Coffin of Tutankhamen Is Unearthed After 3,200 Years

RABINOVITCH FREE IN UNIQUE CASE

SPECIMEN OF BIG COFFIN IS UNIQUE

Chastely Simple in Design But Massive in Construction, Discoverer Says.

GLEAMING PINK

Bier of King Tutankhamen Shorn of Protective Nest of Golden Shrines.

Luxor, Feb. 4.—For the first time in 3,200 years, the great stone coffin of Tutankhamen stood forth today in all its majesty, shorn of its protective nest of golden shrines.

The fourth casket proved, in Howard Carter's experienced hands, a less formidable problem than was first surmised, and a few hours' work yesterday sufficed to disengage the sarcophagus. Then it was seen that the enthusiasm evoked by the glimpse obtained four weeks ago of one end of the sarcophagus through the open doors of the enclosing shrines, was justified.

As massive in construction as it is chastely simple in design, and as untouched by the tooth of time as it is inviolate from the hands of tomb robbers, this grandiose stone chest, gleaming pink beneath the glare of the electric lamps, must be acclaimed a unique specimen of the funerary art of the eighteenth dynasty.

Shield Dead Monarch. The four crowned goddesses of death who in traditional posture stand at the four corners of the coffin with wings outspread to shield the dead monarch from the forces of evil, are boldly and deeply incised—full breasted, with slender arms and powerfully winged, each with one hand grasping the "ankh" or key of life, which figures in the dead pharaoh's name. The lid is massively solid and inscribed in bands with lines of hieroglyphics.

BELIEVE VICTIM NOTED GEM THIEF

Was Shot at Baale While Attempting to Escape From Police.

Berlin, Feb. 4.—A man who was shot at Baale while attempting to escape from the police is said to have been the author of extensive jewel robberies carried out last year in London, Manchester, Birmingham, Glasgow, Hull and other English towns. He was identified with the owner of a villa at Berka, Thuringia, who called himself Walther Brachmann, and professed to be a merchant. A search of the house revealed jewels and gold and silver articles believed to be the fruits of robberies, and further investigation showed that the owner of the villa had lived in England for some years, before the war and had been interned there under the name of Harry Glove. After his return to Germany he is said to have formed an "International Burglary Company, Limited." Beginning last year, the gang got into England, via Holland, and taking up quarters at a hotel in London, where they posed as gentlemen of independent means, planned a whole series of daring robberies.

According to the German papers, a Jeweler in London was one of the chief sufferers from their depredations, and lost so heavily that the companies with which he dealt refused to do business with him. He offered a reward of $5,000 for information leading to the capture of the thieves. On his return to the continent Brachmann was able to deposit half a million gulden in a Dutch bank. The goods found at the villa at Berka are said to have value of $250,000. Brachmann is said to have been a good educated man, and to have spoken English and French faultlessly.

LETTERS OF 2 PREMIERS MADE PUBLIC

Correspondence Between Ramsay MacDonald and Poincare Given Out.

IN TRYING TIMES

French Premier Says He Hopes Labor Leader will be Successful.

(By Canadian Press.)

London, Feb. 4.—The correspondence which passed recently between Ramsay MacDonald, the British Premier, and M. Poincare, the French Premier, following a letter from Mr. MacDonald to M. Poincare advancing the hope that France might adopt a conciliatory spirit toward Great Britain and that the two countries might resume cordial relations, was made public here today. Mr. MacDonald's letter was dated Jan. 26. It was typewritten and was handed to M. Poincare in the chamber while debate on the French Government fiscal measures was beginning. Notwithstanding the confusion growing out of the debate, M. Poincare wrote his reply by hand at the ministerial bench in the chamber and sent it within an hour to the Foreign Office in Paris, whence it was sent to London by the ordinary post.

Text of Letter.

"Mr. MacDonald's letter follows: 'My Dear Mr. Premier: 'Our two countries have gone through such trying times side by side and made such sacrifices together, that, coming into office, I address you a personal note, not only to inform you of the change but to send you my greetings and good wishes.

"I grieve to find so many unsettled points are causing us trouble and concern, and I assure you it will be my daily endeavor to help settle them to our mutual benefit. You have your private opinion and I have mine. You have your national interests to conserve and protect and I have mine. Sometimes at first they may be in conflict, but I am sure that the strenuous action of goodwill these conflicts can be settled and policies devised in pursuit of which France and Great Britain can remain in hearty co-operation."

"We can be frank without being hostile and can defend our countries' interest without being unkind. There is no nominal thing between France and Great Britain can advance together to establish peace and security in Europe."

"I accept these assurances and my sentiments of personal respect, and believe me to be, 'RAMSAY MACDONALD.' M. Poincare's Reply.

M. Poincare's reply was dated Jan. 29, and reads: 'Dear Mr. Premier: 'I am much touched by your kind letter, which you have been good enough to write me to inform me your high functions and to send me your personal good wishes. I hope with all my heart that your country will be crowned with success.

"The bonds which unite it to my own have been knit together, as you recall, in the days of common trial and sacrifice. You may be sure that the memory of those times is ever present to my mind, as to yours. I also regret that several questions of importance to our countries have not yet been settled.

"Like you I will do my utmost to solve them by friendly agreement and to our mutual advantage.

"If we have to take into account public opinion in our respective countries, I am confident that in applying, each in his own sphere, the vigorous action and good will of which you speak to the settlement of problems arising between us, we shall solve them in such a manner as to maintain between Great Britain and France a whole should find once more peace, security and freedom to work.

"I beg you to accept my assurances, etc., etc. 'POINCARÉ.'"

Talks Self Into Jail

Just like a woman! Anna J. Kearns, 21, "napper bandit," walked into a Cleveland drug store, pointed a shiny little automatic at the male attendant and proceeded to help herself to the cash register's contents. Five days later she phoned to tell him how sorry she was. That proved her undoing, for police, tracing the change of the call, arrested her as she left a pay station. Anna told detectives unemployment and impending hunger drove her to it. Just another case of a small-town girl getting off on the wrong track in a big city, the officers say.

Tots Are Tortured in a Fiendish Manner to Appease Rich Visitors

Vienna, Feb. 4.—Exclusive Austrian society is staggered by the disclosure of the most horrible scandal in history through wholesale arrests of the wealthiest and oldest families following the discovery of a flagellation school, where a baroness whipped and tortured children to satisfy visitors, who were charged enormous prices.

Following complaints of neighbors in Silberstrasse, detectives raided the home of Baroness Rosa Nagy Eyed, widow of a Hungarian captain and former wife of a Paris banker named Rosa.

In a plush carpeted, velvet hung room on the second floor the police found a table, like an operating table, with straps and strange apparatus affixed and fresh blood-stains on it. In a cupboard were discovered whips of all kinds, from tiny silken switches like fly swatters, to Russian knouts with leaden pellets attached to the ends of the thongs. The detectives found photographs betraying the terrible usage of the articles—pictures of bleeding, writhing children being flogged by a woman while a group of bestial, gloating men and women, their eyes protruding from their sockets, watched the orgy. Ransacking the house the police found two children with scars and bruises. The boy was unable to speak, but the girl, named Greta Paready, said her mother, starving, had sold her to the baroness six months ago, when the woman had said she loved children and intended to raise her.

The baroness, when put under a third degree, admitted she used the children in flagellation scenes. She confessed that she had used her daughter, Edith, who died last autumn at the age of 14.

The baroness said that visitors paid $50,000 crowns to watch a 15-minute scene, and the receipts averaged $500,000 crowns daily.

ARREST IN CIVIL CASE IS ILLEGAL

Sheriff Wilson Had No Authority to Arrest During Remand.

CANCEL BAIL BOND

Plaintiff in Civil Action Must Pay Costs, the Court Rules.

A case said to be without parallel in the courts of Canada and in which only one similar case in British law was quoted, was decided by Chief Justice McKeown, sitting in chambers this morning. By his decision the Judge ordered set aside the second arrest of Harry Rabinovitch on a bailable capias served by Sheriff Wilson in the police court last week after Rabinovitch was remanded and admitted to bail in a criminal action.

A bail bond on which he was released after the second arrest was ordered cancelled, and the plaintiff in the civil suit was ordered to pay the costs of this application.

Rabinovitch was arrested on a warrant charging him with unlawfully receiving some $50,000, alleged to have been stolen. He was brought before the police magistrate, remanded and admitted to bail. Before he left the court room he was again arrested by Sheriff Wilson on a bailable writ in a civil action brought against him by Max Weizer, in connection with a liquor transaction. Soon afterward he was released on further bail being secured.

Arthur N. Carter, who appeared for Rabinovitch today, asked that the arrest be set aside and the bail bond cancelled on the ground that the defendant could not legally be arrested while still in custody. Dr. P. H. Taylor, K. C., while admitting the arrest was irregular, argued that the bail bond should stand as it had been voluntarily given.

The Judge, however, ruled that the arrest was illegal and therefore ordered that it be set aside, that the bail bond be cancelled, and that the costs of the defendant's application should be paid by the plaintiff.

TRIBUTES PAID TO WOODROW WILSON

Many Statesmen in All Parts of World Mourn Former President.

(By Canadian Press.)

Washington, Feb. 4.—Woodrow Wilson has passed into history. His death came peacefully at 11:15 o'clock yesterday morning.

So imperceptibly did the soul of the war president take flight into eternity that Mrs. Wilson, who was holding his right hand, and his daughter, Miss Margaret on the other side of the death bed, did not realize that the end had come.

Dr. Grayson, who had been keeping vigil all night, was standing by Mrs. Wilson looking down at her as she lay when the faint breathing ceased. There was not a quiver. There was no sign of a death struggle. Life simply departed.

"Just like a tired man going to sleep," said Dr. Grayson afterwards. "Old Machine Broken Down."

Although he had realized fully that he was dying since last Friday night, the former president seemed to have no desire to make any last utterances. His last sentence: "The old machine has broken down," was uttered on Friday. Up until early Saturday night he occasionally indicated desires, and whispered "yes" or "no" to questions.

Commissioners Also Hear About Plan to Operate Booth Fisheries.

(Continued from page 1.) 100 to 150 hands during the season, and it was hoped to operate practically the year round. They would install a machine for making cans and this would add to the number of employees. He also said they would be customers for the civic power commission as it was intended to use electric power to run the plant. He said the amount paid last year for school taxes was $700 and E. M. Olive, chairman of the Board of Assessors said the valuation on the plant was $86,000. Commissioner Wigmore said the valuation on the real estate for water assessment was $25,000. Mr. Connors said the operation of the factory would mean an increase in the value of the city fishing lots. He said that offers had been received from St. George and St. Andrews of exemption from taxes but they would like to locate here. It was decided that Mayor Fisher should bring in a recommendation to council. Exceeded Estimate Commissioner Thornton was given authority to call for tenders for 4,000 feet of hose. He also reported that the bond issue for the steel stairway in City Hall, Carleton, had been extended by $277.04 and he moved that the bond issue for this work be increased from $5,850 to $5,927.04. This carried. He said a first class job had been done and the increase was due to some extra work which had to be done. Commissioner Bullock reported that he had been advised by the city solicitor that in the case of W. D. Wilson, who claimed damages to a horse which had fallen through the floor in the Grand Manan fishmeal warehouse, as this warehouse was under lease the city was not liable and he moved that Mr. Wilson be advised to that effect. Carried. On motion of Commissioner Bullock a lease of a lot 50 by 100 at the corner of Victoria and Queen streets, West Side, for a term of 7 years at Patrick Driscoll. Ferry Rate Commissioner Bullock reported that he had had under advisement the matter of an increase in the rate for transient boat passengers on the ferry and moved that this be increased from three cents to five cents. He said that this increased 470,000 persons had paid the three cent fare and if the same number paid a five cent fare it would mean an increase of $8,400 a year. He was not prepared to make any other changes at present. In other cities the transient rate was from seven to ten cents. Mayor Fisher said he thought there should be an expert engaged to go into the method of handling the tickets and see if any improvement could be made before any increase was made in the rates. Commissioner Thornton said he could see no great objection to increasing the transient rate but doubted if much increase in revenue would result as there would buy books of tickets. The motion carried.

COWBOY WANTS A MAN'S JOB

Travels 15,000 Miles to Get to Boston—Wears His Ranch Outfit.

Boston, Feb. 4.—After 15,000 miles of travel in ten months' effort to reach Boston, John Willis of San Antonio, Texas, arrived here, jobless but happy that he had reached his destination. Route Decided Him. Last April Willis left the Salt Creek oil fields to move westward. He got on the wrong train at Kelsie, Okla., which instead of going west started east. He had no intention of coming to Boston at the time he got aboard the train, but when he found that he was traveling east instead of west he decided that Boston should be his objective. He had only enough money to take him as far as Toledo, O. There he secured a job which took him to Detroit. From then on he tried to reach Boston, but circumstances prevented him. He tacked back and forth across the continent from San Antonio to Moose Jaw, Canada, and from Seattle to St. Albans, Vt. Finally, the other night, he reached White River Junction and hopped a milk train to Boston. Looking for a Man's Job. Dressed in a picturesque checked shirt, a 10-gallon hat and knee-high moccasins, Willis walked the streets of Boston looking for a job. "Folks down San Antonio way know me," he said. "I was born and brought up in the saddle, and I can do anything from roping a longhorn to filing a string of drilling tools. "Ever since I was a kid knee-high to a sprig of mesquite I have wanted to come to Boston. Eastern people coming West say they are from New York or Boston. When I was cow punching at Sinder's ranch the Eastern people used to talk about Boston, and I got a hankering to come East. And here I am, and I'm looking for a job—any kind of a man's job where I can earn my grub."

Doesn't Mind the Cold.

As Willis strolled along Washington street he was quite the hero of the newsboys and other juvenile wild Westers. Willis wears no overcoat. During the cold snap, several days ago, when he was in White River Junction, the thermometer plunged down 30 degrees below zero, but Willis was quite comfortable in his high boots, heavy checked shirt and riding breeches.

SHOULD PERMIT MARRIAGE OF FIT ONLY, SAYS RABBI

"There can be no social health without individual health and no individual health without social health," said Rabbi Brickner at the Social Hygiene Exhibit in Toronto last week before a crowded gathering of women. "One child with diphtheria is not just a home problem but a community menace. It is so with other communicable diseases. Society has learned that it must protect itself by knowledge. We must operate in the light. Disease is not only productive of individual misery, but of dependence and of many of our worst social problems," he declared.

Education for parenthood was badly needed by both sexes, but instead of that there was far too much of the kind of instruction or suggestion. Girls ought to be educated in motherhood as well as in household science, cookery, music and decoration. Nearly one of the fit only ought to be a state regulation. Clergymen might even without the law help in this regard by solemnizing no marriages unless satisfied that both parties were free from dangerous infections.

HELD UP IN OWN CABIN FOR PAPER

Suspect Ship Bandits Were After Document for Rum Plot.

Boston, Feb. 4.—Three bandits armed with revolvers carried out one of the most mysterious holdups on record at the East Boston police station when they suddenly appeared in the cabin of the steamer West Key Bear, and after forcing Captain George S. Young to open the safe, took one of the ship's documents and fled. The nature of the paper has not been revealed, but the police believe that the robbery is in some way connected with rum running. It was a little before 10 o'clock that Captain Young was alone in the cabin of the West Key Bear seated at the table working on his reports when the men entered. At the time he thought they were some of the ship's officers who had boarded the craft as she lay moored at the Federal Wharf at the foot of Boarder street. When he did look up it was into the muzzle of three revolvers. "Sorry to trouble you captain, but you'd better get up and open that safe quick," one of the men ordered. He did so. Then the men backed him into his own stateroom and locked the door. While one of the men stood guard with orders to shoot through the door if the captain made any outcry the bandits ransacked the safe. Left Money Untouched. It was not money that the men were after for there was a considerable sum in the strong box in plain view and untouched. They inspected the ship's books and other documents. Finding the paper they were looking for the bandits left the ship and climbing into a waiting automobile, speeded off up Boarder street. Making sure that the men had left, Captain Young began pounding and shouting to obtain his release. The noise was finally heard by one of the ship's officers, who freed the captain and later accompanied him to the East Boston police station, where the robbery was reported. Their description, which was that of evidently of foreigners, was also broadcast to Revere, Chelsea, Lynn and Greater Boston stations. "The fact that the robbers did not take anything but one of the ship's papers leads the police to believe that the holdup was carried out by rum runners' agents who needed the paper to camouflage one of their vessels. So quietly was the robbery carried out that even the man on watch did not know anything was amiss until Captain Young was released and the alarm given. Captain Young said the men were strangers to him but that they had apparently been made acquainted with the key of the ship's cabin and that the paper they desired was in the ship's safe. The hold-up was also reported to the Federal authorities, who are also working on the theory that it was a part of a rum runner's plot.

THE ROTARY CLUB

W. J. Brown addressed the Rotary Club today on the sales tax. After he had given an exposition of the working of the tax, questions were asked for, and quite a number of members put questions regarding specific application of the tax. It was a most interesting discussion and Mr. Brown was heartily thanked by Chairman Herbert Gould, E. J. Terry, R. D. Paterson and A. E. Massie were added to the committee on the juvenile court, whose other members are A. R. Cruikshank and A. M. Belding. The last named explained the situation to date and urged that vigorous efforts be made to get the juvenile court grant at the next quarterly session of the Municipal Council. W. C. Clark, chairman of the ministerial committee, lifted some hair from delinquent Rotarians who have not yet turned out for rehearsals, and a better attendance was promptly promised.

FINDS STORIES RE FIRE UNFOUNDED

Fire Marshal McLellan Investigates Prince Edward Street Matter.

Evidence of suspicious circumstances surrounding one of several fires in Moncton were investigated by H. McLellan, fire marshal, who arrived home during the week-end. Mr. McLellan said that he had not come to any decision in the matter but that he had found evidence of over-insurance of both the house and furnishings and no apparent reason for their destruction by fire. Asked regarding the matter of the fire in Prince Edward street here a week ago yesterday, Mr. McLellan said that he had examined witnesses regarding rumors of incendiarism on the part of one of the tenants and found that the stories were absolutely without foundation.

PERSONALS

Frank P. Vaughan returned Saturday after a trip to Boston, Montreal and Ottawa. At Ottawa he attended a convention of the Canadian Engineering Institute. Dr. George G. Melvin, chief medical health officer for the province, arrived from Fredericton Saturday afternoon. Friends of O. W. Chesley of Bridgetown, formerly of this city, will be glad to know that he is rapidly recovering from his recent illness and is now able to be around again. Captain Lawson, commander S. S. Cahokia was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Donald MacKenzie, Thorne avenue Saturday. He left for Scotland on Sunday via Portland, Maine. Mrs. Francis McCafferty arrived home today after visiting her daughters in Lowell and Bangor.

BURIED TODAY.

The funeral of Mrs. Annie E. Baxter was held this morning from her late residence, 122 Pitt street, at the Cathedral for high mass of requiem by Rev. J. Brown. Rev. E. P. Reynolds, sub-deacon and Rev. E. P. Reynolds, sub-deacon. Final absolution was given by His Lordship Bishop LeBlanc. Rev. W. M. Duke, Rev. J. Ward and Abbe Casgrain were in the sanctuary. A very large number of spiritual and floral offerings were received, among the latter being a large wreath of roses from the W. H. Hayward Co. and staff; large cross of roses from the Misses Nellie and Belle Read and a pillow from the family. Interment was in the old Catholic cemetery.

Man of Action.

The fireman must be able to do all kinds of things, from rescuing an unconscious man by rope or ladder to dealing with poisonous fumes. He must know the best positions from which to throw water on a burning building. Likewise he is taught how to enter a burning building even though the doors and windows are locked, and he knows how to attain an almost staggering height by means of a series of short ladders.

What happens in a fire station immediately the alarm is given? Many people have wondered. This is demonstrated in 20 seconds. Scarcely a moment after the alarm has gone, an indicator lights up showing the appliances that must leave the station, and instantly the crews shoot down from stanchions by means of a polished brass pole, and throw themselves on to their engine. The doors swing open, the engine huzz and away go the fire fighters. Everything is done in less time than it takes to describe.

LONDON BRIGADE IS WORLD'S BEST

The Fighters Win Praise for Handling of East End Conflagration.

London, Feb. 4.—The way in which the recent great fire in the East End was dealt with by the massed efforts of the London County Council Fire Brigade is a sterling tribute to London's fire fighters, who are the finest in the world. Fire engines, numbering nearly 70, came from all parts of London. The estimated damage was above $1,000,000. The fire brigade headquarters at Southwark are always in close touch with every station in a district covering an area of 121 square miles. At no time, even when the largest of fires is raging, is there any district in the Metropolitan area left without adequate protection against fire. When the alarm is given, the station concerned sends its motor pump and rescue appliances, and should the superintendent officer need additional help he may circulate a district call, which brings 15 or more engines to the scene. A fire which might necessitate a "brigade call" would be attended by 25 to 40 engines. This would necessitate a fresh allocation of engines from outlying districts to those stations from which the additional ones had been called. The public are allowed to watch firemen in training at headquarters, and many visitors look upon the display as an entertainment with a thrill.

Thorne & Co's window, King street. A cup for the highest number of points scored in the events has been donated by Alexander Corbet. WOODROW WILSON
DIED PEACEFULLY
AFTER LONG BATTLE

Passed Away at 11.15 a. m. on Sunday in Washington.

Washington, Feb. 3.—Woodrow Wilson, passed away at 11.15 a. m. today after hovering for two days between life and death. The end came peacefully. Mrs. Wilson, Miss Margaret Wilson and Dr. Grayson, were at the bedside.

Physician's Statement.
The cause of death as officially announced was general arteriosclerosis and hemiplegia. The passing of the former president was announced in the following statement issued by his physician and friend Rear-Admiral Cary T. Grayson.

"Mr. Wilson died at eleven-fifteen this morning.

"The heart's action became feebler and feebler, and the heart muscles were so fatigued that it refused to act any longer. The end came peacefully.

"The immediate cause of death was exhaustion following a digestive disturbance which began in the early stage of last week, but did not reach acute stage until the early morning hours of February 1."

Twice President.
Washington, Feb. 3.—Twenty-eighth President of the United States, and the first Democrat since Jackson to serve two successive terms, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, L. D., Litt. D., occupied the Presidency during eight years of such world upheaval and turmoil that his proper place in history cannot be overestimated until his contemporaries are likewise assigned to their niches.

Certainly, he ranked as one of the great war presidents of the American Republic, and he exercised such an influence in world affairs as never before attached to his office.

An obscure lawyer, by nature a man of letters, he became an educator and won his first attention from the public as president of Princeton University. Then by the stroke of a day of a political system he became Governor of New Jersey and later, because of the victory of the Republican party were divided between Theodore Roosevelt and William H. Taft, he became President of the United States.

After having borne the burdens of a war president, he undertook the task of making a peace which he sincerely believed would be a lasting one and although he succeeded in getting Europe to accept it in large measure, his own country rejected it. And in the fight he broke his health, wore himself out, suffered a stroke of paralysis which led to his death, and declared through it all that he would have been happy to give his life for the success of his efforts.

Was a Virginian.
Born in Staunton, Va., Dec. 28, 1856, of Scotch-Irish parentage, he christened Thomas Woodrow Wilson and he was known in early life as "Tommy." After he was graduated from Princeton in 1879 he was known as Woodrow Wilson. His father was the Rev. Joseph Ruggles Wilson, a Presbyterian clergyman, and his mother was Jessie Woodrow.

Mr. Wilson once said that as a young lawyer he wore out the rug in his office, walking around the desk waiting for clients, so he abandoned a legal career and went to Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore for a post graduate course in letters. While here he published his first book, "Congressional Government," a study in American politics. It evoked offers of professorships at Bryn Mawr and Wesleyan and the young man who wrote of the defects of the American political system in 1885 found himself to-day with them later.

Having written in a deprecatory tone of the tendency toward autocracy in American Presidents he lived to hear himself called the greatest autocrat of them all and to see a resolution declaring his office vacant on those grounds introduced and tabled in the Senate.

College Man and Writer.
Successively, Mr. Wilson became professor of history and political economy at Bryn Mawr and at Wesleyan University and later professor of jurisprudence and political economy at Princeton where, subsequently, he was made head of that institution. Meanwhile, Professor Wilson had gained high reputation as a writer.

In the year 1910 the inexorable force of events came into evidence. The tide which "sweeps on to fortune" began to rise about him. Nominated for governor of New Jersey in a political situation about which many interesting things have been said and denied with equal fervor, he was elected on the Democratic ticket, and immediately took on the state "bosses" for a round of combat which attracted the attention of the country. In the Jersey legislature he found the young lawyer, Joseph P. Tumulty, who became his private secretary and biographer.

Governor Wilson's nomination for the presidency at the Democratic convention of 1912 in Baltimore was one of the dramatic spectacles of American political history. It was a battle royal which brought him victory after more than 40 ballots.

Woodrow Wilson won the election with 433 electoral votes. Roosevelt got 88 and Taft 8. He came to the White House on March 4, 1913, signalling the return of the Democracy to power after successive defeats of 16 years.

Was Much Criticized.
Mr. Wilson was much criticized for "weakness" in handling the Mexican situation, but his friends said he saw a world-war coming and had told them he "did not propose to have the United States caught with one hand tied behind its back." He did not propose to be engaged in a war with Mexico at such a time. At all events, the world-war broke the same year. Woodrow Wilson added his appeals to the futile effort to stay it, sitting by the bedside of his dying wife on a memorable August 6, 1914. Mrs. Wilson passed away that day, and with a world taking fire about him, he took her body to her girlhood home in Rome, Georgia, for burial. The president with almost prostrated with his grief and returned alone to the White House to face his burden. Mr. Wilson's friends always said that during his first Mr. Wilson saw it would be a world war and that the United States eventually would be drawn in. But he realized that the country drawing its population from the states of Europe which were going to war would face a much divided sentiment and a very difficult situation. His first words to his countrymen were a caution to strict neutrality.

Mr. Wilson's efforts were devoted to keeping his country neutral until the submarine outrages began. He was at first unable to believe that the atrocities had the sanction of the German government but was convinced when they sunk the Lusitania. That incident brought the first rift in his official family.

William Jennings Bryan, secretary of state, an avowed pacifist, opposed Mr. Wilson's course and left the cabinet. Mr. Wilson nevertheless went ahead and warned the German government against sacrificing the lives of American citizens. Through a diplomatic correspondence which continued for two years, the president built up a record which reached its climax when he handed passports to Count Johann Von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, and asked Congress to declare war which it did. With that the president led the nation into the tremendous effort before it.

His Second Marriage.
Meanwhile, with a world war all about him, Mr. Wilson had found time for an affair of the heart. He had met Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt, the widow of a Washington merchant. Their courtship was swift, and they were married Dec. 18, 1915. There were no children of this second marriage.

It was President Wilson who conducted the correspondence with Chancellor Max of Germany, when the request for an armistice came, and once the Germans laid down their arms he turned his thought wholly from war to peace, telling his friends that while Germany must be made to pay for her full ability, Europe must not have another Alsace-Lorraine.

It was quite a different Woodrow Wilson who sat in the President's chair when the war ended. With hair whitened and face lined he showed the effects.

Goes to Europe.
Peace in sight, Mr. Wilson decided to go to Europe himself and take a hand in making it. Congress, no longer the suppliant hand-maiden it was during his first administration, roared its disapproval. Mr. Wilson assured Congress that he would know all he did. As a matter of fact he told Congress very little of what he was doing, or anybody else for that matter, until it was done. That was not Mr. Wilson's way. The result was that he committed the United States to the League of Nations and was repudiated.

An obscure lawyer, by nature a man of letters, he became an educator and won his first attention from the public as president of Princeton University. Then by the stroke of a day of a political system he became Governor of New Jersey and later, because of the victory of the Republican party were divided between Theodore Roosevelt and William H. PREACHED IN FAIRVILLE. Rev. J. A. McFarlane preached yesterday morning in St. Columba's Presbyterian church, Fairville. Rev. William Townsend, M. A., conducted the service and introduced Rev. McFarlane. Miss Lucy Black sang with expression, "God's Way is the Best Way." Miss Sadie Cougle was the organist.

A formula has been recently discovered, by which a factory in Bohemia makes what is said to be practically unbreakable glass.

A silken tube enclosed in strong netting to save the contents from being trapped in burning buildings, has been designed.

The following attended 45 Sundays or more and received certificates: Hazel E. Peck, Robert Aird, W. Fraser Robb, Grace M. Archibald, Reginald Johnson, Stanley Olive and Harry McGowan.

The Sunday school superintendent, Robert Reid, assisted Mr. Miller in making the presentations.

At the evening service there was a large congregation, the greater proportion being young people. Rev. Mr. Miller preached a powerful sermon on the subject, "On the Way of Life." This was the first of a series of five sermons for young people.

During the service Miss Erminie Climo sang very sweetly "Crossing the Bar," and the anthem, "Lead Me, Lord," was given by a large choir.

ST. DAVID'S GIVEN

Rev. Dr. A. MacMillan, of Toronto, is Special Preacher.

In St. David's church Sunday morning Rev. A. MacMillan, D. D. of Toronto, secretary of committee on church praise, was the preacher. He expounded the place of praise by choir and congregation. The choir sang an anthem, "Art thou weary," Miss M. Girvan taking the solo part. At this service the minister, Rev. Hugh Miller, presented to 27 boys and girls, for church attendance during 1923, certificates and diplomas and, on behalf of the session, to those who had attended one service every Sunday during the year a testimonial hymn book or Bible to the following: Anna Janet Cox, Margaret McClelland, Isabel F. Malcolm, Thomas C. Somerville, John McL. Malcolm, D. Graham Corbet, S. Frances Moore, Lois C. Ledingham, Constance M. Sage, B. Ellen Nelson, Edith Olive, Thomas McClelland, Robert Hanson, John Stinson and Elizabeth Robb. The following having reached the age where they automatically drop out of the plan were presented with a handsome diploma: Doris T. Steele, E. Mildred Sage, Jean W. Ledingham, Yvonne Johnson and Thomas Aird.

The following attended 45 Sundays or more and received certificates: Hazel E. Peck, Robert Aird, W. Fraser Robb, Grace M. Archibald, Reginald Johnson, Stanley Olive and Harry McGowan.

The Sunday school superintendent, Robert Reid, assisted Mr. Miller in making the presentations.

At the evening service there was a large congregation, the greater proportion being young people. Rev. Mr. Miller preached a powerful sermon on the subject, "On the Way of Life." This was the first of a series of five sermons for young people.

During the service Miss Erminie Climo sang very sweetly "Crossing the Bar," and the anthem, "Lead Me, Lord," was given by a large choir.

MARRIED THREE SISTERS. London, Feb. 4.—At the age of 72, Thomas Lewis Thomas, of Ysalytera, Breconshire, has just married for the third time. His three wives were sisters. The third, Mary Williams, of Llandaw is aged 60. The wedding took place at Llandaw.

Woodrow Wilson won the election with 433 electoral votes. Roosevelt got 88 and Taft 8. He came to the White House on March 4, 1913, signalling the return of the Democracy to power after successive defeats of 16 years.

Was Much Criticized.
Mr. Wilson was much criticized for "weakness" in handling the Mexican situation, but his friends said he saw a world-war coming and had told them he "did not propose to have the United States caught with one hand tied behind its back." He did not propose to be engaged in a war with Mexico at such a time. At all events, the world-war broke the same year. Woodrow Wilson added his appeals to the futile effort to stay it, sitting by the bedside of his dying wife on a memorable August 6, 1914. Mrs. Wilson passed away that day, and with a world taking fire about him, he took her body to her girlhood home in Rome, Georgia, for burial. The president with almost prostrated with his grief and returned alone to the White House to face his burden. Mr. Wilson's friends always said that during his first Mr. Wilson saw it would be a world war and that the United States eventually would be drawn in. But he realized that the country drawing its population from the states of Europe which were going to war would face a much divided sentiment and a very difficult situation. His first words to his countrymen were a caution to strict neutrality.

Mr. Wilson's efforts were devoted to keeping his country neutral until the submarine outrages began. He was at first unable to believe that the atrocities had the sanction of the German government but was convinced when they sunk the Lusitania. That incident brought the first rift in his official family.

William Jennings Bryan, secretary of state, an avowed pacifist, opposed Mr. Wilson's course and left the cabinet. Mr. Wilson nevertheless went ahead and warned the German government against sacrificing the lives of American citizens. Through a diplomatic correspondence which continued for two years, the president built up a record which reached its climax when he handed passports to Count Johann Von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, and asked Congress to declare war which it did. With that the president led the nation into the tremendous effort before it.

WOODROW WILSON

There was a time when Woodrow Wilson stood forth as one of the greatest figures on the stage of world affairs. That was at the close of the war. Because of the unique position of the United States and the great prestige it had gained, and the disposition of the other nations to listen with respect to the voice that came from Washington, there seemed an unvalued opportunity for President Wilson to serve humanity in peace as he had his country had done in the late years of the war. He did not, however, achieve his great purpose. It is true he retained in the United States a great body of followers; but, because he apparently took too much for granted as to the length the people would follow him; and because the feeling grew that he was taking too much upon himself and not consulting the people, a feeling that was very seriously cultivated by his political opponents, he was unable to carry the United States into the League of Nations, and himself went down to defeat in the ensuing presidential elections. A Roosevelt might have succeeded where Wilson failed, but the latter was lacking in something essential to command the situation in such a crisis in national affairs.

But Wilson was nevertheless a great and commanding figure. He proved himself a great war leader. If he emphasized some phrases, such as "determination," which have been a source of no little trouble in some parts of the world, he also fixed in the public mind principles which are essential to true democracy. For three years Mr. Wilson has been a pathetic figure, broken in health but eager to assert his faith in the League of Nations and to influence his fellow-countrymen in its favor. He was a man of lofty motives, representing what was highest and best in the traditions of public service. Only his judgment, never his motives or his purpose, has been questioned at any time. It was the courage and unbending rectitude with which as Governor he cleared up New Jersey state politics that made him a national figure, and pointed the way to Washington, where he served for two presidential terms. Apart from other services rendered to his country his writings on political subjects entitle him to high rank among the leaders of the people.

It is an interesting fact that while the life of the ex-president was ebbing away the League of Nations, which President Coolidge had said was a closed incident and the Senate had pronounced a dead issue, had suddenly come to life again and was occupying public attention to an altogether unexpected degree. There is, indeed, a reasonable probability that the issue will figure to a considerable extent in the next presidential election. The United States cannot live to itself alone, and the knowledge is being pressed home by hard economic arguments.

While Wilson was slow in making up his mind to enter the world war, and many of the best minds in his country chafed at the delay, there was nothing half-hearted about it when he did decide. By none in any country was the case against Germany presented with greater force. His challenge to make the world safe for democracy rang like a clarion call to the nations. His appeal to the American people lacked nothing in dignity or compelling power. Those who were disposed to criticize with harshness the earlier phrase, "too proud to fight," could only admire the resourceful energy that threw ships and men and supplies across the Atlantic after the die was cast. And this was in the face of a determined propaganda by Germans and other enemies of Britain who lived in the United States and sought by every means, fair or foul, to hamper the action of the Government. Happily he had advisers who saw clearly their country's duty, and realized that a German triumph would mean a deadly blow to civilization and the cause of right in the world.

Perhaps history will show that Wilson had greater reason for delay in entering the war than has yet appeared, although there is likely always to be controversy on that point, as there will be regarding the course he pursued after the armistice was signed. He wielded tremendous influence abroad, but his country is still out of the League of Nations. That history will confirm the wisdom of his efforts to get the United States into the League there seems little doubt, but he has not lived to see the vindication. Mr. Wilson may not rank with the greatest of American presidents, but the fact that he was at the helm during the World War will always make him an interesting and striking figure; while portions of his messages to the people after his country entered the war will stand as masterpieces of convincing appeal, illuminating by phrases that stir the conscience of the reader. A ripe scholar, he had acquired the art of clear expression to an unusual degree; indeed his critics have averred that his fondness for a phrase sometimes led him to extremes and too great length of speech. The country which changed presidents after the war will lay aside partisanship while it honors the memory of him who has gone to his rest. His fellow-citizens will remember him as a great American, whose life was clean and wholesome, and to whom self-interest was ever secondary to what he believed to be for his country's good. Right or wrong in his conceptions and his policies, he was at heart a patriotic citizen, and a great upholder of the principles of true democracy.

CHILDREN AND HOMES

Institutional care of normal children was vigorously condemned by several speakers at the meetings of the Social Service Council of Canada, whose sessions have just closed. There is general agreement with the assertion that the best place for a normal child is a normal home. All the evidence is in support of this solution of the problem of the homeless child, assuming, however, that the child is wanted and will be loved and cherished for its own sake, and because it needs a need in the hearts of its foster parents. This is a very simple proposition. The difficulty arises when such homes are sought. It is well known, for example, that there are children in the care of the Children's Aid Society of this city who the Society is most anxious to have placed in good foster homes. Advertisements are placed in the press from time to time in an effort to stimulate interest, but it is extremely difficult to secure the right kind of homes. There is one kind of application with which the Society is not unfamiliar. It is that of the home which is seeking a boy or girl old enough to do hard work. The aim in such a case is not to get an adopted son or daughter, but to get cheap help. Of course that is not true of every applicant for a child old enough to work, and the Society has been the means of finding happy homes for older as well as younger children; but every case must be carefully considered before action is taken.

It would be a most happy solution of the problem of the homeless child if a home where love reigns could be secured, but there is another difficulty in addition to the reluctance of people to assume responsibility for a child's care. All children are not normal or attractive. The family history of some may not be favorable. Those who decide to adopt a child have certain preferences which are not easily set aside. If children are placed out to board there is no assurance that they will get as good care as in an institution. Hence the institution must continue to exist. Its work should of course be reduced to a minimum through the placing of its wards in good private homes, but such homes must first be found—and therein lies the difficulty which up to the present time has not been overcome.

Not only has the Seamen's Institute suffered a great loss in the passing of Mr. Walter Brindle but the city has lost a man who during the period of his residence here was a valued worker, along lines of religious and social welfare. Before the war he was ever ready to assist in work for the good of men and boys, and his gifts as a ready speaker enabled him to wield a wider influence. He was a giver of good counsel, and a ready helper in social work. Although no longer young, he joined two of his sons in service overseas during the war, and his death is in part due to what he suffered in France. On his return he wrote an account of his war experiences. As manager of the Seamen's Institute he was able to put his social qualities to good purpose, and the Institute under his charge was an admirably conducted institution. Many sailors in many parts of the world have pleasant memories of Mr. Brindle. Although he had not lived many years in St. John since he won a high place in the esteem of those with whom he came in personal contact in welfare organizations, and they sincerely regret that he has passed out of life.

Observers returning from England appear to be favorably impressed with the Labor Government under Ramsay MacDonald. The correspondence between him and Premier Poincare of France is couched in the friendliest terms, and there is some hope that diverse as may be the views of the two countries regarding German affairs the outcome of negotiations may be more favorable than was the case under Premier Baldwin.

One result of the trouble in Nova Scotia mines is the importation of large quantities of American soft coal. Thus the American miners profit at the expense of those of Cape Breton. The hope is now expressed that an agreement may soon be reached and the Nova Scotia miners return to work. Premier Armstrong declares that "the public interests of the province cannot much longer tolerate the condition brought about by employers and employees continuing a struggle which means ruin to all concerned." The great difficulty lies in the dispute. Each side to the fixing asserts that it is right and the other wrong, and the public pays the bills.

British recognition of Soviet Russia is quickly to be followed by a Russo-Italian treaty. Reopening Russia to world trade will give a stimulus to industry in other countries, and will help to solve Russia's problems as well. That country requires manufactured goods in large quantity. As an exporter of food and raw materials she will be to a considerable extent a competitor with Canada. This country, however, has manufactured goods to market in Russia, and is actually doing so.

The Canadian hockey team has won over all comers in the Olympic contests. Its most troublesome opponent was the American team, and the correspondent who describes the game ironically observes that there was little love lost between the two. The Canadians, however, by matchless team play gained the victory and a royal welcome awaits them on their return.

It is good news that the hardwood industry of this province is improving. There are great forests of hardwood in the northern part of New Brunswick that have yet to feel the stroke of the axe.

The Canadian National Railways show an increase of $11,000,000 in net operating revenues, for the eleven months ending Nov. 30, 1923.

MENTAL HOBOES

(Chicago Herald.) It is not a fear of affection, nor a pretense of simplicity, that encourages careless diction and slovenly language. It is laziness of mind. The man who really thinks is as careful in the use of his words as a goldsmith in the use of his tools. For words are the instruments of his thought. The man who merely pretends to think, who babbles half-thoughts, has no need for such care. And usually he is incapable of it.

Sids of New York could read and write, at seven he passed medical school examinations at Harvard, at 11 he lectured to university professors on the fourth dimension. Now he is working in a broker's office running an adding machine at $23 a week. What happened was this: Sids' thyroid gland which controls his mental activity, began its real work too early and played out too early. He lived his mental life before his brain cells were able to take down and absorb what he learned. Parents with over-precocious children would be better advised to talk to their family doctor about it instead of running around their neighborhood boring everybody to death with stories of their children's cleverness. Blessed is the average man for, unlike the hobhouse (tomato), he ripens slowly but he keeps well.

1924 Modes Calls For Modart Corsetting

Straight and slenderized lines are laid down again in the fashions just evolved for coming months. That means right through the year, for nothing so radical as a change of line occurs except with the Spring Openings.

Average to Full Figure

A topless corset built for the average to full figure and heavily boned. The elastic belt banding brings the fullness below the waist and secures that evenness of line that makes such modelling necessary.

Average to Slender

Low through the bust and underarm, graduating to a slightly higher and very full shoulder and back. Fullness here extends below waist, while lines are generally straight, the hip is so made to take care of the figure inclined to be a little large.

Without Lacing

A non-lacing model for the average to full figure for sport and athletic wear has these features. Adjustment made possible by elastic panels at side back. Maintains a flattening back effect and gives greatest amount of abdominal control possible.

Long Lines, Low Bust

A graceful model to slenderize and with plenty of fullness at hip, is cut low in front with elastic from the front to underarm, graduating to a slightly higher shoulder and back.

And they must be fitted—that is the important part—services of duly qualified and experienced corsetiers freely at your disposal.

A BRIGHT, NIGHT RIDDLE.

Is the Moon Man your big brother?

'You'll guess this riddle first crack out of the box,' said the Riddle Lady. 'But we have had so many hard ones I thought this would be so nice for a change. This isn't a summer riddle of a winter riddle. It's a fair weather riddle, though, for unless it's reasonably fine weather you can't see the thing the riddle is about. Listen now everybody. Nancy and Nick, come up close beside me where you can hear: 'Twinkle, twinkle, little light, High above the world at night, Singing to the silver moon, A magic tune. 'You are just a tiny spark, Hanging up there in the dark, Like a cinder from the sun, When day is done. 'All your sisters, then, and cousins, Come a crowding out by dozens, Just to see what makes you merry! Jolly fairy!

Old paper, cardboard and sawdust are being turned into fodder for cattle in Europe, by chemical treatment. Mrs. David Thompson, West River St., Paris, Ont., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. For myself and children I use nothing else. My little girl, five years old, has had bronchial trouble ever since she had the 'flu' a few years ago, and, now, whenever she gets a slight cold, she develops a very nasty cough, but all I have to do is give her a few doses of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Also for myself, and the other children, I can find nothing to equal it, in fact, it was only a short time ago that I gave it to my ten months old baby, and could immediately see the difference it made in her. Now, I always keep Norway Pine Syrup in the house, as I feel there is nothing to equal it." Price 35c a bottle; the large family size 60c; put up only by The T. Millburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"Self-Delusion" Blamed For Break In "Gossip Barrier" of Pastor

Mrs. Charlotte Leland (above), who is being sued for divorce on her husband's charges of self-delusion.

Chicago.—Only a clergyman's wife knows how eagerly certain people wait to pounce upon the reputation of a minister of the gospel.

She knows from whence blows the hot breath of scandal, leaving behind the charred remains of a good name. She knows the "church buzzards" who wait for every scrap of gossip. And how she must be constantly guarding her husband against these forces is a most interesting sidelight to the ugly charges and intimations surrounding Rev. Carl D. Case of the fashionable Oak Park Baptist church. Dr. Case has been named as co-defendant in a divorce action filed by Albert H. Leland against Charlotte Leland. Mrs. Leland has signed a certain "confession" of alleged affectionate relations.

That is one story. But Mrs. Case's statement of how just such situations are combated is another. "My husband would not visit a woman on a parish call—particularly at night—without taking me along. There are many foolish and impressionable women in the world. "Also my husband would not receive a woman in his study unless the door was left open. There are so many 'jump at conclusions'."

And now that the hint of scandal has come upon Dr. Case in spite of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity at the Mount Royal Hotel in Montreal last Friday evening.

Mrs. Basil C. White, daughter-in-law of Mrs. G. Rolt White, has gone from her home in Montreal to visit for a few days in Ottawa.

CHURCH OBSERVES 67TH ANNIVERSARY

Exmouth Street Holds Special Services—Visiting Minister Heard.

Special services were held in the Exmouth street Methodist church yesterday in observance of the sixty-seventh anniversary. The preacher was Rev. Dr. John Pringle, of Sydney, former moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly. Large congregations attended both morning and evening services and the choir rendered special music, including the solo, "The Music was remarkably good. The offering of the day was for the repair fund, the total amount being the splendid total of $1,850.

Rev. H. E. Thomas, pastor of the church, welcomed Dr. Pringle, and made reference to church union and the appropriateness of having a former moderator of the Presbyterian church given the anniversary address in a Methodist church.

Dr. Pringle prefaced his morning sermon by expressing his pleasure in being present and telling of his hearty sympathy with the Church Union movement. He said that Church Union might be considered as already consummated as the churches had already voted for union and further action was merely a compliance with technicalities. Dr. Pringle's theme in the morning was "The Church and the World." He spoke of 67 years' church history. He illustrated his address with many incidents of his experiences as a missionary in the Yukon.

SAVE JUVENILES FROM DELINQUENCY

Few Cases Investigated Appear Later in the Juvenile Court.

Of increasing importance in connection with the juvenile court, says the Toronto Mail and Empire, is the work of the Probation Department, the unofficial work, so called because it is preventative and not corrective. The report of the Juvenile Court for 1923, which has just been issued, shows that during the past year 1,885 offences were investigated and 3,245 persons were interviewed, and only 85 offences developed into court cases. This department deals with those who are brought to the court by their parents, not because they are delinquents, but because their tendencies are wayward. Thus, the prospective delinquent is turned in the right direction without the stain on his character of having gotten on the court records. The number of delinquent children dealt with by the court has decreased from 1,608 in 1922 to 1,233 in 1923, of which 1,008 were boys and 225 girls. Adults, men and women, have increased from 284 in 1922 to 383 in 1923, and 619 in 1922 to 760 in 1923. The number of "repeaters"—those who appear more than once—shows a steady decline during the past four years, the percentage in 1920 being 38.1 as opposed to 18.22 in 1923.

MISSING DRESS COMEDY.
Berlin, Feb. 4.—After trying on evening dresses at a fashionable salon in Leipzig the wife of a prominent merchant left hurriedly to finish her afternoon's shopping, but stopped her motor car on the way to take a well known cafe.

As the room proved stuffy she threw off her seakink mantle hurriedly, and in the mirror opposite saw to her horror an image of herself clad only in lace-hemmed silk underwear, supported over her shoulders by silk ribbons. In a dead faint she was taken in a taxi to the nearest first aid station.

Meanwhile, the modiste had found the dress and sent a messenger post-haste to the lady's home, where her husband, who was just returning from business was no less perturbed by the empty dress than his wife over the apparition in the mirror.

What might have led to an unthinkable domestic disturbance was happily averted through the opportune arrival of the lady's car, whose chauffeur had followed on to the first aid station and could not only make possible the restoration of the urgently necessary garment, but could explain the whole comedy of accidents.

Rev. H. E. Thomas, pastor of the church, welcomed Dr. Pringle, and made reference to church union and the appropriateness of having a former moderator of the Presbyterian church given the anniversary address in a Methodist church.

Dr. Pringle prefaced his morning sermon by expressing his pleasure in being present and telling of his hearty sympathy with the Church Union movement. He said that Church Union might be considered as already consummated as the churches had already voted for union and further action was merely a compliance with technicalities. Dr. Pringle's theme in the morning was "The Church and the World." He spoke of 67 years' church history. He illustrated his address with many incidents of his experiences as a missionary in the Yukon.

AT DESIGNERS' CONVENTION.
B. Hoffman, a member of the firm of Hoffman Bros., merchant tailors, Main street, returned Saturday from New York, where he attended on Jan. 23, 24, 25, at the Hotel Pennsylvania, the annual convention of the Association of Merchant Tailors Designers. The convention he reported to be very successful, more than 300 tailors and designers from all over Canada and the United States being in attendance. Mr. Hoffman spent the intervening time between the close of the conference and his arrival home in visiting in Boston and New Haven.

BOTH ARE ILL
The many friends of George Pierce, the well known C. N. R. officer, and Mrs. Pierce will regret to learn that both are ill. Mrs. Pierce has been confined to her home, 650 Main street, for some time and last week Mrs. Pierce became ill. She was taken to the hospital for an operation. Both are generally popular and their many friends hope that they will soon regain their health. It will be remembered that Mr. Pierce narrowly escaped with his life from the river steamer Dream turned over in a gale, about two years ago.

Myers of Chicago Establishes New World's Record in Boston.

Boston, Feb. 4.—One new world record was established and another twice equalled in the 35th annual track meet of the Boston A. A. here Saturday night. E. E. Myers of the Chicago A. C. scratchman, cleared the bar at 12 feet, 10 inches, setting a new world's record (indoor) when he won the pole vault.

Christianson, of the Newark A. C., tied the world's record of six seconds in the semi-final heat of the 45 yards hurdles and that mark was equalled again by Karl Anderson, of the Illinois A. C., Chicago, when he won the final heat.

Anderson broke his ankle after clearing the last hurdle.

Jole Ray, crack Chicago miler, wiped out the stigma of two defeats this winter at the hands of Lloyd Kahn when he raced home a winner over the Boston A. A. runner in the Hunter mile.

Hahn's best efforts failed to cut down Ray's lead sufficiently in the last lap, but the Chicagoan was forced to set a new record for the Hunter mile. His time was four minutes 18 3/4 seconds. Ray's victory gave him a third leg on the trophy and permanent possession.

Nine holes were chopped in the ice of a pond, and snow banks were run up to a respectable score after a year or two of practice.

Billy Evans Says

A year ago turf experts were singing the praises of Jockey Johnny Corcoran. The young man was the sensation of the New Orleans meet. His uncanny ability in putting over winners at long prices made him the most talked about youngster of the year. Followers of the turf played Corcoran rather than his mount and as a rule were well repaid. Johnny Corcoran is still riding, every now and then he comes home in front, but no longer does he win with the almost monotonous regularity that featured his career as an apprentice boy.

DATE FOR ENTRIES HAS BEEN CHANGED

School Boys Have Until Wednesday to Get Into Meet.

The time limit for entries for the school boys' skating meet, which was to have expired Saturday (noon), has been extended until Wednesday. The officials find it hard to explain why the entries were not as numerous as was expected they would be. As there is no entry fee and every school child in the city that has a pair of good stout legs and a pair of skates, it matters not whether they might be bob-sleds or racing tubes, can be entered. The number of entries is not larger, or rather why the list does not contain all the school boys of the city.

WILSON WINNER OVER PAL REED

Details of Recent Middle-weight Bout Which was Staged in Boston.

The following is an account of the recent bout between Johnny Wilson and Pal Reed in Boston.

Wilson won the decision, his third in a row over the "Fighting Parson." Johnny showed that he knows too much about the game for Pal.

His punches were mostly with his right, and excepting in the latter rounds he seldom missed Reed's head. The wonder was how the Natick man stood up under the pasting that he received, for plenty came his way and then some.

As for Reed, he forced the fighting from end to end, his old game and desperate style of milling, ever hoping to upset his rival with a knockout, his lone chance. But knowing his man, Wilson met the vast majority of these rushes with either a straight right-hand drive full to the face, a right hook to the ear, or when in doubt, a right-hand uppercut to the chin. To the credit of Reed's gameness, rather than his judgment, he took all the ex-champion had and was always ready for more.

Reed, fighting southpaw style as did Wilson, both with right hands out, did but little with his own right. About the sixth round he began a right-hand shot at him, beat Reed to the punch by shooting 'em straight inside, or else the right went wild, generally gliding past Wilson's head or winging him in the back.

Did Execution With Left Reed had better luck with his left and it was his punches to the body with this weapon, beginning with the sixth round, which began to tell on the former holder of the middleweight crown and slow him down. In the sixth Reed's aggressiveness made for him the best showing thus far in the fray, which he evened the eighth, had the shade in the ninth and evened the 10th.

The 11th round was a particularly desperate two-handed slugging, with both turning loose all they had, Wilson to hold his clear lead and Pal to put over a kayo if possible. They were at it all over the ring from the bell, passing out blows like a steam catapult, while Wilson shortened 'em up and hooked 'em with right and left for chin and ribs. The award was not well received; there were many who thought Reed had won. The weights were announced as Reed 109 1/2 and Wilson 161.

DOCTOR WAS HERE FROM NIGERIA

Toronto Physician on Furlough From West Coast Service in Africa.

Among the passengers who arrived here on Saturday night from England on the Montcalm was Dr. J. H. McKay of Toronto. He is attached to the West African medical service and has been stationed at Nigeria. He is on furlough and will spend several months visiting his mother in Toronto before returning to his duties on the dark continent.

Dr. McKay has been some 16 years in this service and in two years more he will be eligible for retirement on pension though he is yet in the prime of life. He says a good many Canadians find their way there and to the colonial service stations in various parts of the country. The doctors look after the health of troops, prison inmates and people in other public institutions and also can carry on private practice.

He says that at present attention is being given to the development of the coal industry in the section where he is stationed. Dr. McKay left for Toronto on the special C. P. R. train out on Saturday night.

FORMER ST. JOHN PREACHER HERE

The pulpit of the Waterloo street Baptist church was occupied yesterday by Rev. M. F. McCutcheon, pastor of the First Baptist church, Montreal, who has been visiting here for some days. Large congregations were present at both services to hear this talented St. John preacher deliver his message. In the evening his theme was the "Heart of Religion" and was based on the question of the lawyer to Jesus as to which was the greatest of the commandments and the answer which, he said, was summed up in the word "Love." Love, the speaker said, would do away with all class and national hatred and if the followers of Christ would only learn that lesson of love as exemplified in His life and teaching it would not be long before the Kingdom of God would come on the earth.

NEWS NOTES GATHERED FROM THE WORLD OF STAGE AND SCREEN

CHARACTER WORK IS LIFE CHOICE OF MISS KELTON, AND IT'S A GOOD ONE

"It was not easy to make out Little Dorrit's face... but it seemed to be a pale, transparent face, pale in expression, though not exactly beautiful in features, its soft hazel eyes excepted.—From Little Dorrit by Charles Dickens.

Away out in the State of Minnesota there is a tiny town called Halstead—and Halstead claims with pride the honor of being the birthplace of Dorrit Kelton.

MISS DORRIT KELTON.

Her father was an ardent Dickens reader and it is natural that the name of Little Dorrit appealed to his fancy—perhaps even the lines quoted above influenced him. At all events Dorrit was his choice and Dorrit it is.

"But Dickens says Little Dorrit was not beautiful—'you are tempted to observe.

Do not worry! Miss Kelton doesn't recall the words of a great friend of her in the theatrical profession—she was very frank about it, too—that she was physically adapted to character work, so why should she worry about beauty?

Her Life Work. But it takes more than physical attributes to make a successful character actress and it is in these features that Miss Kelton excels—she is versatile, she has the faculty of adapting herself to any impersonation, she takes a real delight in her work, and she has decided that the stage is her life work.

At the age of three, Dorrit was taken by her parents and two sisters to make their home in Minneapolis and there until the age of 19 she craved herself with education, always with the conviction in mind that the stage was her vocation. Even as a child she had a faculty for acting, she created the lines and business and planning the costumes from her own fertile imagination.

Her inclination was inherited; her parents were both interested in theatricals, her father having engaged in several road productions, including a tour of "Rip Van Winkle" through the western states. He was a great student of Shakespeare and a great natural entertainer. Her mother also achieved much success as both student and teacher of elocution.

Accordingly it was not unnatural that Miss Kelton, as soon as she had graduated from high school, should turn her eyes longingly toward the footlights. She broke into the game by accepting some small bits with a mediocre company in her home town but she thirsted for something better—and to her mind that something was in New York. So, in spite of the fact that she knew not a soul in the metropolis, Miss Kelton ventured into its doubtful throngs to search for her heart's desire.

And she found it. She gladly accepted the job as leading woman in a very inferior company traveling out of New York and playing between frequent jumps through Pennsylvania and the surrounding states. She was able to get an engagement with a better company and improve her work.

While Miss Kelton is willing to play any and every kind of part that is allotted to her, her preference is character work.

"My aim is to be not merely a character woman but a character actress," she said; "I like parts somewhat out of the ordinary, and, as I have chosen the theatre as my life work, the character roles will allow me to continue that vocation later in life than perhaps any other branch of the profession."

To the academic education which she acquired in school Miss Kelton has added to her fund of knowledge through her travels in many states and provinces and through extensive reading. She can talk on a wide range of topics and is a very entertaining conversationalist. St. John has taken her to its heart, too, and will not let her go without a struggle.

QUITS STAGE FOR PERFUME Mme. Robine, for many years said to be the most beautiful classical actress in Paris, is to forsake the stage to manufacture synthetic perfume that will reflect individuality of the user. She is to make perfumes for people of taste and exquisite taste. The million and one aromas of the flowers of the Orient will be her motto, as her perfumes will be many, but like rare books, in limited editions.

The Real Cyrano de Bergerac

Story of Seventeenth Century Swashbuckler on Whom Rostand Based His Drama.

Just as there was a real D'Artagnan, a somewhat sordid adventurer whom Dumas built into the magnificent creation who dominates "The Three Musketeers," "Twenty Years After" and "The Vicomte de Bragelonne," so there was a real Cyrano, a long nosed duelist and man of letters, who flourished in 1650 at the age of 35, later to grow into the legendary figure which culminated in the heroic apotheosis of Edmond Rostand's drama, says Arthur Maurice, in the New York Herald. The story of the real Cyrano is told by Richard Aldington in the introduction of "Cyrano de Bergerac's Voyages to the Moon and the Sun," a volume in the "Broadway Translations" series that is now appearing from the press of E. P. Dutton and Company.

In his brief lifetime and for fifty years after his death Cyrano was a subject of controversy. In the eighteenth century he was all but forgotten. Voltaire merely repeating the accusation of Cyrano's enemies: "a madman." The revival of his fame began early in the nineteenth century, first in England in 1820 with an article that appeared in the Retrospective Review. Seventeen years after that Charles Nodder resuscitated Cyrano in his "Donaventre Desperter et Cyrano de Bergerac." Nodder showed the way to Theophile Gautier, who in 1844 published his "Grosques," made up of ten pseudo-biographical sketches of "romantic" personalities in French literature, chiefly in the seventeenth century. Gautier's work was one of Rostand's chief sources.

For the purposes of romance the Paris of Louis XIII, the Paris that D'Artagnan knew and Cyrano knew, is one of the most delightful and intriguing of backgrounds. The city in which Cyrano found himself when he went there from his native Beauvais in 1637 may be indicated by saying that it was Paris ten years later than the Paris that the youthful Gascon Jonas D'Artagnan discovered when he entered on his yellow horse Rosinante, and Paris ten years before the city so elaborately pictured in "Twenty Years After."

It was an era of dueling. Men fought for the merest trifles; not so much for honor as for the love of fighting, of prestige and notoriety. Mr. Aldington suggests that Cyrano's talent as a brilliant swordsman gave him a position comparable to that of an aeroplane "ace" during the European war. For excitement the sword wearing adventurer from the provinces naturally turned to the tavern. The famous "Pomme de Pin," the "Croix de Lorraine," the "Boisseliere," the "Pressoir d'Or," and a dozen other inns were filled with heterogeneous sets of courtiers, gentlemen, gossips, poets, athletes, duelists and rogues of all sorts.

As Mr. Aldington sums it up: "Into that society of revelers, unscrupulous, heedless, coarse, irreligious, but brave, witty, chivalrous, talented and merry, came a young man of 18, the owner of a curious nose 'shaped like a parrot's beak,' talented, witty and brave himself, already a brilliant swordsman, scattered-brained, vain with all the vanity of young men in Latin countries, eager for knowledge but filled with hatred for the theology and pedantry of his early masters. Imagine the London of James I's reign so vividly and de-lightly sketched in "The Fortunes of Nigel," adding to it that freedom of speech, morals and speculation which Scott largely left out; transfer it to the turbulent Paris of 1637, and throw into the milieu not a sober Scotch laird but a hot headed young Frenchman."

Cyrano's Life Rostand's Cyrano, the Cyrano of "mon panache," was essentially a being of nobility and gaconades. Yet the family of the real Cyrano was neither Gascon nor noble, the first of the name of whom anything was known in France having been a Paris fish merchant of Sardinian origin. But in time the fishmonger grandfather of the poet acquired wealth, and among other properties came into the possession of the Cyrano family. The genuine old De Bergerac family had disappeared, but their memory lingered on, and no member of the Cyrano family ventured to call himself De Bergerac after Cyrano.

Of Savinien de Cyrano's childhood little is known except that he strongly disliked his tutor and that his grandfather left him 600 livres in 1628. When in 1637, he entered upon the wild career of life it was to incur the displeasure of his father, who threatened to cut off his supplies. So at 19 Cyrano entered the company of guards commanded by the "triple Gascon," M. de Carlon de Casteljaux. He was a good soldier, though given to the vices usual to a seventeenth century military life. The company was ordered for active service in 1639 and was besieged in Mouson by the Croats of the imperial army. Cyrano was wounded during a sortie. The following year he was again wounded by a sword thrust in the throat at the siege of Arras.

But it was not his service as a soldier that won Cyrano notoriety, but his dueling adventures. Despite the quarrel provoking size of his nose, it is recorded that in over a hundred of his duels he fought in his capacity as a second to other men and not on his own account. In his own words: "I have been everybody's second." Cyrano's feats, the battle of the Porte de Nesle, is as astonishing and as hard to accept as Dumas' description of the last fight of Bussy in "Le Drame de Mouson." Single handed he attacked a set of hired braves, said to have numbered a hundred, killed two, wounded seven and put the rest to flight.

When Cyrano turned to philosophy and letters and became serious he did not become entirely serious. He still clung to his sword. It was a necessary adjunct to the literary calling of his days. Where his friends saw in his wings an austere genius his enemies saw a madman. For example, here is the kind of contemporary criticism that the hot headed author had to be able to punish: "A madman named

NEW HOTEL WILL PROVIDE STOP-OVER FOR WORLD TALENT

St. John Should Reap Educational Profit from Presence of Artists.

Old folks still relate interestingly of the "days of Lanergan"—halcyon times theatrically when the flower of American actors and actresses, most of them rivals on the metropolitan stage, played in their own theatre on King Square in this city as a sort of vacationing season. Previous to that, traveling thespians of note used to play in the dining room of the old St. John Hotel at the head of King street, where the showings are now located.

A few days ago some of the Bramsly Williams Dickens players of England passed through St. John en route to England. Hardly a big steamer in the winterport season but either takes away or brings across some noted artist, musical, theatrical or of other of the higher studies. Recently the Sistine Choir of Rome desired dates in this city to facilitate their embarkation at this port. Unseen to the general public and practically unknown until one sees it in the passenger lists as printed in the press, performers and noted personages of the world of culture mingle amongst us and proceed to the large centres where they at once become centres of attraction.

Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other cities co-operate with transportation companies in arranging appearances of such notables in their large hotel auditoriums. Chamber concerts, select gatherings of literary folks, art talks, appreciative receptions and functions of this nature are constantly marking the civic life of people enjoying modern hotels in their midst. The new Mount Royal and the Windsor in Montreal are in reality combination hotel, theatre, forum and studio and discriminating people enjoy the privileges thoroughly.

In conversation with one of the inner executive of the United Hotels Co. in Montreal recently it was learned that the auditorium suite included in the plans of the new Admiral Beatty Hotel in this city have been drawn with an Atlantic "art" travel as possible. St. John should therefore be a welcoming eye to capturing as much of this trans-

Cyrano wrote a play called "The Death of Agrippina," where Selanus says the horrible things about the gods. The play was pure balderdash. Scery, who published it, told Bolsobert that he sold out the edition in a twinkling. "Ah, monsieur," replied Bolsobert, "it has such splendid impleties."

BETTY COMPSON'S CHARM MAKES HER GREAT FAVORITE OF SCREEN

Regardless of Artificial Ac-goutments, She Sways Audiences as Ever.

(By Jack Jungmeyer) Hollywood—if male moviegoers were to ballot on the actress having the most allure—vaguely termed "box office appeal" by exhibitors—Betty Compton would undoubtedly carry the nomination.

Certainly her showing in "Woman to Woman" film abroad would not discourage voters. "Showing" will be an obvious pun to those who have seen the picture, adapted from Michael Morton's play about a Parisian dancing girl who almost marries a shell-shocked English soldier. But Miss Compton might be swathed from head to chin in which she isn't in this film—and still exert her oft demonstrated sway over masculine hearts.

Wives and sweeties are far more perturbed by her screen presence than is the case with film damsels presented as out-and-out sirens. They have a habit of saying, "Why does Betty Compton attract men? I can't see her at all!"

Since the question "Why" seems a fair one, and since the astigmatism is naturally not shared by the worse halves of many families, may I presume for the moment to pose as an authority and attempt to answer, quite in the academic spirit, of course? In the first place none of Betty Compton's personal charm is diluted by the screen. It flashes out its full vivid measure, irrespective of her acting ability. That is far from the case with many other stars.

Her blue-fire eyes, shifting quickly from petulance and light rebuff to melting candor, hint the susceptible nature. Eyes of mystery just shallow enough for the average man to plumb; not forbiddingly exotic. She has the wide, drooping mouth, again showing mobility of mood; now pensive, now scintillating, always marked by men while rosy lips go begging in vain.

In addition to these dominant features, there is the unusual looseness of the hair and the faint languor of posture and gesture by which Miss Compton manages to convey a suggestion of temperament, disarming in many of her pictured presentations. A hint of primitive emotions lying close to the surface.

She constitutes a type. More than that, she emphasizes the type. Men presume to read into that type an opulent nature, prodigal of romance, procecutively imminent and clustercrowing that illusion of The Other Woman which Cabell so knowingly alludes to in his "Bogus List." Men—I adhere to the plural in a determined effort to maintain academic detachment—men do not ask of Betty Compton that she act "the face" her whatever the character or merit of the current vehicle may be.

In "Woman to Woman," even men cannot detect the usual psychology of unweaned mother love involved. Her characterization may be caviled at. She dances atrociously. But, vital and alluring, she leads the man who is lured by her spell. It isn't wit or guile. It's an essence, integral, prevalent—this charm of the Compton. And the fact that she is at times rather dangerously diverted in this picture, has very little to do with it. The gaze of men rivets on her features.

SOLDIER PATIENTS ARE GIVEN TREAT Carroll Players' First Performance of "Buddies" at Lancaster Hospital.

If the mountain will not go to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain. There are patients in the Lancaster Military Hospital who have not been able to see a show for many months—some of them in fact for years—so the members of the F. James Carroll Players very generously offered to go to the hospital last evening and give the first performance of a show that will hold the boards at the Opera House this week. That their generosity, as well as their ability, was appreciated was not in doubt for a moment during the performance, and at the end the three rousing cheers, which the men gave, made the players feel that they were generously rewarded for their work and for the great trouble which was necessary in moving the show from the city to West St. John.

The play was an appropriate one—a soldier play with music—"Buddies," written by George V. Hobart, who, by the way was a former St. John man. Though its scenes are laid in France, it is not a war show, but rather a bright, rich comedy of the after-war days, with just sufficient pathos to season it satisfactorily. Every member of the company had a place in the cast, and despite the fact that scenery was out of the question, they gave a very satisfactory and realistic portrayal. At the close of the play a few words of appreciation on behalf of the men were said by Dr. J. A. McCarthy, and the veterans' amen was pronounced in a triplet of three hearty cheers. James G. Coats, speaking for the company, expressed the pleasure of the players at being able to do even the slightest service for the men, and that service was for their country in its time of greatest need, and assured them that at some future date, when they were playing a bill that permitted it, they would be glad to be back again. This announcement, it might be observed, did not cause any great disappointment to the men—they just let loose and whooped it up again.

At the close of the performance the visitors were served light refreshments before being brought back to the city.

WILLIE LOGAN WILL NOT GO TO TORONTO

Not Thought Worth While With Only One Race Open.

Willie Logan, Canadian boy speed skating champion, will not go to Toronto to defend his title according to an announcement made today by his father, Fred Logan, a former international champion. He said there was only one race for boys under eighteen years of age and he did not consider it worth the expense and the long trip just to compete in one event. He characterized the action of the skating officials, who were responsible for drawing up the programme of events, as being one to discourage rather than encourage young skaters about to step into the senior ranks.

Garnett Leaves

Frank Garnett, speedy local senior skater, will leave this evening for Toronto where he will compete in all of the senior events in the Canadian National Championships, which are to be held there Friday and Saturday. He is said to be in the pink of condition and it is expected that he will carry off honors.

Bernard O'Connor, a fast eighteen year old local skater, will leave for Toronto tomorrow night to compete in the senior events. He is only one month over eighteen years, but as the programme calls for under eighteen he must compete in the senior ranks. He is going to represent the Chapel Grove Country Club and will be accompanied by William McKenzie, who will compete in junior events under the same colors.

HERE TOMORROW TO HOLD INQUIRY

Wreck Commissioner to Investigate Collision Off Partridge Island.

Captain L. A. Demers, Dominion Wreck Commissioner, was expected to arrive in the city tomorrow morning, but did not come. His secretary came in on the Montreal train and announced that the commissioner will be here tomorrow to hold an inquiry into the cause of the collision between the S. S. Perene and the ill-fated schooner Maid of Scotland, which was sunk off Partridge Island early last Friday morning as a result of which eight men lost their lives. All arrangements for the inquiry will be made today by Captain Demers' secretary.

This afternoon Fred Doyle and his son, local divers, were to make an attempt to reach the schooner. It was expected that they would be able to go down at low tide, providing that there was no sea running. It was hoped that they would locate some of the bodies of the unfortunate men who lost their lives as a result of the accident, and would probably learn whether or not the small boat of the steamer was caught in the sails or rigging.
