THE VOICE OF THE WIND.

Throw more logs on the fire!
We have need of a cheerful light,
And close round the hearth to gather,
For the wind has risen to-night.
With the mournful sound of its wailing,
It has checked the children's glee,
And it calls with a louder clamour
Than the clamour of the sea.

Hark to the voice of the wind!
Let us listen to what it is saying,
Let us hearken to where it has been;
For it tells in its terrible crying,
The fearful sights it has seen.
It clatters loud at the casements,
Round the house it hurries on,
And shrieks with redoubled fury,
When we say "The blast is gone!"

Hark to the voice of the wind!
It has been on the field of battle,
Where the dying and wounded lie;
And it brings the last groan they uttered,
And the ravenous vulture's cry.
It has been where the coburgs were meeting,
And closed with a fearful crash;
On the shore where no footstep has wandered,
It has heard the waters dash.

Hark to the voice of the wind!
It has swept through the gloomy forest,
Where the sledge was urged to its speed,
Where the howling wolves were rushing
On the track of the panting steed.
Where the pool was black and lonely,
It caught up a splash and a cry—
Only the bleak sky heard it,
And the wind which hurried by.

Hark to the voice of the wind!
Then throw more logs on the fire,
Since the sibilant blast and cold,
And the children are drawing nigher,
For the tales that the wind has told,
So cheer and cheer gather—
Round the red and crackling light;
And rejoice (while the wind is howling)
We are safe and warm to-night!

Hark to the voice of the wind!

Miscellany.

A PERFECT TREASURE.

It was not looking at my girl and silver plate, I suppose that my mother-in-law bilious she might have stopped a long time, at other places I could name, without getting the quality, or even the quantity, of food that would produce an indisposition of that kind. Must I not blame her; she gave way to an unfeeling weakness (it was trifling), poor lady, and she suffered for it more than enough. Neither was it mere ostentation, I suppose, that caused me to provide her with a sick-nurse—Mrs. Maquerey.

My wife, of course, did everything for the child for her mother, but ours is a large household, and we see a good deal of company; so we thought it best to provide a person exclusively to wait upon her.

We had the highest written testimonials as to character, and her behaviour was everything we could wish. Instead of the wars, as persons of her class are accused of doing, she kept herself to herself, and when anything was wanted, she would fetch it in person, rather than give anybody trouble. I used to meet her walking all over the house upon these little errands, and I noticed, to her great credit, that though she made no noise. She so soon upon me, indeed—for I am not at all a man to be familiar with my interior, and should certainly not "take a pleasure in exhibiting my plate to a maid-of-all-work or a crossing-sweeper," as some people have been so good as to affirm—I say, I was so pleased with Mrs. Maquerey's quiet and respectful manner, that finding her upon one occasion in the dining-room, admiring my two new shield-shaped salvers on the sideboard, I took pains to explain to her the design of the engraving, and especially the embossed cipher, with which her intelligent mind was highly pleased. In short, she was a perfect treasure, and it was not long before I had formed a very confidential servant of that sort. I should certainly have retained Mrs. Maquerey in that position, after her duties as a sick nurse were concluded, and in that idea my wife entirely concurred.

Mrs. Maquerey was neither young nor good-looking, but a more thoroughly respectable-looking person, in her condition of life, it was not easy to find. I had every confidence in her. Mrs. Maquerey had the charge of my plate for ten years—yet there seemed something to be a double warranty for the safeguard of my property, while Mrs. Maquerey was under my roof. She was not a suspicious person, far from it; but she once remarked to me, in a meaning way, that the charge of so much valuable plate was a great responsibility, and would be even a temptation to some people; and I saw she kept her eyes on Mrs. Maquerey. As the event proved, alas, Mrs. Maquerey had only too good reason to do so. Last Wednesday, we happened to have rather a large dinner-party; I had been dining out a good deal at various clubs lately, and of course it was necessary to invite my entertainers in return. It is not that I will ask any body to come and admire my plate, but certainly some of the men were not intimate friends of mine, but only acquaintances. However, I suppose the fact of persons belonging to such clubs as I frequent, is a sufficient guarantee for their social position. They were quite good enough, in my opinion, to meet Mrs. Lucifer Matcham at all events, and they met her. The dinner had gone off uncommonly well. The shield-shaped salvers had been very much admired, and so had my new turquoise. The ladies had retired to the drawing-room, and I had just passed the wine leaf claret jug to Colonel Fwenky (on which the old hunk did not pass the slightest remark by the by), when Bowles stopped down and whispered in my ear that a person wished to see me in the hall, upon very important business.

Ask him what it is, said I. It is impossible that I can leave my plate.

I did ask him, sir, and he refuses to state, replied Bowles, confidentially. It is my opinion he's a begging-letter impostor; but he says he must see you in person.

I was upon the point of saying, "Tell him to leave the house," when something or other in Bowles's manner struck me so decidedly that I resolved not to do so. Why should he say a man, about whom he could know nothing, was a begging-letter impostor? Perhaps I placed rather too much confidence in my butler, as Mrs. Maquerey had hinted that very morning. Actuated by a vague presentiment of distress and danger, I rose from the table, and went into my study, and went with me into the hall. A shabby-looking fellow of per on, answering, indeed, very tolerably to my mind's description of him, was standing by the umbrella-stand.

What is it you want with me, sir? said I, in a magisterial tone.

Our minute's private conversation with you, replied he, with a glance at the butler.

You may have us, how I said, I and he withdrew so orderly, although, I am bound to say, very unwillingly. The thought flashed across me like lightning, Bowles has been telling me to fear from this man's disclosure; and the next words of my visitor confirmed me in the suspicion.

I am a member of the detective police force, said he, "and I come to warn you that there is something wrong in your house."

Nothing to do with my plate, I hope? said I, with considerable anxiety.

Very much to do with it, sir, returned he grimly. There is a thief harbored here; and by this time to-morrow you will not have a silver spoon in your possession, unless I find him out. I must see every soul you have got under your roof.

A thief! said I; impossible! I never have even a mouse as a strange waiter. That butler has lived with me for ten years, and my two footmen even longer. I will answer for their honesty.

Let me see 'em, sir; that's all I want, was the reply.

It is not Bowles? said I, apprehensively; don't say it's Bowles; but although it agitated me beyond measure to think that I should have to trust a new butler with all my plate, I confessed that I had a horrible idea that it was Bowles.

I think not, said the detective, quietly. Let me see the other men. I turned the gas-light over the door as high as it would go, and called them both into the hall.

It is not them, said he. What other men have you got in your house?

None but my guests, said I, here in the dining-room.

Do you know them all very well, sir? Are none of them mere acquaintances or neighbors?

Well, returned I, with hesitation, and feeling very glad that Mrs. Matcham was a third party to this interview, I know some, of course, better than others.

Just so, said the detective, quietly; then I must see them.

This was a shocking proposal, and made me feel like all over; but still I was not going to lose any risk with those shield-shaped salvers, Major Pinkey. I now remembered, had expected a great deal to examine them, and inviting him to dinner. When this Major Pinkey was accepted that he belonged to my club—I certainly know no more than the detective, and perhaps a great deal less. Still, it seemed a very base thing to open the dining-room door, and let this fellow scrutinize my guests, in hopes to find a concealed enemy.

Upon my life, said I, Mr. Detective, I can't do it.

Very right, sir—very natural, replied he, smiling in his quiet way. It would never do, would it? But look you, sir; I'm a waiter, a hired waiter. Who is to know that I have not business at your sideboard? In one minute, I could put my eye over the whole lot, and spot my man, if he's there, as sure as taxes.

I did not like even this arrangement; but still it seemed the only thing to be done. So, bidding for Bowles, I arranged with him the plan of proceeding, and then returned to the dining-room. My feelings are not to be described, when a few minutes afterwards, sitting at the head of my table, I heard the door open and knew that the det-ec-tive was in the room.

He was much longer at the side-board than had been promised to be, and every hair seemed to stand upright all the time. Suppose he should suddenly fall on Major Pinkey, and cry, "This is my man!" Nay, suppose Colonel Tansany himself should prove to be the offender! I trembled to have lost all confidence in my fellow creatures. After a period of anxiety on my part, of time could indicate, the supposed waiter took his departure.

You've got a new man, I see, said Dr. Tolson, the carefully; with so much plate about, I hope you are satisfied with it, honesty.

I was exceedingly glad to find out Bowles was honest, and had not been taken by the shirt-trick, and walked off to the street; but of course I did not tell him that.

Pinkey, sir, you've wanted again, whispered Bowles, as he brought in another bottle of claret.

If the kitchen chimney is on fire, I am glad we have done, observed the major, good humoredly; if it can be of any service, pray command me.

I did not inform him what a relief it was to me that he was not wanted, but remarking that it was only a little domestic matter, I told him so.

There's a fellow that's not among them, as far as I know, or ever had a look at the dining-room. Are you sure there are no more men in your number but these I have seen?

Yes, said I; there are no more.

Then now I must have a look at the ladies. The ladies, I cried, against all probability, you don't want to go into the drawing-room?

It would be more satisfactory, observed the detective, to see your information; very reliable. But at all events, who is there?

Well, said I, my wife is there for me; you have no information against her, I suppose?

He nodded satisfactorily so far.

Then there's the Honorable Mrs. Matcham and her daughter.

Safe! rejoined the detective, checking them off his fingers.

Mrs. Fawcett of Regalia Square, and Lady Bellingham.

I suppose they're all right, remarked my inquirer, doubtfully. And your sure there are no more?

There's my mother-in-law but she's in her own room, and exceedingly unwell.

Very good, observed the detective, in consequence. There's a plant somewhere in this house, however; you may take your oath of that, very likely in the last place where you would ever look for it, so now I must see the inside.

It was astonishing even to myself in what complete submission the man had placed himself. Once and only once, a terrible expression crossed me, that the det-ec-tive himself was a "Plant" and would presently blossom out as a burglar; but my over-taxed mind refused to bear this burden. It was so I would trust to the efficiency to save me a silver fork or two to carry on the business of life. If the man trusted out to be anything less than what he described himself to be, all authority would be forfeited to its effect with me. I had read of "the grip of the law" in works of fiction, but I had never understood the tremendous nature of this figure until I felt this gentleman's knuckles (so tactfully inserted in my white cravat. He had to repeat, "So now I must see the inside," in his usual manner before I could collect myself to lead the way to the kitchen—a spot which I should not have allowed to penetrate. To say that the cook and kitchen-maid stared at the phenomenon of my presence, is to underrate their powers of vision.

Now, I dare say you have no charwoman or any temporary assistant, my companion, urbanely; but you and this young woman do all the work yourselves.

That's true, sir, we don't mind hard work now and then, returned the cook, tossing her head and besides, I don't like strangers in my kitchen; add she, with meaning, "especially when I'm busy, and would rather have them run than their company."

I could have given the woman five shillings upon the spot (and I did so the next morning) for that rapid discharge of words; the detective's tongue, although I had found it so terrific a weapon, was silenced by my noble good and retired much discomfited, I could see nothing but his eyes staring to the ceiling.

beneath a contemptuous smile.

Now if I'd been an ordinary policeman, and in uniform, whispered he to me as we reached the hall again I would have gone over that cook in no time.

Without remarking upon this confession of defeat, I led the way up to the nursery. The servants in that department were not unused to visitors, and evidently imagined that my guest who had expressed a wish to see the dear children" in their crib. He on his part immediately understood the part he was expected to play, and walked a limpingly forward to me as though he was a common-sense in baby.

Charming children, and well taken care of, I can see, observed he with rather a familiar nod (I thought) towards the under nurse—it's neither of them, he added, in a low whisper. You have got a house maid or two, I suppose?

His tone was exactly that which an agreeable might have used in making inquiries concerning the last-rate at Crystal Palace. The house maids were inspected and pronounced free from suspicion. But I have not seen every body, said he, de-seer-ly.

Yes, said I, everybody, except Mrs. Maquerey.

Friend of the family? inquired the detective with a disapproving air.

Well, said I, I might almost say so. She came to us, not only with the best of written characters, but my wife had an interview with her late mistress, a Mrs. Ogilvie, who pronounced her a perfect treasure; and we have found her all that could be wished.

What the det-ec-tive saw in the perfect treasure, and then to be the very thing we want.

Nay, said I, but in this case your suspicions are quite groundless as Mrs. Maquerey is a superior person, and takes an interest in us.

Well, you've not had a dose except after you've seen her. Besides, she is my mother-in-law's sick nurse and most likely they have a really made their arrangements for the night to make a party to do to do them.

I'm at sea Mrs. Maquerey, returned my companion, gravely, she seems altogether too ungrateful to be misled.

Kind detectives are clever fellows, replied I with irritation, but you often spend your time very fruitlessly. It is a pity that a man exists to be deceived, and yet avoid being deceived.

However, since you have gone so far, you may as well go through with the business.

With that I knicked at the door, and admitted to the sick-room, where my mother-in-law was taking place; while the invaluable Maquerey retired with her usual delicacy to the dressing-room. Perhaps I spoke a little too loud for that Mrs. Maquerey could stoop to eaves-dropping, it is hard to believe—but, at all events, that intelligent woman must have possessed herself of the substance of what I related for when I opened the door to admit the officer, I found her already in his custody. She had undertaken to escape through the second door of the dressing-room—but like a rabbit," said the detective—but had run into the very danger she would have avoided, and there she was with a couple of handcuffs over her neat mittens.

We know one another very well, me and Mrs. Maquerey, observed the detective, grimly.

I was told I should find an old friend in this house, although I had no idea what it would be until you mentioned Mrs. Ogilvie. She is very charitable, she is in getting her fellow-creatures situated in respectable families where there happens to be a good deal of plate.

It was very nice that this good lady here had engaged to open your front door to her in his custody. Being a sick nurse she would be nobody would be surprised at her entering the house at all hours. Wasn't that your little game, Mrs. Maquerey?

Well, I suppose it's a five-year touch? observed that way, with philosophic coolness.

Well, I'm afraid it is, my man; since that other little business in Carlton Gardens still remains unsettled. Good-by, sir; you will see Mrs. Matcham, once or twice before you are done with her; and in the meantime you take my advice, sir and in hiring another sick-nurse for your mother-in-law, don't apply to Mrs. Ogilvie.

And off he walked with our "perfect treasure."

IS KNOWLEDGE POWER?

Not always; at least the converse of the proposition does not always hold good, as the following epigram shows. It is supposed to be addressed anonymously by a school-boy to his master, an ignorant pedagogue, notorious for hogging.

"Knowledge is power," so saith Lord Bacon, But you're a proof he was mistaken: For though you were brought up at college, You're destitute of wit or knowledge, Though by your hogging every hour, You prove you have tremendous power."

An old minister enforced the necessity of diligence of officers by the argument: Now, if everybody had been of my opinion, they would all have wanted my old woman. One of the deacons, who sat just behind him responded: Yes, and if everybody was of my opinion, nobody would have her.

A Scotchman had reason to perform a journey to London. Beside him in the train was a fellow-passenger, with whom he entered into conversation, and soon the train became quite intimate. During a pause in the conversation, the gentleman reached back his hand in the direction of the pocket in his swallow-tailed coat, saying, "I believe we must have stuff." On this, Sawney, by a series of vigorous blows, immediately proceeded to set his nose in order for the reception of the titillating beverage; but, after thoroughly searching all his pockets in vain, the gentleman was at last obliged to conclude he had unfortunately forgotten his snuff box on leaving home. With the most utter dismay depicted in his countenance, Sawney, on hearing this announcement, cast a reproachful look at the gentleman, exclaiming, "My gods, man, what made ye do that? I had as much in my nose as wad have carried me to Lannan."

A HINT TO TOCIFY PEOPLE.—I learned a good lesson when I was a little girl, says a lady. "One frosty morning I was looking out of the window into my father's farm yard, where stood many cows, oxen and horses, waiting to drink. The cattle all stood very still and meek, till one of the cows in attempting to turn round, happened to hit her neighbor, whereon the neighbor kicked and hit another. In five minutes the whole herd were kicking each other with great fury. My mother laughed and said:

"Now what comes of kicking when you are hit?"

Just so, I have seen one cross word set a whole family by the ears on a frosty morning. Afterward, if my brothers or myself were a little irritable, she would say:

"Take care my children, remember how the fight in the farm yard began. Never return a kick for a hit, and you save yourselves a good deal of trouble."

An American paper tells us the following story of a recent accident:—An Irishman was driving on the line when the engine tied him down an embankment. The driver backed his train to rock up, however, somewhat, but was taken to Norwich. Here the driver knelt off red iron the man to his home, a little way, in a track, but he insisted on his ability to walk, and refused to be sent home. The driver pressed the matter, when the Irishman, who had stood the burning of the cow-October so well, bristled up with, "Go away with your kerriage—I'll go home by myself; and if I've done any damage to yer old engine, bebad, I'll pay it on the spot."

It is stated, that at a fishing village near Aberdeen, that a fisherman's daughter, about sixteen years of age, recently had a small stone on the back of her hand and from this spot in succession, were discharged 120 broken fish hooks, pins, fish bones, &c., and to each hook was attached eight inches of gut.

A riveted brass cauldron, containing a large assortment of antique armor and armor's tools, had been accidentally discovered in the Collinwood Loch in Scotland. They are thought to be as old as about the year 1500, and it is matter of history that Edward I, when in possession of Galloway, had a camp in the Fir Island on this lake, and the remains of a camp have been found in it.

Several nice young gentlemen went to the residence of a young damsel to give her a serenade. After some time, the serenade stepped out and walking up to the harpist, exclaimed, "My friend, the folks are all a-bed; you can't get a cent here to-night."

At an examination of the college of surgeons, a candidate was asked by Abernethy: "What would you do if a man was blown up with powder?" Wait until he came down, was the reply.

"Oh, she was a jewel of a wife!" says a man moving over the bow of his better half, who always struck me with the soft end of the mop!"

An exchange says that a fashionable lady in Pitt-field wore her new bonnet to church last Sunday the wrong side before, but it does not state how the error was discovered.

A Western editor repels the gift of a battle of spruce-burn, on the ground that it is contrary to the rules of the profession to tell a scandal and a half lie for six and a quarter cents.

A Wisconsin justice has decided that a man is not liable for the liquor bills of his wife.

Aroostook Branch Railway.
From the Houlton Times.
The New Brunswick & Canada Railroad has been of signal benefit to us. From its completion business received in this section a new impetus, and increased beyond the anticipation of the most zealous. Real estate, independent of the rise or fall of gold advanced during the last three years, from 30 to 75 per cent varying of course according to location. It is for us to decide whether we shall reap still greater advantages. The people of St. Stephen have nearly completed a branch road which will be opened for travel and freight by the middle of the coming month. The people of Woodstock have projected another, which will be finished by June next. Shall we be behind our enterprising Provincial neighbors? We have the route already surveyed, and will have to build the road only to the Boundary Line. "They of the other side" will meet us there. Its length would be about four miles, and the cost has been estimated at $75,000. The advantages to be derived from a Branch Railroad are too patent to state. It will benefit the farmer, merchant, manufacturer and mechanic. The County of Aroostook is nearly if not quite as large as the State of Massachusetts. That State has been forced in a measure, to quit farming and turn her attention to manufacturing. Aroostook, if her resources are properly developed, need quit one of the other. Her soil, water-power and magnificent forests are unsurpassed. Give her railroad facilities and her capabilities of supplying wealth and a necessary wants can be increased to an unlimited extent. Bring us nearer to Boston, Portland and other centres of trade, and emigration and capital will flow in. The people of St. Stephen in occupying one extreme of N. B. & C. Railroad have not been blind to their own interest. We, as we occupy the other extreme, cannot fall—unless the rules of supply and demand be utterly false—to be benefited in a corresponding degree. Let us have a Railroad here, and we hazard the opinion, that the additional taxes derived from the increased value of real estate will be more than sufficient to pay the interest on the money thus invested. Our four years war which strained our energies to the utmost, is a good and sufficient excuse for all short comings in the past, but, having now satisfactorily completed that job, we shall be without a semblance of an apology if we let the present opportunity slip, and lose all the advantages which a Branch Railroad would give us.

Wherever there is now a Fenian, a British renegade, or an Annexationist, there you find an opponent of Confederation. The following account of a recent meeting of French Canadians who had foreseen their country is pretty conclusive on this point:—
A few French Canadians in New York held a meeting last week, in which they expressed their disgust for Confederation, and their sympathy for Fenianism. What these ignoramus say or think is, of course, of not the slightest importance, and we merely refer to their action in order to afford our readers an opportunity of reading a few specimens of the most exalted bunkum and spread-eagles which we have ever met with. Doubtless these French Canadians' ancestors came from Gascony, and when Gascons and Yankees get together, we may expect to hear the ne plus ultra of braggadocio and falsehood. These individuals then having met at Clinton Hall, proceeded to pass resolutions of a startling character, promising by the extraordinary statement that the Confederation of the British Provinces of North America would "drawn all the French Canadians, together with their aspirations, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence." Then they declared that "Confederation has been patronized by Lord Russell and Lord Cardwell, the two most inveterate enemies of free institutions, as an intended pounce against the United States, and is the last act in the compact formed by Great Britain, France and Spain to arrest the territorial expansion of the Great Republic which is destined to swallow up everybody and everything on this Continent. In the opinion of the renegade Canadians, it is high time that the British power, which "weighs upon the United States in the north, hugs them in the east, holds in its hands the keys of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Mexico, and which is at the present moment choking Ireland with blood," should be put an end to, and that all parts of North America should be united under the "starry flag of the Union."

Important Discovery in Photography.
The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post writes—"Photography in Paris is making wonderful advances. We have an annual exhibition of the Photographic productions of France, Germany, and England, in the large exhibition building, Champs Elysees, in conjunction with the works of painters and sculptors. The student of photography here looks out each year for the long-desired and long-prophesied triumph of chemistry, the production of colour, but we have not yet met with it in these vast collections. The honour of producing on paper the exact colouring which the human form throws on the camera has been reserved for M. Cambay, whose process I have carefully investigated, and am able to declare that he succeeds in producing a portrait which gives all the exquisitely varied tints of flesh, together with a transparency in the shades never before attained. This is a great chemical triumph. We have in Paris admirable examples of tinted or painted photographic portraits, but we have never yet got colour as well as from "Chambre noire." Mr. Cambay is at present almost unknown in his own country, and therefore I feel the more pleasure in recording this great chemical and art event of the day. For the first time I have seen photography doing justice to female beauty; and never did the human hand reflect flesh and texture of drapery with such wonderful exactitude. Henceforward the photographic artist possessing this secret has only to place his man and woman in a graceful and intelligent attitude, and that which a looking glass reflects will permanently rest on the paper. No attempt has yet been made by the artist to produce landscape, and it is with him yet a problem if colour can be held and printed after a certain distance. But one long-sought object has been attained, so far as portraits are concerned, and it dates a new era in photography."

South in Motion.
While it is the fact that many negroes are leaving the South for Liberia, thus lessening to some extent the labor supply, the Southern people are making strenuous efforts to attract emigrants from Europe to their portion of the Union. At the same time they are holding State Industrial Fairs, stimulating the manufacturing enterprise of the South. Instead of sending all their Cotton to the North and to Europe, they propose to manufacture it in the South, and already many of their newspapers contain statements showing the expense of erecting and running Cotton Mills. A Petersburg paper says, very truly—"Manufacturing can be made as profitable here as in any other part of the country. The perfection which the manufacture of tobacco has attained in Virginia demonstrates how successfully a great interest may be developed; and it is only necessary to apply equal skill to any other pursuit to insure equal success. We have the raw material, we have the water power—both the best in the world; a number of operatives may be obtained; and we have every advantage of climate. Richmond and Petersburg might and ought to be made for the South what Newburyport and Lowell and hundreds of other towns are for the North. The Northern people see very clearly the force of Southern reasoning on the subject.—The N. Y. Tribune admits that Southern manufacturers "can afford to bid high for the labor of factory girls from New England, and they say that these girls will be the Sabine women whose children will conquer the world. They see that when they begin to manufacture emigration will flow in, and not before. No longer will they look to the Democrats or the President to save them. They will save themselves. Instead of trying to reform the North, they will reform the South."—Telegraph.

The Standard.
ST. ANDREWS, DEC 19, 1866.
The festive season is at hand, and as the STANDARD will not be published again until the 26th inst. we take time by the forelock, and wish our readers one and all—"a right merry Christmas."

Duty & Beacon Duties	10.82	22.14
	$1980.05	$2305.72
Increase in 1866	$325.67.

St. Andrews, 30th Nov. 1866.
We are happy to notice that the increase in the Revenue of this Port has been steadily increasing for the last few years; it is a sure indication of the increase of business.

HOULTON BRANCH R. R.—In another column, we have inserted an article from the Houlton Times, on the proposed Branch to connect with our Railway. We have heard that the Directors of that Branch, have resolved upon an immediate survey, and have engaged our friend Mr. Beck's services for that purpose.

The last Royal Gazette contains the appointment of Col. D. Mowat and Mr. Robert Ross as Inspectors of Savings Banks. Capt. Henry Hitchings C. C. Militia is permitted to retire with the rank of Major. The first Battalion is now without a Colonel, but should report be correct, an Officer is shortly to be appointed, who will be a credit to the 1st Charlotte, as he is well up in drill and understands his duty.

A REFUGEE ASSOCIATION has been organized at the suggestion of His Excellency Gen. Doyle. This is an excellent move, as it will afford our people an opportunity of fostering and advancing a loyal spirit of defence and self-reliance. Gen. Doyle being a soldier of large experience, and thoroughly understanding the spirit of the people, has done more during the brief time he has been administering the Government of this Province, than any of his predecessors,—to encourage a martial spirit throughout the Province.

After some weeks of fine clear and mild weather for the season, an old-fashioned snow storm visited us on Monday last, but owing to the high wind which prevailed during the day, drifted, making the going heavy. Wagons and drays have been replaced by sleighs and sleds.

What a source of annoyance it appears to be to the Opposition, that the Executive Council make appointments, and remove officials with consulting them. Even the Delegates in England, who are working hard to bring their native Province into favorable notice, and advancing its best interests, do not please them; they are accused of "wasting time and money, instead of being at home attending to their duties and offices." It is really too bad, that our rulers do not conciliate their opponents, by asking their advice and appointing in preference to those who have been their fast friends and political supporters. If a title of the accusations were true, which have been made against them, they would be most corrupt and incompetent men. But happily mere assertion is not proof, and a large majority of the people, know the men, and have confidence in them, or they would not have placed them in power.

That public men are public property, is not denied, and their acts are open to criticism; but imputing their motives, cavilling at every act great or small, and constant fault finding without pointing out or suggesting a remedy, is but a poor apology for criticism, and instead of damaging their reputation as politicians, has the effect of increasing the number of their friends, and their popularity.

No government ever has been or ever will be perfect, mistakes will be committed, and should be pointed out and commented upon, and where a member of the Executive Council commits an act prejudicial to public or private interest merely to gratify his own selfish purposes, he should receive such a withering rebuke, as would teach him better manners in future, or perhaps another method might with profit be adopted—call upon him to resign the trust he had betrayed.

From Mexican dates of the 6th inst., we learn that Maximilian will not abandon the Empire, and that he has published a Proclamation to that effect. Will the French troops be withdrawn? Not likely even to please our neighbors over the border.

Mr. Robert Ross seldom fails when he puts his shoulder to the wheel, and in a few days we will be in a position to give some information with reference to the proposed Steamboat Landing.

TELEGRAPHIC.
LONDON, 14.—Noon.
The Times, this morning, in an editorial, takes a hopeful view of trouble in Ireland and thinks there will be no serious difficulty in quelling the Fenian rebellion with the civil force alone.
Consols, for money, opened at 88½, United States 5-20s 71.

N. Y. 14th.
Gold closed at 137 5/8.

MONTREAL, 14th.
It is stated that Sir J. Michel, Commander-in-Chief of the Forces, recently prepared a report at the request of the Imperial authorities which shows the impracticability of fortifying this City except at very heavy cost.—[An American telegram, evidently.]

BARNSELEY, Dec. 13.
A third explosion took place at Oaks Colliery at 10 o'clock this morning. There is no longer any hope for those in the pit.—They must be all dead. It is estimated that 350 have lost their lives by this terrible catastrophe. The mine is now on fire and the flames have burst from the mouth of the main shaft with great violence. The work of drawing out the bodies of the dead have been suspended, and the mine is to be flooded with water. The cause of the accident will probably remain a perpetual mystery.

HANLEY, Dec. 13.
There was a fearful explosion at noon today at Fox under the Hill, near the town in a coal pit belonging to the North Staffordshire Coal and Iron Company. Two hundred men went into the mine this morning of whom only 13 have been taken out alive, and they were badly injured. The rest it is believed are dead. Up to the present moment 40 dead bodies have been brought out. The excitement among the inhabitants is intense.

LONDON, Dec. 14.
The awful calamities in York and Stafford excite the most painful interest throughout the kingdom. A subscription has been opened at the Mayor's for the suffering families of the victims.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—A very serious accident happened to Rev. William Milligan on Friday evening last. He was driving toward his residence, and when but a short distance from it, his horse shied and ran, striking the Rev. gentleman with such violence as to fracture his collar bone, and badly bruise his left side and arm. Fortunately his head was not injured. Mr. Milligan's sufferings have been very great, but we are pleased to learn that he is now improving, and will, we trust, soon be able to resume his wonted duties among his people.—[Sentinel.]

It is now generally understood that the Rev. Mr. McNutt, Curate to the Rev. Canon Gray, of Trinity Church has resigned his position in the Church of England and cast in his lot with the Calvinistic Baptist body. Mr. McNutt is a young gentleman of an earnest enquiring mind and irreproachable character, and will be an acquisition to the Baptists, while his departure from his old sphere of usefulness will be regretted by his late parishioners.—[Tel. 1.]

ENGLISH COTTON MANUFACTURERS IN THE SOUTH.—The New York Times says it has recently heard of not a few English capitalists having invested in the establishment of cotton manufactories in the South. South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama are reported by the agent of English houses to hold out especially inviting opportunities for investment. The cotton tax acts as an inducement to cotton manufacturing in the South, for cotton escapes the tax altogether when manufactured in the collection district in which it is raised; and the difference of three cents a pound constitutes a serious item, one way or the other, in setting the price of goods per yard.

—An old woman supposed to be extremely poor lately died in Paris, whose few effects, the furniture of her lodging, were sold by auction. Among them was a little box of thread, which was knocked down, in a lot of other "undries," for a few francs. The purchaser found among the skeins twenty notes of the Bank of France for a thousand francs each, and at once set out on a tour in luxurious style through Auvergne, his native province. Had he been wise enough to go anywhere else, his prodigality would have caused no inquiry, but his old acquaintances were inquisitive as to this sudden wealth, and their questions resulted in his arrest. The finder was not punished for his misappropriation, but the money remaining was taken from him,—seventeen thousand francs in amount,—and given to a nephew of the deceased widow, who came into court to claim it.

CHRISTMAS ODE.
Welcome! Merry Christmas!
That's with us now once more.
With all its sport and fashions,
And rollicking, and gale,
When pleasure's of the season,
Make all our bosoms gay;
And festive compliments, all hail
Our happy Holiday.

Welcome Merry Christmas!
The time for heartiest joy!
In Clothing from the Albion House,
Appears each smiling boy,
When juveniles on every side,
Of every age and grade,
Are seen in all the varied dress,
That fancy has portrayed.

The styles which J. Magee brings out,
Are wonderful in extent,
And every kind of useful dress,
Is beautifully bent.
For children, youths, and maidens,
We've hats, and caps, and ties,
With pants and vests, scarfs, &c., and hose,
Unrivalled in their styles.
