The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERRIDGE—REFERENCE TO EDITORIAL IN TORONTO "TELEGRAM"

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the rights and privileges of every member of this house. I do so in relation to an editorial of yesterday's date entitled "Time for an election" in the Toronto Telegram. I do not object to the implication in the editorial that the opposition is directing parliament, for I can easily see the validity of this point, but what I do think is a statement in contempt of parliament is the following:

> Within the last few days the Liberal member for Hull deliberately provoked the Deputy Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: The word "provoke" means "to rouse the anger of". The Toronto Telegram, then, is clearly implying that the Deputy Speaker acted in anger rather than in justice and according to the rules of the house in demanding that the hon. member for Hull withdraw certain of his remarks on March 16. This is a slight on the Deputy Speaker and therefore on the position of the Speaker of this house, in our opinion.

In these circumstances I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

> That Mr. J. D. MacFarlane, editor in chief of the Telegram, be called before the bar of the house to apologize for this insult to parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: A good joke.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member is permitted to place this motion before the house it is my duty to determine whether or not there is a prima facie breach of privilege involved in the editorial of which the hon. member complains. I naturally approach this subject with every intention and desire of protecting the good name of the chairmen and speakers of the house, which of course is essential to do if the house is to carry out its high responsibilities. However, I find difficulty in following the reasoning of the hon. member when he concludes that the Deputy Speaker is accused of having acted in anger simply from a deduction from the use by the Telegram of the word "provoked". If I may refer to the hon. member's statement of privilege, his objection is to the following words:

> Within the last few days the Liberal member for Hull deliberately provoked the Deputy Speaker—

From the use of the word "provoked" the hon. member concludes that the Deputy Speaker is accused of being angry and therefore did not act as he should have acted. Therefore he concludes that the Telegram has accused the Deputy Speaker of acting as he should not have acted. In my judgment the inference taxes one's imagination too greatly to be accepted as the basis for a motion.

I find that the Concise Oxford dictionary says that "provoke" means "to rouse". Therefore the Telegram's editorial might be interpreted as meaning that the hon. member for Hull roused the Deputy Speaker. Other definitions are "to irritate; to instigate; to tempt; to allure; to call forth". I am afraid that although I agree with the hon. member's desire to protect the Chair, I could not accept the words complained of as being sufficient to raise a prima facie question of a breach of privilege of the house.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY PRODUCTS—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING SUPPORT PRICES

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house of the government's intentions with respect to support of dairy products under the Agricultural Stabilization Act for the year commencing May 1, 1962.

Support for dairy products at the same level presently in effect will be continued for the forthcoming year. In order to increase the consumption of butter, and thus bring consumption and production into closer balance, the agricultural stabilization board will be authorized to lower its buying and selling price for butter from the current 64 cents to 52 cents per pound, effective May 1. This action will have the effect of reducing the price of butter by about 12 cents per pound, which should result in a price of from 56 cents to 59 cents at the retail level.

Dairy Products Support Prices

To maintain support at the present level to dairy farmers who market their milk and cream for manufacturing purposes, and thus whose returns are directly related to the price of butter, these farmers will receive compensatory payments based on the difference between the 64 cents support level and the 52 cents board price for butter.

The price at which the stabilization board will buy cheese will be set in relation to the 52 cents purchase price for butter. Cheese milk shippers will receive the same compensatory payment as is to be made to those supplying milk for butter manufacture.

The revised purchase prices for butter and cheese, plus the compensatory payments, will provide the same measure of support to producers supplying milk for butter and cheese production as is provided under the present support program.

The compensatory payment will be in addition to the 25 cents per hundred pounds subsidy now paid to shippers of manufacturing milk. It will not be paid on milk used in the fluid milk market or on surplus milk from producers shipping to the fluid milk market. The pricing of fluid milk and any control of surplus production in this segment of the industry lies within local jurisdiction in each province. Milk used for the production of concentrated milk products will continue to receive the present subsidy of 25 cents per hundred pounds but will not be eligible for the additional compensatory payment.

The stabilization board has been instructed to enter into discussions with producer and industry representatives with respect to details of the new program, including arrangements for the price transition. Following these discussions a full announcement of the details will be made.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): It will be desirable, of course, to await the details which are to be announced later, as the minister has just told us, before making a final assessment of this announcement of policy. However, the general lines announced by the minister follow pretty well the suggestion made by the national Liberal council last January; and, as hon. members will recall, the hon. member for Leeds, who among others during the course of this session, made representations in this house which we are happy to see have been observed by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): We believe the dairy industry itself will be happy that the government has now reached a decision on this matter. I had the opportunity of meeting some of the representatives who were negotiating local contracts in the city of Ottawa some weeks ago, and they had to adjourn their meetings for several weeks because the government had not made up its mind on this question.

The subsidy and the compensatory payments which are being made amount to even more, I believe, than the federation of agriculture has asked for. On the other hand, is the government giving any consideration to bringing into the pattern of these compensatory payments some benefit for the fluid milk industry itself? It would seem to me that until a relationship is established between the fluid milk industry and butter production—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should confine his remarks to comment—and brief comment—on the announcement of policy which has been made. He should not discuss extraneous matters, and he should reserve his argumentative approach to the subject until the matter can be debated.

Mr. Peters: The reason this has been mentioned is that the government may find difficulty in putting these compensatory payments into effect unless consideration is given to the fluid milk problem; because this is a butter fat problem, and the suggestion that the prices paid for butter should be lowered affects the whole dairy industry and its interrelated parts. I would only ask the minister to give consideration to this immediately.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a very important question I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture. In the new policy just announced by the minister, will the position of the milk producers in British Columbia, who have a pooling system under the provincial milk marketing act, be safeguarded by special arrangements? If so, will there be discussions with representatives of the industry in the province to work out the details?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I think the hon. gentleman and other hon. members are aware, suggestions have been made for some two years past by the dairy farmers of Canada and other producer organizations that a scheme somewhat along these lines should be put into effect. As a result of that the producer associations in British Columbia have approached the stabilization board and held conversations with them in regard to what their position would be in the event such a scheme were put into effect.

It was agreed that further discussions would be left until a statement of government policy was made in connection with this matter. Now that this has been done, further discussions will be held with the producer associations of British Columbia with a view to working out an equitable arrangement which will take into consideration the special pooling situation which exists in that province.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY THE GOVERNMENT

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 20—The Minister of Transport—The following proposed motion:—

That a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government, be appointed to consider the accounts, estimates and bills relating to the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys; and that the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time; and that, notwithstanding standing order 67 in relation to the limitation of the number of members, the said committee shall consist of Messrs. Badanai, Brassard (Lapointe), Broome, Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway), Campeau, Carter, Chevrier, Creaghan, Fisher, Forbes, Granger, Grills, Horner (Jasper-Edson), Howe, Kennedy, McDonald (Hamilton South), McFarlane, McPhillips, McWilliam, Mitchell, Monteith (Verdun), Pascoe, Robinson, Rowe, Smallwood and Smith (Simcoe North).

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED INCIDENT FOLLOWING LETTER TO PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister aware that when an unemployed iron ore miner wrote to the Prime Minister asking him to do something about unemployment, according to The Miner's Voice of Winnipeg for March 1962—

Instead of receiving a sympathetic reply the miner received a visit from the R.C.M.P. He was told if he repeated insulting letters to Mr. Diefenbaker he would be in trouble.

Has the minister any comment on this report?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the report is entirely unknown to me. If any such incident took place I should hope it would be brought to my attention. In the absence of any such proof I find it extremely difficult to believe that such an incident actually did take place. If anyone has evidence of any such incident I should be glad to be provided with proof of it so that I may make a full investigation.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED SUGGESTION FROM U.S. GOVERNMENT RESPECTING RATIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of press reports from Washington that United States authorities have declared that the state and interior departments have recommended that the Canadian government be urged to submit the Columbia river treaty to parliament for ratification immediately, leaving what is referred to as an internal dispute with British Columbia to be settled later by arbitration, would the Prime Minister inform the house whether he has received any such extraordinary suggestion from the United States government?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, following the usual rules regarding communications between nations I think I shall go no further than to say that since the hon. gentleman asked me a question the other day as to whether a message had been received from Washington, a message has been received.

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF FEDERAL AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of a press report that the premier of British Columbia announced on his return from the United States last week that he has asked Ottawa to relinquish its authority on the Columbia project and let British Columbia finance and proceed with the project by itself, would the Minister of Finance inform the house whether he received such a proposal from the premier during his recent discussions and, if so, what action the government intends to take?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be fair to the premier of British Columbia, or to the efforts that have been made in the course of our discussions over the past week end, to comment on particular points or specific aspects of the discussions which were held.

FEASIBILITY STUDY OF NATIONAL GRID PROPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether the proposed technical study of the feasibility of the national power grid is to be conducted under his department and, if so, whether there have been any funds appropriated for the purpose.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The feasibility study will be conducted under the auspices of the committee of ministers that met to discuss this subject last Monday. It will require no extra appropriation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister say under what vote the expenses will be paid?

Mr. Dinsdale: There will be no additional money required for this study, inasmuch as the departmental officials will be carrying out the necessary technical work.

HOUSING

TORONTO—CONTINUING GUARANTEE OF MORTGAGES ON APARTMENT BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is the government continuing to guarantee mortgages on apartment buildings in the Toronto area, when the Toronto press reports a high vacancy rate which is expected to get worse?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the hon. member asked me this question, although he has not given me notice. I did notice the story in this morning's paper. I have checked the metro planning board report upon which the Globe and Mail based this story. It is interesting to note the conclusions reached in the report.

Based on the average absorption of 500 units a month that has been the experience since 1959, the market has not reached the saturation point; and, although the average vacancy rate is the highest to date, it represents only a moderate increase over last year and is the smallest increase ever recorded.

Nevertheless, we foresaw several months ago that the pace of construction of rental accommodation was perhaps a little bit fast, even for Toronto. Officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation therefore established a committee that screens all N.H.A. rental applications in the metro area and turns back those for which they judge there will be little or no demand. Since the committee was formed, only 40 per cent of the loans requested for rental units have been approved, and I might add that none has been approved during the past two months.

The N.H.A. content of those rental units presently under construction in metro numbers 6,400. But because of the quality of the buildings and the select basis on which the C.M.H.C. screening committee operates, no difficulty is being experienced in renting them. As a matter of fact the new N.H.A.-financed apartments in Toronto are being rented as quickly as they are completed and available for rental.

We have not, of course in metro any vacancies in limited dividend or public housing projects which are built and financed as rental accommodation for lower income families and for elderly persons.

C.M.H.C.—REPORTED RENT INCREASES TO SENIOR CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works in view of recent correspondence reaching me and press reports to the effect that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which has authority over low rental housing—I refer to apartments and homes—made possible by C.M.H.C. agreements with provincial and municipal authorities, has instructed the administrators to increase the rents of the senior citizens, the blind and disabled by $3 for single persons and $7 for married persons.

May I ask the minister, in view of the $10 increase in pension granted these persons by this House of Commons a few days ago, if the increase in rentals now demanded by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was made with the knowledge and consent of the minister. If it was not, may I ask the minister if he will take this matter up with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order to ensure that the old age pensioners who are dealing with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation receive the full benefit of the $10 increase?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I am having a difficult time following the myriad questions, but I will be happy to sort them out and accept the questions as notice.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RAILWAY ENGINEERS—INQUIRY AS TO PRESENT POSITION OF DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. This is an important question, and it affects every member of the house. Can the minister advise the house whether there have been any new developments in the dispute between the locomotive engineers and the railways?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was in touch by telephone with the presidents of both railways as well as Mr. Travers of the locomotive engineers. Following the telephone conversations I dispatched to all concerned in the dispute a telegram which reads as follows:

> —it is in critical interest of Canada and all Canadians that you and your officers resume negotiations . . . and make utmost effort to settle remaining matters in dispute as soon as possible before threatened strike . . . Stoppage of railway operations would be utterly disastrous in its impact on spring upsurge in Canadian economic activity. Please keep me closely in touch with progress of negotiations.

Today I have been advised that as a result of this telegram the parties to the dispute agreed to meet tomorrow morning at 10.30 o'clock.

SYDNEY MINES, N.S.—WORKING CONDITIONS OF FREIGHT HANDLERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Gloucester asked if I had received a letter from the Princess local, united mine workers of America, at Sydney Mines concerning the Northside freight handlers' association. I have indeed received a letter, and I have asked Canadian National Railways to give me a report on the situation.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPORTED ACTION IN U.S. COURTS AGAINST ROYAL BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. I regret that I have not given him advance notice of it. Perhaps he might answer tomorrow if he has not been informed of the matter. Press reports this afternoon have indicated that disclosures have been made in the House of Representatives subcommittee in Washington indicating that the United States government is suing the Royal Bank of Canada with respect to certain cheques that were not stopped in 1960 when there were political difficulties. Will the Minister of Justice indicate whether it is possible to have the United States government in United States courts sue a Canadian corporation for something that seems to involve a commercial transaction in Cuba?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into this matter. However, I would have some reservations as to whether, in commenting on it, I would not be called upon to express a legal opinion, and on matters that do not fall within the responsibility of the government. Subject to the reservation that I should only report on a matter in so far as it lies within my responsibility as minister, I shall be glad to look into the matter and report to the house as soon as possible.

SONS OF FREEDOM—PROTEST AGAINST CONSTRUCTION OF SPECIAL PRISON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I apologize for asking several questions today, but my constituents are provoked. I wish to ask the Minister of Justice if he has received a resolution from the Nelson chamber of commerce protesting his proposal to build a special prison in the Fraser valley for Doukhobor convicts. If so, will he reconsider this matter to see whether dispersal in several prisons rather than concentration in one might be more apt to reduce the anti-social tendencies of these prisoners?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I cannot say at the moment with certainty whether or not I have received a resolution from the Nelson chamber of commerce to this effect. I dare say I have, because I have received a number of communications from individuals and organizations in that area on this subject, to most, if not all, of which I have up to now replied to the effect that, while there is a good deal that can be said in favour of dispersing Sons of Freedom convicted to penitentiary terms in our institutions across Canada, nevertheless up to the present time, owing to the serious overcrowding in our maximum security institutions, this is not possible. We are left, therefore, with no alternative, in the light of the nature of the Sons of Freedom fanatics who are being convicted, and our previous experience with them as inmates of institutions, but to establish a separate institution for them, at least until such time as overcrowding in our institutions has been alleviated.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMBINES

DRUGS—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Last January 30 I asked the minister if he had received any indication as to when the restrictive trade practices commission would report in respect of its inquiry relating to the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs. The minister replied as follows:

No, Mr. Speaker, I have not a report or any definite indication. However, I can assure the hon. member that in discussions I have received clear assurance that this inquiry is being pursued with all possible dispatch.

I wonder if the minister is now in a position to report to the house in connection with this matter.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to add anything to what I said at that time. I have made inquiries from time to time, and there is a good deal of further work and analysis required to be made of the evidence that was taken. All I can say is that the commission is proceeding with all appropriate dispatch, but hon. members must recognize that this is a difficult and complicated task.

SHIPPING

RICHELIEU RIVER—PROVISION FOR PLEASURE CRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Last Monday evening the minister made a statement which was reported as follows on page 14 of the Nouveau Journal for Tuesday, March 21:

As early as this spring, we will carry out a study of the problems of boating on the rivière des Prairies.

Also according to the same newspaper, the minister added later on:

The time has come for the government to establish certain regulations and carry out the necessary work so that people may enjoy that sport in all safety.

Could the minister inform the house whether that project would also include the Richelieu river, especially in Beloeil, Chambly and St. John, where boating clubs are very important, not only in regard to boating but also as tourist attractions?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regards to navigation, the section of the Richelieu river mentioned by my hon. friend is very different from the rivière des Prairies and rivière des Mille Iles. However, I shall be pleased to look into his request and, if possible, to comply with it.

INDUSTRY

NEW BRUNSWICK—PERMISSION TO PUMP OUT MINE SHAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Yesterday the hon. member for Gloucester asked me a question which I took as notice. I now have an answer for him.

The Fisheries Act prohibits the discharge of any deleterious substance into waters frequented by fish. Since there are substantial quantities of heavy metal compounds such as copper, zinc and lead in the water from the abandoned mine shaft of the Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation, there is no doubt that this water would be deleterious. Officials of the Department of Fisheries are at the moment co-operating with the corporation in an effort to devise a method of disposal or treatment which will avoid any infraction of the act.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

THE QUEEN MOTHER—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF CANADIAN TOUR

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): I have an inquiry to direct to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister give the details of the Canadian tour of the Queen Mother, which has been announced for June?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to give the house that information any time I have it before me. I will take the question as notice.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

National parks branch—

National parks and historic sites and monuments—

648. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $2,500,000.

Mr. McMillan: We seem to be getting more and more supplementary estimates all the time, and I do not know how we are going to get the money to meet them. However, I think we should be trying to cut down our expenses. The government promised to cut out extravagance, and I hope there is no extravagance in this vote. On February 14 last, as recorded at page 851 of Hansard, question No. 133, the hon. member for Port Arthur asked a question in four parts. The first part read:

Has the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources spent any money to restore completely Arizona Charlie's famous Palace Grand dance hall for the occasion of the Dawson city gold rush festival?

The minister answered:

Yes, the Palace Grand theatre is being restored as a national historic site in time for public use during the gold rush festival.

I may say that I have seen a sketch of this dance hall, and it looks like a dance hall with a stage at one end and a bar to the side of it. As the second part of his question the hon. member for Port Arthur asked:

If so, (a) what was the amount (b) under what vote or statutory provision is the money being expended?

The answer was:

(a) $138,463, to December 31, 1961.

(b) Funds are provided in vote 285, national parks and historic sites and monuments—construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment; statutory authority is provided in the Historic Sites and Monuments Act.

I think the funds are being provided under this vote; at least we did not hear about the project last year under vote 285. As I say, I have read something about this dance hall in magazines but I do not pretend to know whether it is a dance hall or a theatre. Evidently it was run during the time of the gold rush by a wealthy American called Arizona Charlie who was in pursuit of more wealth by providing the boys with liquor, gambling, and other diversions for a price.

Mr. Benidickson: And this is to be an historic site.

Mr. McMillan: To support what I say I have here a book on the Yukon, and I have read about it in magazines. This is a book from the library of parliament entitled "The Yukon", published by Hinton & Godsell, and it says that Arizona Charlie's Palace Grand was in competition with the Tivoli, Nigger Jim's Pavilion and other places in providing select entertainment, liquor, gambling, etc. I can tell the house something about this establishment, as I have read about it. There are accounts of painted dancers and other ladies who were present as an adjunct to such an establishment. Hon. members will find all that in this book; and now this dance hall, or theatre as the minister prefers to call it, has been declared an historical site, a shrine, or a monument and I want to know why.

Mr. Pickersgill: A shrine?

Mr. Dinsdale: A site—spelled s-i-g-h-t-.

Mr. McMillan: I wonder is it to perpetuate the memory of Arizona Charlie, the ladies of the night or those who spent their substance there. I believe that declaring this place an historical site was a device in order to spend $138,000 on this particular project. It seems to me that if the government had this money to spend it might have been better spent on some memorial school, a small memorial hospital or something of that nature, because after all Dawson City is a small place. I do not think we should be spending money on this dance hall or theatre, call it what you will.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the amount involved?

Mr. McMillan: The minister may tell us how much is being spent on this building. We know that $138,000 was spent up to the end of the year, but in his answer he indicated that it was not completed.

Mr. Benidickson: This particular minister is the last one who should spend money that way.

Mr. McMillan: The minister might also tell us when the official opening of the building will take place, what inscription will be on the plaque which will probably appear on the front of the building, and whether the Prime Minister will attend the opening and dedication.

Mr. Benidickson: "Opened by Right Hon. Walter Dinsdale"?

Mr. McMillan: The opposition spent many days last year on the estimates of the department of northern affairs, and we did not hear anything about this particular building. As I said, it was concealed in vote 285 under the acquisition of buildings, etc. We are now accused by the Prime Minister of holding up the estimates, but we always try to be vigilant and find out all we can. That is our job, but evidently in this case we were not vigilant enough and did not take enough time. I brought up one matter of extravagance in this department, and I think it is up to the minister to answer some of these questions.

Mr. Fisher: I am glad the hon. member who preceded me brought up this question, because I was going to touch on it myself. I must say that in view of the personal reputation of the minister I was surprised to see this item. I know he has a sense of publicity but I also know he has a certain moral attitude, and I suppose one cancelled out the other and that is why we did not hear about Arizona Charlie's joint last year when we were dealing with the estimates.

I wanted to ask him some further questions on this. I appreciate the information that is on page 852 of Hansard, but my questions were generated by a quite interesting article written by Pierre Berton in the Toronto Star of February 5. The minister may have seen it. I suppose Mr. Berton has a bit of a professional interest in the Yukon since he has been involved, I think, in a television series and has published a very entertaining book on the Yukon. He says a number of things in this article upon which I think the minister should comment just to set the record straight. This is apart from the questions asked by the hon. member for Welland, which I think concentrated on the point as to why the minister was so reticent last year and what are the plans for this year. Here are some of the points I should like to put to the minister. Mr. Berton says:

> The more I think about this project, the more insane it sounds. But that is exactly why it has sparked so much interest. It is so wacky, so unlikely, so off-beat, that everybody wants to go.

This article goes on:

> Sedentary types who normally wouldn't be caught farther afield than the Four Seasons motel are now coming up to me and saying, fiercely: "I've just got to go!"

Of course where they are going is up to the Yukon. Apparently an entire Broadway company is going up there to put on a new musical that is, I gather, an adaptation of the famous Ben Jonson play about gold and greed called Volpone. Again, this is such an imaginative thing that I wonder why the minister has been so discreet and reticent about it. How often does a Broadway musical come to Canada and, of all places, Dawson City in 1962? Why this mystery; why this cloister that has been placed around it by the government? It seems out of keeping with the past behaviour of this government. I have never known such modesty and at the same time such imagination, because Mr. Berton goes on to say:

> Of course, all this is tentative, Broadway musicals being what they are. But contracts have been signed and the book is being written. I'd say there is at least a two to one chance of pulling it off.

So the odds are pretty good. He goes on:

> I hope so because the department of northern affairs has spent something like $200,000 completely restoring Arizona Charlie's famous Palace Grand dance hall just for the occasion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Would he interpret this as free enterprise or socialized entertainment?

Mr. Fisher: I like to draw my own moral at the end of my remarks. If the hon. member will wait I will try to do that. I did want to go on to this—

Mr. Benidickson: The same price to everybody.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Berton also says:

> This is probably more than Charlie spent on it, since he built it from the remains of two steamboats.

Was the Minister of Public Works consulted in this business? It seems to me that if this is a complete rebuilding job—I understand there are a lot of old steamboats up around that area—knowing the vigilance of the Minister of Public Works, this seems an ideal project for him. Anyway, Mr. Berton goes on:

> The department's sleuths have been combing archives and writing old vaudevillians in order to reproduce the decor exactly as it was when the dance hall was built in the spring of 1899. The exterior was completed and the building closed in before the cold weather started last fall and the interior decorators are now at work on the final touches. The restoration of other buildings will depend on private funds which so far have been slow in coming in.

I think we need to ask the minister what assistance he has been giving in bringing in private funds. I gather that the government has accepted the responsibility of building up Arizona Charlie's place but the rest is going to be filled in by private enterprise. This leads me to the point that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate mentioned. I can look at the roads program and all the other parts of the vision of the north, and always the call is that the government shall go in and lay the ground work and the basis for private enterprise. I want to ask the minister, is this project consistent in the same way, and is it also a constructive part of the vision? It seems to me it would be worth while knowing that.

Further on Mr. Berton gives a résumé of what is going to be included in the tour. He sets out the Gold Nugget tour for the first, second and third days. I was just stunned, again, at the reticence in this. I cannot find mention of a single political speech in here. I want to ask the minister, does he mean to say that after an expenditure of some 200,000 bucks on a place like this there is not going to be a politician there to open it or at least make a few remarks?

Mr. Pickersgill: It will be the first opening the Prime Minister has missed.

Mr. Fisher: I want to know more about this. The concluding paragraph of Mr. Berton's article is as follows:

> Crazy or not, the Dawson city gold rush festival is likely to make its mark as one of the most imaginative undertakings of its kind in Canada—

I see the minister nodding. This all becomes part of the vision. Again I ask, why this modesty up to now? Mr. Berton goes on:

> —a genuine attempt to make use of our own history and natural resources and to provide something for visitors that cannot be obtained elsewhere. It is not a money making proposition, of course, and, indeed,—

And here is the question again, this nagging one:

> —unless further funds are subscribed from the public it's possible that it could founder.

Does this mean that private enterprise is not coming through? This article is several weeks old and Mr. Berton may not be up on things, but I think we need a report from the minister on how private enterprise is responding to this government initiative. Mr. Berton concludes:

> So if you have any rich old uncles who would like to underwrite the restoration of an historic building or so, drop me a line. This is one of the cradles of our gaudy past. It would be a shame to see it crumble into dust for lack of public interest.

This exciting description of the festival, the project and the government's role appeared in what I have always heard government members refer to as "that Liberal newspaper", the Toronto Star. Here is a Liberal newspaper, through one of its most noted correspondents, publicizing in tremendous fashion a part of the northern vision, and we have had an inadequate response—I think we can criticize the minister for this—from the government in this regard.

I asked this simple little question and I thought it might elicit some interesting details. I have seen it happen before that a person will ask a question and a minister will take off. The Postmaster General, I am sure, knowing his capacity and sense of advertising, would have done so. I cannot quite understand why I received such a terse answer in this regard. For this reason I would like to support the hon. member for Welland in the questions he has put, and I hope we will have a further explanation of the government's role in this project and what its future looks like at the present time.

I really cannot ask for this, but I would like to suggest to the minister that if there is a moral question involved in all this, as seemed to be adumbrated by the hon. member for Welland, I think the committee would appreciate his comments; because it is not too often that we have the opportunity to receive a moral judgment upon Canadian history. In this particular case I think we would all be delighted to have the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources tell us his own views on this festival and the part his department has played in giving leadership to private enterprise.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies there are one or two observations I would also like to make on the—

The Chairman: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Winkler: I do not wish to take up the time of the committee for long. I certainly do not intend to reply to the points which have just been raised, but I would judge from the contribution made by the last two hon. members that there must have been some very strong local emotion attached to the restoration of this saloon or hotel up north, Arizona Charlie's; and if it is ever made available to the public for public use I should be surprised if in some subsequent political campaign we do not see some billing like "Tonight we present Wild Walter from Welland" or maybe "Dangerous Doug from Port Arthur". Time will tell.

My remarks will not be along those lines at all. I should like first of all to compliment the minister on the efforts which were made on behalf of Canada at the resources for tomorrow conference held in Montreal last fall.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. We are discussing an item having to do with the construction and acquisition of buildings in connection with national parks and historic sites. You recognized the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, no doubt because you assumed he had a valuable contribution to make in connection with the subject under discussion. The hon. member is now going on to discuss something which has nothing to do with this item. There are some of us who are interested in this Arizona Charlie and in the effort to restore him, and I feel this is one occasion when the rules should be strictly observed and that we should be permitted to deal with this item before we go on to discuss other items which do not appear to be comprehended in the estimates at all.

Mr. Winkler: I shall get to my point very soon, and I shall only say to the hon. member from Bonavista-Twillingate that if he would refer to the discussion of supplementary estimates during the last 12 days or so he would see that it is surely ridiculous for him to bring up such a point of order as this. I will get to my point immediately—

The Chairman: Naturally the discussion must centre on the item, and I expect the hon. member will be relating his remarks to the item.

Mr. Winkler: Most certainly. The reason I mentioned the resources for tomorrow conference was this. Out of that conference came some results which will be beneficial to the people of Canada with regard to parks. I regret very much that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate does not want to allow just a minute for another member of the committee to get to his point, though he takes hours at other times.

Mr. Pickersgill: Take whatever time you like.

Mr. Winkler: I will speak of this matter in relation to my own province of Ontario. In Ontario we have an organization known as the Federation of Ontario Naturalists. Representatives of that organization attended the Montreal conference, being interested in the establishment of parks, regardless of under what authority. I am speaking today simply because in the past I have had the pleasure of trying to persuade the minister's department to become interested in the particular area of Ontario in which I live and in other areas immediately adjacent to my constituency.

I speak of the shores of lake Huron and Georgian bay. I indicated on a previous occasion that these are excellent park sites. Off the Bruce peninsula exists the only national park, I believe, in the province of Ontario. I am aware that since 1958 the minister's department spent, in connection with the parks program, some $3.5 million in the province of Ontario for the establishment of camp grounds and picnic areas. These facilities are certainly used to tremendous advantage, and that is apparent even in my own area.

I do believe, however, that because of the importance of preserving it for posterity the establishment of the area I have referred to as a national park should be taken under consideration. When we read the requirements of the department with regard to such parks we realize that this would be a worthy project and that it should be undertaken before it is too late, if it is not already too late. I should like to read these requirements into the record:

> The national park system, is a resource. Like timber or minerals the national park resource has value to man only when it is made useful to man. Parks differ from other resources, chiefly in the nature of their products. Mines and commercial forests yield material products required by the nation. Parks yield the products of knowledge, refreshment and aesthetic enjoyment equally required by all people. The only way these products can be obtained and the supply assured is through intelligent and appropriate use of park resources by people.
> Maintaining the park unimpaired, or preserving it, is a very real part of our obligation. Preservation and use are not irreconcilable. The basic park values are supplied by the natural scene undamaged and unimpaired. To change the character of the park scene or to modify or impair the natural environment, destroys a part of its capacity to yield those benefits to the visitor.

In the area to which I have referred there are many of these characteristics which are worthy of being retained, but I fear that in the near future they will be destroyed through unscrupulous development by speculators if the government does not take the opportunity which exists at the moment. The membership of the Federation of Ontario Naturalists is well aware of these dangers. Very recently the organization, with the co-operation of its members, established a trail which will be known as the Bruce trail extending from the Niagara peninsula northward to the tip of the Bruce peninsula. This endeavour is being promoted by Mr. D. E. B. Webster, the managing director of the F. O. N., and part of the trail will be available for public use this year. If the representations which I have made to the department in the past had been followed—and I ask that they be reviewed and put into effect, if possible, in the near future—this trail will terminate at such a park site. The only park which exists at the moment is at the top of Bruce point, and this is where the trail would end.

I understand the minister is now prepared to extend the recreational park system to all the provinces on a co-operative basis, and I ask him to press for the extension of this park program before the land that is available is taken by speculators. I ask him particularly to consider the previous recommendations I have made to him in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before I begin what I wish to say about Arizona Charlie, in view of the intervention of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce I would just like to draw Your Honour's attention to a libelous reference to this committee—and I use the word "libel" in its true sense—which appeared in an editorial in last night's Ottawa Journal. It said:

> A small rump of his party—

That is Mr. Pearson's party, the Liberal party.

> —remaining in the house were holding up supplementary estimates—taking 14 days for a job which usually takes up not more than three or four days.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has just demonstrated who has been taking up a very large part of the time in this committee. There have been more speeches from the Conservative side than from the Liberal side in these last 14 days, and it is about time the truth was stated.

Mr. Pigeon: He only spoke for five minutes and you spoke for two hours.

The Chairman: I think, first of all, that some semblance of order should be kept so those who have the floor may be heard. I believe that the remarks the hon. member just made are not directed toward the item.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They were just made in passing.

The Chairman: Well, I think the hon. member will admit that his remarks should be directed to the item. I therefore hope he will continue to discuss the item and the item alone.

Mr. Pickersgill: I certainly will, sir.

Mr. Winkler: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate should go back one night previous, to Tuesday night's paper, and read the first letter to the editor. If he does so he will then have the answer he requires.

The Chairman: Order. Every hon. member who is recognized has the right to speak and make the remarks he feels he should make provided they are relevant and according to the rules. I am sure the hon. member who has the floor will do so and that those who follow him will do likewise.

Mr. Pickersgill: I, of course, will comply with your ruling, sir, but I know you would expect me also to reply to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce who instituted a debate. I would make one observation and one observation only, that more supporters of the government than members of the official opposition have spoken on the supplementary estimates, and that is a statistical fact.

The Chairman: Order. That statement has been made by various hon. members on either side of the house. The Chair is not at all interested in hearing a discussion on that subject. All the Chair is interested in is that the discussion be strictly relevant to the item. I would therefore ask for everyone's co-operation so that the discussion may proceed on an orderly basis. I know that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will abide by that ruling.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Chairman, having corrected Mr. Grosart's propaganda I can now go on with the business before the committee. I simply wished to draw attention to it, sir, because it is an extraordinary misrepresentation that is going on in the country, and the people of Canada deserve to know the truth. What I wanted to do was to get to Arizona Charlie's—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: Am I being interrupted again, sir?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Bow River is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who has a great deal of experience in this house, should follow the direction of the Chair and adhere strictly to a discussion of the item before us.

Mr. Carter: Is that all?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Chairman, I must say there is no hon. member whose opinion on any subject will impress me more than that of the distinguished and elevated hon. member for Bow River. We know how much that hon. gentleman has done to raise the tone of public life in this country, and we are very glad to have him bring us all to order in this committee.

An hon. Member: How about getting on?

Mr. Pickersgill: An hon. gentleman asks me how about getting on, but hon. gentlemen opposite fail to ask supporters of the government when they are really not talking about the item at all how about getting on. They do not interrupt their own speakers, who take more time than we do.

Mr. Cardiff: You have not started talking about it yet.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, because the hon. member for Huron in that garrulous fashion of his keeps interrupting.

Mr. Cardiff: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, there is no hon. member in any quarter of this House of Commons who wastes more of the time of this house than the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, sir, if the honourable and distinguished member for Huron were not the amiable gentleman he is I would have to raise a question of privilege about that, but we know the hon. gentleman does not mean it, that the milk of human kindness flows through his veins, and that he is just saying this for the record. I think we will leave it on the record along with Arizona Charlie's and Nigger Jim's as a record of the new heights to which this government has raised the northern vision.

When my friend the hon. member for Welland began speaking about the northern vision and then told us about this bar at Arizona Charlie's, I wondered whether that particular project was part of the northern vision conceived before or after the conceiver had been at the bar, because it does seem to me to be the kind of vision that only comes at that sort of time.

This whole question of the restoration of Arizona Charlie's—and I imagine Charlie was white; he might not have been, but I imagine he was—raises a very difficult problem for the Prime Minister which the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will at once recognize. We, sir, in this parliament enacted a bill of rights, and surely we are not going to have discrimination against Nigger Jim. If we are going to spend a quarter of a million dollars restoring the palais de danse of Arizona Charlie we will have to spend an equal amount on Nigger Jim's just to show that we really believe in the principles of the bill of rights. I am not advocating that. I am just pointing out that that would be consistent with those lofty principles which were embodied by the Prime Minister in the bill of rights and commended to us and accepted by this house.

But I am wondering whether the conception came from another quarter, and I really think it is something we ought to inquire into when we have members of the government on the treasury benches spending the public money—I was almost tempted to say drunkenly, sir, but that would be out of order; nevertheless you can understand why I was tempted to say it—on a project of this kind as a so-called historic monument, a shrine. I just wondered whether perhaps the real conception was not in the fertile mind, the almost too fertile mind, of the rather underemployed Associate Minister of National Defence; because we remember the profession of political faith made by the associate minister in February of last year, just over a year ago. That was before he was promoting steel plants. At that time he was—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, sir, this is very relevant, as you will see in just a moment. The associate minister said:

> "In my riding, I organize dances, fashion shows, and so on. Under the Roman empire, you know how the caesars ruled over their subjects, with bread and games. When no bread was available then games were organized.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman identify what he is quoting from?

Mr. Pickersgill:

> "You know that the federal government is unable to grant all kinds of favors."

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member what he is quoting from?

Mr. Pickersgill:

> "If there is no bread, then there will be games."

Apparently it is not just going to be games; it is going to be fun and games.

Mr. Pigeon: Horses on the payroll.

Mr. Pickersgill: One quarter of a million dollars will be spent in what is now a small and historic village, a shrine, a "palais de danse", Arizona Charlie's place. That is what this government can do, but it cannot find jobs for more than half a million unemployed. It seems to me that with the kind of deficits we have, with the kind of situation the Minister of Finance is faced with, there are better ways to spend a quarter of a million dollars than on recreating a place which, according to what little information I have about it—and I must confess that I do not have the same taste in literature as my friend the hon. member for Welland, and I take his word for it—was a place where the poor fellows who went out in the creeks and found the gold were shaken down. If that is something that is worth another quarter of a million shaken out of the pockets of the Canadian taxpayers in order to perpetuate the memory, I think it is time we were finished with this government and with the northern vision which seems to have been distorted at Arizona Charlie's bar.

(Translation):

Mr. Fortin: Fifteen minutes of nonsense.

(Text):

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I have heard three dissertations on the subject of grand Charlie's palace, "le palais de danse", as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate referred to it, and I think it is just about time that these hon. gentlemen were brought out of orbit down to face reality again. As I listened to the extravagant language used, particularly by the last speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I concluded that if I did not know him better I would almost suspect that he had been visiting Charlie's palace and had been too close to the bar; because the language was extravagant and beyond any sense of proportion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not as extravagant as the project.

Mr. Woolliams: Shut up; you had your turn.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is quite true that what is known as the Grand Palace theatre back in the early days might have been associated with some of the activities outlined by the hon. member for Welland, but that was under a Liberal regime. Any restoration that is going on at the present time will, of course, be under a Conservative regime. I can assure all the hon. members who have spoken on this subject that every activity that takes place in the Grand Palace theatre will be highly respectable and for the edification of the thousands of tourists who are going to visit Dawson city in the current tourist season.

Actually I am very pleased that this subject has been raised in the House of Commons. As the hon. member for Port Arthur has intimated, there has not been too much publicity concerning this question, and there is a very good explanation for that fact. It is not because of undue modesty on the part of the minister. It is because only in the past few weeks plans have been completely formulated for the staging of what has become known now as the Dawson city gold rush festival. Hon. members have implied that this project was conceived by the government, or that the decision to restore the Grand Palace theatre as a shrine was that of the government. I do not know to what faith the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate belongs. However, for him to refer to this as a shrine indicates that he is indeed twisted in his thinking on historic sites.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was repeating what the hon. member for Welland said.

An hon. Member: He who repeats is equally guilty.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. This is an historic site pure and simple. Even the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate should be able to appreciate that point.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege. It may be simple but certainly, judging from the description, it is not pure.

Mr. Dinsdale: I said pure and simple. Let us not go back to its experience under a Liberal regime; let us stick to contemporary times. The decision to declare the Grand Palace theatre an historic site was made by a no less distinguished group than the historic sites and monuments board, which includes among its membership some of the most distinguished historians in Canada.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps it is jealousy that motivates the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. It is not only jealousy. There was a sort of wistfulness in what the hon. member said.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Who is taking up time now?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am. I am rising on a question of privilege in a free parliament. The Minister of Justice, echoed by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, accused me of jealousy.

Mr. Dinsdale: I said "wistfulness".

Mr. Pickersgill: "Jealousy" is now an unparliamentary word. Indeed, it is a vicious attack. We have read editorials from one end of this country to the other to the effect that when an hon. member is accused of jealousy, a vicious attack has been made upon him. In view of the attitude taken by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the chamber, I feel that word should be withdrawn by the Minister of Justice, if he has any sense of justice and any sense of fair play. I say that in view of the tremendous fuss his friends made when an hon. member on this side of the chamber suggested that an honourable and distinguished member on the other side of the chamber was guilty of jealousy. Personally I would not worry about it, Mr. Chairman, but I am suggesting that the same treatment be given to both sides of the chamber.

Mr. Fulton: I do not wish to prolong this discussion. What I said was that it is probably jealousy that motivates the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. If he finds that his sensitivity will not absorb that remark, I shall be glad to withdraw the word "jealousy" and say "green eyed envy".

Mr. Dinsdale: I was just about to indicate that distinguished historians made the decision, as is the case in respect of all historic objects and sites that are designated as such. I refer to Dr. Creighton, Professor Lower and other men with very distinguished historical qualifications. I am afraid that my friend the hon. member for Port Arthur has misinterpreted completely the story of Pierre Berton. Actually the association of the department and the government in the Klondike or gold rush festival is quite incidental. Our only connection is the restoration of the Grand Palace theatre. The moving spirit behind this very imaginative project is Mr. Tom Paterson—who, a few years ago, was responsible for the establishment—and indeed I might use the word "creation"—of the Stratford festival. At the time Mr. Paterson conceived of the possibility of a Shakespearian festival being located in Stratford, Ontario, criticisms very much similar to those that have been raised in this chamber this afternoon were made against the project of those days.

Mr. Fisher: May I just ask the minister a question at this point? He is not suggesting that my remarks were made in a spirit of criticism, I hope. I was just asking for information. I felt that one could really not criticize until one knew more about the project.

Mr. Dinsdale: When I referred to criticism I think perhaps I should have directed my remarks more to the hon. member for Welland and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twistingate; excuse me, I mean the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The organization behind this imaginative program is the Canadian Theatre Exchange Limited, which is known for its outstanding capacity in promotional efforts of this kind. In association with the Canadian Theatre Exchange a local organization, namely the Dawson city gold rush festival foundation, which is made up of citizens in Dawson city, is sponsoring the local arrangements.

Reference has been made to the appeal for funds in order to make this project a success. The membership of this fund raising committee includes men who have had faith in the north. That is more than our friends in the Liberal party have ever had.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dinsdale: Anything that has taken place in terms of northern development in recent years has been described as jumping "from igloo to igloo". That is a direct quotation from the Leader of the Opposition. More recently a Liberal senator has referred to Canadians in the north as ignorant Eskimos. I merely point this out this afternoon as an indication—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us not get political.

Mr. Dinsdale: —that they have a completely biased and twisted viewpoint toward the possibilities of the development of Canada's north. The men who are sponsoring this project are hard headed business men who have gone into the Yukon territory and developed the mining activities which during recent years resulted in an upsurge of development in all parts of northern Canada.

However, what has occurred here this afternoon I feel will be of immense benefit to the festival. The one quantity that it has lacked was sufficient publicity. I am sure the remarks of the hon. members will have drawn attention to the significance of this project. Having listened to the hon. members on the subject I am quite convinced that, along with the 40,000 other people who it is anticipated will visit the festival between July 1 and the middle of August, we shall find the hon. member for Port Arthur, the hon. member for Welland and even the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate wending their way down the Alaska highway into the north in order to come into contact with the realities of the north for the first time.

Mr. McMillan: I do not think the minister answered too many of the questions I asked him. What is the total cost of this project?

Mr. Dinsdale: This question had already been submitted by the hon. member for Port Arthur some weeks ago and, while I have not the figure before me, I think it was around $200,000.

May I say that this is an historic restoration, as a result of which this gold rush festival has already developed. This is the sort of activity that has put our Canadian tourist industry in the front rank as a dollar earner in Canada. I am sure the hon. member for Welland is aware of the impact on the economy of the Upper Canada Village development. This is a project of similar proportion. I think the hon. member would be better advised to be promoting some of the historic restorations that are being undertaken in his part of the country, such as the Welland canal project, rather than criticizing an imaginative project of this kind.

Mr. McMillan: I was just asking for information, I was not criticizing. It was $200,000, was it?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Grey North.

Mr. Noble: I am going to make a few observations, but I assure the minister that I am not going to take too much of his time. In listening to the discussion that has taken place and the remarks made by members of the opposition, I felt that Erik Nielsen and Dawson city are going to be grateful for the publicity given them in kicking off this project. I feel it is going to mean many thousands of tourist dollars for this area.

We have in Grey county the highest point of land in Ontario. It is 1,735 feet above sea level. This is the great watershed of a vast territory of western Ontario. This great ridge, which embraces approximately 40,000 acres, should be completely reforested. Much of the territory adjacent to this natural divide and fountainhead of many Ontario rivers is not suitable for economically sound agriculture, and many of the farms are now vacated. In my opinion this whole area should become a national park.

If the plan I have in mind were carried out it would assure the restoration of all the rivers stemming from this part of the province to their natural flow. This would embrace the Grand, the Humber and the Credit rivers, which flow south; the Saugeen, which flows west, as well as the Beaver, the Bighead and the Sydenham, flowing into Georgian bay. Development of this area for the purpose of a national park would benefit many thousands of people. Located as it is, close to densely populated areas, it would be of great convenience to many people who have limited time and means for holiday trips and visits to our great natural outdoors.

The restoration of this area through reforestation and other projects necessary for park development would not only restore the natural beauty, but would in time restore water levels which more and more are becoming serious problems in all western Ontario. I believe I am correct in saying that we do not have a national park in the province of Ontario, other than Pelee island and possibly a few small islands in Georgian bay—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a very important park in a very important county, the county of Essex.

Mr. Noble: Thank you, sir. I do not know of a more logical area in which to establish a national park. Therefore I urge the minister to have a survey made in order that he might become more familiar with the area and its great possibilities. I am sure that he and his department will be impressed with what could be accomplished with a national park in Grey county and perhaps suitable adjoining areas.

Mr. Nixon: I have one question for the minister before I deal with another matter. According to an answer delivered on February 14 to the hon. member for Port Arthur, the cost of restoring this Grand Palace theatre was $138,463 up to December 31, 1961. Has any money been expended since that time, or is that the total amount?

Mr. Dinsdale: As I indicated, there has been a continuing expenditure for this restoration. I would presume that the figure would now be around $200,000. I have not the total cost before me at this time, but I am sure my officials will bring me up to date in a moment.

Mr. Nixon: We can have those official figures, then? The minister will recall that on several occasions I have raised the question of the restoration of the old stone house in Sault Ste. Marie. This building is roughly 150 years old. The minister has had an opportunity of visiting it himself, I believe. A sum of $35,000 was appropriated for this purpose but has been deleted from the estimates for 1961-62. I wonder if the minister could say whether there have been any further developments with regard to the purchase of this building or its restoration.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is quite true that the hon. member has been interested in this subject for the past several months. I appreciate his support for historic objectives of this kind. So many of the members of this committee seem to fail to appreciate that the government does have a responsibility in commemorating and marking those areas in Canada which have an outstanding historic significance and which might properly be classified as national historic sites. The government has been increasingly active in this field during the past few years. There was tremendous neglect in commemorating these areas, and many of them were lost forever as a result of this neglect.

I can assure the hon. member that so far as the old stone house at Sault Ste. Marie is concerned, I have been in correspondence with the local officials. Certain proposals have been made to the city officials, and we are at this moment awaiting a reply from that source. Actually I think it is possible to say that we have made a certain offer to the city of Sault Ste. Marie, and as soon as we hear from the city we can continue our negotiations in respect of this historic site.

Mr. Nielsen: I feel I should say a word or two about the restoration plans for the Grand Palace theatre, since this building lies within my riding. I was not surprised to hear the derisive and ridiculing remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, because these are the type of remarks we can expect as a result of the half consideration the opposition gives to northern development as a whole.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is wholly inaccurate; nobody has done more for northern development that has the Liberal government.

Mr. Nielsen: Ever since 1958, when the party on the other side of the house put forward a non-confidence motion on the introduction of plans for northern development, there has been a constant program of ridicule, scorn and derision directed at northern development by the members of the opposition. Forty per cent of Canada lies above the 60th parallel, and that part of Canada also has a history.

Mr. Dinsdale: The Liberals don't know that.

Mr. Nielsen: Millions and millions of dollars have been contributed to the national economy by the Yukon territory, and by this particular area alone. The restoration of this theatre is an integral part of an over-all plan for resurrecting the atmosphere of the days of '98 for the attraction of tourists, and for the restoration of a part of Canada that has played a very important role in the development of our nation.

Because of the type of remarks which have come from the hon. member for Port Arthur in times past, I was not surprised to hear him ridicule and criticize this program of the department with respect to the restoration of the Grand Palace theatre for the Yukon gold rush festival. This is not surprising at all, I suggest that hon. members opposite would feel that the establishment of a national park in Yukon territory would also be a waste of money.

I suppose they would feel it is not in the interests of the national economy to attract tourists to the north, but I must differ with them. The government, in comparison with the over-all effort which is being put into the success of the Dawson city gold rush festival, is a small partner. There is a very active Dawson city festival foundation which had been in existence for almost two years and which is comprised of local residents in the Yukon territory. Just last February in Whitehorse we put on a winter carnival to raise funds to ensure the success of the festival. Mr. Alan Anderson, who is president of a large mining venture in Canada and has been an active mining man in the north for many years, is head of the fund raising campaign to ensure the success of the carnival. As a matter of fact only last night a fund raising dinner was held in Toronto. These are some of things which are being contributed by the private organizations that have been established in order to ensure the success of the festival.

The remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with respect to the festival and the attraction of tourists to the area are but a small example of his continued disinterest in northern Canada generally. I would like to enlighten the hon. gentleman in regard to what a very respected organization in the United States has to say concerning the tourist potential of the Pacific northwest, and particularly the Yukon. I speak of the international rail and highway commission and the Battelle report, which has this to say:

> The growing importance of visitors from outside the area, both now and in the future, cannot be overemphasized for a number of reasons: northwest America is the last remaining frontier on the North American continent; its scenery is magnificent, its wildlife is a sportsman's dream; money spent by tourists is at the retail level, whether for goods or services and filters down through the entire economy.
> —Tourism is a big business in many parts of the world, and it could become big in northwest America.
> The commission believes that tourism can be greatly expanded ... Battelle forecasts almost a fivefold increase in expenditures by travellers of $380 million annually by 1980, which would support an additional 20,000 workers—

For the benefit of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and his remarks about unemployment.

> —and result in an increase in population of about 125,000.

Tourism is big business, and this investment that our minister of northern affairs has supported in connection with the restoration of the Grand Palace theatre is a good investment. It is one that will encourage tourism in the north. As I say, it is only a small part of the effort which is going into the creation of a successful festival in the Yukon territory which no doubt will attract hundreds of thousands of tourists to that area.

The hon. member should remember that the Alaska highway runs through the Yukon territory, and there is a ferry system being inaugurated along the Panhandle. There a great new system of communications thrusting through the Yukon, so apart from the obligation which I feel the nation has in remembering the historic part which the Yukon territory has played and is continuing to play in the nation's development, I believe that the hon. member's remarks in belittling this project are entirely out of place.

Mr. Herridge: Last evening I happened to mention that I intended to make a full scale attack on the administration of the superintendent of Revelstoke park, and I am just going to make a few comments now as I have to go and broadcast my words of wisdom to the people of southeast British Columbia. Since I spoke last night I have received further information and have spent a period of meditation, with the result that I decided to change my tactics from that of full scale attack to one of encirclement by placing questions on the order paper, by eliciting information from departmental officials and by consulting with local people who are interested.

However, before taking any set course I want to ask the minister one question. I have been reliably informed by local residents that it is the practice of the local superintendent and senior officials to have the park employees cut their wood for their winter use. One man came to me and said they filled the superintendent's woodshed with fir to feed his open fireplace, but Mrs. Superintendent did not like it so the boys had to take it out again, go back in the woods and fill the woodshed with birch. I want to ask, does this come within departmental regulations?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am sure the hon. member wishes to be entirely fair on this matter—

Mr. Herridge: I do.

Mr. Dinsdale: And I think the question arises possibly as the result of misunderstanding, because it is the practice of the department as is the case with other departments, for instance with respect to military personnel, to supply fuel and heat to departmentally operated homes. The wood in question was salvaged from the slash on mount Revelstoke.

Mr. Herridge: That is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: And is being used for staff house requirements, as well as public camp grounds, picnic areas and so forth. It was not wood specifically for the superintendent's residence. A load was delivered to the house, but because it had been prepared primarily for use in kitchen shelters it was cut too small for use in the fireplace. This wood was therefore taken to the stockpile; the next load brought down was a longer length, suitable for use in the superintendent's fireplace, and everybody was happy.

Mr. Pickersgill: I trust, Mr. Chairman, that I will be allowed very briefly the same latitude that was allowed to the hon. member for Yukon. I have nothing further to say at the present time about the "palais de danse", nor have I anything to withdraw.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are you going to the festival?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member made some observations on what I said about the festival, but at no stage in my remarks did I mention the festival at all. I sincerely hope it is a success, all the more so as we have a very large stake of the taxpayers' money to recover. But what I am going to do is take issue, in the interests of history and truth, with what the hon. gentleman said about the northern vision. The hon. gentleman talks as though the north had been discovered in 1958 by the present Prime Minister of Canada.

An hon. Member: It was.

Mr. Pickersgill: That, of course, simply shows that hon. gentlemen were paying no attention whatever to public affairs before that time; because everybody who does know anything about public affairs knows exactly from where the present Minister of Agriculture produced the northern vision. For the benefit of some of the more ignorant members of the committee who do not know, I am going to tell them where it came from. When the old department of mines and resources was divided into three departments, Mr. Winters became the minister of resources and development and laid the foundations for the modern development of the north—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and when he was succeeded by Mr. Lesage, who is now the premier of Quebec, the government changed the name of that department to the department of northern affairs, increased the budget enormously and laid down the blueprint for everything that has been done since by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Those are the facts, and—

Mr. McGee: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: When I have concluded.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): After five o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I simply want to get these facts consecutively on the record. The northern vision which was produced by the Prime Minister was extracted from the files of the department of northern affairs by the present Minister of Agriculture. I give that great publicist every credit for it; it was a terrific job of publicity. In fact he should not be called the Minister of Agriculture at all; he should be called the minister of publicity, because there is no more clever propagandist anywhere than the Minister of Agriculture. There are many people who can make bricks without straw—

Mr. Denis: Especially the Postmaster General.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but the minister can create castles with words. The unfortunate part of it is that when the words collapse the castles are no longer there, in many cases. The plain fact is that there has been progress in the north in the last five years. Why? Because the plans were there, and they were partly executed. That is why there has been progress in the north, and it is just about time that these inflators of words, these hon. gentlemen who substitute words for deeds—

Mr. O'Hurley: It is time you sat down.

Mr. Pickersgill: —in every aspect of government, had the record set straight for them.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member said he would answer a question at the conclusion of his remarks. Will he accept the question now?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. McGee: The hon. gentleman has just been describing a situation in which he said the planning shelves of the previous administration were fairly bursting with activities just ready to be undertaken. I am wondering if those shelves were as empty as the shelf upon which the great plans for public works were supposed to be kept.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know what that silly question means, but I do know that in 1956 a filibuster was carried on in this house to prevent one of the greatest works that was ever undertaken in this country. Fortunately that filibuster failed and that pipe line was built, otherwise we would have had a much worse recession in 1958 than we had.

Mr. McGee: I will tell the hon. member precisely what that question is all about, because he and his colleagues stumped this country in the latter part of the 1950's telling the people that there was a shelf of public works and activities ready to be undertaken in case of a recession, and in 1957 there was nothing on that shelf, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nothing but 12 years of full employment.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, there is a road called the Alaska highway that runs 1,000 miles or more through the territory I come from. It leads to Dawson, where this wonderful festival is going to be held that will mean millions and millions of dollars being spent in that part of the country. My people would think I was dead if I did not say something about that. I am going there this summer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are all going.

Mr. Henderson: I am pleased to hear you are going to be there too.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are all going, particularly we who have done so much to promote this.

Mr. Henderson: Hon. gentlemen talk about spending money. Think of the millions of dollars that were taken out of that country. I love to recite, even to myself, about Dan McGrew, pitched on his head and pumped full of lead. That is a real country; real people live there. I had better not say too much about that.

When you come up, come through my territory. It is 1,000 miles or more of the most wonderful country you ever saw, the Cariboo. The old boats are lying there; they are being fixed up and waiting. You will have a wonderful time, and while the lady known as Lou may not be there—

An hon. Member: Don't go too far.

Mr. Henderson: No, I will not do that.

[Mr. McGee.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We want to make sure that the man called Gus is there.

Mr. Henderson: He will be there. I have been 50 years in that north country. I am proud of it and I love the north.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will allow me the same latitude that you allowed the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in the remarks he imposed on this committee. Before the hon. member spoke I simply dealt with a very backhanded slap that he took at the policies of this government in developing the north. I say to you, sir, and to all hon. members of this committee that what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said about increasing the budget of the department of northern affairs, about the activities of the Liberal administration when they had control of the department, about this so-called huge backlog of plans that they had, about the present Minister of Agriculture swiping those plans, making publicity and political capital out of them, all those statements are a blatant misrepresentation of the facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Sir, on a question of privilege, I made a statement on my responsibility as a member of this house, but not just as a member of this house. I was a privy councillor, I was a member of the government, I was a member of treasury board. Anybody who cares to examine the public accounts or the estimates for those years will find that what I said about the increase in expenditure is absolutely accurate, notwithstanding the characteristic remark of the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: I suppose that is why the three bridges across the three main rivers of the Yukon were turned down three times by the privy council of which the hon. member was a member.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is that what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would call from igloo to igloo?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have been very interested in this debate. I had a particular interest in what was said by the hon. member for Cariboo. He said he would be there next summer when this festival is held. May I add, because of some of the comments which have been made by members of the opposition, that after the next election he will also be here. There has also been some comment on the question of northern development. Because of the extent of the attacks by members of the opposition in this regard I wish to point out that actions speak louder than deeds—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): "Words".

Mr. Baldwin: Actions speak louder than words. When the bill preceding the legislation in respect of one of the foundation plans for northern development, the Pine Point railroad, was before this house last session, hon. members of the opposition voted against it on two occasions. On one occasion they voted for a six months' hoist.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman. Hon. members realize that I have allowed a fair amount of latitude in this debate, and I hope I have not asked for difficulties in so doing. The reference by the hon. member for Peace River to the Pine Point railway is, I think, all together out of order when you consider the item which is before the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I accept your ruling. I felt I had to make some observation, however, in view of what has been said.

This item covers some aspects of provision for national parks, historic sites and monuments and I would make this suggestion to the minister—that having in mind the opposition which has been put forward by both the official opposition and by the C.C.F.-N.D.P. to this appropriation and other matters of northern development it might be well for him in the course of his duties to set apart certain historic monuments upon which at a later date he might hope to place some of the few remaining members of the opposition parties who will be around after the next election as a result of the opposition which they have put forward.

I wish to endorse what has been said by the minister and by the hon. member for the Yukon in connection with this project in Dawson city. The road into this area goes through the Peace River area for a distance of several hundreds of miles. One day last summer, driving from Edmonton toward Grande Prairie I saw a large number of cars with United States licences. Indeed, I estimated that two thirds of the cars on that highway were cars from the United States on their way to Alaska. As the hon. member for the Yukon has said, when the Alaska highway becomes of particular interest to the government of the United States and ultimately is paved—it is not a question of "if" but a question of "when"—the amount of traffic going into that area will be fantastic. I commend the minister and those in his department who have taken an interest in this matter for setting up programs which will attract these tourists off the highway into Dawson city and other parts of the Yukon. I think the time will come when we shall appreciate what the minister and his department have done, and what other people who are interested have done in connection with projects of this nature.

I also want to say to the minister that I have watched with sympathy and understanding his efforts to dedicate and set aside areas in this country for recreational purposes. I think it is essential at this time in the development of our country when we still have these large areas available, many miles remote from settlements, that we should take the opportunity to preserve them before it is too late. We should take this opportunity while it is available at a relatively low cost and avoid the difficulties which have arisen with the United States where it has become increasingly hard to find space for recreational purposes for the rapidly increasing population.

I commend the minister for visiting the district which I represent and flying into an area which has been proposed as a national park site—the so-called Moncton pass district. I realize it lies completely outside the minister's authority to do anything about this until the government of British Columbia has dedicated this area for use by the national government as a park, but I think his interest is most worth while and I hope he keeps up his good work in that regard.

Included among the parks under the jurisdiction of the minister is the Wood Buffalo park, one of the largest in this country; in fact I believe it is the largest on this continent. Some 15,000 square miles of this park lie within the geographical borders of the province of Alberta. I know that a motion recently made in the legislative assembly in Alberta calls for that part of the park which lies within the province of Alberta to be turned over by the federal government to the province of Alberta. Part of this park lies within my own constituency. A large part lies within the constituency of the hon. member for Athabasca with whom I have discussed this matter from time to time. This park is the summer home of the almost extinct whooping crane. In this park are some 16,000 wood buffalo, probably the largest herd of these animals still in existence. I would be most reluctant to see this government take any hasty action, should this particular notice of motion in the Alberta legislature be accepted and should it become a matter of government policy in that province to urge this particular course. It may well be that the park is so large and of such a nature that certain areas might be carved out and made available for industrial development, though I must say I would view this with some misgivings. Such proposals would require examination and assessment by those who are better qualified to reach an opinion with regard to them than I am. I bring this to the attention of the minister and his officials because it appears as though this action in the province of Alberta may be of some significance. While I do not oppose this suggestion I urge that a most careful and detailed examination should be made by this government before its adoption is considered. We can ill afford to be deprived of these areas to which our people must resort for recreational purposes.

Mr. Denis: I should like to say just a word in disagreement with my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate who said that the minister of northern affairs should be called the minister of publicity.

Mr. Pickersgill: The former minister.

Mr. Denis: I wish to defend the minister, and I do so on the grounds that this title belongs to the Postmaster General and has done so for a long time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I apologize to my hon. friend. He is quite right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not rise to prolong this discusion. I wish to raise another matter. I would simply like to say that when we talk about our interest in the northern regions of Canada it will be difficult to contest the statement of record as given my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate.

There is no doubt that it was under the administration of Mr. St. Laurent that a separate department of northern affairs was established under the responsibility of the present premier of Quebec. It is also well known that the former prime minister indicated his own very deep interest in northern development by observations made in this house on a number of occasions while he was prime minister. Those of us who served with him in government know that he, perhaps more than any other living Canadian, deserves to be regarded as the statesman who gave emphasis to the importance of the development of the northern regions of our country. It will be difficult to contest that both Mr. St. Laurent as prime minister and Mr. Lesage as the first minister in charge of the department took a deep interest in the development of this part of the country.

As minister of national health and welfare I knew a good deal about the initiative which was taken by Mr. Lesage. As my hon. friend knows, much of the development had to do with some very important decisions which were taken at that time with regard to northern health services as administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare. When we are talking about those to whom credit should be given it would be difficult to deny the contributions made by Dr. Percy Moore. That was all under a regime other than the present one.

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. member permit a question? I ask this question in all sincerity. Would the hon. member who has just mentioned Mr. Lesage reconcile Mr. Lesage's present position in relation to the power grid program in the meeting of provincial premiers with the position he took when he occupied the portfolio of northern affairs?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I were to answer that question I would, of course, be out of order just as my hon. friend was in putting the question.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member has unanimous consent to answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The fact is that I think it is generally recognized that Mr. Lesage did play an important part as minister of northern affairs in pursuing policies of the administration of which he was a member, and Hansard of that period will attest to what I have said. I can say as one of his colleagues there is no one—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —in my judgment since who has shown such a responsible understanding—I do not say a propaganda understanding and I am not referring to the present minister—in administering northern affairs. I am sure there was no one who had as vigorous, and intelligent an interest in the problems of that department as did the present premier of Quebec. That is a matter of record.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. member a question on that point?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: If what the hon. member is saying is an accurate reflection of the attitude of the head of the department at that time perhaps the hon. member could inform the committee why Mr. Lesage and his colleagues in the cabinet at that time consistently turned down proposals for bridges and roads in the north? There is an obvious discrepancy which I who lived there am conscious of because I witnessed this complete lack of development.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Usually my hon. friend asks very intelligent questions but I am sure he will agree this is hardly one.

Mr. Nielsen: But I should like an answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let me say that the government of which I was a modest and humble member—and so there will be no question about my modesty I suppose I should add a relatively ineffectual member—built roads and bridges under the department established by Mr. Lesage to a degree that would warrant the view that not much more should be done.

Mr. Nielsen: Where were the roads?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend knows perfectly well. In addition to those I have mentioned—

Mr. Dinsdale: They were from igloo to igloo.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister, who is a very fair-minded man, will not contest what I have said. It was under Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Lesage that this northern vision really developed.

Mr. Henderson: If you ask the man in the north, what would he tell you? He certainly would tell you that nothing was done under the previous government.

Mr. Pickersgill: They did not say that when they elected a Liberal member for Mackenzie River in 1958.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am going to deal with my amiable friend from Cariboo in just a moment but he must wait until I reach him.

Mr. Henderson: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said I was not here in 1958.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say that.

Mr. Henderson: I am sorry if I got you wrong. Let me tell you that I was in the west and in the north.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could explain—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would permit me to conclude before answering the hon. member for Cariboo.

I am saying to the minister I am sure that he as a responsible minister and as an honourable man will not contest my statement that it was under Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Lesage that the real beginnings of the concept of the northern vision were developed.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps the minister would permit me to continue.

Mr. Dinsdale: I thought the hon. member was asking me a question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am attempting to complete my remarks before five o'clock. I am hoping to complete my little speech by that time. As hon. members know I do not often have an opportunity to speak in this chamber.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am sorry, but I thought the hon. member was asking me a question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is all by way of parenthesis and has nothing to do with what I really wish to say. Having listened to what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said and as the only other member of the former government in the committee I thought it only appropriate that I should support the hon. gentleman in what he said in his very accurate historical review of the work of the department. In that connection I am sure we all recognize—

Mr. Nielsen: I don't.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure we all recognize that the late hon. member for Mackenzie River, Mr. Mervyn Hardie was one whose name will ever be associated with northern development. He was one of the supporters of this party. Day in and day out, as the minister knows, he gave evidence of his deep interest in the development of this important section of our country.

I rose to make this suggestion to the minister. He will recall that on February 6 I made representations to him and wrote to him about that time in connection with Banwell house near Windsor in Essex county. My hon. friend is, of course, aware of the Hiram Walker historical museum which serves a useful purpose in Windsor in Essex county. He is also aware of the museum in Amherstburg in the constituency represented by the hon. member for Essex South. These are all important attestations of the historic character of the county from which I come and in which is located the riding I have the honour to represent in this house.

The presentations I made to the minister arose from those made to me by Mr. George Marshall, Mr. Alan Douglas and Mr. Gordon F. Mann of the Essex county historical association. They had reference to Banwell house, which is one of the relics of French Canada in this historic part of our country.

Banwell house was discovered recently and in the field of architectural history it is a finding of importance to the history of the Windsor region and of Canada in general. The discovery means we have had survive a building erected in the French Canadian technique at a time when all such examples were thought to have disappeared from the Ontario scene. I am told that Banwell house and others like it that have so far come to light in Essex county differ substantially from their counterparts in the remainder of French Canada, and therefore to the best of present knowledge are believed to be unique in all of North American log construction. This example of this form of construction displays a high degree of craftsmanship.

Banwell house stands on the east side of Banwell road, north of No. 2 highway and has been identified as the Henry Banwell house.

The minister has promised to look into the representations made to have this set aside as a historic monument. I would add to my written and oral representations the following additional argument. Essex county is one of the most historic counties in the province of Ontario. It has a French Canadian population that goes back several centuries. The house in question is closely allied to the culture of Canadians of French descent in that section of the country and is of interest, as well, to others of various national origins. The house would be a valuable site in itself, but its preservation would also be a connecting link with a phase of the development of the culture of one of the two predominant ethnic groups in Canada. I believe the Banwell house is one that deserves to be preserved. It is part of the pattern that has been built up in our county of developing an appreciation of historical events through historical monuments. I should like to think that the minister would find a way to support this proposal. I believe that, as a result of representations which I was able to make, the minister has made some arrangement for officials of his to contact members of the Essex county historical society. I would be grateful to know what progress has been made since these representations were first put forward, as I am sure would the people in Essex county.

Mr. Dinsdale: I can assure the hon. member that particular proposal will be presented to the historic sites and monuments board when that board meets in May. I am sure that body of distinguished historians will give to the national historic aspects of this particular house the same careful consideration it gave to the Grand Palace theatre in Dawson city. While I am on my feet—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister if it is a fact that someone from his department has already been in contact with the Essex county historical society?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, we have been in touch with the local historical society.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Brantford made some worthwhile recommendations. Perhaps I could now reply to the points he raised, of which I think there were three. The Bell home has long been recognized as a significant historic place. I can assure him that the historic sites branch have taken an active interest in the preservation of this home. They have been in touch, for example, with the local historical society and also with the Bell Telephone Company which naturally would have an interest in the preservation of this home. I am happy to assure the hon. member that the township in which the home is located has been assured of substantial support for the removal project when this becomes necessary. This support will be forthcoming from the Charles Fleetford Sise chapter, telephone pioneers of America. It is one of the functions of the historic sites branch to encourage local participation in the preservation of our historic sites. Not every historic site is of national significance. We feel that it is our responsibility to have local groups active in historic preservation, and to get the provinces active in this important function. In this particular instance there has been a good response from the local people.

The chapel of the Mohawk has also been very carefully looked into by the branch and the policy laid down reference to the preservation of all religious historic sites would apply in this case. We encourage the denominational bodies concerned to be active in the preservation of these old churches. In this case we are hoping for an encouraging response from the denomination under whose auspices the old Mohawk church has functioned.

Chiefswood, the birthplace of the Pauline Johnson, the daughter of the Mohawk chief, also has been under consideration by the historic sites branch. As a matter of fact, this matter has been looked at by the historic sites and monuments board and in 1961 it was decided that this was not one of those historic sites that come under the description of a national historic site. Again, there are other ways of attacking this problem, such as the creation of local interest and support. I am sure that the hon. member will be glad to know that there has been some commemoration of Pauline Johnson. A plaque has been established by the provincial historic sites people and also a stamp was issued by the Post Office Department in order to commemorate Pauline Johnson.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 648 carry?

Mr. Carter: I wish to ask just one question and it will take not more than a minute. I wish to ask the minister whether any consideration has been given to making Sentinel hill in Newfoundland an historic site. Sentinel hill overlooks the town of Placentia which at one time was the capital of Newfoundland at a time when our province was under the control of the French. On Sentinel hill was the fortification which protected the town. It is wrapped or steeped in history going back hundreds of years. Many of our people feel that its claim as an historic site is equal to that of other places which have been included in the historic sites program. I would ask the minister whether any consideration is being given to it.

Mr. Dinsdale: The department has been concentrating on Signal hill outside the city of St. John's in Newfoundland as the historic site in Newfoundland which should receive emphasis as a national historic site. So far as Sentinel hill is concerned, this matter has never come before the historic sites and monuments board so far as I know. I would rather imagine that this is the sort of historic commemoration that would come under the purview of the provincial authorities rather than the national authorities. In each province we try to have a major national historic site which would be genuinely regarded as being of national significance.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions—papers—and public bills. There being no private bills on the order paper, the house will first consider notices of motions, papers.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ECONOMIC FORECAST FOR CURRENT YEAR

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the latest economic forecast prepared in the Department of Trade and Commerce in the series substituted for the Canadian Economic Outlook as described in Hansard for August 10, 1960 at page 7878.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will not trouble to reread the motion which Your Honour has already read. For the benefit of those hon. members who were only elected in 1958, I think perhaps I should tell them what the Canadian Economic Outlook was.

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not part of the motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I can be allowed to proceed, Mr. Speaker, without the assistance of the house leader.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order. We are not in need of any explanation. Everybody can read. All the hon. member is asking for here is for an order of the house with regard to certain documents. We do not need a long explanation in this house with regard to what the documents are.

Mr. Crestohl: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is more closure.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has not got far enough as yet to determine whether or not he is transgressing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not waste time on the observations of the government leader. The Canadian Economic Outlook was a document which was published by the Prime Minister on January 20, 1958, as can be found by reference to Hansard. It had never been published before. It was a document prepared in secret—

Mr. Churchill: I rise on my point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is precisely the matter to which I was drawing Your Honour's attention. Then hon. member now is going into the so-called history of some document or other. He was trying to explain what it was. Everybody knows or can find out from public records what the Canadian Economic Outlook is. He is continuing to bring in irrelevant material concerning the Prime Minister, and so on. This is my point of order, sir.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word on the point of order before Your Honour rules, if I may be permitted to do so. When the change in the rules was made provisionally for this session to transfer these notices of motion from undebatable notices to debatable notices, it was presumably intended there should be a debate about something. It is obvious that no one can explain why a document ought to be produced without first explaining what the document is and why that document, under certain circumstances, is one which should be made public and not one which should be kept secret. This is exactly what I am endeavouring to do. I cannot give my arguments for the production of the document to which I am referring without identifying that document, and I cannot identify it, because it cannot be thoroughly identified, without reference to its predecessor.

Mr. Crestohl: That is elementary.

Mr. Speaker: The point of order would have to be decided on the basis of the issue before the house. As I understand it, this motion calls for the house to order the production of a document described here, the production of which the government resists. The debate is on the issue of whether or not the government is correct in resisting the production of the document. Now, anything that is relevant to that issue would, in my opinion, be relevant to the debate. At this moment, I do not believe we have gone beyond the scope of the debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Thank you, sir. This document which was published on January 20, 1958, was an economic forecast for the year 1957. It was a confidential document prepared by civil servants for the use of ministers and never intended to be published. It was prepared for the previous government. The Prime Minister saw fit, after he became the leader of the house, to make that document public.

Now, the government was greatly embarrassed by the fact the opposition—

Mr. Pallett: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order; the parliamentary secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Pallett: I should like, Mr. Speaker, to refer to your own words uttered during this session and recorded at page 682 of Hansard during the debate on the first motion for the production of documents under the new rule. At that time Your Honour said, and I quote:

> Before the hon. member proceeds further with that line of argument I think I should say to him that my view of the scope of the motion is that it is limited to the desirability of the production of the documents. The motion is one calling on the government to produce the documents referred to in the motion. The question in issue is whether or not they should be produced. Production of them has been objected to.

Mr. Robichaud: Is this a new type of closure?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That does not help very much.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Gloucester seems to feel that the interpretation of the rules should be for one side of the house only. I assume that is what he thinks, from his interjection; but I am one of those who believe the rules should apply to all members of the house and that the orderly conduct of business requires the observance of them by every member of the house. I am raising this point of order in the proper way in which it should be raised, and if the hon. member wishes to argue the point he will have that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member for his assistance in respect of his point of order? If the issue is, as indicated, whether or not it is desirable that this document be produced, whether it is confidential or in the public interest or any other proper ground upon which objection is taken, would it not be relevant to the debate to indicate what use had been made of this document or similar documents in the past or what disposition had been made by this government and former governments of the document in the past? Would this not be relevant to the issue of what should be done at this time? That is the difficulty. As I say, the argument of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is directed towards showing that this document now called for is the same as an earlier document under another name, and to show that certain use was made of that document, that certain publication of that document was made by the government, and that therefore the objection that it is in the public interest to withhold the document now falls to the ground on the basis of that precedent. If the hon. member for Peel feels that is out of order, I would be glad to consider the point.

Mr. Pallett: In so far as the matter of relevancy is concerned, the document that was referred to as the Canadian Economic Outlook has always been produced the year after it was prepared. There was never any objection to that being produced.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Never.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Essex East says "never".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Pallett: He is like that never, never bird.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is that the hon. gentleman, under the guise of a point of order, is seeking to debate the very question I was seeking to debate when he interrupted me. If he wishes to debate it, he should take his turn.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I think I cannot give effect to the objection. It seems to me the debate had better proceed along the lines on which it started.

Mr. Pickersgill: Thank you, sir. As I say, this document was published by the Prime Minister on January 29, 1958 under circumstances that were rather dramatic. A couple of years later the government saw fit, and I can only assume it was because of their embarrassment in the matter, to discontinue this forecast. I will not go into that because I think it would be irrelevant. They introduced a new series of documents which were described at some length by the distinguished Minister of Trade and Commerce in Hansard at the page to which I referred. I put that reference in so that the document would be identified. It is quite clear that although the document referred to by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not precisely the same as the document that was formerly produced, because it has another name, it obviously was, according to the description, for the same purpose.

I will not attempt to summarize the arguments advanced by the Prime Minister on publication of that document on January 20, 1958. I intend to produce them in his own words from Hansard because the Prime Minister's words in Hansard are my argument for the production of this document at this time. The situation is completely analogous. That document was prepared in March, 1957, on the eve of an election. This document I am asking for has been prepared—at least so most people seem to think—on the eve of another election. Therefore every argument which the Prime Minister used in connection with the one applies equally to the other.

I would draw Your Honour's attention to Hansard of January 20, which Your Honour will not have forgotten, January 20, 1958, at page 3526, where the Prime Minister said:

—I put it to the hon. members opposite—every one of them in the official opposition—

That is, the members of my party.

—that they hid the facts; they concealed the record; they did not let the Canadian people know what was taking place.

Later on the same page he said:

You secured the advice of the economists in your own departments and were advised as to what the situation was in March 1957. This record was given to each and every one of you—

At which point the hon. Leader of the Opposition interjected and asked the hon. gentleman what he was reading from.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought the hon. gentleman knew of it before, but I am reading from the report "Canadian Economic Outlook" prepared by the economic branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce delivered in March 1957 at a time when my hon. friends opposite were telling the Canadian people how well things were going and were refusing to act.

How similar the situation is now to what the Prime Minister said it was then. Then, on page 3530 there is this sentence from the Prime Minister:

You concealed the facts. That is what you did.

Later on in the same column he said:

What did they do? They concealed the facts. They told the Canadian people that all was well; Utopia is here; there will be no more unemployment.

Mr. Churchill: It is quite irrelevant to the argument you are making.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the Prime Minister's argument. It may be irrelevant but it is not irrelevant to what I am talking about.

Mr. Jones: We did give the people the facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Later on, at the same page, Mr. Knowles said:

The Prime Minister did not hear my question. Has this document which the Liberals concealed been tabled? If not, will the Prime Minister table it so we can all see it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know that it has been. I would take it that it has, surely.

In other words, the Prime Minister felt it ought to have been tabled.

I would take it that it has, surely. If it has not been tabled my hon. friend has added one more example to the record of concealment by my hon. friends opposite.

Those were the arguments put forward by the present Prime Minister of the country as to why a document analogous to the document I am asking for, should have been made public by the government of that day at that time, and he accused us of concealing it, of hiding it. He took this thing onto the hustings and made a big issue of it. The Canadian people decided in his favour and presumably therefore gave their stamp of approval to what the Prime Minister did on that occasion.

I personally, if that precedent were not there, would never have made this motion. I made it only because the Prime Minister, who is supposed to be the supreme custodian of the rules and procedures of this house, said it was the right thing to do. If it was the right thing in his mind for the Prime Minister's predecessor to do, then surely the Prime Minister does not suggest that this government is governed by different principles and different rules of procedure? Surely if the Prime Minister's predecessor should have tabled this document and not hidden and concealed the facts, as he said he did, surely it is up to him to do it now under the same circumstances and on the eve of an election?

There is another argument and very good reason why this should be done. Hon. gentlemen opposite are going about the country talking about the great up surge in our economy. They are trying to give a certain impression about what this is. I am not saying that impression is right or wrong but they are doing that, and that is exactly what they said my friends and I did when we were in office in 1957. They are doing it now and they are refusing to let us have this document which would give us whatever evidence their experts might have in this regard.

If hon. members look at today's Gazette they will see this is very relevant. They will see that everyone in the country—I am not talking about politicians—does not agree with hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Speaker: I think—

Mr. Hees: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is going beyond the scope, but I shall hear the hon. minister.

Mr. Hees: If I may express my point of order, the hon. gentleman is asking for the production of a document which does not exist, and has not been produced during the last year and a half since I have taken over as Minister of Trade and Commerce. There is no report produced today. The economists of my department report to me periodically, verbally and otherwise, when I wish to know specific information about economic affairs in the country, so therefore—

Mr. Pickersgill: This isn't a point of order.

Mr. Hees: —there is no document to produce such as the hon. member is asking for.

Mr. Speaker: The minister will have an opportunity to indicate that as a matter of debate. It is not a point of order.

Mr. Hees: It just isn't there.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is proceeding on the basis that there is such a document.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister of course, as we know in this house, suffers more from lapses of memory than most hon. members, and when my hon. friend from Essex East produces the record from Hansard that I mentioned in my motion, but which I did not produce because I did not want to take up the time of the house, the minister will find there is such a document and his face will be very red, as it has been very many times before.

The reason the document asked for should be produced is first because the Prime Minister said this is the right procedure for the government to take. Surely if it would have been the right thing for my right hon. friend, Mr. St. Laurent, to do five years ago it is the right thing to be done now? These were conclusive statements and hon. gentlemen opposite should be ashamed of themselves for arguing against their leader and objecting to the argument in view of the importance of what their leader spoke about so eagerly on that occasion.

In their own interest they should produce it because if they do not produce it everyone in the country will suspect it is just the kind of document which they said the other one in 1957 was, that in fact it forecasts the very things that are referred to in these two clippings from the Gazette, and far from supporting the minister's forecast hon. gentlemen opposite should be arguing in the opposite direction. I do not know what is in it. I do not know whether it forecasts these things or not, but I say on the premises which the Prime Minister put before us that I have now read, and on the basis of the accusation which the right hon. gentleman made on that occasion, this document should be produced.

Mr. Churchill: What document?

Mr. Grafftey: How can you produce that which does not exist?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have now, sir, the reference and I have to say that it was the minister's predecessor.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, absolutely. You are wrong all the way through.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are still a minister. What difference does that make?

Mr. Churchill: It makes a lot of difference. There is no document now.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the procedure established by the Minister of Veterans Affairs was so unsatisfactory that his successor changed that, again I do not know the facts but again I put the position as set out by the minister. He said this:

> —I want to make it very clear that there has been no change in the giving of information by the economics branch to me and the transmitting of that information to the government where necessary. I have asked that monthly reports be sent to me from the economics branch and that periodic forecasts be given to me indicating what, in the opinion of our economists, lies ahead in the few months, or the remaining months, of the year. This has been done.

I assume that statement meant what it said, and all I am asking for in my motion is the latest economic forecast of the periodic forecasts that the former minister of trade and commerce, as reported at page 7878 of Hansard for August 10, 1960, said had been made in place of the Canadian Economic Outlook.

Mr. Churchill: That would be September, 1960. Is that the one you want?

Mr. Pickersgill: I asked for the latest one. If that is the latest one why did the government not readily comply with the motion yesterday and save all this time and all this debate? Why did not the minister rise at once and say the motion was satisfactory?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, with some modest allowance for interruptions.

Mr. O'Hurley: He had not said anything.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as I said a little earlier, since I took over this portfolio in October, 1960 I have had very frequent meetings with my economists; we often meet daily. I receive reports from them verbally and in the form of working papers, outlining for me the economic situation in various parts of the country and in the country as a whole. With that information I am able to advise the government and the government is able to formulate policy.

As I said earlier, since I took over the department there has been published no such document as that for which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is asking. As I say, the information from my economists is given verbally and in the form of departmental working papers which assist me in my work as minister. So I have to say once again, Mr. Speaker, that there is no such paper; there has been no formal paper such as that for which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has asked. I must simply say that there is no such paper produced, and of course it therefore cannot be produced for the hon. member.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this matter. I had not intended to do so, but the reply just given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is such an unusual one that it cannot be allowed to go without comment. I am sure that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce reads what he has just said he will agree that he indeed made a most amazing statement. It must not be forgotten that when this resolution was before the house yesterday it was resisted by the minister—

Mr. Hees: No, it was not resisted; I just said "Stand".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says he did not resist it. The record will show that he did.

An hon. Member: He did not resist it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He resisted it not only yesterday, but on an earlier occasion, clearly indicating that the government did not intend to be called upon to do what the Prime Minister himself had done in January, 1958.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I have been accused of doing something which I did not do. As far as I am aware, yesterday was the first time this motion has come up this year. At that time I simply said "Stand". That is not resisting the motion—

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course it is resisting it.

Mr. Hees: —and a year ago when this motion came up I gave the same explanation as I gave today. I advised the house that there was no such document—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: —and that therefore it could not be produced.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have a limited time. If my hon. friend raises a proper question of privilege, that is all right. When a minister says "Stand", that certainly indicates that he has some reservation about the motion. The minister could have risen and said, "There is no such document", and that would have ended it.

Mr. Pallett: He has said it now; does it end it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He has said it now, but what I am now doing is examining the validity of that statement in the light of what was said by the minister of trade and commerce who preceded the present minister. No explanation has been given. The minister could have said, "I note what the minister of trade and commerce who was in office in 1960 said with regard to the character of annual reports, but I have not decided to carry on the same practice". That is not what the minister said. He used significant words in his statement; he said, "I see my economists regularly. We have working papers. There is no formal document". However, the words of the minister were such as to leave open the interpretation that the practice laid down by his predecessor is still being followed.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce could have repudiated this; or with regard to the practice as outlined by the former minister on August 10, 1960 and quoted by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, he could have said that practice was no longer being observed. I cannot find, in what the minister said, any justification for this house concluding that in the Department of Trade and Commerce there is not presented to the minister in some form—formal, informal, or whatever the minister wants to call it—a report which bears the quality of the kind of report which the Prime Minister, so improperly in our judgment, revealed to this house on January 20, 1958, but having himself established that practice, now estops the minister and this government from denying this house the right of access to whatever documents are now in the possession of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In seeking to understand the words uttered by the minister a few moments ago I think we have a right to note what was said by the former deputy minister of trade and commerce who spoke in this city the other day—

Mr. Churchill: No, you have not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —who was the one who signed—

Mr. Pickersgill: Now we will have some more closure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —the privileged document, the secret, confidential document which the Prime Minister so brazenly displayed for the house to see and the country to note, contrary to our practice, contrary to the traditions of parliamentary practice in countries like ours.

Mr. Fulton: Does my hon. friend think it was a mistake?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course it was a mistake, and my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate also said it was a mistake. The contention of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is that, having established this practice, the Prime Minister owes to the house, as does his government, the right to receive a document which the Prime Minister argued on January 20, 1958 he had a right to reveal to the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: And which he said should have been revealed months before.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And which should have been revealed without a motion of this kind being put forward. The man who signed the economic report of 1957, produced on January 20, 1958, Mr. Mitchell Sharp, said—

Mr. Churchill: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He said:

Look at what happened to the economic outlook reports—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There appears to be some question as to the relevancy of the line of argument the hon. member is following. The motion is to produce a current document. The hon. member is seeking to introduce what Mr. Mitchell Sharp said about a document in 1958.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I am seeking—

Mr. Speaker: I fail to see the relevance of that at this moment. Perhaps before the hon. member proceeds he could tell me what is the relevance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can appreciate Your Honour's difficulty and I want to help Your Honour, because you do approach these things with an impartiality which all of us in this house greatly respect.

Mr. Smallwood: The hon. member for Hull certainly did not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I am seeking to do is analyse the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am saying that, having in mind what his predecessor said, what has been the practice throughout, and in the light of the words used by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, it cannot now be concluded that he is not in receipt of reports which in principle constitute what the Prime Minister gave to this house, improperly, on January 20, 1958.

Mr. Hees: Don't be ridiculous.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Mr. Hees: And I say to you, "Stop being ridiculous; stop being pompous".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —do not preclude us from obtaining information which you have in your possession—

Mr. Hees: I have not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and which the Prime Minister said should be given to the house and it should not require a motion to obtain it. It is because I am seeking to establish that the words used by the Minister of Trade and Commerce really mean, in effect, that there are documents, that I am referring to these words of a former deputy minister of trade and commerce.

Mr. Speaker: With due respect to the hon. member's argument, I cannot see the relevance of recalling the words of a civil servant who is not now in the department and does not know what the practice is at the present time.

Mr. Hees: On a question of privilege, the hon. member has persistently said that there is a document similar to a document which I say does not exist. I have told him over and over again that I receive information almost daily from my economists, verbally and by way of working papers. There is nothing in the form of a formal report such as the hon. member is asking for. It does not exist. I receive information at various times and in various forms, but I receive nothing in the form of a document of the kind the hon. member is asking for. He says I have it. I have told him I do not have it, and he must take my word for it.

Mr. Speaker: I have been a little troubled over that aspect of the argument. It is customary in the house to accept the word—

Mr. Pickersgill: Can I say a word on the question of privilege?

Mr. Speaker: If he feels he has to, the hon. member may do so later on.

It has been the practice of most hon. members to accept the word of another member given in his place—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I accept it readily.

Mr. Speaker: —on a matter which is peculiarly within his own knowledge. There is disagreement—and it is an arguable point—as to what is the meaning of what the minister has said. This motion asserts that there is a document and calls for its production, so we are debating—and it is a legitimate debate—the existence of the document. It is legitimate to marshal all the evidence there may be to indicate that what the minister has said does not really deny the existence of a document, although hon. members must accept his specific words, in so far as they are specific. Thus, I cannot give effect to the objection that is taken.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to raise a point of order. I listened carefully to what the minister said. He said there was no formal document, and I accept his word at once. There is no formal document. But I did not refer to a formal document. I have asked for a copy of the latest economic forecast. The hon. gentleman has told us he does get economic forecasts every day, and I am asking for the latest information so that we may know what it is about.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since the minister has risen on a question of privilege and since Your Honour has made an observation in regard to it, may I say I readily agree that if a minister makes a particular representation it must be accepted. But I am basing my argument, first of all, on what the minister said when he first spoke this afternoon and now, more particularly, on what he has just said. In this regard I should like to read again the motion put forward by my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate. It asks:

> That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the latest economic forecast—

And the minister has acknowledged he receives such forecasts.

> —prepared in the Department of Trade and Commerce in the series substituted for the Canadian Economic Outlook as described in Hansard for August 10, 1960 at page 7878.

The minister has not denied that he receives reports which would come within the characterisation of the words used by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in this resolution, nor has the minister said, and he was given the opportunity, that the practice followed by his predecessor, the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) is one which he himself has changed. He has not; and we would assume that the practice of the former minister continues to be the practice of the present minister. What did the former minister have to say?

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the hon. member permit a question? I have tried to listen carefully to what the hon. member has said and to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Ask me the question, because I have only got a few minutes.

Mr. Macdonnell: How could the hon. member read this resolution and then go on to say that the present minister did not indicate that he was following a different plan? That seems to me to be refusing to face the words which the Minister of Trade and Commerce used.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member has stated I have not denied it—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has spoken already.

Mr. Hees: I follow my own system of working with my department and my economists—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member who has the floor has not yielded, and he has limited time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us recall, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not, what his predecessor said on August 10, 1960 in the statement referred to in the notice of motion which is before us now:

> Mr. Churchill: I want to make it very clear that there has been no change in the giving of information by the economics branch to me and the transmitting of that information to the government where necessary. I have asked that monthly reports be sent to me from the economics branch and that periodic forecasts be given to me indicating what, in the opinion of our economists, lies ahead in the few months, or the remaining months, of the year. This has been done.

Is that still being done? Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce say now that that is not being done?

Then his predecessor went on to say:

> I found that the report which has evoked so much interest was being issued in March as a forecast for the balance of the year, and as the economic climate changes so rapidly it appeared to me that it would be wiser to have a series of reports—

This is what the minister said he is receiving.

> —that would keep a person up to date on economic matters.
> It was on the basis of one of those reports that I gave the economic outlook for the balance of 1960 when I spoke on the subject last week. Now, that is what is going on; there has been no restriction whatever in the amount of advice given by or sought from the economics branch of the department. I am convinced that the method that has now been introduced is better and keeps me better informed from month to month as to the trend of economic activity in Canada.

I cannot believe the minister would take the position that he is not following this practice now, because to do so would be holding himself up to ridicule. The Minister of Trade and Commerce—the one who is supposed to feel the pulse of the economy of the nation—

Mr. Hees: Stop being pompous.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman ought not to be infantile in this house. He is now in a difficult position. He feels himself embarrassed at the moment—

Mr. Hees: I am not embarrassed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He does not want to take issue with the Prime Minister or with the former minister of trade and commerce. What we are asking is that these reports be given to this house on the basis of the precedent established by the Prime Minister. We said they should not be given, but that is not what this government says; it is not what the Prime Minister said on January 20, 1958. He said, then, in substance: I do not care how confidential this is; I do not care how privileged it is; it is information that parliament should have. That is the practice he established.

We are asking through this motion that the government should give us the same information as the Prime Minister assumed he had the right to give and in the way in which he used it in January of 1958. As my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate has said, the situation today is parallel with the events which attended January 20, 1958. We are on the eve of an election. We shall be arguing in the country that unemployment under this administration has reached dangerous and alarming levels. The government will be answering that argument. The government will be trying to justify its policy. It will indicate that there is a gradual improvement in the economic state of the nation. This will be contested. Some economists are already contesting it.

An hon. Member: Are you happy?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member asks: "Am I happy?" He knows perfectly well that that is an impulsive question from a young member of parliament. We should like to do something about it. We want first of all to know what are the facts. Let us have these forecasts which the minister receives every day, or every month. Let us have this series of reports.

Mr. Crestohl: Why do they suppress it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why should hon. gentlemen find it proper to deny this information to us when the Prime Minister in this house felt that this was information that should be given to parliament? What justification can there be? Is there something in these reports that the minister is concealing that is contrary to the public assessment of the economic situation?

Mr. Pickersgill: And contrary to what the government says?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, and contrary to what the government says?

An hon. Member: No coaching.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the situation going to be more serious in the months ahead?

Mr. Pallett: This is not 1956.

Mr. Pickersgill: It certainly is not; we had full employment then.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the very argument which the Prime Minister used on January 20, 1958 under circumstances—

An hon. Member: You will not forget that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No one will ever forget it because on that occasion the Prime Minister did something that has never before been done in the annals of parliamentary history. But if it was right for him, it is right for us to ask for these reports. It is the duty of the government to produce these series of documents or series of reports—

Mr. Churchill: What documents? What reports?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —which indicate the assessment of the economic situation made by the officials of the department.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Hees: Thank heaven.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we are entitled as members of the house to draw attention to the tactics being followed by the members of the opposition and the cynical approach—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Churchill: You cannot take it.

An hon. Member: Miss Puddleduck.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I scarcely see how a point of order could have arisen so soon but if the hon. member has one I shall hear it.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order is this. I think perhaps Your Honour will find I am rather more perceptive than the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was because the Minister of Justice got up and started to talk about the tactics used by hon. members. I was severely restricted by Your Honour in the kind of argument I could use and it was even suggested that I could not identify the documents.

Mr. Churchill: You didn't.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely it is not germane to a discussion of this motion for an hon. member, above all the Minister of Justice, to get up and in his first phrase start imputing motives to other hon. members who are exercising their rights in the house.

Mr. Montgomery: Exactly what are you doing now?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is my point of order and it seems to me the hon. gentleman should be restricted.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot see anything derogatory in an hon. member saying of another hon. gentleman that in carrying on the debate he has tactics. It seems to me that imputes nothing immoral.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that my hon. friends would have been very angry with me indeed if I were to have said that they were completely without tactics, as devoid of tactics as they are of common sense, in bringing on this motion. That would really have annoyed them. I have not imputed motives. I will leave the analysis and conclusion as to motives to others when the facts are fully exposed and placed before them. Because I fully recognize and appreciate the rules of the house with regard to the imputation of motives I do not intend to impute motives.

I believe we are entitled to look at the situation which by their very words the members of the opposition have asked us to create in this house in bringing forward this motion.

For the moment may I leave aside altogether the question of whether there exists such a document as is asked for. It seems to me the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce has disposed of the motion itself and certainly should have disposed of the argument long ago when he said there is no such document that can be produced. Hon. members opposite insist that there is one. Somewhere, they feel sure, there should be such a document, that there must be one.

Mr. Pickersgill: There certainly should be.

Mr. Fulton: If there is, what is it? What would it be? It would be the latest written economic report made to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. members of the house including Your Honour heard what was said by the hon. member for Essex East just a moment ago. As I understood him he included the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in his reference and indicated that that hon. member shared the same view; that is, as he said, that it was a mistake, and that it was an undesirable thing that such a document should be tabled. That is their view.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the view we have always taken.

Mr. Fulton: It is their view that the document in question should not have been tabled back in 1959 when it was tabled in this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: In 1958.

Mr. Fulton: Hon. gentlemen opposite said it was a mistake and went on to use adjectives—I do not recall them all—indicating that they took a very poor view of that development. The hon. member went on to say that this represented a bad practice. Of course, we do not share their view with regard to the tabling of the document at that time under the circumstances in which it was tabled. It will be recalled that it was no longer current. I think the document at that time was approximately a year and three months or a year and six months old—

Mr. Pickersgill: Nine months.

Mr. Fulton: It was stated that it was our view that the document was no longer current and that the confidential nature of it which argued against its tabling when the report was first made no longer applied. But my hon. friends opposite do not accept that view. They say that that was a bad thing to have done.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fulton: What are they now asking this house to do?

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fulton: Really, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: A question of privilege, Your Honour.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure Your Honour will assist me by not allowing the hon. member to interrupt.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the minister is seeking to put words in my mouth.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises a question of privilege. Of course, if there is one, it is his duty to raise it when it arises.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question of privilege is this, Mr. Speaker. In this very restricted debate the minister is putting into my mouth words which I did not use at all. I based my whole argument on the Prime Minister's statement that the previous government had concealed this document and that it should have been published by the previous government at the time. Let the minister answer that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising really to explain a misinterpretation, which he may do at the conclusion of the remarks of the minister. It is not a question of privilege that arises in the course of debate.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, if I am guilty of an error in saying that the hon. member shared those views I think the place he should ask the correction to be made is of the hon. member for Essex East, because he was the one who indicated that he and his friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate both took this view.

The point, however, is this. At least one of those hon. gentlemen, a leading member of the opposition party, has stated in the course of his remarks that in their view this was a wrong thing to do, that it was a wrong practice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the position you took.

Mr. Fulton: What are they now asking to do except that, by this motion, one mistake should become the practice? Could anything be more cynical than that?

Mr. Pickersgill: What the Prime Minister did was much more cynical.

Mr. Fulton: In the view of hon. members opposite this was a bad thing. It should not have been done when it was done. Now they want to make it a practice in this house. They want to perpetuate a mistake. When I say "they" I refer to hon. gentlemen opposite. That is what they are asking this house to do. Well, sir, this house and the country learned the danger of perpetuating mistakes back in 1957 and they put the Liberals over there on the other side of the house so that mistakes would not be perpetuated any longer.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are concealing a document the Prime Minister accused us of concealing. That is what you were doing.

Mr. Fulton: Let me make it clear again, that I am discussing their view when I say it is submitted it was a mistake.

Mr. Pickersgill: How about discussing the Prime Minister's view?

Mr. Fulton: We, of course, as I said earlier, did not say it was a mistake under the circumstances under which it was done.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us have the reports, then.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Fulton: The difference between that circumstance and this is that when the other document was tabled it was tabled many months after it was published.

Mr. Pickersgill: And we were accused of hiding it.

Mr. Fulton: The report was tabled many months after it was first made.

Mr. McGee: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We have just witnessed again these two arrogant gentlemen sprawling in their seats interrupting freely and at will the hon. member who has the floor. Surely that is contrary to the rules of the house.

Mr. Pigeon: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Justice has the floor. The minister is entitled to make his argument. I find it difficult to follow because of interruptions.

Mr. Crestohl: These juvenile backbenchers.

Mr. Speaker: There have been interjections from both sides of the house. I invite hon. members to give the minister who has but a few minutes, a clear opportunity to present his argument.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is very little argument.

Mr. Fulton: I am nearly through, Mr. Speaker. I have only the following two points to make. The hypothetical or alleged document the production of which is now sought would, if it existed, be current. That results inevitably from the terms of the hon. member's resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is being hidden.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member in his resolution asked for the production of the most recent in an alleged series of documents. The hon. gentleman seeks the production of a current document which he well knows—

Mr. Pickersgill: Which the Prime Minister said we hid.

Mr. Fulton: —it is not the practice to produce, for reasons which he also well knows; whereas the production of the other document on the previous occasion was the production of a document which was no longer current. Therefore the two circumstances are entirely different.

But third, Mr. Speaker, my colleague has said that there is no such document. Therefore my argument may be summarized as follows.

First, there is no such document. Second, there is no precedent for its production, even if such a document existed. Third, since it is perfectly obvious that all we are being asked to do by my hon. friends opposite is to establish as a practice that which they themselves have said they regard as a mistake, I am confident that this house will treat the motion with the contempt it deserves.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe I would have a moment or two in which to reply.

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this not a substantive motion?

Mr. Speaker: I believe that the motion is a substantive one.

Mr. Pickersgill: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. Surely the mover has a right of reply.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wish to speak now to close the debate. I agree completely with one thing the Minister of Justice said. I agree completely that it would be quite wrong to have this motion passed. It would be contrary to good parliamentary practice. It would be contrary to the proper relationship between public servants and public men which existed up until January 20, 1958 and which was destroyed by the improper publication of the document referred to in my motion by the Prime Minister on that occasion. The only reason I had for making this motion was to put on record something to remind the people of Canada that the Prime Minister himself had said that the previous government should have published that document when it was current.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, no. I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has misstated what was said. What the Prime Minister said was that the former government should not have attempted to deceive the people as to what was in the document.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not a question of privilege. It is just wasting time. The Prime Minister said the document was hidden. He said, "They concealed the facts". He said, "They did not tell us what the facts were". The Prime Minister also said—and this was in reply to Mr. Knowles—"It is assumed it has been tabled". He did not know whether or not it had been tabled when he started to use it. All he knew was that he had torn the top page off it with the word "confidential" in order to try to cover up.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the most shocking performance that ever took place in the Canadian parliament.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member has stated that the Prime Minister tore the top page off the document. He has no evidence whatever to that effect. He should withdraw that statement immediately.

Mr. Pickersgill: I withdraw it immediately. I have no evidence. Maybe somebody else tore it off for him. However, when the Prime Minister tabled it, it was torn off. Those of us who saw the document in its original form, know that and they include the former minister of trade and commerce, Mr. Churchill, who saw it many months previously, as he knows very well, as did the Prime Minister. He said he found it at the last possible moment. The Minister of Veterans Affairs knows that is not true. He knows that months previously the Prime Minister had this document which he said was hidden. It was not hidden at all. It was available to every minister in the files of his department.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that the debate is on the production of a current document. He is getting rather widely afield. In his argument on what was done with a similar previous document he is correct but it is not proper to go into other circumstances.

Mr. Pickersgill: Your Honour is quite right. This incident is one of the few things in public life which, because of its disgraceful character, arouses me very much. However, I submit at once to Your Honour's ruling. I do not in any way wish to participate in, to appear to condone or to have anything to do with that disgraceful kind of conduct, I would ask the permission of the house to withdraw my motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Churchill: No.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Mr. Hees: How ridiculous can you get? How cynical can you be?

Mr. Crestohl: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: It is unanimous.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. It being six o'clock, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Water resources branch—

649. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $40,000.

Miss LaMarsh: I should like to say something with regard to this vote. Perhaps these remarks do not have the urgency which they had recently. The minister no doubt is aware that, with his responsibility over water resources, he has received a brief which was prepared jointly for the governments of Canada and the United States with respect to the proposed extension of Niagara river remedial works and certain proposed operational procedures. One such brief was prepared by the Ontario hydro and one was prepared by the power authority of the state of New York and they were submitted in March of last year.

This fact did not become known to the people of Niagara Falls until an item appeared in the Globe and Mail of October 6, 1961, wherein it was indicated that the proposal was to undertake certain studies with a view to making a further diversion of water from the Niagara river for power production. When these plans became known to individuals in Niagara Falls, there was a considerable outcry. Under the guidance of the greater Niagara chamber of commerce, which covers three of the largest municipalities in my riding, a committee was set up comprised of both United States and Canadian residents from the twin cities of Niagara Falls. After hearing representations from Ontario hydro and from the United States power authority, the committee found itself completely opposed to the proposal.

While it is admitted that the initial request was only to conduct certain tests, these tests would have resulted, it was anticipated, in a reduction of the water flowing over the falls. Now, in 1950 there was a treaty entered into between the United States and Canadian governments, and that treaty provided there would be a minimum flow over Niagara Falls of 100,000 cubic feet per second during the day between the hours of 8 a.m. and 10 p.m., and that would be from April 1 to September 15. Then, between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. the same quantity of water would be allowed from September 16 to October 31 inclusive. At all other times, the allowable flow was to be reduced to a minimum of 50,000 cubic feet per second, except when there are ice jams in the river to such an extent that it would be necessary to flush them down. The 100,000 cubic feet per second allowance, which is allowed in what is called the tourist season, is about one third the flow of the Niagara river.

When on November 1, 1961, for the first time, the smaller amount was permitted it was immediately ascertained that in so far as the laymen or tourists were concerned, there was an extremely bad effect. It was apparent that there was in the upper river large rocks which had never before been visible; that the water in the basin below the falls in which the Maid of the Mist plies had dropped by about 35 feet exposing hazardous rocks; that the mist which had formerly hung over the falls and was in itself a tourist attraction, had fallen to ground level because there was not sufficient updraft resulting from the fall of water to lift it. The local people were appalled by this, particularly since they have made very strenuous efforts in the last few years to attempt to increase their tourist business all year round and not simply limit it to the pleasant summer months of the year.

Meetings were arranged and there was considerable outcry. I had expected that when these estimates were raised I would be in a position to make considerable complaint and appeal to the government to heed the outcry of the residents of Niagara Falls, New York and Niagara Falls, Ontario to assist. As a result of correspondence with the then minister of energy in Ontario, I received the brief which had been forwarded to the international joint commission and which had indicated that it was anticipated some $3 million worth more in power might be developed by what was considered to be an additional minor diversion. However, that diversion, it was expected by those in the area who were interested, would have resulted in an even further loss of water, in less sound developing from the falls, in less mist and indeed in a decrease in beauty. It has been estimated that the falls bring into Niagara Falls city about $40 million a year in tourist business, and it was strongly urged that $3 million worth of power produced would be insufficient to compensate for this loss.

Because of the complaints made, it was agreed by the joint commission that they would go to Niagara Falls, take certain photographs and view the falls in its reduced state. A meeting was to be arranged in January. However, within the past few weeks the United States power authority, that is the state power authority of New York, had withdrawn its application to the international joint commission to conduct such experiments which would necessarily reduce the flow. Shortly thereafter, Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission as well withdrew its application. I have, under date of March 20, a communication from the greater Niagara chamber of commerce which indicates it has placed a resolution before the Ontario chambers of commerce which are to meet in Niagara Falls on May 9, 10 and 11, and to which I invite all members of the house who may wish to attend, to ask both levels of government to intervene in any further approach towards the commission to perform such experiments with a view to cutting the water falling over the falls.

Notwithstanding the fact the applications have been withdrawn it is the feeling of the greater Niagara chamber of commerce that, so far as is possible, an undertaking should be obtained from the provincial power authority and from this department not to permit further diversion of the water from the face of the falls. This has been supported by a resolution from the city of Niagara Falls and a resolution of the Niagara Falls local of the united electrical workers of Canada. I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister has had any such communication from the interested parties and whether he has any remarks which he would like to make concerning the department's position in respect of a possible renewal of the applications which I am informed may come within three or four months or three or four years.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, this matter, as the hon. member has intimated, is one which has been handled largely by the international joint commission on boundary waterways. The position of the water resources branch of my department in respect of this matter has been to provide the necessary engineering data and so forth. I can assure the hon. member that the department is very conscious of all the implications of a proposal of this kind.

It so happens that the tourist promotional activities of the government come under the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Therefore not only are we interested in this proposal from the standpoint of its impact on water resources but also from the standpoint of its impact on the appeal of Niagara Falls to the tourists, and the contribution of Niagara Falls to the tourist industry.

I am sure the hon. member is also aware that inherent in the treaty are the tourist potentialities of Niagara Falls. I thank her for her contribution to the discussion in this way and assure her the matter is being watched very carefully.

Miss LaMarsh: May I ask the minister one or two further questions. Those interested in the problem in Niagara Falls have had some difficulty in ascertaining the meaning of certain words within the treaty. There is a particular reference to off-season, and this is now taken to mean from the first of November in each year; but it is not so defined. There is also a reference to the beauty of Niagara, but of course no criterion is given. It became very apparent within the last four months that there was a considerable difference of opinion as to what the beauty of Niagara might be, whether it might be a six foot or a six inch flow over the crest. I wonder if the minister might inform the committee whether there is any definition to which such interested persons might have recourse, and which might be of some assistance to them if the problem arises again.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would suspect that the description of the beauty of Niagara Falls is a qualitative rather than a quantitative category. Of course it would involve insurance that a sufficient fall of water is maintained, and I do not think we could get an actual specific judgment from an engineer or from engineering sources. The personnel in the water resources branch are primarily qualified engineers. If we wanted an accurate description of what is described in the phrase "beauties of Niagara" I suggest we should have to resort to the opinion of honeymoon couples.

Miss LaMarsh: They are the last ones who would know.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to ask the minister about something which is either under way or is still under contemplation; I am not quite sure which. I want to ask about something in Manitoba and perhaps I can best explain it by reading a brief extract from the Winnipeg Free Press of January 26, 1962, headed "Roblin blasts Fairfield".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Fairclough?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Dr. George Fairfield, Conservative member of parliament. It reads:

Premier Duff Roblin Friday accused Dr. George Fairfield, Conservative member of parliament for Portage-Neepawa with making "unwarranted and misleading" statements about the proposed Assiniboine river diversion.

Dr. Fairfield Thursday told the House of Commons that the diversion could end up as a $12 million "flop." (See earlier story page 8).

I am not going to put that on the record.

In a sharp reply Friday, Premier Roblin said, "It is a matter of regret that Dr. Fairfield should make what I take to be an unwarranted and misleading statement.

"I must assume that he is not well informed about water control and conservation on the Assiniboine river.

"Ten years of study and the best counsel available in North America have gone into the water conservation plan now adopted by the Canadian and Manitoba governments.

"All this information is available to Dr. Fairfield any time he wishes to make use of it. As a professional man, I'm sure he will understand that our professional advisors have taken into full account the various problems involved in these projects."

Dr. Fairfield's attack on the project came only a day after agriculture minister—

That is the provincial minister—

—George Hutton had won approval for the floodway from a majority of members of the prairie flood control organization, which represents people of the area.

I think the house would be interested to know whether the minister is on the side of the premier or on the side of his colleague here in the house, and also what progress is being made in this controversial question.

Mr. Dinsdale: Actually this item, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate knows, comes under the purview of prairie farm rehabilitation, but I am quite happy to answer his question. Judging by the statement he has read from the Winnipeg Free Press there seems to be an honest difference of opinion between the two gentlemen to whom he has referred, and I think I could give the same answer to this query as I gave to the previous query concerning Niagara Falls, that this, I think, is as much a qualitative as it is a quantitative judgment. In so far as wanting to know which side I am on, I would say I am on the side of the angels.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister tell us which side the angels are on, because I think a lot of people would like to know? Perhaps the minister could also give us a very brief progress report on the Red river floodway which I believe comes within the purview of his department. I do not want to hold the estimates up, but it would be interesting to know what progress is being made with this project, which was going to be started four or five years ago. We all recall that when Premier Roblin took office in Winnipeg it was going to be done in no time; but now a long, long period has elapsed and there does not appear to be great progress made.

Mr. Dinsdale: So far as the Red river project is concerned this does come under the Canada Water Conservation Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I wanted to be in order.

Mr. Dinsdale: I can appreciate that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Churchill: That is new.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have reported from time to time when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has inquired solicitously about this matter. We are making very encouraging progress and the program is going to be under way this year. As a matter of fact, judging from the past performance of the former administration, it is about 20 years ahead of what might have been expected.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I should thank the minister for the suggestion that the former administration was so aggressive that it would have gone on with the project before the need was manifest, since the great Winnipeg flood is not yet 20 years away. As the minister knows, at the time when Mr. Roblin was successful in becoming premier of Manitoba he assured the people that Dief and Duff were just "like this". I do not know how Hansard is going to interpret that, but it meant they were very close. They do not seem to be very close nowadays; but he said there would be no time lost before this project would be under way. Does the minister really think that before parliament is dissolved there will actually be a shovelful of earth taken out?

Mr. Dinsdale: Oh yes, Mr. Chairman. As a matter of fact there was some digging done last summer. Since the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate abandoned Manitoba for Newfoundland he has been out of touch with the situation in Manitoba. I know he was there during the 1930's when things were at a bad pass under the former Liberal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, under the Bennett government. The minister is too young to remember, but I do.

Mr. Dinsdale: Since Mr. Roblin and the Conservative administration took over there is a whole new situation. The atmosphere is one of progress and I am sure the hon. member would be delighted to see it if he would return home to Manitoba and pay a visit to us there.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister say whether any contracts have been let under the joint program and what proportion of the cost is being paid out of the federal treasury?

Mr. Dinsdale: This has all been put on the record previously. From memory I can say that there are various aspects of this project. It is a very comprehensive program of water conservation and control. One of the basic contributions was a federal contribution of 37.5 per cent under the Canada Water Conservation Act. I want to be accurate in this respect. The ancillary works will be met by contributions as high as 75 per cent of the cost, that is, relocation of roads and so forth which are involved in this Red river floodway. It also incorporates the complete water basin project; that is, the Assiniboine plus the Red river. The Assiniboine aspect, as I have already indicated, is coming under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, which represents a federal contribution of some 50 per cent.

Mr. Pickersgill: In connection with the part with which the minister's department is concerned, have there been any contracts let under the joint program yet?

Mr. Dinsdale: The contracts have been called, I believe. I must not be presumptuous, Mr. Chairman, on this matter because the contracts are handled by the provincial government, and I am afraid I could not answer that question without referring to the government of Manitoba.

Item agreed to.

Northern administration branch—
Welfare and industrial divisions—
650. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $270,000.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this item pass without remarking, in contrast to the remarks that have been made by hon. members opposite today in connection with northern development generally, upon the housing improvements that have taken place in the Yukon and Northwest Territories generally in the last two years. Particularly concerned in this item is an amount which will set up a low cost housing loans scheme for the Yukon territory, I believe. This plan was evolved in the last year and a half and will make available to residents of the Yukon a fund upon which they can draw to construct housing, where this was impossible before. In keeping with the enlarged regulations under the National Housing Act which has brought about a construction program in the Yukon, where there was absolutely none prior to 1957, this provision in the minister's supplementaries is very encouraging indeed.

I simply rise to remark upon that aspect and to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the department to continue the appropriation that was granted last year in connection with the development of an urban renewal scheme in the city of Whitehorse; that is, the development of what is commonly known as lot 19. I have consulted representatives of the property owner and the officials of the city of Whitehorse, who I understand just today or the day before communicated with the minister's department requesting that the lot 19 scheme be undertaken once again by the joint federal, territorial and municipal governments. Therefore I rise now to ask the minister whether the federal participation in this scheme will be renewed if the owner of lot 19, the municipal authorities and the territorial government agree once again to co-operate in an effort to rehabilitate the areas in the city of Whitehorse which should properly be considered under an urban renewal program such as that suggested.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for Yukon for his complimentary references to this program. He, of course, could himself have taken considerable credit for the scheme if he were not such a modest gentleman, because originally the suggestion for a program of this kind came from the hon. member.

I am pleased to hear that it is having such a beneficial effect in providing very badly needed housing accommodation for the people north of the 60th parallel. This program, of course, is carried forward into the Northwest Territories as well as the Yukon territory.

With reference to the specific problem of urban renewal in the city of Whitehorse, again the hon. member for Yukon will be aware that our plans in this regard were somewhat slowed down by the failure last fall of the plebiscite to get the approval of the people of Whitehorse. However, I can assure him that we have not changed our plans in this regard. We want to proceed with this urban renewal program. We feel that it is in the best interests of the people concerned, and the hon. member can be assured that any effort in this regard will take into consideration the local problems with respect to the dislocation of the people who would be involved in this urban renewal program.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a few words about this item dealing with northern areas.

I should like to point out to the minister that education in new Quebec should normally come under provincial jurisdiction—

The Chairman: In my opinion, the hon. member is straying from the item under discussion when he deals with this matter.

Mr. Pigeon: I shall have the opportunity to come back to it later on.

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall vote 650 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the vote passes, could the minister tell us what items are comprised in here. Is this wholly for housing?

Mr. Dinsdale: The item you are referring to is—

Mr. Pickersgill: No. 650.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, this is to provide for the low cost housing program, in this instance for the Yukon territory.

Mr. Pickersgill: This vote is entirely for the Yukon? I think the minister said that part of it was in Mackenzie River, but that may be the main vote.

Mr. Nielsen: It is for the Northwest Territories as a whole.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, the Northwest Territories as a whole, plus the Yukon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister say in what places this is being carried out.

Mr. Dinsdale: This development program applies to the whole northern area of Canada, where formerly the native population was nomadic and in the literal sense they were hopping from igloo to igloo—

Mr. Pickersgill: Without roads.

Mr. Dinsdale: —to quote a classical phrase. The igloo was quite a useful form of temporary accommodation; but once industrial activity and development makes possible the establishment of permanent settlements, the igloo is no longer a suitable kind of housing accommodation. This situation has created a very urgent demand for minimum standard housing for the people of the north and this program is going forward in every community that requires this type of housing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister say whether any of this housing is provided for Indians, or does his colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, have a separate program?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, in view of his former responsibilities in these matters, would be aware that Indian affairs are handled by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in the north as well as other parts of Canada.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is only true to a limited extent, because the minister will recall—

The Chairman: Order. I recognized the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I was replying to an observation made to me by the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe I was on my feet first.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that is the wish of the Chair, I will resume my seat.

The Chairman: If the hon. member for Yukon wishes to yield the floor in order that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate may finish his observation, he may do so; but before the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had risen I had already recognized the hon. member for Yukon and the floor is his unless he yields it.

Mr. Nielsen: I wished to speak on the same subject, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to say that the program of low cost housing in the Yukon territory as provided for under this supplementary is equally as applicable to the Indian people of the Yukon as it is to other residents.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is in direct contradiction of what the minister said.

Mr. Nielsen: It fills a gap that was very sadly overlooked during the 22 years of the previous administration. The program is already in operation in the Northwest Territories and is progressing quite well in the Yukon. It will provide low cost homes for people in all parts of the territory—indeed for all peoples in all parts of the territories—where such a program was previously completely unavailable.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that you allowed the hon. member for the Yukon to correct what the minister has said. The minister said that the Indians were not covered by this program but came under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. The hon. member for the Yukon promptly got up and corrected the minister's statement. He said these houses were available to Indians. I do not know which of the two hon. members is right, but they cannot both be right.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege—

The Chairman: I think the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has accused me of contradicting the minister. I am doing no such thing. This program is in addition to that which was provided for the Indian people—a program which has been greatly expanded in the last few years to the benefit of the people of the north.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps I might comment. I forgot it is some four years since the hon. member was responsible for these matters and so many changes have taken place since that time—so much progress has been made—that perhaps I should have been more specific in my reply.

Mr. Pickersgill: That, of course, was why I was inquiring. It is nearly five years since I had the responsibility for the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

An hon. Member: Yes. And it will be another five—

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh no. Perhaps five months—

An hon. Member: Four months.

Mr. Pickersgill: I doubt if this is relevant to the item before us, interesting though it would be to debate this subject, and fruitless though it would be to debate it in the absence of the Prime Minister who is keeping hon. gentlemen opposite even more in the dark than the rest of the people of this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are in a state of agitation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Visibly. However, I want to come back to the question of housing for the Indians. I assume the minister knows that when Mr. Lesage was minister of northern affairs, and I was the minister responsible for Indian affairs, an agreement was made between the two departments whereby the schools in the Northwest Territories were provided alike for the Indians and the rest of the population by the department of northern affairs. I think that was a wise thing to have done and a progressive step to have taken. I assumed that since there are no Indian reserves in the Northwest Territories—the Indians live anywhere they please, as does the rest of the population—the Department of Citizenship and Immigration did not have any housing program but that there was one single program in that area. I was surprised to hear the minister say that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration also had a program. Is that correct?

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the hon. member has answered his own question. All these activities involving welfare, education, housing and so forth are handled on an interdepartmental basis in the interests of greater efficiency.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is, of course, trying to cover up. What he is saying in other words, is that there is only one housing program and it is run by his department. Is that right or not?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, if I may—

Mr. Pickersgill: Ah, the parliamentary assistant to the rescue.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member is trying in characteristic fashion to confuse the issue or else he is genuinely misinformed. As a former minister he should know that there was an Indian housing program across the whole of the north and it is continuing now in greatly expanded form as compared to what was done under the previous administration. This program which the minister has introduced by this supplementary estimate represents an addition to the existing program of the Indian affairs branch and is providing houses not only for the Indian people who may, if they wish, take the opportunity available to them, but to all the residents of the territory so that they might be provided with housing in circumstances where otherwise, because of the high cost of construction in the north and the nature of the present regulations under the National Housing Act, they would be unable to do so.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must thank the hon. member for the Yukon for the first compliment he has ever paid me. He did this by pointing out that there was a very considerable Indian housing program when I was in the ministry. Inadvertently, the hon. gentleman has admitted the truth of what I was pointing out this afternoon, namely, that all these things were started by the previous government.

Mr. Nielsen: Again, I cannot let that go by without comment, because I did not use the word "considerable" at all. If I had to comment on that program I would say that a program which was just piddling along under a Liberal administration has increased tenfold in the last four years.

Mr. Robichaud: Can the minister advise this committee if an estimate has been made by his department as to the cost per unit of this housing and how many units are involved in this item of $270,000?

Mr. Dinsdale: There is no specific cost per unit. The homes vary in cost from $500 to $7000. This is not a charity scheme on the part of the administration. This vote is included to provide mortgages to enable the local population to construct their own homes according to their ability to pay for them.

As to the specific number of homes that will be required, it is hard to make an accurate estimate because changes are taking place so rapidly in the north as people settle in the new communities; but it is estimated that over the next ten years some 11,700 units will be required. I believe that is accurate. I am speaking from memory and if I am incorrect I shall be happy to get in touch with the hon. member.

Mr. Robichaud: Does the minister realize that if the $250,000 which was mentioned this afternoon in connection with the Arizona Charlie dance hall was added to this amount it would make possible between 700 and 800 new homes in this region?

Mr. Nielsen: Surely the hon. member is not following the precedent of his friends by criticizing the restoration of the Grand Palace theatre as part of the Dawson city celebrations? Does he think that the Dawson city festival is an unwise investment, or that it will not attract tourist traffic to the north?

Mr. Pickersgill: Are we back to the twist, Mr. Chairman?

Item agreed to.

672. Loans to the government of the Yukon Territory (hereinafter called the "territory") in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in accordance with such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, to enable that government to make mortgage loans to residents of the territory for the purchase or construction of low cost houses in the territory; and to authorize the commissioner in council of the territory, notwithstanding anything in the Yukon Act, to make ordinances in respect of the repayment by the government of the territory of loans made to it pursuant to this vote and in respect of the lending of money to residents of the territory for the purchase or construction of houses in the territory and the taking of security therefor by way of mortgage, $240,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister give us a short explanation of this?

Mr. Dinsdale: Again, this vote is to provide capital for housing construction in the Northwest Territories. A capital sum is provided on a loan basis to the government of the Yukon territory in respect to housing construction. The program outlined in the other vote was a program providing for a more elaborate style of home. This program can be described as follows: The National Housing Act was intended to encourage the development of low rental housing of a type which is desirable in southern Canada. In the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories, however, the high cost of construction, of heating and of water and sewer services places the National Housing Act standards well beyond the ability to pay of the majority of residents. Even with the new second mortgage proposals approved by parliament with the further supplementary estimates in March, 1961, a very large number of residents of the northern territories cannot afford National Housing Act standards. Costs in the north will not likely permit these people to achieve these standards for probably 20 years and interim measures are required.

Special housing programs subsidized by the federal government are already under way for the Indians and Eskimos of the north. The latest estimates place the white population at 11,500 in the Yukon and at 9,400 in the Northwest Territories, a total of 21,100 people.

In addition to the Eskimo and Indian populations there are group centres in the north not taken care of by the program that we have already outlined so that this item No. 672 is designed to fill the gap among those special categories of northern settlers.

Item agreed to.

674. Loans to the government of the Northwest Territories (hereinafter called the "territories") in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in accordance with such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, to enable that government to make mortgage loans to residents of the territories for the purchase or construction of low cost houses in the territories; and to authorize the commissioner in council of the territories, notwithstanding anything in the Northwest Territories Act, to make ordinances in respect of the repayment by the government of the territories of loans made to it pursuant to this vote and in respect of the lending of money to residents of the territories for the purchase or construction of houses in the territories and the taking of security therefor by way of mortgage, $240,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, this is quite a large item. Will the minister tell us what this is for?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, this vote provides for a loan of $150,000 to the government of the Northwest Territories subject, of course—

Mr. Churchill: You are on the next one.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is this 674?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: The other vote, Mr. Chairman, covered the Yukon territory. This present vote, as it indicates, provides the same services for the Northwest Territories. There are two territories north of the sixtieth parallel, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon territory.

Mr. Garland: Could the minister give the committee any information as to the cost of housing on a per square foot basis in the area to which this vote relates?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. gentleman is really serious when he asks me that question. But if he wishes the details of the housing program perhaps I can supply him with an outline of what the program is designed to do although I cannot give him the cost per square foot.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the question. That is a very devious digression.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the cost per square foot at my disposal. I shall be glad to obtain that information. I might have the costs per square head but not per square foot.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, in all reason I think the hon. member for Nipissing realizes—

Mr. Robichaud: The minister has a new parliamentary secretary. What is he paying you?

Mr. Nielsen: —that the costs per square foot in the north are going to vary from Alert Bay to Whitehorse as much as they do from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Vancouver.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That does not answer the question. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he should allow the minister to answer the questions and we would get ahead much faster.

Mr. Garland: Yes. It would be interesting to put another question to the minister with the permission of the hon. member for the Yukon.

We in this committee are interested in knowing about these matters. As I understand it the federal government does not enter into negotiation. This money is for lending purposes only, is that right?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Nipissing takes a very reasonable approach to this matter. These programs are, of course, handled by the respective territorial governments. In the Northwest Territories the money is lent to the territorial government and it is repayable, of course. The territorial government administers the program and, as I have already intimated, if the hon. member would like to have the details concerning the specific costs of the program I would be happy to provide them to him. I do not have that information at my fingertips but I could give him a general outline of what this particular scheme is attempting to do, if he would be interested.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the committee. I was interested only in attempting to arrive at an understanding of the amount of subsidization or assistance that is provided. For instance, what is the rate of interest charged on the moneys advanced?

Mr. Dinsdale: The rate of interest is the going rate of interest plus the cost of financing the loan which would bring it up to something like 7½ per cent in the territories.

Mr. Garland: Federal money is made available in the territories?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That completes the supplementary estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. We turn now to the supplementary estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is the minister?

Mr. Churchill: The minister is unavoidably absent but I am taking his place and I know the official opposition will co-operate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the parliamentary secretary here?

Mr. Churchill: I believe the parliamentary secretary is in hospital.

Mr. Thrasher: He is quite ill following an accident.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now consider vote No. 655.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Public buildings construction and services—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, including expenditures on works on other than federal property, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects —further amounts required—

655. Nova Scotia, $1.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, we are now on item—

I regret that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) is not here this evening, because I would have liked to address my remarks to him personally.

I see we are on item 655, but—

I thought this was the vote relating to public buildings construction and services. That is the first item that comes under the Department of Public Works. I particularly wanted to discuss the construction of buildings and repairs. This seems to relate to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I can wait until we reach the vote relating to buildings in this region. I wanted to make general remarks about construction and repairs.

Mr. Bourget: I understand that the Department of Public Works has received numerous protests about this item relating to a public building at Reserve Mines. I wonder whether the acting minister could give the committee some information about the protests and what has been the decision of the department.

Mr. Churchill: The decision of the department is very firm. No protests have been brought to my attention.

Mr. Bourget: Well, there have been protests. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate raised a question about this in the house a week or so ago. He also mentioned that protests had been sent to the department. The new building was put in a location that is not exactly in the centre of the city and was also on the wrong side of the road. I wonder whether the minister has that information.

Mr. Churchill: I understand some protests were received and were given careful consideration. The Postmaster General and his officials were consulted with regard to this and the best site possible was chosen for the location of the post office.

Mr. Bourget: According to the protests the best site was not chosen. The old post office was located in the centre of the town. The information we have received—and we understand the department has received it, too—is that the new location is approximately 300 or 400 feet from the centre of the town and is also on the wrong side of the road. It is dangerous for school children because they would have to cross the street in order to reach the post office. I wonder whether inquiry has been made after protests were received by the department and whether a final decision has been reached.

Mr. Churchill: I appreciate the interest of the hon. member. However, this matter was dealt with on March 6, on a question asked on the orders of the day by the hon. member for Trinity and answered by the Minister of Public Works along the lines which I have just now indicated when as found at page 1516 of Hansard he stated:

> The site which has been picked is the most popular site, the safest site, and the site that pleases most of the people of Reserve Mines,—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has not been touched by the fact that the protestants in this matter were the Royal Canadian Legion. I confess I do not know anything personally about the two sites or anything of that sort. However, there seems to be a steady stream of protests, public meetings and so on. As the minister probably knows, this post office was cancelled last year and has been reinstated this year. The government is definitely satisfied that this is the best place to put it, then.

Item agreed to.

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, including expenditures on works on other than federal property, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects —further amounts required—

656. New Brunswick, $375,000.

Mr. Robichaud: Will the amount of $375,000 mentioned here be sufficient to complete the additions and alterations to the public building in Moncton? Can the minister give some detail as to how this amount will be spent?

Mr. Churchill: This amount will meet the present requirements for this fiscal year. In the main estimates for next year there is another sum to take full care of the further work that must be done.

Item agreed to.

657. Improvements generally and miscellaneous buildings—not more than $25,000 to be expended on any one project without the approval of treasury board, $125,000.

Mr. Caron: I think this is the item on which I can speak in general terms on construction and improvements.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, as I said a while ago, I am sorry that the Minister of Public Works is not in the house this evening to discuss his department's estimates. However, even though owing to his absence I have to shorten my remarks, I cannot refrain from suggesting that, if his estimates have apparently taken more time than the others, it is probably because of his own attitude. He behaves in this house as if he had been in Quebec during the most glorious days of the Union Nationale. He sees nothing but beauty and greatness in his achievements and seems inclined to attack everything that was done in the past. Yet, he is quite aware of the fact that, under his administration, certain contracts for the building of post offices have been awarded, not to the lowest tenderer, but to the one most suitable to the member for the constituency in question, following which he set forth false motives to justify his position.

In the course of his remarks, the minister talked about the money spent and the savings he managed to pile up since he became Minister of Public Works. But he did not dare tell us about the federal building at Elliot Lake. When it was realized that the building was too large for the city which had already fallen to about half of what it had been in the good days, well, it was decided to cut out one floor and in spite of that, Mr. Chairman, the total cost came up to $40,000 over the initial estimated cost for the whole building, including the two or three floors which were supposed to be built. Therefore, it is a little hard to accept the savings claimed by the minister.

However, what I particularly wish to discuss tonight is this. Out of some 15 projects provided for the national capital, in spite of the requests I made over and over again in this house, not a single one is located on the Quebec side of the national capital. One really wonders whether the minister has a bias against it. There are many reasons why those buildings should be erected on the Hull side.

Recently, the chamber of commerce, public bodies and the Hull city council submitted to the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) an exceedingly well prepared brief on the subject. In that brief were spelled out the major reasons why some of those buildings should be erected in Hull, and that, not only for the benefit of the city of Hull, but also to the advantage of the federal parliament.

> Hull is therefore a part of the national capital area. A point to be noted is the fact that the whole city area is comprised within a three mile radius from parliament.

There is not a single part of the city of Hull outside that three mile radius.

And further on, in the same brief, we read the following:

> The Hull authorities have realized for their part that it was their duty to work in co-operation with the national capital commission to make of that territory one of the most attractive. They have spared no effort nor resources to achieve that purpose.
> That unity of action, that unity of development existing at the level of embellishment and town-planning, should we not find it also at the level of the development of the city? In other words, when the location of government services and federal buildings is being planned, should not the authorities of the capital take into account the particular position of Hull, its position in the national capital area, as well as its proximity to the centre of the federal administration?

And in the complete brief, from beginning to end, we find the best of reasons why the Quebec side of the national capital should be selected for the erection of some of those buildings.

We read again further on, in section 11:

> The duty of making of Ottawa and Hull the living picture of the harmony existing between both races, between the two great provinces of confederation, between two cities, one French speaking and the other with an English speaking majority——speaks in favour of erecting more buildings on the Hull side of the national capital.

> And further on, the report adds: "Two main cities, Ottawa, in Ontario, and Hull, in Quebec: mixed population, different legislation and education systems, two provincial entities it is important to respect as far as the system of administration, the customs, the language and ideals are concerned. Far from causing us difficulties in our work, such a complex of human premises only stimulated our interest.

Those remarks are found at page 157 of Mr. Greber's report.

Still in the same brief, we find:

> In an article written for the December 1961 issue of the Canadian Geographical Journal, Mr. Alan K. Hay, past chairman of the national capital commission, recognizes as an accepted fact that federal buildings be erected on both shores of the Ottawa.

This brief contains similar statements from front to back cover, and we see the same findings in Mr. Greber's reports and in the decisions of the national capital commission.

A little further on, the brief says:

> These important construction projects constitute a practical means to contribute to urban renewal and, indeed, to city improvement. It is in the interest of Ottawa that its next door neighbour be as beautiful as possible.
> The federal policy of decentralization of government services should show a certain balance, because the expansion on the Ottawa side will soon reach its saturation point. It would be advisable to consider now the Quebec side.
> On that side, large tracts of land are still available only a short distance away from the center of the federal administration. Essential city services could easily be obtained. (The city of Ottawa is complaining about the high cost of the services it has to provide to federal buildings, because of the long distances.)
> The federal government must promote a certain unity between the two main partners in the development of the national capital area, that is between Hull and Ottawa.

As you may notice, Mr. Chairman, all such reports are seriously prepared, well thought out and quite well presented.

In addition, it is stated that the buildings which would be erected on the Hull side would be only a mile away from the parliament buildings, from the heart of the national capital, whereas some are being erected at present at a distance of more than three or four miles as the crow flies from the centre of the capital.

This makes it abundantly clear that some of these buildings should be built on the Quebec side.

Following Mr. Greber's reports, Mr. Hay's observations and all the representations that were made in the past, why did not the minister find it appropriate to build some buildings in more suitable places, on the Quebec side for example, even if it had been only one or two buildings out of 15.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder, and so do many of my colleagues, if the minister is not prejudiced against Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I have asked myself that question, especially after having noticed the minister's attitude during the famous investigation made by the public accounts committee about the printing bureau in Hull. The present Minister of Public Works, who was then the executioner of the government within that committee, first asked Major General Young to prove his qualifications as an engineer and then asked him the following question, as shown in the proceedings for Friday, August 8, 1958, of the standing committee on public accounts:

Q. Could you tell us why that location was chosen for the national printing bureau in Hull?

That was the first question asked, Mr. Chairman. Why did we build on that side, on the Hull side? In my opinion, that goes to show there was something in the minister's mind that most of the people from Quebec could not consider as too flattering and too commendable. That is why I am coming back to that subject again.

It was suggested that Hull was not an ideal location and that the construction of the printing bureau was a scandal.

In order to prove that those allegations are false, I ask hon. members to refer to items published in 1959 in the Citizen and Le Droit. Those are statements made by Mr. Raymond Blattenberger, whose position in the United States is similar to that of the Queen's printer in Canada.

The article read as follows:

I would hope that we would retain the services of the architect, said he. Nothwithstanding what was said last year during the investigation carried out by a parliamentary committee, the architect did a good job, according to Mr. Blattenberger. Indeed, he added, the functional organization of Canada's national printing bureau is much better than what we have in the States.

In my opinion, this testimony of an expert is just as good as some of those which were given at the time. Even though certain things and certain additional expenses which had to be made gave rise to some criticism, I am sure we would not have to do too much research to show that the present government has made expenses which were much more extravagant than those we are accused of having made at that time.

Mr. Chairman, I would have much more to say on the matter if the minister were in the house, but I do not want to take up too much of the time of the committee. However, I trust that this government, for the little time it will remain in power, will try to correct that situation by giving something to that Quebec district.

If it does not do so before the next election, I am convinced that the Liberal party, which will form the next government, will see to it itself.

[Mr. Caron.]

Mr. Paul: Do you think that if the Liberal party happened to take over, the building of the interprovincial bridge would proceed as quickly as it did under the St. Laurent administration?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, it is very easy for me to answer that question. I may say that, since 1953, the Ottawa government was ready to build the bridge in co-operation with the Ontario government. But Mr. Duplessis himself told me: "If Ottawa wants to have bridges, let them build them. As far as we are concerned, we shall not build any."

Only the election of the Lesage government in Quebec made it possible for an arrangement to be made between Ottawa, Quebec and Ontario for the building of that bridge. The Union Nationale did nothing for that project.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed another question? Would the hon. member for Hull inform the committee whether he shared the views of the previous minister of public works (Mr. Winters), who decided to build federal buildings ten miles away from parliament hill, although the city of Hull was right at the door?

Mr. Caron: Whether it was the fault of the Hon. Mr. Green, of the Hon. Mr. Winters or of the Hon. Mr. Walker, every time a government has gone beyond reasonable limits instead of coming into the Quebec side, I have taken strong exception to it.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal briefly with a statement made by the hon. member for Hull, who accuses the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) of being opposed to the construction of government buildings in the province of Quebec. He has only brought forward, as evidence, a question put by the Minister of Public Works during the inquest concerning the national printing bureau made by the committee on public accounts. It seems that the hon. member for Hull is basing his contention on a question put to Major General Young: "Why was this site chosen"?

We know that such a question on the selection of a proper site for the building of the printing bureau made sense, if we consider the springs which started to run afterward and which required very expensive additional work. It is absolutely unfair of the hon. member for Hull to have drawn from that question the conclusion that the Minister of Public Works was opposed to the building of the printing bureau in Hull. I do not object to the speech of the hon. member, but I would ask him to kindly not adduce such a weak argument, which in no way justifies him to draw such a conclusion.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I did not want to read the whole evidence of the inquiry on the matter. If I had carried on my reading, you would have realized the way the question was put, because Major General Young replied as follows:

> Mr. Chairman, two factors seem to have come into play at the time. One was the decision of the then government to extend the jurisdiction of the federal district commission to the city of Hull and to the Hull area. The other factor was the necessity of building a national printing bureau.

Then the city of the Hull was mentioned. And if the question had not been put along those lines, I feel that Major General Young, who is an intelligent man, would have thought advisable to mention the words "the city of Hull" in his answer.

Mr. Flynn: It is not the answer that provides a meaning to the question. In a question of location, the hon. member for Hull will certainly want to be fair and agree that there is no question of any province or city. I draw his attention to that fact, because I know that he wants to be fair in this regard and that he should not draw such a conclusion concerning the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Leduc: I heard the remarks of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Flynn). I cannot see that he is consistent. If his government really wants government buildings to be constructed in Hull, let it show its good faith and build some.

Mr. Flynn: I have no objection, Mr. Chairman. I only wish to say that as far as my department is concerned, plans are now under consideration for the construction of some buildings on the Quebec side. The hon. member for Gatineau will recognize that the only point I wanted to make was that you could not draw such a conclusion. I do not intend to discuss this indefinitely. I only want hon. members to be fair to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Leduc: I want to be fair to the minister, but I do point out that since the Conservative government took over, not one building has been erected on the Quebec side.

Item agreed to.

658. Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds—further amount required, $1,000,000.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 658 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. This is $1 million. We can all remember that great estimator, the Minister of Public Works, the man who spent so much time telling us how incompetent was the department over which he now presides. It seems to me that another whole million dollars just for maintenance and operation of public grounds and buildings needs some tall explaining, and I hope the minister can give it.

Mr. Churchill: I hope the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will exercise a little restraint tonight.

An hon. Member: How unusual that would be.

Mr. Churchill: He can be very co-operative sometimes. I am sure my explanation will satisfy him completely. This is not a misjudgment in estimating at all. It is an acceleration of work during the course of the winter months in order to provide employment, something with which everybody would agree.

Mr. Pickersgill: An acceleration in maintenance?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, alterations, painting and decorating, repairs to plumbing, lighting and heating facilities. These are things being dealt with under this vote which can be done during the winter months. It was intended originally to do them during the next fiscal year but under the circumstances it seemed wise to do them now, and I am sure everybody is in agreement with that policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a summary explanation. One million dollars is still a large sum of money for maintenance and I would imagine even this government could do quite a lot of painting for $1 million. Certainly if this were being spent on some new structures that would be a different story. Does a large part of it represent the playing around with the west block, or is that a separate vote altogether?

Mr. Churchill: It is separate. The restoration of that great historic building, the west block, comes under a separate vote and I am sure the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who has a sense of history, would not want to leave it on the record that this is playing around with the west block, as if it were some careless treatment of it. He knows as an historian—and this is one thing I like about him although I cannot think of anything more at the moment—how important it is to preserve that historic building.

Under this particular vote repairs and alterations are carried out to an enormous number of government owned buildings, and they are not only the matters I mentioned such as painting, decorating and so on. There are also alterations. I feel that the hon. member does not seriously want a detailed explanation of this. There are numerous items for the repair and items for the upkeep of buildings in the total vote, and the main estimates ordinarily run into $6 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: What the minister is saying is that it is only a million.

Mr. Churchill: Oh no; that is a Liberal expression.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is pretty liberal with the million dollars, but I cannot let the minister's remarks about the west block go unchallenged.

Mr. Churchill: I thought you would agree with me.

Mr. Pickersgill: What the government is doing with the west block is a terrible mistake and an uncalled for extravagance. What should have been done was what was originally suggested, take the building down, mark the stones, the outer stones, build a proper inner structure—all of which could have been done for less than a quarter of what this is going to cost before they are finished with it—and then put up the external stones so that it would resemble the building now there. I predict that this is going to turn out to be one of the worst errors of judgment in the field of construction or reconstruction, ever made by any Canadian government.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What was done with the old supreme court building?

Mr. Pickersgill: The proper thing was done with the old supreme court building. It was an old stable and should have been torn down, and the proper thing was done.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It was not done.

An hon. Member: Due regard for our historic sites.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, "le palais de danse". We know the kind of historic sites you mean.

Mr. Fulton: Vandalism—a parking lot out of the old supreme court building.

Mr. Pickersgill: When the minister gets back from Arizona Charlie's—

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Fulton: That is where you have been all afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: —I would like to make some observations about the west block. There has been a mistaken story in the newspapers about the office of Sir John Macdonald in the west block, but the fact of the matter is that Sir John Macdonald never had an office in the west block at any time at all.

Mr. Fulton: Was it the crystal ball that told you that?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Veterans Affairs and I will agree on that. This was checked very carefully several years ago when this myth first started. I think it may have been Alexander Mackenzie, the first Liberal prime minister who was also minister of public works, who had an office there but Sir John A. Macdonald never had an office in the west block. This is perhaps not very important but the minister challenged me and I am responding.

Mr. Bourget: This item also includes materials. Could the minister let us know how much is for the purchase of materials?

Mr. Churchill: I am not sure I could give that information to the hon. member tonight. I shall refer the question to the Minister of Public Works and perhaps he could get in touch with the hon. member. The information I have in front of me is not broken down into materials, etc.

Mr. Bourget: I think the materials represent quite an important amount. A few minutes ago the minister stressed that these projects were undertaken to provide winter works, and I would like to know how much of the money is for the purchase of materials and how much has been granted for projects. Maybe the minister has no information about the quantity of material that has been bought, but could he tell us the number of projects, or the number of individual projects costing over $2,500, and where they have been undertaken?

Mr. Churchill: I shall give you an example. In Newfoundland there are six projects in federal buildings and post offices, running from $1,750 in one instance up to $4,200 in another. That is the type of work that is being done.

Mr. Bourget: What work was done there? Was it repairs to the plumbing?

Mr. Churchill: No; it was interior painting at Carbonear, Newfoundland; interior painting at St. Anthony, Newfoundland; improved lighting at Bishop's Falls; a lock-box lobby and terrazzo work at Stephenville; toilet facilities at Walkerville; interior painting at St. Lawrence. That is the type of work that is being done during the winter season.

In Nova Scotia, interior painting at the Ralston building at Halifax, $8,000; interior painting at the federal building at Yarmouth, $8,000, and changes to accommodation on the eighth floor of the Ralston building in Halifax, $1,600. I can go on. Does the hon. member wish further items?

Mr. Bourget: No, I was just asking the minister about the projects over $25,000.

Mr. Churchill: The only one that I can find is exactly $25,000. That is at Blackpool, in the province of Quebec, and it is for masonry repairs.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that a dance hall?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, as a socialist and a member of a party that appreciates Canadian history and tradition and does not support the materialist conception of life, believing that men live by other than bread alone, we support the preservation of the west block and the Gothic beauty and symmetry on parliament hill.

Mr. Pickersgill: So do I, but I like to see it being done economically.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us whether those projects are being done by daily work or by tender; and if by tender, how are the tenders being called?

Mr. Churchill: By contract; by public tender.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would like some information from the minister on this matter of the office of Sir John A. Macdonald. This matter has been referred to by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who said this was not at any time Sir John A. Macdonald's office. I believe it would not be to our advantage to maintain as a symbol something that was not true. Have any records been looked into in connection with this matter? Has the government ascertained whether this was in fact Sir John A. Macdonald's office; and if it was not, what was the reason for doing this?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I will refer the hon. member's question to the Minister of Public Works, who has perhaps delved into this topic. If he has not the answer, we know where to find it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Tell him to be sure to get the right Tilley.

Mr. Peters: I am not really happy about what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said in regard to this matter. If what he said is right, I do not think we should necessarily go to his files to ascertain the true circumstances; I am sure there are records kept that would prove whether or not this is right. We are quite happy to accept the minister's word that he will look into this matter and report.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, in reply to my question of a few minutes ago the minister said all those projects were being done by tender. Are we to understand that notwithstanding the amount of the project, whether it was $1,600, $8,000 or $25,000, public tenders were called for every one?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, I am informed that tenders were called for the accelerated work which is outlined here.

Mr. Bourget: For all the projects, even those of $1,000 or $2,000?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, I am told that tenders were invited on all these projects, even the small ones.

Mr. Bourget: I am asking whether public tenders were asked for on all those projects.

Mr. Churchill: I am informed that tenders were invited from known contractors in the area for these very small amounts—

Mr. Bourget: Up to what amounts?

Mr. Churchill: —and with regard to the very large amounts, of course, public tenders are called by advertisement.

Item agreed to.

Development engineering services—

659. Roads and bridges—maintenance and operation—further amount required, $150,000.

Mr. Bourget: In connection with vote 659, Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us what bridges were repaired under that item, or what roads were constructed.

Mr. Churchill: The Chaudiere bridge is the one that is referred to.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Of great advantage to Ottawa.

Mr. Bourget: Is the whole item of $150,000 for Chaudiere bridge repairs?

Mr. Churchill: That is right.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, the municipal council of the city of Fort William have from time to time endeavoured to obtain consideration from the federal government on some of their more important requirements, among which are two bridges. A few months ago I received a resolution passed by the council of the corporation of the city of Fort William which reads as follows:

> That we petition the federal government through the Lakehead harbour commission to begin construction of a bridge across the Kaministikwia river as an extension of Eighth avenue to the City road to provide access to highway 61.
> The construction of a bridge is essential to provide an alternate approach to the islands—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the federal responsibility applies to international bridges or interprovincial bridges, and I think the hon. member is referring to bridges which are not in those two categories.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that the bridge in question has to do with road access to the new seaway terminal which is located between the two islands. The islands in the city of Fort William provide part of the port facilities under the jurisdiction of the lakehead harbour commission. The lack of adequate bridges over the Kaministikwia and the Mission rivers is one of the major and most serious obstacles which is retarding the development of our city's growth and its industrial potential.

The lakehead planning board wrote to me last year in connection with this matter. I should like to quote from that letter:

> The traffic report from the lakehead, 1960, indicated the need for the all year round permanent bridge across the Kaministikwia river in the third stage of the road proposal. Subsequent to the report, the technical co-ordinating committee met with the consultants and agreed that
> (a) because of the crisis potential of the existing bridge at James street in that it can be taken out of action at any time by a navigational accident:
> (b) and in view of the agreement by the city of Fort William and the municipality of Neebing to provide fire protection services in the South Neebing area, which protection would be meaningless in a traffic situation development at James street bridge;
> (c) and in view of the emergency measures proposals and civil defence requirement which is certainly not in the happiest situation due to (a) above;
> (d) and in view of the increase in tourist and general traffic coming along the international highway 61, meeting in a traffic bottleneck at the James street bridge, the planning board asks that the proposed bridge over the Kaministikwia river receive immediate consideration.

I have indicated on previous occasions the need for a bridge over the Mission river. We do expect some assistance from the federal government in this connection because this bridge has to do with communication between the two islands over navigable waters, which are under federal jurisdiction.

The Premium Ore Company, which is headed by Cyrus Eaton, the chairman of the board of Steep Rock Iron Mines, has an option on an extensive piece of land on Mission island for such a project. But apart from the great development which can be expected to follow the provision of these new bridges, I ask the minister to consider the situation which would arise if anything were to happen to either of the single bridges that are serving at the present time. These bridges were built some 65 years ago and were never meant to carry present day traffic, to say nothing of the heavy oil motor tankers and continental transport trucks now being used on this route.

Following successful representations made to Sir Alex. Gibb and Associates, consultants to the ocean terminal dock project, to have the Fort William temporary access road into the terminal site—as distinct from the Port Arthur temporary access—changed to a point to cross the Neebing river at the extension of 10th avenue, it now appears necessary to look more closely at this intended access road and put it on a more permanent footing. The reason 10th avenue was advocated for this temporary access way was because 10th avenue had previously been selected as the final approximate location of the proposed lakeshore highway, at least in this section of the city of Fort William. The shadow plan for the lakehead calls for the eventual construction of a main highway crossing the two islands and linking up with the mainland road system.

Apart from the fact that those portions of this proposed highway in the city of Fort William territorial limits, when built will undoubtedly accelerate the opening of the islands to full industrial development, the proximity of the proposed ocean terminal site to this highway, as extended into Port Arthur, is another reason why we should not delay in furthering this highway proposal with all due dispatch.

The chief stumbling block to the implementation of this proposal would appear to be the need for the two new bridges to complete this project which, when built, would complete this highway within Fort William's corporate limits. The bridges should preferably be of the high level type to ensure maximum efficiency. The efficiency of bascule or swing bridges would always be at the mercy of every ship that entered that part of Fort William's harbour encompassed by the Kam, the McKellar and the Mission rivers.

Current road access into any part of the 30 odd miles of lakeshore harbour development, both existing and potential, is in an extremely unfavourable state of development, and is not as befits a modern and growing port of the importance of the Canadian lakehead.

For these reasons I beg the minister to give consideration to this matter of assistance toward bridge construction in order that we may have free access to the new lakehead harbour which is nearing completion at the moment. Unless there are adequate bridges the dock facilities will be severely impeded. This has been brought out by the consultant engineers who are on the job supervising the seaway terminal at the lakehead. The minister may not have the answer right now, but within the next few days, or as soon as possible, he may be able to give us the answer to this problem. I have had the opportunity of bringing this matter before the Minister of Public Works but unfortunately I have been unable to arouse any degree of enthusiasm for this particular project. However, I believe it is absolutely necessary and I trust the government will show a change of heart with regard to this project.

Item agreed to.

General—

660. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for including expenditures on works on other than federal property: a maximum of $15,000 may be expended in respect of any one work and, with the approval of treasury board, that maximum may be increased to $25,000—further amount required, $190,000

Mr. Bourget: I understand this item has to do with small post offices. If so, will the minister give us a list of the small post offices which have been built?

Mr. Churchill: This does refer to small post offices. If the hon. member will turn to Hansard of February 9 of this year he will find that a list of post offices per province is given.

Mr. Bourget: The item under consideration amounts to $190,000. I suppose that means about eight or nine post offices. The list would not be too long to put on the record.

Mr. Churchill: There are ten post offices involved in this. They are: Abbotsford, Quebec; Valcourt, Quebec; Gogama, Ontario; Fort Erie, Ontario; Longlac, Ontario; Winnipeg Beach, Manitoba; Borden, Saskatchewan; Churchbridge, Saskatchewan; Hodgeville, Saskatchewan; Elk Point, Alberta.

Mr. Bourget: Can the minister tell the committee the average size of these post offices in square feet?

Mr. Churchill: Yes. Eight hundred square feet net useable space.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that for some reason or other the government did not think it important to build any of the post offices listed, when the original list was published in Hansard, in two of the provinces. I draw attention to the fact that notwithstanding the strong representations which have been made, none of those post offices was being built in either Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island—that is, if the list to which the minister referred is the one about which I asked the Minister of Public Works at the time.

Mr. Churchill: I will draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to those remarks. It is not a matter of deliberate policy to exclude two provinces of the importance of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, but post offices are built according to the number of people who are being served and the revenue which will result from them. However, this is an important point and one which deserves attention.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister be good enough to join his recommendation to my own that post offices be built at Hare Bay in Bonavista bay? I have been trying for four years to get the department to do something about that important and growing settlement. Action is doubly necessary now because that place is a settlement which suffered most from the fire, and a little extra work this spring would be extremely helpful to that community.

Mr. Churchill: I am pleased to support any program which is for the benefit of the people generally, and the hon. member seems to have made out a very good case.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Vote No. 660 terminated the supplementary estimates of the Department of Public Works falling in this group. We will now proceed to a consideration of vote No. 661 which is concerned with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pensions and other benefits.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the Acting Minister of Public Works leaves I think we should draw attention to the fact that when a minister shows some courtesy to the committee he gets his estimates through much more readily.

Pensions and other benefits—

661. To deem the election made by the late Benjamin Vinton Beddow on the 9th day of March, 1961, to be valid for all purposes of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, notwithstanding that he was not medically examined as required by paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of section 7 of the said act, and to authorize the payment of benefits to his widow as if he had taken and passed the medical examination so required, $1.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we should have some explanation of this vote.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the explanation of this vote is rather complicated. We have endeavoured in the explanatory note on page 7 of the supplementary estimates to reduce it to as short a compass as possible. What we are asking for is the authority of a dollar item, which I myself am very reluctant indeed to use but I think it is a proper case, to give authority to pay a pension to a widow who by virtue of a long and complicated series of administrative misfortunes and misunderstandings, coinciding as the events did with a change from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Continuation Act, would otherwise be deprived of her right to a pension.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: The next item is vote No. 662, Department of Trade and Commerce.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited—

662. Payments in the 1961-62 and 1962-63 fiscal years under the contract that was entered into on the 24th day of November, 1961 between Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited on behalf of Her Majesty and Macassa Gold Mines Limited for the purchase by Her Majesty of uranium concentrates, $2,400,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, could we have with us the Minister of Trade and Commerce whose genial personality always contributes something to the committee, or is he, like the Minister of Public Works, off politicking somewhere?

Mr. Balcer: He never does that.

Mr. Churchill: I might just explain as Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce in the unavoidable absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the parliamentary secretary has all the information here which the committee could desire and I myself will be present in the event there are some items which require further exploration.

Mr. Pickersgill: The first question I should like to put to the learned parliamentary secretary, and I hope he will be able to answer it more effectively than his principal has ever been able to, is when the British contract is going to be completed?

Mr. Morris: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could introduce this item in a meaningful way by giving a very brief statement which will include an indication of the answer to the hon. gentleman's question.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The contract between Her Majesty, as represented by Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, and Macassa Gold Mines limited for the purchase of uranium concentrates was entered into as a stopgap arrangement to enable Macassa to continue production of uranium for a period of six months after it had produced all the concentrates for delivery under its original contract. In this way, the closing of the mine, with its consequent effect on employment in the area, was prevented and the mine will be able to continue production until late in April, by which time it is expected that negotiations will have been completed with the United Kingdom for the purchase of 12,000 tons of uranium. When these negotiations are completed, the quantity of 342,000 pounds covered by the stopgap contract will form a part of Macassa's allocation under the United Kingdom contract.

The price to be paid Macassa for the 342,000 pounds is Macassa's actual cost of production, without profit, as established by the cost inspection services of the office of the comptroller of the treasury, unless it becomes a part of Macassa's allocation under the United Kingdom contract, in which case it will take the price applicable to Macassa's allocation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the parliamentary secretary for that very lucid explanation, but I did not catch the date by which he anticipated the negotiations with the British would be completed. I think in giving that date he has gone a lot further than the minister ever has and I am sure we would like to have it right. Perhaps he would repeat the date.

Mr. Morris: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The item in the supplementary estimates covers a period until late April by which time, as I said earlier, it is expected that the negotiations with the United Kingdom will have been completed for the purchase of 12,000 tons of uranium.

Mr. Peters: I know that the people connected with the Bicroft Uranium Mines Limited will be pleased to know there is a possibility that the United Kingdom contract will be completed in time to furnish a carry-on from the temporary arrangements that have been made. In my view the stockpiling arrangement made in this case was advantageous not only because it saved the government considerable expense but it provided a continuity.

Why is the agreement between Macassa and Eldorado rather than the principal mine, Bicroft. It is true that Macassa owns considerable shares and is a registered company in its own right. Why is the agreement with Macassa, which is a profitable gold producing mine but certainly is not involved in the uranium industry?

Mr. Morris: The interest of Macassa Gold Mines in the Bicroft mine at Bancroft represents the interest which the government wishes to have recognized by means of the supplementary estimate. Macassa, to the best of my knowledge, has inherited the Bicroft mine so far as this uranium matter is concerned.

Mr. Peters: That is surprising. I am curious how these things are arrived at. Bicroft has authorized capital of 4 million shares of which 3,057,475 are issued against the original capitalization. Of that amount Macassa owns only 440,000 shares and Renabie, a Macassa subsidiary, holds 360,000 shares. According to the record of issued shares it does not even have control of the company. I am still curious as to why Macassa has the contract.

Let me approach it from this angle. Is there any reason why Bicroft was not given the contract? Has it something to do with the fact that other producers in the area such as Faraday could not have been given the same kind of consideration?

Mr. Morris: The reason Faraday is not considered in this supplementary estimate is that Faraday's contract will not expire prior to the time we expect the United Kingdom negotiations to have been successfully completed.

Mr. Bourget: Can the parliamentary secretary tell us what is the price of concentrate per pound? Is the price mentioned in the contract?

Mr. Morris: The item in the supplementaries, $2,400,000, is intended to cover 342,000 pounds.

Mr. Bourget: About $8 a pound?

Mr. Morris: Yes.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Department of Transport, vote No. 663.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Railway and steamship services—

663. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels and equipment as listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects—further amount required, $71,885.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister would like to tell us what this is all about. We always like to hear from the minister.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, this vote deals with the Pelee island ferry. The vote is in the amount of $46,860 for general alterations and additions to the ferry vessel Pelee Islander operating between Pelee island and the mainland in Ontario; and the remainder, $25,025 for modifications to the ferry vessel Lord Selkirk operating between Wood Island, Prince Edward Island, and Caribou, Nova Scotia. The remainder, namely $25,025, is for modifications to the ferry vessel Lord Selkirk operating between Wood Island, P.E.I. and Caribou, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Bourget: Can the minister tell us whether those contracts were allocated or whether they were given to the companies after tenders had been obtained in both cases?

Mr. Balcer: As far as the Lord Selkirk is concerned, the alterations and modifications were done at Pictou, Nova Scotia. Unfortunately, I have not here the information to tell me whether it is an allocation or whether it was done by tender. However, my recollection is that both jobs were allocated.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could ask the minister this question; I appreciate the fact that it is perhaps not strictly relevant to the repairs to the Lord Selkirk. However, is the department giving any consideration to putting a new ferry on the Wood Island-Caribou service? As the minister very well knows, the service is quite inadequate, having regard to the demand for it at the present time. There is a great deal of agitation to have improvement in that service.

Mr. Balcer: Yes, Mr. Chairman. A second ship for this service has been approved in principle by treasury board.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister think the contract is likely to be let quite soon so that it might perhaps be ready for the season of 1963?

Mr. Balcer: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Air transport board—

664. Subventions for air carriers as detailed in the estimates, $300,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps the minister would wish to give some explanation of this item.

Mr. Balcer: This $300,000 is a subsidy. It represents monthly subsidies of $25,000 being paid at the present time to Pacific Western Airlines covering operating losses on the prairie route on which are Edmonton, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Saskatoon and Regina. The committee might recall that this service was carried on for a long time by Canadian Pacific Airlines and then was turned over to Pacific Western Airlines. One of the main sources of revenue was a mail contract. Unfortunately, this mail contract was terminated. I do not remember the exact date of its termination, but it was some time in 1960. As this route was not a money producing route with the loss of this mail contract, the company was faced with a rather large deficit. The company was obliged to withdraw from the service or to suspend the service. However, as in this area the service was considered to be essential and as no other air line was ready to carry on that service, the air transport board decided to give this subsidy of $25,000 a month. This subsidy is going to be paid until the air transport board makes its report on the prairie milk run route. This report should be made within a couple of months. As you know, Mr. Chairman, the air transport board has made a complete survey of all the regional carrier operations all across Canada starting with the eastern provinces. The last hearings were held a few weeks ago in the prairie provinces. Until this report on the prairie run is received, it is the intention to carry on paying the $25,000 a month to Pacific Western Airlines.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suppose it would be considered a vicious attack to suggest that there was any connection whatsoever between the subsidy and the fact that this air line serves Prince Albert. I therefore would not think of drawing attention to that fact. But speaking seriously may I say this. As Your Honour is well aware, the question of the milk run in western Canada to which the minister refers and with which, as he pointed out, this matter is directly connected, is one on which I know my friend the hon. member for Laurier has a few observations he wishes to make. However, unfortunately because of an indisposition—

Mr. Churchill: Is he politicking?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, he is not politicking. I wish he were but in fact he is not. Owing to an indisposition he was unable to be here today, but I hope he will be here tomorrow. I know he has one or two observations he wanted to make on this matter. As it appears to be ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could pause at this point.

Item stands.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the house leader could tell us whether we shall be going on with these estimates tomorrow. I can hardly forbear to remark that but for the intervention of his friends we might have finished them today.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member just admitted he is waiting for the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Churchill: I must thank the house for the amount of business it accomplished today; it was very encouraging indeed. It might have been done much earlier had there been more co-operation on the opposite side. There are six items left in the present supplementary estimates which we will conclude, I hope, tomorrow, followed by the necessary appropriation act. Then we will carry on with the final supplementary estimates which have been distributed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the minister any suggestions about next week?

Mr. Churchill: Just that we get more business done in the house than we did this week.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

SPEECH BY HON. HOWARD C. GREEN TO DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

I begin my statement today on behalf of Canada by thanking the acting secretary general of the United Nations for the excellent facilities which have been made available. The presence of his representative at this table is of great significance. It emphasizes that all members of the United Nations are vitally concerned with the problem of disarmament. In my opinion, we should never lose sight of this fact in the course of our negotiations. It is obvious that the main purpose of the United Nations is to keep the peace. Of course, under present conditions, that means that disarmament becomes the most important problem of the United Nations, and that forum will always have the main responsibility for bringing about disarmament. There are several reasons why this conference has an unprecedented opportunity to make rapid progress toward agreement.

First, there is now an agreement on the basic principles of disarmament unanimously endorsed by the United Nations general assembly. For the first time there is a common understanding about the objective to be reached, and the guide lines which should be followed in working toward it. As a result, we are in a position to move quickly from a general exchange of views to a detailed consideration of measures which will actually stop the competition in armaments and bring about substantial reductions from the present levels. In my personal opinion the problem of stopping the development of more deadly weapons is perhaps more important than that of bringing about measures of disarmament, although of course both problems are of vital importance.

Second, the new negotiating committee is representative of all major geographical areas of the world. This reflects the fact that disarmament is not the concern only of the great powers, but of all countries, however large or however small. The presence at this table of the representatives of eight additional countries is, in my opinion, a major advantage. They will, I am sure, play a valuable role in avoiding the stalemates which have so often developed in past disarmament conferences. Also, the fresh perspective which they bring to the negotiations will assist materially in the search for early agreement. And may I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the presence of these eight other nations has already been of deep significance as well as of great help to the opening phases of this conference.

Third, we had just ten days ago the unanimous finding of the United Nations committee on the economic and social consequences of disarmament that general disarmament, far from producing adverse economic effects, would be an immense contribution to the advancement of human well-being. There can surely be no doubt that the reallocation of even part of the enormous resources now devoted to expenditure on armaments would open up unlimited possibilities for the improvement of living standards in all the nations, whatever their social system or whatever their stage of development.

Fourth, past experience has made us fully aware of the grave consequences which will follow if we permit these negotiations to fail or even to lose momentum. It is now almost two years since the work of the ten nation committee was broken off. This period has been marked by renewed international tension and a nuclear arms race of increased intensity, of which the resumption of nuclear testing is the most serious aspect. An even more serious deterioration in the international situation will result if our efforts here cannot bring about rapid agreement.

Finally, the increasingly devastating power of modern weapons has placed a new responsibility on the representatives who are gathered here. The very fact that all of us around this table fully recognize the immeasurable catastrophe which would result from a conflict involving such weapons in itself provides new motives for meeting the challenge which faces us. In my opinion we cannot allow another failure to establish an effective system of disarmament. If we do not succeed on this occasion, the world may not be given another chance.

As far as my delegation is concerned, we have come to Geneva with the firm intention to continue working without interruption until a comprehensive system of general disarmament has been agreed. At the same time we hope and expect to see initial agreements reached with the least possible delay. This committee is obliged to report to the United Nations disarmament commission by June 1, and the peoples of the world will expect a substantial measure of progress by then. The time factor is of vital significance in our work, and we should at once start to search for common ground. This is a case where, as we say in Canada, time is of the essence.

The agreed statement of principles forms the basis for discussion and negotiation at this conference. It follows that all measures of disarmament must be carefully phased and in balance with one another; and that reductions of national armaments must be accompanied by improved international arrangements for maintaining peace and security.

Two principal documents are available to the committee. There is the program of disarmament put forward by the United States on September 25, 1961. Canada participated in the drafting of this plan, and fully supports it. The United States representative has emphasized that these proposals have been put forward in a spirit of flexibility and compromise. That is a point to which Canada attaches great importance. In other words, these proposals are not put forward on a take it or leave it basis. There is also the draft treaty advanced by the representative of the Soviet union, based on the Soviet plan of September 23, 1960.

These two documents are the result of a long period of study. This is not to say, however, that either of them represents the only solution to this disarmament problem. The eight new members of the committee will undoubtedly make suggestions of their own. Their views should provide a further valuable contribution to the solution of the problems before us, and they will receive very careful study by my delegation.

In considering the two plans which are now before us we should first seek out common elements on which there is a chance of early agreement. The United States proposals are presented in the form of a "program", and the Soviet proposals in the language of a "draft treaty", but this is largely a difference of presentation. The substantive provisions contained in the two documents parallel one another in several respects, and I suggest that we should take full advantage of this fact in trying to define and enlarge the area of agreement between the two sides.

Starting from the joint statement of principles we should search out specific problems on which the two sides are close to agreement, and try to settle these as quickly as possible. Having achieved this, we should then go on to study problems on which the two sides are further apart—first to clarify differences, and then to resolve them. In this way, my delegation believes, we can systematically move toward a comprehensive system of disarmament and complete the fulfilment of the tasks which have been given us.

I have suggested that we should begin our work with an examination of areas in which rapid agreement might be achieved. There are several examples which could be cited. The following list will help to illustrate the approach which my delegation has in mind.

The first example: The United States and Soviet proposals both provide for means of ensuring that rockets and satellites placed in orbit or launched into outer space will be used for peaceful purposes only. Provision is also made for advance notification of an international disarmament organization about all such launchings. Both sides have an overriding interest in reaching an understanding which will ensure that scientific advances in this field serve only the cause of peace. There is therefore, Mr. Chairman, every reason why agreement should be reached in short order. And may I point out that just this morning we read in the newspapers a report of a United States offer to the Soviet union of a joint space plan. All of this indicates that it should be fairly easy to reach agreement on this particular subject.

The second example: The United States proposals contain suggestions for observation posts and other procedures designed to reduce the risk of surprise attack or accidental war. Specific proposals to this effect do not appear in the new Soviet draft treaty, but similar ideas were advanced in the Soviet plan of September 23, 1960 and again in the memorandum submitted by the Soviet union to the United Nations on September 26 of last year, 1961. The fear that war could break out through accident or miscalculation is a continuing source of international tension which increases as more and more dangerous weapons are developed. Both sides have a vital interest in removing these fears as soon as possible. Both sides have proposed measures which would provide means of doing so. Further negotiation, and a willingness to compromise, could produce agreement in this field.

The third example: The United States plan calls for technical studies of means to deal with chemical and bacteriological weapons. The Soviet union has also put forward a suggestion for joint studies in this area in its plan of September 23, 1960. In the opinion of my delegation, such technical studies should begin immediately. On the basis of existing proposals, it would appear that full agreement already exists on this point, and that there is no reason for further debate before concrete action is taken.

The fourth example: Provision is made in both plans—although at different stages—to cease production of fissile material for weapons purposes and to transfer existing stocks to peaceful uses. The increased amount of the initial end reductions proposed by the United States representative here on March 19 means that by the time the second stage is completed stockpiles will have been very greatly reduced. This fact brings the United States position much closer to the Soviet view that all such stockpiles should be eliminated in stage

II. In our opinion, further negotiation could bring about full agreement.

The fifth example: Both plans contain proposals designed to prohibit the wider spread of nuclear weapons. A resolution submitted by Ireland, calling for international agreement in this field, was endorsed by all the members of the United Nations at the sixteenth session of the general assembly, just a few months ago. What is required now is early action to bring this recommendation into force.

The sixth example: The United States program and the Soviet draft treaty both call for reductions of conventional arms in the first stage. The Soviet plan provides for reductions proportionate to manpower cuts. At our second meeting, the representative of the United States put forward new proposals calling for a reduction by 30 per cent. My delegation believes that this development brings the views of the two major military powers closer together. Detailed negotiations should begin at once to remove remaining differences.

My seventh example is as follows: In the crucial field of nuclear disarmament the positions of the two sides have likewise been brought substantially closer by the significant new United States proposals for a 30 per cent reduction of nuclear weapons delivery vehicles in the first stage. The Soviet draft treaty calls for the complete elimination of all such vehicles in the opening stage. Nevertheless, having in mind the magnitude of the initial cuts proposed by the United States, as well as the agreed principle of balance, my delegation believes that detailed negotiation should bring the two major military powers to agreement on phased reductions in this field.

In these seven areas, and there are probably others, we believe that an appreciable measure of common ground already exists. There is a second category of problems in which there remain more pronounced and generally well known differences between the two sides. I shall not dwell on them today, with the exception of the vital issue of stopping nuclear weapons tests, which requires special mention.

Canada deeply regretted that the Soviet union last August broke a three year moratorium on testing, for we are opposed to all nuclear weapon tests. In this we share the view of most other countries. Indeed, the major nuclear powers themselves have stated at this very conference that they would like to see all tests stopped. However, they now find themselves unable to reach final accord owing to disagreement on inspection. Is there no alternative to another series of tests with all the harmful consequences that such action could bring? Is it not possible, within the framework of this committee, to make the further effort which is required to break the deadlock? In my opinion, such an effort must be made, for otherwise the prospects of this conference itself could be seriously threatened. We already see, in dispatch after dispatch, stories that this disarmament conference is doomed to failure. These stories are based on the talks on nuclear weapon tests which have taken place between the nuclear powers and in which the other representatives at this conference have not been involved at all. In the minds of the public the impression has been created, because of the disagreement in these nuclear test talks, that this conference is going to be a failure. This, I submit, is a very bad situation, and one which I hope will be clarified by the correspondents of all our countries. As a start, it would be most helpful to receive a report on these informal talks which have been taking place on this subject from the three participants. Countries which do not possess nuclear weapons cannot put a stop to these tests; however, we can and do appeal to the nuclear states to do everything in their power to see that a solution is not further delayed.

There is a third category of problems in which the extent and the nature of the disagreement between the two sides are far from clear. As representatives will have noticed, I referred earlier to cases where there is disagreement but where that disagreement is clear cut and everyone understands what it is. What is required to resolve this third category of differences is, in the first instance, an intensive discussion which will demonstrate precisely what the positions of the two sides are. We must find out exactly the position taken by the two sides. To avoid continued misunderstanding, the respective interests of the two sides should be brought into the light of day and the possibility of an accommodation of views examined in good faith.

One of the most fundamental problems requiring this kind of examination is the question of verification. Canada's willingness to contribute to a verified system of disarmament has been demonstrated by the offer which my government has made, and which still stands, to throw open its northern areas for inspection in exchange for comparable rights in corresponding areas of Soviet territory.

In the opinion of my delegation, the best way to achieve a realistic solution of the problem of verification is to avoid any further discussion in the abstract. We should avoid abstract debates on the word "verification". Instead, there should be careful examination of each measure of disarmament together with the specific verification procedures to ensure that all states carry out that particular disarmament measure. In other words, let us take a measure of disarmament and with it study the verification needed for that measure, rather than studying verification in general.

Let us take an example from the Soviet draft treaty to illustrate my point. Article 5 provides for the elimination of certain means of delivering nuclear weapons and for the cessation of the production. Paragraph 3 of this article provides that the implementation of these measures should be verified by inspectors of the international disarmament organization. The language of the Soviet draft treaty suggests that substantial inspection would be allowed over this measure of disarmament. What we need to clarify is how much the inspectors are to be allowed to see, and the conditions under which they would carry out this work. Having done that, the committee would then be able to judge how adequate the inspection arrangements would be for verifying the execution of this particular measure.

In pursuing an examination of the problem of inspection, particularly in the area of disarmament which I have just mentioned, the application of sampling techniques as suggested by the United States representative should facilitate agreement. This approach ought to go a long way toward removing fears that inspection will be out of balance with disarmament or be used for any illegitimate purpose. We sincerely believe there is great hope of reaching an agreement on the question of verification through some type of sampling procedure.

The same method of careful, painstaking examination, rather than abstract debate, should be applied in other areas where important but ill defined differences appear to exist between the two sides.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make some proposals concerning procedure. Ever since the breakdown of the ten nation committee nearly two years ago, Canada has been convinced that rapid progress in disarmament negotiations would require a more efficient procedure than has been adopted in the past. In particular, we believe that agreement on effective procedural arrangements is a matter of the first importance if a committee of this size, with 17 or 18 nations participating, is to operate effectively.

The immediate question is how to proceed from the present exchange of general views on disarmament to a detailed examination of the specific problems. In the opinion of my delegation, an effective working procedure would be as follows. First, an informal committee of the whole conference should be established on a continuing basis, with the number attending from each delegation being more limited than at plenary meetings. Second, the co-chairmen should be given the responsibility for presiding over this committee on alternate days. They should maintain close consultation with one another on the order of business. I think the plan we are following in plenary meetings of having rotating chairmen is very good,—although I know from personal experience that it is more or less an honorary position and puts one in the category of being king for a day. But we believe that for the informal committee it would be much wiser to have the co-chairmen in the chair on alternate days. Third, the emphasis in the committee should be on an informal and private method of work. There need be no list of speakers and no verbatim records should be kept. A summary record could be provided for the information of delegations.

The main purpose of this informal working committee would be threefold: first, to follow up as a matter of priority the common elements in the two plans, such as the seven points which I mentioned earlier; second, to try to achieve reasonable compromises in remaining areas where clear differences between the two sides persist; and third, to make more precise the points under dispute in areas where differences between the two sides are yet ill defined.

In suggesting this procedure, my delegation has had in mind the experience of the conference here in Geneva on the future of Laos. Although there are continuing difficulties in the field in the unhappy country, the work of the conference here in Geneva has been successful. This has been due in large measure to the fact that an effective procedure was adopted, a procedure similar to the one I am now suggesting for the disarmament conference. At our meeting on Friday, the representative of India, Mr. Krishna Menon, also referred to the experience of the Laos conference—of course, India, like Canada, is participating in that conference—and he asked in this context that the committee meet informally so that the representatives of the United States and the Soviet union might provide clarification of respective ideas. We support this idea and agree with this proposal, but what we have in mind in addition is to use the proposed informal committee not only for the purpose of seeking information, but more importantly as a continuing forum for negotiation. By inviting the guidance of the co-chairmen we recognize that the United States and the Soviet union have by far the greatest responsibility in the field of disarmament. I do not suppose that either one of these great nations ever sought this position of prominence or leadership in the world, but they are both in that position and they are essentially the two which must agree. It is essential that they work closely together to reach an accommodation of views.

In conclusion, while the problems of disarmament are difficult, there is clearly evident in this committee a will to achieve results and, more important, a realization of the sobering responsibility we bear for the survival of civilization. The consequences of failure are too disastrous to contemplate. I am confident that we will justify the faith and the trust which mankind has placed in us. From all over the world today, the eyes and the thoughts of people are focused on this conference.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 23, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CF-104—REPORTED DELAY IN ACQUISITION AND COST INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that there was a defence estimate earlier this week, at which time the information could have been given to the house but was not, may I ask the minister whether he can confirm information given outside the house to the press to the effect that the acquisition of the CF-104 has been delayed five months and its cost will be increased by $30 million.

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this question should be asked of the Minister of Defence Production.

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): I wish to advise the house that according to information received this morning from officials of the departments of national defence and defence production, production of the CF-104 interceptor aircraft is on schedule. We were supposed to have 80 planes delivered from the assembly line by the end of March. We shall have 84, so we are on schedule.

I wish to state also that officials of the Department of Defence Production have just advised me that the cost of the program to date is well within the estimate which was originally approved, namely, $420 million, plus $11.3 million for an additional eight dual trainers not included in the original program. I might explain that we are well within our estimate because the engine costs are below what was anticipated.

Mr. Pearson: In view of the minister's statement, will he be able to explain the statement of his colleague the Minister of National Defence that these planes will not be delivered to the squadrons in Europe until next year?

Mr. O'Hurley: I shall be pleased to answer that question. As I said, production is on schedule. The officials of the Department of Defence Production advised me this morning that the weather for testing these planes has been very bad for the last several months. However, 76 of these planes are now to be test flown. That is the report I received yesterday morning. The delay has been caused by bad weather conditions making it difficult to test these machines.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask a further supplementary question. Would the minister now comment on the statement made in this house on September 15 last by the Minister of National Defence that the first squadron would be delivered overseas in November of this year?

Mr. O'Hurley: At the time the Minister of National Defence made that statement it was a correct assumption, but neither he nor anyone else anticipated there would be this very bad weather, unsuitable for the testing of the planes. That is the reason there has been this delay, and it can be verified by officials of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Pearson: All due to the weather.

Mr. Hees: Shot down again.

Mr. Pearson: Five months of bad weather.

Mr. Hees: Ask another question.

An hon. Member: How about one from Paul?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You would get a very interesting one.

Mr. Speaker: When the debate is over the hon. member for Vancouver East has a question to ask.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED DEFRAUDING OF FUND THROUGH COLLUSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): With all the dignified indignation at my command I should like to direct a very pertinent and important question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister noted the front page story in the Vancouver Sun under date of Wednesday, March 21, in which Mr. G. A. L. Murchison, head of Canada's unemployment insurance commission, is reported to have stated in Vancouver—my home city—that employers and workers were "conspiring to defraud the fund of millions of dollars every year" and warning that "contributions will have to be raised if the fraudulent practice is not stamped out"?

Inquiries of the Ministry

I should like to ask whether the Minister of Labour is in a position to comment on this charge made in Vancouver. Can he give the house any indication of how many millions of dollars have been lost to the fund through fraud and, finally, can he clear the good name of the vast majority of Canadian workers whom Mr. Murchison is charging with collusion?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I have not seen the original article, but it has been brought to my attention. Mr. Murchison is not the head of the unemployment insurance commission; he is one of three members. The chief commissioner is Mr. Fortier. Mr. Fortier has been in touch with Mr. Murchison with respect to this statement, and reports to me that Mr. Murchison in his own words did not make any estimate of the drain on the fund resulting from fraud committed by employers in giving false statements of reasons for separation. He was pressed to suggest a figure but declined for the reason that the extent of the irregularity was not known and could not be ascertained with any degree of accuracy.

The Canadian Press checked with Mr. Murchison yesterday morning and now know that no amount was stated. Mr. Murchison also has a copy of the statement which was used at the interview.

INQUIRY AS TO REPLENISHMENT OF FUND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he can say whether or not it is a fact that the unemployment insurance commission has asked for a further amount in addition to the $25 million to replenish the unemployment insurance fund, and that this request was made at the time the original amount was decided on by the government.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member keeps referring to facts when the things he is saying are not facts.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am just asking a question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The answer is no. This figure was arrived at in the course of normal consultation on the part of those concerned, and it was concluded that this was a quite adequate figure to cover all likely contingencies.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister if a request for a larger amount was made? That was my question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): By whom?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): By the unemployment insurance commission.

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think I have answered that question. This was a matter for discussion, and the figure that was put forward in the estimates, $25 million, was regarded by all concerned in the light of the discussion as quite adequate to meet all foreseeable contingencies.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOHN PAPALIA—INQUIRY AS TO RELEASE TO U.S. AUTHORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. If he can, will the minister explain why Mr. Justice W. D. Roach, the commissioner appointed to investigate organized crime in Ontario, was not consulted before the release to the United States authorities of John Papalia, and what were the reasons for the release of Papalia to the United States authorities on March 15, 1962?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think if my hon. friend would look at the article from which he undoubtedly took his information, which article appeared in the Globe and Mail of March 21, he would see the reason Mr. Justice Roach was not consulted. There was no knowledge here that Mr. Justice Roach wished to question this man. I did consult with the attorney general of Ontario, who has made a statement as to why he did not inform Mr. Justice Roach.

The reason for Papalia's release from prison here was in order that he might be sent to the United States, an order for his extradition having been made, to stand trial on a charge of conspiracy in a very large narcotic importing racket. The United States authorities indicated to us that they wished to proceed with the trial this month or early in April, that they had a number of other accused persons ready for trial, and that it would be very much in their interests and in the interests of justice if Papalia were to stand trial at the same time, as all these accused in the United States were involved together.

We concluded that it was in the interests of justice and in accordance with the extradition treaty to release Papalia in order that the order made by His Honour Judge Forsyth for his extradition could be complied with.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it a fact that Papalia had not completed his sentence in Canada and that his counsel had asked that he not be released at this time in view of that fact?

Mr. Fulton: I am not aware that any request was made by his counsel, Mr. Speaker. It is true that he had not completed his sentence, but the time for appeal had gone by.

SONS OF FREEDOM—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address another question to the Prime Minister. It is with regard to the Prime Minister's answer on March 21. Has he now received the resolution from the city council of Trail urging the establishment of a royal commission to explore all facets of the outbreaks of violence in the Kootenays? If so, what consideration is he giving to this important matter?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): A letter was received with the request in question. Because this is a matter that deals particularly with the administration of justice within the province, the setting up of any royal commission, I am sure, would be a matter for the provincial government of British Columbia.

SONS OF FREEDOM—SUGGESTED SHARING OF LOSSES CAUSED BY TERRORISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have another question to ask the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I know he realizes how my constituents are concerned. Has the Prime Minister now received the letter from Mr. T. A. McRae to which I referred on March 21, asking that the federal and provincial governments share equally the financial losses caused by acts of terrorism? If so, what consideration is he giving to this request?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received a communication from Mr. McRae who indicated that he was speaking on behalf of a group of persons at a meeting. No consideration has been given to this request.

The administration of justice is within the jurisdiction of the province and, sympathetic as it is to the situation in which the people of that area of British Columbia find themselves, the federal government cannot act unless the provincial government, within the provisions of the National Defence Act, calls for assistance. This being a matter which peculiarly falls within the jurisdiction of the provincial government I suggest to the hon. member that such questions could generally be directed to the government of British Columbia by those who have communicated with me.

Mr. Herridge: I have a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister realize that this group he mentions is composed of members of all parties representing the whole riding, including capital, labour and agriculture?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in the message received there is no identification as to the composition of the group. I thank the hon. member for giving the house that information. It was not given to me.

FISHERIES

SEAL HUNTING—REPORTED OPERATION OF FOREIGN SHIPS WITHIN THREE MILE LIMIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister been informed that foreign ships are operating inside the three mile limit killing seals at Grady, near Hamilton inlet off the coast of Labrador, and would he please have this matter investigated immediately by helicopter because of its importance to our Canadian sealers who are seal hunting in that area?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, my department has been aware of this report for some time now. We have already investigated it and found that there were no sealing vessels inside the three mile limit, but that sealers from at least one vessel had been killing seals in Canadian territorial waters. We have been assured by the Norwegian authorities that this occurrence will not happen again. I might add that we are watching the situation closely.

POWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's reply yesterday that he has received a message from Washington, presumably concerning the ratification of the Columbia river treaty, could the Prime Minister now say whether he has replied to the United States government?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that communication was received just several days ago and no reply has been made as yet.

TRADE

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has returned to the house I wish to ask him whether he has anything to add to what was indicated to the house last evening by his parliamentary secretary about the negotiations with the British over the uranium contract and particularly with respect to the termination of negotiations and the price.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. As I explained in answering questions asked me by the Leader of the Opposition on several occasions in this house, the negotiations are going forward and we have hopes that they will be concluded in the reasonably near future.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

THE QUEEN MOTHER—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF CANADIAN TOUR

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to give the house details of the visit of the Queen Mother in June?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member asked that question. I think the best way to answer it would be to simply table the press release with regard to the visit.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table the press release relating to the Queen's visit?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) asked me a question based upon an article which appeared in The Miner's Voice in which it was alleged that a person who wrote to the Prime Minister about a problem received no reply but was visited by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In the article it was also alleged that the R.C.M. Police threatened him if he wrote any further such letters.

As I undertook to do, I have investigated this matter. I am advised by the R.C.M. Police that they have absolutely no knowledge of having received a request to make such an investigation, or of having received any such letter that may have been sent to the Prime Minister. My office never referred any such letter to them. I have inquired of the Prime Minister's office and I am advised that there is absolutely no recollection or record of any such letter having been received and referred to the R.C.M. Police for investigation.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, that is the difficulty with this kind of anonymous complaint. In the absence of a name it is impossible to establish with absolute accuracy that no such thing took place. However, in the absence of a name, on the basis of investigations that have been made in my office, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Prime Minister's office, I can only conclude that there is absolutely no foundation for the allegation appearing in that paper.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Air transport board—

664. Subventions for air carriers as detailed in the estimates, $300,000.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) is not feeling well and cannot be with us this morning, for I know he would have certain questions to ask the Minister of Transport concerning the item under discussion.

Last night, in the course of his observations, the minister said this amount of $300,000 represented a monthly grant of $25,000 now being paid to the Pacific Western Airlines in respect of operation deficits suffered in the prairie provinces, where they have a line servicing Edmonton, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Saskatoon and Regina.

I should like to ask the minister why Quebecair, in the province of Quebec, has not been granted a subsidy, when, under the item we are dealing with, a private company is getting one. Why is this western company receiving a grant when Quebecair has been denied one?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, it will be a pleasure to answer that question. But first, I should like to join with the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) in wishing the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) an early recovery. I know his interest in the activities of the Department of Transport and I, too, am sure that he might have one or two questions to ask about those items this morning. I am positive that the hon. member for Levis will carry out this task with his usual skill.

Mr. Pigeon: He replaces him very well.

Mr. Balcer: Now, Mr. Chairman, I come back to my hon. friend's question. He asked why we granted that subsidy to the Pacific Western Airlines Company and why we had not seen fit to grant one as yet to the Quebecair Company.

In the case of the Pacific Western Airlines Company, it is a subsidy for a particular route. As I said last night, Pacific Western Airlines took over that route in 1957, after the withdrawal of the Canadian Pacific Airlines. At the time, the company was getting a rather substantial subsidy from the Post Office Department. The subsidy was discontinued and the Pacific Western Airlines asked the air transport board for permission to discontinue the service entirely.

We realized the government would be faced with the problem of certain communities being deprived of an air line service for the first time in many years. That is why the government decided to give the company a temporary subsidy of $25,000 a month, but only for that route in particular. That subsidy is only temporary and it will be paid in its present form only until the air transport board has made a complete report on what is commonly called the prairie milk run, that is the air service in the prairie provinces.

The request of Quebecair for a subsidy was based on the fact that this company was in a rather serious financial situation in 1961, which was not necessarily caused by one route in particular. Even though Quebecair had discontinued to serve several points on its routes, the latter were already served by several other air lines. Therefore, the public would not have been entirely deprived of air service. With regard to the other points not already served by the two air lines, Quebecair and T.C.A., other air lines were willing to provide such service. Consequently that request was quite different from the other.

As far as the financial difficulties of Quebecair are concerned, that question has already been studied by the air transport board and by myself. After a thorough study of the financial situation and the transport facilities of the company, the board made suggestions and examined, with Quebecair officials, the ways and means to balance the financial situation of the company. In fact, I am happy to be in a position to state today that the company has undergone a serious reorganization, concerning the financial aspect as well as operation and air services, and that it is now in a much better financial situation.

However, Mr. Chairman, this does not mean that Quebecair will not be able to get a subsidy when the air transport board has completed the general inquiry it is now making.

As I said a moment ago, the air transport board is conducting a complete survey of all regional services throughout the country. It held its last public hearing a few weeks ago and we expect to receive a full report within a couple of months. It is quite likely that the board may recommend subsidies for some routes and some regional air carriers. I am of the opinion that, at that time, Quebecair's application may be studied again by the air transport board and, should it be found then that the financial situation of Quebecair warrants a subsidy, according to standards that will have been set by the air transport board, following its inquiry, Quebecair will be treated on the same basis as the other air carriers.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, if I understood the minister correctly, I think that Quebecair has applied to the air transport board for a subsidy. In that case, could the minister tell us if the board has recommended that the government pay the subsidy? In addition, could the minister tell us the amount of the subsidy the air transport board has recommended to the government?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, subject to correction, I think it was $340,000 payable in a lump sum. On the other hand, in its recommendation to the governor in council, the board set five or six conditions.

One was the refinancing of the company. In addition, the board suggested that Quebecair reduce its equipment, following which the company returned its two largest planes to its suppliers who have not yet formally accepted them. The governor in council will make no final decision on Quebecair's application until those conditions have been implemented.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the recommendation—

(Text):

The Chairman: I think I recognize the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order—and I am seeking to raise this in a non-controversial way because Your Honour is fairly new in conducting proceedings from the chair in committee of supply, I think it has always been recognized that when a series of questions and answers about a particular item are being carried on between an hon. member and the minister, it has been considered by the Chair that as long as it is carried on within reason it should be concluded before another hon. member is recognized, so that the matter will be dealt with consecutively in Hansard. I am not seeking to prevent any other hon. member from speaking, but I think we all want to get through these estimates as quickly as possible, and I suggest this would expedite the proceedings.

The Chairman: That is very reasonable. Of course I am not aware before the hon. member raises a question whether it is still on the same particular aspect of the item. If he is still dealing with the same matter then, with the permission of the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, I would yield the floor to him.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister told us that the government had received the air transport board's recommendation.

Now, in his replies to the hon. member for Laurier, on February 2 and 5, the minister stated that the government had refused to accept the air transport board's recommendation.

Could the minister tell us why the government did not accept the board's recommendation?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, the air transport board recommended payment of a subsidy, on four or five specific conditions and, due to the fact, at the time the request for a subsidy was considered, those conditions had not been fulfilled, the government did not deem it proper to grant the subsidy. However, when those conditions are fulfilled, and if at the time the government considers that Quebecair is still in need of a subsidy to provide an essential service or else to prevent the public from suffering owing to the fact that this company cannot provide some essential services, the matter of a subsidy will once again be considered by the government.

With regard to all those subsidies, we should not overlook the fact that the government must base its decisions on the necessity of the service. This must be a public service, and the government must not base its decision on the interest of the company itself, but rather on that of the public.

With regard to Quebecair, I must say it is of great service to the people of an area of the province of Quebec which is developing at a tremendous rate. Today, Quebecair serves communities which were not on the map some four or five years ago, such as Gagnonville, Wabush and Manicouagan.

Mr. Chairman, I point out those facts in order to show to what extent the situation is rapidly developing in that part of the country.

Quebecair authorities had made certain forecasts which did not prove to be accurate then, but quite recently, indeed during the last two months, the company has had tremendous success.

It has set up new schedules and, as we have seen recently, it has established a service between Montreal, Chicoutimi and Wabush, and I am quite certain that as a result of the commercial activity which is rapidly increasing now throughout Canada, Quebecair will probably achieve economic success enabling it to operate and serve the public without government help. But, just the same, the government is always ready to help air transport companies for the only purpose of providing transportation which is essential to the public.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, the minister stated a moment ago that a subsidy had been granted to a western transport company, solely because it was the only one to operate such a service in that area. If I understood the minister correctly, he said that Quebecair was the only one to serve certain new areas like Gagnonville and others, in northern Quebec. I feel that the situation is the same.

If a subsidy was granted to a western company because it was the only one to serve an area, I feel that the same policy should apply to Quebecair since it is the only one to serve those new areas in northern Quebec, and I fail to see why the recommendation of the air transport board concerning Quebecair was not accepted. I do not understand that difference in policy on the part of the government.

Mr. Balcer: My hon. friend misunderstood me, Mr. Chairman. In the case of the Regina-Edmonton route via Saskatoon, Prince Albert and North Battleford, there was only one air line, the Pacific Western Airlines, and when this company expressed the wish to withdraw, no other company was interested in operating that deficit-producing service. Thus, people in that area would have been left entirely without air service.

As to Quebecair, it is a regional air line serving Gagnonville, Manicouagan, and Wabush, and I am convinced that at least five or six companies would be willing to operate that air service because it is profitable. Indeed, if Quebecair decided to abandon that service tomorrow morning another company would seize within 48 hours the opportunity of running a service into those districts. That is the difference.

In the case of the subsidies paid to Pacific Western Airlines, the public was facing the threat of having no air service whatsoever.

In the case of Quebecair, the company was facing some financial difficulties, but I am satisfied that the citizens in the area mentioned by my hon. friend would not have gone without air services.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, the minister mentioned the financial difficulties of Quebecair. Does the minister not believe that those financial difficulties were increased because of the minister promising the company exclusive operation in some districts, and more particularly between Quebec city and Seven Islands?

Would the minister, when replying, tell us whether he made the following statement at Rimouski on February 18, 1961, and I quote:

> As far as Quebecair is concerned, its problems are now being considered and a satisfactory solution will be found and carried out in the next ten days.

In that case, could the minister tell us if the financial difficulties experienced by the company have not, in fact, increased because of the promises which he made in Rimouski?

Mr. Balcer: I differ with my hon. friend on that point, Mr. Chairman, because the company had at that very time acquired some very expensive equipment in the last few months. When T.C.A. decided to reduce their rates, Quebecair had to face a rather serious financial problem.

As far as I am concerned, I attempted several times to assist the company through several means. We were not successful in every case. I tried to encourage its management as far as possible because every week bankruptcy loomed on the horizon. I always tried to maintain that service because the company employed several hundred employees, thus providing for the subsistance of part of the population of Rimouski.

I remember that during that difficult period the dedicated member for Rimouski (Mr. Morissette) was here in Ottawa asking me to try to maintain the Quebecair service.

We succeeded in maintaining it and today the company's business is more encouraging. Everything indicates that the company's future is bright, and that the population of the lower St. Lawrence will continue to benefit from the service of that company and of many others serving the area.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I can see why the minister appears to be so optimistic about Quebecair, but it would be more interesting to find out what concrete steps are being taken by the government to actually help that company.

The minister told me a while ago that the government itself had rejected the air transport board's recommendation. Then, how can he feel so optimistic now, when in my opinion the government has not done anything yet to help the company.

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, the last time Quebecair requested a subsidy, the air transport board made quite an extensive inquiry into the company's business operations, including flight schedules, equipment, operating costs as well as its general financial position.

When the experts of the air transport board referred their recommendation to the government, there were certain conditions to it. Well, all those conditions have not been met but the company did carry out several suggestions laid down by the air transport board.

There has been a complete financial reorganization of the company and it is no longer in danger of bankruptcy. Its financial position is sound now and we have every reason to believe that it will be able to meet its obligations and keep on serving the population of the lower St. Lawrence area.

Mr. Bourget: Does the minister mean to say that at present, the company does not need a grant or financial assistance?

Mr. Balcer: I am not saying that the door is closed but when all the conditions have been met, we shall reconsider the advisability of a subsidy.

When the final report of the air transport board with regard to its enquiry throughout the country has been published, that is in a couple of months from now, we shall see whether the board has reached the conclusion that we should establish the same system as in the United States, or whether we should more particularly assist certain air lines.

I am not an expert with regard to those details, but I am convinced that a report of great significance in the history of Canadian aviation, will be submitted to us by the air transport board, because there has never been so complete an investigation of conditions such as the local air transport companies have to face at this time.

This is the first time that such a far-reaching enquiry is being made from coast to coast, and I believe that it will bring about some extremely important recommendations.

As far as Quebecair is concerned, we will then be in a better position to decide whether that company has a right to an annual subsidy or whether, for instance, it has meanwhile been observing the conditions set forth by the air transport board. If so, the government will reconsider awarding the company an immediate subsidy to help it face up to the present situation.

Mr. Bourget: With regard to that company, Mr. Chairman, the minister undoubtedly remembers that, on February 28, the hon. member for Laurier asked for all correspondence between the Minister of Transport and the president of Quebecair or any other person interested in the matter. I believe that only part of the correspondence was tabled.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier raised that point the other day. I personally checked all our records on the matter and I want to say that all correspondence between the president of Quebecair, myself and the air transport board which was not of a purely personal and confidential nature, has been tabled.

There was some correspondence after the date mentioned by my hon. friend, but, at the request of the president of the company himself, it has been considered as personal and confidential.

As it is a practice in this house not to table any personal and confidential papers, those documents were not included. All we received, which was not of a purely personal and confidential nature has been tabled in this house.

Mr. Bourget: With regard to that matter Mr. Chairman, could the minister not look over the records again to see whether there is not a letter dated November 13, 1961, which was not marked confidential? Could the minister do that or, having looked up the records, is he now in a position to state that there is no letter dated November 13, 1961, which could be tabled as not marked confidential?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I know which letter my hon. friend means. I believe there is a copy, but it is precisely one of those letters the president of Quebecair asked me to stamp personal and confidential, because he did not want it to be tabled in the house.

He said that the letter contained a few allegations which he considered as not accurate after checking.

At his request, that letter was not tabled because he said he had always considered it as personal and confidential.

Mr. Bourget: Did the president of Quebecair personally ask the minister, either by letter or by phone, to have that letter marked confidential, or is it not the contrary that happened, that is would the minister or officials of his department not have asked that it be stamped confidential?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I know that the new president of the company came to see me and that we discussed all those matters thoroughly.

I could not tell whether it was I or he who raised the question but we have discussed that correspondence and he was the first to admit than it contained some ridiculous allegations and that he did not want me to consider it as business correspondence. And he asked me to have it marked personal and confidential.

Mr. Bourget: Of course, Mr. Chairman, I cannot compel the minister to offer his answer, but those who are interested in this will be able to read it in Hansard.

However—and these will be my last remarks—I do feel that two policies are being applied—one for a western company and another for a company in the province of Quebec.

Mind you, I am not at all against a grant that may be needed by that air line company in a western province, but I believe the same policy should apply to Quebecair operating in the province of Quebec.

Of course, the minister is free to act as he pleases; however, he will bear the responsibility of the decisions he is now taking.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I wish to set the facts straight.

Let me repeat for the third time that my hon. friend implies things that are not accurate when he rises here and says that the Quebecair situation, as far as certain points of the lower St. Lawrence river are concerned, is the same as that of Pacific Western Airlines concerning the Regina-Edmonton-North Battleford line.

When he says that it is the same thing, he implies things that are not accurate. He knows very well that what he claims makes no sense because there is a tremendous difference between no service at all and service by another company.

In the case of Quebecair, if that company had withdrawn from any point where it now operates, within 48 hours there would have been another service in operation there by another company. As far as Pacific Western Airlines are concerned, if they had withdrawn from the points mentioned, the public there would no longer have had any service, at least for several years to come. So there is a difference between the two.

In the case of Quebecair, this was a company which was faced with financial difficulties. In the other case, we had a line which did not produce enough revenues for a company to be interested in continuing its operations.

Such was not the situation at all in the case of Quebecair. There was never any question of Quebecair asking permission to abandon any line.

(Text):

Mr. Pascoe: At the risk of appearing too persistent with regard to this problem, I should like to bring once more to the attention of the Minister of Transport the complete lack of air service to the city of Moose Jaw which I represent, I raise the question now in connection with this item No. 664 which is being considered by the committee at the present time because the minister has referred to possible changes in the T.C.A. milk run which now passes directly over Moose Jaw.

There is no need for me to delay the committee at this time by going into details. The minister has in his files earlier representations which I and other interested parties have made to him on behalf of Moose Jaw. I should like to refer briefly to a few arguments concerning the inclusion of Moose Jaw in some air service. In addition to its population of 33,000, Moose Jaw serves a rural population of more than 40,000 and a trading area population in excess of 150,000. The city is greatly concerned over the essential necessity of securing adequate air service comparable to the service received by other prairie centres. The general public in this area is becoming more aviation-conscious each year. This is shown by the increased air traffic from Moose Jaw by T.C.A. even though Moose Jaw patrons have to drive over 40 miles to Regina in order to board planes.

As the minister has stated, the air transport board held hearings last autumn on the application by T.C.A. to abandon the air service which is generally referred to as the prairie milk run. In the belief that some other air line will take over this service should it be abandoned by Trans-Canada Air Lines Moose Jaw presented a very strong brief to support its claim for inclusion in any new air service. I should like to read a brief excerpt from a letter I have received from the mayor of Moose Jaw. He writes:

> —we have consistently approached Trans-Canada Air Lines to give consideration to this city being included on the east-west run now under discussion by all cities concerned from Winnipeg to Calgary. We have repeatedly stated and sincerely believe that this city should be entitled to an east-west outlet . . . We think that any change that does transpire with regard to the operating of this service should include Moose Jaw in view of the considerable revenue that has been derived by Trans-Canada Air Lines from this city and district in spite of the inconvenience caused to the travelling public by having to journey by land direct to Regina.

This is a short extract from a letter I received from the mayor of the city. I wish to present once more Moose Jaw's claim for inclusion in any new air service that may take the place of Trans-Canada Air Lines' present milk run. The minister stated that the decision of the air transport board will be announced shortly. Moose Jaw hopes that the city's brief has been favourably considered by the board.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I wish at this time to raise a matter which I have already discussed with the minister. I thank him for the co-operation he has displayed in listening to the representations made. I have also discussed this matter with officials of the department, with officials of Canadian Pacific Airlines and with other interested groups. The matter I have in mind concerns the development of the airport at Windsor, an airport which I think should be regarded by the department as one of the top priority airports in Canada, if that is not already the case.

Mr. Balcer: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, this item is entitled "Air transport board, subventions for air carriers". I do not think my hon. friend is talking about subventions for air carriers, and he is not talking about services. I believe he is speaking about airport construction, which subject has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise in a critical manner. However, as the minister knows, I can easily be aroused into becoming a critic. My point is that the minister's point of order should have been taken when the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was speaking. That hon. gentleman was not talking about the development of an airport but about the establishment of something that is non-existent—

Mr. Balcer: He was talking about services and subventions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He was talking about services and so am I. This is a vote to provide a grant for the "commission des transports aeriens", the air transport board, and air services. If the facilities of the airport are improved, as I am going to urge and as I have already urged upon the minister, surely that is of direct benefit to the air services that use the port.

The Chairman: Order. On the point of order there is one thing I should like to point out. The details of the item read as follows:

Scheduled air services between Alberta and Saskatchewan—

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was speaking about air services in that area but I am afraid the hon. member for Essex East is embarking on a discussion of air services in his riding in the province of Ontario. I therefore cannot see at the moment that his remarks are relevant to the item before us.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I appreciate your difficulty, Mr. Chairman, but if you will listen to me for a moment or two Your Honour will see how I can bring this clearly within the item before the committee. It will take only a moment. I simply ask the minister to consider the following submission. In view of the fact that Canadian Pacific Airlines operates in western Canada and is covered by this vote, and in view of the fact that C.P.A. proposes to establish a run from Windsor to Mexico on April 14 next, I feel I am in order in asking the minister to give consideration to the request of Canadian Pacific Airlines for the building of a runway that would take care of the jet service which C.P.A. would like to have operate between Windsor and Mexico city. At the present time—

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

The Chairman: I am afraid—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will I not be permitted to continue?

The Chairman: I have allowed the hon. member to introduce his subject but, as I see it, it is entirely irrelevant to the item before us. Much as I would like to allow the hon. member to continue in that vein, if I were to permit him to do so I would have to permit all hon. members to follow that course. I think he will agree that I cannot consider his remarks in order at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank you for your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I would not wish to take advantage of your generosity. May I say, however, I think you will agree that I have reminded the minister of something that is of great concern to the people of my constituency.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few minutes of the committee's time to speak on this item which provides a subsidy of $300,000 to Pacific Western Airlines travelling between Edmonton, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Saskatoon and Regina. Formerly the air line stopped at the city of Lloydminster. About two years ago this service was discontinued to that centre. Lloydminster is one of the most progressive small cities in western Canada. There is considerable industry in that city, and there are many businessmen there who require that service. For that reason, and inasmuch as we are paying the company an annual subsidy of $300,000, I feel the company should service the city of Lloydminster. It is important to the businessmen of that community that they have this service available in order that they may reach the larger centres of Edmonton and Saskatoon, at which points they make connections with larger planes travelling east.

I know the chamber of commerce and the mayor have representations on this matter before the board. I simply wish to draw this matter to the attention of the minister at this time. I feel that if we are to pay the subsidy the city of Lloydminster should be entitled to service by the planes which, although they previously landed there, now fly right over the city.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily. I have received a number of letters from constituents complaining about a lack of co-operation between Trans-Canada Air Lines and Canadian Pacific Airlines with respect to information as to flights and timetables between various airports. One constituent was recently at a prairie airport, I believe in Regina. At the T.C.A. airport it was impossible for him to obtain the information he required to take a C.P.A. flight, and things of that sort. Has the minister had any complaints along that line? I have had several which indicate some lack of co-operation with respect to information concerning times of flights and things of that sort, especially when the flights are delayed.

Mr. Balcer: The only complaints I have received were those that were transmitted to me by the hon. member himself. I immediately transmitted those complaints to the air transport board and asked them to investigate and to make representations to the two air lines so that the public should be treated in the best manner possible, and also so that the service to the public should always be kept up to the very high standard that these two air lines have maintained in the past.

(Translation):

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I have but one question to direct to the Minister of Transport merely as a matter of information.

He indicated, at the beginning of this week, that his department was prepared to contribute $65,000 toward building the Charlo airport in New Brunswick. Could the minister tell us if the company which is interested in the operation of that airport had asked for a subsidy? At the same time, perhaps the minister could report to the house on the request made by the municipality of Gloucester to build an airport in the Bathurst area?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I think the question of my hon. friend is not quite in order. Just the same, I wish to tell him that with regard to the request made by the municipality of Bathurst—no, the other one—

Mr. Robichaud: Gloucester.

Mr. Balcer: —my officials are now considering the matter.

With regard to the air company serving Charlo airport—I do not remember exactly what company it is—and my hon. friend will perhaps tell me its name—

Mr. Robichaud: It is the Maritime Central Airways.

Mr. Balcer: —I do not have this information at present, but I know my officials have decided to contribute that sum for the building of an airport, after having seriously appraised the economic possibilities of the area. I am convinced that the company or companies which will serve that area will also benefit from the closest co-operation on the part of of my officials, and we shall do our utmost to provide the people of that area with the service to which they are entitled.

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: We approve this subsidy, Mr. Chairman. I just wished to underline first of all that there is hardly any air line anywhere in the world that is operating without government subsidies of a direct kind, particularly in the United States. There is nothing in this item that surprises us. The questions I wish to ask arise from the indication given by the minister that there are in preparation reports reviewing the whole scale of services. He mentioned this matter last night.

I wish to ask him some questions about how broad this investigation is. Does it include cost factors built into the Department of Transport through the provision of terminal facilities, for example? Is this survey not only taking into account a projection of the kind of services we need to supply to our communities across the country and the improvements in the next few years, but is it also an integrated look at the expense of providing the terminal facilities?

The reason I ask this question relates to an interest of mine that goes back several years and which indicates that only one or two airports in Canada are actually getting enough revenue from commercial air lines to meet their operating and maintenance expenses. These are very few and the margin is very small. In other words the basic provision of terminal facilities in the air line field is a very costly one to the taxpayer.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw made a point about his community. I think the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose also made a point. In our part of the country we have an interest in better services generally and certainly in better terminal services. I wonder whether these reports being prepared by the air transport board are looking at this total picture and the tremendous expense we have ahead of us in the next decade.

The minister is aware of the fact that we have a number of extremely controversial questions relating to air policy, some of them beclouded by a rather phony fight, from my point of view, between free enterprise as represented by Canadian Pacific Airlines and Trans-Canada Air Lines, the government air operation. I say "phony" just to underline the very point that there is not any way in which the general or ordinary taxpayer of Canada can come out on top where air travel, freight or express are concerned. He is obliged to supply, through D.O.T., so many expensive services that in the long run we are brought starkly up against the realization that the provision of air transport is the provision of a service which in essence can never really be made remunerative or profitable in a total sense. Not only do Canadian Pacific Airlines and all these other air lines need subsidies in respect of the provision of facilities, but in many cases they need much more concrete subsidies than that, as indicated by this vote.

Maybe the minister wishes to wait until we have a debate on the creation of the T.C.A.-C.N.R. committee. However, I would appreciate at the present time a brief review of government policy and intentions in this field. I think the matter is opened up by the indication he gave last night that this report is one aspect of a complete review of commercial air line services in Canada.

Mr. Balcer: I should like to say that this inquiry by the air transport board, as do all their inquiries, deals only with the carriers and not with the facilities such as airports and services like the meteorological services and others. I should like to state now that four or five of our major airports are covering all their costs and depreciation, and that several others are almost covering all their operating costs. That is a very encouraging situation when you consider the splendid airports we have in Canada. We have some extremely modern airports with all kinds of facilities such as radio, towers, meteorological services and all sorts of equipment. When you consider how expensive all these services are I think it is a credit to the department that so many of our airports at the present time are covering their operational costs and that some of them—I refer to the largest ones —are covering their depreciation as well as their operating costs.

Mr. Robichaud: Is the minister now in a position to confirm treasury board approval of a grant for the construction of an airport at Bathurst, Gloucester county?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, I am in a position to confirm this approval right now.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about the airport at Dawson Creek, which is in the centre of the busiest part of Canada. Piles of money are being spent there. Bennett is building a big dam at Hudson Hope.

[Mr. Fisher.]

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to have to tell the hon. member that these remarks are not in order at this time, as the item relates to air services in Saskatchewan and Alberta. I believe the hon. member is embarking on a subject—

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order you have raised, Mr. Chairman, you have allowed a little latitude to some other hon. members. We all love the hon. member for Cariboo, and I am sure there would be unanimous consent to giving him permission to ask his question.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to join with the spokesman for the official opposition and say that not only do we love the hon. member but we adore him.

The Chairman: I am sure that the love the committee has for the hon. member is also shared by the Chair. However, I should not like the good nature of the committee to give rise to an occasion to infringe the rules. If the minister will accept the question, the Chair will certainly allow it provided it is not taken as a precedent.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the official opposition may love the hon. member and the C.C.F. may adore him but the government will still keep him on our side. I will be very pleased to hear him.

Mr. Henderson: There is a lot of construction going on in the Cariboo and thousands of men are going in there. There is an airport at Dawson Creek, but the planes fly over and do not stop there. We want the planes to stop there. A $400 million pipe line running out of that area is being built, and $400 million is being spent on the big Bennett dam at Hudson Hope. Surely we are entitled to air services in a place like that where $800 million is being spent. That is all I am going to say.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the item carries, Mr. Chairman, may I say I am sure that if the quarter of a million dollars that is being spent on the other Dawson had been spent in Dawson Creek the hon. member's wishes could have been satisfied. But I know that is out of order. I am going to ask the minister something that really is in order. He said last night, as found on page 2100 of Hansard:

> One of the main sources of revenue—

The reference is to this air line that is now being subsidized out of the treasury.

> —was a mail contract. Unfortunately, this mail contract was terminated. I do not remember the exact date of its termination, but it was some time in 1960.

I am not seeking to blame the present minister in any way, but does this not indicate a deplorable lack of liaison between the minister's predecessor and the Postmaster General? The Postmaster General cancels a mail contract and forces the treasury to pay a subsidy to this air line to keep it going, and no doubt the post office is still transporting that mail in some other way and spending still more out of the treasury.

It seems to me this is a clear indication that the Minister of Finance, the chairman of the treasury board, is not exercising the vigilance he should be exercising over public expenditures. Maybe it would have cost a little more to carry this mail by air, but if that had saved us from giving another subsidy to this air line it would have saved the taxpayer's money. I think the minister should tell us how much the company got out of this mail contract, how the amount compares with the $300,000 we are being now asked to provide, and how much is now being paid for the carriage of that mail in some other way. Perhaps it is a little unfair to ask the Minister of Transport to answer that, but the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance is in the house. We know how vigilant he is in all these matters, and perhaps he can answer that question if the Minister of Transport cannot.

Mr. Balcer: First of all I want to say for the Department of Transport that the subsidy of $25,000 a month is much less than this mail service would have cost. The Post Office Department had figured out that it was becoming very costly for them to use the air line for this service, and they decided to carry the mail by truck. The saving was greater than the $25,000 we are now paying to Pacific Western Airlines.

Mr. Pickersgill: You know, Mr. Chairman, in this matter, I am from Missouri and the minister will understand the sense in which I use that phrase. I was once acting postmaster general for a while and I know that some of these ideas that some people in the Post Office Department have on how to save money do not end up by saving much of the taxpayer's money. I would have thought that at least $25,000 a month in mail should have been carried in this way and the rest of it carried by truck, thereby reducing the cost of the trucking by $25,000 a month to the benefit of all concerned. No doubt some highly elaborate technical information could be supplied to show how silly that is, but it is not silly at all. If the treasury has to pay $25,000 a month as a subsidy for this service, surely there is some of the mail that could be expedited and this line could carry that amount of mail and at least give the public something in return.

I am not going to press my question, but I think this does show that that eternal vigilance, 18 hours a day, about which the Minister of Finance boasted in 1957, is now being given by him to other matters now rather than to the affairs of treasury board.

I have one general observation I should like to make, and again I am not blaming the present minister but his predecessor. I think the present minister is trying his best to clean up the shocking mess that was made by his predecessor with regard to this whole air service business by reason of the phony doctrine of competition that was spread around before the 1957 election. Nearly all the trouble of these secondary air lines, Pacific Western, Quebecair and all the others, stems from the abandonment of the policy of Mackenzie King and C. D. Howe which was announced in 1944 and which worked very well until the minister's predecessor wrecked it during his passage through the Department of Transport; and, according to the best information I have, wrecked it against the advice of the air transport board and against the advice of the experienced officials in his department. In my opinion, and it is only my opinion of course, he did so for what are usually described as purely partisan reasons having nothing to do with the public welfare. I must say that I hope the minister is successful in cleaning up part of this mess at any rate, of which this $300,000 is only a small element.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the member said in the middle of his remarks that he was expressing his own opinion, because I can assure him that this opinion is not shared by the great majority of Canadians. I also assure him that when I became Minister of Transport—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would that include the tribute that the hon. member paid to the minister?

Mr. Balcer: That was the only part in what he said where he was really on solid ground. All the rest was extremely weak. I think it is unfair to say that of my predecessor, because he went to work in the department in 1957 with the vigour we know he possesses, and he needed all that vigour to clear up the mess that had been accumulating there for 22 years.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have one further brief observation to make in reply to the minister. The minister is gallantly defending his predecessor and that is to his credit, but let me add this. I will agree with the minister to this extent, that his predecessor did not make quite such a big mess in the Department of Transport as he made at Accra when he went there as Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has introduced a general criticism of air transport policy, and I would have appreciated a more substantive answer from the minister with regard to the whole question of the actions of this government, and particularly of the minister's predecessor, in opening up a competitive situation concerning the domestic air lines in Canada, with its subsequent catastrophe in terms of air line deficits. Today rather than having one successful national air line and a number of regional carriers, which previously seemed to be doing well, everyone is in the hole. I should like to deal with the words which the minister used last night, when he said:

—the air transport board has made a complete survey of all the regional carrier operations all across Canada starting with the eastern provinces.

What is the purpose of all these regional surveys? The minister says they do not inquire into airports, and by the way I am very pleased to learn that today there are four or five airports making money over and above their operating expenses and depreciation charges. I believe that two years ago there was only one airport doing that.

What is the intention of the air transport board with regard to these surveys? What are they trying to find? For example, are they just examining the present situation in regard to the provision of service to eastern Ontario, to Kingston, and whether it needs a subsidy; or are they trying to get an appreciation of what all these regions need and will need within the next year or two?

If the minister wants to be specific, what about northwestern Ontario? Has there been a survey there? What has the service provided by a United States line from Duluth and Minneapolis into the lakehead, got to do with the situation? Is it included in the survey? Are the surveys taking into account the regional carriers which do not have regular schedules and which are on a chartered basis? Is any appreciation being made of charter services to determine whether they should be encouraged to introduce a schedule service? Are such things being considered in order to develop this situation?

If this is the kind of survey which the air transport board is making, then I wonder how it can move without making some appreciation of terminal facilities and standards at the airports. Wherever one goes in Canada one sees places like Elliot Lake or the town of Atikokan which have not got proper services at the present time. They want them, but the main difficulty seems to hinge around airport facilities. I believe the minister should give us a more detailed appreciation of how all these regional surveys are dovetailing into the responsibilities of the air transport board. He should also tell us, as the minister who answers for the board, whether he has given any directions or made any requests to that board with regard to these surveys and their purposes. He need not tell me he has not got the authority to do this, because we have seen examples in the past of ministers of the crown holding his particular office giving instructions and asking the air transport board to do certain things. I would like to know whether he has issued any instructions or requests to the air transport board in connection with these regional surveys.

Mr. Balcer: I do not want to take up the time of the committee in describing all the various functions of the air transport board. However, when one considers the manner in which the air transport board proceeds in these general inquiries and in dealing with particular applications, then he will realize that its work has always been done with the utmost care. As hon. members know, representations are made by municipalities, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, industries and other public groups. These bodies make submissions to the air transport board, and the board also publishes advertisements in the newspapers. Anybody who has anything to say on a submission before the board is heard and so I would say that every air service authorized or refused by the air transport board is only authorized or refused after an extremely long and careful study of the matter.

It is also quite logical that the air transport board, before they make any decision authorizing a certain service to a certain community, will make sure that the service to be given that community will have the proper airport facilities for it. The two go together, but it is not the air transport board which decides the kind of airport to be built. This is a decision for the Department of Transport. All the air transport board does is decide on the carriers and on the services to meet the needs of the Canadian people.

In their present general inquiry they have had public hearings all across Canada. They have heard all kinds of representations from interested parties and individuals, and we are quite convinced that by the time this major inquiry has been completed into regional services an inquiry undertaken for the first time in Canada, the board will make recommendations to the government which should have a real, marked effect on the history of Canadian aviation.

Mr. Fisher: It seems to me the minister has indicated that the board, in making this survey, has some kind of a planning function. Could he give us any indication as to how his advisers on air matters are working at present in order to relate the total air picture to the regional studies being made? I know that is a very general question, but this will have to fit into a national scale of expenditure in terms of the provision of facilities. In other words, we might be trying to do too much in too many places at the same time.

Could the minister give us any indication to the effect that after these reports are made available to him we are likely to have a new kind of over-all air line policy from the government? I am not particularly fishing with an eye on the election, or anything like that. I would really like to know whether in a year, 18 months or two years the department will have the information and the plans so that not only the nation but even the regions and towns will know where they fit into the general scheme of things in air matters.

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier, the air transport board has been directed by the Minister of Transport to make this survey and hold these hearings all across Canada. As soon as they have finished with their work, which I imagine will be in a couple of months' time, they will report to the minister. The minister will then consider their recommendations, and it will be up to the government to decide what part of the recommendations will be implemented. At the present time regional carriers are performing functions and rendering services. The air transport board hold hearings and makes decisions on various regional services. When they have completed this inquiry across the country, they have been asked by myself to make a report, and that report will certainly have its effect on the future policy on the matter of regional carriers. As far as the relationship between the policy on regional carriers and the over-all aviation policy of the government is concerned, this is a matter for the decision of the government when the report is before them.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a brief question to the Minister of Transport concerning the government grant requested by the Quebecair company. Could the minister tell the house if he held discussions with T.C.A. representatives with regard to the possible withdrawal of that crown company from Saguenay airport, better known under the name of Bagotville?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I am constantly in touch with T.C.A. representatives regarding all matters likely to interest my department in its relations with that company. With regard to my friend's question, I wish to tell him that this matter was discussed on several occasions.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, can the minister give us the assurance that T.C.A. will continue to serve the Saguenay district?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, no change is expected at present as concerns that service.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I have one last question to ask the minister.

So that everyone may understand what has happened in connection with air mail service, could the minister tell the house the amount of the contract passed between Pacific Western Airlines and the Post Office Department?

In addition, could the minister tell the house how much it costs the Post Office Department to carry the mail following the adoption of the present means of transportation?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend will have to wait until Monday to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) that question because I do not have the information he requests. Only the Post Office Department can provide that information.

As far as we are concerned, the people of that area came to us and said: "Listen, we no longer have any air service and we need one." That is why we have paid a subsidy.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister must realize that the questions I am directing to him are very important, because we shall know whether or not the government was justified in making that change.

Not having the required figures at hand concerning those two air mail transport contracts, we cannot tell the difference between the two. I am not asking the minister to reply right away, since he said he did not have those figures at hand, but we shall probably have the opportunity, when we consider other supplementary estimates, to get a reply from the minister in order that we may know the difference between the costs in transportation.

St. Lawrence seaway authority—

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether, in view of the continuing representations from those interested in the reduction of tolls on the Welland canal, he has anything to announce respecting the reductions of these tolls. I am informed that within the past month or so the minister has received a brief from the St. Lawrence seaway development association and that some assurances have been given to that group that favourable consideration will be given this year to a reduction of the tolls.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier in this house, we had a very interesting meeting with the association. They presented me with a brief, gave all kinds of explanations and brought forward the various factors which could justify the abolition of tolls on the Welland canal. At the conclusion of this meeting I gave them the assurance that I would personally convey their request to the government and that it would be given very close study and very serious consideration.

Unfortunately I cannot give the hon. lady an answer yet on what the government is going to decide; it is a complicated matter. However I can assure her that the government is giving very serious consideration to the matter.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister will say whether the matter will be considered with a little more speed than has been the case in the past few years, particularly bearing in mind the repeated reports in the press that in New York state it is likely that an all-American canal will be built with a view to bypassing the Welland canal if the tolls continue.

I should hope that one of the oldest canals in the country, which has had a considerable amount of money spent on it through the years and which has generated a considerable amount of business for the people in my riding and in the other parts of the county of Welland, will not be allowed to go by the board because of any possibility that because of these tolls the United States will bypass it completely by constructing their own canal.

The Chairman: Shall vote 666 carry?

Mr. Fisher: No, Mr. Chairman. I wonder whether the minister could indicate what the estimated deficit is for the coming year in relation to the St. Lawrence seaway. I think it is fair to ask the question, since it has been apparent that the seaway has not been the financial success that had been anticipated; that is, it is running behind schedule. Also, as the questions just asked by the hon. member for the opposition indicated, there are very active pressures on hand seeking reductions in tolls, which would probably immensely increase the possibilities of a deficit.

For this reason I would like to ask the minister this question. If, for example, the thesis or argument being advanced by Admiral Mainguy was accepted in toto, would it mean the end of the conception of the St. Lawrence seaway as a revenue producer that would in the long run be able to pay itself off? I would like to ask the minister, is this one of the factors the government has under consideration at the present time?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that an abolition of tolls, a reduction in tolls or a new set-up of tolls would have quite an effect on the future financial picture of the St. Lawrence seaway. However, I am not a financial expert, and it would be pretty difficult for me to tell at this stage what would be the effect on the future financing of the seaway. But there is no doubt that any reduction in tolls or the abolition of tolls would have its effect on the revenue and expense figures of the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. Fisher: I have seen reports in the press that the minister's officials have been meeting with their United States counterparts in relation to the St. Lawrence seaway project as a whole. I want to ask the minister a specific question. Have any discussions been held, not with the United States seaway authority people but with United States cabinet or executive officials—I am thinking in terms not of the authority but of the President's executive—with a view to determining what the United States policy position would be if Canada decided either to abolish or to drastically reduce the tolls on the Welland canal? I ask this question because I assume it is a relevant consideration. If tolls are to be abolished the United States government must be consulted, because of the general agreement that there are certain balances when charges are made. I should like to have an answer to that question.

Mr. Balcer: There is very close co-operation between the two authorities, and I am sure that if anything were done on this side we would keep the Americans informed. As to whether there has been any discussion at cabinet level, I must say there has been none in the last few months.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask another question for information. Could a unilateral decision be made by Canada to abolish tolls on the Welland canal?

Mr. Balcer: I am really being asked there for a legal opinion. I would have to refer to the treaty. I would prefer not to give an opinion now.

Mr. Fisher: Could I ask the minister if he would provide me with an opinion in the form of a letter in the near future?

Mr. Balcer: I would pleased to do that.

Miss LaMarsh: With respect to the subject raised by the last speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether it is not correct that one of the bases upon which it has been urged for some time that there should be a reduction or abolition of tolls on the Welland is that the original treaty contained a somewhat vague description of the waters of the seaway which were to be included; there has been doubt, since the conclusion of that treaty, as to whether or not the Welland should be included, particularly as the twinning of the locks has not been completed and the funds which were to be expended on the canal were expended before the construction of the seaway.

For these reasons, the requirement of joint action by both countries may not, in fact, be applicable to the Welland canal. However, I assume this would require an adjustment of the tolls on the whole system from one end to the other, and I do not think it would be possible to do this unilaterally. If the minister does accept this suggestion—and he has indicated that there have been no high level discussions, or discussions at cabinet level, with opposite numbers to the south—may it be taken that there are no immediate hopes for the reduction or abolition of tolls on the Welland canal?

Mr. Balcer: That is not my opinion. I have studied this matter of toll abolition on the Welland canal. I am giving my personal opinion now, but I am convinced that the Canadian government would have the authority to do this without asking for approval from our counterparts in the United States. That is my personal opinion. Of course I speak subject to correction, but I think it is also the opinion of the association which met last month.

Mr. Robichaud: With your permission, Mr. Chairman, and the permission of the committee, may I revert to item No. 664? I asked the minister for certain information, and I think inadvertently I was given the wrong information. I asked the minister if the treasury board had approved a grant for the construction of the Bathurst airport in Gloucester county, and the minister said it had. I think the minister was incorrectly informed. A grant has been approved for the Charlo airport, but formal authorization has not yet been received in respect of the Bathurst airport although the project is under consideration by the minister's department.

Mr. Balcer: That is correct. I was misinformed.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to ask the minister a question but merely to say how we, on this side, regret the absence of the member for Stormont (Mr. Campbell) who is always pleased to find fault with this wonderful achievement, the St. Lawrence seaway.

The Chairman: That completes the supplementary estimates for the Department of Transport.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Emergency measures—

652. Administration and operation of the emergency measures organization—further amount required, $261,500.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps, as it is almost one o'clock and as the Prime Minister is not here, we should call it one o'clock so that the Prime Minister can be here for the discussion of this very important matter having to do with the survival of the Canadian people.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, this vote is related to the general administration of the emergency measures organization. This subject which has received more comment across the nation than any other is surely deserving of some attention in the committee at this time when the supplementary estimate for the privy council is before us. There is probably no subject more serious and perhaps more distasteful than the problem of civil defence and preparation for thermonuclear war. There is no estimate in the blue book or among the supplementaries which it would be more easy to criticize and ridicule than that relating to privy council, yet it would probably be the one in relation to which it would be hardest to put forward any substitute for what has already been done.

I am sure all hon. members realize that the preparations which are being made at the present time depend upon a tremendous number of variables. So far, at least in this country, we have not made an investigation of the variables and the direction in which our efforts should be directed. We do not know how big an attack we might have. We do not know essentially whether it would be by bomber or I.C.B.M. or what the effect would be of an attack on the North American continent by nuclear submarine. We do not know whether the enemy would attack our cities, our military establishments or our communications. We do not know whether there would be a single first strike or whether in an atttack on the North American continent there would be a series of strikes assuming that the enemy had a great degree of mobility in its attacking instruments. We do not know whether there would be an all-out nuclear war or some kind of limited nuclear war, assuming the nation receiving a certain amount of punishment would wish to negotiate peace and therefore forestall a certain amount of destruction. We do not know whether the main emphasis would be by a blast or a series of concentrated blasts or whether the enemy would rely upon the effects of fall-out.

With as many variables as those I have outlined and others which may occur to hon. members I submit in all humility it is difficult to decide exactly what efforts should be made in the field of emergency measures. As the Prime Minister indicated when he introduced the related main estimate last autumn, speculation on this subject has ranged the spectrum from the attitude of Nevil Shute who sees virtually no existence or life on the planet after a thermonuclear war to the equally ridiculous position adopted by Life magazine which assumes that by taking a few simple precautions 97 per cent of the population would survive without severe ill effects. Somewhere between these two fantastic positions at opposite ends of the spectrum we must adopt a position that has some reality.

What must be done is to determine how this can be done. Across this country there has been active questioning about what we have done so far. As I have said, it is easy to ridicule in this area. One has only to consider the number of variables in relation to the kind of attack and the kind of war which might take place and it is easy to ridicule the program introduced by any government or individual. As it now stands the Canadian people are extremely concerned and for proof of this one has only to examine the facts and figures.

[Mr. Pitman.]

Following exercise Tocsin last autumn there was much publicity concerning the fact that under the terms of the National Housing Act it was possible to make application for allowances for the construction of fall-out shelters in new homes. What has been the result across the entire nation? The figures for the provinces are as follows:

Number of N.H.A. loans, for new houses which included allowances for fall-out shelters, to January 31, 1962.

Newfoundland	1
Prince Edward Island	nil
Nova Scotia	nil
New Brunswick	1
Quebec	30
Ontario	13
Manitoba	2
Saskatchewan	1
Alberta	11
	62

As all hon. members realize the value of N.H.A. home improvement loans for the construction of shelters has been given some publicity in the press. It was hoped that because of the emphasis placed upon the construction of home shelters by this government through the distribution of pamphlets and newspaper publicity people would take advantage of this means of constructing shelters. What have been the results across the country? The figures are as follows:

Number of N.H.A. home improvement loans for fall-out shelters, to January 31, 1962.

Newfoundland	nil
Prince Edward Island	nil
Nova Scotia	nil
New Brunswick	4
Quebec	17
Ontario	27
Manitoba	2
Saskatchewan	10
Alberta	18

Only 94 Canadians have taken advantage of N.H.A. home improvement loans for this purpose and only 62 have made use of the provisions in relation to the purchase of new homes in a country with a total population of approximately 18 million. I am not saying that these are the only shelters that have been built. Obviously others would have obtained money for this purpose through normal channels and some would have built shelters from their own reserves. But I am sure the government would not claim that a substantial number of people have taken the advice of the government in building shelters.

The Ottawa Citizen of March 13, 1962 reports the attitude of Premier Roblin of Manitoba:

Premier Roblin told the Manitoba legislature Monday he has decided he won't recommend shelters to the public.

Premier Roblin is reported to have said:

I don't think we've had sufficiently clear directions from federal authorities to make me enthusiastic about building more shelters or putting them in public buildings.

That is the position of Premier Roblin. Surely of all people in Manitoba he should be the one most concerned about emergency measures.

Let us turn now to Saskatchewan. In an article dated November 19, 1961 by Patrick O'Dwyer which article emanated from Saskatoon it is stated:

Saskatchewan's farmers are bristling with annoyance at what they consider an inept federal Department of Agriculture pamphlet designed to help them fight fall-out.

I realize this does not come under the item we are dealing with but it is part of the picture of confusion and concern. I continue:

The reason for the farmers annoyance is that the Ottawa pamphlet is of no real value in helping them prepare for survival. Many of them have complained that instead of being helpful it is a study in futility. This blueprint, of which 200,000 copies have been printed, is a dud.

The Peterborough Examiner of November 29, 1961 carried a Canadian Press dispatch from Edmonton under the heading "Fall-out Advice for Farmers 'Fantastic' ". It reads in part as follows:

Ed Nelson, Alberta farmers' union president, described as fantastic Tuesday a dominion agriculture department pamphlet designed to help farmers fight fall-out in the event of nuclear attack.

The Ottawa booklet says:

"After heavy fall-out you may be advised to plow the topsoil under so as to bury the fall-out as deep as possible before seeding or planting."

United States government scientists have said the ill effects of fall-out would continue to contaminate plants for years if the affected topsoil were plowed down, Mr. Nelson said.

Mr. Nelson said most of the directions are so impractical "that many farmers after reading the pamphlet are apt to throw their hands up in horror—"

In dealing with this matter last September the emphasis in both Canada and the United States was on the construction of individual shelters. Protection thus depended on the means of individuals to construct shelters in their own basements. At that time hon. members of this group were somewhat critical of the fact that the building of shelters should be related in any way to the means of the individual to undertake this construction. Similar criticism was made in the United States and since last September the emphasis has changed from the construction of individual shelters to the construction of community shelters. A recent press release from Washington indicates that under the program of the Kennedy administration fall-out shelter protection for virtually all United States citizens will be provided within five years at a cost of between $5 and $6 billion with the federal government contributing approximately $3 billion. In Holland the Dutch government plans to construct 400 community shelters in 1962. Each shelter will have room for 100 persons. There are presently 262 shelters in the Netherlands with room for 50 persons in each. The country's population is more than 11,500,000.

Then this last fall we had the Canadian municipalities arguing in a brief to the government that the cost to carry on a national program of fall-out shelter construction will be enormous but that the cost of not doing so may be completely disastrous. It seems to me that this is an area in which the dominion government has a responsibility. Surely throughout the history of mankind the defence of its citizens has been of importance and surely this is about the only area about which you can use the word defence in its true meaning, that is the defence of the life, freedom and the security of people of this nation. I am afraid this is an area to which we have given too little time and thought and emphasis at the national level.

I should like to read from a book which is certainly more attuned to the posture of other parties than is this one. It is a book by James Eayrs called "Northern Approaches". His position is that we need this for the first time, that we cannot as I stated, give partial service to the people of Canada. There has not been any great enthusiasm for what the government has been doing now. Perhaps this is because they did not have sufficient knowledge about this matter. One of the things I think we need in this country is some kind of committee on defence which could solve the problem, which could deal with the problem, which could bring witnesses and allow this house to deal with this problem. It is very easy to say that. Last September the Prime Minister said, when he was discussing this problem, that these scientists who are in the know are those who know something about it. But the problem is that those who know seem to be the ones who are creating the most confusion. You have one physicist disagreeing with another physicist. I am suggesting now that Iowa physicists were attacking Dr. Willard Libby who has suggested certain measures for survival in case of atomic attack, by saying this:

It is extremely dangerous to give the impression to the public that the building of fall-out shelters will enable the average citizen to survive a nuclear war.

It is a tremendous affront to the people of this country that such knowledge as is available of the chances of survival under atomic attack has not been placed squarely before them by their own government. A Canadian citizen, desiring the opinion of experts about the effectiveness of the new weapons and the prospect of defence against them, must turn to the testimony of British and American witnesses before committees of their legislatures provided for that purpose. During the debate on defence policy in the last parliament, Conservative critics argued powerfully for the creation of a House of Commons standing committee on defence similar to those now functioning at Westminster and Washington.

Then he goes on to say that this party is in power. More than ever before we need some kind of committee to give us the different opinions of experts in this field so that we can take a national approach to this problem of national survival. I think that one cannot quarrel with what has already been done by the emergency measures organization. I think one would be wrong not to suggest that a great many devoted people have given a tremendous amount of time and energy to the work of this organization. I think they are doing the best they can on the information they have and the money which is made available to them. I will admit that only over the last year we have had a real focus on this matter or any real sense of proper perspective in this field of emergency measures. However, as I say, we still have not captured the Canadian people in this matter in any way whatsoever in terms of the number of people who are taking the advice they have been given by this government.

Last fall we held a civil defence exercise known as Tocsin B. As I said, I have the greatest respect for the emergency measures organization but I think we should not use this organization to project the number of variables in this matter which have no actual reality. For example, after the Tocsin B exercise ended last fall the Prime Minister announced that some 4 million people had been killed or that 3 million or 4 million had been killed as a result of that simulated attack.

Miss LaMarsh: And he was one of them.

Mr. Pitman: One of the hon. members suggests that the Prime Minister himself was one of those who was killed. However, that is irrelevant to my argument. The point is that after this simulated attack the Prime Minister said that some 3 million or 4 million had been killed. If all the facts were brought forward in terms of what kind of attack it was, I think we would realize that this was not a group of variables which would be likely and therefore this number of people killed does not really come down to reality as the number who would be killed in a thermonuclear attack in the circumstances we have read about. For example, there were only 17 weapons dropped with a total megatonnage of some 75. All the bombs were from one to five megatons or only one was of 10 megatons. Yet Mr. Khrushchev himself has said that he would certainly use the largest size weapon he is capable of using.

The whole problem is not the number of megatons a country has at its disposal. It is a problem of getting them there. The United States authorities state that every bomber S.A.C. has could carry the 100 ton bomb that Mr. Khrushchev had exploded in Siberia last fall. I realize that certainly a 20 ton megaton bomb is not 20 times a one megaton bomb but it is sufficiently great in order to have great effect. In a full scale attack on North America it is not a realistic variable on which to say that a certain number of people will be killed.

Mr. McGee: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pitman: Yes.

Mr. McGee: He has suggested that certain assessments were unrealistic. Will he give us his assessment, which presumably will be realistic?

Mr. Pitman: At the beginning of my speech and during it I think I simply stated that there are a tremendous number of variables which no one can determine. I think the most unrealistic thing is to state any number of people killed on the assessment of a simulated attack. If the hon. member will listen to what I have yet to say, I think he will find that the number that was assessed is not realistic in the kind of thermonuclear attack which is envisaged.

Mr. McGee: What is realistic?

Mr. Pitman: If the hon. member will listen maybe he will learn. Only six bombs were delivered by I.C.B.M.'s, it was suggested in the simulated attack. There was not one single bomb that was dropped by mistake. There were no Russian bombs which were directed at United States cities and which ran out of fuel. I am sure we have a great deal of admiration for Russian technology but surely it is not quite that good. In addition, no assessment was made of the number who would be killed during the interception of bombers over our territory by our Bomarcs. Perhaps this is realistic, but none the less it is not included in the assessment of those who would be killed as a result of a thermonuclear attack on North America. There is no account of any nuclear devices released from submarines, one item which is suggested here.

You have a group of variables for the smallest possible attack which could be deposited, if it could be deposited at all. For example, there were only 350 individual aircraft attacking. On the knowledge we have of the number of bombers the Russians have —and this is brought before both the houses of parliament and congressional committees —is this realistic in terms of the total attack which could be made? As I have said, there are a great many variables. I realize that it is not easy to deal with this matter. However, I suggest that it is wrong to assume and to tell the people of Canada 3 million to 4 million people will be killed in a thermonuclear attack unless you are assuming a set of variables which has some relation to what we know of the variables present in various other systems of government. For example, here is another thing in terms of the number of bombs which undoubtedly will be unleashed on the United States; and yet in the whole population of Canada there were only 180,360 radiation sickness casualties as a result of the nuclear explosions in the United States. Is this realistic in terms of the kind of attack which would take place? I think the position we have taken so far has not worked out. We have not got the Canadian people aroused about the problem of emergency measures. A great many people, of course, feel that they do not want to survive a nuclear attack. Indeed, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said as much, and I refer to a newspaper report of a speech he made in Victoria in which there is the following:

> It wouldn't be worth surviving a nuclear war, external affairs minister Green told the Victoria branch of the United Nations association Thursday night. Civilization would be "blown apart", and the end of the war would mean a "return of the dark ages", said Mr. Green. "Many would survive of course, but I doubt if it would be worth surviving. We must learn to live together."

I think the problem is that if we are going to survive we should be surviving together, and I do not think the Canadian people are very much enthused about the idea that we can build shelters singly, that those who have money should build shelters whereas in the case of those who do not happen to have homes and who happen to live in apartments or in blast areas obviously no shelters are possible. There are so many other areas where the problems would be even greater in terms of getting shelter.

Nor are the people very enthused when they receive so much information that is in direct conflict with what they receive through official government channels. For example, I think a great many hon. members are familiar with Consumers Reports which publishes information on a great many different products. These articles are published by an organization which has no advertising interest in the products involved and therefore they carry a degree of reliability which a great many people in this country and indeed in other countries respect. What does Consumers Reports say about fall-out shelters?

> —the fall-out shelter, which is the specific kind of protective device around which our great debate has centred, must be distinguished from the blast shelter. The essential difference between them is that a workable blast shelter, which would provide great protection if one could be devised, really does not exist in the nuclear age; while a fall-out shelter, which can be devised very easily, really does not work.
> This generalization, like all generalizations, can be made to yield exceptions. For, given the proper conditions, anyone can devise a shelter which would work to some extent. The trick is to get the conditions, and whether anyone might get them unfortunately is not known and is largely unknowable.

The article goes on to point out that really the individual fall-out shelter is not insurance protection as we have been talking about it, but rather is a bet. It is simply a bet exactly like a bet on a horse race. What you have to assume is that this series of variables will come together in such a way that your particular shelter will protect you from a certain amount of fall-out. But the point is, and a great many scientists have been indicating this, that this group of variables is not very likely to occur so far as fallout shelters are concerned and a great many believe that the only way we can meet the problem is through community shelters built at public cost.

The cost of such a program in Canada would be fantastic. Probably in no country in the world would it cost more in view of the size of our nation and the way in which our people are spread about. But surely this is the problem about which the people of Canada are concerned and which we are not meeting with any kind of conviction. We are just doing something. We are not sure at all whether that something has any relation to what the danger really is.

If we do develop a shelter program, and here I bring the committee back into focus again, we must deal with a great many problems. Will this develop a war psychosis? Will it enfeeble our desire to prevent war? Will we spend money and energy on shelters when it could be spent on programs to alleviate the tensions which create war? Will we lose our democracy in the very act of defending it?

The debate that took place in the house a couple of nights ago was in my opinion rather interesting and illustrates exactly what we are saying. The Minister of National Defence said that they cannot do anything about these people who graduate from our survival courses, that they cannot keep track of them because this is a form of conscription and because our system of government and democracy deny the right to keep track of these men. Members of the opposition and to some extent those of us in this group kept saying that national survival is a national problem, a problem serious enough that we should give consideration to the question of freedom for this group who are taking these courses in order that we may have them ready in case of a national emergency. This is the kind of debate which is going on all across the nation and the problem is one which I think it would be well for us in this chamber to consider.

Is it simply going to create bureaucratization? After all, once you get a group of people involved the thing is going to escalate. You will have all kinds of people in it who will not be involved in the building of shelters. The thing becomes irreversible. What effect would this have on the promotion of war?

Some people are convinced that the Russians have a very highly developed system of civil defence. I have an article here published by a highly regarded journal, the New Republic, which suggests this is not true at all. On the other hand, there is an article in this morning's Globe and Mail which suggests there is a great deal of feeling that this may be true. I think this is a question which we should be considering before we go any further in dealing with fall-out shelters.

What effect would it have on our allies, on nations such as India and the nations of South America which have no possibility of building fall-out shelters or protecting themselves from nuclear blast? In concluding my remarks because I see my time is up, may I say I have nothing but the greatest sympathy for those who have to deal with a set of variables which are so difficult as those concerned with emergency measures, but I suggest that unless we take a national look at the problem and get some kind of national purpose in this chamber I do not think we are going to have very much effect on the building of fall-out shelters or, indeed, in any other area of activity going on under this program.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of questions I want to put to the Prime Minister. This vote, of course, is for a further amount required for the administration and operation of the emergency measures organization. It may be recalled that last year the Prime Minister, who had had it brought to his attention that there was another unfulfilled promise of his lying around, caused a committee to be set up to study the War Measures Act and the bill of rights and to report on any possible amendments. That committee was thrown together in a hurry in June. It sat three times very briefly and has not been heard of since.

[Mr. Pitman.]

At the time the Clerk of the Privy Council was called before the committee and a number of things were discussed respecting the emergency measures organization. There was one matter which caused me considerable concern, and this has been the first opportunity to inquire of the Prime Minister or of any other responsible person with respect to the answer. As found on page 41 of the proceedings of the committee on June 28 last, Mr. Boyce, the Clerk of the Privy Council, was explaining to the committee the difficulties involved in such exercises as Tocsin I and Tocsin II. He pointed out to the committee that the question of how to bring the War Measures Act into force was of great importance, and part way down the page he made this statement with reference to Tocsin I:

> We tried out, in this exercise which we had in May, how long it took us to get the War Measures Act proclaimed in a legal way; and, from the time the Prime Minister received warning from the chiefs of staff, until we had the proclamation sealed by the great seal—

I draw particular attention to those words.

> —it took us 23 or 24 minutes, or something of that kind.

First, I wish to know whether in fact there was any proclamation sealed. As I understand the situation, the only authority that this or any other government has to issue such a proclamation is that found in the War Measures Act which contains these words in section 2.

> The issue of a proclamation by Her Majesty, or under the authority of the governor in council shall be conclusive evidence that war, invasion, or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists and has existed for any period of time therein stated—

There is absolutely nothing, of course, that permits anyone to have a mock war or trial war. It would appear to me that under the authority of this legislation there has to be a real or apprehended emergency and not a trial in order to put any machinery into operation. Indeed, this appears to have been the opinion of the Clerk of the Privy Council who explained that some means of bringing the War Measures Act into effect had to be ascertained. I do not know whether any such means has been arrived at by the government. If so, I hope the Prime Minister will favour the committee with such information.

I put a question to the Clerk of the Privy Council as to what was done in the United Kingdom and the United States, and he informed me that he did not know. Mr. Currie, the head of the emergency measures organization, also was a witness and he did not favour that committee with the answer. Perhaps the Prime Minister knows what they do and what might be done in this country.

The Clerk of the Privy Council, who is charged with responsibility for this matter, pointed out that in circumstances such as a possible nuclear attack it would be necessary to disperse the government as well as disperse parliament so that there would not be a target presented to any potential enemy. However, if of course it takes 23 or 24 minutes to get the proclamation signed—and elsewhere during the committee proceedings the clerk had indicated that a missile attack might take 20 minutes and would not be preceded by a mass of planes and I.C.B.M.'s whereby we would have intelligence that an attack was coming—then we could not get on a war footing. The Clerk of the Privy Council knows what is going to happen, but even with parliament sitting it would take five or ten minutes beyond that safety factor of 20 minutes to get the proclamation signed because it is necessary that there be some legislative authority for the government to act.

I suppose the reason why this house has not had another committee set up this session is because of the deepening threat over Berlin last summer and fall when the government thought it might be necessary to have the war emergency powers which the last government required to use in a national emergency. I suppose the Prime Minister thought that trying to marry a horse to a cow, which is what we were trying to do in this committee by saying that in an emergency the state must be paramount and on the other hand a private individual's rights are paramount, then this philosophical discussion would have to remain until such time as there was no emergency.

If by reason of the fact, as the clerk said, that this declaration was certified by the Great Seal and signed by His Excellency, I would suggest to the committee that at that time we would be on a war footing in this country, but I would like to know what makes the Prime Minister and the executive branch think this.

Recently we had a second Tocsin exercise, and under the E.M.O. a great deal of money was spent which had already been voted by this house for the purpose, among others, of protecting the executive branch. No one would deny that it would be absolute anarchy to have an attack come and have the cabinet, who must decide the policy of the country, live in a place where they would be blown up. If that happened there would be complete and utter chaos.

We have read speculation in the press, indeed it is more than speculation, that there is a point to which the members of the cabinet will be taken. It has been referred to as the "Dief Bunker" among other things, and ostensibly it must be somewhere in the Ottawa area. It was a great shock, however, to everyone in the country when Tocsin II took place when the Prime Minister, who is the Prime Minister to direct any operations and direct emergency measures, is not in this special place built at the cost of the taxpayers but is instead sitting with his dog on his lap and his wife's hand in his hand, in his own home.

Mr. Pallett: On a point of order, this is just another illustration of the type of thing that the Liberals are building up—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Pallett: I have sat peacefully—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Jones: The parliamentary secretary is on a point of order already.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the parliamentary secretary rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pallett: Yes, I am. I sat and listened with—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, he is not stating his point of order. This is a speech.

The Deputy Chairman: I have no way of knowing whether or not the hon. parliamentary secretary is stating a point of order until I hear him out.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, I sat and listened patiently to this debate. The particulars of the item under consideration refer to informational publications and the debate has ranged far wide of that. I think the committee appreciated your general attitude of permitting a broadening of debate, but I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the type of speech that is presently being made by the hon. member for Niagara Falls is entering into personal attack, for which the Liberal party is now becoming quite famous.

Miss LaMarsh: On a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pallett: It has extended beyond—

Miss LaMarsh: On a point of privilege—

Mr. Pallett: —beyond the rules of the house that have permitted a fairly wide debate on this limited item.

Miss LaMarsh: I attempted to rise on a point of privilege which the Chair apparently did not hear. I made no personal attack and I resent the Prime Minister's assistant saying so. I made an attack on the office of the Prime Minister by saying it was not in the place provided for it by the people of this country, under vote or appropriation, to protect the country should there be a nuclear attack. I made no reference to the person of the Prime Minister at all. It was to the Prime Minister's office being removed from that place where it should be with the other officers of the cabinet.

Mr. Pallett: Perhaps the hon. lady would indicate by telling us—

The Deputy Chairman: I think I shall just intercede voluntarily to state that in my opinion to some extent I think the parliamentary secretary had a point that was reasonably well taken. I heretofore allowed a fairly wide ranging discussion on this item which has to do with the administration and operation of the emergency measures organization. The word "administration" led me to leave a fairly wide basis for discussion. However, I think at this point I should caution hon. members to try and hold themselves fairly close on the track.

Miss LaMarsh: I did not mean and I did not ascribe to the Prime Minister anything improper as the present incumbent, but I wish to state that I do believe any incumbent in that office has no right in time of national emergency to be other than with his cabinet directing the affairs of his country.

I am particularly interested in obtaining from the Prime Minister an answer to the problem I originally raised. What authority has there been under which the emergency measures organization, and in particular Tocsin I and Tocsin II, have been set in force? What, in fact, has been done with respect to the orders in council? Will the Prime Minister table the two orders in council for Tocsins I and II to indicate to this house how he acted and under what legislative authority?

This matter has been raised with me by constitutional authorities, constitutional students, who are concerned whether in peacetime a government may on its own choice enter into such measures without having parliamentary authority to do so. As I understand it, there is no act of this parliament which has given the government such authority. However I understand what was said by the official of the cabinet who was charged with it that this problem remains to be solved and will be solved before there might be any emergency. Hon. members know that we could have been faced with such tension over Berlin.

We have not discussed this in committee of this house since June of last year. Now almost another year has gone by. Perhaps the Prime Minister would tell this committee whether the executive has such a committee set up to work out this problem, or whether he has worked it out already within his own office, and whether any legislation has been drafted which would make the War Measures Act automatically come into effect.

I am informed that it does not automatically come into effect unless the cabinet has a declaration issued and signed by the Queen's representative, and that means that the government then, under authority of the statute, can operate in an emergency situation. I would be grateful to the Prime Minister if he could favour the committee with that authority.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the Prime Minister not think he should make a statement? Earlier I thought he was going to initiate the discussion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is purely for information services.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it not the Prime Minister's intention first of all to answer the questions of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to deprive the hon. gentleman of the opportunity to give the committee the benefit of his views.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the Prime Minister is one of those who could profit by views which come from this side of the chamber.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not from the experience on the part of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would have thought, in view of the fact that we have not had a statement from the Prime Minister, who really is in charge of all civil defence operations as chief co-ordinator, we would have had from him a report of what has been done in this important but difficult field since we last met. The Prime Minister, however, has chosen to confine himself, as his observation of just a few moments ago indicates, to questions involving information services, the direct matter involved in the specific vote before the committee.

Mr. Chairman, the committee will of course appreciate that the information services of civil defence, the pamphlets, the publications, the films and so on, deal with every aspect of civil defence. While one does not want to abuse the area which you, Mr. Chairman, envisage for discussion, it is difficult to conceive that we could have an adequate discussion even of this particular item without traversing in a general way, as the hon. member for Peterborough so ably did, the whole matter of civil defence.

I do not propose to embark on idle criticism because this is a very difficult question, and this was noted by the hon. member for Peterborough. This is too important a matter to permit idle criticism to dominate what one has to say. This does not mean that there are not some things that should be put forward which are agitating the public mind. We must recognize that the difficulties which attend the formulation of civil defence policy are being experienced in countries other than our own, but I think it is only fair to say that, particularly since we last discussed this matter in the house, there is throughout the country, rightly or wrongly, among the people and on the part of those holding office in provincial and municipal governments a feeling that more direction should come in certain aspects of civil defence activity than is now the case.

The premier of Manitoba indicated recently that because there was no clearcut policy as to shelters, he was no longer going to use the private shelter which he had built, and he was not going to encourage citizens of the province of Manitoba to engage in the construction of shelters. I asked the Prime Minister a question about this last week; I asked if he had any comment to make on this statement by the premier of Manitoba. The Prime Minister said he had not seen the statement and on that account could not make a reply at that time. I think it will be expected of him that before we reach the hour of five o'clock he indicate if there is any ground for the action taken by the premier of Manitoba.

Last year when we discussed this problem of public shelters, the Prime Minister stated that the government believed, and I think rightly so, that a considerable avoidance of human destruction and suffering could be avoided by the use of shelters. I think that is a valid statement. I notice that only the other day Mr. John Gelner, a specialist in this and military fields, said that those who opposed the use of shelters under private or public auspices are simply engaging in an unmistakably irresponsible course. The question is not whether we can relieve ourselves from damage in the event of thermonuclear war by the use of shelters, but whether we are going to have a shelter policy that is non-discriminatory. That really is one of the important issues at this time and it is being discussed in the country.

The government has not indicated that it proposes to give any financial assistance in the building of public shelters. That was the statement of policy of the government given by the Prime Minister when we discussed this matter in 1961. We have a right to ask the government if that continues to be the government's view. Is it simply going to continue to encourage, through publications and through the information services, the Canadian people to build basement shelters or shelters above the ground? Is it going to provide for loans under the existing arrangement? Is that the extent of the policy? We are entitled to know what the government proposes to do about this. We are entitled to know this particularly because in the United States there has been, as the hon. gentleman for Peterborough pointed out, a change of policy.

When we discussed this matter last year the Prime Minister was in a position to say that the United States were pursuing a policy of encouraging the American people to build their own shelters and that shelters could be built by private individuals at various prices, but down to a figure manageable for certain income groups. Since that time, as I say, a change has been made in United States policy. The President of the United States announced that the government of that country was going to engage in a program of assisting in the building of public shelters and they were going to spend a considerable sum of money toward reaching that objective.

Is the government going to continue with the policy enunciated last fall, or is it going to do what has been done in the United States, where the government of that country in the month of December announced a program of $700 million to build community shelters for 20 million people. The money under that program is to be spent in a 12 month period starting July 1, 1961 and a major share of the shelters under this program is to go to schools, universities and other non-profit institutions.

As I say, this marks a sharp reversal in United States policy. It no longer makes the provision of shelter the responsibility of the individual citizen; the government of that country now accepts this responsibility, and this proposal appears to be the first step in a much larger program. What is the attitude of our government?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has that received congressional approval?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think it is still being discussed in congress, but it went from the president to congress. I think I saw something only the other day about there having been an increase in the amount proposed. The president proposed $700 million and I think it was Senator Douglas who has almost doubled that amount to take care of a much wider area of shelters.

In any event, this shows that in the United States there is some recognition by the executive of the argument that is made; that is, we are all going to have to face the same danger and no one should be given a privileged position because of his or her financial capacity to provide a shelter, something that might be denied others not so fortunate to possess resources which would enable the building of a shelter in a residence or place of business. Certainly, in principle it is difficult to resist the suggestion that if we think a shelter policy is desirable there should be a policy of non-discrimination so that every Canadian, particularly the younger people and the older people, should be afforded an equal opportunity, regardless of their economic resources, to receive the protection which would come from a shelter program sponsored and financed by the government of the nation.

The Prime Minister has observed that an adequate program of public shelters would cost between $4 billion and $5 billion. I think the hon. member for Trinity, who has given this matter a good deal of thought, suggested a much lower figure when he spoke on this subject last year. In any case, this is a large sum of money, and the government must take into account, in the light of its other obligations, whether or not such a program should be undertaken. My own view now is that if the government feels that the scientists have satisfied it that protection can be provided by shelters, we must now at least begin to embark on a program of public shelters based on the principle of non-discrimination. The extent to which this program will be developed must be decided by the government, because it has information not available to the rest of us, besides having responsibilities which do not belong to all of us.

The government, then, will make that decision. But the government is entitled to receive from us an indication of what we feel is the course it should take. I think the reaction of Premier Roblin will impress the Prime Minister with the frustration which many people have—a frustration which is not entirely due to the way in which this problem is being handled by the government, but is due in a large measure to the inherent character of the problem itself. However, the government cannot escape its share of responsibility for not giving clearer guidance in certain particulars, and I suggest to the Prime Minister that it is not fair to the premier of Manitoba, and it is not fair to the development of civil defence policy for the Prime Minister of the country, who has such heavy responsibilities, to be himself the co-ordinator of the entire program of civil defence. It is just not possible, in my view, for one holding the office of prime minister to be in charge of civil defence over three other ministers, who have a shared responsibility in civil defence policy.

I said a moment ago it was up to the government to determine if we should embark on a program of shelters under public or private auspices. I say I now believe strongly that we should have public shelters. I am not saying to what extent. I would have to give further thought to that in the light of views expressed by those who are authorities on this matter; but some of those who are within sound of my voice know that we have had some discussions on this question recently. But we are entitled to be told by the government if a program of shelters will do the job or not. For instance, Dr. Waldemar Sackston, professor of entomology at Macdonald College, who participated in a public discussion on this subject with the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Defence has stated he is concerned about the program in Canada stemming from one in the United States. The report quotes Dr. Sackston as follows:

> He said serious under-estimation of the casualties that might come from a nuclear attack was deluding the public into a belief in the possibility of survival.

And, later:

> People in shelters stand no chance of being rescued because there would be no one to rescue them.

What is the considered opinion of the government in this regard? That was not its opinion a year ago. I suspect it is not its opinion today. But we are entitled to have a clear direction as to the value of shelters and the protection they afford.

Then we should have from the government, I think, as they recently had in England, a clear and unequivocal statement as to evacuation. Evacuation was the policy in Canada until four or five years ago. It was originally the policy of the United Kingdom, though it was for a while abandoned there. I understand the United Kingdom has recently gone back to the position that evacuation as a policy is not to be considered as having been abandoned. Some people believe that evacuation represents the effective form of civil defence. Is that the policy of the government of Canada? It is important that we should have direction along these lines. Only in today's paper we saw a report in the Globe and Mail on the first page, from Mr. Topping under a Moscow dateline, indicating that western observers have found what they believe to be evidence of an extensive system of bomb shelters in a number of cities in the Soviet union. The article goes on to indicate that some of these shelters obviously represent a policy which was developed in the atomic period as opposed to the present nuclear period. But more lately it appears that the Soviet union has embarked on a policy of providing shelters for school children, for university students, for the aged, for certain classifications of workers and the like. Does the government believe this to be the case? Should we embark on such a program, or seek to emulate it. We know, of course, what has been done in countries such as Sweden. We know that a long time ago Sweden embarked on a program of public shelters. This has been discussed in the house on many occasions. I think it is generally recognized that there were special provocations in the case of Sweden, because of that country's propinquity to the Soviet union and the value that such shelters would have over and above their protective qualities.

These are questions which are in the public mind. We have a right at this time to ask the right hon. gentleman, who is the coordinator of civil defence, to tell us what is the latest thinking of the government on this subject and the extent to which the government believes it should participate in the financing of a public shelter program—the extent, also, to which it believes that the individual should relinquish these responsibilities.

Criticism has been directed by the hon. member for Peterborough against the exercise Tocsin B, 1961. In that exercise, close on 2,600,000 Canadians were presumed to have died from the immediate effects of blast, while another 1,600,000 were presumed to have been injured. It was also assumed that many of the injured would die later and that a further undetermined number would die as a result of the effects of fall-out and lack of shelter. There has been considerable criticism of this exercise. I know it is easy to criticize an exercise of this kind. I do not intend to indulge in that luxury. No matter what exercise was developed in this difficult field it would be bound to give rise to criticism. However, the observation of Mr. Walter Lippmann with regard to a similar exercise in the United States is not without significance. He said:

> The evil comes from telling the people that they are in danger of being exterminated, and that they can and should save themselves separately, each family for itself, and the devil take the hindmost. This is the way to breed panic.

This represents the thinking of some of those who have criticized the exercise. Some argued it created panic and a false sense of danger and that unless you could equate the reaction of danger to the means in existence to provide a defence against that danger, it was wrong to create a situation that would cause such panic.

There are two points of view. The government undoubtedly has its point of view and we should hear from the government the extent to which it has been influenced by this criticism which, editorially at any rate, has a uniform character.

I think the observations made by the hon. member for Niagara Falls were misunderstood certainly by the parliamentary secretary. I do not think she intended a personal reference to the Prime Minister. She was talking about a matter that has a potential which should inspire all of us to the most precise thinking we can achieve. I believe she is justified in saying that if we have a separate place for the government to seek refuge in the event of nuclear war, we should expect the Prime Minister as head of the government of our country to be in that place so that he could do what at the time would be the most useful thing he could do, and that is to help govern the nation in the very extraordinary circumstances which would prevail in such a situation.

The Prime Minister on one occasion, obviously for my benefit, quoted from an editorial in the Windsor Star by a particular columnist. Let me quote from that same columnist who on December 29, 1961 in the Windsor Star wrote:

> Foreign policy and war scare talk going hand in hand, this is as good a place as any to pass on the gripe of one Windsorite who thinks Prime Minister Diefenbaker has made a wrong decision about what he'll do if war comes. On more than one occasion, the Prime Minister has said he elects to stay in Ottawa with his wife and use their standard fall-out shelter.

What is said about the Prime Minister's wife is not, of course, intended in any way to involve that distinguished lady in this discussion. I am sure that was not the intention of the writer nor is it my intention. The writer went on to say:

> "This is a stupid policy," says the Diefenbaker critic. "The Prime Minister is head of government and should go where he can be safe if war comes. It is his duty to see the government functions. He can't do that by appointing a deputy prime minister. It may sound noble to say he elects to stay with the people and suffer whatever happens to them. That isn't his duty. He should go where he can keep the government running."

I am sure most people will agree with that statement. The statement of the Prime Minister that he was going to stay at home on Sussex street is not the kind of assurance the people of Canada want the head of the government to give in the circumstances envisaged by exercise Tocsin B-61 or that would eventuate if the circumstances of that exercise were to become a reality.

I am not saying the Prime Minister does not appreciate that view now. I suspect that on reflection he must agree that in those circumstances his place would be where the government is.

There are some highly important questions that have to be resolved. Some direction not now in existence must be given by the government particularly with regard to shelters. Are we to have public shelters or are we not? Are we to allow shelters to be built now under the principle of perhaps unintended but actual discrimination as is the inevitable consequence of the present policy? Are we still to regard evacuation as a practical course to adopt in certain circumstances? What are those circumstances?

These and other questions are in the public mind. Although this is a small item involving a relatively minor portion of the budget for civil defence, it does afford an opportunity to express our views on this vital matter, and to invite the Prime Minister to make a statement with respect to this question, one which is of urgent concern. We should receive a statement from the Prime Minister who is in charge of civil defence, who is the co-ordinator in this area over the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and their colleagues in other departments of government concerned.

This is not make believe. This is necessary preparation for something we hope will never happen, and to the extent we are prepared in a practical way we have added to our strength in a defensive way.

Mr. Pitman: Surely the Prime Minister is going to answer some of the questions directed from this side. It seems to me the people of Canada are seeking direction in this connection. We now have the worst of two possible worlds. We have a shelter policy which gives us some hope of survival and defending our freedom, but to be of use in our defence posture the program must be related to the real effects of a nuclear attack. If our enemies believe that civil defence is for us a mere posture and that we are going through the motions of constructing basement shelters with their having no relationship to the effects of real danger, surely this is simply a provocation to war. It is virtually an exposing, an opening up, of our defence posture. We must prove that what we are doing in civil defence is as sensible and realistic as what we are doing in our relationship with NATO and the various elements of our total defence position.

I would hope the Prime Minister would indicate whether he would be willing to establish a committee of this house to consider the whole matter of civil defence. Certainly he should be willing to indicate whether there have been any discussions with respect to community shelters. Is there any doubt in his mind about their value especially when the United States in their greater wisdom have undertaken a program of this kind? If we are to be a part of NATO and NORAD our civil defence should be related to our total defence position since we will be facing equal danger. Our policies should go hand in hand. I hope we may receive an indication of the Prime Minister's thinking on these points.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Essex East while he reviewed the problem in a way which revealed the knowledge of the subject he gained during the period he was in charge of this particular phase of defence in the former administration. I had been waiting to hear suggestions from hon. members opposite and have not wished in any way to see the debate restricted to discussion of the item under consideration.

This item has to do with civil defence. I would be the last person to transgress the rules of the house by engaging in a discussion of the whole question of E.M.O., the emergency measures organization, at a time like this. However, there have been some observations made which I believe deserve attention.

As I understood the hon. member for Peterborough he suggested that a committee be set up for the purpose of considering this whole question. When one considers what progress has been made in this house in the last two or three weeks it is found that thus far approximately 16 days have been spent considering supplementary estimates—

Mr. Pallett: It is more than that. It is 19 days.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nineteen days? Oh, well, I always believe in being "conservative". Considering the progress made within the last two or three weeks one realizes that it is absolutely impossible for hon. members opposite to accord important matters that remain to be considered at this session the attention they deserve in a reasonable length of time. However, the manner in which the hon. member for Peterborough dealt with this question has impelled me to say something in regard to it.

I am most anxious not to deny any hon. member the opportunity of placing his ideas before the government. But having waited in order to give everyone the opportunity, I might review one or two matters to which reference has been made.

Reference was made to the general subject of fall-out shelters. As I followed his argument, the hon. member for Essex East stated that there should be an equality for all in survival. I accept that principle. But I notice that immediately it was followed by the suggestion of how difficult that would be. He said, "How could this be achieved, in effect?" He said that it was going to be a tremendously costly proposition to provide public shelters, that the estimate last year was some $4 billion to $5 billion and the estimate now is somewhat higher. Then he stated that he thought the proper course to follow would be to cover the whole field and to assure equality of security and survival now but rather to decide on priorities. Then he asked this question: Who is to have priority? By asking that question he fairly well answered his suggestion as to a national emergency shelter program financed by the people of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think I said children.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He said, "Where do we start, who is to have priority?" Those were the words he used. In doing that he showed his capacity for getting to the heart of the proposition. He was in favour of the general principle that all should be assured of equality of survival and he dealt with it immediately by that question, a fair and reasonable one, the one that actually is the nub of the problem we face, the question of priority.

There have been changes in viewpoint in the United States. Mention was made by the hon. gentleman of the fact that in the United Kingdom there have been changes in this regard. The hon. member for Peterborough spoke of the vast number of variables on many of which we have not full information and the difficulty of arriving at a program in the face of a problem that we hope will never be an actuality, one that we have never faced previously and one that in the days ahead we hope will not have to be faced.

We have also to look at the thinking of the people. If we act as we did in connection with Tocsin B, some say that we arouse fear in the hearts of the people; and mention was made of that matter today. On the other hand if we do not act, we bring about a state of mind that is not in keeping with reality. The same problem has been experienced in the other countries. The hon. member for Essex East mentioned the United Kingdom. In recent months I think there has been a vast alteration of viewpoint in regard to this whole matter. The hon. gentleman quoted from authorities to the effect that there could be no survival and a little later he argued that action should be taken in order to secure survival. No one in any part of the world today knows with finality the course that ought to be followed.

Mention was made of the U.S.S.R. which has the dictatorial power of directing where persons shall go and where they shall not go. The hon. member mentioned an item in today's Globe and Mail. The report was to the effect, as I saw it, that in that country basement shelter construction started to diminish in the mid-fifties and was abandoned in the late fifties. On the other hand, pre-attack evacuation planning in that country has been receiving some emphasis as well as an apparent increase in the construction of what are called "free standing" shelters. These two aspects in the U.S.S.R. seem to indicate a combined shelter and evacuation policy.

Until about five years ago, if Canada had a policy, it was one of evacuation. Today it is a combined policy of shelter and evacuation. It was for that reason that we instituted the various programs and national exercises that have been undertaken.

In view of the mention of the U.S.S.R. I think I should place before you something of what it is doing in this field. The possibility of a surprise attack is admitted by the Soviet authorities. However, they think that actual hostilities will be preceded by a period of growing tension. The central responsibility for civil defence was until January 1960 that of the ministry of the interior, and its responsibility was abolished at that time. The head of municipal civil defence is the chairman of the town executive committee. In each town and city actual planning is carried out by the civil defence staff of the municipality. Residential areas and educational establishments organize "self-defence groups" numbering from 45 to 73 people. Groups are formed for administratively convenient units, varying from 200 persons in rural areas to 700 in densely populated urban ones. Each group consists of leaders and six teams: preservation of order, fire, decontamination, rescue, medical and shelters. They have training schools. In those schools instruction is given about the capabilities of nuclear weapons, starting with a 10-hour lecture course. They also have a further course of 18 hours which recently was brought into effect and which introduces information about fall-out. Shelters against blast, fire, radiation, and biological and chemical agents have been incorporated in basements of new buildings. Basement shelter construction started to diminish in 1955 and seems to have been abandoned in major urban centres since 1959.

Pre-attack evacuation is receiving considerable emphasis but at the same time, there has been an increase of "free standing" shelters. They have a mass training system in order to train the leaders in the various communities to take their parts.

With regard to the government in the event of war, may I say that I have listened with interest to suggestions that have been made arising from a statement which I placed before the house to the effect that I would be in the same position as other Canadians in the event that war came. That statement was made after full consideration had been given to the matter by those associated with this whole problem.

We have a number—half a dozen—of defence locations where government will have its place. We are not going to concentrate the members of government in any particular one. When it was originally bruited or rumoured that there was a place for government there were many, including the press, who stated that the leader of the nation should not be there, that he ought not to ask others to do that which he himself would not undertake. Arrangements were made whereby in the shelter at 24 Sussex street, which is identical in form and construction with those that we suggest for Canadians across this country, whereby there would be provision for co-ordination of government among the half dozen places to which it will disperse.

We are not going to have our key people in government and in the civil service concentrated in any one place. Otherwise all chance of giving leadership and administrative control to the nation might be lost by one direct hit. Some will stay in Ottawa and other places close to Ottawa will house various ministers and their departments. Full arrangements have been made, that there will be co-ordination which will assure not only the continuation of leadership to the various elements that must necessarily be considered but as well within the base itself. I want to emphasize that fact.

I believe, and I think it is fair to say, that in the last year and a half or two years more work has been done effectively on behalf of civil defence in this country than in all the preceding years. There is no question about that. We have brought about an organization in every part of this country. The hon. member for Essex East was fair enough to say that no matter what is done in this regard it can be subject to the luxury of criticism. I point out that the organization headed by Mr. Curry and those associated with him has been diligent, has given of its best and has brought about in co-operation with municipal authorities and others across the country a unity of purpose that was lacking in the past.

The responsibility, as was said by the hon. member for Peterborough, of the emergency measures organization is to co-ordinate planning for wartime emergency not only among federal departments but with the provinces and through them with the municipalities. Planning in federal departments is progressing satisfactorily, with a better comprehension of functions that will have to be performed under emergency conditions. Greater attention is being given to detailed planning, both at the national and regional levels. Key officials have been designated and trained and plans prepared for the quick relocation of a small core of government personnel outside Ottawa as well as near each provincial capital city in time of emergency. I could give the records in this regard showing what is being done in that connection province by province, if it were desirable.

Facilities are now available in the Ottawa area that allow, as I said a moment ago, for the relocation of these essential elements of government. In addition, construction of permanent regional emergency government facilities has progressed on schedule and it is expected that the first four of these headquarters will be completed this summer with others being available early in 1963. In the meantime, interim facilities in all provinces have been made available on national defence establishments.

Then we come to the question of communication, which is most important. An adequate communications system has been provided to ensure continued contact with federal regional headquarters and with all provincial governments.

Emergency orders in council and regulations, required for the continued operation of government in wartime, were tested during exercise Tocsin B and further progress is being made in improving these and correcting overlapping of authority and responsibilities wherever such things occur. The basic authority required to operate in an emergency is provided under the War Measures Act, under which orders were purportedly made, but in each case it was clearly written across the order in question that it was for exercise purposes only. In other words, it was simply the carrying out of the technique rather than the application of the act itself.

Mention was made of the fact that a committee was set up last year on the War Measures Act in relationship to the bill of rights. When it is suggested that we ought to have set up that committee this year, I again point out that for weeks and weeks we have been held up more than I believe to have been necessary or understandable, and it has not yet been possible to bring this matter and several others of major importance before the house.

The basic authority, as I said a moment ago, is under the War Measures Act. The suggestion was made that in the United Kingdom they require something similar. I understand that is not so. The only reason for the War Measures Act is that in the case of an emergency or anticipated emergency it enables the invasion by the federal government of areas within provincial jurisdiction. It declares a national emergency or an impending one, and authorized thereby by the use of the word "emergency" in the preamble, which has been held sufficient for the purpose, the federal government is enabled to do those things that under ordinary circumstances are exclusively under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Records essential in an emergency have been selected and stored so that they will be available at all times. Equally important in providing for continuity of government is planning by the provinces and by municipalities. This planning supplements that carried on by federal departments. The cost of emergency planning by provinces and by municipalities is borne to the extent of 75 per cent by the federal goverment. Many hundreds of municipal emergency planning projects are approved each year. Many municipalities are engaged in working out plans for suitable emergency headquarters and are assigning functions to the key personnel who will be involved.

This is a very large undertaking. The hon. member for Essex East suggested that it was too large to be left in the hands of the Prime Minister. It covers three departments of government; there must be someone in the position of having co-ordinating authority and for that reason the responsibility was placed on the privy council office.

The question of survival touches not only the hearts but the imagination of Canadians as a whole. What are we going to do? How far shall we go? Someone suggested that as a result of the Tocsin exercise people have been filled with fear. The hon. member for Peterborough answered this very well in the argument he advanced when he showed that whatever their fear may be, that fear has not been translated into any action commensurate with the danger that there is.

Indeed all of us recognize this fact today. It has been the same throughout the ages. When people are living under fear from day to day, week to week, and month to month they finally develop an attitude of mind which causes them to believe that there is no danger of that fear ever bringing about the catastrophe regarding which the fear has been engendered. That is the position today and all of us hope that out of this conference in Geneva we will be able to remove something of this fear from the heart of man. All of us who are following that conference from day to day are beginning to wonder whether mankind has learned a lesson and whether there will come out of that conference anything that will give hope to mankind in place of the fear that today overhangs all of us.

In connection with the survival of people, the army's warning facilities in the form of sirens have been steadily increased and the coverage extended. The army is now studying the possibility of suitable warning devices that might be recommended for use in homes. This is a device that is activated by a signal sent over the normal electrical power circuits. The army is developing its plans for re-entry operations in damaged or heavily contaminated areas. It has made good progress in organizing survival columns and establishing target area headquarters to take control of these emergency operations.

We are now working closely with the provinces in an effort to establish suitable emergency communication plans, and through the provinces to establish municipal radiological defence organizations. These will be the means of conveying to people the information they will need about the degree of radioactive fall-out to which they might be exposed, and what measures they should take.

The vote in question has to do with public information. There has been a tremendous demand for literature on this subject. That demand has been increasing year by year and has now come to a point where we have had to ask for this extra amount in order to meet it. I shall not go into particulars except to say that of the publication "Basement Fall-out Shelter," first issued in May, 1960, to date there have been three printings totalling 1,250,000 copies in English and 300,000 copies in French. The figures for other publications are as follows: "11 Steps to Survival", first printed in April, 1961—four printings totalling 1,708,000 copies in English and 322,000 in French; "Survival Folder" first issued in July, 1961—600,000 copies in English and 140,000 in French. "Simpler Shelters", which deals with shelter protection that will provide a reasonable degree of protection against fall-out at a cost of $100 for materials, was first published in the form of a pamphlet in February of this year and has had one printing totalling 800,000 copies in English and 200,000 copies in French. Another publication is "Survival in Likely Target Areas", which is being issued this month in one printing totalling 800,000 copies in English and 200,000 copies in French.

I could go through a very lengthy list of such publications which indicate that people want information. They want to know what the picture will be so that, having got that information, they may immediately react and carry out the suggestions made.

There was a mention made of the exercise in November and I think the hon. gentleman from Peterborough said that there should be some report given to the house. The exercise was planned to practise manning and operation of emergency government headquarters at all levels and, in particular, to test the capability for emergency government in those aspects where weaknesses were revealed in the May exercise. When I last spoke in the house on this subject I quite frankly admitted that there were shortcomings in the May exercise. I did not conceal them. We did not try to paper over the cracks in the wall. We realized that there were shortcomings and we had a further exercise based on the experience of May, designed not only to remove those shortcomings that had been ascertained earlier, but also to expand and extend the field of operations. Special informative programs on radio and television were arranged. The provincial premiers were advised of the decision to hold the exercise and their co-operation was requested. Each and every one of them gave that co-operation very fully. The initial assessment, and this is one that has not been arrived at loosely, is that the exercise fulfilled its primary purpose.

There was some comment that it was unrealistic because of the short duration and the nature of the assumed attack. The hon. member for Peterborough said they had not purported to use as large bombs as could have been used. I do not really get the point of that. It was the exercise and not the size of the cause of the exercise with which we were concerned.

The general purpose of the exercise was not to test the size of the instruments that would be used against us or their effectiveness. Indeed the effects of a bomb do not increase in proportion to the increase in size. The exercise was designed to test our basic arrangements for survival. We recognize that should nuclear war ever take place there may well be longer periods of attack and greater disorganization that was apparent from the exercise. Nevertheless I want to emphasize that not only we, but also those responsible in the provinces, agree that these exercises have helped greatly to develop a basic capability of ensuring that there will be in existence a framework of government services to provide guidance and leadership to the country.

As in the May exercise, federal participation was quite complete with maximum numbers participating. Provincial participation, especially at the senior level, represented a considerable advance over the May exercise, and reflected substantial progress in provincial planning between May and November.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

At the central federal exercise headquarters, 17 federal departments and agencies actively participated in the exercise. I remained at 24 Sussex street, in continuing communication. An exercise cabinet consisting of the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Defence, the Postmaster General, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Defence Production and the Minister without Portfolio met on a shift basis throughout the 24 hour period of the exercise. They were supported by a staff, including deputy ministers and other senior officers, of some 215 persons.

With regard to the previous exercise, it was noted and commented on by the hon. member for Vancouver East that during the time in which the federal government moved from Ottawa to the exercise headquarters it risked being ineffective, due to a lack of communications. This problem was met in Tocsin B by reorganizing the advance party to include in it members of cabinet and an improved staff capability. This solved the problem to which the hon. member made reference, after a very complete and thoroughgoing examination of the May exercise.

As well as the reinforced advance party, additional measures and safeguards may be necessary and are being investigated. Furthermore—and I have already mentioned the question of the drafting of federal emergency regulations and orders—in the May exercise there were difficulties. As a result of that experience sets of these draft regulations and orders were made available in all the provinces when the emergency exercise began. There was a complete review of all the possible contingencies that could arise that required regulations. These were drafted by a committee, the Clerk of the Privy Council assuming a large degree of responsibility in this connection. All these draft regulations, extensive as they are, are now being reviewed in the light of the comments received on the November exercise.

There was also a considerable improvement in departmental organization and training. There has been considerable continuity in staff from previous exercises, and as a result all departments were able to make advances in exercising their emergency organization and fulfilling their functions at such a time.

Many departments, in addition to their staffs at central and regional facilities, operated for the first time comparatively large operational staffs at departmental relocation sites. It is probable that most of these latter departments came out of the exercise with a clear view of the steps they need to take in all fields, but especially in regard to clarifying their functions, their organization and staff training to further improve their emergency capability.

To date in these exercises people generally have been requested to participate in a passive sense only. In fact, the aspect of these exercises aimed at the general public has formed a part of the over-all program of information and education on national survival matters. It is also becoming more and more apparent that although national exercises do achieve much, it is of concern that not enough attention has been paid to the subject of municipalities. While a considerable number of municipalities, actually some hundreds, participated in the exercise, greater efforts must be directed to having municipalities participate more fully, because in the event of a nuclear catastrophe this is the level of government which will feel the first impact. Possibly by recasting our concept of exercises we could achieve more. We have therefore been encouraging provincial governments to conduct exercises within provinces whereby greater emphasis will be placed on exercising municipal governments.

During the early phases of Tocsin B in which the continent was being subjected to a combined bomber and missile attack, it was apparent that our recommendations to the public on steps they should take to ensure their survival, on the basis of public warning systems, needed some modification. A general assessment of the exercise, however, indicates that it achieved its main objectives and reflected a considerable advance over the exercise of May, 1961. Hon. members will recognize that much remains to be done to ensure that fully comprehensive plans for national survival are developed. One of the purposes of these exercises is to test the advances that we make from time to time and to direct attention to the next stage.

That represents a summary of an exercise which was extensive and which was also much more effective and efficient than had been the one in May. This is one of the reasons for the exercises, to learn where there are shortcomings and, having learned, to act in order to prevent a recurrence.

Mr. Chairman, I think that in general covers my statement in respect of this matter. I again say to the hon. member for Essex East and to the hon. member for Peterborough that I appreciate very much having the benefit of their views, because both have studied this matter. All hon. members who have anything to contribute in this connection will receive the fullest co-operation of the government. This is a matter that transcends partisan considerations, the survival of our people to the largest degree possible. That is the responsibility of government. It is also the responsibility of all our people to join together, as they did on these two occasions, in a national spirit of co-operation for the benefit of each and all.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee will welcome the statement the Prime Minister has made. It was a comprehensive statement on this subject, the importance of which it is difficult for us even to conceive. While I do not propose to hold up the passage of this estimate, I do not apologize for saying a few words on this matter in the light of what the Prime Minister has said, nor indeed do I think we need apologize for discussing these supplementary estimates at a much greater length than would normally be the case, in view of the fact that we have no assurance that any of the subjects concerned with them will be open for discussion during the remainder of the session.

Especially in connection with civil defence we do desire to take advantage of this opportunity to listen to the policy of the government as it has been expressed by the Prime Minister and to add our own views, which might have some bearing on that policy. This is an item which does raise the whole question of co-ordination by the government of measures of civil defence. While the Prime Minister has stated, as did the Minister of National Defence before him, that the government is satisfied that these measures are efficient and would be effective in the awful emergency which is contemplated in case they ever had to be used, we cannot on this side of the chamber ignore the fact—and this has been pointed out this afternoon—that there are others who are not nearly so satisfied as to the effectiveness of these measures and their co-ordination. When those people include the premier of Manitoba and certain municipalities in the country, then we have, I think, good justification for expressing our anxiety that perhaps everything is not as perfect as we would like it to be and as the government undoubtedly hopes that it is.

Therefore this afternoon we have put forward some suggestions and proposals and we have asked some questions. The Prime Minister has this afternoon dealt with one of these questions; that is, the measures that have been adopted to enable a government to be carried on in the awful emergency, or in the awful fact of nuclear destruction. We had assumed on this side of the chamber that there was being constructed not very far away, we believed, from Ottawa what perhaps might fairly be designated as a national command post in which the effort to ensure survival and reorganize the life of the country after nuclear attack would be centred.

Surely that is a sensible and reasonable step for any government to take. That will involve, of course, very special preparations and operations. We had assumed that at this national command post there would be very special methods of protection, as, indeed, there must be, and very special methods of communication, as, indeed, there must be. While everyone would sympathize with the desire of anyone, whatever position he might hold, to share in the dangers of the people, nevertheless a position of responsibility does require certain protection in order that that responsibility might be discharged. We had assumed that that responsibility could best be discharged from these particular posts upon which a great deal of money is, I think rightly, being spent.

The Prime Minister has told us this afternoon, and this is the first time we have been so informed, that there is no single place to which the government would be dispersed. I think he said there are half a dozen places from which government activity might be conducted during an emergency, in addition to the residence of the Prime Minister himself, and we had assumed that that was a national command post. This throws a new light on this problem. It is not possible, of course, to discuss this awful problem and what should be done about it without trying to reach some conclusion as to the nature of the destruction which would be visited on us if we ever allowed ourselves—and by "ourselves" I mean humanity—to drift or be pushed into the catastrophe of nuclear war. We cannot know what will happen. All we can do is protect ourselves to the best of our ability under the leadership of the government in readiness for whatever is thought most likely to happen. The extent of the menace and of the possibilities of destruction are changing month by month and I suppose government attitudes and policies have to change as the capacity for destruction changes. What might have been and, indeed, was a kind of protection against bombing in the second world war would amount to nothing at all now, and the kind of protection we are now considering might be worth nothing at all in a few months time. We have been informed, and I think it is no longer a matter of secrecy, that the communist empire of Russia, from which an attack would likely come should it ever take place, has developed a thermonuclear weapon equivalent to 100 million tons of t.n.t. One hundred million tons: that is startling enough, but it is even more startling when one realizes it would be the equivalent of an attack by ten million bombers carrying the average bomb load of the last war. All this, as the Prime Minister and others have pointed out, certainly makes for fear and it imposes an obligation not only to do something about survival in case of an attack, but also to do something about removing the fear itself. The aim, of course, is peace, but peace cannot be achieved unless we remove this awful fear. Yet when we give publicity to statistics showing the nature of the destruction which would occur in the event of nuclear attack we are, in a sense, increasing fear. That is a result which, in one sense, one does not like to see because fear can itself be an enemy of the resolution required to bring about the policies which may remove the fear politically. In that sense the fear we created in trying to convince our people of the necessity of measures for their protection can be used against us in the form of blackmail. That is the destructive circle we are up against.

The Rand Corporation, which has done a great deal of investigation into nuclear warfare and civil defence, and especially Herman Kahn, a member of that corporation, I believe, have told us that in the United States under the present circumstances they have to assume that 90 million people would be killed in any major nuclear attack and that it would take 60 years for economic recovery to take place after such an attack. However, according to this report, if they spent a minimum of $500 millions on their protection they could reduce that figure of casualties to 50 million and reduce the period of 60 years to 15 years. The report is embodied in a long book which perhaps some of the members of the committee have read, and it goes on to say that major evacuation, added to the other measures, could reduce the figure of casualties to 15 million. That apparently, is the irreducible minimum. Then, as the author says, when you cut it down to 15 millions it becomes credible.

It is very important, according to him and others, to maintain what is called the credibility of the deterrent. One aspect of the credibility of the deterrent is the credibility of the people to accept the acceptability of destruction. I do not think anyone can get much comfort out of that, yet the fact that the figure could be reduced, by protective action, from 90 million to 15 million, according to this report, does, I suggest, underline the necessity for the government taking whatever action is possible and it does emphasize the fact that civil defence becomes a part of the deterrent. That is another reason why, I suppose, something has to be done about it in addition to the obligation to do what we can to ensure survival.

We assume that while there is no protection against a hit from a nuclear weapon, or practically none, except by an arrangement of the kind we are operating for the government of this country against any form of nuclear blast, there would be protection against nuclear fall-out, and presumably that is the reason we are taking the steps we are taking. Yet I have seen a report from the head of the department of physiology in the University of Minnesota as part of a study commenting on the Rand Corporation studies and on the civil defence policies of the United States, to the effect that if there was a "real nuclear war"—I do not know what he means by a "real nuclear war"; presumably it is one where there would be attacks followed by attacks; that is presumably what we have to expect—it would be necessary to stay in a shelter for a year if the lethal effects of fall-out are to be avoided. This gives some idea of the nature of the problem we are dealing with on this sunny spring afternoon in this committee of the House of Commons. We on this side of the committee know the agony which is involved in trying to decide what to do about it, though perhaps we are not as intimately associated with these matters as are some people on the other side of the house. There are too many variables, as the hon. member for Peterborough has said, and as I have repeated this afternoon, for us to be able to ensure finality in any policy with regard to this matter.

The only finality will come if we fail in our policy of peace and get into nuclear war. That may well be final. Therefore, the only protection is peace. But I should like to emphasize, as my friend the hon. member for Essex East has emphasized, that while there cannot be any finality in policy or decision it does seem to us on this side that somehow there have to be priorities of protection established.

The Prime Minister has mentioned the fact that we cannot have equality in this matter except in principle and I do not quarrel with that nor does the hon. member for Essex East. There cannot be equality of safeguards or of safety in a matter of this kind but there will have to be priorities established. Indeed in the present policy of the government a priority has been established. The priority that has been established is that if you have the resources yourself as an individual, and if you have the facilities, if you live in a house where there is a possibility of doing this, you can, if you can afford it, give yourself some protection against fall-out. That leaves it up to the individual, with encouragement and support, up to a point, from the government. But surely there must be some more collective approach than that to this problem. If we have to have priorities is it not desirable to add to the individual priority—and I do not think we should take away from the individual the right to do what he can for his own protection and that of his family—a priority for children established by our collective action under which there will be some degree of assurance of survival of the children of the nation. If we could have that kind of action through collective shelters on a basis of co-operation among federal, provincial and municipal governments, is that not the kind of priority which would be justified through ensuring the survival of our children?

I do not know how it could be worked out. I do not have that information, and I do know something about the difficulty. But let us add to whatever priority we are giving, by the very nature of our society to the individual who can do these things with government support and encouragement, some kind of collective priority to the one element of our population whom we would, I should think, especially desire to have survive in this kind of situation. Perhaps this would be a principle upon which we could extend our activity in the future.

There are one or two other points which I feel should be brought to the government's attention. We have pointed out before that it is essential that stockpiles of food and materials be secured at strategic sites, where they will be accessible in times of disaster, if shelters are to be of any value. I do not know whether anything has been done about that yet.

This has also been pointed out by many hon. members on this side. A national system of automatic warning must surely be worked out. Does that not mean having individual units installed in individual dwellings in a way that they could be activated from a central emergency headquarters? It seems to me that is the only kind of warning which would be adequate in the missile age.

There is also the idea of dispersal, of evacuation. The Prime Minister has told us this afternoon that the policy of the government in respect of civil defence and emergency measures is now based on the twin principles of shelters against fall-out, and dispersal and evacuation. We were of the impression on this side—and the Prime Minister's statement rather indicates that we were wrong—that the principle adopted by the government now was the principle of fall-out shelters and not dispersal or evacuation. It has been pointed out, I believe, that the United Kingdom up until the last year or so based its policy on the construction of shelters, but has now reintroduced the idea of evacuation and survival. I do not wish to delay this item but if the Prime Minister could reassure the committee on that point by telling us that the government has indeed now based its policy on evacuation as well as survival through fall-out shelters, that would be a very important result to have been achieved from our discussion this afternoon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his contribution. With regard to the first point raised concerning the priority of the survival of children, all of us can accept that as a principle that appeals to the heart and is important in terms of the needs of the future. However, the hon. gentleman in discussing this question was careful to say that this would be a difficult matter to achieve. How are you going to bring it about? Are you going to provide fall-out shelters in the basements of the schools or in some public place, while the parents would be at home? Hon. members can imagine the heartsickness of a father and mother at home with the children somewhere else. Are you going to establish public shelters for the children only? When these questions are considered you can readily realize what the difficulties would be. Adults would have to be present in order to make possible the effective use of these facilities. All of us will be in agreement with the objective, but we will be equally in agreement as to the difficulties inherent in the achievement of this desirable objective.

I believe I can summarize the policy of the government on civil defence in this way. Evacuation was the policy. That was the policy in effect when we came into office. However, nothing could be done to effectively implement it or to plan properly for evacuation. We now try to get the provinces and municipalities to be ready for voluntary evacuation, because many thousands of people will try to leave the cities and urban centres anyway, and we cannot stop them. We point out what the difficulties and problems are and we make it possible for the municipalities to do their planning for this. We also warn, as we did at the time of exercise Tocsin in November, that those who move should move only if they have arranged their destination in advance. If that were not arranged for it would be quite impossible to have an effective evacuation policy. Instead of a policy of evacuation there would be simply a policy of annihilation. It would bring about a degree of panic that would only serve to add to the dangerous situation prevailing following an attack.

In speaking most frankly on this subject permit me to say I very much appreciate the expression of the views on the part of those who have participated in this debate. I assure them, the committee and the country that I am fully convinced of the importance of this decision. As the Leader of the Opposition has stated it is one of those agonizing decisions that have to be made from time to time. In this matter we have no past experience. All we do is not in the nature of action based on experience but is anticipatory action founded on experiment.

Expenses of the committee of inquiry into the Unemployment Insurance Act including the payment, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, of honoraria or allowances as may be authorized by the treasury board to officers, clerks or employees permanently employed in the civil service for services rendered by them to the committee, $75,000.

Mr. Herridge: Will the Prime Minister tell the committee when he expects this committee to report?

Mr. Diefenbaker: According to information from the chairman of the committee, no definite date has been fixed, but it is expected some time later this year.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes the supplementary estimates relating to the privy council and also completes our consideration of supplementary estimates No. 3.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

Mr. Nowlan (for the Minister of Finance) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1962, the sum of $153,270,929, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Nowlan (for the Minister of Finance) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-78 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1962.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave, now.

Mr. Nowlan (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Before this bill passes second reading, Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say that it covers the third set of supplementary estimates that have been presented to the house this session and we also have No. 4 to deal with at some time in the near future. This group recognizes the need for supplementary estimates. Under present circumstances or indeed under any circumstances it is impossible accurately to judge the amount that will be required for the full year, owing to changing circumstances and conditions. However, we wonder why there have been four lists of supplementary estimates which have contributed to a lengthening of debate. In my opinion this procedure provokes debate unnecessarily. In the opinion of this group the time consumed in debate on supplementary estimates would be shortened if we could have them consolidated more than has been the case during this session. For instance, we have had No. 3 and No. 4 presented here in close succession. I make this suggestion in order to save the time of the house in future sessions. Without a doubt the continuous introduction of supplementary estimates provokes debate and extends the time which is required to deal with these matters.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I am greatly tempted by what the hon. member has said, Mr. Speaker, but I will resist the temptation until the fourth bill comes along when I hope to say something more extensive along the same lines.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the parliamentary secretary should give the usual assurance.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I shall be glad to assure the committee that this bill is in the customary form for appropriation acts giving approval to supplementary estimates. It is in that form which has become standard and which is well known to the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the schedule corresponds precisely with the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, the schedule corresponds precisely to the supplementary estimates No. 3 which have just been adopted in committee of supply.

Mr. Herridge: May I congratulate the parliamentary secretary on having the opportunity to perform this onerous duty on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Peters: Just before the bill carries may I say this. I am curious about this matter. This appropriation bill was prepared in this form and the date on it is February 12. I am just curious to know whether it is the intention that there can be no changes in the supplementary estimates and that the only thing that could happen is that they are accepted in the form in which they are presented and that there can be no modification in them, or whether it means that this bill would have been changed if there had been any modifications.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is simply a draft bill which was prepared on that date. When bills are drafted a date is stamped thereon. Had changes been made by the committee of supply of course there would have been changes in the bill. A new draft would have been prepared and it would have had a new and later date.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might say perhaps that there would have been a new government also.

Bill reported.

Mr. Nowlan moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister not going to divide the house?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

675. Departmental administration—further amount required, $77,500.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, we on this side were gratified to hear the announcement of the Acting Minister of Agriculture that the government plans to reduce the price of butter by about 12 cents per pound and thereby endeavour to assist the country with regard to the record surplus that has been accumulated over the last four years. We wish that this action could have been taken a long while ago. We do not understand clearly, of course, the details of the plan in mind, but we would remind the committee that on January 19 last we on this side directed a question to the Prime Minister asking whether a request had been received from farm representatives for a consumer butter subsidy of 14 cents a pound in order to dispose of the large stocks of butter. I do not believe the Prime Minister ever answered, although there was some statement by the Secretary of State which did touch on this subject.

On January 23 in the debate on the speech from the throne I asked for an immediate consumer subsidy of 14 cents a pound so that butter might be put on the market at 50 cents per pound, hoping that this would permit the large accumulated surplus to be dissipated and that over the course of a few weeks or months it might be possible to let market forces operate so that supply and demand would apply without loss to the producer, who is struggling right now because of the price of 64 cents. I pointed out that consumption of butter has dropped to 15.1 pounds per person in Canada from 19.5 pounds over a very short period and that with the present population of Canada all we need is consumption of approximately 20 pounds of butter per person per year to balance supply and demand.

We consider butter important because it has a critical influence on all dairy commodities. We have taken the view that since the government put the price of butter at 64 cents, just prior to the 1958 general election, the effect has been to channel the dairy surplus of approximately 3 per cent into this one commodity, a commodity which unfortunately had to meet the new challenge of alternative products and also the challenge of the criticism with regard to cholesterol content and of the various directions that were being given by certain medical authorities at the time against the use of butter. I believe there has been a substantial shift in the point of view and we read with encouragement what has taken place in the United States as late as February of this year. Time of February 2, 1962, indicates that the United States has followed other countries like Great Britain and France with a very aggressive dairy program.

We on this side feel that there is no area of agriculture facing a more difficult problem in the immediate future and probably for the next few years until our population, which does not now have the stimulus of immigration but only of natural increase, has built up to a position where our consumption of dairy products will match increased efficiency on the farm in their production, even with a substantial decline in farm families. This matter was brought before the session of the national Liberal policy council on January 30, 1962. That council accepted the proposition that the government should use either a consumer subsidy or a deficiency payment to the producer to get rid of our butter surplus. We do not know whether the figure suggested in this statement—

[Mr. Matheson.]

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it is now five o'clock. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SENATE REPRESENTATION

On the order:

January 22—Second reading of Bill C-28, an act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960, with respect to representation in the Senate—Mr. Nielsen.

Mr. Speaker: Before placing this bill before the house, may I comment on it briefly. Bill No. C-28 seeks to amend the British North America Act by providing for two additional senators, presumably representative of the Northwest Territories. The consequence of creating two additional senators would be that they would be paid, as senators are paid, under the Senate and House of Commons Act.

The problem, namely that the bill may be a money bill and perhaps should have been preceded by a resolution has come to my attention rather late. I have not come to a conclusion and I wonder if the hon. member, in whose name the bill stands, would permit it to stand and the house would permit it to stand in its present priority while further consideration is given to the point.

Mr. Nielsen: I have no objection to that course, Mr. Speaker, if the house would give its unanimous consent.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was just going to say that we on this side of the house are quite agreeable to the course Your Honour is suggesting, and apparently the hon. member directly concerned also agrees.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the house for giving me an opportunity to come to a rather firmer conclusion before the measure is proceeded with. I take it this is at the request of the government, if I may put it that way.

MERCHANT SEAMEN COMPENSATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS FOR ORPHANS OF SEAMEN

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo) moved the second reading of Bill C-39, to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

He said: This bill, Mr. Speaker, is so simple that there is not much need to say a lot about it. It seeks to improve the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act in so far as orphans are concerned, and though it is a simple bill nevertheless it is a very important one for the people in my province. As hon. members know, many people there get their livelihood from the sea but every year the sea takes its toll and children are left fatherless.

As the act stands at the moment, if a seaman leaves no widow, or if the widow subsequently dies, the care and maintenance of the orphans constitutes a claim against the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act. The act provides for the children to be taken care of by relatives or foster parents who must, of course, be satisfactory persons in the judgment of the administering board. Unfortunately, however, for some reason I have never been able to discover, the act provides that orphans cannot receive the maximum benefit unless the relatives or foster parents move into the house that was actually occupied by the orphans' parents.

There does not seem to be any necessity for this restricting provision in the act. I cannot see that it serves any good purpose and it places a handicap both upon the orphans and the people looking after them. In many cases the home of the foster parents may be much better and more comfortable than the original home of the orphans but, as I say, when the orphans move into the foster parents' home they cannot receive the maximum allowance provided by the terms of the act. It is to remove that handicap that I have introduced this bill.

All it seeks to do is to give to orphans and foster parents the same benefits as they would receive if they were living in the deceased parents' home and I hope the bill will commend itself to all hon. members.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): One is most reluctant, Mr. Speaker, to contend with authorship in private members' hour. The hon. member who has brought this matter to the attention of the house has contended in his remarks that this is a simple matter of legislation but I question whether it is altogether adequately described by that. In so doing I hasten, however, to assure the hon. member and the house that which I think we all share, namely an understanding of and a regret for the men who ply their trade upon the sea and, as the hon. gentleman said, the sea taking its toll, leaving behind dependants for whose care and provision surely parliament desires as adequately as it properly can to provide.

However the amendment which is proposed, in my view, is not wholly satisfactory in its present form. To introduce my comments upon it perhaps it may be useful to those hon. members of the house whose other duties are so onerous that they have not a close awareness of the history of this legislation, if I set the matter briefly upon the record.

The merchant seamen compensation regulations of 1945 were issued by order of the governor in council made on July 17, 1945, under P.C. 4755. They were subsequently deemed to have been revoked on August 31, 1946, and for the purposes of section 19 of the Interpretation Act, an act respecting compensation for merchant seamen was deemed to have been substituted for those earlier regulations. That act, which is now before us, is chapter 178 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, amended by chapter 16 of the acts of 1952-53 and by chapter 9 of the acts of 1957, assented to on March 28, 1957.

Mr. Speaker, what would the amendment before us seek to do? The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) would seek to amend section 30(2) of the present legislation in order to empower the merchant seamen compensation board to name as foster mother someone who would take care of a child or children of a deceased seaman in another home, not the existing household of the deceased seaman or of the deceased seaman's family. This amendment would have the effect of entitling the foster mother to the widow's pension of $75 a month as long as she was caring for the children up to the age of 18 years, or in the case of an invalid child, beyond that age. That would be the situation if the seaman died leaving no widow.

Normally under section 30 of the present act the merchant seaman compensation board would pay the $75 monthly to a suitable person who moved into the existing household to care for the children. The idea behind the present section seems to be that the children could be better brought up in the home to which they had become accustomed. There would not be a separation, which would have the effect of only adding to the loss of the father.

Two things might happen if the hon. gentleman's amendment were immediately acceptable. Let us first take the case of a seaman who dies leaving children who are not subject to compensation; that is, able, non-invalid children aged 18 and over. What would become of them if, as the proposed amendment would allow, children up to the age of 18 were enabled to be removed to the care of a foster mother in another household and be subject to compensation; what would become of the children aged 18 and over who would not be subject to compensation? Is the hon. gentleman who proposes the bill satisfied that this would not mean the division of the families of seamen?

Indeed, what would be the case in regard to those children eligible for compensation who are removed from their home into another household? Would their interests not perhaps become compromised by being shared with the interests of children of that foster mother, children native to the household to which the children subject to compensation are to be removed?

Mr. Speaker, let us see what is done under somewhat comparable legislation; let us consider the provincial workmen's compensation act. Most provincial workmen's compensation acts appear to me to have a section similar to the one which is incorporated in our present Merchant Seamen Compensation Act. I understand that Saskatchewan interprets its provisions in such a way as to allow the existing household to be regarded in the sense of being within the family, rather than strictly within the physical building. So that I understand the province of Saskatchewan, under its provincial compensation act will, other factors being permissive, allow full widow's pension to a foster mother in another household if it considers this to be in the interests of the children.

Manitoba also pays the foster mother the widow's pension as long as the workmen's compensation board in that province considers the children are being satisfactorily maintained in the foster mother's home.

British Columbia appears to me to be enabled by its practices to pay the pension to a person such as a maiden aunt if the children are moved into that person's home. In Newfoundland, the very beautiful native province of the hon. gentleman who introduced this bill, I understand that they do not hold strictly to the term "existing household". Like Saskatchewan, a foster mother can live elsewhere and can qualify for compensation.

The other provincial workmen's compensation boards, to the best of my knowledge, hold to the rule that the existing household must be maintained by a foster mother if she is to receive monthly compensation. Section 30(2) of the present act seems to me to be predicated upon the basis of a positive desire to maintain the existing household.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo says he has not been able to discern why this is kept in the act. I can only say that my reading of the history of this legislation would indicate to me, and I hope rightly, that there is a positive intent in the act—it has not come in accidentally—to preserve the seaman's household.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman accept a question?

Mr. Morris: Yes.

Mr. Carter: Is the hon. gentleman taking the position that the interests of the child should not come uppermost and that a judgment must be made as to whether the interests of the child are best served by maintaining the existing household or by moving that child into another household? To my mind the interests of the child or children should be the guiding factor.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that the hon. gentleman is asking me if I have stopped beating my wife. I am trying to portray here an interest in the child, but it can be portrayed in a different way. I pointed out earlier—the hon. gentleman was sitting there; I do not know whether he was ossified—that the child who was being taken out of the household might be done harm—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us not lose our tempers, now.

Mr. Morris: I am not. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) says, "Let us not lose our tempers". I have no intention of losing my temper. I simply said that the interests of the child can be preserved in other ways. I might also add that it is pleasant to see the hon. member for Essex East back in the house. Section 30(2) of the act—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not been here for a long time.

Mr. Morris: —says that in order for the foster mother to qualify she must keep up the existing household and she must maintain and take care of the children entitled to compensation. In this situation the foster mother now would appear to receive $75 a month plus $25 for each child entitled to compensation. If this situation does not exist and the child leaves the existing household, then the child would become eligible for the orphan's rate of $35 a month. The whole purpose of section 30(2) seems to me to be to maintain the existing household. If someone also keeps up the existing household, either moving in from outside or being already there, then that person is in the same position as the mother. This provision would seem also to have in mind that for the benefit of the children whatever was existing in the way of a household should be continued. The hon. member asks: do I place the priority of the interest of this child above the other interests. I say in answer to that that there can be no dispute between us. However, we do not share the same opinion as the best way of ensuring the object we have in mind. I believe that the present legislation is intended to preserve the interest of the child by preserving that which is known to the child, by not running the risk of dividing the family.

Mr. Carter: Does the hon. member think that the foster parents should be penalized in cases where the existing household cannot be preserved?

Mr. Morris: Perhaps if the hon. gentleman would allow me to complete the few remarks I have to make he would understand more clearly what I am trying to say.

The proposed amendment does not take into consideration the continuance of the existing household. That is the whole objection of the hon. gentleman who introduced it. It does require that prior to the time of the death a domestic establishment was maintained for the child or children entitled to compensation. There is nothing which says it should be condemned. I maintain that this amendment defeats the whole purpose of the legislation and, indeed, encourages the dissolution of the previously maintained domestic establishment. It simply ceases to exist as a unit. This is the purpose of the present section.

I am sure there are other hon. gentlemen who wish to participate in this debate. I will, therefore, not compromise their time by dwelling upon the sections to which our attention was drawn by the hon. member in his explanation of the proposed bill, wherein he recommends a close reading of sections of the Pension Act. I wish to summarize my views on this matter by saying that I believe that both the Pension Act and the act we are now considering are at one in their desire to preserve the household. I submit that the concept of the household is as much an underlying factor in the present Pension Act as it is in the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act. If the proposed amendments, devoid of the household factor, were to become law, then section 30(3) would permit the payment of a lump sum of $200 to a foster mother who keeps up the existing household. It would permit that payment now only to a foster mother outside that household only if she keeps up the existing household. With the greatest care may I draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the hon. member's amendment would also appear to me to make it possible to take a seaman's children, subject to compensation, and place them in an orphanage, when the orphanage would be entitled to compensation.

We in this house have the highest regard for all those people across Canada who, in the absence of a family connection or a relative in a position to act as a foster parent, voluntarily, and under the grace of God, assume the functions of parents by taking care of children who were in public orphanages. However, none of us would strenuously argue that that was more desirable than that they be left with a fellow human of their own family.

I take the view, in summary, that the present act may not be as bad as the hon. gentleman portrays it. I did, in reading the act, find other sections of it which appeared to me to require further study. I noticed, for instance, that section 12 of the present act states:

> The right to compensation provided by this act is in lieu of all rights and rights of action, statutory or otherwise, to which a seaman or his dependants are or may be entitled against the employer of such seaman for or by reason of any accident happening to him while in the employment of such employer, and no action in respect thereof lies.

I should like to have the merchant seamen's compensation board study this particular section. I am not a solicitor, but I find it just a little beyond my recognition as a matter which perhaps denies people rights which they should possess. Similarly, I think sections 14 and 18 require clarification. What I am saying is this: I think the intent of the hon. gentleman's amendment is one with which we can all agree, but when he says that this matter is one concerning the deprivation of children, let me tell him that I have taken the precaution of consulting the board about this and the board assures me that no case has come up for consideration in which the settlement of the children has not been satisfactorily arranged or, if it has, they are not aware of it. I do not make this point as an argument against the hon. member but I do think it removes the urgency. The board says there has been no case in which satisfactory arrangements have not been made. Where there was no foster mother available to live with the children the usual arrangements have been that the child or children have gone out to live with relatives, in which case the orphan's allowance of $35 a month was paid to the relative by the company which had employed the seaman. Not the widow's allowance, however; she did not receive the allowance unless she came into the seaman's household and preserved it, and preserved the family as a compact unit.

Further, I suggest that the attention of the merchant seamen's compensation board should be drawn to this debate—and no doubt this will be done—in the hope that the board will consider the points of view which have been expressed, and that it will perhaps consider making a further study of other parts of the act. Then, if it sees fit, it can make appropriate recommendations to the minister concerned, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr).

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): In rising to take part in this debate today I think I might be wise first of all to dispel the surprise, or what might be the puzzlement on the part of some hon. members, as to why a member from Edmonton, Alberta, where we do not have any seamen at the present time engaged in the fishing industry, should be taking part in this debate.

If the house would bear with me and consider it relevant, I might perhaps explain that all my life seamen have been a topic of conversation in my house, because my mother came from Fox Harbour, Placentia bay, Newfoundland, and my father came from Kelligrews, just outside St. John's. From my earliest days, therefore, I became well acquainted with the tales of hardship and struggle on the sea and what happens to the families when disaster strikes. In fact, my interest goes a little further than that, inasmuch as I still have throughout Newfoundland and in many other parts of that coastal area first cousins, second cousins and so on engaged in the fishing industry. Further, I have had the pleasure of visiting Newfoundland, all too briefly I must confess, but I was most impressed with the hardihood of the fisher folk there. I must confess, too, I was a little depressed at not finding that evidence of wealth which I would like to have seen enjoyed by the very fine people I met and talked to there. It is, therefore, a very personal interest I take in this because of family and personal associations with these people engaged in the industry, as well as the normal interest of a member of parliament, when we are discussing legislation which is predominantly concerned with dependant children of those who are not fortunate enough to be able to look after their offspring.

In listening to the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo who introduced this bill I must say I felt he had an excellent point in attempting to cover any possible emergency which might arise or which might in some manner or other preclude some children from receiving the full benefits of the legislation, all the money that is available for this assistance. I know that in any case where the breadwinner is gone—and it is especially true in cases such as this where both parents are gone—it is difficult to imagine that the compensation, even if those concerned can take full advantage of the measure, is sufficient to adequately compensate those who remain. Despite what has been said I am not convinced that if this bill were passed it would really have the effect of improving the lot of the child in these circumstances. Although some additional benefit might be made possible under the legislation this amendment might psychologically open the door to harmful effects which I know is not the intention of the sponsor of the bill.

I do not pretend to be a psychologist but we hear more and more every day about the results of psychological studies. The factors and influences which are essential in the upbringing of a youngster to provide him with a sense of security and belonging, which seem to be the basic traits that contribute to good citizenship, most psychologists appear to agree, are those to be found in a constructive home atmosphere, and the family unit appears to be the best environment in which to foster these elements. Although not intended to have this effect the amendment in application would I think tend to destroy rather than increase family units and this causes me some concern.

Under the existing legislation the compensation is paid to the person who takes the place of the head of the family and maintains the household. The hon. member in saying that they had to move into the same house was, I think, construing the term "household" somewhat narrowly. In my view the words "maintaining the household" do not necessarily mean that they have to live in the same house. Surely what is intended is that "household" means, above all, the family unit. Surely the reference is to the association with the other children. Surely reference is made to the family as a cohesive unit together with personal articles including furniture, and a home if there is one. Essentially, however, in my contention "household" means the family unit. I do not think we must insist that they occupy the same house.

We are dealing here with children who have lost both parents. I am sure all of us know families in which either or both parents is gone. The loss of even one parent is a severe psychological shock to the family. Depending on the age of the children, the loss of the mother is sometimes the most severe shock. Often, too, in families where older boys require firm discipline the loss of the father will have a most disconcerting influence. I am sure all will agree that the loss of both parents, leaving orphan children, is a severe shock indeed and I believe we must tread warily and not fail to recognize the significant consequences of further disruption in the family. We must try to provide every encouragement to maintain these families as units so they will have a sense of belonging when they have experienced a severe blow through the loss of both parents.

I do not think the argument I am presenting is without precedent. While the bill before us seeks to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act there are other compensation and pension acts in all the provinces across Canada dealing with the unfortunate families of those who are bereaved through loss of a parent by an industrial accident or other means. If we examine those measures and the manner in which they are administered I think we will find that emphasis is placed on maintaining the unity of the family. The effect of the proposed amendment would be to deviate from the legislative enactments in this field across Canada.

That, however, is not the main point. In considering these matters I believe the emphasis should be on maintaining the family unit. In other words, as the minister might put it, we do not live by bread alone. Merely securing the maximum financial assistance for each child is not necessarily the most important factor, although I do not underestimate its importance. We must consider the maximum amount of good we can do for these orphans, no matter what form it takes. I hope hon. members do not interpret my remarks as meaning that in this instance we should take the inexpensive way out and fail to make available as much assistance as possible. I invite hon. members to consider the fact that what is done in the provinces, legislatively, need not necessarily be done on the federal level. There is no essential need for the action of one government to match that of another.

I do suggest, however, that in the provincial compensation and pension acts we have had the benefit of the considered opinion of legislators across the country and the benefit of the experience of those administering these measures. This should offer some guidance as to the most effective means of dealing with this problem.

I suggest, therefore, that when we consider making a departure as radical as I suggest this is, we must consider the custom, procedure and usage that has been tried and proved. I do not wish to be unfair to the hon. member who sponsored this bill but I suggest we must not be reckless in considering a bill of this nature. We must do all we can to encourage the maintenance of the family unit. Surely it is more important to keep the family unit intact than merely to provide additional financial assistance, important though that is.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question. Does the hon. member not keep in mind that this bill does not relieve the board of their responsibilities to see that the family unit is maintained, where it can be maintained? That is the responsibility of the board. It appears that the hon. member seems to have lost sight of that fact. This bill does not interfere with that responsibility in any way.

Mr. Nugent: I quite appreciate that fact. I hope my comment was not unfair to the hon. member. I will try to rephrase it. It is simply this. I merely refer to the act as it was, section 2, where it states "and it seems desirable to continue the existing household." When the board is considering the possibility of keeping the household together, I am sure that these hon. gentlemen when they are dealing with these matters have the welfare of the child very much at heart. But I am directing attention to the psychological influence of the board having to consider further the fact that we have put more emphasis on money than we have on the family unit. In other words, by giving greater scope and more possibilities to pay increased money if the family unit is broken up, you take away some of the pressure which normally is there to keep that family unit together.

I am not sure how effective this proposal is. The parliamentary secretary from Halifax mentioned that this situation had not arisen. I hope it does not arise. Perhaps there is much worry about very little. However, whether or not there has been an actual case, the principle about which I am speaking, namely, the emphasis on keeping together the family unit, this method of caring for the welfare of orphans, cannot be overemphasized. We must be extremely careful not to put the emphasis on pure money matters and so detract from what I consider to be the most important principle in caring for the welfare of these children and maintaining the family unit.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo when he spoke on this bill said there was no need to say much. I suppose it is against the rules—if I had a chance to know what he was going to say the situation might have been different—but I wish he could have dealt a little bit more fully with this matter. While I said to the house that I am not disinterested personally in fishermen, I realize that my connection is a distant and a rather tenuous one. It may very well be that he is more familiar with these hardy people. It may well be that the children who are orphans of fishermen in Newfoundland, having always lived more rugged lives than apparently we are obliged to live on the prairies and having perhaps grown up in the shadow of the fear that their father at least might be taken away by the sea at any time, have a more grown up approach. It is possible that the psychological effect of this environment, the means by which their parents earned a living, the way in which they became accustomed to so many widows and perhaps orphans being around, has itself left them psychologically in a much different frame of mind. It is possible that the hon. member who introduced this bill has a better understanding of the particular type of people about whom he is talking.

In considering anything I have said I trust that hon. members will not discount the possibility that it is perhaps presumptuous of me, one who comes from the prairies, to speak.

[Mr. Nugent.]

It is easily possible that those who live by the sea and who work day in and day out with seafaring people will find that I am trying to judge them exactly as I would Canadians in other parts of the country and that I have not paid enough attention to the environmental influences. If I am wrong in this matter I trust that some member from one of the coastal areas will straighten the house out, if I have led it astray in any way.

Mr. John Smith (Lincoln): In rising to speak briefly on this bill, Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to congratulate the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo who saw fit to bring this matter to our attention. I may say that I appreciate many of the things the hon. member has done over the past few years. He is one who has always been ready to speak on behalf of those who were obliged to face the perils of the sea, namely our fishermen and our merchant seamen. It is quite fitting that he should bring this bill to our attention at the present time.

Coming as I do from the banana belt, as it is often called, in the Niagara peninsula I fully realize that it is perhaps not too appropriate for me to discuss too deeply the merits of this bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Does my hon. friend not know that the banana belt is in southwestern Ontario, Essex county in particular?

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): We have the banana belt. In any event, if we wish to get along with this bill, I think perhaps we had better begin to discuss it. However, before doing so I should just like to mention this fact. Over the years this government, like other governments, has introduced many measures to make seafaring, both on the ocean and on the great lakes, much safer than it used to be. I was very happy this year to note that we brought in a measure to provide coast guard service for Canada, something that we have needed for a long time.

As far as the bill is concerned may I say this. It certainly has a great deal of merit. It brings to our attention a problem which arises in the riding from which the sponsor of the bill comes more than it does in mine. However, I do not feel that we should move too quickly on it. I think it is a matter to which we should give a great deal of attention. After all, the first intention of the act is to preserve the integrity of the family home or to keep the family together. I would be inclined to feel that by broadening it out as far as the hon. member proposes, we might find there would be a tendency to break up those family homes rather than to keep them together. If surviving children are required to move into a foster home, they could be moving into an institution, as we know that foster homes are often not confined to one particular family. Oftentimes you will find several families in them. That is one thing about which we must be very careful.

I do not think that we should move too quickly in this matter. I feel that we should certainly keep the family home together. However, I also realize that, in communities such as the one from which I come, the standard of living is probably among the highest in Canada. When one looks at $75 a month for the foster mother and $25 a month for the children, one just wonders how they could make ends meet in keeping a home together. That is another reason why I think this act should be given a great deal more study rather than trying to pass this bill as it is at this time.

There is also the question whether the home might have a mortgage on it which it would be impossible for the foster mother to pay off. These are all matters that should be taken into consideration before we proceed to amend the act. As set out in the bill, suggestions have been made already that perhaps the merchant seamen compensation board should take a good look at the matter before any changes are made. I agree with this, and I feel that if we went into the bill a little more thoroughly as we should we might find other provisions that should be changed slightly. While the bill has a great deal of merit and is one I could support in principle, nevertheless I think there are a lot more details that should be worked out before we give it final approval. Again I wish to compliment the hon. member for bringing this matter to our attention.

Mr. W. H. Payne (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words with respect to Bill No. C-39. I think it would be proper to say that those from the west coast of Canada must regard with a great deal of sympathy the purpose and intent of the mover of the bill, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. I am sure that the situation he finds on the Newfoundland coast is not entirely different from that on the Pacific coast.

There was one note thrown into the discussion today that gives me some concern. Basically we are dealing with the dependants of merchant seamen and not with fishermen. We are also dealing with people rather than legal terms and I think it is very important we should keep in mind that in the rehabilitation and settling of orphan children, whether they be on the seashore or inland, the prime environment which will best establish and guarantee their future development as citizens who will be a credit to the nation and themselves is the family. The basis of the existing legislation ties this adjustment entirely to property and certainly not to the family unit. I endorse and approve the spirit of the amendment and I am certain those who inhabit the Pacific coastal region and who are familiar with the plight of orphans in some of our remote outposts will also concur in the intent of the amendment. However, I do feel, not being trained in any way as a solicitor, more than somewhat confused by the wording. I think it leaves the bill open to a great deal of misconstruing and errors of interpretation.

I am sure it would be the wish of those living in the coastal area in my part of the country that we should look not only at the suggestion brought forward in this amendment but should also give some thought generally to the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act. I refer more particularly to the merchant seamen compensation board which, as I am sure all hon. members know, is composed of three officers of the public service of Canada. In my view this whole matter should be reviewed and surely any review should contemplate the establishment of a board with appointees from other than the public service. I think there are great advantages to be gained by orphans and others who benefit under the act. I could continue at great length, Mr. Speaker, but I see it is six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that it is six o'clock? It is very close to it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, a message is expected from the other place. Perhaps by unanimous consent hon. members would agree to sit beyond the hour. Otherwise we might rise and return.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we might take advantage of this little lull in our proceedings to ascertain from the leader of the house what business it is proposed we shall deal with on Monday. Possibly when the leader is speaking he might indicate not only what we are going to do on Monday but what he envisages we might do all next week. I would even go further and suggest that he might tell us what we are going to do up until April 6, which may be a very decisive date.

Mr. Churchill: If things happen on April 6 such as are anticipated by the hon. member, the decisive date will be later.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, but that would be the beginning.

Mr. Churchill: I am not looking forward with too great pleasure to the end of my hon. friend's association with this house but there are some here who might appreciate it. On Monday we propose dealing with the following items under government orders which we had hoped to get at much earlier. The first item will be No. 10 on today's order paper, the setting up of a select committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Speaker. The second item will be No. 6, the resolution in my name dealing with amendments to the Veterans Land Act. The third will be second reading of Bill No. C-75, an act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The fourth item will be second reading of Bill No. C-38 dealing with financial and other statistics. That would be the business for Monday. We will see what progress we make. If possible I should like to carry on with legislation on Tuesday; then on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday deal with dispatch with the final supplementaries for the fiscal year which is just about terminating; and then the normal interim supply for one month, which is the customary procedure at the end of March.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I may make a comment, I am rather amazed that the government leader should indicate that if we should finish these various items we may deal toward the end of the week with supply, in the hope that there will be some dispatch with regard to supply because of the approach of the end of the month. That statement rather amazes me in the light of the fact that the first item we are going to discuss on Monday is a resolution that encompasses consideration of the closure rule when what the hon. gentleman has just proposed now is one of the most effective forms of closure I have ever heard suggested in this house, namely, that we should take supply in the dying days of the month in the hope that it will be passed before the end of the month in order to pay for salaries and the like. I suggest that is a form of closure that is not worthy of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Fulton: You were a past master of the practice in your days.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Justice cannot withhold comment.

Mr. Fulton: When such inaccurate statements are made they have to be corrected.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would suggest to the hon. leader of the house, who is more understanding in these matters than the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Fulton: And than you.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that I hope in view of this order of business which the government is imposing on us, the Minister of Finance will not be encouraged to repeat the speech he made the other day when he said that unless we passed the supplementary estimates by such and such a time people were going to go without their salaries and the like. I hope it will not be the case, when we have to engage in the discussion that we must have on the supplementary estimates, that the Minister of Finance will not again rise in that unctuous way which he can adopt when he wants to or chooses to, and that the estimates will receive the consideration to which they are entitled.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I want to say—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fulton: We have had enough of this.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps in the interval of waiting for Black Rod there is no more entertaining way of passing the time than listening to the hon. member for Essex East, but I am afraid his remarks are going a little bit beyond what is proper in asking the house leader about the business for next week.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was provoked.

Mr. Speaker: Enticed is the word.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not get a chance.

Mr. Speaker: We might suspend the sitting without leaving the house until the Gentleman Usher arrives.

Mr. Herridge: I rise for the purpose of expressing my concurrence in the statesmanlike approach taken by the main agricultural spokesman for the opposition. I support his stand and his criticism of the government for introducing this legislation at this late date, when we all know there is a necessity to pass these supplementary estimates as expeditiously as possible. There is no necessity for me to repeat the excellent exposition of the situation placed before the house by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Churchill: This is what the former Liberal government did. It dealt with the final supplementaries on the last day of March.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Never.

Mr. Churchill: The record shows that very clearly and I shall give that record on Monday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish to observe again—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest we suspend our discussion.

POWER

NEW BRUNSWICK—ASSISTANCE IN CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FACILITIES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like to inform the house that under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, the governor general in council has approved a request of the New Brunswick power commission for financial assistance in the construction of new facilities at an estimated cost of $13,150,000.

Three projects are involved. The largest, estimated to cost $10 million, is a 60 megawatt extension to the Grand lake thermal station. This new unit will burn exclusively eastern coal from the Minto field in New Brunswick. The extension will meet the expected growth in demand for electric power in New Brunswick over the next two years.

The second project, estimated to cost $3,000,000, involves the construction of a 138 kilovolt transmission line over about 90 miles between Moncton and Saint John. This link in the 138 kilovolt grid will make it possible to meet increased demand for power in the Moncton area from the recently completed thermal station in East Saint John.

The third project is associated with the second; it involves the expenditure of about $150,000 to extend the Moncton terminal station to handle the power coming in over the new line.

Financing required for these projects in the forthcoming fiscal year has been included in the 1962-63 estimates, and will come before the house in due course.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the population of New Brunswick will welcome this announcement made by the minister showing co-operation between the New Brunswick electric power commission and the federal department. The most important part of the announcement is certainly the $10 million approved for the extension of the Grand lake power generating station. We welcome the decision of the New Brunswick electric power commission to use New Brunswick coal to generate power. We hope that this practice will be followed in other areas in the maritimes, as it has the dual purpose of providing cheap electric power for Atlantic provinces industries and at the same time providing assistance to our coal miners.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group are happy with the announcement that has been made by the minister. We note that the taxpayers' money is being used to help power development in the Atlantic provinces. We have also observed in the past that it is being used to help in the case of the Saskatchewan river development. We would like to think that this government would alter its offer to the government of British Columbia—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not within our practice in going beyond the announcement that has been made.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

APPROVAL OF REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS—COMMUNICATION FROM MRS. L. LANK

Question No. 279—Mr. Herridge:

Have any communications been received from Mrs. L. Lank, 5322 Snowdon street, Montreal 29, P.Q., concerning bankruptcy proceedings; and, if so, what was the gist of these communications, and what replies, if any, have been made?

Answer by: Mr. Fulton:

Mr. Speaker, there has been a considerable exchange of correspondence between Mrs. L. Lank and the Department of Justice concerning the bankruptcy of Ralph W. Macdonald and Harold Johnson of Montreal trading as Packaging Specialty Company. In this correspondence Mrs. Lank complained about delays and other irregularities on the part of the trustee. These complaints were inquired into by the superintendent of bankruptcy and found to be unwarranted. Mrs. Lank was advised that any irregularities antecedent to the bankruptcy, or not involving the trustee, were matters for private advice or, if criminal behaviour was involved, for the attention of the provincial authorities.

SMALL POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION IN NEXT FISCAL YEAR

Question No. 305—Mr. Racine:

How many small post offices does the Department of Public Works intend to build in the course of the next fiscal year, and where; and for each place, what are the operating revenue or deficit, and the population served?

Answer by: Mr. MacLean (Queens):

Mr. Speaker, a program for the construction of small post office buildings is now being planned with work to be carried out during the winter season in 1962-63. The site locations for these buildings are now being investigated but until final decisions are made regarding the sites it will not be possible to give the detailed locations. The information requested will therefore not be available for another four or five months.

*TARIFF BOARD HEARING ON ENGINEERING DRAWINGS, ETC.

1. What was the date of the Minister of Finance's reference to the tariff board in regard to engineering drawings, blueprints, etc.?
2. When did the tariff board complete their hearings on this matter?
3. Has the report of the tariff board been received by the minister; and, if not, when is this report likely to be tabled?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the three parts of this question are as follows:

1. July 8, 1960.

2. February 15, 1961.

3. The report in question will be tabled within 15 days of its receipt, pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act.

*SYDNEY MINES, N.S.—WAGES PAID FREIGHT HANDLERS

Question No. 312—Mr. Herridge:

1. Has the Minister of Transport received a letter from the Princess local union of the united mine workers of America, of Sydney Mines, N.S. protesting the low wages paid to the employees of the Northside freight handlers association, subcontractors of the C.N.R.?
2. If so, will representations be made to the C.N.R. to ensure that it lets work out on subcontract only to employers who pay according to acceptable union wage scales; and, what answer has been made to the letter?

Mr. Martini: Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is yes.

With regard to part 2, as this is a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the Canadian National Railways the only action open to the minister is to transmit the representations to the management of the railways. The reply made to the letter stated that the representations had been carefully noted but that as the subject was one for the Canadian National Railways the communication had been immediately referred to the management.

*CLAIMANTS RECEIVING UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

Question No. 313—Mr. Deschatelets:

2. M.V. Federal Maple, August 4, 1961; M.V. Federal Palm, September 1, 1961.

2. Which provinces do such members respectively represent?
3. How many vacancies have occurred since 1957?
4. Give the name, address and qualifications of those appointed to fill such vacancies.

Mr. Jorgenson: The answer is as follows:

1. Four.

2. Commissioners of the Canadian wheat board do not represent individual provinces. The Canadian Wheat Board Act defines the object of the board as the "marketing in an orderly manner, in interprovincial and export trade, of grain grown in Canada". In carrying out this function the board undertakes to market on behalf of producers wheat, oats and barley grown in the designated area of western Canada and offered by producers for sale.

3. The Canadian Wheat Board Act provides for the appointment by the governor in council of not less than three nor more than five commissioners. At no time have there been five commissioners serving on the board. Since 1957 there have been two resignations and two appointments.

Order for Return

4. Mr. J. T. Dallas was appointed a commissioner September 1, 1958 and resigned December 31, 1960, Mr. J. B. Lawrie was appointed a commissioner December 22, 1961. Prior to their appointments Mr. Dallas was executive vice president of the Continental Grain Company, Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Mr. Lawrie was European manager of the Canadian wheat board, London, England. Both these gentlemen, because of their successful association over many years with the Canadian grain trade in executive capacities, were eminently qualified to assume the responsibilities of commissioners of the Canadian wheat board.

*CHIGNECTO CANAL COMMITTEE MEETING WITH CABINET

Question No. 323—Mr. McWilliam:

Has the Prime Minister received a request for a meeting between himself, other members of the cabinet, and the Chignecto canal committee; and, if so, has a time and place been set for this meeting?

Mr. Diefenbaker: This subject has been discussed, but no definite date has been fixed for a meeting with the Chignecto canal committee. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) is the chairman of the Chignecto canal committee of the maritime provinces and has discussed the matter with me and with other members of the cabinet. Today Brigadier Wardell of Fredericton, who has taken a great interest in this matter, is in Ottawa, and I hope later today to see him.

*ROADS TO RESOURCES GRANTS, ONTARIO

Question No. 333—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Did the government of Ontario, between January 1, 1961 and March 12, 1962, ask the federal government to provide, under the "roads to resources" agreement, dated December 22, 1959, for the fiscal year March 31, 1962 to March 31, 1963, an amount greater than $750,000 as referred to in clause 4(1)(d) of the said agreement?
2. If so, (a) what amounts of 'matching grant' for 1962-63 was requested, and, (b) what maximum amount has the federal government agreed to provide?

Mr. Dinsdale: The answer is as follows:

1. No.
2. Not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

*AMOS-MATTAGAMI HIGHWAY, QUEBEC

Question No. 316—Mr. Martel:

1. Were public tenders called in connection with the construction under the "roads to resources program", of a culvert near mile No. 9 on the Amos-Mattagami highway; and, if so, on what date were tenders called, and in what newspapers, giving dates of publication, were the notices published; if not, in what manner was the contract allocated?

Inquiries of the Ministry

2. What was the total cost to date of (a) the construction of the Amos-Mattagami highway (b) extras paid and authorized for the said highway?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question about the intentions of the government with regard to parliamentary business before the Easter adjournment. More specifically, I should like to ask him what business there is likely to be in addition to the supplementary estimates and the legislation on the order paper. I should also like to ask whether there will be a budget before the Easter adjournment, with provision for normal discussion and action.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we intend to proceed with the matters now on the order paper. The fourth set of supplementary estimates will require to be dealt with this week. In addition, of course, there is on the order paper a motion to set up a commission on redistribution, a matter that has been of continuing interest for years. I feel sure the house will want to deal with that at the earliest possible date. Then there are some other measures, of which the house will be given notice in due course, over and above those that are already on the order paper.

I do not think I can go further at this time. I only hope that there will be a spirit of co-operation on the part of the opposition and that we will not experience again the delays that took place on the earlier supplementary estimates.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister has called delays were due to the inability of the government to give us information as to the business of the house. May I ask the Prime Minister if he will deal with my question regarding the possibility of a budget before the Easter adjournment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that will receive the attention of the house in due course.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND KOOTENAY REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of press reports to the effect that the Minister of Justice has assured Mr. Peter Dewdney of Trail, a solicitor for the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company and Progressive Conservative candidate in Kootenay West, that he will visit the Kootenays as soon as possible to speak with the authorities on the Sons of Freedom problem, and in view of the interest of all the people in Kootenay West in this matter, would the minister be willing to meet representatives of all the municipalities, all the labour organizations, all the chambers of commerce and all the farmers' and women's institutes when he visits the district?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, naturally I am flattered by the interest and attention that the hon. gentleman shows in my prospective movements. I can assure him that while I appreciate his concern over the situation, it has not been necessary to have his prodding in order to be in touch with many of those whom he has mentioned. What I have done is to assure my friends in that area, of whom I also have many, that at the first possible opportunity I will arrange to have a discussion with them either in the Kootenays or at some other convenient place, depending upon the exigencies of my schedule.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Are the heads and representatives of all the organizations I have mentioned included in the list of the minister's friends with whom he will speak? That is what I am concerned about.

Mr. Fulton: As I say, I am flattered by this attention to my intended movements. I think the hon. member will have gathered that as yet there is no schedule; therefore his question is a little premature.

ONTARIO—REPORTED LETTER RESPECTING REMUNERATION OF JUDGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question arising out of a statement made by Judge Cooper, retiring president of the county and district judges association of Ontario. The question is, has the minister made any reply to the letter the judge says he sent to the minister on February 8, in which he alleged that Ontario judges were being starved into contravening the Judges Act?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if I received a letter from a judge on February 8 I would have replied to it by now.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister whether the government has under consideration at the present time any change in the remuneration of judges?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it seems to linger in my memory that judges are not the only ones who have an interest in changes in their salary or remuneration; I seem to recall a debate on indemnities in this house on the initiative of the hon. member not long ago. I can assure him that the problem he has brought to my attention is receiving the same earnest consideration as the problem he brought to the attention of the house a short time ago.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BELLECHASSE CONSTITUENCY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion).

Has the minister a statement to make about the request he submitted to the chief electoral officer to investigate the activities of the returning officer in the riding of Bellechasse? Could he tell us in particular on what date he made that request?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked me that question. I should like to make the following statement on this matter.

Early in February, I think—I cannot remember the exact date—I had the visit of the man who printed electoral literature in 1958, at the request of the then returning officer, who is the official returning officer, Mr. Labrecque of St. Raphael.

I got in touch immediately with the chief electoral officer to communicate to him the information that gentleman had given me. Right at that time I had asked that an investigation be carried out to determine whether that information was true or not.

The chief electoral officer and I had a discussion. We did not agree on the meaning of subsection 14 of section 17 of the Canada Elections Act.

Later on I communicated three times with the chief electoral officer, Mr. Castonguay, at the end of February, on March 10 and finally on March 22.

As the chief electoral officer required that a formal complaint be made, I took it upon myself, on the basis of the information I had gathered during that time, not to lodge a formal complaint but to give the chief electoral officer the information that had been provided to me and I earnestly asked him to have an investigation launched immediately by the R.C.M.P.

On March 22, Mr. Castonguay informed me that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had been advised and that it was to begin forthwith its investigation, which had been given priority over all others.

Now, of course, until the results are known, the chief electoral officer himself, who is responsible for the administration of the act, is unable to come to a conclusion and take the steps which may be required when the results of the investigation are known.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) a supplementary question in this regard.

If the investigation report has not been submitted, how could he state the next day that the Quebec Conservatives were victims of calumny. Why not just say slander, or why not simply wait for the investigation report?

Mr. Dorion: Who said that?

Mr. Denis: The Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion), in Montmorency, as reported in the March 24 edition of La Presse.

An hon. Member: Nothing but gossip.

Mr. Dorion: I never made such a statement in Montmorency. When I left—

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question—

Some hon. Members: Order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the matter under discussion is now taking the form of a debate. It seems to me also that the subject does not relate to the responsibilities of the Secretary of State as minister but rather as member for a constituency. If the hon. member feels that the statement made needs further elucidation I will allow one further supplementary.

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State another supplementary question.

Since the minister was officially made aware of the whole situation at the latest on February 6, 1962, how can he account for the fact that he decided to take action only at the end of March, after Mr. Labrecque's doings had been made public by the press?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Dorion: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the inference made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) is completely unfounded. Before the press report came out, the investigation was supposed to have started and on four different occasions I had notified the chief electoral officer who—and I would like the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska to take a look at the act—is responsible for the administration of the act.

Mr. Pigeon: Good.

(Text):

FISHERIES

NON-ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER AT ANNUAL MEETING OF PROVINCIAL ORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): My question, Mr. Speaker, is based on an editorial appearing in The Fisherman dated March 9 last. In view of the apparent inability of the Minister of Fisheries to attend even one annual convention of the united fishermen and allied workers union on the grounds that he has time to attend only annual meetings of national organizations, would the minister consult with the Prime Minister to see how that right hon. gentleman apparently finds time to open county fairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question departs very broadly from the accustomed type of question. It seems that he is intending to convey some argument or information to the house rather than get an answer to a question of fact.

Mr. Regier: If I might ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister feels he should comment on the assertion made by the hon. member, he may have the floor.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that, as all hon. members know, there are many meetings concerning fisheries carried on in every province of Canada, and when an organization of a provincial nature unfortunately has a meeting during the time in which parliament is in session I feel it is my duty to remain here in Ottawa rather than go to all these provincial annual meetings. I might say that in no other case has the executive of any organization experienced any difficulty in understanding the reasonableness of the view that the House of Commons is probably the most important organization in our democratic system, and that it requires our best attention.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

EDUCATION OF ESKIMOS IN NORTHERN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Did the minister receive a formal request from the government of the province of Quebec that in the future the educational system for the Eskimo population in new Quebec, a territory which was integrated with the province of Quebec in 1912, 50 years ago this year, be placed under the jurisdiction of the government of the province of Quebec instead of that of the federal government?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no.

(Text):

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING TRIALS OF PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the government made any representations to the government of Cuba with respect to the trials of those who participated in the attack on Cuba about a year ago?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has been concerned over the fate of the prisoners held in Cuba, and that concern was expressed to the Cuban authorities through diplomatic channels in February. Furthermore, in view of press reports to the effect that the trials of these prisoners are to take place in Cuba later this week, I think on the 29th, instructions have been given by me that the matter be raised once again with the Cuban authorities in order to urge the Cuban government, on humanitarian grounds, that any trials of prisoners should be conducted in a fair and just manner.

There is, of course, a limit to the impact of representations made, because none of the prisoners were Canadians; but this appeal on the part of the Canadian government is made on the basis of what we believe should be the purpose of all governments, namely the maintenance of justice.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister in a position to tell the house what consequences have flowed from representations which the Secretary of State for External Affairs said some six weeks ago would be made with respect to the apprehension of certain Christian trade union leaders in Cuba?

Mr. Diefenbaker: As the hon. gentleman knows, this is a question of detail and I will make the answer available to him tomorrow.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING BETRAYAL OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it a fact, as stated by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lafreniere) at his convention on Friday, March 23 last, that a part of the civil service is betraying the government? Has the Prime Minister any comment to make thereon?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; I did not hear the substance of the question—

Mr. Brunsden: There was not any.

Mr. Speaker: —after the reference to the civil service.

Mr. Caron: This is the question, Mr. Speaker. Is it a fact, as stated by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency at his convention on Friday, March 23 last, that a part of the civil service is betraying the government? Has the Prime Minister any comment to make thereon?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will recall that questions asking the government to confirm statements by individual members have not generally been accepted on the orders of the day, but only where the statement might be construed as a statement of policy by a minister of the crown.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Caron: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, we want to know exactly whether the hon. member was speaking only as a member of parliament or whether he was giving the views of the government in that matter.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the Prime Minister wishes to answer he is at liberty to do so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report, but I may say that any inference of the kind that is inherent in the hon. member's question is not my view. I am one of those who through the years have had an intimate knowledge of the civil service—my father for 25 years was a member of the department of customs—and my attitude to the civil service of Canada is one of deep trust and appreciation.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR COMMEMORATIVE STAMP HONOURING CANADIAN POET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, to emphasize the interest of this group in the proper recognition of Canadian poets, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General. Since August 2, 1962 is the centenary of the birth of the youngest of the big four of the confederation poets, Duncan Campbell Scott, would the Postmaster General consider commemorating the occasion with a special stamp?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General's appreciation of the field of arts and poetry of this country was illustrated in one way at least with the stamp in honour of Pauline Johnson issued about a year ago. Unfortunately it was not possible to include this year in the limited number of stamp issues available, out of the over 100 suggestions we received, a commemorative stamp for Mr. Scott, and at present there is not sufficient time available to produce it.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I might just add that while Mr. Scott's is a very noteworthy birthday, I would like to pay my own personal regards to the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) who has staggered along to another birthday today. Since I probably will not have the opportunity to extend my congratulations to him next year—he will not be here—I thought I would like to do it on this occasion.

Mr. Chevrier: You will be lucky if you are here.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, may I say a word of thanks to the Postmaster General for his greeting, which I appreciate very much. However, as we have some appreciation of some kinds of communism I want to share everything we have been doing. For four years we have been in the opposition, and I hope it will soon be their turn to take our place.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

REPRESENTATIONS BY AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY RESPECTING BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance if it is still possible for certain sections of the automobile industry to make representations to the Minister of Finance in the course of the hearings usually held by a minister of finance prior to the introduction of the budget.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The door of the present Minister of Finance is always open to any good citizens who have matters of interest to lay before the government, and the fact that they come from a part of the country which is groaning under the kind of representation in this house from which they will soon be delivered is no reason why that door should not be open.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the minister very much, but may I ask him what would be the latest date when these representations might be made?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can assure the hon. member that as far as the present government is concerned it will be far, far in the future.

Mr. Pearson: No budget?

POWER

BRITISH COLUMBIA—APPLICATION OF BILL OF RIGHTS TO EXPROPRIATION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Because of our concern with the principles of the bill of rights and their application, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice another question. Has the minister had an opportunity to examine an amendment introduced by the government of British Columbia to the legislation whereby it expropriated the B.C. Electric Company, to determine whether the provision forbidding recourse to the courts is contrary to the bill of rights or ultra vires?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): The question of this legislation has been referred to me and is now under study.

PENITENTIARIES

QUEBEC—CONSTRUCTION OF PENAL INSTITUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Would the minister say if it is true that it is the intention of the government to proceed with the construction of penal institutions in the Brome-Missisquoi riding and also in the riding of St-Hyacinthe-Bagot?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yes. I am glad to note the hon. member's interest in this matter, and to be able to reassure him, as I have already reassured the hon. members for the constituencies he has mentioned, that that is the intention.

Mr. Deschatelets: Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the construction of penal institutions in all the other Conservative ridings in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Fulton: We might in ordinary circumstances prefer to put them into Liberal ridings, where possibly, the need would be greater, but with respect to our construction program in Canada we are limited by the amount of finances available.

NOVA SCOTIA

SYDNEY—REPORTED PREDICTION AS TO FUTURE GROWTH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether in a recent speech at Sydney he made a prediction that now Britain was going into the common market, that city could look forward to being larger than Toronto.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I have not spoken in Sydney for two years, so I do not think I can be charged with having made any such statement there. However, I am sure this is a vision which could be substantiated some day, given time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER GREATER DISPATCH OF BUSINESS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That a select committee, to be designated, be appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of this house for the purpose of suggesting any changes that may be desirable to assure the more expeditious dispatch of public business, and, in particular, to consider the desirability of repealing standing order no. 33 (closure rule), with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time its findings and recommendations to the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the Prime Minister going to say something?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate suggested that I might have a few words to say on this motion. I assure the house that I shall limit myself to a few brief observations at this time. It will be recalled that in the speech from the throne the following appeared:

> My government intends to ask you to reconstitute the special committee on procedure of the house and request it to make recommendations on the elimination of closure of debates in the House of Commons.

It is in pursuance of that undertaking and promise that this matter now comes before this house.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that on a number of occasions the committee has operated in previous sessions and I think, generally speaking, members of the house will agree that the recommendations made have been beneficial to the efficiency and effectiveness of the house. Indeed, I believe that consideration might be given at some later session to having this committee set up each year as a standing committee.

The resolution, as it has been written by the Clerk, asks that consideration be given to the desirability of dealing with standing order No. 33. The purpose of the motion is to enable the House of Commons, through this committee, to give consideration to this very important matter. I could go back over a period of years and point out circumstances which necessitated action being taken in this regard. I could relive past days; but today I have such a feeling of good will to all that I shall not go into that unless pressed to do so by hon. members in any part of the house.

All of us agree that full and free debate is necessary in the parliamentary system, the examination without restraint of the programs and policies advanced not only by the government but by those in the opposition who would provide an alternative government. In the process of national decision-making, the role of parliament is pre-eminent and vital. I believe, in the light of the experience of the past, the principle of closure need no longer be accepted under our system.

There have been tremendous changes since 1913, when it was first introduced in Canada. In the intervening years a number of committees have been set up for the purpose of considering the rules and a number of changes have been made, with the result that the time within which discussions can take place in parliament has been reduced. When closure was first introduced in 1913, parliament had had the experience over a period of three or four years of unlimited discussion. Indeed, in the debates in 1910 and 1911 and again in 1912 and 1913; in debates earlier on the navy bill and on the subject of reciprocity, and later, again on the navy bill, legislation introduced by the Borden government, the House of Commons sat for an almost unlimited time. I have not recently reviewed this, but I think there were a number of occasions when the house sat by day and by night for more than a week, broken only by Sundays.

Then came the changes. There was the determination of the length of speeches, first limited within recent years to 40 minutes and then reduced still further in the house. In committee, in recent years changes have reduced the time to 20 minutes.

I know there are issues upon which lengthy speeches are necessary on the part of the leaders of the government and of the opposition, but generally speaking my own experience in the house has been this. After half an hour or 35 or 40 minutes one has been able to say all that would be necessary on any particular subject. All of us, because of the limitations placed on speaking time, tend to make the maximum the minimum. I know that is human nature. When we decided we would set a limit of 40 minutes on speeches in the house, hon. members found it necessary to speak 40 minutes; otherwise it might be said that they had not fully covered all the matters they should have covered in the period available to them.

When closure was introduced originally there was unlimited time. I believe everything we can do to improve the standards of parliament should be done. The doctrine of parliamentary supremacy demands the maintenance not only of the forms of parliamentary government but also of its soul. I said that in this house six years ago and I still believe it to be true. I also said on an earlier occasion that it is the right and duty of the opposition to advance their arguments and to educate public opinion. I still hold this view.

I believe I was elected to this chamber for the first time 22 years ago today. In the intervening years I have tried to look at parliament objectively, to understand that indefinable something that comes only from membership. I often hear people say that if they were in parliament they would do thus and so. Well, all of us have those views when we become members for the first time, but in the passing years we find that the rules governing debate are necessary, based on experience, and generally speaking provide every opportunity for full discussion.

We in parliament have a duty to preserve the freedom of debate because our freedom, the freedom of parliament, is essential to the freedom of the people we represent. When we have rules that confine or limit our freedom in debate we are permitting rules that also limit freedom in Canada outside parliament as well.

I need hardly quote anyone in that connection, but permit me to recall the words of the late Mr. Ernest Lapointe who, speaking in the house on March 29, 1932, said:

The first duty of parliament is to remain a parliament, not to become a subservient and ornamental body. Parliament has a right which is certainly paramount to the convenience of the prime minister, the right to live. It has the duty to defend itself and not to allow anybody to invade its rights and privileges. It is the will of parliament, not that of the government, that is the will of the nation.

In the same year a former prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, made the following statement in reference to the imposition of closure:

I want to make it perfectly clear, Mr. Speaker, that the battle which has been put up in connection with this measure is not merely over the rights of minorities or the rights of majorities; it is true that it has to do with the rights of both; rights, which in the case of the majority no less than in that of the minority are threatened—

The committee, representing this House of Commons, will make its recommendations. I believe that the closure rule is no longer necessary. Its original purpose was to terminate excessive debate or systematic obstruction. Where there has been obstruction in this house, however far it has been carried, I have taken the stand that under no circumstances should the motion for closure be made. I believe that the experience of a few years ago has assured that never again will closure be applied in this House of Commons. I hope that the fullest consideration will be given to this question by the committee when established.

The use of closure arose by reason of the terrific obstruction that occurred in the British House of Comons during the days of the home rule debate. It came to Canada in 1913 under the government of Sir Robert Borden. It was used on three or four occasions, the last of which was in 1956 under the government of Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. As long as our rules provide for the use of closure it can be misused. On the basis of the experience of the past I feel we should give the fullest consideration to this because governments, whatever their political stripe, with the closure rule at hand have an invitation to do the things that the rules permit.

I shall say no more. I have endeavoured to speak objectively without going into detail and without citing the unhappy experiences of the past with regard to the use of closure. I shall refrain from saying more, because I feel this matter will be dealt with objectively by the all party committee when it is set up. Your Honour will head that committee. I urge the establishment of the committee and trust that on the basis of the experience of the past and the knowledge of the committee it will bring in an early report and recommendation to the house.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Prime Minister reminded me of something I might otherwise not have remembered this early in the day, and that is that although today is a Monday, and he was elected to parliament on a Tuesday, this in the 22nd anniversary of his election to parliament. In view of the shadows which events have cast before them the Prime Minister will appreciate my being somewhat measured in my expression of congratulation, but I will say that the parliament of Canada would have been a very different place if the right hon. gentleman had not been elected 22 years ago.

It is perhaps not the role for which I am most notorious in the house, but I cannot forbear to congratulate the Prime Minister on something else, namely the tone and temper of his speech today in moving this motion. I am afraid the Prime Minister will have disappointed the press, whose advance notices of his speech were somewhat more lurid than the fact justified. However, in this instance I think the Prime Minister has been wiser than those who sought in advance to forecast what he would do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I could be provoked.

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman almost seems to be inviting me, Mr. Speaker. I can assure him that at the present time I would be extremely chary about responding to his invitation in the affirmative. The Prime Minister talked about the need to be expeditious—and the motion also mentions the matter—in the conduct of our business, consistent with proper debate of public issues. I must say that, having regard to the temper and tone of the house at the present moment, I think no one would quarrel with that at all. If the debate continues in the way in which it has begun I think there will be no need for any prolonged discussion on this motion at all. From the main part of the motion we on this side of the house have no dissent whatsoever. Perhaps I might just refer to the words:

That a select committee, to be designated, be appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of this house for the purpose of suggesting any changes that may be desirable to assure the more expeditious dispatch of public business—

That is the main part of the motion. The next phrase, on which I will say a word or two in a moment, is of course merely a subsidiary feature of the main motion. I think we are all agreed with the main motion, particularly after the experience of the session of parliament of 1961. In the light of the private circumstances of many hon. members I think all of us feel that if, by co-operation between the two sides of the house with regard to the business, we can reduce the length of the sessions of parliament and still deal with the public business effectively, we should do so.

In my opinion we would be more effective if we reduced the length of the sessions. I also think it would have this other advantage. If members were away from the house and in their constituencies longer between sessions this would be a better representative body than it is when we are here for so many months of the year. Hence from every point of view it seems to me that there is the strongest possible argument for reducing the length of sessions and reducing unnecessary debate as much as possible. I refer to unnecessary debate, not necessary debate.

I agree completely with the Prime Minister in his view that the most important of all our functions in this parliament is to uphold the right of freedom of speech for all our citizens through their representatives, so that we shall really have self government. That, of course, is the purpose of the House of Commons. It is not the duty of the House of Commons to govern. That is the duty of Her Majesty's ministers. In those famous words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1877, it is the duty of the House of Commons to watch over the government in order to see that the government does that which the people want done, and only that. That is an extremely important function.

I also agree—indeed it would be rather ungenerous of me not to do so—with what the Prime Minister was good enough to say about the work of Your Honour's committee in the last two sessions of parliament. I think the experimental changes that we have made in the rules have resulted in distinct improvements in the procedure. I do not intend to take up any time going into the details of those changes. I certainly hope this committee will have time enough at the present session to recommend that some of those experimental changes be put permanently into the rules, as I think they have worked out in a way that commends itself to nearly all hon. members.

If it will not be taken amiss, I may say that those of us from this side of the house who have served on that committee always did so in the lively expectation that some of us would once more be on the treasury benches and hence felt that we ought to look at the rules from the point of view of both sides of the house. That is something that is very important to remember. We need to remember two things. In these modern days, with modern communications and modern menaces, we need to remember that there must be power in the government to act and to do so expeditiously in times of public danger, and that we cannot have a parliamentary system that is going to endanger our very lives. At the same time we must do nothing which will make the government so independent of parliament that the representatives of the people do not have over the government that constant control which is the glory of our British system.

Having said that, I come to the specific suggestion made in the Prime Minister's motion, in these words:

> —and, in particular, to consider the desirability of repealing standing order No. 33 (closure rule)—

I do not wish to be a purist. If I had been drafting such a motion I am not sure that the precise word I would have used would have been "desirability". However, that is an unimportant matter. I agree with the Prime Minister. He may be surprised to find my saying this without any qualification. I agree with the Prime Minister—and I have no more desire or intention than he seemed to have to relive the past or to try to rewrite it or do anything of that sort—that, having regard to what has happened, I believe that no government in its senses would ever again use the existing closure rule in our book. I therefore do not see any sense in leaving it there. Moreover, it will be recalled that before the Prime Minister became Her Majesty's chief minister in this country, in the election campaign of 1957 he undertook if he formed a government to repeal the closure rule at the first session of that parliament. He gave a similar undertaking in 1958.

I am also not going to say anything more about that matter. However, since the government has twice received a mandate when that was a part of its program, it seems to me that it would be desirable just to repeal the rule right now. It does not seem to me that there is any need at all to send this particular rule to the committee. If it was not, it seems to me that the committee would then be freer to consider these other things.

Moreover, this was a matter of acute party controversy in the past. I do not think that is the situation now, particularly as in what I have just said I believe I speak for all my friends in the house. It seems to me that it would be preferable to have the motion extended and simply to repeal this rule.

There is another reason for that procedure, and again I do not wish to exaggerate this matter; I do not wish to make it seem too important. However, His Honour the Speaker, if this motion is carried, is to preside over this committee. If we can settle here in the house something that has been a matter of political controversy without remitting it to a committee over which Your Honour presides, it seems to me that would be the preferable course.

Beyond that, I speak for my friends, I think, when I say that we will support the Prime Minister's motion and its main objective. If a committee is set up and if reasonable time is permitted to the committee to carry on its work, we will endeavour, in the same spirit in which we have operated in the last two sessions, to seek the objective which the Prime Minister set out as the principal objective of his motion.

I had intended to propose a small amendment to the Prime Minister's motion but I am not going to do so now. I simply wish to tell the committee what was in my mind before I heard what the Prime Minister had to say. I will read the amendment which I had thought it might be desirable to move as one that might commend itself to both sides of the house. It is is these words:

That the motion be amended by striking out the words:

"and, in particular, to consider the desirability of repealing standing order No. 33 (closure rule),";

by substituting a semicolon for the full stop after the word "house" at the end of the motion; and by adding the following words:

"and that standing order No. 33 (closure rule) be hereby repealed."

I appreciate that there might be some difficulty and some embarrassment for the government and perhaps some other technical problems if I were to propose this amendment. Here, sir, I am speaking for myself, and while I may be taking a rather long chance I hope that what I am going to say will commend itself to my friends. I should like to appeal to the Prime Minister to adopt this suggestion. I do not say that he should use these precise words, and it might require unanimous consent for him to do so, but I would hope that this suggestion might commend itself to everyone in the house.

The Prime Minister, and I agree with him completely, says that this rule should never be used again. Let us take it off the books and let the committee start from there in the spirit that would be created by doing so. It seems to me that would give us even greater hopes than we might otherwise have of making real progress in a matter about which I do feel we should seek to be as nonpartisan as possible consistent with our duty.

Let me say that I have no apology for being partisan. It is through political parties that we have self government. I am not ashamed of that at all, and I know the Prime Minister is not either. But there are some matters with respect to which it is certainly preferable not to be partisan if the objective can be accomplished in any other way. Rather than move this amendment I feel, therefore, that I should ask the Prime Minister whether he or his colleague the house leader, or someone else speaking for the government, would be prepared by consent and by agreement to dispose of this matter in this way, which I believe would be in the general interest. If I may, sir, I should like to send two copies of this document across the floor to the Prime Minister so that he may have the opportunity to look at it.

I say, sir, that we believe there is a real opportunity today to do something which will make parliament a better and more effective instrument for the service of the Canadian people, and I am sure everyone in the house is agreed that on this day, the anniversary of the Prime Minister's election to parliament, we would all like to do that.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to add my words of congratulation to the Prime Minister on having been a member of parliament for 22 years. I can well remember the day on which he was first elected. I believe most people in his province were very proud of his election on that day 22 years ago.

I want to say at once that I am most appreciative of the consideration of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in not moving his proposed amendment. This is a day, Mr. Speaker, on which parliament looks at itself, and I believe that every once in a while a look at ourselves is a welcome procedure. I am unable to agree with the proposal of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. As I take it, he is proposing that the resolution should be amended to provide for the abolition here and now of standing order No. 33 without reference to a committee. While on many occasions I take advantage of my rights in the House of Commons to squeal, complain and shout as loudly as I can against actions of the government, to me the basic factor is that when the people of Canada give a majority to any particular party in an election, they also grant to that government the authority to have its way. To my mind the majority must prevail, Mr. Speaker, but the majority is strengthened when it pays proper respect to minority opinion.

I should not like to think we would ever manoeuvre ourselves into the position where an opposition group or groups would be able to frustrate the will of the duly elected government. Within recent days I have seen far too much of the ability of opposition groups in other countries to frustrate the will of the duly elected government. Inasmuch as we generally have elections every four years, I believe that once the people have decided upon those in whom they have confidence it behooves opposition groups and more particularly opposition leaders to remember that in the long run the majority party must be permitted to have its way. If the majority abuse their power the electors will have a chance to express their opinion on the actions or inactions of the government at the time of the next election.

Therefore when we talk about abolishing the closure rule I think we should be very careful. I believe the Prime Minister is most wise in asking that the question of the abolition of closure be referred to the committee on procedure headed by Your Honour, because we could get ourselves into a position which either we or those who come after us might live to regret.

I remember that in the election campaign of 1957 our Prime Minister pledged to the Canadian people the abolition of the closure rule. Now in 1962, five years later, at long last we are faced with action in this regard. The action, of course, as I indicated earlier, consists of a reference of the matter to a committee. There is no assurance that there will not be another election called before this committee is able to consider this particular reference, bring in a report and have that report adequately considered in the house.

As I said before, we in this group welcome this move on the part of the government. However, we should like to qualify our welcome by saying it is our firm conviction that under our system of government, as we have known it in the past, nothing should be done that will prevent a government that has been duly elected from having its way in the long run. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the only time opposition political parties have the right to frustrate the will of the government that has been elected by a majority of the people is when the government has completely violated basic human rights as we know them. I am a great believer in the rule of law. There are far too many areas of the world in which the rule of law is subjected to many qualifications. I would not like to see this parliament do anything that would limit the normal supremacy of the will of the majority of the people as expressed on election day.

I hope no one will mistake me when I endorse this particular viewpoint. I believe that the majority is really strengthened by granting every possible right to the opposition and to the minority. I would be the last one who would be prepared to sacrifice any of the existing rights of the opposition or of a minority. If this resolution passes I should like to see the committee pay very close attention to the possibility of greater consultation amongst the house leaders of the various parties in relation to the order of business and the length of time that ought to be allotted to the various matters coming before us. I believe this is the practice in other democracies to a greater extent than it is here.

I should like also to see the committee pay very close attention to the practice in other democratically elected parliaments relating to the establishment of orderly and ordered sessions of the house. If we knew in advance that we would be here from say January 9 until April 1, then have a month's recess and be here from May 1 until July 1, from September 5 to October 31—these are only abritrary dates—and then have a recess for the months of November and December, I believe our house leaders and our party whips would very soon accommodate themselves to the business at hand. I know this practice prevails in a number of other countries, and I should like to recommend it in all sincerity for the serious consideration of the committee. I believe that if we had this kind of arrangement we would not be engaged in a debate as to whether or not the closure rule ought to be abolished.

There is another recommendation I should like to make, not to the committee but to the government itself. I believe an attempt should be made to have the blue book of estimates a little more accurate than it is at the moment. I notice a growing tendency on the part of the government to introduce increasingly large amounts by way of supplementary estimates. In this particular session I believe we are about to be faced with the fourth list of supplementary estimates. I understand, though I may have been misinformed, that the sum total of the four lists of supplementary estimates equalled 25 per cent of the main estimates in the blue book. Surely this is a flaw, when departments are asked in October to prepare their estimates and submit them to treasury board, yet many months later we are faced with the fact that the estimation of these departments has been wrong by 25 per cent.

I believe this is a habit that is becoming almost an evil so far as orderly parliamentary procedure is concerned. The government is providing the opposition with an opportunity for delaying the business of the house and, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate mentioned, for unnecessary debate. I would appeal to the government henceforth to order departments to attempt to reduce the amount that it may be necessary to request in supplementary estimates.

Committee to Consider Business of House

The Prime Minister made one statement that surprised me a little bit. He has moved a motion to the effect that it is desirable to repeal standing order No. 33, the closure rule, and that the matter be referred to a committee. At the same time he did something that was a little unprecedented, in that he offered a lot of advice to the committee. He stated that the closure rule is no longer necessary. He added also that never again will closure be applied. I felt that these two statements were a bit unfortunate, in that they might prejudice the thinking of the committee that is to meet. He said, too, that governments have the temptation to use the methods that the rules permit. I took down this statement as closely as I could, but there may be a word or two out of line. As I have it, he said that governments have a temptation to use the methods that the rules permit.

This has not been my experience, Mr. Speaker. I believe this is a reflection on the government of the Prime Minister, and also a reflection on past governments. In the main I can honestly report that I have always found the government of the day, whether Liberal or Conservative, rather anxious to bend over backward in order to permit the opposition to have its say. I believe that the Prime Minister is a little out of line in the aspersions he is casting not only upon his own government but also on other governments of the past when he says that governments have the temptation to use the methods that the rules permit.

Our group feel that merely because of one unhappy and unfortunate incident when the St. Laurent government applied closure unnecessarily and most prematurely—and, as events proved, it served no useful purpose; if anything it only lengthened the debate which the government of the day was seeking to curtail—this is a very poor excuse for wanting to go whole hog and completely abolish the right of the government of the day to have its way. We agree that the closure rule needs amending. However, I do maintain that after debate for a period which has been agreed upon by all parties the will of the people of Canada ought to be expressed in the form of legislation, no matter how distasteful that legislation may be to opposition groups. It ought to be left to the people of the nation at the time of the next election to express their opinion as to the deeds or misdeeds of the government of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must inform the house that if the Prime Minister speaks now he will close the debate.

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is on occasions such as this that parliament is at its best. I appreciate very much the expression of views by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I will refer to the suggestion that he made in a moment.

If one goes back to 1957 one finds that in November of that year, I think it was, I placed a motion on the order paper which would have abolished the procedure of closure had it been accepted. Then there were other events that required attention; other matters arose, and finally there was dissolution at the end of January, 1958. I have found over the years that the novelties of today become the accepted things of tomorrow. In 1957 the press of Canada was very divided on this matter. I had stated that our view was that closure should be abolished and, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has stated, it should never be used again. I believe that is correct. The only times it was ever used in Canada it was followed by the defeat of the government which used it, when the people had the first opportunity to vote either for or against the party that brought it into being.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not in 1917.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, not in 1917, but we are not going into the history of 1917. As I recall it, the closure at that time was not brought in by the union government. I am speaking now from recollection, but I think the union government was formed afterward. Closure was used in 1917 in respect of various matters of legislation introduced by the Borden government before a union government was formed. Then many Liberals joined with the Conservatives of that day and formed the union government. In 1917 the vote had nothing to do with questions of party government; it was a vote on the necessity of a subordination of party considerations to the objective of winning the war.

In 1957, when I first dealt with this matter in Toronto at the opening of the campaign of that year, there was divided opinion expressed in the press. I have found over the years, Mr. Speaker, that when you have an objective in mind you cannot always secure it by immediate action; it takes time for public opinion to be educated. I would be the last one to bring into this amicable discussion today anything that might shatter the unanimity of the government and the official opposition, but I am sure nobody will deny me the satisfaction of saying I am happy to learn that the stand taken by this party is now accepted by the Liberal party in opposition. That shows the benefit of discussion and the results that come from taking stands that are proper, appropriate and necessary.

I thank the hon. member for his suggestion. However, it is a singular circumstance that the opposition to anything of this type comes from an hon. member who belongs to a party which must look so far ahead. For, after all, the hopes of political parties go ahead for generations. He looks to that day when the party he represents, whatever its name may then be, because it may have been succeeded by one of another name, but ultimately a party of some kind espousing the national socialism which he also espouses, might find it necessary to have this power in order to carry through its policies. I took it that the hon. gentleman was looking a generation ahead and he realized that with the removal of closure it might be impossible to achieve that for which his party stands.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would permit me to ask him a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the Prime Minister was not reflecting, as I was when the hon. gentleman was speaking, on the kind of letter he is going to get from Mr. Knowles when he reads his speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is a very penetrating question and one that I am sure penetrated the sensibilities of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier). However that may be, he recently had the opportunity of viewing parliament in another portion of the commonwealth, and spoke with that authority which comes from knowing how governments operate in other parts of the world. I took it that he referred to that experience when he was a one man representative of Canada to British Guiana.

However that may be, I think it would be well not to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, because it might be thought by those who represent the third party that an unfair advantage had been taken of them by so rapid an agreement on the part of the official opposition.

Such a reformation on the part of any party has, I think, never been equalled since biblical days in the case of Saul. This has been one of the most unusual transitions and changes. Even so, no one would deny that it is a worthy step forward. I compliment the official opposition for this and, speaking most seriously, I thank the hon. member for this suggestion. In order to prevent the possibility of a numerically small group in the opposition saying that advantage was taken of them, the committee might meet and give a report on this matter at the earliest possible date. It should not take long now, in view of the unanimity among more than 95 per cent of the membership of the house. A unanimity of 95 per cent should assure that the committee will be able to report on this, and then action can be taken immediately. Certainly I thank the hon. member for having taken this step. I know now that the committee will operate with assurance and effectiveness.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said that I, in the course of my remarks, had prejudged what the select committee might do. Nothing of the kind. Anyone who knows the stand I have taken knows that this has always been my stand since 1956, and that the attitude taken today will not have changed that in the slightest degree. This being so, the committee can meet and report on this matter and we shall be able to carry out almost immediately the abolition of closure.

I do not think there is any more I need add. I am pleased with this attitude on the part of the official opposition, and can only say that parliament will always discharge its responsibility for the benefit of all the people when members are prepared to stand up, as did the hon. member, and take the position he did. It is quite the antithesis of what took place in 1956, but the hon. member will recall what Sir Winston Churchill said at one time, though these are not the exact words: "I have never developed indigestion as a result of having to eat my earlier words".

Motion agreed to.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS TO EXTEND QUALIFICATION PERIOD, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Veterans' Land Act to extend the period during which a veteran may qualify for benefits; to establish dates on which persons shall be deemed to be discharged; to extend the repayment period of loans; to enable the director to arrange group life insurance for veterans on a voluntary basis; to increase the rate of interest where a property reverts to the director; to increase the maximum assistance under part II; to provide further financial assistance to certain full time farmers; to provide further financial assistance to part time farmers and commercial fishermen; to extend the purposes for which a part III loan may be used; to extend the uses to which proceeds of a sale or other disposition of land may be put; and to provide for the release to a veteran of a portion of the land on which he is established.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Carter: Does the minister intend to make a statement?

Mr. Churchill: The statement I have to make will run for about 12 minutes, but I am sure there are other hon. members who will wish to comment on this subject because of its great importance and interest to veterans who have been settled on land in all the provinces of Canada.

The Veterans' Land Act has been in effect since 1942, and this is the fourth occasion since 1945 when action has been taken to amend its provisions. The last changes made to the act in 1959 were both important and extensive. Undoubtedly the major amendment enacted then was that which substantially increased the maximum amount of loan the director was authorized to advance, on a broader basis of security, to a full time farming veteran for the development and operation of an economic family farm unit. In general the changes made almost three years ago were aimed at bringing the lending provisions of the act into line with increases which had occurred over the years in land, building and other costs.

In the main, the purposes of the present amendments are basically similar to those of 1959; to assist qualified veterans to acquire farm or home ownership in keeping with their particular or changing requirements by expanding and increasing the financial provisions of the act. As compared with the situation following the amendments in 1959, study of the land and building costs involved in the recent settlement of veterans as small holders or under part II has established that the existing financial assistance available to such veterans is inadequate. It is proposed, accordingly, to increase from $10,000 to $12,000 the maximum amount the director may advance on behalf of an eligible veteran for the construction of his home under part II of the act. In conjunction with this increase it is proposed to raise from $800 to $1000 the minimum security in land or money which a veteran must furnish to the director before a contract is entered into.

Another proposal of a similar nature would increase the maximum loan presently available under part III to small holders and commercial fishermen from $3,000 to $4,800. In conjunction with this increase it is proposed to reduce the amount of contribution required of each such veteran to $1 for each $4 loaned by the director. At present the veteran is required to contribute $1 for each $3 advanced. The combined effect of both these proposals would increase from $10,000 to $12,000 the maximum amount available for the settlement of veterans as small holders and commercial fishermen, at an initial cost to each veteran of only $200 more than the amount of the initial deposit and contributory payment he is now required to make.

When related to the beneficial results of the government's action last summer to reduce to one half acre the minimum land requirement for small holding settlement, it is considered that these proposals to increase materially the maximum amount available for such settlement will facilitate and accelerate the establishment of many more thousands of veterans. From inception of operation to December 31, 1961, a total of 47,575 veterans had been settled as small holders. Of this number 1,814 have been approved for financial assistance in the first nine months of the current fiscal year as compared with 1,424 in the same period of 1960-61. Since the beginning of last July small holding settlement has been 45.9 per cent greater than in the same period of the previous year. Notwithstanding this increase, there remain over 12,000 veterans who are already qualified for this type of settlement but who, in the majority of cases, have been precluded to date from actual establishment due to insufficient funds and because of the difficulty they previously experienced in acquiring land of adequate size to meet the minimum required.

A further measure of considerable benefit to small holding and commercial fishing veterans will be contained in a proposal to enable the director to make additional loans under part III to such veterans who are already settled. Since part III came into effect in 1954 it has been possible to make loans thereunder to small holders and commercial fishermen only at the time they were being settled. It was believed that the additional financial requirements which veterans already settled might have for effecting alterations or additions could be met under the provisions of part IV of the National Housing Act. While many loans have been so made, the arrangement has never been considered too favourably by veterans, and has presented certain administrative difficulties.

At present there is more than one maximum amortization period. All repayable contracts relating to land and buildings under part I can be extended over a period not in excess of 25 years. This same maximum term applies to loans made to small holders and commercial fishermen under part III. However, part III loans advanced to full time farmers may be repayable over a period of 30 years. The bill will propose amendments to various sections of the act to increase the maximum repayment period to 30 years.

The major changes made in 1959 to the farm credit provisions in part III of the act have been well received and, as anticipated, have enabled a considerable number of full time farming veterans to extend their enterprises to sound economic proportions. From the time the part III provisions were promulgated at the beginning of September, 1954 to December 31, 1961, a total of 6,855 additional loans were made to full time farmers already settled. Of this number over 50 per cent were made subsequent to August, 1959 when the amendments made in that year became effective.

The existing farm credit provisions, with one exception, have been found to be reasonably adequate and satisfactory to meet the requirements of the veteran whose circumstances are such that a loan can be made to him for the development and operation of an economic farm unit. To overcome the deficiency which has been encountered in some cases it is proposed to extend the purposes for which a loan may be advanced to permit the payment of farm related debts such as a feed bill, taxes, etc. Any loan made for debts of this type is in the nature of debt consolidation. The proposal will also provide, therefore, that a loan for such a purpose may be made only once to a veteran, on the occasion of the first loan he receives after the enactment of the amendment.

In comparison with the well established veteran farmer for whom the existing provisions of the act have been found to be reasonably adequate, it has become increasingly evident that the same provisions do not meet the needs of an appreciable number of veterans who are settled on what might be described as small family farms. I am not referring here to marginal units or marginal operators. The small family farm of which I speak may be classified as one where the farm income permits an acceptable standard of living to the owner-operator and his family, and which may be supplemented by some off-farm income, but where the physical and financial attributes of the unit or the owner-operator do not permit the development of a strictly economic farm unit.

It is estimated that approximately 6,000, or slightly over one third of the veterans who are still settled under the act as full time farmers, are established on properties which today cannot be considered to be fully economic family farm units. These veterans and their families invariably wish to remain on their farms in their existing communities but require additional financial assistance, usually for basic herd livestock, soil improvement, and permanent improvements to the farm buildings including hydro and sewage facilities.

To meet the additional credit requirements of these veterans who are settled on small family farm units, it is proposed to enact a new section under part III whereby fully repayable loans bearing 5 per cent interest over a maximum repayment period of 30 years may be advanced for practically all of the purposes for which part III loans may otherwise be used. The maximum amount which could be advanced under this new section to a veteran on a small family farm would be the lesser of $6,000 or $12,000 less any indebtedness outstanding under existing contracts the veteran has with the director under parts I and III. In no case would the amount advanced, together with the indebtedness outstanding, exceed 75 per cent of the market value of the farm land as determined by the director.

The provisions of this proposal, in conjunction with the fact that the trained and experienced staff of Veterans' Land Act credit advisers is again in a position to provide an advisory service to veterans established as full time farmers, should assure attainment by the veterans concerned of a better standard of living for themselves and their families. These factors will also make it possible for economic growth to take place within the line fences of the small family farm, and it is contemplated that such growth will be sufficient in some cases to enable the director to advance the larger loans which are available under section 64 for the development and operation of fully economic farm units.

Recommendations have been made periodically over the years by the Royal Canadian Legion and others relating to the matter of insurance protection on the life of a settler under the Veterans' Land Act. In light of the fact that the plan applicable on a compulsory basis to borrowers under part III of the Farm Credit Act has recently been extended on a voluntary participation basis to farmers who secure loans under part II of that act, there is now reason to believe it might be possible to arrange for the provision of such protection to Veterans' Land Act settlers on a similar basis. A proposal is being introduced, therefore, which will enable the director to endeavour to arrange, on satisfactory terms, a group life insurance plan on a voluntary participation basis.

The major change made in the recent amendments to the War Service Grants Act was to extend to October 31, 1968 the period during which application may be made for unpaid war service gratuity and outstanding re-establishment credits. It is proposed to make a similar extension in the Veterans' Land Act and establish October 31, 1968 as the deadline by which veterans must be qualified to participate in the benefits of part I of the act.

Another proposal will be introduced which will also involve the establishment of a date, in fact two dates. At present the legislation specifies that a person who served in world war II or in Korea must be honourably discharged to qualify as a veteran for the purposes of the Veterans' Land Act. However, many persons who continued to serve in the forces were not discharged at the conclusion of their war service. It is proposed that, for the purposes of this act, such veterans will be deemed to have been honourably discharged on September 30, 1947, in the case of those who served in world war II and October 31, 1953, in the case of those who served in Korea.

Experience has shown in some instances that, without endangering the security position of the director, better and more equitable use might be made of proceeds from the sale or lease of mines and minerals, or attributable to permanent improvements effected by a veteran, than is now possible. It is proposed, accordingly, to increase the purposes for which such proceeds may be used.

Mr. Chairman, I have outlined the major amendments to the act to which this resolution pertains. There will be, in addition, a few changes of an administrative nature to which I need not now refer. I might merely add that some of the points I have mentioned are of a technical nature.

We wished to accomplish two things in respect of this act. First we wanted to bring it into conformity with other related acts by extending the date of the application of the measure to 1968 so that veterans who have not been in a position to take advantage of the Veterans' Land Act may have plenty of time in which to make up their minds and look into the problem. Second, we considered that while we were doing that we might also introduce certain other amendments which would make the act better suited to the changing conditions that have occurred in the last few years. It is in that spirit that I bring these amendments forward. I appreciate the fact that it may be in the committee stage, after the bill has been before the house, that it will be possible to answer some of the questions which may arise.

Mr. Carter: This is a lengthy resolution, Mr. Chairman. It proposes no less than 11 separate changes in the Veterans' Land Act. If we examine the resolution, it seems to me that by far the most important changes are those which propose to increase the maximum assistance under part II of the act—that is the part which provides assistance for veterans who wish to build on city lots—to provide further financial assistance to certain full time farmers and to part time farmers and fishermen; and to extend the purposes for which part III loans are used. Consequential on those four main amendments are three others. There is one to extend the period in which a veteran may qualify; another to establish dates on which veterans may be deemed to be dicharged; and a third to extend the loan repayment period.

I am sure that all of these changes will be warmly welcomed by veterans all over Canada. They are in line with the recommendations made by the veterans, the Canadian Legion and other veterans' organizations. We strongly support these proposals and commend the minister of bringing them in at this time.

Then there are four other unrelated changes. One is to increase the rate of interest where property reverts to the director. Another is to extend the use to which the proceeds of the sale or other disposition of land may be put. The third is to permit the release to a veteran of a portion of the land on which he is established. The last one is to permit voluntary group life insurance for veterans to be arranged by the director. The minister did not make such reference to this particular change. One must assume that the group insurance envisaged in this resolution will be arranged with commercial life insurance companies rather than under the Veterans Insurance Act.

These proposed changes which the minister has outlined to us in this resolution are very much in line with a report put out by the veterans land administration in a summary of a survey which they conducted between July, 1957 and September, 1958 of 5,000 V.L.A. farmers who have been settled under the Veterans' Land Act. On the cover of this document it is stated:

> The survey was designed not only to obtain statistical information and as a staff training exercise in the assessment of credit needs but, and more particularly, to create an occasion for the credit advisor and each of his farmers to sit down together and discuss the progress of the enterprise to date and to go carefully into the farmer's plans for the future and particularly what he could and would do with more credit were it available to him.

This report contains such extremely useful information that I think it should be put on the record for consideration when the bill arising out of the resolution is introduced into the house. The first paragraph of the report states in part as follows:

> It was also planned that this survey would include an individual calculation of the amount of additional credit required to put on a sound, economic family unit basis, each and every V.L.A. farm enterprise which had in it the potential for success. This survey was also intended to bring out the purposes for which additional credit was now required, and the extent and nature of the assets available as security.

Then it goes on to give some interesting statistical information with relation to the present farm income of the 5,000 V.L.A. farmers who participated in the survey. On page 2 we find that the net income per farmer, including farm perquisites and an allowance for home use, was $3,207, but that the amount of income required to give an average standard of living, including farm perquisites and allowance for home use was $4,309. Hence there was a shortfall of around $1,000. The survey came to the conclusion that the average amount which, after careful consideration in each case, it is estimated could be earned if necessary reorganization and/or refinancing were carried out was $5,186. In other words, farmers were capable of producing increased income of nearly $2,000.

On page 3 we see that the average total credit required by the settlers in order to put their units on an economic basis worked out to about $9,740. As to the purposes for which the credit was required, 36 per cent of it was for land, including soil improvement such as liming and permanent planting such as orchard and bush fruit; 14 per cent was for farm buildings; 8 per cent for the farm house; 30 per cent for basic herd breeding stock; 10 per cent for essential farm equipment and 2 per cent for working capital.

On page 4 the survey also points out that of the 5,000 farm units which were analysed, 1,441 would appear to be best advised to continue as at present, with the same farm and the same type of enterprise; 808 should continue with the same land but change enterprises to a greater or lesser extent; 1,359 should enlarge farm but continue same enterprise; 618 should enlarge farm and change their enterprise; 104 should sell present farm and buy a better one; 508 are now, or should be, operating their farms only as a supplement to full time income from some other source; and 162 should sell their farm, get away from the farm entirely and try to get some other type of employment.

The resolution apparently seeks not only to remedy some of the needs brought out in the survey but also to go further and, if I understood the minister correctly, make the benefits under the Veterans' Land Act available to a larger number of veterans, many of whom cannot now qualify. In reading this very interesting document I could only wish that a similar study had been carried out with respect to commercial fishermen. I come from a province where the people depend largely on the fishing industry and I represent a community where 90 per cent of the men are fishermen. Therefore it will be understood that this resolution is of special interest to me.

I endeavoured to get some information on what had happened in the case of veterans who had become established as commercial fishermen in different parts of Canada. When the standing committee on veterans affairs sat in 1961 I solicited this information, which was supplied later in a letter dated July 20, 1961. The information reveals a very interesting variation in the incomes obtained by veterans from commercial fishing. In British Columbia, Victoria region, the high gross income was $7,400 per year while the low gross was $1,200 per year, with an average of $3,700 per year. In the New Westminster region the high gross was $10,000, the low gross $900 and the average gross $4,150. This shows that there is a wide variation even within the same province.

In Alberta and Saskatchewan hardly any veterans have been established as commercial fishermen. In Manitoba there is only one and his income is approximately $2,000 per year. Others were getting supplementary incomes of approximately $550 each per year. In Ontario 11 veterans have been established as commercial fishermen and their incomes range from $2,400 to $3,000, including income from renting boats. In Quebec there were none. In New Brunswick the typical veteran established as a full time fisherman grosses approximately $5,500 and nets approximately $3,000. In Nova Scotia most of the veterans established as fishermen are part time fishermen and net approximately $1,300 annually from fishing, while full time fishermen net approximately $3,700 annually. In Prince Edward Island the typical veteran established as a full time fisherman has a gross of approximately $4,300 per year. The typical cost figure is $1,050 leaving a net before depreciation of $3,250, but depreciation of equipment averages about $1,000 a year leaving a net after depreciation of $2,250. Here is the sad part about this information. In Newfoundland there was only one veteran established in commercial fishing on a full time basis and his net income was very low indeed, averaging only about $500 per year.

Mr. Brunsden: He is one of your constituents?

Mr. Carter: He probably is. That is about the average income for most of the inshore fishermen in my riding. I am very grateful to the minister and the government for bringing this legislation forward and I hope it will still be possible for some of our Newfoundland fishermen to take advantage of the new section which the minister outlined to us and which will make loans available at about 5 per cent, if I understood the minister correctly. That at least would give the fisherman veteran a source of borrowing which is not available to him either under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act or from any source within the province.

I know that other members want to make their contributions to the debate on this resolution and I will close by making one suggestion to the minister. I suggest that the bill be sent to the standing committee, because from the length of the resolution we can see that the bill will be quite comprehensive and will require careful study. It is my opinion that study could best be carried out in the standing committee on veterans affairs and I hope the minister will see fit to refer the bill to the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the last speaker a question?

The Deputy Chairman: If he will give the floor.

Mr. Brunsden: The hon. member used certain figures having to do with veterans with respect to the statement that the minister made. I am wondering whether he has compared those figures with the over-all figures for agriculture and fishing across Canada?

Mr. Carter: No, I have not had an opportunity to do that. I have not had the time.

Mr. Benidickson: I doubt that the department has.

Mr. Carter: I think that perhaps would be a chore which might properly be carried out by the department and if the bill were sent to the committee we could get that information.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, now that the dialogue between the two members to my left has been completed I wish to say a few words on this very interesting resolution proposing the amendment of the Veterans' Land Act. The Veterans' Land Act has been a most successful and excellent piece of legislation since it was first given effect in 1942. I think the major reasons for its success are three in number. First of all, there was the consideration given to the experience during world war I and after under the soldier settlement act when without a doubt there were many unfortunate instances of veterans who failed because of having been settled on poor land or under improper circumstances.

The second factor was the representations of the veterans organizations with their knowledge of the circumstances that surrounded the settlement of veterans of the first world war. Third, there was the determination on the part of the government of that day, which I remember quite well, to make certain that the mistakes of the past were not repeated, and the views of other bodies, including the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and related organizations, were sought before the legislation was finally drafted and presented to parliament.

I think the success of the act is fully illustrated in the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs for the fiscal year 1960-61. I want to refer to this and incorporate it in my few words because many people read Hansard who do not have the opportunity to read this report. On page 41 there is the following:

> From inception of operations to March 31, 1961, a total of $451,700,000 has been spent on behalf of 76,135 veterans established with repayable contracts. Including $58,738,000 constituting conditional grants earned by veterans who have fulfilled the terms of settlement for the first 10 years of their contract, 55.8 per cent of the $252,100,000 has already been repaid.
> The number of full-time and part-time farmers with arrears in excess of $200 and $100 respectively represents 2.5 per cent of the active accounts.

I am not going to read further. I believe that is a clear indication of the success of this legislation and its efficient operation. The acting temporary deputy parliamentary secretary has had some experience in this connection I know, and is fully acquainted with the administration of the act. I must pause, for a moment, to congratulate him upon piloting this resolution during the absence of the minister for five minutes. Somewhat like the hon. member for Kootenay West, he has his brief moment of glory.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I should go on. The settlement of veterans on what the minister termed the economic family farm has made a great contribution to rural Canada since the act was introduced. It is interesting to note that in many districts the Veterans' Land Act settlements, and I know a number in the area which I represent, are usually the showplaces and are examples to others. I think the experience under the Veterans' Land Act was partly the cause, shall I say, of the introduction of farm credit legislation and so on. The veterans legislation illustrated what could be done on the basis of providing supervised credit, as we have it under the Veterans' Land Act.

Before proceeding, Mr. Chairman, I must say that the change made last year in the regulations reducing the acreage requirement to half an acre was an excellent one. I am sure the minister knows that this has made it possible for more and more veterans not only to qualify but to obtain land when they were already qualified. The increase in the amount of the small loans from $10,000 to $12,000 rectified a deficiency in the legislation. The changes under part III of the act extending the repayment period to 30 years and extending the purposes of the act to the granting of loans for feed bills and other requirements were also good. I am sure these amendments were brought forward as the result of the experience of those operating in the field.

The minister dealt with the small family farm particularly and those who had supplementary incomes as well. This new section in part III which he proposes will provide loans for development up to 75 per cent of the total value of the farm, and this should be of some assistance to a percentage of these veterans. We all know the Royal Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations have made proposals with regard to insurance. The minister did not give the details. We readily admit that when you enter into that field it will take some careful planning to design a satisfactory scheme. We shall look forward to what the minister proposes in this respect and the regulations related thereto.

I am glad to see the deadline for applications for loans has been extended to October 31, 1968. This should give the veterans of this country ample time to make up their minds if they wish to take advantage of this act. Strangely enough the farther away we get from the war, as a result of personal experience, I find an increasing number of veterans who had deserted the family farm or family life at the end of the war and were attracted by the dollars that could be earned in industrial employment, are finding that all is not gold that glitters and that there are certain advantages to living on the family farm and enjoying the rural way of life. I find repeatedly men coming to me who have decided to go back to the farm and either take up their parents' property or buy land of their own. This legislation will provide them with an opportunity for this action.

This group wholeheartedly supports the amendments proposed by the minister because we believe they will be of benefit to the veteran who is a small holder and the veteran who is a full time farmer. However, before taking my seat I do want to make another suggestion and ask the minister to consider it. I suggest that the time has come, as a result of developments in recent years, for tree farmers to qualify under this legislation. I know this is a new field and has to be approached with some caution. However, I believe it is a field that should be considered. You know, Mr. Chairman, at the moment there are some 20 million acres of crown lands available east of Manitoba for the development of privately owned tree farms. A tree farmer requires from 500 to 1,000 acres. You cannot operate with a few acres, you have to have a sufficiently large acreage to make a living. In the interior of British Columbia the average value of the timber yield per acre varies from $7.50 to $15 per year, according to the stand. This is the stumpage value. If you enter into manufacturing, of course, the value increases.

I am just concluding, Mr. Chairman, so perhaps you will give me a minute to finish and then the minister will get this resolution cleared up by five o'clock. I am asking him to consider this suggestion. Perhaps he could discuss the matter with the officers of the Canadian tree farmers association. I suggest also that he ask his officials to make a study of the possibility of moving in this direction. Perhaps this project could be made to fit in with A.R.D.A. I also suggest the minister could ask his officials to make a report to him concerning the possibility of including tree farmers in this legislation on the same basis as full time farmers. I have trespassed upon your time for a couple of minutes, Mr. Chairman, so I shall take my seat and leave the remainder of what I have to say until the bill is introduced.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to a consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT

MOTION FOR REVIEW BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should undertake a complete review of the Juvenile Delinquents Act, with consideration being given to the appointment of a special committee to bring in recommendations thereon.

He said: Mr. Speaker, after I had filed the notice of motion in connection with the Juvenile Delinquents Act, the Minister of Justice announced that he had set up a departmental committee to study the questions raised by that act. I welcome this study and, although it does not go as far as I had envisaged, I expect that the committee will do a great amount of work and come up with a solution to the problems which have been troubling a lot of people in recent years.

There are shortcomings in the Juvenile Delinquents Act at the present time, particularly in the system of treatment of juveniles, which has not been remedied. There is a noticeable drifting away from the original concepts of the act, and since there has not been an over-all review for some years and since this act operates in co-operation with the provincial authorities, I think it is now high time that the operation of the act and its administration by provincial authorities should be carefully gone into.

The first thing that a committee must do, Mr. Speaker, is to examine the theory and philosophical approach to the treatment of juveniles. This is an entirely different matter than an examination of the mechanics of the act and its procedures, forms and penalties. The committee set up by the minister is composed of a very eminent group of persons concerned with the administration of justice, although I think it fair to say that none are engaged principally in working with juveniles. Therefore I hope that they will give major attention to basic issues and not only to the mechanics of administration.

The first question with which I think the committee should deal is whether there is a proper balance in the juvenile court system between the concepts of courts of law set up to administer semi-criminal law with all the essential protections of criminal procedure, as against the social duty of the state in its obligation as parens patriae to oversee the welfare of children who might be abused, neglected or abandoned by their parents or guardians and thus be led into improper conduct. The Juvenile Delinquents Act which we have is a typical Canadian blending of the two theories, as well as being a midway point between British and United States practices.

Since criminal legislation is in the federal field under our constitution, we must have a sufficient element of criminality to justify a federal and over-all act such as we now have. Since child welfare is a provincial matter under our constitution, we cannot go too far in that direction. But the act provides for a very wide scope as between the two approaches. The United States has in general adopted the social side of the scale and most of the legislation on juvenile delinquency in that country is a state matter rather than a federal one. They consider it a social duty rather than a semi-criminal one. For this reason, the normal protections of the rules of criminal procedure have been fairly well lost in the juvenile courts of the United States.

In reading many of the publications on delinquency work that come from the United States we find that this is one of the things that concerns a good many of the social workers in that country. I refer to the fact that the protection of juveniles is being lost when they come into court; the fact that they are being charged with a breach of conduct which may determine their future lives is completely overlooked, and therefore the normal protections that the state must give are gone.

I believe that the Canadian act has an excellent potential in delinquency matters and I hope this potential will be taken advantage of when the act is under review. The advantage of having juvenile courts with semi-criminal jurisdiction is that protection is, or should be, given to those who appear there; protection against self-incrimination; proof beyond a reasonable doubt; the right to counsel, and limitations on the use of hearsay evidence. I believe that not only equal, but actually greater protection should be given to children and to parents who appear with them than is given to adults. For that reason I think we must be very jealous of the rules that give protection to juveniles in the juvenile courts.

It is not necessary for the courts to make a great show of this protection, but I believe it must be given. I do feel that the trend of the juvenile courts is away from this protection of juveniles and is toward a general feeling by the courts that if the juvenile is brought in by the social agencies, then he must be guilty.

On the other hand, when dealing with children the courts must always have in mind how easily they are led and how important it is to have understanding and sympathy. But the courts must also recognize the hard facts of some cases and the great amount of work and research that comes from the social workers in their reports. Unjustified and ill-considered sympathy can be just as harmful as oppressive sentences.

With this background, Mr. Speaker, and from information which reaches me on this subject, I believe that there is a trend toward giving juvenile courts the prestige and appearance of courts of law, while in fact they are internally moving too far in the opposite direction with strictly welfare considerations. The closed courts, the difficulty of appeal, the dependence of the child on the court, require the judge to be his own most severe critic. This ability is not always present. The juvenile court system with which I am best acquainted is that in Ontario. It is operating extremely well; its judges, probation officers and other staffs have a very high level of ability. But those who are best acquainted with the problems are the first to recognize them.

With this background, Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate several trends which I believe are appearing in the juvenile courts and which should be very seriously considered. First, there is an overemphasis on the prestige and appearance of juvenile courts as courts, rather than working social agencies. Second, that in spite of the foregoing there is a lessening of the sense of necessity to have a juvenile proven guilty, by proper evidence, of the delinquency with which he is charged.

Third, I believe that there is too much secrecy in the juvenile courts, which is evidenced and caused by the difficulty in appealing, the provision for closed courts and the casual interest of the public and the press caused by these situations. Fourth, I believe that the combination of adult and juvenile probation is causing the latter—that is, juvenile probation—to suffer. Fifth, I believe that there is undue pressure on some courts with family and welfare matters, to the detriment of delinquency cases. Finally, in general there is rather casual attention given by all levels of government to juvenile courts and delinquency problems. These are matters which, as I understand it, are subject to divided jurisdiction and one level of government tends to leave them to the other. I am pleased, for that reason, to see that the minister has set up a study of the question at this time.

I should like to make a few suggestions in closing these remarks. While there are a great many important matters in the act which might be considered, I should like to make some general suggestions which, I believe, are worthy of attention.

First, as to appeals from decisions of the juvenile courts. Under section 37 of the act, leave to appeal from such decisions must be obtained from the supreme court and if such leave is given appeals must be prosecuted in the same manner as those on indictment. This is so cumbersome a procedure that appeals from the juvenile courts have virtually disappeared. There are very few of them indeed, and this, in my view, is not a proper situation. I suggest that an appeal should be available as of right to the county or district court judge in the same manner as is now provided in cases of summary conviction, that is, the right to have a trial de novo before a county or district court judge. It would be simple to have such appeals held in camera to protect the interest of the child while at the same time providing for a second hearing in cases when it was felt that justice had not been done.

My second suggestion concerns the age at which offenders should come within the provisions of the act. This question has been under debate for many years. The age fixed at the present time is 16 years. However, some provinces have extended the limit to 18 years. Many proposals have been put forward in connection with this age limit. One proposal which came to my attention was made by Miss Isabel MacNeill who suggested that there should be two levels of court, one for children up to the age of 14 and another for juveniles between the ages of 14 and 18. However, I think there is a simple remedy for the difficulties here. The basic reason why this difficulty over age has arisen is that in every situation one is dealing with individuals. Sometimes a young lad of 15 has the characteristics, mental and physical, of an 18 year-old. The nature of his delinquency may be such that the juvenile courts cannot deal with him effectively. Another lad, just over the age of 16, may have the physical and mental development of a child of 13 or 14, yet in most provinces he would have to be dealt with in open court as an adult. Section 9 of the Juvenile Delinquents Act recognizes the first situation and permits the juvenile court to send on any juvenile over the age of 14 to an adult court in certain circumstances. My suggestion is that there should be a provision either in the Juvenile Delinquents Act or in the Criminal Code for the second situation so as to permit an adult court at its discretion to remit the case of any accused person of 16 or 17 years of age to the juvenile court. This would meet the chief problem which arises in all cases of offenders between the ages of 14 and 18; it would depend on the discretion of the person administering the court whether or not the person should be dealt with in an adult court or in a juvenile court.

My third suggestion is that the principle relating to the secrecy of records in the juvenile court, as provided in Bill No. C-57 now in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver South, should be adopted. Finally, I think the committee must take a long look at the usefulness of the juvenile court committees which have been set up under section 27 of the act. These are described as committees of citizens serving without remuneration. Except for some unusual instances, these committees do not exist, or do not function. The idea that there should be something in the nature of a community interest—a kind of grand jury for juveniles—was good. But the system has not been used and I suggest that some thought should be given to its effectiveness. If this provision is not proving effective, perhaps it should be abandoned. On the other hand, if it can be made to function usefully, then I think better provision should be made in the act.

I hope these few remarks and the others which will be made in this debate will be seriously considered by the committee which is being set up to study the act and by the government when it contemplates legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere—

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I wonder if I might ask the house to show me its indulgence, with your permission, Mr.

Speaker, so that I may say a few words now. I regret that I have another urgent appointment, and while I should like to sit here and listen to the debate I shall not be able to do so. I can assure hon. members that I shall read it carefully in Hansard. If hon. members will understand the reason why I would appreciate the opportunity of saying a few words now, and then leaving—

Mr. Speaker: I take it the hon. member is willing to defer?

Mr. Benidickson: I think there is no objection to departing from the usual routine in this instance. I hope the hon. gentleman's speech will not be a rehearsal of what he intends to say to the ladies of the Canadian Club about juvenile delinquents, perhaps tomorrow.

Mr. Fulton: I can assure the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River that he need have no qualms on that point. I do not intend to speak for long, and I can also assure him that even if I did say here what I intended to say to the ladies, it would not shock him.

The reason I should appreciate the opportunity of saying a few words now is that I should like, first of all, to express my appreciation to my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka for having put this subject down on the order paper. I hope he will understand that my action in announcing, a few days earlier than his motion actually appeared, that a special committee on juvenile delinquency was to be set up was not intended in any way to steal his thunder. It is, rather, that the persons concerned with this subject have arrived at the same conclusion, namely, that it is necessary that a concentrated and co-ordinated effort should be made to come to grips with this problem of juvenile delinquency. It is for this reason that I announced earlier in the session the appointment of a special committee within my department to look into all aspects of this matter and to study it across Canada in consultation with other government and private organizations concerned with this field so as to make recommendations within a year as to efforts which may be made by the government, both within its own jurisdiction and in co-operation with other authorities, to improve the situation.

I should like to take this opportunity to correct one impression—one criticism, I should say—which appears to be widespread. A number of organizations wrote to me after the appointment of the committee was announced expressing regret that we had not included upon it any trained social workers. The answer, as I have indicated in my letters on this subject, is that we do not have in my department, for reasons which I think will be obvious, anyone who has had experience as a trained social worker. I wanted a departmental committee because it was the experience, certainly in connection with the correction and reform program which we instituted, that effective and concentrated work could be done by a departmental committee of this sort. I think, with due respect, in the kind of field in which we are operating more effective, more concentrated and more speedy work can be done by a departmental committee of this sort than by other kinds of general committees or commissions. That was the reason that led us to decide to appoint a departmental committee.

I can assure the house, as I have assured all those who have written me, that there need be no cause for concern that the views of those concerned in this field of social work will not be fully in mind when the committee's report is submitted, when its recommendations to me are prepared, because we have taken care in the terms of reference, the detailed instructions as it were which we gave the committee forming the basis of their operations, to specify that they seek at an early stage meetings and conferences with organizations, welfare societies and individuals active in this field all across Canada for the specific purpose of enabling them to have a first hand and extensive knowledge of the views and recommendations which those concerned with and working in this field would wish to bring to our attention with respect to the solutions and the actions which will be brought to bear on this problem.

It is, as I have said, the intention incorporated in the instructions to the committee that they shall complete their work and let me have a report within a year from the date of their appointment. They are hard at work now. They have made a number of visits to points outside Ottawa. I am glad to be able to report to the house that everywhere they have been in contact with both government and private organizations their presence has been welcomed and the fullest co-operation and mutual interest in arriving at a solution has been evident on the part of those with whom they have met and held their discussions. So I am satisfied that the committee is at work effectively, and I look forward to a useful and constructive report.

The only other observation of a general nature I wish to make at this time is that a certain amount of research, I believe, will be necessary to be done by this committee and by others with whom they work because it has been my conclusion, as a result of the consideration we have given to the matter to date, that there are almost as many impressions of and definitions of the problem of juvenile delinquency and what constitutes a juvenile delinquent as there are individuals who are called upon to express their opinion. What is a delinquent? What is the age at which a person ceases to be a juvenile delinquent and becomes an adult criminal? These and a host of related problems are questions to which there is no agreed answer, questions on which there has been, in my view, not sufficient attempt as yet to arrive at a common basis of understanding that would be acceptable across Canada, at least as the basis upon which to found an attack upon the problem.

It has always seemed to me that you will not make an effective attack on a problem unless you first of all define clearly and concisely the nature and extent of the problem you wish to cure. This will be one aspect and perhaps the first aspect of the committee's work, to define the nature and extent of the problem of juvenile delinquency in Canada and then to grapple with the question of its basic causes. And then if, as I hope, they are able to come forward with specific answers in those general fields, we should be able to get really concrete and constructive proposals for the cure of the problem.

Recognizing always, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, that this field is one of divided jurisdiction, I would therefore wish to make it clear that we as a federal government cannot come up with a course of action which will provide the entire solution. We may be able to, and indeed I believe we shall be able to, arrive at a series of recommendations which will cover the whole field, but it will be the case that we as a federal government, under the present constitutional division of responsibility, will be able to act or intervene directly on only a portion of those subjects or perhaps of those recommendations. With respect to the remainder, it will be our intention and our objective so to conduct our own affairs here and so to co-ordinate our own activities that solutions may be found. For instance, I have in mind the activities of the Department of National Health and Welfare, for one thing, and the possibility of the grants in aid for physical fitness; that is one head that occurs to me. Then we would offer a series of co-ordinated activities or programs with provincial governments and with such other agencies of the provincial governments as they may care to bring to bear on the field, and in so far as lies within our competence, also with private agencies working in this field.

In other words, what it is essential to bear in mind is that the solution is not going to lie in action at one level only. We hope that our recommendations which will have been discussed in advance with all those across Canada in that field, both governmental and private agencies, will commend themselves to those bodies, and that then we will be able, by action in our field and by co-ordinating where we can do so our activities with others not members of the federal government or its agencies, to accomplish a complete attack on the problem of juvenile delinquency.

Why have we been so concerned as to set up this special study recognizing as we do the complex nature of it to which I have just referred? In brief, the answer to that question is simple, but I believe fundamental. It is that no program designed to meet the problem of and the concern for criminality in Canada can be practical or complete unless it attacks that problem in all its aspects.

We have attacked it at one end with respect to our penitentiary system. We have, we believe, fairly launched an up to date, sensible and sound correctional reform program. We are revising our penal system and the programs operating therein in order that we may have, and I believe we will have, one of the best penitentiary systems in the world. That is only going to be a very partial answer to the problem if we stop there because we would be dealing only with one end of the problem of criminality. If we are going to have a well rounded and complete program it is essential that we deal also with the basic causes and factors which contribute to criminality.

I would think there would be general agreement in this house, at any rate, that one of the first places to start in dealing with the problem of criminals and criminality is to do what you can to prevent people from becoming criminals; and surely you can take no more effective action in that field than by launching an attack on the problem of juvenile delinquency. That will be most effectively done on the basis of the following approach, that we give consideration to the young people of this country, even those who may have inherently some psychological or other tendencies which are such that they are prone to become criminals or to fall into a life of delinquency and crime. Then if we can isolate them, find them before they have gone too far down the road, and bring to bear a program such as the one I have hinted at in broad general outline, then we can, I think, confidently expect that we shall have gone a fair way toward preventing the incipient delinquent from becoming a hardened criminal. This is, at any rate, the objective. It is for this reason that we in our department, with the support of my colleagues in the government, have come to the conclusion that, having got our correctional reform program well launched, then the next consistent and essential step to take is to launch a study leading to a series of recommendations and a program in this field. As I said, I shall bring to the attention of the committee and I myself shall study carefully the remarks made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and the remarks which will be made by all those who will speak here in the course of this debate. I thank the hon. member particularly for making it possible to discuss this matter here. I look forward with anticipation to reading the remarks of those who will participate. I should like to express in anticipation my appreciation of the help I am sure we shall derive from them in these sittings.

Mr. Benidickson: I rise only to ask a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brunsden: I will yield to the hon. member.

Mr. Benidickson: No; go ahead.

Mr. Brunsden: I merely wished to ask this question. In his exploration of this most fundamental question in Canada, has the minister found a receptive attitude on the part of the provinces? With respect to the provinces is there any willingness to co-operate with the federal government in coming to grips with the real fundamentals of the question?

Mr. Fulton: It is a little bit early to answer that question conclusively with respect to the policy level, as we have not yet approached that stage. However, on the basis of what we have found so far with respect to the readiness of provincial government officials to meet and to discuss this problem gladly and co-operatively with our committee, I think I am quite safe in anticipating a real readiness on the part of provincial governments as such to co-operate with us. I think it is only fair to say that the extent of their co-operation will to a degree depend on their judgment of the soundness of the recommendations we make. I think I may safely anticipate that we shall come forward with sound recommendations. I think I may also say that I can safely anticipate effective co-operation in the long run.

Mr. Benidickson: If the Minister of Justice will permit me to do so I should like to ask him this question. I think he said, "My colleagues and I have reform well advanced". While he was speaking I tried to look through the index of Hansard in order to determine which member of parliament asked not long ago about the committee to which the minister referred, and the likely time when that committee would present its report. Can the minister reconcile the fact that the ministry has well advanced plans for dealing with this matter with the expectation of a report from a committee about which a member of parliament—as I very well recall although I cannot name him—asked not long ago?

Mr. Fulton: I think my hon. friend has confused two things. I am sorry if any remarks of mine just a moment ago gave rise to that confusion, although I do not think they should have done so. What I said was that we are well advanced with the implementation of our program of correctional reform. I then went on to say that we have concluded that, having gotten that far on that aspect of it, it is now timely and indeed essential that we start on this aspect, namely the juvenile delinquency aspect of our over-all program of attack on crime in Canada. I certainly did not say that we are well advanced in our program with respect to juvenile delinquency, as I drew to the committee's attention the fact that we appointed our study committee only in January. We have instructed that committee to have its report available by the end of the year.

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for having thought of giving the house the opportunity to examine a problem which has become crucial, as anyone who has taken the time to consider the effects of juvenile delinquency in Canada will agree.

I think hon. members appreciate the explanations the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) has given and the additional remarks he has made concerning the work of the committee which was set up to examine precisely the problem of juvenile delinquency and to make all possible and necessary reforms so that we may at least find a partial solution to that problem.

The hon. member who introduced this motion mentioned certain advantages of the present legislation which is to be found in chapter 160 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

When this legislation was first adopted, the situation was just as serious as it is today. If one reads each article of the act, one comes readily to the conclusion that the role assigned to the state is and must remain that of a substitute and that the heart of the matter is to be found within the family circle, from which stems the problem of juvenile delinquency.

During the 15 years I have been practising law, I have been called many times to appear before the social welfare court to assist young delinquents who had got in trouble with the law. Much as I hate to admit it, the parents, in almost the majority of cases, had been remiss in their duties, by failing to watch over their children, by not showing enough interest in them and, above all, by too often setting a bad example.

I think the act should not be amended, but it should be more strictly enforced. One has but to read section 33 to see what forceful provisions are laid down concerning parents.

Parents who, through indifference or bad example, allow their growing child to become a juvenile delinquent should be brought before the courts, so that the sentence imposed could serve to remind each and every parent that he is duty bound to try to bring up his children in such a way that they will become worthy members of tomorrow's society.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I wholeheartedly agree with his remarks concerning the provisions of section 27 of the act.

I think our small towns and municipalities should make it a point of honour to set up a committee of citizens with a view to checking juvenile delinquency within their own territory.

If those who belong to welfare agencies, such as the Rotary, Kiwanis, Richelieu or Knights of Columbus clubs, or other similar organizations, dealt with the real problem of juvenile delinquency, they could do a wonderful job to stem that growing calamity.

Alas. It is often said that juvenile delinquency is but the doorway to crime. I think parents should more often be held responsible for offences committed by their children. When they have been advised that their children must appear before a welfare court, as provided in section 20 of the act, I think that our judges should penalize those parents when there has been real neglect on their part, because, too often, unfortunately, the children only follow the example and advice, especially the example, their parents give them.

While waiting for the committee's report and the adoption of the legislative measures that will undoubtedly be called for later, I think that our welfare courts should be more concerned with the consequences of juvenile delinquency, and the presidents of our courts should see to it more often that the parents are held responsible for their children's misdeeds, when they have shown themselves indifferent and neglectful.

Of course, there are exceptions. Very often, the offences of the children are committed without the knowledge of the parents, but when the latter neglect their duty or set a bad example, I think we should not penalize only the children but rather and especially the parents who are responsible for the crimes committed by those children.

Mr. Speaker, I must somewhat disagree with the mover of the resolution when he says that it would be advantageous for us to give greater publicity to trials that take place before our social welfare courts.

I prefer to endorse the proposal made by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome) who, by a bill introduced in this house last year, requested the destruction of young delinquents' files after five years, in order that they be spared the burden and consequences of a criminal record all their lives. I rather think we should give publicity to trials of adults who are brought before our social welfare courts and keep on considering with pity and helping young delinquents, because the prime object of the act is precisely to reform the child who is in trouble.

Section 3 of the Juvenile Delinquents Act shows the real spirit behind the adoption of chapter 160. Section 3, paragraph 2 provides as follows:

> Where a child is adjudged to have committed a delinquency he shall be dealt with, not as an offender, but as one in the condition of delinquency and therefore requiring help, guidance and proper supervision.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the role of the father and the mother. As I said a moment ago, if we had the courage of assuming our responsibilities, the state would not invade that field of education, because the Juvenile Delinquents Act aims, first of all, to help and bring back on the right path those of our children who have strayed away from it. If all parents understood the gravity of their task, we would not have to consider today such a serious problem.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we all realize how serious is this problem. Therefore let us all try to improve the situation.

I am happy that the mover of this resolution has called the attention of the house to the problem of juvenile delinquency. By giving it serious consideration and by co-ordinating our efforts, we will allow the growing generation to become the hope and the consolation of their parents.

(Text):

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, this motion is a good one and shows a tremendous amount of thought and study on the part of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. However, I think the remarks of the Minister of Justice have made this debate redundant and my contribution will be very short indeed.

My approach is somewhat different from that of the hon. member who moved the motion, his, I believe, being more that of the lawyer and mine perhaps more that of the social worker. However, I am sure both of us see the problem as a national one and one with which the federal authorities have a great deal to do within their jurisdiction, I think the Minister of Justice made a very important point when he said that we must deal with the problem of definition and decide exactly what is a juvenile delinquent, whether the test is to be by age or by development. I believe he also put his finger on the problem when he disclosed the difficulties in getting a commission which would deal with both the area of law and that of social service.

I have only one comment I wish to place on Hansard in this regard. As the committee is mainly concerned with the legal aspects of the problem, I hope that when it writes its report it will not deal with it only from that point of view. We know that there could very well not be a complete meeting of minds between those concerned with social service and welfare and those who deal with the problem from the point of view of law. If there is such a difference I hope every effort will be made to see that the report brings into focus and clarifies rather than obscures the position of the social welfare people who, as the minister himself said, are trying to discover the causes of juvenile delinquency rather than looking at the matter simply from the point of view of the punishment of such delinquents.

I think it would be well for us in this chamber to remember that Canada is not alone in facing this problem. If we read newspapers and magazines we are aware that the problem is faced to an even greater degree in some ways by our friends to the south in the United States. It is certainly also one which the Soviet Union faces and one which causes great concern and consternation in the United Kingdom. Why? There are a great many reasons. Possibly one is the feeling of insecurity in a very insecure age. We are living in an age of transition, of moving from one set of values to another. We are living in a society in my opinion in which, incidentally, all values are being questioned, and we are living, of course, in a society in which life itself seems to be a very uncertain thing.

I hope that the committee about which the minister spoke will make a very detailed, thorough and progressive study of the problem. I believe the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and I perhaps differ on a number of points but we certainly do not differ in terms of the importance of this issue. He referred to the problem of secrecy. I am sure he would recognize the great difficulties in not allowing a general debate to take place in those areas where the lives of young people certainly could be adversely affected in the future. I know there are others who wish to speak. I give my support and that of this group to any change that is made which will help to alleviate the causes of juvenile delinquency in Canada.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is to be complimented on the introduction of this motion. In my view the Minister of Justice is also to be complimented for having taken part in the debate. I think it is an indication of the value of this motion that it has already been adopted by the government. A committee is at work and that committee has been instructed to report back in one year's time.

As mentioned by other speakers, I have a bill on the order paper, Bill No. C-57, which has to do with the secrecy provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. I was attempting to correct one particular problem through amendment of the act. The approach taken by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is much broader and better and the approach taken by the ministry is much better.

I would however, Mr. Speaker, in all fairness say that Bill No. C-57 was originally introduced by the hon. member for Bellechasse, the present Secretary of State. This committee might well refer to the debate which took place on June 24, 1958 when the hon. member for Bellechasse introduced his bill. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka made a tremendous contribution to that debate.

As other speakers have said, I do not wish to take up too much time of the house. I would, however, like to stress one point and that is that since the committee considering the revision of this act will be composed of representatives of the department charged with the responsibility of law enforcement, the drafting of laws, the appointing of counsel to support these laws, the prosecution and conviction of people who may be accused of breaking laws, this committee should give great weight to the opinions of people in the social science field. I have heard it said, for instance, that the secrecy provision which was incorporated in Bill No. C-57 would make it more difficult for law enforcement officials to do their work.

This provision is to the effect that if anyone convicted under the Juvenile Delinquents Act does not get into trouble for a period of five years the records in respect of that conviction must be destroyed. If a person is convicted at the age of 12 and nothing else has happened to him until he reaches the age of 17, I do not see why those records should not be destroyed. After that age he would come before the adult court and be treated the same as any other adult. There have been instances, and I think they were cited during the debate of June 24, 1958, where juvenile delinquency records have been used after the person has become adult. I do not believe this is fair.

In so far as the matter of appeal from the juvenile courts is concerned, I would say that I have no opportunity of judging this complaint one way or the other. However, if there is a lack of the right of appeal, it would seem to me this may be an indication that our juvenile and family courts are doing a better and better job. I will be looking forward to seeing the report of this committee. As I say, I only wanted to say a few words because the minister informed us the committee will be reading this debate and being guided by what has been said.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Aiken: Perhaps—

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the hon. member speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have noted, Mr. Speaker, the indication by the Minister of Justice that a committee has already been established to study this matter. I should like, rather than have a vote, to make a few remarks in closing and then call it six o'clock.

Mr. Benidickson: Speak for one minute, and then get a vote.

Mr. Broome: There is no point in voting.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to clear up one question that arose during the debate. Several speakers indicated that during my introductory remarks I had put forward the suggestion that there was too much secrecy surrounding juvenile courts. I did not intend to convey this impression. I believe it is essential to the work of the juvenile and family courts that their sessions be closed. The act sets out that no press reports can be made and no names used publicly in connection with any case considered by a juvenile court. My point was that the secrecy of the proceedings left wide open the possibility of abuse by judges of the court, if they were so inclined. The difficulty of appealing makes it all the more important that the secrecy provision be not abused.

My suggestion was that appeals should be more easily attained rather than that the secrecy should not be as great. I think that is one of the things with which we are most concerned, that is that courts that operate as social agencies, with secrecy for those who are involved, should have a right of appeal attached to them so that juveniles who may feel they were unfairly convicted could take an appeal to another court.

May I call it six o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DIVORCE BILLS—REQUEST TO SUSPEND PRINTING IN ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Speaker: Before leaving the chair, may I say that I understand the hon. member for Halifax wishes to revert to motions in order to obtain unanimous consent of the house to standing private divorce bills for a further period.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Yes, that is correct, Mr. Speaker. Some excellent progress is being made, but it will take a few more days yet to achieve a solution to the problem. I must, therefore, ask if the house is agreeable for unanimous consent to have the provisions of section 3 of standing order 15 concerning the printing of orders for the second reading of divorce bills, and consideration thereof, suspended until otherwise ordered by the house. The effect of this is to save the cost of printing the daily orders.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I can quite understand the reason the hon. member makes this motion. I wonder if he has been actively associated with other sections of this house in connection with this important matter? I know a number of pages of routine proceedings are required for the printing of these bills unless something of this kind is done. I did not understand the hon. member to say he had consulted the opposition house leader in respect of this motion. Has he done so?

Mr. McCleave: Not in respect of this request, Mr. Speaker. However, there has been consultation going on with all the parties concerning the procedure to be used in handling divorce bills.

Business of the House

Mr. Benidickson: Since there has been no consultation on this request, as is usually the case, I must ask if there was a date set in the motion. Was any date set as to when these items would be restored to the order paper?

Mr. Speaker: As I understand the proposal of the hon. member for Halifax, it is to the effect that the printing of divorce bills on the order paper be suspended until further order of the house, which could come about at the instance of any member.

Mr. Benidickson: The matter could be raised and I suppose, within 48 hours, the effect of this motion could be reversed, is that right, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River objecting to the proposed order?

Mr. Benidickson: No, sir.

Mr. Speaker: In order to make it clear what is being asked, the proposal is that the provisions of section 3 of standing order 15 concerning the printing of orders for the second reading of divorce bills and consideration thereof, be suspended until otherwise ordered by the house. This would mean that the matter must be brought up again in the house and an order made to put them back on the order paper before they would come back on the order paper.

Mr. Benidickson: As I have indicated to Your Honour, I assume any member could make a motion to make that possible within 48 hours?

Mr. Speaker: I think that at any time, under the heading of motions any hon. member could rise and ask that this order be reversed. With that understanding, is the house agreeable?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say that I am completely at sea owing to the mystery of this business, but apparently it is a move to save the taxpayers' money without any infringement upon the rights of hon. members, and therefore I agree.

Mr. McCleave: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I take it, then it is agreed that this course be followed with respect to the printing of these bills on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

[Mr. McCleave.]

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Churchill—Mr. MacEwan in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Veterans' Land Act to extend the period during which a veteran may qualify for benefits; to establish dates on which persons shall be deemed to be discharged; to extend the repayment period of loans; to enable the director to arrange group life insurance for veterans on a voluntary basis; to increase the rate of interest where a property reverts to the director; to increase the maximum assistance under part II; to provide further financial assistance to certain full time farmers; to provide further financial assistance to part time farmers and commercial fishermen; to extend the purposes for which a part III loan may be used; to extend the uses to which proceeds of a sale or other disposition of land may be put; and to provide for the release to a veteran of a portion of the land on which he is established.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Chatterton: I feel compelled to say a few words on this resolution for more than one reason. First of all, I have been closely associated with this legislation for several years. Second, as one of the "backest" of the back benchers—and I sometimes wonder, in this position, how far our voices carry—I ask myself whether the proposed resolution coincides by accident with some of the suggestions I have made or whether some of my suggestions and recommendations to the minister have played a part in the drafting of the resolution which is before us. It is hard to say.

In any event, it is certainly a source of satisfaction to me to know that many of the provisions in this resolution are such as I have recommended to the minister and to the staff of his department. First, as to the extension of the deadline date. The deadline has, up to now, for all practical purposes, been September, 1962. It has now been extended to October 31, 1968. This action was very necessary because of the many anomalies and inequities which arise in legislation such as this in connection with a deadline. For example, under the provisions which have existed up to the present time, certain veterans would have been eligible after the deadline date whereas others, with overseas service, might have lost their eligibility as of September of this year. Another important factor concerning the extension of the deadline in so far as people now serving in the armed forces are concerned is this: not too many of them are aware of the fact that they are eligible under at least two parts of the Veterans' Land Act. The first is part II, under which members of the armed forces are eligible, provided a commanding officer can state that they will be stationed in one location for a period of 18 months. Another area of the act with respect to which members of the armed forces generally are not aware of their eligibility includes parts I and III. By virtue of an amendment brought in by the present government, members of the armed forces are eligible under parts I and III of the act, provided they are on their last posting. This extension of the deadline date to 1968 will make available the benefits of this legislation to members of the armed forces for a period of some five years. I should like to have recommended to the government that no tailgate or deadline be included in this legislation. However, we know that this government will still be here to extend the deadline further in 1968 and I take it, therefore, that the present provision will be satisfactory to the veterans of Canada.

Some of the provisions in this resolution are far reaching. The minister had indicated that the amount of loans to small holders will be increased from $10,000 to $12,000. This is particularly significant when we consider that the amount of the increased deposit required to get this larger loan will be only $200. In other words, for a $200 increase in the down payment the loan under part III will be increased from $10,000 to $12,000. This in itself will be most acceptable. But the one new departure indicated in this resolution is the fact that these increased loans, for the first time in the history of the Veterans' Land Act, will be made retroactive. Hitherto, all the increases, first, from $6,000 to $8,000, and then from $8,000 to $10,000, were available only to new borrowers. They were never made available to those veterans who had previously obtained assistance under the act.

As the minister told the committee this afternoon it is now considered that those veterans who are already established should be able to obtain the additional money required to enlarge their homes or their holdings. It is true they might have been able to do this under part IV of the National Housing Act. Over the years I have maintained that the veterans of Canada are deserving of better assistance than is provided under part IV of the housing act, so I think it is one of the satisfactory features of this resolution that all these veterans, numbering in the order of 60,000, established under parts I and III of the Veterans' Land Act will now be able to get this additional assistance.

One of the major departures envisaged by this resolution, as I gathered from the minister this afternoon, is the new clause proposed to amend the act in relation to the small family farm. Before I discuss that clause I wonder whether for the sake of clarity and getting the record straight I should refer to the welcome comments made this afternoon by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. He read at some length from the report made by the veterans land administration on some 5,000 farmer veterans across Canada, going back to 1957. I think the hon. member did not clearly understand that the recommendations resulting from the findings of that report were fully implemented by this government in 1959. That report indicated the need for additional credit to enable these veterans to set up economic farm units across Canada under the Veterans' Land Act. The act was amended, and those recommendations were implemented by the present section 64 of the act which allows for a loan of up to $20,000 for one farmer, provided he farms an economic unit. That is the crux of the difference between that wonderful legislation and this new proposal mentioned by the minister today, that is, the provision for the small family farm.

The new proposal makes provision for veterans who operate small farms who could not have been accommodated under the existing legislation. Under the small holdings provisions a man was supposed to be able to assure the administration that he had an income from employment and there was a provision relating to the farm being an economic unit before one could qualify for a loan of $20,000. Between these two positions were a large number of veterans operating small family farms who will be taken care of under the new provision.

I think this is a rather bold experiment. I hope it will serve as a guinea pig for similar legislation which will be made available to non-veterans who operate small family farms just as the Veterans' Land Act served as a guinea pig for the Farm Credit Act. In the same way I hope this legislation will serve as an experiment for similar legislation to assist non-veterans who operate small family farms.

Another proposed amendment will have the effect of extending the advance under part II of the Veterans' Land Act from $10,000 to $12,000. As hon. members no doubt appreciate part II of the act is an adaptation of the National Housing Act to the specific use of veterans. This is part of the self-help program. It must be understood that although the advance is increased from $10,000 to $12,000 the amount of the loan available to veterans under part II of the act remains the same as it is now under the National Housing Act. In other words for a three bedroom house a veteran under part II can still obtain a loan of $14,200 and for a four bedroom house he may obtain a loan of $14,900. The only difference is that under part II the amount of money advanced by the administration will be increased from $10,000 to $12,000.

The measure of insurance mentioned by the minister will, I think, be well received. Certainly the experience of the administration in respect of the Farm Credit Act has been satisfactory. I believe the proposal will be accorded widespread approval and a warm reception by veterans.

Further details of the amendments will be presented to the committee in due course. I merely wished to take this opportunity of making a few comments particularly because in my riding there are approximately 1,200 veterans who have taken advantage of the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act. The half acre provision that was introduced last year was well received. I know that the proposals foreshadowed by this resolution will win wholehearted support not only among the veterans and the Legion but among people all across Canada.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Churchill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-80, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, CONTROL OF DELIVERIES, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-75, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the absence of the Minister of Agriculture is deeply regretted by all hon. members of this house. On his behalf I am how bringing to the attention of the house amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture would have much preferred to have presented this measure himself but under the circumstances it is not possible for him to do so. My colleague's record of activity and service during the year and a half he has been Minister of Agriculture is well known to the Canadian people and has received wide acclaim among farmers, particularly in relation to his activity on behalf of the western farmer acting closely in co-operation with the Canadian wheat board in pressing forward with the sales of Canadian wheat abroad. It is a remarkable record and the minister deserves full credit for what he has done.

The main purpose of this bill is to extend for another five years certain vital sections of the Canadian Wheat Board Act which expires at the end of this crop year on July 31 next. These sections have the effect of maintaining the board as the sole marketing agency for western wheat, oats and barley in interprovincial and export trade. The established practice has been one which permits parliament to periodically review the operations and achievements of the Canadian wheat board in the light of changing conditions.

I recently examined the record of the debate that occurred when amendments to the act were introduced in 1957 by the then minister of trade and commerce, the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe. On the basis of my examination of the record which occurred in this house on that occasion I judge that the attitude of the house will be the same now as it was then, and I trust that this continuation of the wheat board will be approved together with the five year extension which will permit a review of the operations of the board at that time.

The important features of the supply and demand position for wheat during the past six years are that (a) the all time peak carryover occurred at the end of the 1956-57 crop year when 733 million bushels were on hand—no one in the house has a better recollection of that than have I because at that particular moment I was charged with certain responsibilities in connection with the activities of the wheat board and the disposition of that overhanging surplus—and (b) the carryover estimated for July 31, 1962, will be less than 300 million bushels. This will be the first occasion in nine years that the carryover into a new crop year has been less than 500 million bushels.

The two most important factors bringing about this change are the well above average exports and below average production. In fact, during each of the past five years, including the current crop year, disposition has exceeded production. Domestic usage has been fairly constant at between 148 million and 166 million bushels, while exports during the five year period will average close to 320 million bushels, compared to 295 million bushels for the previous five year period. Production for all Canada has averaged 384 million bushels during the last five years and 552 million bushels during the five years from 1952-53 to 1956-57, compared to the 25 year average of 428 million bushels.

An exceptionally large export movement of wheat was achieved during the 1960-61 crop year. Combined exports of wheat and flour were 353.3 million bushels, of which 318.4 million bushels were straight commercial sales and 34.9 million bushels were under government assistance program or special credit arrangements. This was the fourth highest level of exports in Canadian history, and helped to maintain Canada's position as the world's leading commercial supplier of these commodities. The average level of wheat and flour exports for the past four crop years has been 311 million bushels as compared with 272 million bushels for the previous four year period, an average increase of 40 million bushels a year.

Last year's export performance was supported by a strong demand for Canadian wheat in Europe and other traditional markets. Sales to Japan, for example, reached a new record of 56.6 million bushels, and the heavy European demand for Durums virtually exhausted supplies of this wheat. In addition, substantial sales of wheat and barley were negotiated with mainland China, Poland and Czechoslovakia, largely under government supported credit arrangements. As to the current outlook, export demand has continued strong through the present crop year and exports should compare very favourably with last year's performance.

The recent striking increases in wheat prices have been primarily due to the improved market situation. One of the important factors on the demand side has been the marked increase in credit sales. In addition, prices were further strengthened by the devaluation of the Canadian dollar. For example, from January 3, 1961, to March 12, 1962, the price of No. 1 northern, basis in store lakehead, increased some 22⅝ cents, of which 10⅛ cents can be attributed to the devaluation of the dollar and 12½ cents to the improved market situation. The house will recall a statement I made on March 12, as found at pages 1684 to 1686 of Hansard, reporting the successful completion of negotiations for the renewal of the international wheat agreement. At that time I announced that the new price range raises the minimum price in U.S. dollars, for No. 1 northern in store Fort William-Port Arthur and Vancouver from $1.50 to $1.62 and the maximum price from $1.90 to $2.02½. At the current rate of exchange this price range in Canada in dollars is $1.71½ minimum and $2.13⅝ maximum. It should be noted that selling prices for the next three years are to be within the price range, and that actual prices will depend on market conditions. It is worth pointing out in this connection that the actual selling price in Canadian dollars for No. 1 northern at Fort William fell, during the course of the present agreement, to a low of $1.63⅝ in November, 1960. This is not only 50 cents lower that the new maximum of almost $2.14 but it is about eight cents lower than the new minimum.

The recent increase in sales, plus the increase in prices, have spread substantial benefits throughout the Canadian economy. For example, exports to date of wheat and barley to China have amounted to $190 million of which payment in cash has been received to the extent of $108 million. These exports, together with exports to our traditional markets, have provided a welcome increase in western farm incomes, which in turn have released new purchasing power for the goods and services required by farmers from the business community at large. Additionally these sales have generated increased employment for country and terminal elevator operators, railway and dock workers, and others engaged in the domestic handling and export movement of grain and flour.

As part of the government's accelerated wheat sales program the Canadian wheat board during 1961 brought to Canada seven important missions for the purpose of studying the production, handling, storing, milling and processing, and merchandising of western grain. These groups were made up of milling representatives and grain trade officials from the following countries: Belgium, Ireland, United Kingdom, Austria, Switzerland, Norway and the People's Republic of China.

In January, 1961, the board established a technical services and market research department. This was done in view of the growing importance of technical factors in the usage of Canadian wheat in overseas markets, and its main function is to study the cereal processing industries in these countries and provide the board and its customers with advice and technical information relating to Canadian grain. The technical assistants, with knowledge of foreign languages, have been selected and especially trained for this service and numerous services to the milling and baking techniques employed in different countries have been carried out to date. In addition, the board maintained its usual close contact with overseas customers through personal visits to principal markets in Europe, Central and South America, the Caribbean area and Asia. It is a matter of record that the Department of Trade and Commerce have assisted the board in every way open to them to effectively promote the sale of Canadian wheat and flour abroad.

As at March 26, there were 99 per cent of delivery points—1,920—in western Canada on an open delivery quota. Seven delivery points were on a six bushel quota, and 22 delivery points were on a seven bushel quota. It is anticipated that in a very short time all delivery points will be on an open quota basis.

This is a most remarkable change in five years. I happened to run across in Hansard for April 1957, a speech by one of those members from the province of Alberta representing the Social Credit party who drew attention to the facts in his area and I think he listed 30 or more delivery points, most of the delivery points were on the three bushel quota, some on the four bushel quota and I believe three on the five bushel delivery quota. Five years later we find almost universally across western Canada open delivery at all the delivery points.

Many of the 29 delivery points not now on an open quota have stocks of No. 1 northern wheat exclusively, and are in the Vancouver shipping area. To ship No. 1 northern from these points in excess of market requirements would cause congestion at Vancouver for a grade of wheat not in immediate market demand. However, it is anticipated that additional quantities of No. 1 northern will be required in the near future at Vancouver, and these stocks will be shipped from these 29 points. A daily check is being made on these 29 points in order that they will move to an open basis as rapidly as is possible, consistent with good marketing practices.

I have already stressed how important the stability of the wheat economy is to the prosperity of the Canadian economy in general. In achieving this stability the Canadian wheat board plays a central and vital role. This role, we all recognize, has become more difficult and complex with the growth of world surpluses and of surplus disposal programs. Consequently, the international wheat agreement, as an instrument of price stability and market guarantee, has become even more important than in the past and, in addition, our bilateral consultations with the United States have in substantial measure succeeded in safeguarding our commercial markets.

I should like to make a reference to the importance of eastern Canada as our primary commercial market for western feed grains. From time to time problems arise in the supplying of western feed grains for eastern livestock and poultry feeders. In order to bring about a closer liaison and a better understanding of these problems the Minister of Agriculture will shortly be announcing the establishment of a special eastern liaison committee to work with the Canadian wheat board.

In closing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to re-emphasize the support of the government for the principle of western producers marketing their wheat, oats and barley through the Canadian wheat board. Accordingly, I strongly recommend the extension of the Canadian wheat board's powers for another five years.

Mr. Brunsden: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Brunsden: As a matter of re-emphasis, would he give us the figures with respect to the total number of open delivery points and the total number on a seven bushel quota or less?

Mr. Pickersgill: It has nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. Churchill: Ninety nine per cent of the delivery points were on open delivery. Seven delivery points were on a six bushel quota and 22 on a seven bushel quota.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, at the very outset of my remarks I should like to join in the expression of regret at the absence of the Minister of Agriculture on the occasion of the presentation of this bill. I am sure all other members of the house will wish to join with me in the wish for a speedy recovery to full health on his part and an early return to participation in the activities in the House of Commons.

I must also say I was glad to hear the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who presented the bill, indicate near the end of his remarks that it was very difficult to overemphasize the importance of the stability of the wheat economy in relation to the total economy of our country. I think some of us may tend at times to underestimate the importance of the wheat economy in the over-all prosperity of the country. I was glad to hear him make that statement and I think it bears reiterating.

I do not propose to review the history of the wheat board legislation. When a similar bill was presented to parliament on February 1, 1957, the history was rather adequately reviewed by the then minister of trade and commerce, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, as appears on page 888 of Hansard for that year. The whole history of the legislation and its development and of the changes made throughout the period since its inception are set out there, and I do not propose to repeat it.

But there are some matters in the bill that concern me a good deal and I want to address myself to them. Since the bill amends several sections of the existing act it is rather hard to describe its principle, but probably the main principle is the extension of the provisions of the act with the present powers for a further term of five years. Therefore in effect the bill renews the act for a further term of five years although there are other important provisions in the bill.

One amendment not mentioned by the minister is the change in the definition of the word "grain" for the purpose of the act by adding rapeseed to the grains included in that designation. That is an important amendment of real substance. The development of the production of this oilseed to the present extent and the potential development in the future if proper markets can be found are quite important not only to the economy of the western provinces but to that of the whole country.

Then there is the change in the definition of the word "minister" from Minister of Trade and Commerce to Minister of Agriculture. It is a curious thing, but when that change was announced in the House of Commons taking away jurisdiction over the wheat board from the Minister of Trade and Commerce and giving it to the Minister of Agriculture no explanation was given by the government of the underlying reasons for the change. If I remember correctly, and the Minister of Veterans Affairs will bear me out in this, the change was made when he left the Department of Trade and Commerce, was moved to the portfolio of veterans affairs and the new Minister of Trade and Commerce was appointed. The new Minister of Trade and Commerce was left with a very much truncated department. Jurisdiction over wheat selling, with all its importance to the economy of the country, was taken away from him. Jurisdiction over the atomic energy control board, with all its increasing importance to this country, was taken away from him. A few other things were also taken away from him and he was left with bits and pieces of the trade and commerce department. If jurisdiction over marketing of products of our mines, the newsprint and woods industry activities was also taken away from him he would be reduced to a very junior position.

In any event, I do think that the government, having done this sort of thing, owes an explanation even at this late date as to why this change was made and why the marketing of this commodity with all its importance was taken away from the trade and commerce ministry.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman not think that question has been answered by the subsequent conduct of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. McIlraith: I did not say so just as nakedly as that, but that is undoubtedly so.

Mr. Lambert: Is this Pat and Mike?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is George. They would not let George do it.

Mr. McIlraith: In any event, I want to point out that surely the marketing of wheat is of sufficient importance to the economy of this country that it should be the major activity of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has jurisdiction over marketing generally. Certainly some explanation is owed to the House of Commons why this change was made, and surely a change is not to be made because of the personalities of different ministers occupying the portfolio at any given time. Surely that cannot be the basis of a change of this importance.

The wheat board seems to have earned the support of the producers of grain in western Canada. I think there is virtually no opposition to it today from producers, although I can recall many debates in earlier years in this house when the spokesmen in the house for the producers opposed the wheat board rather roundly and in language that was not always a model of moderation.

There are one or two things about the bill that concern me. Apart from the change extending the act for five years, I wonder why there are so many small, relatively inconsequential amendments in the bill.

The minister spoke about marketing, increased sales, the shortage of wheat in some parts of the world, credit sales and other things. This raises in my mind one question: why was there such secrecy about the China wheat sale? Why is the house not given the relevant information about that sale, although the minister talked about other sales, the number of bushels each year and certain credit sales. So far as I am concerned, I believe that the major agreement for the China wheat sale was signed before the Minister of Agriculture left for that trip across the Pacific, and the announcement he made about having signed the agreement was completely misleading.

I asked a simple question on the order paper on this subject, and I am going to read it. The question, as it appears at page 1562 of Hansard for March 7, 1962, was:

> On what date was the long term agreement between the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company with respect to the sale of wheat and barley signed?
> 2. How many individual contracts have been signed under this agreement, and what is the date of each?

These questions were not answered at all. The simple question with regard to the date when the agreement was signed would presumably be answered by a simple statement of the date. No such information was given, but a long winded answer was given which reads, in part, as follows:

> Apart from the information with respect to volume and credit terms, it is contrary to government policy and not in the public interest to reveal details of the commercial sales contracts entered into by the Canadian wheat board.

I just have to say that that answer is false because I did not ask for credit terms. I did ask on another occasion for the rate of interest charged on the contract and the rate of exchange on which the price given to this house had been computed; but that information had been refused by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance. This answer, on the face of it, therefore is false. I can give the reference in Hansard to the refusal of that information.

When I asked in the second part of my question how many individual contracts were signed under the long term agreement and the dates of each, I expected a simple reply stating the number—four, five or six, whatever it was. The government did not give that information, but merely this long answer, and I quote:

> Five contracts have been signed under the long term agreement negotiated by the Canadian wheat board with the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation and its accredited agent, the China Resources Company.

I should not have said, by the way, that the number was not given. The dates were not given.

> As indicated in the reply to question (1), the details are considered to be privileged.

The details were not requested.

> The volume and shipping period for these contracts are as follows:

Then, there follows a table showing the quantities in millions of bushels and the shipping period as well as the ports, information which was not requested at all. What is the reason for the secrecy about the one point, the dates of the agreements? We can only construe from the answer that the stories in the trade about these agreements are true and that the trip across the Pacific was for window dressing. We can only conclude that the wheat board is being used, that splendid producers' organization that has functioned so well over the years and grown and developed so well over the years, for the purpose of the propaganda machine of the present government. This splendid sale is being made into a propaganda weapon for the ex-advertising man running the propaganda for the present government. There is no longer any regard for the board and its independence, or for parliament—

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman was not mentioning you, so how could there be a question of privilege?

Mr. Brunsden: Well, a point of order, then. My hon. friend is discussing an organization that is highly admired in the western provinces—

Mr. McIlraith: That is what I said.

Mr. Brunsden: —and he is accusing it of being the tool of this government.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Brunsden: It is the tool of no government. It is a producer organization and it is controlled by the producers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is the point of order? It is a point of disorder.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have an opportunity to speak later if he wishes to do so.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member has not been listening to what I was saying. I was saying that this was a splendid producer organization. It is the tool of no one. I was accusing the present government of misusing it for propaganda purposes. I was going on to point out if they continue on that improper course they will damage the wheat board, damage this splendid producer organization. I also made it quite clear that it is the government who in this China wheat sale made the date of the contract such a great government secret, apparently for security purposes or some other reason of government policy. I want to point out that I believe all members of the House of Commons support efforts to sell wheat to China. They are very happy indeed about the fact this sale has been made, but they are greatly concerned about the conduct of this government in relation to that contract.

I challenge the Minister of Veterans Affairs when he replies to my remarks, as he will have an opportunity to do, to answer precisely the points I have raised. I should like to draw the attention of the house to another example of the abuse of the wheat board by the present government. In so far as the China wheat sale was concerned, the government saw fit to guarantee the payment of the wheat to the extent of $100 million. I asked some questions to obtain information about this, and I found out that the government had not used the vehicle heretofore always used for insuring payment on sales of wheat on credit terms. All previous sales had been insured under the export credits insurance legislation. The reason they could not use this legislation became quite obvious when we examined the provisions of the measure. The $100 million was larger than the authority granted under that act, so the government could not use it.

However, there was another reason. It has been the practice, indeed it is an obligation under that act to produce and disclose such contracts. The secrecy could not, therefore, be pursued if that act had been used even if the government had increased the authority to guarantee payment under that act. In any event, I asked a question about the insuring of the contract and I received another rather long winded answer. It will be found in Hansard for February 26, 1962 at page 1246. I shall read the answer:

> This matter was covered by order in council P.C. 1961-1012 of July 13, 1961, which was reported to the house in the summary of orders in council passed that month, tabled on September 27, 1961. This order authorized the Minister of Finance to give the Canadian wheat board an undertaking that, in the event of any default by the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation in respect of payments due the board under contracts for the sale of Canadian wheat and barley made under the long term agreement between the said board and the said corporation, such parliamentary approval as may be necessary will be sought to enable direct reimbursement by the government of Canada to the board of any payments in respect of which the corporation is in default, and authorize the minister also to guarantee to six chartered banks the repayment of advances and interest thereon made to the board up to a total not to exceed $100 million outstanding at any time for the purpose of financing the sale of up to six million long tons of Canadian wheat and barley under the long term agreement between the board and the corporation.

I ask the house to note this. The second question I asked was:

> If so, by what statutory authority was such guarantee or credit arrangement made?

Note this answer given by the Minister of National Defence:

> The guarantee was given under section 11 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and the authority to make the undertaking was given to use the powers vested in the crown by section 54 of the British North America Act.

I think it will be relevant, since we sometimes in this house do not look at these things, if I read section 54 of the British North American Act. It reads:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that house by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address, or bill is proposed.

It will be noticed, Mr. Speaker, that that section has no applicability to the subject matter at all and no relevance whatever. The answer is that in so far as the guarantee of payment of this wheat board sale, the marketing of this vast quantity of wheat, with which, as far as I understand it, all hon. members of the house are in accord, is concerned, this section has nothing to do with it. The section says that the government has to come to the house for approval of expenditures, but once again the government did not come to the house, before making this commitment on behalf of the treasury.

The order in council is interesting. I was able to worm a copy of the order in council out of the government by having a motion of the house passed compelling its production. I got it, or at least a copy of it. It is not the complete copy, but I take it the original is in order, with the date it was signed. I received what purports to be a copy of it. This order in council is very interesting. It does not deal, of course, with the interest charged under this contract. That is another thing about which we can find nothing. But it does not make any reference to section 11 of the wheat board act as the authority for its passage. Of course, it is perfectly obvious why it does not. It is because section 11 of the wheat board act does not contain any such authority; it gives no such authority whatever. Therefore the government is in a position of having passed the order in council committing the taxpayers to a $100 million guarantee without the authority of parliament.

Our legislation has been very careful to give the House of Commons control over the expenditure of money, and the course for the government, a very proper one was to submit the commitment to the house for approval—I think it would have at once obtained the support of the house—and to disclose to the house relevant facts about the contract. I respectfully suggest that this is why the government did not see fit to follow the proper constitutional course and submit this guarantee by it to the house for approval in one of the three or four ways in which it could have done that. It could have done it under the export credit legislation by bringing that act in for amendment and disclosing the reason for getting the larger amount of money required; it could have done it by a simple vote in the estimates; it could have done it by an amendment to this particular bill. But before I go further, Mr. Speaker, I want to read section 11 of the wheat board act so that we will have on record just what it says. It says this:

> The governor in council may authorize the Minister of Finance, on behalf of Her Majesty, to guarantee on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, repayment of advances made to the board, and interest thereon, on the security of grain held by the board or otherwise, by any bank incorporated under the Bank Act for the purpose of carrying on its operations under this act, or to make loans or advances to the board on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon.

It will be seen that nowhere there is the authority to guarantee credit to a foreign country to pay for a commodity that the foreign country is buying in Canada. It will be seen that it does not give such authority at all. It is no wonder that the order in council does not follow the usual procedure of orders in council in giving its authority in the early part of the order as drafted. The draftsman, had there been any such authority, would of course have followed the obvious practice of stating his authority right in the order in council itself.

There are two or three matters that perhaps could be pointed out in this connection. If the government is going to pursue this kind of policy in handling the wheat board, they are going to break down the wheat board and destroy confidence in it. The wheat board has developed support in this country and does at the moment enjoy the confidence and respect of those concerned with it, not only the producers of grain who are using it as their marketing agency but other people throughout the country who are concerned with the economy of the country and who attach, as the minister correctly stated, major importance to the marketing of wheat in the total economy.

It seems to me that the government should in this bill, when it is among other things correcting what it calls typographical errors in the explanatory notes—I will have some questions to ask about the typographical errors, as they are described, at the committee stage—when it is making that kind of correction it surely should have brought forward, as it was obligated by law to have done last year, an amendment that would provide the authority for this guarantee that has been given. Of course, when that is done it requires the government to disclose those parts of the transaction that are relevant to its consideration by the House of Commons. That can easily and properly be done without in any way jeopardizing those competitive parts of contracts of sale that it is not usual to disclose. There is no difficulty about the matter at all other than this abnormal and improper desire on the part of the government to conceal from this House of Commons the parts of the deal with communist China that are relevant and proper for this house to consider in this commitment of public funds to the extent of $100 million without the approval of this House of Commons.

It would seem as if here, once again, the government has, with all its record of carelessness in money matters since it took office almost five years ago, committed another grave irregularity and another failure to disclose to the house and bring before the house for its approval those matters that belong exclusively to the house, namely its right to approve the expenditures of public funds.

As far as that particular transaction is concerned, the interest charged, and other relevant matters, I do not doubt that the house would have approved the granting of credit on an appropriate basis or the insuring of payments to the producers on appropriate terms. I do not think there is anyone here who would have done otherwise than was done in the case of all these sales where there has been a credit risk and it has been considered advisable to sell on credit. It seems to me that this is a matter for which the government must answer.

I cannot for the life of me understand the reason for the secrecy with regard to the date of the signing of the agreement. That has always been given in the past when there have been similar agreements. As a matter of fact, there was a great fanfare when the contract was announced. There is one aspect of this which mystifies me: in answer to a question which I asked, information was volunteered which, in my opinion, would certainly be useful to competitors—for instance, the quantities to be shipped in each month up to the end of May, 1962. A shrewd commercial agent could learn a good deal from this which would be of use in bidding for further sales. As I say, I am mystified as to why the government should have given this information, which had not been requested, while refusing to give the other information concerning the rate of exchange which had been used in computing the total value of the sales—information which is relevant and necessary for a proper consideration of this matter by the House of Commons.

I am glad to say that the government agrees with the previous government that the wheat board legislation is, in general, good legislation and that it should be extended for a further term of five years, as was done a couple of days before the change of government—as a matter of fact, shortly before the dissolution of the last parliament. I would expect that after this bill has been dealt with there will be dissolution followed by a change of government in accordance with that precedent. I am sure of that; but perhaps it is not strictly relevant to the bill we are considering, however inviting it may be to discuss the subject at this time.

I should like to ask the minister in closing whether, in addition to dealing with the points I have raised, he would give us some explanation before we reach the committee stage of the consequences of the principle of the amendment contained in clause 5 of the bill which ostensibly corrects an error in the previous act. I should like the hon. gentleman to give the house any information which is readily available concerning the consequences of that mistake in the earlier legislation.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): We are again happy to have an opportunity of discussing one of the major Canadian marketing boards, certainly the greatest one the Canadian farmers have. In doing so, I should like to say we are unhappy that the Minister of Agriculture is not with us; we hope he makes a complete recovery and is able to return to his duties soon.

We are pleased to note the report of the minister that Canada is now in a more favourable position than for a number of years inasmuch as we have been able to reduce our surplus of wheat, a surplus which was considered to have been very large at its peak of more than 700 million bushels. Now, the minister says, we are down to a carry-over of only 300 million bushels. Western farmers may be interested to learn that the minister of agriculture in Ontario, speaking about grain in Ontario the other day, pointed out that we might have been guilty of the sin of expecting that our surpluses in western Canada would continue to pile up and that we might have under-estimated the quantity which should normally be held over. He suggested that it might be necessary to hold much more grain than we have held in the past. The present situation has made it necessary, in Ontario, to buy grain; conditions have made it necessary to import grain, and eastern agriculture is looking with some reservations upon the limiting of the surpluses which were considered inevitable for a long time to come. I think we may find that in the next year or two there may have to be an increase in production in those areas which are capable of increased production. We may find ourselves in the happy position of producing more wheat, since the government is going to sell that wheat.

I, personally, would like to congratulate the government on the amount of wheat it has sold. I do this indirectly because, really, it is the wheat board itself that we are congratulating. A member of this committee interrupted another hon. member a few moments ago to point out that the government was not controlling the wheat board. That is true. It is a credit to the wheat board organization and its directors, a credit to the western farmer and, I think, a credit to the governments of Canada, whether this one or previous governments, that we should now have reached a stage after 25 years at which the wheat board itself is capable of going across the world, making advantageous sales and getting co-operation from the administration to allow it to receive currency which the trading nations are able to tender. I think that is a very good thing. The wheat board has over the years developed to a point at which it commands a great deal of respect. It has also undertaken a great deal of responsibility.

I think it would not be out of place to draw attention to some of the advances made by the Canadian wheat board in the 25 years of its existence. As we all know, this is a government marketing agency. It is an agency established by parliament to market on a national and international basis all the grains specified in the act. When the Minister of Veterans Affairs announced the other day that we had participated with 57 countries across the world in establishing a new international wheat agreement, he was, I think, indicating to everyone in this country that here was a national marketing board which had come of age and which was now a prime factor in the agricultural economy of Canada. In the light of this I cannot but wonder how the members of parliament, a week or two ago, could have taken the action they did in this house and made the references they did in relation to all the national marketing boards.

This is the only major one we have tried and it has been successful. This is a socialistic type of marketing board. There are 230,000 grain producers belonging to it. Each gave up a certain amount of the free enterprise spirit to operate under the quota system which in the short term on many occasions has proved not to be advantageous. It has been argued that because of the quota system, because of the international wheat agreement and because a long term agreement had to be worked out by the board the farmer in one year may not have received as much as he hoped to receive. The farmers have to regulate themselves to a large extent by establishing quotas of production. That is essential under any marketing board we establish. Those who belong must realize they have to put something in in order to take something out. I believe the farmers of western Canada deserve to be congratulated for co-operating among themselves in establishing the board and making it successful.

I would be remiss if I did not on this occasion congratulate the present hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale as well as the former member for that riding. Since coming to the house I have heard much talk about rapeseed and have concluded it must be important in that area. Before the present hon. member from that constituency was elected to this house the previous representative also talked about the importance of rapeseed.

Mr. Rapp: Just once.

Mr. Peters: I believe those two hon. gentlemen have been influential enough to bring about the inclusion of rapeseed as a grain under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The present hon. member is also to be congratulated for having introduced his famous bill which incidentally was passed by the Senate within the last few days. He has played an important role in having rapeseed recognized as a major commodity under the terms of the board.

This is a socialistic venture in which the people of western Canada have engaged. They did so for the same reason all people engage in this activity, not because they particularly want to but because they have to. They wanted more for their friends and for themselves and so they co-operated in this respect.

I have in my hand an interesting study published by the Saskatchewan wheat pool concerning orderly wheat marketing through the Canadian wheat board. Many people in eastern Canada should examine why and how the board developed. This should be prescribed reading for members of parliament. We have heard in this house more discussion about western Canadian wheat and cereal grains than we have had about all other agricultural problems put together; yet many people do not realize how the board came into existence. I will read several quotations from this study dated December 1960 and I urge all hon. members to examine it at the first opportunity. The study deals with such subjects as a 25 year history of the board and goes further back in Canadian agricultural history to deal with subjects such as "Farmers in Business", "Farmer-owned Elevators" and "The First Canada Wheat Board, 1919-1920". Reading from the paragraph under the latter chapter heading:

> The Canadian government took complete control of the Canadian wheat crop in 1917 by establishing the board of grain supervisors and closing the Winnipeg grain exchange. The board bought all wheat produced in Canada at a fixed price and managed its movement to Europe to help win the war. The board continued its operations in 1918-19.

It is interesting to note the reason why this was done—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I interrupt the hon. member in the interesting review he is making of the history of this act to remind him that this is an amending bill which does not bring into debate the whole Canadian Wheat Board Act but only the principles involved in the amendments which, as I look at them, are somewhat restricted. I would think the hon. member is going rather far afield when he attempts to review the decisions of this house in previous parliaments in respect to wheat board legislation, unless they are involved in the amendments which are now before the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I say a word on the point of order Mr. Speaker? I think perhaps Your Honour was not paying close attention when the minister introduced this legislation and gave a review of marketing under the act which really had nothing to do with the bill at all, and himself introduced and appeared to be inviting a general debate on the whole subject of the wheat board. It seems to me, the minister having set us that example, at least the official spokesman for each of the parties in the house should be accorded a similar attitude, although I quite agree on technical grounds what Your Honour said is perfectly correct.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, may I also be heard on the point of order? Clause 6 of the bill has the effect of removing a certain limitation period that is in the existing act. The effect of that clause is to extend the entire act as it relates to wheat for a further period of five years. If that clause were not in the bill the Canadian Wheat Board Act would terminate this year so the whole act, in effect, is at issue under that clause.

Mr. Fulton: Nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: I note that part II is to be extended for five years and also part IV which relates to the board's regulation of interprovincial and export trade in wheat to which the minister referred. However, I agree that one does not wish to be unduly restrictive in the initial speeches of the spokesmen for the various parties. Nevertheless, I do not wish to make it impossible for me to restrain the debate as it proceeds.

Mr. Peters: I thought we should review the act because I suspect there are a number of western members who will vote against this bill. One hears rumours about a certain bill on the order paper, an act to quieten doubts that have arisen concerning the constitution of and the exercise of powers by the Canadian wheat board and for the resolving thereof (Canadian wheat board).

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member for Timiskaming is anticipating discussion of a certain motion that is to come before the house and is doing so in violation of paragraph (d) of rule No. 149 of Beauchesne.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member give me the reference?

Mr. Ormiston: Page 127 of Beauchesne, rule No. 149, paragraph (d).

Mr. Speaker: Not the reference to Beauchesne but to the bill he has in mind.

Mr. Ormiston: Bill No. C-61.

Mr. Speaker: As a matter of principle, of course, the hon. member for Melville is quite correct that it would be totally improper to debate another matter standing on the order paper unless the principles of that measure are necessarily involved in this particular bill. From what the hon. member for Timiskaming has said about it, it appears it is quite a distinguishable subject and should not be raised now.

Mr. Argue: May I say just a word or two on the point of order. I agree that it is out of order in one debate to refer specifically in anticipation to another debate. However, I think it would be in order to say that there is a body of evidence, of which this is a part, indicating a concerted attack against the principles of orderly marketing under the Canadian wheat board. There are evidences of this attack in this session as there have been in previous sessions.

Mr. Churchill: That is an unfounded allegation.

Mr. Pickersgill: That has nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure what the hon. member for Assiniboia has referred to.

Mr. Churchill: Nor is anybody else.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to allow the hon. member to proceed.

Mr. Peters: All I was trying to do was to review the history so that the people in eastern Canada in particular would know whether they wished to support this measure at the present time to renew the five year tenure. Surprisingly enough there appears to be this year opposition to renewing it, and I use only this one example. There is the fact that they voted against it the other night on the marketing legislation. However, we will not mention that one. In my opinion the Canadian wheat board has done a remarkably good job. There have been, of course, and there will continue to be free enterprisers who complain about the restrictions of the quota system. I am sure that this matter has been a sore spot with many. These quotas have to be administered obviously by officials who have to decide what the quotas will be. The minister has just informed us tonight that the quota this year is much less restrictive than it has been for many years. The reason, of course, is obvious, and we have congratulated the minister. I refer to government assistance to the Canadian wheat board to arrange the sales of wheat in the export market, particularly to the new markets of China and Poland. In addition, there has been a terrific reduction in our surplus owing to the droughts, for which I do not expect the government wish to take much credit. However, the fact is that the quotas this year are less restrictive than they have been in other years.

In this report we find the following:

> The quota system has to be operated so that it will meet a wide variety of circumstances. The board learns of these circumstances through its contacts with markets overseas and with the elevator agents at every western shipping point. The administration of quotas is a peculiarly difficult task, but one that is essential to efficient merchandising of Canadian wheat in times of surplus.
> Delivery quotas have created many annoyances. But they are an essential part of today's marketing machinery. Farmers recognize the basic fairness of the quota system and the necessity for it under congested conditions. This is an area in which farmers themselves can do much to make it work. If the quota system were destroyed by abuses. all farmers would be much worse off.

I believe that this type of quota is essential in all types of marketing legislation and that the Canadian wheat board is to be congratulated on the fact that they have been able for a great number of years to operate the quota system. They have done so with the support of the majority of the grain producers in western Canada. In 1932, signs appeared on the store fronts saying "Wheat market, open trade, overstocked". One sign said, "579 million bushels, must sell, best No. 1 northern wheat, 54 cents, no offer refused". Through orderly marketing the government has been able to negotiate an international agreement that will give to Canadians under the new wheat agreement a minimum price of $1.71½ and a maximum price of $2.13⅝. While it has not been possible for the Canadian wheat board to get as much as they would have liked to receive, they certainly have been able to equalize the amount of money available to all farmers and we have been able, as a Canadian government, to find that it has been possible for one of our largest and most effective crops to be distributed in a fairly reasonable manner at what is considered to be a fairly reasonable price. Thus in 25 years in one particular commodity we have been able to develop marketing legislation that has been successful.

I believe that not the least of their accomplishments has been their ability to negotiate in an international market. You can remember, Mr. Speaker, the situation a few years ago when we used to tell the government to go off their wheat surplus and to go out and sell it. They did just that. We will always remember the remark that was made by the then minister of trade and commerce who said that these countries knew that we had the best wheat in the world; that if they wanted it, they knew where we were; that we had always been here and that they could come and buy it. I am certainly happy to know that the Canadian wheat board did not take this position. They decided that the only way in which to sell it was to get out and sell it, and they have done very well. The Saskatchewan wheat pool has this to say:

> In the highly competitive international wheat market of today, any price reduction offered to gain a temporary advantage over a competing exporter will almost certainly set the ceiling for subsequent sales. No exporter is going to allow another to undersell in the market. In this situation, what some groups refer to as "price flexibility" can mean only one thing, that is "price cutting." And price cutting is not an effective way to sell more wheat.
> These are only a few of the many factors which go into the daily pricing of Canadian wheat. It is a fact that the price the wheat board has maintained is much higher than prices prevailing during any other period of big surpluses.
> Admittedly, the price of wheat is not high enough to compensate the western farmer for his present high costs. But, without the wheat board as a single selling agency, there is no doubt that the price would be much lower and the farmer in much greater trouble.

I believe that the history of the Canadian wheat board has been sufficiently important that it should be supported not only in western Canada but also in eastern Canada. Not only do I believe that it should be supported, Mr. Speaker, but I believe that a leaf should be taken out of its book, where with 25 years of experience the operations of a national marketing board have been successful, and that we should establish for all commodities this type of legislation.

The Canadian wheat board has certainly set a pattern. I hope I am wrong in assuming that there are some resentments against this type of co-operative enterprise on the part of primary producers themselves. But I know that the government, looking at the record of the board this year and the fact that we had been able to reduce the carry-over to what is considered by some less than a necessary reserve, will realize that we have gone a long way in our marketing legislation. I hope that all the western members, even though they be of the Conservative party and believe in free enterprise, will give their whole hearted support to the continuation of a five year tenure of the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just a few short remarks on Bill No. C-75, an act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Western farmers will appreciate very much these amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. In particular they will be interested in the new paragraph (e) of subsection 1 of section 2 which provides that "'grain' includes wheat, oats, barley, rye, flaxseed and rapeseed".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government was forced into it.

Mr. Rapp: This amendment has been a long time coming, but I should like to congratulate the government for introducing it. However, western farmers will be disappointed to a certain extent that mustard seed was not included. Under the present system mustard seed cannot be included because it has no statutory definition as to grade under the Canada Grain Act. If my Bill No. C-15, which I put before the house a couple of weeks ago, had been adopted this situation would have been changed and the government could have included mustard seed in this amendment in Bill No. C-75.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It should have too.

Mr. Rapp: Up till now mustard seed can only be classed as commercial grade, but if my bill had been adopted it would have been given a statutory definition as to grade. This is very important because mustard seed is a very important grain and there is a future for it. There is a tremendous market for mustard seed in the United States as there also is, of course, for rapeseed. If the bill before us is not approved too soon there may still be a chance to include mustard seed under the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

I understand that in the other place last Friday Bill S-19 to amend the Canada Grain Act was introduced. This is exactly the same bill as I had before the house a few days ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And it was because of the argument on your bill that they were compelled to take that step.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know the hon. member's enthusiasm for mustard seed but may I say that the decision that the house took, if it took a decision, is not subject to review now. Nor are debates in the other place referred to in debates here. Furthermore, if the hon. member wishes to pursue discussion of the clause he mentioned there will be an opportunity to do so in committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order, it may be that the hon. member and I are perhaps a little more moved in this matter than the government or other hon. members are. He and I have been working for this for some time. If I may say so with great respect, it seems to me it is open to a member to say that a bill might have been more adequate if it had included something which has not been included. That is all the hon. gentleman is doing.

He has mentioned what has taken place in the other place, and I made the observation that this had happened as the result of a bill he introduced here, seeking to suggest to the government that it should accept a responsibility which up till that time he alone had had the courage to assume. I should think, Mr. Speaker, that if Your Honour's knowledge of this subject were that of the hon. gentleman and perhaps one or two others you would understand that the matter is germane.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member has invited me to modify my opinion, I shall go so far as to say that, although discussion of the bill of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale is out of order and discussion of what the other place is doing is also out of order, if he wishes to discuss the principle of the inclusion of rapeseed he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. Rapp: I will abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and when the bill is in committee I will deal more extensively with the new paragraph (e) as found in clause 1 of the bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this Bill No. C-75, an act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Those of us who are from the eastern part of the country have many things to say about this bill. This evening, however, I will limit myself to a few comments on the feed grain market, with which eastern Canada is especially concerned.

In my opinion, this market, which constitutes an asset for eastern Canada, should be protected, representing as it does some 100 million bushels of feed grain.

Last year we suffered from a shortage of grain following the regulation imposed by the Canadian wheat board which had stored grain for export in eastern warehouses. Now, this grain shortage caused a substantial increase not only in the price of grain but also in the transportation costs of the grain which came to us by rail instead of by boat. The price of grain increased so much that the production of hogs and chickens was reduced and the eastern farmers suffered real hardship.

I believe that the best market we have for feed grain is the domestic market. The government cannot protect this market because it has no long term policy in this regard, only a day-to-day policy. It is somewhat like the dairy industry policy. We have surpluses, while we lack grain to feed our cattle.

I should have liked to quote figures to show what damage this government is causing to our eastern farmers, but unfortunately I do not have my notes with me. I shall soon have the opportunity, no doubt, of coming back on this subject to prove that the present government's policy concerning the feed grain market is harmful to our farmers.

I have another criticism to make about the government's grain policy. It has to do with transportation. There is a grain transportation subsidy policy which we mean to keep—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member goes further, may I ask him what in this bill would permit any discussion of transport policy? It seems to me the discussion has been wide enough without going further beyond the scope of the limited provisions of the bill which relate to the wheat board and certain aspects of the wheat board. There is nothing about transportation.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I think the grain transportation subsidy policy comes under the Canadian wheat board, at least indirectly. However, what I wish to say is that farmers in the east suffer from the government's policy and from that of the Canadian wheat board.

On many occasions grain dealers and farmers in the east have held meetings following which recommendations were made to the government. In particular, they made one which was not accepted, and that was the one concerning the appointment of a commissioner from the east to the Canadian wheat board. In fact, it is only this afternoon that an answer was given to a question I had put on the order paper and which reads as follows:

> How many vacancies have occurred since 1957? Give the name, address and qualifications of those appointed to fill such vacancies.

I was given the answer that the two commissioners who resigned since 1957 were not replaced by a representative from eastern Canada, although the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) had promised last year that a representative from eastern Canada would be appointed to the Canadian wheat board.

Surely, a commissioner from the east could have made very sound suggestions, to the benefit of our farmers.

Besides, a recommendation was made in favour of the appointment of a commissioner to control transportation and supply of western grain. If the government had accepted that suggestion, we would probably not have the problems—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member, if he understood what I said before, would not want to return to the question of transportation. This is not a general debate on agriculture and wheat production in all its aspects. This bill is to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act and continue certain parts of that act, but not the whole of the act. I have tried not to be too restrictive by interfering with the hon. member when he was referring to the composition of the wheat board which, in my opinion, was out of order. Certainly, it would not be in order to deal with the problem of the transportation of grain under this act. There will be other opportunities to discuss this and I would ask the hon. member to observe my ruling.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about the transportation of grain but about the appointment of a commissioner who would look after the distribution, in an adequate manner, in eastern Canada. A commissioner could make suggestions to the government with regard to the distribution of grain, regulate the stocks in eastern silos, as well as the transportation of western grain to the east.

We know that the free market that exists in the United States is a threat to or a handicap for the eastern farmer. In the United States, the grain market is free, which enables the American farmer to pay a price much lower than the one the eastern farmer has to pay, and then to come and compete with our products on the eastern markets.

Thus, we noticed, last year, a considerable increase in imports from the United States, due to the lower costs of the American farmer compared to that of the Canadian farmer.

The policy of the present government has impoverished the eastern farmer to such an extent that he can no longer make a profit in stock-breeding. Furthermore, the large companies are going in for integration and want to replace the farmer.

Today, we can notice that the farmer in eastern Canada goes in for stock-breeding on a limited scale. Hog-breeding and broiler chicken-farming are affected to a large extent, and there is even today integrated breeding of slaughterhouse cattle.

Mr. Speaker, the only conclusion that can be drawn is that the policy of the Conservative government needs to be revised, not only to protect the eastern farmer, but also to prevent the exodus of the farmers who, every year, swell the ranks of the unemployed.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Boulanger: Certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member tell the house whether he wants us to maintain the Canadian wheat board or do away with it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not at all what he said. The hon. member was not listening very well.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question of the hon. member.

In my opinion, there never was any question, within the Liberal party, of doing away with the Canadian wheat board. In fact, if it exists today, it is thanks to the Liberal party.

Mr. Crestohl: There is the answer.

Mr. Boulanger: Moreover, I could add that the Conservative government is destroying now everything the Canadian wheat board did under 22 years of Liberal administration.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the bill before the house I am sure will receive general approval from all parts of the house since its main provision is to extend the life of the Canadian wheat board for a further period of five years. This is the type of orderly marketing system that has been built up over the years with the support of western producers and the approval of the parliament of Canada. This is a compulsory system for the marketing of grain, but it has the support of the overwhelming majority of western producers. In order to substantiate this statement, Mr. Speaker, I need only point out what whenever farm organizations have discussed the Canadian wheat board they have gone on record as supporting the Canadian wheat board and, further, they have gone on record in asking that the provisions of the act be extended.

The operations of the Canadian wheat board are provided for in the Canadian Wheat Board Act, but the whole cost of the operation and maintenance of the wheat board is paid by the grain producers out of the sale price of the commodities handled by the Canadian wheat board on their behalf. From time to time, as further payments are announced by the minister in charge, it is sometimes felt that these payments come out of the federal treasury. When the cost of maintaining and operating the wheat board is discussed sometimes it is felt, and it is said, that these costs are paid out of the federal treasury.

The fact of the matter is that all of the operating costs of the Canadian wheat board are borne by the producers themselves, even pensions provided for the Canadian wheat board as well as their salaries. This is clearly demonstrated in the bill now before us, which provides for a further expense to the producers by providing for group life insurance plans and group medical plans for the employees of the wheat board. I am sure that this is the kind of provision that would recommend itself to the producers, but it demonstrates again that the producers are paying the whole of the operating costs of the wheat board.

Very often I think the producers themselves do not understand the efficiency of the wheat board's operation. When the wheat board has come before the agriculture committee of this House of Commons they have been able to demonstrate time after time that their operations are exceedingly efficient. As a matter of fact the total administrative costs of the Canadian wheat board have over the years been under one cent per bushel of grain handled. I think this is a very clear demonstration of the great efficiency of the wheat board.

There are some very large costs attached to the operations of the board for which the board pays the bill. These are the operating costs of the elevators, the storage and handling costs; but the cost of the wheat board machinery itself is less than a cent a bushel. I think that producers generally are most happy to be able to pay this very small charge and to receive the great benefits that flow from this central pooling operation and the control that flows under this act.

Mr. Speaker, there is what I call a small amendment; not that it is not an important one, but it is small in relation to the whole operation of the board, namely to include in the definition section the word "rapeseed". I would suggest that the government should have made the provision for the inclusion of mustard seed. As the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale said—I think we should shorten that constituency to "H.M.T." because these names are getting rather cumbersome—"To make it effective you would have to amend some other acts". But surely that is no reason for not starting with this act; and then to make the provision for mustard seed fully effective it is necessary to amend other acts. Then the government can proceed in a regular fashion by amending the other complementary acts so that the full effect of providing for the addition of mustard seed in the Canadian Wheat Board Act would be brought about.

In recent weeks the Canadian wheat board has demonstrated the contribution it can make to orderly marketing in Canada and to the orderly marketing of grain in the world markets. The Canadian wheat board was represented at the international wheat council which discussed and made provision for a further international wheat agreement. While wheat agreements may from time to time not have within them all the provisions that some of us would wish, nevertheless this is the kind of further extension of the system of orderly marketing that commends itself to the western grain producers, and I believe will commend itself to the parliament of Canada.

Some improvements in the international wheat agreement have been obtained in part by the good work of the Canadian wheat board representation at that conference; but, Mr. Speaker, these concessions were in my judgment of a modest type. Initially they hoped to get an increase in the maximum world price of 25 cents a bushel. I think there are arguments why the increase should be more. They had to settle for an increase of only 12½ cents. Part of the reason, I think, for this concession, or this moderate settlement, was the fact that emerging nations have put forward a case for grain prices as low as possible. I think there is a great deal to the suggestion that in the marketing of grain in the world today there should be a clear division between commercial sales and sales of a non-commercial nature and that we should now have two types of international agreement, one to provide for commercial sales and another to provide for an orderly manner of distribution of grain in the non-commercial markets of the world. If this were done, then I suggest it might well be possible to get the kind of increase in the price of wheat for which producers have been hoping for many years.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the house leader what the order of business will be for tomorrow, and is there any change in the business for Wednesday as announced to the house last Friday?

Business of the House

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the intention tomorrow is to continue with legislation, the bill pertaining to the Veterans' Land Act, followed by this one dealing with amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and then the second reading of Bill No. C-38 dealing with financial and other statistics.

Those three items might not consume all the time of the house tomorrow. I am expecting a bill from the other place dealing with an amendment to the board of grain commissioners act, which could be considered; and we have available, if the house is voracious for business, the resolutions in the name of the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Justice has reminded me that we also have available the resolution in his name dealing with an amendment to the Judges Act, which will be taken right after we deal with the statistics item.

Mr. Chevrier: What about Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: We may take up the resolution in the name of the Prime Minister dealing with the electoral boundaries commission. I leave that open for consideration. That is the announcement with regard to tomorrow and Wednesday's business.

Mr. Chevrier: I have just one further question I wish to put to the house leader. In the light of what was said on several occasions, and again today on the orders of the day, is the house leader giving consideration to the statement made by the Prime Minister and himself earlier about the further supplementary estimates No. 4?

Mr. Churchill: With regard to the final supplementaries for this session, I am keeping those in mind; but on reviewing eight earlier sessions from 1950 to 1957 I found that the supplementaries took only part of a day, or two days at the outside, so I thought there was ample time.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are wrong there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are wrong this time.

Mr. Argue: Trying to put it down to the opposition: arrogance, arrogance.

Mr. Pickersgill: A new form of closure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Closure of the worst sort. An arrogant ministry.

Mr. Pickersgill: Remember the earlier debate.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 27, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF FREIGHT ASSISTANCE ON MOVEMENT OF SEED OATS

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as a result of last summer's drought in western Canada, many areas in Manitoba and Saskatchewan are without adequate supplies of seed oats. The governments of these two provinces have requested the dominion government to share with them on a fifty-fifty basis the cost of a program of freight assistance to move seed oats into deficit areas. The cabinet has authorized federal participation in a program of this kind.

The assistance provided will be limited to a maximum of 75 per cent of the total freight costs and also to a maximum of $12 per ton. Assistance will be paid only if the distance the oats are to be moved is greater than 25 miles.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the prairie farmers who are involved will welcome this announcement, but the members of this group do hope this is not in any way related to a coming election.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEETINGS WITH U.K. MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him whether he has any report to make in connection with the visit of the British officials here and the British negotiations to enter the common market.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No special report, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance, the Acting Minister of Agriculture and I met with the Lord Privy Seal of the United Kingdom government over the past two days. We had very constructive talks indeed. This is one of a number of meetings we expect will be held during the next weeks and months.

This program was announced when the Lord Privy Seal was here in January. We believe that these meetings are extremely constructive and useful from the point of view of both governments.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Finance agree with that reply?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has spoken for the government and for all the ministers who attended this very useful meeting. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Essex East is so attentive to this report, which I think if of a gratifying kind. I am pleased that he is now so well acquainted with the subject.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a further supplementary question. May I inquire of the minister whether he is now convinced that the British are going to enter the common market?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the British government has never said it is going to enter the common market.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not ask for the British government's view.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Its decision has been to negotiate. It has taken the view that when those negotiations have served their purpose their government will then be in a position to decide whether or not it will enter the common market in the light of the terms that will then have been negotiated. The whole purpose of the prime ministers' conference is that there may be opportunities for consultation within the commonwealth at the highest level before any such final decision is taken.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether it is a fact, as reported, that Mr. Heath visited Canada this year to forestall a visit by the Canadian Prime Minister to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member wearing that smile behind his hand at the moment knows perfectly well that is a rather far fetched suggestion. Mr. Heath has made it quite clear, as have the Canadian ministers, that this meeting held during the past two days was a matter of continuing consultation. Mr. Heath was here at the beginning of January. At that time it was intended that further such meetings would be held from time to time. Nearly three months have passed since the last meeting, and this week's meeting was timely. It has been extremely useful. It afforded Canadian ministers an opportunity of hearing at first hand from the minister who is conducting negotiations at Brussels on the British side.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

TRAIL, B.C.—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING EXPRESS DELIVERY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. While my question is based on complaints I have received from Trail, British Columbia, concerning Canadian Pacific Merchandising Services, I judge the matter does represent some difficulties in other parts of Canada and therefore has national significance. Canadian Pacific Merchandising Services is a merger of express and freight traffic into one truck service. In view of complaints that since the merger express packages take twice as long to arrive as they did formerly, despite the high express charges, and since Trail and other Kootenay localities are non-competitive points for express traffic—

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. Herridge: —and complaints to the C.P.R. are ineffectual—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think hon. members would better serve the interests of the house if they would allow the question to be completed before judging whether or not it should be on the order paper.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: If any hon. member wishes to raise a point of order I am only too ready to consider it. The hon. member's question undoubtedly is one that would be more appropriate for the order paper.

Mr. Herridge: I thank you for coming to my rescue, Mr. Speaker, but this is a matter of urgency. Would the minister undertake to bring this matter to the attention of the board of transport commissioners and have it investigated promptly?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I shall be pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION ACT—EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether it is the intention of the government at this session of parliament to extend the Freight Rates Reduction Act, which expires on April 30, 1962.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government will make an announcement in the house when it feels it is appropriate to do so.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATE COVERING INTERIM PAYMENTS TO RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the intention of the minister to bring down a supplementary estimate covering interim payments to the railways related to the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation, as was done in supplementary item No. 590 of the estimates for 1961-62?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to introduce any further supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1961-62. I can only express the hope that the house will see fit to deal with those estimates now before it, because the payment of wages to a good many people is awaiting approval of those estimates. I would ask the co-operation of the house in that regard.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question. Does the Minister of Finance not think that if these estimates are of such urgency they should now be before the house?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, they are before the house, and hon. members opposite know that it has been the practice of the house for long years, certainly when the hon. member for Laurier was a minister of the crown, for the final supplementary estimates to be dispatched through the house in a matter of a day or two.

Mr. Chevrier: Never under these circumstances.

Mr. Pearson: Never.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These estimates, as is well known, are in practically every case simply to provide further amounts required to carry out purposes approved by parliament when the main estimates were approved and adopted.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Has the minister given consideration to the fact that supplementary estimates No. 4 are almost a complete duplication of supplementary estimates No. 3?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member would do better to reserve further discussion of this point, which now seems to be taking the form of a debate, until the estimates are called. After all, the ordering of government business is the responsibility of the government, and it is not a matter that should be debated before the orders of the day.

Mr. Chevrier: Speaking to the point of order, may I say that all I wanted to do was point out the parallel that exists between these two supplementary estimates, in order to show the utter confusion on the part of the government in bringing down supplementary estimates No. 4.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, there is no overlapping whatever between supplementary estimates No. 3 and supplementary estimates No. 4 or indeed between supplementary estimates No. 4 and any other estimates whatever.

Mr. Chevrier: No. 5.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member speaks about confusion, and it is regrettable that the confusion is entirely on the part of the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex East rises on a question of privilege, and in that case I hope he is not going to resume this discussion, which as I have already indicated, the hon. member will have an opportunity to resume at another time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do propose to raise this issue on a question of privilege, because the question of privilege does arise out of the arrogant statement just made by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the minister's statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But I have not stated my case.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has said a question of privilege arises out of the arrogant statement made by the Minister of Finance. I heard the statement made by the Minister of Finance, and in my opinion there is no question of privilege arising out of it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would you allow me to state that I do think there is a question of privilege?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Don't be so arrogant.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know what more the hon. member can say, because I heard the statement and he heard the statement. In my view there is no question of privilege arising from what was said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That may be your judgment, sir, after you have listened to me, but surely I have the right to state why I believe I have a question of privilege. The Minister of Finance has indicated that supplementary estimates No. 4 ought to be dealt with with dispatch. It is within the control of the government to decide what business we deal with from day to day, but it is not open to any minister to charge that we have got to deal with particular estimates by a certain period. If we are denied the right to debate these questions, then that is a course of action which I believe is contrary to the rules of this house.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have an opportunity, when the estimates are called, to express his views about the course the government took in ordering its business. As I suspected, there is no question of privilege, and in my opinion the hon. member was seeking to continue the debate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BELLECHASSE CONSTITUENCY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Following the statement he made in the house yesterday, could the minister now comment on the part his assistant secretary, Mr. Marc Andre Bouchard, played in that affair?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I stated that the R.C.M.P. has been asked to make a full investigation.

As early as last Thursday, I personally gave the names of the people whom I felt could be advantageously questioned so that the investigation might be completed during the week end.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Since then I obtained further information which I passed onto the R.C.M.P. yesterday afternoon. As soon as the results are known, we will take the necessary action.

(Text):

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The previous question was entirely out of order, as this is a matter which concerns the director of elections, so I am sure that any supplementary question would be out of order. It is about time that hon. members on the other side of the house obeyed the rules.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just one word on the point of order, as a former secretary of state. It is well known that the Secretary of State acts in this house as the channel of communication between the chief electoral officer and the house. I therefore submit to Your Honour that it has been a time honoured practice to put to the Secretary of State questions regarding the office of chief electoral officer, and I have never before heard exception taken to it.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure but that the question, if it relates to the same matter that was raised yesterday, was directed to the Secretary of State in his capacity as a member of parliament and not as Secretary of State. At least that is the way it appeared to me. However, I will hear the supplementary, and perhaps we can then determine whether or not the question is properly asked.

(Translation):

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he intends to suspend his assistant secretary pending the investigation?

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): That is none of your business.

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, until I get a report from the R.C.M.P., I do not think it would be proper and justified to take any action.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State.

Could the minister tell us who recommended Mr. Labrecque for the position of returning officer in the riding of Bellechasse?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

[Mr. Dorion.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—REPORTED OFFER OF JOINT CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if it is a fact, as reported by the Canadian Press in today's morning newspapers, that the United States has offered Canada joint control over nuclear weapons on Canadian territory on the same basis as the Anglo-U.S. arrangement, the two key system?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, nothing has taken place since the last report in this connection, and any article that may have been published today is purely speculative in every way. I have nothing to add to what has already been stated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Essex East asked this question:

—what consequences have flowed from representations which the Secretary of State for External Affairs said some six weeks ago would be made with respect to the apprehension of certain Christian trade union leaders in Cuba?

While the Canadian government expressed its general concern about the fate of prisoners in Cuba last February, representations were then made with special reference to the case of Reynol Gonzalez, who was well known in Catholic labour circles in Canada and was reportedly under threat of the death sentence. The Cuban authorities have informed us that Mr. Gonzalez has not yet been tried and accordingly is not yet under any sentence. We were assured that the Cuban government would take special account of Canada's interest in this case.

VETERANS' LAND ACT

AMENDMENTS TO EXTEND QUALIFICATION PERIOD, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-80, to amend the Veterans' Land Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, CONTROL OF DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, March 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Churchill for the second reading of Bill No. C-75, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, when the debate adjourned last night I had been pointing out that the extension of the Canadian Wheat Board Act was something that would receive the overwhelming support of the producers in western Canada, and that over the years the Canadian wheat board had served the interests of the grain producers in a very efficient manner.

I had also referred to the discussions that had taken place to bring about another international wheat agreement, and the Minister of Veterans Affairs correctly pointed out two main reasons why the surplus grain situation no longer exists. The first of these, and I think this is the minor one, is the increase in Canadian sales of wheat, and the second reason is the very widespread drought experienced last year which followed a number of years of less than average rainfall. The minister also pointed out that 99 per cent of the delivery points are now on an open quota; but I contend that the grain producers, from the standpoint of potential income within the next few months, are in a very serious situation.

The anticipated deliverable grain from March 1, 1962 to July 31, 1962 totals 177.2 million bushels. This includes all grains, and I would point out that the figure for the same period last year was 554 million bushels. Therefore the income position of grain producers will be very serious during the next few months. This is not the occasion to advocate legislation to bolster farm income, particularly in relation to potential crop failures, but the government should take action in other legislation to protect the farmers from what is a very serious financial crisis at this time.

We have heard many statements about when the election will take place. I have guessed before and guessed wrongly. I probably could guess wrongly again, but the Prime Minister announced that the final payments, after all possible expenditures have been flushed out of the wheat board funds, will be in the producers' hands by May 28. I think that at least has some significant bearing on the date of the election. I am not complaining in any way about the action that has been taken to make interim payments, or about the government doing everything possible to put more money in the pockets of the grain producers at the present time.

but one can only wonder whether this action would be taken in a non-election year, or whether this is an instance of government action being influenced by the proximity of the general election.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs used some statistics to show the improvement being brought about in the ceiling prices by reason of the change in the international wheat agreement. It has been said that there can be a 12.5 cents increase per bushel in the prices to producers because of the increase in the ceiling, but I would like the minister to explain why the present selling price for No. 1 Northern wheat out of Fort William and Port Arthur is $1.90 plus a fraction of a cent, which is about nine cents lower than the maximum under the present international wheat agreement in terms of the Canadian dollar. Our dollar is at a discount today, and the maximum price for wheat under the international wheat agreement is certainly not being obtained for the grain that is being sold out of Fort William/Port Arthur. How can the minister contend, when the wheat board is unable to get the maximum price for wheat under the agreement at this time, that there is any real possibility of getting the maximum in discounted Canadian dollars, to which the minister referred last night, of $2.14 a bushel? I think the minister is just fooling the farmers when he puts forward those figures as a realistic possibility. I suggest to him that they are not; that as the minister introducing this legislation he probably knows they are not, and that he should not be using statistics of this kind.

My main question is this. Why is the wheat board unable to get the maximum price today for wheat out of Fort William/Port Arthur? And if it cannot get it now, why does the minister imply that the wheat board may be able to get the maximum price under the new wheat agreement which will come into effect on August 1?

This amendment gives us an opportunity to review the operation of the wheat board over a five year period, as the minister has said. There has been established under the wheat board something which is called a special account. The money in this fund was accumulated as a result of the fact that certain sums credited to grain producers from time to time have not been claimed. This money is set aside in what is called a special account, and it can be used upon the authority of an order in council set up by the government in what the government believes to be, or says it believes to be, in the interests of the grain producers. In the crop year 1959-60 an order in council was passed which is referred to in this report as PC/1960/519. This took $775,000 of the farmers' money out of this special account to pay to the United Grain Growers Limited because they had an accident in one of their terminals at Port Arthur. The report states:

> On September 23, 1959, the out-shore annex of the United Grain Growers Limited terminal elevator "A" at Port Arthur, Ontario, collapsed. The collapse resulted in the loss of 1,914,760.1 bushels of wheat, oats and barley valued at $2,406,175.22.

This was a loss suffered by one elevator company. True, it was a farmers' elevator company, but I suggest it is not a proper use of this fund to take $775,000 out of this special account and pay it to a single elevator company. The moneys in this account should be used, in my judgment, for the general advantage of all grain producers, and not as a kind of slush fund out of which dollars are made available to an elevator company because it lost certain sums as the result of an accident. I think such an accident as this is an ordinary risk which the company itself should cover by putting away proper reserves for an emergency, taking out insurance and so on. I would ask the minister when he speaks to tell us why it seemed appropriate to take this $775,000 out of the special account and pay it to one elevator company which had suffered a certain loss in grain in a terminal elevator.

The minister wound up his statement last evening by saying that the Canadian government, in presenting this bill, had demonstrated its support of the wheat board as a marketing agency for wheat, oats and barley. However, during the term of office of this government the jurisdiction and the effectiveness of the Canadian wheat board have been undermined. They have been undermined in relation to the sale of feed grain to the feed mills in the prairie provinces. The first excuse was that the wheat board did not have the legal jurisdiction to ensure its quota regulation. Then certain references were made to the supreme court, and the jurisdiction of the wheat board was upheld. But even in the face of this decision by the supreme court, members on the government side of this house carried on an attack directed against the wheat board, an attack on the marketing of oats and barley on the prairies by the wheat board to the feed mills. Led by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and in face of stated opposition from the wheat board and from all the farm organizations, except perhaps one, they were able to remove the jurisdiction of the wheat board in this field.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): May I ask the hon. member a question? Can he recite any opposition which has come from the wheat board with regard to the feed mill policy?

Mr. Argue: Oh, yes. Opposition to this policy which is being followed was stated in the committee.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I was in the committee but I did not hear any opposition.

Mr. Argue: You could not have been listening. The representatives of the board appeared and stated their opposition.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): You could not have been there.

Mr. Argue: I was there. The wheat board opposed this policy. The record is clear. Of course since then the government has arranged that this shall be done and the wheat board, I suggest, has no alternative but to support the government's action in undermining the board by taking out of its jurisdiction the sale of oats and barley to feed mills on the prairies.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): May I ask the hon. member—

Mr. Argue: I have the floor. If the hon. member wants to ask questions he can do so after I have sat down.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the hon. member yields the floor the hon. member for Lisgar will have to wait his turn.

Mr. Argue: I suggest this was the thin end of the wedge. I suggest the Conservative members in this house were following the traditional Tory attitude of tearing down the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board in this field.

Some hon. Members: That is not true.

Mr. Argue: Well, the attack has been made, and it has been successful. The jurisdiction of the wheat board over the sale of oats and barley to feed mills within the prairie provinces has been successfully removed. And, of course, this has increased the pressure from other parts of Canada to have the jurisdiction of the board still further reduced. The hon. member for Melville, who is a genial member, believes that the jurisdiction of the wheat board should be tested even further in the courts. He believes that in future the wheat board should have to go to the Minister of Agriculture to get permission to prosecute wrongdoers who have been bootlegging grain from the prairie provinces across interprovincial boundaries.

I suggest that if this course were to be followed the whole system of the orderly marketing of grain in Canada would be completely undermined. I think the system of orderly marketing built up over the years under the wheat board system has been a good one. I think it should be protected, and I think the policy of the government with regard to feed mills has been a mistake.

The Minister of Agriculture said that before the end of the crop year, July 31, 1961, he would provide for further submissions before he made his policy for the present year clear and final. My understanding from the farm organizations is that he has never consulted them. He never gave them a chance to make representations. He merely went forward in the present crop year with this policy which has undermined the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board. I think any reference to the courts in the future instituted or supported by members of parliament or the government to restrict the areas of jurisdiction would be a great mistake. The Canadian wheat board is today supported by farm organizations and producers. Instead of attempting to tear down the jurisdiction of the wheat board as it now exists I feel further steps should be taken to strengthen the wheat board, to restore the jurisdiction it once had and to make it a more effective organization in the marketing of producers' grain both within Canada and in export trade.

Mr. Brunsden: It still has wide jurisdiction.

Mr. Argue: The announcement as to new prices in the international agreement is important, but I do not understand how the minister can make the claim that there is any real possibility of getting $2.14 a bushel in the future for wheat being sold out of Fort William. I should like the minister when he answers to explain the basis of his statements, and to explain why $775,000 of the farmers' money was paid to one elevator company. I should also like him to make it abundantly clear, if he will, that the government has no intention of further undermining the wheat board jurisdiction over the sale of grain both within Canada and outside our country.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that the hon. member for Assiniboia, now removed from the seclusion of the far corner of the house into the midst of the official opposition party, would have brought some moderation with him; however, it seems to me he has brought all his pessimism and his capacity for wild statements along with him. I would gather that since he could not compete with the hon. member for Essex East in this regard, he decided to join him. It appears to me the hon. gentleman has neglected to erect a partition between his imagination and his information.

I should like to deal with one aspect of the hon. gentleman's remarks, and that is the question of the policy with regard to the feed mills. The hon. gentleman has suggested that I was the one who led the Conservative party into compelling the wheat board to adopt this change in regulations with respect to feed mills. Let me put the record straight. This matter was brought to our attention on a number of occasions not only by the members of the board but by farmers and feed mill operators. It was decided that hearings of the agricultural committee would be held and representations would be heard from all organizations interested in this matter. This was done, and upon the conclusion of all the evidence presented before the committee the decision was taken unanimously. I repeat that it was a unanimous decision.

Mr. Argue: Not with my support.

Mr. Jorgenson: I am sure the hon. member upon reflection—

Mr. Argue: I opposed it all the way through.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has just finished his speech and the parliamentary secretary now has the floor.

Mr. Argue: Well, I do not want him to be unfair, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jorgenson: I am not being unfair. I am merely pointing out that it was a unanimous decision on the part of the committee that the Canadian wheat board would examine this regulation. It is certainly not our fault that the hon. member failed to be present at that meeting.

An hon. Member: There were other Liberals present.

Mr. Jorgenson: There are several aspects of the whole question of feed mills which have not been and should be fully dealt with. I think it should be made clear that in so far as jurisdiction regarding price is concerned, the Canadian wheat board never did have jurisdiction over the price of grain going into non-agreement feed mills. They were responsible for the administration of a quota for the reason that the board has outlined, simply to regulate the flow of grain.

Mr. Argue: That affected the price. That fixed the price.

Mr. Jorgenson: In the terms of the Canadian Wheat Board Act it is stated clearly that the board has responsibility for the movement of grain in interprovincial and export channels. They have no jurisdiction over the movement of grain within a province. It is perfectly legal and it always has been for a farmer to sell grain to another farmer. I ask the hon. member what justification there is in allowing one farmer to sell his grain to a feed lot operator or to a feeder in perfect legality and in penalizing another farmer merely because he sells his grain to a local feed mill.

Mr. Argue: So you penalize them all.

Mr. Jorgenson: Here again you have a problem affecting the smaller farmer. The hon. member for Assiniboia always claims to be the champion of the small farmer, but the very suggestion he is making would have the effect of penalizing the small farmer by compelling him to buy his grain at wheat board prices while the feed lot operator or the big rancher who has the equipment to go out and transport grain is able to obtain the advantage of a negotiated price from the producer. I ask the hon. member what justification there is for that policy.

It is elementary to law enforcement that it is extremely difficult if not impossible to enforce rules and regulations unless they have the support of public opinion. It was quite evident right from the start that public opinion was behind the wheat board changing their regulations in this regard. The only criticism of this policy we have heard has come from the hon. member for Assiniboia and some of his friends in the province of Saskatchewan. With the few exceptions I have mentioned the decision of the board in adopting this policy has received unanimous acceptance.

Mr. Argue: That is not true.

Mr. Jorgenson: Certainly at this time the board has better jurisdiction and better authority in the administration of this policy than they ever had before. They have a better idea of the amount of grain that is going into feed channels and a better idea of what amount of grain is being purchased by the feed mills. After this has been dealt with so many times, and in view of its approval by farm organizations without criticism save for that of a few friends of the hon. member, I fail to see why he continues to bring up this old chestnut.

An hon. Member: They were his friends.

Mr. Jorgenson: Yes. Someone suggests that they were the hon. member's friends. I wonder how closely related to him they are now.

Mr. Argue: What about the Saskatchewan wheat pool?

Mr. Brunsden: What about it?

Mr. Argue: It is opposed to this policy, and so is the national farmers' union.

Mr. Jorgenson: In this connection I would say that whereas under the old arrangement there were only 60 feed mills out of a total of 182 that had agreements with the Canadian wheat board, at the present time practically all the feed mills have agreements with the board, affording the board an opportunity to exercise a greater degree of control over the moving of grain into the feed mills, in addition to helping the smaller producers in obtaining their feed supplies at local mills in the manner in which they wish to purchase these supplies. In many cases the farmers do not have the equipment with which to go out and buy the grain, truck it home, grind it and mix it; they depend on the local feed mills for this service. The change in regulations enables the feed mills to provide that service for the smaller farmers. Rather than being detrimental to the smaller producer, it is of great help to him. Regardless of what the hon. member may suggest, I am going to continue to make in this house recommendations and suggestions which will help the smaller producer rather than make it more difficult for him to compete.

Mr. Brunsden: Will the hon. member for Provencher permit a question?

Mr. Jorgenson: Yes.

Mr. Brunsden: I would have addressed this question to the hon. member for Assiniboia, but I know he would not have the answer, as he bobbed into the meetings of the agricultural committee, asked a couple of foolish questions, got his name on the record, caught the odd headline and disappeared.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Brunsden: I have not put my question yet, Mr. Speaker, and it is this. In terms of bulk grain or in terms of millions of bushels, what is involved in sales to feed mills?

Mr. Jorgenson: In reply to the hon. member's question may I say that the total amount of grain involved represents about 1½ per cent of the total volume of grain handled by the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Argue: About 10 million to 12 million bushels a year.

(Translation):

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should simply like to add a few remarks to those of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) on the Canadian wheat board.

On March 26, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) replied to a question put by my colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger). The third part of starred question No. 315 reads as follows:

How many vacancies have occurred since 1957?

And here is the answer, as found on page 2157 of Hansard for March 26, 1962:

The Canadian Wheat Board Act provides for the appointment by the governor in council of not less than three nor more than five commissioners. At no time have there been five commissioners serving on the board. Since 1957 there have been two resignations and two appointments.

The fourth part of the question asked by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska reads as follows:

Give the name, address and qualification of those appointed to fill such vacancies?

And here is the reply given by the minister:

4. Mr. J. T. Dallas was appointed a commissioner on September 1, 1958 and resigned on December 31, 1960, Mr. J. B. Lawrie was appointed a commissioner December 22, 1961. Prior to their appointments Mr. Dallas was executive vice president of the Continental Grain Company, Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Mr. Lawrie was European manager of the Canadian wheat board, London, England. Both these gentlemen, because of their successful association over many years with the Canadian grain trade in executive capacities, were highly qualified to assume the responsibilities of commissioners of the Canadian wheat board.

I remember very well, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture—following several requests made by eastern farmers and representations by my colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska, as well as by a few others of my colleagues—while he may not have promised it, certainly gave us to understand that he would appoint to the board a representative from the eastern provinces who would see that the interests of the eastern farmers, that is the farmers in Ontario, Quebec, the maritime provinces and Newfoundland, are protected.

I suggest that the minister should have had the time to make the appointment since that statement was made.

Before my hon. colleague from St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) gets up and charges me of trying to set the western farmers against the eastern farmers, I should like to add that we are very glad indeed to note that the hon. members from the west are looking after their constituents, the western farmers. Such is their duty and they do not fail in that duty.

But, without wanting to set the western farmers against the eastern farmers, it is also our duty to look particularly after the farmers in Ontario, Quebec, the maritime provinces and Newfoundland. That cannot be challenged. For once, I should like the Minister of Agriculture to look into this problem and to help us to refute certain ideas currently expressed throughout the province; he should see that everyone is given a fair deal, for the people of Quebec—as well as those of Ontario—are Canadian citizens just like the people of the western provinces.

We are all proud to belong to the same country, Canada, but we wish to see everybody treated on an equal footing, in the ten provinces. That is what we are asking.

I should also like to ask the Minister of Agriculture, or the hon. gentleman who is representing him in the house, if he intends to allow eastern farmers to buy directly from western farmers, without having to go through brokers, wholesalers or the Canadian wheat board. Since such a privilege is granted to western farmers, I wonder why the Minister of Agriculture should not give a similar one to eastern farmers.

One of the parliamentary secretaries to the minister said a while ago that they first have to know public opinion before they can make changes in the regulations of the Canadian wheat board. Hearing such an argument makes me wonder.

The hon. member for Assiniboia stated in very plain language that there was discrimination in that field. The government knows about that. Why should they have to wait for public opinion to take action? Do their actions depend on public opinion? Do they give more consideration to the votes they can get from public opinion than to justice towards all Canadian citizens?

That is the question I put to him and I should like to have an answer. Especially, I should like to hear someone tell me if, before long, eastern Canada will be represented on the Canadian wheat board.

(Text):

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, as a member from the west and one who represents several thousand farmers in the constituency of Bow River I could not sit silently today and hear statements made by a former graduate from Saskatchewan—I refer to the hon. member for Assiniboia—to the effect that the Canadian wheat board had been undermined. Sometimes it is necessary to go back and look at the record and at history. I think I can safely speak for other Conservative members and say that we stand wholeheartedly behind the Canadian wheat board and believe it is the only type of marketing agency that will serve the western Canadian farmer well. When the charge comes from the newly adopted Liberal member from Assiniboia to the effect that we were undermining the wheat board, it is necessary then to look at the history of the wheat board and ascertain who created it.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Someone who knew something about agriculture.

Mr. Woolliams: I agree with the hon. member. I am glad that I was interrupted by the hon. member for Lapointe. After listening to his speech and that of the hon. member for Assiniboia I found that they took opposite sides of the fence, and I wondered which one was the true Liberal after all. The hon. member has had his chance to make his speech. If he will just give me a few moments in which to do so, I will deal with the history of the Canadian wheat board.

If you go back, Mr. Speaker, to June 13, 1935, volume IV of the debates of the House of Commons, or in fact if you go through the whole volume you will see that it is made up of the debate on the Canadian wheat board. I think it is time some western Conservative member set the record straight once and for all, and made it clear that the Canadian wheat board came about through the instrumentality of a great Conservative who represented a part of my riding of Bow River but which at that time was called Calgary West. I refer to none other than the late Right Hon. R. B. Bennett. The farmers of Alberta, and I am sure the farmers of Saskatchewan, know that it was R. B. Bennett who created the Canadian wheat board as a result of which there was, in the words of the hon. member for Assiniboia, some facsimile of organized marketing.

One cannot deal with these amendments without going briefly into the history of the wheat board. Just read the debates. Who was it who talked for days and months in 1935, delaying the legislation creating the Canadian wheat board? None other than the Liberal party. That may be why the Liberal party had to go elsewhere for a representative from the Canadian west at this time. It is the reason they have had no representation in western Canada.

The farmers know who their friends are. The farmers know who created the wheat board and who are the friends of the wheat board. There has been talk about undermining the wheat board, but who was it who opposed R. B. Bennett in 1935 when he tried to create the board? The Liberal party; they opposed it. When the bill was brought in at that time they talked for days on the Canada Grain Act, out of which gradually grew the Canadian wheat board as we know it today. There is not a Liberal here who will stand up in his place this afternoon and deny that the foundation for the creation of the Canadian wheat board was the Conservative party. In fact, to the farmers of western Canada the Canadian wheat board is Mr. Conservative.

It is all hogwash for the Liberals to talk about undermining the wheat board and for them to say that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale who sits in front of me, has suggested that the Conservatives have not been playing ball with the Canadian wheat board. I should like to say here that it is because of the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, whose riding I know well because I lived there for almost 10 years, that rapeseed is now classified as a grain. As a member from another province I wish to congratulate the hon. member, because this shows what one Conservative is doing and it shows that we all work together for the common good of the western farmers.

Another charge was made in connection with the new international wheat agreement. It is not so many years ago that the western farmer when he was leaning over his back fence and talking to you would say, "Why did C. D. Howe not compromise to the extent of five cents a bushel", so that an international wheat agreement could have been consummated by those countries that wished to buy the best wheat in the world from western Canada? It was the Liberals who made the mistake, and it is time it was put on the record that because of that mistake a surplus of some 700 million bushels of wheat was piled up in bins, on the ground, in barns and other buildings, all stored in western Canada when we took office. However, because of the dynamic action of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton, Qu'Appelle) we were able to unload the surplus created by the former administration. The western farmer knows what I say is correct, because wherever you go western farmers will tell you exactly what I am saying in this chamber today.

The hon. member speaks about the Saskatchewan wheat pool. Everybody in Saskatchewan and Alberta knows that it was a Conservative government that kept the wheat pools in operation financially during the depression of the 30's. They know who are the friends of the wheat pools, the friends of the co-operatives and the farmers. Let us see what some of these distinguished men have had to say about the international wheat agreement. I refer now to the Wheat Pool Budget of March 16, 1962, where I find the following:

> In view of greatly reduced supplies in most wheat exporting countries, exporters had hoped to get a somewhat higher ceiling.

It is obvious that the farmers want more for their wheat and everything they sell, but at the same time they are fair. We all want the best price.

> G. L. Harrold, president of the Alberta wheat pool who attended the Geneva meeting, said: "We had hoped for another 2½ cents", and that the current increase is "probably a compromise".

Let us pause there for a moment, Mr. Speaker. Was it not better that we reach a compromise than turn down the agreement, as C. D. Howe did under the former administration, thus letting surplus wheat pile up on the prairies so the farmers could not meet their obligations? Let us see what the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool had to say about the recent agreement. These are men who represent farm organizations and speak for the farmers, and when the hon. member for Assiniboia says that we are undermining the wheat board or undermining the farm organizations the farmers just do not agree with him.

Mr. Argue: Tell us about the feed mills.

Mr. Woolliams: The parliamentary secretary answered the hon. member very well in that regard, and I am not one who believes in repetition. Read his speech tomorrow if you did not listen to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did you say "reputation"?

Mr. Woolliams: I quote:

> Charles Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, said that under the circumstances the agreement was the best that could be negotiated and still have sufficient countries involved to make it effective.

In other words Mr. Gibbings, the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, for whom I have tremendous respect, said it was necessary for a compromise to be reached. He said it was necessary under the circumstances in order to get a firm agreement. These two gentlemen, the presidents of the two great farm organizations of western Canada, have patted the government on the back and said that under the circumstances we have acted properly.

Mr. Argue: They patted themselves on the back.

Mr. Woolliams: We can do that too, because we have something to pat ourselves on the back about. We got rid of the surplus that you talked about, and when you went back to Assiniboia you found out that the farmers like the acreage payments. That is probably why you switched parties.

There was one other charge that I think should be answered. It was made by the new wheat critic of the Liberal party, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith). He said it was rather unusual that the wheat board should be taken away from the Department of Trade and Commerce and placed under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Argue: Now it is back in veterans affairs.

Mr. Woolliams: Let us face facts. We know it was a good move because since that time, and with the co-operation of the Department of Trade and Commerce the government, through the Minister of Agriculture and the former minister of agriculture, has been able to negotiate large sales of wheat to communist China and other countries and unload the surplus. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. Maybe the change should have been made in the days of C. D. Howe, because I am confident that Mr. Gardiner would have liked to have the wheat board under his thumb. He could not get along very well with Mr. Howe. He practically admitted that in Alberta on several occasions and apologized because there was such a large surplus of wheat at that time.

When we hear loose criticism of that nature I wonder whether the Liberals are not looking for something to talk about in the hope of influencing somebody and confusing the people enough so the odd farmer may vote for them. It will take more than the hon. member for Assiniboia, the new member of the Liberal party, to convince the farmers of western Canada that they need the Liberal party to look after their interests.

Let us review the situation. The Conservative party has always stood solidly behind the wheat board. We created it, and we believe it is a good marketing institution. It organized the sellers so they could deal with the organized buyers. We also believe that the Canadian wheat board should be under the Department of Agriculture, because then you have the proper relationship between the Minister of Agriculture and the board, and the minister can work hand in hand with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his department. Finally, I say that when the hon. member for Assiniboia or any other member of the Liberal party says that we have undermined the wheat board, he is just whistling "Dixie" but he has got the wrong tune.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in the debate on this bill until the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) displayed another of his varied talents today and undertook the role of historian. He told us about the devotion of the Tory party in the thirties to the wheat farmers and how grateful the wheat farmers were to Mr. R. B. Bennett. I sent for a parliamentary guide, because I lived in the prairies in those days and I remember something about that devotion. Of course the hon. gentleman did not say that for 22 years after the event he described the farmers of western Canada expressed their gratitude to the Tory party in the following fashion:

Mr. Woolliams: By voting C.C.F.

Mr. Pickersgill: In 1935 the Conservatives got three seats in the prairie provinces and the Liberals got 29, which perhaps gives some indication of what the farmers thought. The hon. gentleman, perhaps, was not old enough to remember that. In 1940 the Conservatives got three members; in 1945, at the end of the war, they managed to get it up to five when Mr. Bracken was their leader; in 1949, they dropped to four and in 1953 the number went up to six.

Mr. Woolliams: Tell us how many we got in 1958.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not need to blow the hon. gentleman's horn. However, I point out that these people who can sweep the west can also be swept out of the west, and there is plenty of history to prove it. I suggest it is not only out of the west they are going to be swept.

It seems to me that perhaps we might more profitably be discussing the wheat board in 1962 than this denaturing of history in which the hon. gentleman engaged. His history, of course, is just about as good as his journalism, of which we have also had some recent examples. Having risen, I cannot refrain from reading the first paragraph of the order in council to which the hon. member for Ottawa West referred. I have had some experience with orders in council.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You sure have.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was clerk of the privy council at one time, and while I was clerk I reduced the number of orders in council by about 70 per cent. This was not of very great importance, but in a government that was supposed to be devoted to passing orders in council I thought it was a reasonable record. However, in all the time I was clerk of the privy council, which after all was only one year, and in all the time I was a bureaucrat, which was rather longer than that, and all the time I have been a member of this house, I have never read an order in council quite like this one. I should like to think, sir, I was eloquent enough to describe this order in council in the way it would have been described by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) if he had been on this side of the house and this order in council had been passed by the previous government.

This is the order in council which guarantees this China wheat sale. The government were scared to come to the house and ask parliament to vote a guarantee as they should have done. They preferred, in a backhanded fashion, to give a guarantee, and let us look at the legal authority for it. I quote:

His Excellency
The Governor General in Council:

His excellency the governor general in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

This is not done on the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Trade and Commerce or any of these other lesser lights, but upon the recommendation of that super guardian of the treasury, 18 hours a day, the Minister of Finance.

—pursuant to the Canadian Wheat Board Act—

He does not even mention the section. He does not dare do that because there is no section which has any relevance to this matter. I suppose it was felt that by mentioning a statute it would give the appearance of statutory authority to this incredible provision, and here it is:

—is pleased hereby to authorize the Minister of Finance (a) to give to the Canadian wheat board an undertaking—

Just listen to this, sir.

—to give to the Canadian wheat board an undertaking that, in the event of any default by the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation in respect of payments due to the board under contracts for the sale of Canadian wheat and barley made under the long term agreement between the said board and the said corporation, such parliamentary approval as may be necessary will be sought to enable direct reimbursement by the government of Canada to the board of any payments in respect of which the corporation is in default—

Well, talk about contempt of parliament; talk about taking parliament for granted; talk about an arrogant attitude, this is an assumption by hon. gentlemen opposite that they will always occupy the treasury benches, because this is a long term arrangement. What is the undertaking? It is that they will come to parliament and ask for this money; that is the kind of guarantee that they purport to give. It is no wonder it was so difficult to get any of these details out of the government.

Now, the right course to take, as the hon. member for Ottawa West said last night, is to use export credits insurance. Everybody wanted to see this wheat sold. Everybody was glad the wheat board sold it. I do not think everybody was so glad that the Minister of Agriculture, after the contract was signed, wasted public money by flying to Hong Kong and pretending he had signed the contract there. This is the reason, of course, the government keep this date a secret. They do not want the plain fact to be revealed to the public, although it is well known throughout the trade. It is common gossip in Winnipeg, and the government has not dared to deny it because they know it is true. Here is another example of the attempt of this government to give the impression that these ministers do everything that is done by good administrative machinery which has been there all the time.

The wheat board was able to sell wheat to China because the Chinese were starving and had to have it. I am glad, speaking for myself, that starving people are going to be able to eat this wheat. I hope we are going to be paid for it. However, I say there should be some respect for the rights of parliament on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. They should have insured this sale properly under the export insurance act. If they felt the transaction was too large to come under that act—and I think that might have been a reasonable attitude to take—they should have come to this parliament and told us what they were doing. Then they could have asked parliament to sanction it.

We were reminded yesterday, sir, in very gentle tones that we had a tremendous filibuster, an awful fuss, in this house six years ago because the government of that day sought to lend $80 million, at a good rate of interest and with excellent prospects of recovery, to a company to build an important undertaking which prevented a much more serious recession than would otherwise have been the case in 1958. This was a big parliamentary matter. Here is a guarantee of a sale of $100 million and it is made in this back room manner, behind closed doors. This is the kind of undertaking given to the wheat board, which the wheat board was no doubt obliged to accept and keep quiet about. If there should be a default the government would come to parliament and ask for the money, treating us like rubber stamps.

I say, sir, it is a shocking thing that has been disclosed by the hon. member for Ottawa West. It does seem to me that this bill ought to contain a provision asking parliament to validate this matter instead of leaving it in this extraordinary state. The right hon. gentleman who is head of this government went back and forth across this country from the time he was elected to parliament 22 years ago yesterday until he became prime minister, talking about government by order in council.

This is the first order in council I have seen in my experience that appears to have no legal authority of any kind whatsoever. I am not a lawyer and I may be wrong, but I would be most interested if the Minister of Veterans Affairs or the Minister of Justice will show us the statute which gave authority to the government to give this kind of guarantee and this kind of undertaking without asking parliament for the authority to do it. It seems to me this is the kind of thing against which the right hon. gentleman used to be so eloquent in the past, and it is the kind of thing that should not be tolerated if we are to continue to have parliamentary government.

I am quite sure that distinguished hon. members of the house, like the hon. member for Bow River, will go about saying that the Liberals are opposed to the sale of wheat to China just because we want to know the terms on which it has been sold, but should that kind of lie be spread about in western Canada I do not think anybody will believe it.

Mr. Pascoe: They know it now.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is pretty good evidence of the kind of honest, honourable and straightforward campaign that hon. gentlemen are apparently boasting about carrying out, because they know there has not been one hon. member belonging to any party in this house who has opposed the sale of wheat to China. I do not know of any hon. member who did not welcome the sale of this wheat, and was not indeed very glad that, when there was difficulty about some of our other markets, this market was open and available to us.

Mr. Pascoe: Backtracking.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is no excuse for saying that parliament should not know the terms on which the sale was made and the terms under which it is guaranteed. That is not saying that the government is justified in hiding these things and, when they are exposed, trying by blackmail to prevent a debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is getting his argument back to a decision already taken in this house, in the line he is now taking. I have been very doubtful about the relevance of the whole debate on the guaranteeing of the sale to China because the wheat board act, which it is now proposed to amend, apparently has nothing to do with the guarantee. But, as there was discussion yesterday, I have not been prepared to interfere. However, when he is reopening the debate which resulted in a vote in this house on the production of the contracts, it seems to me he is going beyond the scope allowed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, sir, I am quite unaware of having said anything that had to do with any vote in this house. I am discussing this order in council, which was produced in this house as a sessional paper, and I always understood it was perfectly proper for hon. members to do so. At no stage am I aware that any decision was taken in this house about it. That is precisely what I am complaining about, that this guarantee or purported guarantee is nothing more than an undertaking to bring a vote to parliament at some time in the future under certain contingencies. I am complaining that that is an improper act for the executive to take. It is contemptuous of parliament; it is a presumptuous act, and it deserves the censure of the house as an attempt by the government to usurp the control of finances by the house. I am saying that this bill now before us should contain a provision enabling parliament to determine this matter, and determine it now in the light of all the facts. That is my whole point.

Mr. Argue: And protect wheat board funds.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I was quite astonished at the remarks made by the hon. members for Lapointe and Drummond-Arthabaska (Messrs. Brassard and Boulanger), and in particular by the latter's attitude, when he condemned the policy of the Canadian wheat board, charging that it causes serious harm to eastern farmers.

I hope the western farmers will remember these remarks made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska because that is one of the ways that are used to try and divide the farmers of this country.

Mr. Boulanger: As usual, you misunderstood me.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, in order to prove my point, I am prepared to quote part of a speech made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska last night and, instead of condemning the attitude of the Canadian wheat board—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): He did not condemn it.

Mr. Pigeon: —or to criticize—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): He did not criticize it.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I shall quote the remarks made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, which appear on page 2197 of the official report for March 26, 1962. I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I think the grain transportation subsidy policy comes under the Canadian wheat board, at least indirectly. However, what I wish to say is that farmers in the east suffer from the government's policy and from that of the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Is that condemning the Canadian wheat board?

Mr. Pigeon: Surely, because he is blaming the Canadian wheat board.

If the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska had been in the house last night—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Boulanger: I was here.

Mr. Pigeon: —when the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) moved the legislation now before us in the name of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton), he would have heard him make the following statement, as can be seen on page 2188 of Hansard:

> I should like to make a reference to the importance of eastern Canada as our primary commercial market for western feed grains. From time to time problems arise in the supplying of western feed grains for eastern livestock and poultry feeders. In order to bring about a closer liaison and a better understanding of these problems the Minister of Agriculture will shortly be announcing the establishment of a special eastern liaison committee to work with the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that such a statement coming from the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who was then acting for the Minister of Agriculture, is very encouraging for eastern producers and will help to bridge a gap which existed under the former administration and which was never corrected.

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks I wished to make in the interest of eastern producers.

Once again, I must say that the policy of the opposition is to set eastern producers against those in the west. I hope that hon. members from the west will remember the attitude of opposition members and will make it known in their respective ridings during the next election. For my part, I shall make this attitude known to the electors of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member let me ask him a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm if it would not be better to have an eastern representative on the Canadian wheat board, instead of setting up a liaison agency between eastern farmers and the Canadian wheat board. I feel that it would be much better to have someone who had his say on the board itself, and I should like to know what the hon. member thinks of this suggestion.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to answer that question.

As the minister explained yesterday, I believe that this special eastern liaison committee will be of great service to eastern producers and will enable them to place their views and their problems before the Canadian wheat board.

I feel that this way of doing things will be better than the do-nothing policy which always existed in the past. It is an improvement—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): But we have no representative on the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Pigeon: It is a remarkable improvement.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman—

(Text):

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fit and proper that I should rise at this time and join with others who have given the house the benefit of a little of the history behind the development of the wheat board. I do so because I well remember the time when Hon. Robert Weir was minister of agriculture in the Bennett government, and it was during his term of office that the wheat board was developed.

As it happens I served as an economist under Hon. Robert Weir, and about four or five of us were assigned to the job of hammering out the provisions of the wheat board act. If there is anyone who believes in and has supported the wheat board act in this house it is the member for Macleod, but to hear the hon. member for Assiniboia talk one would think he had something to do with its development. I am delighted to hear that he supports it and would be against anyone undermining it. I want to tell him that nothing this government has done has been in the direction of undermining the wheat board. The people of my province and of my riding are solidly behind the policies that have been put into effect since this government came to office, including the marketing of feed grain to feed mills.

In answer to some remarks which were made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I wish to say there is no farmer in western Canada who is not fully aware of the Liberal attitude with respect to the sale of wheat to China. If the hon. member thinks that by a twist of his phrases at the present time he can convince the farmers of western Canada that the Liberal party takes a benevolent attitude toward the sales and is in favour of them, he has a bigger job before him than he ever tackled before.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Kindt: I shall be through in just a minute, and then the hon. member can ask his question. If there is any farmer in western Canada who would vote against this government and in favour of a Liberal government, it would serve him right if he had to put up with a Liberal government in the west.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member indicated I might ask a question at this point. Can he give me evidence of any statement made by any Liberal member in this house speaking for the Liberal party to justify his assertion that the party opposes the sale of wheat to China?

Mr. Kindt: In order to answer that question I would have to go back over the records and documents.

Mr. Pigeon: Surely it can be shown by their remarks each day.

Mr. Kindt: However, I should like to read this into the record—

Mr. Pickersgill: What is that from?

Mr. Kindt: It is from the Ottawa Citizen of March 3, 1962, and it reads as follows:

> In a particularly damning attack on the Prime Minister, Mr. Tardif said Mr. Diefenbaker had thought he was "God-sent" before being elected and subsequently decided he was God's equal and, now, God's superior.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is precluded by our practice from reading—

Mr. Kindt: Well, I should like, if I might be allowed—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would resume his seat. I will explain to him the difficulty which I feel arises from what he is saying. It is neither customary nor proper to read editorials which reflect on the conduct of hon. members of the house. This editorial seems to reflect on the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Tardif). I am not sure if it is criticism of what he did in the house or not. If the comment refers to something the hon. member said outside the house perhaps it would be admissible, though it does not seem to me to be relevant to the debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might say a word on the question Your Honour has raised. It might simplify the matter. I asked the hon. member to cite, if he could, a single statement made in this house by any member of the Liberal party that went into Hansard, and there is none.

Mr. Kindt: I should like to answer the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I am looking at this for the first time—

Mr. Argue: Where did you get it?

Mr. Kindt: —and I was having trouble finding the spot. I have it now and to continue:

He accused the Conservative government of favouring the western farmer in its agricultural legislation and referred specifically to the wheat deal with China.

That is the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter).

Mr. Pickersgill: What does that amount to? How ridiculous can you get?

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? If the minister speaks now he will wind up the debate.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I have listened with interest to the debate so far, and I have heard with some amazement statements made by hon. members in the ranks of the Liberal opposition. Despite some of these statements, I find that generally the house is in favour of passing this legislation.

Unfortunately the debate has ranged far afield without reference, at times, to the bill which is actually before us. If I am to answer some of the questions which have been put forward I shall not be able to relate my answers specifically to the bill, either. However, the hon. member for Ottawa West began with a question as to a change in the ministry which might, of course, have been better directed to the Prime Minister. It is not up to me to answer questions of that nature.

Mr. McIlraith: He does not give any answers, though.

An hon. Member: He is too wise.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member then began to talk about the wheat sale to China, and other members of his party have dealt with the same subject. With loud protestations they put their hands over their hearts and say they are all in favour of the wheat sale to China, but nothing has disturbed them more than that magnificent action on the part of the Minister of Agriculture and the wheat board in bringing about a sale far beyond anything which has been made in the past, a sale which has lifted a burden of surpluses from the western farmers and put us in a position with regard to our wheat which is completely different from that which existed several years ago.

I recounted yesterday when I was introducing the bill the great change which had taken place in five years, during which period we have moved from a surplus position of 730 million bushels in July, 1957, with a new crop just around the corner, to a position today when the surplus is less than our average exports during the last few years, in other words a surplus of some 300 million bushels. This represents a tremendous change in the space of five years and the sale to China has capped it.

The Liberal party have protested time and again that they are all in favour of the wheat sale to China. Nevertheless they spend most of their time criticizing it. They say oh, yes, it is a great thing to sell this wheat, but you have done it in the wrong way. This is a very narrow method of criticism, and it is very shakily founded. The hon. member for Ottawa West, supported today by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, has criticized the method by which the wheat board has been given a guarantee with regard to its transactions with the China buying corporation. They are protesting vigorously that this arrangement represents some affront to parliament, and so on.

The complaint rests upon an interpretation of section 11 of the wheat board act, and it would perhaps better be left to the law officers of the crown to settle that matter than for us to attempt to settle it here. I do not find any difficulty as I read those sections in considering them to be adequate for the purpose for which they are intended. The wheat board is guaranteed against loss if the representatives of the Chinese government fail to make payment. Although they are very fond of the China wheat sale, as the debate progressed members of the Liberal party gave me the impression they would like to see a default in the payment. In fact over the last several weeks rumours have been started to the effect that China is already in default, and questions in that regard have been asked in the house. Only last week end another rumour was started that China was in default. The situation, of course, is that the payments are right up to date, and for the months of February and March payments have been made totalling almost $11 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: Good.

Mr. Churchill: There is no comfort at all for the Liberal party in this. We consider the deal to be satisfactory. This is not the first time there has been a sale of wheat to China. Memories are a bit short, but in the year 1958 ten cargoes of wheat were sold to China. That sale happened to be on a cash basis. The wheat board was active then with the assistance of Mr. Forsyth-Smith of the Department of Trade and Commerce who was stationed at Hong Kong, in the arrangements for the sale of wheat to China. That original contract away back in 1958 paid off in 1961 because the contacts with the merchandisers had been made and the wheat board with its usual alertness and activity had kept closely in touch with the situation in China.

The hon. member for Ottawa West has accused the Minister of Agriculture of using the wheat sale to China for propaganda purposes. Surely there is nothing wrong in letting people know about a wheat sale of that size.

Mr. McIlraith: That was not the accusation.

Mr. Churchill: It is unprecedented in recent years, and it is only good business to let people know what is going on. It has certainly been of great encouragement to everyone in western Canada; and although the hon. member for Ottawa West in the rather narrow circle that prevails here in Ottawa may not think it is important, no one in western Canada holds that opinion.

The hon. member for Ottawa West also mentioned certain details of the act which perhaps might best be considered when we study it in committee. The hon. gentleman continued his protests with regard to an alleged failure to disclose various aspects of the agreement with China. However, he had to admit in fairness that it would be quite wrong for the Canadian wheat board, engaged in competitive selling around the world, to disclose the nature of its contracts, because if it did that advantage might be taken of the situation by other countries that have wheat for sale. It has been the practice over the years for the wheat board to do as any prudent business concern would do, to keep secret the terms and details of its contracts.

The hon. member for Timiskaming in the course of his remarks said the credit for the China wheat sale should go to the wheat board and not the government. In the three and a half years I had the pleasure and useful experience of working with the wheat board I always gave credit to that organization, and so has the present Minister of Agriculture. But I suggest to the hon. gentleman that some credit should go to the government because when trouble arises the government receives the blame, and surely it must work both ways.

I recall that when I had responsibility in this field I was constantly under fire in the house from hon. members opposite with regard to such question as the box car situation, the quota situation out in the prairies, the shipping situation at the lakehead, whether the icebreakers were in operation opening the harbour at Fort William, whether demurrage should or should not be charged on railway cars which had wheat stored in them at the lakehead, what was the government going to do about wet and damp grain and how were we going to get it dry, and things of that nature. When trouble hits the western agriculturist the government hears about it immediately, and hon. gentlemen on the other side have always been the first to lodge complaints. Therefore I think it is only fair, when things are going fairly well, that the government might reasonably accept some share of the praise for those conditions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister leaves his reminiscences, would he permit me to ask him a question? Has the minister yet found out which end of a box car is the front end?

An hon. Member: We are leaving that to you.

Mr. Churchill: As one historian to another may I say I did investigate that matter very closely, and there is a very slight difference which perhaps I will tell the hon. member about privately, as I am sure His Honour would interrupt us if we were to engage in a discussion of that subject now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. The brake is at one end.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. members for Drummond-Arthabaska and Lapointe made contributions to this debate. In fact on the other side of the house we have agricultural spokesmen in the hon. member for Essex East who is, of course, the leader of the pack—although now the hon. member for Ottawa West has entered it—and in the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, on whom we can always count to talk on any subject that may be disclosed here.

Mr. Brunsden: Whether or not he knows anything about it.

Mr. Churchill: That no doubt stems from the hon. gentleman's reminiscences of the days when he was clerk of the privy council. As I said, we also had contributions from the hon. members for Drummond-Arthabaska and Lapointe. And then, buried in the group over there, we heard from the hon. member for Assiniboia. That hon. gentleman was at least fourth on the list of agricultural spokesmen for the Liberal party. Quite a change has taken place in his position in parliament, and the ear of the country is not attuned to his discourses as perhaps it was in days gone by.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the minister permit a question? Would he not agree that this legislation has to do with wheat marketing?

Mr. Churchill: I wish, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Ottawa West had reached that conclusion yesterday.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what we were trying to talk about, not typographical errors.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Assiniboia is interested in wheat marketing, or at least he has conveyed that impression over the years, and he spoke about that today. He engaged in a severe attack on the Conservative party and on the present government. He made a serious accusation in saying that this government is undermining the authority of the wheat board. Fortunately an answer has already been given to that accusation, but I should like to reinforce what has been said by hon. members on this side of the house in that regard.

Rather than attacking the wheat board or undermining its position, the present government has done its utmost to strengthen the position of the wheat board. We have repeatedly praised the activity of the board and given it every assistance possible within our means.

I rely upon the record of the Conservative party, which came to the rescue of western wheat producers in the autumn of 1930. The Liberal government of 1929 and 1930 had neglected the wheat producers, and the wheat pools were in difficulty. The government of that day had left it to the provincial governments to support the wheat pools. Finally the Conservative government under R. B. Bennett came to their rescue and guaranteed loans from the banks, and subsequently went on to stabilize the situation and develop the Canadian wheat board.

Hence our record is quite clear and quite good with regard to the Canadian wheat board, and it has been maintained up to the present time. The wheat board gets the full support of the present government.

However, the hon. member for Assiniboia felt called upon to reiterate a charge he has made in the past with regard to the Canadian wheat board. I suggest to him that he is going to have much more difficulty in the group with which he now finds himself than he ever had in the past, for this reason. Although in the days of the late Mr. Gardiner and the late Mr. Howe the wheat board was free from serious restraint, that is not going to be the case in the future. If the hon. member for Assiniboia, according to speculation which I read in the press yesterday, becomes minister of agriculture he will find himself in immediate conflict with the proposed minister of finance, namely Mr. Walter Gordon—

Mr. McIlraith: Repudiated by the former minister of trade and commerce.

Mr. Churchill: —who is now one of the main advisers to the present Liberal party and whose attitude toward the western prairie producer and the Canadian wheat board is shocking, to say the least. The hon. member for Assiniboia is going to have the greatest fight of his life to maintain the authority of the Canadian wheat board within the group with which he has now associated himself. I wish he had asked my advice before he took the hasty step he took a little while ago.

An hon. Member: He is going to be sick.

Mr. Churchill: In commenting upon Mr. Gordon's report Mr. Howe said this:

> If any hon member wishes to be recorded in support of the recommendations of the Gordon commission I hope that he will rise in his place and state his position clearly and unequivocally. The underlying theme of the Gordon report on wheat is "restriction". The report returns time and again to the theme that the producer must be confronted with a limitation under which he will make whatever adjustments he can. This conception is directly opposed to the present government policy, which is to establish fair initial prices, provide the largest possible delivery opportunity for producers and to assist by paying carrying charges on abnormal surplus stocks of wheat until markets can be found.

That statement can be located at page 891 of Hansard for February 1, 1957. I suggest to all hon. members from western Canada that they read, reflect and repeat those remarks of Mr. Howe with regard to Mr. Walter Gordon, who is going to determine matters through the position which the speculative press has suggested for him if the Liberal party ever gets back into power again—something which I doubt—and who is going to be in a position to control people like the hon. member for Assiniboia; and he will have his effect on the western farmer. He had no conception of the situation, as Mr. Howe pointed out. Mr. Howe said this:

> Strangely enough, many people living in other parts of Canada who write and talk about the marketing of wheat obviously do not understand the detail of present methods of marketing Canadian wheat. It is to them that my explanation is directed.

He directed it right to Mr. Walter Gordon, who in the Gordon commission report indicated his complete misunderstanding of the Canadian wheat problem. I now suggest that the hon. member for Assiniboia has more work cut out for him in the Liberal party than he ever had with the defunct C.C.F. party. He had better now become a labour representative in the Liberal party rather than a farmer representative, as I do not know how he is going to make his policies prevail against the attitude of Mr. Walter Gordon toward the western grain problems.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister also like to say something about Mr. Mitchell Sharp's views on grain marketing?

Mr. Churchill: No. However, at this stage I wish to comment upon the slashing attack made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate upon the present Clerk of the Privy Council. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate told us at some length of his tenure of that office and of the number of orders in council he had produced. He implied that they were all perfect. Then he said "This order in council is the worst I have ever seen". I presume he meant that the present Clerk of the Privy Council is the worst Clerk of the Privy Council he has ever heard of.

An hon. Member: This is out of order.

Mr. Churchill: If the former clerk of the privy council was the producer of orders in council, it follows that the present clerk is the producer of orders in council.

Mr. Crestohl: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We are now discussing the question of wheat and not procedure before the privy council. I see no reason why the minister should swing his line of argument to the privy council when we are discussing the question of wheat.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I am glad—

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the hon. member's point is well taken. The issue was raised first by the hon. member for Ottawa West at some length yesterday, and reinforced today by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the minister proceed. The hon. member can at the end of the minister's speech, exercise his rights with regard to correcting statements.

Mr. Churchill: I think perhaps with these few remarks on that narrow subject, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will spare us in the future with regard to his personal history.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't be too sure.

Mr. Churchill: Useful comments on the bill before us were made by the hon. member for Bow River, the hon. member for Macleod, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, and the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, who is an acknowledged authority on wheat problems and a friend of the farmer. The problem which he raised with us yesterday is one that I think we shall deal with at the committee stage. I shall have some comments to make at that stage on his proposal of a further amendment to the act.

Quite generally, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we bring forward the present amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act with confidence that the house will pass them and that the Canadian wheat board will continue its useful course of action with regard to western Canadian agriculture. To those from eastern Canada who are so greatly concerned may I say that the Canadian wheat board represents the producers of that great wealth of western Canada which runs into hundreds of millions of dollars every year. Through the useful suggestion made by the Minister of Agriculture the eastern farmers, I think through a liaison committee, will be able to present their views to the Canadian wheat board with good results. However, I do not follow their argument that someone from eastern Canada should be a member of the Canadian wheat board, for the Canadian wheat board is a sellers' organization engaged as an agent on behalf of western producers.

The Canadian wheat board has had a long and useful history. In the marketing of western grain there is as great stability as I think can be achieved under world conditions. I think it is wise to look at the western grain problem, and particularly the wheat problem, not over a period of one year or two years but over a ten year period. In the course of that time it is possible to pass from a surplus position to a period of relative scarcity and then back again into a surplus position. However, we have now had a great deal of experience in the handling of western grain with regard to storage matters, marketing procedures and things of that nature. Through measures which this government has introduced with regard to cash advances on farm stored grain and the constant activity with regard to the selling of our grain in world markets, I think we have achieved, in so far as western agriculture is concerned, a very satisfactory situation at the present time. The amendment to the act now proposed will continue the wheat board in existence and it will be appropriate to review its activities five years hence.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to exercise my right under the rules to correct a gross misstatement made by the minister with regard to something I was supposed to have said. The minister said I had made an attack upon the Clerk of the Privy Council. I did nothing of the kind even by implication. I assume that the present Clerk of the Privy Council, like me, does not make the orders. The orders are made by the governor in council and the ministers are exclusively responsible for their content.

Mr. Churchill: The ministers take full responsibility, but I do recall to your mind, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate talked about the orders in council which he had produced and said, "Look at this; it is the worst example I have seen in my career".

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say "produced", sir.

Division

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: Would you call the yeas and nays?

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay. In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Churchill, for Mr. Hamilton, Qu'Appelle) which was agreed to on the following division:

NAYS

Nil.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. MacEwan in the chair.

On clause 1—Grain.

Mr. Argue: I would like to say a few words on this clause and move an amendment to it. There is an addition to this clause in paragraph (e) which adds rapeseed to the list of grains defined under the wheat board act.

This is an important addition to the act. It is the kind of provision which would enable the wheat board to provide quota systems for rapeseed, as for other grains, in the instance of a very heavy production and the necessity of marketing this grain in an orderly fashion. As the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale has pointed out, there is a further grain which is becoming of greater importance in western Canada. That is mustard seed and some time ago, when debating a bill which he had before the house, it was my privilege to suggest that in addition to rapeseed certain provision should be made to include mustard seed.

It is perfectly true that including mustard seed under this legislation would not by itself go the whole way, because there is also the necessity to have the grain defined in the Canada Grain Act. There is also the question of having the Crowsnest rates apply to rapeseed and mustard seed, but I think it would be an appropriate step to add mustard seed under the provisions of this bill at this time. Perhaps I can move the amendment before five o'clock. I have some other general questions which I wish to put to the minister on this clause, but right now I would like to move:

That paragraph (e) of clause 1 be amended by deleting the word "and" as well as the semi-colon in line eight and adding the following words: "and mustard seed".

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman. The subject matter of this proposed amendment was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale who has—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Before the minister proceeds I have some doubt as to whether or not this amendment is in order. Perhaps the minister might comment on that aspect of it in the initial stages before we consider it as an amendment.

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Chairman, I also wanted to have a little time to think it over. I thought that if I gave some of the background material now, it would soon be five o'clock and we would both have a chance to consider it.

Mr. Argue: The minister might like to move it himself.

Mr. Churchill: It would be far better coming from this side. Originally, of course, it was proposed by a Conservative member.

Mr. Argue: That is not right. I have been on mustard seed for a long time.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): You have been on a hot seat.

Mr. Argue: Others prefer rapeseed.

Mr. Churchill: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the present amendment which includes rapeseed under the definition of grain is due very largely to the initiative of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, who is known throughout the west as "the farmers' friend," and he had hoped that on this occasion we might include the words "mustard seed". However it is important to consider what we are doing, and to consider the size of the crops that are produced before we take any action.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could raise a point of order in a non-controversial spirit. It does seem to me that we should settle the point of order before engaging in debate. As it is practically five o'clock and as Your Honour might wish to give this a little consideration, perhaps Your Honour could tell us what is troubling you about the amendment so that we would have a chance to reflect on it between five and eight o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: It is in order.

Mr. Pickersgill: We would like to know what the difficulty is. Could Your Honour indicate what is the difficulty?

The Deputy Chairman: In my view it introduces a completely new subject matter to the bill and if you look at Orders of the Day, page 15, item No. 37, you can appreciate the fact, as does the chairman, that the suggested amendment is already under consideration by way of a private member's bill. For this reason I shall give consideration to the matter over the period of the supper hour and make a ruling on it at eight o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I assume Your Honour will hear argument before making it.

The Deputy Chairman: For the reason that it is five o'clock I am not going to hear argument now.

It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. S-13, to incorporate Polaris Pipe Lines—Mr. Baldwin.

Bill No. S-14, respecting Canada Security Assurance Company—Mr. Stefanson.

THE GOVERNING COUNCILS OF THE SALVATION ARMY

Mr. Jack Wratten (Brantford) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-11 respecting the governing council of the Salvation Army, Canada east, and the governing council of the Salvation Army, Canada west.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the hon. member intends to make any remarks on this bill.

Mr. Wratten: There are two main points. The first is intended to bring the financial arrangements of the Salvation Army into line with those provided for in bills already passed by this house affecting other religious denominations. The second purpose is to bring the province of Newfoundland under the jurisdiction of the Salvation Army board, Canada east.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to say a word in warm commendation of this bill. This is one of the things that are ancillary to the completion of confederation—to the union of Newfoundland with Canada in 1949—and I give it my warm support.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-28 to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960, with respect to representation in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling on the hon. member who moves the bill, may I remind the house that the last time this bill was called I raised the question as to whether it might be a money bill requiring a resolution and the authority of the ministry before it could be proceeded with. I have come to the conclusion, subject to such persuasion as may be exercised by hon. members who wish to discuss the point, that it is not clearly enough a money bill for me to take the responsibility of preventing debate. I am therefore disposed to allow the mover to proceed, unless some hon. member wishes to object to that course and persuades me it is not the right course.

I think I should state briefly what considerations arise, because it is not without importance. Bill No. C-28 provides for an amendment to sections 21 and 22 of the British North America Act so as to increase the number of senators from 102, the present number, to 104. In other words, the bill provides for the addition of two senators to the Senate. Now the consequence of passing this bill would be that those senators, under the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act, chapter 249 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, would become entitled to compensation as senators and would be paid accordingly. So an indirect consequence of passing this bill would be to expend from the public purse the emoluments which are payable under another act to the two additional senators, after they have been appointed. The consequence of passing the bill would, therefore, be an expenditure of public funds.

However, I rather take the view that the expenditure of public funds is already authorized by the Senate and House of Commons Act which provides for the payment of senators apparently in anticipation of the appointment of additional senators as well as of additional members of parliament. So authority for payment has already been given by parliament. It was given when it passed the Senate and House of Commons Act; and this bill, which does not in itself provide for any payment, might therefore be regarded as not being a money bill, even though it sets in motion the other act and would, therefore, involve expenditure.

There is one precedent, and it is on the basis of this precedent that I propose to allow the matter to proceed. There is the Representation Act, chapter 15 of the statutes of 1952 called an Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1951, with respect to the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons. This was introduced as Bill No. 221 on June 10, 1952. It was introduced without notice. It was not preceded by resolution, nor did it have the recommendation of the crown, although as a result of the bill the number of members of the House of Commons was increased from 255 to 265 and an additional member was provided for the Northwest Territories. In that case the house proceeded to increase the number of members of parliament and thereby to increase the emoluments to which members were entitled. It seems the cases are parallel. It is the only precedent and, therefore, I think the proper course would be to register this query about the bill so that it will not stand in the way of future decisions, but not to press the point to the extent that debate would be discontinued.

I am reinforced in my view by thinking that one should settle these matters giving the benefit of the doubt to the authority of a private member of the house to proceed to raise such matters as he thinks may properly be brought before parliament, not by ruling in a restrictive way.

Mr. Fisher: Perhaps I could raise this as a point of order—I was just wondering if the government has any view on the matter you have raised.

Mr. Churchill: It certainly would not be normal to express government policies or views during an hour which is devoted to private members' business.

Mr. Nielsen: I hope the house will be as disposed to the acceptance of this bill as it was to the acceptance of the measure which I introduced a short while ago in connection with representation for the Keewatin and Franklin districts. The same reasons are applicable in support of representation in the other place for these areas of northern Canada, perhaps to an even greater extent because we are dealing here with all that land mass and all those Arctic islands north of the 60th parallel, whose residents at the moment have no specific representation in the other place.

With the passage of the bill dealing with the extension of the franchise, or, rather, the facilities enabling Canadian citizens living in the Keewatin and Franklin districts to cast their ballots, no other Canadians remain in our nation who do not now have the opportunity to cast their votes and, by so doing, take part in the government of Canada. I gave as supporting reasons in favour of that bill that the citizens of Canada should not be taxed without having the opportunity of being heard in the parliament of Canada. I think it is trite to say that the parliament of Canada consists of two houses, this House of Commons as well as the other place. Matters concerning taxation are discussed here and laws concerning the taxation of Canadians are made in this chamber; but before their final passage they are considered, accepted, rejected or amended by the members of the other place. Surely, then, the Canadians of the north should be entitled to be heard on these matters in the other place.

It seems to me it is important to recognize the fundamental right that in a free and democratic society such as ours in Canada every adult Canadian is by law clothed with the right to take part in government. I advanced this argument in discussing the amendment to the Representation Act which I brought before the house a few weeks ago and I advance it again. The people of Canada in all parts of the country have a right to take part in their government and in my view the government of Canada consists of both houses of parliament.

This principle was embodied in the four kinds of rights to which I drew the attention of the house when I last spoke on my bill to amend the Representation Act, the rights expressed in the principles to which the United Nations dedicated itself in the universal declaration of human rights in 1948, a declaration which grew out of the public demand for recognition of the advancement of equal rights among all members of the human family.

In support of my argument that all Canadians have the right to be represented in both houses of parliament I would draw the attention of the house to the British North America Act of 1886 which is to be found in the Revised Statutes of Canada, volume 6, at page 159 where, after the preamble, it is set forth in section 1 that:

> The parliament of Canada may from time to time make provision for the representation in the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, or in either of them, of any territories which for the time being form part of the dominion of Canada, but are not included in any province thereof.

In section 2 of the same act it is set forth that:

> Any act passed by the parliament of Canada before the passing of this act for the purpose mentioned in this act shall, if not disallowed by the Queen, be, and shall be deemed to have been, valid and effectual from the date at which it received the assent, in Her Majesty's name, of the Governor General of Canada.

The act goes on to discuss the making of provisions for adding to the membership of the House of Commons and the other place. In effect, the act gives us the right to amend our own constitution as found in the British North America Act in so far as such an amendment may effect an addition to the House of Commons or to the Senate.

The second point I made in discussing my argument in support of extending the facilities of the franchise to the residents of the Keewatin and Franklin districts of the Northwest Territories was in relation to the Canadian Bill of Rights. I think it is of paramount importance, and I am sure all hon. members of the house will agree with me, that the Canadian Bill of Rights affords its protection to all Canadians regardless of their race, colour, creed or religion, and that essential protection is that there shall be no discrimination as between Canadians. It seems we fall short of the principle expressed in the Canadian Bill of Rights if we continue to refuse to grant to northern Canadians above the sixtieth parallel the right to have a voice in the other half of the Canadian parliament.

There are other and valid reasons for the house giving favourable consideration to this measure. I realize that the bill comes before us at a rather awkward time since there is a resolution on the order paper calling for the setting up of an independent commission to inquire into the redistribution of seats in this house. It might be one of the terms of reference of that commission that they may be called upon to look into the desirability of redistribution in the other place as well; of this I am not aware.

Another argument I would advance in support of the house adopting this measure is the developing autonomy of both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I wish to deal with those two territories for a brief moment.

In the Yukon territory we have a long history of the development of autonomy and we are rapidly approaching the point where we can see in the near future the possibility that the Yukon might become Canada's eleventh province. Certainly there is every reason for anticipating this development. It would seem incongruous in the light of the development there and the increasing population and industry that we should continue to turn a blind eye to the fact that the area is without representation in the Senate. The Yukon has had a sitting member in the House of Commons since 1902 after the Yukon was created a separate district, having been carved out of the Northwest Territories in 1901. In the Northwest Territories, the Mackenzie district has had a sitting member since the amendment of the Representation Act in 1947. As hon. members will recall the first sitting member for that district came to this house in 1949. We are slowly progressing toward the development of the political autonomy of the north and it seems to me the next logical step that should be taken by this House of Commons and by the Senate is to provide a voice for the people of the north in the other place.

Canada above the sixtieth parallel constitutes 40 per cent of the nation. I do not think the argument rests on the number of people in that area. It is a particular area, an Arctic area, and it has special problems. Those problems have to be voiced in as wide a fashion as possible in both places. I think it is not unreasonable to suggest that since the appointment has been made to the other place of a member of the Indian race we might anticipate the appointment to the Senate of an Eskimo to voice the views of those people who number approximately 10,000 in the Canadian north.

There may be those who say that in the development of this trend toward the greater autonomy of the north the federal government largely subsidizes the areas, and therefore we as the House of Commons should continue administering those areas until such time as the population and industry of the Canadian north reach the stage where autonomy is economically justifiable. I would simply refer those hon. members who take that view to the province of Manitoba in the years immediately before it became a province, when the local territorial government was heavily subsidized by the federal government and yet the province achieved autonomy while in the position of being so subsidized.

Of course there is the classic current example of Newfoundland, which is now heavily subsidized by federal funds. I think I should not leave the presentation of this bill without also remarking on the recent resolution passed by the Northwest Territories council when they met here last January. It suggested that from the existing three administrative divisions in the Northwest Territories we should carve out two new Canadian areas. The present area of the Northwest Territories is one third of the whole of Canada, to put the matter in another form. On the northeast it snuggles right against Greenland and on the west it is flanked by the Yukon. At one point it is a mere 100 miles from Alaska. It is true that there are only 23,000 people in this vast expanse of the Northwest Territories. However, the council, when it met here last spring, began dividing the territories into two pieces. That was a logical move, in my view, and one which I think lays the groundwork for suggesting to this house in the near future that, once the division is made, it might be the time for introducing a measure which would give both the western and the eastern portion of the Northwest Territories a member in this house.

There are other arguments that can be advanced in support of the measure before the house. When one agrees to the principle that Canadians have a right to be represented in the Canadian parliament, I feel that the house would be remiss if it did not accept the principle that it does not restrict the representation spoken of to a right to be heard in the House of Commons. I contend that this right embraces also the right to be heard in the other place, where every piece of legislation passed by this house must be considered. Certainly the voice of the north cannot be heard in its entirety if, with respect to the opinions and views of the Canadian people who live in the north and who are pioneering the area above the sixtieth parallel, we restrict that right to one chamber, namely this House of Commons.

I believe there are others who wish to speak on the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker. With the simple urging to the members of the house to lend support to this measure I will now take my seat in order that those others might be heard.

Mr. Peters: Question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for bringing to the attention of the house what obviously has been an important defect in our system of government. I refer to the fact that a substantial number of people have been without complete representation. That is something without which no democratic country is altogether perfect. He has obviously made a careful study of the matter. His research, references to the law and historical analysis of the situation have been well presented and indicate that this is a subject to which he has devoted a good deal of time and attention. I hope that in due course this particular bill will go to join the ever growing number of private bills which members, particularly on this side of the house—and I say this without intending to introduce any partisan note—have been bringing forward with such emphasis and such force that they have been able to commend themselves to the government and in due course have received the approval of the government and have become part of the law of this country.

I do not wish to traverse many of the points which have been dealt with over the past several years in connection with the north, its needs and requirements. I have a sympathetic feeling toward the principle involved in this bill. I represent a constituency which in size is more than a third of that of the province of Alberta. I know what it is like to be obliged to travel substantial distances. I know what it is like to be obliged to meet with a variety of problems of a number of people scattered over a great distance. That is one of the problems which beset the Yukon and the Northwest Territories at this particular time.

I know that the hon. member for Yukon is a member of the same profession as that to which I have the honour to belong. I know what is involved for him in representing at this particular time, when it is in the midst of its growing pains this tremendous area of the Yukon which will in due course, I believe, evolve into a greater, far more populous and much more economically prosperous region.

I can enumerate many of these problems and I do so because I think they have a bearing on the particular issue which the hon. member has raised. The hon. member referred to his hope that if this bill should in due course be approved and become part of our law and if a new senator was to be appointed, such senator might be a person of the Eskimo race. I heartily approve and second that proposition. I know many of the Eskimo people. I have travelled a good deal in the north. The Eskimos are fine people. They are now at a difficult period in their development from a simple nomadic race. Coming in contact in recent years with white people, white settlements and white industrial development they have discovered the problems which under those circumstances they are bound to experience. I think it would be a splendid idea to see in the other place a member of the Eskimo race, someone to speak for them, to tell of their problems and of the difficulties which they have experienced in the past and are bound to experience over the new generation. I think of the Indians. While we have, of course, legislation to some extent dealing with them, those who live in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon have particular and special problems of their own over and above the difficulties of the Indians in the other parts of Canada. I think of the economic changes which are now approaching in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon. I say all these things, Mr. Speaker, because I think they bear strictly on the problem for which I believe this bill will provide the cure.

I stop here to emphasize that there should be that additional representation in the parliament of Canada to which that particular part of our country is entitled. I know that the hon. member for Yukon has a great task to perform and he is performing it ably and adequately. I was well acquainted with the late member for Mackenzie River. I visited Yellowknife and district for several days last summer and had the privilege of meeting him and talking to him there on his return from an extended trip which he had made with his family into the vast hinterland of his constituency, an exhausting and demanding task even for one in the best of health. As I listened to the hon. member for Yukon speak it struck me that there should be additional assistance in the form of senatorial representation at this time to deal with all the problems that arise.

Great things are about to happen in the north country and I say that generally, not wishing to precipitate any particular issue at this time. Within the existing limits of the British North America Act and our own laws we have done certain things. We have provided a judiciary for the Yukon and Northwest Territories. We have provided the incipient beginnings of representative government by means of a territorial council both in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon. But we must look ahead to the time, in the not too distant future, when there may be additional political units in the form of provinces to add to the 10 we already have in Canada. This matter has been referred to by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources from time to time, as well as by other members of the house. I know that at the present time the population is not large but I believe I am correct when I call the attention of hon. members to the fact that as a result of the last census it now appears that the rate of population growth has been greater in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon than in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: It is 60.8 per cent.

Mr. Baldwin: I thank the hon. member for Yukon for drawing to my attention the fact that it is 60.8 per cent. When I am home in the summer, in my riding of Peace River, the pathway to the north, day by day I see tremendous numbers of cars with tourists going north as well as others with people going in there with the intention of carving out for themselves a new home and a new career. This is one of the few places left on this continent where it is possible for men of courage, industry and imagination to go and, without too much influence or too much money, be able to establish a home for their families and a business and career for themselves.

From what I know, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that the fantastically high rate of increase in population is bound to continue. It is inevitable; it cannot be stayed. I believe it is up to us at this time to make a complete survey of the whole situation so that when new provinces are created, when larger populations become a fact, when new industries are established and we see a quickening of the economic pulse of the north we will have provided the necessary machinery of government so that the people there will have complete and adequate representation.

Someone has described the other place, I believe, as the repository of sober second thought. If that is the case, I am quite sure that any representation from the north will be largely influential in providing some change in that spirit. We heard something about that the other day in a debate, if I may be permitted to refer to it, when we talked about certain improvements to the old town of Dawson city. I would think that the spirit of Robert Service might well flourish in the other place.

On another aspect of the matter, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that it often happens, as was the case last year, that there are differences of opinion between the two bodies. This, of course, is the right of both. It might well be that the people of the Northwest Territories should be entitled to have representation in the other place so that they might be free to take a different view from that which we happen to take in this house.

I want to be careful in phrasing my final point. I know many people who went into the north country who have expressed the view I wish to express, and I have been there myself and have experienced this attitude of the people. Up until recent years the people there felt that Ottawa was a long distance away and that there was a complete lack of understanding, sympathy and appreciation of the point of view of the northerner, which I may say is completely different from that found elsewhere in this country. I do not wish to be critical in any sense of the departmental officials who went to that part of the country because in many ways they were faced with difficult tasks when they left other parts of Canada to make their homes in the north. They had difficulty in understanding, assimilating and interpreting the views of the people there. However, the people there felt that on too many occasions there was a lack of understanding on the part of certain officials of what were the real requirements not only of the present but of the future.

Therefore, it is my view that if this bill as proposed ultimately becomes law it will have the effect of interposing additional representation in the form of two senators, one from each of these geographical units, so that the true views and real desires of the people in these territories can be presented personally in Ottawa by people who have lived in the territories and who have experienced the problems of the people of the north. For all these reasons I am most happy to lend my voice and support to what has been said by the hon. member for Yukon, and I hope the time may not be too far distant when we may look forward to the arrival in Ottawa of senators from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, as will be proven by the time the clock reaches six, that the government does not support this measure. However, I should like to say a few words upon it on behalf of this group. According to the explanatory notes, the purpose of this bill is to make provision for representation in the Senate of the territories which form part of the Dominion of Canada which are not included in any province, as authorized by the act of 1886.

I fully appreciate and well understand the interest of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) in this subject, and his desire to see the Yukon and the territories have representation in the upper house or, shall I say, the upper house which some say is the counterpart in the parliament of Canada of the House of Lords in Great Britain. I know he has been interested in this subject, and I presume this is a good political move with regard to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories which contain the two constituencies that have recently been created.

However, in our opinion, Mr. Speaker, this move is a bit premature. You know, the members of this group always try to make two and two make four. We want to make certain what the future holds before we move forward, to make certain that what we are doing is necessary under the circumstances and will be of genuine advantage to the people concerned, not just of advantage to one individual. We say the bill is premature because, in our opinion, these areas should first become provinces and have self-government like the other provinces that are represented in the upper house of this parliament. That definition should please its members. We should proceed in these matters a step at a time. First of all, let us provide for self-government in the areas by virtue of the establishment of provinces. It is obvious that to date no government of Canada has considered that the population in the territories concerned could justify a provincial government or the expenses of its administration and so on. However, that is a matter of debate.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Herridge: Certainly.

Mr. Nielsen: If what the hon. member says is correct and we are premature, and since the territories are not yet provinces, can the hon. member suggest the reason why, as far back as 1886, the mother of parliament was far-sighted enough to include in the provisions of the British North America Act a provision for the appointment of senators from the existing provinces and from all the territories which, for the time being, do not form part of the provinces but form a part of the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can well understand that inclusion because the persons who drafted the legislation would interpret the legislation as the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) would on occasion, in the light of all the circumstances. In our opinion, the circumstances are such that the move on the part of the hon. member is somewhat premature for several reasons. First of all, we believe there should be a provincial government. Then, too, the question of Senate reform is in the air, or am I mistaken, Mr. Speaker? Is it up in the air? We are not quite sure what is going to happen in that respect. Before we approve of a measure such as this, I feel we should know exactly what the Prime Minister has in mind with regard to Senate reform. This is one of those unrevealed mysteries to date. We give that as a second reason, Mr. Speaker, for suggesting that, with all the good intentions in the world, this measure is somewhat premature.

Then again, the population would not justify the additional expense at this time. We believe that rather than create the additional expense, it would be more businesslike, shall I say, more practical, for additional moneys to be paid to members from the Yukon and other northern members to travel their constituency to a greater extent than is possible today. I believe that would be a more practical way. It would be far better to have members of parliament representing these northern constituencies provided with sufficient funds to go to these isolated places. We certainly understand the difficulties involved and the exceptional expenditures required as compared with representing a riding like Wentworth, for instance. It would be far better to have three members doing that than have a representative in the Senate and three members from these ridings simply representing the area in the House of Commons or in the upper house without sufficient funds to travel their constituencies. I suggest the cost of a senator could be used to better advantage in that way.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Herridge: Certainly.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure the hon. member agrees with me on the fundamental principle that there should be no taxation without representation. Since the other place has, in effect, a veto on taxation measures passed in this house, does the hon. member not think the citizens of the north should have a voice in the place where they are, in effect, faced with laws which impose taxes upon them?

Mr. Herridge: I think the hon. member's question is very easy to answer. In so far as the realities of taxation are concerned with respect to the people of Canada, the control exists in the House of Commons. I am quite sure that people are well protected, and I am quite sure the people of the Yukon are well represented in that respect. I am sure the hon. member for the Yukon will make certain that the people of his district are protected with regard to taxation, and they will have their views considered through him.

Mr. Nielsen: That is true; but just recently the other place, for instance, refused to pass an item affecting the customs tariff. Now, there again the other place completely nullified the action taken by this house.

Mr. Herridge: This was not a case within the scope of the Department of National Revenue. It was not on the basis of a form of taxation that the bill was opposed by the gentlemen in the other place. It was opposed because it was considered something new in Canadian history, the denial of the right of appeal. The Senate were protecting the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

I do not wish to prevent other members from having the opportunity to speak. However, I wanted to give the house some reasons why this group considered this bill somewhat premature. We are not willing, therefore, to support a measure of this type at this time because we do not believe the appointment of a senator to the upper house representing the areas specified is justified under present circumstances.

Mr. Nielsen: Before the hon. member takes his seat, I wonder if he would answer a question which arises out of his initial remarks? Does he not feel representation in the parliament of Canada, including the other place, would be of benefit to Canadians who live in the north?

Mr. Herridge: I tried to make the point before that it might from a theoretical point of view be a benefit. However, their representation would be greatly increased by providing the members of parliament elected from those northern areas with the funds required to travel and meet all their constituents, rather than by spending this additional money in the appointment of a senator to the Senate of Canada to represent that area.

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): I should like also to take this opportunity of congratulating the obviously sincere hon. member for the Yukon upon the introduction of Bill No. C-28. I was interested in this particular bill, so this afternoon I took the opportunity to check on the latest census figures. I note that the Yukon electoral district now has 14,628 people; the Northwest Territories, 22,998 and Mackenzie, 14,895. To me this is sufficient reason why representation should be given in the Senate.

I was very interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). All of a sudden the hon. member appears to be interested in saving dollars and cents. I have with me a book entitled "The Government of Canada" written by MacGregor Dawson and I should like to quote from it as it is appropriate in an argument against the cost involved, as put forward by the hon. member. It reads:

> —the Senate was intended to act as a revising and restraining body to deal with possible errors or impulses of the Commons. On this point the opinion of Sir John A. Macdonald may be taken as typical:
> There would be no use of an upper house if it did not exercise, when it thought proper, the right of opposing or amending or postponing the legislation of the lower house. It would be of no value whatever were it a mere chamber for registering the decrees of the lower house. It must be an independent house, having a free action of its own, for it is only valuable as being a regulating body, calmly considering the legislation initiated by the popular branch, and preventing any hasty or ill-considered legislation which may come from that body, but it will never set itself in opposition against the deliberate and understood wishes of the people.

Apparently the hon. member for Kootenay West is a perfectionist. Therefore he makes no mistakes and can see no reason why the people of that area should have representation in the Senate. I wholeheartedly support the views of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) regarding the appointment of an Eskimo to the Senate. The Prime Minister appointed the first Indian to the upper chamber and, as I say, again I support the views expressed by the hon. member for Yukon in this regard.

In the north we have such cities as Whitehorse and Yellowknife, that are growing daily. I have had some experience in the north and have travelled through it on two or three occasions. It is indeed a fast growing area and at the moment I wish to make reference to a speech made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) at Winnipeg, some six months ago. He said that a satisfactory program for the north must clearly give full weight to natural resources development. It would fail, however, if it overlooked the human resources in the 35,000 people who live there. The territories are not overcrowded yet and it is startling to think that part of the country has a smaller percentage of people living there than in some of our larger cities. The population of the north is growing faster in percentage terms than any other Canadian province. Since the 1956 census estimate there has been a 60 per cent increase in population. I do not know if this is the actual figure. It is the greatest asset for development that the territories have.

I just want to go on record once more as saying that I wholeheartedly support this measure.

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): I would also like to commend the hon. member for Yukon for bringing this bill before the house. Anyone who has done considerable travelling in northern Canada can see the real need for the bill.

As a representative of a far northern riding and having had the opportunity recently of making an extended tour of the north, right up to the Arctic, I have seen the rapid growth that is taking place in that area. It would do a lot of hon. members good to see the development in progress in the north, and accompanying it the increase in population.

I also want to commend the hon. member for bringing the bill before the house in order to give the franchise to the people of Keewatin and Franklin districts. Returning to the present bill I, as one who represents a large population of Indian people, can fully realize what it has meant to those people to have a representative in the upper house. I know the great task which the hon. senator who represents that vast population has to do, and I can see great possibilities in the Eskimo population having a similar representative.

I know the hon. member for Kootenay West was talking about saving money, but when one looks at the vastness of the north country and understands that these people want better representation than what they have at present, then his argument does not bear much weight. In conclusion I would like to go on record as supporting Bill C-28.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, CONTROL OF DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-75, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act—Mr. Churchill—Mr. Henderson in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 1—Grain.

The Deputy Chairman: Before going on I should apologize to the committee for having inadvertently referred to the Orders of the Day, page 15, item No. 37 which I find has to do with the Canada Grain Act, not with the act which is before the committee at the present time for consideration clause by clause.

I am now prepared to hear arguments on the amendment which was presented to the committee by the hon. member for Assiniboia as follows:

That paragraph (e) of clause 1 be amended by deleting the word "and" as well as the semi-colon in line eight and adding the following words: "and mustard seed".

Mr. Argue: Do I take it the amendment is considered to be in order?

The Deputy Chairman: I only made the comment I did so that it would be clear, before we got under way, that I had made an inadvertent error before we rose for the dinner hour by making the reference I did to an item on the order paper which does not concern the bill I had in mind when I made that reference. I apologize for doing so. We now have to consider the question of whether or not this amendment is in order, and I would ask any hon. member who wishes to make a contribution in order to assist the Chair in this regard to rise now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps Your Honour would indicate the further ground upon which you had doubt about the validity of the amendment proposed. I am not sure that all hon. members will recall what the other ground was. It might shorten debate if you could indicate it briefly.

Mr. Rapp: On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps we could first hear what the Chair has to say.

The Deputy Chairman: There were two points I had in mind before we rose for the dinner recess. One was the question whether or not the addition of the words "and mustard seed" did not introduce a completely new and unrelated amendment. In this regard I may refer to Beauchesne at a later time if hon. members wish to make any contribution in this regard.

Mr. Rapp: On the point of order; yesterday I said I should like to see mustard seed included. However, I said also that under the present system mustard seed cannot be included because it has no statutory definition as to grade under the Canada Grain Act. It is not listed as a statutory grade in that act, neither is it listed under the western division which we find in the act on page 60. Consequently, I think, we shall not be able to bring mustard seed under the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Only western grain can be brought within the provisions of that act. In the Canadian Wheat Board Act it is stated that grain includes wheat, oats, barley, rye and flax seed. It is stated further in the Canada Grain Act, in section 2, that western grain means grain grown in the western division, and the western division means all that portion of Canada lying west of the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the city of Port Arthur. Thus I regret very much that we cannot include mustard seed at the present time because it would be out of order to do so. I suggest that the amendment cannot comply with the regulations set out in the Canada Grain Act and in the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, all I can say is that the remarks we have just heard come strangely from a member who obviously, on the basis of his past efforts, is interested in having these regulations apply to mustard seed. It is strange he should argue that the amendment is out of order.

However, I would remind the Chair that we are dealing now with the Canadian Wheat Board Act and that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, in arguing that this amendment is out of order, has referred to another act altogether. The definition of grain in the Canadian Wheat Board Act does not depend, according to that act, on some other legislation. It stands on its own feet. I submit that if this phrase "and mustard seed" were added it would be within the jurisdiction of the wheat board to decide whether or not quota regulations would apply to mustard seed. It might well be that action should be taken to define grades of mustard seed under the Canada Grain Act, but I suggest that is another proposition and that it has to do with another act. In my view it is very much in order to amend the act which we are now considering by adding the words "and mustard seed" in addition to the amendment which is already before the Chair, namely that which refers to rapeseed. For these reasons I suggest we should deal with this matter not by declaring it out of order but by putting the amendment before the committee.

Mr. Rapp: Further to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct your attention to chapter 25 of the Canada Grain Act, where it refers to statutory grades of western grain. Perhaps I might read the grains which appear in the western schedule. They are: red spring wheat, winter wheat, amber Durum, mixed wheat, oats, barley, rye, mixed grain, flax seed, buckwheat, corn, sunflower seed, soybeans, peas and rapeseed. Your Honour will find that these are the grains which come under the western schedule. Only those grains come under the Canadian wheat board which are listed in the western grain schedule.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a word about the point of order. It seems to me that the point of order almost is answered by the fact that the whole purpose of the clause we have before us is precisely to amend the present list of grains to include rapeseed, and if it is competent for the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to introduce an amendment to include rapeseed surely it is equally competent for the hon. member for Assiniboia to introduce an amendment to include mustard seed. If the one is out of order the other would be out of order and it seems to me that is more or less an absurdity. This is not the kind of question it was ever intended that the Chair should settle. This is precisely the kind of question that the committee should settle by a vote.

This is a government measure. If the government in its wisdom sees fit to resist such an amendment, of course that is the government's responsibility, but it seems to me it would be a very dangerous thing for Your Honour to take upon his shoulders a responsibility that properly belongs to the whole committee.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, may I—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I feel I have had enough assistance from hon. members of the committee at this stage and wish to thank them for the help they have given. I do not reject an amendment on the basis of whether or not it would be better put to a vote in the committee to let the committee decide, because I would fear the bad practice of establishing a precedent by which the Chair or his successors may not be able to abide. I start with the premise that is set out in section 59, paragraph 2 of the standing orders which reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

That standing order is well known to all hon. members of the committee. If I may, I should like to refer to May's sixteenth edition at page 421 the opening paragraph under the heading "Rules with Respect to the form and Content of Amendments" which reads as follows:

> The fundamental rule that debate must be relevant to a question necessarily involves the rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed—

It goes on to say:

> Stated generally, no matter ought to be raised in debate on a question which would be irrelevant, if moved as an amendment, and an amendment cannot be used for importing arguments which would be irrelevant to the main question.

Paragraph 1 on page 554 dealing with the topic "Amendments" reads as follows:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill, or if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration.

This is the authority which leads me to believe that the committee should weigh very carefully the complex question of introducing a word which might enlarge the scope of the clause under consideration.

Finally, may I refer to the explanatory notes of the bill itself which generally describe the purpose of the bill. The explanatory note to clause 1 reads as follows:

> The purpose of the amendment to paragraph (e) is to redefine grain to include rapeseed.

This is cast in pretty ironclad terms. It is for this reason that I feel the addition of the words "mustard seed" in the clause under consideration would enlarge the scope of the bill. I see that the hon. member for Ottawa West is anxious to rise to his feet. If he has something further to offer to assist the Chair I would be very glad to hear him.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word if I may about the point of order. The explanatory notes have no relevance at all in consideration of the matter because they can have no effect before the committee. If a minister includes explanatory notes in a bill that do not accurately explain what is being done by the bill, that surely cannot restrict the bill when it is before the house or the committee for consideration. It is the bill itself at which we must look in order to determine the question of relevance or whether or not the proposed amendment is foreign to the object of the bill itself. That must remain the test.

On the question of whether or not the proposition embodied in the amendment offered is relevant, I should like if I may to point out exactly what the part of the clause with which we are concerned says. It is an amendment to the definition of the word "grain" which in the act reads " 'grain' includes wheat, oats, barley, rye and flaxseed" and the amendment merely adds the words "and rapeseed". In other words the word "grain" is being enlarged in part by adding another of the oil seeds to the definition.

The word "grain" it will be seen does not contain an inclusive definition but is defined by listing certain cereal grains and certain oil seeds. That is the method the government used in approaching the definition of the word. The amendment offered is merely to enlarge the number of oil seeds being included in that definition, so it is not foreign to the clause in the bill before us. It is squarely within it. It is adding after the definition now included in the bill the words "and mustard seed", which is another one of the oil seeds. Surely it would be perfectly competent, for instance, Mr. Chairman, to suggest that the word "grain" should include all the cereal grains and the oil seeds. It would be quite impractical to do it as a proposition for the house to adopt but surely it would be perfectly competent to redefine the word "grain" by offering an amendment that said simply that it includes all cereal grains and all oil seeds.

Since the bill is put forward in the form that it designates certain cereal grains and certain oil seeds, what is being offered here is an addition to the oil seeds already included in the definition. Surely that is competent. For instance, it would be competent to offer an amendment that would limit rapeseed to certain grades of rapeseed as defined under the Canada Grain Act, or to restrict them in any way. Here we are merely extending the definition of the oil seeds to include mustard seed.

Mr. Churchill: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think Your Honour was on sound ground when you quoted from May at page 554:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill—

This is beyond the scope of the bill because as will be shown later the purpose of adding rapeseed is very clear. Arguments will be advanced as we go along. If you now permit individual members to bring forward additional types of seed, of which mustard seed is only one that might be thought of, you might have half a dozen amendments extending the meaning of the word "grain" and thereby imposing on the wheat board certain obligations which are imposed upon it by adding, as we have done in the past, flaxseed, and now rapeseed, under the title of "grain", so that the wheat board will have certain jurisdiction over those seeds. But you are going beyond the scope and the intent of this amendment if other seeds may be added at the whim of individual members.

Mr. McIlraith: It is not the whim of individual members. It is the judgment of the house.

Mr. Argue: That is what parliament is here for, namely to decide.

Mr. Churchill: On the other hand, an amendment which modifies the proposed amendment, as the hon. member for Ottawa West so wisely pointed out—that is restricting, for example, rapeseed to certain grades—I think would be in order; but I think this goes beyond the scope of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word at this precise point, Mr. Chairman, as it seems to me to be clear that the reservations in the mind of the minister have nothing to do with this clause of the bill. The notions the government has as to what this bill should be are just the government's notions. This parliament is supreme over the government, or should be supreme as the Prime Minister pointed out to us yesterday in another context. The word you have to take into account in making your decision, Mr. Chairman, is "grain". The subject of this subclause (e) is grain. The only question which Your Honour can ask yourself is whether mustard seed is or is not a grain.

Mr. Rapp: It is not a grain.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member for Assiniboia had sought to put in apples, I would say that Your Honour would have been perfectly right to rule it out of order as being beyond the scope of the bill. If he had sought to put in trees, it would have been beyond the scope of the bill. However, is there anyone who will deny that mustard seed is a grain and yet say that flaxseed and rapeseed are grain? It seems to me that the word "grain" means seed. Anyone can look in the dictionary and find out. I can illustrate the point in another way, I think.

An hon. Member: What about apple seeds?

Mr. Pickersgill: Apple seed might be all right but not apples, and I suggest not apple sauce either.

Mr. Herridge: We are very sympathetic to this amendment, Mr. Chairman. Does the hon. member think it would be out of order if the hon. member for Assiniboia had put in peanuts?

Mr. Pickersgill: I confess that I am not enough of a botanist to know whether a peanut is a seed or whether it is a tuber. As that question is not before us, I probably should not be wasting the time of the Chair in discussing that rather oily intervention. However, when the hon. gentleman interrupted me I was pointing out that I could illustrate in another way why this would be in order. Much as it might displease the government, and certain as they would be to ask their friends to vote it down, I am sure that, if I were to rise in my place and move that flaxseed be stricken out, that amendment would be perfectly in order. If it is in order to strike out flaxseed, it is surely equally in order to put in mustard seed if the committee wishes to do so.

The government has a huge majority in this House of Commons and it does not need to worry about this being done by whims, to use the word of the minister. All the government needs to do is to tell the large number of supporters it has in the house, of whom there are a good number here this evening, how he wants them to vote, and I do not think they are going to be defeated. However, that is no excuse for the government's seeking to restrict the rights of hon. members to speak about mustard seed; and as Your Honour pointed out, anything you can speak about, you can make an amendment about. However, I come back to the point that mustard seed is a grain, that the subject matter of this amendment is grain and that therefore it is indubitably in order.

Mr. Rapp: It is not a grain.

The Deputy Chairman: I had some reservations and that is why I allowed fairly wide latitude in the discussion with regard to this point of order. I again thank hon. members who have assisted me. It is, of course, impossible for the chairman to define what is grain. This is a responsibility with which he is not charged. I can understand quite readily the suggestion made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that there would be nothing wrong with an amendment to delete from the act one of these designated grains. However, I cannot discharge from my mind the fact that in my view the addition of another grain would widen the scope of the bill. If the amendment, for example, classified one of the grains named, this to my mind would be perfectly in order. However, because the addition of mustard seed in my view enlarges the scope of the bill, in my judgment it would be unwise to rule that the amendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia is in order. Accordingly, I must rule that it is not in order.

Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Argue: No, Mr. Chairman; there is something I wish to say before clause 1 carries. This is the place where one can have a general discussion. I wish to refer to the statement made by the hon. member for Provencher to the effect that no farm organizations had opposed the government's feed mill policy and the removal from the jurisdiction of the wheat board of feed grains sold to feed mills on the prairies. I refer to the submission to the government of Canada by the national farmers union on January 31, 1962, which at page 14 states as follows:

> We again register our opposition to the present policy of allowing feed mills in western Canada to purchase their supplies of grain at open market prices and outside the price and quota regulations of the Canadian wheat board.

I do not mind the hon. member for Provencher putting forth arguments as to why he thinks the wheat board's jurisdiction should be reduced to this extent. However, I do not think it is fair to the farm organizations to make false claims about their position. The position of the national farmers union is made abundantly clear in its brief. It has been a consistent policy. It is no different today than it was in 1959 when the evidence was being taken before the committee.

It is my opinion that the Saskatchewan wheat pool is still opposed to this policy. That is my opinion. I have not seen any statements on this point in recent days. However, I would appreciate having from the parliamentary secretary or from the Minister of Veterans Affairs a statement, if he can give it, as to the position of the Saskatchewan wheat pool. I do not think this is a correct statement for him to make. However, if he is right I should like to hear it and I would think that the western producers who are members of the wheat pool organization would like to know whether this is the kind of submission that the parliamentary secretary has received from these organizations. I wish again to register the strongest objections, as I have done consistently, to this new policy which has been imposed by the government and which to my mind is cutting down the very basis of the wheat board and the orderly marketing of grain.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman—

(Text):

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I have asked the parliamentary secretary a question. I think it is a pertinent one. I think it is one to which the committee has the right to hear a reply. He has made a general sweeping statement with regard to the position of the farm organizations. I have quoted a paragraph giving the policy of one farm organization and I have asked him whether or not he has any recent information about the position of the wheat pools.

Mr. Kindt: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for Assiniboia may I say that I have before me an editorial from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of March 12 to which I would refer him. In that editorial it is stated quite clearly that in their view and in the view of western farmers the feed mill policy is generally accepted and has worked out much better than the farm organizations predicted it would. In reply to the specific question I would say it is true that certain farm leaders were opposed to the feed mill policy but I am quite confident that they do not reflect the views of the entire membership of their organizations.

Mr. Argue: I should like to get the reply of the parliamentary secretary clear. Did I understand him to say that he had in his hands and was referring to an editorial in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix? If he had said the Western Producer, it at least is an organ of a farm organization, but I think it is an insult to refer to the position of farm organizations on the basis of an editorial in a daily newspaper which is completely divorced from those organizations.

Mr. Bigg: A Liberal newspaper.

Mr. Pigeon: It is a Liberal newspaper.

An hon. Member: Liberal or C.C.F.

Mr. Pigeon: Socialist Liberal.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor and I do not mind standing here while these interruptions take place.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Assiniboia has the floor and no hon. member should interrupt from his seat.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I was just saying that I think it is an impertinence for the parliamentary secretary to refer to the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix as a basis for the position of farm organizations.

Mr. Bigg: It is a Liberal paper.

Mr. Argue: If he had used an editorial from a newspaper connected with the farm organizations such as the Western Producer, then that would be evidence, of course, as to the position of the wheat pools.

Mr. Jorgenson: Or the Country Guide?

Mr. Argue: The Country Guide would reflect the position of the U.G.G., but I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that what he is saying now has absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with the position of the farm organizations, and that to use an editorial in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix purporting to indicate the position of the farm organizations is an insult to those organizations. Although the parliamentary secretary made the sweeping statement this afternoon that farm organizations support the government's feed mill policy, which in my opinion is undermining the Canadian wheat board, I am very pleased that he has not been able to substantiate that statement.

What does he say now? He says that certain farm leaders take this position but the membership does not. This can mean only one thing, that he is referring either to the national farmers union or the Saskatchewan wheat pool as taking this position. I suggest it is an insult both to the membership and to the leadership of these organizations to suggest that the leaders are talking one way and the membership is taking a different stand.

Mr. Lambert: Come out to Alberta and find out.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that the position taken in recent years by the farm organizations has not been altered in any way by evidence produced by the parliamentary secretary.

I should like to raise another point on clause 1. It has to do with the reference made by the minister, when he was introducing the legislation, to the maximum price for grain that can be obtained at Fort William-Port Arthur and Vancouver under the international wheat agreement. In making his statement the minister said that the maximum price, in accordance with the discount today on the Canadian dollar, could go as high as $2.14 a bushel at Fort William and Vancouver. I am not trying to misinterpret what the minister has said. I am asking for information and clarification. I did so this afternoon but the minister did not answer me in his general reply. I asked this afternoon why the wheat board has not been able to obtain more than $1.90 a bushel at Fort William when the Canadian dollar is at a discount today.

I take it that the maximum price at Fort William today in United States funds is about $1.99 a bushel. The minister can adjust that to the precise amount but I think that would be very close. I ask him why the price at Fort William today is not above $1.90 and why the wheat board is unable to get this additional amount at this time. The minister seemed to imply in his statement that this might be accomplished by the 12½ cent increase in the maximum price of wheat because the price in United States dollars has gone up from $1.90 to $2.02½. If the best the wheat board can do today is $1.90 and a fraction it would seem to me that the best they could do in the future under the international wheat agreement with the ceiling where it is would be $2.03 or thereabouts.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I understand the hon. member's interest in this particular question but it is quite obvious that I could not provide the answer tonight. I would have to consult with the wheat board with regard to the price range at the present time. I would be very glad to do that and endeavour to get an answer for the hon. member; but without consultation with the board I am certainly not able to give that answer now.

Mr. Argue: If I may follow up that point, I wish to get an answer from the minister. I will appreciate an answer. I suppose he will have to write me a letter if the bill has been passed but I would appreciate an answer in any case. However, I will tell the minister now what I think the answer probably is, namely that wheat out of Vancouver commands a premium over wheat out of Fort William because of lower ocean transportation rates. The point I wish to make is that the ceiling that the minister has quoted for Fort William and Vancouver is really in fact the ceiling at Vancouver, and the price at Fort William has to be adjusted downward. I think that is the attitude of the Canadian wheat board. Therefore from the standpoint of the producers it is not realistic to refer to this ceiling as being the ceiling at both Fort William and Vancouver. In other words, the maximum ceiling under the international wheat agreement is not available for all Canadian wheat. It is available only for Canadian wheat that moves out of Vancouver and there is a discount in the case of wheat moving through Fort William.

I have given the minister what I think is the answer. I am not positive I am right. I do not have any particular information except what I have picked up by reading the newspapers. I wanted to bring out this point so that there would be further clarification of the sweeping statement made by the minister that $2.14 was the maximum price at Fort William and Vancouver. My point is that even with the discount on the Canadian dollar this is in fact the effective maximum at Vancouver and there is a lower price at Fort William through which a large part of the grain moves.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, for the information of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), I should like to comment on the statement he made this afternoon when he suggested that farmers would not be against the opening up of the Canadian grain market.

In this respect, I should like to put forward the views of eastern farmers who have repeatedly made representations to the government in order to receive the same treatment as the millers in western Canada.

Eastern feed mills are subject to the regulations enacted by the Canadian wheat board, while western feed mills are not. As a matter of fact, this is what eastern farmers have asked of the government since the Canadian wheat board regulations have been changed. The association for the development and protection of agriculture in eastern Canada pressed the government for:

> The removal of all trade restrictions on the sale of barley, oats and other feed grains to restore equal prices across the country so as to ensure the orderly production and marketing of cattle, poultry, dairy products, etc.

We made criticisms last year, especially in the committee on agriculture and colonization, and we showed that grains sell for less in the west than in the east, that is at approximately half the price. On the other hand, we have shown that the situation is somewhat different today because grain supplies are at a minimum, and if the 1962 crop is a failure, we will probably be short of feed grains.

Moreover, certain western organizations have protested against changes in the regulations. Both the government of Saskatchewan and the Saskatchewan wheat pool made representations in that connection, the latter through its chairman, Mr. Gibbings.

As you can see, Mr. Chairman, it is not only the eastern farmers who have protested against these changes but certain western organizations as well. Last year, we said that the changes in the regulations would bring about a certain integration for the western feed mills.

I am able to say tonight that on June 1st, 1961—when looking back to the last ten years—hogs produced in eastern Canada and British Columbia numbered 3,149,000, which represents an increase of 87,000 over 1951. On the other hand, production in the prairie provinces went up from 1,800,000 to 2,700,000, which is an increase of almost one million hogs in the west, to the detriment of eastern farmers.

Today, we, in the east, have to import from the west. We import a considerable quantity of beef, which is only normal. But when we have to import pork, there is something wrong; and that situation can be attributed to the short view policy, the day-to-day policy of the Conservative administration. We have told the government that there is still time to remedy that state of affairs so that our eastern farmers may enjoy a better standard of living.

The number of farmers in eastern Canada has decreased by 32,000 in the last ten years, whereas in the west it has decreased by only 16,000. The reason for it is that eastern farmers do not have sufficient income to provide for the needs of their families. Last year, we passed an act for the development of submarginal farms, and it is time that the government put that legislation into force.

At this stage, I would like to make a correction—

The Chairman: I listened carefully to the hon. member and I hoped he would come back to the clause before us. I would ask him to keep to that clause.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I did not stray from the subject. I was on the point of making a correction, as my remarks with regard to the Canadian wheat board have been misinterpreted. I know that the Canadian wheat board was established by a Conservative government.

Mr. Pigeon: You said a "Liberal government."

Mr. Boulanger: I said, afterwards, that for 22 years the act was administered by a Liberal government. And, with regard to the act commonly called A.R.D.A., it was introduced by a Conservative government, but it will be a Liberal government which will put it into force in a few months, when it will again be in power.

Mr. Pigeon: Think twice before speaking in this way.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture to carefully note our remarks, because they express the views of our eastern farmers.

I know that tomorrow night there will be a meeting of eastern mill owners, and I know that their recommendations will be similar to those I just made.

I would like to hear other hon. members from that area expressing their views with respect to the treatment meted out to eastern farmers. Some people of course, rise to praise the government and its farm policy. I hope that, during the next election, they will go on praising the policy of a Conservative government that has brought about an agricultural depression.

Mr. Pigeon: Why don't you tell us about Mr. Courcy, the No. 1 enemy of farmers and agronomists.

Mr. Boulanger: The agricultural policy of the Conservative government is a defeatist policy. Our farmers are leaving their farms to go and live in the cities, because they can no longer live on their farms. We only have to read a booklet issued by the Department of Agriculture, last year, to realize that 61 per cent of eastern farmers are hardly making a gross income of $2,500 a year. How can you expect them to make both ends meet when a floor sweeper, in industry, is earning $3,000—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Paul: It is very interesting to hear the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger), but I think it would be more practical for him to stick to the consideration of this bill.

The Chairman: Not only would that be more practical, but it would also be more in order. As I have already asked him to do, I would again ask him to abide by the rules and to deal with clause No. 1 now under consideration. I know the hon. member will abide by my ruling.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have strayed away from the subject. It is perhaps the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere—

Mr. Pigeon: Tell us about Mr. Lesage's policy.

The Chairman: Order. Such interjections should stop. On the other hand, the hon.

member, who has already acquired some parliamentary experience, knows that he must deal with item No. 1, and I hope he will do so.

Mr. Boulanger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Each time I have the floor, I realize that I hurt the feelings of Conservative members. That is why I seem to be out of order more often than I should. I sincerely believe I am defending the opinion of eastern farmers, and I shall continue to do so.

(Text):

Mr. Jorgenson: It is not my intention to follow all the wanderings of the hon. member but I do want to deal with one of the points he raised because I think he is labouring under a misapprehension and I wish to correct him.

The question was raised about feed grains moving into the eastern provinces, and he suggested that these should move without the authority and jurisdiction of the board. I should explain to him that the recent change in regulations simply permitted feed mills—the farmers all had this right before—to purchase grain within the provinces. The jurisdiction of the board does not apply to moving grain within a province, but if a farmer in the province of Saskatchewan wanted to buy feed grain from the province of Manitoba he would have to go through the Canadian wheat board, just the same as is the case in dealing with the movement of grain from the western provinces to the eastern provinces.

I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia must be considerably embarrassed by the statements which his colleague made—

Mr. Argue: Not at all.

Mr. Jorgenson: —because what he is seeking to have done is what the hon. member for Assiniboia has been criticizing.

Mr. Argue: The theory is that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. The mistake was made.

Mr. Jorgenson: The hon. member knows that in regard to the movement of grain between provinces there is no intention to tamper with the authority of the board.

Mr. Argue: You have already tampered with it in the quotas.

Mr. Jorgenson: I should like to quote from an article in La Terre de Chez Nous which appeared in the issue of November 29, 1961. It is an article which deals with this question of feed grains and with what happened when the government decided last fall to authorize the feed companies to import quantities of grain, particularly feed oats, from the United States. It reads:

[The Chairman.]

> Feed is not "for the asking"; it must be paid for and at a high price just now. This is a common complaint. It is heard throughout eastern Canada—from the head of the Great Lakes to the easternmost tip of Newfoundland. In Quebec and Ontario, the various mixtures are selling from $1 to $5 or $6 a ton more than a year ago, and in some cases the difference is even much greater.
> As everyone knows, the cause of the trouble is the small quantity of grains used in making feed, particularly oats and barley. Another well-known fact is that when stocks are limited, prices climb quickly especially at the consumer level. In the case of feed grains, the leading consumer, the one who foots most of the bill, is the eastern farmer. His plight is the greater because of the fact that products obtained from these grains show no sky-rocketing tendencies.
> However, it must be admitted that the prices of oats and barley are no longer at the top of the ladder as they were in August. They have dropped a little, maybe two or three rungs, according to official quotations. The entry into Canada of a few million bushels of oats from the United States has had a wholesome effect; that fact must be recognized. According to one of our best economists, these American imports have helped reduce by about $3 to $4 a ton the price of oats and barley in Canada.

That quotation is taken from a newspaper published in the hon. member's own province. I might say in this connection that from August 17 to February 16, 1962, the board has issued permits for the importation of 10,370,300 bushels of United States oats. Each permit had a 30 day expiry limit and not all of the permits were exercised. Over 5,200,000 bushels of American oats have been brought into Canada, mostly to eastern Canadian positions, half of which have been used up and the remainder is still in storage.

At March 1 this year there were over 6 million bushels of feed oats in the elevators in eastern Canada. This included about 2,400,000 bushels of American oats and a small quantity of eastern Canadian oats. This total is almost double the quantity of oats in eastern positions at March 1 last year, when only 3,400,000 bushels were on hand.

Supply of Canadian feed oats in store at the lakehead at March 1 this year amounted to 7,300,000 bushels compared with only 3,400,000 bushels at March 1, 1961. Therefore the hon. member's charge that the Canadian wheat board has not been recognizing the difficulties of the eastern feeders is not well founded, and the charge that the board has done nothing to assist the eastern feeders is one which cannot be substantiated, as is shown by the article I quoted from La Terre de Chez Nous and as is indicated by the statement I have just made.

I am sure that the hon. member, on reflection, would be prepared to say that the Canadian wheat board has made a very strenuous effort to ensure that quantities of feed have been made available to eastern feeders at all times.

Mr. Tardif: When I was absent this afternoon the hon. member for Macleod made a statement and attributed something to me that is not factual. He said that I was against the sale of grain to China. What I did say was that every member in the house was delighted with the sales made to China, that we deplored the fact that Canadian salesmen were not as good as Australian salesmen who sold considerably more wheat to China, that China could never be a permanent customer, and that the people charged with selling Canadian grains should devote themselves to trying to establish permanent customers. I also stated that when China was able to supply its own needs it would no longer be a customer of the magnitude it is now, but I was glad to see that we were selling wheat to China.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Group life insurance plan and group medical-surgical insurance plan.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Argue: I would like some information from either the minister or the parliamentary secretary on what is really involved in this clause. Its scope is obvious. It states:

> With the approval of the governor in council, the board may enter into a contract with any person > (a) for the provision of a group life insurance plan, and > (b) for the provision of a group medical-surgical insurance plan > for the members of the board and the officers, clerks and employees employed by the board under this act and their dependants, and may contribute a share of the premiums payable under such plans out of the funds of the board.

Subclause (2) reads:

> Contributions made by the board pursuant to subsection (1) shall be deemed to be expenses incurred in connection with the operations of the board.

It is perfectly clear what this will allow to be done. With the approval of the governor in council contracts can be entered into to provide group life insurance and group medical-surgical insurance for members, officers and clerks of the board, and the farmers will foot the bill. The farmers will pay the cost out of the wheat board funds.

Now I am not objecting to this. I want to make that clear; but I believe the minister owes it to the committee to tell us how many employees could be covered by this clause, and give us some idea of the thinking that went into bringing this important amendment before the house. Has the wheat board on hand some tentative proposals with regard to this kind of coverage? If so, what would the cost be, and how many employees are involved. I think the grain producers of western Canada who are going to have to foot the bill and pay these costs, or a portion of them, have the right to know what may be involved.

Mr. Churchill: The thinking behind this amendment, of course, is obvious. It is consideration for the employees of a first class business organization. It is just good business practice, recognized also in government circles, to provide the type of benefit which the board would like to provide for its employees in this amendment. I am sure the producers of western Canada who are now paying the salaries of the Canadian wheat board and the employees of that board would be only too pleased to go this step further, as most business enterprises are doing today, and provide for group life insurance and group medical-surgical insurance for the employees of the board. This is a contributory plan. It is not simply a handout on the part of the producers. However, there is the normal share paid by the employer toward the cost of the plans. What that means in dollars and cents I cannot say immediately because I have not got the figures in front of me showing the number of employees but, of course, that is readily available. I would think that after approval has been given to this measure, when the officials of the wheat board are here, as they are before the committee on agriculture every year, the detailed questions which the hon. member for Assiniboia has raised could very well be answered. However, unless hon. members intend to oppose this forward step I am not certain that we need go into some of the details the hon. member has mentioned.

Mr. Argue: I wish to protest certain features of the statement which has just been made by the minister and I want to protest the general attitude of the government in this regard. Here is a minister who is acting as the minister for agriculture. He is the minister in charge of this bill and he has sitting beside him a capable parliamentary secretary. Yet, when we ask questions that are pertinent to this clause he gives us no information. What the minister is saying to us is: pass the clause, rubberstamp it, and then call in the wheat board officials and they will treat the agriculture committee like a kindergarten class, after the law has been placed on the statute books. I think the minister should have the officials before him. We have the right to be given this information in this committee. We should not have to pass blank cheques even for a good purpose. The minister says the information is readily available. That may be the case, but he has not got it and he will not produce it.

Mr. Churchill: All right. Sit down, and I will give it to you.

Mr. Argue: I will not sit down. This is the parliament of Canada and I do not have to take that from the minister. My question was: how much money will this cost? How many employees are on the board? Yet I am told to sit down—

An hon. Member: And he would give you the information.

Mr. McIlraith: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask you to see that order is observed in this committee. When members of the opposition speak, they have a right to be heard and to debate this subject. When supporters of the government rose to speak they were listened to without interruption, but when anyone in the opposition gets up he is not given an opportunity to speak, and that is not good enough for the Canadian parliament.

The Chairman: I would ask the co-operation of all members of the committee in order that the member who has the floor may be heard. The hon. member for Ottawa West is right in saying that all members, no matter who they are, have a right to be heard and I ask all to co-operate so that this rule can be observed.

Mr. Ricard: I cannot let the affirmation of that gentleman go unchallenged. He says that we on this side were heard—

The Chairman: I have asked for the co-operation of all members of the committee so that whoever has the floor may be heard. My remarks were not directed to one side or the other. The hon. member for Assiniboia has the floor.

Mr. Lambert: On that point of order—

The Chairman: Unless the hon. member from Edmonton West has another point of order to raise, I think this matter has been thoroughly dealt with.

Mr. Argue: I have been asking some questions to try to elicit from the minister information which I think is relevant to the clause which is before the committee. I was trying to find out whether there have been any discussions with the board concerning any binding agreements or contracts which could be entered into with the employees with the approval of the governor in council to provide for group life insurance and group medical-surgical insurance. The minister says this information is readily available. This information is not readily available. The minister comes into this house without the figures for which I have been asking. I am not saying he should carry them all in his mind or even in his briefcase. But I say that he should have the officials before this committee so that we can obtain this information. I say, Mr. Chairman, that in all my time in parliament I have never known a minister of the crown say to me in response to a question I put to him: "Oh, sit down". I think that is the height of arrogance from an arrogant minister in an arrogant government. It is hardly fitting coming from a minister in a government which says it does not want to impose closure but wants parliament to have the right to free discussion.

The grain producers of western Canada are being asked in this clause to give the government the right to impose an additional burden on grain producers. I am not saying they will object to the contracts. I think the grain producers have shown that they want an efficient wheat board efficiently run. But I also believe that in a time of crop failure and low incomes to grain producers, at a time when the government has felt, with the support of all the members of the house, that steps should be taken to do at least something to alleviate this situation, it is pertinent to ask how much this is going to cost—how much it may cost. I have the greatest regard for the personnel of the Canadian wheat board but I make the statement that people who are receiving salaries of $20,000 a year or more are just a little more capable of providing their own life insurance and their own group medical-surgical insurance than the hard-pressed grain producers who will be asked to foot the bill.

I do not intend to oppose the clause. I am going to vote for it. If the minister wants to call a vote, I shall vote for it; but I think it is a very bad thing for the minister to come here and ask parliament to rubberstamp this proposal, though it be the best clause in the world, without giving us the kind of information for which I have asked. While I shall vote for it, I wager that there are tens of thousands of grain producers who would say that in view of the attitude of the government it is an imposition in a year of crop failure to ask them for this kind of blank cheque without any explanation. It is not enough to say to parliament, "Pass it tonight and we will give you the information at some later date when we have a meeting of the agriculture committee".

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Chairman, you have just heard the hon. member for Assiniboia who is a master of bluster and noise. He is acting now within the ranks of a great historic party as he behaved when he was ranting and raving in the corner to Your Honour's left. I must say the conduct of the group in that corner has been vastly improved since the hon. gentleman left that corner because the group seated there is now under the genial guidance of the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not much opposition left, you mean.

Mr. Churchill: Indeed, my respect for the group in that corner has risen immensely since the hon. member for Assiniboia left. He is now trying to re-establish himself by bluster and noise and that, I think, will not work within the party with which he is now associated.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would it not be more simple to answer the question?

Mr. Churchill: Just wait until Mr. Walter Gordon gets after the hon. member for Assiniboia. During the course of his remarks which the hon. gentleman repeated over and over again, I said to him, "If you will sit down I will give you the answer".

Mr. Argue: Oh, no. You just said, "Sit down". You said, "You sit down".

Mr. Pallett: You were talking so loudly you could not hear what was said.

Mr. Crestohl: You are getting a dose of your own medicine.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will take note of the interruptions from the other side of the house. I am not being given a chance to be heard. This is a shameful thing. This is destructive of parliament and it reflects on the reputation of the Liberal party. I shall deal with the monstrous blustering of the hon. member for Assiniboia. I asked him to sit down and told him that if he did so I would give him an answer.

Mr. Argue: That is not what you said.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member kept repeating his statement and then quite falsely he referred to half of my statement and accused me of ordering him to sit down. I did no such thing. The hon. member has been in the House of Commons a long time—

Mr. Pallett: Too long.

Mr. Churchill: —and he knows better. If the hon. gentleman is going to re-establish himself as a suitable member of parliament the electors will send back to the house, he will have to modify his ways and become more moderate and establish himself as a proper member of the Liberal party and not just a blusterer who has no home at all.

Mr. Crestohl: The hon. member for Assiniboia will have to check Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Churchill: I said with regard to this measure—and I spoke with the greatest moderation—that this was proposed by the Canadian wheat board in the interests of their employees, just as any good business enterprise would do. I said with regard to the hon. member's question that the number of employees was readily available. The information appears in the annual report of the Canadian wheat board at page 23 where it is stated that on July 31, 1961 the board had 724 employees as compared with 708 on July 31, 1960.

With regard to the amount of money which this will cost the employees and the employer, I do not have those figures in front of me for this very simple reason. The Canadian wheat board is examining several schemes with regard to the proposal. This is quite normal. There are several schemes available, I understand, with regard to the provision of group life insurance and group medical-surgical insurance. I would think it would be through consultation between the wheat board and their staff that they would select the plan that was most suited to their needs.

We are not asking this house to rubber-stamp this measure. We are suggesting that the wheat board be given authority to propose this scheme and put it into operation if it is satisfactory. If it is not satisfactory and if it appears to be a burden on the producers of this country I am sure their voice will be heard. There is an advisory council which sits in with the Canadian wheat board representing the producer interests of this country and they will have something to say with regard to this. I am sure that the wheat board will listen to any representations from local authorities, if any have some objection. On the other hand, I feel sure that the producers of western Canada, satisfied as they have been over the years with the efficient operation of the wheat board and with the effective work being done by their employees, will be glad to co-operate in this regard.

Just the other day we discussed in this house one of the acts under my jurisdiction, the Veterans' Land Act. There we suggested that the director be given authority to work out an insurance plan for those farmers coming under the Veterans' Land Act who were getting land from him and who owed debts to the director. We did not spell out the exact cost or the exact plan because we do not know yet what these will be. Various plans are being considered. No one then suggested that we were rubberstamping a proposition brought before the House of Commons.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Assiniboia will not sit still and listen. He wants to get up and interrupt.

Mr. Argue: I just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. gentleman does not wish to hear what I have to say. He wants to talk all the time and bluster and make a great deal of noise. Let the hon. member stay silent—

Mr. Argue: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Let him stay silent while he is seated in his place. If the hon. member has the floor I shall be glad to listen to him as I did before. While I have the floor, however, let the hon. member be silent and listen to me.

On that occasion we did not ask parliament to rubberstamp the bill. We put a proposition before the house which was reasonable and sensible and the house very sensibly adopted it. The director under the Veterans' Land Act can now work out schemes. Similarly, we are suggesting the same here. This House of Commons, with the sole exception of the hon. member for Assiniboia, is a very reasonable house tonight and I am sure the committee will accept the proposition that is spelled out in the amendment before us.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, as I remember the veterans legislation referred to, while it gives the director the power to consider this kind of scheme—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—my impression was that the veteran would pay the insurance himself and would decide whether or not he wished to avail himself of the insurance. However, under the plan before us, if it goes through at some future date, it will be an imposition on the grain producers.

I notice that the minister is gleefully reading notes which are being passed to him. That is perfectly fine. The minister told me to sit down and then he told me to remain silent. If the minister does not care to listen that, of course, is his right and I am not objecting to his giggling over the notes he has received.

This scheme will be an imposition and the grain producers have a right to the information requested. I think it is the duty of hon. members to inquire what this will cost. The minister has given us a little information, not too much but a little. He has told us that two or three schemes are being considered one of which may recommend itself to the wheat board and may be brought before the governor in council. The minister has given us no idea of the range of costs of this scheme. He has given us no indication what this might cost the grain producers of western Canada.

I think the wheat board system is an excellent one. I am willing to take a chance on this clause and on what may come in the future even if we should be so unfortunate as to have this government in power —and I do not think that will be the case— when any provision may be signed by the Canadian wheat board. None the less I think that when the grain producers have to foot the bill and pay part of the group life insurance plan and the group medical-surgical insurance plan, it is only realistic that the minister, before the provision is adopted by parliament, should be asked how much money might be involved. He might have given us the range of costs if he had that information. I think it is pertinent. While the grain producers are willing to pay reasonable costs and reasonable salaries—and I think they are paying reasonable salaries—I think they and the committee have the right to know what is involved.

Mr. McIlraith: There is one point I should like to have clarified with regard to clause 2. The difficulty in which I find myself arises out of the fact that the explanatory note says something quite different from what is contained in the clause itself. The clause provides that the board may, with the approval of the governor in council, work out a group life insurance plan or a group medical surgical plan. From that provision I take it that it is quite clear that what is envisaged is an attempt to bring the provision for the employees in line with the provisions usually made for employees in the government service and in larger private corporations, where there are sufficient numbers of them to work out a scheme of this kind. That is what is intended here, I take it. However, what I am not clear about is the latter part of subclause (1) of the new clause 8A wherein it is provided that "the board may contribute a share of the premiums payable under such plans out of the funds of the board". The explanatory notes say something quite different from that latter part of the clause which I have quoted. The explanatory notes say that the board would be permitted to contribute the employers' share of the cost. There is no such limitation on the board at all. The board could contribute much more than the employers' share. In the proposed legislation there is no limitation on them. What I want to know from the minister is this. Does he envisage any part of what is usually called the employers' share in these joint schemes being provided by the government and not by the board itself through the producers? The act is wide open in its language and permits payment from any source. It is merely permissive with the board to pay a part of the share if it so wishes. Does he envisage that any part of the employers' share will be paid by the federal government out of public funds?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman. That matter has not been drawn to my attention. The wheat board has been operating all these years without government contribution. I would judge that principle would apply at the present time. As a matter of fact, the notes that have been given to me indicate that there would be no commitment on the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. McIlraith: From the minister's explanation I am satisfied as to the intention of the government. However, I would point out that the bill does not express that intention. It does not make clear what is intended. For instance, it does not limit the wheat board to charging the producers merely with the usual employers' share of the cost of this scheme. If they wish to do so, under the legislation they are given authority to provide much more. I am wondering whether the minister would take a look at the clause in order to ascertain whether it accurately expresses what I believe the government has in mind in this connection. I wonder whether he would have a look at that clause. If it needs clarification and correction, possibly it could be done at a later stage in the procedure on the bill in the other place.

Mr. Churchill: Yes; we will have a good look at it. In connection with this proposed amendment may I point out that the approval of the governor in council is obligatory. Any scheme that comes forward from the wheat board would have to be considered by the governor in council. I would presume that the house would readily get the information at that time because of questions that would be asked, and so on, or statements that would be made by the minister.

Mr. McIlraith: I am willing to let the point go. However, I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that, as the legislation is drafted, it is possible to put what would be quite an unfair charge on the producers. As the legislation reads, in this clause there is no protection for the producers on that point.

Mr. Churchill: The question that has been raised is an important one. If someone can come forward with a suggestion to modify line 19, we would certainly consider it. Whether we should put in there the employers' share, if that would be a clarification, or whether we should say "its share", I do not know.

An hon. Member: Let the clause stand.

Mr. Churchill: We might allow the clause to stand and proceed with the others. Perhaps within a matter of minutes someone might have a satisfactory solution.

The Chairman: Is it the desire of the committee that clause 2 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

On clause 3—Duration.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister. Could he tell us how many grain elevators are under the control of the Canadian wheat board?

(Text):

Mr. Churchill: I think I gave that figure the other day with regard to delivery points. It is something over 1,900. Offhand I would say it is 1,960.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Does the government intend to create a transport board in order to control grain movement to eastern elevators, and at the same time the distribution of that grain in eastern Canada? I believe there was such a commission a few years back to look after grain storage and distribution. The establishment of such a commission was requested, I think, by the millers' association of the eastern townships as well as by the Catholic farmers' union.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I asked the minister a question which, I hope, he will be able to answer.

(Text):

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member oblige me by repeating the question? I missed a word or two of it in the translation.

Mr. Boulanger: I will put the question in English, if the minister does not mind. I wish to ask the minister whether it is his intention to organize a transport commission in order to take care of the storage of grain in the eastern elevators of the country and to control the delivery of these grains. I am asking this question because a few years ago we had this commission and in the east the supply of feed grain was more adequate than it is now.

Mr. Churchill: It is not the intention to do as the member suggests. Although that is undoubtedly an important point, I think it would have to be raised at some other time and with regard to a different act. At the moment we are simply dealing with the Canadian wheat board whose jurisdiction does not extend further eastward than the lakehead.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4.

Mr. Argue: I should like to ask a question on clause 4 merely in order to get the opinion of the minister and the government. Some farm organizations—and I refer particularly to the national farmers union—have been asking that the Canadian Wheat Board Act be made a permanent one. I am not positive in my own mind just how that would be done if it were the intention of the government to do so, but I take it you would merely omit the termination date for these various pool periods and omit any termination date anywhere in the act.

I can see arguments both ways. I think what the producers have in mind is this. They want to be reassured that the Canadian Wheat Board Act is in fact a permanent statute and that there is no intention to bring it to an end. On the other hand, there is the argument on the other side that parliament every once in a while—by this amendment it would be five years from now—should have the chance to review the act. I can see good arguments on both sides. I am simply wondering whether the government has considered the representations of the national farmers union and what the thinking of the government is in making the termination date August 1, 1967.

I have no doubt that a future parliament prior to that date will extend the act for a further period. I cannot conceive of any government likely to be elected in this country throwing out the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Nevertheless the farmers in this country wish to be reassured that for all practical purposes this is permanent legislation.

Mr. Churchill: That question has been considered, Mr. Chairman. As a matter of fact, I discussed it with the Minister of Agriculture just the other day, and there are points in favour of removing the five year review and making the act permanent. I think the hon. member for Assiniboia is quite right, that no future parliament would destroy the wheat board. Nevertheless, in conversation with the Minister of Agriculture we reached the conclusion that there might be some advantage in bringing forward for review at five year periods the operations of the wheat board.

As a matter of fact, I read the debate that occurred five years ago on this subject and may I say that the hon. member for Assiniboia made a very good speech on that occasion. It was well thought out and, insofar as Hansard indicates, moderately delivered. There were no interruptions.

Mr. Argue: A different government.

Mr. Churchill: But a terribly worse government in those days. On reflection I think there is a little more in favour of the argument for periodic review rather than simply making the act permanent. At any rate, granting that there are arguments on both sides, we reached the conclusion that it was better to have the act brought before parliament again in five years time.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, clause 5 has to do with changing some words with regard to defining the separate account. I have read the clause carefully and it may clarify the provision for a separate account so-called in certain circumstances. I can see nothing of a substantive change in this clause.

However, at this time I do wish to get from the minister, if I can, information as to the amount of money in the separate account and the amount of money, if any, that has been paid out of the separate account during the last few years. In particular I should like to refer to one very large payment which, according to the annual report of the Canadian wheat board for the crop year 1959-60, was paid out of the separate account by authority of order in council P.C. 1960-519. The report contains this statement:

> On September 23, 1959, the out-shore annex of the United Grain Growers Limited terminal elevator "A" at Port Arthur, Ontario, collapsed. The collapse resulted in the loss of 1,194,760.1 bushels of wheat, oats and barley valued at $2,406,175.22.

From this information I take it that the United Grain Growers came to the government and said, "Look, we have had an accident. We have lost over $2,406,000. Will you help us out by taking $775,000 from the special account and making us this gift?" I am just saying that is my interpretation. If I am wrong, I ask the minister to correct me.

As I understand the situation, this special account originates from the fact that over the years, with so many grain producers accounts, some payments are not claimed; and with such huge sums of money involved in total over the years the moneys unclaimed have accumulated to a sizeable amount. I am prepared to listen to arguments and to say that I could be persuaded I am wrong, but my impression at this time is that this is not the best use to be made of these funds.

The minister can claim, and rightly so, that the United Grain Growers Limited is a farm organization and that this is a case of taking funds out of the special account in the general wheat board fund and paying the money to a farmers' grain organization. I would also think that if a private grain company suffered the same kind of disaster it would have an equal claim, and I think it should have an equal claim for payment out of this fund. But if you are going to take funds out of a special account and pay them to grain companies I think that in itself is not the best use to be made of those funds.

I remember that when this legislation was first proposed years ago I said I would far rather see this money in the separate account paid into the general wheat board funds and go into the pockets of the grain producers in total. I suppose the only argument against that is that in relation to the total number of grain producers there is not so much money involved per grain producer and that it would be better to use the money in a chunk to greater advantage than to divide it among all producers. That is the argument on the other side perhaps, but I do not think it is valid in this case because the money has been paid to a group of grain producers instead of to all grain producers. I think this is a bad precedent and I hope it will not be followed in the future.

I want to say that I think that many of the uses to which this money has been put are excellent. Bringing over trade missions that may buy larger quantities of grain and using the money generally for the promotion of markets for all grain producers are good ways to use the money, but I do question the wisdom of making a handout, which is all it was in my opinion, to an elevator company even when that elevator company has suffered a disaster. I think this is not the right way to use the funds in this account.

I do not have the information that is available to the minister at my fingertips and I am prepared to be persuaded I am wrong. It may be because I lack some of the information that I have come to this conclusion, but I should like to hear from the minister what particular events or arguments persuaded the governor in council to take $775,000 out of this special account of the Canadian wheat board and pay it to the United Grain Growers.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, this was one of the most difficult problems that faced me as minister with some responsibility for the wheat board in the year 1959 and the spring of 1960. It involved a great many meetings and consultations between ministers of the government and representatives of the United Grain Growers, a tremendous amount of work on the part of the law officers of the crown consulting with representatives from the United Grain Growers. The situation is now, of course, two years old. The settlement was reached two years ago.

However, the hon. member's query is a fair one. Should the money in the special fund be used for a purpose such as this? I tell you quite frankly that that was the question which was considered time and time again in the course of the many meetings that were held with regard to this problem. The problem arose as a result of the collapse of an elevator at the lakehead, one of the unforeseen hazards with regard to elevators. If my memory serves me correctly, at the time I asked if anyone could tell me of any similar occurrence in Canadian history. Relying again on my memory, I think they said no, other than the collapse of a wooden elevator that had grown very old. However, this was an elevator situation on the shore of the lake; the foundation gave way and the elevator collapsed. We are very fortunate that there was no loss of life because a ship was scheduled to arrive at the wharf for loading within a few hours of the collapse. Had the ship been tied up beside the wharf, the ship might have been destroyed, in addition to the elevator, and there may have been loss of life as well.

Well, we were faced with this situation, that there might have been litigation, a suit against the wheat board. The amount of money involved would have been tied up pending a settlement by the court, and that would have affected the final payment in the spring of 1960 for the earlier crop year. We had to consider this situation, that 50,000 producers, members of the United Grain Growers organization, would have to bear the entire cost and might therefore be embarrassed financially. A decision was reached to draw from the special fund, largely on these grounds: That the disaster which occurred only in one elevator and to one elevator company was unprecedented and unlikely to occur in the future; that it was something against which adequate insurance provision could not be made. In addition, we thought it was unwise to tie up the final payment by paying money into court until a settlement was reached. Then, too, we thought that spreading this unprecedented loss over a very large field by drawing upon the special fund might be the best way out of the difficulty.

Whether the decision was right or wrong, time alone will tell. I do not doubt but that it could be criticized on some ground. Perhaps other people would have made a different decision. We ended up by reaching what appeared to us to be a reasonable settlement and came to the assistance of 50,000 wheat producers who own their own elevator system, and placed no penalty on any producer in the country, because the special fund was of such a size at that time that it was possible to draw upon it in that amount without interfering with the other uses to which the fund is put from time to time. I suggest that is the background of that particular incident, and our hope is that no such disaster will affect any of the elevator companies in the future or any of the producer organizations.

Mr. Argue: Has the minister any information as to the approximate amount in this special fund at this time?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, in the annual report it is given as $821,426.

Mr. Argue: What page is that?

Mr. Churchill: It is in exhibit No. 1.

Mr. Argue: I appreciate the answer the minister has given. I cannot express an opinion tonight on the legal questions involved. I have no idea, myself, as to the grounds upon which the United Grain Growers would press any claim for damages against the Canadian wheat board. However, I do think that the government should be most careful in using this fund for this kind of purpose. I do not see, myself, how this situation could have any real bearing on the final payment because the amount involved, a million dollars or so, just could not tie up the whole of the final payment which would be a much larger sum of money than that. I can see how it might tie up $2.4 million, but even then I think the wheat board could borrow the money within about 60 minutes if that were necessary, because the wheat board is handling huge sums of money and has assets probably hundreds of times greater than the $2.4 million involved.

I have a natural inclination to think of the individual grain producer. It is for this reason I have been putting forward these remarks tonight and stating the position of the grain growers as a whole as opposed to action which provided assistance for 50,000 grain growers out of almost 250,000. If the individual farmer who has to take his grain to the wheat board suffers a disaster on his farm, he foots the bill. The individual farmer has no recourse to anyone of whom I am aware. However, it is interesting to note that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in an appendix to its brief this year, set forth a policy asking for emergency loan legislation for individual farmers suffering a disaster.

I will read the first paragraph of this submission:

> Occasionally farming areas are struck by sudden natural catastrophes such as severe drought, large scale floods, storms of hurricane force, severe infestations of insects, plant diseases of epidemic proportions, severe frosts at certain periods for plant and tree growth and other natural hazards.

This is a new aspect of farm policy requesting extraordinary action in time of disaster to the individual farmer. Perhaps this scheme would be a difficult thing for the wheat board to administer. It would perhaps be difficult to make any of these moneys available to an individual farmer who suffers a disaster, but I put it to the minister that if a farmer loses one year's crop, this is a much greater disaster from his point of view than the disaster affecting an individual even though he be a shareholder in the United Grain Growers. Perhaps this could be made something of a revolving fund out of which moneys could be made available to help individual producers who face individual disasters.

The minister has given us an explanation of the long discussions that took place in making these moneys available. I shall not accuse him tonight of having made a wrong decision but I believe that in his own mind he certainly thought this was a borderline case. However, if errors are to be made I would prefer to see errors of judgment made on the side of helping the individual producer and not helping to bail out a grain company from a disaster, even though that grain company may be owned by producers. If it is United Grain Growers today it could be some other company tomorrow, and this fund could be used in a way which parliament never intended when the legislation passed through this house.

Clause 6 agreed to.

The Chairman: We shall now revert to clause 2, which was suspended a few minutes ago.

On clause 2—Group life insurance and group medical-surgical insurance plan.

Mr. Churchill: We have now got some notes from the law officer of the crown to the effect that it is not easy to suggest a modification of the wording as it is now. If we say "its share" that begs the question of what share is precisely meant. The same objection arises in connection with the expression "employers' share." The only way to give certainty to the matter is to spell out precisely what share might be contributed, and this cannot be done until the plan has been worked out.

With the caution we have received from the hon. member for Ottawa West, perhaps we could pass this and watch it very closely when the board puts forward its scheme for the approval of the governor in council.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Next sitting.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, could we consider having third reading now. Since the bill has come forward without amendment it could be considered at this stage.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister is quite right and I have no objection.

Mr. Churchill moved third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-38, an act to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada.—The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be fair for the Minister of Justice or anybody else, to start the study of this bill at this late hour. May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, with the concurrence of the hon. gentleman I might call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Argue: Yes, let the minister call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not much point in putting the motion, is it agreed to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I take it that tomorrow we will go on with the estimates as announced by the minister on Friday?

Mr. Fulton: Good heavens, then I am not moving the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Churchill: It is understood that the Minister of Justice did not move the adjournment of the debate, so that the bill will keep its place. The business for tomorrow, in view of the general interest in the house to complete the final supplementaries, will be the supplementary estimates.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 28, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE ON RETURN AFTER ILLNESS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, naturally I join with all hon. members in welcoming the Minister of Agriculture back to the house after his illness. May I add my own deep appreciation of the reception that has been given by hon. members opposite on this occasion, which is so revealing of the general attitude of parliament.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we on this side join very warmly and wholeheartedly in the welcome that has been extended to the Minister of Agriculture on his return to the house, and we welcome especially his return to health. We do not always agree with the minister, but we on this side are glad to pay tribute to his invariable personal courtesy and kindness to all members, including members of the opposition.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in expressing the delight of this group at the return to the house of the Minister of Agriculture whose illness, I am sure, was occasioned by his over attention to work and, shall I say, excessive industry.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEXICAN MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): My reason for rising, Mr. Speaker, is to draw your attention to the presence in the gallery of the Honourable Walter C. Buchanan, secretary of communications and transport in the government of Mexico. He is a most distinguished representative of a country with which for long we have had close and friendly relations. During the past few days he has visited various Canadian industrial plants and research establishments in this city, in Toronto and in Winnipeg. As the member of the Mexican government responsible for communications and transport he is particularly interested in Canadian scientific experiments in the ionosphere, in Canadian aircraft production and in telecommunications.

I know that I express the views of hon. members in all parts of the house when I say that we warmly welcome him for what he has done on behalf of good government within his own country, and for his attitude in international affairs. I should like him to convey to the president of Mexico, Mr. Lopez Mateos, and to the government and the people of his great country our warmest good wishes.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those on this side of the house I should like to share in and support the warm welcome which the Prime Minister has just extended to the minister of communications and transport from Mexico, and to echo the friendly sentiments the Prime Minister has expressed about the gentleman in question and the country he represents here today, a country whose hospitality some of us have had the privilege to enjoy.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group join wholeheartedly with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in extending a welcome to our distinguished visitor from Mexico, the minister of communications and transport. We trust that his visit to Canada will be fruitful on his part and that as a result of his visit our government will learn something about the percentage of expenditure by the federal government of Mexico on highways in that country in connection with the states and provinces.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ADDITIONAL SALE TO CHINA

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of what I wish to say I should like to thank hon. members and yourself for the very kind welcome back to the house after my absence.

If I may be permitted to do so, I should also like to thank all hon. members and people generally across Canada who sent me their good wishes during the last two months.

I should like to say a special word of thanks to my colleagues the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries, as well as my two parliamentary secretaries, for carrying during my absence some of the burden that normally belongs to me. I hope they will keep on helping me for a little while yet.

I have pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in announcing today the completion of an additional sale of one million long tons of wheat to China. Allowing for a tolerance of 5 per cent, this will amount to slightly in excess of 39 million bushels. The estimated value of this contract is approximately $75 million. This sale is part of a long term agreement which I announced in the house last spring. This latest sale is the sixth contract completed under the long term agreement which called for the purchase of up to 186.7 million bushels of wheat and 46.7 million bushels of barley. In summary, therefore, six individual contracts have been concluded to date under the long term agreement, totalling 108 million bushels of wheat and 26 million bushels of barley. In addition to these quantities purchased under the long term agreement, China purchased on a cash basis last spring 31.7 million bushels of wheat and 12.7 million bushels of barley.

Payment terms for the contract on the latest purchase of wheat are identical to previous contracts, namely 25 per cent cash and 75 per cent on 273 days' credit with interest. This transaction was completed within the $100 million credit guarantee made by the government to the wheat board to facilitate the sale of grain to China.

The bulk of the wheat will be shipped from west coast ports from June through December. This will assure a steady volume of exports from Vancouver for the balance of the year. A smaller volume of approximately 5.6 million bushels will be shipped from Atlantic and St. Lawrence ports in April and May respectively.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we on this side welcome the additional sale that the minister has mentioned of grain to China under the original contract, the details of which we are still anxious to secure.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): We also welcome this new sale to China and appreciate the fact that it could be guaranteed under the original $100 million guarantee; and unlike some sales in the past we do not consider this to be peanuts but to be a very good grain sale at this time.

Questions

*JOB PLACEMENT FIGURES

Question No. 318—Mr. Fisher:

1. How often does the Department of Labour or the unemployment insurance commission issue figures on job placements?

2. What were the last two totals given in such releases?

3. Did these two totals include only people placed in new jobs (or jobs new to them), or did they include people who were called back to work after lay-offs, the call-back being handled through the national employment service; and, if the latter is the case, how much of the given totals in each case was for those who were placed in jobs new to them by the national employment service?

Mr. Thrasher:

1. Figures on placements are normally released monthly in the Labour Gazette and in occasional press releases.

2. The February, 1962 edition of the Labour Gazette showed December, 1961 placements at 96,503. The December edition of the Labour Gazette showed a cumulative total for the first 10 months of 1961 at 924,844. A news release issued by the unemployment insurance commission on January 4 showed preliminary total placements for 1961 at 1,119,855.

3. Placement totals included people placed in new jobs, or jobs new to them, as well as people who were called back to work through the national employment service. Precise data are not available as to the proportion of total placements which relates to persons placed other than by reason of being called back. It is estimated, however, that persons placed in new jobs, or jobs new to them, amount to about 90 per cent of the total placements.

Question No. 322—Mr. McWilliam:

Has the Minister of Public Works received a request from the Miramichi port improvement association for an interview in connection with a request for water shipping improvements on the Miramichi river; and, if so, has a time and place been set for the interview?

Mr. MacLean (Queens) (Acting Minister of Public Works): The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The department has suggested Aprill 4 or 5, in Ottawa.

1. Has the federal government been contacted by Lever Brothers (Canada) in regard to the use of copies of the Canadian Bill of Rights in connection with the promotion of Stripe tooth paste?
2. Has the federal government made available to Lever Brothers (Canada) any substantial number of copies of the Canadian Bill of Rights for this purpose; and, if so, how many copies?
3. What was the total cost of production of these copies?

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS

Question No. 327—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total number of active claimants for unemployment insurance benefits as of February 28, 1962, 1961, and 1960 respectively?

Mr. Thrasher: The number of active claimants as of February 29, 1960, was 814,241; as of February 28, 1961, 872,842; and as of February 28, 1962, this figure is not yet available.

*ELECTRICAL GOODS—DUMPING DUTY EVASION BY SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES

Question No. 328—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Is there information before the Department of National Revenue that subsidiaries of Canadian electrical goods manufacturing and distributing companies, incorporated outside Canada in low tax-rate jurisdictions, purchased electrical goods in the United States at prices below the fair market value as prescribed by the valuation provisions of the Customs Act in effect since September 6, 1958, and transferred their rights in the goods so purchased to the parent Canadian companies without the application of dumping duty contemplated?
2. If so, how many Canadian companies are known to the Department of National Revenue to have used subsidiary companies for this purpose since September 6, 1958?
3. Does the government contemplate any action with respect to this situation?

[Mr. Morris.]

Mr. Nowlan:

1. The Department of National Revenue has information to the effect that some Canadian manufacturing companies, including a few which are engaged in the manufacture and distribution of electrical products, have been importing goods produced in other countries through intermediate companies incorporated outside of the jurisdiction of Canada. Wherever this situation can be construed legally as a relationship of principal and agent, the Department of National Revenue has refused to recognize transactions between them to be at arms' length, and appropriate dumping duty has been applied.

2 and 3. Answered by above.

4. How many inspectors are engaged in this project?
5. Is it still contemplated that the work will be completed by June 30 or is a further extension in contemplation?

Answer by: Mr. MacLean (Queens) (Acting Minister of Public Works):

2. No extra work on this contract is anticipated.

3. 15.

4. Three; one on dredging and blasting in the entrance channel, one on wharf construction, and one on blasting and drilling associated with the wharf construction.

*FEASIBILITY SURVEY, CHIGNECTO CANAL

Question No. 339—Mr. McWilliam:

Is it the intention of the government to include, in a further supplementary estimate for the year 1962-63, the sum of $2,300,000 to cover costs of a full-scale survey of the engineering feasibility of tidal power and canal construction of the proposed Chignecto canal?

Mr. MacLean (Queens) (Acting Minister of Public Works): The federal government has not yet had an opportunity to review the preliminary engineering report on tidal power prepared by three consulting firms for the government of New Brunswick, nor have we received New Brunswick's proposals concerning it. Until such a review has been made, the government is not in a position to make a decision regarding a full scale survey on the engineering feasibility.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

METHOD OF AMENDING CONSTITUTION

Motion No. 2—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Chevrier):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Justice and the attorneys general or other provincial ministers since July 1, 1960, regarding the method of amending the constitution of Canada.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to accept this motion subject to one or two reservations or observations. First, in anticipation of the opening of this session I wrote to the provincial attorneys general on January 9 asking if they had any objection to the production of this correspondence. I have received no objection, with the exception of Quebec, to which I will refer in a moment, and accordingly propose to table the correspondence for the period up to January 9 when I asked for the views of the provinces.

With respect to the province of Quebec, there is unfortunately an objection from that province to the production of one of my letters to Mr. Gerin Lajoie. I am hopeful that this controversy can be resolved in the very near future and I will then table the correspondence with the province of Quebec, up to a date a little later than January 9. Because of the discussions we have been having, it will be necessary to table the later correspondence in order to make the picture clear. I hope to table the correspondence with all the other provinces very shortly, and shortly thereafter the correspondence with the province of Quebec.

Mr. Pickersgill: I take it from what the minister has said that there is no correspondence with the other provinces between January 9 and 18?

Mr. Fulton: There is some, but it is really in the nature of continuing negotiations, and I do not feel I should produce correspondence beyond the date for which I asked for consent.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

LOT 19, JUNCTION GORE, GLOUCESTER TOWNSHIP

Motion No. 35—Mr. McIlraith:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report declaring the land (being part of lot 19, Junction Gore, Gloucester township) surplus as referred to in order for return, sessional paper 194. tabled on the 14th of February, 1962.

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, with the agreement of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) this motion stands.

Motion stands.

AMOS-MATTAGAMI HIGHWAY, QUEBEC

Motion No. 36—Mr. Paul (for Mr. Martel):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all agreements, contracts, and other documents relating to the construction, under the roads to resources program, of the Amos-Mattagami highway including a copy of the contract entered into by the province of Quebec or the department concerned and the general contractor who carried out these works; a list of names and addresses of persons who worked for the general contractor and the provincial department concerned on the construction of the said highway; a list of subcontracts given out by the general contractor in connection with these works and the names of individuals or companies having rented equipment, by the hour or on a contract basis, for the carrying out of the general contract or the subcontracts in question; a list of suppliers, and the names of those who recommended them to the general contractor or the subcontractors.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable subject to the concurrence of the province—

Mr. McIlraith: It has not been moved yet; it is not before the house.

Mr. Speaker: Has Mr. Paul leave to move this motion for Mr. Martel?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Paul, for Mr. Martel, seconded by Mr. Pigeon, moves:

That an humble address—

Mr. McIlraith: Before you put this motion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order and draw your attention to the fact that the first part of the motion asks for certain copies of agreements, contracts and other documents relating to the construction, under the roads to resources program, of the Amos-Mattagami highway. It then goes on to say, and these are the important words:

—including a copy of the contract entered into by the province of Quebec or the department concerned and the general contractor who carried out these works; a list of names and addresses of persons who worked for the general contractor and the provincial department concerned on the construction of the said highway;—

And so on. It will be noted that this part of the motion relates to a matter that is the responsibility of the provincial government. I must say I was somewhat amazed to observe that such a notice of motion appeared on the order paper, since it relates to the production of provincial government documents and not to the production of federal government documents. I wish to draw the matter to Your Honour's attention because I think it will be granted that within its own field of jurisdiction the province is sovereign.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I think before we deal with that case we would have to know what the situation is. It is my understanding that the situation is that when a joint roads to resources project is agreed to, one of the terms is that the contracts will be produced to the federal government with the relevant information asked for here. As I say, that is only my understanding of the situation. It was, I think, with that in mind that these words were included in the motion.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the mover and in view of the doubt about the matter, unless the Minister of Justice is prepared to assure the house in this respect—

Mr. Fulton: No, I am not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: —I think the motion might stand until the next time, and perhaps the house then could be advised whether there is a right on the part of the federal government to produce these documents. There may be a contractual right, but it is not apparent on the face.

Motion stands.

NEW FEDERAL BUILDING, FORT WILLIAM, ONT.

Motion No. 37—Mr. Badanai:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence since January 1, 1961, between the Minister of Public Works and other persons and associations outside the government, regarding the construction of a new building to house the unemployment insurance commission and a new post office in the city of Fort William.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS FIXING DUTIES ON IMPORTS

Motion No. 38—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Benidickson):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of rulings, directives, regulations, and prescriptions of the Minister of National Revenue, and also orders in council issued under authority of sections 39, 40, 40A, and 40B of the Customs Act (as amended by chapter 26, Statutes of Canada 1958); and a copy of ministerial orders issued since April 17, 1961; under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties on imports.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would allow this to stand until I have the opportunity to discuss it with the mover; because there are some limitations, I think.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Motion stands.

ILLUSTRATION OR EXPERIMENTAL STATION, THUNDER BAY DISTRICT

Motion No. 39—Mr. Badanai:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence since January 1, 1958, between the Minister of Agriculture and other persons and associations outside the government, regarding any operation or plans of the Department of Agriculture dealing with illustration stations or the establishment of any permanent experimental station in the Thunder Bay district (more particularly in the vicinity of Port Arthur and Fort William).

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): We have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPORTED ACTION IN U.S. COURTS AGAINST ROYAL BANK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether he has any comment to make on the legal action taken by the United States government against the Royal Bank of Canada in New York regarding a payment by that bank of certain moneys to the Castro government in Cuba?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

WATER RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO EFFORTS TO OVERCOME SEA POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the fact that the three week conference on oil pollution in the sea held in London was informed that oil pollution has not increased substantially around the United States since 1955 but is much more serious around Canada, could the minister inform the house what additional efforts he is making to counter this unfortunate development under free enterprise, and to ensure that Canadians may regain the freedom to enjoy unpolluted waters?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, as this subject comes under the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Transport, I would suggest that the hon. member direct his question to him.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport prepared to answer?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that my department is exerting strong efforts in fighting pollution. For the time being I shall accept the hon. member's question as notice.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY PRODUCTS—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF SUPPORT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Doucett (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any announcement to make with respect to the details of the dairy support program as indicated last Thursday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman gave me notice of his intention to ask this question. It will be recalled that when the announcement was made last Thursday the Acting Minister of Agriculture stated that the stabilization board had been instructed to enter into discussions with producer and industry representatives with respect to the details of the new program, and that following these discussions a full announcement of the details would be made. There will be an announcement as to details and any modifications which may be agreed on following consultation with various representative groups.

There have been a number of these representations made to date with regard to this program, and when the consultations have been completed the house will be made fully aware of the details.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister received any request from the fluid milk producers for a meeting with the government regarding this program?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I received communications from various groups of milk producers, and my recollection is that they will make representations. I am not able to answer specifically the question asked by the hon. gentleman, but my recollection is that discussions will take place not only among representative groups but also particularly among the milk producers themselves.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

REPORTED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES OF DEVELOPMENT AND ENGINEERING BRANCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Public Works. Can the minister explain the sudden lay-off at the beginning of the construction season of a considerable number of the members of the staff of the development and engineering branch of the department?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take this question as notice and provide an answer to the hon. gentleman.

(Translation):

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF FRENCH CITIZENS FROM ALGERIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, of which I gave her notice. Could the minister inform the house whether she received representations concerning the admission to Canada of French citizens from Algeria? If so, does the government intend to take special action in this respect?

(Text):

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I received the notice after I entered the house and have not had an opportunity to check with my department, but to the best of my knowledge no representations have been received. Certainly none had been received last week when I made some inquiries myself. However, if representations are made from any source, of course, the matter will be very carefully considered.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DAWSON, Y.T.—EXPENDITURES ON RECONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question arising out of a very recent article in Maclean's magazine which states that the department of northern affairs is pouring more than $400,000 into the reconstruction of Dawson city, not only in relation to Arizona Charlie's but also in relation to two saloons and a mortuary. I wanted to ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member proceeds may I say the question appears to me to relate directly to the estimates of the department and, in addition, to estimates which were discussed in this house within the last two or three days.

Mr. Fisher: If I may speak to the point, there is nothing in the supplementary estimates coming up under which we can broach this. The indication given by the minister last week in discussing the relevant estimates was that the expenditure would be of the nature of $200,000. Because of the exciting increase in the expenditure plus the objectives of the increase I thought it would be in order for me to direct the question to the minister.

Mr. Speaker: I should think the hon. member would be well advised to defer a question of that kind until the estimate is offered. It is obvious the expenditure will not be made until the estimate is offered.

HOUSING

REPORTED DECLINE IN STARTS IN FEBRUARY 1962

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the acting minister. In view of the 16.6 per cent decline in housing starts in February, 1962, as compared with February, 1961, is the government contemplating any measures to assure that housing construction will not fall below last year's level?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take the question as notice, but I would say in passing that any changes in government policy will be announced in due course.

Mr. Garland: If I may be permitted to do so, I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the continuing need for better housing accommodation for low income Canadians, has the government any explanation why no loans for limited dividend projects were made by C.M.H.C. during February, and for the reduction so far this year which amounts to about 99 per cent?

Mr. Grafftey: That is a statement, not a question.

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I will have this matter looked into, Mr. Speaker.

POWER

BRITISH COLUMBIA—APPLICATION OF BILL OF RIGHTS TO EXPROPRIATION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. My question is related to the bill of rights and not to the bills of expense that are being questioned. With reference to my question on Monday, would the Minister of Justice now be in a position to state whether the provision in an amendment to legislation introduced by the government of British Columbia forbidding recourse to the courts is contrary to the bill of rights or ultra vires?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make any report on this matter beyond what I said on Monday. However, as I have seen in the press certain references to my answer, I think I should remind the hon. member that of course the bill of rights was carefully drawn so as to apply only to matters within federal jurisdiction.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF SKILLED WORKERS UNDER NEW REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a question. Now that two months have elapsed since the new immigration regulations came into effect, can the hon. lady say whether any considerable number of skilled workers have yet been admitted who would not have been admissible under the old regulations?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The short answer is no, I cannot say, Mr. Speaker. However, the hon. member knows that these people do not come in 10 minutes. The regulations went into effect only on February 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Evidently the hon. lady did not understand my question. I said "two months", not "ten minutes".

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is in a position to advise us as to the date on which he expects to bring down the budget.

Mr. Pearson: He is in a position to do it, but he will not do it.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the sooner we get through with the supplementary estimates, the better the essential business of the house will be expedited.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say that the supplementary estimates are really holding up the presentation of the budget?

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY ON MEDICAL CARE INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question. Now that the sessions of the royal commission on health services are just about completed, may we expect before the dissolution of the present parliament an announcement by the government of what it proposes to do with regard to medical care insurance?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Essex East answered his own question by indicating that the sessions are not yet completed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Postponement again; procrastination.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED CONTRADICTION IN STATEMENTS BY GOVERNMENT SUPPORTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I ask the Associate Minister of National Defence a question? As reported in the press day before yesterday, he is alleged to have said during a meeting in Laval that the Liberals had a socialist program while the member for Laval, who also attended the meeting, is reported to have said that the same program had been implemented by the Conservative party.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member might seek an answer to that question after dissolution.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: I simply wanted to know which of the two was right, the minister or the member for Laval, when speaking on the same platform about the same question.

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think both were right. It is quite true that the Conservative government has achieved several of the things the Liberals had included in the platform they announced at their January 1961 political convention.

As to comparing our hon. friends to the socialist party, they are themselves the victims of their actions. As long as they behave like socialists, they will be considered as such.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

675. Departmental administration—further amount required, $77,500.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, has the minister a statement to make? Since he has not, I would like to say a few words about this item and examine the present state of Canadian agriculture.

I have done so on many previous occasions, but there are some matters we have not had a chance to discuss.

When we analyse our agricultural situation today, we find a certain bitterness among that class of people who, after having chosen the most humanitarian calling of all, do not receive the reward they deserve for their efforts to maintain the standard of living of the Canadian people.

In fact, the income of the farmer is decreasing every year. His family income is not sufficient to maintain the morale of the head of the family, and that is why, each year, thousands of families leave the farm and join the ranks of the unemployed in our cities.

This agricultural stagnation has been increasing since the present government has been in power.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), who posed as the champion of the farmers during the electoral campaigns of 1957 and 1958, has forgotten his promise to give the farmers their fair share of the national income.

The two ministers of agriculture who have successively been in charge of the department and have talked and talked in praise of the farmers and promised them higher incomes, are now concerned with other things—one has to decide for or against nuclear arms and has not made up his mind yet, while the other, unfortunately, has gone into enforced silence, a fact we all deplore.

I take this opportunity to say how pleased we are to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) among us today.

Mr. Chairman, before referring to the detrimental situation of our farmers, analysing its causes and making the necessary recommendations, I should like to give the house some expert opinions, for the benefit of those members who have accused me, as well as my colleagues here, of wishing to set western farmers against eastern farmers.

My statements in this house faithfully reflect the opinion of all agricultural experts and all eastern farmers in Canada.

In an article published in La Terre de Chez Nous, on May 24, 1961 we read the following:

> The federal government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars each year for western producers. So much the better for them, if those expenses can be justified. On the other hand, eastern producers are entitled to a fair treatment, through an intelligent and consistent use of a few million dollars which Ottawa is spending for them on grain.

In another article published in L'Action Catholique, on August 19, 1961 we read the following:

> Would Mr. Diefenbaker have any objection to letting us know how many farmers we will have to sacrifice on his account, and how many plants will have to go out of business, before he goes to the trouble of taking the train to come and see for himself the extent of the damages caused by a shortsighted farm policy. Perhaps we could add that any other minister would do just as well—we are not so exacting as those western chaps who seem to have the nerve of calling the Prime Minister over for any trifle.

I would have other articles to quote but I will let the matter rest for now as my time is somewhat limited.

I will therefore confine my remarks to the present situation of agriculture.

On the basis of d.b.s. returns, it is noted that the net farm income for the fiscal year ending in March 1961 was $1,006 million, which is the lowest farm income since 1957.

Now, if we take the net average income for the last five years, we see that it was $1,185 million whereas the average of the last ten years before that period, that is from 1949 to 1956 inclusive, was $1,459,300,000. This means that, since the Conservative government came into power, the net farm income has been $274 million lower than during the last ten years of the Liberal administration.

Going on with our analysis, it is easy to find that the 232,000 farmers in the three prairie provinces, according to the 1956 census, shared in 1960—a normal year—a net income of $706.5 million, or $3,000 per capita, while the 343,000 farmers of the eastern provinces and those of British Columbia earned an average income of slightly less than $2,000 per capita.

It is true that in 1961, western farmers only had a net income of $1,600 each, because of the drought.

But if, during the other years, farm income fell, it was due to the failure of this government to exercise that price spread control promised by the Prime Minister.

The price index for goods and services bought by farmers shows, for the period from 1956 to August 1961, an increase of 40.2 per cent, whereas the index for farm products increased from 234.6 to 243.5. Practically, it means that goods and services for which the farmer paid $100 in 1956, cost him $114 in 1961. On the other hand, for each $100 of products he sold in 1956, he only got $103.75 in 1962.

Yet, the Prime Minister said on May 16, 1958, in Manitoba:

(Text):

—to farmers whose average family income has dropped from $3,600 to $3,000 since 1951, while the average income across Canada has risen from $4,100 to $4,900.

(Translation):

What will the Prime Minister tell the country's farmers about farm income a few months from now? If he is sincere, he will have to say that the individual farmer's net income has gone down from $3,000 to $2,000 and $1,600.

I should now like to say a few words concerning the dairy industry. At this moment, the situation as we find it is worse than ever before, due to the incompetence and lack of interest shown by the government in dealing with the dairy industry problem. If other emergency measures are not taken immediately, on top of the 12 cents per pound subsidy recently granted to butter producers, we shall find that industry on the brink of bankruptcy.

In eastern Canada, dairying represents the most important sector of the farming industry, the gross value of its production reaching a billion dollars.

Capital investments and outlays support that industry require tens of millions of dollars each year. The 1,900 different industries engaged in processing and distribution of milk products pay out $117 million each year in salaries to their 133,000 employees.

For us, in the province of Quebec, that is the main income of the farmer, since that industry represents 42 per cent of his farm income while in Ontario, it is only 21 per cent. It is 25 per cent in New Brunswick, 29 per cent in Nova Scotia and 17 per cent in Prince Edward Island.

It is in fact the main sector of farm activity since its gross production exceeds that of wheat, beef cattle, hogs, or that of any other sector of the farm industry.

Now, what is done to support that farm sector and to maintain the buying power of the people engaged in it?

The government has had a few acts adopted since 1958, among others the one dealing with price stabilization of farm products which reflects, after having been in force for four years, the sterility of the agricultural thinking of the ones who introduced it. That act to stabilize the prices of farm products received royal assent on January 31, 1958.

In its preamble, which I shall not read, it was said, among other things, that the act would protect farm income. The theory expounded in the preamble is very well drafted, but it cannot be said it is practical in its application, because the aim of that act was to influence the vote on the eve of a general election.

On May 1, 1958, the price of butter was raised from 58 cents to 64 cents a pound. That was before the general election. At that time, there was a surplus of 25.2 million pounds of butter, and at the end of the year, that surplus had increased to 79.3 million pounds.

Consumption, of course, decreased by one and a half pounds per capita. At the end of 1960, we had a surplus of 125.5 million pounds of butter. Again consumption dropped, and at the end of 1961, there was a surplus of 200 million pounds of butter.

That decrease of 4½ pounds of butter per capita in the last three years is due to the fact that the retail price of butter was too high as compared to the price of margarine.

The decrease in consumption started four years ago, and the government did nothing to correct the situation.

The consumer was left at the mercy of dairy products' prices.

Actually, it is the workers and the heads of families who made up for the carelessness of the most biased government this country has ever had.

However, as the consumers are not always taken in, they have been buying margarine instead of butter. They refused to buy 70 million pounds of butter in the last three years, and, as a result, there was a 25 per cent decrease in the sale of that commodity, while the population increased by 2.7 per cent.

Is the farmer to blame for having increased his production? We could hardly blame him for improving his production technique and for following the instructions and advice of high officials and agricultural experts of the government.

We should rather congratulate him for having followed the advice which was the only way in which he could lower his production costs. If the government is logical, if it finds that surpluses are a nuisance, why not close down agricultural schools and set up launching pads on our experimental farms.

What use was made of the Agricultural Stabilization Act to maintain the price of skim milk powder? Here again, the government has violated the spirit of the law since it provided that the prices of agricultural products were to be established one year in advance.

Even on the eve of the general election, skim milk powder was selling for 12 and 15 cents. On May 1, 1959, those prices fell to 8 and 10 cents a pound respectively. Four months later, that is on September 30, 1959, price support was abolished entirely. That is when the price of skim milk powder went down as low as 4½ cents and 5 cents a pound. Today many manufacturers are on the brink of bankruptcy following the losses they had to bear concerning the sale of that commodity and the storage expenses they had to pay.

The price of milk which was $3 per hundred pounds in a large sector of the province of Quebec, in 1957, is now only $2.75, even if you include the subsidy of 25 cents per hundred pounds.

Besides, the government established a sales agency which met on seven occasions. It was abolished in May 1961. I ask the minister to tell the house why it was decided to dissolve that organization whose purpose was to promote the sale of butter and farm products.

During the 22 years of Liberal administration, agriculture was never in such a state of chaos as it has been for the last five years.

The price support policy established by the Right Hon. Mr. Gardiner was flexible and in line with the needs of consumers and foreign markets.

The Liberal administration applied itself mainly to maintain our domestic market which has always been the most important. In a few years the Conservative government has destroyed what it had taken the Right Hon. Mr. Gardiner 22 years to set up.

Our domestic market was disrupted through the inefficiency of the authorities in the agriculture department, and we will have to pay hundreds of millions of dollars to restore order.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

It seems that there would be no advantage in trying to resume our trade with Britain, since the price of butter there is 31 or 32 cents a pound. We know that Denmark is the largest supplier of butter to the British and that she intends to spend an amount of $1,140,000 to increase her sales to England.

Due to the drought in the prairies last year, the net income of western farmers was reduced, but one must not forget that the eastern provinces also suffered a drought in the form of a drying up of the agricultural good sense of our leaders.

The right hon. Prime Minister has repudiated his promise to give back to the farmers the share of national income to which they are entitled. When the present government has completed its term of office in a few months, it will go down in our political history as the government whose prime minister and two ministers of agriculture have most wronged our agricultural population, namely the 350,000 producers in eastern Canada.

In 1961, $150 million were paid in subsidies to agriculture to assist about 2½ million people living from it. But are we aware that $2,400,000 were paid out in 1959 and $1,900,000 in 1960, to assist deficit gold mining, in order to keep 16,000 men at work? Are we aware also that during the 1959-60 fiscal year, more than $15½ million were granted to coal mines in this country, whose labour force is only 11,500?

No doubt we are justified to help those industries whose production reached $156 million in 1960 for gold and $76 million for coal.

But is it not as justifiable to help an industry whose production reaches $2.8 billion?

What does the government intend to do to correct the situation? Why is it waiting to take action, following the advice given by the opposition and all agricultural organizations in Canada? It is not competent enough to find an adequate solution and it hopes that time will settle things.

Yet, the situation of agriculture could be improved if we took the trouble to develop a rural planning program, such as the Liberal party has developed.

In fact, the basis of such planning is the fact that the abundance of farm products is a blessing from Providence and an instrument we can use, both within and without our country , to fight hunger, misery and poverty, which are causing so much trouble in various countries.

Our farmers deserve the greatest tribute for their efficiency in increasing their production.

It is inconceivable that, through arbitrary measures, we should try to curtail it, when one third of the population is suffering from hunger and millions of children are dying of starvation each year.

The second principle is the following: the government should rely to a greater extent on farm organizations in the preparation, at the initial stage, of farm legislation and programs designed to improve the income of the farmers so that their standard of living may at least equal that of the working class. This obviously requires that two essential conditions be met by the farmers, and the government.

(a) The unification of the large farm organizations under a single authority which would become the one official voice entitled to speak to the federal government on behalf of the farmers. This would not necessarily exclude provincial or regional organizations, nor those made up of producers of special crops such as beets, soybeans, etc.

We were glad to hear that the country's two largest farm organizations have entered into negotiations which, it is hoped, will result in their unification.

(b) The setting up by the government of an advisory commission at both the federal and the provincial levels whose terms of reference would be to study farm matters. That commission could prepare a report each year and make recommendations according to the needs of each sector of farm production.

It is at that level that the planning policy should be discussed and the issues could be varied but comprehensive, since they would affect the production, the distribution, the processing and the marketing of farm products.

I think that marketing of farm products is the main point of a planning policy, since it is the phase the farmer is the less informed about. That is why, in the Liberal party platform, we advocate the setting up of a regular information service to work hand in hand with an independent research council which would promote the development of new food products and their marketing on both domestic and foreign markets.

At the present time we have recommendations to make to the government, which are of international scope and deal with the creation of an international foodstuff organization, similar to those already in existence for wheat and sugar.

That organization would play the part of a buffer in the distribution and pricing of agricultural products on the world markets.

There are other important principles which make up the planning policy of our party, but as I have not enough time to go into details, I will merely summarize them:

The improvement of the Agricultural Prices Support Act. That is to say, this act will have to be made flexible enough to permit the pricing of agricultural products in relation to their cost and the financial needs of the farming families.

Thus emergency measures should be taken immediately to safeguard the main industry of eastern Canada, the dairy industry.

Our party recommends—and intends putting it into practice—a system which would set a reasonable price for farm products and promote the marketing of these products, both on the domestic and foreign markets, and a program of milk distribution in schools.

In the United States, 80 per cent of the children in the public schools have access to some kind of catering service. In Canada, we have practically nothing of the sort.

Here are other policies advocated by our party: the improvement of crop insurance; easier credit for the improvement of livestock, drainage, for the consolidation of establishments, and to ease the transfer—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

(Text):

Mr. Bell (Carleton): If I might just say a word, the genial hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska in my submission is under some misapprehension as to the nature of this particular vote. The principle of the main vote has been approved, and the issue before the committee essentially is the wisdom or otherwise of increasing the expenditure for the particular purposes which are set forth on page 13 of the book of estimates.

The additional requirements arise chiefly from increased travelling and removal expenses, mostly of international missions, including grain sales promotions, and intensified activities in relation to FAO, OECD and GATT. The issues which my hon. friend raises are ones which I should be glad to debate with him on another occasion when I might express myself with somewhat greater vigour than I do when I appear before the house in the role of suppliant.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, we are on a supplementary item of the Department of Agriculture, namely departmental administration, and of course as my hon. friend knows, under this item it is customary, whether in supplementaries or main estimates, to discuss the whole question of departmental administration. This is, I think, particularly relevant at this time when we have no assurance at all that we will be given another opportunity to discuss the Department of Agriculture.

I point out that when we were discussing the third set of supplementary estimates we did at least have ministers in the committee whom we could question about the departments under consideration. We are now on agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture is not in the committee. The acting minister is not here. There are two parliamentary secretaries in the Department of Agriculture, neither of whom is present. The Minister of Finance is not here. We are delighted to have the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance here, and presumably he is going to bear the burden of the government debate on further supplementary estimates totalling $138 million. Mr. Chairman, I claim that this is not good enough in the discussion of such important matters as we are facing at this time in this committee.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, may I say to the Leader of the Opposition that the practice in the past, the practice in the government in which he was a member was that the Minister of Finance conducted the final supplementary items. Because of a matter of urgent public business the Minister of Finance must be absent this afternoon, and I hope the committee will be indulgent with me while I try to fill the role in accordance with what has been the customary practice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, on the point that has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition, it is not a question of the suitability of the parliamentary secretary, in the circumstances; that is not in issue. What the Leader of the Opposition pointed out was that we are dealing with supplementaries totalling a large sum of money at a time when we are possibly engaged for the last time before an election in the discussion of items having to do with various departments of government. We certainly are not going to have an opportunity of dealing with departmental estimates as such in their usual form until after this parliament will have been dissolved. That being the case, we are presented with a situation altogether different from what may have attended former practice —if in fact it is the practice, and that I doubt this very much—on other occasions.

Today, as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, we are discussing the departmental administration of the Department of Agriculture; and not only that, but afterwards we will go into atomic energy, citizenship and immigration, the civil service commission and a whole series of items on external affairs. The parliamentary secretary is in the unhappy position today, of having to discharge this responsibility, I believe without proper status before the committee—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Not at all unhappy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not unhappy, but ignorance is bliss when it is folly to be wise. The hon. member is happy possibly because he cannot be expected to know about all of the items covering the departments that are before us.

As the Leader of the Opposition has said, we do not even have the Minister of Finance with us. We have only the leader of the house—he is the only minister in the committee—and when we look at the government benches we find perhaps no more than 25 Conservative members in the committee at the present time.

Mr. Crouse: That is not true.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a fact; and this at a time when we are beginning to discuss important items concerning proposals for expenditure by this government. The Minister of Agriculture obviously cannot be in his seat. We saw his condition today and it would be inhuman and most unfair to expect him to be here. We are not asking that the Minister of Agriculture be here; but there is an acting minister of agriculture in the person of the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Pearson: And there are two parliamentary secretaries.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are two parliamentary secretaries, as the Leader of the Opposition has reminded us. One of them has just come in, because undoubtedly he was called in by the alert whip, who himself is not in the committee at the moment.

Mr. Crouse: This is untrue.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to correct the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You can correct me after I have finished.

Mr. Jorgenson: On a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no point of order.

The Chairman: What is the hon. member rising on?

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is accusing me of not being here. I have been here. I went up to my room to take a couple of aspirins because I had a headache. In the meantime somebody called me and I was delayed for a few minutes. I may say that I got the headache from listening to the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I must say, Mr. Chairman, that was not a point of order, and if I may say so with respect, that should have been indicated.

The Chairman: It is hardly fair to expect the Chair to know before the point of order has been stated. The hon. member has stated his point, whatever it may be, and the floor now belongs to the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry if the hon. member was ill. He said he went up to his room to take an aspirin.

Mr. Jorgenson: That was because of listening to you.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure he is not the only one on the other side of the chamber who will be taking aspirin after the next election. But the point is, we are discussing public business. Hon. members may have legitimate excuses for being out of their seats, as I am sure the parliamentary secretary had, who just intervened. However, that is not the point. We are discussing public business and we have the right to have in this chamber the ministers concerned with the various departments. We discussed the third supplementaries a few days ago. Each minister was in his place. The Minister of Finance, or the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, did not conduct the affairs of the government—

The Chairman: Order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and surely we are entitled—

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Order. The chairman is on his feet.

The Chairman: Order. I believe the hon. gentleman has the right to discuss matters concerning agriculture, but I do not think it would be proper at this stage to discuss the past attendance of hon. members in this committee. I do not think that is at all relevant at the moment. I know that the hon. member will get back to this item.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect to Your Honour, I was not discussing the past attendance of ministers; I was discussing the fact that when we are dealing with supplementary items, as we are now, on the eve of a general election we have the right to have in the committee the responsible ministers for the departments concerned so we can put questions to them. We are not discussing past attendance; we are discussing the obligation of ministers of the crown, particularly when they come to parliament and ask parliament to give them money to carry on the various projects which they recommend.

If I were now to ask the parliamentary secretary questions about what is the sugar policy of the government of Canada with regard to sugar beets I would be greatly surprised if even so competent an hon. gentleman were able to give the kind of reply which thus far this session we have not been able to get from the Acting Minister of Agriculture or from either of his parliamentary secretaries.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, this is the way this government regards parliament; this is the way it treats the public business and this is a further example of the arrogant way it has been acting toward parliament, particularly during this session.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I only want to say one or two words, and in somewhat different temper and tone than that which the hon. member for Essex East has adopted. The situation is that he has attempted to draw a comparison between supplementary estimates generally and the final supplementary estimates. The hon. gentleman said that on the last occasion supplementary estimates were before the committee each minister was here. That is true, and that has been the practice. However, the general practice of the house over a period of years has been that the final supplementary estimates should be taken by the Minister of Finance. That has been departed from on perhaps one or two occasions, but not more, to my knowledge.

The situation is that the Minister of Finance has been called away on important public business. If the hon. gentleman wishes to ask me for any information of a detailed nature, I will certainly either give him the answer or endeavour to get the answer for him as quickly as possible. I submit that there is no substance to the attempt of the hon. gentleman to suggest that in some way there has been a departure from what has been the traditional practice and procedure of this committee in the past.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in reply to the hon. gentleman concerning the point he has made on the point of order. The hon. gentleman talked about the practice when the previous government was in office. There is some substance in what he says about the final supplementaries when the previous government was in office, but when the previous government was in office the supplementaries were genuine supplementaries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: They were the result of shortfalls in the original estimates. They were nothing like what we are being treated to in this parliament at this time.

I have in my hands figures for the further supplementary estimates showing the totals for the whole five years from the year ending March 31, 1953 to the year ending March 31, 1957 inclusive. The previous government in those five years brought in by way of further supplementaries $357 million. That was in a five year period. This is the fourth lot of further supplementaries introduced by this government this session and already the total for this year is $341 million, in further supplementaries, almost as much as in five years under the previous government.

The Chairman: The hon. member seems to be embarking on a debate right now. I had recognized the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking about the point of order raised by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I raised no point of order.

The Chairman: I understood the hon. member was raising a point of order. If he is, I will listen to him, but he should state his point of order and not begin to initiate another debate which to my mind would be foreign to the item before the committee. If the hon. member has a point of order I shall listen to him and if he has not I shall give the floor to the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order has relation to the privileges of the house and particularly to the rights of the opposition in the house. In a moment I wish to cite a very celebrated authority on this particular point, an authority who I am sure will impress hon. gentlemen opposite. But first of all, sir I wish to draw your attention to the fact that we have a different situation here and I feel I have illustrated it rather graphically, when you think that in one single year we have had further supplementary estimates totalling $341 million. That is not all, sir. Just recently we considered further supplementary estimates No. 3. We now have $8 million being asked for for the same branches of departments which were up in the last lot of supplementaries. The same items are again involved. It seems to me that is evidence of the financial disorder that makes it necessary to have the ministers present to explain these items.

The Chairman: I still do not see any point of order in what the hon. member has said. The hon. gentleman referred to estimates that have been passed. I do not think it would be in order to bring them back before the committee in this debate. I would therefore call on the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you call on the hon. gentleman may I request that you hear the authority I wish to cite about the way in which the government is treating us.

The Chairman: I am willing to hear the authority the hon. gentleman wishes to cite but I am not quite clear concerning the grounds upon which this authority is being brought forward.

Mr. Pickersgill: The ground is the very simple ground that an attempt is being made by a method of pressure on the part of the government to prevent a full and adequate discussion with full and adequate opportunities being provided us to obtain information before the voting of supply.

The authority I wish to quote is the hon. member for Prince Albert speaking in this house on April 11, 1957 when the right hon. gentleman, as he is now, said:

> As I look back over the records of parliament when parliament was discharging its responsibility and maintaining its prestige, when estimates were carefully examined and critically condemned if improperly included among those presented, and compare that situation with the situation today, I can only say that this method of placing so many hundreds of millions of dollars of expenditure before parliament is a further insult and humiliation to this institution and to its prestige.
> Indeed, I say this. It is a contempt of parliament to deny consideration except as provided in this general manner. We in the opposition have been willing throughout to co-operate.

Those words may be applied to this side of the house. We have offered co-operation at every stage but we do not feel that we should be gagged. A little later on—

The Chairman: Order. I believe this is a matter of debate. It is not relevant and it is not a point of order. I therefore must recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That statement was made on interim supply.

Mr. Pearson: Exactly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly, and you are going to try to give us an hour for that.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That statement was made on interim supply and has nothing to do with this.

Mr. Peters: Instead of having a discussion of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture it would appear that we are again having a discussion of Beauchesne's, which is not unusual in this committee.

I should like to know from the acting minister whether it is because of his ability in the field of agriculture that he is now piloting through these estimates. I believe we are having our last opportunity to speak on the estimates pertaining to the Department of Agriculture. Certainly the present incumbent of the office appears to have as much authority as anyone to state what is the agricultural situation in Canada today. Before referring to what has been said by the government in this respect I wish to quote a statement made by the hon. member himself in relation to agriculture:

New stabilization legislation has provided highest support prices. Payments to agriculture—1953-57—$363 million; 1957-61—$706 million or an increase of 95 per cent.

That statement may be found in a pamphlet entitled "Report to the Electors of Carleton" published by the hon. member for Carleton.

This is not without support from the economic division of the Department of Agriculture. They point out that:

During the first nine months of 1961, farm cash income from the sale of farm products reached the all time high of $2.12 billion. This estimate is 4 per cent above the corresponding figure in 1960—

I wonder whether this is fact or political speculation. I leave the answer up to the voters of Canada rather than the acting minister. I leave it to the voters to determine whether this is political speculation or fact. I question the right of the department in publishing this statement in the bulletin concerning the current review of agricultural conditions in Canada to draw the conclusions that are drawn. They are certainly not in keeping with the opinions of those in the agricultural community I represent or of those in other agricultural communities with whom I am in contact. On page 2 the following statement is made:

With increased national production, rises in labor income and higher farm cash income in 1961, and only a modest rise in the consumer price index for food, the year appears to have shown a general improvement.

It goes on to say:

Farm cash income: During the first nine months of 1961, farm cash income from the sale of farm products reached the all time high of $2,120.0 million. This estimate is 4.0 per cent above the $2,039.7 million obtained in the same period of 1960 and 3.1 per cent higher than the previous record high of $2,056.8 million established in 1959.

What is involved is pointed out:

Major contributions to the increase in farm cash income from 1960 to 1961 were made by wheat, flaxseed, tobacco, cattle, calves, hogs, dairy products, poultry products and Canadian wheat board participation payments.

I want the committee to remember that included in the major contributions are products of the dairy industry. We are not questioning whether or not these statements are exact, but in doing some homework on this subject I examined figures from 10 or 12 different publications and found, although they were all taken from the dominion bureau of statistics figures, with very few exceptions did they bear any similarity. I presume it depends on how you use the figures, what application they have and what is considered in making up the figures. It is easy to say that farm income has gone up if you forget to say you are using a gross figure and that the net income is lower than it has been for many years in relation to many commodities.

Last evening we said we were happy that western agriculture appears to have solved most of its problems. It will be agreed that the gross income position of farmers will be improved as a result of large wheat sales reducing our national surplus of this commodity. The sales of grain to China and Poland have had a beneficial effect. It is important to remember that important sales have been made to new markets. The acting minister can take some credit for the fact that the Department of Finance—although it is questionable how it did it—has been able to give a guarantee which made these large sales of farm products possible.

I am pleased to note that today a further sale was indicated and that the original guarantee was sufficient to cover that sale. I wonder what this means. Does it mean that western Canada has had better representation than has eastern Canada? Or does it simply mean that the problem in eastern Canada is more diversified and therefore much more difficult to understand? I frankly think this may have been the case. Some of the things we have endorsed, because of this strong representation from western Canada, are not necessarily so advantageous to some of the eastern producers; and certainly some of the other Conservative solutions to problems of agriculture have not been necessarily advantageous to all producers in the country. I should like to mention only one or two facts.

The system we have used for community pastures and community feeding in western Canada has had a detrimental effect on feed production in the province of Ontario. I think it is also true that the changes we made in this feed and grain act a year or two ago may have been advantageous to western producers but that they have not been advantageous in eastern Canada. While we are not in disagreement on the reason why these things have been done, I would also note that consideration has been given to one area in the Canadian production at the expense of some of the other areas. I think this is probably the prime reason why, when the next government is formed in this country, if the New Democratic party forms the government, there will be an eastern minister of agriculture for the first time in a long while and he will bring more uniformity to the legislation throughout this country. I think one of the things that will happen immediately will be the establishment of a national marketing board. From listening yesterday to the western members we know that they are not opposed to this idea.

Mr. Pallett: What does Mr. Douglas say about that?

Mr. Peters: I doubt whether Mr. Douglas will be personally involved in that office. He certainly will have something to say about who gets it. I have not committed him in any way, shape or form as to who the incumbent will be. I am only saying that I am sure there will be a rather different distribution than there is at the present time.

From listening to the discussions yesterday, we know that many of the members from western Canada are not opposed to national marketing boards which, in the final analysis, offer a solution for most of the problems we have in agriculture today. We know that with respect to wheat we have engaged satisfactorily in operating marketing legislation that has been advantageous to the producer, to the consumer, and certainly to the country itself through the export program. I think there can be no argument about the matter. Perhaps I should not go that far, Mr. Chairman, because I know there is some argument. I was surprised that the hon. member for Greenwood should state that he was opposed to national marketing boards because they limit, direct and regulate. I was surprised that he should say he was opposed to them basically for this reason. I would suggest that most members from western Canada who have an interest in the development of this national marketing agency have agreed that there must be regulations; that control must be exercised over production; that there must be an equalization of payments across the country and the indication of an end price that will be competitive in the world market if we are to sell a major portion of our commodities on the international market.

We in eastern Canada know that one of the greatest problems affecting agriculture is to be found in the dairy industry. That industry has been allowed to grow haphazardly in all directions. I think the farmers of eastern Canada are to be congratulated on the direction it has taken with so little assistance from government. We are now a large producer of dairy products. We produce so many of them that the government is now in the same position as that in which they were a year ago in the matter of wheat. They are worrying what they are going to do about the surpluses of these commodities. Last year milk production in Canada amounted to 19.2 billion pounds, an increase of about 4 per cent over 1960. All the provinces contributed to this increase in production except Manitoba. The national dairy herd had grown by 74,000 cows or 2.3 per cent by June 1, 1961, compared with the same date in 1960.

The fact that in eastern Canada last year we also had favourable weather meant that we were in a position to be able to increase our production and therefore to increase the surpluses that were piling up in certain commodities. One of these commodities to which the government has been asked to give consideration is butter. Many suggestions have been made as to what should be done about the surplus in dairy products. If you have followed them over the last five or six years, Mr. Chairman, you will know that the national dairy council and the component parts of it have been very much interested in each bringing forward a solution that will be satisfactory with regard to their particular commodities. These solutions have included the pooling of all fluid milk and equalization payments being made from one commodity group to another. Each of these solutions has met with some success and certainly with some resentment from members of their own organization and from the government. The national dairy council in recent months have been concerned particularly with butter. It should be pointed out that the situation that we have in Canada of a large surplus of creamery butter is not unlike the situation that has happened in other countries according to the World Dairy Statistics Digest which incidentally is a booklet that is not available in Canada. It is not available in the public library here and I understand it is not available from the Department of Agriculture. However, they point out that most dairy producing nations face the same difficulties as those with which Canada is faced. For example, the combined production of New Zealand and Australia increased from 35,000 tons a year in the first half of 1950 to about 400,000 tons since that time. They go on to point out that each of these countries, and particularly those countries that are dealing with the largest available market, namely the market of Britain, have been suffering difficulties over the last number of years, and that these difficulties are increasing.

What did the government do about the matter? A year or so ago the government were asked to allow the producers in Ontario—I refer to the fluid milk producers in Ontario—to pay a subsidy to other segments of the industry so that the amount of surplus fluid milk could be fitted into the whole dairy program. When they came to Ottawa and asked for the government's assistance in this co-ordination plan, they were told that the federal government could not give them authority until they were licensed as a marketing agent of the province of Ontario. When they went back to the province of Ontario, the provincial government informed them that as far as they were concerned they were licensed far enough as an agency to be acceptable to the federal government. With this background the dairy farmers themselves or the Ontario milk producers set up an inquiry and went into the whole matter of marketing and the pricing of milk and cream in Ontario. Last September they established a marketing committee consisting of David MacFarlane, professor of economics, faculty of agriculture, McGill University, A. W. Wood, associate professor, department of economics, University of Manitoba, and John W. Carncross, professor of agricultural economics, Rutgers University, New Brunswick, New Jersey. They examined the situation and made certain specific recommendations to the Ontario milk producers. Their major recommendation was the establishment of an integrated marketing plan with a high degree of co-ordination of the policies of the several producer groups. They recommended that there be a central producers board and went on to say:

> It is also judged advisable that the whole milk producers league be reorganized as a marketing board.

It is estimated that the cost of operating the board would probably amount to one-fifth or one-fourth of a cent per 100 pounds of milk or milk equivalent of cream. They suggested that the various dairy requirements be divided into groups and that consideration be given to all of them in a fairly uniform manner. The national dairy farmers of Canada presented a special committee report in Toronto on October 20, 1961, in which they pointed out the seriousness of the surplus butter situation and referred to certain things that they suggested should be done about it. This finally resulted in the request of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture for a subsidy of 14 cents a pound on the price to the consumer.

On March 23 the government made an announcement that it was prepared to pay a subsidy of 12 cents a pound effective May 1 next with the idea that such a subsidy would tend to eliminate or at least curtail the amount of the surplus which at January 1 last was estimated to be 197 million pounds. The Ottawa Journal of March 23 points out that about a quarter of this amount is in converted butter oil for which no economic use has been found, and the rest is in whole butter.

At that time I asked the minister if the government had any intention of giving additional aid to the whole milk industry as an industry rather than as a commodity group. I did so because everyone connected with the whole milk industry knows it is one that has made great use of technological advances and through such technical changes is now able to produce more milk per cow than is the case in any other segment of the industry. Because they have improved milk production to this extent they have found that particularly during the spring, summer and fall when the cattle are on pasture they are producing more milk than the established quotas call for. This milk cannot be absorbed and this means that the surplus has gone into the production of butter and cheese.

There is a desire on the part of the whole milk industry and the commodity groups to try to integrate the surplus whole milk production into the whole industry so that it will not cause the large overproduction of butter. The acting minister may not be aware of how much this has affected the industry but certainly it has had a terrific effect. On occasion, production has been very close to 10 per cent over normal production of fluid milk. In 1960 surplus production amounted to about 15 per cent. This is a very important factor in the production of butter and in my opinion it has to be taken into consideration if we are going to solve the problem.

I wonder whether the farmers themselves have not failed to give consideration to something that is even more basic to the whole problem. There are certainly many figures available, in fact so many that it is hard to keep track of all of them. We know that in recent months there has been a terrific increase in the consumption of margarine and it seems to me that so far as the butter industry is concerned margarine is the most fundamental factor in the problem and also with regard to overproduction in the other segments of the fluid milk industry. In my view the government has a responsibility in this field.

The federal government is going to pay a subsidy of 12 cents on the price of butter to the consumer. I am very curious to find out, and I think most people will be, on what ground the government assumes that the consumer will get the full benefit of the subsidy. I have discussed this matter with several people who are negotiating milk contracts in the Ottawa area, and they have pointed out that in the last few weeks dairies have informed them that they need two or three cents more to take care of their rising overhead. I wonder whether they are not going to take their two or three cents first. Is it unreasonable to expect that the retailer, who has never been averse to taking his cut on any product he handles, will also take another two or three cents? If the subsidy only amounts to seven or eight cents by the time it gets to the consumer, then I think the aim of the government in paying this subsidy will not be met.

In my view now is the time for the government to sit down with representatives of the national dairy council and decide what they are going to do about margarine. Most of the margarine production is by soap companies. Many of them are large producers of margarine. We know that margarine was introduced in this country because of the fact that during the war dairy production did not keep up with the demand and there was a shortage of butter at that time. For this reason a teriffic impetus was given to the production of margarine.

We also know that the increase in the consumption of margarine came at a time when the price of butter increased, and the higher the price of butter goes the more will margarine be consumed. We are also informed that the production of margarine is a very lucrative field for the companies manufacturing it and that there is a spread of 15 or 20 cents between the cost of production and what the consumer pays. I think the amount of money involved in this spread could quite easily be used to subsidize the consumption of butter if the government would control the production of margarine in conjunction with the whole dairy industry.

The farmers are now opposed to margarine and their opposition is shown by the necessity of having to colour margarine; but margarine is a basic commodity for many people in Canada who are in no position to pay 65 to 70 cents per pound for butter. I think the farmers would be in a more advantageous position if they would advocate the use of some of the large profit on the production of margarine to subsidize the production of butter. In this way it would be possible to reduce the price of butter to the consumer because the government would have taken over regulation of the retail price of these commodities.

If the government does not regulate the retail price of butter at the present time, then I fail to see how they are going to get this 12 cents into the consumer's pocket which the dairy council hopes will mean an increase in the consumption of butter. The consumption of butter has fallen off somewhat, and it is hoped that this incentive will restore consumption to a point where it is more nearly in line with production.

I do not know whether or not everyone is aware of it, Mr. Chairman, but within the last year the production of margarine and other spreads has increased by 2.4 per cent in the month of December to 15,097,000 pounds from 14,743,000 pounds in December, 1960. On a full year basis, production amounted to 183,480,000 pounds, which was 10.4 per cent greater than the 166,641,000 pounds produced in 1960. The production of margarine and these spreads has been increasing steadily since they were introduced in 1949, and at the same time the consumption of butter has been decreasing. I believe these are very serious times for the dairy industry, Mr. Chairman. We all know that subsidization is not the ultimate answer. We have to arrive at a better system. Subsidization has been carried on not only in this industry but in others and we have seen it carried to the extent where a surplus of the product has been built up and we have not accomplished what we sought to accomplish.

Mr. Brunsden: What is the alternative?

Mr. Peters: There are many alternatives. The logical one is to sell the commodity. We found this was true in so far as western Canada was concerned. If it had not been for the fact that we were able to sell wheat, and if there had not been a drought, we would not have been paying the farmers of western Canada one dollar an acre but we would have been paying them $2 or $3 per acre. I think the fact the government did finally decide to push the marketing agency to the point where it was able to sell wheat, was the best answer. Canada is reaping the benefits of these international sales. In so far as dairy products are concerned, we are in a position where we can produce far more in this country than we are able to use. I completely disagree with those people who think we can double or treble the consumption of a particular agricultural product. I know that most people who can afford butter are going to use enough of it to satisfy them. I do not really believe they will use twice as much butter merely because the price is reduced, so this is not the answer. If people are not getting any butter and are now buying margarine, the reduction in price will obviously induce them to use some butter. However, I do not believe those who are already using butter will double the amount they are now using.

I think the answer to this problem lies in something which the hon. member voted against the other day.

Mr. Brunsden: Oh, no.

Mr. Peters: Yes, he and every other member of his party voted against marketing boards.

Mr. Brunsden: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman is implying that those of us who were here and who represent agricultural regions are against national marketing boards. We are not. We voted yesterday for the wheat board. We believe in national marketing. My friend has been talking about fluid milk, apparently without any comprehension of the fact that fluid milk marketing is a provincial concern and not a federal concern.

Mr. Peters: On February 20 of this year, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East, I moved an amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It read in part:

> This house regrets that Your Excellency's advisers have failed to give—

The Chairman: Order. I believe the hon. member is getting out of order because he is reviving a debate that has already been settled in this session.

Mr. Peters: I only wanted to read the amendment against which the hon. member had voted. I am sure that if the hon. member had considered the matter he would know that his party had already made a decision on this particular matter in a way the Canadian public can easily check. I know that many of the agricultural commodity groups in this country are in accord with the views I have expressed, namely that in Canada we need national marketing agencies that will not only market one commodity on an interprovincial basis, as is being done now for many commodities, but we need marketing agencies large enough to handle the exportable surplus of any product.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. McMillan: I think all Canadians are concerned about the 170 million pounds of surplus butter, and about the fact this surplus is likely to continue to increase under the floor price. I know this is a very difficult problem for the government. I believe last Thursday the government announced that they would be making a distinction between two classes of farmers, namely those who produced milk primarily for the butter market and those who produced milk for household consumption.

When I was home lately I found there was considerable confusion amongst the producers as well as the distributors of milk. I know that today the Prime Minister announced there would be some consultation with producers, I believe. I hope that some announcement will soon be made in this connection. I found that the people who were most disturbed were those who were producing milk to be sold to distributors for household consumption. They were concerned that their deliveries might be cut down and their prices cut. There is a distributor at home who has a moderate sized plant, buying about one hundred cans of milk a day for distribution. Up until a few months ago he used his surplus milk to produce butter which he sold at 64 cents a pound, thus contributing to the butter surplus. He became interested in increasing the market for milk products and started to make whipping cream out of his first grade surplus cream. He sold this whipping cream at 75 cents a quart on the week end, and disposed of over 100 quarts a week.

Now, I know that the price of whipping cream in the half pint and pint sizes is about double that price, but he certainly established a big market. This particular distributor claimed that selling whipping cream at 75 cents a quart gave him about the same return as he would have received if this cream had been turned into butter and sold at 64 cents a pound. This resulted in his withholding a lot of butter from the surplus butter market. In that small area this one distributor is withholding over 100 pounds of butter a week, or about 500 pounds a month from the market. This seemed rather novel to me and I think it is at least some proof that we might be able to increase the marketing of butter fat before it becomes butter. Certainly in that case it has been proven it can be done when the price is appealing enough to the public.

I do not pretend to know anything about the economics of the production and distribution of milk products, and I am not taking dietary considerations into account. The question also poses itself as to whether with an increase in the sale of whipping cream there might be a decrease in the sale of butter, but in the instance I have cited I have been told they did not cut down their butter sales, and did not appreciably cut down their sales of whipping cream in the smaller half pint and pint containers at the original price.

I do not know whether the government has given any consideration to this aspect of marketing milk and milk products. I heard the hon. gentleman to my left say that their sale comes under provincial jurisdiction. I believe that the decrease in the selling price of butter will encourage its consumption but in so far as we have to put up a lot of money to buy this surplus butter it behooves the federal government to give consideration to the sale of butter fat before it is manufactured into butter. In view of the fact that in one small area a single distributor has been able to take 500 pounds of butter a month off the surplus market, I wonder could it be done in other parts of Canada. I have never heard of its being done elsewhere.

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks on the item under consideration, in view of the fact that, as it was said a moment ago, it is probably our last chance to do so.

I want to discuss two questions which are of particular interest to me: the advertising agency of the dairy industry and the possibility of increasing milk distribution in schools.

On March 12 instant, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) a question concerning an advertising agency which was to launch a campaign to promote the sale of butter. The minister, through his representative, answered as follows:

> The government of Canada did not appoint a butter advisory committee of Canada. However, in 1960, the government employed a public relations firm to conduct a butter promotional campaign. In the course of its work this firm named a butter advisory committee to assist them in an advisory capacity. This committee consisted of seven members.

A little later, he added:

> Six meetings were held on the following dates: October 31, 1960; November 22, 1960; January 5, 1961; January 27, 1961; February 17, 1961; and March 23, 1961. The committee concluded its functions during May, 1961.

In my opinion, the committee could have carried on its work, because it had at its disposal an ideal instrument to boost propaganda in favour of the sale and food value of dairy products. It could have fought against the vocal and misleading publicity which is being made about what are called non-saturated fats from a salad oil made out of corn. On account on that publicity, many people are wondering whether butter fat and certain animal fats would not be the cause of heart trouble, which is absolutely wrong.

In the United States, authorities in charge of the implementation of the food legislation have issued many statements to the effect that such publicity was false and misleading. In fact, they have stated that there is as yet no evidence of any relation between the proportion of cholesterol in the blood and heart trouble, and that nothing justifies any substantial change in the food diet generally in use in the United States, nor to the eating of fats which it involves. If we refer to certain statistics to be found in U.S. documents, we find that in the United States butter consumption amounts to 8 pounds per capita as compared to 18 pounds in Canada. Those figures are for the year 1959.

We have other figures we can use as a check; for instance, the number of deaths caused by heart trouble in 1959 was 270 per 100,000 in the United States and 234 per 100,000 in Canada. The proportion was lower in Canada while butter consumption was higher.

That committee could have counteracted the effects of that misleading publicity. It could also have endeavoured to destroy a wrong impression about milk contamination by strontium 90, because it is the food that contains the least amount of it. The danger is almost non-existent, if we remember that the cows eliminate 95 per cent of what they absorb in their own food.

The committee could have made several suggestions to the government, which could have guided it in its legislation.

The situation will become alarming if we do not take steps at once to stop the decrease in butter consumption.

In the last few years, it has decreased by one million pounds a month. While the per capita consumption of butter stood at 20¼ pounds in 1957, it went down to 15.1 pounds in 1961.

It must also be kept in mind that 395,000 farmers derive 67 per cent of their income from dairy products.

That is why I would urge the government to reorganize that national advisory committee whose purpose is to promote the sales of dairy products.

I should like to deal briefly with another matter that is of concern to me, that is the distribution of milk in schools. It is rightly said that this distribution would be best organized in co-operation with provincial governments. It is felt that apart from making up for the pupil's failure to have breakfast, milk is a wholesome food which can compete with other beverages often more harmful.

Third, this would be a way to get rid of surpluses, if we consider, for instance, that in 1958-59 there were 3,780,000 children in grade schools, while that figure is expected to rise to 4.2 million in 1964-65 and to 4.76 million in 1969-70.

In the December 1961 issue of L'Economiste agricole, the present situation in the United States is described, as follows:

> In March 1957, a catering service of some kind was available to 80 per cent of the children attending public schools. Milk distribution facilities were available to 90 per cent. Thirty three per cent got a complete meal every day (based on the daily average of the month). Milk consumption reached the equivalent of one pint per day for the total number of children attending public schools. On the average, those children had to pay 24.3 cents per meal under the N.S.L.P. program and 3.1 cents per pint of milk, under the S.M.P. program. During the school year 1957-58, the children attending public schools consumed $619 million worth of food (wholesale price, including the price of lunches and milk), that is $19 per child on the basis of the total registration in public schools. 47 per cent of that amount was for dairy products, of which 35 per cent was for plain milk.

That, in my opinion, is proof in support of that policy which the present government could follow in Canada.

> On the average, each child consumed 59.8 pounds of plain milk. The total cost of the national school lunch program and of the special milk program in both public and private schools amounted to an estimated $926 million in 1957-58. The federal share totalled $241 million, that is 26 per cent of the whole or $6.28 per child, on the basis of the total registration in public and private schools.

Our agricultural organizations have long been considering the question of milk distribution in schools. Thus, La Terre de Chez Nous has published a U.C.C. report concerning the distribution of milk in schools. In my opinion, that report contains most interesting information which could help make that idea become a reality.

Indeed, a large number of agricultural organizations have long been advocating the distribution of milk in schools.

American and British experiences in this field also support the adoption of such a policy, even though the results in these two countries are far from complete and, therefore, cannot be too readily analysed.

Health experts also agree on the high food value of milk, especially for the growing child.

Now, children, and especially teenagers, are always being urged by advertising to buy all sorts of beverages without any food value.

The distribution of milk in schools, in addition to improving the diet of many children, would supply them with a basic food and give them a good eating habit.

We know that the country, and particularly the federal government, has a disposal policy. They grant subsidies to concentrated dairy products industries and make substantial gifts of skim milk to nations which often are underfed.

We support that policy because it sometimes becomes urgent to dispose abroad of a product which is chronically in surplus.

On the other hand, such action is often exposed to severe criticism by the general public who do not always realize the economic reasons for that initiative but think that moneys spent that way could serve a better purpose if they were used to feed our own children.

During the school year 1958-59, as I said a while ago, there were 4 million children in primary, secondary and private schools. And the figure I gave then rather concerned the birth rate.

However, through the development of a milk distribution policy in schools, the government would reduce dairy surpluses and would kill two birds with one stone, since this would contribute to decreasing our Canadian stocks. Moreover, such a policy would give impetus to the dairy industry, so that it could become successful in some areas of our country where it is practically non-existent. If our dairy industry became prosperous through this policy, many of our farmers who have to depend upon the income from that industry would therefore benefit from such a distribution of milk in schools.

I hope that the government will consider this measure and that, in co-operation with the provinces, it will find a way to have this policy implemented by the various governments.

At present, on the eve of an election and especially with the warm electoral campaigning which we know, speakers on the government side praise the agricultural policy followed during the last four years. Indeed, one can even hear members declare that they saved agriculture by passing the Crop Insurance Act.

However, I asked the Minister of Agriculture the following question on February 12, 1962:

> Which provinces have agreed to the federal crop insurance scheme?

To which he replied:

> The province of Manitoba entered into agreement with this government under the provisions of the Crop Insurance Act on May 24, 1961. Agreements are expected to be concluded with Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island in the near future.

That answer clearly indicates that the enactment of the Crop Insurance Act failed to interest every province, since as yet, only one has entered into agreement and two others are examining the proposal.

And the same goes for the Farm Credit Corporation.

To another question of mine on February 14, 1962, the reply was that only 44 farmers from the province of Quebec had secured loans in excess of $15,000, under part II of the Farm Credit Act.

There again, we can see that even though the act does not contain any reprehensible clause, in my opinion, even though it is well drafted, it does not as yet render the services it should, because only 44 farmers from Quebec have taken advantage of part II of the Farm Credit Act, under which loans in excess of $15,000 are permissible.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

(Text):

The Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will proceed with consideration of private members' business.

TRANSPORTATION

REQUEST FOR DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the development of a national transportation policy so that the transportation needs of Canada can be met with a minimum degree of subsidization of competing forms of public transport.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the house that I intend to be very brief because in the time allotted I should like to hear as many other hon. members as possible express their opinions on what is to me a very serious problem in Canada. I recognize at once, and I want to open my comments with the admission that Canada covers an area of roughly 5,000 miles from Victoria, British Columbia, to St. John's, Newfoundland. We are, relatively speaking, a greatly underpopulated country. It is possible that there is no country in the world with the problems and headaches that Canada has in the field of transportation. This being so I also recognize that it may well be that the public purse will always, in one form or another, be called upon to subsidize public transportation in our country in order to keep at a sufficiently low level the rates being charged for the movement of goods and people.

In the past we have had a large number of royal commissions that have been charged with the responsibility of investigating various transportation problems. The most recent of these was the MacPherson commission which investigated transportation by rail in Canada. We have in this nation two main national railway systems. There are also a few smaller railway companies. In British Columbia we have our famous P.G.E. and in Ontario there is a northern railway system; but in the main we have two large railway systems which may be described as national systems. Both of these receive government subsidies in one form or another. I often doubt whether this country has sufficient population and a sufficient passenger and freight traffic potential to be able to afford the luxury of having two competing national railway systems. At this time I do not wish to argue the merits of private ownership versus public ownership but it appears to me that the idea of integrating Canadian railways deserves much more serious consideration than it has received till now. I am not sure that it would not be wise to sell the Canadian National Railways to the Canadian Pacific Railway or to have the Canadian Pacific Railway absorb the Canadian National Railways system or integrate with it.

However, my motion goes beyond the problem of railways. There is no form of public transportation in Canada that is not now in receipt in one form or another of heavy government subsidization. Our air lines are subsidized if in no other way than through the taxpayers providing growing extensive airport facilities. In addition to that, the estimates now before the house contain the huge deficit of Trans-Canada Air Lines.

It is likely that our trucking industry will deny that it is being subsidized. However, if one examines the tremendous expenditures made on highways by federal and provincial governments it can scarcely be denied that this industry is also in receipt of subsidization, although it is paid indirectly, it is true, by the taxpayers of Canada.

We subsidize rail transportation. The taxpayers also subsidize road transportation. Most bus lines are in receipt of public subsidies. Our water transportation is heavily subsidized. The taxpayers are called upon to pay for the construction of canals, harbours and the like. We have only to think of the tremendous expenditure caused by the deepening of the St. Lawrence seaway. I understand we pay 40 per cent of the capital cost of building ships in Canadian shipyards. I am not too sure we are not wasting hundreds of millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money in failing to integrate available transportation, putting it on a basis to adequately serve the transportation needs of our people.

Because this is a complex problem there is no ready solution and because it is a long standing one there is no real urgency to it. I would even like to advocate the appointment of a royal commission on transportation but I would urge that it be not limited to dealing with only one aspect of transportation. I believe you cannot isolate one form of public transportation without paying attention to competing forms. This government and governments of the past, I believe, have always made the mistake of limiting the terms of reference of previous royal commissions to only one form of public transportation. You cannot arrive at a solution to the problem of railway transportation unless you have considered all the other forms of transportation available.

I should like to see appointed a royal commission that would, in the first place, assess and receive expert advice on the existing transportation needs of the nation and also the likely future transportation needs for at least the ensuing 20 year period. I should then like to have the commission assess and receive advice on existing facilities in the field of public transportation and on probable future developments in this area. Only when we know our national needs and have received adequate and expert advice on existing and probable future transportation facilities can a national board of transport commissioners advise concerning ways and means of best resolving our problems.

I feel we are indulging in a luxury our country can ill afford. We are subsidizing air lines, the trucking industry, bus lines, railroads and transportation by water all for the rather dubious privilege of maintaining a phony free enterprise system of transportation in Canada. It is not free enterprise in that it is in receipt of subsidies at a tremendous cost to the taxpayer. I feel it is time that we as reasonable men and women examine the whole field of transportation and discontinue our present and past policies of examining only one form of transportation hoping we can resolve the problem by blinding ourselves to the problems and needs of other available modes of transportation.

After all, if we use a dollar of the taxpayers' money to lure a passenger on our air lines we require another dollar of the taxpayers' money to give to the railroad in order to compensate the railroad for this loss of business. Every time we take a ton of freight and subsidize the taking of the ton of freight off our railroads and putting it on to the highways, not only are we obliged to spend the dollar to make possible this transport on the highways but at the end of the year we are also faced with a deficit on the part of the railroads and we are obliged to spend another dollar by way of subsidy to the railroad for loss of business.

I feel that our habit in the past has been most unreasonable; it is not realistic. I believe that half of the money the taxpayer is now spending in subsidies in the field of public transport might be saved. I believe that not only would we end up with more stability, more assurance and more efficiency in the field of transport but that we would save ourselves and the taxpayers a great deal of money for which many more worthy causes exist.

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief and strictly extemporaneous. There are certain advantages to being a backbencher, even a government backbencher, as he on occasion can afford the luxury of integrity or, if you prefer, irresponsibility. I think it is on occasions such as this one that ordinary members can and indeed should speculate on the shape of things to come.

On more than one occasion I have said in this house that this country of ours, this Canada, is a monstrosity. It is a monstrosity in this sense: it was created in defiance of geography and economics. Only our history holds us together. It was the passionate desire of our ancestors to live under the old organic form of life to which they had been accustomed for generations rather than a republican form of government. It was the desire of our French Canadian compatriots not to be submerged and lose their identity in the North American Anglo-Saxon mass. These are the reasons that cause us to continue as a separate country with a separate and unique identity.

Mr. Benidickson: Oh, there were French people here also.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Although we do this we must pay a price for it. Because of current developments throughout the world the question now is whether we are going to be able to continue to pay this price. I think certain modifications, and probably substantial ones, may be necessary. In Canada, of course, it is a commonplace that the thing which basically held our country together originally and which to a large extent does so even today is our transport system, those two bands of steel that have welded us from sea to sea, in contrast to all the geographic lines going north and south. There is the fact that the Saskatchewan prairie farmer and the Montana prairie farmer are subject to the same droughts and the same storms, that in a geographic sense the maritimes are a natural prolongation of the Atlantic seaboard to the south; and so on right across the country. As anyone who is acquainted with that area knows so well, west coast British Columbia, is in many respects much similar to and encounters the same problems as do Washington and Oregon to the south. They both suffer from claustrophobia because they are isolated by the shining mountains.

It is interesting and, in fact, it is very disturbing today, 20 years later, to observe the tremendous contrast between the economies of western Europe and that of North America. One would almost think today that the new world, the world of vitality, the world of growth is in western Europe, whereas North America to a degree, since the artificial prosperity of the post-war period, appears to be in a state of stagnation. One probably valid assessment of the reasons for this situation I ran across the other day in an article by Anthony West in the Saturday Evening Post. I should like to read a couple of paragraphs which I think are most pertinent with reference to the United States and to the comparative slowness of its growth in recent years as compared with the European common market. The article states as follows:

It—

The United States.

—has adopted all the devices beloved of left-wing economists by which the private sector is made to finance state enterprise, the steeply graduated income tax, corporate income tax and capital gains. But while these do inhibit the healthy further progress of private capitalism they don't produce any compensating social benefit because the prevailing devotion to free enterprise prevents the State from making any constructive use of the money.

Then it goes on to state this:

The private capital mopped up by the tax apparatus is squandered as income in the public sector. A grotesque proportion of it is frittered away on three wholly sterile items; paying farmers to grow unsaleable commodities, building unwanted roads and preparing to send cans into outer space.

In our own country the situation differs to a considerable degree. Our farmers, being in the unfortunate position of buying retail and selling wholesale, need every assistance they can get. I think the present government, in comparison with its predecessors has been very much aware of this problem and is showing a continuing awareness of it. Fortunately, we are not obliged to contend with the perhaps quite acute problems of defence with which our neighbours to the south are obliged to contend. However, perhaps one of our most vexed problems today in Canada is that of transportation. It is one of our perennial problems. Railways, although in some ways obsolete, remain essential to Canada. This fact becomes especially evident in times of war. However, it is also obvious that they are being squeezed between competition from air lines and buses for passenger traffic and competition from trucking for freight. Nevertheless, because of our vast distances, they remain essential to the actual survival and operation of our country.

The question is this: how can we make the most efficient use of our transportation system? How can we minimize duplication of services? How can we get the most value for the dollars that our taxpayers spend in all sorts of assistance and subsidies, both open and covered? It seems to me that any time you drive along the highway, especially at certain times of the day, it is almost impossible to do so because of obstruction caused by these huge transports. They cause the greatest wear on our roadbeds. Nevertheless there is, as has been mentioned, this substantial subsidization, although not an obvious one, to the whole trucking industry in that they are not obliged to provide their own roadbeds as the railways do. Again you have the vexed and perennial problem with which we have to contend in Canada, namely that of concurrent jurisdictions as between the provinces and the federal government. It is one that is found in any federal system. But it would seem that possibly the provinces, which have the direct responsibility for highways, might consider further contributions from the trucking industry toward the upkeep of those highways.

I realize that the whole matter of transportation and especially the competing railroads is an inherently and extremely complex and complicated problem with all sorts of nuances and implications, but I believe that ultimately we will be forced, because of increasing expense and increasing demands elsewhere, to consider some sort of rationalization of this system, some sort of integration of our two railway systems either by the government buying out the C.P.R. or selling the C.N.R. to the C.P.R. or to private capital so that the two systems can be incorporated into one rational, serviceable, efficient operation.

Mr. Benidickson: Amalgamation again from a Conservative.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Quite. We know that in earlier days there was almost a mania of building unnecessary and uneconomic lines, many of which were brought into being by Mackenzie, Mann and other Liberal promoters. Finally the situation reached such a state of confusion that the whole system broke down and Mr. Borden's government of that day just about the time of the war crisis was confronted with the possibility of Canada's financial reputation abroad being jeopardized by the threatened bankruptcy of these railways. Faced with this dire situation, in order to protect our credit rating throughout the world we were obliged to amalgamate these inefficient, bankrupt railroads into some form of coherent system.

With the increasing competition that the railways are being confronted with from other forms of transportation in this rapidly changing age, it seems to me that the day may not be too far distant when we must look at the whole situation again, and this time not only the railroads but their competitors, and somehow or other form a rational, integrated system that will best serve the people of Canada with a minimum of unnecessary expenditure and waste.

Mr. Benidickson: Lord Bennett bankrupted the employees.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us suggests that the house should give immediate consideration to the development of a national transportation policy so that the transportation needs of Canada can be met with a minimum degree of subsidization of competing forms of public transport. In my judgment the whole question of a national transportation policy cannot be centred around one single objective, namely to reduce the amount of subsidization of transportation. Indeed, I would suggest that it is not just a question of subsidization out of the public treasury. There may be a great many ways by which subsidization can take place. Freight users in the maritime provinces and freight users in the prairie provinces will say that they have been subsidizing the railways for years by paying unduly high freight rates. Before we agree to take this very simple idea and go forward on this basis, I think we should judge where this kind of policy could lead.

The hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Campbell) talked about the growing competition and then made the rather sweeping suggestion that, at least as far as railway transportation is concerned, there should be an amalgamation of the systems either as a government monopoly or a private monopoly. I think the country is plagued now with too much monopoly without having the suggestion made that by action of this house support should be given either to a public monopoly or a private monopoly in the transportation field.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think I have been misinterpreted. What I was advocating was that the whole transportation system of the country be investigated, not only the two railways but their competitors, and that a thorough study be made of all systems in order to arrive at some sort of rational solution.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a point of order. The record stands. The hon. member made his statement and I think my interpretation of what he said is accurate. He wanted amalgamation of the railways, he said, either by the C.N.R. buying out the C.P.R. or the CP.R. buying out the C.N.R., but whichever way it is done it is a monopoly in the railway business which I think would be a very great mistake at this time. I think it would meet with opposition from the public generally and very strong opposition from the railway employees.

The central theme of this motion is very much the central theme of the second volume of the report of the MacPherson commission on transportation. In very sweeping conclusions the MacPherson commission says in effect, "Let us take off all regulations and controls step by step", but the idea is to take off controls and remove subsidies. Over the years I have seen a transportation policy being developed in this country, inadequate in many ways but being developed, which has had as a very significant part thereof the payment of certain subsidies out of the national treasury of the country as a result of very careful studies having been made by royal commissions in the past, recommendations having been made by those commissions and parliament having acted upon those recommendations.

Mr. Justice Turgeon, at one time chief justice of Saskatchewan, who is an authority in this field, has headed royal commissions in the past and has made very important recommendations. I for one would hate to see the bridge subsidy of $7 million, which helps to carry the traffic between Sudbury and the lakehead, removed. This, of course, is something that would have to be considered under this motion. The member who introduced the motion said that we should be able to save half of the subsidies. I would hate to see action taken to remove this subsidy or even to reduce it by half.

Another recommendation by the MacPherson commission appointed by this government was the removal of part of the subsidy that is being paid within the maritime provinces on freight moved within the Atlantic provinces. I would expect that members from those provinces would need to take a very careful look at this recommendation before they agreed with it.

There is another recommendation in the report that I think members from eastern Canada, certainly rural members, would oppose, and I think they should oppose it. I refer to the recommendation that the $19 million transportation subsidy on feed grain shipped from the prairie provinces to eastern Canada should be removed. I think that would be a step that would cause a great deal of opposition and should not be accepted without question, even though it is recommended by a commission headed by a person of the prominence and ability of M. A. MacPherson.

Another central recommendation is that to aid the railways, they should be allowed to tear up the branch lines in this country and save for themselves the additional moneys that it would cost to operate those branch lines. I believe this is a policy that should be looked at very carefully. I am amazed, Mr. Speaker, and I am disturbed that this particular recommendation, so far as I have been generally able to ascertain, has been accepted even by organizations whose members will be very adversely affected, as something that is inevitable and is going to happen. They seem to say, well, let it. I think before we say, let it happen, we should look at some of the results if it should happen.

Some farm organizations have been interested in this particular question. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture attached appendix D to its brief to the cabinet dealing with this particular part of the recommendations of the MacPherson commission. In addition to saying, let us find out what the railways wish to do and have them divulge their abandonment program at least five years in advance, the main recommendations of the federation are, the need to provide accelerated depreciation on elevator facilities on branch lines that are to be abandoned; the need to provide for the depreciation of the undepreciated value of facilities still there when abandonment takes place, and the need for accelerated depreciation on new facilities to be built because of the abandonment of certain branch lines.

This is, of course, of great importance to the elevator companies and the grain companies that will be affected. My remarks are not in any way critical of the people who put forward these particular proposals. However, I would suggest that the results to the members of these organizations, the farmers who are members of these organizations, will be much more drastic and, in general, much more important than the results to the elevator companies themselves, although these will be of unquestioned importance. People all across this country from one coast to another in these areas served by branch lines have built their businesses, have built their farms, on the basis of railway service coming into their area. If you remove that railway service, you depreciate the value of the businesses that are operated within the towns and depreciate in one stroke, in a very substantial manner, the value of the farm businesses that have been built up over many years.

I suggest that it is the ordinary people, the ordinary freight users, the ordinary citizens that have been forgotten both in the MacPherson report and in this particular resolution. It is these people who will suffer, and suffer very seriously from any wholesale abandonment of either subsidies for transportation or branch line railways. Suppose, for example, a farmer has built his farm business, purchased his land, paid for it and engaged in this operation on the basis of a railway market which is five miles away. Suddenly, overnight the branch line is abandoned and he has to go 50 miles to market. The value of his property is reduced immediately; his transportation costs go up and his profit margin is reduced as well as his standard of living. This is one of the results that will flow from any wholesale implementation of the MacPherson report, namely the transfer of wealth from the ordinary freight users, businessmen, farmers and others, who live in communities surrounding branch lines, into the coffers of the railway company. I suggest that this is something that should be approached very carefully.

Now, I think it is true that one could not advocate that uneconomic branch lines or all uneconomic branch lines should be maintained indefinitely. However, I do suggest the economic results that flow from the abandonment of branch lines should be considered and a policy should be designed to deal with more than accelerated depreciation for the very large business firms connected with the use of these branch lines. I would suggest that there are a number of factors that should be considered whenever a branch line may be abandoned. First of all, the ordinary facilities should be certainly maintained for the people in those areas. Where mail has come by railway, and this happens to a lesser degree every day, the same service should be maintained by truck transportation. I would suggest further that federal action should be taken in co-operation with the provinces and the railway companies to ensure good all-weather highway facilities wherever branch lines are abandoned.

I would suggest further that the government, in addition to considering accelerated depreciation for large businesses should consider a policy which would provide moneys by way of compensation, not only to large business firms but to smaller businesses and to farmers who suffer direct and severe personal financial loss as a result of the abandonment of railway lines. There are a number of ways these payments may be made. Money should go to make certain there are good highway facilities. In so far as grain producers are concerned there might be some compensation in the price paid for the grain to compensate the farmer for having to truck his grain 40 or 50 miles when he has built his business on the basis of a haul of only 5 or 10 miles. This same kind of consideration could be given to the transportation of livestock. It may be possible to provide accelerated depreciation not only to large companies but for the investment of ordinary people themselves. I suggest that over the years subsidies in this country have become an important part of our transportation policy. "Subsidy" should not be considered a bad word.

Who can say what really constitutes a subsidy? There are subsidies that are paid, as I have said earlier, that do not come out of the national treasury. Some members of parliament may be underpaid and some may be overpaid. If some are overpaid, then I suppose that is a type of subsidy.

If some people have to pay unduly high freight rates then that is a type of subsidy to the railroads. The question is whether we can get a national transportation policy that is geared not only to the needs of the railways and the main transportation companies themselves but will provide protection, compensation and a cushioning effect from the economic results that will bring hardship to ordinary citizens when changes of a technological nature are necessary.

This is not a new concept. We have had other legislation which says that certain areas are depressed and that certain action will be taken by the government to assist in maintaining or establishing industries in them. All I am saying is that we should not accept this motion precisely as it stands now, nor should we accept the recommendations contained in the MacPherson royal commission report without making certain that within our national transportation policy there is a real degree of equity not only for the transportation companies involved but, of even more importance, for the ordinary citizens who must use these very necessary facilities.

Mr. Morris: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question which is not of an antagonistic nature? I hope to participate in this debate later as a private member, but the hon. gentleman spoke of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the 20 per cent internal subvention on goods moving within the maritimes area. I wonder has he a view as to whether it would be better to continue that subsidy, that subvention, internally within the Maritime Freight Rates Act territory or take that subvention and apply it in the form of a new subvention to the products of secondary industries leaving the region and going outside it.

Mr. Argue: I think we should be careful not to abandon what is already there. Of course the freight rates act provides for a subsidy going outside the provinces, and my initial request would be to let us give the maritimes a greater benefit in toto instead of cutting off some of the benefit they now have.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Would the hon. gentleman permit another question? I am just wondering where he got his indoctrination in Gladstonian Liberalism.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Any intelligent man who reads can get it.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): The resolution before us takes in a tremendous amount of territory and I shall try to confine my remarks to a small part of it, as otherwise I am afraid it would take a very long speech to touch on all it contains. First of all, I am impressed with the thought that the wording of the resolution gives another indication of the opinion we often receive from the socialist corner of the house, that all that is needed is more and more government control in order to take care of some of the financial difficulties which industries might suffer from in this country.

My first reaction to the resolution is one of extreme caution that we are again being asked to do even more planning with regard to the transportation industry, which is perhaps the biggest business we have. It touches every phase of life and it embraces the field of public transport, private transport, indeed all methods of transportation. It perhaps involves more expenditure of money than any other single industry we can name, and to suggest that we should have a national transportation policy is taking in a great deal of territory.

The hon. member who introduced the motion mentioned only public transport, but his resolution is very wide, covering as it does "the transportation needs of Canada". I do not say that there has to be less subsidization but I would point out that the more government interferes, and the more direction government tries to give to developing the various transportation facilities, then the greater is the response of industry saying "Well, you have regulated, now you support it." Therefore we cannot have more direction from the government without considering responsibility for the costs entailed in the service.

For instance, I know that in the field of air industry the general policy of the air transport board is to select areas in which carriers are to operate, the theory being that there is only so much business, that it is a very expensive business to enter, and that if the potential business in an area is not carefully guarded it will not be possible for any carrier to make money. An area would be broken up so much that it would result in poor equipment, poor safety standards and poor service.

However it has been my experience that sometimes the board in pressing that policy reaches the point where, in its anxiety to make sure that the air industry is itself healthy, it forgets that the ultimate policy of a healthy air industry is to serve the needs of the community and area in which a particular company is operating. This same policy and thinking can be applied to all branches of transportation.

I know that provincial governments in considering such things as bus transportation within the provinces have had to make a choice between private competition, public ownership and regulated private competition. The only method I think we can adopt as an assured guide for making sure that we do not have to subsidize is to make positive that we get efficiency, and one of the best regulators of efficiency is private competition.

We find that wherever the government steps in and regulates competition there is some risk of a lack of efficiency, or it may have to regulate competition by setting up a monopoly with an arrangement to regulate the price so that the people who are using the service will not be overcharged.

In the province of Alberta the bus operators come under the supervision of the vehicle highway traffic board. Each bus operator is given a franchise to a certain route, and rates on passengers and freight are strictly controlled and regulated. I think it should be pointed out that this is an entirely artificial method of finding costs. It is true that the government could look at the financial returns of a company and if it finds the company is making too much money there might be some basis for believing that the costs were too high. On the other hand, if the company is losing money it might be just as true to say the costs are too high because it is much too inefficient.

The only point I am striving to make is that effectively regulated enterprise is one of the best means of ensuring the saving of money which will cut down on subsidization, but with greater efficiency there will be less cost to the taxpayer.

I could touch for a moment on some of the difficulties which, even if the government decided it has a good method of figuring out costs, could be troublesome, especially when you have two different types of industry competing with each other. It is then very difficult to find out what are costs, how much is subsidy, and which industry is efficient. Of these I suggest the most obvious are the railroad and trucking industries.

In the north of Canada we have quite a bit of discussion as to whether or not aeroplanes can compete with barges. There are such factors to be considered as winter stockpiling, where a barge can haul a much greater load, but the value of your money is tied up in a year's inventory as compared with the initial cost of an airplane, the landing strip for it, the relatively high unit cost, but greater turnover of capital.

I suggest that if we are to adopt a national transportation policy all of these factors, as wide ranging as the size of an inventory which it is best for a merchant in Aklavik or Inuvik to keep on hand, the size of an aeroplane to be used to service the Yukon territory, whether it is better to use a barge on the Mackenzie river, all the way down to how much of a subsidy it is when a provincial government builds a highway for a truck to operate and really pay as compared with a railway, must be considered. It may be said, I suppose truthfully, by proponents of this resolution that the present subsidization is really a hit or miss affair or at best sort of a spotting of areas of trouble.

The object of the government, of course, is first to make sure that the service is supplied to the public. I would suggest that where the service is really needed and where people are given enough scope, private enterprise has enough ingenuity to find a way to give them that service at a reasonable cost and make a profit. I would therefore just like to add a note of caution; that we by all means try to avoid regulation which is going to discourage our private enterprise transportation people from giving us the benefit of their wisdom and experience and being able to take care of many of these problems which otherwise would be sloughed off on to eager government shoulders.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal, not as parliamentary secretary but as one of the Atlantic provinces 33 members of parliament, with one particular aspect of the motion before the house. What is asked in the motion is a minimum degree of subsidization of competing forms of public transport.

We maritimers are understandably sensitive about transportation. We had historic pledges that our transportation services would be preserved to us and that, more particularly, the Intercolonial Railway would not be measured in economic terms alone. If it were to be measured in economic terms alone, it ought first of all to be taken up and relocated. The present Canadian National Railways route between Halifax and Montreal follows a course of scenic beauty, but none the less one which was intended to secure it far enough north to inhibit nocturnal raids by intransigent Yankees from New England. Consequently whenever it is suggested that transportation services be put on another basis, that they not be subsidized or that they be put on economic terms alone, maritimers are apt to be sensitive.

In the brief time permitted me in this debate I want to speak about that aspect which has to do with the recommendations of the MacPherson report. In so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, it is evident that the recommendations of the MacPherson royal commission, if implemented in whole or in substantial part, would have a very far reaching effect upon the economy of our region and upon our people.

The principal recommendations of the MacPherson royal commission in respect of the Atlantic provinces seem to me to be these. First, the report recommends that the 20 per cent Maritime Freight Rates Act subvention now paid on rail shipments moving within the Maritime Freight Rates Act territory—which is to say, the four Atlantic provinces and that part of the province of Quebec lying east of Levis and Diamond, south of the St. Lawrence river—be removed except in so far as it applies to, from and within Newfoundland.

The commission's rationale for recommending the removal of this inside assistance seems to be this, at least in part:

> We are convinced that the development of the trucking industry in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island has now, in spite of the handicap, progressed to the point where the withdrawal of the subvention on intramaritime shipments will in general bring rail rates to a level which is favourable to the encouragement of traffic. The consequent shift of resources from rail to non-rail investment will be in response to demand for that service from shippers.

Continuing the quotation from the MacPherson report:

> The commission is not unmindful of some of the disturbances in shipping patterns which may be created, should parliament decide to amend the Maritime Freight Rates Act by eliminating the payment of the 20 per cent subvention on shipments solely within select territory.

Mr. Speaker, time will not permit me to develop the theme which I wish to develop on this removal coupled with the recommendation that the outside subvention be sustained. This suggestion that the internal subvention of 20 per cent be now removed is one which is receiving the closest consideration of the maritime transportation commission, the governments, industry and all our people. The question which I asked the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) dwells with us; whether it might now be better to sustain this recommendation and remove that internal subvention and apply it as a new subvention, over and above the 30 per cent outside subvention, to the products of secondary industry in our region moving beyond the region.

Mr. Speaker, I see that it is six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I assume we are going on with the supplementary estimates tomorrow.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and with rapidity and relevance.

Mr. Pickersgill: The relevance I can assure the minister there will be from this side.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 29, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE CORPORATION—TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT AND FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the house that today I have tabled with the Clerk of the house the annual report and financial statements of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation for the year ended December 31, 1961, in English and in French.

Hon. members will recall that when the amendment to this act was under discussion I undertook to table certain information. As recorded on page 909 of Hansard for February 15, I stated:

> The specific commodities in each case are not available for the moment. They will become available when the annual report of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation is made, I believe early next month. At that time the complete list of commodities will be made available.

In accordance with that promise, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the attached list be published as an appendix to Hansard today.

Mr. Speaker: May I inquire whether the document the minister wishes to table is filed pursuant to statutory authority or pursuant to the minister's undertaking?

Mr. Hees: Both, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In so far as the document is covered only by the minister's undertaking, has the minister leave to table the document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed also that the document be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to above, see appendix.]

IMMIGRATION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN FAMILY ASSISTANCE TO CHILDREN

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that effective April 1, 1962 the monthly rate of family assistance paid by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to children under 16 years of age admitted or readmitted to Canada for permanent residence will be brought into line with the rate of family allowances paid to the children of other residents of Canada. After April 1 immigrant children up to the age of 10 will receive an allowance of $6 and those from 10 to 16, $8 per month during their first year of residence in Canada. After one year they become eligible for the regular family allowances paid by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

It is felt that, in justice, immigrant families should be entitled to the same social benefits as other residents of Canada. It is estimated that approximately 25 per cent of the immigrants are children under 16 years of age.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I am naturally very gratified that the policy which I was able to persuade my colleagues to institute when I was minister has commended itself so much to the minister that she has made this amelioration in it. I only wish that the flow of immigrant children that this country was able to absorb when I was minister could continue today.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Without being ridiculous about it, Mr. Speaker, I only wish to associate this group with the remarks made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to the effect that this is a laudable course to take. I wish, too, that perhaps a good many of the native Indian children in the country who find equal difficulty—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSION ADJUSTMENT ACT

EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION TO INCLUDE PROVIDENT FUND PENSIONERS

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland) moved for leave to introduce a bill to amend the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act (to include provident fund pensioners).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Creaghan: Mr. Speaker, the provident fund act was passed in 1907 to permit public servants employed by government owned and operated railways to contribute to a pension plan. The fund is administered by a board of five directors, one of whom is the regional manager of the C.N.R., two are appointed by the Minister of Transport and two are elected annually by the employees. The secretary is appointed by order in council. The board meets regularly at the fund's headquarters in Moncton.

As of the end of 1958 provident fund pensions were paid by Department of Transport cheques to 4,013 retired employees, and at that date there were still 1,941 employees in active service and contributing to the fund. The figures are smaller today. The fund is subsidized by the Canadian National and by annual vote of the Department of Transport. This year's vote is No. 120 under the heading pensions-railway employees provident fund.

The existing legislation appears to include provident fund pensioners. This amendment will simply clarify the point and make certain that those retired public servants can come under the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act passed in this house in 1959.

Mr. Speaker: Before placing this motion before the house I wonder whether the hon. member who proposes it could satisfy the house that the bill does not involve the expenditure of public funds. It appears on its face, if it is effective, to extend the number of ex-employees who would secure benefits under the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act, and certainly those adjusted benefits involve the expenditure of public funds. Without saying more than that, perhaps the hon. member has thought about this question and may have the answer to the difficulty I feel is inherent in the bill.

Mr. Creaghan: I have given some consideration to this technicality. It seems to me that the resolution introduced in 1959 by the Minister of Finance, and the legislation passed, were broad enough to include this group of public servants. The schedule to the act, paragraph 10, contains the same words as are in the explanatory notes to my bill that the adjustment could be paid to people who in the opinion of treasury board were in receipt of pension "calculated on the basis of length of service".

I believe that the legislation already passed is broad enough to include this group, but I have ascertained that treasury board has not seen fit to so include them. When I voted for the bill in 1959 I thought the provident fund pensioners were included. As Your Honour will recall, it includes members of the armed forces, retired federal civil servants and members of the R.C.M.P. who, like provident fund pensioners prior to 1922 when the C.N.R. came into existence, were contributing to a government pension or superannuation.

I feel I am not asking this parliament to vote money. I want the previous legislation clarified and, second, I would point out that the bill I am introducing today does not say that parliament shall vote the funds. It simply says "if in the opinion of treasury board," which means parliament will not be deciding, but treasury board will.

Mr. Hellyer: Abrogation of responsibility.

Mr. Creaghan: If Your Honour looks at the explanatory notes accompanying the bill, although I presume it has not been distributed as yet, you will see it is very much in line with a bill already introduced in this current session without a resolution.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): On a point of order, the hon. member who has introduced this bill should advise the house whether he has contacted the government and received the approval of the government. We are not against the principle of the bill, but it is a decision to be taken by the government.

Mr. Creaghan: I would like to speak to the point of order. As a member of parliament interested in the railway workers of this country, I have been in continuous contact with the government on this point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order.

Mr. Creaghan: However, I did not in any way contact anyone on the treasury benches concerning this bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government should adopt this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The point in issue is not whether the hon. member has asked the government to bring in this bill. The fact is that the government has not brought it in. If it is a bill requiring the expenditure of money, it can only be introduced in this house by resolution sponsored by the government.

Mr. Hellyer: Let the Prime Minister introduce it as a government bill.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether any hon. member wishes to add something further to what has been said, but I have a fairly definite view that this is a money bill and it is my duty not to accept it.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): May I with respect, Mr. Speaker, suggest that possibly the best thing to do would be, without prejudice, to allow the bill to be introduced and distributed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Fulton: —and at that time, before it is called for further debate, it could be considered. If it is then found to be a bill that does require a resolution, it seems to me it would be within Your Honour's power to order it withdrawn from the order paper. But I think it would be difficult to ask us, and I think difficult to ask Your Honour, to reach a decision on a point of that sort without having seen the bill.

I would only like to add that the doctrine just put forward by the hon. member for Gloucester is to my mind the most extraordinary I have heard in this house, namely that the consent of the government should be obtained before a private member introduces a private bill.

Mr. Hees: That is the way they did it.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the decision you have made is the right one, that this bill should be withdrawn from the order paper and reintroduced by the government as a government bill.

Mr. Speaker: The latter part of the argument of the Leader of the Opposition is not for me to deal with at the moment. I think perhaps the suggestion made by the Minister of Justice is the proper course to adopt. I have a fairly definite view now, but as an issue has been raised, without opportunity for hon. members to consider whether I am correct in thinking that this bill does involve the expenditure of money and therefore should be preceded by a resolution, it might be left so that there would be an opportunity to review the matter, on the understanding that when the bill again comes before the house the issue will be determined. Then if I come to the conclusion, or retain the opinion, that it is a bill involving an appropriation of funds, it is my duty to direct that the bill be withdrawn and that it shall not be proceeded with. I think that is clear. I refer hon. members to Beauchesne, fourth edition, citation 250 which reads, in the fourth paragraph:

> "If any motion, or bill, or proceeding is offered to be moved, whether in the house or in a committee, which requires, but fails to receive, the recommendation of the crown, it is the duty of the Chair to announce that no question can be proposed upon the motion, or to direct the withdrawal of the bill".

I think the preferable course would be to stand the motion and deal with it at a subsequent sitting, rather than to have it remain on the order paper.

Mr. Creaghan: Mr. Speaker, may I just say one word on your ruling. Could I not introduce the bill and personally undertake to withdraw it if it is ruled to be a money bill?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. member's interest in this matter but he would gain no advantage by having the bill on the order paper—and it would complicate the order paper to have it there—and then for me to direct its withdrawal. Therefore with the leave of the house I shall direct that the bill stand until Monday. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RAILWAY ENGINEERS—INQUIRY AS TO COST OF STRIKE SETTLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether he can tell the house what is the estimated cost to the railways of the settlement which they made with the engineers?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not as yet received the full report on the settlement; I have been informed that there are still a number of small items to be ironed out. Consequently I am unable to give any estimate of the cost of the settlement because of the fact that I have not received all the details of that settlement.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I ask the Minister of Transport if he could inform the house what would be the estimated cost of Canadian National Railways share of this settlement?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would give the same answer as my colleague the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Chevrier: May I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him if the amount which is represented by this settlement will be obtained on behalf of the railways and, more particularly, on behalf of the Canadian National Railways by an application to the board of transport commissioners for an increase in freight rates, as the Prime Minister indicated in his speech in November, 1960 in connection with this matter, or whether an estimate by way of a subsidy will be introduced by the government to provide payment thereof.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): When a determination of the amount has been made, the government will be in a position to advise the house concerning the course which will be taken to meet the situation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

PUBLICITY GIVEN TO NEW REGULATIONS RESPECTING SKILLED WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of newspaper reports that little publicity is being given to the relaxed admission requirements for skilled immigrants, would the minister inform the house what action she is taking to ensure that people are informed of, and understand, the latest regulations?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I saw the article referred to in this morning's press, and I should like to say that there is no truth whatever in the suggestion that the immigration department is deliberately holding back on publicizing the recent changes in the immigration regulations, as was said in that article.

When the changes were announced in the house on January 19 last, full publicity was given to them in the press and through the news media both in Canada and overseas. Copies of the new regulations and information pertaining to them were distributed immediately to the ethnic press in Canada. There has been wide editorial and news comment on the new regulations.

In addition we have supplied all our immigration offices overseas, all our Canadian diplomatic missions abroad, and British consular authorities who act for us in other places with full information in respect of the new regulations and how we expect them to operate. This information is available to any and all who may be interested. We have provided information through established diplomatic channels here in Ottawa to all governments which have expressed an interest. We have supplemented the written information with discussions in a good many instances with representatives of India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Japan, to give but a few examples.

We have not, of course, inserted paid advertisements in the press overseas or gone on radio or television in foreign countries. That has never been the policy of the government or of the department. Moreover, many overseas governments exercise very firm control over the types and amounts of publicity relating to immigration which they will permit within their jurisdictions. But it is nonsense to suggest that publicity relating to the new regulations is being deliberately held back.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Can the hon. lady say whether there has been any increase in the staff of any of the immigration offices in order to deal with the additional applicants resulting from the less stringent regulations, and whether any new offices have been opened anywhere?

Mrs. Fairclough: The answer to that question is no. During consideration of the estimates last year, I think, someone asked me whether we had decreased the overseas staff. The answer to that question was no. We expect that the existing staff will be adequate to handle the increased flow. However, we do anticipate that there may be additional countries to which it will be necessary to supply staff, possibly, in the first instance, in the form of travelling teams. The hon. member is familiar with that procedure. If there is sufficient flow from any country to warrant the opening of an office, that may well have to be considered as the need arises.

Although I told the hon. member yesterday that it was as yet too early to expect any actual entries into Canada, I might say that the increase in interest abroad and in applications from abroad has been pronounced since February 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might be permitted to ask the hon. lady another supplementary question. Can she say whether the department has sent any officials to the British West Indies, or whether such action is contemplated?

Mrs. Fairclough: When any decisions are made along those lines they will be announced.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF MEAT INSPECTION SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I wish to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the parliamentary secretary in a position to indicate to the house that the government is prepared to take any steps to expand or increase its meat inspection services?

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): The answer to the question is yes. A considerable number of meat plants have applied recently to have their operations brought under the federal meat inspection service. In order to provide the staff required for this service the department has been authorized to increase its establishment by 41 positions of meat inspection assistant and 11 positions of veterinarians.

TRANSPORT

WELLAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Since navigation is due to open on the Welland canal this week end, can the minister say whether the government has reached any decision regarding the abolition of tolls on that canal?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): As I said earlier, if and when a decision on this matter is taken by the government it will be announced in the house.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM—REPORTED MOVEMENT INTO NORTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of recent press speculation about a subject which has generated a large number of letters directed to me from the people of the Yukon, can the minister assure the people in the Yukon territory that the conjecture that the Doukhobors, Sons of Freedom sect, are going to be moved into areas of the north, including Yukon and Northwest Territories, is unfounded?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, what may be the thoughts of those who have suffered as a result of the activities of these people as to where they should be sent, I am unable to say. However, I can assure my hon. friend that whatever area they might wish them consigned to, there has been no consideration given to that suggestion by this government.

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SECOND NATIONAL MICROWAVE SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the house whether Canadian National Railways has reached an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway to construct a joint microwave communications link across Canada? If so, what is the Canadian National Railway's share of the cost?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): A statement was made to the press the other day by the presidents of the two railways, making their intention to proceed with the building of a microwave system across Canada at a cost of $38 million, to be shared evenly between the two railway companies.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—REQUEST FOR FINANCING OF EXISTING HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In his absence perhaps I could direct it to the acting minister. Has the minister seen the article in the March 23 issue of the Financial Post under the heading "Mortgages Merit Very Close Look" which states as follows:

> The difficulty in financing older homes is one reason for the unnecessary decay of the heartland of our cities.

Will the minister comment on that article, or say whether the government is giving any consideration to the subject matter?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Public Works): I have not seen the article in question. When I see it I will have it looked into and will indicate whether there is any fact on which the conclusions of the article can be justified.

REPORTED DECLINE IN STARTS IN FEBRUARY 1962

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Public Works): Yesterday the hon. member for Nipissing asked me a question which I took as notice. He referred to the current housing program and made particular reference to limited dividend loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

At the present time C.M.H.C. is negotiating with limited dividend companies toward the approval of 44 limited dividend projects, comprising 2,544 housing units, for total loans of $16,500,000. It is likely that these negotiations will result in firm applications for limited dividend loans during the next few months.

The hon. member also asked me about housing starts in February this year as compared with those in February 1961. As to the rate of starts for February, I should like to point out that, seasonally adjusted, this represented an annual rate of 95,400 for urban centres of 5,000 and over, little changed from the January rate or, indeed, from the average rate in 1961.

I think hon. members will recall that in December, 1960 the down payment requirements for housing were lowered, and this action resulted in a higher than usual number of starts in the following January and February, with the result that the starts for February this year are down, as the hon. member said, 16 per cent as compared with starts for 1961.

Mr. Garland: I wish to thank the minister. I wonder whether he could say with respect to the first question that he answered for yesterday, why no loans were approved in the limited dividend field in February.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I do not know of any particular reason. I think it is not intentional. As I said, 44 projects are being negotiated at the present time. It would appear that it just happened that during that month no contracts were entered into.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister say whether an under secretary of state has been appointed? If so, what is his name?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): An appointment has been recommended. However, it requires the approval of the Governor General, and I hope to be able to answer the question tomorrow.

TRANSPORTATION

ROYAL COMMISSION—IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of the undertaking given by the Prime Minister in November, 1960 with reference to the royal commission on transportation, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to implement any of the recommendations of the commission as contained in either volume 1 or volume 2 at this session of parliament.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman, having at one time been a minister of the crown, realizes that questions such as that are answered when the government is in a position to do so. If the opposition will only get along with the supplementary estimates and get them passed we can deal with other matters.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize that they do not like this, Mr. Speaker. If they will get along with the passing of the supplementary estimates we shall then be in a position to deal with some of these matters that ought to be dealt with. However, altogether too much time is being spent on repetition, thereby denying the government the opportunity of bringing in legislation which it desires to bring in.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Is the Prime Minister telling us that in order for the government to do its job we must refrain from doing ours?

Mr. Speaker: Order. While it is in order to discuss the business of the house, I think it would not be in order to debate how it should be conducted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I agree with that statement. The answer is obvious. If the hon. gentleman were here, possibly there would be more expedition in dealing with these matters.

Mr. Pearson: May I remind the Prime Minister that no member of the government except the house leader was here during the discussion of the estimates yesterday. Neither the Prime Minister nor any of his colleagues was here.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of his belated but undoubtedly real interest in the dispatch of public business, can he tell us when we may expect at least one report from one of the 13 royal commissions now touring the country?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will look back over the period when he was on the treasury benches he will find out about the number of royal commissions.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the number of royal commissions was approximately the same for a comparable period and some took longer to report than those now operative.

Mr. Chevrier: It did not take two years to bring in legislation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are getting the latest Gordon report every week.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister obviously did not hear my question, and I wonder if he would be good enough to answer it.

Mr. Hees: He did not miss a thing.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HOCKEY—REQUEST FOR FULL COVERAGE OF TORONTO PLAY-OFF GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Cathers (York North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I regret I have not sent him notice. In the interests of several million spectators in the Toronto area who are interested in watching the Toronto Maple Leafs win the Stanley cup, will he do what he can with the C.B.C. so that these millions may see the whole game and not just half of it?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I am glad to know that the Toronto area now has so many millions, which I presume makes more difficult of achievement the prophecy I made the other day of Sydney, Nova Scotia some time equalling that population. Nevertheless, I am sure all hon. members would like to see more publicity given to the Maple Leafs, as well as to the Canadiens, but under the practice which has prevailed for the last nine years these teams will have to first win the semi-finals in which they are now engaged—perhaps prayers to that end will be rewarded—and having achieved that objective the C.B.C. will cover each of the final games in its entirety.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—CONFERENCE OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has anything further to report on the proposal for a meeting of the commonwealth prime ministers.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Heath was here a few days ago I again emphasized the necessity of there being a prime ministers' conference before a final determination is made by the United Kingdom on entering into the common market. As I recall, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom earlier today was asked in the House of Commons about this matter. He said, as I read the report of his statement, that before this decision is made, inasmuch as the question of commonwealth trade is so important to the economic life of the members of the commonwealth, the subject would be discussed in a prime ministers' conference and, furthermore, that within a week or two he might be in a position to make an announcement.

The determination as to the date of a prime ministers' conference is, of course, always difficult. There are all the various eventualities that arise, and there are circumstances peculiar to one or more of the countries. All these things have to be taken into consideration even after acceptance of the principle before a definite date can be fixed.

BRIDGES

JACQUES CARTIER AND VICTORIA BRIDGES, MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO TOLL CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could he acquaint the house with the latest developments concerning the federal government's intention of removing the tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been in communication with the provincial government so that a meeting could be arranged between the chairman of the national harbours board, the assistant deputy minister of transport, the provincial government's representative and the deputy minister of the provincial department of highways, to discuss conditions concerning the federal government's intention of removing the tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges, in Montreal.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Pursuant to the question which was just directed to the minister, may I ask him whether the Champlain bridge will be discussed during the talks he mentioned a while ago?

If not, could he tell us if he has made up his mind to levy tolls on that bridge after it is officially opened?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the talks which will be held next Tuesday will bear exclusively on the question of tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges. As far as the Champlain bridge is concerned, there is no change for the time being in the plans to charge tolls on that bridge. In that, we are following the policy adopted by our predecessors.

Mr. H. Pit Lessard (St. Henry): Has there been an exchange of correspondence or notes between the city of Montreal and the minister concerning the question of toll-collector bridges?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Johnson: Further to the question asked by the hon. member for St. Henry, could the minister give us a definition of a toll-collector bridge?

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

REPORTED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES OF DEVELOPMENT AND ENGINEERING BRANCH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Levis asked me the following question which I took as notice:

Can the minister explain the sudden lay-off at the beginning of the construction season of a considerable number of the members of the staff of the development and engineering branch of the department?

I am able to inform the house that there has been no sudden lay-off of construction staff of the development and engineering branch of the Department of Public Works. It may be that the hon. member noted that 25 vacant positions in the establishment of the branch were deleted during the present year and do not appear in the 1962-63 estimates. These positions were provided in the establishment for this branch some years ago when the extent of its program was not definitely known, but they were never filled. The positions have therefore been deleted.

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is the minister able to say that no employees of that branch have received letters informing them that they will be laid off at the end of this month?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes. I think what the hon. member has reference to is the fact that four technical officers employed in the Atlantic provinces will be laid off effective March 31. This has resulted from a reduced requirement for staff due to the approaching completion of certain federal road construction in the maritime provinces. I might add that three of these members of the staff have been offered employment in other localities in Canada but have declined this offer.

675. Departmental administration—further amount required, $77,500.

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned yesterday, I was saying that the government resorted to all possible publicity to praise certain measures it had implemented. Now, I shall tell you about the pitiful situation of the dairy industry.

There are 350,000 dairy farmers in Canada and 100,000 in the province of Quebec alone. That is why, of course, I made those few remarks yesterday and I should like to proceed along that line today.

While in 1957, every Canadian consumed an average of 1,021 pounds of dairy products, that figure fell to 940 pounds in 1960, and there is every indication that the consumption of those products is still decreasing.

Three years ago, Canada was the fourth highest consumer of dairy products in the world and it was only the sixth in 1960.

If you refer to La Presse of February 21, 1962, under the heading "Lowest farm income since 1957", you can read the following:

Net farm income, in 1961, including changes in stocks of grain and livestock, amounted to some $1,006 million, a decrease of 24 per cent from the adjusted estimate of 1960 ($1,319,600,000) and the lowest income since 1957 ($1,058,300,000).

Well, I think we are justified, Mr. Chairman, in regretting the government's attitude towards agriculture.

Recently, we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) stating on television that he would rely on his own record in the next election. I wonder whether the Prime Minister did not wish to compare his own record with that of the American cosmonaut.

Of course the American cosmonaut was in orbit three hours and some odd minutes, while the Prime Minister has been in orbit for four and a half years. Maybe that is why he cannot see the domestic problems.

As for his record, he should not forget that the capsule holding the American cosmonaut has been recovered, while his own not only has not been recovered but is not recoverable, and it will land in opposition on election night.

Mr. Pigeon: You have a leader—

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take advantage of this item, departmental administration, to deal very briefly with the policy of the party we represent in respect of agriculture. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance is looking askance at me, but I am quite in order and I shall be as brief as possible.

Everyone here who thinks at all about the development of our economy gives some consideration to the necessity for planning, whether it is in the field of agriculture, in the field of industry or in other aspects of our economy, and recognizes that major planning must take place. Some want this planning under the auspices of the large corporations, others want it under government auspices, and others want it from other directions. However, I believe this principle is generally accepted in our modern society.

There are different approaches toward planning. I would say that in so far as planning for agriculture is concerned—I intend to use agricultural terms—the attitude of the Progressive Conservatives is one of somewhat laying back on the breeching; so far as the Liberals are concerned I would say they are pawing the ground, and so far as the New Democratic party is concerned I would say they are leaning forward and straining in the collar. In case some of our suburbanite representatives do not understand that language and are not acquainted with horses, possibly I should put it in other terms. I should say that members on the government side are inclined to have their foot on the brake; members of the official opposition have their feet on the floor, and members of the New Democratic party are stepping on the accelerator. I think in general that fairly describes the approach toward planning of the various groups in this house, and toward agricultural planning in particular.

If I might digress for a moment I might say that I am delighted to see the hon. member for Cariboo listening intently, as he always does during the discussion of agricultural subjects. I wish to give the house of piece of interesting information, of which perhaps it has not been aware before. The hon. member for Cariboo, I understand, is a graduate of the Red Star livery grain and feed stable, and he could write a thesis on "The horses I have known". I am glad to see the hon. member here today.

I do want to say a few words about our policy. First of all, let it be clearly understood that the members of this party are firm supporters of the economic family farm unit. We believe in the dignity of the individual, and we believe this is one way of maintaining it in this country. We believe in the very definite values of rural life which are being discarded in many quarters today for a less satisfactory way of life. We believe that the family farm could be and should be an economic production unit, and could be made so at the present time by each farmer having the necessary acreage of good land, the necessary machinery and the requisite skill in management. We also believe this way of life provides the opportunity to practice democratic planning and in so doing derive the benefits of the application of the principles of the mixed economy in which we believe.

There is a great opportunity here for the practice of these principles in our country life. It gives the opportunity for federal and provincial governments to plan, first of all, for conservation of our soil, forest and water resources in relation to agriculture. It gives the opportunity for planning in respect of research, which is very necessary and should be greatly increased. There should be more research in respect of production, and further research in respect of marketing. It gives also the opportunity for planning in respect of marketing legislation on both the federal and provincial levels. It gives the opportunity for planning a sound crop insurance scheme applicable to all branches of agriculture from the Atlantic to the Pacific. As a result of co-operation between federal and provincial governments the foundation in principle has been laid in the legislation passed by the house, but we believe it has to have wider application and apply to larger groups of people if the premiums are going to be such that the average farmer can pay them.

Now, the idea of the family farm unit also provides the opportunity for the development of co-operative ownership and, shall I say, the co-operative philosophy of life which has been so well illustrated in some Scandinavian and other western European countries. We could develop the co-operative ownership of processing plants and packing plants, as they are doing in the fruit industry. We could develop co-operative ownership of farm machinery where the investment is too large for a single farmer. This is happening in my own constituency, where fruit growers while owning some equipment, other expensive and heavy equipment is owned co-operatively. The co-operative packing house purchases it and it is owned co-operatively but used individually. This is another field that can be very well developed.

Then we have the development of farmers marketing in co-operation with federal and provincial planning and marketing boards. It also provides the opportunity for the government to co-operate even more closely than they do today with the farm organizations of this country. Finally, although we require this planning at federal and provincial levels and this extension of co-operative ownership in the ways I have mentioned, at the foundation we have the private ownership of the land by the farmer himself.

We believe that our program does provide the opportunity to practise the principles of the mixed economy in the co-operation of the farmers and their organizations. We believe that development along these lines will provide basic security and maintain freedom, as well as lay the material foundation on which we can build a civilization that will provide the opportunity for the development of what I would term a genuine spiritual and cultural life.

Having dealt very briefly with the sort of over-all philosophy of our approach to agricultural policies and planning, I want to bring to the attention of the house the program for which this party stands, on what may be the last occasion before the advent of the day which, from our respective positions, we all look forward to or otherwise. The family farm is the basic unit of agricultural production and a desirable institution of our society. New Democratic objectives for agriculture are maximum food production for Canada and a hungry world, and effective marketing machinery to ensure fair and reasonable farm income.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, is this a debate on an estimate or an enunciation of a political party platform?

Mr. Herridge: This is a debate on the administration estimate of the Department of Agriculture, and it has always been the accepted practice that we can deal with policy on this occasion. If the hon. gentleman is getting restless I can assure him that I am not going to speak at great length, because in this party we are in the habit of putting good things in small compass.

We believe that we must free the farmer from the effects of the cost-price squeeze, and that we must lower farm production costs by ending monopoly control over farm machinery, fertilizers, chemicals and other supplies. We also believe in the extension of long term loans at low interest; and to offset the adverse effects of vertical integration of farm processes by private companies we believe assistance should be given to farmers to build co-operatives for processing and marketing their own farm produce.

Our party will assure producers of sufficient marketing power by (a) development of federal producer marketing boards to co-ordinate the work of provincial marketing boards; (b) encouragement of co-operative and publicly sponsored facilities for storing, processing and distributing farm products; (c) development of programs to increase domestic levels of consumption; (d) distribution of surplus food to the needy of other lands in such a way as to avoid economic dislocation, and support for the establishment of a world food bank; (e) vigorous and imaginative efforts to sell surplus products such as wheat, including the acceptance of part payment in sterling or currencies of other countries, long-term commodity agreements, credit arrangements, barter and other bilateral trade agreement; and (f), giving the wheat board permanent status.

I place this on the record as a brief summary of our policy, and with these few remarks I urge the government to consider this policy prior to the election period to see if it can embrace this policy which is the result of the thinking of farm organizations in co-operation with many segments of agriculture across Canada, and is the result of the experience and research of hon. members in this house and people from all parts of Canada.

Mr. Argue: This discussion has developed into a very general consideration of rather broad agricultural questions. We have just listened to a statement by my good friend the hon. member for Kootenay West in which he said many things with which I am sure all hon. members are in wholehearted agreement.

The agricultural industry of this country is based on the family farm, and in my judgment anything which interferes with that unit as the basis of agriculture is not only against the interests of agriculture but is against the general interests of the people. We have heard a great deal about vertical integration and I am afraid we shall hear a great deal more bout it in the future. Policies and action must be forthcoming to arrest a trend which I am sure all those interested in the agricultural industry must fear. That trend is the encroachment of large corporations in a field of production which better serves the nation in the control and ownership of the farm family.

Steps will have to be taken to remove some of the heavy burdens that fall on agricultural producers. One of the burning issues, so far as agriculture is concerned in every province and municipality, is the very rapidly growing taxation burden on farm property, and this taxation burden is one of the costs which help drive the agricultural industry into vertical integration.

The Liberal party has given a great deal of thought to an agricultural program. Certain aspects of its program have already been made public, and further important, far reaching and advantageous planks in the Liberal platform will be made public in the days and weeks ahead. One of the things which is already public information is the policy of providing loans to municipalities at reasonable rates of interest in order to provide them with credit facilities which are not now available to them for undertaking the essential work that is part of municipal government.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, the hon. member is discussing provincial and municipal policy—

Mr. Argue: No, no.

Mr. Brunsden: —which has no point in this discussion. May I suggest that the hon. member is going entirely beyond the scope of the debate and should keep his remarks related to agriculture in Canada.

Mr. Argue: Another important national plank has to do with the provision of crop insurance. The present government has a so-called crop insurance program which is not working across the nation. It is working to a very limited extent in the province of Manitoba, and to such a limited extent as to be of very little value in the province of Saskatchewan. It is not really working in any other place, and many improvements will have to be made to the crop insurance scheme before it can work successfully.

One of the things which needs to be done is for the federal and provincial governments interested in this field to expeditiously work out means by which there can be a real insurance against the great losses that might result from a crop insurance plan. As the formula is set up now, with the very limited contribution by the federal government, the major part of the burden of serious financial losses falls upon the farmers themselves and the provincial governments. This has brought the crop insurance scheme almost to a standstill and in many respects has made it an unworkable proposition.

Another plank in the Liberal platform which will have great appeal to western grain producers, and which is not a slogan or something directed merely to gaining popular support with little chance of being implemented, is the provision of the two price system for wheat. This is a well considered part of the Liberal program, and on the advent to power of a Liberal government it will be inaugurated. Under the two price system, wheat consumed in Canada by Canadians will carry a parity price, a price higher than the international price. This will implement a unanimous demand by farm organizations for a two price system, and the benefits from this system will be paid to the agricultural producers on the basis of certain deliveries, so that the financial benefits will be divided among the producers in a more equitable fashion than if they were paid on a strictly per bushel basis for all deliveries.

Those are some of the planks that have already been made public. Others will be forthcoming, and they will be forthcoming on the basis of a responsible program that will be placed on the statute books of this country in due course.

Another question I would like to raise today is this. I appreciate the difficulty of the parliamentary secretary in answering or trying to comment upon some of these general propositions. There is one parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture in his seat. If anyone has any information on this question, I would like it given to this committee after I conclude my remarks. There is a drought crisis on the prairies, of which all hon. members are fully aware, and there is a real possibility that there may be a second disastrous crop failure in western Canada this year. A disastrous crop failure this year following the disastrous crop failure in 1961 would entail tremendous hardship for western farmers since their financial reserves have already been largely depleted. The surplus of grain built up on the farms over a number of years has largely gone. The government has decided—and everyone is in favour of this—to make as many payments as possible to the farmers in as short a time as possible. If there is a crop failure this year the amount of income that farmers will have will be exceedingly small.

There is another crisis in the west that is being superimposed upon this drought crisis. I refer to the forecast of one of the largest grasshopper and cutworm infestations in the history of western Canada. This is a further danger to the very limited prospects of a crop in western Canada in 1962. The farmers are very much aware of this crisis. It is a common topic; one hears farmers saying "What about the grasshopper forecast? What about possible cutworm damage? If we are lucky enough to have enough moisture in the ground for the crop to sprout, will the insects devour the crops, so that even if we get rains at a later date they will be of little advantage?"

There was a conference held in Regina on March 23. This conference was reported in the Regina Leader-Post of March 24. More than 450 persons crowded into the museum in Regina, representing municipalities, provincial government departments and the federal government. They discussed this crisis. My plea this afternoon to the parliamentary secretary is for the federal government to take some responsibility by assisting in the provision of the chemicals necessary to fight this plague. I mean financial assistance. I think this is exceedingly important. The cost of spreading dieldrin or sevin at first sight may not seem to be an exceedingly expensive proposition; it is from 15 cents to 25 cents per acre. However, that is only part of the cost. There is also the cost of application, and if there is a widespread outbreak of grasshoppers there will be farmers who will need to apply this chemical to the crops two or three times. This is an operation that will cost—depending upon the method of application, whether the farmer has his own equipment or whether he has to hire it, whether or not he has to hire aeroplane service for air spraying—somewhere between 50 cents and $1 per acre. If a farmer has to do this two or three times it is a very heavy cost at a time when he has very limited financial resources.

This is the cost in connection with destroying grasshoppers. If the farmer has to spray for cutworms and uses dieldrin or other chemicals he has to increase the concentration four or five times, because cutworms have a heavy protection and it takes more poison to kill the cutworm than it does to kill the grasshopper. Therefore it will be a very expensive proposition to deal with the widespread cutworm infestation that is being forecast.

I know that last year the federal government, at the request of the government of Saskatchewan, provided some emergency aircraft, I believe through the Department of National Defence, to transport the chemicals from Toronto to Regina. But I think the federal government should do more. I think the federal government should take a lead and should be prepared to pay 50 per cent of the cost of these chemicals so this heavy burden does not have to be borne by the farmers who have suffered one crop failure, who have very limited financial resources and who, if they have to pay these costs entirely themselves, will either have to go on relief to obtain aid through the municipalities or, worse still, will have to say "We cannot afford it; we will just have to let the crop go". This is a practical proposition, whether a farmer should try to salvage a crop, when he does not know whether there will be anything left of the crop a month or so hence, at a cost of quite a large sum of money, money that he very badly needs, whether he should gamble his last few dollars, or whether he should say "Well, I cannot afford to salvage this crop".

There are other costs that farmers have to face at that time of year. They have to go out and spray for weeds. I know from my own experience last year that a great many farmers decided they could not afford to spray for weeds because they were so short of money, with the end result that where they did not spray for weeds there was no crop at all, and farmers who did spray for weeds got a small crop of probably three or four bushels per acre and found that the spraying of weeds was a good investment.

I am not putting these remarks forward, Mr. Chairman, in any way to condemn the government. As a matter of fact, if there is any condemnation called for I wonder whether the three provincial governments in western Canada are asleep. I do not know. I wonder whether they are asleep—

Mr. Brunsden: Saskatchewan is.

Mr. Argue: Apparently they are all sleeping, each as soundly as the other, because my information is that they have not made this kind of request. However, whether or not they have made it I would like to see the federal government take the lead and make the offer, because the farmers find that this heavy cost for these kinds of sprays is serious. Last year a great many of them had difficulty in finding the money necessary to deal with the grasshopper and cutworm outbreak, and it will be even more difficult this year.

I am making a plea to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance to use his good offices to convey what I have been saying this afternoon to his colleagues, in the hope that the federal government will take the lead now, will remove some of this burden from the producers and help deal with what is being forecast as a very, very serious outbreak of grasshoppers and cutworms in western Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We have heard two interesting speeches outlining some aspects of the policies of two parties. I resist with some difficulty commenting on the policy of the third and more important party, and will deal only with two specific matters which have been raised.

The hon. member for Assiniboia has mentioned the problem of drought on the prairies. I can assure him that all aspects of the lack of moisture are under the closest study by the government, and will continue to be. One would hope that his ominous forecast of an outbreak of grasshopper and cutworm infestation will not prove to be true, but the situation will be carefully studied by the government and I shall draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the comments the hon. gentleman has made.

Yesterday afternoon the hon. member for Welland asked me for some information in connection with the amount of surplus butter which comes from surplus milk shipped by fluid milk producers. Because the hon. member has always been so genial I have endeavoured to obtain statistics which would be helpful to him. However, I regret that statistics concerning butter production are not broken down so as to indicate the origin of the milk from which butter is made, and I am therefore not able to give him the details which he sought.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the item carries I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he could explain to us the reasons for this extraordinary increase in travel and removal expenses, amounting to $42,000. Even before they began increasing them in the further supplementary estimates the travelling expenses of this government were, heaven knows, astronomical compared with those of any government since confederation, yet here is another $42,000 for one department alone. How much of this, may I ask, represents the trotting around of all these publicity men attached to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): As to the latter, very little. The increase arises out of the implementation of the agricultural program by the minister and his staff as well as by the grain commission of the Department of Trade and Commerce, now on loan to the ministry of agriculture. There are also expenses in connection with the A.R.D.A. program, provision for which was not made in the main estimates. In addition there were attendances at international conferences exceeding the estimated provision by some $17,800. These expenses arose mainly from the FAO conference, from the OECD meetings and from GATT.

Mr. Pickersgill: Have the figures been kept separately so that we may know how much that totally unnecessary trip to Hong Kong cost?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I confess that I am not aware of any unnecessary trip which was taken to Hong Kong. If the hon. member is referring to the journey undertaken by the Minister of Agriculture, I can only say that the results speak for themselves.

Mr. Pickersgill: They certainly do, because the agreement was signed two days before the minister got there. If anything was a sheer waste of money, that was. There is one further question I should like to put to the minister relating to this item and the next one. Can he say whether any part of this additional money is required to meet salaries or wages at the end of this month and, if so, how much?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Argue: Could we know what amount of these travelling expenses was entailed in connection with the A.R.D.A. program?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am sorry, but I do not have the breakdown. It is not a large sum of money. However, I do not have the figures segregated.

Item agreed to.

Production and marketing branch—

677. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act—further amount required, $78,588.

Mr. Howard: Since this government took office a problem has developed with regard to these subsidies, arising from the fact that a limit of some $50,000 was placed on the subsidy in respect of cold storage facilities, compared with a total subsidy equal to one third of the total cost, which was the case before the government made the change. I have been given to understand that the reason the limit was placed on this subsidy was that an overabundance of cold storage warehouse space existed in the country, and it was therefore felt necessary to place some limit on the public funds being spent in this particular area.

I have no cause to complain in this regard, because I am not familiar with the agricultural production situation. However, I do say that this argument certainly does not apply in the case of fisheries products. I think it is most incorrect to lump together the paying of subsidies to cold storage warehouses intended for such different purposes as the preservation of agricultural products and of fisheries products. The circumstances are entirely different, and the fishing industry generally suffers as a result of this approach.

I know that for some months, in fact, ever since this change in policy was made, the Prince Rupert fishermen's co-operative has been attempting to get the government to reconsider its aproach and to look upon the construction of cold storage warehouses for fisheries products in a different light. We have asked about this in the house on a number of occasions. We have asked the Minister of Agriculture about it and we have also made representations to the Minister of Fisheries. We have spoken about it and written letters, but invariably we have received the same negative reply. As a result, as I say, the fishing industry suffers and people like those in the fishermen's co-operative are disappointed. This particular organization had made plans for the expansion of its cold storage warehouse, but when the members finally got around to taking practical steps they found themselves cut off because the government had changed the rules in the middle of the game.

I do not expect the parliamentary secretary will be able to tell us that the situation is to be changed right now. Perhaps if he could confer with some of the members of the cabinet he might get them to make an announcement. But I place this question before the government again. I point out the seriousness of this problem and I reiterate—because this seems the only way to get things done—that it is the fishing industry which suffers because of the restriction which has been placed on this subsidy, restriction based entirely on the situation which existed with regard to agricultural products.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it is necessary for me to add very much to what the hon. member for Skeena has said. There are many subjects on which we do not agree, but on this one on which we certainly do. When we made representations to the Minister of Fisheries on this subject last year we hoped that even this slow moving government would correct this situation and place the administration of the cold storage subsidy as far as fishermen are concerned under the Minister of Fisheries, where it might receive sympathetic attention. I urge the parliamentary secretary to use all the influence he has with the Minister of Finance and with the Prime Minister to see whether even at this late date—and perhaps because of this late date—the government might wake up to the fact that there is a fishing industry in this country.

Health of animals division—

678. Payment of compensation to owners of animals affected with diseases coming under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, which have died or have been slaughtered in circumstances not covered by the above act and regulations made thereunder, all as detailed in the estimates, $8,417.

(Translation):

Mr. Clermont: About this item, I should like to ask the authorities of the agriculture department whether it would be possible to speed the work provided for under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

On January 18, 1962, the constituency of Labelle in the province of Quebec, was declared a brucellosis eradication area.

Could the authorities of the department proceed with that work as soon as possible?

(Text):

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I shall draw the hon. gentleman's comments to the attention of the proper authorities in the Department of Agriculture.

Item agreed to.

679. Supervision of race track betting—further amount required, $28,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to explain to us, in any capacity he wishes, either as the porte-parole of the Minister of Agriculture, as the hon. member for Carleton or as the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, the relationship between this vote and an item which appeared in the Ottawa Journal last night about a new race track here in Ottawa. Can he explain to us whether this track has been licensed by the federal government and how much extra it is going to cost the taxpayers to supervise this new race track?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Under this particular item there is involved only the supervision of race track betting in the province of Quebec which was not foreseen at the time the main estimates were prepared. This is a self-liquidating item. As I think the hon. member knows, it is recovered from the take at the time of the betting. What my hon. friend is referring to is quite a different matter. My understanding is that the licensing of that particular project would be a provincial matter. Beyond that, it is a matter on which I confess I am not able to speak with any authority.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the hon. gentleman say whether, even though its licensing is a provincial matter, it is not still supervised by the federal government?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Oh, yes; it would be necessary to apply for the parimutuel licence and there will be supervision of the parimutuel racetrack betting. There are no funds in this particular item for that purpose.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that, but since the law is the same whether it is for this item or for any other item, perhaps the parliamentary secretary could say whether, before a parimutuel licence is given to one of these race tracks, the federal government ascertains that the original licence has been properly and validly granted. Or do they just assume that such is the case?

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the parliamentary secretary would like to reply to my question.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This particular item applies only to the province of Quebec. A statutory levy of half of one per cent on all moneys wagered at tracks covers the cost of supervision. I regret that I am not able to answer specifically and directly the question asked by the hon. gentleman as to the extent of the supervision that is exercised over parimutuel race track betting licences which are issued. As I understand it, the position with respect to the particular one to which he has made reference is that there have been outstanding for a number of years appropriate authorities. If the hon. gentleman has anything specifically that he wishes me to get, I shall be glad to send him the information as soon as possible.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not wish to hold up the item. However, there is a certain amount of natural curiosity about this matter, and perhaps it is enhanced a little by the names which were published in that highly reputable journal—I refer to the Ottawa Journal—last night as the directors of this enterprise.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not the way in which the hon. gentleman last described it. He accused them of libel.

Mr. Pickersgill: No. I said that a particular editorial was libellous, and it was libellous, but that does not alter the fact that even the best newspapers err once in a while. I was using the term "libel" on that occasion in a strictly technical sense in the hope of drawing the editor's attention to my remarks. Apparently I was successful. However, it seems rather odd—and perhaps the learned parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture could throw some light on the matter—that people can pick up old charters floating around and get into this business in that way without any current examination of their credentials. If the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand can throw any light on this matter I am sure the committee would be most interested.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think the situation to which the hon. gentleman refers is primarily a provincial matter. There is perhaps the unusual situation, namely that the Criminal Code places the federal supervision under the Minister of Agriculture. That has been the case for many years. Perhaps that is because of the type of tests that are made at the courses in order to ensure honesty in the parimutuel betting. I shall be glad to get any additional information for my hon. friend and send it to him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Thank you.

Mr. Webb: I have been told that with the setting up of this race track the estimated revenue of the province of Ontario will be in the neighbourhood of $3 million to $4 million per year.

Mr. Pickersgill: That seems very relevant.

Item agreed to.

Plant products division—

681. Contribution to Prince Edward Island, in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council, of one half of amounts paid by that province to potato growers in respect of their 1960 crop as compensation for losses due to fusarium rot to a maximum contribution by Canada of $300 in respect of any one farm—further amount required, $70,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: May we have an explanation of vote 681?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This vote provides for the dominion contribution in a shared cost program with the province of Prince Edward Island for the payment of compensation to potato growers for losses due to fusarium rot in respect of the 1960 crop. The supplementary estimate is required to provide for the balance of the federal share of the program. The amount of $125,000 was provided in the further supplementary estimates No. 1. However, on the basis of actual claims paid by the province, which total $389,937, the federal share is $194,946. Therefore a further amount of $70,000 is required and is sought from the committee in this estimate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I remember this matter because it is something about which I was obliged to prod the government a great deal before they got on with it.

Item agreed to.

682. Agricultural lime assistance—further amount required, $1,362,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the parliamentary secretary say why such a very large additional sum seems to be required? It looks like bad estimating.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There has been an unexpectedly large increase in the purchase of agricultural lime and marl. That is what necessitates this supplementary estimate. As my hon. friend knows, the earlier estimates the preparation of which started in September and October 1960 were of necessity based on the tonnage of lime which was then expected to be moved to the farmers. However, the lime purchases—and I think we should consider it a good thing—greatly exceeded earlier purchases, and that is why it has become necessary to have this supplementary estimate.

Mr. Pickersgill: How does the total compare with that of the previous year?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is a very considerable increase. The total for this year is $2,662,000. In 1960-61 it was $1,400,000.

Item agreed to.

Special—

684. Estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural products board account to cover the net operating loss recorded in the account as at March 31, 1962, $4,861,998.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a very considerable item. Can the parliamentary secretary say something about it?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes. This item really arises out of the report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons. As the committee knows, the agricultural products board was established under the authority of the Emergency Powers Act by order in council 3415 of July 31, 1951, to administer food contracts and other commodity operations which may arise from time to time. The board was re-established under the Agricultural Products Board Act of 1952. The purchase of agricultural products by the board resulted in a net loss of $4,861,998 as of March 31, 1961, mainly due to purchases of whole milk powder as a means of reducing butter production. The milk powder was transferred to the Department of External Affairs for donation to international relief agencies. The report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961 comments on this deficit and indicates that a parliamentary appropriation should be sought. The department and the government agree on a policy basis with the view which was expressed by the Auditor General. This vote is to regularize what he has suggested.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is just a bookkeeping item.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, it is really a technical point.

Item agreed to.

685. Estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural commodities stabilization account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board as at March 31, 1962, $23,139,333.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a very big item, and perhaps the parliamentary secretary could give us a comparison with the last two fiscal years.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The figure involved here is a total of $23,139,333. In the previous fiscal year the amount was $69½ million and in the fiscal year before that $57.6 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: I take it this is an item that does not occur in the main estimates at all, that this is only in the last lot of supplementaries each year.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It is traditional that this item be in the final set of supplemental estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is really analogous to the deficit of the C.N.R., in other words.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My hon. friend is quite right. That is the position.

Item agreed to.

Atomic energy control board—

686. Administration expenses of the atomic energy control board—further amount required, $1,400.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before this vote carries, I would point out that it is now almost April 1 and I am sure the parliamentary secretary would not have come into the house without ascertaining from the genial, accurate and well informed Minister of Trade and Commerce the latest estimate of the date on which the British will actually come to terms with us about a contract. I see that the eager member for Halifax, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, is in the house, and as he showed he was so much readier to give us information than his minister I am sure he could confirm that April will not run out without this contract being made. Perhaps he can tell us it has already been made.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am very glad there is one thing on which the member for Bonavista-Twillingate and I can agree, and that is his description of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. There is nothing I can add on this particular item to the information which has been made available to the house, and I hope the expectations expressed to the house will be fulfilled.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say one more word. Though the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce was really pretty specific the other evening, when a subsequent question was put to the minister he got the matter back into the ethereal realm of utter vagueness again. Can the parliamentary secretary assure us that when he said April he was speaking for the minister, and that April it will be?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am sure that the turn of events will establish exactly what the situation will be, and I am sure the hon. member will have his curiosity satisfied in due course.

Mr. Pickersgill: I really think I would rather have it satisfied by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When the parliamentary secretary is here it seems unnecessary for another parliamentary secretary, who obviously cannot be as well informed about the subject, to have to speak in rather vague language for him. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce can give us any indication of any further progress. Has any progress been made since he last made a statement to the house?

Mr. Morris: Mr. Chairman, the statement I made in the house when supplementary estimates No. 3 were before us was sufficiently specific. It was a valid statement. I am not in the habit of justifying remarks made on the basis of my responsibility, and the statement was intended to be made in the form in which it was made. The minister's subsequent remarks in no way denied the remarks which I made. The statement I made on supplementary estimates No. 3 was a responsible, accurate statement, and it is still a valid statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very relieved to hear that. The difficulty is that they sometimes forget to tell the Minister of Trade and Commerce what he is supposed to say in the house.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs branch—

Reserves and trusts—

687. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $59,500.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, on supplementary estimates No. 3 we discussed a particular matter I brought to the attention of the hon. lady with respect to the Indians of the Tsimpsean reserve in Skeena, British Columbia. At that time we went into the matter rather fully and the hon. lady indicated that she was going to recall the tenders as a result of the confusion which then existed. I am informed that the minister has received a number of communications, including a band council resolution and a letter and perhaps a telegram from the band itself, since a copy of a letter dated March 24 has been sent to me. I wonder whether the minister can advise the house as to the present situation, in view of the fact that it appears that the band council, with the endorsation of the band, unanimously passed a resolution on March 23 indicating that they are opposed to the calling of new tenders.

The committee may recall that it was suggested by myself and other hon. members, which suggestion was acceded to by the minister and certainly with our approval, that new tenders should be called. However, apparently the Indians whose property it is are not pleased with such a decision. In the Prince Rupert daily News of March 23 there is a headlined story of an interview with Chief Sampson of the band, in which he indicates that he desires that the unsuccessful bid of the two received should be accepted. From all correspondence and statements it appears that the chief bases this first of all on the band's understanding of this particular offer, the Beaufort bid, and on some of the items which I brought to the minister's attention, particularly reforestation and the road. Furthermore, the band council is also concerned that if new tenders are called almost a year may elapse, and as there was no work for these Indians last year they are concerned that there be immediate work and immediate development of their resources. I am further informed, and I have no support for this statement but perhaps the minister can verify it, that the short term export market at least for such timber is unsteady, and there may be some amount of pressure with respect to letting the contract immediately.

While I am on my feet I also wish to inquire of the minister whether certain remarks made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate have been followed up by her branch in any way. They had to do with consultation between her branch and the Department of Trade and Commerce with a view to obtaining some idea whether this and similar timber may be exportable and will receive an export permit, particularly in view of the fact that on June 26, 1960 the Prime Minister, when dealing with legislation providing for the creation of the Department of Forestry, quoted with great approval a recommendation of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters in the following words:

> Your committee feels that Canada cannot afford to ignore a potential so great for lumber and pulp sales as is offered in the Orient and, therefore, it recommends that these markets be approached on an open minded basis.

Because the Prime Minister himself seemed to be aware of the necessity for expanding our markets in that regard, I wonder whether the minister can advise the committee whether there have been exploratory talks between the two departments with a view to ascertaining that such timber, no matter who cuts it, whether it be the Indians or someone else, will be exportable; because this will have a considerable effect on the price of the timber and the amount of any bid.

I should like it to be firmly understood that my view still is that because of the great confusion which developed over the awarding of this contract it would be preferable, as it always is in such cases, to call for new tenders, but I must confess that I am concerned about the Indians' concern and about their very clearly expressed resolution and desire to have a deal of which they know the specifics.

The minister told the committee a matter of a couple of weeks ago that she was sending a commissioner out there. The commissioner appears now to be speaking to the public press, according to reports. He was to go to the Indian band and explain both bids to them. He appears to have done this; at least there has been a sufficient lapse of time to do so. Nevertheless, under date of March 24 there is a letter, which I believe the minister has, from the band council in which these people are most explicit about desiring one particular bid to be accepted.

Now, I cannot suggest other than that this must cause the minister great concern. Certainly it causes concern to anyone who is interested in the two problems, the one of calling for new tenders and the other of satisfying the Indians. I wonder if on these points the minister would advise the committee what she plans to do and, in addition, whether she could advise us if anything has been done by her department in consultation with the Department of Trade and Commerce about export permits.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the particular supplementary vote which is before us relates only to forest fire protection. As the hon. lady knows, the past year was a disastrous fire year throughout Canada, and this amount of $59,500 is required for unpaid accounts in five of the provinces.

In so far as the matter which the hon. lady raises is concerned, I might say to her that as of the present time new tenders have not been called. The representations which she has made will, of course, be considered in due course by the minister.

Miss LaMarsh: I do not want the parliamentary secretary to be under any misapprehension that I am making representations on behalf of any group except the Indians, according to their clearly expressed wishes in the resolution. Of course the minister is their trustee in this regard. I do not suggest in any way, that any decision that has to be made is easy, but I should hope the minister would be able to advise the committee just what she plans to do in view of the fact it is getting rather late in the season and apparently if there is any delay in the further calling of tenders, the Indians will suffer. The last time tenders were called it took almost a year from the time of the original negotiations until the time the tenders were received. If such a delay occurs now, then the Indians will be deprived of income, work and training. It is on their behalf that I am making these inquiries, and on behalf of no other person.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am sure the hon. lady can be confident that the minister will take a decision based solely upon the good of the Indians who are involved.

Miss LaMarsh: I take it, then, she has made no decision.

Mr. Howard: I do not wish to be unkind about it, but I should hope that the situation would be as represented by the parliamentary secretary. I should like to make a few brief comments on this problem because, unfortunately, I was absent when it arose earlier. However, I do not wish to get involved in the intricacies of the negotiations. Unfortunately the natives themselves, as I know from speaking with the Indian people, do not trust Commissioner Boys. I have had this view expressed to me by many of the Indian people at Fort Simpson, the Queen Charlotte islands and over on the Babine agency. They do not have that degree of trust in Commissioner Boys which is necessary for the proper conduct of negotiations between the Indian affairs branch and the natives themselves. They do not feel particularly confident, either, about Mr. Brett. I do not know whether this results from a misunderstanding as between Mr. Brett and the band council itself or from the inability or failure of Mr. Brett to fully explain all that was taking place. It could be for some other reason entirely, but they do not have that degree of confidence in Mr. Brett which is necessary.

The lack of trust in these individuals is understandable, because the natives have been exploited by the so-called white people for many years. This has developed almost an inherent feeling of distrust for any of our dealings. I am very much afraid of what might happen in this particular instance if there is anything in the future which smacks of dishonesty or which leads to misunderstanding. If the situation should arise the band might well say "All right, we will just keep the timber" and the Indians will remain in economic stagnation for another 10 or 15 years. This is the greatest fear I have as to what could result from the situation which exists there.

Incidentally, this feeling is not confined to Fort Simpson. There are other villages involved in the sale of timber, and they have had relationships with Mr. Boys and Mr. Brett. These people are also now a bit reluctant and concerned about how far they should go in these particular negotiations. It would be my thought that the recent attitude expressed by the band council in the letter to which reference was made should be the point of view that should carry the most weight with the department. This was a unanimous decision of the band itself, but Mr. Boys expressed some disagreement and said it was not unanimous. Evidently the band expressed some preference for one of the two bidders in connection with the sale of this timber.

Perhaps it may be necessary to engage outside legal counsel—I know the band has consulted lawyers—to ensure that the interest of the people there are protected to the fullest possible extent. I am not sure whether this step may be necessary now. I am afraid that unless this is done the results may be injurious to the band itself, and could very easily contribute to the destruction of that mutual trust we are trying to develop between ourselves and the native people of this nation. This mutual trust is difficult to establish because the history of our dealings with these people is not particularly clean.

In my opinion our sole concern should be to protect the interests of the Indians to the fullest possible extent and to move toward the development of this mutual feeling of trust. Unfortunately, as I say, whether it was deliberate, by reason of inefficiency or just misunderstanding, the native people in Tsimpsean and elsewhere do not have that degree of trust in Commissioner Boys or Mr. Brett which is so necessary. Neither do they have a very high regard for Mr. Ewen, the officer in charge of the Skeena river agency which covers the particular area.

Miss LaMarsh: I should like to direct some questions to the minister in respect of this matter. I have been informed that there was a company created on the west coast called Nishka Pacific Forest Products, a company which was composed entirely of Indians and which chose to apply to cut timber on the Nass reserve. I understand they were told by Paul Brett, the forester for the branch in British Columbia, that if they were ever entitled to cut the timber they would have to replant the areas which they cut.

I have no supporting evidence with respect to this. I have only been told it and I would ask the minister to inquire into the truth or otherwise of such a statement because, if true, it appears most peculiar in the light of the fact that the minister had advised that it was the same Mr. Brett, among other people, who had given advice that this particular land should not be replanted.

I am further informed that at the same time the application was made some indication was given that no private company would ever be allowed to cut timber on the Nass reserve, but I am informed that at the same period there was correspondence being carried on between the department and at least one private interest seeking to cut timber there. If some of these allegations are true they would appear to be almost diametrically opposed to the remarks allegedly made and supported by affidavits and photostats, which we discussed in this house a couple of weeks ago, emanating from the same source, Mr. Brett. I would ask the minister if she has any knowledge of these matters to advise the committee, and if not I would ask her to ascertain the truth or otherwise of such charges and advise the committee.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is not usual for a minister to intervene during discussion of these final supplementary estimates but, with the kind permission of the house, I would like to make a few remarks. I shall of course inquire into the matters which have been raised but I think I should have a little more information. If the hon. member for Niagara Falls will tell me the source of the information or the rumour she has heard with reference to the Nishka lumber company, I shall have it investigated. The other matters are presently under consideration, as the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance has indicated.

I would just like to say one word about the relationship of Indians with members of the Indian affairs branch. As the hon. member for Skeena has so rightly said, a great deal depends on the trust which is imposed by the Indians themselves in the officials of the branch. From time to time complaints reach me with respect to one civil servant or another who is allegedly not acting in the best interests of the Indians, but quite frankly I can only think offhand of one instance where there appeared to be any real evidence that such was the case. In that particular instance the matter could be traced directly to what might be regarded as a slightly high-handed attitude on the part of the individual involved, and was not due to any intention on his part to do anything that would in any way injure the Indians.

Because of this situation I deplore more seriously than I can express in words any references in this house to the actions or the intentions of members of the branch who may be serving the Indians in the field because these things will undoubtedly get publicity. What I fear then is that the trust of the Indians in these officials charged with the responsibility of administering their affairs will be destroyed.

That does not mean I am not anxious to explore any real difficulties which there may be, and if any hon. members have reason to believe that any member of the department is not doing his best for the Indians, and if they let me know, then I pledge my whole support to a complete investigation into the circumstances of which they have been made aware. I am reasonably sure that any hon. members of the house who have had close association with the Indians will understand my concern in this regard.

We have even had instances where half a band was actively supporting a superintendent while the other half was making charges against him. These are very difficult things to unscramble if the situation deteriorates. The obvious solution is to remove the individual involved and put someone else in his place who can effect harmonious results in the administration of his duties. Sometimes an administrator who is not completely acceptable to one band will be much beloved by another band with which he later has association.

Therefore I plead with hon. members not to destroy the faith of the Indians in the members of the branch who are charged with the administration of their affairs, but I shall certainly take every means at my disposal to investigate any real charges which are made against any members of the branch.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to say a word about the last point made by the minister. I am sorry I have not got the newspaper clipping with me, but I read a story in one of the newspapers the other day about a statement which was attributed to the commissioner in British Columbia about the incident to which my hon. friend from Niagara Falls referred the other day. I am sure the hon. minister has seen the statement to which I refer.

Now the minister knows I am not one who criticizes civil servants in this house. I was once a civil servant myself and was criticized by some of the hon. lady's friends in this house, but I did not make any reply at any time to those criticisms. However I was really very shocked to read this report. It may be that this gentleman said something privately that was published without his knowledge. He should not even have done that; but if he said in public, for publication, what he was supposed to have said about the hon. lady then he should be very severely reprimanded because civil servants should remember that they are not elected to this house and it is not their business to make any kind of comments whatsoever about the conduct of hon. members in this house.

The report to which I refer was published several days ago and I am sure the hon. lady's attention has been directed to it, because I know how efficient her department is. I mean that genuinely. I am sure she has already investigated it and will be able to give some explanation for it. If she cannot I would ask that it be investigated and a report made to the house. This is the kind of thing that really is an attack on the privileges of the house.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is of course one of the peculiarities of the civil servant that he is defenceless unless someone rises in this house to defend him and that his activities can be attacked, whether fairly or unfairly, by any member of the house who then is protected by the immunities which are attendant upon the position of an hon. member in this chamber.

I have seen the article referred to by the hon. member. I do not think it attacked any individual. I think it attacked statements which were made, and I agree it is deplorable that it should have reached the press. However, as the hon. member suspected, I made inquiries about its origin. I also suspect he was right when he thought that possibly it was an offhand remark made in private which has found its way into the newspapers, but I agree with him that it should not have been made in any event. The matter is being investigated.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have just got the report now. I am not going to put the gentleman's name on the record. I shall, however, read the words that are in quotation marks in the newspaper article because for my own reputation I want hon. members to know that I am not raising this matter lightly. What this civil servant is supposed to have said is that Miss LaMarsh's charge was:

> Utterly false and not deserving of any other comment.

No civil servant should be making remarks like that about us in this house, however irresponsible, silly or false he may think we are. If the minister wants to say that the hon. lady's comments are irresponsible, false or not deserving of any other comment, if she can get by the Chair by using the word "false", that is what we do in this house. But I felt this was a matter of sufficient importance in the circumstances to have it made clear. I am sure the hon. lady from Niagara Falls would be the last person who would want any other kind of discipline taken, but one worries a little about the attitude that would prompt a civil servant even to make that kind of observation in private, because we have a duty in this house to try to see that the public affairs are properly carried out.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I will not go as far as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in his references to members of the public service. It seems to me that if one of them is mentioned by name in the house—and I do not know whether or not this is the case with the individual involved—and attached to that reference is an accusation of some sort, the minister certainly and the individual concerned should have the right to make comments contrary to what was said and put forward their point of view as to the true state of affairs. I do not think a member of parliament should be in the position of being able to level accusations against members of the public service and expect them to remain absolutely silent. That is one thing.

The next point I wish to refer to—and I think perhaps the minister misunderstood the point I was making—is in connection with Indian commissioners Mr. Boys and Mr. Brett. I took down two or three of the minister's words to get across what I am getting at. She made reference to any evidence that these people are not working in the best interests of the natives, or if their actions or intentions are detrimental to the natives, and so on. The minister asked us—I am not saying that she asked me directly—not to destroy the faith that the Indians have in the officials of the branch.

This is not the point. It is not whether there is evidence of malfunction on the part of the individual, whether any official in the Indian affairs branch has done something wrong, or whether his intentions or actions are as the minister said they should be before she will take action. I am complaining about a feeling which exists among native Indians and their attitude generally to the Indian affairs branch. I mentioned Mr. Boys because he was involved. This occurred in British Columbia and Mr. Boys and Mr. Brett were up at Port Simpson and were involved in this matter. I mentioned these gentlemen only because they were two officials of the department who had dealings with the Port Simpson band, and the fact is that the Port Simpson band does not have a great degree of trust in the Indian affairs branch or in these individuals. That is what I was saying; not that Mr. Boys had done anything wrong or that his actions or intentions were not in the best interests of the native Indians, but I was referring to the feeling on the part of the Indians toward the officials of the branch. I can understand this because our history of the exploitation of these people is very black indeed.

This attitude exists and that is why I say it is even more important in dealings with native peoples for the Indian affairs branch to bend over backwards to ensure that every "t" is crossed and every "i" is dotted in any contracts or relationships with the Indians. We have to do this. It may be necessary to go outside of the branch in order to have some neutral person involved in some of these negotiations or contract discussions to ensure that we do everything we possibly can to build up the faith of native peoples in the non-Indian peoples. This is all I am concerned about and all I am getting at. I have no desire to say anything wrong against Mr. Boys or Mr. Brett or anybody else within the branch, regardless of what feelings I may have about them. These have nothing to do with the feelings of the Indian people toward them. This is the sole key to the matter I am concerned about, and unfortunately I do not think this attitude is being promoted in the department.

Item agreed to.

Welfare of Indians—

688. Operation and maintenance—to increase to $65,000 the grant to the province of Manitoba of one-half of the cost of a program of community development and to provide a further amount of, $765,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise another matter that was brought to my attention this morning by a telephone call from Mr. Robert Angus, the editor of the Fort Nelson News in British Columbia. He was speaking on behalf of the chamber of commerce in that place about the state of the Indians at the Prophet river reserve, where it appears that there is an acute epidemic of hepatitis. I am not giving this information on my own responsibility but as information given to me. I say at once it is not information that I have personally and I am not making any charges; I merely want to bring this matter to the minister's attention so that it can be investigated immediately. Apparently the whole settlement of Fort Nelson is aroused over the situation of these Indians, and the reason they are apparently unable to resist this disease is acute malnutrition of a very serious kind.

As I say, not knowing any other facts about it I cannot give any more information than I have now given to the minister. Mr. Angus told me he sent last night by air mail a copy of the newspaper containing his article and setting out the facts in this matter. If the facts are such as he sketched to me there does seem to have been a very serious neglect of the welfare of these Indians. As I say, I have no means of knowing by whom. I intend to send the newspaper to the hon. lady as soon as I get it, but I felt that even one day should not be lost and that the matter should be brought to her attention immediately so that an immediate investigation can be made of the situation. Apparently almost the whole of this group of people are suffering from malnutrition, and now from a very serious malady as well, according to the information that has been given to me.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the responsibility and jurisdiction would rest with the Department of National Health and Welfare. I am sure the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will take note of what has been said, and I assure my hon. friend that the moment the committee rises I will communicate the information he has just given to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and ask him to take appropriate action.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. gentleman for reminding me of the constitutional responsibility, which I was not exactly unaware of before being reminded. But the Department of National Health and Welfare does not in fact have a doctor or health facilities on every Indian reserve. In connection with every Indian reserve there is an Indian superintendent and the primary responsibility is with the Indian superintendent to bring these conditions to the attention of the medical authorities. I know the hon. lady herself recognizes that thoroughly.

I had not intended to say this, but the parliamentary secretary, in order to exonerate the Department of National Health and Welfare, has obliged me to say that there is the most acute criticism of the superintendent in this particular case in connection with this matter. As I say, I have no personal knowledge of the facts but this is one of those situations that appears to have aroused a whole community and I cannot think that responsible people such as the chamber of commerce and the editor of a newspaper would have been aroused about something that is not serious. I cannot think that responsible people like the members of this chamber of commerce and the editor of the newspaper should have been aroused about something which is not so. I hope the hon. lady will give us an assurance that something will be done about this right away.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It will be treated on a basis of urgency.

Mr. Cardiff: If this is so important, why did they not contact the government instead of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman might write a letter to Mr. Angus and ask him that, or he might write to the chamber of commerce. I did not see any particular reason why I should be rude to someone who had taken the trouble to telephone me about a matter of public importance. For all I know he might have communicated with the minister as well. He might have communicated with the Minister of National Health and Welfare. How do we know? The Minister of National Health and Welfare is not here. It may be that attempts have been made to communicate with the local officials. I am sure that if he had communicated with the hon. lady she would have done something about it. Maybe he communicated with the local officials and got no satisfaction. I might add that this seems to be in the same region as that matter which my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo brought to the attention of the house the other day. Maybe more needs to be looked into in this particular area.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since it is almost five o'clock, I cannot reply at any length to what the hon. member for Huron has said. He comes from my own section of the country, and his question would be noted. I think the logical reply to his question is that a request was made to my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate in the same way as requests are continually being made to members of the opposition, simply because this government with regard to many things is not doing its job.

Mr. Cardiff: Anything that is brought to the attention of my minister is looked after. It does not take him 22 years to look after a request.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had temporarily forgotten the fact that the hon. member for Huron is the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps he could explain this whole situation to us right now.

Mr. Cardiff: I have no intention of replying right now. The matter will be brought to the attention of the minister; I can assure the hon. member of that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did the hon. gentleman know anything about this situation before it was mentioned in the committee?

Mr. Cardiff: Not before the hon. member mentioned it, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the parliamentary secretary whether there are any health services in that particular area?

Item agreed to.

SECRETARY OF STATE

Civil Service Commission—

689. Salaries and contingencies of the commission including compensation in accordance with the suggestion award plan of the public service of Canada—further amount required, $5,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: This item has to do with salaries and contingencies. Is someone not going to be paid if this $5,000 is not voted?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This vote represents the cost of an increase in the numbers and amount of awards granted under the suggestion award plan.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the parliamentary secretary give us an estimate of the amount which has been saved to the treasury in respect of which we are recompensating these people to the extent of $5,000?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, I do not have an exact figure.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

A—Department—

690. Care, maintenance and custody of stand-by defence plant, buildings, machine tools and production tooling—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. Chevrier: I regret the Minister of Defence Production is not in his seat. I think he should be on this occasion because this is a substantial amount of money having to do with the care, maintenance and custody of stand-by defence plants, buildings, machine tools and production tooling. I should like the minister to have been in his place because he might have given us an explanation of his presence at a certain meeting in Quebec held not so long ago and having to do with a sulphur plant. I should like to know from the minister whether or not this is one of the projects which could be described under this vote, namely, a defence plant. After all, several ministers were at this meeting, and the Minister of Defence Production has given little or no explanation for his presence. Perhaps if the minister cannot explain the nature of that project, the parliamentary secretary can.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This vote is one which will be of great advantage to the maritime provinces. It deals with repair and stand-by facilities and covers the cost of inhibiting, packing and shipping the CS2F tracker aircraft tooling presently in the plants of two contractors in Ontario, the De Havilland Aircraft Company and the Canadian Car division of the A. V. Roe Company, to the plant of Enamel and Heating Products Limited at Sackville, New Brunswick. The aircraft are being transferred from central Canada to the maritimes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the parliamentary secretary say whether this is a true supplementary estimate or whether it is a new project which was not foreseen at the time supplementary estimates No. 3 were brought before us?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It is a true supplementary. The cost of the tooling was not foreseen at the time the main estimates or the earlier supplementary estimates were drawn up.

Mr. Pickersgill: Even No. 3?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Those estimates, of course, as the hon. gentleman is aware, were really prepared at the same time as estimates No. 2, back some time in January. The actual preparation of the estimates, as the hon. member knows, takes place some time before they are tabled in the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is there any production actually going on, or does this represent an effort to have this plant in readiness in the event work is available?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The vote is for repair and overhaul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is there any production under way? How many men are employed, for instance, in production, if there is any production?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My understanding of the vote is that it is for repair and overhaul. The general purpose of the main estimate, to which this is supplementary, is to provide for the cost of care, maintenance and custody of defence plants in a stand-by condition, and for the care and maintenance of buildings, machine tools, equipment and production tooling including cost of dismantling, packaging, crating, transportation, repairing, inhibiting, storage and other expenses incidental to the preservation of such facilities which may be required again. This is a transfer of those facilities, as I have indicated to the committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My question has not been answered. Are these plants in production or is this something being built up in anticipation of anything in the future? Perhaps there is nothing ahead and this merely represents maintenance work. What is the situation?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am advised that this is in respect of continuing repair and overhaul. This is to continue the work.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Continued overhaul of what? Surely you do not continue to overhaul a plant from which no production is carried on. Is there any production of any kind going on? If there is not, what is the purpose of keeping these plants in a state of preparedness? There may be a good reason. Is this part of the government's policy of meeting the problem of unemployment in chronically distressed areas? Is the government at long last listening to the pleas of the Liberal opposition that it should do something about unemployment? Is that what this means? We want to know. This is a good example of a situation which would be more easily dealt with if the minister himself were present to tell us the answers.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I shall be glad to tell the hon. gentleman now. This is for the annual repair and overhaul of the CS2F tracker aircraft. These are stationed at various points in the maritime provinces and are brought into this plant belonging to Enamel and Heating Products Limited for repair and overhaul.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a stand-by plant? It does not relate to plants already in production? The wording of the vote itself would seem to be misleading. If this plant is in actual operation—and I sincerely hope it is —it should be placed under some other vote. It should not be under a vote for a stand-by plant. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary could make some inquiries and let us know more at eight o'clock.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps he could have the minister here, too.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the Chair so that the house may proceed with the consideration of private and public bills under standing order No. 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

EVANGELICAL MENNONITE MISSION CONFERENCE

The house in committee on Bill No. S-5, to incorporate Evangelical Mennonite Mission Conference—Mr. Muir (Lisgar)—Mr. MacEwan in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): For the benefit of the committee I should like to assure hon. members that the bill has been given a proper consideration in the other place and also in the miscellaneous private bills committee of this house. The bill incorporates the same procedure as that which is used in the establishment of the central administrative bodies of churches of all faiths. I might say that, with the Easter season approaching, it would seem appropriate that we consider this measure in committee at this time and subsequently give it third reading.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

APPLICATION OF PROVINCIAL DRAINAGE LAWS TO PIPE LINES

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-33, to amend the National Energy Board Act (drainage works).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill was brought before the house previously on December 13, 1960. By reference to the debate on that date the arguments presented at that time are available to the members of the house. The bill presented this year is similar in all respects to that presented in 1960. It provides as follows:

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

1. Subsection (1) of section 75 of the National Energy Board Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"75. (1) Sections 207 to 246, section 248 and section 273 of the Railway Act, in so far as they are reasonably applicable and not inconsistent with this act, apply mutatis mutandis to companies and their works and undertakings."

Then section 2 of the proposed amendment would repeal section 77 of the National Energy Board Act and substitute the following therefor:

"77. (1) Except a drain used to drain land that for the purpose of municipal assessment is classed as a farm, market garden, or nursery, no highway, private road, railway, irrigation ditch, drain, drainage ditch, sewer, telegraph, telephone line or line for the transmission of hydrocarbons, power or any other substance shall, except by leave of the board, be carried across, along, upon or under any pipe line.

The history of section 273 of the Railway Act, which the amendment aims to have included in the National Energy Board Act, would make pipe lines operating under federal charter subject to provincial drainage laws as are pipe lines operating under provincial charter.

Back in 1903 this house spent many days debating an amendment to the Railway Act as it existed at that time in order that farmers might be adequately protected against large railway corporations when it came to settling drainage crossings on railway properties. Our Canadian sense of fair play provides that those in a contest should have equal ability; that is to say, we do not pit a large corporation against a small private individual. That procedure is not fair. In 1903 the debates surrounding the advisability of introducing or creating section 273 of the Railway Act centred around that principle. It was felt that individual farmers and drainage authorities had neither the resources nor the wealth to contest successfully the points of law and points of advantage with the great railway corporations of those days. The net result was that section 273 was incorporated into the Railway Act in order to compel the railways to carry across railway property, at the expense of the railway, farm drains and drains provided for by drainage authorities. When the Pipe Lines Act was set up, although 40 some sections of the Railway Act which involved provisions for the expropriation of land and settlement for the same were incorporated into the Pipe Lines Act, section 273 of the Railway Act was left out. Therefore the individual farmer and drainage authorities in the various parts of Canada were left to fight an unequal battle against the great pipe line corporations.

When the National Energy Board Act was introduced in 1959 and passed by the house, again section 273 of the Railway Act was omitted, although 40 some sections of the Railway Act were incorporated in the National Energy Board Act. Having regard to the way in which the act is being administered, it is now felt that section 273 should be incorporated into the National Energy Board Act. It is felt that the provisions of section 273 of the Railway Act are just as necessary today in the National Energy Board Act to protect individual farmers and drainage authorities against the great pipe line corporations as the provisions of that section of the Railway Act were necessary back in 1903 to protect the farmers and drainage authorities of those days.

As an indication of the attitude of the pipe line companies, I might say that there are now four pipe lines crossing Middlesex West. Three of them operate under provincial charter and therefore are subject to the provisions contained in section 273 of the Railway Act. In other words, they are subject to provincial drainage regulations. One of the four pipe lines which crosses Middlesex West, Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, operates under a federal charter and does not come under the provisions of the provincial drainage legislation of Ontario. The result is that when a farm drain or a municipal drain has to be run across the right of way of any one of the three pipe lines of Sun oil, Imperial oil and Union gas, those three lines must pay the extra cost which is occasioned by their presence or operation there. There is no question that they pay these costs and as far as I know everyone seems quite happy with the situation.

However, Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, operating under a federal charter, does not come under these provincial drainage regulations as contained in section 273 of the Railway Act, with the result that they do not pay the costs of such crossings. They assess these costs against the individual farmer or against the municipal drainage authority.

It is true that up to the present time, with one exception as far as I know, individual farmers and drainage authorities who have constructed drains across the right of way of Interprovincial Pipe Line Company have agreed to the conditions laid down by that company which assess the whole cost against the farmer or the drainage authority.

I should like to outline the conditions laid down by Interprovincial Pipe Line Company with respect to such crossings and to do so I should like to place on the record a letter from Interprovincial Pipe Line Company to Archibald, Gray and McKay, Ontario land surveyors, London, Ontario, dated January 21, 1960. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether I could have permission to have this letter included in Hansard rather than reading it. It is composed of three sheets.

Mr. Speaker: It is not customary to read at great length from documents in the course of a debate. Can the hon. member not select enough to make his point?

Mr. Thomas: It is rather difficult to make the point inasmuch as the conditions that are laid down cover approximately two pages. I think they are important to the case we are trying to make because the conditions laid down by the pipe line company are strongly biased in favour of the company. As a matter of fact, they load on the back of the individual farmer or drainage authority all the responsibility for carrying the drain across the pipe line and for maintaining it in the future. If there is objection to including this in Hansard without my reading it, I shall read those parts which I think should be included. They say in part in their letter:

As there are, as yet, no regulations covering such crossing, this company will request the national energy board to include in their order the following conditions:

1. Except as hereunder provided, all work in connection with the construction, maintenance, renewal and repair of the proposed crossing of the company's pipe line by the drain of the applicant and the continued supervision of the same shall be performed by the authority having control over such drain, or the owner thereof, as the case may be, at its own cost and expense, unless the renewal or repair is made necessary by the negligence of others. No work shall at any time be done in such a manner as to unduly obstruct, delay or interfere with the operation of the company's pipe line. Notwithstanding the foregoing, all work which might disturb the pipe, which necessitates re-aligning, raising or lowering the pipe or excavating material from over or round it, or the addition of casing or other appurtenances thereto, shall be performed by the company, and all costs and expenses of such work shall be borne and paid by the authority having control over such drain, or the owner thereof, as the case may be.

2. The authority having control over the drain, or the owner thereof, shall at all times maintain its crossing of the company's pipe line in good working order and condition, so that at no time shall any damage be caused to the company's pipe line or its usefulness or safety be impaired, or the full use and enjoyment thereof be in any way interfered with.

3. Subject to the proviso hereinafter set out, before any work of constructing, renewing or repairing its crossing of the company's pipe line is begun, the authority having control over such crossing or the party making, owning or operating such crossing, as the case may be, shall give to the company at least 48 hours notice thereof in writing, to enable the company to appoint an inspector to see that the work is performed in such a manner as shall, in all respects, comply with this order; except that in cases of emergency, the appropriate official of the company shall be notified immediately. The amount of wages and expenses of such inspector shall be paid by the authority having control over such drain, or the owner thereof, as the case may be, upon receipt from the company of a statement showing in reasonable detail the particulars of such wages and expenses.

4. The applicant shall at all times wholly indemnify the company from and against all loss, costs, damage, injury and expense to which the company may be put by reason of any damage or injury to persons or property caused by the drain construction, maintenance or operation of the drain, as well as against any damage or injury resulting from the imprudence, neglect or want of skill of the employees or agents of the applicant in connection with the construction, operation, maintenance, renewal or repair of said drain, or any other works herein provided for, unless the cause of such loss, cost, damage, injury or expense can be traced elsewhere.

Those are the conditions requested by Interprovincial Pipe Line Company in connection with any order which the board shall issue for a private individual or drainage authority to carry a drain across their pipe. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that these conditions are heavily weighted in favour of the pipe line company and offer little or no protection to the farmer or drainage authority concerned.

Any crossings which have been made to date have been made under these conditions. So far as I am aware, all the costs of drains carried across interprovincial pipe lines have been paid for by the farmer or drainage authority concerned. However, three pipe lines have expended as much as $7,000 or $8,000 per crossing in expenses in order to carry drains across their line, and there has been no question about who should pay those costs. All pipe lines operating under provincial charter pay all the extra costs when any farm drain of an individual farmer or drainage authority crosses their line. It is suggested that, in all fairness and justice, this anomaly should be removed and that all pipe lines should be treated alike. This amendment, therefore, is proposed to the National Energy Board Act in an effort to see that any discrimination is removed and that the pipe line companies have to give the same deal to all farmers and drainage authorities concerned.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a few short and personal comments following the statement of the hon. member. I examined Bill No. C-33, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act (drainage works), and I must say that I want to express some rather significant reservations on the matter.

I have no doubt that in submitting this bill, the hon. member has a very praiseworthy aim, and that its effects might, in some cases, be of great benefit to farmers.

I believe that this is, primarily a local issue, for which it would seem possible to find a solution without resorting to such drastic amendments.

But I do not object so much to that as to the way of going about it, which, to my mind, is prejudicial to provincial rights in that regard.

We are dealing here with drainage works, and I think that the hon. member who preceded me will admit that there is nothing more local and provincial than drainage works. The explanatory notes to the bill, and more particularly the last two paragraphs, speak for themselves in that respect, and I quote:

The result of the present laws is that the railway utilities, interprovincial and provincial, and the provincial pipe lines utilities are subject to provincial drainage authorities while the interprovincial and international pipe line utilities are subject to the national energy board.

This bill proposes to incorporate in the National Energy Board Act the provincial drainage laws so as to apply these laws to interprovincial and international pipe lines with respect to farms, market gardens and nurseries so classed under the applicable provincial assessment law.

In other words, and to summarize the scope of this bill, what is intended here is the incorporation in a federal act, by way of an amendment, of all provincial drainage laws.

In my opinion, it will be necessary to redefine farms, market gardens and nurseries. It can readily be seen how these definitions, for the purposes of municipal assessments, can vary from one province to another.

I fail to see how such a bill could be approved without the province having been consulted on the matter. I want to point out that we seem to forget too often that the provinces hold annual sessions, through interprovincial conferences. Thanks to the leadership of the premier of the province of Quebec, discussion with the provinces is much more easy now.

Too often, in passing measures of this kind which we considered by ourselves, we confront the provinces with a fait accompli.

It may be that we are faced with technical problems—this might well be so in this case—and that the co-operation of the provinces is not only desirable but necessary.

I submit that in any field of joint federal-provincial jurisdiction, and especially in any field of purely local and provincial jurisdiction, we should have here, in the House of Commons, some machinery which would prevent the repeated introduction of certain bills which I feel exceed our jurisdiction and which, even if they were adopted, would be ultra vires and could not be carried out.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is a rather easy way of overcoming such a difficulty.

We all know that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) is authorized since the Canadian Bill of Rights has been passed to examine bills introduced in this house to satisfy himself that they are not contrary to any provision of the bill of rights. Therefore, I feel that the bill now before us would not have been introduced if such a check had been made.

In any field involving federal and provincial jurisdictions, I wonder why the Minister of Justice as well as the officials of his department would not be authorized to examine the bills before their introduction to see if they are not encroaching upon the exclusive privileges of the provinces.

I think that if that was done, many a difficulty could be prevented.

I do not want to take too much of the time of the house, because I wish to give other members the opportunity to comment on this bill.

May I simply be allowed to sum up. The intention here is to incorporate provincial drainage laws in a federal statute, and from the explanatory notes I read a moment ago, I am inclined to question the constitutionality of the bill.

However, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) for having introduced this bill. I believe that his purpose is very commendable, and that it would be in the interest of a very large number of our fellow citizens that something be done along those lines, so that drainage projects may be carried out in the most practical way for all farmers and landowners through whose lands those pipe lines pass.

In my opinion, it would be possible to find a more practical and easier solution, a solution which would certainly be more constitutional than this bill introduced by the hon. member.

(Text):

Mr. John Smith (Lincoln): On rising to speak briefly about this bill I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) who has brought this matter to our attention again. Contrary to the views expressed by the previous speaker, I believe it is a matter which we should seriously consider passing.

With vast resources of gas and oil in western Canada and with major markets for it in the east, it will mean that in the future we will have many more pipe lines bringing gas and oil to eastern Canada. I should like to give my interpretation of the bill. Its intention is to amend the National Energy Board Act so that the construction of pipe lines will come within the provisions of the provincial statutes and be subject to provincial drainage laws and to the judicial interpretation of these laws by the courts, regardless of whether the pipe lines are constructed under a provincial or federal charter.

In past years we have not had too much of a problem in connection with oil and gas pipe lines constructed under federal charter because there were not too many of them. However this is now becoming a factor which we must consider. At the present time there are several bills coming before the house in connection with the construction of gas and oil pipe lines through different parts of Canada and for that reason I think it is most important we should consider this bill and give it some measure of approval. With the advance of time there are other problems to be considered, probably not particularly connected with this bill, but there is also the building of underground power transmission lines and telephone lines under federal charter, that cross more than one province.

Surely it is only reasonable that the national energy board drainage regulations should be amended to comply with provincial drainage regulations? I do not intend to deal with the mechanics of the bill. I believe the hon. member for Middlesex West has done that in a very able manner, but I would like to outline some of the problems which appear to me in connection with the building of pipe lines. For instance there is the disruption of a land tile drainage system, which is a most important matter in the province of Ontario, more especially where we have fruit and vegetable growers.

I understand that a 30-inch pipe line, which is a common size for the bigger projects, has to be placed about six to eight feet deep in the ground, and the trench must be quite wide to provide working space while the pipe line is being built. One can readily understand the problem there. But even in the case of a pipe line of much less capacity the flow of a field tile drainage system could be completely disrupted and could only be made to operate satisfactorily by the construction of an interceptor tile drainage system on either side of the pipe line. I have some experience in connection with this and I know it is a problem which could lead to a lot of expense.

Unless the construction of pipe lines is brought under the regulations of provincial drainage laws this expense could very easily fall to the responsibility and cost of the farmers and wheat growers whose land is crossed by a pipe line. I also contend that pipe lines for the transmission of gas and oil should come under the regulations of provincial drainage laws for the purpose of being made subject to special assessments for clearing and repairing natural water courses, just the same as other structures and assessable properties above ground. Occasionally water courses have to be cleared and repaired, and when that is done an assessment is made under the authority of provincial drainage law and it is assessed against the adjacent properties concerned. Should federal pipe lines be excluded from provincial drainage regulations it is quite possible they might not have to share part of this cost.

There is also damage caused by interference with natural water courses and spring flooding conditions, which often cannot be calculated until wash-outs and flooding take place. Provision can best be made to provide for these hazards under provincial drainage laws.

There is another matter I wish to raise and it is one which is not entirely relevant to this bill. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, if I get out of order you will correct me. I have made some study of this matter and I recommend to the national energy board that they take into consideration ways and means to recover to Canada—where facilities are available and where there is a requirement—a proportion of the huge quantities of Canadian gas and oil that may be piped into the United States from points west of Port Arthur. This gas and oil is transshipped by a great network of pipe lines across the United States, and I understand some of it arrives back in Canada, and I suppose at substantially increased costs. I have checked with the national energy board and have been advised that no recovery provisions have yet been made in export permits for gas and oil. However, they agree it is a matter well worth considering.

Mr. Speaker, I could say more on this matter but I know other hon. members wish to speak on it. I think that as far as the province of Ontario is concerned this bill is a matter that should be given very favourable consideration. As the mover of the bill has mentioned it is connected with the old Railway Act which was brought in many, many years ago. We have to review these matters from time to time and, as I have already said, because of the large number of gas and oil pipe lines that are coming to eastern Canada we should take steps now to see that those with federal charters come within the provincial drainage schemes.

[Mr. Smith (Lincoln).]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join previous speakers in this debate in congratulating the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) for the work he has done in the preparation of this bill and for the discussion that has ensued from it.

I believe we are all very worried when we hear or read of the terms and requirements that are made by pipe line companies. We have heard read this afternoon correspondence from an interprovincial pipe line and we heard the terms they made when they had the opportunity of evading some of the responsibilities that other pipe lines have to face. These are legal terminologies, it is true; but they remind me of reading the original contracts which farmers signed in many cases, and the heavy legal verbiage which allowed absolutely no loophole whatever to anyone connected with the contract. I think a farmer is terrified by the language itself and therefore when he makes any request he is, and rightly should be, always very cautious when approaching any problem in connection with pipe lines.

It is perfectly true that in Ontario there is going to be a continuing and growing demand for drainage and that where drainage crosses a pipe line it is going to be highly essential that this drainage be carried out at the lowest possible cost to the municipality, the authority or the farmer who may be involved in the drainage program. For the success and progress of our agricultural industry it is necessary that drainage shall take place on a much larger scale than has been necessary in the past. For this reason we must be concerned with the advent of gas pipe lines passing through the agricultural lands of Ontario. I have been concerned with the trend that has been indicated by at least one speaker today. He indicated that we should use as the basis of our argument the fact that the province of Ontario or other provinces have passed drainage laws in a provincial sense, and because the federal act has not been sufficient to take care of this problem in the past we should make all pipe lines into provincial lines so that they would be under provincial jurisdiction and the provincial governments, having jurisdiction over both fields, would find less difficulty in equalizing the problem as between the drainage act and the Pipe Lines Act. I suggest that this is a dangerous thing to do because, as the last speaker pointed out, there is an increasing growth in Canada, not only of lines carrying oil and other commodities in the province, but there is also a very large and growing field of international and interprovincial pipe lines.

Our laws must be brought into line. I think this is really what would happen if the amendments contained in this bill were put into effect.

I agree with those who say that this may be a very cumbersome way of doing it. It may be true that we would have to go back to the Railway Act and pick out some of the sections that should not necessarily have been applied, but I think this has been made necessary by the very inflexibility of the pipe lines with which we deal. The Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, and particularly Trans Canada Pipe Line Limited have shown their inflexibility in any type of dealing not covered by the contract they originally signed. In my opinion these original contracts had the best legal brains in the country behind them and the pipe line companies had at their beck and call the best kind of legal advice in drawing them up.

I am always amused to remember that the only thing that was not put into the bill concerning the trans-Canada pipe line was a complete and workable expropriation clause. How they could have missed the most important one, I do not know, because I am sure from reading many of these contracts that the pipe line companies employed the best legal brains they could afford. I think it is a condemnation of the legal advice that pipe lines receive when it is necessary for the hon. member for Middlesex West to ask parliament today to enact laws that will provide for the very simple matter of allowing water to flow from one area to another and surmount the difficulties created by pipe lines. It is perfectly true that the pipe line companies have expropriated, bought or own the particular strip of land under which they have put their pipe line. But this does not give them the almighty right to say, "We will not allow any other type of development in the area". They were able to look far enough ahead and see that there would not be a loophole which would mean they would have to give some assistance to the farmers and they have relied upon their contracts when this question has arisen.

I think the farmer has a right, if he is draining the back 40 acres of his farm to another area of the farm, to say to the pipe line company, "You are obstructing this drainage". He should be able to say this, as he can when a highway is involved. I think the farmer should have the right to say, "You must put in the connecting link in my drainage system. This is your responsibility. You are now a member of the community. You are part of this area. This should be done".

I think it is a condemnation of this whole industry that we should have to come to parliament and ask, in what I consider to be a very roundabout way, for a very simple and basic need to be provided, namely the need for drainage in rural areas. I believe that the pipe line companies would find a great many more friends in parliament and across the country if they did not try to beat the little farmer but instead co-operated with him in connection with the rights they obtained when buying these narrow strips of land under which they buried their pipe lines.

I suggest they should always be responsible for the particular area and putting in the connecting link, because I think it would be unfair to ask the farmer to dig up the pipe line and put in the connecting link himself. I think this would be dangerous. I think it would not be in the interests of safety if he had to do this, particularly if there happened to be some rock there and he decided to use force to remove the obstruction. I think everyone will agree that this is going to have to be done by the company itself, and the company should carry the expense of maintaining their interest and participation in the community in co-operation with the other members of the community, who in most cases happen to be farmers whose land they are crossing, and in some cases dividing, by their pipe line. I hope we will not give any consideration to this idea of dividing into provincial jurisdictions the pipe lines that are interprovincial in nature. I believe the federal government has a responsibility for maintaining liaison with the provincial governments and for giving whatever direction may be necessary by way of regulations or other means, such as the bill now before us, to assure farmers and other members of the community, including drainage authorities, that they will have free access to this type of land so that drainage can be completed. It is well known that the presence of a pipe line does not mean that the whole topography of an area is changed and that water will begin to flow in another direction.

The house has an opportunity of passing this measure this afternoon so that its provisions may be put speedily into effect. It is unfortunate that it should be necessary to proceed in this way by adding a section to the act which would allow the drainage authorities the same rights as they would have enjoyed if we had been dealing with a highway, a railroad or some other obstruction. Years ago it was necessary to deal with this problem while the railways were being laid. I should have thought that the improvement in public relations since then would have allowed us to deal with the present difficulties in a much more friendly manner. However, if that is not the case I shall certainly support the proposed amendment and I hope other members of the committee will do likewise.

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): As has been indicated, this bill deals with amendments to the National Energy Board Act to make pipe lines operating under federal charter, that is, interprovincial and even international pipe lines, subject to the drainage laws of the provinces through which the pipe lines pass. It is suggested that for this purpose section 273 of the Railway Act be added to the 49 sections of the Railway Act already incorporated in section 75 (1) of the National Energy Board Act.

I have had very little experience indeed, I must confess, with this type of problem but when I heard there was this strange difference between the procedure required to get compensation from interprovincial pipe line companies as compared with the relatively simple and expeditious procedure involved in provincial pipe lines, I was amazed. I think this anomaly, this omission, must obviously have been due to inadvertence rather than design. I can see all sorts of problems involved with which municipalities and farms will have to contend increasingly even in eastern Ontario, questions which are fertile of litigation; whether, for instance, a pipe line under construction should go under or over existing trunk sewer or even a farm tiled drainage system. Every three or five years these drains have to be cleaned out and maintained. Surely, if one of these ditches intersects an oil pipe line, the company should be responsible for contributing a portion of the cost of this maintenance. There are many other instances where these difficulties arise. Many, as I say, are fertile of litigation. Nevertheless, that is an expensive course to take both in time and in the cost involved and as has been suggested people tend to be, if you will, almost terrified by the prospects of having to contend with highly paid legal counsel, the best available advice, such as the pipe line companies can afford.

In wet regions and especially in certain parts of Ontario, surplus water gathers in low spots in the fields and this interferes with cultivation and ruins standing crops. Proper drainage is the answer to this condition. Even in our own area of Cornwall tile drainage will become increasingly common. This drainage is provided by placing stone tiles end to end in a trench approximately two feet below the surface of the land. Surface water seeps into the drain and is carried away into suitable outlets, usually into larger drains and ultimately into open ditches. This permits the aeration of the soil and allows a healthy crop to grow. It also helps the cultivation of the soil.

I see that time is passing fast. I just want to emphasize, since I shall not be able to finish the remarks I wish to make, that these proposed amendments to the National Energy Board Act were endorsed by the Ontario association of land surveyors at their annual meeting which was held in Hamilton in February, 1960. I think it is interesting that one of the gentlemen who took part in those discussions at that time is a friend and former classmate of mine from Cornwall, Mr. Leonard Stidwell. I think it is important that we should anticipate these difficulties before they become acute and therefore I think it is highly desirable that this legislation should be incorporated into the National Energy Board Act so as to provide an expeditious, quick, efficient, cheap and familiar method of dealing with this problem.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

A—Department—

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): When the committee rose at five o'clock there were some members of the committee who were having difficulty in understanding the explanation I had given of this particular item. The fault quite obviously was mine.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit me to correct him? I am sure he will do that.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, I will do that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it not the situation that my hon. friend did not have the facts?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, not at all. My hon. friend's hon. friend had the facts in full, but the circumstances were perhaps not expressed with that precise clarity which is required in order to make the hon. member for Essex East appreciate in full the details of the facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is another way of saying the parliamentary secretary had not done his homework.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think the parliamentary secretary had done his homework in full. Since we are starting off the evening in this pleasant way, I trust that we shall end it with equal pleasantries.

The position is this. The production in Canada of the CS2F tracker anti-submarine aircraft for the navy was completed in 1960. As these carrier-borne aircraft normally operate off the east coast and have an operational life of from eight years to 10 years it was decided by the government to select a repair and overhaul facility in the maritimes. In order that the necessary parts and components would be available for this facility it was also considered advisable to transfer to the same area the tooling that was used in the production of the aircraft. The only particular in which I was perhaps slightly inaccurate this afternoon is that I spoke of only one contractor in the maritime provinces, that of Enamel and Heating Products Limited, at Sackville. There is a further firm, namely Fairey Aviation Company Limited, Dartmouth. The latter contractor in Nova Scotia was selected for the repair and overhaul work and the second contractor, namely Enamel and Heating Products of Sackville was chosen for the production of the necessary aircraft parts and components. This production tooling will be kept in a stand-by condition to be withdrawn for the production of spares as required. This is the most economical approach to the situation.

The relocation in the maritimes of the CS2F tooling which originally cost around $9 million and which is presently at several locations in Ontario involves expenditures for packing, inhibiting and shipping. This is estimated to cost in excess of $140,000 of which it is anticipated that $100,000 will be spent in the current year. That is why a supplementary estimate in the amount of $100,000 is being submitted.

My hon. friend from Essex East was interested in what the future was. He will appreciate that this vote deals with the transfer of tooling to the plants in the maritimes and that once it is there, then the repair and the overhaul will come normally from the ordinary vote of the Department of National Defence, navy.

The Chairman: Shall vote 690 carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All I can say is that the parliamentary secretary who has obviously done without his evening meal—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Not at all. He has done very well.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and has obtained some facts, has presented the committee with a picture that seems to be out of proportion having regard to the amount actually being asked. It is difficult to conceive that the situation warrants the exaggerated account we have received from the parliamentary secretary of what is proposed by this expenditure. However, we have learned, as a result of this intervention, that we have afforded the hon. gentleman an opportunity of at least being able to provide what reasonably, without examination, might seem to be an adequate reply to a simple question. However, on analysis of what the hon. gentleman has said, it is apparent that he has not really answered the question.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Oh, oh.

Item agreed to.

Crown companies—Canadian Arsenals Limited—

691. Administration and operation—to extend the purposes of vote 74, main estimates, 1961-62, to reimburse Canadian Arsenals Limited in respect of outstanding balances of previous years' operating deficits, $1.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the parliamentary secretary explain the nature of this vote? It is for $1?

Mr. Pickersgill: More than that. In the margin appears the sum of $100,001.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is really a technical matter.

On their balance sheet of December 30, 1961, Canadian Arsenals show an item "Uncleared Funds" due by the receiver general and amounting to $129,339.92.

This sum represents the total of two balances of expenditures by the company in the fiscal years ended March 31, 1960 and March 31, 1961, which were in excess of the total funds provided in the estimates in those years.

If hon. gentlemen will examine the reports of the Auditor General they will find the full particulars. Particulars taken from the reports of the Auditor General are as follows:

Supply—External Affairs

1959-60	Provided in main estimates (vote 74)		$ 2,000,000
	Net loss from operations during year		2,059,719
	Balance due from Receiver General		$ 59,719
1960-61	Provided in main and supplementary estimates (votes 73 and 509) .....$	2,849,120
	Net loss from operations during year ..	2,918,741
	Balance due from Receiver General		69,621
	Total of uncleared funds at December 30, 1961 .....$		129,340

Based on present forecasts by the company, the 1961-62 estimates provision of $3,880,230 in vote 74 for the administration and operation of Canadian Arsenals Limited will be more than sufficient to meet the company's 1961-62 actual requirements. Funds in this vote will therefore be available from which to reimburse the company for the actual balance of $129,339.92 due in respect of the years 1959-60 and 1960-61. Authority is accordingly sought through the above supplementary entry to transfer $129,339.92 to Canadian Arsenals Limited from the 1961-62 funds provided under vote 74.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not know whether I followed the parliamentary secretary too well, however, apparently there has been a deficit in previous years in connection with the operation of this crown corporation.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is correct.

Mr. Chevrier: In what we are voting here is not the amount of the deficit because the whole item appears as the sum of $1. How is the money obtained? Is it from the consolidated revenue fund in payment of these deficits to which the parliamentary secretary has referred?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We are getting authority in this for the amount of the deficit for the two years less the amount of the surplus for this year. This is purely an item of authority.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

692. Departmental administration—further amount required, $225,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This item introduces a series of votes in the Department of External Affairs totalling some $4,144,998 which the Secretary of State for External Affairs is asking parliament to approve. I am going to ask the parliamentary secretary who is charged with this matter in the House of Commons at the present time, if he will agree to postponing this item until tomorrow. I am informed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be arriving from Geneva some time between 10 p.m. and midnight tonight. He has been at an extremely important conference in Geneva, as we all know, involving matters of the greatest importance. While under normal circumstances he would be expected to make a report on motions tomorrow it seems to me, as I am sure it will to the committee, that it would be desirable to have him do this in committee so that he might not only make a statement but as well that we might be given an opportunity to question him in a constructive way, I am sure, about the matters which have engaged his attention.

So I hope that at this stage, whatever may be the view of the government with regard to the way in which it proposes to conduct the estimates, it would be agreed that in the light of the fact that there has not been much discussion of foreign affairs this session and as this will be the last opportunity to do so before dissolution, the Secretary of State for External Affairs should be afforded the opportunity to deal with these various estimates and particularly for the reason I mentioned at the outset, that it will afford him an opportunity to give a report on what took place in Geneva and give members of the house an opportunity to elicit further information from him.

There is another reason for putting this request at this time. Unlike former sessions, there has been no sitting of the external affairs committee, an arrangement that has enabled us to pursue interrogations in past years, and which therefore eliminated unnecessary duplication of discussion in the house. Apart altogether from the desirability of having ministers conduct the discussion of these various estimates themselves, to which course the government has registered a very strong and totalitarian objection—I say that with no offence because we are in a very happy and constructive mood tonight—I think that the parliamentary secretary should accede readily to the suggestion that we postpone until tomorrow item 692 and the following items under external affairs up to 706. If there is any difference of opinion then as to the procedure to be followed we could have that argument at that time. I simply request at this time that the parliamentary secretary forgo dealing with these matters until the return to the house of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to support wholeheartedly the most reasonable plea of the hon. member for Essex East that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs be postponed until the minister returns, which I understand he will do tomorrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Tonight.

Mr. Herridge: But it will be possible for him to be present tomorrow. In view of the fact that the committee on external affairs has not sat this session and in view of the excellent work the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been doing at Geneva, I think it would be most unfortunate if this house were to pass these estimates without having a report from him. I am sure we are all looking forward to hearing of his activities at Geneva, and we on this side again look forward to extending our co-operation to the government through constructive suggestions for the improvement of our foreign policy. I do urge the parliamentary secretary to give consideration to our pleas.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East knows how very difficult it is for me ever to resist his blandishments, and when they are supported by the hon. member for Kootenay West it is all the more difficult. But this is an occasion when I must indicate that what they have suggested would be in fact a departure from what has been the practice of the committee of supply.

We had some discussion yesterday as to what has been the practice in dealing with final supplementary estimates. In all instances they have been dealt with not by the individual ministers concerned, with one or perhaps two exceptions, I think, but by the Minister of Finance whose poor substitute I am on this particular occasion. The custom and tradition of the committee have never been to use the final supplementary estimates for statements of policy of the type to which the hon. member for Essex East refers.

The final supplementary estimates generally, and in this case in particular, as my friend will see, deal with the provision of further amounts. The policy has been determined earlier by the committee. The issue which is before the committee in these instances is the wisdom or otherwise of supplementing amounts, and that is why these estimates are called supplementary estimates. If we were to concede the point of view of the hon. member for Essex East, then in each instance the minister of the crown whose estimates they were would be in the house for these final supplementary estimates.

I think perhaps the best statement that has been made in respect of the procedure in this regard was made by that very distinguished minister of finance, Mr. Justice Abbott. Over the dinner hour I sought to find the statement he made on one occasion when he was minister of finance. I believe that during all the time he was minister he conducted the final supplementaries himself. I know that in the election year of 1953 the final supplementaries, with almost as many items as there are at the present time, went through in less than one afternoon.

To concede what my hon. friends suggest would be a departure from the tradition, custom and practice of this committee, and difficult as it is for me to resist the hon. member for Essex East when he is in one of his rare reasonable moods, I regret that I have to do so tonight.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the decision just made by the parliamentary secretary involved great concern and discernment on his part. He has given certain reasons for his position, but I want to bring to his attention one or two points that I think differentiate the position in which we find ourselves tonight from that to which my hon. friend has made reference. He says it is the custom and tradition of this house in dealing with supplementary estimates not to have the ministers in their seats to answer questions. That statement—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is true.

Mr. Chevrier: —is not wholly accurate because I can remember full well further supplementary estimates when I had to come into the house at the request of the then minister of finance to explain certain matters concerning items under the heading of the Department of Transport. I can think of two particular instances right now where there would have been a terrific row if I had not been here and I will bring them to the attention of the parliamentary secretary if need be.

The other point I wish to bring to his attention is that the circumstances today are entirely different from those to which my hon. friend has reference. First, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as the hon. member for Essex East has said, has been at an important conference in Geneva and I think he would be one of the first to want to be in the house to discuss these items. The minister has been away for some time on important government business and it seems to me that the house would welcome his presence here. Knowing him as I do, I am sure that he too would want to be here to give an explanation of these items. I am also satisfied in my own mind that if he were here they would go through much faster.

However, leaving that aside and without assenting for the moment to what my hon. friend has said, let me say to him that the circumstances today are entirely different from those to which he refers because, as has been succinctly put by the hon. member for Essex East, we do not know how long we are going to be here. Having regard to these circumstances, if it is a fact that this is the last opportunity we will have to discuss estimates then it is our duty and responsibility to ascertain what these expenditures are for. It is also our duty and responsibility—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I shall be glad to tell the hon. member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend really seriously contend—

Mr. Chevrier: I have not finished yet. I want to say, if that is the case, as I have every reason to believe it is, then I think we should know, a fortiori, what these things refer to.

There is another reason, a far more important reason, which was raised by my hon. friend yesterday. It has to do with the manner in which these supplementary estimates No. 4 have been compiled. If you look at them and compare them with No. 3, you will find there is no reason for having a discussion of these estimates at this time. If they had been prepared with due order and without the confusion to which I referred the other day in a question addressed to the Minister of Finance, all except perhaps a few of them could have been included in supplementary estimates No. 3. If you look at No. 3, and compare it with No. 4, you will find the titles are practically the same and the items are practically the same. There is little or no difference.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not true.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to take up an undue amount of the time of the house, but I have marked here in red ink the duplicate items. If my hon. friend insists, I will give him the items that are contained in supplementary estimates 3 and 4.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There are five.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend says there are five. I refer to supplementary estimates No. 4, items 677 to 682, which are under the production and marketing branch; then there is land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects, and these are the same as in estimates No. 3. The items in external affairs are in large part a duplication. They are not the same items; that is not what I intended to say, but they are a duplication. The point I am trying to make is that these estimates should have been ready and prepared and included in supplementary estimates No. 3 rather than in No. 4 because there is a period of barely three weeks between the time No. 3 was tabled in this house and the time No. 4 was tabled.

There is an added reason why it seems to me that there has not been the order in the preparation of these estimates that normally there is under conditions of this kind. For these reasons, I again ask the parliamentary secretary if he will not give consideration to the point which was raised by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the parliamentary secretary replies and so that he will not repeat a statement that he could not support, I turned up the only volume of Hansard I happened to have on my desk. I looked at page 2402 of Hansard for 1957, volume III, and I read:

> Supply: The house in committee of supply. Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair. Department of Citizenship and Immigration, Immigration Branch—553.
> Field and inspectional service, Canada—further amount required, $194,177.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What date was that?

Mr. Pickersgill: March 18, 1957, the last further supplementaries brought into this house by my friend Mr. Harris. There was a question by Mr. Knowles, a reply by me and then pages and pages thereafter of discussion in which Mr. Harris took no part but in which I took a part. This was only characteristic of what happened whenever hon. members in the opposition in those days wanted information from a minister. The difference, as my hon. friend from Laurier has pointed out, between the situation in the days when hon. gentlemen were over here and we were over there and the hon. member for Carleton and I most of the time were out of the house, was that our supplementaries were supplementaries. They were not a complete new budget. This is a new feature of this government this year. As I pointed out yesterday, in all, the further supplementaries added together from the year ending March 31, 1953 to March 31, 1957, all the further supplementaries added together in those five years were $357 million and the further supplementaries for 1961-62 are $341 million for this one year, nearly as much as the last five years before 1957.

Well, this means you are bringing in a new budget. You are upsetting the ways and means. It means the Minister of Finance had no notion, as we know he did not last year, of what he was doing at all. Never before that I have been able to discover have four sets of further supplementaries been introduced. Perhaps this happened in Mr. Bennett's day, but never again as far as I have been able to ascertain. The whole point is that we no longer have any ways and means at all in this house. We no longer have any balance.

This government, in order to create phoney impressions of balance of ways and means at budget time deliberately vastly underestimated; then the Prime Minister has some vision and we get a whole lot of entirely new expenditures introduced into this house as further supplementary estimates.

These are huge sums of money, almost as much as the budgets were in the days before the second world war. We say that we would like one department in these estimates held up for a perfectly good reason. After all, sir, it is not every day or even every year, although unfortunately it happens all too often because they do not seem to be very successful, that we have a disarmament conference under the terms and conditions of this one and in the state the world is in at this time. It seems to me, sir, a very unwise denial of a reasonable request. I realize how awkward it is for the parliamentary secretary when the premier of British Columbia snaps his fingers and the Minister of Finance has to go trotting out to British Columbia to bow and scrape before that great potentate. I realize how embarrassing it is for the parliamentary secretary, who may be ticked off, who may even be fired like Mr. Coyne—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would it not be well for the hon. gentleman to get back to discussing these estimates?

The Deputy Chairman: I wonder if I could have the floor just for a moment? I was not in the chair when this discussion got under way, and I did not realize that the basis for it, as has been explained to me by the Clerk of the house, was that hon. members wanted this series of items on external affairs deferred. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate came back to that point just a moment ago. I feel that debate on this subject has been fairly well exhausted and unless the parliamentary secretary accedes I think it would be well if we got back to the item under consideration, which is departmental administration and which allows fairly wide scope for debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: You interrupted me, Mr. Chairman, just as I was going to do what I think you will not deny I have a perfect right to do. I was going to appeal to the senior minister who is now leading the house. It is the ministers of the crown and not the parliamentary secretary who must make a decision on this matter. The senior minister, I take it, is the distinguished Postmaster General, whose well known sense of justice and whose breadth of view will appeal to all of us. We regret that the parliamentary secretary, whom we all hold in high regard, has not authority in this matter. The Postmaster General, the distinguished leader of the house for the time being, will see the force of this argument and having the authority will I am sure accede at once to the request of the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The mood and temper of the house has been so pleasant tonight that I shall do nothing to upset it in any way. However there have been a number of statements made which are rather difficult for me to allow to remain uncontroverted. I shall correct them with perhaps calmer deliberation than my inclinations would lead me to venture.

I have to say to my hon. friend from Laurier that he is quite wrong in his suggestion that these final supplementaries ought to have been incorporated in earlier supplementaries. They could not have been and they should not have been, and if it were proper under our rules I could elaborate in detail to the hon. gentleman on the reasons why that is the case. May I say to him and the hon. gentleman from Bonavista-Twillingate that the only unusual item in these supplementaries, when compared with those of the last few years, is the item dealing with T.C.A.

The bulk of these final supplementary estimates are in three items, the agricultural prices support program $23.1 million, the C.N.R. deficit $67.3 million, and the T.C.A. deficit, $6.5 million, making a total of $96.9 million. The remainder of the budgetary items in these final supplementaries of $25.9 million compare most favourably with the usual governmental costs provided for in previous final supplementary estimates.

Because of what my hon. friend said I would point out that if you eliminate from the last 10 years in the final supplementary estimates those matters you ought to eliminate, the T.C.A. deficit, the C.N.R. deficit, the old age security fund deficit and the agricultural prices support costs, you will find these statistics: 1952-53, $41.8; 1953-54, $58.6; 1954-55, $47.6; 1955-56, $16.5; 1956-57, $84.8, for a total in those five years of $249.3 million. Let us take the next five years: 1957-58, $48.0; 1958-59, $32.2; 1959-60, $15.6; 1960-61, $41.2; 1961-62, $25.9, or a total of $162.9 million. In other words during the last five years of the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite the total of the final supplementaries was $249 million, and in the last five years under this government the final supplementaries totalled $162 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: You eliminate what it suits you to eliminate.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What you eliminate, and properly eliminate, are those things which I have enumerated.

Mr. Pickersgill: I eliminate nothing.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My hon. friend eliminates nothing and that is perhaps the reason why he is in the condition he is at the present time. The hon. gentleman spoke yesterday of an $8 million duplication, but may I say to him that there are only five items, numbers 688, 694, 701, 723 and 732, which total $1,840,561, that are in any way duplicated by the supplementaries, and it would have been impossible for those who were preparing the estimates to have put these items in the earlier supplementaries.

Now I understand it has been the practice of the house on all occasions of which I am aware—I think with one or two exceptions—that the final supplementaries have been carried with very little discussion because the policy has already been determined and it is only a matter of deciding whether there is expediency and wisdom in adding to or subtracting from the amount which had been earlier determined. With the facilities available to me and with the great skilled assistants I have here, I shall endeavour to answer any questions that may be put, but I venture to suggest that the committee would be wiser to proceed in a businesslike way with its proceedings tonight and we shall see if we cannot completely satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Maybe I may be allowed to say a word since I raised this matter first at eight o'clock. I must say to the parliamentary secretary that I have watched him during the past day. I have admired his skill in having a minimum of intervention from the government side, resulting in a more ready dispatch of our business than is usually the case, particularly when the Minister of Finance himself conducts the deliberations.

But the hon. gentleman has made an exception since eight o'clock. We have now been engaged in a procedural discussion for some 40 minutes. If the request had been granted at the outset we would have made some progress on the items following those in external affairs, rather than become engaged, as we have, for almost half of tonight's sitting in a procedural wrangle.

The parliamentary secretary has spoken of previous practice. I do not agree that my hon. friend has stated this correctly. It may be that the figures which he has produced, when put in proper context, allow another interpretation altogether. However my argument does not rest on that. This surely is a unique situation. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, charged with the responsibility of speaking for Canada on vital matters involving our relationship with other states at this critical time, will be in the house tomorrow morning. He will have returned from one of the most important international conferences held since the end of the second world war and only he, on behalf of this government, is in a position to give an authoritative account of the important dispositions made at Geneva.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have no doubt he will.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend admits this. Only in committee will we be afforded the opportunity before dissolution of exchanging views with regard to these vital matters.

If this proposal is not accepted, then what is the situation which the parliamentary secretary puts parliament in tonight? He puts parliament in this position that we will be denied having a report—

An hon. Member: What a laugh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —from the Department of External Affairs and the opportunity to examine that report, as it should be examined in regard to matters of fundamental importance to this nation and to the peoples of the western world. We shall be denied the opportunity to discuss such things as whether we are going to have a cessation of nuclear tests, what progress has been made in disarmament, and the relationship of Canada with neutralist states vis-à-vis the United Kingdom and the United States. These are matters of the greatest moment.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen say "order". They may not be interested in the importance of this matter, but the country is.

Mr. Nesbitt: You will get the report tomorrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say that on a matter of such vital importance parliament is being made look ridiculous tonight as a result of the decision, which is being forced on the parliamentary secretary as the spokesman of the government on this occasion. Here we have two ministers of the crown, two members of the government, who sit with the cabinet in discussing these matters.

An hon. Member: There are five now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That makes my argument all the stronger. Yes, the Minister of National Defence is here. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is here. He has some knowledge of these questions. I am sure he will appreciate the significance of what I am saying. The refusal of the parliamentary secretary—undoubtedly not because of his own judgment but because of a decision imposed on him by the government—means that this parliament will not be given the procedural opportunity—

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): That is a lot or nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to get from the Secretary of State for External Affairs a report on one of the most vital conferences—

Mr. Flynn: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, when I have finished—which has been held since the end of world war II. This puts into proper perspective the boast of the Prime Minister and the boast of others in the government of their efforts on behalf of peace. I have no doubt that this government is anxious to do something constructive in this field, but this is being denied—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Then why make that insinuation?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am making the insinuation because we are now being refused the opportunity of a discussion with regard to foreign affairs at this critical time. In view of the return tonight of the Secretary of State for External Affairs it should not be denied to a free people in a free parliament.

What is the alternative if the parliamentary secretary refuses this request, and apparently he is going to? I would point out how ridiculous this situation is, because here we have the parliamentary secretary, not to the Prime Minister but to the Minister of Finance, an amiable gentleman, an able gentleman admittedly, competent in the particular department to which he is assigned, telling us, "Do not worry; I will get up and I will give you all of the answers to these various questions" in a department that requires, if any department does, the quality of the specialist. Yet the parliamentary secretary says, "I will tell you all about Laos. I will tell you all about the discussions between Mr. Harriman and the royal Laotian government. I will tell you why Bulgaria, a communist country, supported Canada in its position against the United Kingdom and the United States in Geneva".

Mr. Nesbitt: Who is being silly now?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend from Oxford, the ex-parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, intervenes. I am sure he knows that what I am saying is right. If he were the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—and he is not; I do not know why he is not—and he were in that role tonight, I would not object to his beginning a discussion, because after all he has had four years experience at the United Nations while my hon. friend the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance has been engaged in matters having to do with financial policy. If this request is not granted in spite of the repeated and earnest requests put forward by my two colleagues and myself, what will be the result?

Mr. Pickersgill: And by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And by the leader of the socialist party. If this request is not granted, what will be the consequence? The consequence will be, as I am sure the leader of that party will agree—

An hon. Member: Who is your leader today?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that under departmental administration we will engage in a discussion of foreign policy; that is obvious. I know that my hon. friend has on his desk three packages of speeches on foreign policy which he proposes to deliver. I have three too, and I propose to engage in such a discussion. But we are not going to make any advance this way. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs were here, these observations—

An hon. Member: This is nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope that the hon. gentleman will not apply the rule of closure, because the Prime Minister has decided that we are going to eliminate closure and I am to be allowed to express myself.

Mr. Parizeau: This is not 1956.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am having some difficulty in hearing the hon. member for Essex East because of the interjections. I think it would be in the interest of progressing these items if the committee gave the hon. member a fair hearing, and I would ask his co-operation also in holding closely to the point of relevancy, with regard to which I am having some difficulty in reaching a decision; therefore I would ask his co-operation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, you will have that co-operation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have nothing very much more to say. I have been sincere in the suggestion I have made—

Mr. Pigeon: No, you are not sincere.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —in asking that this request for postponement be granted. Let us briefly recall the context of the request, Mr. Chairman. Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs is arriving from Geneva tonight some time between the hours of ten o'clock and midnight.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know because I made a point of asking his office when he was arriving, and that is what I was told. He will be in his seat tomorrow. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been at a conference that can be described as a momentous one, one involving our relations with the east, our relations with the Soviet union and our relations with countries behind the iron curtain in matters which we all admit are the most important on our agenda. All I am asking is that in view of this, the first item of departmental administration and the other items in the Department of External Affairs be postponed until tomorrow so we can have the advantage of having, in addition to the parliamentary secretary, the special knowledge and the special authority of the minister charged with these important matters.

Surely this is not an unreasonable request. To deny this request will place this government in the position, on the eve of a dissolution of parliament, of having denied this house the opportunity of discussing matters which we all regard as foremost in our considerations.

Mr. McGee: Since when?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That very junior hon. member for York-Scarborough asks, "Since when?". Obviously he has not lived long enough to realize that these problems have concerned the people of Canada for a long time and their concern is increasing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The situation, notwithstanding these interventions and regrettable catcalls in a discussion of this kind, is that if we are denied this request let it be known that this government, which regards itself as loyal to the traditions of a free parliament—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —has taken a step to deny us, on the eve of dissolution—

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —the opportunity of examining the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the vital matter of our foreign relations. That is the situation.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is utterly ridiculous.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The parliamentary secretary has replied. I ask the ministers who are sitting behind him to speak for the government. I suppose the senior minister is the Postmaster General, and I ask him to rise in his place and tell us, is it the policy of the government of Canada in the present circumstances to deny parliament the right of hearing from the Secretary of State for External Affairs under conditions that will enable us to interrogate him?

An hon. Member: We will hear from him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says. "We will hear from him"; but what will happen tomorrow is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will come into this house and on motions he will make a statement. The Speaker, of course, will allow spokesmen for the two opposition parties to reply, but those replies will obviously be, as always, pro forma. There will be no opportunity for a serious discussion.

The consequence of this refusal is that we are going to be denied asking questions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I now appeal to the senior minister in this house, if he has the authority, to allow us to postpone this matter so that we can go on with the next item, which is the Department of Finance, a department for which the parliamentary secretary is particularly qualified to speak, and to leave the discussion of external affairs to the man who is pre-eminent in that field because of his post, and because of his experience in Geneva. The Canadian people do want a report from him and do wish to give to opposition groups the opportunity of stating their position and to elicit from the minister further information. If this request is denied, this government will stand condemned, as it deserves to be.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): It has never been the case that a loud voice, a red face and a pompous manner will make a sound argument out of something which has no substance whatsoever. That remains as true tonight, after what we have heard, as it has been after so many other arguments put up by the hon. member over the months.

He himself, speaking at great length, has listed a number of things he would like to drag by the tail into this debate and discuss in the presence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He himself knows perfectly well, as has been ably pointed out by the parliamentary secretary, that this is not customary, that this is not in accordance with the traditions of this chamber and that it offends all the rules, practices and traditions of this committee. Second, he has asked whether it is the policy of the government —these were the ringing terms he used—to deny freedom of discussion. It is not. We have remained here for an hour and heard the hon. member wander all over the map. He is free to remain here and waste that much time. He certainly is doing that extremely well—wasting the time of the committee and wasting the time of the entire country with his specious arguments. He is able to do that.

Tomorrow, or at some appropriate time, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will do that which is customary. He will come to this house and give on the order for motions a report at length on matters which have concerned him while he has been away. The hon. member, or more probably his leader, will have the opportunity to comment on that, as will the representative of the other group in the house. This will give an adequate opportunity to air fully all those matters which cannot be aired tonight because the secretary of state is not here.

The hon. member makes a great case out of the suggestion that there will be no further discussion possible because this parliament is going to be dissolved, apparently in a matter of hours, according to him. I do not know where he gets his information—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Maybe I am closer to the Prime Minister than is the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): But it so happens it is not the hon. member's privilege to decide when parliament will be dissolved, and if he continues in his present vein it will never be his privilege no matter how long he lives.

I say merely in closing—and I have tried to be brief because to me the time of this committee is valuable, and the matters which we discuss here are important—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): We are most anxious as a government to proceed expeditiously with the business before us. There are other matters to be brought forward. There are measures to be discussed. It has been pointed out in great detail the amount of time which has already been spent on these estimates and on those which have preceded them. We have seen another example tonight of delay, obstructionism, of grasping at any straw which can be found in order to continue a pointless waste of time—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. So far we have had a fairly objective discussion and it is unfortunate that the Postmaster General should have introduced terms which have not characterized this debate so far.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is not within our rules for an hon. member of this committee to say that another hon. member is engaged in a process of obstruction. Surely no one can be charged with obstruction if he is seeking to obtain an opportunity for the discussion of questions which are of vital interest to us all. I would ask you to request the Postmaster General to recover the calm and serenity which, on occasions, he possesses, and recognize that in making the remarks he has, he was making remarks which are unparliamentary.

The Deputy Chairman: As I heard the comments of the Postmaster General it appeared to me he was using the expressions he did in broad terms without particular application to any hon. member and without even particular reference to a party in the house. I cannot find that his use of language was unparliamentary, if one might apply that term.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I shall conclude, Mr. Chairman. We will not pursue this discussion of obstructionism. The point has been made, and those who read Hansard and watch this house in operation can judge for themselves the amount of time which has been wasted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear. This is a sad night.

An hon. Member: Stand up when you talk.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): They can judge the amount of time which has been wasted by unnecessary repetition, by dragging in unrelated arguments—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A sad night.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The parliamentary secretary, in piloting these estimates through the committee in the name of the Minister of Finance does so with the complete support of the government. The position which he has taken on this matter is a sound one. It is one which is completely in keeping with the traditions and practices of this committee, and it is the position which is taken by the government itself.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: If I may intervene briefly for a moment, may I say that I am concerned about the fact that we are not dealing with the item which is before the committee for consideration. I am worried about the fact that we are not getting on with this discussion. I hope the hon. member for Kootenay West, to whom I shall give the floor since he rose before the hon. member for Laurier, has this in view.

Mr. Herridge: I am very sorry that the parliamentary secretary, and, later, the minister, did not respond favourably to the eloquent, logical and moving appeal of the hon. member for Essex East. I think that hon. member was fully justified in saying this committee should have the opportunity to hear a full report from the Secretary of State for External Affairs before proceeding with these estimates.

I listened carefully to the arguments of the parliamentary secretary and of the minister, but it seems to me that those arguments would apply if these were just tidbits of incidentally supplementary estimates brought forward in the normal way. But we are not operating in normal circumstances or times. These are abnormal times. This house has been in session since early in January and it has not had an opportunity to discuss foreign affairs during one of the most serious periods in the world's history.

Since the plea of the hon. member for Essex East has been denied, and in the knowledge that the opposition is determined to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I think we could very profitably spend the next hour discussing a matter of great importance to the Canadian people, to the people of British Columbia and to all the people of my constituency, namely, the question of the Columbia river treaty. This is a story that should be told to the Canadian people and I am going to take advantage of the situation this evening.

Mr. Flynn: I rise on a point of order. You have indicated before, Mr. Chairman, that you had doubts about the relevancy of the discussion which has been going on for an hour. I draw to your attention that there is nothing in this item which would allow a discussion such as has been going on up to now. The rule applicable, as you know, is the rule of strict relevancy. Furthermore, this is a matter of a further supplementary estimate. I have referred Your Honour in previous debates to May's comments at page 738 of the latest edition.

I am sure the hon. member for St. Henri will have something to contribute to this discussion because he is so knowledgeable on the rules of the house. If he cares to contribute I would be most happy to hear him, but in the meantime I suppose I have the floor and the hon. member will permit me to continue.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flynn: I know that hon. members on the other side have previously endeavoured to prevent me from rising on points of order because of my having occupied the position which you, Mr. Chairman, now occupy. But may I remind hon. members that it is the duty of all hon. members to help the Chair to apply the rules of the House of Commons notwithstanding the fact that one may have had some experience in the chair. What the hon. members have been discussing here is entirely out of order. If they wish to do so, they may move that the item be allowed to stand. That is their business. But discussing whether we could hear the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the conference at Geneva would be completely outside the scope of debate which would be allowed under this estimate.

Because the hon. member for Essex East or the hon. member for Kootenay West suspects that there might be dissolution is no reason for altering the rules of the House of Commons. The house could not work on any such assumption. I therefore think that until the committee agrees to changing the rules, whatever may be the argument of hon. members with regard to dissolution, I think it is the duty of this committee to adhere to the rules.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on the point of order which the minister has been discussing. I am sure Your Honour has been greatly assisted by the remarks of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys who relatively recently left the position you now hold. I am sure he is wise and well versed in the rules of the house. However, in his reference to the rule on the item under discussion with which hon. members are quite familiar, there is one thing which the minister seems to forget. That is why I chose to rise on the point of order. When there has been a discussion such as the one which has been going on today, and a statement such as the one which has been allowed on the part of the Postmaster General who I regret is absent from the house, as I have something to tell him particularly—

Mr. Pallett: On the point of order?

Mr. Chevrier: —I think it is the duty of the Chair—and I say this respectfully—to allow those who wish to say something in answer to what has been said by the Postmaster General, an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Flynn: This is not on the same point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I am speaking on the same point of order.

Mr. Flynn: No.

Mr. Chevrier: I am speaking on exactly the same point of order as was the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister gave us a lecture.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; the minister who seems to have become so well versed—

Mr. Flynn: I have had enough from your side.

Mr. Chevrier: He deserves to have some.

Mr. Flynn: I have said that we have had enough lectures from your side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: If one is to judge by the conduct of the minister the other evening in his interruptions—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: —from that side of the house then I think—

Mr. Flynn: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has referred to my conduct in other circumstances. If he wishes to deal with it I have no objection. However I hope Your Honour will allow me in turn to deal with it. Otherwise, I think the hon. member should revert to the point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Flynn: That is a question of privilege. The hon. member has referred to my conduct, and this is not relevant to the point of order which at present is being discussed.

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. gentleman will keep his mind in peace and resume his seat I will discuss the point of order.

Mr. Flynn: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is very sensitive about points of order and questions of privilege. When he is subject to attack, he feels that he must rise. Sometimes I think he has a persecution complex.

Mr. Flynn: Oh, no.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member is the one who has that. He changed ridings.

Mr. Chevrier: If there is a point of order, and as he rose on a point of order, I think he should at least allow me to complete the point which I had in mind to make. I was coming back to the point which I intended to raise in the first instance. What I wish to say in connection with this matter is that it is not at all accurate for the Postmaster General or the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance to state in this chamber that the rules of the House of Commons have been breached by what has been done by my friend the hon. member for Essex East and the rest of us who have taken part in this debate. In answer to that assertion I wish to put on Hansard what took place on March 18, 1957—

Mr. Flynn: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a point of order. You cannot have a point of order on a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: —under circumstances which were not unlike these. On March 18, 1957, as found at page 2431 of Hansard there was under discussion an item—

Mr. Flynn: Stick to the point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: No point of order can be taken when one is already under discussion.

Mr. Flynn: I am not raising a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am quite prepared to hear the hon. member for Laurier out. I just wish the members of the committee to reflect on this quotation from May's 16th edition at page 737 where he states as follows:

> If the sum demanded by a supplementary estimate is of the same order of magnitude as the original estimate, the chairman has allowed questions of policy to be raised upon it which would have been in order if it had been an original estimate; but if the supplementary estimate is merely to provide additional funds of a relatively moderate amount required in the normal course of working of the services for which the original vote was demanded,—

These are the words which I thought hon. members ought to note.

> —only the reasons for the increase can be discussed and not the policy implied in the service which must be taken to have been settled by the original vote; nor can savings be discussed.

I am sorry that I interrupted the hon. member for Laurier. However at that point the committee was experiencing a series of interruptions in any event and I just thought I should refresh the memories of hon. members of the committee with regard to that very important authority. I will now hear what the hon. member for Laurier has to say.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the chairman for having brought to my attention the matter with which he has just dealt. I think I shall be able to conclude what I have to say rather quickly. I would draw Your Honour's attention at once to the fact that these estimates have reference to $130 million.

Mr. Flynn: Not this item.

Mr. Chevrier: These items.

Mr. Flynn: Not this item.

Mr. Chevrier: I am trying to deal with what the chairman has said. If my hon. friend had been listening to the remarks of the Chair, he would not have made that interruption as the Chair was indicating that when one deals with the ordinary estimates, that is the rule. The point I am trying to make is that these estimates are not ordinary estimates since they are of the magnitude of $138 million, of which $67 million have to do with the deficit of the Canadian National Railways and $6.7 million have to do with—

Mr. Flynn: We are dealing with external affairs now.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: I am now told that we are dealing with external affairs. Surely, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to be denied the opportunity of replying to the inaccurate statement made by the Postmaster General and also the parliamentary secretary. I wish to reply to that statement. The Postmaster General said that the rules of this House of Commons were not being adhered to. He said that what we were doing is not customary in a debate such as this one because it offends against all the rules of the house. That is not so. That statement is not accurate and I intend to prove that it is not accurate, I intend to do so by a reference which can be found at page 2431 of Hansard of March 18, 1957. The house was then discussing item 546, "Production service—Health of animals", the last supplementary estimate. Mr. Gardiner was in his place and was being questioned on that item. If hon. members will only take the trouble to go to Hansard they will see that for a period of two hours, from eight o'clock in the evening when the committee resumed, the committee discussed item 546 until it adjourned at ten o'clock the same night, because the hon. member for Assiniboia called it "ten o'clock" and progress was reported. There are almost 20 pages of discussion on the last supplementary estimates, so that I am surprised that the Postmaster General, who should know better because he has been in this house longer than the parliamentary secretary, should try to tell us what he did. Then there is this other statement—

Mr. Pallett: What was the total time taken on supplementary estimates in that session?

Mr. Chevrier: What was that again?

Mr. Flynn: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster General—

Mr. Chevrier: There can be no point of order. The minister, who was chairman of committees of the house, should at least know what the rules are and should not be interrupting me on a point of order.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Flynn: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: When I sit down, yes, I will allow the minister to ask a question. I ask the minister to resume his seat.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I do not think the interruptions are helping us to make progress on the point of order and I think they should be modulated, if I may use that word, to permit the hon. member for Laurier to complete his point. I would remind the committee that the hon. member who had the floor before the discussion started was the member for Kootenay West and I hope we can bring this to a conclusion as quickly as possible.

Mr. Chevrier: I will do my best, but I assure you I would have been finished a long time ago if it had not been for these interruptions. There are just two other points and I will make them as quickly as I can. The minister has said that there has been obstruction and delay. I say to the minister and the parliamentary secretary that if there has been obstruction and delay with reference to these estimates it has been obstruction and delay on the other side of the house. On behalf of the opposition I made the offer to the house leader last week in connection with these estimates that if the Minister of Finance would tell the house what the urgent measures were that had to be dealt with and which were holding up cheques of civil servants and holding up cheques in regard to any other matters having to do with these estimates, we would consider those items and pass them at once if need be. I went a step further and said that if he wanted to include them in an appropriation bill we would be willing to pass that appropriation bill quickly.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That was the earlier set of supplementaries.

Mr. Chevrier: There has been no response to that offer and that surely is some indication of delay. The other point is that we were told we would be dealing with these estimates beginning Wednesday of this week. Under what rule of the house, either in the rules as we know them here or any change, is it the right of the government to tell us that we must dispose of these estimates within three days? That is exactly the effect of the statement made by the house leader.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member for Laurier has progressed into a discussion of the business of the house, to some extent in retrospect. I feel now that no ruling is really called for and I think we should perhaps give the floor back to the hon. member for Kootenay West if that is agreeable.

Mr. Chevrier: I always obey your rulings, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Flynn: There should be a ruling made on the point of order I raised.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the Chair has forgotten what the point of order was.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think Your Honour is very wise to forget.

Mr. Flynn: If Your Honour will permit me I will remind you that it had to do with the rule of relevancy, but as the hon. member for Laurier was permitted to revive the whole debate I understand, of course, that Your Honour might have forgotten what the point of order was.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, with your permission I should like to take advantage of the time available to discuss a matter of great concern to the Canadian people, particularly the people of British Columbia and more particularly the constituents I have the honour to represent, namely, the Columbia river treaty. I think we are justified in doing so under the rules because during recent weeks and months we had read of discussions and differences between the federal government and the government of British Columbia. Members of this house are quite uncertain as to the direction in which matters are proceeding.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely you are not going to interfere. Surely members of this house have some rights.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. member spoke for about half an hour and he should give someone else a chance to say something.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Closure. Totalitarianism.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Surely we are as much entitled to raise a point of order as the hon. member. The point I should like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that your predecessor in the chair a few moments ago read a citation from May, page 738, which said that if the amount of the estimate to be considered is comparatively small—I do not know what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would say about that; I think I overheard him say it was three or four million dollars—

Mr. Pickersgill: For external affairs, $4 million.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The total amount of these estimates for 1961-62 is $93 million and the proportion is three or four million dollars to $93 million. Would the chairman think that would justify embarking upon a discussion of the Columbia river project at this stage of the supplementary estimates or should the hon. member not be confined to asking questions regarding the various items that are to be considered tonight? There is an item of $225,000 for departmental administration. Surely that does not justify hon. members embarking upon all sorts of questions having to do with policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. member not think $4 million is a lot of money?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): It is a great deal of money in my books.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You belittled it. "What's $4 million", you said.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): No, I did not say that.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): We do not have a Mr. Howe over here.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am referring to what is said in May.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word on the point of order that the distinguished Solicitor General has raised. It is true that the item for departmental administration is only $225,000 but an extra $4 million is being asked for the Department of External Affairs in these supplementary estimates—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Why don't you discuss it then?

Mr. Pickersgill: —which is a very considerable fraction of the total amount voted for this department. It seems to me that it is not an insignificant amount in the eyes of the Canadian people, however insignificant it may seem to the Solicitor General and to the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary. Moreover, even $225,000 is the cost of restoring Arizona Charlie's and that is a large amount of money.

The Chairman: On the point of order, I would call on the hon. member for Kootenay West and I will listen to what he has to say. If he gets too far from the realm of relevancy I will be able to remind him.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will stay strictly within a subject that comes under the administration of the Department of External Affairs. Let me say to the Solicitor General, who used his best efforts to try to stop me speaking for my constituents, that not only am I speaking for the party I have the honour to represent but I am also speaking for a large number of people who support his party and a large number who support the Liberal party who have asked me to take the first opportunity available in the house to place before it certain information with respect to this development from the local point of view and certain information with respect to the engineering aspects of the Columbia river treaty. If I am denied this opportunity now I will have to go home and say that I had closure applied to me by a member of the cabinet.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, no one seeks to apply closure to anyone. We only seek to have the rules of the house applied fairly and equally to all members of the committee. In the particular departmental administration item now before the committee there is nothing which relates to the Columbia river treaty. Anything that relates to the Columbia river treaty will be found in the administration item of the main estimates under international joint commission. There is not a dollar in this item, I suggest to the hon. gentleman, who is one of our most experienced and genial parliamentarians and who at least should set an example to the house as to how we in this house should conduct ourselves, for this Columbia river. The hon. member should be an example rather than treating the house to the farce to which we have been treated tonight by that distinguished hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to speak to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and I should like to deal with the outburst and loss of temper—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Oh no, I just enjoyed myself.

Mr. Chevrier: —which is not often displayed by the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is getting more like the Minister of Finance all the time.

Mr. Chevrier: As my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate says, he is imitating the Minister of Finance a great deal. The point my friend makes is not well taken. I submit that under the item for departmental administration it is the privilege of hon. members to deal with any part of matters having to do with the department. This is what I tried to show earlier when I put on the record, before Your Honour was in the chair, what happened under similar circumstances with the item concerning the Department of Agriculture. From eight o'clock until ten a discussion took place and the item was not passed until then. I say, therefore, with respect that the parliamentary secretary is entirely wrong in what he says. We have an item headed, departmental administration, and even though there is nothing in it having to do with the international joint commission, the Columbia river project is not a matter that concerns exclusively the international joint commission. Surely my friend will concede that. Under those circumstances I say to you, with respect, that the hon. member for Kootenay West has the right to do what he was doing.

Mr. Flynn: Mr. Chairman, may I point out to Your Honour that I cited to the deputy chairman of committees, when this point was first raised, the rule that is laid down in May's last edition. It is on page 738 and is to the effect that a general policy debate is not allowed under an item such as this. May I suggest to Your Honour that the rules of the house do not belong only to the opposition but to the whole house. When there is obstruction every member, those on the government side and in the opposition, suffer from it. All members suffer when the rules are not adhered to by members on all sides.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word precisely on the point that has been raised. I referred earlier to what happened during the consideration of the last supplementary estimates brought before this house by a government that respected the rights of hon. members in committee of supply. During the consideration of an item for citizenship and immigration, because there had been new developments, because the Hungarian business had come up since the regular estimates had been passed, the government of that day, knowing the facts of the situation and the fact that this was a national forum, allowed discussion of the matter without points of order being raised. Another matter in which hon. gentlemen were greatly interested at that time was George Christian Hanna, who had come in at that time, and the present Prime Minister was making great humanitarian speeches about him, the same Prime Minister who later deported him. These subjects were discussed at great length without any points of order being raised, without any attempt by Mr. Harris or anyone else on the front benches to stifle debate in the way it is being stifled by these incessant points of order from these hon. gentlemen opposite.

We would have had half of these estimates through this evening if the reasonable request of the hon. member for Essex East had been met. Probably all the estimates would have been through, except external affairs, if hon. members opposite had not dug in their heels and stubbornly refused to have the minister here when he could be here tomorrow. This is the minister whose estimates we are being asked to pass.

We have not taken any objection to the fact the Minister of Finance is not here. We remember one evening when Mr. Drew was leader of the opposition and he refused to proceed with the estimates because they were being piloted by a parliamentary secretary without the minister being in the chamber. He made a terrific scene about it. It seems to me we have shown some courtesy to the parliamentary secretary in not raising this point that the Minister of Finance is not here. When we say that the minister whose estimates are being considered ought to be here and make a reasonable request that they be held up until he gets here, this request is refused. We are accused of obstruction. It is a pretty topsy-turvy kind of attitude to the rules and to the practices of parliament being exhibited by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is an unreasonable request to have an opportunity to discuss this subject because it has been a fluid situation. There have been differences of opinion since we last discussed the subject between the federal and provincial governments; there have been differences of opinion between ministers of the crown and ministers in the United States. The Prime Minister and the ministers of the government have answered questions directed to them to try to elicit information. Surely, Mr. Chairman, one should have an opportunity of presenting the views of one's constituents which are broadly based and broadly held.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I could be allowed to proceed—

The Chairman: I listened with great interest to the general remarks the hon. member has just made. I think I should caution him before he goes into detail on the subject that he should keep his remarks in rather general terms. As the parliamentary secretary has pointed out, there is no money being requested in this group of supplementary estimates for the subject on which the hon. member has embarked. On the other hand, we have a vote concerning administration. Even in May there are citations restricting debate and other citations which seem to enlarge it a bit. While remembering the rule of relevancy and also that the Columbia river development is not mentioned in the item, I will permit the hon. member to make a few general remarks. However, if he gets into particulars about the subject, I think then he will definitely be transgressing the leniency the Chair is supposed to allow.

Mr. Herridge: You impose a very particular burden on me, Mr. Chairman, to talk in general terms about the particular or, in other words, to talk in abstract terms about the concrete. I shall do the best I can. I think what I am going to say, Mr. Chairman, will be of interest to members because this is a matter of some substance. I wanted to tell members, first, of the particular local details in connection with this matter. I am quite sure that under these estimates there is some provision for entertainment related to the Columbia project. If you look at one or two of the items, I think they could be related to the Columbia river treaty. There would be certain hospitality extended when these gentlemen come up from the United States.

Mr. McIlraith: You mean the Minister of Finance entertained them?

Mr. Herridge: I am speaking of the Department of External Affairs. I am sure they would not allow Mr. Udall to come to Canada without treating him to a nice dinner or refreshments. I think in that way I can relate the item to the Columbia river treaty.

The Chairman: As someone remarked on a previous occasion, that would be really taxing the imagination of the chairman to accept such a viewpoint. Unless the hon. member can state it in a more specific way than he has done, I cannot see that this estimate for $225,000 could relate by near or by far to the Columbia river. I know the difficulty of the hon. member, but still these difficulties spring not from the ruling of the Chair but from the rules as they were made, and these must be applied. I think the hon. member will have to base his discussion within the limits involved.

Mr. Herridge: There is another item here, representation abroad, operational expenses, travelling expenses, postage, telephones and telegrams. Could you assure me that none of that money is to be spent on telephone calls or telegrams in connection with this matter?

The Chairman: The hon. member is on a different item. He has gone on to the next item. Right now we are on item No. 692.

Mr. Herridge: But it comes under "departmental administration."

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Could I ask the chairman if the Chair and the hon. members of the house realize the consequences of the disposition that is being made of this matter? The contention is made that because under the departmental estimate no particular expenditure is proposed, then that precludes a discussion of this particular matter. When the original item is proposed or when, as is now the case, we are discussing further items of proposed expenditure under departmental administration, surely that ruling in May does not mean what the minister of mines suggests? Surely under our procedures, under departmental administration it is open to us to discuss anything having to do with administration, whether it involves expenditure or not. That is the rule; and to interpret May as is suggested by the Deputy Speaker is, I believe, stretching the rule. Also, while I am speaking, I would suggest to you that there are not many precedents in this house when former presiding officers have chosen to influence the course of procedural decisions as we have had it done tonight.

The Chairman: The Chair would very much like to be enlightened if the hon. member had a precise citation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, it is common sense.

The Chairman: If the hon. member had a precise citation covering this matter I would certainly like to hear it, but in the absence of such a precise citation I can only go by rule 59, paragraph 2—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Which does not say that.

The Chairman: —which says the discussion must be relevant—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course.

The Chairman: —and I must also bring forward the principles that are enunciated at page 738 of May. I have not stopped the hon. member yet. I have only cautioned him to remain within this scope. I appreciate his difficulty. I think he is trying to co-operate with the Chair and perhaps we should allow him to continue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order. I asked while Your Honour was talking, if I could see May's book. I suggest on reading his citation it does not lend itself to the interpretation which Your Honour has put on it. It says "relevant," but what the hon. gentleman is discussing is a matter which comes under the administration of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and to say he is precluded from discussing a matter under this item, which does not at this particular time involve a proposed expenditure, is stretching the meaning of the citation beyond reasonable terms. That is what I am saying.

I am not offering any citation. I am simply asking for a literal interpretation of what the English language says in May.

Mr. Fulton: As interpreted by Martin's bureau of statistics.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

The Chairman: That is what the Chair is trying to do. The deputy chairman read from May a little time before I took the chair, and there are certain lines which are particularly applicable to the present case. For instance:

> As a general rule, on the supplementary estimates it is in order to discuss only the particular items which constitute the supplementary estimates and the sub-heads of the original estimates can only be referred to so far as they are involved in the fair discussion of the points contained in the items asked for in the supplementary estimates. Of course, it is quite obvious that it should be improper, as a general rule, to raise on a supplementary estimate the whole question of policy involved in the original estimate—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

The Chairman: Further down it says:

> —if the supplementary estimate is merely to provide additional funds of a relatively moderate amount required in the normal course of working of the services for which the original vote was demanded, only the reasons for the increase can be discussed and not the policy implied in the service which must be taken to have been settled by the original vote.

I believe that the general gist of all of that is that under the main estimate of administration, as everyone knows here, all phases of departmental administration and all matters affecting the department can be discussed; but here we are limited by the fact that we are only asked for certain additional sums and we are further limited in our discussion by the details of that estimate. Unless the hon. member can relate his remarks to these sub-heads I cannot really see how he would be in order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I can do that very easily. I notice that $33,000 of this particular additional amount—as the hon. member for Kootenay West directed our attention to it —is for telephones, telegrams and other communication services. Only three days ago the Prime Minister admitted in this house that he had received a message on this very subject from the government of the United States, and no one will make me believe—unless the minister produces all his messages and shows it is not true—that no part of this $33,000 is not being used for communications with regard to the Columbia which no longer, contrary to what the parliamentary secretary has indicated, has to do with the I.J.C. This is a treaty, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs is responsible for the decision as to whether or not that treaty will be brought before the house and whether it will be ratified. So, it is entirely within departmental administration, and there is in this item a detail which prima facie has to do with the Columbia. Probably a great part of this $33,000 had to be used because of the difficulty over the Columbia.

The Chairman: I thank the hon. member for his valuable contribution and I am convinced that the hon. member for Kootenay West would be in order if he asked the parliamentary secretary whether any sums of money being asked were applied to phone calls made in regard to this matter; but he is not entitled, as far as I can see, to discuss the general matters of the Columbia river development.

Mr. Herridge: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is an unusual circumstance and there have been continuing and changing developments with respect to this matter. This is an entirely new matter arising out of the circumstances of the signing of this treaty. I wanted to give this information to the house because I was asked to give it at the first opportunity. So far as the provincial government is concerned, and I say this without any hesitation, in my opinion it has acted in bad faith in this matter. I agree with what the federal government did so far as the treaty is concerned, not its effect, terms and details, but I do think that the provincial government has acted in bad faith in leading this government to believe it agreed with the terms of the treaty, whether directly or indirectly, permitting this government to sign it, and then changing its course of conduct shortly afterwards. I think that should let me off the hook. Anyway, the provincial government held hearings which were conducted by the water controller.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): How the provincial government comes into this is surely something the hon. gentleman has not explained to the committee in any way.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is parliament being reduced to?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It is the hon. gentleman who is endeavouring to reduce parliament to something by his exaggerated histrionics and by the buffoonish contortionism he is conducting tonight.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All I can say to the parliamentary secretary is that what he is trying to do is prevent us from talking, depriving us of the right to free discussion in this house.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is the most utter nonsense the hon. gentleman has ever uttered in this house, and he is a past master at uttering nonsense in the house.

The Chairman: I do not think anybody is trying to stifle anybody else. As far as the Chair is concerned—

Mr. Chevrier: I am not so sure.

The Chairman: —it is only interested in promoting free and uninhibited discussion.

Mr. Chevrier: Can we hear from the Minister of Justice?

The Chairman: But the Chair is fettered by the rules, which all hon. members of the committee have freely accepted. I know that the hon. member for Kootenay West, who is a great expert on the conduct of this house, will want to abide by the rules to which he was a party.

I am forced to agree with the parliamentary secretary that in introducing affairs concerning the provincial government the hon. member was getting out of order. Although he is committed to raising this matter at the first opportunity, I do not believe that this is the right opportunity to do so.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, do you really agree with the conduct of the parliamentary secretary?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Chevrier: He almost crossed the floor.

The Chairman: I was not discussing any hon. member's conduct; I was only discussing the ideas expressed, and I mentioned one aspect of his remarks with which I had to agree. I am sure the hon. member who has the floor will abide by the rules.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might make an appeal to Your Honour. On Monday of this week the Prime Minister came in here and asked the house in a very conciliatory way to join him in an effort to abolish the closure rule. Could we not proceed, sir, in the spirit in which the Prime Minister began the activities of the week?

Mr. Fulton: That is what we are asking you to do.

The Chairman: I am sure we were all inspired by those motives, but this is not a discussion about closure.

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, I don't know, sir.

The Chairman: As a matter of fact the rules exist as they are to prevent closure and to permit free debate. If it were open to every hon. member to introduce any subject that came into his head upon every item, obviously no business would be transacted at all. The only purpose of the rules is that the business shall be transacted.

Mr. Fulton: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, we will be here for days at this rate.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I was going to mention the hearings held by the water controller as part of his responsibility under provincial law in connection with this treaty. He held hearings at Kaslo, Revelstoke, Nakusp and Castlegar and over 1,000 people attended those hearings. Three hundred people made written or verbal representations before the controller. I want to bring this to the attention of the ministers concerned because it was one of the most unusual circumstances in Canadian history. Here, in connection with this treaty, is a water controller acting in a judicial capacity to make a decision as to whether a licence would be given, while at the same time the water controller was part of the British Columbia negotiating team representing British Columbia and pressing for the building of the High Arrow and other dams. He was praised by the minister of lands and forests in the province of British Columbia for his work in promoting it alongside his pal Dr. Keenleyside. Then at the same time he signs a report of the British Columbia energy board in which the same subject is discussed and the same matter is dealt with. I raised this point first of all—

Mr. Flynn: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that you have an interpreter for the hon. member for Kootenay West, because apparently he does not understand your ruling.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, such insolence.

Mr. Chevrier: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: A junior member of the house.

The Chairman: I am sure that the hon. member did understand my ruling.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): He does not abide by it.

The Chairman: I do not think he has adhered strictly to it. In introducing matters in connection with provincial bodies I am not quite sure whether he is even on external affairs; in any event he is certainly not on item 692. I would ask the hon. member's co-operation, because after all there are quite a number of items here and there are probably many hon. members who wish to speak on this particular item and have relevant contributions to make. I hope the hon. member's contributions will likewise be relevant.

Mr. Herridge: I will try and make them relevant, Mr. Chairman, by saying that the people who attended these hearings have asked me to rise in this house and repeat briefly what was said at those hearings.

Mr. Fulton: Do it at the right time.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Herridge: They wish me to mention briefly some of the things that were said at those hearings.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Irrelevancy.

Mr. Herridge: I am speaking to the government of the day on behalf of my constituents and organizations in my constituency.

Mr. Fulton: Do it at the right time.

Mr. Herridge: I must explain, Mr. Chairman, that they protest most vigorously that here a treaty was signed without any survey being made of the land which was being flooded, or of its value, without any proper estimate of the cost of the public facilities that were to be flooded—over 20 docks and wharves, and things of that sort—and with no estimate as to the destruction of the forest industry.

Mr. Pallett: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Herridge: For these reasons I have been asked—

The Chairman: Order. The parliamentary secretary has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, the rule has been specified a number of times this evening. I refer to the rule of relevancy in debate. With regard to this matter Your Honour has expressed very clearly that adherence to the rule provides for the expedition of the business of the house. I think the hon. member for Kootenay West is out of order in his remarks. I also think that the conduct of the official opposition this evening has indicated—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order.

Mr. Chevrier: Order. Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: I agree that the parliamentary secretary was going beyond the point that the point of order warranted. However, the first part of his remarks were well taken, and again I must caution the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the item under consideration.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Such frivolity.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am dealing in a concrete way with a problem that is related to the administration of the Department of External Affairs. I say also that there was no assessment of the damage done to the forest industry or to the fishing industry.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I claim that the hon. member for Kootenay West is completely defying your ruling as to relevancy.

Mr. Chevrier: Where is the point of order?

The Chairman: Order. I do not believe that the hon. member is animated by a spirit of defiance, but he seems to have some difficulty in restricting his remarks to the item under consideration. Perhaps, as I tried to suggest a little earlier, this may not be the proper opportunity for the hon. member to raise the very interesting points that he wishes to raise, and perhaps he will contain his remarks until a more appropriate occasion.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I did not clearly understand the point of order raised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder whether he would explain it to the committee once again.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes, I would be very glad to do so. It was simply that the hon. member for Kootenay West was not following the instructions as to relevancy laid down by the chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: Is that a point of order?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I would think it should be.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare it does seem to me that he has insulted Your Honour and he has insulted the committee—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —by suggesting that Your Honour presumes to instruct any hon. member in a free parliament. I suggest that the person who needs instruction in free assemblies is the Minister of National Health and Welfare himself and that he should not be permitted to make these irrelevant interventions in a serious debate about the administration of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Flynn: You should not either.

The Chairman: To put the hon. member's mind at ease, I must say that I was not at all incensed by what the minister said—

Mr. Pickersgill: Your Honour should be.

The Chairman: —because I feel that he said it in a spirit of co-operation to try and expedite the business of the committee. Perhaps the same spirit of co-operation will animate the hon. member for Kootenay West and he will now embark upon the item under discussion.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, would I be in order in directing a number of questions to the parliamentary secretary with a view to getting answers?

The Chairman: The hon. member may direct his questions to the parliamentary secretary and as they arise I will decide whether or not they are relevant.

Mr. Herridge: I want to know from the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance why a treaty was signed and an estimate given for a certain dam without any estimate of the cost of putting the logs of the Selgar Corporation over the dam. Does the Minister of Finance know that it will take $25 million to put the machinery in to take the logs over the dam and that the estimate in the original treaty was $50,000? Does the minister know that? Can he give me an answer?

Mr. Fulton: How does the hon. member for Kootenay West arrive at that figure?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the Minister of Justice could reply, since he has been so successful in these negotiations.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I would be glad to answer any questions relative to the item which is now before the committee. When this committee is dealing with this particular matter raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West I am sure he will get all the information he desires. However, the inference contained in the question asked by the hon. gentleman is erroneous. I think it comes from one man, and one man only.

Mr. Herridge: Can the minister tell me if any officials of the Department of External Affairs have been informed by any official of the Selgar Corporation as to the cost of the construction of this equipment?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is not a capital item, and the hon. gentleman by repeating the same question is not going to make an irrelevant question more relevant.

Mr. Herridge: Surely, an official of that corporation visited the Department of External Affairs and gave the officials that information and asked for an answer.

An hon. Member: Still not relevant.

Mr. Herridge: Can the parliamentary secretary answer that question.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I can only say to the hon. gentleman as I have said before that whatever blandishments he may hold out to me to answer an irrelevant question I feel that conducting myself in accordance with the rules of the house is better than getting into that discussion tonight.

Mr. Herridge: When I hear the parliamentary secretary say that an underestimate of $25 million on one dam is an irrelevant question, I think I have the right to continue this debate until we get the facts.

The Chairman: I am afraid the hon. member is confusing the committee in mentioning this contract for $25 million because the vote before us is only for $225,000. The hon. member is referring to items which are foreign to the subject properly under discussion.

Mr. Herridge: My point is that this is a matter which comes directly under the administration of the Department of External Affairs, and it is a matter upon which the department has been informed by this gentleman since we last had an opportunity to discuss these estimates.

An hon. Member: Who gave you the information.

Mr. Herridge: I am referring to personal conversations with a number of people who know what they are talking about.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to pursue the inquiry which was raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West. We know where this matter stands. This treaty has not been ratified.

Mr. Fulton: What treaty?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Columbia treaty. The government has not even dared to bring it before the house.

Mr. Fulton: How does it arise under this item?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the Minister of Justice could reply when I have finished.

Mr. Flynn: On a point of order.

Some hon. Members: More closure.

The Chairman: Order. The minister of mines is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Flynn: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate knows very well that Your Honour has ruled the discussion of this matter of the Columbia treaty to be irrelevant. If I rise on a point of order it is because I feel that the worst kind of closure is the one which has been conducted by members of the opposition.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order which has been raised by a gentleman who had an opportunity to learn something of the rules, an opportunity not given to many of us, but of which he does not seem to have made very good use, let me say it has not been ruled that any discussion of the treaty is irrelevant. Your Honour has said it is not irrelevant to discuss it in a general way.

Further, I was proceeding to demonstrate that this matter was peculiarly within the item of departmental administration because it had not been resolved. There is no capital item. There is a project. A treaty has been signed but it has not been brought before the house. It lacks ratification. We want to find out why this has not been done, why there has been this delay on the part of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in getting on with the job. We should like to find that out from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Flynn: On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely not another of those dreadful points of order.

Mr. Flynn: I had risen on a point of order but I wish to withdraw it because it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): If the hon. gentleman is asking for information it is the first time there has been any real request for information from across the floor tonight. The opposition has been interested in wrangling, bickering and squabbling, not in a constructive request for information.

The Chairman: I really regret to have to interrupt this debate at this time, but the clock indicates that it is ten o'clock and it is therefore my duty to ask the committee if I may rise, report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Item stands.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Miquelon studied law at Laval University and was admitted to the bar of the province of Quebec in 1934. He joined the Canadian army in 1941, following a period of service as crown prosecutor in Val d'Or. He spent several years overseas and became deputy judge advocate general of the Canadian army occupation force in Germany; returned to Canada with the rank of major and resumed legal practice in Montreal. Mr. Miquelon served as the Quebec representative on the dominion command of the Royal Canadian Legion from 1955 to 1960, and in the latter year was elected vice-chairman of the Legion's dominion command. He is recognized as a distinguished member of the bar, and the government is pleased that a man of his capacity is available to accept this appointment.

Mr. Chevrier: No, sir.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE—REPORT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No doubt, Mr. Speaker, the house would be interested in having a brief report on the disarmament conference which has now been under way in Geneva for over two weeks.

Canada has been very deeply interested in this disarmament conference. Hon. members know our nation was a member of the 10 nation disarmament committee which broke down in June, 1960. A few weeks later Canada and the United States took steps to bring about a meeting of the disarmament commission of the United Nations. That was held, I think, on August 18, 1960, and after some trials and tribulations, a unanimous resolution was put through calling for an immediate resumption of disarmament negotiations.

As we all know, nothing happened, and at the meeting of the general assembly of that fall and at every opportunity at the United Nations since that time Canada has been, I think I can fairly say, taking the lead in demanding that disarmament negotiations be resumed; also that there be added to any disarmament committee representatives of the unaligned nations, and that any such committee should be more closely under the United Nations.

The conference now taking place at Geneva meets all these conditions and for that reason, if for no other—and of course the main reason for our interest is the vital importance of the question of disarmament and of putting an end to the nuclear weapons race—Canada is very pleased that the disarmament conference has been set up in the way in which it has been and with the way the conference is now taking place in Geneva.

One of the main features, of course, is that we now have the two great nuclear powers, the United States and the Soviet union, negotiating. They are right there, talking to each other, and in addition they are the joint co-chairmen of this conference. That has never been the case before. In the conference on Laos, where the British and Russians were joint co-chairmen, we thought the results of that particular set-up were excellent, and we pressed before the disarmament conference commenced for a similar arrangement at this conference under which the United States and the Soviet union would accept the joint co-chairmanship; because if they do not reach agreement then there is not going to be any agreement reached that is of any value. I think there is great merit in placing the responsibility right on the shoulders of the representatives of these two great nations.

This was agreed to by the other members of the western five. We also placed the suggestion before the Soviet union and the eight non-aligned countries which are participating, and eventually when the conference met agreement was reached that the United States and the Soviet union would accept this responsibility. So there they are, their representatives talking together every day and many times a day; they have to come to terms on procedure and the subjects to be discussed, and I think this is a very sensible arrangement and one which could make all the difference between the success or failure of the conference.

As we all know, there are eight non-aligned countries participating; India and Burma from Asia; Sweden from Europe; the United Arab Republic, Nigeria and Ethiopia from Africa, and Mexico and Brazil from Latin America. These are all countries which have been very much interested in the question of disarmament. Canada's relations with each and every one of them are excellent, and the foreign ministers or heads of delegations of those countries were in Geneva determined to try to bridge the gap between the so-called western and communist nations.

In my judgment these men and women are doing an excellent job. The head of the Swedish delegation now is a woman, Mrs. Myrdal, who is a member of the Swedish senate, and I am awfully glad she is there. I hope she will tell the men to stop arguing and fighting whenever the need for such advice arises. She will be listened to far more than a Canadian man would be, for example, or a man from any other country. I believe these representatives are there in a spirit of dedication to the cause of world peace. The very fact that these eight non-aligned countries are represented is another very hopeful feature of the conference.

So far as the connection with the United Nations is concerned, the conference was set up by a resolution of the United Nations. There is a representative of the secretary general there in addition to other officials, and the conference has to report to the United Nations disarmament commission by June 1. This is another extremely important factor, because in this situation time is of the essence. The conference could easily drag on and on, as earlier disarmament conferences tended to do, but it is faced with a deadline by which an interim report must be made to the United Nations disarmament commission. So in all these three respects the conference meets Canada's wishes.

Now the first stage is over. The conference has been organized in a reasonable way. The main objective, of course, is to work out an agreement on disarmament, a disarmament treaty. This is to be undertaken by the conference meeting in plenary session. It is regarded as the main job. Yesterday, for example, the conference met in plenary session and was working on a draft preamble to a treaty. I am hopeful that before too long it will be possible to reach agreement on a preamble. The Russians have submitted a draft treaty with a preamble and the United States has a draft disarmament program which also contains a preamble. Canada has some ideas about what should be in the preamble as well, and I hope that before too long it will be possible to get a small drafting group to sit down and actually write out the terms of a preamble for such a treaty. Then the aim is to go on section by section and, where a section is difficult and agreement cannot be reached, to set it aside for the time being and deal with other sections on which it is more likely there can be agreement. This was the method followed at the Laos conference with greatest success.

Then in addition—and I think Canada can take some credit for this—there has been set up a committee of the whole on initial or collateral measures. We very soon decided that there were some issues which, although not directly related to disarmament—they would not necessarily be in a disarmament treaty—were nevertheless capable of an agreed solution with the result that tension could be reduced. The viewpoint was generally held that it was worth while trying to reach agreement on some of these collateral measures, and this committee was designed for that purpose.

We were a little afraid there would be delay in actually getting that committee working, although it had been agreed that there would be such a committee. So on Monday there was a debate in plenary session council and we suggested that this committee should get to work. In order to give its members something to work on and also to start the wheels turning we recommended that the committee should first consider the question of outer space. We submitted a draft declaration in the following terms:

> The governments of Brazil, the People's Republic of Bulgaria, Burma, Canada, the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic, Ethiopia, India, Italy, Mexico, Nigeria, the People's Republic of Poland, the People's Republic of Rumania, Sweden, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America, desiring to facilitate the achievement of an international agreement to ensure that outer space will be used for peaceful purposes only, solemnly declare that henceforth:
> (a) the orbiting or stationing in outer space of devices for delivering weapons of mass destruction shall be prohibited;
> (b) they will give advance notification of launchings of space vehicles and missiles to the secretary general of the United Nations, and, upon its establishment, to the international disarmament organization.

We believed and still believe that a declaration of that kind would be of great value, and we see no reason why agreement should not be reached on it. I point out that neither side now has weapons of mass destruction in orbit so that a declaration of this type, if adopted, would be before the event. I suggest it is much easier and wiser to have questions of this kind agreed to before there are weapons of mass destruction out in orbit than it would be after such weapons are in orbit. Once they were in outer space it would be a much more difficult task to reach agreement of this kind.

As I have pointed out, we asked that there be a meeting of the committee of the whole on initial collateral measures and that was agreed to. The committee met on Wednesday. Several other countries had suggestions to offer. The communist countries wanted to consider the question of atom free zones, and there were various other suggestions; for example, the question of surprise attack, and preventing wider dissemination of nuclear weapons. Several other points were also raised. In the final analysis it was left to the two co-chairmen to decide what subject would be dealt with first.

The communists took exception to our proposal on outer space being considered first. They said that it should be considered in the main debate on a disarmament treaty and they raised some other technical objections. Our proposal received excellent support from Great Britain, Italy, Mexico, Sweden and India, and I think all the eight non-aligned countries and the United States would like to have this subject discussed; the question remains whether we can succeed in having it discussed first in this special committee. It will be discussed at some time, but I am not sure at what stage that will be.

Another feature of the organization is this. There is a subcommittee on a nuclear test ban set up by the conference comprising the three nuclear powers, the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet union. They have been meeting but as yet have reached no agreement. The big obstacle is the question of verification. They are still meeting and may be reporting to the plenary today. We suggested that some of the non-aligned countries be added to the subcommittee of three. That suggestion has not yet been taken up and indeed it may not be, but in any event the non-aligned countries will be drawn into the picture in one way or another.

Arrangements have also been made for informal meetings of the conference, and we have had several already. No record is kept, and there are only three present from each country. You can ask questions, talk across the table and let your hair down to a degree that you cannot in a plenary meeting. This, I believe, is an entirely new feature in disarmament negotiations, and I think a very helpful one.

The atmosphere of the conference to date has been one of moderation. No delegates have made nasty speeches, though some have leaned a bit that way. Generally speaking, however, the statements have been constructive, and I think this is probably one of the outstanding features of the whole conference.

In the early days of the conference general statements were made by representatives of each of the 17 nations. Unfortunately France is not represented, although there is a chair there for her. I believe that the opening statement made by Canada has either been tabled or printed in Hansard so I will not go over it today, but our main purpose was to pinpoint subjects on which there was near agreement between the United States and the Soviet union. There are quite a few of these subjects where it would not take a great deal for the two sides to get together. We believe it is of great importance to stress these first, and this is what we will be doing as the conference proceeds.

In addition, of course, there have been many private talks between the different delegations. Mr. Rusk, Mr. Gromyko and Lord Home have had many such talks. Canada has also had many. We discussed the situation with the representatives of each of the other countries attending the conference, and I think these talks are very useful. They afford a foreign minister an opportunity as well to discuss any subject in which another country represented at the conference is involved. Mind you, I think all the foreign ministers have left now, or they will all be gone by tomorrow. They are like a lot of seagulls; when one goes all the rest go, and you are considered a bit of a scab if you stay around after the rest have gone. I found it safer to go home at that particular stage. However, the Canadian delegation is in exceedingly good hands under Lieutenant General E. L. M. Burns, who in my opinion is the outstanding expert on disarmament in the world today and who certainly has the respect of the members of all the other delegations.

For a couple of days before the conference met and while it was meeting there were discussions on the question of Berlin among the Americans, the Russians and the British. No one could be expected to solve the Berlin question in a matter of two or three days, but because it was not solved in these talks there has been quite a lot of pessimistic reporting, particularly in United States newspapers. They got the talks on Berlin all mixed up with the disarmament conference, and some of them reported right from the start that the disarmament conference was doomed, that it had been a failure before it began and all that sort of nonsense. That was not a very helpful attitude for those who were trying to get some results in the disarmament conference. Before Mr. Rusk left last Tuesday he and Mr. Gromyko issued a joint statement concerning Berlin, in these words:

> In connection with their presence in Geneva to attend the opening sessions of the 18 nation committee on disarmament, the foreign ministers of the U.S.S.R. and the United States have had a series of meetings devoted to a discussion of the German problem and related questions. Their conversations have been both useful and frank, and some progress has been made in clarifying points of agreement and points of difference. They have agreed to resume contact in an appropriate way after reporting to their respective governments and after consultation with their allies.

It is of great significance that these two men, who today carry tremendous loads in world affairs, had the opportunity for over two weeks to meet and consider these issues and discuss them thoroughly. That, I think, has been of great importance. Mr. Rusk said goodbye to Mr. Gromyko at a luncheon I gave, and they parted on the understanding that they would keep in touch with each other.

I become annoyed with this attitude of hopelessness, that nothing can be done, that the world is going to the dogs, that we are all going to be blown up and we might just as well do nothing and get blown up. That does not make much sense to me and I do not think it does to a lot of other people because, for one thing, we do not want to be blown up. I think the leaders of the world today have a responsibility to see that this great tragedy, this tragedy to end all tragedies, does not occur. I cannot promise anything, but I am hopeful and there is no reason why agreement should not be reached fairly quickly on some of the points.

I am prepared to go back to Geneva at any time provided some of the other foreign ministers return, and if progress is made I think there is a possibility that the heads of state will meet. They could then give the conference further impetus and probably reach agreement on subjects on which the foreign ministers and the other delegates have not been able to agree. The conference has begun very well. Canada will be doing her part to see that its deliberations are successful. The cause is a great one, and we are in a good position in the conference. We are on good terms with everybody, and I know I have the support of the house when I say that Canada at least will do her full part to restore sanity in this fear riddled world.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on the eve of his departure for Geneva I had the pleasure of extending to the hon. gentleman the good wishes of the house. As the first spokesman today for the opposition, I have the pleasure of welcoming him back to the house. The minister seems to have performed a useful service in outlining to his colleagues at the conference of 17 powers the desirability of noting areas of agreement, particularly among the Soviet union, the United States and the United Kingdom. The minister said that one notable achievement seemed to be the possibility of agreement between the Soviet union and other interested powers on a preamble which would be annexed of course, to an agreement on disarmament.

Mr. Green: That would be the first step.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As a first step. The minister did not say if such an agreement would be less than what was agreed on by the United States and the Soviet union on September 20 last at the United Nations in the document known as "Agreed Principles". It is significant that if this is the measure of achievement, then we have an indication of the very great difficulty of arriving, in the foreseeable future, at a comprehensive agreement on disarmament.

The minister indicated that Canada had placed great stress on a declaration or prohibition against stationing nuclear weapon carriers in space. He did not say, but it has been reported, that such a ban would require an exchange of information on launchings. There would be no inspection services required in the sense in which that term has been used in other contexts in disarmament discussions. This would be by way of a declaration, and this is different, apparently, from what the United States wants, namely that such a declaration should be transferred into an agreement in the form of a convention or treaty. It has been reported that while the eight unaligned states did support this Canadian position, the United States and the Soviet union did not seem to pay much attention to the suggestion and did not give it anything like the same kind of support.

Mr. Green: That is not an accurate report.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says that is not an accurate report. It may be that when we discuss his estimates, further details can be given, which are not available under the procedure presently open to us.

The minister also mentioned that there was some hope for a meeting of the heads of states or heads of governments. This was referred to by the Prime Minister some weeks ago when he indicated, as we all understood he would, his desire to go to such a meeting of the heads of state and government of the 18 powers. The minister did not say, however, if such a meeting does eventuate before the conclusion of the present discussions in Geneva, that it would be confined to the three great powers and possibly France, and would not necessarily extend to the heads of government of the remaining countries attending the conference.

Mr. Green: I think it would include them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Secretary of State for External Affairs intervenes to say it would include them all.

Mr. Green: I said I think it would include them all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says he thinks it would include them all, but that is not what has been reported. Of course the minister is in a better position to say. This would mean, if there was a meeting of the heads of government, that instead of there being 17 foreign ministers in the guise of seagulls there would also be at least a similar number of prime ministers likewise in the the guise of seagulls, who would be flying from their countries some perhaps during a period of great intensification of activity.

The minister did not say anything about the cessation of tests, a problem which we know engages his interest and attention. The minister said nothing about the determination of the United States, as related yesterday by the President, to resume testing unless an agreement is forthcoming with the Soviet union in Geneva during the next few weeks. The minister is reported, however, as having said outside the conference that Canada's position with regard to tests was unchanged and, of course, that puts Canada in opposition to the position taken by the United States. However, as the minister said in a reported statement this morning, it is up to each country to determine the position which it feels it should take.

We hope to have an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, when the minister's estimates are before us to go into these matters in further detail. I may say to the minister that all members of the house share the view that any effort toward disarmament is one to which we must studiously direct our fullest attention. We are all agreed that we can remove one of the possible sources of war by miscalculation through an agreement on disarmament, in a manner which does not prejudice the security position of this or any other country concerned.

To the extent that my hon. friend, as spokesman for Canada, was able to make a contribution toward this objective, which in the light of existing difficulties seems to be a long way off, he may be assured that the house is with him as are indeed the people of the country, who want to see the elimination of these dangerous and mischievous instruments of war under circumstances that will not prejudice our security.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we will have an opportunity to discuss external affairs in a few minutes, my comments will be quite brief. However, I must express on behalf of this group a most sincere and warm welcome to the minister on his return. We have followed the course of the conference at Geneva with close interest almost daily, and particularly the minister's efforts at that conference on behalf of peace. We admire his stubborn determination, regardless of the criticism that comes from some quarters, to be undismayed by temporary set-backs. The minister will not mind a sort of personal reference, I am sure, when I say that in the opinion of this group his self effacing, mule-like qualities are of value to Canada at this time and particularly to his office under these trying circumstances.

I was very interested in the minister's report. I have no hesitation in saying it was one of the best, most heartening reports in relation to world conditions we have heard a secretary of state for external affairs give in this house. We were most interested to hear about the arrangements for the appointment of co-chairmen. This is evidently a very worth-while step. I am one of those, and I think the minister would agree with me, who believe it is not always the legalistic approach that gains the objectives; it is getting human beings together across a table. I think the minister has had a good influence in that direction. We were interested also in hearing of the growing influence of the unaligned countries. I think that is a helpful development and, from our point of view, Canada has taken a very worth-while stand in promoting that development.

I conclude my very brief remarks at this stage, Mr. Speaker, on the work of the conference and the efforts of the minister at the conference, and I have no hesitation in saying that his efforts have been of value in working step by step toward what we all hope for, world peace. His efforts will raise respect for Canada to the highest level all across the world.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FINAL PAYMENT ON 1960-61 POOL

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I have great pleasure in announcing the final payment on wheat for the 1960-61 pool. This final payment is the largest of its kind in the history of the operation of the Canadian wheat board. It would not have been possible without accelerated sales to traditional markets, without sales guaranteed by government credit terms, and without the effect of the recent devaluation of the Canadian dollar.

As the Prime Minister reported on February 2 last, the pool account was closed on February 28, 1962. The final accounting has now been completed. Producers delivered 392.8 million bushels to the 1960-61 pool. The 1960-61 pool closed with a surplus of $165,500,284, including the interim payment of $39,282,601 paid to the producers during November last. The final distribution to producers will therefore amount to $125,088,385, after allowing for the Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy, the cost of issuing final payment cheques and after crediting the account with estimated additional interest earnings.

On producers' deliveries of 392,826,011 bushels, the average final payment is 31.843 cents per bushel. This compares with an average final payment on the 1959-60 pool account of 12.001 cents per bushel. Final payments for the principal grades of wheat delivered to the 1960-61 pool are as follows:

	Final Payment (cents per bushel)
Red spring wheat grades:
No. 1 Manitoba northern	29.130
No. 2 Manitoba northern	29.924
No. 3 Manitoba northern	32.292
No. 4 Manitoba northern	34.174
No. 5 wheat	44.347
No. 6 wheat	49.450
Feed wheat	53.069
Amber Durum grades:
No. 1 C.W. amber Durum	41.155
No. 2 C.W. amber Durum	41.966
No. 3 C.W. amber Durum	44.165
Extra No. 4 C.W. amber Durum	47.135
No. 4 C.W. amber Durum	46.465
No. 5 C.W. amber Durum	44.347
No. 6 C.W. amber Durum	49.450

[Mr. Herridge.]

The Canadian wheat board will commence to issue the final payment cheques early in April. I might repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this final payment is the largest of its kind in the history of the operation of the Canadian wheat board. It comes at a time when, due to poor crops in 1961, prairie farm income would ordinarily have been at a very low level. Coupled with the adjustment payment on the 1961-62 pool that will follow in May, it is hoped that the main shock of last year's poor crop may have been met.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): This important announcement by the Minister of Agriculture is another demonstration of the very efficient operation of the Canadian wheat board. Even though hon. members opposite may laugh at this remark—

Mr. Jones: You surely are not laughing.

Mr. Argue: —it is nevertheless correct that the payments announced by the Minister of Agriculture are made possible due to the good work of—

An hon. Member: This government.

Mr. Argue: —the Canadian wheat board, which has been doing this work for so many years. The minister has announced what he described as the largest final payment ever made. However, I wish to point out that there was only one previous interim payment. This is the final payment, but this "largest final payment" is merely bringing the final price, the total price of wheat received by Canadian producers, back to a position comparable to but somewhat below the price received by the producers for wheat during the years following the second world war and, in context with the very severe increases in costs of production since 1945, the farmer still has a long way to go to the price-cost position at that time.

The total payments announced at this time do not mean that the Canadian wheat producer is receiving anything like special treatment. He is getting the world commercial price for wheat, without subsidy by the government, and with the Australian wheat producer he is still receiving the lowest price for wheat in the world. That is one factor that also must be considered.

The final payments on Durum were about what one might have expected, although I thought they might have been a few cents higher—just a few cents higher. As the price of Durum is very high today, I believe that the final price for Durum wheat sold during the present crop year will undoubtedly be considerably more than the total final payment for Durum which the minister has just announced.

The minister's statement once again demonstrates the wisdom of western grain producers in supporting the Canadian wheat board's system of orderly marketing.

Mr. Churchill: Has the hon. member for Essex East been demoted?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was an excellent statement.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): On behalf of this party I wish to welcome the statement made by the minister, but I just wonder why there is this difference; that when something satisfactory is being done the government takes credit, but when difficulties arise the wheat board takes the blame.

I believe the wheat board is to be congratulated. The farmers in western Canada have now received their final payments, and we shall study the matter with a view to seeing whether the government has done an efficient job in the trading arrangements it has made. However, we would like to express our appreciation of the fact that Canada has been able to raise its grades of wheat this year. The standards have been increased over those of recent crop production years despite bad weather conditions and poor farming conditions generally.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PERSONNEL OF SELECT COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER GREATER DISPATCH OF BUSINESS

Mr. John Pallett (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister) moved:

That the select committee on procedure, appointed on March 26, 1962, be composed of Miss Aitken and Messrs. Balcer, Chown, Churchill, Crestohl, Fulton, Howard, Martineau, McCleave, McGee, McIlraith, Meunier, Pallett, Pickersgill and Ricard.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MUSTARD SEED AND RAPESEED

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-19 (from the Senate), to amend the Canada Grain Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILE—REPORTED STATEMENT BY U.S. CONGRESSMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister any comment to make on a statement made yesterday by two United States congressmen that the Bomarc cannot provide adequate defence against massive enemy attack?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question has been asked many times before on orders of the day. Whether or not it has again become urgent because two congressmen have made a statement, I leave to the minister; but in my opinion, on its face the question is one which has been dealt with a number of times, and unless the minister or the hon. member feel that there is something new in the question I suggest that there is nothing much to be added by asking it on the orders of the day.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully suggest to you that it has become urgent because of evidence that was given yesterday before the United States house appropriations committee, part of which evidence was given by the United States defence secretary, Mr. McNamara. These statements by the two congressmen arise out of a discussion that took place at that meeting, and it seemed to me that the matter was of some urgency, having regard to the fact that the Bomarc system is one that has been agreed upon between the two countries. I think the minister should at least comment on it.

Mr. Speaker: I agree that it is a matter of importance, but my problem as your chairman is to decide whether every time there is external comment on a matter of Canadian public policy that has been discussed frequently, this gives it an additional standing and makes it urgent to the point that it should be raised here. I can see that if all these questions were allowed, this period of questioning might be very substantially extended. However, I leave it to the minister to indicate whether he considers that there is something new involved in the question.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the matter of my commenting on statements made by two congressmen of the United States would be the same as Mr. McNamara in the United States commenting on some of the ill-conceived statements made by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) in regard to matters in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question arising out of what the minister has stated, having regard to the fact that the defence secretary is reported to have made the statement before the house appropriations committee that one of the weaknesses of the Bomarc system is its dependency on an electronic communications system which, because of the fact that it is above ground, is vulnerable to air attack. It seems to me that is a statement upon which the minister should comment.

Mr. Harkness: As far as I am aware no statement of that kind is reported as having been made except by these two congressmen. All I can say is that the ability of the Bomarc B missile to do its job of intercepting aircraft has been demonstrated in a number of tests which have been highly successful. I think it is a proved weapon, and that is accepted by everybody who is an expert in connection with the matter.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the opinion of a United States air force officer that the Bomarc might be 50 to 75 per cent effective, depending on the weight and action of its nuclear warhead, would the minister give the house his opinion of its effectiveness without any warhead?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Hellyer: Surely we should get some indication from the minister. This squadron is the bulk of the Canadian arsenal in defence, and we have a right to have some opinion from the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member bases a question upon an assertion in a statement made somewhere else. It is open to the same objection as the original question.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about warheads being effective. He has not any head at all.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ADVERSE EFFECTS OF NEW DRUG ON PREGNANT WOMEN

On orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question is based on an article in this morning's Globe and Mail to the effect that a drug called thalidomide contributed to the birth to a Winnipeg woman of a malformed child. The article also states that on March 21 this drug was withdrawn from the Canadian market. My question is, inasmuch as the article indicates that there is still some quantity of the drug in existence, could the minister indicate what steps are being taken, if any, to ensure that no further use is being made of this particular drug?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this drug known as thalidomide or kevadon, the new drug submission was cleared on November 22, 1960 and the drug was added to schedule F of the Food and Drugs Act, which meant that it was for prescription sale only. On April 1, 1961 this drug was introduced to the Canadian market after all the usual forms of testing and records had been received and studied, and so on.

On December 1, 1961 the medical representatives of the two companies manufacturing this drug came to Canada to inform us of reports of congenital malformations in newborn infants which had been reported from Germany following the use of thalidomide in pregnant women. The information supplied was statistical in nature, in that the instances of certain malformations in the group of children born to mothers taking the drug were somewhat higher than in a group of children from mothers not taking the drug. A warning letter was sent out to physicians, informing them of this fact, by the two companies concerned on December 4 and 5, 1961.

On March 2, 1962 the department decided that there was now sufficient evidence to warrant a request to the manufacturers that the drug be withdrawn entirely and the manufacturers were so informed on the same day by telephone and letter. A letter was also sent to all physicians on March 5, 1962. Efforts are being made, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that any drug still on the market is picked up.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF ACREAGE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but before doing so would Your Honour permit me to extend to the minister on this special day, his birthday, many happy returns—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rapp: —and my best wishes for good health, happiness and a prolonged stay in this house as Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rapp: My question is this. Would the minister be in a position to give the house information as to whether all the acreage payments have now been made, and the total amount of same?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his very kind personal remarks. I would inform him that all the acreage payments have been made to those who have submitted permit books, but there are still about 500 permit books under review at the present time on which, if they are accepted, payment will have to be made. The total amount of money spent is something over $39 million; I have not the exact figure with me.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPHET RIVER RESERVE, B.C.—REPORTED NEED OF ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration might I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and ask the minister whether his parliamentary secretary brought to his attention the plight of certain people on the Prophet river Indian reserve in British Columbia, and whether the minister has any report to make to the house on this matter.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary secretary did bring this matter to my attention at the first opportunity. I understand that the Indian affairs superintendent of the Fort St. John agency visited the Indian band in question, I would say 10 days ago. At that time everything appeared normal. However, in view of the report in the press I have instructed my officials in British Columbia to make an immediate investigation and let me have a report so that the necessary steps may be taken to meet any emergency.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the minister a supplementary question. Has the minister seen the reports in the local press about this matter? If he has not I will be very glad to send him the paper.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No, I have not. I will be very happy to see it.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could add something to the information already given, as Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and confirm what has been said; that the Indian superintendent at Fort St. John was telephoned yesterday afternoon and he advised that he had visited this group of Indians last week and nobody lacked any food. I might also say that the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) asked me about this matter this morning, and I obtained this information as a result of that request.

The Indian superintendent, however, was instructed to proceed immediately to Prophet river to see whether any special foods were necessary, and if so to have them supplied at once. Furthermore, in view of the seriousness of the charges Mr. Boys, the Indian commissioner in British Columbia, was instructed to proceed as soon as possible to this band of Indians, investigate the charges that had been made and report and take immediately, on the spot, any remedial action that was found to be necessary.

On the basis of the information so far received, it would seem that the charges of neglect which have been made are unfounded, in view of the fact that the Indian superintendent visited the reserve just a week ago and found there was no lack of food. We, of course, cannot control the outbreak of epidemics and this, I think, is the aspect which is being looked into now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the acting minister has been good enough to make a statement on this matter I should like to express my appreciation that the department should have acted so promptly, as I would have expected, in this case. I hope that in view of the feeling in the community, which apparently is widespread, there will be a thorough investigation.

WATER RESOURCES

STATEMENT ON EFFORTS TO OVERCOME SEA POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): On Wednesday last the hon. member for Kootenay West inquired as to the efforts that are being made to counter oil pollution from ships in Canadian waters.

As I indicated to him, my department is making every effort to control pollution of waters, and in support of that statement I might point out that the masters of Canadian coastguard vessels are now designated as oil pollution prevention inspectors and may report infractions of the oil pollution prevention regulations and lay an information against any offender. Masters of Department of Fisheries vessels as well as fishery officers are also designated as inspectors.

Steamship inspectors of the Department of Transport are designated as oil pollution prevention officers on the east and west coasts, and on the great lakes and St. Lawrence. R.C.A.F. aircraft report oil slicks on the water, both on the east and west coasts, and also the identity of vessels in the vicinity. During the coming navigation season on the St. Lawrence it is planned to use one of our helicopters for patrol purposes.

I might add that several successful prosecutions have been made against offenders during the last year.

[Later:]

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. This matter also concerns the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As I have not given notice of this question, perhaps they would take this question as notice. Could the ministers bring the house up to date on what has been done in the past few months in co-operation with the United States federal government toward the elimination of oil pollution on the great lakes?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, surely that kind of question has no urgency within the meaning of the rules. The hon. member should put his question on the order paper, as Your Honour has so often directed hon. members on this side who attend the house more frequently.

Mr. Starr: Liberal closure. Shades of 1956.

Mr. Murphy: May I be permitted to make an observation, Mr. Speaker. May I point out to the hon. member who finds it difficult to contain himself, that the navigation season opens immediately and what the governments are endeavouring to do, I think, is to work jointly with the shipping companies to eliminate this evil.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, as far as my department is concerned, we are considering this matter very seriously. We consider it extremely urgent. I am pleased to take this question as notice, and I shall report back on Monday.

TRADE

TEXTILES—ACCEPTANCE OF SHIPMENT REFUSED BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is it true that Hong Kong representatives are to meet the minister shortly to ask that Canada accept a cargo of textile products which was refused by the United States?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The short answer to that question is no; there has been no meeting with the minister, and certainly no discussion with respect to the admission of any particular shipload of textiles. I might say, however, that in the course of routine proceedings there was a meeting yesterday of officials of the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Finance, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of National Revenue with representatives from Hong Kong to discuss the operation of the quotas which are presently in existence.

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH CIVIC REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Pit Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport a question. Could he tell the house whether the city of Montreal authorities have been invited to take part in the meeting to be held next Tuesday in Montreal to discuss the removal of tolls on the Jacques Cartier, Victoria and Champlain bridges?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wrote Mayor Drapeau inviting him to send a delegate to that meeting.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

KITCHENER, ONT.—PROVISION OF ARMOURY FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if progress is being made by his department in securing suitable armoury facilities in the city of Kitchener so that the present military quarters in the old post office building on King street can be removed.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Yes, progress has been made in that regard. The hon. member was helpful in drawing my attention to a number of properties which have been considered by the army, and we have one of those properties now under consideration which should provide suitable temporary accommodation for the militia units there until it is possible to have an armoury built.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A political reply.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION FOR FARE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can the minister tell the house whether the air transport board pursuant to its powers under the Aeronautics Act has yet made a determination of the application on behalf of Trans-Canada Air Lines for an increase in its rates which, I understand, is effective on April 1? The minister will remember that he seemed to think, first of all, that this matter was one for the determination of T.C.A., but on a later occasion he indicated that it was one for the air transport board, which is why I have put my question in this form.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The procedure followed in this case is along the lines I indicated earlier. Like any other carrier which intends to make any change in its rates, T.C.A. must file the new rates proposed with the air transport board. As the hon. gentleman knows, the board has the power to approve or reject those rates or to call an inquiry or public meeting if objections against the proposed rates have been registered.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, but my question was this. Having regard to the fact that these rates come into operation on April 1, has the board yet made a determination?

Mr. Balcer: The rates have been filed and they are under study by the air transport board at the present time. No further announcement has been made by the board.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EAST BERLIN—DETENTION OF CANADIAN NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. and patient member for Halifax.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): For a moment I was afraid I should have to grow taller so that I could catch Your Honour's eye.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister, and I have given him notice of my intention to ask it. It concerns the detention in East Berlin by the Vopos, the East Berlin police, of Mr. Eric R. Dennis of the London bureau of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, a former member of the parliamentary press gallery here. I would ask the right hon. gentleman if there is any official report on this incident.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The only information I have on the subject is that which has appeared in the press, a statement on the part of Mr. Dennis which revealed the rather excruciating experience he had of being detained for some 40 minutes and searched, his alleged offence having arisen out of the fact that he was copying an anti-NATO sign on the border between East and West Berlin. I do not know of any complaint which Mr. Dennis made to the Canadian mission. His statement to the press was given from London. We have had no report from our mission in Berlin on the incident, but have communicated with our representative there to secure whatever information is available.

I point out that Mr. Dennis did say that although he was detained in a small area, some four feet square, or something of that kind, he was not submitted to any indignity other than that of being carefully searched from head to foot.

SUMMIT CONFERENCE—POSSIBLE INTERFERENCE WITH CANADIAN EVENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): In view of the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that there may be a summit conference before the end of April—

Mr. Green: I did not say that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, during the present disarmament discussions, and in view of the fact that this may include not only the heads of government of the three major powers but those of all the other powers attending the Geneva conference, may I ask the Prime Minister if that is something which would in any way interfere with plans he may have with regard to events in Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): In the same spirit may I say that for the past two years the hon. gentleman has been asking for an election.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is the only one who applauds. The reason, I suspect, is that he hopes he would become leader of the opposition sooner.

But his question is founded on a wrong premise. The Secretary of State for External Affairs did not mention the month of April, though April is a month which is of interest to all of us.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a question of privilege, I regret that the Prime Minister should have made the remark he did, but since he has made it let me tell him that his successor will be the present Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Martel: How many flags?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid not. I recognize the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The question I wish to put to the Prime Minister relates to the proceedings of this house, and if I cannot do it in any other way perhaps I could put it as a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question of his own it would be quite appropriate for him to ask it when he is recognized, but not as a supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question is this—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): You are not recognized. Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the Prime Minister given consideration to following the course which his predecessor followed in 1949 and frankly stating to parliament and the country what are the intentions of the government, in a statesmanlike way?

Mr. Hellyer: He would have to know what his intentions are first.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have been watching with some interest the degree to which the opposition have been filibustering.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It just may be necessary to make a very early announcement that will satisfy the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us have the announcement right away.

Mr. Chevrier: Give us the date. Let us have it.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Laurier will not be here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why wait for spring? Do it now.

SPORTS

MANITOBA—REQUESTED GRANT FOR PHYSICAL FITNESS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Inasmuch as the end of the 1961 fiscal year is fast approaching, could the minister advise whether any decision has been made on the request of the province of Manitoba for a grant of $200,000 under the physical fitness and amateur sport program?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope to make an announcement on this matter at the very first of next week.

OLYMPIC GAMES—INQUIRY AS TO GRANT TO CALGARY ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I apologize for not being able to give him notice. Is the minister yet in a position to announce that the federal government will give financial support as requested by the Calgary Olympic development association in their attempt to bring the 1968 winter Olympic games to Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this an urgent question; 1968?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to announce that a contribution of $35,000 by way of a grant to the Calgary Olympic development association has been authorized.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ORGANIZED CRIME—FEDERAL REPRESENTATION AT MEETINGS OF ONTARIO ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could the minister say whether his department is represented by an observer at the meetings in Toronto of the royal commission on organized crime?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deschatelets: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the Department of Justice is not represented, how does the minister expect to benefit from the important evidence compiled thus far by this inquiry?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may not be aware of it but the Minister of Justice can read, and will be able to study the evidence taken.

Mr. Argue: Progress.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a debatable motion.

Mr. Fulton: I am rather surprised that one coming from the province from which the hon. member comes should suggest that we should show an anxiety to interfere in an inquiry which is entirely provincial.

Mr. Deschatelets: I am much more surprised at the absence of a federal observer from your department.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister never seems to hesitate about interfering in provincial matters.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the allegation that the crime syndicates operate on an international as well as an interprovincial basis—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Hellyer: —and in view of the responsibility—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister raises a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member for Trinity will yield the floor.

Mr. Fulton: I raise the point of order, Mr. Speaker, whether it is proper for hon. gentlemen opposite to be basing questions on the evidence given before a commission of inquiry which is presently under way and entirely provincial.

Mr. Chevrier: Why, then, did you answer the question?

Mr. Fulton: I answered a question only with regard to the absence of a federal observer at the inquiry, not with regard to any evidence given or anything taking place before the commission. I dealt only with the area of responsibility of my department. Again I may say this is an extraordinary question coming from an hon. gentleman from a province that has always taken the position that provincial affairs should not be interfered with.

Mr. Chevrier: You do not hesitate to interfere in other matters.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The fact that the inquiry is taking place would not appear to limit the right of hon. members to ask questions provided the questions relate to the administrative responsibility of the federal minister. I did not fully hear the question, but the hon. member seemed to be making an assertion rather than asking a question. Perhaps if he has a supplementary question he would ask it.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The minister in saying what he has said concerning the provincial sphere is merely demonstrating his ignorance of the allegations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a supplementary question perhaps he would observe the rules by asking his question.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of the responsibility of this parliament under the constitution for the criminal law and for the procedures in respect of the criminal law, and in view of the allegations that these syndicates are operating on an international as well as interprovincial basis, does the minister not think he might benefit by having an observer sit in and obtain as much first hand knowledge as possible from the evidence being presented to this royal commission?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member cannot distinguish between an inquiry being conducted by a province and an inquiry being conducted by the federal government, I am unable to help him.

Mr. Hellyer: And if the minister cannot distinguish between provincial and federal responsibility he should not be holding his portfolio.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps my hon. friend will contain himself for a moment. The hon. member for Trinity asks questions about the effectiveness of certain missiles without warheads. I can only say my hon. friend thinks he is pretty effective, yet he does not appear to have anything in his head at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the minister's response was somewhat in the same category as part of the question, but I should remind him as I reminded the hon. member for Trinity that while the hon. member for Trinity is privileged only to ask a question, the minister is privileged only to answer it.

Mr. Argue: More arrogance.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Coming from anyone other than the Minister of Justice, I would consider that statement an insult, but coming as it does from that hon. gentleman I feel I need not even request that he withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

THE QUEEN MOTHER—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN ARRANGEMENTS FOR VISIT

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise the house whether there have been any changes in the announced arrangements for the visit of the Queen Mother to Canada in June?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have no information on that subject, Mr. Speaker. Such plans are made long in advance. However, I know of no changes that have been made. I understand that the hon. member is most interested in that visit and I am sorry that the Queen Mother, according to present plans, is not visiting Niagara Falls. I think some arrangement might be made in that regard, and I would hope that the Queen Mother might decide to go there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Now we know when the election will be.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR AGENDA OF FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question. Would he indicate to the house, either orally or by tabling the information, the agendas, if any, prepared for the forthcoming labour-management conferences which are being sponsored by his department?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure when the conference is to take place, but I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—REQUEST FOR FINANCING OF EXISTING HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Nipissing asked a question about an article that appeared in the Financial Post of March 24. The question of the financing of existing houses under the terms of the National Housing Act has been before the house on a number of occasions. It is a matter for the government to consider and to which the government has given consideration, and when a new policy is determined in this respect it will, of course, be announced in the usual way.

In the article it is suggested by the Financial Post that the subject of the financing of existing houses is one that should be examined by the royal commission on banking and finance. That seemed to be the hon. member's point, and this seems to be an obvious thing to suggest.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Martineau in the chair.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

Royal Canadian Mint—

707. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $42,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned last night we were on vote No. 692, and we have now gone beyond the estimates of the Department of External Affairs to item 707, Department of Finance, to which of course I have no objection. However, having regard to what happened last night I think in all fairness, as well as in justice to the request made by the hon. member for Essex East that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs be held up until such time as the minister was here to reply to our questions, I should point out that quite clearly we were entirely within our rights. Not only were we within our rights, but the point we took last night was well taken. I do not wish to get into an argument at this time, but with all respect to those who sit on the other side of the house I say that they should not have raised the objections they did during the whole of the two hours last night, and should not have taken the time and the attitude they took.

I repeat that we have no objection to the procedure suggested now, and having regard to the fact that we understand the minister will be here in due course to carry on the discussion of his estimates there is nothing but commendation on this side of the house in that respect. I understand quite well, too, why the minister cannot be here at this time. He has been on a plane for the last 12 or 15 hours and I am sure he wants to have some rest. We on this side would not want to deny him that privilege so that he can conduct the presentation of his estimates in a more refreshed spirit.

All I want to say is that the whole procedural wrangle which took two hours last night could so easily have been avoided by consenting to the request of the hon. member for Essex East then rather than this morning, and if that had been done last night we would probably be far beyond item 707 now.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, just before we get into the meat of these estimates I wish to associate myself and the members of this party with the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier. It is quite obvious that since the parliamentary secretary has had a few hours of quiet meditation he has come to the conclusion that the opposition were correct last night in their representations with respect to the external affairs estimates. We are very pleased that the discussion of these estimates has been postponed. The minister will have an opportunity to refresh himself after his long journey from Geneva, and will also have an opportunity to prepare a further report to the house and to prepare himself to answer the questions that the official opposition and the effective opposition are anxious to ask on these estimates. Not in many months has the correct approach of the opposition parties been so vindicated as in this instance to which we are now referring.

Item agreed to.

Special payments to provinces—

709. Payments to the government of each province, in respect of income tax collected from corporations whose main business is the distribution to or generation for distribution to the public of electrical energy, gas or steam, of amounts computed in accordance with section 6 of The Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1952, as if the last two lines of subsection (1) of that section read as follows "... ending on the thirty first day of December, one thousand nine hundred and fifty nine"—further amount required, $396,559.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I think we should have some explanation of this item. It is a substantial sum arising out of the tax rental agreements, and I wonder whether we should not get a detailed explanation.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There has been a considerable increase in the income tax collected from the utility corporations mentioned in this item. The increase over the preceding year has been from $21 million to $27.5 million, and in order to pay to the provinces their 50 per cent share of the income tax collected from these corporations this additional vote of $396,559 is required.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the government given any consideration to putting these private utilities on the same basis as public utilities with regard to taxation, in view of the great professions of the hon. gentleman's leader that his government is devoted to private enterprise as opposed to socialism? As the hon. member knows, there is no tax on the Ontario hydro but any private company has to pay tax. I know I am asking about policy and I can guess what the parliamentary secretary will be obliged to say, but would he draw to the attention of his leader and his distinguished minister, who is not with us to give us indications about policy because of his attendance at the court of King Cecil the first—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We are starting out by getting along very well today.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that here is a chance for them to strike a real blow for private enterprise?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is a matter, of course, which is under continuous consideration.

Item agreed to.

Contingencies and miscellaneous—

710. To authorize the treasury board to delete from the accounts certain debts due, and claims by, Her Majesty, each of which is in excess of $1,000, amounting in the aggregate to $3,710,688, $1.

Mr. Chevrier: On this vote, which has to do with claims made on behalf of various departments as outlined in the details, I think the parliamentary secretary should give us some indication of how this list compares with those for the last several years. Are these claims mounting? I think the practice has been for the parliamentary secretary to give some of the larger claims so the committee would get an idea as to why they have been erased from the books of the various departments as not being collectable.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the practice of the present Minister of Finance has been to lay on the table of the house a statement which gives a summary of the debts presented for deletion from the public accounts by departments. I assume I am not in a position to lay it on the table at the present time, but perhaps it might be indicated that when Mr. Speaker is in the chair this statement, which I have in my hand, will be laid on the table. I would be glad to send to my hon. friend opposite a copy of it now so that he may have the opportunity of examining it.

It is not customary, of course, to give the details of the individuals who are involved, although at any time I will be glad to show to the financial critic of the opposition any of the particular details. It will be observed that the largest item is that of the Department of National Revenue, taxation, where there is a deletion of 391 debts totalling $3,299,627. This amount represents unpaid taxes of defunct corporations without assets. As I glance down the list, it is evident that most of these debts are 10 or 12 years old and every effort has been made by the Department of National Revenue to collect. The corporations are simply out of business, and collection is impossible. I think there are four individual debts where the debtor died leaving no estate or is in poor health with no income other than the old age security pension. There are four individual debts and 387 debts of defunct corporations.

Mr. Chevrier: I asked the parliamentary secretary if he was able to give some further details as compared with previous years. I think it has been the custom in the past for the minister to compare the items that are being erased or done away with now with previous years, say for a period of five years.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am sorry I omitted to mention that, Mr. Chairman. I regret that I do not have under my hand a comparative table for the period of time to which my hon. friend refers. I am advised that the amounts are normal, but I shall undertake to get a comparative table for the period of the last five years and send it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the parliamentary secretary. I have one further question in connection with the large amount of $3,299,000 related to national revenue. Is the parliamentary secretary able to say how this particular item compares with former years? It is true that he has said that on the whole the total amount is pretty much the same, but since this item stands out so clearly from the others I wonder whether there is some way of getting from the parliamentary secretary a comparison. Perhaps the official who is with him now could provide the information in respect of other years?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am told that there is nothing extraordinary about this amount; that these debts of defunct corporations are under continuous review, and the write-off is approximately the same in each year. I do not have under my hand, nor so far as I know is it immediately available, information relating to the actual figures. I will get this for the hon. gentleman. If I can arrange for an official in the gallery to secure the figures by telephone I will do so while we are still on these estimates. Otherwise I will send them to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is just one question that occurs to me. Perhaps I once knew the answer to the question, but if I did I have forgotten it. What is the reason for not making public the names of these defaulters? After all people who do not pay their debts to the crown are not likely to pay their debts to other people, so it does not seem to me there is any good reason, in the public interest, for being tender with these people.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think perhaps it has been a matter of compassion in large measure. The committee, I understand, has never insisted upon it. I have no doubt that if the committee wished to have the information it would be subject to production. However, I should hope that it would not be. There are complex circumstances in respect of some of these cases. In so far as the information being shown to the financial critic of the opposition is concerned, I would be delighted to reveal full details about any particular instance.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Pickersgill: There is just one point in connection with what the hon. gentleman says. As he knows, the details of the remuneration of civil servants are available to everybody who does business with them.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Not now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, almost all of them are available. It does seem odd that someone who is presumably conferring a benefit upon the country for which he is getting remuneration should have his private affairs made public, while someone who is not paying his debt to the crown is protected. I do not insist upon disclosure. I was trying to find out whether there was any reason in the public interest, for this lack of disclosure, rather than this private reason of compassion which I can see would arise in some cases.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask one further question along the lines of the one asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, but having to do with the Department of Transport. I too probably should know the answer, but it has left my mind if I did know it. I refer to the $16,000 relating to the overpayment of allowances where services were performed for the Department of Transport. Without giving the names, of course, can the parliamentary secretary give some indication of how and under what circumstances the overpayment of allowances was made?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes. The debts that are involved here resulted from the overpayment of isolation allowances which the department had made to catering employees at Frobisher Bay from October, 1958 to August, 1960. The isolation posts regulations require that the prevailing rate isolation allowances be reduced by the amount that the rate of pay at the base exceeds the prevailing rate at the point of departure. The Department of Transport did not reduce the isolation allowances to the catering employees.

This situation arose due to a decision by a departmental official to offer employment on a prevailing rate basis to cooks on the understanding that after a reasonable period of probation the employees would be given contract employment with retroactive pay from the date they entered the service. Contract wage rates are higher than prevailing rates, and any overcompensation, therefore, could be recovered in the retroactive salary adjustment under the terms of the contract. The department decided to turn the operation of the mess hall over to an outside interest and the transfer of the prevailing rate cooks to a contract basis was postponed. The district personnel officer at Frobisher should then have recovered the overcompensation and lowered the pay to the lesser rate, but did not do so on the ground it would have caused mass resignation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Too many cooks spoil the broth.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes. Treasury board, while deprecating the action taken by the official, agreed that the likely cost of recovering the overpayment would be prohibitive, since each of the employees argued that he had agreed to work at a rate of pay offered by the department and since action taken by the personnel officer had resulted, in fact, in a saving of public money almost equal to the amount of overcompensation to the employees concerned, in transportation costs that would inevitably have been incurred had the employees resigned en masse. Therefore they recommended the suspension of the collection action.

Mr. Pickersgill: A clear, brief and lucid comment.

Mr. Regier: May I ask if the parliamentary secretary has a breakdown of the write-offs under the Department of National Revenue, where I notice there are 391 claims totalling $3,299,627. How many of these claims and in what amounts arose under the personal income tax laws, how many arose under corporation income tax laws, and how much has to be written off because of the sales tax?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I indicated to the committee that there were four debts under the personal income tax act; there were three debtors who died leaving no estate whatsoever, and there was one which represented the unpaid tax of an individual in very poor health, with no assets whatsoever and no income except the old age security. The other 387 represent defunct corporations without assets and, as I indicated, they go back a good many years.

Every possible effort is made in the courts and otherwise to collect, but mostly these are situations where it has become quite evident that a corporation is defunct and has no assets, and it is just a useless bit of bookkeeping in carrying the debt forward on the books of the country.

My hon. friend from Laurier asked about the national revenue claims for the last four to five years. I have been unable to get the figures for the last five years, but I have the figures from last year's supplementary estimates. At that time there were 913 claims representing a total of $3,755,086.90. I shall get the figures for the other years for the hon. gentleman as soon as possible and send them to him.

Mr. Regier: Could the parliamentary secretary say whether the bulk of the debt owed by the defunct corporations comes under corporation income tax, or is it due to their not remitting the 11 per cent sales tax?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My notes indicate that this is Department of National Revenue, taxation. As I believe this is correct, then of course it would apply to corporation tax and not to the sales tax which comes under the Department of National Revenue, customs and excise.

General items of payroll costs including superannuation payments—

711. To supplement other votes, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for the payment of salaries, wages, and other pay list charges—further amount required, $2,500,000.

The Chairman: Shall vote 711 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: This is to supplement other votes, etc. Would the parliamentary secretary give examples of how this $2.5 million is dispersed among the various departments?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman mind repeating his question? I went one step too far in my book.

Mr. Chevrier: I said this item was to supplement other votes, etc. Would the parliamentary assistant give the house some idea of how the $2.5 million is dispersed among the various departments?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is the general salary vote, as the hon. gentleman knows. In summary the requirements are: salary revisions which have already been announced, $1,227,925; other requirements of a normal character at this season of the year, $2,501,-132; and a protection on possible other salary revisions of $750,000. That gives a total figure of $4,499,057. The balance available remaining in the general salaries vote was $1,958,-000 and the additional cash requirement then was $2,520,997, which was rounded out to the figure shown in the estimate.

Mr. Chevrier: Is this one of the estimates which can be considered in the nature of urgent in so far as payment of salaries and wages is concerned?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, this is one of those.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the parliamentary secretary whether any delay in the passage of this vote, say between now and Monday, is going to affect the actual pay of any person?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am glad to be able to say to the hon. gentleman that emergency arrangements have been made by way of transfers so that all payroll cheques have been or are being issued yesterday and today to civil servants.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was a story to that effect in the Ottawa Journal, and I am glad to have the parliamentary secretary confirm it. I commend the treasury on this occasion for doing something which, to that extent, removes from the committee a certain pressure which it would have been very improper to impose on it.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): However, the hon. gentleman will realize it will involve delays in payment of some suppliers' bills, but so far as pay cheques are concerned they have all been issued.

Mr. Pickersgill: The government knows it has a big enough majority that it can get the cheques ready so that all it has to do is post them when the estimates are passed.

Item agreed to.

712. To authorize persons who become employed in the public service as a result of the transfer of administration of the Vancouver airport to the Department of Transport and who, immediately prior to such transfer, were employed by the city of Vancouver, to count as pensionable service under the Public Service Superannuation Act, notwithstanding anything contained therein, their service with the city of Vancouver on the basis that the amount required to be paid by them, in respect of such service, shall be determined, in accordance with regulations to be made by the treasury board, as if an agreement had been entered into with the city of Vancouver pursuant to section 28 of the Public Service Superannuation Act in terms similar to those contained in such agreements that have been entered into with other public service employers, $1.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the parliamentary assistant should first tell us what were the terms under which the Vancouver airport was taken over by the Department of Transport, and also what is included; because I take it this arises out of the transfer. I do not want to read the explanation of the item. There is another question that comes to my mind, but I see it is one o'clock and perhaps we might leave the matter for the moment.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, when the committee adjourned for lunch I was asking some questions in connection with the transfer of the Vancouver airport to the Department of Transport. I will not repeat what I asked because I am sure the parliamentary secretary is ready to give a reply. However, there are one or two other questions that arise out of this matter.

During the course of his reply I trust that the parliamentary secretary will be in a position to say whether this agreement has been finalized with the city of Vancouver. I understand that under the municipal bylaws or regulations of that city, any agreement made with a federal department has to be approved of by vote; whether it be in the form of a plebiscite or a vote at a municipal election, I do not recall at the moment.

I would like to know, (1) what is the price of the sale or the transfer; (2) whether it has been approved of by the ratepayers of the city of Vancouver, and (3) whether that agreement is now finalized; in other words, is there a signed agreement which is effective between the department and the city of Vancouver?

Following the answers to those three questions perhaps we can enter into a discussion of this item.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I had really intended to indicate the purpose of this item in the first instance, which is of course rather different than answering the questions which the hon. gentleman has asked. However, perhaps I might deal directly with the questions he has asked, which really apply to a transport item but I will be very glad to deal with them now.

First as to the price. The price which was agreed upon and appraised was $2,750,000, which was subject to a number of deductions for previous federal grants totalling $216,250, so the net price payable is $2,533,750.

The hon. gentleman is quite right in believing that it is required that there be the approval of the ratepayers of Vancouver, and I am told that this approval has now been given and the takeover date, which has been agreed upon, is the first day of June next. I assume that this is a bylaw approval in the usual way. My hon. friend and I are members of the Ontario bar, and I assume it is an approval of a bylaw in the same way that we would understand. As I say, agreement has been reached for a takeover date of June 1 and I am assured that all preparations to that effect are in progress.

Mr. Chevrier: Has the agreement been signed?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am told that it has. I think the hon. gentleman would perhaps like to know what we are endeavouring to do by this item; that is, we are trying to bring the employees of the Vancouver airport into a position equivalent to that of a civil servant. There is no reciprocal agreement in respect of superannuation between the federal government and the municipality of Vancouver. There are perhaps fewer reciprocal agreements in respect of superannuation matters than there ought to be generally across the country. Personally I would hope that reciprocal agreements might increase in number and give a greater fluidity of movement of public servants as among municipal, provincial and federal authorities.

The vote in this particular is similar to a vote which was adopted in respect of Quebec fishery inspectors when they were transferred, I think in the year 1959. The vote will permit the recognition of the pensionable service of each employee on the same basis and to the same extent as if a reciprocal agreement had been included. Consequently, if the amount transferred in respect of a particular employee is insufficient to purchase the full past service credit, the employee will be permitted to contribute the balance of it and in the net result he will be put in the same position as if he had been a civil servant.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just follow that up. There are two points which come to my mind. The first is this. My hon. friend said that the agreement had been signed between the Department of Transport and the city of Vancouver. Does the agreement cover the persons referred to under item 712 which we are now discussing; in other words, was a provision made in the agreement for taking over these employees as employees of the Department of Transport? Second, was a committee established to determine what benefits would flow to these employees of the municipality of Vancouver by becoming employees of the Department of Transport? I presume that these employees will now be in the same category as, for instance, employees at Dorval airport in Montreal or Malton airport in Toronto of the Department of Transport. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would answer those questions.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, to the second question of the hon. gentleman the answer is a simple yes. With regard to the first question, I do not have the agreement in front of me but I am assured that no loss of employment will be involved for any of the existing employees.

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to the second question is yes; that means that a committee was established. That was my second question.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My understanding of the hon. gentleman's second question was whether they would be put in the same status as public servants elsewhere where the government of Canada had been the owner of the airport for a number of years.

Mr. Chevrier: That answers my third question. The second one was whether a committee of government officials had been established to determine the status and the benefits that these people would receive. Then I ask whether all the employees, prevailing rate employees as well as permanent employees, are covered by this vote.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My information is that all these persons employed by the government of Canada will be assured of employment at the date of takeover, should they so desire. The question of benefits is not one which can be determined by a committee. They are determined by statutes which have been passed by this parliament—the Civil Service Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act, which we are seeking to apply to these individuals through this vote.

I do not wish to become too particular. The hon. member may perhaps have something specific in mind and he may be asking me to make a public pronouncement on the basis of a somewhat limited knowledge. But, certainly, the intention is to take care of each of these employees exactly as if he or she had been employed at one of the airports which have been under the Department of Transport for a number of years.

Mr. Chevrier: I can assure the hon. gentleman that I had nothing in mind when I raised the question, other than this—and now I have to draw on my memory—that when the Department of Transport telephone and telegraph services in British Columbia were purchased by private enterprise, a committee was established to make sure nobody would be unfairly affected by the transfer from one post to another. That is why I wondered whether a similar committee had been established in this case.

I intended to follow that up by asking two questions, first, how many employees are affected by this transfer, and next, how many chose not to become employees of the Department of Transport, to use the parliamentary secretary's own words, and therefore did not seek to take advantage of this agreement.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think the hon. gentleman has asked three questions. First, I believe the position of each of these employees will, in fact, be enhanced rather than otherwise as the result of the provision which parliament is being asked to make here. As to the second question, I am sorry but I do not have before me information as to the actual number of employees, neither do I have information as to the number who may choose to enter the federal service on the date of takeover. However, I will get that information for the hon. gentleman and try to let him have it before we reach a Department of Transport item.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Special—

713. Estimated amount required to recoup the lobster trap indemnity account established under vote 540 of the Appropriation Act, No. 5, 1955, to cover the net operating loss in the account as at March 31, 1962, $99,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the parliamentary secretary could tell us how this amount compares with the amount required under this vote last year and, if he has the information, what proportion of the lobster fishermen are covered.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I can give the hon. gentleman the number of vessels covered but I do not know whether I can give him the proportion covered, by which I assume he means the percentage. I might inform the committee for the benefit of some hon. members who may not be as well informed as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and I on this subject of lobster trap indemnities that at January 31, 1962, about eight and a half years after the inception of the fishermen's indemnity plan, the excess of cumulative indemnities over premiums in the vessel account stood at $7,875.58. This figure is the result of a cumulative deficit of $17,271.25 as at January 31, 1961, plus an operating surplus of $9,395.67 for the 12 months ended January 31, 1962. An earlier deficit of $30,159 in this account had been recouped through estimates.

In the lobster trap account at January 31, 1962, the excess of indemnities over premiums stood at $79,907.92. Earlier deficits of $378,115.84 in this account had been recouped through estimates, $114,480 of it as recently as in further supplementary estimates (5), 1960-61.

The over-all fund covering both vessel and trap operations has a ceiling of $150,000, and the cumulative deficits of $7,875.58 in vessels and $79,907.92 in traps totalling $87,783.50 leave therefore only $62,216.50 at January 31, 1962 as a working margin against further abnormal losses.

At the end of January 1962 there were 6,010 vessels covered by the plan valued at $19,788,000, an increase of 377 vessels and $2,074,000 during the previous 12 months. The present maximum contingent liability is $13,240,000, an increase of $1,383,000 over the figure of one year ago.

I think that information will, perhaps, give in sufficient detail an answer to what the hon. gentleman has in mind.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

Mr. Pickersgill: It does not really answer my question, very interesting though the information is. All I wanted to find out was what proportion of the total number of lobster fishermen is actually covered. The minister may not have that figure. If the committee might also have the figures broken down as between the provinces, that would be interesting, too. I take it that this figure of $99,000—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is the net deficit.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is to meet a deficit but it is money in the bank, so to speak. It is paid out in this fiscal year but it is to meet losses in subsequent years.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It recoups the fund.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was my understanding. But if the hon. gentleman can tell us what proportion of the total number of lobster fishermen is covered by the fund and how it is distributed between the provinces, I should be grateful.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am sorry I do not have those figures in the notes which have been prepared for me in relation to this item, but I shall get the information for the hon. member and give to him at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Howard: I may wish to go further into this question on the lines indicated by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate once the information is available. I am sure it will be readily understandable that there is some concern—a concern which, I gather, has not been communicated to many people in the department—about the position of crab fishermen with regard to this provision for indemnity. The crab fishermen do not fall within the same coverage structure as do lobster fishermen and I gather, from reading Hansard, that when the administration of the fisheries indemnity plan was dealt with in 1935 the then minister of fisheries, Mr. Sinclair, said no one on the west coast appeared too concerned about crab trap coverage under the plan. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could obtain any information as to the position of crab fishermen with regard to this plan.

My second point is this. I believe it is an awkward way to proceed, by way of a vote of parliament and subsequent statutory coverage, compared with the system of setting up a fund through a separate act.

The Prime Minister was concerned about the former system of appointing parliamentary secretaries and subsequently introduced a system under which parliamentary secretaries are appointed by authority of an act of parliament. In my opinion it would be better to deal with these matters by means of a statute rather than by means of an estimate with subsequent action by the governor in council to establish regulations.

The system that has been in existence for many years amounts to giving the cabinet a blank cheque to proceed on whatever basis it likes and set up whatever funds it likes under the fisheries indemnities plan. I pass this thought on to the parliamentary secretary to be communicated to the cabinet for consideration.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I assure the hon. gentleman that note will be taken of his comments.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

714. Departmental administration—further amount required, $75,500.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to the attention of the committee under this item a matter of serious concern to my constituents. I have been asked to raise it by numerous organizations including chambers of commerce, labour, industry, farm institutes, women's institutes and one Anglican bishop in my constituency who has a great sense of social responsibility. I refer to the recent bombings and burnings that have occurred in the district I have the honour to represent. This is a serious problem. These incidents have occurred since 1923 and according to a qualified official of Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company who has kept a record, the loss to date totals more than $17 million as a result of bombings and burnings, the blowing up of railroads and bridges, the destruction of community halls and houses, and so on. That means that to date the loss averages $1,200 a day. In addition there is an average annual expenditure by the provincial government of over $300,000.

In fairness to the greater body of Doukhobors I should explain to the committee the distinction between the main body, the Sons of Freedom and the fanatical sect of the Sons of Freedom. I do this also for the members of the fourth estate, who are gentlemen, and others connected with that vocation. The Doukhobors in the interior of British Columbia number somewhere between 8,000 and 10,000 and are a hard working, law abiding group of citizens. Then we have the Sons of Freedom group which numbers between 2,000 and 2,500. These on the whole are also law abiding but in that group there is an unrepentant fanatical minority. It is difficult to estimate the number in this group but it is possibly somewhere between 200 and 300. It is the fanatical minority that has caused trouble throughout the years. I hope that hon. members of the committee and the gentlemen of the fourth estate in future will not report these incidents as having been caused by the Doukhobors but will refer to them as the fanatical sect of the Sons of Freedom section.

The latest outrage that has caused considerable uproar in my constituency is the bombing of the power pylon—the largest over-water power line in the west—on the west shore of Kootenay lake causing damage estimated at $1 million which resulted in throwing out of employment approximately 1,000 miners and smelter workers and others associated with the mining and lumbering industries. Some may be out of work for several months, but it is hoped that the majority may be given employment as the weeks go by so the loss in terms of wages will be mitigated to some extent. This has caused strong feelings in the district I have the honour to represent together with the hon. member for Kootenay East who, I am certain, is burning to follow me in this debate because we co-operate in doing what we can in these situations.

Before proceeding I wish to compliment the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers and other unions in the district who have met with the employer, Consolidated Mining and various employers in the forest and other industries affected and have done their best to work out staggered hours of employment and rearrangement of activities so the loss will be lessened as far as planning to that extent can lessen it.

I have received wires, letters and resolutions from the Kootenay and boundary citizens committee on Canadian and Doukhobor affairs, from the mayors of municipalities, labour organizations, chambers of commerce, other groups and numerous individuals expressing their concern about this continuing situation and urging that certain steps be taken to remedy it.

First of all they have asked for the maintenance of law and order and requested that more members of the R.C.M.P. be made available in the district. I understand the minister made available additional members of the force from Alberta and to that extent the situation has been remedied. Naturally, those who are proved guilty must be punished and law and order must be maintained.

Second, various mayors and municipalities and other organizations have urged the sending of troops into the district by the Department of National Defence, not to be used against the unfortunate people who are being misled by certain leaders who in the past duped them out of large sums of money, but as a protection to all citizens including members of the Sons of Freedom group against whom there was a large degree of resentment for a few days, as a protection for property and as a stabilizing influence.

I have raised this question in the house. The Minister of National Defence has taken a somewhat niggling point of view in suggesting that the attorney general should apply to the officer commanding in the area to see whether he can maintain law and order. That is not the purpose of this request. It is possible to have a company there in training available to protect property. That is their opinion. I am not suggesting it is a complete remedy to the situation. The people of the district cannot understand why it is not possible to train a battalion or company in the Kootenays. It is magnificent country for certain types of training such as mountain climbing, skiing, building bridges, swimming, and other water sports, and there are adequate unusual natural obstacles. The people cannot understand the position of the department, especially when they learn that the Department of National Defence is going to send 600 troops to the world's fair at Seattle for a week. Sending troops to the Kootenays will cost the taxpayers of Canada money, and if it is a matter of expense I cannot see the argument because these troops have to be paid and so on. In any event, that is a matter that is being decided between the Minister of National Defence and the attorney general of British Columbia, but I mention it because it has been brought to my attention by these organizations.

I have also had resolutions from various organizations, including the Kootenay and Boundary committee on Canadian and Doukhobor affairs, urging these matters and also suggesting that the losses suffered by corporations and individuals should be shared by the federal and provincial governments. I put that forward as another suggestion to those on the government side of the house who, I trust, are listening to my pleas.

Then there is the question of rehabilitation. A good number of people have written to me urging that consideration be given to the problem of rehabilitation. Mind you, this is the most difficult social problem in Canada related to one particular group. It is of the longest standing and is one of the most difficult ones. I know these people. I have talked to them. In fact, I am getting letters daily from some of them who are in jail. I had two this morning, one from one of the former leaders in which he explains the circumstances. He is not complaining and, as a matter of fact, seems quite happy, but he is giving me his views.

On the whole these are simple people who have been misled throughout the years and who have been bled financially by some leaders. In the past governments have seen fit to pass the buck from one to the other. They have taken a purely legalistic view of the problem. The federal government has said on many occasions that the maintenance of law and order, property and civil rights, etc. are the responsibility of the provincial government.

I am trying to be as brief as possible, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to take the time of the committee unduly but this is a serious problem to the people I have the honour to represent.

It so happens that 10 years ago this month the consultative committee tabled its report on its research into the whole problem and it made some excellent recommendations. At that time the people of the Kootenays looked forward to co-operation between the federal and provincial governments toward a final solution of the problem, but nothing happened. I have some correspondence here. In 1950 the matter was discussed between the attorney general of the province at that time, Mr. G. S. Wismer, and Mr. Stuart Garson who was minister of justice, and the situation is described in the same terms as I am describing it today. But nothing happened.

I also have copies of an exchange of letters in 1953 between the Hon. Stuart S. Garson, Q.C., minister of justice and the Hon. R. W. Bonner, Q.C., attorney general of British Columbia, relating to the British Columbia Doukhobor problem. Once again may I say that I do not like the word "Doukhobor". "Doukhobor" is a Russian word meaning spirit wrestler. The matter should be referred to as the Sons of Freedom problem and I want to impress that on the authorities.

I wish to read briefly from one letter in the correspondence. One would judge that at that time the governments were co-operating very closely to meet the problem. Mr. Bonner wrote to Mr. Garson on May 20, 1953, and I quote part of the letter:

> A complete solution to the problem posed by the Sons of Freedom sect of the Doukhobor community lies beyond the constitutional competence of the provincial government and requires the closest co-operation of the federal and provincial governments which jointly share the sum total of constitutional competence to deal with this problem. We ask, therefore, that the federal government recognize this basic position.

I am asking this federal government to do exactly that. Then Mr. Bonner went on to make several suggestions. I might say that I discussed this problem with Mr. Garson at some length because I have lived with it for over 40 years. Some of these people have worked on my ranch and when they are away from the influence of their community you could not have better or more industrious workers or more kindly people. I know the whole circumstances. In any event, Mr. Garson to his credit did make an offer of co-operation. He discussed the question of relocation in the Slocan valley, the rebuilding of the communities and so on; but unfortunately Mr. Garson did not get a reply to his letter to the attorney general of British Columbia and the matter was left more or less in the air. Nothing was done. No action was taken in 1950; no action was taken in 1953.

What do I suggest? I suggest in broad outline the recommendations of the consultative committee on Doukhobor and Sons of Freedom affairs which made its report 10 years ago this month. First of all, I urge that the government abandon the strictly legalistic approach to the question and that they approach the government of British Columbia and offer their co-operation. Let them take the initial step and offer their co-operation in any way possible.

I suggest that what is required is a commission that can make a quick report. The basic facts are there. The consultative committee's report was the result of a great deal of research and it is the foundation upon which any later report could be made. First of all, federal-provincial co-operation is required and I suggest that the federal government offer to co-operate. Then a commission is required to make a quick examination of the problem, based on previous material which is available and on interviews with the people of the district. I suggest that the commission go to the Kootenays and meet representatives of the churches, labour, industry, the chambers of commerce and the farmers' and women's institutes. I am sure they will find that the representatives of these organizations and their members are willing to extend their co-operation and accept their responsibilities as organizations and individuals in working toward a solution. I suggest that after that committee reports there should be co-operation between both governments and the recommendations should be given effect as a result of co-operation between the governments, the organs of the people in the district concerned and the people.

I have had a lot of people write me who are most interested and concerned and there are many very capable persons available who could make a great contribution. I had a letter from a very well known bishop in my constituency just two days ago in which he deals with the whole question. He is a retired man of means, a man of outstanding intellect, and he knows these people. There is one man who would be able to serve on the committee and would make a great contribution because of his contacts with the Sons of Freedom, the Doukhobor people and the balance of the community and because of the respect in which he is held by all communities. I am sure there are leading people in all the churches who could make a contribution in that respect. The country is simply alive with talented persons who are willing to do something if there is some mobilization of government forces and of the local people's capacity to meet the problem. I suggest that we should meet it head on.

We hear about immigration. I have a letter here from the Brazilian embassy. Some of the representatives of the Sons of Freedom, who now have written me to say they are in the penitentiary, went to Brazil and made arrangements to buy 5,000 acres of land; but the question of the Brazilian government permitting them to enter the country had to be considered. I received a letter dated March 8 from the chargé d'affaires of the Brazilian embassy which reads as follows:

> In reply to your letter dated March 7 concerning the Doukhobor question, I would like to advise you that the Brazilian government is still studying the request for the group to migrate to Brazil. As soon as I receive any information on this question, I will be very pleased to contact you.

I am not very hopeful in that respect, Mr. Chairman. I am sure that recent events would not cause any country to welcome some of these people with open arms. I think we have to face this question head on. We have other people who are suggesting that these Doukhobors should be sent to other parts of Canada. As soon as you suggest that, the people in the other parts of Canada hold meetings of protest. While we have to punish the guilty and maintain law and order, we have civil rights in this country. I have heard people suggest that the whole group should be moved to some other part of Canada. However, we have a bill of rights and you cannot take a group of people who have not been proven guilty of any crime and move them to another part of Canada. This is against our bill of rights, our democratic principles and so on.

I say to our people in the Kootenays, let us face this question head on. You know, we have thousands of acres of good land there. We have a valley 30 miles long with a paved highway right through it and with electricity to light every farm. We have a large river flowing through this valley. This land would provide the opportunity for resettlement, re-education, vocational training and social rehabilitation. What we require is co-operation between the federal and provincial governments and then co-operation between agencies such as the P.F.R.A., the Veterans Land Act administration, the Farm Credit Corporation and the provincial agencies directly concerned.

I might say that when I discussed this matter with Mr. Garson, he was prepared to recommend to the cabinet that we go along with such a scheme as that, utilizing the P.F.R.A. At that time I suggested these people be resettled, re-educated and sent to vocational training schools. There are some bright aspects of this problem, regardless of this recent catastrophe which resulted in the destruction of this pylon and the damage that flowed therefrom. However, the young Doukhobor women, the Sons of Freedom women, have continued to send their children to school. These are the young women who could have a big influence in the future with regard to the community, and they are the persons with whom our organizations should be dealing. I suggest that having the land, the roads, the power, the public facilities and the capacity in the district, we should mobilize all these forces. I suggest the government could rebuild the jam factory. You know, the finest jam in the country was manufactured by the Doukhobors in this area. Do you know why it was the finest? It was the finest because nothing but plain sugar and the finest fruit were used. There was no jiggery-pokery about it like there is with a lot of monopoly capitalism. This jam was known throughout the whole country and they could not supply the demand. I have been in the factory many times. I think government action through these various agencies could rehabilitate these people. I say let us face it together; let us work at it together and give the local people an opportunity to do something as the result of government action.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I have tried to be as brief as possible on a question of great importance to my constituents. I do urge this government to offer its co-operation to the provincial government in an effort to find a long term solution to this problem. Let both governments work together with the people of the Kootenays and let us accept this challenge in the spirit that we intend to succeed and end for all time this social disability.

Mr. McFarlane: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the rare occasions in this House of Commons upon which members of opposing political parties join hands for the benefit of the people in general. I certainly agree with many of the remarks that have been made by the hon. member for Kootenay West. During a period of many years—I am going back now about 40 years—we have had similar conditions in the Kootenays but not quite so serious as the recent outbreak. I have had a certain amount of personal contact with many of the Sons of Freedom sect, as we call them, and generally speaking I have found them to be very good people. They have been actively concerned with local civic projects and the average member of the sect has been a credit to the district in which he has lived. Of course, you will find radicals in any organization or in any group of people.

I have also received wires and letters from the chambers of commerce, cities and villages in the area. I will eliminate the women's institutes in the area because I think they have other things to consider. The latest bombing has affected part of my area. Not long ago we had a grain elevator blown up twice and this radical sect also endeavoured to blow up a little church in this area. It was fortunate that the time bomb did not go off. The men who were sent in to defuse the bomb had to be very careful, but they were able to eliminate this danger without too much difficulty. This latest bombing is something that has affected my area. It has thrown a considerable number of men out of work as the result of the closure of the fertilizer plant and the iron plant, which were working to full capacity at this time of the year. Electrical power, which we need in the area, was reduced to the point where it was barely sufficient to carry on the essentials.

Prior to this time, and over a period of 40 years, we have experienced many of these bombings and possibly we have treated them a little too lightly. We have accepted them as a matter of course. It was nothing to pick up the paper in the morning and find that the Sons of Freedom had blown up part of the railway track or a power pole. We did not take the matter too seriously. It was not a major subject of conversation. The situation has reached the point now, Mr. Chairman, where something must be done. We cannot go along living in danger of our power plants being destroyed, our theatres blown up or places of business destroyed with a possible resultant loss of life. Something must be done now.

It has been said that the provincial authorities neglected to request help at the time they should have asked for it. As soon as the extent of this bombing was known, a wire or telephone call from the provincial authorities should have been made requesting the proper assistance. I should like to read from Hansard, page 1593, March 8, 1962. A question was asked of the Minister of National Defence, and he replied as follows:

> The responsibility for maintaining law and order in the Kootenays, as indicated by the Minister of Justice, is with the provincial authorities. It would appear to me that until they have exhausted their capabilities in that direction there would be no necessity to call upon the members of the Canadian army to assist them in that regard.

The point I want to bring out, Mr. Chairman, is that the provincial authorities did not accept their responsibility and request assistance from the federal government which, we have been assured, would have been supplied. In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would say that we must have the co-operation of the federal and provincial governments as well as the small municipalities concerned in order to bring this matter to a satisfactory conclusion.

Mr. Roberge: I fully appreciate the contribution made by the hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for Kootenay East on the Doukhobor question. However my purpose in rising is entirely different and I would like to restrict my remarks to the item under discussion.

On studying these estimates, I find that according to page 18 the government is asking for a sum of $5,000 to cover travelling and living expenses for the committee on juvenile delinquency. I do want to deal at length with that item because it was the subject of discussion the other day and was fully ventilated. However the government is asking for a further amount of $75,500; but on examining pages 239 and 240 of the blue book I find these special sub-items dealing with professional and special services, travelling expenses, telephones, telegrams, publications, departmental reports and other matters, amount to a total of $180,000. Therefore this further amount represents over 60 per cent of the original estimate.

To me that is a tremendous amount of money by comparison with the original estimate, and there must be good reasons for it. Offhand I cannot discover any and I wonder is it due to lack of foresight on the part of the department, or what special reasons have brought it about. I ask the parliamentary secretary why these further amounts are required? Is it due to lack of foresight, or what?

I have a special interest in the last amount which deals with publication of departmental reports and other material. The original estimate seeks $2,500 but this last supplementary is asking for $15,700. That is an increase of over 600 per cent. I find it hard to understand and I would like the parliamentary secretary to explain why that amount is required.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words only on this item, following the question I put this morning to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), on the orders of the day, when I asked him whether the government had sent an observer to the inquiry on organized crime in Ontario.

The minister seemed rather surprised at my question. I must say I was much more surprised at the reply he gave me. The Minister of Justice has taken the ridiculous position that, since it is a case of a provincial inquiry on organized crime, we should keep aloof from it to respect provincial autonomy.

That a minister of justice should take a certain position for sound reasons, that is his own responsibility; but to justify on such childish grounds the absence of a departmental observer in so serious a matter as the royal commission on organized crime in Ontario, I say is inconceivable.

The minister is then of the opinion that organized crime knows frontiers in Canada. Nothing is more contrary to the facts, and all those who have any experience in the matter will find that the argument of the Minister of Justice does not make sense.

Crime, especially organized crime, knows no provincial frontiers, especially when we know that the inquiry on crime in the province of Ontario has been decided on account of the infiltration from the United States.

I submit it was the responsibility of the government, and especially of the Department of Justice, to be represented by an observer.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. But I do not want to leave on the record the impression which might have been created this morning by the reply given to my question by the Minister of Justice, because, at the time, on the orders of the day, the rules forbade me to do so.

Surely the Minister of Justice is not trying to make us believe that just by reading press reports he will have all the information and that he will be posted on the extent of the activities of organized crime, as uncovered by the inquiry. Coming as it does from people who have so often complained in the past three or four years that they are misquoted by the press, that statement is even more fantastic. Now they are saying: "Well, we will rely on press reports". We know very well that in a matter of this kind, newspaper accounts are necessarily incomplete since the press cannot give all the information an observer would be able to pick up if he were present.

All those who are interested in this matter —and they are much more numerous in Canada than one might think—feel that major amendments should be made to the Criminal Code in that regard. They will deplore not only that there is no observer at the inquiry but especially the apparent lack of interest which the Minister of Justice shows concerning that inquiry.

(Text):

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have just two or three comments to make. Naturally all of us were interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for Kootenay East in respect of the very difficult problem which exists in their area. Of course it is not a new problem. I well remember sitting as an observer in the gallery listening to a man who was a dear old friend of mine, Billy Esling, then member for Kootenay West describing the situation as it existed long years ago. Most regrettably it has not been possible to solve the problem that has existed since these people emigrated to Canada.

The remarks made by the two hon. gentlemen will be carefully noted, but I may say that the same representations made to them by public bodies have also been made directly to the Minister of Justice and the government generally. I can tell them the government remains ready, willing and anxious to cooperate with the provincial government of British Columbia and the local bodies in bringing a sane and rational solution to what is a really difficult problem.

The hon. gentleman from Megantic asked a number of questions in respect of this particular item. From the details given he will observe that professional and special services have increased, principally due to an unusual number of prosecutions of counterfeit cases in the province of Quebec.

Travelling expenses have also increased and this has been due to a need for travel which was not contemplated at the time. I may give an example of one of the items before me. It relates to the travelling expenses of an officer of the department while attending a United Nations consultative group on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, which met in Geneva, Switzerland. The hon. gentleman himself mentioned the item of $5,000 which applies to the special departmental committee on juvenile delinquency which the Minister of Justice has established.

The item for telephone and telegraphs was underestimated having regard to last year's full expenditure for this item, which was in fact $18,359. This undoubtedly was an underestimation having regard to previous experience.

In the matter of the publication of departmental reports and other material, the department, as I think the hon. gentleman knows, has found it desirable to publish four pamphlets which outline and cover the various functions of the Department of Justice. I am sure these pamphlets will be useful and that they will meet with the approval of the hon. gentleman.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont has raised again the question which he raised earlier in the day. As to the matters which were then in issue between himself and the Minister of Justice, I do not seek to intervene. I can assure the hon. gentleman that all aspects of any evidence which may be presented to any commission which relates to the enforcement of law under the jurisdiction of the federal government will be most carefully considered by the Minister of Justice and by the officials of the Department of Justice.

With regard to the question of the correct technique, the hon. gentleman appears to believe that it is wise for counsel on behalf of the dominion government to appear before provincial royal commissions. If that is his opinion, as I think it is, he is entitled to it. However, I suggest there are other techniques whereby the same objective can be achieved without an intervention on the part of the federal government in royal commissions which may be appointed by the provinces. I am sure the hon. gentleman and the Minister of Justice will have another occasion on which they can discuss this matter, and in such argument as they may put forward I would not seek to intervene.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I would not like this item to be carried without reminding the parliamentary secretary that I did not mention or suggest any intervention; I just suggested that an observer should go there and report to the Minister of Justice here. Also, the minister in his reply this morning made it very clear that his only interest in this matter is in the reading of papers. I have no doubt whatsoever that the minister is able to read. Has he got time to read fully? I do not know. Do these newspaper reports cover all the field of the inquiry? I am sure that this question is answered in the negative. Therefore the answer just given by the parliamentary secretary does not meet the point I made; but I am very hopeful that one of these days the Minister of Justice will be able to answer adequately the suggestion I have made.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, of course the hon. gentleman appreciates that the enforcement of the Criminal Code is under the jurisdiction of the provincial attorneys general. I believe that the provincial attorneys general will do their duty in the enforcement of the code. If there should come to the attention, through reading, listening or otherwise, anything wherein the Department of Justice can help in the proper enforcement of the law, my hon. friend can be assured that it will be done.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a word. I am really rising to say a word about what was said by the two hon. members from Kootenay, and it will be a very brief one I assure the parliamentary secretary.

Before doing that, in view of what has just been said I must say that the attitude of the Minister of Justice this morning and the parliamentary secretary this afternoon is very astonishing to me. That having an observer at a provincial royal commission should be an intervention in provincial affairs is certainly a new and strange doctrine in this country. After all, hon. gentlemen were just recently criticizing the premier and provincial treasurer of British Columbia because he did not appear before a federal royal commission on banking and commerce, which is exclusively under federal jurisdiction; and this government recently called a conference on a matter that is of purely provincial concern and took great exception because the premier of Quebec did not send a representative to it. In the light of those precedents—and I could mention a good many others—it does seem to me an attitude on the part of the government of straining at a gnat after it had swallowed, as the little girl once said, a saw mill.

It is not that about which I rose to speak, but I just could not resist saying a word about how really silly the Minister of Justice had been this morning. I do not blame the parliamentary secretary; he just had to repeat what the minister had said, because that is party solidarity. The parliamentary secretary would not have made such a ridiculous observation on his own. But I did rise to say just one word on and join with the hon. member for Kootenay West in the plea that everybody who refers to this unhappy and regrettable problem in the Kootenays should make a clear distinction between those people who are involved and the great body of Doukhobors who are descendants of the people who came to Canada in 1898, most of whom are just as good, law-abiding citizens of Canada as any other citizens of Canada and whose feelings must be injured every time these loose references are made. I do not criticize people too much for making them because most people are not as familiar with the problem as are the hon. gentlemen who spoke about it. Most people are not familiar enough with the problem to make that kind of distinction, but as it has been brought to our attention I think it would be very desirable that we should make this distinction.

I also feel, like the hon. member for Kootenay West, that it is rather unfortunate—and I do not want to be unnecessarily critical about this—that the rather narrow and legalistic view was taken by the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Justice regarding the request of the attorney general and the premier of British Columbia. I have not any great admiration for the government of British Columbia, any more than has any other hon. member of this house that I know of, but I do think that the suggestion made by Mr. Bonner in this instance was a very sensible one indeed.

When you think of the tremendous amount of money we are spending on defence in this country it does seem to me that to have a small group of troops engaged in that area in some useful exercise might have had the very salutary moral effect that Mr. Bonner was hoping it might have, without having the invidious suggestion the troops were called in because the police could not do their job. I think it would have been the part of statesmanship on the part of the government of Canada to accept that suggestion in the broad spirit in which it was made and I rather regret what I think was a rather hasty and snap judgment.

I do not blame the federal government very much for being rather touchy and irritable about the government of British Columbia; heaven knows they have had to endure an awful lot of humiliation of one kind and another from them, including the absence of the Minister of Finance at the present time. Notwithstanding that fact, even the attorney general of British Columbia can occasionally be right about something, and in this instance it seems to me that he was right and was taking a broad view of this matter, and it is rather unfortunate that the government of Canada did not join with him in taking that view.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I only want to make one comment. If I thought that anyone in the committee would take seriously the use of the word "silly" in relation to any comment which has been made by the Minister of Justice, I would intervene further in the debate. The reason why I refrain from doing so is obvious.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary speaks for himself. The Minister of Justice, like the rest of us, is quite capable of being silly at times, and quite often more silly than some of the rest of us.

Item agreed to.

Northwest Territories—

715. Administration of justice in the Northwest Territories, including the Northwest Territories territorial court—further amount required, $47,000.

(Translation):

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, concerning this item, I should like to ask about the same questions I asked earlier in respect to the previous supplementary estimate.

Could the parliamentary secretary tell us why this item is almost 50 per cent higher than the item in the main estimates? In addition, could he tell us if it was possible to foresee that such a high additional amount would be required?

(Text):

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, the first item, as the hon. gentleman from Megantic realizes, involves legal fees, court costs and payment for the maintenance of prisoners and juvenile delinquents in the Northwest Territories. An amount of $65,000 was included in the main estimates for these purposes and an additional $35,000 is required. The allotment was underestimated, as expenditure for the year ended 1961 amounted to $88,996. Expenses to February 28, 1962, total $92,070. As the hon. member, with his career at the bar, knows, it is a difficult matter to estimate from one year to the other what costs may be incurred in court fees and the maintenance of prisoners. There was an additional amount in respect of travelling expenses to members of the territorial court and the court staff while the court was on circuit. Much of this travelling was done by chartered aircraft and involved distances between places such as Yellowknife and Frobisher Bay and intermediate points. There was an underestimation of the amount required.

Item agreed to.

Yukon Territory—

716. Administation of justice in the Yukon Territory, including the Yukon territorial court—further amount required, $41,000.

Mr. Roberge: This item has to do with the Bankruptcy Act. Before I continue I should like to put a formal question to the parliamentary secretary. Does he know when the bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act will be introduced in the house? Will it be before dissolution? In the further supplementary last year, the parliamentary secretary may remember there was an amount of $52,000, I believe, having to do with special inquiries in relation to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, in the Montreal district particularly. These inquiries concerned trustees and I suppose this item represents an additional amount to cover expenditure of this kind.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It is seldom that the hon. gentleman asks a loaded question, but his first question was definitely a loaded one and I think he will forgive me if I do not reply to it, except to say that I am not in a position to inform the committee when a revised and consolidated Bankruptcy Act may be presented to parliament.

The hon. member is quite right with respect to the second matter he raised. This is the result of investigations into the administration of bankruptcy trustees in the province of Quebec and also in the province of Ontario. This investigation has resulted in the cancellation of the licences of several trustees and in some cases criminal prosecutions have been instituted. In dealing with this situation it has been found necessary to obtain legal advice, retain the services of the solicitors and so on. Accountants have been required to audit the books and to testify in the courts when necessary. With the authority of treasury board, the superintendent of bankruptcy entered into an arrangement to subsidize the work of a trustee in bankruptcy in Montreal to enable him to take over approximately 280 estates which were previously being handled by two trustees whose licences were cancelled.

Mr. Roberge: I wish to thank the parliamentary secretary for that information. I am sure the trustee in Montreal, whom I know personally, will be able to handle those cases effectively.

I realize my first question was loaded but I refrained from putting it to the Minister of Justice earlier this afternoon on the orders of the day because I thought I would have the opportunity to ask the question on these estimates. However, I suppose I shall have to ask the question on the orders of the day on some other occasion.

Mr. Herridge: I wish briefly to comment on this item. I must say we had hoped that the government would have introduced amendments to the Bankruptcy Act before this because the need is obvious and urgent from my point of view and from the point of view of a good many of the people I represent.

We have had citizens and companies from the United States coming into the district—I can speak of one man, and I can mention his name, because he is a rogue, a man named Pidge. He comes in and fleeces people of half a million dollars and then goes bankrupt. He does not pay wages; he does not pay for supplies; he does not pay income tax; he does not pay provincial taxes; he does not pay unemployment insurance contributions and he does not pay workmen's compensation. He goes bankrupt and clears off, leaving the employees and the tradesmen holding the bag.

There should be a strengthening of our bankruptcy laws to avoid any repetition of conduct of this kind.

Recently I heard that this bloke was coming back. I went to our immigration officer and said: "Do you have to let that bird into the country again?" He said: "Mr. Herridge, if he comes to the border and asks for admission I shall have to admit him. We all know he is a swindler but he has committed no crime in the ordinary sense of the word; he went bankrupt in the usual way and he can come back into the country." This kind of thing is happening all over the interior. There have been numerous instances, one just over three months ago. I hope there will be amendments to the Bankruptcy Act and to the Immigration Act which will net these birds before they come into our country.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Without necessarily agreeing with the hon. gentleman as to his assessment of any particular individual, of whom I know nothing, I should like to say that the comments which he has made on this and earlier occasions have been duly noted.

Mr. Roberge: I see the Minister of Justice is now in his place. I am glad to have an opportunity to ask him the question which I put earlier to the parliamentary secretary. Is the minister able to tell us when he expects to bring down a bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act?

Mr. Fulton: I think the principle is well established that questions of this sort are not in order on supplementary estimates and that if asked they are not answered.

LEGISLATION

House of Commons—

721. Canada's share of the expenses of the commonwealth parliamentary association including subscriptions to publications of the association—further amount required, $1,000.

722. General Administration—estimates of the Clerk—further amount required, $148,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the parliamentary secretary explain to the committee the nature of these two items? Perhaps he would deal with the first one. Is it an annual expenditure?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes. There is, of course, an annual expenditure for the commonwealth parliamentary association and the assessment made upon the parliament of Canada by the commonwealth parliamentary association was £6,490. When the estimates were being prepared in September, 1960, this was calculated at the rate of $2.75 to the pound but it was paid at the rate of $2.90. That is the explanation of the first item. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would like me to deal with the next item at the same time.

It arises solely out of the rather lengthier sessions which we have had than has been the practice in the past. The cost of publishing our debates has risen by an amount of $105,000. When hon. members see the bound volumes of the last session of parliament they will not be at all surprised. Our friends of the Hansard staff will know very well why the additional amount is required here because of the longer hours of duty which they have had to put in. In the printing of other publications $23,000 additional is required. I have a breakdown of the amount for each of the divisions of the House of Commons; but basically it is simply a matter that parliament is sitting for a longer period of time and perhaps we are working harder.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of this group I wish to take advantage of the opportunity afforded by this item—

Mr. McGee: What group is that? Look behind you.

Mr. Herridge: The unseen hosts surround me. I wish to take the last opportunity of this session to express our appreciation of the good work our Speaker has done, and his courtesy, and to express appreciation of the splendid services of Mr. Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chairman of committees, and the house staff, the Clerk, the Clerk Assistant—I consider them the rubies surrounding the Speaker's crown, as it were—and the reporters and the Hansard angels. I include also the protective staff which is the nearest thing we have to a metropolitan police force in Canada—magnificent physical specimens, good looking, courteous, well informed and efficient—and the messengers and the elevator operators who provide valuable service every day, and even the cleaning ladies. Without these services we could not carry on the work of parliament and I think we as members of parliament should recognize this and express our appreciation.

I have had an idea in mind for some time. I think we in a fitting way should do something so that the lady members of the house will go down in posterity and be remembered far into the future. I got an inspiration the other day I wish to share with the committee. A creative member of the staff of the parliamentary restaurant has come up with an exciting creation called cream of chicken soup Judy. I feel this is one way in which we as members of parliament may ensure that the hon. ladies among us will be remembered for all time. If we could name dishes for them in the parliamentary restaurant their names would go down in history. For instance, we could have haggis Margaret Macdonald and Jean's angel cake and Margaret's Formosa chow chow. But the women who are elevated to cabinet rank should receive special attention and I would suggest that the breakfast menu be left for them. What better way to recognize the splendid contribution the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has made to the development of the country than by having our breakfast menu headed in the future, "start the day with Ellen's mess of pottage". I just put this suggestion forward as a suitable way of commemorating our lady members, and although the suggestion is rather novel I trust it will commend itself to all hon. members.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

A—Department—

General—

723. Polar continental shelf project—further amount required, $103,565.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I think the parliamentary secretary should tell us who now has the contract for the helicopter work on the polar continental shelf, whether or not this contract was obtained by tender or by submitting tariffs to the board of transport commissioners, what the amount of the contract is and what is the total amount that it is expected will be expended on the polar continental shelf for this purpose.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Perhaps I might give the committee an indication of the nature of this item. This supplementary estimate, as the committee sees, is for $103,565. It is to provide for expenses arising out of the planned field program for 1962 and as my hon. friend well knows, because of climate, the program must commence in March of each year. In viewing the main estimates for 1961-62 the decrease in the vote of $100,000 was made on the understanding that the board might be prepared to approve a supplementary estimate should it be impossible because of the reduction to maintain the planned program. This is what has happened and it has been necessary, really, to reinstate the amount.

My hon. friend asks me the name of the present contractor. In respect of this I am advised that there is no general contract. There may be some subordinate contracts. This is a field program. I am sorry that that is all the information which I am in a position to give the hon. gentleman at the moment. I shall try to obtain some additional information.

Mr. Chevrier: Having listened carefully to what the parliamentary secretary said, in the breakdown of the vote it is quite clear this has to do with the contract work in the polar continental shelf and since it has to do particularly with the planned field program which cannot be carried out unless there is helicopter service, I think the committee is entitled to know who the contractor is.

I understand that pursuant to the practice that has been adopted since this government has been in office a contract has been awarded—this I saw in the press—for the polar continental shelf fairly recently. This is for helicopter services. I think the committee is entitled to know who the contractor is, the amount of the contract and how it was awarded.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am advised that no contract has been let in respect of this.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the parliamentary secretary tell me who held the contract last year for helicopter services in the polar continental shelf?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes. They were friends of the hon. gentleman, Autair.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. I thank the parliamentary secretary very much for that information and for the adjective he used in describing my relationship with the company. Do I take it that this answer means that Autair Helicopter Services now have the contract for the 1962 services provided on the shelf only?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am informed that a letter of intent has been issued covering the services of Autair from March, 1962, until approximately August, 1962.

Mr. Chevrier: For how much?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Approximately $275,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Does that cover the period for the whole services to be performed on the continental shelf?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: Could the parliamentary secretary tell me how the letter of intent was given? Was it given pursuant to a demand for tenders in the usual way?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My information is that the normal action is to ask certain companies, certified by the air transport board as being competent in this field, for tenders of services. In this particular case all the major companies were asked to indicate their tenders of services. That having been done, an assessment is made in the department of the total cost likely to be encountered by the government. The hon. gentleman will know, of course, that with this vast area to be covered the location of the helicopters is very important and that there are many complex factors to be considered. On the basis of the assessment which was made of economy and efficiency, the letter of intent of which I have spoken earlier was issued.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I obtain from the parliamentary assistant what other contracts this company received in the past? For instance, my hon. friend has told me that for the period March, 1962 to August, 1962, a letter of intent has gone out for a contract covering services in the amount of $275,000. What was the period in the year 1961 and what was the amount? What was the period in the year 1960 and what was the amount?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. member will appreciate that the figures I am about to give are approximate only. In 1961 the amount was approximately $231,000 covering a period extending roughly from March to August, and in 1960 the amount was $170,000 for approximately the same period.

Mr. Chevrier: I have just totalled these amounts and if the amounts given by the parliamentary secretary are correct the total is $676,000, close to $700,000. I take it that covers all of the contracts that have been awarded to this company. There are none prior to 1960, are there?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That covers all of them for this project.

Mr. Chevrier: The question that comes to my mind at once is this. A moment ago the parliamentary secretary stated what the normal action was in the tendering of these services. Does it appear normal to him that it is always the same company that obtains the work notwithstanding the fact that all companies have been asked to tender in connection therewith? Has the parliamentary secretary any comment on that point?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The only comment I would make is that location is a very big factor in relation to this matter, and it is my understanding that the department has been satisfied generally with the services that have been rendered. There are two aircraft positions in Resolute bay which constitute a very important factor and perhaps a capacity to give expeditious and efficient service in relation to the project.

The fact that this company possibly does not commend itself entirely to some members of the house does not necessarily indicate that it has not done an efficient and competent job in the work that has been undertaken.

Mr. Chevrier: On that point may I say that I had not entered into that argument at all. However, the parliamentary secretary has brought it up and I would remind him that when the company applied to the air transport board for a licence the board turned it down and decided against it in a formal judgment. It was only on appeal to the minister that the decision of the air transport board was reversed. I mention that only because the parliamentary secretary brought up the matter.

The point in which I am interested is the manner in which these submissions are obtained. Because of the method by which this is being done I am not satisfied in my own mind that the companies to whom offers of submission are sent are given a fair opportunity to submit a price that is acceptable to the department, and I would remind the parliamentary secretary that though there are not many there are certainly several helicopter companies in our country that can do this work efficiently. These companies have done similar work before elsewhere, have done it before on the polar continental shelf and are equipped so to do. What I am saying is that if the submission is one which asks the various companies to submit tenders, and they do, and an assessment is made by the departmental officials of what the costs are likely to be in the manner in which the former minister of mines and technical surveys made it, then, as I stated in the house before, that is not the acceptance of a tender. It is simply handing out a contract to one rather than another helicopter company. Along that line I would ask the parliamentary secretary to inform the committee as to the date of the letter of intent which gave this company the contract for the March-August, 1962 period.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): March 2, 1962.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few observations about this matter, and since this is precisely the same item as we had in supplementary estimates No. 3 I would draw the parliamentary secretary's attention to what was said by the minister, whose absence at the moment is conspicuous, about this very matter. As found on page 2028 of Hansard for March 21, I asked the minister whether this company had a contract and this was his reply:

> The only thing I can say is that I have no information that it has anything to do with the $16,400 mentioned in this item.

That is no doubt correct or probably correct.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not questioning that particular statement. Then I said:

> The minister surely knows whether they have a contract. They might carry the materials to build this building. They might have something to do with it. Can the minister say whether they have a contract at the present time?

Mr. Flynn: Do you mean in a field other than the one governed by this item?

Mr. Pickersgill: In the continental shelf program.

Mr. Flynn: I do not know. I would have to check. I am not in a position to give an answer now. I think this question was fully discussed last year. Perhaps a rereading of Hansard when the main estimates were discussed would provide an answer.

The minister told us this letter went on March 2. As the parliamentary secretary knows, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys was the product of that great cabinet reshuffle, that took place on December 29. He had been in the department for two months and he had been in the house, as his answer here indicates, during the previous debate that had taken place in connection with Autair. He knew that this was not a routine matter or he ought to have known it. I wish the minister were here because I am not seeking to use, in his absence, extreme language. It does seem to me that for the minister to say on March 21, having given a letter of intent on March 2, when he is asked whether or not these people have a contract—I am sure that the parliamentary secretary would not want to quibble about the difference between a letter of intent and a contract or indulge in that kind of sophistry—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I would not agree that was sophistry.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister says:

I do not know. I would have to check. I am not in a position to give an answer now.

He either did know or he did not. If he wanted to say that a letter of intent was not a contract, he should have said, no, they have not a contract. This would have been a misleading answer, but literally a correct one. On the other hand, he could have said, yes, they have what is in effect a contract; they have a letter of intent. We know from experience with this company that if they get a letter of intent it is not revoked. This has not been the experience of some other companies in this field who have sought to get business from this government.

It seems to me, sir, that is a shocking thing for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to have done on supplementary estimates No. 3. He ought to be here now to explain these estimates to the committee. Certainly, this company, with its very questionable past, this company that was rejected by an independent tribunal set up to consider the matter, as my hon. friend has just pointed out, should not be preferred over all others. Then, the minister sought by a statement that is a good deal less than frank to give the impression that nothing had been done about this company. If you go on, sir, to read the next few exchanges, you will see that is what he did. He said:

Perhaps a rereading of Hansard when the main estimates were discussed would provide an answer.

At that point I said:

That might well be. But before the item passes—I do not want to delay it—may I express the hope, since we have a new minister, that the new minister is not as much associated with the past as some other ministers may have been. If he has any contracts to let for air services to the north may we hope that proper, competitive tenders will be called and that all competing companies will be allowed to compete for the business.

Here is the minister's reply:

I will give an assurance to the hon. member that my department will always proceed in this respect on the basis most economic for the department. But I am sure he will not quarrel with me if I do not go further at this time, because the whole system of asking for tenders in this field is not as simple as in other departments.

I think that my retort to that is rather eloquent:

We have found that out already.

I say this is an outrageous way for a suppliant government to be treating the committee of supply. The minister is not doing the job in his department; if he let the deputy or someone else give this letter of intent without telling him about it, he does not deserve to be minister. If he knew of that letter of intent and did not tell the committee about it in the face of these questions, it seems to me that he does not deserve the confidence of the house. It is conduct that is not becoming a member of the ministry.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. member has used extravagant language—

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite the contrary.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): —in relation to this, and I think when he has time to consider he may perhaps wish to modify it somewhat. The fact is the answer of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys was completely accurate. The same statement could be made today. Autair, as of this hour, do not have a contract. A letter of intent was entered into and the formal terms of the contract, I am advised, are under negotiation at the present time. The statement which the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys made and which has been read to the committee by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate stands. He said, and I quote:

—my department will always proceed in this respect on the basis most economic for the department. But I am sure he will not quarrel with me if I do not go further at this time, because the whole system of asking for tenders in this field is not as simple as in other departments.

Mr. Pickersgill: It certainly is not.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Along the polar shelf, where you are dealing with vast distances, of course it is not as simple as it is in other departments.

Mr. Pickersgill: You get the company with the biggest accident record.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My hon. friend is speaking of other factors. I have heard this argued back and forth in the house, but I am not prepared to speak in relation to it one way or the other. I am only prepared to say that I am advised that, in fact, the most economic contract for the government of Canada was that which was entered into. If the letter of intent is succeeded by a contract for the coming year, it will be the most economic one for the government of Canada.

Now, I am advised that of the three proposals received, taken on an over-all basis, there is no question but that the lowest was that of the company to whom the letter of intent has been issued, but in respect of which company no contract has yet been entered into, and the formal terms are still under negotiation. The statement made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, in fact, is totally accurate.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I can sit here and listen to what the parliamentary secretary has said without making the kind of retort that the answer deserves, and that is that the statement made by the minister is wholly inaccurate. I will give you an example of why it is wholly inaccurate. When the minister's predecessor was in office I put on the order paper a series of questions, one of which had to do with this very matter. The question was whether or not a contract had been entered into in respect of helicopter service for the polar continental shelf. The reply was, no, but that a letter of intent had been given. This being the case in so far as the predecessor of the present Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys was concerned, why did we not get the same answer from the present minister? The answer which the minister has given is not only inaccurate but it is not in accordance with the facts. Once a letter of intent has been given that is, legally at least, tantamount to a contract. There have to be some very strong extenuating circumstances if a contract is not awarded, particularly if money is spent on behalf of the contractor arising out of the letter of intent. I presume the contractor is always in a position to say that, because in this case almost 27 days have elapsed since the letter of intent was given. Surely, the letter of intent has been acted upon and it is equivalent to a contract.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I would have difficulty in agreeing with that. I know in my own law practice there have been many cases in which letters of intent have been given which were not followed by contracts. Certainly to suggest that a letter of intent is equivalent to a contract is, with respect for the learning in the law of my hon. friend totally erroneous.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend, in the first place, did not allow me to complete what I was about to say. In the second place, I thank him for his lecture on the law. This morning, he told me that my law was pretty good. He prefaced his remarks by saying that as a member of the bar I would know that, under similar circumstances to these, this is the position and this is the law. Apparently I knew the law this morning but this afternoon I do not know anything about the law so far as the granting of tenders is concerned.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It may be another field.

Mr. Chevrier: But the point that is at issue is whether a letter of intent that has been acted upon—and that is what I am saying—is not tantamount to a contract. Certainly if it is not, I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree with me when I say it is the basis for an action in damages. It is the basis for a quantum meruit in so far as a contract may or may not have been completed.

However, that is getting away from the point and I shall not allow my hon. friend to divert me, as perhaps was his intention. The point I was trying to make was simply to confirm what had been said by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, namely that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys did not give the house accurate information and, if he did not, then he should be here to tell the house why he did not. It is possible that he did not have the information, that it was not given to him by his officers. But knowing him as I do, and particularly as he made reference to original discussions which had taken place about this matter, I feel confident in my own mind that he was aware of the circumstances, or should have been aware of the circumstances; yet he gave information on March 21 which indicated that there was no contract. What he should have said, as his predecessor said in a written reply to a starred question, was that while there was not a contract there was a letter of intent, and that kind of answer indicates that there is quite likely to be a contract entered into in the not too distant future.

It is unfortunate that the minister is not here to explain the position. I see from time to time he does not hesitate to raise points of order and he would be much better off to be here and explain his position with respect to this item.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There is nothing I can add to what has already been said, other than the fact that this letter of intent has not been acted upon in the sense that there is no aircraft flying pursuant to the letter of intent. The terms of contract are under negotiation at the present time, but I do not want to say to the committee that we have a letter of intent which will result in a formal contract, because as the hon. member well knows, there is many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip in regard to letters of intent.

Mr. Chevrier: I feel satisfied that there will not be a slip on this occasion. I know that on two previous occasions, one involving an expenditure of $170,000 and the other $231,000, letters of intent went out in the same manner as in this case, if my memory serves me right, and again for the period March to August, 1962, there is a letter of intent involving the sum of $275,000. Therefore in my mind there is not the slightest doubt but that a contract will be finally entered into between the company and the department. I have no doubt about it, having regard to what has taken place in the past; but I do have a great deal of doubt about the manner in which these contracts, in these three separate instances, have been awarded.

I am satisfied in my mind that they have not been awarded in accordance with the practice that prevails in other departments, and it is not an excuse to say that the circumstances in respect to the polar continental shelf are such that we have to adopt other methods. These contracts should be given on a tender basis, in the same manner and to the same extent as contracts are given in any other department of government.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No sir. In view of what the parliamentary secretary has said I do not think we can let this matter pass quickly. I think the minister should be sent for and should come in here to tell us what he meant by saying "I do not know."

It is true that if you take the literal meaning of the words, the question I had posed to him was, had a contract been entered into, and he said "I do not know." Either he does not know what is going on in his department or he did know that the contract had not been let but that a letter of intent had gone.

Before we vote more money for this gentleman to squander on this disreputable company we are entitled to know whether the minister is in charge of the department or whether it is just being run by bureaucrats. If the minister told us the truth when he said he did not know, that meant he did not know whether or not there was a contract. So, if he did not know he is not doing his job, and if he did know he was seeking to deceive. There is no third possibility. There are only those two alternatives. He said "I do not know." It seems to me the minister cannot be very far away. He is always in here trying to interfere with other people's estimates, and he wasted two hours last night on raising points of order. Why is he not here now when the affairs he is charged with are before the house?

Mr. Jones: You wasted the time last night.

Mr. Pickersgill: The committee was held up while he was trying to usurp the place of the Chair for two hours last night, and now when his own department is before us he is absent. He has flitted. He is away somewhere. Perhaps he has gone to Quebec on another trip. It is really a disreputable way for the minister to behave or it is an indication of a deplorable lack of knowledge of his department. It is either one or the other. I would say it is in line with the slipshod way this whole government treats parliament—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I suggest that the hon. member get back on the item.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am on the item.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I do not want to have to reply in kind, since we have been getting on very well today.

Mr. Chevrier: Until we got to this item.

Mr. Pickersgill: The parliamentary secretary is apparently now developing the same admiration for this Autair company that other people on the treasury benches seem to have. Incidentally I might say that I noticed in the press that Autair has moved from the province of Quebec to the city of Winnipeg, no doubt to be closer to the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite since their erstwhile friends in Quebec have been sent into the wilderness.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: When I have finished. The hon. gentleman's interventions are always so helpful to me and other hon. members that I would not like to discourage him. I say we should have the minister here to explain to the committee these evasive or untrue answers that he gave the other day.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Does the hon. member not think it is rather shameful to describe as bureaucrats his former colleagues and friends who are not in the house to defend their reputations? Is that not thoroughly discreditable? I consider it as such.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have never used the word "bureaucrat"—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): You did use it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman could wait until I have finished my sentence. I have never used the word "bureaucrat" in the derogatory sense in which his leader uses it to attack civil servants. I was a bureaucrat myself for 16 years and I am not ashamed of it. I have referred to myself as a bureaucrat and I feel no shame about it any more than I feel shame about being a politician. I merely indicate that I did not apply any adjectives to them. I merely implied that this letter of intent had been sent by bureaucrats without the knowledge of the minister or that the minister knew about it because if it was sent without the knowledge of the minister, he is not doing his job in his department; if it was sent with his knowledge, he was not telling the house the truth when he said he did not know whether or not there was a contract.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Has the hon. member answered my question now? If so, may I ask him another question? Does he not know that the term "politician" is descriptive, while the term "bureaucrat" is derogatory? Does he not realize the difference?

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say, Mr. Chairman, that if I sought to educate the hon. member for Stormont this session would last a lot longer than it is likely to last.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I was not asking to be educated; I was endeavouring to cure the invincible ignorance of the hon. member.

Mr. Chevrier: Is not the parliamentary secretary going to reply to those questions?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I do not want to get involved in this cross-fire.

Mr. Chevrier: Why not?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Well, I would like to get finished by five o'clock and get the appropriation bill through.

Mr. Chevrier: If you keep some of your colleagues quiet, you might.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): All I would like to say in relation to this, Mr. Chairman—I do not want to pursue it further—is that I think anyone who reads the normal and natural meaning of this language and the explanation I have given to the committee will understand the matter fully.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, is the parliamentary secretary not going to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to come into the chamber, because after all I think he owes an explanation to the committee in relation to these matters.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think I have explained as fully as I can what has been the practice in supplementary estimates in the past and I do not think I can go any further. I simply say to my hon. friend that I think on the normal and natural meaning of the language, the fact is that there is not a contract today. When a contract may be entered into, I am unable to forecast; I have no information on that. The normal and natural meaning of the words speaks for itself.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has a very catching smile, particularly when he feels that the item is about to pass. I really commend him for the manner in which he proceeded to answer the last part of the question, but I would remind him that, while we have been dealing with the last supplementary estimates for some few days now, there have been ministers in their seats who have come and replied to questions. I think particularly of the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who replied to a number of questions that were put to her by the hon. member for Niagara Falls, and there were other ministers who came in. That having taken place, I do not see why, under these extraordinary circumstances, where a minister has certainly been caught in serious default, he should not be asked to come in—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): With that I do not agree, of course.

Mr. Chevrier: —and explain the contradictory position taken, having regard to the information which we received today compared to that which the minister gave on a former occasion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to say anything more about the minister coming into the chamber. I am sure that any minister who had any regard for his reputation would insist upon coming in and defending it after the allegations that have been made this afternoon. If the minister does not want to do that, if he wants to leave these allegations on the record unanswered, I suppose, since this favourite of the government has to be given another contract, it is going to be done anyway without any regard to the public interest, and perhaps we are taking up an unnecessary amount of time over the reputation of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys who, having been caught out in this evasion or ignorance, whichever it is, will be judged perhaps by another jury before too long.

But one thing I will not let pass, sir, is these repeated and erroneous references of the parliamentary secretary to the practice in the past. We demonstrated last night, by reference to the very last day of supplementary estimates under the previous government, that most of the afternoon of that day was taken up, not by Mr. Harris answering questions through his parliamentary secretary while he was off in British Columbia, because Mr. Harris stayed in the house and attended to his job here, but what happened on that occasion was that because there were some very controversial questions about the Department of Citizenship and Immigration the then minister satisfied the committee by answering those questions at considerable length. Then in the evening of the same day, as my hon. friend from Laurier pointed out last evening, the minister of agriculture answered questions for two hours.

So it is all misleading nonsense to talk about the practice of the house; and the Minister of Justice, I believe, earlier this afternoon even went further and said "the rules of the house". There is no such rule, and that observation should not be left uncontradicted on the record. We have not taken any exception in regard to the more or less non-controversial items, for which we do not expect the minister to be here, but when something of this magnitude comes up, when there is a question of whether the committee has been misled, surely it should not be left to the parliamentary secretary, however able he is, to have to defend ministers. It is the ministers, not parliamentary secretaries, who are responsible to this house, and a responsible minister would be here to defend his good name and his reputation, which is certainly under very serious question as a result of the answers given on March 21 and in the light of the fact that this letter of intent had been given on March 2 and to all practical intents and purposes this company had been told it was going to have this business.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I only want to say that the good name, reputation, and character of the hon. gentleman for Quebec South, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, speaks for itself and, I am satisfied, will be vindicated by the jury to which the hon. gentleman referred.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hansard speaks for itself too.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I would not like the discussion to be left at this point without adding that Hansard will also speak for itself, and it speaks with great emphasis.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Then we will have to leave it to the jury.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Royal Canadian Navy—

724. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $3,500,000.

The Chairman: Shall vote 724 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly not, Mr. Chairman. This item is for $3½ million. Is the parliamentary secretary going to deal with this item, without any minister to explain it, not even the distinguished Associate Minister of National Defence, who I suppose may have gone to Argentina? Surely either the minister, the associate minister or the parliamentary secretary should be here. Not one of them is in the committee, and we are dealing with an item asking for $3½ million. This is a disgrace, sir.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, what has happened to change the mood of the hon. gentleman in the last half hour, I am not sure. The hon. gentleman was in an agreeable frame of mind, we were proceeding readily, and he suddenly got back into the frame of mind in which he was last evening. Whether it is that there is an item ahead that he does not want to reach before five o'clock, I do not know.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is an item about Arizona Charlie that I would like very much to reach.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Then perhaps I could just sit down and we will get along to Arizona Charlie.

The Chairman: Shall vote 724 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman; we want to know why $3½ million more is needed.

Mr. Tardif: Yes, tell us that.

Mr. Jones: Goodness, the hon. member for Russell is back in the house today.

An hon. Member: It must be the end of the month.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I seem to be experiencing some interference because of a welcome being extended by the committee to my distinguished friend from Russell.

Mr. Tardif: They should do that every day; I am here every day.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I observed that the hon. gentleman said that in his nomination speech. However, the hon. gentleman and I are good friends, as well as neighbours. This item is, of course, for the operation and maintenance of the navy alone. The breakdown shows that miscellaneous materials and supplies require an additional $1,200,000; repairs and upkeep of buildings and works, including land, an additional $1 million; and repairs and upkeep of equipment, $1,300,000. A substantial part of that is in connection with current commitments on winter works projects.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

National health branch—

Health services, including assistance to the provinces—

725. To authorize hospital construction grants to the provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory upon the terms and in the amounts detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $2,000,000.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, on page 20 it says, in regard to this vote:

To restore a portion of the amount deducted in the main estimates, 1961-62, representing the difference between the commitments which it was estimated would fall due in 1961-62 and the actual cash requirement.

Are there more to come in after this, on top of this $2 million vote, or does this represent the estimated total for the year?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The position can be described very simply by saying that the program is governed by commitments which are made some time in advance. When progress is made more rapidly than is contemplated at the time of the estimates an additional amount such as we have in this item is required.

Mr. McMillan: Yes, but the hon. gentleman says this is to restore only a portion of the amount deducted. Is the government not restoring it all?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is due to an actual speeding up of operations. The progress of construction requires the restoration of this particular amount of $2 million.

Mr. Deschatelets: Could the parliamentary secretary inform us if there is any assistance to the province of Quebec involved in this special item of $2 million?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, there is not.

Item agreed to.

Welfare branch—

726. To authorize payment to the government of the province of Prince Edward Island in respect of the month of January, 1961, on account of claims submitted under an agreement entered into with that province pursuant to the Unemployment Assistance Act notwithstanding that claims were not made within the time required as provided in paragraph 13 of the said agreement, $15,708.

Mr. McMillan: In connection with this vote, was the unemployment assistance contribution paid to all the provinces up to the end of June?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is a special situation and it applies only to the province of Prince Edward Island. It arises out of an error in that province as a result of which the provincial claim for the federal share of unemployment assistance was not submitted within the period of time which is required, the specified six months. This was due to a misunderstanding which arose between the offices of the provincial deputy minister of welfare and the provincial auditor, the latter being a new official. It was felt by the federal government that since this misunderstanding had occurred on a local basis it would be unfortunate for us to take advantage of a technicality not to pay. However, it would be impossible under the law as it stands to pay this amount without authority and that is why this item is required.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are these payments made on the basis of the calendar year or of the fiscal year?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Claims for reimbursement are submitted monthly. Estimating, of course, is on the basis of the fiscal year. Claims must be submitted within six months of the expenditures being incurred. In this case, because of a misunderstanding in the public service of Prince Edward Island, the claim was not submitted within the six month period. Technically, the federal government could say: We owe you nothing under the legislation. However, it was felt the government should not stand on such a technicality. However, I am bound to say we all hope that this will not become a practice among provincial governments. If provincial governments do not submit these accounts in time, the federal government may have to say: obey the law and get your bills in within six months, or else.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

National parks branch—

National parks and historic sites and monuments—

727. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $163,000.

Mr. McMillan: In connection with this item, I wonder if the minister would give us a full account of the expenditures as far as the celebrations at Dawson city are concerned. I know the other day the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources admitted there would be an expenditure of $200,000, I think, for the restoration of Arizona Charlie's place. However, according to a recent issue of Maclean's magazine, federal expenditures amounting to $400,000 have been approved by this government for the restoring of a hardware store, a mortuary and two saloons.

When the subject was under discussion the other day the minister should have told us this. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary can give us some information, now, about this expenditure.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am told the commitment is a little over $300,000 to date. I confess I am not such an expert on the doings at Arizona Charlie's as the two hon. gentlemen on the other side of the committee may be, but I would point out that this is a significant matter for the people of the Yukon territory.

Mr. Pickersgill: And for the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have the figure here. It is $385,000, approximately.

Mr. McMillan: It is approximately $400,000. In other words $400,000 has been approved.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It is $15,000 less than $400,000.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary has taken cognizance of the article to which my hon. friend from Welland has referred.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No. The hon. gentleman has kept me too busy during the last three days for me to have time to read the magazines.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, apparently the information in this magazine is accurate, because the hon. gentleman said a moment ago, after some hesitation, that the expenditure was a little over $300,000. The article in Maclean's indicates that it is close to $400,000. After he had reconsidered, the parliamentary secretary gave the exact figure as being $385,000. So the article is correct.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I wonder if I may correct myself? The figure for commitments to date is $300,000 but it may run to approximately $385,000. I was in error when I said it was actually $385,000.

Mr. Chevrier: My interpretation of this article indicates it is close to being accurate. When the parliamentary secretary says it may run to $385,000 I take it the expenditure probably will run to that unless cognizance is taken of the remarks which have been made in the past and which may be made in the future concerning this item. I think we must ask ourselves in connection with the spending of such large sums of money on the saloons whether the sums are properly expended and whether this is being done in part to satisfy "the vision"—the great vision of the north which the Prime Minister likes to talk about so often and which many of his followers like to talk about as well. Is this going to be a part of that vision of the north? Will it be possible to say in the future that this is a vision which has gone from saloon to saloon, for instance? One would think this is likely to be the case having regard to what is contained in this article, because far more information is given to us in this article than we have been able to obtain from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or from the parliamentary secretary. I think we deserve some explanation of whether this is, in fact, as stated here, only a question of resurrecting two saloons, together with a mortuary. If that is the case we shall be going not only from saloon to saloon but also from saloon to mortuary. I think this committee is entitled to an explanation of these large expenditures and of the circumstances in which they are being made.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This particular subject was discussed at some length only a matter of ten days ago. The hon. member speaks of going from saloon to saloon and he is drawing from the other expression, igloo to igloo, which represents a philosophy he apparently endorses. The fact is that this item—

Mr. Chevrier: I prefer the latter.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman is confirming his endorsation of the igloo to igloo philosophy.

Mr. Chevrier: I prefer that philosophy. I much prefer it to the saloon to saloon philosophy.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My hon. friend now says he prefers igloo to igloo. Let me say to my hon. friend that this vote is an important factor in developing tourist trade for the north country. I hope that as a result of this tourist trade which may be increased this year because of the world's fair at Seattle which will bring people into the north country, they will see the very vision that the hon. member derides and they will invest in the north country and share with all hon. members on this side of the chamber in assisting to develop it.

Mr. Pickersgill: More saloons and more mortuaries.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Of course, this is a matter which properly would come under the jurisdiction of the provincial government; but the territorial government is unable to finance this sort of thing. This is being done not for the purpose of restoring saloons but for the purpose of improving the economic well-being of an important part of Canada where the very future of this country may rest.

Mr. Herridge: I listened carefully and with interest to the remarks of the parliamentary secretary in which he indicated this was a basic part of Canada's tourist development policy.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It is of assistance.

Mr. Herridge: However, I am not prepared to treat the Yukon in a different manner from the Kootenays. The chamber of commerce in my district and other organizations have been interested in developing tourist trade in the area and have asked me to bring to the attention of the government at every opportunity the opportunities that prevail in the Kootenays for the enjoyment of tourists. Our important attractions are hunting, fishing and beautiful scenery. We also have some historic sites that could be developed along the same direction indicated by the parliamentary secretary. We certainly have had some famous and historic characters and dance halls in the area. We did not have Charlie but we had Whisky Lil, Brimstone Annie, Broken-Back Rae and Yukon Iola who came from Dawson city. I knew her when I was a young man—that is, I knew of her.

The Kootenay historical society has recently been housed in what is known as Rosie's Retreat. I have been asked by a constituent to ask the government if they would consider a grant to its development to benefit the tourist industry of the Kootenays and also contribute to the development of Canada.

An hon. Member: Restoration.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, restoration. I think it is unfair to have this policy apply in only one area. I am not opposed to the policy but feel it should not be confined to only one area. The hon. member for the Yukon should not be the only one to reap this advantage.

Would the minister tell us whether it is the plan to apply the policy on a national scale? I am sure there are many districts where it could be well applied. Kootenay is an old mining district with a glamorous past where funds could be devoted to the restoration of similar institutions to Charlie's, to the advantage of the tourist industry and Canada generally.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I fully share the hon. member's appreciation of the beauties of the Kootenays. In fact, they are so beautiful I wonder why the hon. member should bother coming back to Ottawa again. However, I shall resist the temptation of making the suggestion I was about to make.

The hon. gentleman will appreciate that the responsibility of the federal government in the territories is somewhat different from that of the federal government within the provinces. I would not be able legitimately to make the plea on behalf of my constituency that we should be put in exactly the same position as one of the territories.

Mr. Pickersgill: You had better not.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Hon. gentlemen will appreciate what is being done generally by the federal government in endeavouring to promote the tourist industry across the country. The projects that are being undertaken in the territories are being undertaken because the territorial government has not the financial capacity of a provincial government and is unable to assume responsibility.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, there is one brief observation I should like to make about this. In the days when these saloons which are now being restored in quantity flourished—back in '98—they were private enterprises—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is misleading the members of the committee when he says that saloons are being restored. Not a single saloon is being restored. It is a theatre that is being restored.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: The unpaid parliamentary secretary is always rising and interfering when other hon. members have the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: Just setting the record straight.

Mr. Pickersgill: The point I was making was that in the old days when these saloons did flourish they were private enterprises that paid taxes to somebody no doubt—perhaps not all they should have, but they paid taxes—but this new policy of having socialized saloons is, I suggest, a bit strong for the Canadian people.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words following the remarks made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). If houses of that kind are to be restored in some regions of the country,

I wish to point out that Montreal has also a number of historic houses, in particular one called "Taverne de Jos. Beef".

I do not think we should adopt a discriminatory policy, that is restore houses in certain cities and not offer the same advantages to Montreal.

(Text):

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Order. It is now five o'clock. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the parliamentary secretary wishes to table a document.

Mr. Richard A. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. When the house was in committee of supply I made reference to a document relating to vote No. 710. This is a summary of debts presented for deletion from the public accounts. I should like now the permission of the house to table it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the parliamentary secretary, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, leave of the house to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills and private bills.

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the indulgence of the house to proceed with a bill under private bills standing in my name, namely Bill S-15, an act respecting the Canadian Indemnity Company and the Canadian Fire Insurance Company. It is quite important to this company that this matter be proceeded with as quickly as possible and if the house would give unanimous consent to proceed with this item first it would be appreciated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the request made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North that this private bill be considered before public bills as listed on today's order paper?

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Mr. Chevrier: There is no objection from this side.

Mr. Herridge: None from here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take it that there is unanimous consent and the bill may be proceeded with.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN INDEMNITY COMPANY AND CANADIAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-15, respecting the Canadian Indemnity Company and the Canadian Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, Bill No. S-15 is not in my file and I take it that it is not in other members' files of Senate bills. I wonder whether we could have it on the table?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am informed that the bill is being brought to the house.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the amalgamation of two insurance companies, namely, the Canadian Indemnity Company and the Canadian Fire Insurance Company, each of which has its head office in the city of Winnipeg. The amalgamation is being made under the provisions of section 108 of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act by virtue of an agreement between the two companies entered into on July 26, 1961. As well as effecting an amalgamation, it would also create a new corporation referred to as the continuing corporation under the name of the Canadian Indemnity Company and, in French, L'Indemnité Compagnie Canadienne.

The two companies in existence are owned by the same owners and this is just an amalgamation in order to facilitate the carrying on of business. The bill has received the approval of the other place and was reported from their committee without amendment.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

PROVISION FOR DISTRIBUTION OF NAMES OF CANDIDATES

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-34, to amend the Canada Elections Act (campaign contributions).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the matter of campaign funds, if one can believe the indications we have heard from the benches opposite, is a particularly appropriate one for discussion at this time. I am going to begin by taking issue with the proposals that have been put forward for changes in this regard by both the Liberal party and the New Democratic party. In particular, I take issue with what presumably is now Liberal party policy as set out in the house by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) on March 19 when the resolution which stood in his name was under discussion.

The proposals put forward by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate were, as he said at that time, in two parts. The first had to do with the limitation of total expenditures.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking to interrupt the hon. gentleman in any way except that I think there is a point of order involved here that we should consider for the whole house in this debate. I think that probably what the hon. member is seeking to do in this particular and peculiar circumstance is all right, that is, to refer to a debate on a motion that took place in the house in this session. Normally that would be against the rules. I am not seeking to take an exception to it. I merely felt that the Chair should take note of this at the beginning so that all hon. members would feel equally free to refer to that motion, which was merely a motion to establish a committee to consider something, which I recognize is closely related to the subject matter of the hon. member's bill. All I am concerned about is that we should have an understanding at the outset that equal privileges will be accorded to all hon. members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think in this particular instance the difficulty does not arise as no decision was taken on the motion, and all members, of course, will receive the same treatment.

Mr. McGee: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, before I continue with my remarks, surely the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would not seek, directly or indirectly, to deprive the house of his pearls of wisdom.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite the contrary. I just wanted to be sure I could reply in kind.

Mr. McGee: If it will satisfy the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I can refer from memory—

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no. Go right ahead and quote it.

Mr. McGee: —to that momentous occasion one recent Sunday afternoon when he jousted with the newly elected leader of the New Democratic Party with one of history's most impartial chairmen adjudicating the debate. Whether I read or paraphrase does not really matter. The proposal he put forward had two parts, the first being a limitation on the total expenditures allowed to any particular candidate or political party. His second proposal, and the one to which I take particular objection, had to do with the payment of possibly all but certainly the greater part of these expenses out of the public treasury.

To deal with the first question first, I do not think there is any disagreement among the parties or among the various members of the house that some means must be found to apply some reasonable limit. One can argue that there is a natural law or natural correcting process in force in that if a political party or an individual candidate in a constituency is clearly spending a great deal of money in an attempt to win an election the public becomes aware of the wide disparity between individual candidates or parties, and the good common sense of the Canadian people is very likely to counteract that. I offer in support of that view an incident which occurred in the electoral history of this country where a candidate spent a total of $75,000 and the reaction of the electorate in that constituency was precisely that which I have indicated. They were offended at the suggestion that someone with a great deal of money could come into that constituency and expect to be elected simply because he had more money than anyone else. I do not recall precisely, but if my memory serves me correctly the gentleman in question, having expended that amount of money, lost his deposit. That there should be some limit applied and some practical method followed to make that limit effective no one will deny.

I do suggest to the hon. member that there are prodigious difficulties in connection with any attempts that have been made to apply this limit. The difficulties I mentioned before in this house involve such things as the evaluation of various services which are rendered to individual candidates. I have in mind the value involved in a person who leaves his normal form of gainful employment to devote his entire energies to the support of a particular candidate. This is an expense in the true sense of the word. The man is foregoing the opportunity to earn money and is, in effect, making a contribution to the candidate of the amount of money he is not earning at that particular time.

Then, too, in my constituency certain of my friends and supporters make available their recreation rooms for committee rooms. While these items of expense never appear and will never appear on my election expense list, there are elements of value in placing a recreation room or an empty room in an office building at the disposal of a candidate because these places could be rented to others. There is value involved. You can go through the various components that make up an election organization and you find these difficulties that I have mentioned before. I mention, too, the situation which arose in one constituency where labour organizers from all sections of the country were mobilized in that one constituency. Clearly, there was value involved. These men were not doing what they were being paid to do by the organization which normally pays their salaries. These are some of the difficulties that the hon. member is going to encounter in connection with this proposal.

Legislation has been enacted in various countries and jurisdictions in an attempt to accomplish this end. In fact, complete control or anything near complete control in this field has escaped those pursuing this goal. I am not suggesting for a moment that simply because there are prodigious difficulties we should not proceed, but it seems to me that we can reasonably expect little effective action in exploring this area. According to the statement made by the hon. gentleman which I read to the house a few minutes ago, he felt that all campaign expenses should be paid by the public treasury. In this connection, there was an article published recently in the Star Weekly written by a gentleman by the name of Rae Corelli in which this question was discussed in general terms. The article quotes an hon. member of this house, as follows:

> Skeena's Frank Howard opposes a treasury subsidy on the grounds that political parties would "tend to lose contact with the people".

Then, later, there appears a more interesting comment from a person described as a high level civil servant, and I quote:

> A high-level civil servant who has watched the Ottawa scene for 30 years goes further and attacks the treasury plan: "This would be a crime against the people of Canada; that's all we need—a welfare state for politicians."

These views are certainly not my precise views on the subject, but do represent some of my thoughts. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) went on to describe how he would manage his proposal to have the election expenses of all candidates paid by the treasury. Apparently all candidates would be given a certain amount of money, depending in part on the number of constituents involved and having regard also to certain other factors such as those encountered by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and other areas where transportation difficulties are the overriding factor, rather than the number of voters. He suggested that in order for a candidate to qualify for this grant or handout from the government, he would have to poll a certain percentage of the vote. The hon. member suggested that it should be 20 per cent of the total vote or 20 per cent of the vote of the successful candidate. He goes on to talk around the subject a bit and finally settles for what he calls a respectable vote.

It seems to me that the difficulty which would evolve here would be the impact on splinter groups or independent candidates, parties other than the Liberal or Conservative parties in this country. I suggest to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that he is on sound ground when he advocates the proposition that the two party system is the most desirable form of parliamentary government. I might even go along with him in the suggestion that splinter parties impede the procedure of the house to some extent, although they provide comic relief from time to time and as a recruiting ground for the Liberal party they presumably perform some useful function for the Liberals as well.

I am wondering, however, if the hon. gentleman is not in difficulty with this 20 per cent suggestion in that it will, in effect, penalize minorities in our system in the name of encouraging broader participation in politics. If he is going to do this at the expense of weakening the potential position of minority parties, he ceases to stand on strong ground. I am surprised at this attitude—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question? Does he see any difference in principle in saying that if a candidate cannot get a percentage of the vote he would not have his expenses paid and the present law which says that if a candidate does not get a certain percentage of the vote he loses his deposit? It seems to me that, in principle, both of these propositions are discriminatory against the minority, if that is the way the hon. gentleman wants to describe it. There is no difference in principle between the two.

Mr. McGee: Perhaps that illustrates the difficulty in arguing solely on the basis of principle. Clearly, the difficulty that would evolve here would be that a candidate presumably would be given an undertaking that he would be entitled to a certain amount of money at the end of the campaign. If he did not get the 20 per cent of the vote, he would not get that money. The money would have to come from somewhere. I am quite certain the hon. gentleman had in mind a great deal larger sum of money than the $200 which is the amount of the deposit at the present time. When this matter was under discussion in the privileges and elections committee a few years ago, the question of increasing the amount of the deposit was discussed. If my memory serves me correctly, the feeling of the committee at that time was that no useful purpose would be served by increasing it substantially because the $200 would prevent nuisance or frivolous candidates from participating in the election.

I shall come back to the point I was dealing with before the hon. member interrupted me. This question of discriminating against minorities is not new in the broad political scene. I saw an article in a newspaper the other day which indicated it is common practice within the hon. gentleman's own party. The report said there was a new practice these days in that great democratic Liberal party that unless you have $75 to put on the table at a nominating convention you cannot even stand for nomination. That is a great stride forward within this party which has all the answers—all the answers, indeed. In effect the hon. gentleman is not only burdening the already overburdened public treasury in this matter but is, I suggest, effecting a form of discrimination which seems to be becoming typical of that party.

My solution, and the principle involved in this bill, have to do with a solution which will remove some of the possibilities giving rise to areas of abuse inherent in this whole question. It is my contention that it would be a far healthier thing for our democratic system if we could obtain participation on the part of a much larger percentage of our population than we have now. It is my contention—and I offer some factual basis for it—that a great many people would be willing, and in fact are anxious to participate in helping with the campaign expenses of individual candidates and political parties, if only they were approached.

Evidence of that is shown in the result of a Gallup poll which was taken a few years ago in the United States when a very interesting experiment took place in the elections of 1958. A number of people in that country had become concerned about estimates which indicated that 90 per cent of political contributions were being made by 1 per cent of the population, which indicated an obvious disparity and clearly recognized opportunities for abuse.

They gathered together to discuss the question, a question which has been discussed ever since elections were first held, and they decided to take some positive step to find a solution. The Gallup poll came up with impressive evidence that millions of voters are ready to contribute to the political party of their choice, but they have never been asked to do so. It showed that some 17 million families in the United States would be willing to give at least $5 each, making a total of $85 million, if somebody would just ask them, if some machinery could be set up whereby these people could be approached and assured that their contributions would find their way to the person or party designated by them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Does he feel a confidence in Gallup polls that is not reflected in the editorials of his favourite newspaper?

An hon. Member: What about the one in New Brunswick?

Mr. McGee: The hon. member has twice tried to steer me away from my objective and I am going to forgo the opportunity to offer the kind of reply which I think he expects to that question. The indications are that the same situation would be evident to a similar extent in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. McGee: May I ask if allowance was made for the interruptions and questions of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes; there was a minute or two added to the hon. member's time.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): The value to be placed on this bill—not the value to be placed on the explanatory note accompanying it—is evidenced by the amount of time which the hon. member spent dealing with it. Some 17 minutes of his time limit were spent in a negative approach to something else, and the balance of three minutes to advocating support for the bill now before us. He had no refuting remarks to make about the proposals which we have been putting forward for quite a number of years.

We should differentiate between what the explanatory note says the bill will do and what the bill itself will actually accomplish. The explanatory note says it is "as a convenience in making campaign contributions". The title refers to "campaign contributions" but the substance of the bill itself has nothing to do with this particular question. Were the bill to become law it would be nothing more than a smokescreen to cover up for the pork barrel artists who assist the two old line parties now represented by the government and the principal party in opposition.

There was an article in Maclean's magazine a few months ago in which a former Liberal organizer, campaigner, or something of that nature, made comments about things which existed within the party so far as campaign contributions were concerned. He wrote that it is the general practice for large corporations to divide their campaign contributions on the basis of 60 per cent to the party in office and 40 per cent to the party in opposition. The article referred to by my hon. friend from York-Scarborough, which was written by Rae Corelli in the Star Weekly, gives a similar indication. I do not know where Mr. Corelli got his information. I do not know if his article is as authoritative as that I referred to earlier, but nevertheless he gave the same indication with regard to campaign contributions by private corporations.

Obviously they operate on the principle that if you have two horses in a race and bribe both the jockeys, then your chance of winning is pretty good. This bill deals only with candidates, and only requires a candidate to file his source of income and method of expenditure. It does not require the same information to be provided by political parties, and our major concern should be for the interest and welfare of the general public.

In my judgment this bill will not take one step towards protecting the public against encroachments that may be made upon their property and rights of freedom by political parties. It does nothing to make sure that secret contributions will come under public scrutiny. It does nothing to deal with the question of whether there should be a limit placed upon the amount of money that can be spent by a candidate and a party. It does nothing whatsoever to deal with the possibility, remote or otherwise of a recurrence of something akin to the Beauharnois scandal that existed not too many years ago, and it does nothing to prevent a recurrence of the awkward situation in which Sir John A. Macdonald found himself with respect to party contributions. It does nothing whatsover to prevent a recurrence of something similar to the Somers scandal which existed in the structure of the provincial government of British Columbia not too long ago. All it will do is place more work upon the shoulders of the returning officers because they are required by one of the provisions of the bill to give to the various postmasters a list containing the names, addresses and occupations of the candidates and the official agents.

It will overload the postal employees, who are overloaded in any event at election time. Its sole purpose is to disseminate by householder mailing system the name, address and occupation of the candidate and the official agent. I submit that if one wants to accomplish this sort of thing and if, as the hon. member for York-Scarborough says, there are a number of people who would like to contribute to the party of their choice but who have not done so because they have not been asked, this is valuable information for the parties themselves and for the candidate, and I think it would be a worth-while expenditure for the candidate, his official agent or his campaign committee to invest some money in a householder mailing system and in effect say, "This is our candidate. This is what we believe in. If you would like to contribute, this is the address to which you can send your contribution". This would be a far better way of approaching the question of asking for campaign fund contributions from the individual citizens of this nation than by overloading the returning officer and the public treasury by having to pay for the householder mailing system.

I have other thoughts about this matter which apply to candidates themselves, but these are not connected with the question of campaign fund contributions. We have made suggestions and proposed ideas in years past on this question, and will continue to do so. I think it is an excellent system which exists at the moment, where all three parties are represented in the House of Commons, each expressing ideas and making suggestions and proposals as to how we can deal with the question of campaign fund contributions and how we can ensure that parties remain in close liaison or rapport with the general public.

I doubt very much that we will come to any agreement on what approach should be made before that time arises to which the Prime Minister made reference today, but I hope we will be able to keep alive in the minds of the parties themselves, no matter which one is in government or which parties are represented in the house, after the election this idea that we should be tackling this problem in more than a casual way. I hope these proposals which are being made are not merely election gimmicks to present a picture of purity to the general public before the election takes place.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mr. McGee: Is the hon. member saying, in his critical remarks concerning this proposal, that he is in effect opposed to a mailing system giving this information to the electors, and a nation-wide campaign encouraging citizens to acknowledge their responsibilities in this matter and contribute to the individual candidates? Is the hon. member expressing opposition to that notion, which is the working basis for this bill?

Mr. Howard: What I said right from the outset, Mr. Speaker, not directly to the hon. member but to the house—and perhaps I could say it again now—was that I am not indisposed to the explanation given in the explanatory note of this bill, which I will read again:

> The purpose of this bill is to inform electors of the candidates and their respective official agents as a convenience in making campaign contributions.

That is a decent thought to have. What I do say is that the bill has nothing whatsoever to do with that. It provides for the first part, giving information to the electors by householder mail as far as the name, address and occupation of the candidate is concerned, but it makes no reference whatsoever to campaign contributions.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit me a question. Does the hon. member still believe, as he did a couple of years ago, that the possession of a reasonably substantial sum of money is likely to subvert the candidate in favour of those who provide it?

Mr. Howard: My position is that the possession of a reasonably large sum of money in the neighbourhood of perhaps $8 million to $10 million, contributed secretly to political parties by private corporations with axes to grind, is likely to subvert a political party, as it has subverted political parties in the past.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some brief remarks on this bill. It is not very complicated. Its aim is to inform electors as a convenience in making campaign contributions.

One of the provisions of this bill stipulates that the returning officer shall prepare a list setting out the particulars of the name, address and occupation of each candidate, together with the name, address and occupation of the official agent, the said list to be sent to all householders.

Mr. Speaker, I rather think that the adoption of this bill would entail considerable expenses. The mover, the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee), did not touch upon that fact, but I am of the opinion that the expenses would be too high with regard to the practical advantages that would be gained.

If you want to let the public know the names of the candidates, it is quite proper to prepare a list. And I have no objection to adding the name, address and occupation of the official agent, but I think things could be arranged so that the public treasury would pay the cost of such advertising in the leading papers in the country, English as well as French. Thus, all the electors could know, within a certain period of time before the election, those who solicit their support or their votes. The expense would not come very high for the public treasury. In fact, it would cost even less than the method proposed by the hon. member for York-Scarborough.

Mr. Speaker, if one examines this bill one finds that its purpose is to facilitate the making of contributions. I fail to see how such contributions can be included in the amendment proposed by the hon. member. I fail to see also how the fact of sending the list of candidates to each elector would encourage them to contribute to the election campaign of a candidate.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in politics for a rather long time, having been first elected to the house in 1953. I have acquired some practical knowledge since and, frankly speaking, I cannot see how the public can be led to participate in the election campaign of the candidates simply by being informed by the returning officer that Mr. so-and-so is the candidate in a given constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I readily admit that some important amendments are required with regard to the Canada Elections Act, and even that they are urgently needed. That is why I am somewhat surprised that the government have not taken a definite stand on the matter in the last four years, because it was their responsibility, I think, to introduce a bill for election reform in the light of today's needs.

I should like to point out to the hon. member that we, on this side of the house, as he knows—for he mentioned it a little while ago—are in favour of limiting election expenditures. In fact, I even had the pleasure to support a resolution to that effect moved by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) to the recent Liberal convention held last January, where similar resolutions were adopted.

I think the high costs which would result from the passage of this bill could be put to better use, especially if the government should consider that certain expenditures are necessary to help a candidate. I think it would be much more practical to use that money to help a candidate cover necessary expenses.

I would also be in favour of the government spending money on the eve of an election, during an election period, in order to urge the public to exercise its franchise.

Of course, all candidates urge the electors to exercise their franchise; but if the electors were urged by the state itself, or by some supra-political body, there could be more voters than is the case at present. I was saying a moment ago that electoral reforms are necessary. I know the hon. member has studied the matter and that he knows all the difficulties involved in the application of those reforms. In the province of Quebec, the head of the government in power has proposed this year important reforms to the elections act, in order to simplify and reduce the cost of election campaigns.

The bill introduced in the Quebec legislature not only limits election expenses, but will help each candidate find the required amount of money to successfully manage his election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to press the point too long, because I want to afford other members the opportunity of saying a few words; but, to put it briefly, I think electoral reforms are necessary.

I hope that as soon as we have won the next election, we shall be able to propose legislation similar to that introduced by the premier of Quebec during the present session.

Before concluding my remarks, I should like to say a few words to my hon. friend from Skeena (Mr. Howard).

(Text):

This is not the first time the hon. member has spoken in the way he did about electoral funds and it is my opinion that he has obtained his information from certain bedtime stories. Reality is much more simple than that. I want to tell him that personally I found campaign funds so limited that I was obliged to pay an additional amount myself through personal loans and to try to get voluntary workers. As far as I and my colleagues are concerned there is no such thing as tremendous spending in electoral campaigns.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, in other words, however praiseworthy the aim of this bill may be, I do not believe that the procedure stated therein, will enable us to reach it.

(Text):

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): The last two speakers have, in effect, found nothing wrong with the principles contained in this bill but they have made certain suggestions which indicate that they look askance at the methods employed. It is elementary that if there is a good principle we can always modify the legislation to suit the circumstances. When one looks at the bill together with the explanatory notes it seems to me to be based on excellent principles and if the house were to decide to pass the measure it would be simple enough to add a section or a subsection saying it is the intention that those voters who desire to participate by making a contribution to a party or candidate were receiving a sheet, or information, for that purpose.

If it were decided that it would be good for a form to be used, it would be elementary to put at the bottom of the form a statement that those desiring to make a contribution to support a party or candidate whose names were shown might do so. This would achieve the result which the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) wishes to achieve.

A bill of this kind is probably a considerable improvement over the existing practice and I think we should support it because it is substantially better than an alternative which has been offered and which has been the subject of some discussion in an earlier debate, namely that all this should be done through what is, in effect, a government expenditure. I submit that government is too much with us now.

There is a tendency on the part of many voters to consider themselves as having little or no part in government. They think of themselves and of the government as being completely distinct. If a democratic system is to flourish and improve it can only be with the participation of those who comprise the electorate. I submit that the effect of putting into the hands of the government all the campaign expenses would remove from the people a considerable incentive to participate. It would add to the distance which all too often separates the voter from the government. We saw too much of this in years past. Until 1957, as a result of the war and conditions following it, there was a system developing of government by revelation, government by a few favoured individuals who thought they had this divine right. In 1957 and 1958, the people of this country ended that phase and restored control to members of parliament. They will confirm and endorse that decision at a certain date which I hope is not too far removed. To that extent, the greater participation which will inevitably result from the adoption of the bill would be all to the good. I think of a statement made by a very eminent young man, who now holds an important position in the free world, when he was faced with accepting great responsibility. That statement may very well be applied to the principle of the bill we are now considering. He said: Think not of what your country can do for you, but of what you can do for your country.

I think this is the spirit in which people should approach the question of government and the election of members of parliament. Not everyone has the time or opportunity to participate in the administration of the country. All cannot be members of parliament or returning officers. However, if people had the opportunity of making these contributions and felt it was the thing to do they would have a sense of participation and would have a definite interest in election campaigns and their results.

In my limited experience I have found that when we return to our constituencies we encounter a great reservoir of common sense, good judgment and sound understanding. Certainly this was demonstrated in March of 1958 as I am sure it will be again.

I know that others wish to participate in this debate and although there is more I should like to say I will conclude my remarks. To the extent to which I am certain this measure will tend to result in more people becoming interested in political campaigns I am glad to endorse the principle behind the bill.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, may I commence by paying a massive tribute to the sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for York-Scarborough. When he made reference to history's most impartial chairman in the debate between the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the future defeated N.D.P. candidate in Regina city, I think the hon. member for York-Scarborough with that reference paid one of history's greatest compliments to a father-in-law. The Ottawa Journal please copy.

I do not share the feeling of my colleagues in the Conservative party who have previously spoken in this debate. I would have a natural reluctance, I am afraid, if the taxpayers of this country should be asked to pay the costs of sending the names of candidates and official agents around from door to door, even though I realize, as the bill sets out, all the candidates in a particular riding would be lumped together.

I look upon this matter very much as I think I would if I were a bachelor to whom someone sent a list of all the eligible young spinsters in the neighbourhood whom I might court. I think politics should be approached very much on the same basis as romance in that one should seek out, look around, hunt and woo as best one possibly can and the road should never be made too easy.

Further, I suggest I do not think the public would give general acceptance to a bill in which they would be asked to pay part of the expense of a political campaign. No matter how highly we regard ourselves in this honourable chamber, outside I think people would entertain a certain suspicion—and probably a well justified suspicion—if we should adopt the measure that is proposed by the hon. member.

May I point out a fallacy in the sponsor's argument. This concerns the reference to the Gallup poll in the United States in which apparently some 17 million people—I presume this would be a projection from their interviews with a few hundred thousand people or families—would favour giving $5 apiece to their favourite political party if only machinery could be set up to collect that money. Presumably those 17 million at one time or another in the last United States campaign heard of Mr. Nixon or Mr. Kennedy, and presumably there were enough advertisements everywhere to show where these donations might have gone. I would therefore ask the hon. member why at least part of the 17 million, a substantial number—say over half—did not make those $5 donations. I think the measure he proposed for this country would have very much the same result.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the house leader what the business will be for Monday and the rest of next week, if there is a "rest of next week" so far as this parliament is concerned?

Mr. Churchill: Hon. gentlemen opposite are getting nervous.

Mr. Chevrier: Not in the slightest.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are not the nervous ones.

Mr. Churchill: On Monday, Mr. Speaker, we will proceed with legislation. The first item will be No. 13 on today's order paper, the resolution in the name of the Prime Minister to establish an electoral boundaries commission. Item No. 2 will be the resolution in the name of the Minister of Justice dealing with the appointment of additional judges. Item No. 3 will be second reading of Bill No. C-38 in the name of the Minister of Justice dealing with the reporting of financial and other statistics. Item No. 4, if we get to it, will be Bill No. S-19, an act to amend the Canada Grain Act. I think that would be the order in which we will take the items. If there is a change I will notify the other side before the house opens on Monday.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult to understand the attitude of the other side of the house having regard to the debate which took place for two hours last night, the argument being advanced that we were holding up these estimates and that they had to be put through before a specific time. We were told by the house leader that these estimates had to go through in three days.

Mr. Churchill: I suggested that as an objective.

Mr. Chevrier: And now, notwithstanding the urgency which these final supplementary estimates have, we are going to proceed with legislation on Monday. This is a clear proof, in my mind at least, that these estimates were not in the slightest degree urgent.

Mr. Churchill: I cannot allow that statement to go unanswered. The estimates are important and urgent. In other years the final supplementary estimates have passed this house sometimes in part of a day, sometimes within two days and always within three days, at the outside. The opposition on this occasion has elected to filibuster on the final supplementaries.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege particularly having to do with the word "filibuster", there has been no filibustering from this side of the house, but for two hours last night we had a filibuster consisting of points of order coming particularly from the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

It being two minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron) moved that the sixth report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, presented to the house on Friday, March 30, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH COURT OF INDIAN CLAIMS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-81, respecting the Canada court of Indian claims.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard: The purpose of this bill is to put into effect the unanimous recommendation of the joint Senate and House of Commons committee of last session that there be established a court of claims to deal specifically with the B.C. Indian land question and the Oka land question in Quebec, plus other matters.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who has been giving diligent attention to this particular matter, I feel bound to raise the question as to whether a bill of this sort can be introduced by a private member without involving an expenditure of public funds. I have not seen the bill, as will be obvious, but may I make this reservation now and indicate that our concurrence in leave to introduce this bill is subject to that reservation.

Mr. Howard: If I may speak to the point of order raised by the minister, this bill does not involve a charge upon the crown because the court of Indian claims named is in reality the Exchequer Court of Canada. This bill would give additional powers to the exchequer court which it does not now have, in order that it may deal specifically with these problems.

Mr. Speaker: Then the possible objection that might be taken to the bill is reserved for consideration when the bill comes up again.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, surely a point of order that goes to the root of the matter as to whether or not the bill is to be received and dealt with by this house on the motion of a private member is one that cannot be postponed. Surely there has to be a determination of that point of order before the bill can be introduced.

It seems to me, therefore, that the better procedure is to leave the motion on the order paper, deal with the point of order and then determine, after the point of order is decided, whether or not the hon. member may have leave to introduce his bill. If the point of order is well taken, then the bill ought not to be received.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member's suggestion points to the better course. I would think, offhand, that the bill could be introduced and read a first time without committing the house to reading it a second time if objection taken later revealed that the bill was not in accordance with the rules of the house. But I think the hon. member for Ottawa West is correct in saying that it would be preferable not to have the bill read the first time by the house if there is some objection to be taken to it in the matter of form.

Therefore I would think that as the bill has not been seen by hon. members of the house it would be preferable to stand the motion until tomorrow, to give hon. members who are interested an opportunity to look at the bill. I have not the bill before me either, and I am therefore in the same position as other hon. members of the house. In fact I could not proceed with the matter without having the bill. I therefore suggest that this motion stand until tomorrow.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may say with respect to this matter that it raises the all-important question as to how hon. gentlemen can see a bill before it is introduced.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, if I may add a word, as I understand the point of order raised, concisely stated it is as to whether or not this proposed measure requires to be preceded by a motion on the part of the government because it is a money bill, requiring the advice of the Governor General that he commends it to the house, under the provisions of section 54 of the British North America Act.

Mr. Speaker: The point taken by the mover of the bill was that it would not be printed and in the hands of hon. members unless the house gave leave to introduce it. That, I think, has some force. First reading of the bill does give permission for the bill to be printed and distributed and, as I indicated earlier, I see no obstacle to taking exception to a bill after it has been read the first time and before it has proceeded to second reading.

If the hon. member has his bill, perhaps the most convenient course would be to allow him to introduce it and have it read for the first time, if the house is agreeable. Then it will be in the hands of hon. members, and if they feel further objection should be taken they will be able to pursue the matter.

Mr. McIlraith: I understood that the procedure to be followed by a private member putting forward a bill was to take it up with the law clerk to see whether it was acceptable, whether it met the provisions of section 54 of the British North America Act and, presumably standing order No. 61 of our rules.

Mr. Speaker: Presumably that has been done, and it has proceeded thus far. Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENT AND REVISION OF EXISTING LEGISLATION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-82 respecting income taxes.

Mr. Chevrier: Explain.

Mr. Howard: This is intended primarily to bring the Income Tax Act up to date.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce this bill? Carried.

Has the hon. member got the bill? May I have it?

The bill appears to be a very lengthy one involving a substantial amount of printing, but it does not seem to make any change in the act as far as my examination has gone. I daresay there are changes, however, and I think by leave of the house I should like to reserve an opinion on this matter at the present stage and give it further consideration.

Mr. Howard: I think, with respect, that would not be a correct course to follow. I do not see how a reservation of that nature could be made. Situations similar to this have occurred a number of times before.

Mr. Speaker: I agree that the house has already authorized the hon. member to introduce his bill. I said "By leave of the house", and if the house does not give me leave I shall put the next question, which is that the bill be read the first time.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Did I understand Your Honour to say that the house had already given leave? It seems to me that the leave the house might give would take into account the point raised by Your Honour, and if Your Honour feels that the bill should not be introduced until you have had a chance to look at it I doubt very much whether the house would be prepared to give its leave until you have had an opportunity to consider it further.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Your Honour having decided on what seem to have been the facts in the first case, which are similar to those in this case, it seems to me that you are bound by the decision rendered with regard to the first case.

Mr. Fulton: The decision in the first case was altogether different. In that case I had entered a reservation with respect to whether or not the bill, entitled an act respecting the Canada court of Indian claims, could possibly be a measure which did not impose a burden on the public treasury. I felt we should not give first reading to a bill in that form without such a reservation; that we could make up our minds after we had had a chance to look at it.

With respect to this bill Your Honour has made simply a general reservation. I should think that Your Honour would like a chance to look at the bill before it is introduced into the house. This is, as Your Honour pointed out, by its appearance a bulky bill. We had experience last year, I recall, of a bill which purported to amend a statute and then did nothing of the sort; it merely re-enacted it. I do not know what the effect of this bill is. I raised the point at that time that such a bill was not properly before the house.

Your Honour has now said to us, on the basis of a quick look, that this bill does not appear to make any changes in the Income Tax Act. I certainly would not be prepared to give leave to the introduction of the bill about which Your Honour has expressed a general reservation. Your Honour having expressed that reservation, I certainly think the house should wait until Your Honour reports back to us before deciding whether or not we are prepared to give leave.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed one word, I must respectfully disagree with what the Minister of Justice has said. The test is not whether the bill is bulky; the test is whether or not it imposes a charge upon the treasury. If it is a charge upon the treasury it seems to me it ought not to be introduced, and Your Honour having ruled in the first instance this seems to me to be a case where Your Honour has to follow the original ruling or upset the ruling in the other case.

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Speaker; with respect the hon. gentleman has missed the point. No one was raising a point of order on this bill with respect to whether or not it was a charge on the treasury. That point is not raised here. But as Your Honour, looking at it, has expressed a reservation whether or not the bill is, generally speaking, in proper form, since the leave of the house is not a matter which should be automatically given, I think the house would wish to take the position that we do not give our leave until Your Honour has had the opportunity to report to us further on the bill for which leave is now sought.

Mr. Speaker: We have now proceeded past the stage of giving leave. The house has already given leave to introduce the bill. The house does not need to read the bill the first time. The subject matter is not debatable on the motion for first reading. The house has the option of accepting or rejecting the bill. This is rather a difficult choice for the house to make without having seen the bill.

Looking further at the papers submitted by the hon. member it appears to be a draft bill, as nearly as I can make out by a hasty examination, in appropriate form, with the Income Tax Act re-enacted with some changes here and there. In the circumstances I think I will do what has been said. I am obliged to proceed to the next stage and put the matter before the house by putting the motion.

Mr. Howard moves that the said bill be now read the first time.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, would you permit me to ask one question. When you speak about the bill making some changes in the act, does the bill purport to make changes in the rates of taxation? If so it must clearly be beyond the capacity of any private member to introduce.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Skeena could answer that question.

Mr. Howard: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. It does not purport to make changes in the rates of taxation. I carefully examined into this question and as far as I am able to determine the bill does not offend any of the rules of the house and is in correct form.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT ADDITIONAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-83, to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act (Canada highways).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; the motion is defective. There is no bill attached to the motion. The motion is not complete, as there is no bill for introduction except a pro forma bill.

Mr. Howard: I have a copy of the bill here, sir. Its purpose is to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act so that it will speak in terms of plural highways, rather than in the singular, to enable additional agreements to be entered into if desired. It does not touch upon the present financial limit provided for in the Trans-Canada Highway Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING APPLICATION AND INCREASING EXPENDITURE

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee of the whole at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act to extend, but not beyond the 30th day of April, 1963, the period during which the revised rates under the said act shall be applicable and to increase the authorized expenditure under the act by an additional fifteen million dollars.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*INQUIRY INTO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Question No. 317—Mr. Fisher:

1. What is the purpose of the inquiry into the unemployment insurance commission being carried on by the firm of Urwick and Currie?

[Mr. Speaker.]

2. What is the estimated cost of this inquiry, to what vote will it be charged, and on what date was its initiation approved by treasury board?

3. Was any consideration given to having the organization and methods service of the civil service commission carry on the inquiry now being conducted by Urwick and Currie; and, if so, what were the reasons that ruled out the use of this government agency?

Mr. Starr: The answer is lengthy and I would ask the permission of the house for it to be taken as read and inserted in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. The purposes of the inquiry are:

(1) Take responsibility for the production of new time standards for measurable activities.

(2) Appraise the department's program for devising staffing standards for non-measurable activities.

(3) Train existing and newly acquired staff to produce work standards and carry out methods studies in the future.

(4) Devise a system for the collection and analysis of work load figures for the use of management in assessing the effectiveness of the various components of the organization.

(5) Advise on the role and size of the standards and methods division in the light of existing projects and on a suitable organizational framework within which to carry out this role.

2. (a) $43,500; (b) Vote 50 of administration of Unemployment Insurance Act; (c) December 15, 1961.

3. At the initial stage when the work to be done was considered, a representative of the civil service commission participated in the discussion. After exploring the situation it was decided that in view of previous commitments, the advisory services branch of the civil service commission could not make staff immediately available to undertake this task without jeopardizing the completion and success of other important projects.

*C.N.R. LETTER TO NON-OPERATING EMPLOYEES

Question No. 319—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Canadian National Railways issued to all its non-operating employees a letter expressing the company views on the breakdown in negotiations between the railway and the union representatives of the non-operating employees; and, if so, did the letter contain the statement that "no independent tribunal has ever endorsed the durable goods standard"; and what other comments may the letter have had on the durable goods standard?

2. Has the C.N.R. studied the following reports: Kellock (1950), Kellock (1952), Kellock and Sloan (1954), Taylor (1956), Thomson (1958), and Milvain (1960); with a view to ascertaining what the position of these tribunals was on the durable goods standard; and, if so, does the C.N.R. consider that the positions were not an endorsement of the durable goods standard?

3. Did the C.N.R. put forward any standard in the recent negotiations; and, if so, what was the nature of this standard?

Mr. Balcer: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1, 2 and 3. A conciliation board has been authorized by the Minister of Labour under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and the railway companies and unions have nominated their representatives on the board. When the board convenes the position of the Canadian National Railways will be stated.

T.C.A. LAY-OFF OF PILOTS

Question No. 320—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has Trans-Canada Air Lines laid off any pilots or co-pilots during the past two years (since March, 1960); and, if so, how many, on what basis, and for how long?

2. Are any of the pilots now laid off unlikely to be needed in the next five years by T.C.A.?

3. What alternative employment plans or arrangements have been made by T.C.A. for any of these laid off pilots?

Answer by: Mr. Balcer:

The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advise as follows:

1. Yes; 98 pilots laid off indefinitely during 1961.

2. This question cannot be answered categorically but there is a possibility that those who were laid off and are still unemployed might be needed in the future.

3. Of those laid off, in substantial part because of the efforts of T.C.A., 47 have found employment with other air lines; 17 have been re-employed by T.C.A. in other capacities. It is also understood that 12 have found other employment and 16 have submitted outright resignations, while the status of the remaining 6 is unknown.

PERSONNEL, DRUG DISPENSARY, CAMP HILL HOSPITAL, HALIFAX

Question No. 321—Mr. McWilliam:

1. What was the number of staff personnel, with classifications, engaged in the drug dispensary at Camp Hill hospital, Halifax, N.S., in the year 1945?

2. What were the costs of staff salaries, and other operating costs, in the year 1945?

*EXTERNAL AID TEACHING ASSISTANCE, UNDER-DEVELOPED COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES

Question No. 346—Mr. Fisher:

Has the external aid office in hand, or under consideration, any program of teaching assistance for undeveloped countries of the commonwealth, which would centre on the use of Canadian secondary, vocational, and university teachers in a crash, summer program, taking advantage of holiday release in Canada; and, if not, why not?

Mr. Green: The requests which have been received from the less developed commonwealth countries for assistance from Canada in the teaching field have all been for persons who are prepared to serve abroad for a year or more. The cost of sending teachers overseas for short periods would be very high in relation to the assistance they could render in a limited period, and Canadian teachers would probably require a disproportionate amount of time during a short assignment to become familiar with local conditions. For these reasons the external aid office is not contemplating at present a program of the kind referred to and it is considered that the funds available for this form of Canadian assistance can be more effectively used in meeting requests for teachers for longer assignments.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question contains a series of figures. Perhaps the answer could be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the answer to this question be printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

2. Does the government consider that the loss of production will be balanced by increased use of paper by Canadian publications; and, if so, what is the period of time involved in which the government estimates that this adjustment will take place?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. 1, no loss of production has been anticipated. No. 2, not applicable.

Questions

3. Has the corporation of the town of Parent reimbursed the federal government for any of this drainage and/or road work carried out in 1959?

Answer by: Mr. Chambers:

1. (a) and (b) $42,792.92 of which the village of Parent is responsible under an agreement dated June 17, 1958 to contribute 25 per cent.

2. The work involved reshaping and drainage improvement, compaction, and applications of a levelling course and cold mix asphalt to the approximately one mile of municipal roadway forming part of the access road to R.C.A.F. station Parent. LOW RENTAL HOUSING, THOMPSON, MAN.

Question No. 370—Mr. Herridge:

Has the Prime Minister received a letter dated March 23 from Mr. Ken Woods, financial secretary of the Thompson and district mine, mill, smelter and refinery workers union asking that an immediate solution be found to the urgent requirement for low-rental housing in Thompson, Man.; and, if so, what answer has been given?

Answer by: Mr. Diefenbaker:

Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part is, Mr. Woods was informed that the views of the membership of Thompson and district mine, mill, smelter and refinery workers union were noted. I should point out that the letter has to do with certain apartment blocks which are owned by a private company, and as such any control over rental must necessarily be within provincial jurisdiction.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. First I would like to welcome him back to the house after his trip to the British Columbia coast. I would like to know whether the minister has a report to make concerning his love feast with the premier of British Columbia.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his somewhat dubious welcome back to the house. It is refreshing to note that when one is away for just two days his absence is so directly noted. I think that on the basis of this standard the hon. member's seatmate and some others deserve a roaring welcome.

Mr. Fulton: But they may never be back.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have received from the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) a letter indicating his intention to ask me the following question this afternoon:

Has the minister a report to make to the house on his meeting last week with the premier of British Columbia concerning the Columbia?

I presume that these two questions relate to the same matter, although in one case the meeting was described as a meeting and in the other case it was described by the hon. member opposite as a love feast. That is his expression.

I had a very good meeting indeed with Premier Bennett in Vancouver last Thursday afternoon. As in the case of the two meetings which we had held in Ottawa within the previous fortnight, the meeting was held in a very friendly atmosphere. We were discussing questions in relation to the development of the Columbia river.

I think I should not at this time go beyond saying that the premier and I plan further meetings, and also that the effort of the federal government in this matter is directed to do everything that it possibly can to get this great undertaking moving.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question. In the light of the answer which the minister has given, is the minister not able to give the house some further details of these discussions; because after all the premier of British Columbia and he greeted each other not so long ago with the words "Hail Columbia".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is yes, I could.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Then why does not the minister do it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Concealment.

INDUSTRY

FEDERAL REPRESENTATION AT CONFERENCE OF CONSUMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement by Mrs. A. F. W. Plumptre, national president of the Consumers Association of Canada, that the association will hold a consumers' conference at Queen's University, Kingston on June 18 and 19, and in view of the sessions that will be held on such important subjects as advertising, anti-combines legislation, consumer product testing, retail distribution and consumer protection, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether he will ensure that the government has observers at this important conference?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I doubt whether the question is of such paramount importance that it should be asked on the orders of the day. It has to do with the month of June, in which there has been considerable interest. The government will be able at that time to ascertain whether or not the consumers league and the subjects which will be discussed are of such importance as to require the presence of an observer.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I might direct a related question to the Minister of Agriculture, and ask him if he will arrange to have butter served at that conference.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO LORD'S DAY ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is it the intention of the government to introduce at this session amendments to the Lord's Day Act?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Representations on this subject have been received from time to time, and these representations indicate clearly that views as to what changes should be made vary very widely depending on the area from which they come and also on the traditions and background of the organization or individual from whom they are received. This whole question has been carefully considered, both in general and in the light of individual representations, and the conclusion is that it would not be appropriate or desirable to bring in amendments to the Lord's Day Act at the present session.

Mr. Skoreyko: A supplementary question, if I may. Has any such consideration taken into account the question of coin operated laundries and other activities which are of vital importance on the eve of the opening of the 1962 tourist season?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, these considerations have taken into account the situation with regard to coin operated laundries and other activities. The scheme of the Lord's Day Act is that the basic law respecting Sunday observance is of general application but variations from the general law may be enacted by the provincial legislatures so as to reflect regional or local views and requirements in respect of particular activities. Thus the provincial legislatures may, under section 4 of the act, provide exemptions from the prohibition against the transaction of business on Sunday, and under section 6 provide exemptions from the prohibition against conducting games and performances where an admission fee is charged. The situation with regard to coin operated laundries and other coin operated machines would appear to be essentially one that can be more suitably dealt with on a local basis by the provincial legislatures, which are now all in session, without making an amendment of general application to the Lord's Day Act.

DIVORCE—INQUIRY AS TO PROCEDURAL REFORM THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to inquire of the Minister of Veterans Affairs in his capacity as leader of the house if he is in a position to say whether or not legislation or ideas will be introduced at this session dealing with the question of parliamentary divorce reform.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Some consultations and discussion have been going on with regard to this matter. If and when I have an announcement to make I will let the hon. member know, and the house as well.

SHIPPING

LABRADOR—USE OF ICEBREAKER TO AID SEALING SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister please advise the house whether he has received requests for assistance by sending an icebreaker to penetrate the ice off the Labrador coast so the sealing ships may pick up the thousands of seals which have been killed and panned.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I am able to advise the house that one of the Canadian coastguard's large icebreakers is in the area to help sealing vessels get through the ice.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. While I have not given him notice, I think by reason of its timeliness he may have anticipated it. I wonder if it is the intention of the minister to introduce a budget during the present month.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I would have been happy to be able to deal with that subject long before this, and I am sure I would have done so had there not been so much everlasting obstruction and delay on the part of hon. members opposite with regard to the supplementary estimates.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): The Minister of Finance has repeatedly stated—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Chevrier: —that there has been obstruction from this side of the house, and the point of privilege to which I have risen is this. I repeat what I have said before, namely that the obstruction has come from the other side of the house; because had they wanted to deal with the estimates they could have so indicated on Friday. But the leader of the house decided to deal with legislation today instead.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I fail to see any question of privilege in the gratuitous observations just made by the hon. member. The fact is plain for everyone to see. If hon. members opposite had been satisfied with anything like the normal time for the review of supplementary estimates we should have been weeks further ahead with the government's program of legislation at this session than we are.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member does so, may I say that this discussion is very reminiscent of one that took place two days ago. There have been gratuitous observations in questions and gratuitous answers which naturally lead to these discussions. I think the hon. member should limit his question to the business of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to do so. That is what I had in mind. Is the minister aware that on Thursday of last week for a period of two hours this house discussed procedural points on a motion made by my hon. friend from Essex East to hold over the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, and the next day that request was granted by the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Laurier is asking a question to which all hon. members have the answer through the proceedings in the house and reports in Hansard. They can form their own conclusions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I comment on this?

Mr. Speaker: Comment is unnecessary, as the question relates to transactions which are recorded in Hansard and which all hon. members can read for themselves.

Mr. Chevrier: The reason for the delay is the incompetence of the government.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF SECRETARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I have a question to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In his absence may I direct it to the acting minister, who may take it as notice. Can the minister advise the house whether the secretary of the national energy board has recently tendered his resignation and, if so, what were the reasons for such action?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall take the question as notice.

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF TWO-WAY RADIOTELEPHONE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to inform the house when the government is going to make general service band two-way radiotelephone communication available to the general public, which was to have been done months ago. And can the hon. gentleman explain the reason for this delay, which is causing hardship and confusion in the electronics industry?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, whenever an announcement can be made it will be made in the house.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPHET RIVER RESERVE, B.C.—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration or to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, whichever one of them may prefer to reply, and inquire whether there has been any report on the investigation into the situation on the Indian reserve near Fort Nelson, British Columbia.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I indicated to the house that I had directed that an immediate investigation be made into the problems that were reportedly being faced on the Prophet river Indian reserve in British Columbia.

This morning my department received a telegram from the regional superintendent of Indian and northern health services in Vancouver. This stated that the provincial health officer in charge of the Peace river health unit, who acts for us by arrangement, had visited the reserve last Saturday. He found no evidence of starvation, and reported that the three persons placed in hospital with hepatitis two weeks ago were now home again.

The only evidence of more recent illness apparently involves a number of influenza cases. The health officer indicated that residents of the reserve were concerned over the publicity that had appeared, and felt that the situation had been greatly exaggerated.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister quite satisfied that the situation is well in hand?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I have just given the report which I received by telegram this morning, and I shall certainly continue to look into the situation.

CROP INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT PLAN BE PUT ON ACTUARIAL BASIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture based on a pamphlet issued by his department. In view of certain deficiencies in the present crop insurance scheme and in view of the necessity of providing over-all crop insurance for all farmers, has the minister considered bringing in amendments to the Crop Insurance Act to ensure that the plan may operate on a sound actuarial basis without undue burden on the provinces?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for being so courteous as to send me a copy of his question before the orders of the day.

The answer to the question is as follows. Discussions were held last year with several of the provinces concerning amendments to the Crop Insurance Act so as to help those provinces where crops were grown which might add to the liability of the province beyond their ability to pay. The results of those discussions have been brought together and a proposal is now before my colleagues in the government. When a decision is reached it will be announced.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—LAY-OFFS OF MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister advise whether the national employment office in Newfoundland has completed interviewing miners who were affected by the March 25 Dosco lay-off at Bell island? If so, is the minister in a position to make a statement on this subject?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in order to answer that question I will have to obtain a report from the unemployment insurance commission.

FREIGHT RATES

PAYMENTS TO RAILWAYS IN REDUCTION OF CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In the light of the legislation which he is introducing today I should like to ask the minister how much of the $50 million payment referred to in vote No. 590 of the supplementary estimates paid to the companies as defined in the Freight Rates Reduction Act is being paid to the railway companies in reduction of freight rates?

Mr. Speaker: Have those estimates been called?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The question relates to the estimates. It is not usually the best practice to deal with information at this time of the day in an oral way when such information properly can be brought out on the estimates, particularly when the question asks for statistical information. I should think the hon. member could deal with that point more satisfactorily on the estimates or on the order paper.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering whether I would be out of order in dealing with it at a later date. Since it is an estimate which was passed prior to March 31, 1961, I thought perhaps if the minister were not able to answer it now he might take the question as notice and answer tomorrow.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chevrier: I think the minister was about to answer.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. If I were to reply I would merely say that this is a question for the order paper if there ever was one.

SPORTS

OTTAWA—CONSTITUTION OF PROPOSED RACE TRACK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, and ask the hon. gentleman whether he has ascertained, as he undertook to do when we were in committee, whether the proposed new race track in the neighbourhood of Ottawa had satisfied the government that it was properly constituted and had a proper charter?

Mr. Richard A. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): I have had no report as yet, Mr. Speaker.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ADDITIONAL ONTARIO JUDGES

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for two additional judges of the trial division of the supreme court of Ontario and seven additional judges of the county and district courts of Ontario including one chief judge.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think I should say only a word in introducing the resolution, which is largely self-explanatory. I have satisfied myself by discussions with the attorney general of Ontario and reports I have received from him that there is a need for this measure increasing the number of judges in that province, a need with respect both to the trial division of the high court and the district and county courts of Ontario.

The provision for a chief judge is one which personally commends itself to me, and I think will commend itself to the house, as a measure which is being introduced into the administration of the system of courts in Ontario designed to further the better and more expeditious dispatch of business in those district and county courts. In Alberta, for instance, there is a similar provision which has been in existence for some time. There are, in fact, two chief judges there, one of the northern and one of the southern districts. They direct in general the operation of the courts within those districts, and the system has worked well and efficiently.

With respect to the trial division of the high court, hon. members will be aware, of course, of the recent appointment of Mr. Justice Wilson as chief justice of Cyprus, an appointment which brings honour and credit to Canada and its judiciary as well as to the judge himself. Mr. Justice Wilson has accordingly been granted leave of absence without pay. It is anticipated that his appointment will last for six years. This then leaves the high court short one judge for that period, and this situation will be taken care of by one portion of the amendment now before the committee. In addition there is in my view need for a further judge, so that the amendment provides for two additional judges of the high court.

As hon. members will see when it is distributed, if the committee approves the resolution, the bill will be in the standard form of a bill for this purpose with the exception only that it will come into force on proclamation. The reason for this provision is that there is some urgency about this situation. I was advised by the attorney general of Ontario that they were in fact proceeding with the introduction of the necessary legislation into their house, and I was requested to make the necessary provision here as soon as possible. Normally we wait until the legislation has gone through the provincial legislature before introducing it here. In view of the representations I received and with which I concur as to the urgency of providing these additional appointments, I undertook to introduce our legislation at once on the basis that we would insert the provision for proclamation so that it would not go into effect until after the appropriate legislation has gone through the Ontario house.

That legislation has been introduced. I am not certain whether it has yet been carried, but I understand it is well on its way through the Ontario legislature.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I think hon. members will agree that with the growth in population of the province of Ontario and the accompanying increase in business and volume of litigation, it is necessary that there be some addition to the judiciary. Whether the figure should be two additional judges of the trial division of the supreme court of Ontario, or one or three or five, I would consider something that could be argued at great length and I do not propose to do that at the moment, because it would appear, at least on the surface, that two is a reasonable number as it relates to the present constitution of that court.

The additional judges being provided for the county and district courts of the province are required not only because of the growth to which I have referred but also because of the increase in jurisdiction of the county courts. To the extent that that increase in jurisdiction takes away work from the trial division of the supreme court it has a bearing on the number to be added to the trial division of the supreme court and, of course, on the number of county judges to be added.

The situation in the county court judiciary has not been a happy one for some years, basically because of the fact that in some counties in which there is a large population the work load has increased rapidly, while in other counties the work load has remained static or has decreased. Not always has the rearrangement of the service of the county court judges and the making of them available to certain of the cities in which the increase has been large kept pace with the changes in the distribution of population within the province. A real problem exists there, but it is largely within the jurisdiction of the province. As far as the federal authority is concerned, it can merely provide the number of judges required by the province. A real problem exists there but as I say, it is largely the concern of the provinces. However, it is one which perhaps needs more thorough attention than it is getting.

Basically, for the older part of Ontario, the boundaries of the counties are those which were set up some 114 years ago. There has been little significant change in them since that time. Hence some real problems exist. However, as I say, they are within the jurisdiction of the provinces and I therefore do not propose to develop a discussion on them other than to indicate the nature of the problem. I mention it here in the hope that it will receive more consideration than it has received in the past.

There is one other question that arises out of this resolution. I think all hon. members will agree that under our system of government, respect for the judiciary is of the utmost importance. By and large over the years our reputation in this country for having a competent, wholly impartial, hard working and fair judiciary is very good. I think all hon. members will agree that is the case by and large in the country. However, a situation is developing here which requires us to ask ourselves this question. What is the use of increasing the number of judges if the situation among them, by reason of inadequacy of pay, is such that we are not going to have the best persons available for appointment to fill these vacancies? That is a question on which I feel very strongly, and it is one that is germane to this particular resolution.

The county court judges' salaries have not been increased since 1955. They are substantially below those of most of the solicitors in the minister's own department, except the very junior ones. The legislation requires that a county court judge, to be eligible for appointment, must have 10 years' experience in practising his profession. Yet we pay him on a lower basis than that on which we pay his counterpart who enters the civil service as a junior out of law school. We may well ask ourselves whether it is serving any useful purpose to increase the number of the judiciary if we are going to leave the other half of the problem undealt with and the situation such that the government cannot get the type of competent, experienced personnel required to accept these appointments.

The situation with respect to the trial division of the supreme court of Ontario is equally bad. It is now a case of a person appointed to this division having to take a reduction in earnings in order to accept the appointment. The pay level is such that if these persons have a family at a stage where they are seeking to educate them, it is impossible for them to take the appointment unless they have outside means.

That is not a desirable situation. It means that in considering persons for appointment the government have available to them only older men who are past the stage of active practice and are looking to the appointment as an end to their professional careers rather than as an opportunity for undertaking great new work which should be held in the highest repute in the profession, as indeed it is. That situation is one that causes a good deal of alarm at the present time.

I was happy to hear the minister make reference to the appointment of one of the members of the trial division of the supreme court of Ontario to the position of chief justice of Cyprus. That appointment tends to emphasize the high repute in which our judiciary have been held in the past in this country, and indicates the background of the general reputation of the judiciary in the province. I would hope that the minister would see fit to deal with this matter of the inadequacy of pay of the judiciary so that the high reputation which has been enjoyed up to the present time by our judiciary can be continued in the future and so that, by reason of inadequacy of pay, he will not be obliged to appoint persons with lesser qualifications than we would wish them to have.

It seems to me that respect for the judiciary is an inherent part of the effective function of our whole system of government. That being so we must by our legislation, and the government by its action, take all steps that will ensure that the judiciary will command that respect. If we are to continue the underpayment of the judiciary, as we are doing now, we are in danger of appointing persons who are less well qualified and who will not command that respect which the judiciary has always had.

I might add that I am somewhat at a loss to understand why this urgent problem has not been dealt with, particularly in view of the fact that at least two major upward revisions of public service salaries and pension legislation have taken place since the judges' salaries were last examined. No explanation at all has been given as to why this deplorable omission has occurred. I ask the minister to explain, before the resolution carries, how he hopes to have a relatively wide choice of qualified persons for consideration for appointment on the present pay level. I would hope that he would give a thoroughgoing answer to that problem.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I should say another word on this because I find I inadvertently misled the committee when I said the bill will contain a provision for coming into effect on proclamation. This is what we had intended when the measure was first considered, but I had overlooked the fact that on giving it further thought we came to the conclusion, since no appointment could be made in any event until the legislation is introduced in the Ontario legislature, that it was not necessary to put in the provision for proclamation. I am sorry that I overlooked that fact when I spoke on introducing the measure.

I appreciate what the hon. member for Ottawa West has said both in respect of the quality of the judiciary and in respect of the problem in connection with salaries. Indeed, it gives me an opportunity to say that I am constantly amazed at the quality of those who are prepared to accept judicial office in view of the fact that the remuneration, as the hon. member has suggested, might well be reviewed at the appropriate time.

However, he is not quite correct in assuming, as he appeared to do, that county and district court judges of Ontario receive only the remuneration mentioned in the Judges Act. As the hon. member well knows, the fact is that they act as surrogate judges, and under various other headings they do receive supplementary remuneration bringing the general level of salaries to around $14,000 or $15,000. I am not for a moment pretending this is generous. Indeed, as my hon. friend knows, I have given consideration to and still have under consideration the question of judicial salaries. I feel, however, that this question should await the general revision of the Judges Act which I have in mind and upon which we are still working.

I do want to say, however, that I am quite confident that although I am giving consideration to the question of the revision of salaries and other revisions of the act, there need be no doubt as to our ability to secure first class men for appointment to these vacancies. It is a feature of the respect in which our judiciary is held and the tradition of our bar that—although I make no pretense of suggesting that those who accept appointment at these salaries do not make substantial sacrifice in terms of their present income—there are well qualified persons who are prepared to accept these appointments. Sometimes they take some urging. I think the committee well knows that the question of the revision of salaries is under consideration, but it has not been possible at the present time to make any specific move in that direction.

Mr. McIlraith: There are two points arising out of the minister's reply with which I should like to concern myself. The first has to do with other employment of the judiciary. It is quite correct to say that county court judges supplement their income by taking other employment.

Mr. Fulton: I do not believe those were the words I used. I said there was remuneration in the capacity of surrogate judges and similar capacities in addition to the salary provided under the Judges Act.

Mr. McIlraith: I am most anxious to use the language the minister used because I do not wish to interpret his language in any other way than it was intended to be interpreted. The point is that today many of the county court judges supplement their income by other means than the additional salaries some of them get from the provinces for acting as surrogate court judges, police commissioners in certain cities along with the mayor of the city and chief magistrate, and so on. Many of them receive additional income from outside employment by acting as arbitrators or in other employment under the various labour legislation provisions. This takes them away from their judicial work, and a very nice question arises as to whether county judges should be encouraged to do that sort of thing in order to earn a living.

It is not desirable, from the point of view of judicial work, that they be taken from that judicial work to perform these other duties which, in the main, are connected with labour disputes but may relate to other types of arbitration as well. As a matter of fact I believe the trade unions call this practice of having two jobs moonlighting. I do not believe this practice is helpful in maintaining the kind of standard in the profession that it is desirable and indeed necessary to maintain. I interpret the minister's explanation as an additional reason for dealing with the question of judicial salaries promptly.

I thank the minister for his explanation about proclaiming the act, which I take it from his remarks will come into force upon receiving royal assent rather than at a date to be set by proclamation. This raises a very interesting proposition. It means that the minister is coming before this committee and asking us to pass legislation that may never be required. In other words he is dealing with this legislation in quite a different manner than the accepted practice. The accepted practice has been for the province to pass the necessary provincial legislation setting up the requirement for additional judges; then the federal authority makes provision for the appointment of those judges. The minister wants now to reverse the practice without an adequate reason.

There are a great many conjectures one could make as to his reasons for adopting an improper practice of this type and taking up the time of the committee in passing legislation that may never be required. This government has been raising at all times recently and even earlier today, the question of wasting time in this house, so I feel it exceeding strange that the minister should be making this request. Perhaps the minister should plead guilty at once to wasting the time of the house by presenting the legislation that may never be required.

Be that as it may, I think a more practical reason for the introduction of this measure in this unusual way is that the minister fears dissolution of the house, and would like to make the appointments before dissolution knowing that the government will be changed. If I make more assumptions on that subject I may be ruled out of order by the Chair; however, I suggest perhaps that is the real reason for the minister proceeding in this improper way. I must say that this is one of the best examples we have had of a government, which complains about the time of the house being taken up improperly, taking up the time of the house improperly itself. The minister, having made his explanation, now may wish to defer the bill until after the provincial legislation has been passed.

Mr. Fulton: That, I think, would have been to waste the time of the house improperly. I might add that the fear does not reside on this side of the house; it is over there.

Mr. McIlraith: Not fear; we welcome it.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one point which deserves to be underlined. It was the last point made by the hon. member for Ottawa West. The opposition has been attempting, although I confess not very successfully, to keep down expenditures in this country by its efforts in this house, but here we are instead dealing with a hypothetical measure about which the legislature will do something sometime.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fulton thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-84, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada.

He said: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is "to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada." The speech from the throne mentioned that parliament would be asked to consider legislation on this subject during the present session.

This is an extremely important bill, and it forms an integral part of the government's national policy. Canadians are becoming increasingly aware of their nationhood and of the importance of developing to the full the cultural, social and economic resources of this country. This bill is directly related to the efforts the government has been making in such fields as the domiciling of our constitution in Canada, and also to the numerous steps the government has already taken, and is taking, to encourage the development of the nation's resources, their control by Canadians and their use primarily for the benefit of Canada.

This bill, then, is not a manifestation of any narrow nationalism, nor is it anti-American. It represents the determination of the government to understand fully the operation of our economy, the extent of foreign control of various units operating within that economy, and the effects of that control; and our desire to see that the Canadian people are made aware, in general terms, of these facts and their implications. This is the duty of any responsible government, and this is the basis on which the bill has been drawn up.

The right hon. Prime Minister, as leader of the opposition, on February 11, 1957 when moving the adoption by this house of a natural resources development policy, spoke of the need at that time for:

> —a national policy; not a policy of nationalism but one whereby Canada in the days ahead will remain an independent Canada and will not inexorably drift into economic continentalism; one whereby Canada will maintain her economic independence and her sovereignty; a policy that will provide national development for a greater Canada in which growth and prosperity will not be purchased at the expense of our economic independence and our effective national sovereignty.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The Prime Minister and other ministers have emphasized on many occasions that this national policy is not designed to hamper in any way those investors outside Canada who may wish to devote their capital to the development of Canadian resources and industries. This country needs foreign capital, and will continue to welcome it as long as its activities in Canada are compatible with Canada's national interest.

In this connection the Prime Minister, addressing the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Great Britain, stated succinctly what the government, and indeed Canadians generally, expect of business organizations controlled from outside Canada. He said:

> We have made it clear that we expect foreign concerns operating in Canada, or Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies, to carry on operations as Canadian businesses. We expect them to make available a fair portion of their equity securities for purchase by Canadians; to include Canadians on their boards of directors; to make proper disclosure of their Canadian operations; to employ competent Canadians in senior management and technical positions; to conduct a fair share of their research in Canada; to purchase their requirements within Canada if those are available on competitive terms; and not to be denied by those in control a fair opportunity to sell their Canadian products in export markets.

One reason for the fundamental importance of this proposed legislation is the extent of foreign investment in the Canadian economy. Total non-resident investment in Canada as of 1959 amounted to no less than $20.7 billion. In December, 1957, the most recent date for which these figures are available, more than half of all Canadian manufacturing industry—56 per cent to be precise—was under non-resident control, as were 76 per cent of Canada's petroleum and natural gas industry and 61 per cent of our mining and smelting industry. Altogether there are an estimated 6,500 foreign controlled companies in Canada.

Obviously any sovereign nation must have access to financial information on the operations of industry within its borders. Foreign investment in Canada is so extensive and has such a far reaching effect upon the national economy that information on its activities is essential to the conduct of public affairs. We cordially invite foreign capital to help us with the development of our great natural resources, and we invite foreign investors to derive a profit from this development. Is it not reasonable, therefore, that we should ask them to tell us something about their activities and finances? The proposed legislation seeks, among its various objectives, to fill this gap.

The legislation is also important to the individual Canadian citizen. The government has been urging Canadians to invest their savings in the economic development of their country. But the freedom to buy shares in a developmental or industrial enterprise may be of little value to the private citizen unless he knows something of the nature of the enterprise and of its corporate structure and ownership. He already has access to this information for dominion public companies. He may or may not have access to a company's prospectus filed with a stock exchange. The proposed legislation would make general background data available on all kinds of companies operating in Canada.

Up to this point I have been speaking of corporations, but similar considerations apply to international labour unions. In a sovereign nation it is only to be expected that foreign controlled labour organizations should also divulge general information on their affairs in this country.

Members of the house will recall that early last year a bill to provide for returns from corporations and labour unions received first reading.

Following its introduction various representations were received from both companies and unions. For example, it was suggested that the original bill was discriminatory as between various kinds of companies. To remedy this, some suggested that the coverage of the bill should be more restricted, and others that it should be made to apply to all companies. Similarly as related to labour unions, some urged the broadening and others the narrowing of the coverage. It was also stated by some that the original bill would have required companies to lay bare their confidential company affairs before the eyes of their competitors.

Perhaps it was not surprising that representations should have been received or that some of the suggested changes were directly in conflict with others. After all, the bill was the first attempt at legislation in a new and exceedingly complex field. The government therefore welcomed the expression of views by representatives of companies and unions, and these views were very carefully and exhaustively studied and taken into account in the preparation of the new bill.

The measure now proposed, Mr. Speaker, is similar to its predecessor in most respects, but there are five important differences. First, the reporting requirement in the new bill will in general apply to all companies, whether owned or controlled in Canada or abroad, and whether public or private. The bill makes a number of specific exclusions, principally small companies and companies already reporting similar information to the government under some other statute. Second, all labour unions will be required to make returns whether or not their headquarters are situated outside Canada. Third, the range of information to be reported has been considerably extended as compared with that in the previous bill, in order to give a clearer picture of the extent and particularly the effect of foreign control. Fourth, the information is segregated into two clearly defined classes. The first class will include information that will be available to the public; the second class, which will be for government use only, will include those items whose public disclosure could be damaging to companies competitively. I shall return to this point. Fifth, the initial year for reporting will be 1962 instead of 1960, as in the previous bill. This change should make it appreciably easier for companies and unions to prepare their first returns.

In the drafting of this legislation the principal questions to be determined were first, the general form of the legislation; second, who should be required to report; and third, what information should be reported.

As to the form of the legislation, one possible course might have been to amend the dominion Companies Act. The government, after all, already receives periodic returns from all public companies incorporated under that act, including both Canadian controlled and foreign controlled companies. These reports are filed with the Department of the Secretary of State. It was decided not to use the dominion Companies Act for the present purpose because that act applies only to enterprises incorporated under federal charter and does not cover, for example, the many companies incorporated under provincial charter or licensed by a province, nor does it cover labour unions. The scope of the reporting would therefore have been much too fragmentary.

Instead it was decided that new legislation should be drafted under the authority of head 6 of section 91 of the British North America Act, which authorizes the parliament of Canada to make laws in relation to "the census and statistics", so as to permit the collection of financial information pertaining to all firms whether incorporated under federal or other authority, and also of all labour unions.

I have already mentioned that the second question, "Who should be required to report?" presented some difficulty. One possibility might have been to exempt Canadian owned and controlled companies and unions from the reporting requirement. This, however, was felt to be impractical. After all, there are many different means and degrees of control, and it was not considered realistic to single out for exception general classes of corporations such as all private companies or all Canadian owned companies.

Furthermore, on the matter of share ownership for example, the government is interested not only in those corporations having, say 51 per cent of their shares held outside Canada, but also in those having smaller percentages owned abroad; because it is quite possible that effective control may be exercised by the holding of less than 50 per cent of the shares. Similar considerations apply to the various other criteria of control. I should add that information on an across the board basis may be expected to provide useful data to enable comparisons to be made between foreign controlled and Canadian controlled companies, as a broad factual background for the consideration of policy problems that may arise from time to time in this field.

For administrative reasons the reporting requirement will not apply to corporations whose gross revenue during a reporting period was not over $500,000 and whose assets did not exceed $250,000. Companies operating under the authority of such statutes as the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Loan Companies Act, the Small Loans Act, the Radio Act and the Railway Act will also be exempted so as to avoid duplication of returns in cases where already substantially the same kind of information is being obtained under other federal legislation.

In much the same way the legislation would apply to every labour union in Canada having 100 or more members resident in Canada. This requirement to make returns to a public authority is not a new obligation for international unions. The labour management reporting and disclosure act of 1959 in the United States requires all labour organizations to file annual financial reports, a copy of their constitution and various other particulars. Also for some years all union headquarters in Canada have voluntarily given certain information to the Department of Labour, including items such as the names of their officers and the extent of their Canadian membership. This information is published annually by that department in its booklet "Labour Organization in Canada". The returns required by this bill will amplify this information in important respects.

On this third question, "What information should be reported?", the government considered that the requirement should call for only such information as is necessary to give a clear picture of operations in Canada and of the nature of management, ownership and financial affairs. It is believed that corporations and unions will find the terms of the requirement to be reasonable and no more onerous than is necessary.

One important thing that I would like to emphasize is that the bill is designed to produce factual or statistical replies, rather than value judgments, from respondents. It is a fact finding bill. Questions calling for statements of opinion are avoided. No questions are asked relating to contractual arrangements through which control may be exercised, because of the intangible nature and infinite possible gradations of such control. There are no direct questions concerning company procurement policy, personnel policy, investment policy or export policy. The bill does not ask companies to identify their "beneficial" shareholders, because it is recognized that in many cases this information is not available to the companies themselves. The government is concerned primarily with the incidence and extent of foreign ownership and with the effects of foreign ownership on a factual basis, and intends through this bill to provide a basis on which further studies may be made, as may be necessary, on particular aspects of such ownership or control.

I have mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that the returns will be divided into confidential and non-confidential sections. The non-confidential items to be reported by corporations will include information as to how and when they were incorporated, the amount of their authorized share capital, the number of shares held by persons having addresses of record within Canada or elsewhere, the name and address of any corporation holding 10 per cent or more of any class of share, the total amount of debentures issued and outstanding, and the name, address and nationality of each director and officer.

Section B, the confidential part of the return, will include financial statements and an itemized statement showing separately certain payments made by the corporation in the reporting period to persons not resident in Canada. This will include remittances abroad covering such items as dividends, interest, rent, royalties, fees, salaries and other charges as against the operation in Canada. It will be appreciated, therefore, on examination of the bill, that section B can be said generally to be devoted to producing information designed to give in a factual way an idea as to the effect on the operation within Canada of the foreign control, whereas section A of the return is designed to give us factual information as to the physical extent of the foreign control of those corporations operating within Canada, and the same with respect to labour unions. It will be appreciated, therefore, that with respect to part B the very nature of the information desired indicates it to be of a confidential nature and, further, that it might be of immense value to competitors who would find it for the first time.

Labour unions affected by the legislation will be required to provide similar kinds of information, also divided into the two parts. In section A they will furnish a copy of their constitution, name and address of each local union or branch in Canada, information on trusteeships, a list of employers in Canada with whom they have a collective agreement; and the name, address and nationality of each officer and employee of the union resident in Canada—with the obvious exception of clerks and stenographers—together with information on the manner of selection or appointment of these persons. Section B, the confidential part of the return, will include the union's financial statements and a classified statement showing separately the amounts paid to a union with headquarters outside Canada by members resident in Canada on account of initiation fees, membership dues, health and welfare assessments, death benefit assessments, strike benefit assessments, fines and work permits.

In preparing the legislation, particular care has been taken to ensure that unnecessary information is not being requested, and that the burden of reporting will not be relatively more onerous for labour unions than for corporations, or vice versa, having regard to the differences in their functions. As a further means of facilitating the preparation of the reports, it is contemplated that corporations will be permitted to file financial statements in the same form and at the same time as those supplied to the Department of National Revenue for income tax purposes. This relates only to the general statements such as the balance sheet, statement of income and expenditure, and statement of surplus; copies of the detailed and confidential schedules filed for income tax purposes will not be required by this bill. As still another means of simplification, the bill contains a special provision whereby certain information will not have to be filed year after year.

I have spoken of the kinds of information to be obtained, and I should like now to turn to the use to be made of it. The bill provides that the non-confidential part—section A—of the return filed by each corporation shall be kept on record in an office of the Department of the Secretary of State, and that section A of the return by each union shall be held by the Department of Labour. Any person will be permitted to inspect these reports upon payment of a nominal fee not exceeding $1 in respect of any one corporation or union. This fee is intended merely to cover the government's costs of recording and indexing the returns and of providing facilities for their inspection by the interested persons.

Section B of any return filed by either a corporation or a union will be privileged information, and will not be available to any person other than an official or authorized person, nor for any purpose except a purpose relating to the administration of this act.

At this point, I think I should indicate certain changes which will be proposed in the detailed operation of this legislation. These changes arise largely from the consideration we have given to a number of representations we have received since this bill was introduced.

First, it was suggested that since it is important that the confidential parts of the reports be kept strictly confidential, they should not be required to be filed with the Departments of the Secretary of State and of Labour respectively, but with an organization which, from the very nature of its operations and functions, is accustomed to the receipt and custody of confidential statistics. It was represented to us that industry and business, as well as unions, are anxious to co-operate with the government in carrying out the purposes of this bill, and that the business segment especially would find it much more acceptable from this point of view if the returns were to be filed with the dominion bureau of statistics, which has established an enviable reputation, and has the trust and confidence of all those who are required to furnish returns to it.

I may say that in my view, and that of the government, the fears expressed by those who made those representations to us as to the dangers that the confidential parts of the returns might get into unauthorized hands and be used for unauthorized purposes under the bill as drafted, were, to say the least, somewhat exaggerated. However, the bill is to some extent experimental and it is, indeed, as I myself recognize, a first step. Certainly, its successful operation does depend upon good relations and mutual confidence between the government and those who are filing returns if we are to get the full and frank disclosure which is desirable. Therefore, we felt that in view of these considerations no harm, certainly, would be done by giving effect to these representations which we had received.

Accordingly, it has been decided that all returns, both part A and part B, should be made in the first instance to the dominion statistician. The dominion statistician will in turn forward one copy of part A of the company returns to the Secretary of State, and one copy of part A of the union returns to the Minister of Labour. Those portions of the returns will be available for inspection in those respective departments in the same manner and circumstances as is now provided in the bill. Part B of the returns will remain in the control and custody of the dominion statistician.

With respect to part B of the returns, the use to be made of them will remain, in general, as now provided, subject to the observations I shall make in a few moments. That is to say, the details may not be made public at any time, but they will be processed and analysed in the bureau and the general effect and conclusions to be drawn therefrom will be published in the form of an annual report for the information of the public, but framed in such a manner that individual statistics and information cannot be identified or related to any individual corporation or union making returns.

I should emphasize that this new obligation imposed on the bureau of statistics, and the method of dealing with the returns received, does not imply any departure from the rules and procedures now applying with respect to returns received under the Statistics Act.

Next, it has been suggested that there is a danger, as the bill is presently drawn, that confidential information contained in the returns will somehow fall into the hands of persons by whom it will be used for purposes not connected with the bill.

Suspicion has even fallen on the Minister of Justice for no better reason, apparently, than that he has the carriage of the bill through the house, although no return will ever be made to him under the bill. Here again we feel that these fears are somewhat exaggerated, to say the least. The provisions of the act now carefully define who is an authorized person and limit the uses that such persons may make of any information received. To act in the manner that some have suggested would be done would clearly be a breach of the statute. However, once again we recognize that it is essential that there be co-operation and confidence, if there is to be full disclosure and advantage from the legislation.

I would have been prepared, therefore, in any event, if there appeared in this house to be any feeling that it would be desirable to amend the bill to make it even more abundantly clear that information could not be communicated or used as suggested, to accept an appropriate amendment to clause 14. As it is, now that it has been decided in any event to use the bureau of statistics, and in view of the desirability of preserving intact the tradition of non-disclosure to unauthorized persons or for unauthorized purposes of any information the bureau has received, I believe it would be advisable to modify clause 14 to reflect absolutely this position. Accordingly, at the appropriate stage, I shall ask one of my colleagues to move the appropriate amendments. There will be a fair number of consequential amendments arising from the foregoing decisions which I shall also ask one of my colleagues to move at the appropriate points in committee of the whole.

I should like to emphasize again, Mr. Speaker, that the financial information in section B of the individual reports which might affect the relationship between competitors will remain strictly confidential. It is to be used only for the purposes of this act and may not be used, for example, as a cross check for the purposes of other acts such as the Income Tax Act or the Combines Investigation Act.

The bill makes provision, also, for any necessary regulations, and for penalties for failure to file a return for a reporting period as required by the act, or for improperly divulging confidential information.

This legislation will provide the government and the citizens with basic information on corporations and labour unions operating in this country supplementing the limited data heretofore available. We hope that companies and unions, whether controlled in Canada or abroad, will act like good Canadian citizens. Indeed, as a government, we have no hesitation in saying that many do so now.

I should like to conclude with a few remarks as to the policy of the bill. In the first place, as I have already stated, it is in a sense a first step. Second, it is designed to enable the government to understand the operations of the Canadian economy, an economy which admittedly owes much and will continue to owe much to foreign investment. However, no nation which calls itself sovereign can be careless of the extent of results of foreign control of vital segments of its economy. It is essential that we should at least understand careless of the extent or results of foreign control so that we may be able sensibly to determine the policies which should be followed in order to direct our own affairs as Canadians in the kind of world in which we live.

The bill, therefore, is designed to give us two kinds of information. The information contained in part A of the returns will give us a clear picture of the extent of foreign control of the Canadian economy in both the business and the labour field. Part B of the returns will provide us with information as to the effects of this control. It will provide to the government a picture of these effects in precise detail. The publication of the annual reports will enable the public to assess the effects at least in general outline, and so for the first time in our history, the ground will have been laid for the formulation of policy on the basis of all the facts rather than only part of them.

This brings me to the third policy consideration behind the bill. It remains a basic tenet of the Conservative party under the direction of our Prime Minister that Canadian resources should be developed and used primarily for the benefit of Canadians, and that Canadians should participate effectively in the policies which direct our economic development in order that the well-being of this and future generations of Canadians may be ensured.

We are on the threshold of exciting and challenging opportunities for Canada. We have been through difficult times and decisions. We will face equally difficult times and decisions. But surely, we as Canadians, even if we are only 18 million people, are not afraid to measure up to the challenges of new opportunities and decisions affecting our economy. What better way can we measure up to new opportunities than by formulating our policies on the basis of information as to where we now stand in reality.

This bill, then, reflects no narrow nationalistic policy. This government recognizes that we are living in a world of increasing interdependence both in terms of defence and development. We believe, however, that Canadians have a Canadian point of view to bring to bear upon that world and those developments. We believe, therefore, we can make our most effective contribution when the Canadian economy is under the effective control and direction of Canadians. We have as our objective, therefore, to co-operate with our friends both in world development as well as in national development. We expect to benefit from both spheres just as we expect them to benefit; but while we invite them to participate with us and to benefit with us in both the corporation and labour fields we do not expect them to control us; and so we intend over the years to follow policies which will have as a result the objectives set by the Prime Minister whose words I again repeat when he pronounced in the speech to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Great Britain in 1960:

> We have made it clear that we expect foreign concerns operating in Canada, or Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies, to carry on operations as Canadian businesses. We expect them to make available a fair portion of their equity securities for purchase by Canadians; to include Canadians on their boards of directors; to make proper disclosure of their Canadian operations; to employ competent Canadians in senior management and technical positions; to conduct a fair share of their research in Canada; to purchase their requirements within Canada if those are available on competitive terms; and Canadians expect not to be denied by those in control a fair opportunity to sell their Canadian products in export markets.

These policies, Mr. Speaker, we shall be able to further on the sound basis of the information that this bill will provide.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, will the minister allow a question. Is it the intention of the government after second reading to send the bill to the standing committee on industrial relations?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, that will depend to some extent upon the progress made here and the views expressed, but I do not see any compelling reason that would indicate that course. We think we can have complete, full and frank discussions in committee of the whole here.

Mr. Pickersgill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not think it might expedite the business of the house if this bill could be sent to the committee so that the house at the same time could get on with some of that urgent business about which the government has been telling us?

Mr. Fulton: In our view this is extremely important business, as important as any—

Mr. Pickersgill: "Urgent" was the word.

Mr. Fulton: —or as urgent as any that could come before the committee of the whole. I am confident that as my hon. friends study further, as they will, the carefully drawn legislation, together with the amendments I will be introducing in committee of the whole, they will agree there is not much reason for holding it in committee of the whole very long. I anticipate it will go through with a substantial degree of unanimity.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, the minister said a while ago, and he repeated it in the last words he used, that this was one of the most important bills the government would bring forward at this present session. This must be so if the government took the view that the supplementary estimates we were considering last Friday should be put aside in order to bring the bill before us at the present time.

The minister said it is an important measure, and it is. Hon. gentlemen opposite knew in 1957 that they intended to bring forward a bill of this nature and one wonders why there has been this delay. The minister said in his opening remarks that the Prime Minister when speaking of national policy in 1957 expressed his intention of bringing forward a bill of this kind. In England in 1960 he said what Canadians expected from foreign companies. They wait until the end of the session and the end of a parliament to bring it to the House of Commons when they could have brought it forward in 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960 or even 1961. However, they did not do that. They said it was too important to do that. I will admit that in 1961 the government brought in Bill No. C-70 which was similar to this one but with a big difference.

An hon. Member: Are you opposing it?

Mr. Caron: I will answer those questions when I am through and hon. members will know what I think of the bill when I am through. They brought in Bill No. C-70 last year but they did not proceed with it. It was one of the worst pieces of legislation that we ever heard of. It was the kind of legislation that creates animosity. It was one of the worst blunders the government ever presented to the house. That bill was creating discrimination between Canadian companies and foreign companies. This year they have brought in a bill which is a good deal better than the one they brought in last year. Bill No. C-38 is different. All companies, Canadian and foreign, are forced to bring in a report to the Minister of Labour or to the Secretary of State showing their balance sheets and other information for which the government may ask. We think that in the back of their minds they still have the same opinion. I followed the minister a while ago when he said he did not wish any distinctions to be made in this matter. However, we think they still have the same opinion. They have an eye on United States companies dealing in Canada just as they have an eye on United States unions dealing in Canada. I think it is just as bad as the 15 per cent trade diversion which the Prime Minister talked about when he came back from his first trip to England after election as prime minister, something which is not creating Canadian good will among other nations. As the minister said, we need foreign capital. In order that we can develop a country as big as Canada, we need that foreign capital. If we need it, we should not discourage it before we start. We have to ask them for information and that is perfectly all right. We have no quarrel with the principle of the bill. The government has the right to know about investments in Canada, especially United States investments, as people from that country are the ones who have invested more in Canada than have those in any other country. It is perfectly natural that the government should ask for such information. However, if we in general accept the principle of the bill, there are in it a few parts that I certainly cannot support and these we shall have an opportunity to discuss when we come to the committee stage.

I was surprised a while ago to hear the minister say that he does not think it is necessary to send the bill to the industrial relations committee. He was the first one to say when he was speaking that they will bring in amendments to the bill when we come to the committee stage. They intend to bring in amendments a few weeks after they present the bill. Hence they admit that some changes can be made. I met some industrialists a few weeks ago and they expressed surprise that the bill was coming back this year. They had not heard about it and they had had no chance to study it. I think they would want to go to the committee or at least to send a brief to the committee, in order to indicate exactly what they think of it. That would give the members of the house a chance to learn what outsiders think of that bill, and more particularly the unions. When they presented a memorandum to the government on March 14, 1962, this is what they said at pages 19, 20, 21 and 22.

The labour unions report that the introduction of Bill C-38 raises once again the objection taken when a similar bill, C-70, was submitted last year. They object principally to a bill that gives the impression that cooperatives and trade unions are institutions so similar in character as to be governed by the same legislation. They say that there is a profound difference in the structure, the line of authority and objectives of a corporation and those of a trade union. Further on they say that the trade union on the contrary is a voluntary association of workers, that the right to vote is equally distributed among its members and elected officers are responsible to them; and that in short unions are associations of individuals formed for collective action in an employer-employee relationship. They further say that in the case of trade unions it is safe to say that no other institutions in Canada operate so much in the full blaze of public security. They further say that labour agrees that Bill C-38 is likely to have two effects, neither of which is desirable. They say that it will on the one hand create trouble and nuisance with respect to the provision of information, some of which is already available in one form or another and a good deal of which is of only questionable value.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would it be convenient to interrupt the hon. member at this point as it is now five o'clock.

Mr. Caron: Yes.

Mr. Broome: Before the hon. member takes his seat may I ask him, when he continues his quotation, that he also quote paragraph 2 on page 21.

Mr. Caron: It is five o'clock also for the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Well said.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. members will be able to pursue the matter in due course. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

FINANCE

TEXTILES—REQUEST TO REFER TARIFF BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke) moved:

That in the opinion of this house, consideration should be given to the advisability of referring the recommendations of the tariff board on textiles to the standing committee on banking and commerce for the purpose of examining and reporting on the problems of the textile industry, more particularly in connection with foreign imports.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether there would be unanimous consent in the house to allowing the hon. member to come and sit in one of the front row or second row seats a little bit nearer to most of us in the house. I think there are many members who would like to hear him speak and it is a bit difficult to do so from back where he is.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to take advantage of the suggestion to which apparently the house would agree?

Mr. Allard: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member may be heard from the seat he now occupies?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, the textile industry plays an important role in Canada, and indeed constitutes an economic factor of primary importance to central Canada.

In the province of Quebec, there are 417 firms employing 35,879 persons, which puts this industry in the fourth rank among Quebec manufacturing industries. A noteworthy fact is that 33.4 per cent of textile employees are female.

The principal plants are located in Sherbrooke, Magog, Drummondville, Granby, Shawinigan, Grand'Mère, Joliette, Three Rivers, Montmorency, Sorel, Montreal, Cowansville, Lachute and St. Hyacinthe.

This industry has a long history of constant progress. In 1667, Jean Talon, administrator of New France, took pride in being able to find in this country whatever garments he required. It will be recalled that, at the time, spinning and weaving were done at home.

On March 29, 1845, the first limited company in Canada started its operations at Sherbrooke, in my own constituency. That company was incorporated under the name Sherbrooke Cotton Factory.

The importance of the Canadian textile industry is revealed by the extent of Canadian investments, amounting to 80 per cent. It is therefore one of the few Canadian industries financed chiefly by Canadian capital.

Therefore, if we wish to add to our economic independence, we must protect this industry with particular care.

But especially since 1951, our textile industry has had to face many problems. I might point out that from 1951 to 1958, in the province of Quebec, the number of people it employed decreased by 10,974 and that, in the field of employment, the industry dropped from first to fifth place, all within the space of seven years. Across Canada, during the same period, 23,000 workers lost their jobs and almost 80 manufacturers had to shut down. The Canadian production of textiles, which stood at 468 million yards in 1950, had dropped to 349 million yards in 1958.

The causes of these difficulties are many and well known. Canadian production has suffered from international competition on the part of the United States and Asian countries. In 1948, 1949 and 1951, tariff reductions granted by a Liberal administration opened the door too wide to foreign products. Thus it was that, from 1950 to 1958, our textile industries lost 16 per cent of the domestic market.

Our textile products can no longer meet foreign competition, our production costs and salaries being comparatively much higher. To illustrate, here are the hourly wages in different countries: Japan, 25 cents; Italy, 51 cents; Belgium, 60 cents; Western Germany, 67 cents; United Kingdom, 80 cents; Norway and France, 86 cents; Canada, $1.34; United States, $2.

It should be noted that, while the hourly wage in the United States is $2, our neighbour, with its population of 180 million, has an enormous market, something which our 18 million people cannot provide.

Tariff Board Recommendations on Textiles

When the present Progressive Conservative government came to power in the middle of 1957, the situation was already quite serious. Our textile industry was clearly on its last legs because the former Liberal government had done absolutely nothing to help it and had even taken several measures calculated to destroy it; facts and figures prove it.

To mention only a few examples, I would point out that, from 1951 to 1958, textile imports from Hong Kong increased fivefold and that those from Japan increased tenfold. In fact, the figures from the dominion bureau of statistics confirm that serious unconcern of the Liberals. In 1951, these imports from Hong Kong totalled $560,000 and from Japan, $2,555,000. In 1958, they had reached $2,597,000 and $24,023,000 respectively.

When I was elected member for Sherbrooke in 1958, I undertook, as was known to my party, to lead an active fight to restore our Canadian industry.

It is very difficult to restore to health a dying body which has too long been left without care.

But this government did tackle the task and, unlike the Liberals who had not done anything since 1945, took action in favour of our textile industry on 19 different occasions. Let me list them:

1. In 1957, the tariff board was asked to proceed with a survey and make recommendations with regard to tariffs on textiles.

2. In 1958, the government increased the British preferential tariff on woollens and worsteds listed under item 554b of the customs tariff.

3. In 1959, the government raised the most favoured nation tariff with regard to section 554b in order to reinstate the British preferential margin.

4. In 1958, this government substantially modified the definition of the word "dumping" for the purpose of the act.

5. The government appointed additional assessors and provided for more detailed bills with attached samples.

6. The government is applying measures concerning special groups of goods, on the recommendations of the tariff board, and within our international agreements.

7. At the GATT meetings in Geneva in 1959, the government started negotiations with regard to a certain number of textiles. This action was repeated in 1960 and in 1961.

8. The government was officially authorized to pursue those negotiations with regard to all consolidated textile items under tariff board reference No. 125.

9. At the request of the Conservative government in August 1959, imports of textiles from Japan were temporarily stopped.

10. On March 31, 1960, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) made his budget speech and introduced four resolutions providing for a tariff raise averaging 15 per cent on foreign textile products, and especially on cotton goods.

11. In 1960, 1961 and 1962, as requested by the Conservative government, the Japanese limited their textile exports to Canada through voluntarily applied quotas.

12. In 1960, Mr. Fleming asked the United States to withdraw their subsidies on textile exports, but his request met with refusal.

13. The government sought to increase the membership of the tariff board, in order that two groups may meet separately and conduct two hearings and two appeals simultaneously.

14. In 1961, there was a new definition, in the customs tariff, of goods of a class or kind manufactured in Canada. This was to avoid undue delays in the rulings of the tariff board.

Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to point out, incidentally, that the Liberal majority in the Senate blocked those last two initiatives of the present government.

15. In the June 20, 1961 budget, the Conservative government announced new negotiations to protect the following textile products: hosiery, narrow fabrics, lace, woollen clothing and manufactured woollen goods.

16. In October 1961, a one year treaty was signed following the Geneva conference, in order to balance the trade in certain textile goods, while protecting our national market.

17. The devaluation of the Canadian dollar in 1961.

18. In 1962, our government negotiated a long term treaty providing for a better distribution of textile products throughout the world, while protecting the Canadian textile industry.

19. In March 1962, and more especially last week, during the visit in Ottawa of the minister of economy from Hong Kong, the Canadian government prevailed upon Hong Kong to voluntarily set restrictions on certain textile goods exported to Canada.

Those 19 measures have helped to stave off a disaster and to improve the situation. In fact, foreign imports were down in 1961, and our Canadian textile industry is picking up. A recent article on pages 1 and 2 of the Financial Post of March 17, 1962, witness to that. Here are a few extracts from this article:

(Text):

There's a strong new note of optimism running through Canada's long-harassed textile industry.

Production and employment are at the highest level in five years with earnings on the rise for every major company in the industry. Several companies have just moved into the black for the first time in several years.

(Translation):

And a little farther on, the article adds:

(Text):

Some textile officials now are forecasting an industry production gain for the year of around 10 per cent.

Competition from imports still is keen but the lower discount on our dollar—running around 6 per cent lower than this time last year—is strengthening the competitive position of local mills particularly vis-à-vis U.S. imports.

(Translation):

The article concludes as follows:

(Text):

A more sympathetic treatment by government trade authorities, which have been checking up more vigorously on alleged dumping infractions, is starting to bear fruit.

(Translation):

Page 12 of the March 29, 1962 issue of the Montreal Gazette deals with this year's report of the Dominion Textile Limited. Here is what it says:

(Text):

Sales of Dominion Textile Co. Ltd. for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, will be in excess of $120 million, according to F. R. Daniels, president and managing director. This would represent a gain of perhaps 20 per cent over the $103,185,000 reported for the previous year.

Dominion Textile—

(Translation):

A little further, the article says this:

(Text):

—recently declared a "final" dividend of 35 cents for the last quarter of the fiscal year bringing total payments for the year to 80 cents compared with 70 cents last year when the final payment was 25 cents.

(Translation):

So, Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the situation is improving and that this Conservative government has done a lot to bring about an economic recovery.

However, I feel that additional steps should be taken to better set our textile industry on the road to security and prosperity. I therefore wish to offer nine suggestions to that effect:

The government should consider applying whenever necessary the provisions of section 6A of the Customs Tariff to United States subsidized cotton textiles, since Washington gave a negative answer to the request of the Canadian Minister of Finance.

Section 6A of the Customs Tariff reads as follows:

Where in the opinion of the governor in council subsidized goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada have been or may be directly or indirectly imported into Canada, he may declare such goods to be subject to an additional duty on their importation equal to the amount of the subsidy on those goods as determined by him.

Japan should be asked to make public at the beginning of each year the details of its voluntary quotas thus enabling our Canadian industry to determine its production ahead of time. Moreover, those Japanese quotas should include additional items and their quantities should be reduced so as to leave a greater share for Canadian products.

Before any other delivery of grain to red China, we should ascertain that they will not try to pay us back with textile products.

The Minister of Finance should grant our textile industry certain tax concessions in order to encourage it to convert part of its production.

Section XIX of GATT should be applied, if need be, in emergencies concerning particular products.

The new definition of dumping should also be applied wherever necessary.

The government should seriously consider setting up a value for duty that would permit fairer competition between Canadian and foreign producers with respect to consumer sales.

The time has come also to set up values for duty in the case of fishing nets and Japanese-made netting.

Finally, as far as the next long term international agreement is concerned, Canada should not endorse the principle of systematic increased imports, but should strive to have the retaliation measures defined more clearly with respect to the flooding of markets by foreign products.

Those are the problems and solutions which the banking and commerce committee should consider.

That is the spirit of the resolution I have the privilege to introduce. Consequently, I would ask hon. members to express their views as to the desirability of having the said committee examine the recommendations contained in the tariff board's reports. I am speaking of the ten reports submitted by the board concerning reference 125, following the inquiry on our textile products.

Those ten reports are included in a table I have prepared. That table also shows the date on which the board's reports were completed and tabled in the House of Commons and the date of the budget in which those reports were put into effect.

With the consent of the house, I should like to have that table printed in Hansard after the remarks it has been my pleasure to make in the house this afternoon.

Tariff Board Recommendations on Textiles

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): I wonder if the hon. member would advise the house how long the table is so that we can better appreciate how to handle it?

(Translation):

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, the table has several divisions: dates on which the reports were published, dates on which they were tabled in the House of Commons as well as consideration which the government may have given to them on the occasion of the various budgets, especially in 1958.

I thought it would be tedious to quote the dates and references in the case of each product, and that it would be more convenient to ask the house to give consent to the printing of this table in Hansard following my remarks.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Will the house give consent to the printing of this table as suggested by the hon. member, not as part of his speech but as an appendix to his speech in Hansard?

Mr. McIlraith: As I understand the request —and I am subject to some handicaps in understanding it—it was that it be printed at the end of his speech as part of his speech. If I am correct in that, then I am quite agreeable he should have leave.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Will the house therefore give unanimous consent to having this table printed at the end of the hon. member's speech as part of his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Text):

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that the motion is for a decision that in the opinion of the house consideration should be given to the advisability of referring the recommendations of the tariff board on textiles to the standing committee on banking and commerce for the purpose of examining and reporting on the problems of the textile industry, more particularly in connection with foreign imports.

The hon. member, I take it from the purport of his remarks, intends that all the reports made by the tariff board pursuant to reference No. 125 be referred to the standing committee. If I am not correct in that, I would ask him to correct me, because the motion is not explicit in its language; but I take it that it was his intention that all the reports made on tariff board reference 125 were to be referred. On that assumption I am proceeding to discuss the matter.

I quite agree with the hon. member when he speaks about the importance of the industry in the economy of the country and when he goes on to point out the number of employees it has and the direct bearing that has on our general economy. I of course do not agree with him as to the causes or cures for the difficulties in which the industry finds itself, but I think we are on common ground that the industry has been through a very difficult period and is still in a very difficult period, and that there should be a thorough examination of those difficulties and appropriate corrective action taken to assist the industry.

The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) will I think agree with me on that point at least. We will, as I continue my remarks, find ourselves in disagreement, I think, as to the causes of some of the difficulties and possibly as to some of the methods of curing them. For instance, the hon. member gave certain statistics as to production in Canada and the number of employees from the year 1951 on. I have every reason to believe that his figures are correct. If they are not correct, I am not aware of any inaccuracies in them. I accept them. But he then attributed certain causes to the facts revealed by the figures. He did not, for instance, tell us that at the conclusion of the Korean war there was quite a sharp drop in the activities of the textile industry in the production of war material. That is one of the factors that slightly upsets his argument. I merely point out by way of illustrating the difficulty in choosing an arbitrary date such as 1951, when the textile industry was completing certain war production, taking that as an arbitrary date and using that figure for a comparative purpose. The point I wish to make there is that using the figures in the way he has used them does not support the arguments he made.

Then his attempt to attribute all the blame in this matter to the former government and none of the blame to the present government is just not sufficiently mature treatment of this subject and is not the kind of treatment the subject deserves. For instance, he did not deal with the action of the present government in the last five years in stopping, and indeed reversing, the reductions in taxation that had been forthcoming every year previously. Heavy taxation is undoubtedly a cost factor in the production of goods, and the failure to continue that reduction undoubtedly hurt the textile industry.

There are other factors like that which must be considered. The hon. gentleman stated that one of the factors in the present difficulty was international competition, and he was quite correct in stating that; but it is not good enough, having stated that, to blandly go on and say that the action of the government in the 12 years following the conclusion of the war in reducing taxation every year did nothing for the industry, and the action of the present government in increasing the cost of production continuously in the last five years was a great boon to the industry. That kind of argument does not treat of the subject at all. It may be listened to from some platforms, but surely it does not help in analysing the problem.

Notwithstanding what I have said on that score, I think the motion is a good one because the banking and commerce committee, if permitted to examine and report on the problems of the textile industry, could examine each one of the facets of the problem he has mentioned and the one or two I have pointed out and see exactly what effect they have had on this industry and what remedial action should be taken. The hon. member's bland assumption that tariffs are the cure-all or cause-all, depending which side of the picture you are arguing at any given moment, of these problems is just not adequate at all. Tariffs are undoubtedly a factor in this subject, and a very important factor, but they do not either cure or cause all the difficulties.

Such things as even the increase in the contributions under the Unemployment Insurance Act have a considerable effect on adding to the cost of production of textiles. The 10 per cent increase this government put on the sales tax has a great deal to do with it. The failure of the government, when these other countries the hon. member mentioned strengthened their own competitive machinery and their own economies and became strong international competitors, to recognize that and to bring our corporation tax into line with the rate of corporation tax paid by the other countries who are competitors, to examine our corporation tax, to grant larger allowances for modernization of machinery and equipment, to grant depreciation to meet that kind of problem, are all factors that are very important.

I have the impression myself—but these things would want to be examined in a more precise and detailed way—that the relief the industry needs, or a great part of it, should come out of a complete examination of our corporate tax structure, which has not been revised and is a problem that has not been faced by this government in the last five years, although these other countries with whom we compete internationally have become much more competitive in the last five years as they have built up their own economies. I think that an examination into that subject and appropriate action taken when the examination revealed, as I am sure it would, that changes are needed would do more to help this industry than any other single thing.

In any event, the point I wish to make here is that this is the kind of problem that can best be examined in a committee with witnesses in a carefully conducted hearing with an examination and, if necessary, cross-examination of those witnesses. It will be seen at once, for instance, that the administrative practices under our present corporation tax legislation are such that they do not lend themselves to easy discussion in the house in a general debate, but they would lend themselves to the most minute examination in a standing committee such as is indicated in the motion, namely the banking and commerce committee. We would see how many of these administrative practices do, in fact, unnecessarily and improperly increase the burden placed on this industry. The same comment applies to the method of computing depreciation allowances under the rules provided by the income tax legislation, as well as the legislation fixing the rates of taxation itself.

There are, of course, many problems here. It was interesting for instance, to hear the hon. member point out that one of our main competitors in this industry was the United States. Then a few moments later in his interesting remarks he drew attention to the fact that the highest hourly wage rate paid in the industry was paid in the United States, the very country which provides us with such strong competition. The wage rate there per hour is eight times the wage rate paid in the industry in Japan and it is something like 50 per cent higher than the rate paid in Canada. The rate varies widely, of course in various countries. In West Germany, for instance, it is about one third of that paid in the United States. Questions of this kind could be examined in committee to see what these different wage rates have to do with the problem and to what extent there should be compensatory legislation to protect the high standard of living in this country which I think all hon. members wish to see protected.

The point I wish to make out of all this is that in my view this is a problem which should go to a committee of members for examination. I believe the banking and commerce committee is the appropriate committee. I think the condition of the industry is such that remedial action is needed. As a matter of fact, if I were to follow that part of the hon. member's contribution in which he was making a political speech I would be critical of the government for not having taken remedial action sooner. This problem is an urgent one and it should be dealt with now. I wish to make it clear, therefore that I should like to see this motion carried and, when it has been carried, see an appropriate motion put on the order paper to refer the subject to the committee.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise to express the support of this group for the purpose of the motion because, like many others in this house, we are very concerned with the problems of the textile industry. However, I must emphasize that we certainly do not agree with many of the statements and arguments put forward by the proposer in support of this motion.

Indeed, it was very interesting to hear him list the protective measures which the present government has taken to date in order to protect the industry. We think that what is required is a fuller understanding of the problems of the industry, and the only way to get that understanding is to have representatives of the industry, representatives of the labour organizations connected with the industry, together with economists and persons who can contribute to the information of hon. members, come before the banking and commerce committee, tell their story and offer their suggestions.

For that reason we support the purpose of the motion. Before resuming my seat I should like to support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Ottawa West with respect to the desirability of an additional motion to refer the matter to the committee. We have heard a great deal of discussion with respect to the textile industry. I know all members have received resolutions from various sections of the industry, from the manufacturers, from the trade unions concerned and, in some instances, from municipalities who are directly concerned with the prosperity, or lack of prosperity, of the industry. It is our opinion always in this group that before you can take effective action of any kind you must be informed. I notice that is sinking into the minds of hon. members who are listening at the present time. The way to be informed is to listen to those who have knowledge of the subject. For that reason, members of this group support the motion and trust there will be no delay in passing the resolution and referring the subject to the banking and commerce committee, so that the resolution will be effective shortly.

(Translation):

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, this measure was introduced by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) in order to improve the lot of our textile workers. Though he did commit the error of not mentioning the fine city of St. Hyacinthe when listing localities where this industry is established, I shall nevertheless, commend him.

I will only take a few minutes to tell the house why this measure deserves our support.

However, before doing so, I should like to remind hon. members that, since we came to power, the Conservative government, as my hon. friend from Sherbrooke said, took action on 19 separate occasions to improve the situation of our textile industry. We, of the Conservative party, have all reason to rejoice that the textile industry did not decline under this administration, but rather under the former administration.

Since we took over, the textile industry tends to improve. Today, if we take a close look at the forecasts by people in the industry, we see that they certainly have more confidence in the future than when they operated under our predecessors. And, in order to illustrate my point, here are some facts as I ascertained them myself in the summer and fall of last year.

Mr. Speaker, you will remember that, during the summer and fall of last year, our friends opposite were trying to sow seeds of confusion among the people, by making a great fuss about the alarming unemployment situation at the time. Therefore, being interested to know the exact working conditions in our local industries, I took it upon myself to visit the various plants in the city of St. Hyacinthe. Among the 25 plants I visited, about 10 were connected with the textile industry.

Of course, the first plant I wanted to visit was the one where I worked for 24 years, that is to say the Goodyear Cotton Company of Canada Limited. I am very glad to say here, Mr. Speaker, that not only conditions there have improved substantially, but that the progress made by that company in the course of the last few years is incredible. While during the 1939-45 war, our friends opposite were saying that we had full employment, a sort of golden age, the Goodyear Cotton employed at the maximum 824 persons, whereas that St. Hyacinthe plant is now operating full time, on a three-shift basis, with 925 persons.

Each week I have the opportunity of meeting employees both from that plant and others, and I am happy to note that everywhere working conditions are improving.

At Penmans Limited, for instance, as a result of a contract worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, from the Department of Defence Production, the employees enjoy practically a regular working week. The 550 employees of this plant are very happy to realize that a dynamic government is the successor of a government which had done nothing, or just about nothing, to save this very important industry which contributed enormously to stabilize the economy in the city of St. Hyacinthe.

At Consolidated Textiles, another very prosperous company in St. Hyacinthe, it was somewhat difficult to find the necessary workers to form a third shift.

At Donahue Corporation, the situation is also very good. And it is the same at Yamaska Shirt.

At the beginning, Megantic Knitting had about 50 employees. According to the information that the manager himself gave me, this plant should increase the number of its employees to nearly a hundred in a few months time.

Lefebvre Garment, which normally employs 35 people, would be glad to find some fifteen more trained workers, whom it could hire at once.

As far as Canadian Corduroy is concerned, its 40 employees work a regular work week and everything is fine.

To show you the climate prevailing in St. Hyacinthe, I am going to quote from a report published in Le Courrier de Saint-Hyacinthe entitled:

Prospects for four new industries in St. Hyacinthe.

The subtitle reads:

If nothing should frustrate the projects under consideration, St. Hyacinthe should have in a matter of a few months four new industries which together would occupy 300 workers, most of them men.

Tariff Board Recommendations on Textiles

Presently, they are erecting a building for a new industry which is to be established at St. Hyacinthe and which is called Smith Textile Limited.

This shows, Mr. Speaker, that under the present Tory government, far from suffering setbacks as under the previous government, the textile industry is going forward.

I should like to put on the record some figures to prove my point. According to the Quebec Industrial Review, employment which, in 1951, stood at 98,000 in the primary textile industry, had fallen to 81,000 in 1956.

In 1956, there were, in the province of Quebec, 218 communities with textile plants. For their operations, these industries were buying $240 million worth of Canadian products.

Imports from the United States, Great Britain and Japan increased from 94 million lineal yards in 1930 to 286 million lineal yards in 1955.

It is also somewhat surprising to see our friends opposite claim that we could have done more for the textile industry. They really have a high opinion of us to say that, in only four years, we could have done more than they were able to do during the 22 years they were in power.

In 1930, the textile industry in Canada supplied 71 per cent of the domestic market, whereas in 1956, under the Liberal government that was in power before us, that proportion had fallen to 57 per cent.

During 1956 only, Mr. Speaker, imports of woollen fabrics from Italy increased by 140 per cent.

It seems to me that our Liberal friends should have been able to do something for the textile industry at that time.

I refer now, Mr. Speaker, to the speech made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) some time ago at Drummondville, a city where the textile industry is flourishing, and which is represented here by my good friend from Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger).

Mr. Allard: He is not here.

Mr. Ricard: It would not be proper for me to name him; but that would not make much difference since he is absent today.

Mr. Pigeon: Like the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier).

Mr. Ricard: I refer to the report which was published in La Parole, of Drummondville, and in which the Secretary of State is quoted as saying:

[Mr. Ricard.]

Mr. Pickersgill has emphasized that the textile industry would not be a native industry because in many cases raw materials and machinery that are used are imported. It may be true, said Mr. Dorion, that the textile industry is not a native industry, but is that sufficient reason to throw it out of the country? If other countries were to use the same argument what would happen to their industries using the raw materials we sell them?

And during that conference, the Secretary of State—

(Text):

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question. He has attributed certain remarks to an hon. member of this house. Would he give the authority for those remarks?

Mr. Ricard: If the hon. member will look at Hansard he will see the reference. I do not have the proper page of Hansard. This statement will be found in Hansard of last year when we were studying the relevant tariff item. I have not had time to do my homework on this but I will privately inform the hon. member as to which page of Hansard contains this statement.

Mr. McIlraith: I am sure the hon. member did not quote the words from Hansard and I feel he misconstrued them in repeating them.

Mr. Ricard: I was quoting the words of the Secretary of State who himself took the information from Hansard.

Mr. McIlraith: He has misconstrued the words of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Ricard: I am sure if the hon. member will read Hansard he will find the statement is just as I quoted it. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that this problem of the textile industry does not greatly interest the Liberal opposition, if you look at the number who are in the house now. I think they should be a little bit more cautious in what they are saying.

Mr. McIlraith: All the ministers are absent from the house at the moment.

Mr. Ricard: I have the floor. I am referring to an article in the magazine Canadian Textile Journal of January 5, 1962. I should like to quote a few remarks made by Mr. Gerald L. Bruck, chairman, Primary Textiles Institute. He states as follows:

The past year has been one of the most important periods on record for Canada's vital primary textiles industry, and, for the first time in nearly a decade, the future looks bright.

Three factors have helped mark 1961 as an important year. They are:

1. A general pick-up in national economic activity, which has had a considerable influence in the area of softgoods demand;
2. Devaluation of the Canadian dollar, which has made imports less attractive (though they still remain a major threat);
3. And emergence of discount outlets, which have resulted in an increase in total demand for merchandise.

Then he goes on to say this:

Combined with an increase in home production and a halt to annual employment reductions, they have given Canadian manufacturers a long-awaited oportunity for real hope for the future. If continued during 1962, the present trend could have only beneficial results.

(Translation):

Well, Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, some of my colleagues would like to say a few words. I could go on and on and prove to you that the industry is still expanding but in order to give others a chance to express their views, I shall resume my seat immediately.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

How can the hon. member explain to this house that we need a committee to study the situation if everything is as fine as the hon. member just said it was in his constituency?

Mr. Pigeon: So that it remains so.

Mr. Ricard: First, Mr. Speaker, it is in order to see the extent to which the previous government has overlooked the situation. Second, in order that appropriate steps be taken so that such recessions no longer occur in the future in the textile industry.

(Text):

Mr. John Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak briefly on this motion, and I should not like to be the one who would talk it out. However, I must congratulate the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) who has brought it to our attention. I should like to say that I certainly approve of the principle of this motion. I should also like to say that I am not opposed to the tariff board or the manner in which they are set up—an unbiased board—to be the referee between industry and the consumer and to hear both sides of requests for the raising or lowering of tariffs. However, I am not satisfied with the manner in which the recommendations from the tariff board are sometimes finalized.

I feel that private members should have more opportunity to discuss the recommendations of the tariff board before they are incorporated in the budget or in some other form of legislation. I understand that the recommendations from the tariff board generally go to the Minister of Finance. Some of these recommendations must be negotiated through GATT. In such cases a private member does not have the opportunity to express his opinion on them until they are incorporated in the budget. In other cases the changes recommended by the tariff board are brought to the house by the Minister of Finance in resolution form and private members do not have much of an opportunity to discuss them either.

I fully agree with the hon. member who sponsored this bill that those matters should be referred to a standing committee of some kind so that we may have an opportunity to give them some consideration.

I might say that the textile industry was once a very important industry in my riding but prior to 1957 we lost some five fine industries. For that reason, this is an important matter as far as we are concerned. When a decision from the tariff board hurts an industry and sometimes puts it out of business, it is not the tariff board that gets the blame; it is the local member. For those reasons I feel that in the future we as private members should have a greater opportunity to discuss those recommendations of the tariff board before they are put into effect.

Mr. McIlraith: Carried.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): I agree that the banking and commerce committee would be a good committee to deal with tariff matters. I was hoping to deal briefly with the matter of sales tax and excise tax, a matter which is also sometimes dealt with by the tariff board. However, I observe that I do not have time in which to do so now.

Mr. McIlraith: Carried.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fulton for the second reading of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock, when I had to interrupt my remarks, I was saying that the unions are not at all satisfied with the bill in its present form.

I understand that they did not strongly oppose this bill, but they did oppose it clearly enough, and that opposition is worth mentioning. Mr. Speaker, I will say frankly that I did not mention all the things that the brief contains about this Bill C-38 because it would have taken too much time.

I see, in the last part, the following:

(Text):

There is none the less a good deal of detailed criticism of the bill which the congress would like to make and feels it should have the right to make, but this is not the appropriate place or occasion. We strongly urge that the congress and other interested parties be given an opportunity to make formal representations, either to a parliamentary committee or otherwise, before the bill is enacted.

(Translation):

That was just what we were asking for, and what the unions are asking at this time. And I am convinced that a number of corporations only want, as do the unions, to have an opportunity of explaining their position and stating clearly what they disapprove in this bill.

As I said in my opening remarks, the basic principle of the bill is not bad, but it was badly prepared. It is a bill with several faulty sections. We should be given the opportunity of discussing them in committee.

No need to be a lawyer to realize at a glance that the bill needs improving. Indeed, the minister himself said that "We prepared several amendments which will be submitted by my colleagues." Since he introduced the bill in the house, he discovered the need for some improvement, it means he admits that, in principle, the bill is imperfect and incomplete.

Now, in agreement with the Canadian congress of labour, as well as with others I had the opportunity of meeting, we want to ask the minister to avoid all excessive hurry when discussing the bill, and to refer it rather to the standing committee on industrial relations, so that people who have some information to give, or objection to raise, may do so. As a matter of fact, that is the only democratic way to proceed, but that is not the policy of this government.

If the people concerned have not been advised beforehand, how can they express their views in the house since in the committee of the whole, nobody but a member may rise and speak? Therefore, this is done at the expense of those primarily concerned.

I believe a staff of experts should be appointed who would see to the preparing of reports and have an opportunity of enlightening the house. How many experts on this matter are there here? Not many, I would say.

Now, that is the reason why we need the help of those who are more particularly affected by the bill.

We might hear experts on constitutional matters who would tell us how they interpret the bill. We might also have representatives of corporations who would state what form they would like the bill to have to be of any help to them. And, finally, we could have experts in industrial relations who would explain the various ways to deal with labour matters.

Besides, the bill itself should not have been introduced as one bill; there should have been two different bills: one for corporations and one for labour unions. In fact, if we examine the situation closely, it is easy to see that the views, purposes and even wishes of corporations differ from those of labour unions. Consequently, the two should always be dealt with separately.

But, to speed things up before the election, the minister has introduced a bill which is incomplete and ill-conceived, as will be shown at the committee stage.

I suggest that the bill is a dangerous one.

The minister stated a while ago that the bill was divided in two parts, one having to do with statistical and non-confidential information, the other with confidential information.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how the minister can still believe that by virtue of some provision of this bill, secrecy cannot be violated, after he has prepared it himself or with his experts.

You only need to read it to know that secrecy cannot be safeguarded, since according to the definitions in it, any person who is or has been employed by the government could ask for and obtain information, and nobody could prevent him from getting it. Besides, a former employee of a company could come today and ask for information and you could not turn him down, according to the wording of this bill.

Now, we claim that there have been and still may be some people so interested in money that they could sell themselves to a company in order to obtain some information about a competitor. Such people could obtain information which they could sell or give away.

Some will say: They are federal civil servants and you usually defend them. That is true but there might be some among them in whom you could not place your confidence. We might find some odd individuals willing to sell information available to them. That does not mean that the civil service is bad. Indeed, Christ had one Judas among his twelve apostles and you would not say that the others did not deserve his confidence.

Mr. Speaker, this bill contains numerous provisions which could not be accepted before they have been considered by a standing committee of the house where experts could advise us on how to improve them.

For example, somewhere in the bill provision is made for a maximum term of imprisonment and a maximum fine, but no minimum is stated. In short, if the judge is lenient, he could sentence the accused to a five cent fine or an hour in jail.

That is why I tell you that it is too late to introduce this bill in the house, the more so because it is impossible to study it in full and adequately.

A while ago the minister said that the bill is introduced under section 91 of the British North America Act. Well, I ask the minister to find, in Bill No. C-38 that he is introducing today, a section that says clearly that this measure is introduced under section 91 of the British North America Act.

I am convinced that this bill represents a constitutional hazard.

Can companies or unions of a purely provincial nature be forced to answer questions for any purpose other than taxation? If they refuse to do so, how can the minister compel them to answer?

Besides, I do not regard that provision as very important, for the corporations and even the unions will be able to defend themselves when the time comes. Nevertheless, there is always a danger. If the minister had really wanted the bill to be in accordance with clause 91 of the British North America Act, he should have prepared a preamble in which he would have specified it. It should have been not only stated, but written.

We are being asked to accept and sign a blank cheque. We are simply being asked to allow civil servants to ask all the questions they like, without those questions having been submitted to the house.

Had the minister wanted to make this bill more complete, he should have added to it an appendix giving a form, a sample of the questions, so as to show which questions will be asked.

Now, I will be told that a certain part of those things are defined in the bill. But what we want to know is the nature of the questionnaires which will be sent to the industrialists, the representatives of the corporations, of the trade unions, in short, to whoever information will be sought from.

In my opinion, as long as we do not have these forms, it is wrong to ask the house to approve such an incomplete bill.

I could have introduced an amendment to have the bill referred to a standing committee of this house, but it would have killed it. It would have been a non-confidence motion. But that is not our purpose; we want the bill to be studied further.

We feel that the government is entitled to ask information from all corporations operating in Canada; it has the right to know how the union funds are used. But to that end, we believe that the bill should be referred to a committee in order to make it a complete and acceptable bill.

This bill is not too bad, but the drafting is poor. It comes too late, at the end of a session, at the end of a parliament.

We know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) have had that project in mind for quite a while, because it was mentioned as early as 1957.

In 1960, the Prime Minister made a statement to that effect in England.

Well, if they were thinking about it at the time, why wait until April 1962, at the end of a session, at the end of a parliament, when we know quite well that even if that measure is adopted it will have no effect for some time, because they will need time to gather information.

If the bill had been introduced two months later, that would have made no difference, save that the public could have had the time to prepare itself.

Therefore, I once again urge the minister to kindly refer the bill to the standing committee on industrial relations, in order that the people concerned may democratically exercise their right to express their views, to submit briefs and evidence, which would also permit us to have before the committee economists who could enlighten us on the various phases of this bill because it includes several sections we shall have to consider. Furthermore, I would ask him to grant the request made by the Canadian congress of labour in its brief dated March 14, 1962.

Once again, I would ask the minister to refer the bill to the standing committee on industrial relations in order that it may be seriously considered, so that, at least, when it is returned to the house, it might be clear enough for the corporations, as well as the unions, to know what they have to offer and what the government expects from them.

In that way, I believe everyone in Canada will be happy, and even the minister, if he agrees to our wishes, will perhaps feel better.

(Text):

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): The house, and indeed the whole country, has waited for the present bill somewhat in a similar fashion to that in which the western world waited for Colonel Glenn's flight. This bill was hanging over our heads throughout the last session, and finally died on the order paper at the end of the longest session parliament has ever known in Canada. We now have it before us, or rather an anaemic version of the one which hung over our heads last session. But I would say that it is only in the day to day expectation which we experienced that there is any similarity between the bill and the flight of Colonel Glenn because, while that flight was a complete and total success, this bill, at least in its present form, is pretty much of a fizzle.

When introducing the bill the minister said it was to bring to fruition some of the pronouncements of the right hon. Prime Minister about repatriating our constitution, our resources and so forth; but I am afraid that, like so many of his pronouncements, this bill is going to fall very far short of its purpose. In fact it is something like the great pronouncement about the abolition of closure, where we abolish closure one week and then the following week the government uses its huge and misbegotten majority to kill the first reading of a bill.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member should not discuss a matter which the house has recently referred to a committee for study.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Very well, Mr. Speaker. There was another thing I thought rather strange about the minister's introduction of the bill. No recognition was given to the fact that during the last four years private bills sponsored by members of his own party were discussed on a number of occasions in this house.

There are a number of good items in the bill, but I shall not spend much time dealing with them. After all, there are 208 government members in the house and I am sure that if there is any good in the measure they will be perfectly willing to talk about its good points.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did I understand him to say there are 208 Tory members in the house? Where are they?

Mr. Brunsden: Where are the Liberals?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has asked a very good question and I will have to take it as notice. I would like to deal this evening with some of my main objections to this bill. The first and most important objection is the one that has already been mentioned by the hon. member for Hull. It is the one that is spoken of in the brief which the Canadian Labour Congress presented to the government a couple of weeks ago. I refer to the attempt in this bill to lump together as one class and kind, to use a favourite expression of the government, and as being the same or similar, corporations, co-operatives and trade unions; trying to create in the public mind the image that these are all one and the same thing.

I would like to say that this cannot be done by the mere passing of a bill. Certainly with the majority this government possesses at the present time they could pass a bill saying that moose and wolves were the same, but that would not make it so. The same thing applies to this bill. If and when the bill is passed, it certainly is not going to make corporations, trade unions and co-operatives one and the same thing. Corporations and trade unions are not the same; they cannot be the same, and they will not be the same even when this bill passes and becomes law.

I would like to deal briefly with some of the reasons why this is so. Apparently government members do not realize this or they would not be trying to lump them together under one umbrella in this bill. Corporations have one motive and one motive only. It is clearcut and it is simple. Their motive is to make money. They are not benevolent societies; they would not be in business if they were. Corporations long ago realized that for their present and future benefit they should take political action. This they have done for many years in connection with the two old line parties. This is something that the trade unions are only now learning, and it is something the co-operatives have still to learn.

Mr. Brunsden: They are not very apt students.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): After all, the political party which is in power and forms the government makes the laws which govern this country. Laws are much easier to follow if you make them yourself.

Mr. Fulton: That is an interesting argument.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): That is why the corporations have in the past proceeded to take control of both the Liberal and Conservative parties—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —on the simple theory that if you have both horses in the race, you cannot be a loser.

Mr. Slogan: What about union leaders?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I am sure the hon. gentleman will have ample time and opportunity to make his own speech when I have finished.

Mr. Brunsden: I hope he does better than you.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I think that if we check back through history we will find that no law that has ever been passed by a Liberal or Conservative government has interfered too much with corporations.

Co-operatives, on the other hand, are slightly more complicated. They are groups of people with certain common interests, working together—I almost said "collectively", but that is a bad word; that is one of the words that unfortunately the communists have banished from our dictionaries—but working together for the common good; they combine the basic motive of gain of the corporation with the basic motive of protection from exploitation which is common in the trade unions.

I am not discussing the merits of these various things but I would just like to point out the differences between them and the reason why we should not try and group them all together, as is being done in this bill.

Trade unions, on the other hand, are much more complicated than the other two. First of all their main motive is protection, and the only reason they came about was to protect themselves from the exploitation by the corporations. So they cannot be one and the same thing. I am one of those who think that we have in this country far too much of trade unions versus management, instead of trade unions with management. I think that before we can ever hope for a rosy future we have to take a different look from that which we have taken in the past in considering just how we are going about it. I certainly have no quick solution.

Trade unions, the same as any other group in our society, are subject to our laws. After all, labour laws, like all laws, were written by governments, which I have already stated have in the main been responsible to the corporations. They are the only government we have ever had in this country.

Trade unions also have the motive of personal gain. In this respect only are they like corporations. They also have something in common with co-operatives, because through their efforts benefits accrue not only to themselves but to society as a whole. Trade unions were built by two different kinds of people. You have the idealists, people who work all their lives for something in which they believe, and you have the professionals who work for something for which they are paid. Originally they were all idealists, but unfortunately the trade union movement found that it was up against a loaded deck. It is pretty difficult to fight with a bunch of idealists on one side and a bunch of professionals on the other, and therefore the trade unions have had to turn more and more to professions in order to meet them. After all, the only reason we have a Jimmy Hoffa is because the transport management drove their employees to turn to a man like him to lead them. Hal Banks, the most famous—if you want to call him famous—

Mr. Brunsden: Infamous.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —or perhaps "notorious" is the word, trade union leader in Canada was not brought in by trade unionists, but by management. I think we found in that case that the cure was almost as bad as the disease. In fact, our whole past history has shown that corporations have in the main refused to deal with responsible trade union leaders; they would only deal with them when they had to, when they were faced with a law that compelled them to do so.

However, after trying to equate trade unions and corporations let us look at this bill and see the difference in the measures that are applied to each. For example, there are the exemptions under this bill. The only exemption as far as trade unions are concerned is that locals with less than 100 members are exempt from the provisions of the bill. However, when we look at the corporations we find there are 27 different classes exempted by this bill—

Mr. Fulton: Where do you get that?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —and the last two classes, Nos. 26 and 27 are very interesting, because as I read the bill I find that No. 26 takes in almost exeryone that is designated by the minister and No. 27 refers to any other corporation which the minister may deem in his wisdom to exclude from the bill.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member tell me from where he gets 27 classes of corporations.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I think you will find it in the schedule, if you read it over.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): What page is that?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): This is at the back of the bill.

Mr. Fulton: I read 17 in the schedule and some of them are co-operative credit societies.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I checked this bill over and I believe there are some 157 sections and subsections in it. It is really a Jim Dandy.

I should like to point out another disparity in the treatment afforded to these two different groups which are thrown together in this way. We find that the penalties, fines, prison terms and so on are equal for each side. In other words, they are identical. But I should like to compare the gross revenues involved for each of these two groups. As one example, I should like to take a case with which I am familiar—the Hollinger gold mine. There are about 800 men in the bargaining unit and at a current rate of $5 a month union dues, if the members were all paying dues, which they are not, this would amount to a gross of $48,000 a year. In 1959, the mine produced 205,727 ounces of gold. If we use the round figure of $35 an ounce, that amounts to some $7,200,465. In the same year the company received emergency gold mining assistance amounting to $817,663, making a total gross revenue of $8,018,128. So we find a gross of more than $8 million on one hand versus a maximum of $48,000 on the other. Nevertheless the penalties for the infringement of this bill are identical in both cases. This certainly is the case of the stew with the one horse and one rabbit in equal parts.

One aspect of this bill could, I feel, be very dangerous, particularly in areas such as the one from which I come, where there is no union security and no check-off of dues. In a situation like this one has to run pretty well as a bluff for most of the year, and in many cases if the operators or the companies were to realize how low the membership might drop in a trade union at a given period when there is no check-off of dues it might lead to all kinds of trouble.

A further aspect of the bill with which I must find fault is its discriminatory aspects. Why is nationality rather than citizenship asked for in this bill? Why, when a report on membership is given, must there be discrimination between male and female members? Surely a union member is a union member regardless of sex or nationality. There is another part of this bill which I find amusing. It puzzled me for a while but finally I have found a solution. In his little book entitled "An Uninhibited History of Canada", the author, Professor Eric Nicol, refers to the bill of rights as follows:

> Included in the bill of rights are all the freedoms that Canadians hold precious, except freedom from under-arm perspiration. It states that everybody is entitled to a lawyer unless it is perfectly obvious that he is guilty (e.g. communists, sex fiends, Liberals, C.C.F. and off-duty postal clerks).

I think we could add a couple more classifications to that. I think we could add corporations and trade unions, because in certain provisions of this bill we find words to the effect that if they are guilty of an offence the penalties will apply regardless of whether they have been tried or convicted. I think this would fit very well into Professor Nicol's description of our bill of rights.

I have spent a good deal more time dealing with the bad points in this bill than I have with the good points but, as I have said before, my experience in this house is that supporters of the government have always been oblivious to the bad points and therefore these need greater stress.

Just before he ended his remarks, the minister mentioned something about the fact that the government wanted to gather all the information it could with regard to corporations and trade unions. But he has completely ignored something which is of vital concern to this country. In the last two or three years we have heard a great deal of criticism, especially by the newspapers and by members on the government side of this house regarding trade union support of the New Democratic party. We have also heard criticism from time to time about political support of the two old line parties by corporations. If we really want to know all the facts, taking the minister at his word that he really wishes to have all the information that is available, I am surprised that this aspect was not considered when the bill was being prepared. To help the minister get all the facts I should like to close my remarks by moving an amendment, seconded by my hon. friend from Skeena (Mr. Howard):

> That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "this house declines to proceed with a bill the provisions of which do not provide that corporations and unions be required to make public the amounts of money which they contribute to political parties and candidates for public office."

Mr. Fulton: I have not yet had an opportunity to look up the citations but I think one would be bound to call Your Honour's attention to the rule of relevancy with regard to this amendment. It might be interesting to know the nature and extent of the contributions of corporations and labour unions to political parties. It might be interesting to know a lot of other things about the activities of these corporations and labour unions. However, the purpose of this bill and the principle behind it are related to acquiring information about the effect and extent of foreign control on corporations and trade unions. That has no bearing whatsoever on their contributions to political parties if, indeed, such contributions are made as the hon. member has asserted.

So the point I make is that the amendment is entirely irrelevant to the purpose of the legislation. If, in connection with the elections act some such amendment were moved, it might be relevant; I do not know. But it is certainly not relevant to the principle of this bill which relates entirely to the incidence and effects of foreign control.

Mr. Howard: This is the first time I have heard that foreign control is related to the sex of trade union members, which is part of the information sought in this bill. Surely we should be just as concerned about certain elements having control over the parties in the House of Commons as we should be regarding their control of other institutions within our country. These questions are relevant to each other and the minister is simply arguing with his tongue in his cheek when he approaches the question from the point of view he has chosen to adopt.

Mr. Churchill: I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker to May's sixteenth edition at page 573 which is a continuation of the paragraph headed "Inadmissible Amendments". Subsection 2 indicates that an amendment is inadmissible if its effect would be to negative the bill which I think is intented by this amendment and which states, in part, "the house declines to proceed with the bill," which it is stated does not do certain things the hon. member would like to have done. In other words, it negatives the bill completely. At page 554 of the same edition, May states:

> An amendment which is out of order on any of the following grounds cannot be proposed from the Chair:
> (1) An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill—

I think Your Honour might take that under consideration. This amendment is beyond the scope of the bill and endeavours to deal with matters which are not within the bill. It attempts, as I see it, to do two things: to go beyond the scope of the bill—and in those circumstances the hon. member would then agree that the bill should be accepted—and, second, it attempts simply to negative the bill and for that reason should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, before you rise, may I draw your attention to one other fact. Both the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Veterans Affairs have made reference to this being beyond the scope of the bill, the bill relating only to foreign control of corporations and unions. I point out that the title of the bill makes reference to no type of control, foreign or otherwise. It is entitled:

> An act to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada.

I submit the amendment deals specifically with the reporting of financial and other statistics, namely those relating to contributions to political parties. I think you will find the argument, being irrelevant, is not a valid one.

With respect to the argument about negativing the bill, I think this is what is called a reasoned amendment not dealing particularly with anything contained within the bill but with something perfectly within the ambit of it.

Mr. Speaker: The amendment which has been submitted by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) is framed as a reasoned amendment which is quite admissible on second reading of the bill.

Citation 382 of Beauchesne's fourth edition reads:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees——and so on. The amendment appears to be of that type, on its face. The bill is one which will require corporations and trade unions to submit information. The reasoned amendment is that the bill does not require certain information to be submitted. The question I am to decide is whether that is a declaration of a principle contrary to the bill or whether, as is argued, it goes so completely outside the bill as not to be related to it.

It is a fact that we have on the order paper two propositions about contributions to political parties and candidates for public office, but dealing with the making of contributions rather than the making of returns with respect to contributions. This amendment refers only to the making of returns or to the giving of public information.

I think the subject matter introduced, that of contributions to political parties, is in reality entirely unrelated to the bill, but it is introduced in a way that gives a semblance of connection to the bill in that it is related to the giving of information. With ingenuity one could think of a great many kinds of information that might be required of any corporation or union and thereby be made the subject of returns and consequently the subject of an amendment in this bill.

On the whole, I think the subject matter of the proposed public information is unrelated to the bill. It is another kind of problem. It is the problem of contributions to political parties rather than the constitution of the corporation or union and therefore is not a subject matter entirely germane to the bill, even though it has the semblance of being related to the bill, because it is related to the giving of information. On that ground I think I would be disposed to rule the amendment out of order, although not without some doubt, and I declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, as one who has had a private member's bill on the order paper for the last three or four years dealing with financial disclosure by Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies I am naturally interested in this bill. I must give the government full marks for having gone much further than my bill in certain respects, in that the government has included in this measure all companies in Canada both public and private, whether operating under federal or provincial charter; and labour unions are also brought in under this umbrella. I was rather surprised that the minister did not refer to previous debates in this house on my bill because I think those debates were quite informative and would have been of assistance to the minister's staff in the drafting of this measure.

Frankly, I have somewhat mixed feelings about this bill. It represents a step forward but it does not seem to me to go far enough. It appears to me that the information contained in part A is the type of information which, although it cannot be described as inconsequential, does not amount to very much. It is not the type of information that varies from year to year.

Why there should be a fee for this information I do not know. I think the fee might well be removed. It is supposed to cover the cost of indexing and that sort of thing. There will have to be facilities set up to do this if we are to receive tables and reports, and so this cost is there from the beginning. It might be good policy to eliminate the fee.

I was interested in the statement made by the minister with regard to outside control of Canadian industry. This was brought out in previous discussions in the bill to which I referred. It is an amazing fact that a highly developed industrial nation like Canada stands in the position it does. It stands in that position because we have had to have massive imports of foreign capital to develop this country. We needed and wanted this capital; it has been welcome. As the minister said, capital has certain responsibilities to this country, as well as rights. We offer a stable political climate, except perhaps in the province of British Columbia, where capital can develop, where capital can gain the advantages of development in our resource industries. We offer good markets. We offer an access, up to now anyway, to commonwealth markets. We have many advantages for foreign capital and foreign capital comes here not to do us a favour but because it is a good climate for foreign capital. In this respect I take strong exception to what was said by the hon. member for Hull who seems to think that the favour is being done to us when foreign capital comes here. It is a favour on both sides. The extent of this capital is well illustrated in "The Canadian Balance of International Payments, 1960," put out by the dominion bureau of statistics. On page 60, statement 32, "Ownership and Control of Selected Canadian Industries," we find here that, with respect to the rubber industry, in 1959, 98 per cent of it was under foreign control; pulp and paper in 1959, 49 per cent under foreign control; agricultural machinery, 55 per cent; automobiles and parts, 97 per cent; transportation equipment, 73 per cent; electrical apparatus, 81 per cent; chemicals, 77 per cent.

I should like also to refer to the autumn issue of Queen's Quarterly for 1958 in which is found an article by Professor J. E. Smyth entitled "Financial Disclosures by Subsidiaries". This is what Professor Smyth had to say about this matter, and this has to do with what is properly secret information and what is properly public information. I quote:

> But the concept of what information is private is somehow related to the concept of what property is private. Those who are sensitive about their property rights are likely also to have precise ideas about what business is their own and no one else's. The ownership of property implies the right to exclude all others from a knowledge of its use (as long as the use is lawful) and of the results of its use. The problem today, however, is to decide in what sense the property of large business is private, and if it is private, who is entitled to the amenities of such privacy. The assets of large corporations are financed by shareholders and by creditors (including employees who must wait for payment until they have rendered their services). Public relations programs are designed to convince the consumer that he too has a stake in the corporation.

And so it goes on. In referring to disclosure of information, at pages 404 and 405 Professor Smyth had this to say:

What we have in Canada today is a distracting unevenness in the publication of financial information.

He states:

It is when some businesses disclose their financial affairs and condition with candour and others (equally large) are allowed to maintain an inscrutable silence that we can never know where we stand, and that some businesses may enjoy, unfairly, such advantage as there may be in secrecy.

The minister made quite a play on that point. He mentioned that this disclosure could be damaging competitively, that it could be of immense value to competitors. What is the minister talking about? The minister is talking about foreign owned subsidiaries in competition with Canadian companies. This is the way I read it. So we want to perpetuate this advantage, if there is an advantage in secrecy, to the foreign company as compared with the Canadian company. What are these foreign companies? I can give a short list of some of them. They include such companies as the Borden Company, Bristol Myers of Canada, Campbell Soup, Canadian International Paper, Chrysler Corporation, Coca-Cola, Colgate-Palmolive, General Foods, General Mills, General Motors, H. J. Heinz, International Harvester, Irone Ore Company of Canada, Kellogg Company, Kraft Foods, Nabisco Foods, and National Cash Register. There is a whole galaxy of major corporations across this country, with one exception. I mentioned International Harvester. In one session when my bill was being debated and I mentioned the name of International Harvester Company, I received a letter from the president of International Harvester stating that although International Harvester was a fully owned subsidiary of a United States company, they felt it their duty to their customers and to their employees in Canada to make full and complete disclosure of the Canadian operations and they were putting out a balance sheet, profit and loss statements and all the rest of the financial papers which are supposed to be put out by a public company in Canada. They said they were doing this so they would take the people of Canada into their confidence as to what they were doing. I say that this is an enlightened management when that sort of thing is done. But that is not done too often.

What are we asking for, or what were we asking for before this bill was amended? Again, according to Professor Smyth at page 408:

A point of interest is that even were the Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. parent companies required to publish their financial information according to the most stringent requirements for disclosure presently prevailing under any companies legislation in Canada, the disclosure would be considerably less in detail than that required of the parent company in the United States by the securities and exchange commission.

That is what we are asking for, or rather that is what we were asking for, namely, that the subsidiary of this company would give to the Canadian public the same information the parent company is obliged to give to the United States public. Last week out of the Financial Post I cut out two little clippings. They are not very big. One reads as follows:

CTS of Canada Ltd., Streetsville, Ont., steadily expanded its production of variable resistors during 1961, according to annual report of parent CTS Corp., Elkhart, Indiana.

Then down below it states as follows:

Results of the Canadian firm are not published.

Again there is this clipping with the heading "Flintkote Doing Well in Canada". Again the Financial Post bases its report on information put out by the parent company and in the second paragraph in brackets we find the following statement:

(Financial statements of the Canadian operations are not published.)

I say that this bill certainly is a big step forward. It is necessary. However, I do not think it fulfils exactly what the Prime Minister said when he was quoted by the Minister of Justice. For one thing we desire a fair portion of their equity sold in Canada, or Canadian participation in ownership of these subsidiary companies. This is fine. But if there is an advantage in secrecy, then why should they do this? This would take away the advantage of secrecy. They would come under the public companies section of the Companies Act. I have on the order paper another bill with regard to directors. The Prime Minister said that these companies should have Canadians on their boards of directors. My bill simply provides that the majority of directors of any company incorporated under a federal charter should live in Canada. Canadian nationality was not a requirement; but it would get away from absentee management.

The third point made by the Prime Minister was proper disclosure. I fail to see why information which the parent company puts out in the United States—and we are talking mainly about United States subsidiaries as they have the great bulk of investment in this country—or financial statements should be in part B. I can see good reason for much of the information being asked for being in part B.

However, as far as the standard financial statements put out by the companies are concerned, I can see no good reason for it. As I said before, if there is a valid reason why this must be considered as giving an advantage, then we are saying to foreign companies, "The best way for you to operate in Canada is through 100 per cent owned and controlled subsidiaries; keep Canadians out of participation because otherwise you may have to be put on a fair basis with competing Canadian companies. You may have to let Canadian people know what you are doing in this country, the same as Canadian companies have to do."

I say that, to me, this does not appear to be carrying out what the Prime Minister and the leading members of the government have said time and again in this country and in the United States. This bill does not implement those statements.

Mr. Pickersgill: Another broken promise.

Mr. Broome: It is all right; the hon. member for Hull thought even this bill was going too far. If it was left to a Liberal government to do anything along these lines we would wait 100 years. You do not stand up for anything Canadian, you never have and you never will. You never had any confidence in this country. You are afraid that if you stand up for Canada and Canadians or Canadian interests you are going to frighten off a dollar of investment. This is not so.

In so far as union disclosures are concerned, I did ask the hon. member for Hull to read one paragraph of the brief. I listened intently, but I do not believe he did read it so I will read this paragraph from page 21:

> Notwithstanding our criticism of Bill C-38, a criticism by no means exhaustive, we refrain from voicing further objections to it here. We are prepared to live with it because we have nothing to hide. We would assume that the legislation will not, either in its provisions or regulations, require the publication of information which will damage a union's collective bargaining status, but apart from that we are prepared to co-operate in every way and to waive confidentiality. To the extent that the public are interested in data as to membership, finances and so on, they are welcome to it.

I contend that is a much more realistic attitude on the part of the Canadian Labour Congress this year than they showed last year.

Mr. Caron: Will the hon. member permit a question? Would he read the last paragraph? This is the point I was trying to make.

Mr. Broome: Yes, I know the last paragraph, and I will read it.

> There is none the less a good deal of detailed criticism of the bill which the congress would like to make and feels it should have the right to make, but this is not the appropriate place or occasion. We strongly urge that the congress and other interested parties be given an opportunity to make formal representations, either to a parliamentary committee or otherwise, before the bill is enacted.

The hon. member for Hull read that paragraph, I believe, and I did too. Actually, there is no substance to this argument. The point is, are they willing to agree that this information should be disclosed or do they wish to keep it secret? They cannot, in all honesty, take the position that they do not want this information disclosed, otherwise they will be saying to their members, "We don't want you to know what is happening to the finances of this union." This attitude would not be acceptable. The Canadian Labour Congress has taken the proper attitude that not only their members but the Canadian public are entitled to this information.

It is well to recall that they are only talking about the bill as it is now, part A and part B, which does not require the disclosure of too much information. The congress says the public of Canada is welcome to this information. I do not know what kind of tables the dominion bureau of statistics will bring out eventually to let us know about the operations of foreign subsidiaries in Canada. I go back to Professor Smyth, Mr. Speaker, where he says:

> One of the unfortunate by-products of the present situation, quite apart from its larger implications, is that research in the field of business finance in Canada is stymied at many points because of the large blind spots in our knowledge of what is taking palce in the Canadian economy. The incidence of the operations of subsidiaries upon the Canadian economy is so great that one can never be sure that such published financial statements as we do receive give a typical picture of economic trends and financial developments in Canada. Until about four years ago the Bank of Canada compiled and published financial data from a sample of Canadian companies; it has since abandoned the series. One of the important limitations of these data was that they were drawn entirely from published financial statements, and that the proportion of Canadian economic activity which was affected by large private companies, for which no statements were available, was so significant as to invalidate any conclusions which might be drawn from the published figures.

In other words, we did not even know where our economy was going because there were so many blind spots. Well, we will not have these blind spots in the future, that is if our civil servants can work out the proper tables and ascertain the type of information to which we are entitled. Even when an industry is 98 per cent foreign owned, Mr. Speaker, and there are only three companies in the field, I suppose they will develop tables which will not disclose anything because some smart person may be able to figure out what one of these companies is doing. This would be a terrible thing. Perhaps these civil servants have the godlike quality of being able to say what is good for the Canadian people to know and what is bad for them to know.

All I know is that I like the bill and that it embraces the whole field, labour unions and companies. I like the approach. It is a big step forward, but I feel that the bill lacks this one essential, and that is keeping normal financial statements in the secret part of the bill instead of putting them into the public disclosure part of the bill.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I listened with a great deal of interest to what the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Broome) had to say because we know he has a particular interest in this subject and related matters. In fact, he has had, and has now, bills on the order paper dealing with somewhat the same sort of thing. I would have thought that the minister, in his introductory remarks, and especially in view of the fact both hon. gentlemen are from the same province, might have carried out the normal British Columbia courtesies by making some reference to this fact. However, such was not the case. Perhaps it just slipped his mind in his own desire to speak about what he claims are the principal reasons behind the submission of the bill to the house.

Last year a bill was introduced dealing with substantially the same sort of thing, but was deliberately not proceeded with and a number of representations were made during the course of the session. These pieces of correspondence in respect of Bill No. C-70, as I believe it was called last year, were tabled. I have had an opportunity of perusing them and one thing has become quite clear. Most of the representations to the government about the structure of the bill last year were from corporations or interests operating on behalf of corporations, and the bill before us now implements most of their suggestions. I might be unfair if I were to say that the minister knuckled under to these representations. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say this is what he wanted to do in the first place, but he did not know how to have the bill drafted so it would meet the desires of the corporations in this country.

I do not think the minister dealt with the bill itself to any great extent because his remarks were interlarded with references to economic independence and to the development of a Canadian identity so far as corporation and union structures were concerned. He made quite a few references to national development, to ownership, control and utilization of our own resources, all of which are very commendable ideals and are very worthwhile things for the minister to express, but these are not the things which the bill specifies. It does not deal with these questions at all. It deals entirely and exclusively with the filing of statistics about the operations of corporations and unions, albeit arising from that information someone will discover the degree to which corporations and unions have international affiliations or have international controls exercised over them.

Apparently the bill is based upon a speech made by the Prime Minister to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Great Britain, during which he made reference to a number of things he would like to see existing in Canada with regard to foreign controls and foreign concerns. The Prime Minister said:

> We expect to make available a fair portion of their equity securities for purchase by Canadians;

This is something highly commendable. We would all like to see more opportunities provided for Canadian financiers to participate in the operation and formation of companies, be they foreign or otherwise; but the bill says nothing about that. The bill, which has been lauded by the Minister of Justice and the government as the last stepping stone to full economic development, does not say a word about that at all.

The Prime Minister also said that we expect them "to include Canadians on their boards of directors". However there is no reference in this bill to Canadians or anybody else being included on boards of directors. It makes no requirement that Canadians be appointed to boards of directors. Are we to balance that statement of the Prime Minister, which stated one of his great national goals was to have Canadians on boards of directors, against this piece of legislation? Were we to do that we could say that we do not believe the Prime Minister because the bill does not propose to carry out what the Prime Minister hoped would be effected.

Your Honour will remember that last session we spent hour after hour after hour until finally, after what seemed an interminably long time, we were able to get one small pipe line company, Aurora pipe lines, in the position of having Canadians as its directors. We had to put up a long battle to achieve that objective, an objective which was in concert with the attitude expressed by the Prime Minister. However the bill before us does not cover that point at all.

The Prime Minister also said he wanted foreign concerns "to make proper disclosure of their Canadian operations." The hon. member for Vancouver South, who has just spoken, said this bill does not allow for the making of proper disclosures. It allows for the making of certain disclosures but, as pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver South, who has studied this question at great length, the bill is worthless in that regard because it does not provide for the making of proper disclosure.

The Prime Minister also said he wants foreign companies "to employ competent Canadians in senior management and technical positions." Again that is a very worthwhile ideal but there is nothing about it in the bill. The Prime Minister also talked about foreign concerns conducting a fair share of their research in Canada, but under this government in recent years we have issued patents galore to United States parent companies in the pharmaceutical industry which have subsidiaries here in Canada. These two things do not add up; they do not balance the scale.

The Minister of Justice made some reference to the percentages of foreign ownership and control, stating that 1957 was the last year for which such statistics were available. I do not know whether the minister just did not know there were statistics available for 1959, or whether he deliberately left them out because they painted a much more difficult picture. According to statistics issued by the dominion bureau of statistics foreign control in our petroleum, natural gas and mining industries was 61 per cent in 1957—the same figure as the minister gave for foreign control of our mining industry in 1957—while two years later the percentage had risen to 63 per cent under the present government.

The minister now comes forward with this half-baked piece of legislation and says the government wants to reverse that trend and is seeking Canadian control. However this measure is not going to accomplish that aim. The minister wants to reverse a trend which has been accelerating during the term of his own administration. I cannot see how he will do that merely by requiring the filing of returns, merely by enacting a sort of national snooping law into the businesses of others. The government wants to stick its snoopy nose into everybody's business, for example, to find out how many male and female members a union has, and their nationalities. Maybe it is desirable to know this sort of thing but we would like to have some guarantee or assurance that this will produce a beneficial result towards the goal outlined by the government. I submit the bill does not do that. It merely requires unions and corporations—but not all corporations, there are those which the government thinks should not have to file returns, in fact 27 types in all—to file a list containing certain information, some of which will be public and some of which will be kept secret. In connection with the latter I understand the minister has some amendments to propose so that the secret information filed will become more secret. At any rate I gather that was the intent of his remarks.

I would like to know how this filing of statistics by businessmen and unions, already overburdened with demands for statistics from the government and the d.b.s., is going to move us towards economic independence. How is it going to reverse the trend of more foreign control, of the greater absentee landlordism and ownership which has been increasing under the present government? How is it going to reverse the trend of give-away programs in many provinces with respect to natural resources? How is it going to promote national development, as mentioned by the minister? How is it going to make businesses carry on in the way we would like Canadian businesses to operate? I do not believe it will have one iota of effect at all.

The minister made reference to the fact that he wants the Canadian people to be made aware of what is taking place in the operations of corporations and unions, but then he turns around and says he does not want them to be made aware of everything, that he wants certain things to be kept secret. I ask, is this bill going to allow the government to collect statistics, juggle them around to suit its own need, and then publish what it sees fit? The minister would be far better off to take the advice of the hon. member for Vancouver South who has studied the implications of this and other related matters, someone who is an expert in this field, someone who—

Mr. Argue: Order.

Mr. Howard: —in my opinion might be able to advise the Minister of Justice how this particular piece of legislation should be drafted. If the minister would take that advice, accept those suggestions and agree to put them into effect when the bill reaches the committee stage, perhaps we would be less critical of its effect. If the minister would earnestly say to us now that he meant all these things he spoke about, including understanding our economy, economic independence, and so on, but they really had nothing to do with the bill, then the house might have a better appreciation of whether to vote for or against the bill. At the moment, until I hear some clear indication from the minister when he closes the debate as to what is the real purpose of the bill, I am afraid I will be unable to make up my mind.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, if no one else has anything to say I will say just a few words. I do not really intend to speak on the bill itself, but very briefly to make an appeal to the minister about the procedure to be followed with relation to the bill. Having listened to the debate, having listened to the minister's own statement that he himself has already come to the conclusion that it would be desirable to propose certain amendments to the bill, having heard the thoughtful suggestions made by my hon. friend from Hull, having heard the views expressed by the hon. member for Timmins, the queries raised by the hon. member for Skeena, and the very thoughtful and thought-provoking observations about the limitations of the bill and the anaemic character of the bill expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver South, I believe that the government would save the time of the house, which they profess to be very anxious to do, and would be able to get on with other urgent business by sending this bill to a standing committee.

It could be sent to the committee on industrial relations, or if the government thought some other committee more appropriate I am sure we would be quite agreeable to sending it to whatever committee they suggest. In the committee these amendments could be carefully considered; time could be taken on them. I feel that if this course were followed, when the bill came back to the house after that kind of consideration it would probably take almost no time at all in committee of the whole. Meanwhile it is now only 25 minutes past nine o'clock and we could probably dispose of at least one more piece of legislation in the house this evening. The government knows how anxious we are, and have been all along, to get on with the essential business—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and to do it as rapidly as we can consistent with a proper consideration of the expenditure of the vast sums of money we are being asked to approve.

An hon. Member: Peanuts?

Mr. Pickersgill: I make this suggestion, that instead of continuing the rest of this evening in committee of the whole on a bill that, if it were carefully considered in a special committee could probably be disposed of on some other day in a very few minutes, we follow this course and try to get on with the other urgent business that the government is seeking to put before us.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much indeed the interest in this bill that has been evidenced by those who have spoken and by such helpful suggestions as have been made in the course of this debate on second reading. Perhaps in closing the debate I could deal at once with the suggestion repeated by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who has urged that we refer this bill to one of the standing committees for consideration. The hon. member based his suggestion on the idea that by so doing it would enable the house to get on with other urgent business. I would like to say just two or three things about that.

First I should say that in view of the interest and the encouraging degree of unanimity so far expressed with respect to this bill in the debate on second reading, I am satisfied that the committee of the whole house could scarcely be better occupied than in processing this bill through its various stages. I am also satisfied that this stage will not take too long and that the amendments which we have in mind, and which I outlined quite fully in my opening remarks, will generally be approved.

I must say that I do not find myself very much taken in by the other suggestion of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, which was that members of the official opposition are really anxious to get on with the essential business that is before the house for this session. This and other bills have been on the order paper since the early days of the session. Hon. members opposite have known full well precisely what was the legislative bill of fare had to be passed, and at no time so far have they shown the slightest disposition to give these matters a proper sense of proportion or expedite the business of this house.

Miss LaMarsh: Shame.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a very good way to get business through.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate says, "A very good way of getting business through". Sir, nothing at this session has sufficed to persuade the opposition that they should get business through, neither co-operation on our part nor occasionally a frank and bald statement as to what was the situation; nothing has so far persuaded the opposition that they should cease their obstructionist tactics. We have tried everything, and I think we must now just let matters take their course.

The proper way to proceed with bills, in my submission, is for them to be given second reading and then consideration in committee of the whole. That is the procedure we intend to follow and I can assure the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, as well as all other hon. members of the house, that such amendments as we propose we hope to have adequately considered in committee of the whole. It will not be our intention to rush them through. We hope that each clause of the bill will be adequately considered, with a sense of proportion, and that the arguments advanced will be relevant. That may be a forlorn hope but we hope it will be the attitude shown, because this is important, and in our view sensible, legislation.

With regard to the various points raised by hon. members opposite, I will try to deal with them in the order in which they were raised. The hon. member for Hull suggested that we have brought in this bill too late at the end of the session, and at the end of this parliament. Well, sir, he may be better informed than I am with respect to the end of the session. That question seems to trouble him a little. All I can say, however, is that this bill has been on the order paper since the beginning of the session and if my hon. friends had made it possible for us to bring it on for debate at an earlier time, we should have been very glad to do so. However, we are not asking them to rush it now; they can take all the time they wish, because we regard this as important legislation which should be adequately considered. If, therefore, there is at any time any suggestion that there is not adequate time to consider this bill, the house and the country will know where the responsibility lies: it lies squarely on the shoulders of the hon. member who made this suggestion, and his colleagues.

The hon. member for Timmins made an interesting observation at the opening of his remarks. He said that the house and the country have waited for the opening of the debate on Bill No. C-38 in somewhat the same way that the world waited for Colonel Glenn's flight in space. That suggested to my mind an interesting parallel. There are occasions, it is true, when persons go into orbit and we have been observing the gyrations of the new party, or the New Democratic party to which the hon. member belongs. If he was seeking to create or suggest a parallel between this bill and Colonel Glenn's flight, I can only suggest a parallel or similarity between Colonel Glenn's flight and the activities of his own party which seem to me to be even more striking, especially when one stops to reflect that although both have been in orbit, the significant difference is that whereas Colonel Glenn made a successful landing the hon. member's party is still away out in space.

Mr. Pickersgill: So is that figure of speech.

Mr. Argue: That took five minutes.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: That is not nearly as long as it will take the former party of the hon. member for Assiniboia to make a successful landing, and it is even a conspicuously shorter space of time than it will take the hon. gentleman's present party to make a successful landing. Even though he has found a temporary refuge I can assure him he is far from having made a safe landing.

Mr. Argue: Well.

Mr. Fulton: The suggestion has been made that the bill is defective because somehow or other it seeks to equate the corporations and the trade unions. I can only say that anyone who studies the bill will realize how ill founded is this criticism. Of course, it is not the purpose or the effect of this bill to make them the same; the sole purpose is to require both to report statistics. There is no other purpose, and I cannot see, on the basis of the arguments so far advanced, how anyone can suggest that there is anything improper in requiring the two types of organization to make returns in the one piece of legislation. That does not seem to me to indicate in any way that we are trying to equate the operations of trade unions and corporations. One has heard suggestions that we should get on with the business of the session. With that, I quite agree. Yet hon. members on the other side seem to suggest that instead of doing this thing efficiently and expeditiously by providing in the same piece of legislation for these returns, we should take further time in the house by introducing two separate pieces of legislation.

Further, the suggestion was made that the bill was defective in that the penalties provided for infringement are the same in respect to both corporations and unions. This criticism, again, surprised me. I can only point out in answer that this is a universal principle with respect to legislation. The principle is that penalties for the breach of a statute should be the same no matter who commits that breach. Does the hon. member who made that criticism really mean to imply what is inherent in his criticism, namely that there should be one law for the powerful and another for the weak? Certainly that has never been in my opinion a proper basis on which to found any provision setting forth a penalty for breach of statute.

The fact is that what we desire to acquire is information about the activities of those who control from outside certain elements of the Canadian economy, whether that control be exercised in the field of corporation activity or of trade union activity. So we have provided without discrimination that both segments of the economy should be required to make returns and be subject to the same penalty if there is any breach of the statute.

My hon. friend from Vancouver South made an interesting and constructive speech. It was pointed out by him that he has had bills on the order paper in previous sessions having as their object a similar purpose to that of this bill. That is true, and I should like to express my appreciation to him both for his interest in the subject and the contribution and studies he has made of it, also for the fact that he reminded me that I did not refer to those efforts in my introductory remarks. If there be any omission for which I should be blamed, I accept the criticism gladly. I had thought, however, that his interest in and his contribution to the subject was too well known to need specific reference by me. Indeed I thought it might even have been obvious without my saying so, that we, as a government, have profited by the contribution which he made to this subject himself and by the contributions to knowledge and thought on this subject made during those debates in the past.

Mr. Herridge: Rather belated, but we are glad to hear it.

Mr. Fulton: I do not know what the hon. member for Kootenay West regards as belated, my tribute to the hon. member for Vancouver South or his own, but I am glad he now realizes that his recognition has been belated.

The hon. member for Vancouver South put on record a number of statistics with respect to the extent of foreign ownership and I am sure he will agree with me that these reinforce the arguments in favour of this bill, arguments which suggest that it is timely now that we should take steps to determine the effect and extent of this foreign ownership. I appreciate that the hon. gentleman feels the bill is defective, in that it provides that much of the financial information to be submitted in the returns should be kept confidential. This is because as a result of the consideration we gave after Bill No. C-70 was introduced last session we decided that the representations made with respect to the discriminatory aspects of that bill were well founded. Accordingly, we decided that in the new bill introduced this session we should require the same kind of information to be filed, but by all companies whether private or public and whether Canadian owned or foreign controlled. Having made that decision, the point my hon. friend makes that it preserves somehow the competitive advantage of foreign companies to keep that information confidential is, I submit, not well taken. If my hon. friend will give due weight to the effect of what this bill requires, he will realize that all companies are now required to report. This includes, for instance, Canadian private companies, and these private companies are required to make returns under this bill which they are not otherwise required to make available to the public. Therefore, for us to have allowed that these returns might become public knowledge would have had the effect that information regarding the operations of Canadian private companies, to single out this one group, would have been available to their competitors, including foreign owned United States competitors, to the great advantage of those competitors.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, no one would suggest that we should take any action which would increase what my hon. friend has said is a competitive advantage already existing in favour of foreign owned companies. No, our conclusion was that because it is desirable that the government should obtain this information from all companies, including Canadian owned as well as foreign controlled, and private as well as public companies, that consideration outweighed the consideration in favour of making this information available in detail to the public; because to do so would place Canadian companies which now have the benefit of privacy with respect to certain of their operations at a disadvantage; would place that information at the disposal of their competitors who are controlled from outside the country and thus give their competitors an advantage which at the moment they do not have. We do not feel that these details of the operation of Canadian companies in the category I have mentioned should be exposed to their United States competitors.

As I said in opening the debate on second reading, we recognize that the bill is to an extent experimental, that this is a first step. It is a step that has never been taken before. As a result of this bill, the government, for the first time in our history, will be in possession of all the facts as to the operation of our economy, the influence on that economy of control of important segments exercised from outside the country; and by having the advantage of the information with respect to both Canadian owned and controlled organizations as well as the foreign owned and controlled organizations we can compare the facts and see the full impact on our economy of these foreign controlled operations, whether it be in the corporation or the union field. We can then, as a result of that information, assess the situation and base specific policies, either administrative or legislative, which we will present in the future, upon an intelligent appreciation of all the facts instead of upon conjecture, prejudice or only a partial appreciation of the facts.

This bill will enable us to develop policy in the field of ensuring effective Canadian control of the Canadian economy and, of course, the information it places at our disposal will also enable us to remedy any defects which may be disclosed as time goes on. In other words, we recognize this as an important step, but a first step, an experimental measure which time and experience may indicate requires certain amendments or modifications. We will be prepared to introduce those modifications on the basis of experience. I am convinced, however, that this step is so important that it is well justified in spite of any uncertainties or risks. Let me make clear that we are not uncertain as to our policy; I mean uncertainty only as to the very best and final way to go about implementing it. Nevertheless the objective to be accomplished in terms of ensuring control by Canadians of the Canadian economy is so important that any risks are well justified. I feel experience will show that this is one of the most important and far reaching steps, in terms of true national development and national policy, that any government has yet taken.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Fulton moved that the house go into committee of the whole on the said bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I should like to deplore once again the fact that the minister would not refer this bill to the standing committee on industrial relations where, I am convinced, it could have been improved so as to satisfy everybody, because the opposition wants the bill to prove as useful as it is designed to be.

Unfortunately, this was refused. We are in no position to impose our views; we would be defeated by the majority. We shall abide by this decision, even though we were unable to obtain the information we were entitled to get.

The minister says himself that this bill is important. Therefore, it would have been worth while to enable the public to express their views and objections, as was done for other bills. Those concerned should have been allowed to submit a brief likely to enlighten all hon. members. I am convinced that a great number of members on both sides of the house are far from being experts on that matter. We need the advice of experts to explain the principle of the causes we wish to defend.

Now, in the standing committee on industrial relations, we have the right to call experts in constitutional law. Some of them have greatly helped us in the past when they gave us their opinions. We could also have heard industrialists, successful businessmen. Those people could certainly have given us the information we need and which the government has not yet given us.

We could also have heard representatives of the Canadian Congress of Labour and other labour unions; indeed, those people could have enlightened us on the very nature of the principle of the bill. They could even have suggested amendments to make the bill more acceptable. The minister himself recognized that it is not entirely acceptable, since he intends to have his colleagues introduce amendments to improve it?

The most surprising point of all is that even though the government has been studying this bill since 1957, and has introduced Bill No. C-70 last year, we are presented this year with legislation which seems to have been prepared at the last minute.

We did not want to move any amendment during the debate on second reading because that would have resulted in a vote of non-confidence.

Once again I say that the principle of the bill is a good one and that the government is entitled to the information it is seeking. Now, what is the best way to go about obtaining it. That, we do not know.

Besides, the minister said that he introduced this bill under the authority of section 91 of the British North America Act. I have that section here, which, under subsection 1, paragraph 2, reads:

The regulation of trade and commerce.

However, if we look at the rights reserved to the provinces, we find that provinces also have the exclusive right to regulate trade.

Consequently, there seems to be some conflict, which could have been avoided if the minister had included in his bill a preamble in these words: "This bill has been drawn up under the authority of section 91, subsection 1, paragraph 2, of the British North America Act".

I think that would have made it much more acceptable from a constitutional point of view.

As it is, I am of those who believe that strictly provincial corporations and unions will have only one thing to do: refuse to give out the information asked for. It will then be up to the government to take legal action and the courts will decide whether it is really constitutional, as the minister claims it is.

Why compel corporations and unions to take such a stand when everyone would be ready to co-operate if the bill had been prepared properly. But it was not. Now, in some provinces, we might see provincial corporations and unions refuse to give out information and then, the courts may say later that the bill is anti-constitutional in this part.

That is why we ask once again the minister—which he seems to ignore—why he does not prepare a bill in which it would be clearly indicated that the bill is based on section 91, subsection 1, paragraph 2 of the British North America Act. We would then see clearly that the information concerns trade and commerce.

Consequently, the act would become much clearer, much more precise, much more acceptable.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go over the discussion we had previously because when we come to certain sentences we will undoubtedly have some remarks to make; for the time being, I ask the minister to explain the preamble further, which would make this bill more in keeping with provincial laws.

Now, if the minister refuses to accept this suggestion—I know that there are not nearly enough of us to oppose it—we will bow to the demands of a government which does not want to listen to reason.

(Text):

Mr. Howard: I do not wish to make any general comments, Mr. Chairman. However, in opening the debate on second reading the minister indicated that one of his colleagues, if one was available at that time, would move an amendment to clause 14 and that there would also be some consequential amendments to other parts of the bill. I wonder whether the minister would be disposed to make available either to the committee—although this procedure may be a bit irregular—or perhaps in a more private way to representatives of both the official opposition and ourselves the amendments which he proposes to have moved, in order that over the evening and tomorrow morning we may be able to look at them and associate them with the rest of the bill.

Mr. Fulton: Before I reply to the last suggestion, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could deal briefly with the remarks of the hon. member for Hull. I think he missed the point of my remarks in opening the debate on second reading when I said that we relied primarily upon subheading 6 of section 91 of the British North America Act as the constitutional authority for this bill. I am confident that there may be other heads of section 91 upon which we could rely for such authority. It seems to me that this is an answer to the hon. member's suggestion that we should insert a preamble defining, as I understood him to say, precisely the provision upon which we rely. Certainly we do not rely precisely or exclusively on the trade and commerce heading. As I said, heading 6 appeals to us. However, I think there are others. There are also general provisions upon which we rely with respect to federal jurisdiction. I think it would be extremely unwise in a bill of this sort to attempt to define with particularity precisely the constitutional grounds upon which we rely as to the validity of the legislation. In saying that I do not mean to imply that we have not examined the point with precision and particularity. We have done so and we are satisfied that this bill is within the constitutional authority of parliament.

With regard to the amendments referred to by the hon. member for Skeena may I say that the consequential amendments, while they may be fairly numerous, are minor in nature. I can give him and the committee that assurance. They are changes in the designation of the minister and of officials holding responsibility arising largely out of the decision to entrust the dominion bureau of statistics with responsibility for the reception in the first place of these returns, and the custody of part B. The amendments to all the other portions of the act arise out of the major amendments to clause 14. The amendment to clause 14 affects the definition of official persons and their conduct in connection with the custody of information that comes to them. It does not in itself have very many consequential amendments. The consequential amendments derive mainly from the decision to give the bureau of statistics custody, as I have said. I therefore do not really think there is any necessity for anticipating the amendment to clause 14 at this stage.

Mr. Brunsden: Ten o'clock.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the house leader could indicate the urgent and important business the government proposes to bring before us tomorrow and each succeeding day of this week so that the opposition will be well prepared to expedite that business.

Mr. Churchill: I welcome the change of heart.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no change of heart whatever.

Mr. Churchill: All government business is important. May I stress that fact. Of course it is also urgent. Otherwise it would not be before hon. members. The first item tomorrow will be the bill based on the resolution which was passed today dealing with amendments to the Judges Act and then we will carry on in the committee stage with Bill No. C-38 which we have just been considering. Then we will follow with the resolution in the name of the Prime Minister dealing with the electoral boundaries commission. Then we shall take second reading of Bill No. S-19, to amend the Canada Grain Act. That appears to be the order in which these items will be taken tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the house leader if we can be reasonably sure there will not be a change of program, that the Prime Minister will proceed with the resolution, and that this indication of urgency would mean that redistribution is to take place before there is an election?

Mr. Churchill: There are far too many questions here. However, in view of the tremendous burdens which fall upon a prime minister, I am sure the house would be perfectly agreeable to any shift in the order of business to accommodate him. It is just normal.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SECOND AND THIRD REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT

Mr. G. W. Montgomery (Victoria-Carleton) presented the second and third reports of the standing committee on veterans affairs, and moved that the second report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

COTTON TEXTILES—IMPOSITION OF EXPORT QUOTAS BY HONG KONG

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that an international short term arrangement on trade in cotton textiles was negotiated in Geneva last July. Canada signed the arrangement on September 5 and it came into force on October 1, for a period of one year. On February 16 I tabled in the house a copy of a long term arrangement which was being submitted to the governments of participating countries for approval. It is envisaged that the long term arrangement would come into effect on October 1 of this year, when the short term arrangement expires.

These arrangements are aimed at expanding the export opportunities of less developed countries, while at the same time preventing disruption in the domestic markets of importing countries.

Hong Kong is a substantial supplier of very low cost cotton textile goods to Canada. Early this year there was a noticeable increase in Hong Kong's exports to Canada of one important category, cotton slacks and shorts. The colony's exports of this category to Canada had more than doubled between 1958 and 1959. They then increased by a further 80 per cent in 1960 to a level of about 300,000 dozen. This was, by quantity, about 18 per cent of the total market. In 1961 there was a slight decline, which was part of the general falling off in Hong Kong's exports of textiles to Canada. However, shipments of cotton slacks and shorts in December and in January of this year gave every indication that exports would rise rapidly and cause further disruption in the Canadian market.

In February the Canadian government requested Hong Kong to impose export restraints under the terms of the short term arrangement. This arrangement provides that an importing country may request an exporting country to apply restraints at a level not lower than actual shipments in the year ended June 30, 1961. Last week Mr. H. A. Angus, director of Hong Kong's department of commerce and industry, visited Ottawa and held discussions with Canadian government officials. As a result of these discussions Hong Kong has agreed to impose export restraints, in accordance with the provisions of the Geneva agreement, totalling 255,000 dozen cotton slacks and shorts, divided as follows: men's 70,000 dozen; women's, 55,000 dozen; children's, 130,000 dozen, for the period ending October 1, 1962.

The United States government has also requested Hong Kong to impose restraints on exports of a number of cotton textile items. On March 19 the United States government announced that it would prohibit the importation for consumption of certain shipments from Hong Kong. This naturally gave rise to some concern in Canada lest large quantities of goods ordered for the United States market be diverted to our market. This possibility was discussed with the visiting Hong Kong officials in connection with their future licensing arrangements. Both sides agreed that it was unlikely that serious problems of this kind would arise for Canada.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I am sure the textile industry, which has been experiencing some difficulty, will welcome the announcement indicating exactly what has been done in this field as a result of the agreement announced by the minister.

I would point out, however, that this is the first time in my recollection that I have heard a minister, on motions, merely amplify remarks made by a private member in the previous day's debate on a private member's motion. The hon. member for Sherbrooke made the announcement on this subject at five o'clock yesterday. However, to the extent supplements that announcement, we welcome that the minister's statement amplifies and it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Members of this group wish to thank the minister for confirming the statement made yesterday by the hon. member for Sherbrooke. In view of the fact that the announcement we have just heard was made by the minister on this occasion, we shall examine its contents carefully and express our opinions at a later date.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BRAZIL—THREATENED EXPROPRIATION OF CANADIAN OWNED COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government has made any diplomatic representations to the government of Brazil regarding the reported threatened expropriation of Canadian undertakings in that country?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, shortly put the answer is no. There were no suggestions or requests on the part of officials or officers of Brazilian Traction for any action to be taken in this regard; therefore none was taken.

CIVIL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED BREACH OF SECURITY RESPECTING HEADQUARTERS LOCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister based on a most unusual report in today's issue of the Ottawa Journal. In view of a report in today's issue of that newspaper that Canadian Aviation Electronics in a report to shareholders states that it turned over to the Canadian army signals at Carp, Ontario in late 1961 a sophisticated computer tied into NORAD and an advanced electronics display system that will plot air, ground and nuclear detonations activity on a large screen and will keep the army's civil defence teams immediately up to date; and since we thus have revealed the location of government survival and defence operations in the event of nuclear attack, has the Prime Minister any comment to make on this incredible breach of security, or will he have the matter looked into?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the general statements made by the hon. gentleman. If I were to answer one way or the other I might be giving information that might be a breach of security. However, in not giving information I do not want it taken that there has been a breach of security. The interpretation placed by the hon. member upon the actual words and expressions used in the article is not, as I see it, borne out by the facts.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister, I take it, does not consider there has been a breach of security in this article?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Questions of breaches of security, Mr. Speaker, are never subject to discussion in the House of Commons.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—REPORTED PLAN TO ESTABLISH HEAVY WATER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister prepared to comment on reports that Dupont of Canada, Limited, are negotiating with the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia on a $50 million plant for the Sydney area to produce heavy water for atomic reactors?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO REGARD FOR BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to our dedicated Minister of Transport. Could he tell the house if Canada's bilingual character will be respected within the Canadian coast guard, the establishment of which he recently announced?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, knowing the constant interest shown by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm in the cause of bilingualism, I am glad to be able to inform him that instructions have been given to the effect that badges, posters and other signs are to be prepared in both languages.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF ENGLISH SPEAKING VICE PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of his violent attacks against Canadian National authorities when he sat in opposition because there was no French speaking vice president on the board of directors, how can the minister justify the recent appointment of one more English speaking vice president to the board of directors of the Canadian National?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when my predecessors were spokesmen for the Canadian National in this house, the reason they gave, every time we asked such a question, was that this matter concerned the Canadian National administration. Indeed, everyone knows that the vice presidents of the C.N.R. are appointed by the corporation. However, since the Conservatives have been in power and since my appointment as Minister of Transport, the number of directors was raised from seven to twelve and there are now three French Canadians among C.N.R. directors.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Is it not true that the minister stated on numerous occasions that it was important that one of the vice presidents of the C.N.R. be a French Canadian.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, it is true that I have always asked in the past to have more French-speaking representatives in the C.N.R. administration, and we have dealt with the problem by appointing three French speaking directors during the last session.

Mr. Pigeon: That is much better than when the hon. member for Laurier was minister of transport.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESIGNATION OF SECRETARY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in my absence the hon. member for Gloucester asked whether I could give him any information regarding the resignation of the secretary of the national energy board. Mr. Warren Armstrong, who has held that post for some time and has done an excellent job as secretary has requested permission to return to the practice of law, which permission, of course, has been granted and his resignation is effective today. We are very sorry to lose the service of Mr. Armstrong, as he has been a very outstanding secretary, but we wish him the very best of success in the continuation of the practice of his chosen profession.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BELLECHASSE—INVESTIGATION INTO ACTIVITIES OF RETURNING OFFICER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State. Could the minister inform the house about the investigation on the returning officer's activities in the riding of Bellechasse?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I stated earlier, this investigation is being conducted by the R.C.M.P. under the direction of Mr. Castonguay. As soon as he has communicated to me the results of the investigation, I shall be pleased to inform my hon. friends.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house which government appointed the chief electoral officer?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is asking for information which is readily available to all hon. members of the house.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEAT INSPECTION—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question arises out of a comment made by Ontario health minister Dr. Dymond that only Ontario and Manitoba were sympathetic toward a federal-provincial meeting on the subject of meat inspection as proposed by the minister. Can the minister indicate the present situation with regard to these talks, and any alternative plans if such proposals are unacceptable to the majority of the provinces?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the ministers of health for Ontario and Manitoba indicated that they would prefer to have a conference. Judging by the replies of the other ministers from whom I have heard, not all having replied, there did not seem to be sufficient indication for a full fledged conference. Incidentally, I am meeting Hon. Dr. Dymond in Toronto tomorrow and will be discussing this matter with him, but the whole matter has been referred to the dominion council on health which will be meeting here about the middle of the month.

REPORTED EXCESS OF VITAMIN D IN FOODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has his attention been drawn to a statement by Dr. William Cochrane, who is indicated as associate professor of pediatrics at Dalhousie University in Halifax, to the effect that a large number of foods and food preparations in Canada contain excessive amounts of vitamin D and that this is somewhat alarming? Would the minister care to comment on this matter?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article, and naturally I would have to examine it very carefully before commenting.

AIRPORTS

ALMA, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO PAVING AND LIGHTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger Parizeau (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? Could the minister tell the house if his department intends to pave the airport at Alma and to instal a lighting system?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the installation of the lighting system has already been approved by the treasury board. With regard to the paving, my department has submitted to the treasury board tenders to that effect.

Everything leads me to believe that the paving will be done this year.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT TO BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has Mr. G. Russell Boucher, former member of parliament for the constituency of Carleton, been appointed to the air transport board? If so, what are his specialized qualifications for this highly technical position?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the air transport board is one of the outstanding judicial bodies of the present government and Mr. Russell Boucher is one of the outstanding lawyers of central Canada. We were very pleased that we could secure his services for this very important appointment.

INCOME TAX

EXAMINATION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION BY JUSTICE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he has received copies of Bill No. C-82, which was introduced yesterday, pursuant to standing order No. 85 with relation to the minister's duties under the bill of rights.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have received it. I did not regard the matter as of such supreme importance that I should shelve my other duties to look for it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Arrogance again.

[Later:]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be allowed to supplement the answer I gave a moment ago. I was not aware that my hon. friend was referring to the bill which was defeated on first reading yesterday. I thought he was referring to Bill No. C-81. However, in so far as this question refers to Bill No. C-82, I think I should say that fortunately the house became aware of the ruse or device which the hon. member was adopting in trying to bring this matter before the house in a manner which was really not possible—

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Fulton: The house, however, having divided—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, such arrogance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would both hon. members resume their seats? The minister is replying to a question, and a point of order has arisen with respect to his reply. Therefore I feel I should interrupt him to hear the point of order.

Mr. Fulton: I have not made my reply yet, Your Honour.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I feel, sir, that since the minister is seeking to raise a matter that was settled by the house yesterday, this is a contravention of the rules that should not be permitted.

Mr. Fulton: Quite the contrary. I was seeking to explain why this bill not only has not come to my attention but will, I understand, never come to my attention simply because the house defeated it yesterday on first reading. Therefore it is not before the house, but my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate does not seem to appreciate that.

Mr. Benidickson: A new form of closure.

Mr. Howard: I pose a supplementary question to the minister. Is he aware that he himself, being a member of the rules committee last year, participated in proposing a standing order which requires him to do just what he is talking about?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is replying with argument rather than putting a supplementary question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—LAY-OFFS OF MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Trinity-Conception asked me a question concerning lay-offs of Bell island miners. The hon. member for St. John's East has also made inquiries about this matter. The officials of the unemployment insurance commission at St. John's advise me that they have completed interviewing and registering the miners in question. I may say that some 600 miners were registered on Bell island by officials sent there for that purpose. These applications are now being processed.

There are some vacancies on file in the local office for mining and construction employment in Labrador. The St. John's office now has about 360 vacancies listed. About 175 of these are in mining and construction. This figure should expand when various mining areas in Quebec and Newfoundland are canvassed. My officials are also canvassing mining centres in Quebec and other areas in order to endeavour to place as many of the Bell island miners as are willing to accept employment away from the island. This process will continue until such time as we are successful in placing as many as can be placed. I will be pleased to make further reports from time to time.

CO-OPERATIVES

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION PERMITTING FEDERAL INCORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of the long-standing request of co-operative organizations for the introduction of legislation to provide for the federal incorporation of co-operatives. In view of the intimation of the Prime Minister last year that this question was being studied, could he say whether a decision has been reached in this regard and whether legislation will be introduced during the present session?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Naturally the matter is one that has received consideration. The other question as to what action the government will take is one that will be answered when it is appropriate to do so. However, I suggest that before we start looking for new fields of legislation the hon. gentleman, in his new position in opposition, might devote himself to seeing that those matters which were in the speech from the throne receive attention.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED SUGGESTION FROM U.S. GOVERNMENT RESPECTING RATIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can say whether it is a fact that the President of the United States, the secretary of state or someone on behalf of the government of the United States has indicated to the Canadian government its desire to have the Columbia treaty implemented as quickly as possible? At the same time can the minister say whether or not there has been a threat that the United States will not carry out its commitment unless action is taken by this government?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I believe Mr. Speaker, this question was dealt with while I was in Geneva.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the Secretary of State for External Affairs could indicate when this was dealt with then it would be possible to accept his reply, but I suggest to Your Honour that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not aware of it. Nevertheless the suggestion made just now to the hon. gentleman by the Prime Minister is in error.

Mr. Green: I think this was dealt with in the house while I was in Geneva.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ADDITIONAL ONTARIO JUDGES

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-84, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Caron: May I ask, is this bill available and has it been printed in English and French?

The Deputy Chairman: I am just waiting to ascertain if that is the situation.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the bill is No. C-84 and it has been distributed to hon. members. It is in our books. It is a simple bill of only two clauses.

The Deputy Chairman: The chairman is just waiting for his copy of the bill, if the committee will bear with me for just a minute or two.

On clause 1.

Mr. Caron: Has the bill been printed in both French and English?

The Deputy Chairman: I am advised that the bill has been printed in both languages and has been distributed.

Mr. Benidickson: Earlier in the session, after a report from Mr. Silk was made public, the Minister of Justice was asked about some matters that required federal co-operation, and I take it that the matter of the appointment of a chief judge and county court and district court judges in Ontario was referred to at that time. However, I do not know if the minister was asked whether officials of the Ontario government and the attorney general had approached him with respect to a very significant item in Mr. Silk's report, which suggested that in Ontario jurisdiction with respect to divorces might very well be assumed by district and county court judges.

Some parts of the northwestern area of the province are just as far away from the seat of government as is Halifax, and are only visited by supreme court judges approximately twice a year. Mr. Silk's recommendation has considerable merit, and I would ask the minister whether he has been in consultation with the government of Ontario with respect to consequential federal amendments that might be necessary to permit county and district court judges in Ontario to assume jurisdiction for hearing divorce petitions.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking from recollection; therefore I would have to speak subject to correction. About all I can say is that I have been furnished with a copy of the Silk report, but I do not recall that there has been what I would call specific consultation on the question of the divorce jurisdiction of district and county courts. If I am correct in my understanding I would put it this way, that I think it is a matter upon which there would have to be consultation and discussion as to appropriate amendments and approval at the various stages. That kind of discussion, if it is involved, has not yet been held.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, yesterday at the resolution stage of this bill the minister made reference to the appointment of one of the judges of the supreme court of Ontario to become chief justice of Cyprus for a period of six years, and indicated that this was one of the reasons he was asking for an increase of two in the number of judges in the trial division of the supreme court of Ontario.

I want to ask the minister, does he envisage appointing a judge to the supreme court of Ontario for a period of six years only? His treatment of the subject yesterday is capable of that construction, and I wish the minister would clarify the point.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure the hon. member, who has made an exhaustive study of these matters, knows that it would not be possible for me to make an appointment for a period of six years only, and no such course of action is intended.

Mr. McIlraith: That is what I understood was the situation, but I think the minister's remarks, if they are re-examined, rather indicate that one of the judges might be appointed for the period during which Mr. Justice Wilson is absent on his duties as chief justice of Cyprus. I wanted to clarify that point for the record.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have read my remarks in yesterday's Hansard and I do not think they are capable of any such interpretation. I simply pointed out that Mr. Justice Wilson has been given leave of absence without pay in order that he might take up his appointment as chief justice of Cyprus, an appointment which, as I pointed out, normally extends for a period of six years. My remarks had no reference to the duration of the appointment of any other judge to the trial division of the supreme court of Ontario.

Mr. McIlraith: I thank the minister for clarifying the matter. I think if he re-examines his remarks of yesterday he will find an ambiguity in them which I think it is desirable to have clarified for the record. That is all I was seeking to do.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I rather anticipated when I saw the bill that it would make provision for special remuneration for a chief county court judge. I do not see that this is the intention of the government, and it surprises me somewhat. When I spoke earlier I should have joined in the remarks that were made yesterday by the hon. member for Ottawa West. I am not going to repeat them in any shape or form, because I agree in every respect with what he said on the matter of salaries.

We have here a salary of $10,500 for the new chief judge who will supervise 78 judges and junior judges of the country and district courts of Ontario. As the hon. member for Ottawa West said yesterday, that is rather unsatisfactory. I thought the hon. member made a very good comparison in this respect. When the minister requires senior, competent legal counsel even from young members of the bar sometimes, we find in the estimates at page 156 that he pays a deputy minister with legal talent $21,000; he pays two associate deputy ministers $19,000 each; he pays two assistant deputy ministers $17,750 each; two senior advisory counsel, $16,000 each; four senior advisory counsel $15,000 each, and one senior advisory counsel $14,000. Another salary range is between $12,000 and $14,000, and there are 15 who in the normal course of salary increases, based on relatively short term service, rise to a salary of $12,000.

I thought this was a very telling point in favour of a reconsideration of the present salary offered to county and district court judges in Ontario as presented yesterday by the hon. member for Ottawa West. It was pointed out in the Ontario house, I think, that all these judges would normally carry out surrogate court work and would receive a remuneration of $1,500 from the province, but there was considerable vagueness about some of these other opportunities to which the Minister of Justice referred yesterday. Because of this vagueness, and the suggestion that perhaps this was something that was available to all; because it was not specific and we have little idea of how it relates to some of the figures that I have specifically indicated, to which reference was made yesterday in only general terms in the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa West, I feel that perhaps there is some unfairness in the treatment of judges of the county and district courts of Ontario.

The minister indicated that this matter is under review, but I also read that these gentlemen had a spokesman about three weeks ago, Judge Cooper of Sudbury, who indicated that he thought they were very dissatisfied with their place in life. As I say, I merely wish to endorse in every way what the hon. member for Ottawa West said yesterday as to their importance in the judicial system. It is all the more important in areas such as the one I represent, where we have two district courts and where we very seldom, because of distance, have an opportunity to receive judicial decisions from a higher level such as the supreme court of Ontario. As a consequence litigants on both sides consent to the hearing of civil actions by district court judges in our area. Indeed, this also applies to other actions which would normally be dealt with by supreme court judges where the counties are nearer Toronto.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister whether he has had an opportunity to check on the progress of the legislation being sought in the Ontario legislature to provide the requirement for these additional judges.

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it has yet passed the Ontario house. I know that it has been introduced there, and I believe it has been referred to a committee in that house.

Mr. McIlraith: I just want to point out again, as I did yesterday, that the minister is coming before this house and this committee with legislation that is purely hypothetical in its nature, and is asking us to create the authority to appoint judges before there is any requirement for those judges and before the number required has been dealt with by the legislative body having jurisdiction. It seems to me that this is a most unusual course, and there has been no satisfactory explanation from the minister as to why he should seek to follow this unusual course.

Mr. Fulton: With deference, there has been a satisfactory explanation given inasmuch as I have already pointed out that Mr. Justice Wilson has taken up his appointment in Cyprus, having been granted leave of absence without pay, and there is, as I think the hon. member for Ottawa West will agree, considerable urgency about a replacement for at least that position. In addition, as I think we are both in agreement, legislation is also required for the appointment of a further extra judge for the trial division of the high court of Ontario.

It therefore seems to me proper that we should introduce into this house the necessary legislation to enable the appointments to be made at the earliest possible date. The hon. gentleman suggested yesterday that we should carry on our business with expedition and dispatch. I do not expect either the house or the committee to deal with legislation without proper questioning, but I simply pointed out that no appointment can be made under this legislation until the necessary legislation is passed by the Ontario house. The length of time taken here is naturally dependant on hon. members opposite. If they want to take all day on this, they can do so; that is their business. But there is now a need for extra judges in the high court of Ontario, and I suggest that is the sort of explanation the hon. member is seeking.

Mr. McIlraith: I think the minister is altogether unfair in his remarks. On the second reading of this bill the opposition did not take up any of the time of the house. It went through without debate. In the committee stage we have less than 20 minutes. Surely the minister cannot complain that the opposition has been taking up the time of this committee—

Mr. Fulton: I am not complaining. I am merely answering.

Mr. McIlraith: I would point out that if the Ontario legislature does not pass this legislation, the present bill will be of no effect whatever.

Mr. Fulton: You are wrong.

Mr. McIlraith: I would point out also that my remarks are addressed to clause 2 of the bill, and I want to read that clause to the minister, because apparently he has not observed it:

> 2. Paragraph (a) of section 19 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> (a) One chief judge and seventy eight judges and junior judges of the county and district courts, each $10,500.

The "said act" referred to is, of course, the Judges Act. My remarks had reference to the country court judges and the situation with respect to the changes in the county court judges' legislation in the province. The reference to the appointment of new high court judges is not applicable to that situation and has no relevance.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall like to say a word on this point, since it has been raised. We have been lectured recently about holding up urgent legislation. So far as we know, this parliament is going on through a normal session. The legislature of Ontario has not done its part in this process, so the present legislation can by no stretch of imagination be regarded as urgent, since it cannot possibly come into effect until the Ontario legislation has been enacted. This bill would not take nearly as long if the legislature of Ontario had acted as it may now, because we would not have this additional subject of discussion.

Here we are told that urgent matters are being held up. At the same time we are having hypothetical questions placed before us which properly should not be brought before the federal parliament until the necessary provision has been made by the Ontario legislature. So unless the government has some ulterior motive which it is not disclosing to this house the present legislation is not urgent at all.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I should like to tell the hon. member for Ottawa West that there is no area in which this legislation is more urgently needed than in the area represented by the hon. member for Ottawa West and myself.

Mr. McIlraith: In reply to that remark let me say that the hon. member for Carleton knows perfectly well that the appointments cannot be made until the Ontario legislature has passed legislation dealing with this matter. The correct way to proceed is to have the Ontario legislation passed and then to take further steps here. We are now being asked to pass legislation which may well prove to be utterly useless, though I hope it will not.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think there is any need to prolong this discussion. It seems to me the mere fact that over the 95 years since confederation it has been customary to wait until a provincial legislature has acted to create vacancies before we introduced a bill here to provide the salaries for the appointments does not necessarily mean we should slavishly follow that system every time, especially when it has been demonstrated, and agreed by the hon. member for Ottawa West, that there is urgency about making appointments. These judges are needed. I think we are entitled to take what I believe the courts would call judicial notice of the fact that a bill has been introduced in the Ontario legislature, and I think we are entitled to assume that the Ontario legislature may well pass that legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: And may well not.

Mr. Fulton: As I pointed out yesterday, if the vacancies are not created there the appointments cannot be made, so we are not asking for any power which we can exercise regardless of whether or not we have the right to do so. All we are asking is that this house should place us in a position to make the appointments at the earliest possible moment when the vacancies are created, and in view of the urgent situation in the district courts here and in the county of Carleton I must say I am surprised to hear the hon. member for Ottawa West suggest we should have delayed the introduction of this bill.

Mr. McIlraith: I am not suggesting the minister should have delayed the introduction of this bill. I am suggesting that there should be greater competence on the part of the minister in the treatment of this house when he is fulfilling his responsibility as a minister of the crown. He knows perfectly well that there undoubtedly is a need for the Ontario legislature to rearrange its judicial districts in the county court field and increase the numbers of judges.

Mr. Fulton: Of course I do.

Mr. McIlraith: He knows perfectly well that the Ontario legislature has jurisdiction over the subject, and that until that legislature takes action the legislative body here cannot do anything effective about the appointments. This being the case, the minister has put this house in the position that if the Ontario legislative body does not complete the legislation now before it—as well it might not, if one reads the reports of certain inquiries going on in that province—

An hon. Member: What has that got to do with the bill?

Mr. McIlraith: I will tell the hon. member if he will listen.

An hon. Member: Make it perfectly clear, will you?

Mr. McIlraith: I would only wish to reply to a brilliant interjection like that in the very kindest of language. I must say that the brilliance of the interjection is not clear to all of us. It may be clear to some in the house. In any event, what this has to do with us in this committee can easily be explained. The minister, on his own admission, is aware that this legislation may never be used. If it is not used, then this government will be guilty of having taken the time of this house from business which it regards as of an urgent nature; supplementary estimates, for instance. It is also needlessly spending the taxpayer's money and wasting the time of parliament.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What amazes me, Mr. Chairman, is that my friend the hon. member for Ottawa West should be seeking to delay dealing with what is an emergency situation in the city of Ottawa and county of Carleton.

Mr. McIlraith: I wish to deal with that point, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Carleton is seeking to completely mislead the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: And deliberately.

Mr. McIlraith: His charge is a serious charge to have made about me. The minister has referred to another situation which has nothing to do with this bill, is not remedied by this bill and is not dealt with by this bill. I think that should be pointed out in fairness to all concerned. This bill provides for an increase in the number of county court judges and can have effect only after the provincial legislation is enacted and becomes law, and not before then.

As to wasting time, I wish to draw attention to the arrogance of this government in dealing with the subject matter of delay and waste of time. Surely we have come to a sad state here if parliament cannot take 25 minutes to deal with the second reading and committee stages of a bill which is of significance dealing with additional appointments to the judiciary of this country. Surely the government and—what shall I call them?—its senior supporters have reached a strange state of arrogance if that is the position that is being taken, and if every time an opposition member rises to ask a question or to put forward a point of view on a bill he is met with that specious charge.

Mr. Fulton: Precisely, Mr. Chairman. I realize it is no use striving for the last word because my hon. friends opposite are not amenable to arguments of logic. But Your Honour must recall, as the committee will recall, that the ones who raised this question of wasting time were those seated opposite. I have not accused them of wasting time. They have accused me of wasting the time of the house—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benidickson: The Minister of Finance has also contributed to wasting the time of parliament.

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friends opposite did not wish to waste time they would wait until I have finished. This bill has taken in all, so far, certainly less than an hour. I do not think that is a waste of the time of this house in relation to a measure of this importance. I have not suggested that the time has been wasted. It is my hon. friends opposite who have contended that the government has been wasting time in introducing legislation, in this instance designed to facilitate the appointment of additional judges. The government has been accused of wasting time in introducing urgently needed legislation. If there has been any time wasted it has been that time wasted by my hon. friends opposite in taking the time of the house to advance futile arguments of that nature.

Mr. Pickersgill: The argument is not futile at all, Mr. Chairman. As a matter of fact there is an important constitutional principle involved in the issue before us. This government has assumed that the equally arrogant government of Ontario—and I am just supplying the words for them—merely because it introduced a bill into that legislature is necessarily going to be successful in having that bill passed.

Mr. Fulton: Not at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then why are we wasting the time of this parliament discussing a measure that cannot have effect until the Ontario legislature has passed the legislation introduced in that house?

Mr. Fulton: Who is wasting time? You are wasting time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the hon. gentleman a moment ago, when he asked not to be interrupted, suggested that these interruptions were a waste of time. I would remind the hon. gentleman of his own recipe.

As I was saying when I was interrupted by the Minister of Justice, this legislation cannot have any validity until the Ontario legislature has acted. We do not know how it is going to act. Indeed, in the present disturbed state of opinion in the province of Ontario it is quite possible that that legislature may be dissolved long before this parliament is, without any more legislation being passed, and therefore it is presumptuous of us to assume that that legislature will act. In doing so we are taking them for granted; we are assuming the legislature is going to do something it may never do.

I say, sir, that this bill should never have been introduced at all until the Ontario legislature had acted. This legislation could then have been introduced and it would have been passed very quickly, because there has never been any hold up on these bills once the legislature has acted. There is only one reason why the government is trying to slip this thing through at this stage. I can think of only one reason, but I will not seek to discuss it at this point because anyone can well imagine what it is. But the real point is that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the leader of the house have time after time said that the members of the opposition were obstructing and holding up urgent business in this house by debating the millions and millions and millions they are spending. They have said that in discussing the estimates we have been holding up urgent business. I say that is urgent business in this house; this is not urgent yet, until the Ontario legislature has acted.

When the government suspend the consideration of the expenditures for the last fiscal year, what urgent business do they bring before us? They present a hypothetical piece of legislation that can have no effect until the Ontario legislature has acted, if it decides to act. That is the most urgent thing they can think of to bring before this parliament now, something that cannot possibly come into effect until the legislature has acted. For that they put off consideration of supply, consideration of the budget and consideration of measures over which this parliament has some control.

I think it needs to be underlined that this is the government's idea of what is urgent business. Now, what possible benefit can it be to the government to get this legislation passed now? It can only be of benefit if they want to be sure in case the Ontario legislature does act, which we do not know anything about until it has acted, that they have a little bit of patronage. That can be their only reason for trying to rush this thing through. If they have some intention of terminating the life of this parliament they might wish to get this legislation passed before the Ontario legislature has acted so they can have the patronage during the rest of their very short life as a government.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend's arguments were not so pitiful they would be almost humorous. The hon. gentleman said we insisted upon interrupting the consideration of the final supplementary estimates. It became perfectly obvious some days ago that my hon. friends opposite were not prepared to deal seriously with supplementary estimates. They are the last persons who should make a charge of that kind. They are the most wrong persons in the world to claim that the supplementary estimates have been improperly set aside, because it was my hon. friends opposite who frustrated and interfered and day after day made it perfectly clear that they were not prepared to deal with the supplementary estimates in an efficient, orderly and proportionate manner; indeed, it was abundantly evident that they were not prepared to deal in that manner with anything we might bring before the house.

My hon. friend also said we are trying to slip this bill through.

Mr. Pickersgill: So you are.

Mr. Fulton: Again this is a matter which might be humorous were it not for the fact that it is so pitiful. It will be recalled that yesterday I took pains to point out to the house our position in this regard. At first I was in error in my recollection. I said the bill would come into effect only on proclamation; then I corrected myself and said we left out the provision concerning proclamation, and that this bill would go through but the appointments could be made only after the Ontario legislature acted to create the vacancies. For my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who prides himself on being a parliamentarian, to use words like "slip through" and "improper haste" under those circumstances—

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not use the phrase "improper haste".

Mr. Fulton: Well, my hon. friend has used every other phrase he could think of; apparently he simply did not think of that one. If he had, I am sure he would have wasted the time of the house by using it.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is an impropriety.

Mr. Fulton: For the hon. member to suggest we are slipping through something here demonstrates only the deviousness of my hon. friend's mind that he exercised so frequently when he was over here on this side of the chamber, even to the point that the people of Canada finally put him over there on the other side where he will remain a long time, certainly as long as he persists in indulging in the kind of tactics in which he is now indulging.

So far as the introduction of this bill now is concerned, we come back to two or three simple propositions. There is an urgent need for the appointment of extra district and county court judges in the city of Ottawa and county of Carleton. My friend the hon. member for Ottawa West who first raised this matter now looks embarrassed and wishes he had not raised it.

Mr. McIlraith: He does not.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman fully appreciates that this is an urgent bill necessary to the due administration of justice in his own district. We on this side of the chamber have no apologies to make for introducing this bill, which is urgently needed, under which appointments will be made if and when the legislature of Ontario creates the vacancies, a course upon which that house is presently embarked. If for any reason the bill does not go through in the Ontario legislature, or if the bill is amended, we will nevertheless have authority to make such appointments as will then have been created in the district and county courts of Ontario.

Why my hon. friends, who claim to be wanting things to be done expeditiously, should insist that we follow an outdated, antidiluvian process every time when by a simple process such as that which we are now following, taking this house into our confidence as to what we are doing, we can place ourselves in a position to make appointments at the earliest possible moment, I am unable to say. Of course my hon. friends try to read into this all sorts of motives, and of course we are accustomed to that sort of thing.

An hon. Member: Closure.

Mr. Fulton: All I can say is that if the hon. member for Ottawa West and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate mean what they say when they say they want the house to get on with the business, they will stop this kind of futile argument and allow this bill to pass.

Mr. McIlraith: There is a point that I think should be dealt with, Mr. Chairman. I think better than anything we can say it points up what the situation is. The Minister of Justice of Canada, in seeking to deal with clause 2 of this bill at the committee stage, saw fit—and indeed was permitted to do so under the current practice of the last year or two in the house—to make personal references as to my looks and appearance. I refrain from any comment on that matter, other than to say this. When the Minister of Justice is obliged to resort to that kind of argument, as the Prime Minister does repeatedly, in order to deal with a matter like this, it is rather bad. For my part I refrain from any comment whatever as to the appearance of any hon. member of this House of Commons at any time. As far as I am concerned the looks or appearance of any member of the House of Commons who has been sent here by his constituents is perfectly fine and satisfactory for me. I think it is an irrelevancy. However, it shows the attitude of the current cabinet and the Minister of Justice, supported by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys with his repeated interjections.

The minister keeps pleading for urgency in getting this bill through. I do not know by what right he is continuously concerned with charging us with obstructing the bill because we assert a point of view on it. I do not know by what right he sought to bring in the situation in the county of Carleton, the district in which the constituency I have the honour to represent is located and in which the constituency the hon. member for Carleton has the honour to represent is situated. The situation in that county is not dealt with in any way by this bill, nor was that point raised. The minister cannot make additional appointments in that district or county until the Ontario legislature has taken the action it is required to take under our division of authority under our constitution. That was the point raised, and that is the point the minister seems to be unwilling to grant the propriety of raising. Then we have his reference, of course, to the quality of any arguments that differ from those of the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Puerile arguments.

Mr. McIlraith: "Puerile arguments" I think was the term used. Obviously the test in the minister's mind as to whether or not an argument is puerile is whether it is asserted by a member of the government of the day now holding office or by one of its supporters. If the argument is asserted by anyone else it becomes puerile. When it is asserted by the government it is an important argument and an important matter. Surely that is too feeble an approach for any member of the House of Commons to use. However, it is an indication of the thinking of the Minister of Justice on this bill, and on this clause in the bill, that he should stoop to use that argument and the earlier one I mentioned instead of dealing with the subject.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the minister made a a certain personal reference I feel that I should be permitted to reply to it. The minister said that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and other members over here had demonstrated conclusively last Friday that they were not—

Mr. Fulton: All last week.

Mr. Pickersgill: —prepared to pass the supplementary estimates. I have here a copy of Hansard for Friday.

Mr. Fulton: All last week.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman might perhaps allow me to reply without interruption. I did not interrupt him.

Mr. Fulton: Be accurate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am being accurate. Here we find that the estimates of nine departments of government were dealt with on Friday; I refer to the supplementary estimates of nine departments. Millions and millions of dollars were voted with, in most cases, relatively few questions. Hence a great deal of progress was made last Friday. There is not much doubt that if the government had gone on in a businesslike way these supplementary estimates would have been completed yesterday. There is no reason whatsoever to doubt that likelihood, in view of what happened. It is true that difficulty appeared on Thursday evening because the government would not accede to a reasonable request which they acceded to on Friday. That prevented any progress from being made. On Friday they were willing to bring estimates before us with someone to give information about them, and they made good progress. But why do they adjourn this business? They do so in order to bring forward urgent legislation. If the legislation was genuinely urgent that would be one thing. However, this bill is hypothetical. The minister himself makes that admission. I did not accuse the minister of trying to hide that fact. He admitted it yesterday.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member said we were trying to conceal it.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I said you were trying to slip it through. I did not say you were trying to hide it. You were trying to put the pressure on and were suggesting that we were holding up an urgent piece of legislation. You were trying to create the impression that my friend the hon. member for Ottawa West in some way or other was preventing the courts in Carleton from functioning properly. If the situation in Carleton is so bad, the fault is that of the Ontario government and the Ontario legislature for not acting. It is not our fault. The attorney general of Ontario one can understand, has other preoccupations these days and may not be attorney general for very long. His successor may not have the same views as to how the courts should be organized. It would not surprise me if his views on many subjects were very different, whoever he may be.

I say that if this had been at the end of a normal session when there was a long recess ahead, there might have been some excuse for this action in bringing in this hypothetical bill. But when it is done in the middle of a session that is going to go on until the end of June, if we are going to do the normal business of the country, that is a different matter. There is no need to have it brought in now. It is not urgent. It cannot be urgent until after the Ontario legislature has acted. It is therefore just a confession that the government has no urgent business to bring before us.

Mr. Fulton: Will my hon. friend permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: May I say that I have just had a telephone message from the attorney general of Ontario saying that the bill has passed and has received royal assent.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman had made his telephone call this morning, I think he could have saved an hour of the time of the House of Commons. I have now no reason for speaking any more.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. McIlraith: I just want to say that the minister's message now delivered to the house points up more clearly and more eloquently than anything that could be said by any hon. member here the impossible situation in which the Minister of Justice was putting us in this House of Commons. It indicates also that if he had acted properly and had held off the presentation of this bill until he had that telegram, it probably would have gone through in a very few minutes.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. Before doing so, however, I should like to make an observation. Under our system of government we have the legislative branch, namely parliament, the executive branch or government and also the judicial branch. I have always admired the ability of the members of the judicial branch to disregard past political affiliations upon being appointed to the bench. I believe we are one of the few countries in the world with a judiciary that is almost, if not completely, removed from political consideration. In my view this speaks most highly of those appointed to the bench in our country.

However, I have also noted over the years that appointment is usually based on political consideration, and as the bill now before us has to do with appointments to the judiciary in the county and district courts of Ontario I should like to ask the minister a question. In the light of the increasing number of Ontario lawyers who have expressed their willingness to be candidates for the New Democratic party and also the growing number of Ontario lawyers who have expressed a desire to see the Leader of the Opposition as the next prime minister of Canada, is the minister able to assure us that there are sufficient Conservative lawyers left in Ontario in order for him to be able to fill these vacancies?

Mr. Fulton: I can assure the hon. member that there are a vast number of Conservative lawyers in Ontario and in every other province and part of Canada whose friendship I am proud to claim and who undoubtedly, along with all the other citizens of Canada who will be voting for the present government, will see to it that the present government is re-elected in the next election. So my hon. friend need have no concern at all as to the number of lawyers of the Conservative faith in Canada or the number of Canadian people who have confidence in the present government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the Minister of Justice think it appropriate that he should take only Conservatives as potential candidates for the high office of judge in this country?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, may I point out that I made no reference to Conservatives as candidates or potential candidates.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You said they were the only people who could qualify.

Mr. Fulton: I said no such thing. My hon. friend, who for 22 years looked only to the Liberals with regard to appointments—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not so. You know that.

Mr. Fulton: —seems to think that we do the same thing. I answered a simple question with regard to the number of Conservative lawyers in Canada. I made no reference to appointments to the bench. My hon. friend's guilty conscience betrays him.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

The house resumed, from Monday, April 2, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada—Mr. Fulton—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. Since Bill No. C-38 was introduced into the house and consequently was printed and became public property, has the minister received any representations with respect to it, and would he indicate the gist of those representations?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have received a number of representations from companies, chambers of commerce and the Canadian Labour Congress. The representations with respect to Bill No. C-38 are not nearly as lengthy or as critical as they were with respect to Bill No. C-70 last session, which I think indicates that we have done a pretty good job of improving the legislation.

Mr. Howard: The minister has indicated that he has received representations and has said that they were not as critical as those received last year with respect to Bill No. C-70, but I asked the minister to give the committee an indication of what the representations were.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, they were such representations as, for instance, we have dealt with by the decision I announced yesterday, to provide that returns shall made in the first instance to the dominion bureau of statistics, and the other decision I announced that we would be amending the provision with respect to the method of handling the information once it is received. Therefore the bulk of the representations we have received in that respect have been dealt with by those two decisions.

With regard to other representations, those from the Canadian Labour Congress were discussed yesterday in the course of the debate on second reading and were dealt with by me in the course of my reply to the points that were made. The main criticism of the Canadian Labour Congress appears to be that by requiring corporations and trade unions in the same bill to make statistical returns we were somehow or other seeking to equate the conduct and activities of corporations and trade unions, a mistake which I assure you we would never make.

Mr. Howard: The minister has mentioned companies and chambers of commerce. I took that to mean the national chamber of commerce, but perhaps he has received representations from individual chambers of commerce as well. He also referred to the Canadian Labour Congress. Has he received any representations with respect to this bill from people in the academic or legal fields?

Mr. Fulton: The bulk have been from corporations, chambers of commerce and similar organizations, plus the Canadian Labour Congress. I understand that within the last few days a submission has been received from certain professors in the department of political science at Queen's University.

Mr. Howard: Could the minister indicate what their representations were?

Mr. Fulton: Do I take it that my hon. friend has not also received a copy?

Mr. Howard: Could the minister indicate what those representations were, in the same manner as he did with the C.L.C., the chambers of commerce and the corporations?

Mr. Fulton: I thought that since my hon. friend has presumably received a copy we might save the time of the committee by not being required to read it. However, a summary is that the professors expressed their support for the principle of the bill but they were concerned that the public, including academic researchers, were to be denied access to part of the information obtained under the bill, in particular the information contained in part B of the report made by corporations.

Mr. Caron: The minister spoke about the representations made by the Canadian Labour Congress, but he forgot to state that they said they had more extensive remarks to make if the bill were sent to a standing committee of the house. They said that in the last paragraph of the representations they made to the cabinet on March 14. That is why we asked yesterday to have the bill sent to the standing committee on industrial relations. Then everybody would know about it.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, but I invited the Canadian Labour Congress to submit their further representations to me. They have done so, and I can assure the hon. member that, on careful study of the representations so submitted, I find they have all already been taken into account.

Mr. Caron: In the bill as it stands?

Mr. Fulton: In the decisions which we arrived at, and on the basis of which we drafted the legislation or the changes which I indicated to the house yesterday. I do not say that the bill in its present form, or the changes we will propose, will meet all the points made by the Canadian Labour Congress. What I do say is that their representations have been carefully considered and are either met in the bill or have been decided not to be sufficiently soundly grounded as to warrant other changes in the legislation.

Mr. Howard: With reference to the matter of sending this bill to a committee of the house for consideration, I can now see that regardless of the minister's statements yesterday as to how efficient he and his department are in drafting legislation and meeting the desires of the people affected by it, namely corporations and unions, he was in error. Perhaps he really did not want this to go to a committee. He has just made a number of comments, referring to the bulk of representations from chambers of commerce and the C.L.C. He also read part of a letter from what I believe is a department of Queen's University, and all these had proposed changes to Bill C-38.

The minister says some of these proposals have been met; but in denying the house the opportunity to send the bill to a committee the minister has kept these representations, ideas and thoughts with regard to changes in the bill, from being studied in a more formal way. He has also shown his own opposition to the people affected by it, and has offered a great affront to the house.

It would have been much more in keeping with the dignity of the house had he explained on second reading yesterday that he had received representations, who the representations were from, and generally what they said. I believe he has admitted to this committee that in the first instance he did not want any great public scrutiny of the bill presently before us, and especially that he did not want to provide an opportunity to interested parties to appear before a standing committee, make known their views and be subject to cross-examination.

Mr. Fulton: I had assumed, and I am sorry if I was in error, that in view of the recent liaison—or shall I put it, dictation relationship—between my hon. friend and the C.L.C., the views of the C.L.C. as expressed to me would be known to my hon. friend from Skeena. If therefore there was any dereliction or failure to bring those views before this house I cannot see that I can be charged with that responsibility. All I have said is that the views of the Canadian Labour Congress were made known to me, and apparently in spite of all that has been said the liaison between the C.L.C. and my hon. friend is not as perfect as the country had been led to believe.

Mr. Howard: The minister, in his usual nasty way, has deigned not to answer the question.

Mr. Fulton: You did not ask one.

Mr. Howard: Well, he has not deigned to answer the representations and suggestions I made. Instead he has taken a roundabout and very nasty way of making accusations, which are unfounded and untrue, against members of the New Democratic party. Yesterday the hon. member for Hull and the hon. member for Vancouver South read into the record extracts from what I took to be the annual submission of the Canadian Labour Congress to the cabinet, which pleaded for certain things. I followed that very closely and it is my opinion, as an individual, that I must disagree with the people who prepared, drafted and submitted that submission. This does not represent any dictation, and may I say further that the minister's accusation that this party is under some dictation by a group of people is entirely untrue and unfounded.

It is true that we have a relationship with individual local unions which may desire to become related to us, but we are not like the minister's party which goes around by the back door and gleans its campaign funds from people who want special privileges, consideration and rights, and who get them from this government. We are not like the hon. gentleman who makes special arrangements for tax evasion situations for individual friends of his on the west coast. We are not that sort of party. We are the sort of party who are prepared to come out flat footed in public and explain our relationship with any group of people or any individual in this country.

Were I to engage in kind, and make a general reference to the low type of accusation which he has made against myself and my party, I would probably run foul of the rules of the house, and I certainly would not want to do that. Having listened to him I say that his accusations against myself and my party are unfounded and untrue, but perhaps they explain why he is not prepared to give us the details of the submissions made. This is another indication of the type of party to which the minister belongs. This is another of the smear type of accusations which he is wont to make on every occasion possible, and which he made only a while ago against the members of the official opposition. The public should know the type of party to which the minister belongs, and should know some of the things he has done, cloaked in secrecy, with reference to developments in British Columbia.

Mr. Fulton: I recognize, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member is hard put to it to restrain his venom; therefore I make no comment in kind. I simply point out that this bill has been public knowledge since January 22 and I should have thought therefore, as I was indicating earlier, that views with respect thereto have had plenty of time to be made known. They have certainly been made known to me. They have all been carefully considered, and we have placed our proposals before the house and do not intend to be sidetracked from those proposals by the venting of the spleen of the hon. member for Skeena, to which we are all, unfortunately, becoming accustomed.

Mr. Howard: You deserve it, too.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, the minister just said that he has received a number of briefs and representations. That is all right; we admit that he has and that he has studied them and tried to do what is best with all the representations he received. But the other members of parliament did not have any knowledge of them. If this bill had been referred to the industrial relations committee instead of to committee of the whole, then we could have looked at those representations and perhaps we would have been in a better position to suggest amelioration of the present bill. Even if we accept the principle of the bill, we suggest that there may be a way to ameliorate it. In this situation we have only the minister's word that the government have tried to comply with all the information and representations which have been made to them. We do not have that information; we did not receive any of those briefs; we do not know anything about what was said to the minister in this regard, either against or in favour of the bill. That is why I was suggesting that it should have been sent to the industrial relations committee.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman. I can only say that I have given my reasons for not referring it to the committee. Of course I am not one to judge of the desirability of persons making their representations more widely known than they have done already. It certainly has been my impression that the representations which have been made to me have been made known to other people; perhaps not to my hon. friend from Hull, but I am under the impression that they have been made known generally to—

Mr. Caron: They have not been made known to the official opposition.

Mr. Fulton: —persons on the other side of the chamber.

Mr. Caron: Not at all.

Mr. Fulton: I am not, of course, in a position to prove that. In any event, I can only repeat that we have given the most complete consideration to these representations and no one that I know of, except the Canadian Labour Congress, has suggested that the bill should be referred to a committee in order that they might appear there and make their representations.

I am prepared to discuss here in committee of the whole—as of course it is my duty to do—every point of view that may be advanced. I assure my hon. friends in the committee that points of view which have merit will be entertained on that basis. I think this is the place to consider the bill and the suggestions which have been advanced.

Mr. Caron: I can tell the minister that outside of the memorandum which was placed before the cabinet on March 14 of this year by the Canadian Labour Congress, none of these briefs have been sent to the official opposition.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, at this stage in our discussion, I have but a few remarks to make.

The minister was saying a while ago that there was a great difference between this bill and the one introduced last year, under No. C-70. In fact, they are as different as night and day.

Nevertheless, the bill as it now stands, while acceptable in principle, could be substantially improved in many ways.

That being the case, I should like to make a suggestion through which the administration of the act would become more practical, more efficient and less discriminatory toward the majority of the companies concerned, these companies which already submit innumerable statistical and other reports to the various government departments.

A brief submitted to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, on February 8, 1962, stated as follows:

(Text):

That consideration be given to specific exclusions in the bill of those corporations reporting similar information pursuant to the Companies Act and other statutes provided that such companies might be required to furnish additional information as is specified under the present bill.

(Translation):

I agree with that point of view, and I know that all corporations affected by part I of this bill also agree.

We must avoid any duplication of information and returns to be supplied by Canadian corporations.

I think that without realizing it, because of a mass of information asked from those firms, we have reached the point of saturation where many companies now need a considerable staff just to supply that information which involves absolutely unnecessary duplication.

We should be practical and, to that end, I would ask the minister to take into consideration the proposal which was made to him on February 8 by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce concerning the duplication of those returns.

Could it be that one of the amendments he has in mind will eliminate that useless duplication?

In my opinion, there is room for much improvement there.

Most Canadian companies comply readily with everything we ask them to do, but we could save them a considerable amount of work.

Would the minister be kind enough to comment on that part of the suggestion the Canadian Chamber of Commerce made to him last February 8 with regard to the duplication of returns?

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to find from what the hon. member has just said that, contrary to what the hon. member for Hull said a moment ago, copies of the submissions made by various organizations are in fact in the hands of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Caron: Not officially. It is his personal affair.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont just referred in some detail to the submission made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I take no objection to that; I am just glad to point out—

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Fulton: —that that is the fact.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont has risen on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deschatelets: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the minister that I was reading from personal correspondence that I received which relates to only a few lines of a brief submitted to the minister. I am not at all aware of the submissions in the brief presented by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, but I am aware of this part of their suggestions which a few minutes ago I asked the minister to consider.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to consider it. There was a suggestion made that the bill should be altered so as to eliminate the duplication of reporting under this bill and under the Companies Act and other statutes. We considered that suggestion but came to the conclusion that the kind of statistics that were wanted here went far beyond what was contained in the returns required to be made under the Companies Act.

With respect to the kind of return that might be made under the Statistics Act, I think it could be argued, although I did not look into this personally and did not do so for a very good reason, that much of the information we are asking for here is contained in the returns made under the Statistics Act. But I have already referred to the reputation, tradition and feeling of confidence that exists between the bureau of statistics and those who make returns to the bureau under the Statistics Act, and the respect that is given to the tradition of confidentiality in connection with those returns. Since it is required here, and is required as a matter of policy, that there be public access to a portion of these returns, the part A returns at least, as well as a condensation and a report made of the analysis of the information contained in part B, we felt it was not appropriate to use for this purpose the information contained in the returns made under the Statistics Act.

We came to the conclusion, therefore, that however much we might wish to avoid placing upon businesses and unions the necessity for filing additional returns, the exigencies of the purpose we had in mind required new and separate returns to be made. That purpose was to place the government in possession of the detailed information which we needed, and in a position to use that information to the end which we intended, that is, the formulation of policy. I did point, however, in my speech on second reading that with respect to some portions of the return, particularly the summarized financial statement, a duplicate of the kind of statement which is filed with the Department of National Revenue would suffice. So wherever possible we have introduced provisions which will eliminate extra work, though we have felt it essential to require separate returns under this bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: There is no doubt that, as far as duplication is concerned, corporations, and unions as well, will probably have to hire additional staff. I do not know whether the minister intended to solve the unemployment problem that way, but I may say, as I said during the debate on second reading, that if the minister had deemed it proper to append to his bill, as it may be done normally, a copy of the questions that might be asked, we would be in a position to determine whether that procedure would involve additional work and higher expenses on the part of those who have to answer those questions. But, unfortunately, the questionnaire will be drawn up only when the bill is approved, and the questions will be known only later, when it will be useless to protest because they will have been submitted already to the people concerned.

That is why I asked yesterday—and I hope the minister will be able to do so before the end of the study of the bill in committee—that the type of questionnaire which is to be addressed to corporations, unions and individuals, be produced.

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: I think the answer to the hon. member's comments is that the bill itself details the information which will be required. In that respect I think perhaps this statute is unique. I must say it has been drafted with the greatest of care in order to make sure it will speak for itself as to the information which is required from corporations and trade unions. For this reason no questionnaire remains to be drawn up by the government.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: The minister will certainly admit that the list in clause 4, referring to the series of particulars which are to be asked, does not clearly show the number of questions which may be added to it. A series of questions can be set out. For instance:

(Text):

(B) interest, classified according to the kinds of obligations on which and currencies in which such interest was payable.

(Translation):

Mr. Fulton: I beg your pardon—

(Text):

On a point of order, I wonder whether we could refer this kind of discussion until we reach clause 2, when I shall be prepared to answer in detail. I understand that we are on clause 1 at the moment. Would the hon. member be good enough to wait?

Mr. Caron: I was citing that part of clause 4 by way of example. The bill goes on to ask 10 or 20 questions to clarify this situation, and these requirements would create a lot more work for any corporation or union or individual who had to establish clearly what the government wants to know. If we had before us a measure along the lines I have indicated we should have the information enabling us to know exactly what trouble and expenditure it would cause the companies and the unions to fulfil the requirements of the government.

Mr. Fulton: The answer is that there is no such power given to the government or to any agency thereof to ask supplementary questions. The bill requires that corporations and trade unions should furnish certain information. If they do furnish that information, that is the end of their obligation. It is only when they furnish inaccurate information, or if they fail to make a return at all, that there is any breach of the statute. No power is given to the government to go around asking a lot of supplementary questions.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Does the minister mean that unions, corporations or individuals will decide for themselves what answers they are to give to the government or will they have to fill in a form, as it is done for income tax or statistics purposes, when we receive forms upon forms asking for information? Is the minister saying that the people from whom this information is required will make their own decision concerning the nature of the information, without having to fill in a form prepared by the department?

(Text):

Mr. Fulton: No, there will not be a formula prepared by the department. The bill itself contains in precise detail the requirements as to the information which corporations and trade unions are obliged to furnish. The only exception is with regard to the financial statement, the statement of income and expenditure and the statement of surplus. Only with respect to that part of the return is there any power to prescribe by regulation the detail which must be shown. What will happen in this field is that regulations will be promulgated after the bill has become law and they, again, will say precisely what information is required to be furnished in the financial statement. The purpose will be to standardize the information in the financial statement. So between the statute on the one hand and the regulations on the other, the precise detail in which companies and corporations are bound to make their returns will be set out. There are no supplementary questions or follow-ups to be made. The only query that will arise is (a) is the information accurate or (b) has the return been furnished at all?

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised to see that the minister seems to think that everything is clearly defined in his bill and that people will have to supply, on their own accord and under this bill, whatever information they feel justified in submitting to the government.

In every department, whether it be the dominion bureau of statistics or any other agency—if it was not so at the start, it has now become the normal practice—quite a number of questions are prepared in advance, for the enlightenment of the heads of the branches concerned. As a matter of fact, I would scarcely be surprised if the same course were followed, when information is required under the legislation now before us. Otherwise, I would be unable to understand it.

(Text):

Mr. Regier: I listened with a great deal of interest to what was said by the minister during his intervention yesterday, and I noticed his very nationalistic appeal. If we are ever to be masters in our own house, he said in effect, we require the information that is now being sought under the terms of this bill. I remember very well the election pledges of 1957 and 1958, that we were to restore the control of the economy of Canada to Canadians. If that is so vital, I should like to ask the minister to explain why it has taken the government four or five years to introduce a bill of this type which demands only basic information. I feel it should not have taken the government four or five years to introduce legislation that does absolutely nothing to restore the control of our economy to Canadians but seeks only information which may or may not lead to legislative measures and other action that will help restore control over our economic destiny to the Canadian people. I remind the government that it was elected on the basic promise of restoring this control to Canadians.

I regard this bill merely as so much window dressing. It is a last ditch, desperate attempt on the part of the government to apologize for the fact that it has not only failed to implement this basic election pledge but also now faces the reality of the fact that the economy of Canada today is even more under the control of outsiders than it was at the time the government was initially elected in 1957. I do not think I have ever seen a bill that contains more eyewash than the legislation before us. It took the government four or five years to get around to introducing a bill under which authority is sought to gather basic information, with the ostensible end in view that after having obtained the necessary information measures might be undertaken to fulfil the election promise made in 1957 and repeated in 1958.

My real reason for rising, however, was the allegation, if not indeed the imputation, made by the minister when he spoke. I can report to the minister that contrary to his expectations I have received in connection with the bill now before us no representations in any form from the Canadian congress of labour. I am not under the dictation nor will I ever be of any group in Canada, be it the Canadian congress of labour or any other Canadian organization. However, let me assure the minister of this. Had that body made representations to me I would have considered them seriously because they would have represented the considered opinion of a large segment of the Canadian population. Those opinions would have weighed much more heavily with me than any representations that have been made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. It is my contention that I am not now and never will be under the domination of the Canadian congress of labour or any other group, but if need be I would rather be under their domination than under that of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or the Canadian Manufacturers' Association as I am sure the Liberal and Conservative parties have been over the years in this country.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I could give a harsh answer to my friend the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam but I know him to be a sincere member who is much concerned about these matters, so I will refrain from doing that. I shall endeavour to deal with these points seriatim. It is true I suggested that in my anticipation the hon. members of the New Democratic party would have been provided with copies of the submissions made—I do not mean only those made to cabinet but made to me—by the Canadian congress of labour. I did not think there was anything wrong in that assumption or suggestion. I simply anticipated that in the nature of things that would be done. As I say, I was not criticizing it but was merely voicing my own expectation or understanding of what would be the fact. I am informed that is not the fact, and that I accept. I accept it one hundred per cent because the hon. member assures me he has not received that submission.

I can only repeat that as a result of an exchange of telegrams between the president of the Canadian congress of labour and myself I did receive submissions enlarging upon the contents of the Canadian congress of labour brief to cabinet. All the points contained in that submission have been carefully considered. Some of them, I believe, have been met; others, I believe, are not well taken; and with respect to others, I am simply unable to agree because they seem to me to arise from a fundamental misinterpretation of the purpose of this legislation.

With respect to the other point my hon. friend made, that this bill has been long delayed, especially as he put it, by a government which had as one of its basic tenets the bringing under effective Canadian control of the Canadian economy, I certainly cannot deny it has taken us four and a half years to design and bring in this legislation. However, let me point out two things. First, this is not the only measure we have taken in this field. I do not wish, Mr. Chairman, to lay the foundation for a discussion which would be out of order so I will be careful in what I say.

My hon. friend suggested this was the only step we have taken in this field. May I remind him it is by no means the only thing we have undertaken in this area. I remind the hon. gentleman of amendments introduced by this government to the oil and gas regulations in the Northwest Territories under which now you must be a Canadian citizen or a company must be under Canadian control if a permit is to be granted. That had not been done before. That affects vast areas of Canadian resources, and the measure was introduced by this government. I could also mention a number of other things this government has done to encourage and ensure effective Canadian participation in the development of the Canadian economy; but I think I would be out of order if I got into that field. So let me come to the second point I wish to make in answer to the criticism that has been made.

It is true that it has taken four and a half years to bring this bill before the house. I only ask my hon. friend if he has ever tried to draft legislation dealing with such a prickly, thorny subject as this? Already I recognize it is not a complete excuse to plead difficulties and obstacles. Although that may not be a complete answer let me point out to my hon. friend that we have been making progress in this field. Our attention was directed first to matters such as I have mentioned, the partnership program with the provinces in enabling us to open up Canadian resources and the oil and gas regulations that I mentioned. Then our attention became focused on this aspect of it and it was, as it were, with increasing clarity we realized we really did not have the information to enable us to draw up specific measures dealing, for instance, with such matters as compelling or inducing Canadian subsidiaries of foreign owned companies to open their share registers to purchases of shares by Canadians.

We did not know what would be required to do that. So we found then that it would be necessary to obtain the information on which to base such a policy or such legislation. We therefore set to work to draft such legislation. I can assure my hon. friend that it was not just last year, although last year we introduced the bill. It is my recollection that it was at least a year previous to that time that we began to discuss in departments and between departments what it would be necessary to include in legislation such as that which we have here. These discussions advanced to the point where last year we were able to bring a bill into the house. Then the hon. member will recall the criticism—I do not know that it is exaggerating to call it the storm of criticism—with which the bill was met.

As I said yesterday in my speech on second reading, this criticism was quite understandable. We were experimenting in a new field altogether. I wish we had been able to devise a perfect bill the first time. However, I really do not think that I am obliged to apologize very profoundly for the fact that we were not able to devise a perfect bill the first time. We therefore let that bill stand for a while. We assessed the extensive criticisms we received from those companies and trade unions. We analysed and collated those criticisms. It was necessary to review the policy and then come up with a fresh approach which is now incorporated in the bill before the committee. Hence, it is a fact that it is four and a half years before this bill comes forward, but I can assure the hon. member that does not mean that we have been idle in the meantime.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): The minister has just told us that the stopping of foreign control is only one of many things for which the bill is designed. He listed a couple of other matters. It seems to me that he tried to create the impression that the situation is better since this government took office.

Mr. Fulton: And so it is better. The situation has improved.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): That is just another step along the road to distortion of actual facts. In spite of the steps that have been taken by this government, the fact remains that the situation is worse now than it was when they took office. I do not think the minister should get away with trying to create another impression in this House of Commons.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Miss LaMarsh: In his rejoinder to the last speaker, does the minister suggest that what has been announced, as has frequently been said in the public press, is not a fact, namely that there is more United States ownership of Canada now than there was five years ago?

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member for Niagara Falls is a well known statistical expert, Mr. Chairman, and I should not care to get into that kind of argument with her.

Mr. Matheson: May I indicate to the minister that not very many days ago I asked a question of the government with respect to foreign ownership of assets in Canada. I am not at the moment able to put my finger on the answer. However, it clearly indicated that up to the last date available the amount of foreign ownership since this government took office has been substantially greater than it was when they formed the government. That is one of the things that leads us to make comments on this bill. We think that the bill in many respects is designed to give the impression that the government is doing something about the situation, or cares to do something about it. I do not think that the bill does anything of the kind.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before it carries I might say that I think the Minister of Justice in this matter has shown discretion which might well have been shown by his colleague the Minister of Public Works on a television show the other day. The Minister of Justice at least has not said, in respect of dominion bureau of statistics figures that were produced in the house, what his colleague said about them namely, "Well, you may believe them; nobody else would do so". We all remember that clownlike performance on television not so long ago which we on this side of the chamber are hoping to have repeated on some suitable occasion. However, in view of the rather broad play the minister has made without any kind of evidence to support it, it seems to me that the evidence which has been produced in the house should be put on the record before we go any further with this matter. These figures were given in the house the other day—

Mr. Fulton: Then why repeat them?

Mr. Pickersgill: —in reply to a question by the hon. member for Leeds, and they are on the record. In order that our proceedings should give a faithful reflection of what has been happening in this matter it seems to me that we should take the time necessary to do this, notwithstanding the extreme urgency of passing this bill. We all appreciate how urgent this bill is, how frightfully important it is that it should be passed before five o'clock and how greatly the passage of this bill is going to affect the fortunes of every Canadian.

Mr. Fulton: Repetition is not in order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: We all appreciate how the country was going to be saved by these disclosures.

Mr. Fulton: It is the hon. member who has been saved.

Mr. Pickersgill: We remember in times gone by that great crusade to liberate Canada from the economic slavery into which the country was driven in the days of long ago and which was changed on June 10, 1957.

Mr. Fulton: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe my hon. friend from Leeds is now able to put on the record the information which shows just exactly the extent and character of this liberation which has been brought about or is going to be brought about by this bill. As my hon. friend still seems to be engaged in his researches, I think the minister himself ought to tell us what he is able to give us from his own notes of the extent to which United States concerns have been bought out by Canadians and the extent to which the investment in Canadian companies has been reduced in the last four years so that we may have the basis on which the minister made his statement.

Mr. Fulton: I am not going to get into that sort of statistical battle with the hon. member. I made a statement that this is not the only front upon which we have been attacking this problem of Canadian control of Canadian resources. I referred to other areas such as the oil and gas regulations in the north. I particularly pointed out that I did not wish to be tempted into getting this discussion out of order. We are discussing here a bill for the disclosure of corporation and trade union statistics. My hon. friend has made certain assertions which he regards as being relevant. I am not sure that they are relevant, but it seems to me that it is up to my hon. friend to follow up that assertion and to relate it to the purposes of this bill. I would imagine that for every statistic quoted one way, another statistic could be quoted another way. However, it seems to me that what has been said so far indicates what I believe to be the case, namely that this House of Commons reflects the attitude of the country, namely, that we are concerned about the question of Canadian control of the Canadian economy.

I am glad to find that we are all concerned about that matter. I would therefore expect that hon. members of the opposition might be more concerned to look at this bill and examine it from the point of view of whether it does the job it is supposed to do, namely to make it possible for us to get information about the extent and effects of that control, rather than to indulge in this, may I suggest, rather fruitless statistical battle. I am quite prepared—indeed it is a premise upon which the bill is based—to admit that there is such a degree of foreign control of our economy today as to give us concern. I am not going to get into a statistical battle as to whether it be 60 per cent or 62 per cent nor am I going to get into a statistical battle as to whether it is 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent more than it was in 1957. It was enough in 1957 for us to be concerned about. It is still enough today to be concerned about. That is why we are introducing this bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may say one word, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Leeds now has the statistics but I should like to say one word—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I might well intercede at this point to suggest that the implications of the remarks that immediately preceded those of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate tend to take us out of the realm of relevancy. I have been extremely tolerant all afternoon with the idea of moving along the business of the house and I hope I have not spoiled my day by doing so. I was going to point out to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that I recognized the hon. member for Skeena before he rose and I think he might perhaps defer to him.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, I think Your Honour was not in the chair the other day when we were discussing a very similar question having to do with continuity in discussing a particular point. If the hon. member for Skeena is going to speak on this specific point then I defer at once, but if he is introducing a new subject I am sure he will be very glad to yield.

Mr. Howard: My remarks are precisely along this line. With deference to your suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that possibly we are getting out of order, I would point out that yesterday the minister himself made a very bloodcurdling, flag-waving speech in which the precise reason he gave for introducing the bill was the degree of foreign control. I might mention in passing that even on the amendment we moved the minister's argument was that it was out of order because the bill dealt with foreign control, percentages, statistics and degrees of foreign control. We know the minister likes to have two policies, one for the government side and one for the opposition; but his main theme yesterday was that the reason for introducing the bill was the degree of foreign control and the desire to know all the facts about it. Surely he cannot expect you now, Mr. Chairman, to put yourself into the unwise and unfortunate position of agreeing with him because he does not wish to have members follow up at this stage of the bill what he said yesterday. That is exactly the point with which we should be dealing because the degree of foreign control was the precise reason the minister gave yesterday.

I point out again, as I did yesterday, that certainly the degree of foreign control increased from 1957 to 1959. I put those figures on the record yesterday. Under this government foreign control of the manufacturing, petroleum and natural gas and mining industries increased from 61 per cent to 63 per cent in the period from 1957 to 1959. Far be it from me to attempt to support the government's point of view but I would point out that from 1954 to 1957 when we had a Liberal government foreign control increased from 55 per cent to 61 per cent, or 6 per cent in three years compared with an increase of 2 per cent from 1957 to 1959. Perhaps the minister can come to the conclusion that the increase has been less rapid under the present government than under the former, but we all know that one can take statistics and juggle them this way or that to suit one's convenience.

The fact is that there has been an increase. I cannot quote the minister's exact words of yesterday, but the fact is that in his opening remarks he said that 1957 was the last year for which statistics of this kind were available. He referred to foreign control of the mining and smelting industry to the extent of 61 per cent and also pointed out that the manufacturing industry was under non-resident control to the extent of 56 per cent. He said that 1957 was the last year for which statistics were available, but that is not the case. The same kind of statistics from which the minister quoted are available now for the year 1959 and were available even before the minister's speech was prepared. I will place them on the record.

Mr. Fulton: On a question of privilege, would my hon. friend permit me to say something? I admit that what he says is in part correct. My speech was prepared shortly after the bill was given first reading. At that time the last figures available were those for 1957. I admit to an oversight in not having realized that subsequent figures were published about 10 days ago, I believe. I had grown rather out of touch with the subject as I was not sure when the bill was going to come on so I am afraid I was not aware of that fact. I did not mean to mislead the house. The figures I had at the time I prepared my speech were the last available figures.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, it is delightfully refreshing to see the degree of frankness with which the minister approaches the question, and as a change it is very commendable. I commend his example to other ministers. I am glad I was able to assist the minister in rewriting his speech and bringing it up to date by my introduction of these statistics. The point is that over the years up to 1959 there has been an increase in activity with regard to the ownership, control and operation of Canadian industry and the Canadian economy by people outside of Canada. This has taken place both under the Liberals and the Tories and there has been an increase not only percentagewise but in total absolute dollar volume. I wonder whether I could call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not five o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-11, respecting the governing council of the Salvation Army, Canada east, and the governing council of the Salvation Army, Canada west—Mr. Wratten.

POLARIS PIPE LINES

The house in committee on Bill No. S-13, to incorporate Polaris Pipe Lines—Mr. Baldwin—Mr. Chown in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Directors.

Mr. Howard: I wish to make only one brief remark about this clause. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that during the last session we had a lengthy debate on a bill to incorporate Aurora Pipe Lines. We spent many days debating it and one of the key points which we in the New Democratic party—then the C.C.F.—were trying to establish was that Canadians should be on the board of directors and that there should be Canadian control of that company, at least from the directors' point of view. Parliament agreed with us and an amendment was made in committee providing for that.

I am glad to see that that principle, for which we were primarily responsible in establishing at the last session, has been carried forward to a degree in the present bill to incorporate Polaris Pipe Lines, at least to the extent that this clause requires that the majority of the directors of the company "shall, at all times, be persons resident in Canada and Canadian citizens." Should the government believe in dealing with these things by steps, then we think this is one of the concepts that should be promoted as an additional step towards ensuring that there is control of the operations of corporations in Canada, at least to the extent of having Canadian citizens on the board of directors. It seems to me we should establish a requirement in our private bills rules that all such bills in future have a clause similar to this. In fact I believe we should have a provision to that effect respecting all companies incorporated under the Companies Act. This would be a statutory indication of public policy by the government and parliament, and it would be much better than pious statements from the government without any concrete action being taken to accomplish what they say.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Private Bills

RELIANCE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North, for Mr. Lafreniere) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-12, respecting the Reliance Insurance Company of Canada.

He said: The sole purpose of this bill is to add a French version to the name of the Reliance Insurance Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

THE UNITED CHURCH OF CANADA

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-16, respecting the United Church of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should give one word of explanation. At the present time the United Church of Canada Act limits the investment in common stock to 15 per cent of the ledger assets of the corporation, which in turn limits the corporation pension fund. The purpose of the amendment is to remove this restriction.

When the basic act of the United Church of Canada was passed in 1924 the investment powers were very much restricted. There was an amendment to the act in 1951, which set out the investments to be limited in accordance with the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, chapter 31 of the revised statutes of 1952, as they are now cited. At that time it restricted the type of investments, and also restricted investment in common stock to 15 per cent of the funds. This act hopes to remove that limitation so that they can invest more than 15 per cent of their funds in common stock. At the present time there is about 12.5 per cent of their funds invested in such stock.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I deeply appreciate the relatively low income of the members of the clergy of all denominations in Canada, and I subscribe to the good intentions of parishioners who want to provide adequately for the retired clergy to their respective religious denominations.

However I cannot fail to record once again that not too many centuries have passed since the practice of usury was a cause for expulsion from the Christian community. I have no intention of opposing the bill now before us, but I do hope that the religious communities of Canada do not become overburdened in beginning to engage in playing the stock markets, regardless of how worthy the cause may be. I intend to support the bill because I know that the cause it espouses is a worthy one. Even though 99 per cent of the time I agree with any request that is made of the public and parliament by the United Church of Canada, I know the United Church would be the first to understand the particular warning that I am intending to sound at the present time.

Many religious communities in the world today are among the most unscrupulous landlords in existence. I know this does not apply to the United church. I do not intend to oppose this bill, but I do feel that we should not neglect to take note of what is happening in this field.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member care to elaborate on the rather unsavoury suggestion he put forward and tell us what he had in mind when he was making that suggestion.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I leave it to the hon. member to do his own research.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid I cannot accept the invitation to elaborate on what seemed to me to be largely irrelevant.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

GREYMAC MORTGAGE CORPORATION

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-18, to incorporate Greymac Mortgage Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to authorize the incorporation under the Loan Companies Act of a mortgage company with a capital stock of $1 million, a subscription of $500,000 before a general meeting of the shareholders may be called, and providing for $200,000 to be paid into the treasury before the company can commence business. The head office is to be in the city of Hamilton.

A mortgage corporation of this character cannot, under the provisions of section 4 of the act to which I have referred—that is, the Loan Companies Act—be incorporated by letters patent; it must be incorporated by act of parliament. It may be of interest to the house to learn that this will be the third such company, as I understand it, to be incorporated under the Loan Companies Act. The act requires that one of the steps in incorporating is that a model bill be drafted as prescribed by the act. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is in the form so prescribed.

There is a need for a company to supply additional mortgage money under the National Housing Act and this company is being formed for that very laudable purpose. The mortgage funds available across the country will be increased upon the commencement of business by this corporation, and it is intended that it will be able to provide both National Housing Act loans and conventional loans.

[Mr. Regier.]

The powers of a company incorporated under the Loan Companies Act are found in sections 60 and 62. Section 60 provides the power to lend money on the security of mortgages, but the amount of the loan is restricted by subsection 1 (f) in that they can lend on the security of such mortgages only to two thirds of the value of the security. This is the conventional mortgage loan, and I am sure those hon. members who are lawyers will be familiar with it and the ceiling placed on it.

Under the National Housing Act, however, a company of this nature may become an approved lender by applying to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and having acquired this status such companies may lend a much higher percentage of the value of the security; in some cases as high as 90 per cent. We know how much this additional lending power or the raising of the ceiling means to young people particularly, who may not have too much money laid aside but none the less wish to own their own homes. Moreover, these loans under the National Housing Act are fully insured, so that trust funds can be invested in such mortgages.

I think I have indicated that the applicants intend to enter both the conventional mortgage field and the National Housing Act field. It is also intended to utilize the provisions of section 62 of the act to which I referred, whereby a company incorporated under that act is permitted to act as agent for other companies or individuals supplying money for the purposes of lending upon the security of mortgages.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member goes further, would it not be more appropriate for him to introduce this matter in committee? The bill itself does not contain anything about the company's intentions; it simply gives the company capacity to undertake mortgage business. I think it would be irrelevant to indicate now what the company proposes to do after it is incorporated.

Mr. McCleave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then perhaps I could close my remarks very quickly in connection with this bill by indicating that to my knowledge two other companies have been incorporated under special act. For the interest of the house, they are Gillespie Mortgage Corporation, with its head office in Vancouver, incorporated in 1955 by special act; and General Mortgage Service Corporation, with its head office in Toronto. I believe the application by this corporation is currently being considered by parliament.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would only like to mention that I hope the committee, of which I am not a member, to which this bill will be sent will explore the possibility of making an amendment to the bill which will require that the directors of the company, as occurred with Polaris Pipe Lines and Aurora Pipe Lines last year, will be composed either entirely or by a majority of people who are Canadian citizens and resident in Canada, akin to what we have done with other bills in the past.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must inform the hon. member that if he speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps I could set at rest the mind of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) by assuring him that the five incorporators of the company and the shareholders will be Canadians. I understand that it is a possibility that United States money will be used by the company to put into home building in Canada. This would not be in the nature of a United States shareholding interest but rather for loans.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. R. D. C. Stewart (Charlotte) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-17, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company and certain wholly owned subsidiaries.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to vest in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the railways and undertakings of three wholly owned subsidiaries.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE CANADIAN AIRCRAFT REGISTRY

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-35, to amend the Aeronautics Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman could move from British Columbia to somewhere in the centre of the country so that we may hear him a little more easily.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, I would like very much to do so, but it has been tried several times and I have a distinct recollection of the interpretation of the rules which confine me to this corner.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure there would be unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is interested in unanimous consent being obtained, I shall inquire. Is the house agreeable to the hon. member moving to a seat more centrally located for the purpose of presenting his argument?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pallett: Provided he does not cross the floor.

Mr. Speaker: The unanimous consent, I may say, is limited to this occasion only.

Mr. Pickersgill: Do not make any announcements for the government like your predecessor did.

Mr. Drysdale: This is probably the closest I shall get to the cabinet this session, but I certainly appreciate the honour and the suggestion of the hon. member.

This bill dealing with a central aircraft registry is one which I introduced during the past session as Bill No. C-37. It is a matter of considerable importance to the people in the aviation industry and because it is a measure of a somewhat technical nature I propose at this time to supplement the remarks I made on that occasion. I should like to refer any hon. member who is interested in this subject, and who wishes to look back, to the remarks I made then as recorded in Hansard, volume 7 at pages 7337-7343.

The purpose and principle of the bill is relatively simple, namely the establishment of a central aircraft registry to record title to and charges against Canadian civil aircraft, aircraft engines, propellers and spare parts. One of the most important aspects of the bill deals with the financing of aircraft, which is related to the degree of title protection which a finance agency may obtain on the security of an aircraft. In order to supplement the remarks I made in my previous speech on this subject, I should like to refer to a draft brief which has, I understand, been submitted informally to the Department of Transport and which was drawn up by Mr. Frank Kennerley, a lawyer who specializes in aeronautical matters and who has had a great deal of experience in aviation law. The brief will require the approval of the Canadian Bar Association, the air industries and transport association of Canada and of the industrial development bank, but I propose to refer to some of the factual historical background which is provided very concisely in the brief. This, I think, will be of interest to hon. members and also to the Minister of Transport.

In this brief Mr. Kennerley says:

The certificate of registration for a Canadian aircraft issued by the Department of Transport is misleading to the uninformed and does not mean that the "owner" thereon named has clear legal title to the aircraft.

I think this is important, because I wrote to all of the provincial attorneys general and in the reply from the province of Quebec, I believe it was, it was indicated there was already a registration procedure established. That is correct, but it deals only with the registration of aircraft and has nothing to do with encumbrances. I continue to read:

In fact, the purchaser under a conditional sales contract, who has no legal title to the aircraft, is named on the certificate of registration as the "owner" and is so defined in the air regulations.

The finance agency must, after it is satisfied that the aircraft title is clear, also protect its prior claim in the aircraft title from subsequent purchasers, mortgagees and creditors of the owner.

The interest of title to an aircraft is therefore twofold. First, those persons who are concerned with what, if any, prior liens or encumbrances in the form of chattel mortgages, conditional sales contracts, and so on affect the title to the aircraft. Second, those persons who are concerned with the registration or giving notice to subsequent purchasers, mortgagees or creditors of prior interest in the title to the aircraft.

These interested parties must search in all common law provinces of Canada where the aircraft may have been for any registered encumbrances against the aircraft. The log book of the aircraft is of some assistance in determining where to search, but log books are not always accurate, and if a fraud is to be perpetrated, the fraudulent person is unlikely to disclose in the log book that the aircraft was ever located at the place where the encumbrance is registered. A proper search for encumbrances would involve searching every country where the aircraft may have been in every common law province that did not have a central registry. The search would be somewhat easier in those common law provinces where a central registry was located. Failure to make such a complete search may result in the aircraft landing at a distant airport only to be repossessed or seized under an encumbrance registered in the county or province where the airport is located. It is obvious that great time and expense is involved in making such a proper search. Even after completing such an exhaustive and expensive title search, the aircraft title may still be affected by an encumbrance in Quebec that is not required to be registered.

How may a finance agency protect its interest, as secured by a chattel mortgage or conditional sales contract, in a Canadian aircraft against the rights of subsequent purchasers, mortgagees or creditors?

Each of the nine common law provinces of Canada has by legislation provided for the registration of chattel mortgages and conditional sales contracts. In some provinces registration is made in the county where the aircraft is situate at the time and must be made within a limited time after the date of the transaction. This registration is effective notice to subsequent purchasers, mortgagees and, in some instances, creditors of the person in possession of the aircraft, provided the aircraft is not moved out of the county where the registration was made.

[Mr. Drysdale.]

I emphasize the word "provided".

The common law provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta have established one central registry for the province to include aircraft so that the registration of the encumbrance is similarly protected, provided the aircraft does not leave the province. Newfoundland is in a similar position as there is only one registry for encumbrances for the whole of the province.

All of the common law provinces have legislative provisions for the reregistration of chattel mortgages and conditional sales contracts when the aircraft is moved. In some cases where there is not a central provincial registry, from one county to another in the same province, and in all cases where the aircraft is moved from one province to another. The time limit for such reregistration varies from 20 days to two months, and in some provinces the time runs from when the mortgagee or conditional seller receives notice of the removal of the aircraft; in other provinces the time for reregistration runs from the time the aircraft is moved notwithstanding the mortgagee or conditional seller did not know about the move.

The province of Quebec, although not a common law province, has provision for registration locally throughout that province for encumbrances in certain instances. In other instances there is no provision for registration and the rights of the holder of the encumbrance against a third party are not impaired if the aircraft is purchased by the third party without notice of the prior encumbrance.

The finance agency, to protect its interest in the aircraft secured by a chattel mortgage or conditional sales contract, must follow the movement of the aircraft and register its security in accordance with the particular laws of the province where the aircraft is from time to time located. Failure to do so may result in loss of its interest in the aircraft.

A further difficulty is encountered in that the registration of chattel mortgages and conditional sales contracts must be renewed after periods varying from one to three years depending on the province of registration.

An example of the present situation in Canada would be if an aircraft is sold to an operator based at Malton airport, the seller taking a chattel mortgage from the purchaser as security, and registers the chattel mortgage in the county of Peel where Malton airport is located. Unknown to the conditional seller, the aircraft is moved to Toronto island airport and remains there for a few months during which time the purchaser goes into bankruptcy. The Toronto island airport is situate in the county of York and the relevant law of Ontario requires that the chattel mortgage must be registered in the county of York within two months after the aircraft is moved there. The failure to reregister in the county of York results in the seller who held the chattel mortgage losing that security and only being able to claim in the bankruptcy as an unsecured creditor.

Another example that has actually occurred recently was the case of an aircraft based at Winnipeg that was flown to Ontario and left in Ontario as security for charter services rendered. About three months after the aircraft had arrived in Ontario the finance agency, which held a chattel mortgage registered in Winnipeg, discovered that the aircraft had been moved to Ontario, at which time it was too late to reregister the chattel mortgage in Ontario. The finance agency, as a result, lost its security in the aircraft.

I should like to point out, as I did in the speech I made last June, that the suggestions I make with regard to this proposed central aircraft registry have the approval of the Canadian bar. I believe there were resolutions in 1956, 1957 and 1958 to this effect.

Mr. McGee: Would the hon. member permit a question at this point?

Mr. Drysdale: I would prefer to get everything on the record if I could. I should like to answer questions at the end.

During the last part of my speech on June 30 of last year I spoke of a letter I had sent to the various provincial attorneys general based on my opinion that this matter was purely one of federal jurisdiction; but there was some possibility, since it dealt with encumbrances and chattel mortgages within the provinces, that it might come within the purview of provincial rights. Therefore I directed a letter to each of the attorneys general of the ten provinces drawing attention to the bill I was introducing and asking for their comments. On June 30 last as reported in Hansard of that date I read out in complete detail the replies I received from British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick.

Subsequent to my bill being discussed in the house on June 30 last I have received two further replies and following my procedure of endeavouring to put the matter on the record in as complete form as possible I wish now to read the replies received from Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia. I might point out that in the correspondence reference is made to Bill No. C-37 as it was known in the previous session. The same measure is now known as Bill No. C-35.

The first is a letter from Hon. R. A. Walker, attorney general of Saskatchewan under date of June 28, 1961:

Dear Mr. Drysdale:

Re: Bill C-37

I have been considering your proposed amendment to the Aeronautics Act.

In so far as this is a matter relating to aeronautics, it falls outside the responsibility of this government and I would prefer not to make any comment.

It does appear to me, however, that if this bill is enacted it might conflict with provincial legislation governing conditional sales, bills of sale, chattel mortgages and the registration of these documents. As your bill lacks a number of the provisions presently existing in provincial legislation with respect to such matters it would not cover the area as comprehensively. I would therefore be pleased to have your views as to whether your amendment would override provincial legislation presently in force affecting instruments of title to aircraft. If you consider that it would so override, I would invite you to consider the legislation of the various provinces on this subject with a view to incorporating some of the provisions not found in your amendment.

Yours sincerely,

R. A. Walker,
Attorney General.

Under date of July 4, 1961 I received the following reply from Hon. R. A. Donahoe, attorney general of Nova Scotia:

Dear Sir:

Re Bill C-37

I have your letter of the 6th June, and had previously received your letter of the 6th April which had been referred to the departmental staff for their consideration and recommendation.

In fact, we have no provision in Nova Scotia for the registration of aircraft, and there has been no proposal that we should institute legislation providing for such registration or for the registration of encumbrances against aircraft as such. In the absence of such specific legislation, I presume that in appropriate circumstances our bills of sale act or conditional sales act would apply to aircraft.

Further to the above, I can only add that I am personally in sympathy with the general concept of a central registry for aircraft and encumbrances against aircraft, and I am confident that any request from the federal government for legislation complementary to any federal enactment would be well received in this province.

Yours very truly,

R. A. Donahoe

I should point out too, Mr. Speaker, that up to the present time I have not received a reply from Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland, but with the two replies I have just read I have now received replies from the other eight provinces.

After I made my comments in the previous debate the hon. member for Laurier, the former minister of transport in the Liberal government, offered some very constructive criticism of the proposed legislation. I wish to place on the record a comment made by the hon. member for Laurier as reported at page 7344 of volume 7 of Hansard for the 1960-61 session. The hon. gentleman stated:

That is why I think we should have two things so far as this bill is concerned. First, as is customary we should have the opinion of the minister. What does the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) think about this legislation? Second, we should be informed whether or not the Minister of Transport has submitted the bill to the Department of Justice to ascertain whether or not it is an infringement of property and civil rights.

I put on the record in the previous debate a considerable amount of material and the hon. member for Laurier said he had some difficulty following it. I should like to refer to the fact that the letter dated April 15, 1959 from the former minister of transport, the hon. member for Broadview, is to be found at page 7339 of the same volume of Hansard. With respect to the jurisdictional aspect he said that in relying on an opinion from the Department of Justice the legislation was within the jurisdiction of parliament.

Supplementing these observations I wish now to read an exchange of correspondence between myself and the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Transport. I regret having to put on the record so much correspondence and detail but I feel it is the most constructive way of providing for the utmost circulation of the material I am about to present at this time.

Under date of June 30, 1961, I received the following letter from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada:

Dear John:

I acknowledge with thanks your letter of May 20th forwarding to me a copy of a letter you have received from the attorney general of Ontario, Mr. Roberts, suggesting that your Bill C-37, entitled an act to amend the Aeronautics Act, be placed by me on the agenda of the commissioners on uniformity of legislation for discussion this summer.

This group was meeting, I believe, in Winnipeg, just prior to the annual meeting of the Canadian Bar Association. I continue:

As I understand your bill its intention is to provide for a central registry for the recording of title to, and encumbrances on, aircraft registered in Canada. The establishment of such a registry would seem to me to be a matter within the jurisdiction of parliament and not of the provincial legislatures, and I would therefore suggest that you discuss with my colleague the Minister of Transport the feasibility of his department establishing such a central registry for aircraft.

So far as the commissioners on uniformity of legislation are concerned, the principal function of that body is to recommend uniform provincial legislation, and under the rules of procedure adopted by the commissioners a few years ago matters are not ordinarily placed on the agenda unless there is reasonable likelihood that any model act prepared by the commissioners will be adopted by at least three provinces. Since the subject matter of the bill under discussion falls within federal rather than provincial jurisdiction, it would not seem to be appropriate to refer this to the commissioners.

Yours sincerely,

Davie Fulton

I received that letter on July 13. Under date of July 14, 1961 I wrote to the Minister of Justice as follows:

Dear Davie,

Thank you very much for your letter of 30 June 1961 concerning the central aircraft registry. You are quite correct that the matter is within federal jurisdiction or competence. However, the registration of encumbrances on aircraft is within provincial jurisdiction also, and it appeared to me that it would be extremely valuable to have provincial government reaction or comments on such a registry before it was established because they can insist on continuing provincial registration requirements. In fact, there would have to be legislation passed in each province stating specifically that registration in the central aircraft registry was sufficient and that registration in provincial registries was no longer necessary.

It is for the reason of notifying the provincial attorneys general that I thought this matter should be placed before the uniformity commissioners, in order to get their reaction and the necessary provincial co-operation. Would it be possible, therefore, to bring this matter before the commissioners to obtain provincial reaction to the central aircraft registry?

Yours sincerely,

John A. W. Drysdale.

On August 3, 1961 the Minister of Justice replied to my letter as follows:

Dear John:

Thank you for your letter of July 14th setting forth your further views as to why you feel your Bill C-37, entitled an act to amend the Aeronautics Act, should be placed before the commissioners on the uniformity of legislation this summer.

It is my understanding that apart from possibly the conditional sales acts there are no statutes in the provinces providing at present for the registration of aircraft or of personal property in general. Any amendments required to the conditional sales acts would be to remove aircraft from the kinds of property that might be registered under these acts. In any event, if the legislation as passed by parliament to establish a central aircraft registry was framed so as to be legislation in relation to aeronautics and not in relation to property, I am of opinion that complementary provincial legislation would not be required in order to make it effective.

As I mentioned in my letter of June 30th to you under the rules of procedure of the conference matters are not placed on the agenda unless there is a reasonable likelihood that any model act prepared by the conference will be adopted by at least three provinces. As no provincial legislation apart from possible amendments to the conditional sales act would appear to be required in order to make a central aircraft registry effective in Canada I do not feel any useful purpose would be served in referring this matter to the conference at this time.

Yours sincerely,

Davie Fulton.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. gentleman finished? If not I might ask the house whether it would give him a minute or two more to finish his reading.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should think it is just a minute or two. We do not wish to exalt the hon. gentleman too much.

Mr. McGee: On the point that has been raised, Mr. Chairman, may I say this. In discussions prior to the making of arrangements which are now in force concerning time limits during private members hour, I think perhaps this was one of the kinds of bills or one of the situations in which we anticipated unanimous consent would be allowed to the mover in order to complete his presentation of a rather complicated and complex subject.

Mr. Speaker: I would think then that, subject to the limitation of being only a matter of two or three minutes, the hon. member has the consent of the house.

Mr. Drysdale: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should also like to thank the house for the courtesy extended to me. I had perhaps not paced myself too well. Perhaps all I can say is that the Minister of Transport confirmed basically the opinion that was expressed in this letter to the Minister of Justice. I think that would help to dispose of the jurisdictional question raised by the hon. member for Laurier.

In view of the fact that you want a very brief summation, Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I should say this. I have tried to indicate as clearly as possible the foundation namely, first of all that the federal government has jurisdiction and second, the necessity for such a central registry. The positive suggestions I should like to make at the present time would be first, to recommend to the Minister of Transport that D.O.T. officials and representatives of Canadian aviation be sent down to Oklahoma city in the United States where the present central registry is located, in order to inspect and subsequently to report on this registry. Second, I would recommend that the Minister of Transport have the department investigate present Canadian registration procedure and see what steps would be required in addition for a central aircraft registry.

Third, I would propose that draft legislation should subsequently be drawn and submitted to a committee of the house and that representations should be requested from the provinces and interested aviation people. I think the growth of air transportation brings me to my final recommendation, and that is something that has been emphasized. In Montreal there is ICAO, the international civil aeronautic organization which is the U.N. central air organization. We have IATA, the international air transport association as world headquarters. In McGill University we have the McGill institute of air and space law. I would suggest that, in conjunction with the recommendations that I have made, it would seem suitable that consideration should be given by the government to uniting all the functions dealing with aeronautics and, I would suggest also, all the functions dealing with outer space—I believe this year Canada will be using a United States vehicle in order to launch her own satellite—and to creating a ministry of air and space which would take in all these functions. The space aspect might perhaps seem to be a little bit premature. However, it should be remembered that Canada has been an active participant in the U.N. committee dealing with outer space and has been one since 1958.

I should like to thank the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate for being able to get me within shooting range, and I should also like to thank the house for providing me with this extra time.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond and I should like to congratulate him on the thoroughness with which he prepared the statement to which we have just listened. As for myself, may I say that I have a great interest in this matter for a number of reasons. However, I hasten to add that if I am long on interest, I am short on technical knowledge. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to accept my interest as a reason for my making these remarks rather than my ability to make any profound suggestions with respect to the matter before the house.

There are several reasons for my interest. One is that I come from a province in which air transport is an ever growing necessity. To speak specifically, I may say that my riding is the centre of the aircraft industry in Newfoundland. I refer to Gander. There is no need for me to elaborate, nor is this the time at which to do so, on Gander's place historically in aviation and where it stands today. I might also mention Goose Bay and Labrador. However, the thought to which I should like to give expression is that aircraft are being used more and more in an ever increasing number of fields of endeavour in Newfoundland. The medical health services of the province and the department of health use aircraft. The international Grenfell association needs them. In Labrador they are essential in these respects. Mail is delivered by aircraft in wintertime. Then there is the ordinary conventional use to which aircraft are being put in Newfoundland. I might mention fisheries in particular. There is a growing need for the increased use of aircraft for various purposes. I might add that our province was made for the use of aircraft and that we should like to see aircraft used even more to the betterment of the people.

Those few remarks probably explain the basis of my interest, apart from the personal interest which I have in the use of smaller aircraft. I think of my own personal interest in the flying club association, for instance. However, the fact of the matter is that in the world in which we are living aircraft are being used more and more by governments, corporations and individuals.

I think perhaps the comparison made of aircraft with ships is a fair one or the suggestion that a central registry is needed for aircraft in the same way as one is needed for shipping. Despite the increasing use of aircraft by individuals, by the very nature of their use they still resemble ships more closely than they resemble motor cars. In saying that I am not thinking of the fact that some alight on the land and some on the water. I am thinking of the whole concept of flying, the use to which aircraft are put and the distance which even the smaller aircraft of today is expected to cover.

As they grow in number the problems which the hon. member seeks to meet through his bill are certainly becoming more acute. We are not dealing with just a few aircraft in an occasional place or in few areas. We are dealing now with a vehicle which is in widespread use throughout the length and breadth of Canada and which promises to come into ever greater use as time goes by. As I say, I think the idea seems to be a sound one in what it wishes to avoid and what it wishes to bring about. However, I must admit that I am speaking as a layman with regard to this problem. At first glance, I think that a central registry for aircraft seems to be a good idea. If I now appear to condemn by faint praise, that does not mean at all that I am against the bill. One or two matters which were raised—and incidentally I may say they were raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond when he sought to answer them this afternoon—have not been answered quite to my satisfaction, although it is quite possible that I did not follow him carefully enough or that I misunderstood some of what he said. I think he did very well in pacing himself to keep within his time.

As I said, this matter is a technical one. Last year the hon. member for Laurier raised one objection which the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond sought to answer today. That is the question of whether or not the bill infringes provincial rights. In listening to the hon. member I gathered that he has not yet had replies from one or two provinces, including Newfoundland. I may be mistaken in my interpretation of what he said but it did not seem to me that the arguments he advanced completely met the problem of whether or not the bill is in conflict with provincial jurisdiction. I do not know either, but I think it is one matter that should be thoroughly investigated so that we will know the answer beyond any shadow of doubt before any move is made. Before the bill becomes law and a part of the aeronautics legislation of Canada I think parliament ought to be sure that it is clearly within federal jurisdiction without any conflict whatsoever with provincial rights.

The other suggestion that was made last year was that the bill should go to a committee for complete examination. I believe the hon. member has conceded that point and has said that this should be done. It is quite likely that the objection I have raised as to the possibility of the bill being in conflict with provincial jurisdiction would be dealt with right in that committee. As a matter of fact, I would assume that a committee studying the bill would make very sure that it was clearly a federal matter. As the hon. member has already suggested that a committee should examine the bill, I believe the criticism I have raised with respect to possible infringement of provincial jurisdiction would be dealt with at that time.

Other than making these two points and emphasizing again the importance of legislation regarding aircraft, there is not much more I wish to say. I would point out that the use of aircraft is growing and unquestionably will continue to grow. Aircraft of various sizes are becoming a common sight in the skies of Canada. There is an increase in private flying which in itself makes this legislation very interesting and legislation to which serious consideration certainly should be given.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not intend to talk out the bill but on behalf of the members of this group I wish to say that we appreciate the intent of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond to bring law and order to bear with regard to this problem. I should also like to endorse the remarks just made by the previous speaker with regard to jurisdiction. In the light of the replies that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond has already received from eight attorneys general, I too would hope that the bill might be submitted to the scrutiny of a committee and I believe that point could be explored at that time. Our group certainly intends to support the bill.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond on his imaginative and well arranged discourse in introducing this bill. As a matter of fact, when he spoke last year I was not inclined to agree with him, but it would appear that he has profited from the criticisms directed against the measure last time and also because of his temporary change of venue this afternoon. I am sure those hon. members who have been in the house longer than I will appreciate that a move of a very few feet in the place from which one speaks sometimes makes considerable difference in the measure of authority with which one addresses the house.

The bill is a good one, the principle is fine and I support it. The issue as to its constitutionality which was raised and discussed is not one which can be easily determined in the comparatively short time in which I am permitted to discuss the bill. Judging from the course of conduct of the house over the last few days, I would assume that the bill may well come up for discussion again at some future time before the session ends.

From my study during the time I have been able to give to an examination of the constitutional issue it is my opinion that the bill is a valid one. The only two provisions that I think may involve a constitutional issue are found in subsections 3 and 4 of section 26. Having in mind that this matter is the responsibility of the federal government and that under the ancillary rule a matter once assigned to the federal government may be pursued by ancillary measures, I am inclined to the view that this is valid legislation. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS

PROVISION FOR FURNISHING OF FINANCIAL AND OTHER STATISTICS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-38, to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada—Mr. Fulton—Mr. McGee in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Matheson: According to the Minister of Justice this is an extremely important bill. He said it forms an integral part of the government's national policy. He also spoke of the importance of nationhood in economic matters, which reminds us of the type of comment we were accustomed to hear in 1957.

I refer to the Winnipeg Free Press of April 25, 1957, in which the then leader of the opposition, now Prime Minister of Canada, was reported as speaking about the growing dominance of foreign owned business. He said:

> Foreign investment was to be welcomed and should be treated fairly "but a sense of national destiny for Canada calls for it being directed to the maximum benefit of Canada."

At Halifax, on April 26, 1957, he spoke of preserving for Canadians "the control of our economic destiny". Therefore we can presume what basically the government and the minister have in mind when he talks about this being an extremely important bill. It was for that reason that question No. 164 was asked by me, as recorded at page 1241 of Hansard for February 26, 1962. I asked:

> What is the percentage of foreign investment control in the years 1956 and 1961 in (a) the resource industries (b) the manufacturing industries?

The answer given was that the percentage of foreign investment control of the mining and smelting industry increased from 58 per cent in 1956 to 61 per cent in 1959, and that no further figures were available with respect to subsequent years. The answer also stated that the percentage of foreign investment control of manufacturing industries increased from 52 per cent in 1956 to 57 per cent in 1959. Therefore from the figures disclosed by this government it would seem that the policy of 1957 has not been fulfilled. In fact this matter, which the government complained of, has considerably worsened.

Having spoken of this bill as being an extremely important one, the minister went on to say, as reported at page 2399 of Hansard:

> —the bill is to some extent experimental and it is, indeed, as I myself recognize, a first step.

We are interested in where this step is going, and what is the purpose of grouping together a corporation and a union in this extraordinary fashion. Is one simply a saw off against the other? Is this simply a propaganda bill which appears to indicate activism on the part of the government in an area where it has already demonstrated marked failure? Is it a case of taking one section of the economy and dealing with it in one section of the bill, and then taking unions and dealing with them in another section, thereby trying to give the appearance of some sort of fair saw off to two elements in our economic society?

It would appear that there is nothing in the bill to indicate to what end the information will be obtained and, as we go through all its clauses, I think we can fairly contend that all the important information is already available to the government or, if it is not, it could be very easily obtained by minor alterations in present requirements. I believe information could easily be obtained by one minister from corporations and by another minister from unions, and that this information would disclose all that was necessary. In fact when he spoke yesterday the minister did not indicate what particular gaps existed in information.

The changes which have taken place in the drafting of this bill in past months have resulted in the presentation of an emasculated bill which is now so innocuous that it will do nothing helpful, nothing indeed except cause obstruction, expense, delay, inconvenience and perhaps some small measure of insult to people endeavouring to carry on business in Canada from the corporate or union standpoint.

I have taken the trouble to discuss it with Mr. Andy Andras of the Canadian Labour Congress and I thought his approach to it was extremely fair. He said there were some minor particulars in which information might be useful, even to the unions themselves, but added that this could be easily obtained in another way.

What is the new intention of the government in taking this first step and where does the second step come in? I invited some opinion on the bill from people who are attached to a school of business administration. One head of a department said that this legislation inserts into the record of parliament a new type of legislation, namely a record-keeping function that smacks of Hitler. This may sound strange, but hon. members will recall that some years ago Hitler, for reasons that were not very clearly disclosed at that time, required a certain ethnic group to register. What is the reason why these unions must register?

I looked into the records in the parliamentary library and found that there is published by the Department of Labour a pamphlet covering labour organizations in Canada for each year, in very complete detail. I find, on looking through this information, that it is fully documented. I do not think there are any secrets which cause the Minister of Labour any embarrassment in not knowing what are the important unions and who are their executive heads from time to time.

Of course it is a problem to keep completely up to date with respect to unions of a hundred members. In fact, surely no record-keeping function of the government is ever going to permit this to be completely up to date. It will always be out of date. But the information is always available if the government needs it. In fact it is nearly all available in the publications now printed by the Department of Labour.

What, then, are the mysteries with respect to corporations, or is this simply another indication of fear and displeasure that people who have some relationship outside this country happen to, and are pleased to, come and do business in Canada, either from the management or the labour side? If that is all it is, I think there is much reason for speaking against this bill. It seems to me that this administration has managed to do quite a bit since 1957 to simply discourage investment generally.

A few days ago I was looking at a publication printed by the Bank of Canada for the year 1961 and I found, as I looked at the graphs that appear on page 25 of Mr. Rasminsky's report, that the business fixed capital formation has substantially declined since 1957; that construction is substantially down; that machinery and equipment is down. Surely this is not the time for us to insert new, picayune legislation which has no real purpose, which the minister himself said is experimental, the first step; but he does not tell us what the second, third or fourth steps really are. We have no idea where this thing is going or what it seeks to accomplish.

Is there a real problem of corporate control? Certainly if we read the press today and project what appears to be the trend, we find in such industries as mining and smelting and manufacturing that there has been a very substantially increased United States ownership in Canada since the year 1959. There have been prognoses by such people as Earle McLaughlin and others who have been interested in certain specialized parts of our economy, such as the monetary and fiscal techniques which have been employed by this government since, for instance, December, 1960 which seem to indicate that the situation has substantially worsened since the baby budget.

If the government does in fact know that their policy in the fiscal or monetary field has tended to bring a good deal more foreign control into our industries, I think the minister should disclose that information. We are vitally interested; that is why we asked the kind of question we did in No. 164: What is the percentage of foreign investment? Does this government have anything further beyond 1959? If it does not, is it alarmed by the substantial increase of foreign investment and control that appeared between 1959 and 1956? Is this government really concerned about increased control from outside this country in labour organization?

We have had no evidence from the minister that this is a fact. We have to bear in mind that as we take this step with Bill C-38 it is certainly a step towards nationalism. In some of his remarks the minister would appear to have indicated that this is not really the purpose; it is not really nationalism. If it is not, I would like to know what it is, because surely we are moving into a time in the world where the tendency among enlightened modern countries who are uplifting their economies is to work together and not against one another. The implements and techniques of national limitation and control are completely contrary to the tempo of development that we see demonstrated, for instance in Europe, Great Britain and the United States, and certainly in Latin America.

Is this just another indication that we are going to go it alone; that we are going to cut off our outside connections which in many ways have elevated not only Canadian development, industry and expansion, particularly in the speculative areas of our economy, but have also done a good deal, surely, in the labour area? Are we moving alone in this field, having regard to the direction of enlightened progress elsewhere?

I say that reading sympathetically and carefully the obviously very carefully prepared remarks of the minister we do not know where this is going, or why; we do not really have any vice to be corrected; if so the minister has not indicated what it is. If it is to implement what the Prime Minister appeared to indicate to be his policy in 1957, would the minister give us some more facts? Would he tell us the extent to which this government during the last two or three years has really found itself the victim of foreign control and investment. It seems to me manifestly clear, by all the financial statements we can look at, that Canadians are not now of a mind to invest very generously in their own country. It seems to me that in certain areas—and this is certainly true in the mining and smelting industry and Canadian secondary manufacturing—Canadians have not been quick to step forward in recent months to invest in Canada.

What does the minister really mean by "first step"? Surely we are entitled to know something beyond this. We would like to have some idea of what the second step might mean. Does it mean, to cut out foreign investment; does it mean to curtail, limit or prevent the activities of international unions in Canada? If this is the purpose of the government, surely we should know what the government is thinking of as the second or third step phase, because if the second or third step phase is something that tends to be contrary to the trend of progressive development, this is something germane to our discussions at the present time.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions—"Minister".

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, on clause 2 I am required to ask my colleague, the Solicitor General, if he would be kind enough to move one of the consequential amendments which results from the decision that I announced last evening, the effect of which will be to change the definition of "minister" to "Minister of Trade and Commerce". The amendment would read:

That Bill C-38 be amended by striking out paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 2 thereof and substituting therefor the following:
(a) "Minister" means the Minister of Trade and Commerce;

I would ask my colleague, the Solicitor General to move accordingly.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Chairman, I beg to so move.

The Deputy Chairman: Moved by Mr. Browne (St. John's West):

That Bill No. C-38, an act to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada, be amended by striking out paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 2 thereof and substituting therefor the following:
(a) "Minister" means the Minister of Trade and Commerce;

Mr. Caron: That means it falls under one minister instead of two ministers?

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Caron: It was under the Secretary of State and the Minister of Labour before; now it is coming under the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Howard: To get this clear, this is because the dominion bureau of statistics is under the Minister of Trade and Commerce and eventually it will be the d.b.s. which will collect and compile all this information.

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Howard: I would just make the comment in passing that we have had three ministers involved in this bill up to now—the Secretary of State, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, yet we find the Minister of Justice piloting this bill through the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think at this point we should have an assurance from the minister that the information which is supposed to be kept secret is, indeed, to be kept secret and that nothing will happen such as happened January 20, 1958, when confidential information in the hands of the Department of Trade and Commerce was made public, because we have some unhappy recollections of what happened then to that kind of information.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if we might now consider the procedure to be followed with regard to this clause and, certainly, subsequent clauses. Clause 4 for example takes up to almost three and a half pages to print, and I thought we might consider proceeding by subclauses in order that we might be more orderly in our approach. Perhaps this comment does not particularly apply to clause 2, although it could. It would certainly apply to clauses 4 and 6.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is a good idea.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member would make that suggestion when we come to clause 4.

Mr. Fulton: I shall be glad to respond on that occasion.

Mr. Howard: On clause 2 I merely want to make an observation and an inquiry to see whether my concept of what this means is the same as that held by the minister. I refer to paragraph (c) of subclause (1) which says:

> "union" or "labour union" means any organization of employees formed for the purpose of regulating relations between employers and employees.

In other legislation such as labour relations legislation dealing with collective bargaining and so on, such a definition is normally taken to apply to company unions also, that is, unions such as that existing in Atlas Steel, the president of which company is also the president of the productivity council. That is considered to be a company union, and I wonder whether it is the minister's opinion that the definition would apply in such cases.

Mr. Fulton: The fact is that the definition appearing here is the definition appearing in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act which, the hon. member will appreciate, is the best definition that the Minister of Justice can find of a union or labour union.

Mr. Benidickson: On that point, I see some exemptions here with respect to crown companies both provincial and federal. We are talking here of any organization of employees formed for the purpose of regulating relations between employers and employees. What about our joint council representing senior civil servants and employees here in Ottawa? What about the civil service federation? What about the organization within the postal service? What about those who are organized within the civil service as professional workers, who apparently do not work with some of the other people but who are organized for the purpose of regulating relations between employers and employees? Are these civil servants exempted? What about firemen in municipalities, and what about other municipal workers who have organized themselves? Are these groups to be considered unions inasmuch as they are formed for the purpose of regulating relations between employers and employees? What about policemen and those in similar bodies which have formed an organization to work in concert for the purpose of talking to an employer?

Mr. Fulton: If they come within the definition here they will be expected and required to report.

Clause as amended agreed to.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

On clause 3—Application of part I.

Mr. Howard: I wish to make some general remarks on this clause. I think they will be in order, because clause 3 sets out certain exemptions with respect to what shall constitute corporations for the purpose of this bill. The first exception is, of course, with respect to a corporation to which part II applies. The second is a corporation described in the schedule. I should like to make a reference to the schedule to indicate not only what corporations are exempted but to ask the minister the reason for such exemptions. Why, for instance, should a chartered bank or a bank to which the Bank Act applies, be exempted? Why, also, should a bank to which the Quebec Savings Bank Act applies be exempt from the provisions of the bill? I think we could go right down the line noting all the other types of institution which are exempted, such as insurance companies, trust companies licensed under the Loan Companies Act, corporations licensed under the Small Loans Act, and so on, and ask why they should be given exemption. Why should corporations of this sort which deal in finance, not be required to comply with the terms of this bill? It seems to me they have a greater impact on our economy and a greater degree of control over it than the manufacturing companies.

I should like to pass on this question to the minister first of all and, perhaps, make a comment or two later, depending upon his reply.

Mr. Fulton: The committee will recall that one of the criticisms made by hon. members earlier was that the bill might require duplication in reporting. We are conscious of that criticism and we have eliminated the basis for it to the maximum extent consistent with obtaining information required to fill the gaps in our knowledge. One of the ways in which we eliminated it was by making sure that corporations and other organizations which are already required to report under other statutes information which is substantially the same as is called for in this bill would not be required to duplicate their returns. So the schedule was carefully drawn up with this object in view, and organizations will not be required to make duplicate reports, whether they are corporations or trade unions or co-operative credit societies—and the hon. member will see one referred to in paragraph 6. I am advised that, with respect to all those corporations listed in the schedule, substantially the same information as called for under this bill is required now to be filed by them under the respective acts under which they carry on their business; and that indeed not only substantially the same information as is called for here must be filed by them, but in most cases a good deal more information as well. Therefore it would only be creating duplication of returns to require them to file. That is the reason why they are exempted in the schedule.

If we find, as we accumulate experience under this bill as it operates, that some of these corporations under their acts as enumerated do not give the information we want here, then their respective acts can be amended to require that information.

Mr. Howard: I take it that the returns of the companies to which the minister refers are not filed with the dominion bureau of statistics as is anticipated in this case, but are returns filed with the Department of Finance or perhaps the insurance branch of that department. Also, some of this information filed by these companies is public. For instance, under the Bank Act there is tabled in parliament every year information listing the names and addresses of everyone owning more than 500 shares, I believe it is, in a private chartered bank.

If it is desired to compile information about the control of corporations this information should be forwarded to one place, namely, as the minister indicated, the dominion bureau of statistics in order that all the facts and statistics about the operation and control of the corporations mentioned in the schedule will be in one place, and the statisticians will have full knowledge of the facts in drawing their conclusions based on these statistics.

The minister said this information is substantially the same as required by the bill. I understood him to say that under the Bank Act, the Trust Companies Act and other measures companies are required to file information about their operations. If the government is going into the field of duplication of information such as corporate names and the addresses of head offices and the like, which information I understand is in many instances filed under the Companies Act, it would not be too much to ask a company such as the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce to make a carbon copy of whatever statistics were being compiled so that they could be filed with the dominion bureau of statistics.

Part 16 of the schedule exempts a corporation if it has a gross revenue not exceeding $500,000 and if the assets in Canada of the corporation as of the last day of the reporting period involved, determined as prescribed by the regulation, do not exceed $250,000. That is a rather high ceiling to establish before a corporation is put in the position of having to file information.

I take particular exception to part 17 of the schedule which reads:

> Any other corporation of a class prescribed by the regulations to be a class of corporations the filing of returns in respect of which is not essential to the securing of effective compliance with part I.

In my opinion it is asking too much that those referred to in the schedule, plus heaven knows what else the cabinet may desire to have excluded as a class or group, be exempt. If we make exemptions they should be made, not on the basis of whether or not these private corporations are organized under another act of parliament but on the basis of whether or not they are corporations coming under the public domain, such as municipalities. The references in the schedule in this regard are quite correct.

Although the minister referred to it, I also see no reason for exempting co-operative societies if they wish statistical information.

If we are going to exempt corporations from the application of this bill the exemptions should be set out in the measure and not by way of the schedule. We should eliminate the blank cheque the government requests in asking that it be given authority to exempt anyone else it desires to exempt from this measure.

I wish to propose a formal amendment. It is rather lengthy because it includes parts of the schedule and perhaps it would be desirable to distribute it before it is read so that hon. members may follow it.

I move:

> That clause 3 be amended by deleting therefrom, in lines 4 and 5, the following: "and (b) a corporation described in the schedule," and by substituting therefor the following:
> (b) a corporation that is an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or is named in Schedule D to the Financial Administration Act,—

That is drawn from part 7 of the schedule. I continue:

> (c) a municipality in Canada or a municipal or other public body performing a function of government in Canada,

That comes from part 8 of the schedule. I continue:

> (d) a corporation not less than 90 per cent of the shares or capital of which are owned by Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or by a municipality in Canada,

That is the language of part 9 of the schedule. I continue:

> (e) a corporation that is an agent of the government of a country other than Canada,

That is the wording of part 10 of the schedule. I continue:

> (f) a corporation not less than 90 per cent of the shares or capital of which are owned by the government of a country other than Canada,

That is drawn from part 11 of the schedule. I continue:

(g) a corporation having as its object the furtherance of any religious or other charitable purposes,—

I do not know whether or not that applies to the Liberal party.

—no part of the income of which is payable to or otherwise available for the personal gain or benefit of any proprietor, member or shareholder thereof, and

(h) any corporation, for any reporting period of the corporation in respect of which it can be established that

(a) the gross revenue of the corporation for that reporting period from the business carried on by it in Canada, determined as prescribed by the regulations, did not exceed one hundred thousand dollars,—

This proposes an alteration from the present requirement of $500,000 bringing it closer into line with what the government is attempting to do. I continue:

—and

(b) the assets in Canada of the corporation as of the last day of that reporting period, determined as prescribed by the regulations, did not exceed fifty thousand dollars, except any such corporation that is one of two or more corporations that, by reason of inter-relationship of management, ownership or financial affairs, are designated by the minister to be related corporations and that would not, if considered as a single corporation, qualify as a corporation described in this item.

If accepted by the committee the deletion of the schedule would be required because the references in the schedule which I think should be in the measure are contained in this amendment to clause 3. It would leave us provided corporations which would require to submit the statistics under this act, including banks under the Bank Act or the Quebec Savings Banks Act, an insurance company or a fraternal benefit society registered under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act or the Foreign Insurance Companies Act; trust companies; loan companies; small loans companies; a co-operative credit society; a corporation that is an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada; a corporation licensed under the Radio Act to establish a broadcasting station; a transcontinental air carrier; a railway, telegraph, telephone or express company or a carrier by water in respect of which returns are made in pursuance of sections 384 to 389 of the Railway Act and a corporation which did not have gross revenue of more than $100,000 or assets of more than $50,000. I think this would be more in keeping with the desire expressed by the minister to have under one agency a complete understanding of all of the facts relating to the operation and control of our economy.

[Mr. Howard.]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I dispense with the reading of the amendment? Is it agreed that I dispense with the reading of it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there any discussion on the amendment?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: I should point out that I have some doubt as to the admissibility of the amendment, if that is of any help.

Mr. Benidickson: If there is argument in so far as the point of order is concerned I will defer my remarks as they would apply to basic clause 3 as it now stands.

The Deputy Chairman: I should point out to the committee that my concern is that the amendment enlarges the scope of the clause which is amended and thereby goes beyond the scope of the bill itself. That is a matter on which I should like to have some assistance from the committee, if I may.

Mr. Fulton: The point of order is a technical one. Far be it from me to avoid points of order by which Your Honour seeks to apply the rules. However, I must say that if the amendment were to be accepted, it would greatly increase the number of returns that would be required to be filed under this act. But whether or not it goes outside the scope of the bill or the clause is a question upon which I find it difficult to pass judgment. May I put the matter in this way. The two questions, namely whether or not it goes beyond the scope of the clause and whether or not it is desirable on the merits, seem to me to be very closely interrelated. Without prejudice to the point of order which Your Honour has raised, I would prefer to put my objection on the merits. I have indicated that the corporations of the class described in the schedule are all corporations which are required to report very completely under the acts under which they have their authority. I am also advised that with the possible exception—

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may interrupt the minister for just a second, I should like to get one matter clear. Am I to take it that the minister is arguing that we should consider this amendment on its merits and should not trouble further about the point of order that has been raised? If not, I think it would be just as well to get from the Chair a ruling on the point of order. I take it that the minister did not himself wish to make an issue of the point, and I think that would be the view on our side. After all, this amendment would appear merely to restrict the number of exemptions in a slightly different way and I would think we ought to consider it on its merits.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fulton: As I say, Mr. Chairman, you have raised a point of order. I think the point of order is well taken. However, if Your Honour would not feel it to be a violation of the rules, I am prepared to deal with the amendment on its merits.

Mr. Howard: Certainly I am prepared to deal with it on its merits. However, it seems strange to me that the minister now says that the point of order you took, Mr. Chairman, is well taken but that a moment ago he felt hard pressed to argue the point.

The Deputy Chairman: If I may, I should like hurriedly to point out to the committee—and I do not want to delay the proceedings—that in looking over the amendment I was immediately concerned with subsection (c), for example, which brings in a municipality in Canada. However, I am quite prepared to leave aside the ruling and to hear the case for the amendment on its merits.

Mr. Fulton: What the amendment proposes to do, in my opinion, is not to introduce new exemptions but rather to delete certain of the exemptions established under the schedule. If I may do so, I should like to point out with respect that clause (c) does not introduce a new heading. It reproduces paragraph 8 of the schedule. As I appreciate the amendment, what it would do if it were carried would be to delete heads 1 to 6 of the schedule as well as heads 14 and 15, to modify head 16 and to delete head 17. However, I do not think it would introduce anything new. I therefore take it that the committee would wish to deal with it on its merits rather than under a point of order.

As I said a moment ago, all the corporations exempted under the schedule are corporations which are required, under the acts by which they have their authority, to report all of the information which this bill calls for, and indeed in most cases more. I can therefore see no purpose in deleting any of the exemptions established by the schedule. Indeed, if the objection of the hon. member be that this information is not available to the public may I say this. I am told that, for instance, under the Bank Act, the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act and the Loan Companies Act the information filed by the companies subject thereto is available without legal barrier not only to the government but indeed to publication in annual reports and information of that kind. Hence there is no purpose whatsoever in requiring these corporations to duplicate the returns they already make under the acts by which they have their authority. There is therefore no purpose to the amendment which seeks to remove the exemption of those classes of corporations contained in the schedule.

With respect to paragraph 16 which the amendment would modify by decreasing the limit from $500,000 to $100,000 and $250,000 to $50,000 respectively, may I say this. I am told that the number of corporations that would be included as a result of that change would not appreciably affect the picture as to the effect on the Canadian economy of foreign control, although it would vastly increase the number of corporations from whom reports would be required. I am advised that under the limits now established by virtue of clause 16 of the schedule some 25,000 corporations will be required to report. I do not know whether the members of the New Democratic party are entirely careless of the volume of work that is entailed. We are prepared to ask civil servants to do the work that this bill will entail but if you consider that the limits of $500,000 and $250,000 respectively as the lower limits for the reporting requirement produce a requirement to report by 25,000 corporations, you can imagine the vast increase in that number that would take place if those limits were lowered.

I must say, sir, that I think it is surely an obvious proposition that to require corporations with a gross revenue of less than $500,000 and assets of less than $250,000 to make these reports would not add greatly to the knowledge of the government as to the effects of foreign ownership upon the Canadian economy. I am told that it might well mean that you would require returns from another 75,000 corporations.

Certainly the general pattern is that it is not the small corporation that one is concerned with here. The exercise and incidence of foreign control are generally apparent from the larger corporation, and it is in that sphere that there occur the effects with which we are concerned.

With regard to the suggestion that paragraph 17 of the schedule be deleted, this I am entirely unable to accept. The committee will observe that paragraph 17 does not give the government the right to exempt a specific corporation from the requirement to report. It only gives the right to exempt classes of corporations, so that if we find as we gain experience under this legislation that some of those who are reporting under it are in fact duplicating reports they already make we can then exempt that class of corporation.

Furthermore, any regulation made hereunder would require to be tabled and would become public knowledge, and if anyone had the dark and rather exaggerated suspicions, if I may so describe them, of the hon. member for Skeena, he could, of course, question the propriety of exempting that class of corporation. It will not be possible for the government to single out a particular corporation for any reason whatsoever and exempt it by regulation. It will have to be a corporation falling within a class. So, Mr. Chairman, for these reasons I am unable to accept the amendment.

Mr. Benidickson: Did I understand the Minister of Justice to say that there are now caught in this net 25,000 corporations that will be asked to submit reports under the terms of the legislation?

Mr. Fulton: That is the estimate, yes.

Mr. Benidickson: And did the minister indicate that if the amendment were accepted the number of corporations that would be liable to report would be increased considerably?

Mr. Fulton: Very considerably.

Mr. Benidickson: Irrespective of the amendment, I was going to ask that question at the appropriate time before we proceeded very far. I was suspicious in the first place that this was rather half-baked legislation and I am more satisfied as we proceed that it is really nothing but political window dressing. I doubt that the minister himself has his heart in it. It is certainly very empty compared with what was presented last year. Not many people are objecting to it at this time, but I do not think they realize the consequences of a relatively petty nature that are involved, though in the aggregate they are not petty.

If 25,000 corporations are asked to provide information that has been so watered down that it is of little value to anybody, I imagine they will have to hire professional services, accountants and lawyers, and that the minimum expense for each corporation will be $200. That is a total amount of $5 million that will have been imposed upon these corporations across the country. Even taking the expense at $100 for each corporation, and I doubt that the minister would want to provide all this information from his office for that amount, the total would be $2½ million. But that is not particularly my point.

I indicated that I intend to speak on clause 3 as it was originally drafted, but having in mind the point I wish to advance I can do so equally well on the amendment. I feel that the minister should give us greater assurance than he has that what we are avoiding in this wide list of exemptions in the schedule is duplication. I am not satisfied to hear from the minister that those corporations listed in the schedule now submit returns that are susbtantially the same. At another time he said "very completely the same". There are obligations here with regard to annual presentation.
