross national product. The gross national product in the last year, 1961-62, he told us only nine months ago, would be a 3 per cent increase, even in the absence of the additional stimulus through government policies which he would provide.

What has happened? The minister's figures revealed the other day just what had happened. The increase was only 2 per cent in that year of boasted expansion. Therefore, by the minister's own admission, his policies brought about a reduction of 1 per cent and deprived the Canadian people of about $360 million of income.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is rubbish, and you know it.

Mr. Pearson: The minister says the increase will be 3 per cent, plus what I am able to add to it by the policies I am introducing. The increase was 2 per cent and the minister's policies, by his own admission, resulted in a decrease of 1 per cent.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Ever hear of the western drought?

Mr. Pearson: Only nine months ago, the minister was out about $150 million in his deficit estimate because as we know it was $791 million instead of $650 million. So, we accept any further predictions and estimates for the next year in the light of the record of his previous mistakes. In this respect, his public trust account is overdrawn.

Let us look at his further predictions for 1962-63. The current estimated sixth straight deficit is $745 million. On the record of past predictions, it will be considerably higher. It is based, this most recent forecasting by the minister, on a gross national product increase of about 7 per cent, assuming normal crops and no untoward events. I assure the minister that from his point of view there is going to be one very untoward event shortly. This gross national product of 7 per cent for 1962-63, the minister said, has been exceeded only twice in the last 10 years, both times of course under Liberal administration. But we know, and the minister must know if he pays any attention to the opinion of experts, that the current recovery is not as strong as expected in either Canada or the United States. Nevertheless, in the face of this situation, the Prime Minister who does not pay much attention, apparently, to the opinion of outside experts had this to say on March 22 in Montreal:

> In every part of this country the economy is making giant strides forward.

Tell that to the people in those areas where unemployment is 15 per cent of the labour force. Of course it is partisan rubbish, to use a favourite expression of the minister.

Conservative propaganda would like us to believe that all our economic problems have been solved, but in spite of the current, limited recovery we still suffer from chronic unemployment and lack of adequate economic growth which is the only way by which it can be removed. Moreover, many economists tell us it is likely that the current recovery will soon come to an end. Experts, but not the government, are worried about this. Cyclical patterns are quite regular, and in the recent past recessions have appeared every three years. The last one began in the second quarter of 1960 and, if that pattern is continued, the next one could start before the end of the current fiscal year.

President Kennedy, in his message to congress in January, had the courage to face this possibility. He warned the United States congress about the likelihood of another recession soon if adequate steps were not taken now to prevent it. In particular he asked for powers and made proposals to fight the recession if it should come again. The Minister of Finance did not have such courage as that. Just as he failed earlier to warn Canadians about the last recession, and in doing so misled the country about the true situation of the Canadian economy, so now he has failed in his responsibilities as a minister by not taking effective steps in preparation for what might lie ahead. There is nothing in this budget for that purpose.

If governments cannot entirely prevent recessions which originate in the private sector of the economy they can minimize their effects by appropriate action taken at the appropriate time—but not this government. That is not the way they operate. They do not anticipate; they do not understand; they do not prepare. They just stumble along and hope for the best, and there is no excuse for that. Instead of recognizing the possibility of danger ahead and getting prepared for it so as to minimize its harmful effect, ministers prefer expediency and complacency, as I have said, to paper over the cracks and tinker with the surface.

Since 1958 the present government has failed every single year to give us a proper and true picture of our economic situation. Every single year they have been proven to be wrong in their economic forecasts. One reason for this, as I have already pointed out, is that having sabotaged confidential relations with civil servants, they have destroyed the effectiveness of economic forecasting, which is so essential to the formulation and implementation of sound and appropriate policies. The government's systematically wrong and over-optimistic assessment of the situation since 1957 has not been conducive to appropriate and effective policies. It has been a major reason for the difficulties we have had to face.

I can summarize the mistakes of the minister and of the government in this regard in one short table. In 1958 he forecast a 2 per cent rise in the gross national product. In effect the increase was one per cent. In 1959 he talked about an increase in G.N.P. of 7 per cent, and the results were 3 per cent. In 1960 the forecast was 6 per cent and the facts were 2 per cent. In 1961 the forecast was "significantly" above 3 per cent, and the results were 2 per cent. In 1962, on the eve of an election, the forecast is 7 per cent.

Mr. Pallett: The same as the Prudential Life.

Mr. Pearson: The Prudential Life is as strong as Gibraltar, and that is not the case with this government.

I should now like to say a few words about fiscal policy. The promises that the government made in 1957 with respect to government finances were very simple indeed—they would reduce expenditures, they would reduce taxes, and they would balance the budget. The Minister of Finance, when he was in opposition, used to be very eloquent about balancing the budget. In those days he found deficits to be sinful and shameful.

In 1957-58 when he took over responsibility for our finances, the recession reached its maximum intensity in the winter of 1957-58. The minister could have planned for a deficit to defeat that recession by stimulating the economy, but he refused to recognize it, let alone defeat it. Therefore the 1957-58 budgetary deficit, at the height of that recession, was $38 million.

In 1958-59 the economy was recovering from that recession. That surely was the time to reduce the deficit but the minister that year, in a year of recovery, budgeted for a deficit of $648 million, which was a peacetime record.

In 1959-60, now facing his third consecutive deficit, the minister finally realized that the financial situation which he and his colleagues had created did not fit with their earlier fiscal principles of a balanced budget at all costs, and so the minister decided to abandon the principles.

He announced his conversion in a speech on April 9, 1959 when, as recorded at page 2415 of Hansard he had this to say:

> As economic conditions change, the government's budget policy needs to change also. It must be flexible; it should be adapted to the shifting economic climate. There are times when a substantial deficit is clearly the right policy; there are times when the budget should be in balance; there are times when some provision should be made for the orderly retirement of debt.

It seems to me those are all Liberal sentiments. The minister went on to say:

> The problem of timing the adjustments in budgetary policy is not an easy one, and yet good timing is often of crucial importance.

That, Mr. Chairman, was the great conversion. That was the political conversion loan which was not any more successful than the other one. That was the birth of the new "flexibility Fleming". But, Mr. Chairman, the minister was flexible only in the variation of his deficits because he was not more faithful to his new set of financial principles than he was to his old ones.

As soon as he declared his new doctrine he abandoned it. It was quite clear that the fiscal year 1959-60 would be the peak of the 1957-60 business cycle, and according to the minister's new doctrine that was the time to provide for the orderly retirement of debt, or at least to balance the budget. So what did he do? He budgeted for a deficit of $393 million, up to then the second highest in the postwar period.

We now come to 1960-61. The 1960 recession began with the 1960-61 fiscal year and, according to the minister's new fiscal doctrine, he should have then planned for a sizeable deficit. But did he? No, Mr. Chairman. That was the year he planned for a surplus, and this is how he explained his plans for a surplus, as recorded at page 2681 of Hansard:

> The position we have now reached, with its sound prospect of a fully balanced budget, represents the fruits of carefully designed policies carried forward over the past 18 months.
>
> This is not something that just happened. It is a result of considered aims and efforts... I am happy to say that we have reached this goal of a balanced budget—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: The minister, not realizing what was going on in the Canadian economy, planned for a small surplus. He did it at the wrong time and got the wrong result; he got a deficit of $345 million. The planned surplus became a large, unexpected, unwanted and unplanned deficit. Now after it is all over we are told that that deficit was planned also.

Mr. Denis: Deficit Fleming.

Mr. Pearson: The 1960-61 recession ended with the beginning of the 1961-62 fiscal year. I think I can say without boasting that I was the first in this house, in March, 1961, to say that this particular recession was ending. Later in his budget speech on June 20, 1961 the minister himself recognized that when he said:

> By now in mid-1961—

That is last summer:

> —we are coming to the end of those adjustments related to special and cyclical factors which in 1960 were exercizing a restraining influence on expansion.

According to the minister's new financial principles of flexibility he should then have attempted to balance his budget, or at least reduce the deficit. Instead the minister announced, as we know, a deficit of $650 million, a new peacetime record in Canada, which became a deficit of $791 million. The Prime Minister and the minister then say, "We stand on our record".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. O'Hurley: Yes, sir, so we do.

Mr. Chevrier: What a record.

Mr. Denis: A broken record.

Mr. Pearson: This year they are budgeting for a deficit of $745 million which, on the record of the past, will be more than that. You add it all up and what do you get? You get accumulated deficits over the minister's term of office of just about $3 billion; and if you add the depletion in the unemployment insurance fund and the liquidation of the national defence fund you get accumulated debts of $4 billion.

Mr. Denis: What a success.

Mr. Pearson: That amount is a debt the Canadian people will have to pay. For each family of four it will amount to $640. Yet we are informed that the Tories are able to wear these deficits as a cloak of virtue and with pride and say, "We did it all for the unemployed. We did it all for the expansion of the economy. We planned it all that way".

A hon. Member: Poor planning.

Mr. Pearson: What have we got? We have deficits of $3 billion and we have unemployment figures at a record high over these five years. Even in March, 1962 we have 718,000 claimants for unemployment insurance. We have deficits and we have jobless too. That is the ultimate in mismanagement by government. Government spokesmen counter that by saying that employment is up to record heights. Because of the slow down of the economy over these years the increase in employment is less than the growth in population. Therefore how can that increase which they boast about absorb the existing chronic unemployment, let alone the growth in the labour force? Employment—and these are the official figures—has increased by 324,000 since 1957. That is the boast.

The labour force—and the Prime Minister never talks about this—has increased by 515,000 since that time. Why is that? The answer is very simple indeed. It is because per capita production in constant dollars has actually decreased since 1957. The figure in 1957 was $1,923; the figure in 1961 was $1,893. There, Mr. Chairman, is the answer to unemployment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member permit a question? What is the source of the figures he has just now quoted?

Mr. Pearson: They are all dominion bureau of statistics figures.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. Would the hon. gentleman please give us the precise source of those figures, because they will not stand up.

Mr. Pearson: They are from the dominion bureau of statistics, and I take responsibility for them and stand by them.

Mr. Pickersgill: They stand up a lot better than your figures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. gentleman, if he is not in a position to give the reference to his source now, would he undertake to do so as soon as possible?

Mr. Pearson: Of course, these are official figures.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, they are not.

Mr. Pearson: What I am giving I stand by as official figures.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: They hurt.

Mr. Pearson: Since 1957 the population has gone up by 10 per cent; that is an official figure. Population is up by 10 per cent, but the goods and services produced in this country are up only by 9.1 per cent. So how can we possibly avoid unemployment with that rate of growth, or ensure expansion to take care of the increase in the labour force? Furthermore unemployment, bad as it has been recently—though it has improved over last year, and we cheerfully admit that on this side of the chamber—would have been much worse if the labour force had virtually not ceased to grow during the last year, with people dropping out of it, with immigration drastically reduced and with emigration increased until from the point of view of the labour force it just about balanced the immigration.

Let us look at the figures—and they are very depressing figures—in regard to unemployment. They underline the importance and urgency of this problem. The average number out of work for 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961 was 6.8 per cent; the average from 1946 to 1957 was 3 per cent, which is less than half of that of the Tory years. In actual number, the average number of unemployed from 1946 to 1957 per year was 179,000; the average unemployed from 1957 to 1961 was 415,000. To deal with this there is the excuse which we hear all the time, that it was worse in the United States. I need only say that the United States average during the same period was 6.1 per cent; not higher, but lower. In Europe, of course, and in Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand there was virtually full employment.

In the face of all this the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and others keep shouting, "We have never had it so good". Indeed, as I have just said, the Prime Minister had the effrontery to boast in Montreal on March 21, and I repeat this quotation:

> In every part of this country the economy is making giant strides forward.

Mr. Churchill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not true.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It certainly is.

Mr. Pearson: As I say, Mr. Chairman, tell that to the areas where the unemployment is 15 per cent of the labour force.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: And, Mr. Chairman, we know from their own propaganda that they actually give as evidence for this growing expansion and increased prosperity a great increase in unemployment payments. The Tories in their propaganda actually boast about this, the necessity for which should humiliate them.

Mr. Chevrier: Eight hundred per cent.

Mr. Pearson: They boast about the necessity for the great increase in unemployment itself. Because of these increased payments, and in spite of increasing the rate of contributions to the fund by worker and employer, the unemployment insurance fund dropped from $926 million in December, 1956 to $77 million on March 31, 1962.

Mr. Hellyer: Still going down.

Mr. Pearson: The unemployment insurance fund from 1942 to 1957 increased at an average rate of $9 million a month because there was practically full employment during those years. During the last 59 months, in spite of a 33 per cent rise in premiums the fund has decreased at an average rate of $17 million a month. The government propagandists say: "Isn't it wonderful? We are paying out so much more for unemployment relief." They boast about the fact that in 1961-62 the payments for unemployment relief had gone up by 847 per cent over the last full Liberal year. Perhaps if he were here the Prime Minister would recall the words he uttered in Brantford on February 7, 1958:

> The people who are unemployed will not be put in the false position of being on relief.

I repeat, the relief payments during this period have increased by 847 per cent. This is another chapter of the record on which this election is going to be fought.

Let us look for a few moments at a subject which is very close indeed to the heart of the Minister of Finance and very close to his interests. I refer to monetary policy. When the minister was in opposition he held the view, which was the correct view, that the government was responsible for monetary policy, and therefore the government of the day, when he was in opposition, should be condemned, and it was condemned, for tight money. The minister has been in office now for nearly five years. During the earlier years, for about four years or three and three quarters of that period, the minister was very emphatic in arguing that the government had no responsibility for monetary policy and therefore could not be condemned in 1959 for the most rigid tight money conditions ever experienced in Canada, with the highest interest rates we had ever experienced. In those days the minister argued that the Bank of Canada had the responsibility and, according to the Prime Minister in one famous "Nation's Business" broadcast, the Bank of Canada had the responsibility along with the big bad chartered banks.

Last summer it became necessary, so the government thought, to find a scapegoat for its lapses and its sins—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true and the hon. gentleman should know it.

Mr. Pearson: —and the governor of the Bank of Canada was chosen to be the victim.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is untrue.

Mr. Pearson: He was to be the victim even if it was necessary to tear up their cherished bill of rights in the process.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member's accusation is completely false.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That question has been decided.

Mr. Pearson: The dismissal of the governor of the Bank of Canada represents one of the most sordid and shameful episodes in our history.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman's accusation is completely false.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was an unforgettable brawl.

Mr. Pearson: The minister ran interference for the Prime Minister in this sorry episode.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a false accusation, too.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is absolutely true and the minister knows it.

Mr. Pearson: The governor went, and he went in circumstances that brought shame on the government. He went in circumstances that besmirched the Canadian Bill of Rights, which degraded parliament, which humiliated Canada abroad and tarnished her good name.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thanks to the part played in it by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister did not have the courage to resign.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister should have resigned.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And leave matters in the hands of Liberal riffraff?

Mr. Pearson: Having got rid of Mr. Coyne a new governor was appointed in the person of Mr. Rasminsky whose first act was to issue a statement saying that the government did indeed have responsibility for monetary policy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course.

Mr. Pearson: This was something on which we had insisted all along and which the Minister of Finance had violently rejected.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And which your leader, Mr. St. Laurent, rejected.

Mr. Pearson: The new governor of the Bank of Canada having issued this statement, the minister then followed it up at once with a statement in which he agreed entirely and in a rather meek way with the new governor. The Minister of Finance had gotten back, by the road of political expediency, to the point he started from ten years ago; but as the Prime Minister is so fond of saying—and he speaks with authority on this subject—you do not get indigestion from swallowing words.

The minister told us the other evening in his speech that he now sees the governor of the Bank of Canada at least once a week. The former governor of the Bank of Canada should have been seen by the minister at least once a week. Weeks and weeks went by when he did not see him.

An hon. Member: Four years.

Mr. Pearson: If the minister had seen him once a week he might have been able to criticize some of the statements the former governor was making during that period.

Mr. Hellyer: Some of them might not have been necessary.

Mr. Pearson: But he did not bother seeing the former governor during that period. What kind of monetary policy is it for which the minister now assumes responsibility? In opposition he used to lead some blistering assaults on the government of that day for tight money and high interest rates. I will quote just one statistic to show the present situation.

In 1956 the interest rate you had to pay on Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation mortgages was 5½ per cent and it was violently criticized by the minister at that time as being too high. It is now 6½ per cent.

What about the national debt and what about taxation policies? In Liberal days the national debt used to be reduced. We all know the record of the previous government in achieving a reduction of over $2 billion in post-war years. What has happened under this regime? Our gross national debt—and these, Mr. Chairman, are official figures—was $18⅓ billion on March 31, 1957. It was $21⅔ billion on March 31, 1961. In the fiscal year 1957-58 the national debt per capita was $648. In 1961-62 it was $725. Because of this increase and because of higher interest rates the payment of interest on the national debt has gone up from $520 million in 1956-57 to an estimated $804 million in 1961-62. But do not worry, say the apologists of the government, indeed, the political economists of the government—and I emphasize the word "political"—do not worry; this is easy to bear. What is $3 billion, after all?

And to what are the people of Canada most indebted in connection with this national debt? Surely our foreign debt must have gone down during these years because we recall how the Prime Minister and his friends were going to release Canada from the stranglehold of foreign debt—this was in 1957—and especially from United States control of our industry and development.

You will remember, Mr. Chairman, how hon. gentlemen opposite accused Liberal governments of having sold Canada to the United States, of making us an economic satellite; and in driving home their arguments, for political vote catching purposes they are not above fomenting or exploiting anti-American feeling.

What is the situation now? Again the figures tell the story and they again throw a lurid light on the gap between Tory promises and Tory performance. According to official figures from the bureau of statistics released on March 12, 1962, Canada's net balance of international indebtedness rose in the year 1960 from $14 billion to $16.9 billion and in 1961 to almost $18 billion. Even more significant, the greatest part of the increase was due to the direct investments of Americans in United States branch plants and subsidiaries in Canada, particularly in resource industries such as petroleum and natural gas and mining and smelting.

As a result of the growth in foreign ownership and investment, the amount of money sent out of Canada in the form of dividends, profits and interest rose from $669 million in 1960 to $771 million in 1961. That was the increase in one year alone.

So much for the Tory policy of saving us from United States domination. I should not say that they have done nothing during these five years. They have passed a bill which makes it necessary to give some information about this matter. Taxation?—how have the minister and his government managed this? In 1957 they ranted about the country asserting that every Canadian family was overtaxed by $500. This used to be the theme especially of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am sorry he is not in the chamber tonight either. In the year 1957 the Canadian people paid $4,928 million in taxes, and these are official figures. In 1961 they paid $5,751 million into the federal coffers, an increase of 17 per cent, more than $70 in additional taxes for every Canadian family of four. Thus between the fiscal years 1957 and 1961 —and this should end all this talk about the easier burden of income tax that we hear from government spokesmen—the amount collected from personal income tax went up by 28 per cent and on a per capita basis income tax went up from $94 to $108 or by 15 per cent.

There is something else the minister has done recently that should be noted, namely the decision with regard to the devaluation of our dollar out of which he takes great and growing satisfaction these days. It was not very long ago—two or three years ago—that the minister was telling us that the government could do nothing about devaluing the dollar. We on this side in 1958, 1959 and 1960 urged this course on the government at a time when devaluation would have done the most good. However, the minister replied in those days that to lower the value of the dollar—and I quote from his statement in the house—would be "a gigantic financial speculation with little chance of success" and would result in undesirable and indeed impossible controls. Then last summer the minister saw another great light.

Mr. Hellyer: The vision.

Mr. Pearson: In his budget speech he told us he was going to force down our dollar "significantly". That is a word he seems to like. He said he was going to force it down significantly through the exchange fund by purchasing United States dollars. In that same speech in June, 1961—I refer to his budget speech—he said this course would be desirable also because it would add to our reserves—and I quote—"which have not grown over the past decade in line with Canada's international transactions". Our reserves were too low. This is to be found at page 6649 of Hansard of that year. That was nine months ago. The situation now is that instead of buying United States dollars in order to get our reserves up and get our dollars down he is selling United States dollars in order not to depress but to support the Canadian dollar, to stop it from going down too far.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: It is going down and it may go down too far because of loss of confidence in that dollar. One reason for that loss of confidence, in addition to certain ambiguous statements by the minister, was the shameless Coyne affair and the effects it had abroad.

Mr. Chevrier: It lowered the prestige of Canada.

Mr. Pearson: This operation which was to bolster our reserves, has cost our reserves about $350 million in the first three months of this year. I can only describe that, Mr. Chairman, as muddled manipulation of our dollar.

We ought to say a word about trade because that matter loomed quite large in the minister's statement, especially in that part of it which was not given to the house. The criticism of the minister and his colleagues in 1957 of the government of that day was that Canada had too many trade eggs in one basket. Since then the only new baskets of any significance in terms of trade which have been developed have been red China and Cuba. We remember the 15 per cent diversion boast in 1957 to transfer $500 million of imports from the United States to the United Kingdom. What a phony that turned out to be. We on this side, of course, knew that it was a hoax from the beginning. However, the British took the Canadian Prime Minister seriously and in order to assist him in achieving this objective they made a proposal for free trade between the two countries in September of 1957. After all, that was the only way in which this boast could have been fulfilled or in which this vision could have been realized. However, the Canadian government, their bluff having been called, treated this offer with silent contempt. They swept it under the rug and they hoped that everyone would forget that it had ever been made. However, the United Kingdom did not forget. They learned among other things how much importance was to be attached to the public declarations of the Prime Minister and his colleagues. After the dust had cleared away the Canadian government introduced a series of measures designed not to help but to hinder the ability of the United Kingdom to assist the Prime Minister to realize that 15 per cent diversion. They were pin pricking, protectionist measures.

Then let us look at the confusion about Canadian policy toward the United Kingdom and the European common market. It is impossible to resist the temptation to say a word or two about that matter especially as now some attention is being distracted from the past policy, the past attitude and the past words of the government in this matter. A year or so ago—about a year and a half ago—the British government gave clear indications for anyone who wished to understand them that it would seek to come to terms with the new European common market by membership, if possible on suitable terms. The Canadian government pooh-poohed our warnings that this might happen. They received many from this side of the house and they paid no attention to our suggestion that it should be a first requirement of Canadian policy also to try to come to terms and to make arrangements with this new and important European development. Instead of trying to bring this development across the Atlantic and transform it into something even bigger than a European arrangement, they decided to fight it and they went to Accra for that purpose. The Canadian government, instead of taking a constructive and farsighted approach, violently criticized the United Kingdom for seeking to join the European common market and warned of dire results for the commonwealth if that ever happened.

At this commonwealth meeting at Accra the Canadian delegation—and the Minister of Finance was one of them—acted like petulant children. That is how they were described in Canada and abroad at the time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Falsely described.

Mr. Pearson: There is other evidence of this purely carping and sterile attitude. We have the refusal of the Canadian high commissioner in London to attend a meeting of commonwealth representatives called by Mr. Heath to discuss European common market questions. We have the irritable and unnecessary complaint of the Minister of Finance that they were not shown the full text of Mr. Heath's statement last autumn to the European common market negotiators in Paris. Since that time we have had a full summary of that statement which was given to the minister at that time. We have been able to compare the summary with the full text which has also been made public, and it is quite clear that the summary contained every bit of substantial information that the full text contained.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: Of course.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is he not going to be frank enough to tell the committee that the summary was a summary of only one part of the speech?

Mr. Pearson: That is perfectly true, Mr. Chairman. There was a great deal of introductory matter in the speech. I have read the speech and I have read the summary and I say that every piece of substantial information in the speech which the Canadian government would have a right to have in negotiations of that kind was contained in the summary.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then does the hon. gentleman say that the full text should not have been made available to Canada and other commonwealth countries?

Mr. Pearson: This government, Mr. Chairman, is very sensitive about making public the texts of diplomatic documents when it is in the midst of negotiations with other governments, and it should exercise the same restraint in respect of other governments making texts available to them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will you answer the question?

Mr. Pearson: I tell the minister that he got all the information which the government required in the summary which was given to him and that has been proven by comparing the summary and the full text.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Now will you answer the question?

Mr. Pearson: Therefore, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will you answer the question?

Mr. Pearson: —the irascible and indignant complaints of the minister on this occasion were not only unwarranted but mischievous.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And your statement now is untrue, completely untrue. You ought to know better.

Mr. Pearson: Yet in the light of all this the Minister of Finance had the amazing effrontery to make a speech in Vancouver on March 29 in which he stated, and he has stated it before:

> Canada has shown no hostility toward the United Kingdom in connection with negotiations over the common market.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Very true.

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Trade and Commerce was even more absurd in his statement in Lethbridge on April 5—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You find the truth absurd.

Mr. Pearson: —when he is reported as having said:

> Canada is not trying to influence Britain on whether she should join the E.C.M. or not.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You do find the truth absurd, don't you?

Mr. Chevrier: He finds the minister absurd.

Mr. Pearson: I have comments here from British papers about the Canadian position and I have comments here from Canadian papers about the Canadian position. Are they all wrong? Is everybody in Great Britain and Canada wrong about the government's attitude? Can the minister find anything in any newspaper praising the attitude of the Canadian government at Accra?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, those that were acquainted with the facts.

Mr. Macdonnell: I should like to ask the Leader of the Opposition a question. He says he has comments from British newspapers as to what happened at Accra. Has he read what the London Economist, which I presume he respects, had to say?

Mr. Pearson: Indeed I have, and when I spoke about this before I put on the record exactly what the London Economist said and it was nothing to give any comfort to any member of the government. I wish I had it here.

Mr. Macdonnell: Will the Leader of the Opposition put the comment of the Economist on the record, or will he allow me to do so?

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps the hon. member would put it on the record at the end of my speech. I am frank to admit, Mr. Chairman, that there has been a very considerable change in the government's attitude and the government's words in the last few weeks. Of course they soon saw the reaction in this country to their policy at Accra. Frightened about the votes they would lose by his needless and carping criticism of the United Kingdom, this rather stupid attitude, the Prime Minister and his colleagues have since that time tried to beat a retreat and to swallow their earlier words, and the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have been doing some swallowing in that regard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not at all.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps at long last they are beginning to realize that to protect Canadian interests it is not necessary to irritate everybody else.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the heart of the problem.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is necessary to deny what you are saying because it is not true.

Mr. Pearson: As the London Telegraph or Sunday Times said at that time, people want to be on good terms with the Canadian government but it is almost impossible to be on good terms. Surely the government is now aware of the fact that in order to support the commonwealth it is not sensible needlessly to offend the most important member of the commonwealth.

In short, Mr. Chairman, the conduct by this government of its trade relations with the United Kingdom has been characterized by shortsighted and angry stupidity. And this is the government that at every possible opportunity shouts from the housetops on every conceivable occasion its devotion to the commonwealth association. Again, it is a case of words rather than action.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You certainly have never done anything for the commonwealth.

Mr. Pearson: I prefer to let my attitude to the commonwealth be shown by deeds rather than by words.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You dragged your feet at every commonwealth conference you ever attended.

Mr. Pearson: As for becoming less dependant on the United States for trade, this is what the Minister of Finance is reported in the Vancouver Sun as having said in that city on March 29 last:

> Canada will have to follow Washington's trading policies to adjust successfully to changing patterns of world trade.

Mr. Hellyer: What an about-face that was.

Mr. Pearson: The minister also said at Saranac, New York, on April 7, the day before the budget speech, I believe:

> We are fortunate these days in witnessing the constructive and imaginative leadership of the United States.

I wish we had some constructive and imaginative leadership in this government, Mr. Chairman.

Having talked about trade relations with the United Kingdom, I should like to look for a moment at the external trade picture generally and the figures for our exports, because those figures constitute one of the biggest boasts of the government. We will hear a great deal about them in the weeks ahead. The Prime Minister and other ministers have claimed, certainly the Minister of Trade and Commerce has done so, that in 1961 Canada experienced the greatest growth in our exports in our history. That was the statement made by the Prime Minister. That growth, and it is one from which Canada can take satisfaction, was something over 9 per cent over 1960. I believe it was a very small amount over 9 per cent, but notwithstanding what the Prime Minister said in the exuberance of his imagination about this being the greatest growth in our exports in our history, in six of the eleven post-war years our exports increased by more than 9 per cent. This is an instance of what I have just referred to as the exuberant use of statistics.

We admit, of course, that exports increased last year and it is a very good thing they did. Let us hope they will increase even more this year. But while our exports may have increased this cannot obscure the fact that our relative position in world trade has gone down since 1956, and that is something which should cause every Canadian some worry.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Our trade has not gone down since 1956.

Mr. Pickersgill: Relatively.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: The Canadian share of world trade has gone down since 1956, and if the minister gets any satisfaction—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Canadian trade has gone away up since 1956, one record after another. Why don't you tell the whole truth?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The fifth trading nation now.

Mr. Pearson: If the minister wants to speak, let him get up on his feet. I am giving statistics which are true.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are distorting the facts.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is annoyed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A travesty of distortion.

Mr. Pearson: Let me repeat what the Prime Minister said.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was the Minister of Finance treated this way in the budget debate?

Mr. Pearson: I am not worried about him. He is a little upset tonight by this exposure of his financial policies. I am going to repeat what the Prime Minister said because the Minister of Finance does not accept it. The Prime Minister claimed that in 1961 Canada experienced the greatest growth in our exports, a 9 per cent increase. I tell the minister that in six of the eleven post-war years Canada's exports increased by more than 9 per cent. Let him try to reconcile these two statements if he can. I also say to the minister that our relative position in world trade has gone down since 1956, notwithstanding certain ministers' attempts to try to do something about it. In 1956, which was the last full year of Liberal administration, this country exported $5,254 million worth of goods. I use United States dollars so a comparison will be made on the same basis as world exports which are reported in United States dollars; that is the United States dollar figure. World exports for that year were $93,960 million.

Mr. Harkness: You had a trade deficit in those years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, look after your Bomarcs.

Mr. Harkness: You don't like the truth.

Mr. Pearson: In 1961—

Mr. Chevrier: Fire a few more civil servants.

The Chairman: Order; with these continual exchanges I have some difficulty in hearing what is being said.

Mr. Pearson: In 1961, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to proceed in relative calm, Canada exported $6,076 million, which is a very considerable increase over 1956. However, world exports had increased in that year to $118,300 million; in other words, world exports expanded by 25.9 per cent during this five year period while Canada's exports expanded by 15.6 per cent. In 1956, Canada was fourth largest exporter in the world, and in 1961 she was fifth.

Our exports by destinations are significant. They went up during this period to the United States, in 1961, $162 million or 5.5 per cent to $3,198 million. These are exports to the United States, and this is the basket which used to worry hon. gentlemen opposite when they criticized us. Our exports to the United Kingdom last year went down $5 million to $920 million. Our exports to the rest of the world, and this increase is largely to communist China, went up $342 million or 31 per cent to $1,443 million.

Our imports from the United States were up last year by 4.9 per cent to $3,874 million. Our imports from the United Kingdom were up 6.2 per cent to $625 million.

Now, this increase in our exports, from which we can take satisfaction, is due largely as I have already indicated to sales of grain to communist countries, mainly China, and that is not a very substantial or permanent basis for an increase; to devaluation and to increased sales to Japan and Cuba. Much as we welcome the increased sales to any country, we cannot help but be preoccupied by the nature of these increases when they go to destinations which do not provide a continuing and solid foundation for the kind of increase we would like to see happen. As the Globe and Mail said on January 30, 1962, and I quote from this editorial:

> Particularly pleasant was the rise in exports of wheat, which made up the larger part of the increase, for our wheat farmers have not generally shared in Canada's advancing prosperity in the last ten years.

Then, the editorial continues:

> Let us enjoy this pleasure while we may, for the additional sales of wheat were more the result of China's bad luck than our good management.

The Minister of National Defence, in his interruption a few minutes ago, talked about our favourable balance of merchandise trade. Of course, at the moment, this represents the most popular talking point of government spokesmen who are dealing with trade. This is their biggest boast, Mr. Chairman. It is quite true. We can take, all of us, satisfaction out of the fact that our merchandise trade last year showed a favourable balance of $179 million as compared with an unfavourable balance of $145 million in 1960. I believe, Mr. Chairman, in giving all the statistics on each side of this question, unlike some government spokesmen. This is an important change for the better and is a gain of $324 million in our balance of merchandise trade.

Our non-merchandise trade, Mr. Chairman —government spokesmen do not talk about this—had an unfavourable balance of $1,070 million in 1960. This unfavourable balance went up to $1,168 million in 1961, or a loss of $96 million. We do not hear these figures from government spokesmen or from government propagandists. The result of this is that in 1961 our total unfavourable balance of payments, merchandise and non-merchandise, was $989 million, almost $1 billion. This means, Mr. Chairman, that our current account deficit for 1961, merchandise and non-merchandise, amounted to almost $1 billion. If the minister tells me that is a better figure than last year, I say that is true. But I would point out to the committee that for the five years, 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955 and 1956, our current account deficits totalled $2,726 million, or an average annual current account deficit of $545 million. What is the picture for the five years 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961? The total accumulated current account deficit was $6,113 million or an average annual current account deficit of $1,222 million. This is what the government calls improvement in our position.

The government has taken a great deal of satisfaction out of what they call the great improvement in the economic situation. The government is boasting about the economic recovery that has been taking place since the spring of 1961.

Mr. Walker: This is a dull speech.

Mr. Pearson: If the Minister of Public Works would just refrain from his normal bad mannered practice of interrupting—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: If he must talk however, Mr. Chairman, perhaps he will be able to restrict his language to that which is customary in parliament instead of the language he used the other night.

Mr. Walker: Will the hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Walker: —say whether Walter Gordon, who is in the house tonight, wrote this very dull speech?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pearson: I did not hear what the minister said but I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that I missed very much.

Well, Mr. Chairman, of course there has been recovery in our economy. We predicted it early in 1961. We thought the minister was a little pessimistic at that time. We expected, of course, on this side that the recovery would continue through the most of 1962. As I said earlier in my speech, Mr. Chairman, it is a normal movement in the business cycle.

Mr. Creaghan: You hope not.

Mr. Pearson: I did not catch that additional interruption from some hon. member who did not stand up.

Mr. Creaghan: I will repeat it. I said, you hope not.

Mr. Pearson: I think he said that we hope this—

An hon. Member: You are extremely dull.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member says that we on this side hope the improvement will not continue. That is what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, and that is what the Minister of Public Works said outside this house. Mr. Chairman, whenever that kind of statement is made I call it a slanderous falsehood. That is what it is, and although I know that having called it that, that is not going to prevent the Minister of Public Works from using those words whenever he sees fit.

Mr. Walker: Your days are numbered.

Mr. Pearson: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, this is the kind of policy or lack of policy we have been getting from the government. I charge the government with not doing anything to meet this predictable end, with not putting into effect the kind of policies that will be needed to meet this problem if and when it arises. They are taking refuge in extravagant optimistic hopes that something will turn up to get them out of the trouble in which they have been for the last five years. Yet, Mr. Chairman, when we call attention to these difficulties and dangers that may lie ahead, what reply do we get from the minister and his colleagues, especially from the loquacious Minister of Public Works with his eloquent parliamentary language? We get the reply that we are prophets of doom and gloom.

We get that reply in spite of the fact that we point out that every prediction the Minister of Finance has made about the economy has been wrong, that he has been extravagantly over optimistic in everything he has said, and that every estimate he made has been wrong every time about what was going to happen.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: I am always delighted to hear the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Has he completely forgotten that the deficit for the fiscal year 1958-59 was substantially less than I had forecast?

Mr. Denis: You were wrong.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let us hear what your leader has to say.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has just convicted himself out of his own mouth. He says he was wrong away back in 1958-59 but, Mr. Chairman, this was the only time he was wrong in the right way.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not what you said a moment ago.

Mr. Pearson: Not only has he been wrong the right way once but he has been wrong in the wrong way many times. However, I am glad he was wrong in the right way once, but that was away back in 1958.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Don't you think you were extravagantly wrong just now?

Mr. Pearson: When the minister and his colleagues try to get out of their difficulty by criticizing those who expose their weakness and call attention to the problems facing him, they call us prophets of doom and gloom. I say, Mr. Chairman, that is merely cheap politics and demagoguery. Nothing we have said in this house about the economic position at the present time has been contradicted by outside objective observers. I could quote, as I have done, the president of the Newfoundland-Anglo Development Company. I could also quote the ex-governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Graham Towers, who said our economy is not growing sufficiently to take care of the demands made on it.

I could also quote another very eminent economic authority whom the Prime Minister loves to quote, Mr. Michael Barkway, who said in the Citizen on April 2:

> Amongst economic experts who have no political axe to grind recent weeks have brought a distinct moderating of optimism about both the length and strength of the business pick-up.

All we asked was that the government realize that some of these things may happen, and that in the budget put forward by the Minister of Finance there might be some policy to deal with them if they do happen. But all we have had was a little more of the old stuff we have had during the last four years. It is too late and it is not good enough.

All the big decisions of this government are always being postponed. On this occasion we have got just a little more of their usual treatment for economic recovery, a little of the same, and it is the same four years too late. The problems are piling up. Yet the government ignore them and fall back on their favorite motto—save the surface and you save all.

We have had continuous growth of our debt over the last five years, a piling up of deficits without the economic growth and employment that would justify them. We are having more and more international indebtedness and greater and greater foreign control. We had four years of refusal by the government to do anything about the dollar, and now they are trying by frantic efforts to keep it from dropping too far. We have had devaluation by loss of confidence. We have had fumbling and uncertainty in international trade policies. We have had an increase in exports, but it is dependant on markets which give no assurance of stability or continued growth.

We have had a continued postponement of solutions to the problems that are facing this country but, Mr. Chairman, that continued postponement is nearly over because the time is coming when this government will have to give an account of their stewardship to the Canadian people—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And happy they are to do it.

Mr. Pearson: —and the Canadian people will decide on the record of that stewardship.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is what you said in 1958.

Mr. Pearson: That is what I am saying in 1962.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The result will be the same.

Mr. Pearson: Not according to the recent test of public opinion carried out by an agency asked to do this test by the Toronto Telegram.

An hon. Member: You went south of the border.

Mr. Pearson: That paper initiated and financially sponsored this test, but when the results came out in the last week or so they were so damning for the Conservative party that the newspaper which initiated this test refused to publish the results.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Was the man who composed the speech being delivered by the Leader of the Opposition the same man who was responsible for the liquidation of Canada Cottons Limited in Cornwall?

Mr. Pearson: That is probably the last interjection the hon. member is going to make during this session, and perhaps his last intervention in a Canadian parliament. May I tell him that this interjection is characteristic of all the others that have preceded it in this parliament.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Will the Leader of the Opposition answer my question?

The Chairman: Order. The Leader of the Opposition has not yielded the floor.

Mr. Pearson: In closing I think I can do no better as this parliament comes to its untidy end, than to quote Oliver Cromwell. Unlike the doughty editor of the Ottawa Journal, who perhaps does not know his Cromwell as well as he knows his Burke and Meighen, I shall quote the whole passage.

Mr. Walker: This is your valedictory.

Mr. Pearson: This is what Cromwell said about a parliament, and it could be applied to the Conservative members of this parliament as it comes to its unlamented end:

> You have sat there too long for the little good that you do. It is time to make way for better men. In the name of God—go.

Mr. Chairman, it is time for this government to make way for a better one.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam surely must have had your eye before the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

An hon. Member: You can't take it, eh?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Under our rules it is understood that the parties are given a fair opportunity to present their side of the case. The Minister of Finance had over two hours when he presented his budget. Following him there was the Leader of the Opposition. To deny the hon. gentleman who stands immediately to your left the opportunity of speaking would be a violation of the rights of hon. members of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Denis: Closure.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Essex East has raised a point of order and I will hear the hon. minister on the point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, we are in committee of ways and means. I have not spoken in this committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Monopoly of debate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The last speaker was from the opposition. I now claim the right to use the five and a half minutes that remain to make some reply.

Mr. Howard: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, hon. members opposite are engaging in a time killing manoeuvre to prevent free speech in this house.

The Chairman: Order. I cannot hear more than one hon. member at a time. I understand the hon. member for Skeena has risen on a question of privilege.

Mr. Howard: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In accordance with the right provided by the rules, I move that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam be now heard.

The Chairman: Moved by Mr. Howard, seconded by Mr. Herridge—

An hon. Member: This is Liberal closure.

The Chairman: —that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam be now heard. All those in favour of the motion will please rise.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Liberal closure.

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Impersonation.

Mr. Denis: A new type of closure.

Mr. Deschatelets: The committee is over now.

Motion (Mr. Howard) negatived: Yeas, 35; nays, 49.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order. I will hear the hon. member for Laurier on a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: My point of order is that after the vote was called and while it was being taken the Postmaster General came in. That is contrary to the rules of the house. He should therefore not have voted and his vote should not be counted.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, I was just seeking simple words that the opposition could understand, and trying to simply phrase them. Certainly I came in after the vote was called. However, as the hon. member knows perfectly well, this rule applies only when the Speaker is in the chair.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): When the house is in committee an hon. member may come in at any time—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): — until the row has been counted.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, may I make a comment on the point of order and in respect of what the Postmaster General has just said. On previous votes in committee, on two separate occasions I have raised a similar point of order without naming the hon. members who came in late. On each occasion the chairman of the committee at that time agreed that my point of order was well taken and that hon. members should not enter the chamber when a vote was being taken in committee.

The Chairman: Standing order 12, paragraph 2 reads:

> When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the house, or make any noise or disturbance.

There is no doubt that by analogy the same rule will apply in committee. Therefore I believe that one vote should be deducted from the count made.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. Churchill: Ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Closure.

Mr. Nesbitt: Typical Liberal closure.

The Chairman: Order. Before I put the motion may I ask if the hon. member would defer his motion, as it is now ten o'clock and we could call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be very happy to withdraw the motion, sir.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, it was stated that the Postmaster General came into the chamber while the vote was being taken. The hon. member for Cape Breton South also came in after the vote started.

The Chairman: The same alteration would apply.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, the hon. member for Hull has called attention to the fact that I came in from behind the curtain after the vote was called.

Mr. Caron: Yes, you did.

Mr. MacInnis: If my eyes served me right, the hon. member also came in after the vote was called.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock—

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Cape Breton South said that I came into the chamber after the vote was called. I was in here when the vote was called. I came in before the vote was called. The hon. member came in after the vote was called, and there is quite a difference.

Mr. Denis: Get some glasses.

The Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I take it that tomorrow we will continue with this debate.

Mr. Churchill: More of the same tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps on Thursday.

Mr. Denis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: They cannot make up their minds about anything, poor fellows.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if unanimous consent could be given with respect to tomorrow's order paper; that is, to having private members' bills printed for private members hour and giving them precedence during that hour.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deschatelets: I did not hear what was said.

Mr. Speaker: It has been suggested by the parliamentary secretary that the private bills be printed on tomorrow's order paper and by unanimous consent be given precedence during private members' hour.

Mr. Howard: I think we would agree to that if the hon. gentleman has any expectation of making progress on them.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that private bills be printed under private members' business tomorrow with priority?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

It being two minutes past ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 18, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXCISE TAX

AMENDMENT OF RESOLUTION RESPECTING SALES TAX

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the practice I followed in previous years I should like to give notice of an amendment to the Excise Tax Act resolution which I intend to move when this resolution comes before the committee of ways and means in due course. The amendment is merely to change the effective date of paragraph 7 of the Excise Tax Act resolution.

The paragraph in question deals with the liability for sales tax when certain equipment is diverted from a tax exempt use to a taxable use. It now provides that legislation based thereon is to become effective from budget night. The amendment I propose provides that this legislation shall come into force on receiving royal assent. In view of the expected delay in the enactment of legislation based on the budget resolutions it is considered that this paragraph, which concerns the administration and collection of sales tax, should not be considered as having come into effect on budget night and instead should await the passage of legislation.

I think I should give the text of the proposed amendment.

That paragraph 9 of the Excise Tax Act resolution be amended to read as follows:

"9. That any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 to 6 of this resolution be deemed to have come into force on April 11, 1962, that any enactment founded on paragraph 7 of this resolution shall come into force on the date the said enactment is assented to, and that any enactment founded on paragraph 8 of this resolution be applicable in respect of contracts of insurance entered into or renewed after April 10, 1962."

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REMOVAL FROM MARKET OF DRUG MER 29

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on March 30 I made a brief statement in the house relative to a drug called thalidomide which has been removed from the market. Last Monday similar action had to be taken regarding another new drug, MER 29, and I understand that parallel steps were carried out in the United States.

I might add that in order that the procedure for reviewing new drugs should encompass the most complete assurances of their safety, I have today requested the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada to set up an ad hoc committee to consider procedures which the department has followed for over 10 years.

I am most anxious, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada receive the full benefit of advances in medical science as soon as safety has been determined. I trust that the action being taken today will be reassuring in this regard.

TRADE

GATT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FURTHER RESULTS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce some further results of the GATT tariff negotiations which have been taking place in Geneva.

During the tariff conference Israel, Portugal, Cambodia and Spain engaged in tariff negotiations with several countries in order to complete the necessary steps for their accession as member countries to GATT. This will bring the membership of the GATT to 44 members, accounting for well over 80 per cent of world trade.

In our negotiations with Israel and Portugal, concessions of interest to Canadian exporters were secured. In addition, indirect benefits accrue to Canada by virtue of bilateral negotiations between these two acceding countries and third countries including the United States. The results of the United States negotiations with these two countries have already been drawn to the attention of the house in my announcement of April 6.

Tariff reductions obtained from Israel of interest to Canadian exporters include the following: wheat, aluminum, synthetic rubbers, phenol and radio navigational instruments. Bindings against tariff increases were secured on hoops and strips of iron and steel, internal combustion engines and cattle hides.

Portugal has agreed to reduce the duty on flaxseed, synthetic rubbers, copper, synthetic fibre threads and yarns, films and refrigeration apparatus. Existing rates on salted cod were bound against increase.

In return, Canada has agreed to bind the existing free entry on oranges, almonds, boards and blocks of cork, ripe olives in brine and unset diamonds. Canada also agreed to bind the existing rates on corks and to reduce the duty on manufactures of cork from 15 per cent to 10 per cent.

Canada did not negotiate directly with Cambodia, but all tariff reductions agreed upon between Cambodia and third countries will be available to Canada. The results of these negotiations will be announced later. With respect to Spain, negotiations have been successfully concluded between Canada and Spain and it is expected that the results of all Spain's negotiations will be made public shortly.

I wish now to table three copies each of the protocols providing for the accession of Israel and Portugal to the general agreement which Canada signed at Geneva on April 6.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RATES ON CULTURAL AND OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-88, to amend the Post Office Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): This bill is designed to implement certain recommendations contained in the report of the royal commission on publications and, specifically, to eliminate for all publications local delivery rates of postage and to reduce rates on cultural publications and certain other special classes, allowing the first 5,000 copies of such publications to be carried free of charge.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*SURVEY OF INDIAN RESERVES, SASK.

Question No. 424—Mr. Howard:

With respect to Mr. Joseph Dreaver and his duties to survey the Indians of Saskatchewan in respect of their reactions and recommendations concerning the findings of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian affairs (a) has he made any report or reports as to his findings; and, if so, what does the report or reports contain (b) is he under any obligation to report by a certain time; and, if so, what are the details surrounding this (c) what procedures and systems does he use in conducting this survey, and who developed them (d) how long will he be employed (e) what travelling expenses have been incurred (f) what are the names of the reserves which he has visited in the course of his survey, and upon what dates did he visit each such reserve (g) has he visited any organizations of Indians; and, if so, upon what dates?

Mrs. Fairclough: The answer to this question is as follows:

(a) Yes. An interim report has been received, the contents of which are privileged.

(b) Further reports will be submitted by Mr. Dreaver from time to time as the survey progresses.

(c) The systems and procedure to be used in the survey are the responsibility of Mr. Dreaver.

(d) One year or until such time as the survey is completed, whichever is the lesser.

(e) Travelling expenses are included in the per diem payment for Mr. Dreaver's services.

(f) Mr. Dreaver has visited the Big River, Sandy Lake, Muskeg Lake, Wahpaton Sioux, Red Pheasant and Sweet Grass Indian reserves. The information as to dates of these visits is not presently available.

(g) Yes. Mr. Dreaver has met with members of the Onion Lake and Meadow Lake bands, a member of the executive of the Queen Victoria treaty association, the executive committee of the federation of Saskatchewan Indians, the president of the independent Indian association, members of the executive of the Battleford, Regina and Prince Albert Indian and Metis societies. Mr. Dreaver has also met with Indian trappers at Prince Albert and Indians from northern Saskatchewan reserves at Buffalo Narrows.

BUTTER OIL—SALES, AMOUNT IN STORAGE, ETC.

Question No. 449—Mr. Matheson:

1. How much butter taken into storage has had to be converted into butter oil since March 31, 1958?

2. What volume of butter oil has been sold since March 31, 1958, and for what total price?

3. What volume of butter oil is now held in storage, and what is its approximate value?

4. What is the estimated loss sustained since March 31, 1958, as a result of failure to sell butter in that form and its necessary conversion to butter oil?

Answer by: Mr. Charlton:

1. No butter had to be converted to butter oil, but as the weight of butter oil is approximately 80 per cent of the weight of butter, conversion is desirable in order that storage costs be minimized. Since March 31, 1958, 100,215,629 pounds of butter have been converted to butter oil.

2. 1,762,087 pounds of butter oil have been sold for $1,374,427.86.

3. 78,474,292 pounds of butter oil, with an inventory value of $61,209,947.76.

4. The saving in storage costs will compensate for the cost of converting butter to butter oil and therefore there is no loss to date.

*YARMOUTH HOUSING LTD.—CHECK ON TENANTS' QUALIFICATIONS

Question No. 450—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is there any agreement between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and Yarmouth Housing Limited as to tenants' qualifications in respect to incomes, and as to rentals charged; and, if so, is a check ever made to ascertain whether terms of the agreement are being carried out?

2. When was the last such check, if any, made, and with what result?

Mr. Walker:

1 and 2. The corporation entered into two agreements with Yarmouth Housing Limited in regard to limited dividend projects consisting of 24 and 32 units respectively. Both agreements contain tenant income qualifications and rental rate restrictions.

The projects are inspected annually by the corporation in regard to physical condition and rental administration. The last inspections were made in May 1961 and inspections for the current year are scheduled for June. At the time of the last inspection the company's records reflected that all tenants qualified for occupancy under the agreement with the corporation and income declaration forms were due for renewal in January 1962. It was verified that rental rates approved by the corporation were in effect at the time of the last inspection.

GAP FILLER STATION—CONTRACTS FOR U.S. PRODUCTS

Question No. 455—Mr. Fisher:

How many American products, of what kind and to what value, were supplied or whose approval for supply have been approved by the government in the contracts relating to gap filler stations?

Answer by: Mr. Chambers:

Under the cost-sharing arrangements with the United States covering the construction of 45 gap fillers to be located in Canada, the construction of bases and the provision of unit equipment is being provided by Canada.

The United States is responsible for and is absorbing the cost of the supply, installation and testing of technical equipment. The radars are of U.S. manufacture but are being installed by Canadian firms. The communications equipment is of Canadian manufacture and is also being installed by Canadian firms.

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO QUEBEC SINCE 1956-57

Question No. 456—Mr. Grafftey:

What amounts have been paid, by fiscal years commencing 1956-57, out of the federal treasury to or for the benefit of the province of Quebec?

Answer by: Mr. Fleming (Eglinton):

The attached table shows the amounts including tax abatements which have been contributed out of the federal treasury to or for the benefit of the province of Quebec for fiscal years 1956-57 to 1961-62, together with the estimated contributions for the year 1962-63.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

SUBMISSIONS ON BILL C-38

Motion No. 50—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all briefs, letters, and submissions presented to the government or any agency or branch thereof since January 22, 1961, dealing with Bill C-38.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): We are prepared to accept this motion with the reservation that documents of a confidential nature, or documents which are ordinarily privileged, will not be expected to be produced. As this bill was introduced in the house only on January 22, 1962, there can be no briefs dealing with Bill C-38 as such prior to that date.

Mr. Howard: I am sorry that did not come to my attention earlier. That "1961" is a typographical error. It should be 1962.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that an amendment be made in the motion so that it will read 1962?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the parliamentary secretary is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BEAUCEVILLE, QUE.—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY

Motion No. 52—Mr. Racine:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, options, and contracts concerning the purchase of a lot for the construction of a public building in Beauceville, together with a copy of all contracts or other documents now in the possession of the Department of Public Works relating to this property.

Mr. Roberge: I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine).

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member for Megantic may proceed in the absence of the hon. member for Beauce?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why not?

An hon. Member: You are afraid.

Mr. Pigeon: No, we are not afraid; he is not in the house.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege having to do with this motion as well as questions in the name of the hon. member for Beauce which were raised as a question of privilege in the house some time ago. The points I raise are two in number. First, there are five questions standing in the name of the hon. member, certainly the vast majority of which could have been answered in a very short time.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: They were not answered—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Laurier will agree with me that delay in answering a question, or the absence of an answer, does not raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Hellyer: The government has to keep the old cabbage leaves well covered.

Mr. Chevrier: In view of the serious allegations made by the hon. member, I think it would be appropriate to answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: However, dealing with the motion, if the minister and the government, who seem to be unmoved by the questions and the motion, are so sure of the facts it seems to me they should accept the motion.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I thought perhaps the hon. member was raising a point of order as to whether the motion could be placed before the house in the absence of the hon. member in whose name it stands. My impression is that without the consent of the house a substitute mover is not acceptable.

Mr. Chevrier: I was coming to that point, Mr. Speaker, and I was going to ask you to invite the house, in view of the question of privilege raised by my hon. friend, to decide that this is one of those cases wherein unanimous consent might well be given.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: If he had any sense of responsibility, he would be in the house.

(Text):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Laurier, if it was felt to be important that the hon. member for Beauce should clarify this question, I think he should be in the house now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am advised that the practice which the house has followed in the case of motions coming before the house in the absence of the mover is that if the motion is opposed, the mover must be present; if the motion is unopposed, the house has normally allowed a substitute mover. In those circumstances perhaps the minister concerned could indicate whether the motion is accepted.

Mr. Churchill: The minister asked for it to stand, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Denis: They have got something to hide.

Mr. Pickersgill: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Chevrier: Let us hear from the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It has been requested that the motion stand, and in the absence of the mover the motion will have to stand. No. 53, Mr. Pickersgill—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, at least the minister could have accepted your invitation to explain the position of the government.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, we have hundreds of questions to answer, and we are doing our best to get around to answering them.

Mr. Hellyer: Hundreds more like this one?

Mr. Walker: You cannot make a silk purse out of a a sow's ear; I am not going any further.

Mr. Pearson: That is perfectly true.

IMMIGRATION—ADMISSION OF WIVES OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Motion No. 53—Mr. Pickersgill:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a letter addressed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on March 5, 1962, by Ian G. Wahn of Toronto, regarding the difficulty experienced by two Canadian citizens in having their wives admitted to Canada, together with a copy of any acknowledgment made by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, in view of the fact that this may be the last day of the session. Can she say whether, in her reply to the letter from Mr. Wahn, about which a motion was accepted by the hon. lady today, she indicated that the wives of these two Canadian citizens were to be admitted to Canada?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The wives of Canadian citizens who comply with Canadian regulations are always admitted.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister whether the wives of these particular Canadian citizens have complied with the regulations?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mrs. Fairclough: There seems to be some confusion as to identity, and when it is cleared up they will be admitted.

ENGINEERS' COMMITTEE REPORT, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER AND MONTREAL HARBOUR

Motion No. 54—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report of the committee of engineers, designated as the St. Lawrence river and Montreal harbour committee 1950.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the document referred to in this motion is a departmental report. Under the long established practice of the house, departmental or interdepartmental documents are considered privileged. In the circumstances I would hope my hon. friend would agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Fisher: I would ask to have it transferred pursuant to standing order No. 47, when it will be open for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 47 this motion is transferred to notices of motions (papers).

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO VISIT OF WESTERN DELEGATION RESPECTING DROUGHT RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture whether a delegation representing western agriculture waited on the government yesterday in connection with drought relief. If so, can he report to the house?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): I have no knowledge of anything along that line.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED CALL FROM B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the report of an interesting telephone call from Premier Bennett of British Columbia to the Minister of Finance on Monday last, is the minister in a position to satisfy the ever-increasing curiosity concerning this most unusual report and will the minister inform the house of the facts?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I have had various telephone conversations with Premier Bennett over the last two or three weeks. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would particularize the report he has in mind.

Mr. Herridge: It was a report which many of us consider there are good grounds for believing, to the effect that the premier of British Columbia suggested it might be necessary to call an immediate election in certain circumstances.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The premier indicated his wish that parliament should ratify the treaty before dissolution, but he did not indicate to me that he proposed to call a provincial general election in British Columbia if that course were not followed.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

PROTEST RESPECTING SUBMARINE CONSTRUCTION ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Bissonnette (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production.

Would the minister care to comment on a telegram from the Lauzon shipbuilding workers' unions addressed to several members from the Quebec area, to protest against the building of Canadian submarines abroad?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, on April 17 I received a telegram from the workers' unions of Lauzon, protesting against the construction of a submarine in England.

First, I must say that no contract of the kind was awarded abroad, and if it should ever happen, I can assure the workers of Lauzon that they will be protected by other contracts more beneficial to them, such as the construction of frigates provided for in the new program, as well as the conversion of frigates of the existing fleet, and their share of repairs to our warships, as in the past.

We want to provide work for our defence industry in compensation for contracts we award abroad, and that, always in order to help certain sectors of that industry which are now undergoing some serious difficulties, like our aircraft industries, for instance.

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Does the Minister of Defence Production not think that the very idea of asking for tenders—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Bourget: —in view of buying submarines in England is an insult to our shipyards as well as to our qualified workmen in Lauzon and elsewhere in Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for Levis speaks of insults, he should get some information with regard to circumstances connected with this matter.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question. Is it the policy of this government, in view of helping our Canadian industries at a time when we have many hundred thousand unemployed people, to consider the question of dollars and cents?

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Levis wants to discuss the matter of Canadian defence contracts, I am ready to explain what we have done and to point out the premiums we have paid to keep those defence contracts in Canada, but there is a limit to the amount we can pay in order to do so.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, another supplementary question. Does the minister—

(Text):

A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The last two supplementaries appeared to me to be more of the order of a debate than a search for information. I recognize the hon. member for St. John's West.

Mr. Bourget: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I should like to address myself to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Bourget: The matter concerns—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will come to the hon. member in due course. I recognize the hon. member for Lapointe.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

On February 26 last I asked the Secretary of State, through the Minister of Transport, to provide me with certain documents concerning the Boisjoli affair. I wonder if I will get an answer before the dissolution of parliament is announced.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): I shall take the hon. member's question as notice and try to answer it as soon as possible.

(Text):

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, and ask him when I might expect an answer to starred questions Nos. 356 and 357, passed as orders for returns on April 2. These are simple questions directed to the Department of Transport, and certainly would not require the amount of investigation that was required for the questions the Minister of Transport answered today.

Mr. Dorion: I shall make every effort to give an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I should like to ask the Secretary of State when he expects to be in a position to answer question No. 406, which was passed as an order for return and which related to conditions prevailing on Halfway House, Blueberry and Prophet river reserves?

Mr. Dorion: I do not know if it will be possible to answer tomorrow, but I will try.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Stinson (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. However, before doing so I should like to thank him and all other members for the many messages they were kind enough to send to me when I was in the hospital. Has the Prime Minister any comment to make on the story appearing in the press today to the effect that the commonwealth prime ministers' conference is to be held on September 10?

An hon. Member: He will not be there.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As the house knows, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom has communicated with the various prime ministers of the countries of the commonwealth, and I would expect that an announcement will be made by him in this regard very soon.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. If the election had been held on September 12, as the Prime Minister suggested yesterday, would this not have interfered with the holding of the commonwealth conference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman should be complimented on his kind remarks.

[Mr. Dorion.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that we have enough difficulty with questions that are pertinent without dealing with those that are hypothetical.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

OTTAWA—RENTAL OF HOTEL ROOMS FOR POLITICAL CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, who is accountable to the house for the C.N.R.

Could the minister give some information to the house concerning the rental of several rooms in the Chateau Laurier for a political convention to be held in the fall for the election of a new party leader? Apparently the rooms have been rented recently by the hon. member for Essex East.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the house that I would not want to interfere in any way with the campaign of my hon. friend for Essex East.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is he aware that the publication entitled "Northern Neighbours, Canada's Reliable and Independent Magazine reporting the U.S.S.R.", is presently classified as second class mail, and will he give consideration to reclassifying the magazine so that the Canadian people will not be subsidizing the distribution of such questionable propaganda?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I have some doubt that "Northern Neighbours" is either reliable or independent. I agree with him when he says that it seems to be U.S.S.R. propaganda. However, the Postmaster General does not classify magazines as being eligible for second class rates. The laws of the country establish certain qualifications which, if met, allow any publications to benefit from the second class rates. This publication meets those qualifications. It is therefore entitled to second class rates. I might add that I do not accept the implication in the question that the Postmaster General should assume the responsibility for censorship of that which passes through the mails. I have trust and confidence in the Canadian people themselves to make their decisions. I do not think we need a censorship branch in the Post Office Department.

SUGGESTED COMMEMORATIVE STAMP OF PRESENT MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Some hon. Members: The last question.

Mr. Denis: I should like to know from him if he will recommend to the next Liberal government the issuance of a stamp bearing the minister's picture in commemoration of the most photogenic, expensive and ineffective postmaster general in Canada's history?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should very much like to accommodate this last request of the hon. member, but there are two obstacles which stand in the way. When I said "last request" I meant "death-bed request". As for the two obstacles, I would point out that the hon. member referred to the wrong party as forming the next government; and second, to be commemorated on a postage stamp one must not be alive. I hope to be both alive and here in this position if the Prime Minister so wishes when this house next convenes.

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question. Out of the millions of dollars given away in the last few days of this parliament and to be paid out of government deficits, would the minister spare a dime for the installation of one of his magic plastic mail boxes for the people of St. Denis, who have not seen one yet?

Mr. Ricard: Who wrote that for you?

Mr. Denis: Not Ricard, anyway.

TRANSPORT

WOOD ISLAND-CARIBOU—INQUIRY AS TO NEW FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Margaret Macdonald (Kings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Is he in a position to advise the house when a new ferry will be built for the Wood Island-Caribou service?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I am very pleased to tell the hon. lady and the house that an agreement has been worked out between Northumberland Ferries Limited and the government for the building of a new ferry by Northumberland Ferries Limited for the Wood Island-Caribou service. I understand that for this contract, which will be eligible for a subsidy of 40 per cent, tenders will be called very soon so that the building of the ship will be undertaken in the very near future.

While I am on my feet and while I am mentioning this 40 per cent subsidy and talking about shipbuilding, I should like to remind the hon. member for Levis that the Bonaventure or the aircraft carrier that is the largest ship of our fleet and that was bought by the previous government was built in Belfast.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether this ferry to which he referred in his answer to the hon. lady today is the same ferry which during consideration of the supplementary estimates he told us was going to be built?

Mr. Balcer: During consideration of the estimates I said that treasury board had approved the decision. Now agreement has been reached between the two parties.

Mr. Pickersgill: Who is wasting the time of the house?

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Can the minister tell the house about the size of that ship? Is it of the nature of the Lord Selkirk now in service?

Mr. Balcer: This vessel will be of the most modern roll-on/roll-off type and will be able to load and unload the full complement of automobiles in a matter of minutes. The overall length will be approximately 250 feet, with a maximum speed of 14 knots. Capacity will be 60 automobiles and 350 passengers with up to date accommodation for the crew. The ship will also be able to handle the largest size trailer trucks.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Levis has a supplementary question?

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): May I ask the minister what will be the name of the captain, and also his age?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker—

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should also like to ask the minister a supplementary question.

Mr. Churchill: Let him answer the first one.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say when this ship will be ready for service?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to answer the first question. When the ship is christened I think the question of my hon.

friend will be answered. However, I think a proper name for that ship would be the Mrs. Macdonald, in view of the continuous effort on her part in this connection.

Mr. Pickersgill: I merely wish to repeat my question to the minister. Can the minister say when the ship will be in service?

Mr. Balcer: It will be built in a Canadian shipyard. I am sure it will be done with the greatest speed, so that it will be in service in the near future.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Will he use his good offices to ensure that Ferguson Industries Limited at Pictou, Nova Scotia, which lies in close proximity to the Nova Scotia terminal of this ferry route, is given every opportunity to tender on this ship?

Mr. Balcer: I am pleased to tell the hon. member that Ferguson Industries will be asked to tender on that ship.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF OPENING OF LAKEHEAD TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): If I might be permitted to reply to the hon. member for Port Arthur I should like to assure him and members of the house that the harbour terminal at the lakehead will be definitely opened with an appropriate ceremony befitting an occasion of that kind, undertaken jointly by the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport.

The opening of this terminal is of more than local importance, as it will include accommodation for deep sea shipping. The deepening of the interconnecting channels to open the upper lakes to deep sea traffic is now being carried out by the United States. Thus the new facilities, which will be among the most modern in the world, will soon become the western terminus of the St. Lawrence seaway. This is, of course, of significance to western Canada as well as to northwestern Ontario. All members of the house will be pleased, I know, that our Prime Minister has consented to officiate at the opening ceremony which will take place on June 23 next.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Public Works tell the house, in view of the fact the Prime Minister is going to be there, when he consulted the Leader of the Opposition about this?

[Mr. Balcer.]

Mr. Walker: Which one of the four, Mr. Speaker? There are four horsemen of the apocalypse, and I do not know which one.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—DISLOCATION OF SHIPPING THROUGH CLOSING OF EISENHOWER LOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and if I could comment on the previous answer I will say that we would welcome a visit sooner. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can give us an appreciation of the dislocation, particularly in the grain trade, that has been caused by the closing of the Eisenhower lock. My question is occasioned by scare reports in the press that it is going to dislocate the shipping of grain for this season.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course we are very anxious to see shipping in the seaway resumed as soon as possible. I have inquired through my officials, and I am informed that the officials of the St. Lawrence seaway authority are keeping in close touch with the United States authorities, and barring unforeseen developments it now seems fairly certain the lock will be in service by April 24 at the latest.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question. Does the Minister of Transport not think, in view of the circumstances, he should send his colleague the Minister of Public Works to make an investigation of that lock to ascertain whether the funds were properly spent?

Mr. Balcer: If it were a Canadian lock I think we could not find any better man than the Minister of Public Works. He has been busy for the last four years repairing all kinds of damages that were caused by our predecessors.

Mr. Chevrier: He was going to make a seaway investigation, and we are still waiting for it.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR LIST OF BOOKS FORBIDDEN ENTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, now that everybody has milked the ferry to the limit I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue possibly one of the last questions I will ever ask him. Can the minister inform the house when he is going to table the list of naughty books forbidden entry to Canada under his instructions?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member feels the finger of approaching fate resting so heavily on his shoulders, but we will remember his way of asking questions when he is not here in the house in the years after the election. So far as the answer to the question is concerned, there have been few books banned by the present minister. They are largely books banned by my predecessor in office. The list is very long. I am told by my departmental officials that we have gone through 1955, 1956 and half of 1957, but having got to 1957 the list will be very short from then on and I hope it will be available when parliament reassembles.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—FEASIBILITY STUDIES OF PUBLIC PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the recent article in the Atlantic Advocate referring to the possibility of a development fund for the Atlantic provinces and in view of the recommendation, among other things, of feasibility studies of public projects in the Atlantic provinces, does the Prime Minister have any comment to make?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman gave me notice of his question. The government is now studying this matter and is giving consideration to the establishment of a federal Atlantic development board which would be empowered to examine projects recommended by provincial governments or other parties, and to give assistance and recommend appropriate plans to the government.

CIVIL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO RECRUITING PROGRAM FOR SURVIVAL COURSE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the report that the army has only been able to recruit approximately 15,000 of the 25,000 people required for the fourth civil survival course? If so, can he advise the house what the reasons are for this failure to attract the required number of men?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the number of people who had enlisted for the fourth and last of the survival courses was some 16,000 odd at the close of business on Monday, I believe. What the number will be when recruitment for this course ends tomorrow, which I believe is the last day, I do not know. I think I indicated some time earlier it was always anticipated that there might be some difficulty in securing 25,000, the objective of each course, as far as the fourth course is concerned.

COAL

MARITIME PROVINCES—FURTHER UTILIZATION BY LOCAL INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the Prime Minister has been allowed a number of days to give some thought to the matter, can he advise the house if he is prepared to table the brief presented to him on March 7 by the premiers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick on the expansion of resource development in the Atlantic region through the utilization of maritime coal?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have anything to add to what has already been said in that connection.

Mr. Robichaud: A supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that the brief has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and the members of the dominion coal board?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last question will apply to this one too.

Mr. Robichaud: No answer.

[Later:]

Mr. Robichaud: Before the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys leaves the chamber, may I direct a question to him. Can the minister advise the house if a brief sent to the Prime Minister and presented on March 7 by the premiers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick has been brought to his attention, and if so on what date?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robichaud: On what date?

Mr. Flynn: This is statistical information, and if the hon. member wants to put a question on the order paper he will receive an answer.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

PATRONAGE—STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur, referring to a newspaper article about patronage in appointments which, in part, quoted certain views of the chairman of the Civil Service Commission of Canada, inquired whether the federal government has revised its views along what he called the same line.

It is quite clear that Mr. Hughes was expressing a personal comment respecting an area of employment over which the federal government has no control, that is appointments to provincial positions which are outside the jurisdiction of the provincial civil service commissions.

In reply to the hon. member's question I would say that the government's views with respect to the federal civil service have been expressed from time to time, notably in the Civil Service Act passed by parliament within the past 12 months, in what was said in the debates on that bill, and in the regulations made under that act two or three weeks ago. These views have not been revised along any such line as the hon. member's question implies.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

BEAUCEVILLE, QUE.—RECOVERY OF ALLEGED OVERPAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. What steps is he taking to recover the $8,000 which was overpaid to a supporter of the Union Nationale in connection with the Beauceville post office as alleged by the member for Beauce?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, seeing that this is the swan song of the hon. member for Laurier, the pseudo leader from Quebec, who has never been anything else, may I say to him that in the fall we will welcome his enthusiastic co-operation in the public accounts committee to fully investigate this alleged matter, if he is re-elected; and if he is not we might employ him as special counsel to help him out.

Mr. Chevrier: I asked the minister a question and he made a speech. I put this question to the minister, since he has refused to answer my first question. Why did the minister not carry out his undertaking to submit the allegations of the hon. member for Beauce to the public accounts committee promptly? Having suggested this, he then refused to let the matter go to the public accounts committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me this is reviving a matter we dealt with the other day.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister not answer my question as to what steps he as Minister of Public Works is taking to recover that amount?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, for many, many months I have wanted to ask the hon. member—

Mr. Chevrier: Answer the question.

Mr. Walker: —why the Welland canal, which he predicted would cost $1.3 million, cost $27 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Walker: To deal with the question of the Beauceville post office—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the minister asked me a question and I think he is entitled to a reply.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Questions are in the reverse direction at this stage of the day. If the hon. member has been misquoted or if there is a matter of explanation that arises out of the comment of the minister I will give him the floor—

Mr. Chevrier: It does.

Mr. Speaker: —but not to continue a debate.

Mr. Chevrier: No, but the hon. member wants to know why the Welland canal cost $27 million. The government ought to be able to give the answer, because they supported it and the Minister of Finance approved that expenditure.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will appreciate that this is not the time to debate the construction of the Welland canal, or the cost of construction.

Mr. Chevrier: I agree, Mr. Speaker; your ruling is quite correct.

Some hon. Members: Sit down, then.

Mr. Chevrier: But the statement I wanted to make was that the original Welland canal which was estimated to cost $50 million actually cost $132 million when a former Tory government was in office.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member accepts my ruling, I would be glad if he would abide by it.

TELEVISION

MAGDALEN ISLANDS—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FRENCH NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): On Monday, the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine asked me a question with regard to the prospects for the installation of television service in these islands, and the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond also raised the question with me at the same time. I have an answer here, Mr. Speaker, which is rather long for orders of the day, and rather technical. With the permission of the house I suggest it might be better if it were printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The text of the answer is as follows:]

The corporation has given a great deal of attention to possible methods of extending C.B.C. French language television service to the Magdalen islands. Four possible plans have been studied:

(1) Video tape recordings.

(2) Kine recordings.

(3) A series of rebroadcasting stations in Prince Edward Island, Cape Breton island and the Magdalen islands relaying live network service from our present Moncton station.

(4) Extension of the French network from Moncton to Cape Breton where a network relay station would serve a rebroadcast station in the Magdalens.

The first two plans were abandoned because of the high costs involved particularly for a non-live service. Plans 3 and 4 have the advantage of providing live service to the French language population of P.E.I. and Cape Breton, as well as the Magdalen islands. While both these plans are more expensive in dollar terms than either video tape or kine recordings, the fact that they would serve more than twice as many people makes their estimated cost per capita the same or lower.

Plan 3 (the system of rebroadcasting stations) would involve a relatively high capital cost and would affect limited potential for future extensions of service. While plan 4 (extension of the network) would involve a lower capital cost than plan 3, operating costs would be substantially higher resulting in a somewhat higher per capita cost. However, this plan would lend itself more readily to extension of t.v. service into adjacent areas should the need arise in the future. In addition, plan 4 is considered to be more satisfactory from a technical point of view.

At the moment, the corporation is assembling further data and refining its estimates, particularly with respect to the costs of extending network service. When this process is completed, probably within the next few months, the corporation will be able to decide which of the two plans under study should be acted on.

DIVORCE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has given any consideration to the establishment of a royal commission to undertake a study of parliamentary procedure with regard to divorce.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): That is a matter, of course, for parliament to decide.

FINANCE

INCLUSION IN BUDGET OF DEPOSIT LOST BY CANDIDATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister say if he has included in his budget the $200 deposit that the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is going to lose in the coming election?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members have been taking a fair amount of latitude today, and perhaps now we can get to orders of the day.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STE. ANNE DES MONTS, QUE.—POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF POSTMASTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland English (Gaspe): I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General.

Was he made aware of the fact that a civil servant, that is a postmaster at St. Anne des Monts, tendered his resignation in order to run as a Liberal condidate at the next election?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that would be—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the question hardly warrants the time of the house.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I thought the vacancy might be of interest to the hon. member for St. Denis.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TORONTO—SECURITY FENCE TO PROTECT MARSHALLING YARDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the government intend to insist that the Canadian National Railways fulfil the promise allegedly made by its president, Mr. Donald Gordon, that there would be no level crossings and that a security fence would be erected in built-up areas adjacent to the access line to the new marshalling yards in Vaughan township north of Toronto?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I am quite sure that any undertakings given by Mr. Gordon in this connection will be carried out.

TRANSPORT

SOULANGES CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFER TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

To questions asked yesterday and the day before by the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Bourbonnais), the minister replied that the province of Quebec had not yet given an answer to the offer made by the federal government concerning the Soulanges canal.

Here is my question. Should no reply to this offer be received from the province of Quebec within a reasonable time, would the Minister of Transport consider an offer from the Sulphur Converting Corporation?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member's question is a little too hypothetical to be urgent.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SESSIONAL EMPLOYEES—CONSIDERATION OF GOOD FRIDAY AS HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the house leader, and through him Your Honour, whether consideration can be given to the establishment of Good Friday as a holiday with pay for those sessional employees who are now on the staff of the House of Commons and who have not had any holiday this session. Could Good Friday be classed as a holiday for them, as it is for other civil servants?

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might take the matter up with the Speaker at an early opportunity.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

PITTSBURGH TOWNSHIP—DECLARATION OF LAND AS SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Has any part of lots 15, 16 or 17, concession 1, in the township of Pittsburgh, west of the Great Cataraqui river, been declared surplus by the federal government during the twenty-fourth parliament? If so, has it been disposed of, to whom has it been sold, and what were the details of the sale and the price?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): The hon. member gave me notice of this question, and during the short period of time I had at my disposal today to make inquiries of the crown disposal corporation I have not discovered any record of any such request having been made in this regard.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister inquire further and, should he have any information, give it to me privately?

Mr. O'Hurley: I shall make further inquiries.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee has before it for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, the sum of $138,416,981, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Regier: I want to thank the other members of the New Democratic party who have again asked me to be their spokesman on this particular occasion. There is some honour, loyalty and appreciation of each other in our group, and I wish to say that I am proud of each of the seven other members in our group.

It used to be said that there was honour even among thieves, but I am dismayed to note that the Liberal party cannot even be classed in that category. I have noted with dismay the absence of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in recent days. He has been re-elected to this house on many occasions as a Liberal-Labour member and has always been regarded as the financial spokesman or financial critic of his party. His responsibility has been to watch daily the financial affairs of our country, and especially the financial activities of our government. Yet in the interests of political expediency he was most unceremoniously and mercilessly dumped by his political party. By contrast, I am very happy that neither my national leader nor my house leader are so anxious for publicity that they would thus violate the ordinary rules of honour and decency, and I am also very proud at this moment that I do not belong to the Liberal party.

In this resolution we are being asked to vote money to the government of the day, but history has a way of taking many turns. The very origins of parliament were to provide a voice for the taxpayers in determining how the money necessary for the maintenance of law and order should be collected, but look how this has worked out. Under our rules we have now established an allocation of six days in which to debate the budget. We agree we ought to spend no more than six days debating how the money is to be collected; yet all of us know, and many of us regret, that we spend six, seven and eight months of the year discussing mere details of governmental expenditures. Readjustment of that situation is badly needed. We all know that a government requires at least minimum funds in order to sustain our society; yet under the existing situation we allocate only six days to a debate on how the money is to be collected and, as I have just said, we spend six to eight months of the year niggling about details of particular expenditures.

Looking at the financial policy of the government, I am afraid I must come to the conclusion that the government has no policy. Its financial policy is neither fish nor fowl. It is neither hot nor cold; it is lukewarm. It is something to be spewn out of the mouth as distasteful, and I expect the electorate of Canada will agree with me in that regard on June 18.

I was very disappointed with the attitude taken by the official Leader of the Opposition during his television appearance on budget night. The leader of the Liberal party in his television appearance on budget night really found nothing to complain about in the budget as it had been presented, except that it had arrived many years too late. I believe that the Canadian people will by now have noted that the leader of the official opposition has yet to present a real alternative to the financial policies of this government. Perhaps I am saying too much when I call them financial policies, because in my opinion the actions of the government in the field of finance are very contradictory and I believe they can best be described in the quotation "John versus Don".

Last fall we read some rather interesting newspaper speculation to the effect that John was about ready to fire Don and move him into some other field of responsibility. However, I understand that St. James street and Bay street made adequate representations and Don managed to retain his present office. I was pleased—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do you believe all that bunk?

Mr. Regier: I was pleased to read the end result, Mr. Chairman, because despite the fact that I disagree with the basic Tory and reactionary policies of our Minister of Finance, I would hate to think of the condition our country would be in today if the irresponsible economic and financial attitudes of our present Prime Minister had been able to prevail within the councils of the government. I would rather live with the financial policies, even though I hope it would not be for too many years, of Bay street and St. James street as represented by the present Minister of Finance than live in a country dominated by the lack of knowledge and the financial and economic irresponsibility of a Prime Minister who seems quite prepared to increase a deficit to the tune of $100 million in the interests of four constituencies and in the interests of only 100,000 people; who is quite prepared to be irresponsible and spend $15 million, which is only a preliminary expenditure, on behalf of two constituencies; who is quite prepared to be irresponsible and advocate the abolition of tolls on a couple of bridges in order to bribe a few more constituencies back into the Tory camp. In the face of irresponsibility of that type I would prefer the traditional Tory financial atmosphere even though I hope I would not have to live with it for many years.

Our government is responsible for the economic welfare of the Canadian community. The United States of America is always regarded as the heart of so-called free enterprise, the heart of capitalism. I would like to think that the government of Canada would be at least as bold as the President of the United States in that he was recently so amazingly successful and was able to call to task the steel corporations of his country. Over there a steel corporation, Mr. Chairman, is spelt s-t-e-e-l. I am afraid that in Canada we have far too many s-t-e-a-l corporations and this government, like the one before it, seems quite prepared to allow a policy of s-t-e-a-l to continue ad nauseam.

In this regard I would like to quote from a report issued by the B.C. federation of labour entitled "Conspiracy against the consumer: The difference between right and wrong!" This is a report on the investigation by Senator Estes Kefauver, chairman of the United States senate subcommittee investigating price rigging in the steel and drug industries:

> The following tables showing profits in the steel industry in recent years is very revealing.
> Net income (after taxes) per ton of steel products shipped; 1952, $6.80; 1953, $8.85; 1954, $9.15; 1955, $14.51; 1956, $14.56; 1957, $17.91.

At least the United States now has a president who was able to call a halt to this continuing exploitation of both labour and consumer. Our government has yet to arrive at that concept and do at least as well. All of us remember reading in the newspapers some months ago that leading industrialists across the line were put into jail. I wish to remind you, Mr. Chairman, that our Prime Minister when in the opposition ranks used to call for amendments to our Combines Investigation Act which would demand that officials of companies who were found guilty of violating the spirit of the Combines Investigation Act should be sentenced to a jail term, which should be mandatory and not optional.

All of us were happy to read last fall that officials of the General Electric Company and others were put into prison in the United States of America because they had been found guilty of price fixing. Yet what do we find in Canada? I read again from the publication put out by the B.C. federation of labour, page 7:

> In recent years over 150 companies in Canada have been fined under the combines act for engaging in price fixing.
>
> A few of the major examples of price fixing in the last ten years include the following:
> 1951—Canadian Bakeries, McGavin's, Weston's, and their subsidiaries found guilty of price fixing on a grand scale.
> 1951—Eddy match company and five lesser firms found guilty of price fixing and restraint of trade.
>
> 1953—Northern Electric, Canadian General Electric, and seven other firms found to be price fixing.
>
> 1954—10 companies in Vancouver convicted of a conspiracy to prevent competition in the supply of coarse paper.
>
> 1954—30 gasoline retailers in Vancouver convicted of price fixing (later appeal allowed on a technicality)
>
> 1959—12 supermarket chains in the United States, including such giants as Safeway stores, indicted by a federal grand jury for price fixing.
> 1960—19 of North America's largest electrical equipment manufacturers pleaded guilty to price fixing and bid rigging, involving annual sales of $2 billion a year. All told there were 72 guilty pleas, and 88 pleas of no defence.

I should like to think that even a Tory government in Canada would have as much interest in the welfare of the consumers of Canada and in the economic health of our community as the democratic party of the United States under the leadership of President Kennedy, and that it would be as brave as his administration has recently proved itself to be.

The budget presented to this house is a poor housekeeping budget. The minister is predicting a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product. Assuming the minister to be right in this prediction, how, then, does he forecast a deficit of $800 million? These two factors simply do not add up. If we are going to get a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product there ought to be no possible excuse for a deficit, yet the minister announces that he expects a deficit of a size almost unprecedented in Canadian history.

The minister calls this an expansionist budget but he offers no evidence to support this contention. He has been found so wrong on so many occasions in the past that in the absence of any evidence that this is an expansionist budget I am afraid we have to ascribe this label as mere wishful thinking on the part of the minister.

There is no hope expressed in the budget that continuing heavy unemployment will not remain with us for many years to come. Our unemployment insurance fund has been almost exhausted. I should like to remind you, Mr. Chairman, that some years ago I predicted in this house that in the event of a severe economic recession hitting the Canadian economy this fund, which then stood at $900 million, would begin to disappear and would completely disappear within a short time. At that time the house hooted and howled me down. My statement was labeled as nonsensical and irresponsible, yet the government today has to admit that the unemployment insurance fund is not geared, and never was geared, to handle a situation in which the economy is on the decline.

The investment record, or investment intentions, give the lie to the prediction of the minister that there is to be a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product. I should like to read from a publication issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce and entitled Private and Public Investment Outlook in Canada, 1962. I notice that in terms of current dollars, in 1957 private and public investment in Canada totalled $8,717,000 while the expectation for 1962 amounts to only $8,596,000, in other words, a decline. Capital expenditure as a percentage of the gross national product which, for 1957, is listed as 27.3, appears as 23.3 for 1960. There is nothing in the investment predictions contained in this report to indicate that the minister has any reason for predicting a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product. I notice on page 11 of the same report, incidentally, the statement that institutional services are expected to increase their investment amounts to $220 million and that government departments are expected to increase theirs by $159 million for a total of $379 million. This clearly indicates a decrease in the private sector of our economy as compared with 1960 of $45 million. Thus, upon the facts, the minister cannot substantiate his prediction about growth. I noticed a report in the Globe and Mail out of the Ottawa bureau dated March 27. It stated:

> D.B.S. reported that Canadian industrial production dropped back in January after climbing for 10 months, the fall being even more severe than in the United States.

It went on:

> Today D.B.S. reported that the seasonally adjusted industrial production index in Canada dropped by two points, declining 1.2 per cent to 178.6 from 180.7 in December.
>
> The bureau said mining production dropped by 1 per cent and manufacturing by 1.7 per cent, while output of electric power and gas utilities rose by 3 per cent.
> Two thirds of the decline of the manufacturing index was in the durable goods field, which has been one of the driving forces behind the economic recovery so far.

I have another complaint against the minister and his administration in that I feel he is continuing to be guilty of mismanagement of the public debt. Our public debt is predicted to increase by some $800 million in this year. His past position has been remedied only by his manipulations of our foreign exchange reserves and by a kind of phony retirement fund or public debt retirement fund that he established at the time of his last budget. We have heard the Minister of Finance present his budget speech to this House of Commons. However, only a few days later our Prime Minister rises in his place and announces an additional expenditure of over $100 million which were not reported in the budget. I can assure the Prime Minister that I am confident that even the people in the Atlantic provinces could think of many more useful ways of spending over $100 million than on this proposition which I have been told is not going to even begin to cover the cost of engineering surveys.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who told the hon. gentleman that?

Mr. Regier: The Prime Minister might be shocked if I revealed this information to him. However, I am not one to reveal confidences. The needs of the Atlantic provinces are great. However, I am convinced that the government has no intention of carrying out its announced project of building the causeway connecting Prince Edward Island to the rest of Canada as $100 million bears no relationship to any realistic assessment of what the actual cost would be. It is very nice to announce this project only nine weeks before an election date. However, I know that the people of the Atlantic provinces have taken a keen interest in education in the past century and more, and that they are not going to be so stupid as to be bribed by this particular announcement. I know they will take it for what it is worth. I am not saying that the causeway should not be built. However, we have yet to hear or to have reported to us an analysis of the situation. Who knows what else may be promised the people of Canada within the next eight weeks? With the lack of confidence I have in our Prime Minister's sense of economics and of finance I am quite prepared to believe that he may indeed be willing to offer a $10 million bribe to each of the 265 ridings in Canada.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-89 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1962.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave, now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I just wish to ask the Minister of Finance one question. Is this bill drawn in the usual and accepted form?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, sir.

Mr. Hellyer: And all rights reserved for free discussion in due course?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is not interim supply.

Mr. Pallett: Keep that question until later.

Mr. Hellyer: I am sorry; I will save it.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Interim Supply

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $1,704,710,347.93, being the aggregate of—

(a) five twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $1,666,406,647.92;

(b) an additional one third of the amounts of external affairs items 40, 45, 80, 85, 90, 95, 100, 105, 107, 110, 120, 140 and 145, finance items 50 and 70, forestry item 11, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys item 20, national defence item 70, national film board item 5, privy council item 40, public works item 200 and transport items 65 and 170, of the said estimates, $5,451,575.00;

(c) an additional one quarter of the amounts of forestry items 5 and 20, northern affairs and national resources item 10, loans, investments and advances items 120 and 125 of the said estimates, $3,199,700.00;

(d) an additional one sixth of the amounts of citizenship and immigration item 90, fisheries items 30 and 45, legislation item 25, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 80 and 130, northern affairs and national resources items 50 and 120, privy council item 30, transport items 60, 80, 85 and 125 of the said estimates, $4,550,983.34;

(e) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of external affairs item 35, fisheries items 25, 85 and 90, forestry items 15 and 25, labour items 5 and 40, mines and technical surveys items 40, 50, 70 and 100, national defence item 45, national film board item 1, national health and welfare item 25, national research council item 1, national revenue item 5, northern affairs and national resources items 15, 20, 25, 45, 70, 75, 100, 108 and 118, public works item 190, trade and commerce item 26, transport items 30, 35, 40 120 and 222, veterans affairs item 60 of the said estimates, $25,101,441.67; be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1963.

He said: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the committee would be prepared to give consent to dispense with your reading of this resolution. Copies have been furnished to hon. members opposite and the details have been supplied to hon. members in the form in which they now appear before you. There are a great number of items and amounts here.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A terrific sum, too.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that I dispense with reading the said document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the resolution asks for a vote of five months interim supply. Several weeks ago the house voted two months interim supply for the fiscal year which commenced on April 1, 1962. The addition of today's resolution will bring the total to seven months.

In this respect we are following the same course as was followed by our predecessors in 1949 and in 1957. In both of those years there was a dissolution of parliament in the month of April and an election in the month of June, so that there are those two clear and recent precedents for the number of months for which supply is asked here.

In addition to an additional five twelfths of all items there are, of course, additional proportions, as is usual, with respect to certain items. These items relate to programs that do not lend themselves to a pro rata provision of supply month by month. For instance, there are numerous grants to international organizations where fixed sums have to be paid without regard to a month by month accrual. In addition, there are numerous programs of work involved in various departments which are concentrated in certain seasons of the year and, of course, the bulk of the concentrations are in the summer months. Therefore with respect to a number of items additional amounts are required.

But I do emphasize for the assurance of all hon. members that in no case do we ask for the full amount of any item. There will still be a proportion to be voted by parliament when parliament resumes in the autumn and accordingly the house can be assured of retaining its right of discussion with respect to any item. Furthermore, I give the usual undertaking that the passing of this measure will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the details of the proposed bill having to do with interim supply have been given to the official opposition. We have looked at them and I believe that on the face of it the statement made by the minister is in accordance with the fact that this has been the practice in previous years under similar circumstances. Had this measure been introduced prior to the statement made by the Prime Minister concerning the date of the election, there would unquestionably have been strenuous opposition from this side of the house. However, now that we know the date of the election and as the proposed bill is couched in the language we now have before us there would be no purpose in objecting to its form or substance.

I note also that in his statement the minister has made it quite clear that members of the opposition and, for that matter, members of the house, will retain their right to discuss any of these items at a future time and he has given his undertaking that the voting of this interim supply will not in any way prejudice the right of members to criticize these items. In view of the fact that the form and substance of the bill are similar to what was proposed when we were on the other side of the house, there is no objection on our part to the measure in its present form.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, in essence this group agrees with the statement that has been made by the hon. member for Laurier. However, in the past, especially in 1958, extensive use was made of governor general's warrants. I regret very much that after that time the Financial Administration Act was amended to grant even more discretion and authority to the government of Canada with regard to the possible use of governor general's warrants in order to carry on the business of government. I should like to ask the minister this question. If approval is given now to this interim supply measure, does he see any possible need to exercise the prerogative of the government of using governor general's warrants before parliament is again called?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The whole purpose of the present measure, Mr. Chairman, is to make provision for everything that we can foresee at this time, and unless something extraordinary should arise that we cannot now foresee the present bill should provide all the supply required to take us up to the month of October.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, this measure will authorize the expenditure of further vast sums for weapon systems and weapons which only have an atomic capacity or which, to use the Prime Minister's words, only reach their full capacity when armed with atomic warheads. It involves in addition, I presume, certain expenditures for housing at the Bomarc stations at North Bay and La Macaza. The statement of the Associate Minister of National Defence that these devices at La Macaza and North Bay would at best only be useful for something in the order of three years even if they were armed raises, of course, the logic of continuing these expenditures and the logic of parliament authorizing such expenditures at this time. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the committee whether the government has decided yet if it will or will not authorize the use of atomic warheads by Canadian troops?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the attitude of the government has been set out most clearly in this regard. There has been no change and there is no anticipated change.

Mr. Hellyer: Can we take it then that the further authorization of additional funds for the F-104 program in fact means that the government intends that they will be used for the strike attack role when the squadrons are ready to go to Europe?

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have had very long discussions of that matter from time to time and there is nothing more I can add to my statement that there has been no change in our position whatsoever.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, the sum of $1,704,710,347.93 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-90, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1963.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST TO PROCEED WITH PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Mr. Churchill: This completes government business, but we have on the order paper the following notation:

From five to six p.m.—private members' business—private bills (special order).

Perhaps the house would consent to dealing with these matters now, although it is not yet five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to proceeding now to private members' business?

Mr. Peters: No.

Mr. Speaker: I hear objection to this procedure, and without unanimous consent it is not possible.

Mr. Churchill: May I understand this lack of consent to the proposal? Is it that we take up these matters later? Can we not deal with them right now because time is running out and this parliament will soon cease to exist.

Mr. Speaker: I am in the hands of the house. It is not yet five o'clock and without unanimous agreement we cannot move the clock ahead.

Mr. Churchill: We have a simple notation on the order paper with regard to the hour, and if certain business is completed then do we not normally move on to the next order of business? Why would there be a hiatus of half an hour or several hours between one piece of business and another?

Mr. Speaker: I think the difficulty is that the time of the house now is reserved for government business, and as long as there is government business on the order paper we could not pass automatically to the next order of business, which is private members' business. Perhaps a motion could be agreed to that we now proceed to the business in question?

Mr. Churchill: I would move that we now proceed to a consideration of private members' business, private bills, special order.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Veterans Affairs has suggested a motion to pass to private members' business, but I am afraid there is a technical difficulty to accepting the motion. In effect it would be necessary to suspend standing order 15, which regulates our business, and that can only be done on proper notice. The alternative, in the absence of proceeding with the order paper, would be to move that the sitting be suspended until five o'clock.

Mr. Hellyer: Perhaps now that hon. members have had a chance to reflect quietly on this, unanimous consent might be given to moving the clock ahead to five o'clock.

Mr. Herridge: We agree to that proposal.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the house may be willing to agree unanimously that it is now five o'clock and proceed to the business that is ordered for that time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: We agree to call it six o'clock, if the government so desires.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on the order paper for today.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the motion with respect to Bill SD-2, is the house agreeable to consider the divorce bills in groups?

Mr. Howard: I think they should be called in the order they appear on the order paper.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I wonder whether hon. gentlemen who have expressed their views strongly would give consideration to the taking of these bills in groups. They have received the full attention of the other place and each of them has been examined. If there are some cases that hon. gentlemen regard as needing further examination, well and good, but I would point out the fact that the people who made these applications did so in good faith.

The law has been as it is and they accepted in groups and if we proceed to ask for royal assent in what has been done at a quarter to six this evening, these bills will die when dissolution takes place. The result will be that those who have the right to expect that parliament will deal with their cases will suffer irreparable loss, besides being subjected to a long delay before the next parliament.

I realize there are strong feelings on this matter. At the same time I do something I have not done before—I make an appeal to hon. members that they permit the taking of all the cases, excepting those they designate as a result of their reading as desiring further consideration. I would hope it would not be said of us that we, under law, denied those who are proceeding under law their rights and privileges.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to make a comment on the suggestion made by the Prime Minister. His remarks and the appeal he has expressed now have been uppermost in our minds for the last three years, ever since we became interested in the procedure followed in parliament in dealing with these particular cases.

Over the past few years, perhaps too vigorously at times, we have proposed a variety of alternatives to the present system. Without going into the full details of those alternatives, we have asked that, even though there should be no great desire or agreement to proceed to establish an alternate procedure, at least the government should indicate that it be made the subject matter of intensive study by a royal commission. Were that done it would indicate the government was taking steps to deal with this particular question, which might even be confined to the question of parliamentary divorces.

As I say, we have proposed a number of alternatives but they have all reached a dead end. That is very regrettable to me. It is painful to me, to the hon. member for Timiskaming and to others who concerned themselves with the problems and difficulties facing the individuals making petitions to parliament. Indeed it is difficult and painful at this last hour, as it might well be, to have to say that we feel we cannot agree to the suggestion made by the right hon. gentleman. Had there been coupled with that suggestion some announcement of government policy with respect to dealing with this question in a forthright and definite way, then the reply we now make would probably be quite different.

Again, it is just as regrettable, painful and disturbing to us as it is to everybody else to have to decline to accept the suggestion made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Well, in the absence of some agreed method of dealing with the situation with which the house is confronted, I have no other course but to proceed according to the order paper and the rule book. It being five o'clock I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole to deal with Bill SD-2.

BRUCE REID CAMPBELL

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-2, for the relief of Bruce Reid Campbell—Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: We now have on the order paper 327 bills and prior to today we have had only two hours' opportunity to investigate the allegations in these bills. I believe we should have a much longer time today to look into some of these bills.

The bill before us asks for relief for Bruce Reid Campbell, domiciled in the province of Quebec. The petition indicates that the marriage took place in the county of Middlesex, England. The adultery took place in the province of Quebec.

This marriage was solemnized in the Church of England; it was duly published and celebrated by Arthur Douglas Young, rector. At the time of the marriage the petitioner was a solicitor in the Canadian army. He was temporarily resident in England but domiciled in the province of Quebec, Canada. His wife, June Ethel Phyllis Campbell, was domiciled in England before the marriage, and since the return to this country of the husband and wife the parties have declared the province of Quebec to be their domicile, in the district of Montreal.

Mr. Chairman, in this case, again, there are children. One of the matters which has concerned us very greatly is the fact that this particular marriage comes under the British North America Act and gives the federal government jurisdiction in the matter. Out of that marriage there is issue; Malcolm Harold Campbell, Donald Ernest Campbell and Janice Anne Campbell. The petition contains the information that there have been no legal proceedings between the plaintiff and the respondent as to the maintenance of the children; there has been no agreement or arrangement between the spouses with reference to the children.

This matter of maintenance of children has been argued in the past and probably will be argued in the future. I presume it is a legal argument beyond my ability or comprehension. However, it would seem to me as a layman that if the federal government has the responsibility for this marriage, they must also have the responsibility for any children born of the marriage. There has been considerable discussion in other places regarding the residency clause, and because a particular province is concerned it has been said that the children of the marriage are the responsibility of the provincial authorities and not the federal government.

In this case, Mr. Chairman, we are concerned with whether or not this petition should be granted, but in this case the passing of the bill will give relief to only one person, we assume, if the charge of adultery is correct, and that of course is a matter that warrants some discussion. The fact that we are considering giving relief to the petitioner will create a certain amount of hardship for the children of this marriage.

These children are all of an age at which they are not expected to look after themselves. The first child was born in 1947, the second in 1949 and the third in 1951; therefore they are still of an age when they can expect and should receive parental assistance. Because the question of the maintenance of these children has not been dealt with in the province, because there has been no previous legal application before the courts in connection with their support, this becomes a matter for this committee to consider now, because we are being asked to grant relief to the husband in this particular case, who of necessity would be the breadwinner of the family. Therefore I think in this particular case we should be very much concerned about what happens to the children. I presume that before consideration is given to this question there will have to be some indication that the children have been taken care of and that they will be looked after financially if we separate them by law from their parents.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to the evidence given in this particular case because I think it is important. I would refer the committee to page 11 of the proceedings held in the other place in regard to this matter:

By Senator Cameron:

Q. Are your children with your wife? A. Yes, I thought it best to allow her to have their custody.

By the Chairman:

Q. Your wife has had custody of the children all the time? A. Yes.
Q. You entered into a definite agreement with her about that, did you? A. No, we discussed this until finally my lawyer drew up an agreement.
Q. That agreement has been signed, has it? A. Yes, on November 30.
Q. That agreement gives her what? A. Custody of the children.
Q. Do you pay her any money? A. No, sir. In the past I have been paying, though.
Q. But there is nothing in the agreement requiring you to pay her any maintenance? A. In the future, no sir.
Q. You have no monetary responsibility so far as the agreement is concerned? A. In the future, no.
Q. How long have you been separated now? A. I moved downstairs in September, 1961.
Q. Do you go to see the children at all? A. I occasionally drop up in the evening. My mother owns the property, it is three flats.
Q. They are still living on your mother's property? A. Yes, on the top floor.
Q. How old are the children? A. My oldest boy is 14, the next one is 12, and my daughter is 10.
Q. Are they all going to school? A. Yes.
Q. They are being satisfactorily schooled? A. Yes.
Q. Properly clothed and looked after? A. Yes.

By Mr. Gomery:

Q. Do you know what plans are to be made in the future concerning your children? A. Just the fact that my wife wants to marry another man and he has promised to bring the children up properly and they will be schooled and well taken care of.

It is apparent from this evidence that the matter of the custody of these children has not been settled. While it has been argued on occasion that there are certain matters which enter into provincial jurisdiction, I think that because this matter comes under a section of the British North America Act which establishes in parliament the responsibility for marriage and divorce, by implication we are responsible for looking after the children of the marriage.

When somebody petitions parliament he should at least be prepared to say what he is going to do in relation to the issue of the marriage. I believe that the issue of the marriage is a part of and cannot be divided from the original marriage. The issue is part of the marriage, and I believe there is no hon. member in the committee this afternoon who would not agree that one of our major concerns in granting this petition is the side effects and the results it will have on those being affected by this particular bill. It is evident that the corespondent in most of these cases has a direct interest in the future of the arrangements set out in the petition or in the evidence. In many cases, if the petition is granted he or she will marry the defending party in the case. In other cases, of course, they say they have nothing to do with the affair at all and that their names were improperly used. We have set up machinery in the other place to consider these matters. The position of the innocent party in the proceedings is discussed as is the position of other people who may be involved. In these circumstances I think no one would disagree that before these petitions can be granted parliament should be satisfied that a suitable arrangement has been made for the protection of the children concerned in these cases.

The father in the case now before us has indicated that the second man involved, the corespondent, has agreed to accept the children as his own and to provide support for them. I suggest this is an unrealistic way of looking at the situation. Certainly, he should have some responsibility for the care of the children. However, I do not believe we have any direct relationship with the corespondent in this case. We are not at liberty to determine whether he has agreed to accept these responsibilities. We are dealing with what normally would be called hearsay evidence. This is not, in my opinion, the type of arrangement of which we should approve. This is one of the problems with which we have been faced during the past two or three years, and I believe it would be better if, in fairness to all the parties concerned in the case before us, there were an arrangement which would satisfy the house as to the probability of the children being cared for, educated and given sustenance in their formative years.

There is another matter with which I am concerned in relation to this petition, and it is the possibility that the citizenship of these children may be changed. The adultery alleged is supposed to have been committed with one Arthur Dewing of Stamford in Connecticut, which is one of the states of the United States. It may be that we are not even protecting the birthright of these children, their right to remain Canadians, because they are under age and if they are accepted by a foster father they may even lose their right to be Canadian citizens. I believe no one in Canada would want a decision of this type to be made for these children with no protection from the court which is granting the separation.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not wish to get into the debate but I should like to set the hon. member's mind at rest in that regard. If these children were born in Canada they are Canadian citizens.

Mr. Peters: I thank the minister for that information. I was aware that they could carry their Canadian citizenship. I am only suggesting that their foster father, as a citizen of the United States, would no doubt exercise a great deal of influence on the children during years when they are not of an age to formulate opinions for themselves. It could come down to the same argument as is used in Ontario at the present time with regard to adopted children and religious considerations. It is felt unwise and not necessarily in the public interest to allow children to be placed in families having a religion other than that of the natural parent. I think by similar reasoning this would also apply to the question of citizenship in this particular case. This may not be a major problem, because I agree that children born in Canada, even if they are ten or eleven years old, would probably want to continue their Canadian citizenship. Nevertheless a man who was keeping such children only because he had volunteered to do so would have considerable influence over them and the result would not necessarily be in the interest of Canada in general.

I am sure that the adultery charge itself is of great concern to the house and that the arguments which have been advanced on several previous occasions with relation to other cases should be examined again, because the courts are always warned, and rightly so, that in cases where a paid investigator is used only a limited amount of credence should be given to his evidence. Obviously this is so because on many occasions the paid investigator has been hired by the lawyer for the plaintiff and has, therefore, a special interest in the case. Let me refer to the questioning by the committee when this matter was discussed. The evidence will be found on page 13 of the third report from the other place.

Q. What is your full name?—A. George Roland Foucher.
Q. What is your age?—A. 45.
Q. Where do you live?—A. Montreal.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. Investigator.

I believe that in all fairness we have the right to ask ourselves and the house to give consideration to a number of further questions which should have been asked. One of them is whether this investigator—

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Howard: The last point mentioned by my hon. friend from Timiskaming is an important one because it concerns the weight which should be attached to the evidence which was given before the committee of the other place.

Before I get into that, I might perhaps say that I do not particularly want to engage in debating this particular bill. I do not wish to engage in reading through the evidence to discover whether something is right or wrong. We do not particularly think this should be a function of parliament. If I may be allowed to make a general comment or suggestion along that line, I should like to do so. Before the committee sat, a suggestion was made by the Prime Minister that we might lump all these bills into one and deal with them by a process of automation, I suppose. To that suggestion we could not agree at that time. We then propose that there is still a way out of this impasse and we would hope that it might be taken. We still have a few minutes left before we reach the hour of recess or adjournment or whatever we are going to reach. Perhaps the members of the government could reflect upon what course of action they might suggest or might wish to suggest in this regard and, before the hour of six o'clock—I am not sure whether that would be 5.36 by the time of the clock or whether it will be six o'clock by the time of the clock —or in any event before the committee rises, we might be in a position to hear a positive pronouncement by the government on the course of action they wish to undertake to deal with these things. Perhaps we could easily at that time follow the course of meeting the requests of the petitioners themselves. I say this only in a general way. There is a good half hour or three quarters of an hour perhaps left. I would hope that the Prime Minister who earlier expressed concern about this matter—with which concern I agree—and some of his colleagues in the cabinet who are interested in this matter might be thinking about some proposal to make and we could consider it on its merits at that time. We do not wish to be obstinate. We feel that this is something with which parliament should not be dealing. I am sure all members of the House of Commons would like to see these divorce bills taken out of parliament and dealt with in some other way so that we should not be obliged annually to go through this same sort of tortuous process. We hope that perhaps we could find some common ground of agreement there. If the cabinet or the Prime Minister on their behalf would later on care to make some suggestions, either publicly or amongst the house leaders including the hon. member for Kootenay West, we may be able to reach some agreement on what course we should follow.

Apart from that however, if I may I should like to get back to the question raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming with regard to the value we should place upon evidence given by private investigators. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that I placed on record yesterday some quotations from a decision by Mr. Justice Spence in Ontario with respect to a particular case and in which he said we should look very carefully into the evidence given by people who classified themselves as investigators or as private detectives but who are in fact not licensed to carry on that activity under whatever the provincial law happens to be; that if they are people who are not licensed to practice they are in the same class or nothing more than a paid witness on behalf of whoever they happen to be giving evidence about; and that such evidence—I am paraphrasing Mr. Justice Spence's remarks—given by these people requires careful scrutiny, corroboration and substantiation by others.

We drew this matter to the attention of Senator Roebuck who is chairman of the Senate divorce committee. Yesterday I read extracts from that letter. The answer we received was "Thank you very much. The contents of your letter have been noted". In this instance, as to the people who classified themselves as investigators, namely George Roland Foucher and Jean Vinet, in neither case in the evidence that is before us is there any query made of them as to whether or not they are in fact licensed as private detectives or licensed investigators under the private detectives act of Quebec. I look beyond the information contained in the printed evidence. I have the official papers and documents which go along with this bill and which retain all of the originals, including the original petition, the original transcript of evidence, the notice of application, copies of the advertisements and the like. Nowhere in any of the official documents or papers relating to this particular case is there any indication that anyone was the least bit interested in whether or not Mr. Foucher and Mr. Vinet were licensed as private detectives under the private detectives act of Quebec. I, of course, do not think we are entitled thereby automatically, because there is no indication that they are not so licensed, to come to the conclusion that they are in fact not licensed. It might well be that they are licensed. However, the point is that even after this matter was drawn to the attention of the chairman of the committee of the other place, and even after it had been drawn to his attention that it would be helpful if this information was obtained, there was obviously no desire to do so or no effort made in that direction, thus indicating perhaps that this is something which the committee of the other place or at least its chairman did not consider was a practical or worth while matter. In fact, I remember in one instance reading the evidence given by a lady who classified herself as an investigator and gave her age as 82. She perhaps was licensed as a private investigator, but it seems highly unlikely. From following the evidence that she gave, we learned that she did not go out of her way to discover the circumstances which happened to exist in a rooming house in which she lived. However, she classified herself as an investigator. In that instance I think she would have been nothing more than a paid agent.

With that approach or that background, perhaps we should see just what these two gentlemen, these private investigators, discovered in their search for adultery upon which this petition is founded.

Mr. Foucher who is one of the investigators, and is apparently the major one, gave certain evidence shown on pages 12 and 13 of the record. Certain preliminary questions are asked. Then towards the bottom of the page Mr. Gomery who is the counsel for the petitioner clearly asks as follows:

Q. Were you asked to conduct a divorce investigation on Mrs.—

That is the respondent.

—by myself? A. Yes, on the 30th August, 1961.
Q. Could you tell the committee the result of that investigation?

Then it continues on at some length as follows:

A. On Friday, September 15, and Saturday, September 16, 1961, I followed Mrs.—

He gave there the name of the respondent.

—during the day. On Friday, the 15th, from approximately 1.30 p.m. until approximately 5.30 p.m. when she left from the corner of St. Antoine and Green and entered a black Renault car with a gentleman in it, I followed her. They drove around town stopping off quite some time at the Camillien Houde observatory at the mountain and returning home at approximately 5.30 p.m. I followed the car.
Q. By returning home what do you mean?
A. On returning close to her residence on Selby street, which is just around the corner from St. Antoine street.

Mr. Nugent: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard: Certainly.

Mr. Nugent: It has become obvious that this large group of divorce bills is not going to go through. I can understand what the hon. members are striving to do and I have a suggestion which I hope they will consider. The result of their present course of action is that this large number of divorce bills will not go through and I suggest to them that even if half of the total number were allowed to go through they would still achieve their objective by blocking passage of the rest and would still be bringing pressure to bear as they hope to do.

It can be argued, of course, that we would be discriminating against the other half that we did not pass, but I simply suggest that for the purpose they wish to achieve they are now discriminating against all these people who are unfortunate enough to have divorce bills on the order paper. In effect what I am suggesting is that we do not discriminate against half of them, that we give relief to half of them because otherwise all of them are going to suffer disappointment.

I understand that the hon. members who have been speaking have given considerable study to this subject. It may be that there are certain cases about which they have graver doubts than they do about others. Possibly they might be willing to let every second bill go through or the first half of the list or the last half of the list. I am merely suggesting that the hon. members can achieve the same objective even if we give relief to half of these people, and I would ask them to consider that suggestion.

Mr. Howard: If I may answer the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, it would appear to me that he was not asking a question but rather making a suggestion as to how we might approach this matter, but either way I will deal with it. Unfortunately, I think we would be picking and choosing among the various cases that appear on the order paper and if we did that we would in fact be saying that simply because the bills involving certain people are in a particular position on the order paper we would grant their petitions but would not deal with those bills that happen to be in another position on the order paper.

I do not think parliament should be put in the position of attempting to pick and choose on the basis of drawing a line halfway down the list or a quarter of the way down or picking out certain ones and not picking others because we have doubts about them. If we accepted this suggestion I think it would cause a great deal more consternation than is being caused at the moment and we would be laying ourselves open to charges against which we could not defend ourselves.

Parliament drew a distinction last year between the types of bills before the house. I have been told by someone who has kept track of the matter in the other place that perhaps two of these bills—I do not know their numbers—involve annulment rather than dissolution of marriage. In other words, a marriage did not exist in the first place because of some peculiarities with regard to the marital relationships of the couples involved. Last session we treated annulments in an entirely different way because a marriage did not exist in the first place. If the sponsor or anybody else wants to pick out the bills of that type on the order paper we can proceed with them and pass them as was done last session. That would be quite agreeable but in our view that is the only distinction we can draw with regard to the bills now before us. We do not think it should be done on the basis of tossing a coin or saying that the first 50 bills will pass but the next 50 will not, or by drawing numbers out of a hat. I do not think we can engage in a lottery in this regard. I would prefer to have some announcement made by the government of an approach that would meet the situation. I do not think there would be any hesitation then in letting them all pass. Failing that, I am afraid we would be inviting trouble if we followed the suggestion of the hon. member.

Prior to the question being asked I was dealing with what had been ascertained by Mr. Foucher, the investigator, in the course of following the respondent. I do not know where I was when the hon. member asked his question but I will read again the words of the investigator near the top of page 13.

A. On returning close to her residence on Selby street, which is just around the corner from St. Antoine street. I followed the car after that. I returned to the Mount Royal hotel and from there I was able to establish that he had gone up to the sixth floor and I had the name given to me before through the hotel registry—

He gives the name of the person who is recited in the petition as being the corespondent.

He had room—

He gives the room number.

Throughout that night I failed to notice anything happening. Mr. Dewing was not in his room, I lost him, and it was not until the following day, Saturday the 16th, that I was able to take up again after—

He gives the name of the respondent.

—at approximately 7.30 p.m. left in her car and drove and parked it on the northwest side of Atwater avenue near St. Catherine street, and a few minutes later was picked up by the same car and the same man and they went across to the Clover cafe where they remained inside for approximately an hour. They came out again and drove directly to the Mount Royal hotel. I noted that the woman was carrying besides her purse something that looked like a paper bag. The car was left at the hotel, the attendant looked after it, and they went into the Picadilly lounge on the ground floor of the hotel where they remained until approximately 9.15 p.m. Then they both made their way to the elevator, went to the sixth floor. In the meantime I called Mr. Vinet to join me at the hotel. He did so about 9.30 p.m. and from there on I made periodical checks on the room, I heard voices inside until about 11.10 p.m. when Jean Vinet and myself went up to the room and I knocked on the door. It was opened by Mr.—

He gives the name of the corespondent.

I addressed him by his name and asked him to go in and as he was standing inside the door we entered and I asked to speak to—

He gives the name of the respondent.

—who at that time was just on the edge of the bed partly sitting up and wearing a light blue nightgown.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Howard: Was account taken of the time for the question and answer?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that the hon. member for Skeena was interrupted because of the rule of the committee. He was raising a very important point and I only want to refer to one part of the evidence. There are a couple of amusing passages I might mention. I am always interested when these questions are asked about how so and so was dressed. We find the answer here is that he was wearing cream coloured, solid coloured pajamas.

An hon. Member: What colour do you wear?

Mr. Peters: Here, we have a budding investigator in our midst, and we did not know it. After the events of the next few months, perhaps he will be appearing before us regularly as one who has entered this very lucrative field.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, which is not really a point of order. On other occasions when evidence such as this was being read into the record, contrary to what was the practice in this chamber in days gone by, may the page boys be relieved of their duties in the chamber.

Mr. Peters: We certainly support that.

The Chairman: The committee is in agreement with the suggestion made by the minister, and the page boys are therefore relieved from further attendance at this time.

Mr. Peters: We are not going to embark on that type of discussion, anyway. I only wanted to point out one thing that was said. There was a question asked by Mr. Gomery, who was the lawyer for the plaintiff, I am told. The question was asked, I presume, of the first detective, Mr. Foucher, and I quote from his answer:

> I explained the purpose of our presence in the room and I would say they took it philosophically, there were no acrimonious comments made when we left. We retired downstairs and stayed there for about half an hour and then left.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this would not be surprising if it were not for the fact that this couple were seeking a divorce. This is one of the problems with which we are always faced in connection with these matters, connivance and arrangements that are quite often made. We should refer again to the questioning by the lawyer for the plaintiff, and I quote:

> Q. What prompted you to leave? Start from the beginning.
> A. Well, things had not been going too well within the family for several years. My wife, for the last two years insisted on taking her holidays on her own, without me, and she came home late one night last summer, very early in the morning and I gave her a severe reprimand and this time she said she wanted a divorce. I thought this over a couple of weeks.

It would be very interesting to know what a severe reprimand is from a husband to his wife.

> Q. Why did she say she wanted a divorce? A. She told me she was in love with another man and wanted to marry him.
> Q. Did she say who he was? A. No, but the following day she told me.
>
> Q. Who was he? A. Mr. Arthur Dewing of Stamford Connecticut, United States of America.
>
> Q. Do you know Mr. Dewing? A. Both my wife and I knew Mr. Dewing in England.
>
> Q. He is an Englishman? A. Yes.
>
> Q. What is he doing in Stamford, Connecticut? A. He emigrated to Canada first then he went to join his sister in the States.
>
> Q. What did you do as a result of this conversation with your wife? A. I thought a couple of weeks about it and finally I decided to secure legal advice.
> Q. What did you instruct your attorney to do? A. I thought they should start a divorce investigation at least.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the point of the remark that was made at the scene of the alleged offence when the investigator said they took it philosophically and there were no recriminations, as there sometimes are in these cases. The reason for this treatment was that they had decided to get a divorce. She wanted a divorce and he wanted a divorce. He went to a lawyer and asked how to get it. Obviously, this is one of those cases were the corespondent may or may not be guilty of the offence. There is reason to believe that this divorce was obtained by what I would consider to be other than the regular legal procedures.

I return to the evidence, and I find that this question was asked.

> Q. As a result of this consultation with your attorneys, did you learn anything which made you think you should move out? A. Yes.
> Q. What did the attorneys report to you?

I am surprised this testimony was allowed to continue this far, but the chairman finally intervened and said:

> We cannot allow that.

I would think that not only could the chairman not allow it but I would be very surprised if the lawyer could follow this type of question because it would be inevitable that he would become implicated if this line of questioning were continued. The lawyer then said:

> Mr. Chairman, I merely want to establish the reasons for his moving out.
>
> By The Chairman:
> Q. As a result of the investigation which your attorneys made you moved out?
>
> A. Yes.

It is surprising that in this evidence the chairman did not ask about the date he moved out of the house which he was sharing with his wife and children. He did not ask for the simple reason, I would imagine, that this would also have indicated that the whole procedure had been instigated by the two people who were interested in obtaining this divorce. If these allegations are true, Mr. Chairman, then since this is a quasi court and since collusion has been indicated, we should act as a court.

Now, we note that in this particular case the respondent appeared before the Senate committee and the chairman of the committee spoke to her as follows:

Mrs. Campbell, I want you to listen to me for a moment. You have gone in the box to give evidence—

This certainly sounds like court procedure.

—and I have to make it quite clear to you that you are under no obligation whatever to give any evidence that will tend to show that you have been guilty of adultery. You can give that evidence if you like, but you can refuse to give it. If you want to give evidence, of course, it will be taken down in the ordinary way. Now, with that caution on my part do you still wish to give evidence?

Well, this divorce was very important not only to the respondent but to the petitioner as well. This was the questioning by the clerk of the committee:

Q. What is your name?

She gives her name.

Q. What is your age?

She gives her age.

Q. Where do you live?

She says where she lives.

Q. What is your occupation? A. Clerk typist.
By Mr. Gomery:
Q. Are you the wife of Bruce Reid Campbell, sitting on my left? A. Yes.
Q. And the respondent in this case? A. Yes.
Q. Were you issued with a subpoena requiring you to be present today? A. Yes.
Q. Did you commit adultery with one Arthur Dewing on September 16, 1961 at the Mount Royal Hotel? A. Yes.

Well, Mr. Chairman, there are two surprising facts here. One is that this lady could get up and make this declaration which has certain social as well as legal restrictions to it, and the other is that this is the type of evidence that can only be given when the respondents themselves wish to make this type of information available. It cannot be forced from someone. Certainly the chairman of the committee fulfilled his duty in informing this person that she had the right to refuse to do this.

The second surprising feature, and the most important one involved in this particular case, is that when this respondent was before the other place no question was asked about what would happen the children. Yet we have seen from the evidence that the children were going to be the sole responsibility of the respondent and that the plaintiff had already declared he was waiving his right to the custody of the children. No questions were asked about the children and no consideration was given to them. It is surprising that this woman appears to have so little maternal affection that she did not ask for the indulgence of the committee for the establishment of her maternal rights to the custody of the children and the formalizing of an agreement which was indicated by the plaintiff as being agreeable to him.

The third point is probably not so important, but it is something I have not often noted in these cases. In this particular case the lawyer for the plaintiff asked whether a subpoena had been issued requiring attendance that day. I may have overlooked this in other cases, but I am under the impression that this is very seldom done. It is very seldom anyone ever subpoenas the respondent, that is, obtains a court order, and I cannot see how such an order could be obtained from the other place. I do not know if the other place has authority to give such an order but I do know that in the House of Commons miscellaneous private bills committee there is no power to subpoena private witnesses.

The Senate may have some legal machinery whereby it can do that, but I do not believe that is so. I shall be very interested in this matter and would like to know if a subpoena was issued through a provincial court.

Mr. Chairman, it has been brought to my attention it is now six o'clock.

Mr. Drysdale: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: It is six o'clock.

Mr. Drysdale: I realize the hon. member and his party have clearly indicated they are opposed to the fundamental principles in the bill of rights, but I wonder if he could indicate to the house whether that party, which used to stand for the freedom of the individual as proclaimed by Mr. Woodsworth and other members of the party, intends to perpetuate this violation against individual freedoms contrary to the principles in the bill of rights, or whether that party will give consideration to having these individual freedoms and principles upheld at this time?

Mr. Peters: That is a beautiful question but it is unfortunate that the time has arrived for the ending of this hour. I wonder if the hon. member who asks this question has in mind the rights of the individual under the bill of rights—is he interested in only one individual in these cases and not in the other four individuals who are concerned? There are the rights of four other individuals to be concerned and three of them are innocent. They have nothing whatsoever to do with this, even though they are going to be very fundamentally affected. With regard to what the Prime Minister said about this matter—

Mr. Drysdale: Will the hon. member answer my question?

Mr. Peters: It is six o'clock.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Peters: The bill of rights, in my opinion, should apply to all people and should be given to all people.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Then apply it to all, yourself.

The Chairman: Order. We are not discussing the bill of rights. We are dealing with Bill SD-2.

Mr. Drysdale: On the point of order, the hon. member has indicated, I think, that the bill of rights is relative at this particular time.

Mr. Howard: Six o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, you gave an opportunity some time ago to the hon. member for Skeena to make some introductory remarks before he dealt with the bill under discussion. I should similarly like to take this oportunity to make some remarks with regard to what is proceeding here this afternoon, which is a shocking affront to parliament and to the people of Canada.

I think the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Timiskaming will stand condemned before the people of Canada for their action this afternoon and their part in it—

Mr. Regier: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I believe that a question of privilege takes priority over a point of order. As I understood the arrangement we called it five o'clock at 5.36 p.m. by my time. It is now 5.41 by my time and I believe we are entitled to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: I see no point of privilege there at all, Mr. Chairman. To complete my sentence—

Mr. Regier: I should like to appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, to deal with my question of privilege and not permit a minister to brush it away arbitrarily.

The Chairman: So far as the chairman of the committee is concerned it has been brought to his attention that there should not be any deviation from the rules and, under the rules, private members' business must take up from five to six o'clock, and it is not yet six o'clock.

Mr. Regier: If I may rise on the question of privilege I, appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, to explain how we can call a time five o'clock and then, one hour later, refuse to call it six o'clock.

The Chairman: Well, to enlighten the hon. member that particular agreement took place while the Speaker was in the chair. The committee has no knowledge of it and it has no direction to deviate from the normal rules. Therefore I must continue to apply normal rules unless there is unanimous consent to proceed otherwise, and I do not see that unanimous consent.

Mr. Churchill: I would like to complete my sentence, that the New Democratic party will stand condemned by the people of Canada for the action of these hon. members today, who are acting with the consent of their entire party.

It is a serious reflection on that party that it will use the power given to it here under the free rules of this house to prevent justice being done under the law to 586 Canadians who, under the law, have made applications in good faith for divorces.

Time and again we have discussed the nature of the procedure with regard to divorces. As I said last night, we have made every possible effort in conjunction with the New Democratic party, with the Liberal party and the other place to reach agreement and consent concerning the method of dealing with this type of procedure in the house.

Not having obtained consent, it surely is not fair to these people, who in good faith and under the law submitted their applications to parliament, to deny them their rights under the law. Whether or not people approve of divorce does not enter into the question at the moment. By this action two members of this house are denying to at least 600 people the right that is due them and is assured to them under the law of this country.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Churchill: This is not going to go unnoticed throughout Canada. I regret that the New Democratic party as reorganized has gone so far away from the principles established in the past by men who were great leaders of the C.C.F. party, Mr. Woodsworth, Mr. Coldwell and others—

Mr. Regier: And you.

Mr. Churchill: —and now Mr. Douglas who is leading the New Democratic party. These men, I am sure, would not deny to Canadian citizens their rights under the law. Never did I hear that mentioned in this house in the past when the C.C.F. was here in strength.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman could I ask the minister a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Churchill: That was a party which stood, along with other parties, for the rights of the individual, and here is a denial of freedom under the law.

Mr. Howard: You are denying it.

Mr. Churchill: It is a complete denial of the bill of rights.

Mr. Howard: You are denying it.

An hon. Member: Go back to the hills.

Mr. Churchill: It is a shocking abuse—

Mr. Howard: You are the ones who are finally denying it.

Mr. Churchill: —of freedom within parliament. The hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Timiskaming both know that every effort was made this session—

Mr. Howard: That is not true.

Mr. Churchill: —to reach agreement—

Mr. Howard: That is not a true statement.

Mr. Churchill: —and all sorts of meetings were held. They were advised of the difficulties in the way, and yet they stand up here—

Mr. Howard: That is not true.

Mr. Churchill: —attempting to hold a shotgun to parliament in its dying days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: They do this at the expense of—

Mr. Howard: You are not telling the truth now.

Mr. Churchill: —and in denial of the rights of 589 citizens of this country.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, the hon. member said the Minister of Veterans Affairs has not told the truth. I am asking him to retract it.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I should think so.

The Chairman: Order. I will hear the hon. member on the question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

An hon. Member: Withdraw or be named.

Mr. Howard: Oh, here is this threat of naming again that comes up. It is the first thing that comes to one's mind, to name someone.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Howard: If you will contain your blood pressure for a moment, I will. I withdraw and say this, that what the minister said is not in accordance with the facts; and that is a true statement. That was placed on the record yesterday. When the minister gets up here and invites us to get down in the gutter with him, I refuse to co-operate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has made an attack upon the minister. I can assure the committee and all hon. members of this house that the minister has done all he can within the realm of practical politics to come to some solution of this problem. I want to say that some of us have negotiated with hon. gentlemen on the other side of the chamber. We came to what we thought was the principle for a solution and waited until we had word from another group as to whether the general principles agreed upon would bring about the solution desired. But it was only at the last minute that we heard this arrangement had fallen through.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regier: Which other group?

Mr. Morton: I have had private conversations on this matter. The hon. member was kind enough yesterday not to divulge the names of people involved, and I am not going to involve people either. All I am saying is that we waited, and so did the people who are now trying to heckle me, until we thought a solution had been reached. It was at the eleventh hour that we found nothing could be done. I say it is most unfair to blame the minister, who helped us try to reach a solution and who himself was let down at the last minute.

Mr. Nowlan: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Howard: On a point of order—

Mr. Nowlan: I am on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Skeena did withdraw, or at least in part, or pretended to withdraw—as he does in regard to most things he says in this house—the allegation that the Minister of Veterans Affairs had told an untruth. Then he said he descended into the gutter, or words to that effect. That is just as unparliamentary and I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member—or "the member"; forget the "honourable"—for Skeena should stand up and withdraw more of the canards which he has been throwing out, and particularly the one with regard to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the oversensitivities of the government demand apology, and I extend it. But I want to say this on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Davenport. If he says that in this house there is another group which at the last moment refused to go along with making some arrangements on this matter, then the minister cannot rise and accuse me of causing all this difficulty. It is the other group that is the cause of it all, if what the hon. member for Davenport says is correct.

The Chairman: I think we have had quite a fair discussion on this particular point of order and we should get back to the item before the committee, which is clause 1 of the bill. Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: I would like to ask the minister one question. Is he not aware of the fact that, while it is true negotiations went on for almost a year, it is not going to be a calamity if we have not had the time to discuss these bills and they therefore do not pass, because did this not happen in 1958 with this government, when these bills were carried over in the other place and reintroduced without any expense being involved.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, could I answer that question?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege—

The Chairman: Order. Before the minister raises his question of privilege I will hear the hon. member for Halifax on this matter.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have remained remarkably silent, to the extent that my hon. friends around here are commending me for all kinds of prizes. Perhaps it is because I hold here the Polynesian goddess of justice and she has comforted me in these somewhat bleak moments. I would like to answer the hon. member for Timiskaming on this point. In these cases which I have on the desk there are a number in which unless we grant divorces today children will be born illegitimate. I think it would be a shame if any one of us went forth from here having put that stigma on children.

I would also draw this to the attention of the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Skeena. If a child is born illegitimate of an adulterous union, subsequent marriage does not cure that illegitimacy. I make that point. Finally, as I said yesterday, I do not want to enter into recriminations, but I do appeal to the heart of the House of Commons. If ever that heart was to show itself collectively—and it is only as strong as any one individual's heart—it must be shown at this point.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago we were raising this matter of collusion that quite often appears in these cases. I refer to the arrangement between the parties to a divorce. I was reading certain information that I think gives some indication that this was the case in this particular petition. I would be happy to have information as to why this respondent came before the committee on a subpoena which I would suggest does not exist. There is no machinery to provide it. I presume a subpoena could not be given by parliament and I do not believe it could be given by a committee. We have tried this. Hon. members may recall the case of Eccles v. Eccles a year or two ago. It was the intention of the committee to subpoena the corespondent in that case and also some of the other people concerned. This proved to be impossible. I refer again to the evidence in this case:

> Q. Were you issued with a subpoena requiring you to be present today?—A. Yes.

I would suggest—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the royal assent is to be given and I suggest that you, sir, report progress. Then we shall continue, after royal assent has been given, so there will still be an opportunity to get this matter cleared away.

If not, I shall then move that the house do adjourn and dissolution will become official, I hope, tomorrow.

I had expected that there would have been a degree of give and take on this. It is apparent there is not going to be. These people who have taken proceedings—the only proceedings that they can take—are going to be denied what parliament provides as a remedy because one political party is determined that unless it gets its way they should be denied their rights.

I would suggest that you report progress and that we proceed to the other place as soon as the Gentleman Usher reports that the Chief Justice as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General of Canada is ready to give the royal assent.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I can make one comment about what the Prime Minister has just said. Of course, we disagree violently with his suggestion that there is a denial of rights involved here.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Howard: We would hope that the Prime Minister, in the period between now and when we come back after royal assent has been given, will think about this matter and make some concrete and forthright proposals to parliament so that we might consider them at that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister cannot in his position place this house in pawn to meet the wishes of two members in this house and the party to which they belong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: I had intended to rise on a point of order about what the Prime Minister had said, but the applause covered up his sneaking out the back door before I had a chance to do so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Prime Minister did not sneak out the back door. He went to perform the duty of the Prime Minister in relation to receiving the deputy of the Governor General who is coming to give royal assent, and it ill behoves the hon. member to cast a slur of that baseless kind on the Prime Minister. I suggest that if he values his honour as a member of this house he should immediately withdraw that baseless imputation.

Mr. Howard: I do not want to accuse the Prime Minister unfairly of anything, but he did engage in attacks against me and my party, and before I had a chance to say anything he was gone.

The Chairman: I think the hon. member will have to accept the explanation given by the Minister of Finance, because he must take it under the rules of this house.

Having said that, I will put the question: Is it agreed that I rise, report progress and ask for leave to sit again later this day?

Progress reported.

Mr. Howard: Is it understood that after royal assent we shall come back and proceed to deal with private bills?

Mr. Speaker: If the house so decides. This does not put the house into committee. This is simply leaving the door open to return to committee if that should be desired.

Mr. Howard: And if it is not desired?

Mr. Speaker: When shall the committee have leave to sit again?

Some hon. Members: Later this day.

Some hon. Members: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Without unanimous consent the house cannot return to committee later this day. Next sitting of the house.

Royal Assent

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House, Ottawa
April 18, 1962

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 18th day of April, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to incorporate Brock Acceptance Company.

An act to incorporate Gerand Acceptance Company.

An act respecting Canada Security Assurance Company.

An act to amend the Canada Grain Act.

An act respecting The Canadian Indemnity Company and the Canadian Fire Insurance Company.

An act respecting Reliance Insurance Company of Canada.

An act to amend the Representation Act.

An act to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

An act to provide for the Reporting of Financial and other Statistics relating to the Affairs of Corporations and Labour Unions carrying on Activities in Canada.

An act to incorporate Greymac Mortgage Corporation.

An act to amend the Customs Act.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1962.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Before I declare the adjournment, may I say to all hon. members that my wife and I shall be extremely happy if hon. gentlemen wish to join us across the hall after the adjournment. I include in this invitation such members of the press as have survived, and their ladies.

Royal Assent

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what our status is at the moment, it being after six o'clock. However, I believe it would be the wish of all hon. members, whether we are proceeding in a formal sense or an informal sense, that I extend to you at what is no doubt the closing session of this twenty fourth parliament, the thanks of all hon. members for the admirable, fair, good humoured and always pleasant way in which you have presided over our deliberations. If a friendly atmosphere has not always prevailed in the chamber, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly no fault of yours because you have radiated friendliness, fairness and a desire to address yourself to the business before the house. There may not be agreement on all outstanding questions, Mr. Speaker, but on this one I am sure there will be a unanimous feeling in this house in thanking you for the manner in which you have presided over the twenty fourth parliament, as you did over the twenty third parliament.

Perhaps you will not think it amiss, Mr. Speaker, if I associate others with this expression of gratitude to you. I think, of course, of the Clerk of the House and the first assistant and second assistant clerks. They have always been fair, always courteous and always devoted to their duties. I think that all members of this house consider themselves happy indeed that the house has been so admirably served by its officers.

I was not aware that the Prime Minister would be arriving at this particular time, Mr. Speaker, otherwise I might have suggested a few minutes of relaxation pending his arrival. He has indicated to me, however, that I may complete my remarks. In this case, I should like to include as well members of the staff of the house, the Sergeant-at-Arms and his deputy, the staff of this house in all its branches, who served this house so faithfully.

You have been associated and upheld, Mr. Speaker, by two worthy members of this house, the Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman of committees. They, like you, have presided over the deliberations of the house and committees with fairness, with dignity and have sought as well to make their contributions to the transaction of the business of the house in as pleasant an atmosphere as may be possible in a parliament that is known to have divisions. So, Mr. Speaker, this is an expression that is extended to all who have served this house, and I believe it will be the expression of all hon. members.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the absence of the Leader of the Opposition, which he regrets very much, and in the absence of my hon. friend from Laurier who would normally have followed the Minister of Finance, I may say that I do not think my sentiments could be expressed any better than in the words used by the Minister of Finance. It has not always been the case in the 24th, or even the 23rd parliament, that I have found myself in agreement with the utterances of the Minister of Finance but, at the very close of this parliament, I find myself perforce in agreement with him because we do appreciate the way in which Your Honour—on some occasions that have been quite trying and difficult, when feelings were aroused and when difficult points were raised—has threaded through the intricacies of procedure and come out with decisions which some of us may not always have agreed with but which all of us agreed were always reached objectively and fairly and in the best traditions of the high office you hold.

As for the staff of the house, the Clerk of the House, the Sergeant-at-Arms and all those who assist them in the procedure of the house and in the housekeeping of parliament which has become more difficult as we spread ourselves into more and more real estate, above ground and under ground, I express the warmest feelings of appreciation. I may add we hope that all the digging of tunnels may be completed by the time the next parliament meets.

In all the matters which make for the efficient discharge by this house of the duties we are sent to discharge as the representatives of the people, we have had the unfailing and courteous assistance of the staff who have often worked very long hours under quite trying circumstances. It is not often that we have the opportunity to express the gratitude we feel and I support the Minister of Finance in all he has said about them. Of course that applies particularly to Hansard. Perhaps there are few hon. members in the house who have more reason to thank Hansard because there are few members who have put a greater burden upon them, according to some of the statistics which I might be inclined to dispute, but which I sometimes read in the press.

As for the Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chairman of Committees I echo what has been said by the Minister of Finance. Both of these gentlemen have replaced others who fulfilled those functions previously, and in the particular case of the hon. member for Spadina because of circumstances which we all deeply regret.

Perhaps sometimes our differences with the Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chairman of Committees may have been a little more intense than they ever were with Your Honour. Nevertheless on this occasion I would like to echo the words of the Minister of Finance with regard to the present occupants of those positions—if they are still the present occupants—those occupants who in a very few minutes will cease to adorn those positions. I express our appreciation of them and of those who preceded them. In doing so I include the junior member of the government who, despite whatever differences we had with him, we always found occupied the chair with dignity and decorum.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that my last official act as the parliamentary leader of this famous group for this session of parliament is a delightful and pleasant one—to join with the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in expressing our sincere appreciation of your services as Speaker during this parliament.

It has been true that your understanding of human beings, your understanding of the mood of the house, your sense of humour and your spirit of fair play have caused you to be so loved by us and has caused us to have such an appreciation of your period of office. It is for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, that during recent months there has been a growing interest in the house, and in the party for which I have the honour to speak this afternoon, in the proposal that we should have a permanent speaker.

We in this group trust that finally we shall adopt the practice which has been found so satisfactory in Great Britain, namely the appointment of a permanent speaker and that, because he is the permanent speaker, he will receive that due consideration in the difficult periods that come occasionally when the people of a country have to make their decision as to the government they wish to have.

Before concluding I must also express our appreciation of the kindness and hospitality extended to hon. members of the house by your good wife. She is one of the most charming ladies one could imagine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Anyone who has attended one of her dinners cannot but realize she knows what a good table is and how to make certain that all present enjoy themselves in the friendliest of atmospheres.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group, and I might say we all expect to be back after the next election, we trust you will have an enjoyable holiday and will return refreshed to the coming parliament and that we will find, should that parliament decide early in its proceedings to make provision for the office of a permanent speaker, you will grace it.

Mr. Speaker: I trust hon. members will permit me one word more. In view of the kind and gracious things that have been said I should like to acknowledge, first on behalf of my associates in the chair and in committee, the words of appreciation which have so properly been spoken about them. Then I should like to acknowledge the appreciation expressed for the officers at the table, the Clerk of the House, the Assistant Clerk, the Sergeant-at-Arms and others who have served the house so well and upon whom we all depend so greatly. For them I am sure I express their gratitude that their services, so often ignored, have been properly acknowledged in these closing hours. Likewise for my wife I could not be more appreciative of the words which have been said about her.

For myself, of course, I would like to say a great deal more than would be acceptable. May I put it simply—that these years in the 24th and 23rd parliaments have been years of great happiness and interest. They have been years of happiness because of the co-operation which the house, on all sides, has extended unfailingly to me, both when I was right and when I was not so right. So I say, not without some feeling, that I am grateful for everything that has been said in this final hour. What I should say to you I am not quite sure as you go out to the experience we shall all share in common. Perhaps the best I can do would be to renew the invitation to join me across the hall, and wish you all many happy returns.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the formal adjournment of the house is asked for I should like once more to ask hon. gentlemen in the New Democratic party whether they would be prepared to continue this session until the conclusion of that portion of business which was being considered at the time we resorted to the other place. I make that appeal; I shall do no more. If there is no hope of that appeal receiving the consideration which I would have expected it would receive, then of course there is nothing more to do than for the house leader to move the adjournment of the house. I think tomorrow may be the date when His Excellency will receive the advice and the dissolution already indicated will become effective.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would move the adjournment of the house until April 26.

Business of the House

Mr. Speaker: By leave the house could entertain a motion; it is after six o'clock. Does the house agree to entertain a motion to adjourn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, April 18, it stand adjourned until Thursday, April 26, 1962.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the house leader what the business will be on April 26.

Mr. Churchill: I will confer with the hon. gentleman before we resume.

Motion agreed to.

It being forty five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

The twenty fourth parliament was dissolved on Thursday, April 19, 1962, by proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General.
