YARMOUTH, N. S., May 15, 1886.

C. C. RICHARDS & CO.

Having used your Mink's Lintment for several years in my stable, I attest to its being the best thing for horse flesh I know of. In the family we have used it successfully for nearly every purpose that a liniment is adapted for. It is recommended to me by the late Dr. J. L. Webster. Personally I find it the best remedy of neuralgia pain that I have ever met.

Selected Literature.

THIS WAS HIS REVENGE.

"You will introduce me—won't you, Alister?"

"I don't know so much about that. I hardly think it safe—when a plain fellow like myself is pretty confident that he is in a fair way to win the heart of the dearest, loveliest little woman in the world, I don't think he would be wise to throw in her path a handsome lady-killer like your self, Charlie."

"Bosh. There is not much danger of cutting you out if she knows what a good fellow you are. Are you engaged?"

"Not exactly—I couldn't ask Ella to be my wife until I could see some way of keeping her in the luxury she has been accustomed to all her life. I'll introduce you, Charlie. I'll risk it, because when you have made Ella's acquaintance you will resign yourself to music and talk, instead of wasting your substance on cards at the Junior night after night. I'll sacrifice myself to serve you, old chap, and trust to your honor not to be too fascinating to my lady love. Knowing her will do you a lot of good. It has me. So will go to Hill street this evening; it's one of Mrs. L'Estrange's 'At Home' nights."

"Thanks, Alister. I shall be so delighted. Miss L'Estrange is a great beauty, isn't she? I heard so at the club the other day. What is she, blonde or brunette? I hate blondes—they are generally insipid—big black eyes sparkling like diamonds; dusky cheeks with a dash of damask roses; ruby lips, and five feet three—just Venus de Medicis height. There you are, with my beautiful ideal of loveliness right before you." Charlie Vane rattles according to his habit, and glancing up with a laugh, he is rather amazed at the shadow that has unmistakably fallen on Alister Grant's face.

"Ella is your beau-idéal, then," is the reply, in a low voice. "You have described her so exactly that one would fancy you had seen her! But I really have never thought much of her beauty. I only know that she is everything to me—and that it would break my heart if she went out of my life."

"So! you are hard hit indeed, my boy—when you talk of breaking your heart, hearts are tough things now-a-days, but let us hope the fair Ella appreciates your liking properly, and would not so much as look at another man!"

"Let us hope it," is the grave response, and Charlie Vane, unaccustomed to much show of feeling in the London world, stares at his friend for a moment.

Then he shrugs his shoulders, and rattles away at some other topic, while the color that had left Alister's face slowly creeps back.

But somehow the two men dash along to Hill street, Charlie feels a curious perturbation, and a new-born shyness, and a good deal of his ordinary careless demeanor bearing is absent, when he is introduced to Miss L'Estrange, a dark girl with big black eyes, and damask roses on her dusky cheeks, and a pair of sweet fresh lips that look like twin cherries. She is dressed in a long trailing white silk dress, with a rope of pearls round her throat, and the same pure jewels gleaming in her glossy hair, and she receives Charlie Vane—one of the crack regiments, and a habitué of all the swell houses—with a smile that fairly takes away his breath.

Still he is disappointed for Miss L'Estrange is not the beauty he expected—though a sweet, lovable girl.

"Alister need not be afraid—I shan't lose my head or my heart to her," he thinks, as he walks into his rooms that night; then he drops into a lounge and a reverie, with a cigar in his mouth—and through the clouds of smoke two large black eyes look at him, and two ruby lips tempt him by their sweetness and freshness.

"How do you like her, Ella?" Alister asks of the girl he is half engaged to.

"How do I like her! Oh! so—so—so you see he is your great crush, so of course I must like him!"

"Don't you like him for himself, darling? He is awfully handsome and agreeable and sings like a Capouli."

"Yes," Ella answers, slowly; "still—I'll tell you, he has been told that he is irresistible and knows it too well, and that's why I don't fancy him—I can't bear conceited men!"

Alister flushes with pleasure, while he reproaches himself for his unloyalty to friendship, and, to appease his conscience goes on affably:

"The women have spoiled him to a certain extent, perhaps; but he is the best fellow going. I want your mother to be kind to him and to ask him here often. He is pretty well off and has been leading rather a fast life and I want him to sober down. He is passionately fond of music and if you'll take compassion and sing with him I am sure you will win him from those eternal club evenings, which are the devil!"

"Alister!" cries Ella, pretending to be shocked, "you must be anxious about Captain Vane's welfare when you take to bad French, like that!"

"Miles pardons, dear, but you will do yourself, won't you?" he answers, murmured that she does not admit his friend and that no danger can possibly accrue from duets and continual companionship.

And so the weeks go on, and Ella begins to grow curiously tolerant of Charlie's enigmatic and curiously nervous as the evening hours came on. Of course she welcomed him simply because his voice blends so deliciously with hers, and he has the power to make even her grim old father smile over his gay sallies. Somehow, the evenings he is away at some grand ball or reception—for Charlie is wonderfully in request—seem dull and flat and stale, and altogether unprofitable—but the evenings in Hill street when the first notes of "M'Appari" or "Salve Dimora" break on her ear are just a snatch of her ideas of paradise.

Besides this, there is the sweetest, subtlest feeling, that in spite of the professional beauties, and the attraction of cards at the club, Charlie never fails coming to Mrs. L'Estrange's "At Home" when he is invited.

He himself wonders how his evenings have passed before he made his first bow in Hill street; and curses himself for a blind fool not to have seen how lovely Ella really was, and how irresistible. It is hard; hard to find out, when she of course loves Alister Grant, and is really pledged to him.

These were the thoughts that rack his soul, and bring an unwanted shadow over his handsome innocent face, that seemed as if sunshine was habitual to it in the first days, and as Ella marks the shadow, she grows pale, and her heart sinks, and in life, which she has up to now looked at in glowing hues, seems a horrible and awful mistake.

Unsuspecting—putting implicit and blind faith in his mistress's affection—Alister smiles on the two, delighted to see the reformation in the man whom he likes almost as a brother, and satisfied that he has a hold on Ella's heart that ought to be unloosened.

"Ella, darling! My uncle died yesterday, and I am a good many thousands richer, so I shall speak to your father in a day or two, and then you will let the world know how happy I am! You won't look back now, love, but by my own wife soon—won't you?"

Ella's face is bent over a piece of elaborate work, and Alister does not see the scared look that starts into her eyes, but he sees the little white hand tremble, and sure that it is from sheer excess of joy at the news—he seizes it, and presses his lips passionately to it.

And she does not dare to drag it away—though these kisses seem to burn and near her flesh.

"Tell me, dearest, that I need not wait long. Oh! my darling! If you know how I love you, I am sure you will let me really ask you to marry me—you would answer! You would put these dear arms round my neck and whisper that you are too glad!"

But Ella does not dream of being demonstrative—nay, she shrinks back a little and bows her head, with its coronet of blue-black tresses, still lower, so that her lover may not read in it her want of love, her utter falsity.

She murmurs in a tremulous voice at last, "I will answer you to-morrow."

But Alister, never doubting her fealty, is quite content.

Mr. L'Estrange gives a cordial consent to Alister's suit when he has fully explained to the paternal ears his change of fortune. Alister Grant comes of a good old Scotch family, and to Richard L'Estrange—a self-made man, whose antecedents are shabby, such a marriage would well fulfill his aspirations for his daughter. So with a heart brimful of rapture, Alister hastens on the morrow to find Ella, and hears the blessed words that are to make him the happiest of men for ever and ever.

With a white face and compressed lips, Mr. L'Estrange meets him at the door and draws him into the library.

Alister, amazed, stares at him aghast; then a pallor sweeps over his own face, and, staggering a little, he leans up against the wall.

"Ella! what of her? Is she ill?"

"Worse."

"Not—dead?" and the young voice rings out with a supreme agony, that touches the old man to the soul.

"No, no, really not dead—that is, not dead—but dead to you, my boy. She has gone off—clipped with that handsome, good-for-nothing scoundrel, Vane. Come, Grant, bear it like a man. Although she is my child, I must say she is not worthy of such love as you're."

As Mr. L'Estrange's words clearly forced the truth on Alister's mind, he grasped the nearest chair for support. No sound escapes his white lips. Yes, plainly enough the other man sees that his daughter's falsity has dealt a fearful blow—that it has crushed not only hope but life out of the heart which only a few moments since was so joyous and confident of success.

"It is a bitter blow, but it won't kill me," Alister mutters, presently; "I have something still to live for!"

"That's right, my boy; that's the way to take it," Mr. L'Estrange says heartily, as he grasps the poor young fellow by the hand.

"Revenge! I'll live for that! Yes, Ella, with your latest breath you shall remember me!" Alister murmurs bitterly, as he strides away from the house, which had once held such happiness for him.

Only once he met his faithless love by chance, eighteen months after her marriage—and at the sight of him she turned almost fled—and he never dreamed of pursuing her. He was not a man to wage war with women.

But one day he came across Charlie Vane, who was about to pass with a hasty bow, when Alister cried in stern voice: "Stop!"

Now Charlie was a brave man. He had never lost his nerve when the bullets flew within an inch of his head in Afghanistan and Egypt; yet now he felt a quiver, as with a hesitating gesture he held out his hand.

"Will you take it, Grant?" he faltered.

But Alister struck it away.

"No. I would as soon clasp that of a murderer, I believe, for such you have been to me. I trusted you—trusted you with all my heart and soul—and you show me with a blow more deadly than an enemy's weapon could deal. That would be dealt and finished, but the wound you have given is still open—festering—fatal—and thus it will remain until it is dealt back—aye, and doubly paid for. The time will yet come when Mrs. Vane will think of me with a different feeling than pity. To her latest breath she will remember Alister Grant."

So the words he struggled against it, "God knows and I!"

But Alister, not heeding his words, turned on his heel.

"Months rolled by, and it was three years since the day when Ella had left home with Charlie, and in all this time a sort of dread spoiled their lives."

Charlie could not banish from his memory Alister's words and manner when they last met. He felt perfectly sure in some way he would make them keenly feel the wrong they had done him.

Why in all this time Alister had made no sign and remained inactive, they could not surmise a reason. Was it that he was waiting a sign or more perfect revenge to gain? Or was it that the good and noble character of the man they had injured had proved firm against the whispering of the evil spirit? They could not tell.

And Alister Grant himself scarcely knew why he lived on and did not seek the revenge for which he had vowed to live. Was it that the love—betrayed, outraged, cast aside—had not yet been cast out of him? How could he slay the man without hurting the woman? These thoughts would come to Alister, and, starting up, he tried to throw off the better mood, and murmured, as if to excuse tardiness of action—

"No, no. It is not so. I am not such a weak, pitiful fool, God knows. I am only waiting for a surer—more perfect revenge."

That he lived at all was a marvel to all who knew him. Not only had his life been spared, but health and strength had seemed to sink under the blow until only the shadow of his former self remained. A pity that he was not of the same nature as many men in these days; but he was thoroughly Scotch to the backbone, with a Scot's best points—earnest, tenacious, incapable of change. His honest face, with the light blue eyes of the North, had lost its wonted expression entirely, and the crisp, light brown curls, almost flaxen in fairness, were thickly sprinkled with silken threads, Ella seemed to fill each hour of his life.

Established 1867.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

As the hour of the start of the grand procession approached, thousands of people lined the streets on the proposed course, and the windows of the houses in the line of march were filled with eager faces. The procession was formed in the North Common and before starting Major Mackintosh welcomed the visiting firemen in a most pleasing address.

During the fall of '85
my system was completely run down. I had no appetite, and what little I did eat caused me great distress. I was so weak that I could hardly do my daily work. I saw that I must get my system back to normal, and I bought a bottle of ESTY'S Iron Quinine
Tonic. I took it regularly, and in a few days I felt much better.
I continued to take it until I was well, and now I am as strong as ever. I can do my work without any trouble, and I feel much better than I did when I first bought the tonic.

us for six boxes, accompanied with $5.00, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only on Dr. C. ALLEN, Druggist, Newcastle; and C.
E. FROST, Druggist, Campbellton.

UNDER TAKING.

We are living in an age of progress and discovery, that is especially applicable to the study of the human body.
The world's wonder or Family Lintment is a positive cure for Rheumatism. It is invaluable for Cuts, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, and all diseases requiring external application. Sold by Geo. C.
Allen, Newcastle, Geo. E. Frost, Campbell-
ton. Price 25 cents and 50 cents per bottle.

A girl who had become tired of single blessedness wrote to her intended thus:
"Dear Augustus—Come ride off if you are cunning. I will have him and he will me so continually that I can't hold out much longer."

The cheapest doctor you can employ is to always keep in your house "Minner's Lintment," "Conqueror of all Pains,"
"Family Pills" will stir up the Family Pills, the best Family Pills known, and general cathartic, "Nelson's Chinese Pain-Expeller," the Worm-Killer, pleasant to take.

Prof. Zwolfer, of the University of Bonn is a very able and successful physician, and has been engaged in solving some scientific problems. The servant hastily opened the door, and a student, who announced a great family event, "A little stranger has arrived!" "Er!" "There is a little boy." "Little boy? We ask him what he wants." "Taxes," replied the student.

MIND AND BODY alike suffer from sluggish action of the Blood, the result of Dyspepsia or Bilelessness. "Minner's Lintment" will stir up the Liver, excite the Stomach and Bowels to activity, open the pores of the system, and insure health of body, which is indispensable to mental vigor.

"Mother," said a little girl, "I believe I was a duchess when I grew up."
How can you expect to become a duchess,
my daughter? "Why, by marrying a Dutchman, to be sure," replied the little girl.

Baird's French Ointment is an excellent article for any kind of Humour, such as Salt Rheum, Pimples, Pustules, Rash, and a sure cure for the Itch. It quickly heals obstinate Sores and Ulcers, &c. Sold by dealers.

Sam Jones says "there is something wrong with a preacher gets $400 and a pitcher $50.00." But Sam should remember that the $50.00 pitcher has a much better delivery than the $400 preacher.

Baird's Balsam of Horehound is very healing in its nature, and by its Tonic properties strengthens the muscles of the Throat and gives tone and vigor to the organs of speech. It promptly relieves Croup, Asthma and Irritation.

At the earnest request of the students of Harvard College, compulsory prayers
in that institution have been abandoned.
This will give the students more time to baseball, novel reading, boat rowing and other brain work.

Why will you suffer when 25 cents will buy you a bottle of West's Pain-King and cure the worst case of colic or cramps and a few doses will cure summer complaint, dysentery, diarrhea or cholera. Kept by Geo. C. Allen, Newcastle, Geo. E. Frost, Campbellton, Druggists.

Directly opposite U. S. Patent Office.
