Life Assurance Which Satisfies

Many a man fears that the amount of his insurance, if paid in one lump sum to his beneficiaries, may be spent during their lifetime, thus leaving them in want. If his policies could only guarantee a stated income for life to his wife, and for at least twenty years to his children, he would be satisfied. This is the exact guarantee of the new policy issued by The Ontario Mutual Life.

One of the greatest boons that can be possessed by man or woman is a complete, healthful, fine-looking set of teeth, such teeth, in short, as are the results and illustrations of the constant use of that fragrant dentifirice, "Odontine." This preparation is purely harmless, because purely vegetable, is indorsed by all who have ever employed it, and combines all the qualities requisite in a perfect dentifrice. It cleanses and preserves the teeth, arrests the progress of decay, purifies the breath, and preserves the normal healthful condition of the gums. In many London families, "Odontine" (Cairneross & Lawrence) is a standard article, and once used it enjoys increasing popularity, as its

"My Husband's New Suit Cost But Twenty Cents."

"When we were married we determined to study true economy. Neither of us were misers; we dressed well and lived as comfortably as many whose incomes were larger than ours. Of all the agencies that contributed to our success in money saving, the Diamond Dycs were certainly the most noted. When my dresses, skirts, blouses, capes, jackets or ribbons became faded or dead looking I made them look like new creations with the Diamond Dyes.

"Just a week ago I took a faded and spotted light gray summer suit that my husband wore last summer and dyed it a handsome dark navy blue. It looks so fresh and new that it attracts the admiration of our friends. My husband's new suit cost but twenty cents; economy, isn't it? If other wome of the Diamond Dyes they would quite as successful as I am. I never use the our dyes; they are dear at any price."

THE TRIAL OF W. D. EMERSON.

For His Part in the Music Hall Tragedy, Closed.

Prisoner's Wife Corroborates the Story of Tuttle Having a Knife,

And the Nurse's Account of How Emerson Got the Pistol.

The Hvidence Completed-Impassioned Pleas of Counsel for the Crown and for the Prisoner-Waiting for the Judge's Charge and the Verdict.

"What will it be?" was the question that agitated the minds of thousands of citizens last night as they gossiped about the finding of the jury in the trial in which W. D. Emerson's life hangs in the balance. Yesterday the evidence was completed, and the impassioned addresses of counsel were made to the jury, who have all to say in the matter.

The court room was filled all day, and there were heavy hearts and many sobs when at 2:15 Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, Q.C., made his strong appeal to the jury for the life of his client. Women sobbed pitifully, the prisoner's eyes were not for a moment dry, strong men shed tears, and old men bowed their heads as they gave vent to their feelings. Mr. Johnston's address lasted for two hours and a haif. He had only fairly begun when a thunderstorm burst over the city. Heavy hail dashed violently against the big skylight, and the rain made its way to the floor and tables in copious streams. The counsel's voice could scarcely be heard for about twenty minutes, and there was an intermission which to some extent relieved the feeling that had taken hold of the audience and melted it to tears. Mr. Heyd's address for the crown was exhaustive concerning the evidence. On one or two occasions Mr. Johnston corrected him when he referred to points on which there was no evidence, and the crown counsel passed them over with an apology.

Friday Atternoon.

MRS. W. D. EMERSON. The prisoner's wife was called when the court resumed. She was pale, and looked worn, for she has not been well for some time. After being given a seat, Mr. Johnston proceeded with his years ago, and their baby girl was now nearly two years old; while in London, in the employ of the Wesley Stock Company, she had engaged a nurse girl, Lena Dowdell, to look after the child while the performances were going on. Witness then recited the story of how the revolver lay on the of how the baby had nearly pulled it over on itself, and of its being taken by Mr. Emerson. She corroborated the story of the nurse girl in every particular. Both Mr. Emer-con and Mr. Booth had agreed not to play until they got their money. Wit- beyond the vestige of a doubt. Be this saw Tuttle come upon the stage and heard what took place about the salary, when Tuttle struck Emerson. Witness said she intended to spring between her husband and Tuttle as soon as the trouble began. She came forward at the time Tuttle delivered the blow and a moment later Tuttle advanced towards her husband with a knife in his hand. There was a snot, and Tuttle fell. Witness came to her husband, and he accompanied her to the dressing-room, where she delirious; remembered her husband asking some one to send for an oi-Mrs. Emerson recognized her husband's revolver, and also the one which her dead mother had given her about five years ago. She had had it

Mr. Heyd, in his cross-examination, failed to change Mrs. Emerson's story. Emerson would not admit that it would have been just as easy for Emerson to have put the revolver in his coat pocket as in his trousers. "It would have been more dangerous in his coat pocket, in any case," she said. anybody else about the knife incident, until very recently; but why, she could not tell, unless it was that she seldom or ever spoke about the affair; when she went to see Mr. Flock it was generally about bail for her husband. Referring again to the conflict between Emerson and Tuttle, witness said, when Tuttle stepped back, after delivering the blow, he collided with her.

In answer to the crown's question, as to what use there was of Tuttle, who her husband, Mrs. Emerson said she firmly believed Mr. Tuttle intended to injure him.

MR. JOHNSTON'S ADDRESS. This concluded the evidence, and the counsel addressed the jury. Mr. Johnston, having placed the revolvers, diagram, and a bunch of notes on evidence upon a table before the jury box, bowed to the judge, and stood for a moment erect; and, looking from one juryman to the other, he began. He said: I stand here before you, pleading for a life; I stand here asking you to give back to that woman near the box (pointing to Mrs. Emer-son) the life of her husband, W. D. Emerson—not the life of a man who has spent his years; not the life, perhaps, that has only one or two years to run before he is called upon to give over all that he has in this world; not the life of a man alone, with no ties; not the life of a man with no future; not the life of a man without affection and without love; but the life of a man who has a name to make, who has his ambitions to satisfy-aye, and a thousand times dearer than all life's ambitions, who has a life of care and affection for his wife and the dear little girl, who can hardly lisp her father's name. Not only so, not only am I asking you for his but I am here pleading for his liberty —liberty, perhaps, sometimes dearer than life itself; liberty men will not give in exchange for life of long, weary years in a felon's cell, day after day passing without even the rays of God's sunlight upon it; month after month in its ceaseless round; year after year, perhaps, separated from his fellow-men; a mere machine of the law, no higher than the dull, helpless clod of earth you may turn over in one's field, devoid and deprived of action; destitute of movement within the stifling walls of a jail cell. I ask for his deliverance from that because that deliverance may be to him dearer and sweeter than life itself. I mention this to you because I want you to acquit this man upon any ground of any sympathy, not because I ask you to restore this man to his wife and little baby on the mere feelings of charity or of gratitude; but I ask it upon the grounds of justice, and justice alone. I do not mention this to you for the purpose of influencing your minds one iota. I do not ask you to turn your minds from the straight line of duty minds the great responsibility devolves upon you.

The speaker said he realized the great responsibility, because there were many who realized that the prioner's future largely depended upon whatever humble efforts he (Mr. Johnston) was able to put forward. It was a responsibility which able advocates shrank from. "If I make a mistake in this man's case," he continued, "and if you notice a mistake in following up this evidence in coming to a conclusion in your jury room, the mistake is terrible in its consequences to the prisoner at the bar and his family, a examination. Mrs. Emerson said she mistake that time cannot rectify, and had married Mr. Emerson about three a mistake that eternity is too short to make good. Once the verdict is rendered, and the sentence pronounced by his lordship on the bench, file man's doom is sealed, and the mistake is beyond recall. I say to you, in all seriousness, the responsibility which devolves upon us today is grave and grave beyond all doubt. A man who loses his property goes out in the world and can begin over again. the man who gives up his life to law once there is no compensation. The law contends that a man is inno cent until the crown proves him guilty dyed deep in the blood of his fellowman, he is, until convicted, by a proper tribunal, as innocent as the little baby that is hardly able to lisp its father's name. Where there is doubt the doubt goes in favor of the pris-If the jury thought the prisoner inoner. nocent, said Mr. Johnston, they must release him, and if he was guilty his crime must be punished, no matter what the effect may be upon his family. There are three things which are dear to a man, and which he is allowed by law to protect-his property his name and fair fame, and his life. The prisoner's counsel then went into the animal nature, the ungovernable nature, of some men who were charged with crime, and contrasted them with the even temper of the prisoner and his bright intellect. He had not come before the jury pretending anything, but came before the jury and the judge as a man conscious of his innocence. The prisoner had carried his life in his hands when he walked Witness had not said anything to Mr. from the prisoner's dock to the witness' Ed. Flock, her husband's counsel, or stand to give evidence in his own behalf. One act of equivocation, one false step, and he was gone. He went to the box boldly, with a conviction of innocence in his mind. Emerson said: "I will tell the whole truth. I fired the shot, and I intended to fire it, but did not do it with the intention of murder." Take the evidence for the crown from start to finish; take the witnesses for the defense from the first to the last; go through the evidence carefully, and there is not a single instance to offer was a big man, having trouble with the suggestion for the shooting except that given by Emerson and the witnesses called on his behalf. The crown had started out with a speech, in which they were told how Emerson's pistol had been placed in the pocket for the purpose of the deed. They were told of the altercation, of the shooting and of the death. If the pietol had been placed, as the crown said, then Emerson was guilty of murder of the worst type. But where was the evidence up-

wrong, how easily it was to blast his character; but there were other times when it was easy to explain and correct a wrong impression. He did not deny, but had always admitted that Emerson had fired the shot, but it was not to kill. Would they, he asked, on this evidence, take a man to the gallows to expiate a crime of which he was innocent? People might talk, they might believe him innocent or guilty, but they had nothing to lose. With the jury it was different. "In the last day," he continued, "and on your death-bed, in the last throes of dissolution, you will recall this day. You will then ask yourselves, 'Did I make a mistake and condemn an innocent man?' Oh, the anguish of that moment! The prisoner, he said, was either innocent or he was guilty: there was no half-way measure in the case. Pointing to Emerson, he said: "There sits a man against whom not one breath has been turned. While in the box his whole life was open to them, and it was open to the crown to show that Emerson was a dangerous man; but they showed he was a most peaceful man. It was not for the speaker to rake up the objectionable features of James Tuttle; that might cast reflections upon his memory, and cause sorrow to his loved ones. would malign no man; but the fact remained that Tuttle was a man who, in an altercation, was of violent and ungovernable temper, and who, when once roused, had the demoniac failing of the very devil. Emerson had no hard feeling against Tuttle, but asked for his money and expected that Tuttle would send it up, and not come up and raise a row. Emerson's evidence spoke for itself, both as to what he said and the manner in which he said it. Who was the man, he asked, that caused the trouble? It was the man who on one occasion had picked up the knife and "The next man that makes said: a kick to me, I'll split his head." It was the man who smashed in the door of the box office. Emerson could not be blamed for the part he took in asking for his money, considering the ru-mors that were in circulation. Had Tuttle paid him or been willing to pay him, neither he nor the jury would been taking the part they were. There would have been no shooting, no death, no trial. When Tuttle went upstairs it was with the intention of making Emerson go on and play, and to attack him if he refused. He referred to the prominent part the knife played in the scene, as adduced by Emerson's, Laughlin's and Mrs. Emerson's testimony. He then pictured the two actors, not in part of a play, but taking part in the tragedy of life. If they were as grossly insulted as Emerson, by language which not only reflected on himself, but upon the pure being who gave him birth, he asked them if they were armed with a stick and struck the ruthless insulter, they would call it murder if they struck and killed him? He asked how they would like to have their actions weighed in the fine balance of reason. It was not his place to dictate to them as to what they should do-it was his part merely to present the case as it appeared to him, and leave them to decide. If they believed Emerson's story they must acquit him, but if not there was no conclusion to come to but his guilt. Emerson in the box might have said, if he chose, that the blow was struck with Tuttle's right hand, in order to make his statement corroborative with the other witnesses, but he told the truth and said the left hand, and said, too, like an honest man, that he could not help what other people had said. The witnesses had agreed on all except the question of time. He presented this difficulty by saying that if he asked each man to put down on a piece one hair's breadth owing to that cirof paper how long he had been speakbut merely to bring to your ing, he ventured to say there would ing, he ventured to say there would no two wlike. that the witnesses did their best, and that none had made misrepresentations knowingly. There was no evidence of premeditation on the part of Emerson -not one jot of evidence presented by the crown. The mere accident of his having the revolver in his pocket had been explained away by Emerson. His hands covered with grease and paint, he allowed the revolver to remain in his pocket until he should have occasion to wash them, which did not occur before the tatal moment approached. No man could be hanged, nor kept in prison, on suspicion. The whole question was one between very narrow limits. Was the deed an act of self-defense? If it was Emerson "Have you a wife?" went free. "Have you children? asked. yourself in Emerson's position and ask yourselves, 'Would I like to be tried for murder because I acted like he Mr. Johnston went over the evidence of Laughlin, which the crown had cast a slur upon, but the crown failed to disprove it, and the man whom they had to make the plans got to Laughlin's position himself and said it was not only feasible but very Mr. Johnston continued on simple. Laughlin's evidence, and emphasized the strong points, which the crown witness verified. The speaker traced the evidence step by step, and pointed to the mass of it declaring the prisoner's innocence. The prisoner was either guilty or innocent. If they said he was guilty of manslaughter, there was little to choose between that and conviction for murder. He closed with a fervent appeal that melted to tears the majority of the spectators present It was for the jury to say what should be done with the prisoner. They were to remember that the dutiful wife, who had shared the great strain with her husband, would be anxiously waiting for their return, waiting for their verdict, and what would it be? "Will you take away from that young woman a loving husband, and leave her a widowed mother with an orphan child?"

MR. HEYD PRESENTS HIS CASE. Mr. Heyd began his address on behalf of the crown by congratulatory words for Mr. Johnston. He had filled his position as counsel for the prisoner as only one with such a gigantic intellect could fill it. He had done his duty and more than his duty. He had presented the facts of the case to them with consummate ability, and if they failed to meet his expectations with their verdict it could not truly be said that Mr. Johnston was in any way to blame. He had appealed to their tender feelings, and to their sympathies. He had pointed to the dutiful wife, who had stood by her husband in all this terrible strain, and he agreed with every word that had been said respecting her. But he (Mr. Heyd) wanted to point out a few facts to them. It was not a question of sympathy, he said. It was not a question of how the jurors would feel on their death-beds if they brought in a verdict of guilty. It was a question of cold, stern justice, of terrible reality, that everyone connected with the case must face. The jurors were only ordinary men called upon to do the ordinary duties of citizenship. The man without sympathy was not likely to make a good citizen, Johnston alluded to the story of the but while this was so he hoped they nurse girl, and showed that by the would not be carried away by sentimerest accident Emerson had his rement. He asked them to imagine that volver in his pocket, because his greasy and painty hand would not althere was some person else, besides Mrs. Emerson, awaiting with interest low of the keys being readily obtained the decision of the jury. There was a woman whose boy had been taken away without being given time to do what this man (Emerson) had had sevat the time to enable him to place the weapon in his trunk. When they got eral months to do—to prepare to meet his God—a woman whose boy had just started out in the world for himself; a boy who left his mother's house full of life and vigor, never to return again, had been hurried without a moment's notice to meet his God. The fact that Emerson killed Tuttle was never questioned, for how could it be? There was no room for questioning it. The jury was not to consider what Emerson's past life had been, whether he was the greatest criminal or the greatest saint that ever lived on this earth. He would not say that James Tuttle was the embodiment of virtue, but that was no reason why his life should be taken. Tuttle was a powerful man, and Emerson had seen him from day to day and knew what kind of a disposition and temper he had before he persisted in refusing to play, by which decision the dead man would have lost money. It was questionable whether was serious when he spoke about using the big stage knife on the next man who made a kick, and it was questionable whether he was in a bad humor when he came on the stage just before he was shot and his soul hurried into eternity. Counsel pointed to the fact that Emerson had demanded something, when he asked for his money, that a man had no legal right to demand. Mr. Heyd went over the evidence and referred to the "pretty" story of Lena Dowdell. He referred impagaionately to the shooting and impassionately to the shooting, and laid stress upon the point that although Tuttle was said to have had a knife in his uplifted hand, nobody seemed to have heard it drop to the floor after the shot was fired. They were to place their own value on the evidence. They were to do their duty to their fellowmen. "Gentlemen," he said, "there is a man whose destiny is to be determined. You all know human weak-You know how some men fall at a little temptation. There is a man who walks out of that box to the prison or a free man. You have seen his performance in the witness box, and the impression that his appearance in the box makes on your minds settles the question. It is of great consequence to him."

Mr. Heyd then went over Laughlin's evidence. It was a strange thing, he said, that Laughlin should be sitting on a roof in the snow, and hear Tuttle threaten to kill Emerson, and hear things that nobody else heard. There had been nothing said at the police court about this knife. Laughlin knew that this man was languishing in jail. Why did he not come out like a man and tell all he knew about it then? He asked the jury whether or not they believed Laughlin's evidence, and whether Laughlin was a man who, to save 10 cents, would climb up on the barn. Did it seem possible that a man with lung trouble, who had had 100 hemorrhages, would go on the roof in his shirt sleeves on a night when the snow was falling? It was a very improbable thing for a man in this condition to go on the roof and arrive at the window just in time to see a man shot dead. The crown valued life, and would not permit it to be taken unless there was reasonable ground for taking it. He referred to the evidence, and said he abandoned the charge of murder, but directed their attention to that of manslaughter. They were to do their duty as jurors and honest citizens; that done, the responsibility rested upon his lordship on the bench to fit the punishment to the crime. He hoped he had performed his duty on behalf of the crown, and he thanked the sury for their patience.

The judge, addressing the Jury, regretted that the trial had to go into the third day, but it could not be helped. The court adjourned at 7:15

FLAMING FORESTS

QUENCHED BY RAIN. Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 30.-Reports received at the railroad office in this city are to the effect that the forest fires in the northern part of the state were quenched by a heavy fall of rain last night. The heaviest loss was suffered at Cumberland, where 25 families were rendered homeless by flames, and a large saw mill valued at $225,000, was wiped out. Wires are down in all directions, and particulars of the ruin wrought have not yet been received, but are expected to come in shortly. Only one death as far as known has resulted, that of Mrs. Jacob Correson, of Dry Wood. children of Mrs. Correson were seriously burned while attempting to rescue their mother. The pecuniary loss is not expected to reach over $1,000,000. St. Paul. Minn., Sept. 30 .- A Cumberland dispatch says: Cumberland pre-sents a sad sight tonight. The mill portion of the country is a smoldering heap of ruins. Loss about $150,000. Forest fires were swept into the city from the southwest at about five o'clock last night. The fire started on the east and west sides of the town and at about the same time. The fiames spread with a rapidity that threatened not only the entire city, but the lives of the inhabitants. Every part of the town was filled with smoke and flying firebrands, and the people were running in every direction panic-stricken. Two freight trains standing here took about 200 people to Shell Lake, and hundreds more sought the western lake shore for safety. Meanwhile the volunteer fire department did noble work in trying to save the business portion of the city. A timely down-pour of rain, lasting about 20 minutes, enabled the firemen to check the progress of the flames on the west of the city, but nothing could save the city east of the Omaha railroad, including the large lumber yards and the mills of the Beaver Dam Lumber Company.

Indigestion and Stomach Troubles Removed by South American Nervine Four Bottles Brought Back Health and Vigor.

Mr. Jas. Sherwood, of Windsor, Ont., writes: "For twelve menths I was a great sufferer from indigestion and stomach trouble. After trying other remedies without any benefit whatever, was attracted to South American Nervine through great cures I read of its making, and I decided to try it. After a few doses I felt great relief and benefit. I have taken four bottles, although I am 70 years old I give this thankful testimony for relief from the great suffering I had. I consider it a great medicine.

CRICKET. ENGLISHMEN WON.

Baltimore, Sept. 30.-The friends and admirers of the local cricket players were distinctly disappointed when the visiting Englishmen, under the guid-ance of Mr. P. F. Warner, held them down to 30 runs, with all out. When the Englishmen went in for their second inning they had but seven runs to go, and these were made in short order with the loss of but one wicket.

Philadelphia, Sept. 30.-The last of the international cricket matches between the gentlemen of Philadelphia and Capt. Warner's British eleven, was begun today on the grounds of the Germantown cricket club at Manheim. When stumps were drawn for the day the local players scored 143 runs for their first inning, and the visitors 114 for the loss of four wickets. TURF.

GENTRY DEFEATS PATCHEN.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 30. - At the state fair, in the presence of six thousand persons, John R. Gentry defeated Joe Patchen with ease in the match race for a purse of $5,000. The first heat was won in 2:041/4 and the second in 2:031/2, and Starter Newlen Imus announced it was the fastest race of the year, and also that it was the best two consecutive heats ever done by Star Pointer, Joe Patchen or Robert J. The conditions of the race were that both heats should be done in 2:05 or less. The winner received the purse. Neither horse broke during the race.

FURIOSE WON.

St. Thomas, Ont., Oct. 1 .-- A small crowd went out to Recreation Park yesterday morning to witness the fin-ish in the free for-for-all race which was left over. Furiose won the fifth heat and race in 2:18½. Paddy R. finished second, Prince H. third, Capt. Hunter fourth, and Axtell fifth. Prince H. got second money, Capt. Hunter third and Paddy R. fourth.

NEWMARKET RACES-SLOAN'S SUCCESS.

London, Sept. 30.-At the fourth day's racing of the first October meeting at Newmarket, a selling plate for 3-year-olds and upwards was won by the 6-year-old brown gelding Eau Gallie. Church of England Passing Through a Momentous Crisis.

Strike Involving 87,800 Miners Satisfactorily Settled-Plucky Act of the Duke of Connaught-Drought Followed by Deluge-Jealous Jockeys -Patti's Baptismal Record.

London, Oct. 1.—There has been a week of congresses distributed among various provincial towns, the chief of them being the church congress at Bradford, whose proceedings were looked forward to with intense interest. Some pronouncement from the Archbishop of Canterbury was expected on the great question of ritualism which threatens to bring about a serious split in Anglican circles. The recent uproarious proceedings of the agitator, Kensit, in the London churches, followed by Sir William Vernon Harcourt's letter in the Times denouncing "illegal ritualistic practices," have brought matters to a head, and even the hierarchy admit the Church of England is passing through

A MOMEN'TOUS CRISIS. The Archbishop of Canterbury proved somewhat disappointing at the congress, as while he declared the church must put a stop to a great deal of what is going on, and expressed confidence that the bishops will be able to stop it, yet he did not give the faintest indication as to how this was to be done. A definite pronouncement, however, is expected next week in the archbishop's charges to the clergy of his diocese, when decisive instructions are fully anticipated.

A GREAT STRIKE AVERTED. The conference of the Miners' Federation in London came to an important decision, to accept the employers' terms regulating wages until 1901. The miners got an immediate advance of 21/2 per cent, and a reference afterwards to the concilation board, who have given the minimum and maximum wage. This decision wards off threatened strikes involving 87,300

CONNAUGHT'S PLUCK.

The Duke of Connaught, after his interesting experiences at the French army maneuvers, where he displayed admirable horsemanship and took the greatest interest in the outfits and food of the soldiers, has again attracted attention by plucky conduct at Aldershot camp, where he is in command. A bush fire, due to the drought, burst out near Aldershot, and the Duke of Connaught, who was riding a bicycle, was the first to perceive it. He jumped off his wheel, called to some laborers to help him, and beat out the fire. He chose the hottest part, wielding the branch of a fir tree and the flames with his feet. He efforts were successful, but the duke rode away with his clothes ruined and his face as grimy as a chimney-sweep's.

MONUMENT TO WASHINGTON. The officials of the line of American transatlantic steamers intend to make extensive alterations in their boats. The New York is to be sent to Belfast to be lengthened.

David Christie Murray, in a newspaper here, revives the suggestion that a monument to George Washington be erected in England. He urges the Anglo-American League to take the matter up.

DELUGE FOLLOWS DROUGHT. Great Britain has emerged from a period of prolonged drought amid general rejoicings. The western, central and northern counties were deluged on Thursday, while London and the south were treated to deluging showers. The thermometer and barometer fell together. Frosts are reported in several parts of the country. The change in the weather promises to be lasting, and will fill the reservoirs throughout the country, which have run very low. Birmingham had storage only sufficient for ten days, and villagers in many parts were obliged to walk miles in order to obtain water. Many of the fine, patriarchal trees in Windsor Park are dying.

JOCKEY JEALOUSY

There is no doubt that bitter jealousy has been aroused by Tod Sloan among the English jockeys, who are aghast at his phenomenal series of wins. The attempt to oust Sloan in the Thursday welter handicap was made when he was descending the bushes hill. "Nat" Robinson, who was riding the favorite, Logganhall, caromed on Kirchwasser. Sloan kept his seat, but Kirschwasser, losing his balance, was passed by Manderola, ridden by "Sammy" Leates, who, immediately after, on the home run wasser, who was close beside, with her, the result being that Kirschwasser turning to the weighing-room were: "Say, where's the objection room?" The upshot of the matter was that Leates and Robinson were summoned before the stewards of the jockey club, who disqualified Manderola and suspended Leates from riding the Houghton meeting and cautioned

SYMPATHY FOR SLOAN. The sympathies of the British sporting men are all on the side of Tod

Sloan and the jockey club. One paper says: "To invite foreigners to enter their horses in English races, we welcome them on our different courses, and the same generosity should be extended to the jockeys, no matter when they come. It is gratifying to see that the stewards will not wince at shady conduct upon the part of even a fashionable jockey like "Sam" Leates. would be far better for some of our riders to imitate to a certain extent Sloan's style, than to attempt to jockey him out of a win by unfair means." The suggestion that the English jockeys imitate Sloan's style of riding has already been anticipated by a leading English jockey, Madden, who won the Triennial stakes on Thursday in Sloan's style, with the saddle placed well for-ward, and finishing on his horse's neck. The successful north country jockey, Weldon, is also adopting the American

question of short distance races, the increasing number of which it is contended is causing a degeneration of the standards of the thoroughbreds, and counterly the standards of the thoroughbreds of the standards of the thoroughbreds. and converting the horse into a mere instrument for gaming. The jockey club decided that half of the total amount of the added money at every meeting shall be appropriated for these yearraces of a mile or over for three-yearolds and upwards, and that half of this money shall be devoted to races of over a mile and half. It was also agreed that prior to June of each year, there shall be no two-year-old race of greater value than 200 sovereigns.

Nursing Her Dying Child Her this favorite actor at the Grand Opera Health Gave Way.

Anaemia, Followed by Neuralgic Pains, Racked Her System-Her Friends Feared That She Could Not Recover.

[From the Enterprise, Bridgewater,

N. S.1 Mr. and Mrs. James A. Diehl, who live about one and a half miles from Bridgewater, are highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. Mrs. Diehl has passed through a trying illness, the particulars of which she recently gave a reporter of the Enterprise, as follows: "In the spring of 1896 my health gave way. In addition to my ordinary household duties I had the constant care day and night of a sick child. In the hope of saving my little one, it did not occur to me that overwork, loss of sleep and anxiety were exhausting my strength. Finally, my child passed away, and then I realized my physical condition. Shortly after I was attacked with neuralgic pains in the shoulder, which shifted to my right side after three weeks and settled there. The pain in my side grew worse and after a few days I was unable to leave my bed. In addition to my bodily trouble I became melancholy and was very much reduced in flesh. My friends regarded my condition as dangerous. I remained in bed several weeks; to me it seemed ages. It is impossible to describe the agonies I suffered during that time. A skillful physician was in constant attendance upon me. He said mine was the worst case of anaemia and general neuralgia he had ever seen. After some weeks he succeeded in getting me out of bed, and after a few more weeks I was able to do some light household work. But I was only a shadow of my former self; 'ny appe-tite was very poor and that maddening pain still clung to my side and also spread to the region of the heart and lungs, darting through and about them like lances cutting the flesh. Every few days I had to apply croton oil and fly blisters to my chest, and had a had cough. My friends gave up, thinking I had consumption. I, too, really thought my end was near, fearing mostly that the pains about my heart might take me off any day. During all my illness I had never thought of any medicine other than what my doctor prescribed. It happened, however, that in glancing over the Enterprise one day my eye fell upon the statement of a cure made by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The case resembled mine in some respects. I read and re-read the article. It haunted me for several days notwithstanding I tried to dismiss it from my mind. At last I asked the doctor whether he thought these pills would help me. He looked at me a moment and then remarked 'well, perhaps you had better try them. I believe they do work wonders in some cases and if they do not cure you they will certainly do no harm.' That remark opened to me the door of life, for had he said 'No' I should not have used the pills. When I had used two boxes I began to feel better, my appetite improved and there was less of those pains about the heart and chest. The cough too was less severe. I kept on until six boxes more were taken and to make a long story short, I was myself again, appetite good, spirits buoyant, pains gone, and I could do my own work with comfort. I have been well ever since and have no doubt that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life, and restored me to my family. I am ever ready to speak their praises, and in my heart am ever invoking

London, Saturday, Oct. 1, 1898.

The New Viceroy of India. In a recent essay, speaking of the government of India by the British, the Right Hon. Max Muller said: "The government of India by a mere handful of Englishmen is, indeed, an achievement unparalleled in the whole history of the world. When I see in a circus a man standing with outstretched legs on two or three horses, and two men standing on his shoulders, and other men standing on theirs, and a little child at the top of all, while the horses are running full gallop around the arena, I feel what I feel when watching the government of India. One hardly dares to breathe, and one wishes one could persuade one's neighbors also to sit still and hold their breath. If ever there were en accident, the crash would be fearful, and who would suffer most? Fortunately by this time the people of India know all this, and they have learned to appreciate what they owe not only to the Pax, but also to the Lux Britannica. If we could dare to read the minds of three hundred millions, I should say that in the present state of things the people of India, as a whole, want no change, except such changes as can be achieved by the ordinary constitutional means." In the same essay he tells of some young Indian Rajahs, who, while traveling on the continent, met some Russian princes and noblemen there, who were very kind in explaining to them the beneficent rule of the Czar, and went the parting they asked the Indian princes 'When shall we see you at St. Petersburg?' They were not a little taken aback when the strangers bowed and smiled, and said: 'We are going just now to be present at the opening of Parliament in London. We should very much like to see St. Petersburg afterwards, and to be present at the opening of your Parliament there!" India is always interesting, and the appointment of Mr. Curzon, a comparatively young man, to the position of Viceroy, has attracted considerable attention. On this side of the Atlantic the principal feature in Mr. Curzon's career seems to be the fact that he has an American wife. Indeed, some American papers talk as if Mr. Leiter's money had bought the viceroyalty. power of "the almighty dollar," though to those who know British politics it is absurd. It is simply a coincidence that another gentleman with an American wife won the seat vacated by Mr. Curzon. English constituencies are not manipulated by American women or any other women. Many voted Liberal in Southport to condemn what they regard as the weakness of the Government's foreign policy; others because they believed home rule to be for the present dead, so that it was safe for them to vote with their old party. However, our present purpose is not to discuss the social position or political influence of American women in England, but to note some views of the new Vicerov. his position and pros-

Mr. H. Norman, who has been round the world, and knows something of foreign politics, refers to "the very charming lady who was Miss Mary Leiter, of Washington," and says of Mr. Curzon: "He is young, which reminds us how many great men have reached the top before they were 40; he knows India; he is on excellent personal terms with the Ameer of Afghanistan; and he has carefully studied Russia in Central Asia - three qualifications which will enable him, if he so chooses, or is, as I believe, so instructed, to hold back the dangerous military frontier party by knowledge equal to their own, and without suspicion of being a little Indian." These are great words of praise from a competent critic. It is not necessary to say that these qualifications are not such as Mr. Leiter's gold could buy. It may, however, be well to point out that this is a different view from that which some hold who regard the appointment as a direct defiance of Russia. The same critic tells us that "a chorus of good wishes has hailed his appointment, even the bitter critics of his party's policy having laid down their pens the moment their words might belittle the Viceroy of India. If Mr. Curzon succeeds, his success will be very great; for Indian problems at this time are very great, too. If he fails, he will have bade adieu to public life. Everybody admires the courage with which he has been willing to face the trying alternative. 'Festus, I plunge.' 'We wait you when you will!""

Mr. Norman's apt quotation reminds us that this is different plunging from that of young Leiter, and we trust it will meet a different fate.

A German reviewer of the month's politics (Cosmopolis) says: "There is still to be noticed the fact that Mr. Curzon goes to India as Viceroy; this betokens a further straining of England's strength for its Asiatic policy. Since Mr. Curzon, as is well known, represents the view that from India the destiny of the world will receive Its decision. He writes: 'The secret of the mystery of the world is, if they only knew it, in the possession of the British people.' We shall see how this secret will be unveiled." As this same electors were to dehorn themselves as tween the Kaiser's handling of business and his "oratorical surprises," he might as well allow something for Mr. Curzon's earlier rhetoric, although as a matter of fact, an expert like Vambey has said practically the same thing.

A French journalist says that Mr. Curzon will be a "vice-roi de combat, and his nomination to the vice-royalty of India is a kind of defiance addressed to Russia;" and hence he sees great dangers from English jingoism in that quarter. May his fears prove false! To show the view taken by an outsider, we may quote a few lines from this gentleman's description of the new viceroy: "Mr. George Curzon is not yet forty years of age; and if he is not the youngest of English politicians who have been called to the Vice-Royalty of India, he is one of the youngest. Son of Lord Scarsdale, whose title he will one day inherit, after a brilliant university career, he entered politics as Lord Salisbury's secretary in 1885, and in 1886 he was elected member of parliament, and soon distinguished himself. He has traveled in Persia, Central Asia, in China and Cochin China, and he has reaped from his travels, first, several volumes which have been well received, and next a knowledge of these regions which has stood him in good stead in his parliamentary and official career." These, of course, are wellknown facts, but the chief point of the Frenchman's criticism is that the new Viceroy represents a reckless, forward policy, and a fiercely anti-Russian attitude. In this we think he is mistaken, and that he does not sufficiently consider the sobering influence of great responsibility upon the welltrained British politician

After the Battle.

The Rev. Ira Smith, of this city, 18 reported as having assailed The Advertiser at the Auditorium meeting subsequent to the voting for its course in connection with the recent contest. The sins charged, apparently, were not sins of commission, so much as sins of omission; such sins, we suppose, as allowing letters on both sides of an important discussion to appear in our columns without money and without price; and, we suppose, the sin of not seeing eye to eye with the reverend gentleman. The other day we printed a complaint from the Rev. Dr. Courtice, editor of the Christian Guardian, to the general effect that the meannesses of some even of his religious critics and correspondents made him sometimes almost lose faith in human nature. Seasoned secular editors are seldom astonished at any similar manifestation, living as they do behind the scenes, and knowing pretty well the seamy side of This is no doubt a great tribute to the even clerical human nature. So that, ist spirit. He puts this view in a pregwhat the cleric thinks of the journalist than what the journalist thinks

> As to the Rev. Ira Smith's gratuitous references to The Advertiser, we are not aware that we are under any obligation to see eye to eye with the reverend gentleman any more than were the large number of brainy and sincere clergymen, not alone in this city, but throughout Ontario, who quietly did their own thinking on the two questions really involved-first, was the evidence sufficiently clear that prohibition was the best method of dealing with the liquor traffic? and, second, was the time ripe for prohibition? We are not aware that there is anything so unusual in the Rev. Ira Smith's pulpit or platform abilities or in his mental grasp, or anything else about him, that entitles him to lecture his fellow-Christians, or to set himself up as a sort of Deputy Providence, and pattern to clergymen and laymen every whit as intelligent, as disinterested, and as sincere as himself.

At Toronto, after the polling, Rev. Dr. Potts, in an interview, commented on what he called the mismanagement of the campaign on the side of prohibitionists. This obvious mismanagement was not confined alone to Toronto. One chief evidence of mismanagement was the constant inculcation of the principle of exclusion, instead of comprehension. The ex-cathedra manner in which all were given to understand that their temperance orthodoxy was to be measured by the opinions of the self-appointed few who in this and that locality undertook to call themselves the temperance party; and the manner in which a few undertook to nominate themselves as special telephonic mediums through which the Almighty would from time to time announce His views-these things caused a natural and justifiable pause on the part of many thoughtful persons.

The most useful, and the most successful effort, ever made in London, was that when the popular vote was recorded which resulted in the reduction of the number of licenses in this city from 70 to 40. That campaign was conducted with moderation of statement, without epithets, and with the excellent generalship of arawing together all who, whether themselves total abstainers or not, were prepared to work in co-operation. Towards the carrying of that great boon to the city, it was freely admitted at the time that The Advertiser was the principal

That was a practical and commonsense campaign, and far removed from the childishness of a subsequent socalled temperance political campaign, an idea which sprang full-blown from the brain of some goose of the first magnitude, in connection with which on their ballots!

The Rev. Dr. Potts was not far wrong in thinking that there had been mismanagement of the recent compaign. The lesson of that mismanagement is the necessity for leaders in the movement of wider views, bigger caliber, and broader sympathies than many of the self-appointed leaders, whose good intentions we do not impugn, but in whose judgment the great majority of people of balance have little confidence.

The Importance of the Tropics. A remarkable book, which has a profound bearing on problems now confronting British and American statesmanship, is Benjamin Kidd's "Control of the Tropics." Mr. Kidd first deals with the commercial importance of the tropics, and adduces some surprising testimony. He points out that the total trade of Great Britain with the tropics in 1896 amounted to £138,000,000, while British trade with the Englishspeaking nations outside the tropics, was £233,000,000, making a grand total of British trade with the tropics, and the English-speaking world of £371,-000,000, set against a trade of £367,000,-000, with all the rest of the world.

The official returns in the United States tell the same story. American trade with the tropics in 1895 was $346,-000,000, and has since greatly increased. The combined trade of Great Britain and the United States with the tropics in 1896 amounted to £208,000,000, as against £473,000,000 with the remainder of the world outside of Englishspeaking lands.

Mr. Kidd points out that the complex life of the modern world rests upon the production of the tropics to an extent which is scarcely realized by the average mind. But it is the political significance of these facts that he lays particular stress upon. He says that the continental nations have been so occupied with their own narrow affairs that they have taken little notice of the future to which the world, mainly under the influence of the expansive forces at work among the Englishspeaking peoples, has been traveling." The best minds in France and Germany, he says, have been suddenly awakened to the full significance of the situation. These nations must expand or perish. They find the temperate zones all occupied. Only the tropics remain. This is the key to the strange colonial infatuation which now possesses France and Germany, and which nearly ruined Italy in Africa.

Mr. Kidd deplores and condemns the sordid and unenlightened statesmanship which seeks to acquire colonies merely that they may be exploited for the exclusive commercial gain of the power in possession—the grasping protection-

"It is one of the gloomiest spectacles at the end of the nineteenth century, this railing off of immense regions in the tropics under the policy which has suggested their acquirement, regions tending, in the absence of white colonists, to revert to the type of states worked for gain, and slowly but surely surrounding themselves with a wall of laws and tariffs operating in favor of the European power in possession, to the exclusion of the interests of the rest of the world."

Here is food for thought for our American friends. Will they try to carry their narrow economic ideas into the broader sphere which awaits them as a colonial power?

New Zealand may become a dangerous rival in the British market. The colony has secured an Ontario man as its dairy commissioner.

The visit next week of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston will give another social stimulus to gay old Quebec. The Ancient and Honorables are among the elite of Boston, and are as much at home in claw-hammer coats as in regimentals. They have been the guests of Her Majesty at Windsor, and have been feted by British aristocracy. Quebec intends to give them a taste of Canadian hospitality that they will always remember.

Mr. Joseph Martin, Attorney-General of British Columbia, is at Quebec, in the interests of the sealing industry. Mr. Martin may rest assured that the Canadian commissioners will not barter away these rights for nothing. Speaking of reciprocity, Mr. Martin says that such a measure might allow the farm products of Washington and other States to enter the mining districts of British Columbia, but the increase of mining would eventually give Canadian farmers who were on the spot a larger market. This is a reasonable [Toronto Mail and Empire.] On the whole, it seems probable that over the whole country there will be a small prohibition majority. A good many people have imagined that this would mean the enactment of a law. This is a mistake.

WILL NOT MEAN PROHIBITION. TION.

[Toronto Telegram.] The result of the plebiscit will not mean prohibition for Canada. But it will mean that men engaged in the liquor traffic have received notice that their business is carried on by sufferance of the electorate.

[Toronto Globe.] With a majority of over 35,000 for prohibition in the Maritime Provinces, we have Quebec at the other extremwith about that number against. would be futile to shut our eyes to the difficulty that these two facts present. They consitute an almost irreconcilable situation.

> J. J. MACLAREN'S VIEWS. [Interview.]

Dr. J. J. Maclaren, Q.C., said he did not think he had any opinion upon the result as then obtained to express for publication. He stated, however, that in his view, the chief result of the plebiscite was that it raised prohibition to the dignity of a national issue, and placed it upon that footing for good.

UNDOUBTEDLY SUFFERED. [Brantford Expositor.]

The prohibition cause undoubtedly suffered to some extent by the uncharitable language of some of its advocates. The issue was one in which faired men, and even honest friends of temperance, might reasonably take opposing sides, and there was no occasion to sit in judgment upon those who, in their hearts, believed the adoption of such drastic legislation at this juncture of our history would be a mistake.

GOLDWIN SMITH INTERVIEWED. [Toronto Mail.]

Smith said he rejoiced in the result in one way, because it was practically a defeat of an attempt of a section to force their particular theory upon the country by neglecting all other public questions, and centering their votes upon the one thing. Questioned upon the political consequences of the vote, Prof. Smith said he did not think that the government, even if they had wished, could have attempted legislation in the matter uns less there had been a decided majority in each of the provinces, or at all events, in each of the larger provinces.

> AN UNFEELING WORLD. [Toronto World.]

Our truly good fellow countrymen down in Nova Scotia are very much in favor of prohibition. If they cannot get it through a Federal law, they can at least attain substantially the same thing by a provincial law so strict in its penalties and licenses that business will be driven to the wall. So let them pass such a stern law and set an example to their less sober fellowcitizens in the west. But somehow we suspect our esteemed and truly good Bluenose brethren of rather hankering after free whisky Smuggling is a thriving inwhisky. DREYFUS HAS LEFT DEVIL'S ISLAND.

Paris, Oct. 1.-The walls of the city were placarded yesterday with the an-nouncement that the anti-Dreyfus meeting, which was to have been held on Sunday next, had been abandoned in order to allow those who would have attended to visit the various Dreyfus meetings and shout, "Vive Armee!" and "Vive France!"

It is rumored that Dreyfus has already been transferred from the isie d'Diable to Cayennes, where he awaits a steamer to bring him to a French or Algerian port.

VESSEL SUNK-CREW SAVED. London, Oct. 1. - The International Line steamer Rhynland, Capt. Han-nah, from New York, Sept. 17, which arrived at Southampton yesterday, reports that on Sept. 18, second day out from New York, she collided with the Nova Scotia bark Athlon, Captain Sprague, from Dublin, Aug. 8, for Sandy Hook. The Athlon was abandoned in a sinking condition, the crew being all saved, and taken on board the Rhynland and brought to Southampton. The Athlon was a wooden vessel, built at Spencer's Island, N. S., in 1879. She registered 1,308 tons, hailed from Windsor, N. S., and was owned by A. W. Dickie.

NICARAGUA CANAL SURVEY. London, Oct. 1.-The eight government engineers who have been engaged upon the preliminary survey of the Nicaragua Canal have arrived here after completing their work. Their obstacles are in the way; and that the cost will be considerably less than the estimates made by the Ludlow commission or the sum named by Admiral Walker a year ago as likely to be needed. The Ludlow commission estimated the cost of the canal at $133,000,000. Admiral Walker named $125,000,000 as the aggregate cost. The report of the engineers will place the estimate at less than $100,000,000. By changing the location of the dam from Ochoa to a point fourteen miles lower down, the building of the San Juan basin and its costly embankment can be avoided and a saving of $10,000,-000 made.

Rios, Spanish governor of the Visayas Islands, who is reported to have recently proclaimed himself governor-general of the Spanish dominions in the Philippines, ports that the insurgent expeditions have arrived at the Visayas. The rebellion, it is reported, is spreading, and several provinces in the Islands of Luzon have been invaded and some officers of the gendarmes and their families massacred. The governor and officials at Iloilo, Island of Panay, have fled to Manila. La Correspondicia blames the Americans for tolerating the new rising of the insurgents, and urges the government to present a protest to the Paris commission.

The government is seeking the con-sent of the United States to send Spanish troops from Manila to the Visayas Islands to suppress the rebellion there, so as to avoid the necessity of dispatching troops from Spain.

SHE WAILED FOR "JACK"

Found Him in the Morgue-He Had Been Run Over by a Train of Cars.

Detroit, Oct. 1 .- John C. Robinson, & Michigan Central switchman, who lives at 101 Junction avenue, had been working over-time for a few weeks. He was not due at home until nearly noon. His wife waited patiently to greet her husband yesterday morning. A friend came in to tell her that her husband had been hurt. Mrs. Robinson would not rest until she had the whole story.

Robinson had been on a freight train near Poplar street. The train had broken in two, and the engineer had slowed his half of the train down in order to let the rest catch up. Robinson was climbing down the end of the last car of the front section when the rear section caught him, crushing him between the cars and then dropping him to the tracks to be run over by several of the other cars. His body was horribly mangled, but his face was uninjured. Coroner Dickson sent the body to Marshall's morgue. Mrs. Robinson insisted on going to the morgue to see her husband's body. Her grief at the ghastly spectable was heart-rending. Her frantic cries for "Jack, Jack!" filled the rooms. "My God, to lose

OF INCREASE

In the Trade of the Canadian Provinces.

Review of the Business Situation on Both Sides of the Border.

New York, Oct. 1 .- Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: Trade reports and failure statistics go to confirm current reports of active business in Canada. Toronto reports fall trade active, and Canadian mills fully em-ployed. Shipments of Canadian cotton goods to Egypt are a feature of the week. Wheat receipts are more liberal, but prices are still above an export basis, and less tendency to accept maximum estimates of Manitoba yield is reported. Stormy weather has interfered with business in the Maritime Provinces. Newfoundland fishery returns are unsatisfactory, and the lumber trade in New Brunswick shows little improvement. At Victoria and Vancouver trade is active and prices of hay are higher, partly because of the short California crop. Failures in the Dominion of Canada for the nine months number 1,091, with aggregate liabilities of $7,592,510—a decrease of 26 per cent in number and 29 per cent in liabilities from last year, and are the smallest alike in number and in liabilities involved for any year for at least ten years past. Bradstreet's says: Canadian reports show no important change in the condition of business, although on the whole there is evidence of some increase. Thus at St. John business is somewhat improved, with retail trade fairly active, though collections are not very good and lumber shipments are very moderate, with prices low. Retail trade at Halifax was especially encouraged by the exhibition week in drygoods, and the fish market advanced in price, though the catch is small, but the wholesale trade varies but little and the business throughout the province is not very brisk. Trade conditions at Quebec continue good, with fair collections and money plentiful, 6 per cent ruling for commercial paper. Fall trade at Montreal is satisfactory, with good collections and no change in money as yet, though call rates are expected to advance on Monday. Trade keeps up remarkably well at Toronto. and sorting-up orders have been good, and cash sales are increasing in nearly all lines. Trade is steadily improving at Hamilton, with a disposition to extend in most lines, and prices are fair for fruits and other products. Winnipeg reports fair wholesale and retail trade, with very little grain yet marketed, farmers holding for higher prices. At Victoria retail trade in clothing and men's furnishings is good, but shipping business is not active.

September trade is satisfactory at Vancouver, with collections fairly good. New York, Oct. 1 .- Dun & Co.'s review says: Failures in September have been about $6,700,000, and for the quarter about $22,875,000, the returns indicating a smaller aggregate than in any other month in many years, exthis year. Changes are all for the better, excepting the fall of cotton to the lowest point for 50 years, and even the lowest prices of 1848, considering difference of qualities, were perhaps not lower than those of this week. While the stagnation in wool continues, with sales even smaller than in the same month of the panic year, 1893, numerous mills have started temporarily in order to get out sample pieces. There has been no quotable decline in wool, and scarcely any in price, the recent reduction having stimulated a larger demand. With pig iron everywhere,in spite of the extraordinary output, the consumption is growing. Wheat rose 2½c, but on Thursday declined sharply, closing 2c lower for the week, notwithstanding very heavy exports, amounting for the week to 4,911,022 bushels, against 20,-661,315 last year, flour included. The usual guesses do not change the belief that the crop will be the largest ever grown, and while farmers throughout the west are holding back grain, the receipts are running above even the extraordinary movement of a year ago. Corn is a fraction lower, with some decrease in export demand, though the recent shipments would have been considered heavy in any year until the last, and can hardly be continued long. Foreign commerce has been a little smaller in exports, and larger in imports. The exchanges at the leading clearing houses indicate a volume of business only-1/2 per cent smaller in September than last year, and 14.1 per cent larger than in 1892. Failures for the week have been 195 in the United States, against 195 last year, and 17 in Canada, against 34 last year. BRADSTREET'S REPORT.

Though rather quieter conditions are reportable in a number of lines of trade, the volume of business doing the country over is a very heavy oneslightly smaller so far as bank clear-ings would indicate than in September one year ago, but comparing very favorably with corresponding periods in all preceding years. Wheat, after quite a heavy bulge early in the week on undoubtedly good export demand, foreign buying and nervousness of September shorts, has quieted down slightly, and prices are a few cents lower on the week, the result mainly of increased deliveries by farmers taking advantage of the tempting premium existing for cash wheat. Sympathetic weakness in other cereals is likewise noticed. Pork products are lower, partly because of less favorable southern advices. Cotton is weaker on continued heavy movement, and cotton goods, especially print cloths, are thereby sympathetically affected. Refined sugar has weakened as a result of the approaching close of the canning sea son and the inauguration of the socalled sugar war. Business failures for the third quarter of 1898 are reported the smallest for at least six years past, but because of one very large failure in September, the liabilities are larger than one year ago.

It is in October and November that the sharp twinges of pain, and long days and weeks of agony make thou-sands wish for death as a release from suffering. October and November are the months most fatal to rheumatic mortals—it is the time when death reaps its richest harvest. Just here the statement cannot be too plainly sub-mitted, that Paine's Celery Compound is the only reliable cure in the world from all forms of rheumatism, and the ninety-nine out of every one hundred who have died from the disease could have been cured if the great compound had been used in time.

The prime cause of rheumatism, as of so many other diseases, is a lack of

Sufferers from rheumatism, sciatica | the nervous system gains ground, the | cure for agonizing rheumatism, sciatdigestive organs are deranged; the food remains too long in the stomach it turns sour, and the resulting acid enters the blood. Nature tries to get rid of this acid through the urine or perspiration. The patient gets a slight cold in some way, and the acid cannot be expelled. There are chills, pain in the back, quickened pulse, coated tongue, constipation, extreme thirst, poor appetite and sediment-loaded urine. Soon the joints swell; usually the knees, elbows and wrists, and great suffering ensues. This is how rheumatism originates. For long years it has been a recognized fact that celery freely eaten has given relief to rheumatic sufferers. Physicians now rejoice in the discovery of Prof. Edward Phelps, M.D. LL.D. the great physician, who gave the world and suffering humanity what is known as Paine's Celery Compound, a prescription which combines celery with other valuable vegetable remenerve force. If you are a sufferer from rheumatism or kindred troubles, your duty is plain. You must begin by furnishing the body with nervous energy as fast as you can, and get a richer and purer blood supply. There is no way known to medical men in which this restorative process can be so swiftly brought about as by using Paine's Celery Com-pound. In short, Paine's Celery Compound expels all poisons and acids from the blood; it builds up the system, regulates the nerves, increases strength and gives that true health that makes one feel happy and joyous.

Paine's Celery Compound is superior to all other medicines and pills as strength is better than weakness. If you suffer, follow the advice and example of the thousands who have found a new life-use Paine's Celery Compound during October and November; it will banish your rheumatism and you will never have any return of

THE WOES OF TWO PEG-LEGS

Driven From Pillar to Post in the United States.

Arrested Many Times as the Slayers of Policeman Tochey,

Who Was Mayor of London, the Dicpatches Say-One Tramp Is Going To Write a Book.

The St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch of Sept. 27 contains a communication from St. Joseph, Mo., which would be very amusing reading for Londoners, did it not remind them of the painful Toohey tragedy. It will be news to people here to learn that Policeman Toohey was mayor of London, and kept a coachman. The dispatch is as follows:

St. Joseph, Mo., Sept. 27.-The mayor of London, Ont., was found murdered on the night of June 24. His coachman, a light-colored negro with straight hair, a peg-leg and strangely marked, did the murder. A resemblance to this murderer has furnished many a miserable chapter in the strange undoing of James Lewis, a lame mulatto, who is visiting his brother in this city.

Lewis was born in Ohio, and lost a leg while jumping from a train in one of his tramps about the country. Ever after that he wore a wooden stock fastened to a staff that reached his waist and was held in place by a strap. His hair was straight, not kinky, as others of his race. Last July, while Lewis was at Grafton, O., he read a dispatch in a newspaper that startled him. The mayor, Mr. Toohey, in London, Ont., was murdered on the night of June 24. The murder was done by Meade Brown, a negro. This is the description Lewis

"Copper colored, with straight black hair (not kinky), 5 feet 6 inches tall, thick neck, left leg off below the knee, peg from the knee down, scars on arm, upper front teeth wide apart. The man is a desperate scoundrel, and all-round thief and burglar, and has several times escaped from jail in Texas. Will shoot, and is an expert train jumper. Five hundred dollars reward is offered for his capture."

"Just think," said Lewis to himself, as he read it over and over. "Here is a man that is enough like me to be my brother-wooden leg and all, and he is a murderer and a reward offered

The police of London, Canada, telegraphed the description of this murderer far and wide. And that included Grafton, O. Lewis had not been in Grafton but a few hours when a big man with a star on his coat stepped suddenly before him. His eyes were as big as an owl's at night, and his lower jaw dropped in utter amaze-

"Say," he said to Lewis, "what are you doing around here? What is your

"James Lewis is the best I have." "Wooden leg, 5 feet 6 inches," said the big man to himself. Then out loud: "So you are not Meade Brown-"Meade Brown!" gasped Lewis. "The man-who-shot-you mean this man." he held out the newspaper clipping with trembling hands. The big man looked at it hastily, saw the words "He will shoot," and "$500 reward." Before Lewis knew what had happened the big man's club had landed on his head and he sank to the street. Then a shrill whistle blew and a crowd assembled and they carried him to the bastile. In a few days an officer came from Ontario to take Meade Brown back to answer for his crime. When he saw Lewis he was certain that the right man had been caught, but he decided to wait a few days till he could send for a man who knew Meade Brown to come and identify him. He came, and said Lewis was not the man, although he looked very much like him. The marshal went back to Toronto, and in a few days Lewis was released and told to leave town within four hours. Lewis then started across the State of Ohio. He remembered a brother who lives in St. Joseph, Mo., and he started to find him and stay with him until the real murderer was captured. But his progress was slow and painful He got as far as Terre Haute, Ind. and his first experience was repeated, only he was handled more roughly by the police and stayed longer in jail. He moved again as far as Garrett, Ind., and spent several weeks more in a cell. In crossing the State of Indiana he was exactly eight weeks, owing to his arrest in various towns. He was jailed twice as he passed through Illinois, and arrested at St.Louis, Kansas City and Leavenworth.

"Telling of his troubles, Lewis said: "Everywhere I plant this wooden peg of mine I am placed under arrest. That $500 reward looks tempting. I know, and I'd like to have it. After I had been arrested five or six times I thought I would just give myself up to some detective and confess to this crime which I never committed and share the reward. I might as well have done it. I have been in jail ever since. Now I haven't any money. If I had served my time like a good fellow I'd have been out pretty soon, and with half that reward money in my pocket I could settle down for life. I suppose it's too late now. I've been in thirteen jails merely because I look like another man. Do you know, I've been in every jail and workhouse between here and Ohio, and I'm going to write a book on the jails of the United States, with interesting instructions for beginners. You must excuse me for dodging every time you speak. I'm used to seeing clubs and all sorts of things aiming at my head. When I was arrested in Garrett, Ind., the detectives had read that the man I'm supposed to be was a very desperate character and a sure shot, so they marched me through the town at the

ing dispatch:
Macon, Mo., Sept. 27.—In the county jail in this city sits Robert M. Stewart, a tall, broad-shouldered man. His complexion is swarthy, yet his face is rather thin and his hair is long and straight. His dark mustache ends in thin curls upward; his eyes are blue. Downward streaks from his eyes and under his nose give his countenance a pinched, strained appearance. His left leg is off four inches below the knee. He is being held because he nearly answers the description of the man who murdered the mayor in London, Ont. The sheriff has sent his picture to Toronto, and is already choosing what he will buy with the $500 reward.

But Stewart only laughs as he hobbles up and down within the narrow pales of his cell, and says it is all wrong. As the days pass his apprehension of the future grows apace, and he laughs less and thinks more. When a reporter called at the jail Stewart protested his innocen

"Of course you know nothing about "You are right. I was in Dubuque, Ia., at that time. I figure that out by tracing back from the Fourth of July. "I am not the murderer," he said, "but I begin to see that I might almost as well be. Merely because I am swarthy I am put down as a negro, and because I have lost a leg I am taken for a man who has committed a murder and hunted all over the

At first I was a tramp printer, but when the machines came and drove out a plain compositor I began going from place to place and drinking whenever I could. If I ever get out of here I shall make a bee-line to find him. But if I am to be arrest-

He stopped with a sudden recollection, and then proceeded slowly. "I was just thinking," he said, "that not over a week ago I was arrested at Bucklin, Mo. Government Engineer Horetzky Speaks of London's Sewer System.

A Plan of Sawaga Disposal Proposed, the Cost of Which Is Estimated at $20,500 -- The Plan Recommended by the Sewer Committee Would Have Cost Double This.

A paper of much interest to Londoners was read before the American Public Health Association at Ottawa on Tuesday by Mr. Charles G. Horetzky, C.E., of the Ontario public works department. In 1895 Mr. Horetzky was one of the consulting engineers with reference to the disposal of the sewage of this city, and recommended a system of land filtration; but in view of recent important discoveries as to the capabilities of gravel and coke filters. aided by forced aeration, he now considers a system of this kind the more suitable for London.

Such a system is in use at Reading, Pa., and was brought before the notice of the sewer committee of the London council some months since. Mr. Horetzky gave a lengthy scientific description of the discoveries upon which he bases his present recommendation; also a description in detail of the Reading works, and comments as follows:

"Careful examination and inquiry as to the operation of the Reading sewage works have convinced me that practical application of coke straining and aerated filtration is worthy of the very serious consideration of the London, Ont., authorities, who have still the vexed (and to them, doubtless, most perplexing) question of their sewage disposal before them.

"This plan of disposal is certainly far in advance of land disposal, pure and simple, over large areas, as it is generally understood, and which I unequivocally recommended three years ago. But this is in reality a land disposal system in a much condensed form, with but a fractional portion of the duty imposed upon it, as in ordinary kand disposal, by reason of the prior removal of the bulk of the sludge by coke combustion, as already described.

"Upon this account, and that of the reduced cost of construction and future maintenance, as compared with other proposed plans, I unhesitatingly recommend it now.

The modifications in the Pennsylvania Sanitation Company's plan, which he advised, included receiving chambers, coke ovens, furnace and chimney, and provision for burning the rakings from the filter. Instead of using the double artificial filters, as at Reading, he proposed to run the strained and "sludge-freed effluent" from the receiving chambers across the cove water to a tract of twenty acres upon farm "B," for final treatment by fil-tration. This area of twenty acres would be ample, inasmuch as 50 per cent of the suspended matter of the sewage would have been removed and retained by the coke, and the land relieved of half the duty which would otherwise be imposed upon it by fully charged heavy sewage, as it comes from the main sewer.

He gave the following comparison of the cost of the three plans proposed for London, as follows:

Land disposal-Forty acres of land, $7,000; preparing same, $24,000; syphon and other items, $10,000; total, $41,000. International process-Cost of construction, as given, $41,300.

The plan now proposed, being a combination of the Reading coke system, with suitable filtration-Coke $5,000; 24 acres, prepared land, $15,500; total, $20,500.

The latter, he added, besides being nearly $20,000 less in cost than either of the two other methods, would be as efficient as the original land disposal plan, and would not cost more than the latter, or as much as the International plan to maintain. It was also pointed out that this new method possessed the inestimable advantage of being freed from the sludge nui-

MOTORMEN AND CONDUCTORS.

Wisely Pin Their Faith Firmly to Dodd's Kidney Pills

Toronto, Sept. 26.-The motormen and the conductors in the Toronto Street Railway Company's employ are a most intelligent, shrewd and respectable body of men. It is no easy task to impose upon them in any way. When these facts are considered, it will at once be seen that the evidence of these men, regarding the wonderful efficacy of Dodd's Kidney Pills, must carry the very greatest weight. A great many of them have been cured of Kid-ney Disease by Dodd's Kidney Pills after all other medical efforts had failed. There is no wonder the boys pil their faith so firmly to "Dodd's."

Of Interest to Women.

How To Be Dainty.

Daintiness is that undefinable quality in a girl which causes her to appear more charming than those around her; it is an attribute that is seldom Inborn, but the result of culture. She is certain of making a good impression where others fail to do so, a fact which causes jealousy and makes those who are not dainty look on with envious admiration and wish that they, too, possessed the subtle charm. Daintiness however, though not inherited, is the outcome of habit. A girl is dainty because she has been accustomed to give thought and time to being agreeable to others. Thus it comes natural to her. Her wealth of hair, always so glossy and carefully trained, owes its satiny appearance to the fact that she brushes it regularly and frequently, and not solely when she feels in a mood to do so, or when she desires to look extra nice. Her pretty, soft hands, with their shell-like nails, are always in an immaculate condition, for it is er habit and pride to keep them spotssly clean. Her person appears to shed around her a fragrant perfume, delicate, yet quite perceptible. subtle fragrance comes from her dainty way of putting her dresses into drawers which contain sachets of sweetly smelling powder, the scent from which appears to be a part of herself.

Ease for Tired Feet.

"I wouldn't mind the work if my feet did not ache so annoyingly," is the common complaint of the housewife, who must spend the greater part of each day standing over, her work and passing back and forth between kitchen, pantry and dining-room. Saleswomen, too, often complain of tired feet, and it is said that trained nurses suffer from swollen feet, especially when they first go into hospitals. Some simple remedy for this trouble is sure to be appreciated by those who are often fatigued with standing.

A powder which is much used by the German army for sifting into the shoes and stockings of the infantry soldiers might be of service. It consists of three parts of salicylic acid, ten parts of starch, and 87 parts of pulverized soap-

This keeps the feet dry, prevents chafing, and heals any sore spots. The soapstone by itself has also been found useful. Soap alone will also give great relief, well rubbed over the soles of the stockings. But, even if the powder proves beneficial, or the soapstone seems to give relief for a time, there is nothing like a regular nightly bathing in hot water with quick and thorough rubbing just before going to bed, to take away and keep away that distressed feeling of fatigue from long standing.

Pears and Peaches.

Pear marmalade is a welcome addition to the housekeeper's fruit closet. Cut up fine-flavored pears, but do not peel or core. Cook half an hour in a very little water, then press through a sieve so as to separate the pulp from the seeds and peel. Measure the pulp and allow three or four pounds of sugar to five pints of the strained pulp, the juice of two lemons and the grated peel of one. Cook the pulp and sugar together until thick. Orange peel may be substituted for the lemon, and part apple pulp may be used in combination with the pear. Put in little earthern pots or glasses, and seal. Peaches served whole should have the down removed with a soft brush. The very large, soft ones are frequently served cut in two and eaten out of the skin with a spoon. A doily should always accompany the service of peaches, as there is no stain so difficult to remove. Renewed applications of Javelle water or chlorate of lime are the only means of removing peach stains.

How to Keep Umbrellas.

All wise women who are not overwealthy have a gloria umbrella for common use in marketing or in a driving rain or sleetstorm. The really handsome umbrella should be kept for dress use on dull, rainy-looking days, when it would be unwise to venture forth unprotected. A well-known literary woman says

An extract from a book of Loisette, the old authority on memory, is both interesting and amusing in this connection. It is the custom in England to say "Good afternoon" to a salesman on leaving a store, a practice which seems somewhat odd to the American mind. And pine for what is not, is one of the pitiful things about poor human beings. We are not willing to live in the present, and to drain to its dregs the cup of happiness that is now held to our lips. We push it away, to turn our heads and look back to that which is past, or, in drinking it, we mar our enjoyment of the flavor by comparing it with another cup of happiness, and declaring that this is not as sweet as was that. And yet, when this present has become the past, we will sigh over the period of our lives in the same way. There is so much present happiness in the lives of most of us that we should try to cultivate a mental vision so conveniently short that we will not look before and after. The "now" is gloriously and blessedly ours-and the "now" alone-Harper's Bazar.

SOME MODERN RELIGIOUS IDEAS

Recent Things in the Current Religious Press.

It may be there is such a volume, but if so we do not recall it-a volume which exhibits the laws of the Old Testament regarding workingmen, their rights and their wages. No code of laws was ever more just and merciful than that found in the Mosaic legislation. It provided for the prompt, in fact, daily payment of wages to common labor; for the exemption of tools from execution for debt; for non-distraint for rent, temporary loans without interest, and a strictly guarded Sabbatic day of rest which under no circumstances might be taken from him. To the poor belonged a certain part of the grain and fruits, the rich man being forbidden to reap the utmost corners of his field, or to shake twice his olive orchards. Such laws as these, with others for the relief of honest but bankrupt debtors and for the future redemption of alienated farms, give us lines of legislation which are at once just and merciful, which do not rob the rich nor yet oppress the poor. Some day every Christian state will re-enact them.—The Interior.

The Universalist Leader calls for a disarmament of churches corresponding to the disarmament of the nations proposed by the Czar of Russia. It affirms that the longing for general unity through the last twenty years has been specially pronounced, but that meanwhile, in order to secure general denominational peace the sectarian forces of the different bodies have been somewhat abnormally developed, especially in the line of expenditures for fine church buildings, destined soon to lose their value in consequence of some fresh discoveries in the same field. It holds that religious culture, economic progress and church extension have been either paralyzed or checked in their development by the system of extravagance, and urges that the churches unite in an effort to curb this extravagant development, that there may be less of rivalry and a more uniform and genuinely effective effort for church development.

Whatever the gift of the Holy Ghost, mentioned in the Gospels and Acts, it was accompanied by power to work miracles and by supernatural attestations of various kinds. One of the most common of the charges made was the ability to "speak with tongues." If it be true that every believer is entitled to claim a "second baptism," a

Prof. Mahaffy says: "St. Paul's epistles were written not to the high and intellectual but to the middle and lower classes of various cities, in Greece and Asia Minor; they were written by a practical teacher whose object was to explain and persuade, and who therefore would carefully avoid 'talking over the heads' of his audience. The trades and labor council held its regular fortnightly session Tuesday evening, Vice-President Garceau in the chair. After routine the organization committee reported progress on its work of forming unions of unor-ganize unions. The Labor Day committee reported that there was a small deficit, and promised a detailed statement for the next meeting. It was decided that the council should hold several open meetings during the coming winter months, when subjects of interest to both organized and unorganized wage earners will be discussed. The question of holding a concent on Thanksgiving night was also brought up, but action was deferred. The matter of the city council refusing to grant financial aid to the burned-out residents of New Westminster, B. C., was brought up in the form of a resolution disproving of the city council's action. Several delegates took part in the discussion. It was stated that a council which had money to squander on useless delegations such as were sent to Ottawa to promote the interests of speculators, should have had a little money to help a distressed sister Canadian city, when a direct appeal was made. The resolution was carried. The council decided to purchase a number of tickets for the lecture by Lucien Sanial, as an act of sympathy. Previous to adjournment the makers' reported that the label had been withdrawn from one of the factories in this city.

The Piano Workers' union of Chicago has petitioned the board of education to use only union-made pianos. The city council of Duluth, Minn., has fixed the wages of day laborers on the streets of that city at $1 75 at ten hours per day. A resolution to reduce the hours to eight per day was defeated.

James O'Connell, grand master machinist of the International Association of Machinists will be the orator at the Texas State Fair on Oct. 6, designated as labor's day. The fair will be held in Dallas this year. The Coopers' International Union last week settled the machine question by a compromise. The workmen in machine shops working on slack barrels will be admitted as members, but the introduction of machines in beer keg shops is prohibited. The printers of Canada and the United States are perfecting arrange-ments for the nine-hour day soon to be inaugurated. There are only two union cities in Canada where the printters work more than nine hours a day, viz., London and Kingston. It is possible that the electrical workers of the United States will make their organization international at the next convention, so as to ad-mith the electricians of Canada into their society. Several good unions can be formed in the cities on this side of the line. The British Trades Union Congress, which held its session in Bristol, England, last month, elected two delegates to the December convention of the American Federation of Labor at Kansas City. Heretofore the delegates to the two bodies—American and Engwere merely fraternal delegates and took practically no part in the proceedings; now they voice and vote as other delegates.

The Bloomington Trades Review says that the laborers employed at the plow works of Deer & Co, at Moline, Ill, have had their wages increased from $1 35 to $1 50 a day. This raise will bring the wages up to the old scale paid previous to the cut in 1883. The blacksmith helpers of the same works have also been granted the request for a raise, and their wages will be $1 75 instead of $1 50, which they have heretofore been paid. The big strike of miners in the Pittsburg district, which has been bitterly waged for several weeks, was settled last Monday in the nature of a compromise. The terms are satisfactory to both sides, and all the old men were given back their places without prejudice. Suits against the strikers under arrest have been withdrawn, and all wages held to prevent a strike are ordered paid. Some of the miners on strike at Pana, Ill., returned to work at 25 cents a ton. 2½ cents less than they received before the strike, while others have left there in search of employment. The success attained in introducing the printing trades label, says the Typographical Journal, is truly remarkable, when the money expended for that purpose and the opposition met with in certain quarters is considered. It seems to thrive on abuse and denunciation, as the demand is constantly increasing, notwithstanding the efforts of unfair employers to convince their customers that it is an instrument of oppression and specially designed to drive them out of busi-The label stands for fair wages and conditions, and can be obtained by any employing printer who is willing to recognize that his employes are entitled to just consideration.

Perhaps the greatest victory won by organized labor this summer is the victory of the International Associa-tion of Machinists over the Bullock Bullock Manufacturing Company, makers of electrical machinery, dynamos, etc., at Cincinnati. About five years ago this company attempted to introduce the piece work system, and the 100 machinists employed by them went on strike. New men were advertised for and secured, but the union induced them to quit as fast as possible, when the company paid extra prices as an inducement to the non-union men to go on strike, when the company secured an injunction against the union restraining outsiders from congregat-ing near the works or talking to or interfering with its employes. ly after this it was claimed that the company was compelled to abolish the piece work system, as machinery was returned as unfit for use. D. F. Bell-zell, then superintendent of the Bullock Company, who had worked night and day to defeat the union, broke down from the physical strain and took morphine with suicidal intent, it was asserted. About a month ago the company made an offer to a committee of the union, agreeing to take the men back with the understanding that they were to work by the piece at some future day, to be decided by the company. This one-sided arrangement was promptly rejected by the union. No further overtures were made by either side until last week, when the company sent for a committee of the union and an agreement was made that the union men be reinstated under the old wages and conditions, with no piece work system, which was accepted, and work was resumed Tuesday.

Silently they obeyed, and stood in their shirts before the emperor. Bonniniere's eyebrows arched themselves until his forehead was as wrinkled as a plowed field, and he wellnigh pulled his mustach out by the roots, for the two brothers presented each an exact fac-simile of the other, save that Gaston's chest was badly scarred by an old bayonet wound.

> . . The Rainy-Day Postman.

[By Annie Willis McCullough.] "It's a splendid rainy-day plan!" shouted Maurice. The children were having a conference about what they should do that afternoon.

Mildred had proposed the plan, and she smiled modestly. "I know papa would like it," she said. "He's dreadful lonesome while mamma is away. We are, too, but, then, we go to bed early, and poor papa has to sit up, of course,

"I do hope grandma will soon be well, and then mamma can come home right away," exclaimed Edith. She was six years old, but still "the baby," and she missed mamma dreadfully. Nurse let them all have pencils pens and writing-paper, and they passed a busy afternoon getting ready to surprise poor lonely papa, when he should come home wet and tired. At last the key was heard in the latch, and the children flew to meet Maurice took his dripping umhim. brella; Mildred had his slippers well warmed, and Edie pushed his favorite chair up to the open fire.

"Ah, this is nice," said papa, as they waited on him. "It is a good, good home to come to, my dears. Soon the supper bell rang, and they all went to the dining-room.
"Why, what's this?" cried papa, as he pulled his chair out. On its seat lay an envelope addressed to him. It was marked in the lower left-hand corner, By the rainy-day postman. They all sat down at the table, the children red and smiling. This must be a new postman, my dears," remarked papa. "Does he look different from our other postman? He must be a kind fellow, to be willing to be the one who tramps out on the rainy days delivering let-

"He is, papa," said Mildred. "I've seen him; he's quite a little fellow for postman." She looked at Maurice, smiling. As papa lifted his plate he almost dropped it, for there lay another letter marked, By the rainy-day postman. "Well, children," he said, looking around, "this rainy-day postman is more than kind; he is really generous. It is very pleasant to get letters on a rainy night, and I thank him." "It isn't him, it's a her, this time," burst in Maurice. But papa didn't take any notice. He went on opening his letters. The first one read like My dear papa,-It's awful stormy, and I thought you'd like to have a letter from me tonight, when you come home tired and wet. I spilled some ink on the library table doing this, but most of it went on the blotter. I hope you will not care. Very truly MAURICE. yours, P.S.-Mildred thought of this plan.

The other note read as follows, only the spelling had to be changed, for dear little Mildred was no speller: My Darling Papa,-We thought it so lonely without mamma that you would enjoy to hear from us by letter. We have tried to be good today. Yesterday we didn't, very hard, but we are sorry. Your loving little daughter, MILDRED.

In a moment some one passed the bread to papa. As he lifted the top slice off, a square white something lay underneath-a tiny envelope ad-

"This curious rainy-day must certainly be rewarded," His mother was engaged at some papa, as he lifted the envelope. In it was a little sheet of paper with these words: Dear, Dear, Papa,-I don't want you to be lonely, so I send you my love Your little girl, EDIE.

"Now, children," said papa, "after supper you must all be on the lookout, and if you see anything of that rainy-day postman, just invite him to have some candy and nuts with us. He's just the dearest fellow I ever heard of, to be thinking all this after noon about a lonely papa who hasn't any dear, good mamma to sit with this evening. I expect to feel more lonely than usual, too, for I didn't get my daily letter from her today."

How the children chattered then, two are in America."

"That makes no difference," returned the porter. "Orders are orders, and light in papa's surprise! It was a light in papa's surprise! It was a light in papa's surprise.

"And grandma is so much bet-I couldn't stay away any longer." "Well, ma'am, you are just in time for a little party," said papa, as he took off her wraps and led her into the dining-room, Mildred, Edith and Maurice following. "We plan this evening to entertain the rainy-day will surely like him when I tell you how good he is to lonely people on rainy evenings!"

It was a gala night to the family. Papa had a box of candy, and his pockets full of nuts, and mamma had lit-tle gifts for them all. AROUND THE WORLD

Three Wheelmen Girdle the Globe Successfully

In Two Years-The Worst Place Was in China.

Interest in the experiences of Mr. John F. Fraser and his two companions, who have just completed a trip around the world on bicycles, should not be confined entirely to wheelmen. Many details of the trip, as described by Mr. Fraser, are important as revealing the character of the countries traveled through, as showing the disposition of different races toward foreigners, and also as confirming previous reports to the effect that almost everywhere bicycling has become popular. The trip was made in a little over two years, and its object was purely for pleasure. Each of the trio rode a wheel of English make which weighpostman. You are not acquainted with ed 35 pounds. Baggage weighing 30 him yet, but I'll introduce you, and you pounds, in the form of clothing and photographic and emergency supplies, was carried by each, and provisions were obtraced wherever possible. The party wers spared much time and em-barrassment by the fact that, in linguists, they were exceedingly capable. Among them English, French, German, Italian and Russian could be spoken and understood without much trouble. It was only with the countrymen of Li Hung Chang that the who men found great difficulty in making their wants known.

The King of Belgium impressed the travelers as being a right jolly old fellow. He invited them to his palace, and, being an enthusiastic tricyclist himself, took a lively interest in their steel-framed roadsters. All through Germany the roads were good and people agreeable.

The party's reception in Vienna was exceptionally cordial. On arriving there they found their rooms tastefully decorated with flags, and prominent citizens of the place adorned the wheels of their visitors with ribbons and bouquets. In the domain of the czar traveling was not always pleasant. Food was usually poor, and often very scarce, and the strangers' presence was regarded by the common people with a good deal of suspicion. In their encounters with the Cossacks the riders were obliged to display firearms.

The Shah of Persia, upon witnessing some feats of the tourists, ordered several bicycles for his ministers.

Wheels are by no means uncommon in that country. Across India cycling was excellent.

One hundred and fifty-one days were spent in crossing the Middle Kingdom, and during that time 3,000 miles were covered. Mr. Fraser's account of his experiences in that country, particularly as regards the condition of the roads, agrees perfectly with the reports of other travelers in the Far "We never had a East. He says: ride of five clear miles withous dis-mounting while in China."

Speaking of the manner of paying their bills in western China, he re-ports that the only money they found was cash coin strung on a cord, which was run through a hole in the center. "Our money," he adds, "was in silver bullion, and we exchanged it weight in payment of hotel bills or for a string of coins."

In Japan, the riders found beautiful roads and hospitable people, and nobody mistook them for outlaws. The journey from San Francisco to

New York was not made without some hardships. For 1,700 miles before reaching Omaha the party were obliged to ride on railroad tracks, and in some parts of the west they were treated by the citizens with apparent indifference. East of the Missouri everything went well.

A ride around the world was attempted some time ago by a wheel-man who, it is supposed, met his death in Armenia. Mr. Fraser and his companions are to be congratulated upon the successful accomplishment of their undertaking. They are now the chamglobe-circling pedallers.-New York Sun.

SEEN IN COLORS

ature's Beauties May Now Be Reproduced by All Who Own a Camera, the Special Outfit, and the Technical Knowledge of the Art-A Process of Incalcuable Value.

Color photography has been made a inal success. The process of using an ordinary camera and in one fifth of a second accurately photographing all the brilliant hues of a flower garden, all the ontrasts in green of a landscape, all the conders of a summer sky, the jewel upon our finger, the ribbon at your throat, he stripe in your clothes, the decorations of your hat, the bouquet on your lapel, is now a reality. Not a canvas of the old masters but what may be reproduced, with every tint of the original; not a lowers but what may greet the eyes from photograph; not a line in the features and dress of a friend but may be retained orever upon the plain panel of a photographic card.

And all this done, not by retouching or tinting, not by laborious processes after the picture itself is taken, but done by the sunlight instantly, on the me second that the picture itself is taken.

The pity of it ell is that the discoverer of the process, after long years of work, died a year before its practical operation was made public, although he himself had used it and has left a portrait of himself which shows the very dark red rose in his buttonhole in its natural

JAMES W. M'DONOUGH colors and his white necktie with blue spots as he wore it when in life. The man who has done all this, after expending a fortune of $200,000 in perfecting his process, and who died just as full fruition was about to crown his lengthened labors, was James W. McDonough of Chicago, who will be remembered by Canadians as one of the men who, with Elisha Gray, is famous in the scientific world as one who laid claim to priority of invention of the telephone as against the claims of Alexander Bell. After he and all others had been defeated by the Scotchman in the telephone suits, he turned to his old dreams of color photography, begun in 1870 when the old wet plate process was used exclusively in photography, but by which good work had been done since its introduction in 1850. The color idea was created in his mind one day while watching the murky waters of the dirtiest river in the world -the Chicago River. With characteristic energy he set to work and learned the mechanical process of the collodion method. He learned by apprenticeship all that was to be known of photography 25 years age. For years his experiments were absolute failures, but still he persevered. He had many things to unlearn about colors that passed current in scientific circles as truth, one of the chief of these being that yellow was a fundamental color. Other portions of the work found similar experiences, repeated again and again, but at last, one day, he found that he was on the royal road to color photography, that he succeeded in obtaining a picture by photography in the natural colors. He had now but to make the process

so simple that it would command commercial attention. He applied for a patent and obtained it, and then set to work on his new and difficult problem. The work of the man was little short of heroic. As an instance it may be mentioned that he worked days and weeks to secure a single color that would be suitable for making a screen. Thousands of colors were rejected by him after tests. Finally he secured a perfect transparency that would produce the perfectly colored photograph.

But if Mr. McDonough is dead how can his discovery benefit the world? The question is natural, because inventors and discoverers generally do not leave their plans in such shape that others may successfully use them in advance of octual commercial work. Fortunately, this man's eye was single, and the specifloations be left behind him were so plain, and his labors had been so exhaustive, that a life-long friend found it comparatively easy to put into practical operation his discoveries. This gentleman is Mr. Ellaworth E. Flora, a resident of Hyde Park and a mechanical engineer of ability, and he pays the highest tribute to the genius of the man who left behind him such explicit instructions that he has been enabled since Mr. McDonough's death to photograph a flower in all its brilliancy. It is expected that the middle of December will see on the market the commercial products necessary for photographers the wide world over to possess to produce photographs in their natural

Mr. McDonough's process is a color photography that is purely mechanical, and may now be used successfully by all who have an ordinary camera and a proper knowledge of Ducos Du Hauron's olored photograph methods and those of Kurtz and Ives, or any other knowledge that is necessary to skill in the art. but not necessarily a full range of theoretic science. The negatives are produced and developed by the usual processes, but before exposing the negative in the camera a transparet screen ruled with the three primary colors, red, blue and green, is interposed between the photographic plate and the object to be photographed. After developing the negative a positive plate is produced from it, which, viewed by itself, does not differ from the ordinary black and white plate, but when it est Medicine is laid upon a viewing screen ruled with the primary colors (being a duplicate of the taking screen used in the camera) the colors of the object photographed appear. Isochromatic plates, that is, sensitive to all the colors of the spectrum, are used in making the negatives Then the positive is made in the usual manner by contact printing. This positive is then placed over the ruled screen and the dark lines on the positive made to register with the colored lines on the screen. When this is done the picture is seen in its natural colors. Paper photographs are made by printing in the usual manner on the sensitive paper ruled with the three colored lines, as on the screen. Kalf-tone pictures in colors are also made by printing with black ink (from a half-tone plate made from the original) on paper having the three colored lines ruled on its surface the same as the screen. The practical value of this discoverer's work cannot be estimated. In three lines of life alone it will work a revolutionthe physician will find its value incalculable: the stronomer, especially now that McDonough's own isochromatic plates have already photographed the red region of the stellar spectra, has a new and immense field of research opened up to him, while in the detection and prevention of crime the sytsem will become an important adjunct of the Bertillon system.

A SOUTH POLE HUNT.

Borohgrevink's Party New on the Way to Antarctic Seas. Barely a year has elapsed since a Belgian expedition under the command of Capt. de Gerlache left Antwerp for south polar seas, with the intention of landing at Cape Adare and proceeding southward on the ice-cap of the great southern continent. A new expedition is about to leave England, under the leadership of Mr. Carsten Egeberg Borchgrevink, who is celebrated as having been the first man to set foot on that portion of Antarctic land first discovered by Sir James Ross in 1841, and named by him Victoria land. Notwithstanding that Borchgrevink is following so closely in the wake of the Belgians, there will be much valuable work for him to perform, and science will be the gainer when the results of the two expeditions are given to the world. Borchgrevink's main object is not so much to make a record south as to institute scientific investigations on sea and on land, discover, if possible, the south magnetic pole, and, generally, pave the way for future expeditions. Since returning to England and Norway from his last venture southward in 1895, Borchgrevink has endeavored to rouse public interest and float the expedition which is now an accomplished fact, thanks to the liberality of Sir George Newnes, who placed over $100,000 at his

The vessel that has been secured is a trim little steam bark of 481 tons gross register, built as a whaler at Arendal, Norway, in 1886, from the designs of Mr. Colin Archer, builder of the celebrated Fram. She is now called the Southern Cross. The ship is of unusual strength, and the accommodation leaves nothing to be desired.

The expedition consists of 32 men all told, including six scientists, and in addition to being furnished with an equipment similar to that taken by the polar expedition under Sverdrup, is provideed with over 80 Siberian dogs, including some ten Greenland animals which were once owned by the late Elvind Astrup. The master, Bernard Jensen, is an experienced ice navigator, and was mate on the Antarctic when in 1895 he landed with Borchgrevink at Cape Adare. The principal officers are as follows: Carsen erg Borchgrevink (Norwegian), leader, surveyor, etc.; Herlof Klovstad (Norwegian), surgeon; Nicolai Hanson (Norwegian) and Hugh Evans (British), zoologists; William Colbeck, lieutenant R.N.R. (British), and Louis Bernacchi (British,) astronomers and magnetic observers; Bernard Jensen (Norwegian), master; Hansen (Norwegian), first mate; Jorgen Pedersen (Norwegian), second mate.

Mr. W. E. H. Massey's "Dentonia" Near East Toronto.

A 200-Acre Farm Devoted to Dairying, Poultry-Raising and Pisciculture on the Most Modern and Approved Methods-View of the Stock Barn and Some of the Stock.

Mr. W. E. H. Massey of the well-known Massay-Harris Manufacturing Company has established on the outskirts of East Toronto, within ten minutes' walk of the Scarboro Electric Railway, and of York Station on the G.T.R., a 200-acre farm devoted mainly to dairying, poultry-raising, and pisciculture, each of these branches being prosecuted with the energy and efficiency characteristic of the owner in all his undertakings. When it is remembered that only two years ago this beautiful and well-equipped park and farm was cut up into twenty small holdings, of various sizes and shapes, studded with unsightly shacks and tumble-down snake fences, and that as many title deeds had to be searched and transfers of ownership made in order to securing a well-rounded, compact, and convenient property, the amount of energy displayed and the work accomplished in evolving the present prospect is truly phenomenal, and could only result from a well-considered plan and welldirected effort, backed by substantial means, a genuine love for the work, and a worthy ambition to excel.

The front of the farm is of a character peculiarly adapted to the purpose to which it is devoted, says the Farmer's Advocate, that of a park, being broken and irregular, embracing hill and vale, bluff and ravine, stream and pond, the hills being mainly covered with a pleasing variety of trees of native growth, including oak and elm, beech and linden, with a preponderance of evergreens, such as pine, spruce and hemlock, supplemented by plantations of the cultivated varieties on the deforested parts, which in a few years will add greatly to the beauty, variety and interest of the landscape. All the features of an ideal park-including shady walks and driveways, rustic bridges, silver streams lined with water cress and connecting numerous trout ponds in which grow water lilies galore and speckled beauties of the finny tribe in myriad millions-are found here, while further on one comes to the spacious and attractive summer residences of the brothers Massey, with their wide verandas and the many other provisions for home comfort which modern methods of housebuilding secure, while in the rear of these, at a convenient distance, stand the farm buildings, and stretching away in the distance lie the permanent pastures and fruitful fields which produce the necessary grain and fodder for the stock fed on the farm.

The Farm Buildings.

The main barn, which is here illustrated, is a model structure in most particulars, and is well adapted to the purposes to which it is devoted, the whole plan having been studied out and the work directed by Mr. Massey with a view to economy of cost, convenience and efficiency of service, symmetrical proportions and a pleasing effect. The main building is one hundred feet long by forty-two feet wide, and four stories high, and is built on a hillside, the ground floor being stabled for fattening cattle and young animals, the second floor being devoted to the dairy herd of Jersey cows in two long rows facing the feed alleys on either side, the working dairy being separated from the stable by the engine room, in which stands a stationary engine for generating electricity, with which all the buildings are liberally lighted, and lunning a 10 horse power electric motor, used for working most of the machinery in the buildings, such as threshing and grinding grain, cutting ensilage, straw and hay, pulping roots, and running the cleam separator and churn. The third story is occupied by the horses and carriages, the workshop, groom and herdsmen's rooms, etc., while the upper story is the barn proper, in which is stored the hay, grain and straw grown on the farm and used for the feeding of the stock, all the feed being passed down through chutes to the lower stories as required. A very efficient system of ventilation is in operation by means of a revolving funnel on the ridge of the roof, through which fresh air is conveyed to the stables and distributed through pipes under the mangers with openings which diffuse it in plentiful supply near the heads of the animals, the foul air passing up through tubes to the roof. Provision is made for storing a large quantity of roots convenient to she cattle; and twin circular stave siles, 12 feet in diameter and 80 feet deep, prove entirely satisfactory in preserving corn fodder-last year's ensilage being still in supply and having proved a valuable help in carrying the cattle through the deep below the basement provides . the cattle and for the dairy, and is pumped by the steam engine or the electrie motor to a 5,000 gallon tank in the upper story of the barn. In addition to this, water is forced by a hydraulic ram from a spring in the ravins, a distance of 110 feet, to a tank of 6,000 gallons capacity on a tower near the buildings, at the rate of 250 to 500 gallons an hour, which provides an excellent fire protection; an overflow pipe connecting with a 10.000-gallon cistern under the approach to the barn floor, from which the stable floors, which are all water-tight, being matched like the decks of a ship, are flushed, the same water being used when necessary for irrigating the vegerear of the barns. The Dairy. which is under the care of Miss Shuttleworth an honor graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College Dairy School, who has recently received the appoint. ment of Lady Instructor in the Western Dairy School at Strathroy, is a model of completeness, cleanliness and efficiency, being fully equipped with all modern ap-pliances, and from which is produced a table garden and the pasture plots in the quality of golden butter calculated to excite the envy of the gods. Everything in this department is conducted on scientific principles, with the result that a uniform quality of product of the highest standard is assured, and the "witches" in the churn never succeed in preventing the butter from coming, science and the sunny smile of the dairy-maid proving an irresistible combination in securing a satisfactory outcome.

An annex, running out from the ground floor of the main building, is devoted to the accommodation of the sheep and swine, of which small but select herds are kept, the former being Shropshires and the latter Berkshires and Yorkshires.

The Poultry Department is receiving special attention, and provision is being made for prosecuting this feature of the business on an exten sive scale, two large buildings being already occupied, one for hatching by means of incubators, and the other for feeding and raising broilers and breeding stock. An extensive addition to this branch is contemplated, and a well-planned building 150 feet in length and three stories high is now in course of erection to be devoted to practical work in poultry production. The fish ponds are well

Something of the Stock.

The magnificent herd of high-class registered Jersey cattle maintained on the farm is, however, the main feature of this interesting establishment; and from their superior quality, rich breeding, and splendid record as butter producers and prize-winners on the Island of Jersey and elsewhere, will undoubtedly attract the attention of all who are interested in dairy stock. When stocking his farm Massey concluded that the Jersey would be the ideal cow for his contemplated park dairy work. He decided to go to the fountain-head for his foundation stock, and to this end the eminent expert judge, Mr. F. S. Peer of Mt. Morris, N. Y., was commissioned to make selections from the best of the breed on the Island of Jersey, the home of the race, with carte blanche to secure the best available, regardless of cost, with the result that an importation of a dozen high-class animals was landed at Dentonia Park in July last, after the regular quarantine detention of ninety days. For the sake of uniformity of nomenclature and of associating the names of the animals with that of the farm, their island record names have been dropped, and they have been registered in the herd register of the American Jersey Cattle Club under attractive and appropriate names, bearing the affix of "Dentonia" in each case. At the head of the herd stands the stock bull, imported Lord of Dentonia 50166, A.J.C.C., alias Bacchus, P.S., 2415 J.H.B. (see illustration), selected by Mr. Peer, and imported last year, a two-year-old son of Clemenceau, a noted sire on the and of Orleanaise 2nd (in this ye ortation, and nov herd,) a cow which won the certificate of merit in the butter test on the island, and also holds the bronz medal for the largest quantity of butter produced in a Lord of Dentonia is a typical Jersey bull in style, conformation and quality, being of solid color with rich dark shadings, and having a handsome head and horns, exceedingly bright, full and prominent eye, beautiful crest, long, straight quarters, and a rich yellow skin of fine handling quality-a show bull in every sense of the word-and having a strong constitution and rich breeding he cannot fail to prove an impressive sire. Prominent in the list of the imported temales is Dentonia's Island Queen (Orleanaise 2nd, above mentioned), with her splendid island record. She has fine dairy form and great capacity for work, having immense depth of body and wonderful milk veins, and both Mr. Rockefeller's and Mr. Vanderbilt's farm managers sought to purchase her while in quarantine in New Jersey.

Brilliant of Dentonia (Brilliant Lass) is a five-year-old cow of model dairy conformation. She won several prizes on the island, including one of the Royal Jersey Island Lady of Dentonia (illustrated), by Hackbeam, and out of Highflyer 3rd, was imported in 1897, and is now in her three-year-old form, having recently produced and shows the grandest udder we have ever seen on a heifer with her first calf.

In adition to these, as may well be imagined, there are many other imported and native born high class Jerseys, which plentiful supply of pure spring water for are a delight to the owner and ornaments to their beautiful park home.

CELESTIAL PHOTOGRAPHY.

The Sensitive Plate Reveals More Than the Eye Can See. In St. Nicholas there is an article on

"Photography—Its Marvels," by Elizabeth Flint Wade. The author says: Almost the first use in science to which the new discovery was put was the photographing of the moon, the first recorded picture being made by Professor Draper and presented to the New York Lyceum of Natural History. His son Henry grew so fond of astronomical photography that on leaving college he went to Ireland to see leaving college he went to Ireland to see the great reflecting telescope of Lord Rosse. After seeing it he determined to make one like it. The reputation of the Yankee boy -that he can make not only the thing he undertakes, but also the machine that makes it-was proved to be deserved by Henry Draper, for he made and he mounted the first American reflecting telescope. With it he took over 1,500 photographs of the heavens, and the instrument is still in use in Harvard observatory.

The telescope not only reveals more than can be seen by the eye alone, but the sensitive film surpasses the power of the eye when aided by the telescope, for the camera records on the film objects which the eye cannot see through the greatest magnifying lenses. No matter how far away or how dimly it shines, the light of the faintest star in time impresses the film, and thus that which is invisible to the eye becomes visible on the plate.

In celestial photography the camera is kept moving during the taking of a picture. The exposure sometimes lasts several hours, and if the camera were stationary the motion of the earth would soon carry the subject out of line with the telescope. The camera, therefore, is attached to the tube of the telescope, and the object to be photographed is brought into the lens at the intersection of two cross wires. Then by a system of clockwork the telescope moves so that the subject occupies the same position on the plate during the

It is another curious feature of celestial photography that a plate may be exposed several nights on the same subject. I have seen star cluster and nebulæ pictures which were exposed, the former on two and the latter on four successive evenings. The picture showing the nebulæ required a total exposure of 13 hours and 44 min-

Eccentricities of Temperature. We have ground for expecting that in England about three times in the century the Thames will be frozen over at London bridge, but that consummation is synonymous with an intense degree of continuous frost which will not be confined to Britain, for of late years it has become patent that these areas of extreme temperature are very extensive, and that when there is an excessively cold winter in England and France, even Italy is often included. I can recollect in the winter of 1881 seeing the Arno at Florence being skated upon, and icicles like a prodigious portcullis hanging from the Ponte Vecchio, some of which were 7 and 8 feet in length. I have known Cannae and Pompeii smothered in snow and the entere lemon crop of Amalfi and Palermo destroyed by frost. Nevertheless I have nev-

Irish Point Lace.

Let it not be supposed that this lace is simply an imitation of the Italian model. At first the stitches were few, but with time and practice some hundred new ones have been invented, and these so complicated that it is almost impossible to rip them. Consequently this lace, which looks light as gossamer, has great durability and grows more valuable with the lapse of time. It stands wear and tear and can be washed and made up without detriment. It is often conpared to the finest old Brussels point, which it more nearly resembles now than the Italian point, from which it sprang. But what between the number of new stitches invented by the lacemakers, the variety of designs and the perfection to which the work has been brought the Irish point has a right to its name as an original fabric, though "it only came into existence as an Irish industry within living memory. It is made entirely with the needle and

FOUGHT THE FEVER

A London Boy Who Was Attacked in Uncle Sam's Camps-Wretched Treatment of the Sick.

Mr. Bert Harding, of Detroit, a popular London boy, who was formerly with The Advertiser, is in the city. Mr. Harding has not yet recovered from his terrible struggle with malarial fever, contracted in Uncle Sam's camps in Florida. Mr. Harding enlisted with the 32nd Michigan volunteer infantry at the outbreak of the war. The corps went to Tampa, and in that unhealthy, swampy district sickness laid many of the sturdlest men low. Mr. Harding's case developed into a malignant malarial type. He was ill for three weeks at Tampa be-fore being removed to Fernandina, on the northeast coast of Florida. confirms the printed reports of the whetched treatment of the soldiers. The sick were shamefully neglected. They were without proper food, medicine, or nursing, and had no special accommodation. Mr. Harding was ordered home, but the official papers, necessary to his transfer, were long in reaching him. Fortunately he had plenty of means, and was enabled to get decent transportation to Detroit, where he lay at death's door for five weeks. Only the most skilled and devoted nursing pulled him through. home. He cannot understand

Mr. Harding resigned a good position in the Detroit office of the Wagner Palace Car Company in order to get to the front. The company have kept the situation open for him, and he will resume it as soon as strength permits. He noticed a newspaper paragraph a few weeks ago in which it was falsly stated that his comrades de-voted a month's pay to helping him the statement came from, as he had a good supply of eash, which he would readily have exchanged for some of the comforts and attention a sick man should have. George Northcott, a South London boy, was ill in the tent adjoining Mr. Harding's. His mother is now at Fort Macpherson, Atlanta,

Her Impressions of the Yukon District -It is a Beautiful Country-The Winter Not Severely Felt.

The special correspondent of the London Times has made the journey to Dawson City, and her impressions are recorded in a series of charming letters to that great journal. The following extract, describing her entry Reported at Fashoda, Are Coming into the Klondike, dispells the idea that it is the barren, ice-bound country so often depicted. She writes from Dawson City thus: In entering the country by either the

Chilcoot or the Winte Pass, Lake Bennett is the first of the important lakes which constitute finks in the chain of waterways leading almost due north to Dawson. Bennett, which is reached by a two day's portage that can be done either on foot or on horseback across the mountains from the coast, is the southerly terminus of the river streams. It is a little town of which, like all canvas towns, tents expands and contracts with marvel-ous rapidity. Every newcomer sets up his tent. In one week the population may number as many as 10,000, and in the next have fallen to 200. In the spring, when men who cannot afford the luxury of packing their goods on horseback across the passes are using the snow, which at that season lies to a depth of four feet and five feet upon the ground, as a means of transit for sleighs that they drag by hand, Bennett becomes thickly populated. It is the custom of those who for purposes of economy braved the hardships of the winter journey to wait here, whip-sawing timber and building boats, until the melting of the ice opens the waterways. This takes place towards the end of May or the first week in June, and by the second week in June Bennett is emptied of the larger postion of its inhabitants. The same man who drags his goods over the snow to avoid the cost of a pack-train will build his own boat and make his own way down the rivers to avoid the cost of traveling by steamer. The expenses of locomotion and carriage by any other means than those which nature has provided are heavy enough under present con-ditions to make this course almost obligatory upon the poor man. Goods are not freighted from the coast to Dawson for less than a shilling a pound, and when this sum comes to b added to the thousand pounds' weight of provisions, which even now a miner studying economy will take in to equip himself for a year, the consideration becomes important. The cost of a return passage by river steamer from Bennett to Dawson for the individual, independently of his goods, is at present equal to about twice the cost of a first-class return passage in an Atlantic liner from England to America. The traveler to whom time is important will gladly recognize the value of the equivalent which he receives. Taking his passage in the steamer, he may expect to be landed within a very few days at Dawson. Lakes lead in succession to the finally continuous channel of the river, and only one important rapid, necessitating a portage of five miles, interrupts the course of navigation to the lower Yukon. This portage occurs at the White Horse Rapids, and the difficulty is met by a double service of steamers, one ply ing above the rapids to Bennett, the other below the rapids to Dawson. A failure to make connection may cause delay at this point, and, as the course of the river widens in some parts to shallow water; sandbanks have also been reckoned with. In spite of these inconveniences and of the material discomfort caused by insufficient ac-commodation, the journey is neverthe less one from which in fine weather great pleasure can be derived.

The scenery is extremely beautiful, having in the upper lakes, which are closely surrounded by rocky peaks, all the characteristics of deep sea flords. As the river breaks out from the mountains the relatively low hills which accompany its course recall the Scotch highlands. The slopes are covered chiefly with dark firs, and the common willow-herb of the Thames valley flourishes in profusion, covering all hill sides with a rose colored effect that, at a distance, produces almost exactly the impression of Lake Bennett does not depend exthe country tends to open on lower beauty and novelty of its scenery. country, and the climate grows not more, but less rigorous as the head waters of the river are left behind. Inhabitants of Dawson assert that, owing to the relative absence of wind, the winter in this town is less severely felt than the winter in Manitoba. These statements must be taken in conjunction with the fact, scientifically established, that the annual range of the thermometer in the Yukon district is from 80 degrees below zero to 80 degrees above. At this time of year the climate appears not unlike that of England or Scotland. It is neither hot nor cold, nor wet, nor fine, but a variable mixture of them all. The sun on hot days is perhaps hotter than the English sun, but warn blankets are always welcome at night.

The vegetation as seen from the river banks has a most familiar aspect to English eyes. Wild roses and the common English wild flowers pre-sent themselves in abundance. At Marsh Lake, on a spot where some grain had been accidently spilt last year, we found on July 19 wheat, barley and oats growing in well-filled ears, the wheat having already flowered and being quite as far advanced as it would be likely to have been in Manitoba. A bag of beans which had been spilt a little lower down the river had produced a similar result, and a bean-field was spreading itself over the banks. With regard to the mosquito scourge, of which so much has been heard, it is certainly bad, but can be mitigated by using reasonable methods of protection. To encounter it at its worst it is necessary to go into the woods and creeks. The Yukon mosquito, like the African tsetse-fly, appears to avoid centers of habitation, and the beaten track of travel is comparatively free. CORSET STEELS.

With dealers the buying of corsets is largely a matter of confidence, at least as far as the true quality of the boning is concerned.

In order that rusting may be guarded against each bone or steel should be covered before being placed and sewn in position in the corset. In ordinary corsets this is rarely done. The best corsets are fully boned, the cheaper ones are only partly so. Ordinary corsets are almost invariably boned with cheap, poor quality steel and its cheapness manifests itself in brittleness. In first-class corsets specially tempered, high quality spring steel is used; the better the steel the lighter the corset, for in quality is strength. Never buy a light weight corset unless you buy the famous French, tailor-cut, handsewed corset, the Closing Scenes of the Emerson Trial.

The Judge Explains the Difference Between Murder and Manslaughter.

Jury Returns a Verdict of "Not Guilty" Amid Applause by the Audience.

SATURDAY MORNING. At $:30 the court room was again filled to the doors. Interest in the Emerson case is unabated, and the curious crowd collects in every available place to get a look at the prisoner. THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

The judge occupied an hour and firteen minutes in delivering his charge to the jury. He said: "You have rightly been told that this is a great case; that the duty which you now have to perform is a momentous one. It is right that I should, in the first place, tell you that your powers are not so prisoner. You have no power to give back to anyone or take from anyone his life. You have been asked to set him free. You have no power in your own discretion to set him free or to send him to prison. Whatever the result of this trial, you have to do your duty fearlessly. The law of the land is the outcome of wisdom of legislators for hundreds of years. Whether it is too hard or too lenient, you and I must administer it as it is-neither you nor I have any power to alter it. Your duty is simply to find the facts. My duty is to tell you what the law is. I must accept your finding of the facts implicitly, and you must act upon the law as I have explained it to you. If I err, and a wrong is done, there is a higher court that will correct that error and right that wrong. Bearing all these things in our minds, let us approach the facts of the case."
"On Friday night, April 1, a human life was taken by an act of violence. It is right that there should be strictest scrutiny into the circumstances of the taking of that life. We are here to perform part of that duty. It is right that the man who took that life should be called upon to give an account for his actions. The man himself recognized that, and gave himself up to the custody of the law. It would not have made any difference if he had not given himself up. It is fortunate for you that the facts of this case are different from the facts in the majority of cases where the crime of murder is charged. Usually there are no eye-witnesses. Your duties are much simplified by the fact that there is no denying that the life of James Tuttle was taken by the act of violence of William D. Emerson. Your duty now is to find the truth in regard to the circumstances under which that life was taken. If those circumstances are considered to be such as I will tell you, the law justifies the act of the prisoner. Then your verdict must be 'not guilty,' no matter how wrong, in a moral, or any other sense, you may think them to have been. You have no alternative. You cannot say that you think the man should be punished. You must return a verdict of "not guilty" and I must let him go. The judge then said he wished to correct an impression, if impression had been made, of a remark that fell from Smith Bros., plumbers, died yesterday the lips of one of the counsel, namely, that there was little difference tween the crime of murder and the crime of manslaughter. A man re-sponsible for the loss of life through negligence was guilty of manslaughter. "The law," he continued, "makes a vast difference between the crimes. For the crime of murder there is one judg-ment which can be pronounced—that of 'guilty.' For the crime of manslaughter, according to the best judgment of the court, the judgment pronounced can be imprisonment for one day, one week, one month, one year, or several years. or lifetime, as the judge, within his discretionary power, determines. Starting, then, with the admitted fact that the life was taken by the prisoner, what are the circumstances under which it was taken?" The defense, he said, admitted Emerson fired the shot, but the jury would have to say whether it was intentional or accidental. The only direct testimony regarding that was the testimony of the prisoner. He said he determine. The jury must bear in mind the probabilities and the improbabilities of a man stretching a point in his own favor in this case." He drew attention to the fact of the prisoner having gone into the box and given evidence in his own behalf, of the nature of his evidence. If a man points a pistol at a man, and it explodes and death is caused, that man is guilty of manslaughter, though he might spend the rest of his days in sorrow. The prisoner was guilty of manslaughter if they considered that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the prisoner in pointing the

The judge said the words that Emer. son had used, "I did it," meant that he did it, and if he could not mitigate or justify that act he was guilty of murder. The greatest difficulty which they would have to consider in the case was, "did the circumstances justify or excuse the act?" The judge explained the law to show that a man could repel force with force, but was not permitted to go beyond what was necessary. Let me impress these words upon your memory. If the pris-oner believed on reasonable grounds that he could not preserve himself from death or grievous bodily harm, then he was justified," but the jury

The complainants were given to understand that the staff of emwas a most extraordinary story, and as Mr. Johnston had said, had it stood alone he would not have asked them ing the evidence.
Referring again to Laughlin's story, and Mrs. Emerson's corroboration of it, the judge asked, "Is it a concocted story, or was it an attempt to deceive and mislead justice?" There were, he said, persons foolish enough to do anything to make notoriety, and make statements that could not be contralordship went into many other details and concluded as follows: "Go and do your duty. Exercise your best judgment. Upon your own conscience give a true verdict, according to the evirevenge for the dead, or sympathy for the living. Then, whether your verdict gives pleasure or pain, you have the satisfaction of knowing that you have faithfully performed one of the highest of all human duties—a duty of a judge of the acts of your fellow man in a British court of fustice."

The jury retired at 10:15. The Verdict.

The crowd in the court room when the judge took his seat after lunch was perhaps as large as any crowd that had ever assembled in the old court turn aside.

There was a huzz when Deputy But he did neither. Straight on he room. There was a buzz when Deputy absolute or unlimited as you might ga-ther from some of the remarks that fell jury, and a moment later the prisoner the defense. You have been asked to give back to someone the life of the great mental strain, his wife leaning long slender best Long than the life of the great mental strain, his wife leaning long slender best on his arm. Hers was a grief not well described, and his anxiety was one that no tongue could tell.

When the jury arrived, the clerk asked if a verdict had been found. He was answered by the foreman in a clear voice: "We find the prisoner not guilty." Mrs. Emerson sprang from the chair and fell into her husband's arms. The cheer that followed the announcement was deafening. Men and women raised their voices, and waved hats and handkerchiefs. So great was the noise that the constable's cries for order could not be heard.

When silence had been restored, Emerson's face grew pale, and he stood up in the dock to await the pleasure of the court.

A pin could have been heard to drop, and the judge took this opportunity of condemning the action of the spectators. He said "I am surprised. I am ashamed. I did not expect such conduct by people in a court of justice." Turning to Mr. Heyd, he asked if there was anything else against had found him. the prisoner.

"No, my lord," was the reply. The judge, addressing Emerson, informed him that he had been found innocent of a most grevious charge, and that his action was justified. His character was clean, and in the eves of the law he was free from crime in connection with the taking of the life of James Tuttle. The judge closed with the remark, "You are a free man." Emerson then stepped from the dock, and received congratulations from all present. The verdict was rendered at 2:10 p.m.

A WELCOME AT THE GRIGG. Emerson, his wife and child, were escorted from the court house to a hack drawn by two white horses. They were driven to the Grigg House, via Dundas and Richmond streets, followed by many on foot and on bicycles. When the carriage drew up at the Grigg House entrance, a large crowd blocked the sidewalk, and as the actor elighted three hearty cheers were given him. He smiled, and took off his hat. The happy couple managed to squeeze through the door, and immediately went upstairs, where they were affectionately greeted by a company of friends, and the employes of the hotel. Emerson then went to his room.

A FIGHTING SNAKE

It Boldly Attacks Two Men in a Boat.

A Desp trate Pursuit-The Snake Shot at and Then Clubbed.

Fishing one day in a bayou of the Pearl River, with one companion, we sat ip opposite ends of a long, light boat, but did not come to a sharp point. It had but three seats-one at each end, and a middle seat. When a change of position was desired, we sunk a light paddle in the water, and quietly propelled the boat by strokes under the water so as to make no splashing. My end of the boat had turned toward the nearest bank, which was distant about 30 feet, and lying asleep on a log at the water's edge I noticed a moccasin of very fair proportions.

Signaling to my companion, I pointed to the snake, that he might hold the boat steady while I tried a shot at it with a little pocket pistol—a 22-caliber -that we always carried on our trips, and in the use of which constant practo believe it. The jury were not bound to believe anything. Witness might honestly mislead a jury and themselves, too. Juries, like judges, had to be very careful in sift-ing the evidence. ing a fair mark that I could hit nine times in ten shots, hoping to break his spine. My pistol was a single shot, which was usually no disadvantage in shooting at snakes, as they always took to the water if not disabled at the first shot. Taking a very careful aim at the fair mark presented by the snake's body on the log, I fired.

The boat must have moved slightly dicted, and he asked was that the position of Emerson. He reviewed the evidence, and after pointing out that a ed. Instead of going through the man might concoct a story, gave the jury to understand that this was not likely to be the cocco with the cocco jury to understand that this was not likely to be the case with Emerson. His like a hot iron, judging by its actions. After a quick quiver and full length squirm, he began to bow his back and spit like an angry cat.

This was so very unusual that it amused us very much, and we sat dence, unswayed, unmoved by pity or laughing heartily for a moment or two, expecting every instant that the snake would take to the water and disappear. Suddenly the snake swung round with its head stretched out in our direction, and plunged into the water, but did not disappear. Thrashing through the water like mad, he made straight for me with an air of business that cured my attack of laughing promptly and effectually.

I was paralyzed with fright, but could not believe that the snake was really coming to attack us, and sat looking at his approach, expecting every moment that he would dive or came until he was but a few feet from ther from some of the remarks that fell from the lips of the learned counsel for jury, and a moment later the prisoner recovered my powers of locomotion, and chance of routes, so straight down the long, slender boat, I dashed towards the end my companion occupied, clearing the middle seat with a jump that nearly drove the bottom out. My companion had started up with a startled cry to "Look out!" and had grasped a heavy paddle lying in the bottom of the boat, but seeing me bearing down on him in a wild flight, that was certain to carry us both over the end of the boat into 20 feet of water, he dropped the paddle, stooped low, and caught me with an approved football tackle hold just above the knees, and together we fell with a clash against the end seat, my head striking with such force that I was dazed and rendered almost unconscious. Springing to his feet my friend snatched up the paddle and ran to the end of the boat that I had fled from, and found the snake still in pursuit, although the boat had moved some distance from the impetus given by the sudden arresting of my flight. Not until he had received a blow that almost disabled him did that pugnacious serpent retire from the attack. He then swam back to the bank and crawled out on the very log on which first we

When I had sufficiently recovered from the knock on the head, and gathered my scattered wits, we held a council of war, and there was a division in the camp. The man who was not make-timid was in favor of going right in and whipping out the enemy with our heavy paddles; while the man who was most decidedly snake-timid was in favor of a general and immediate retreat from the unpleasant, and, to him, unfortunate location. We finally compromised by landing the boat at a point some distance from the enemy, and the able-bodied contingent went to the attack alone, while the sick and wounded stood guard at the boat. The snake refused to retreat to the water, and was killed with a long pole while still showing fight. This is no exaggeration of the attack of the only moccasin that I ever saw "carry the war into Africa."-Lewis Hopkins, in Forest and Stream.

CHAPTER XXXI.

During those two years which have been so cursorily touched, Maria Saproni's existence had flowed on uneventfully; a triffe monotonous, yet not altogether unpleasant. When she compared her present engagement with that of Lady Westbrook's, of course, the difference was extreme. Nevertheless, Mrs. Mannering was too good-natured not to be liked; a kindly disposition formed an under-current to Miss Honoria's grand airs, while Cassandra's honest, outspoken brusquerie amused and won Maria. As to Hector, she rarely saw him, save if they chanced to meet on the stairs or in the passages.

"Yes, for some time," smiled Maria. "Why do you ask? Do you think me so plied. "My present position is higher than it has ever been. My parents were very-very poor."

"Humph!" remarked the girl, flectively. "Then there must be a great difference between poor Italians and poor English. Why, half the ladies I meet would give I know not what for such small, pretty hands as yours. Bythe-bye, I heard someone singing in mamma's boudoir yesterday, when she was out. Was it not you?"

Yes, but I did not know anyone heard me." "Else you would have stopped? Why, that is the very reason I should sing, if I had such a nice voice as yours. I love music when it is good. It's droll, ali Honoria's masters cannot make her sing like you, you who were never me to her home. She had no children of her own, and both my parents were then dead, so she said she would adopt me. This infuriated her relations, for was rich; but she did not care for that, and for two years she had me educated and my voice cultivated." "What a dear old lady!" cried Cas-sandra. "Why, signora, did you ever leave her?"

"Of my will, I did not. Unfortunately for me she died suddenly. Her relations immediately arrived, and, finding she had left no will, vented their rage, which had been brooding in their hearts, against me, by turning me quite penniless into the streets. An old servant of the Signora Patrina, however, took compassion upon my delicate position, and I lived with her until I could obtain employment. I was poor; I could not burthen my old friend, so I accepted the first situation that was of-fered, which was to attend a little girl of 6; I was 13. From that I gradually continued Maria with a smile, which had in it a covert bitterness, "to be, at 20, a lady's maid." "How romantic! It's quite as good as the novels I read. I'm sure you are handsome enough for a heroine. Can you guess of what I was thinking as I watched you in the glass just now before I spoke?"

"Indeed, no; it would be difficult." "That you might be a princess in disguise, and, signora, I believe you Maria burst into a laugh, full of gen-"Oh, Miss Cassandra," she said, "if such a thing were only possible, I should be a heroine, truly. But, unfortunately, there is no mystery in my parentage to carry out the idea; so I must be content with my lot," she smiled, as she gave the finishing touch to the young girl's hair, and concluded the conversation. Ever after this, with Cassandra and

Hector, whom she acquainted with the incident, Maria went by the name of the "disguised princess."

The Italian had one great source of pleasure; that was the society of Caroline Langton. The human heart, if properly organized, can no more live alone than the convolvulus grow to perfection without support. Thus, the young governess, hearing an account of Signora Saproni from Cassandra, had experienced a faint hope of finding in her one with whom she might break, occasionally, the monotony of her life.

This had led her to make the first advance, and Maria, governed by the same desire, eagerly caught at the friendship offered. Each soon recognized in the other one of a superior order. Maria saw in Caroline Langton a sweet and gentle woman—a lady in manner and education; the governess, in surprise, beheld one innately possessing the refinement of a higher class, and intellectually endowed.

In a brief space, a very strong friendship sprang up between them; but—and each secretly wondered—it never went so far as that mutual confidence which so marks female intimacy.

Maria's bearing might certainly have led to the belief that she had, like the "needy knife-grinder," nothing to tell, but it was different with Caroline Langton.

The Italian perceived that she evidently had some secret trouble; under her calm, even manner there surely was a sub-current of a hidden sorrow. It may have been past grief, yet it still preyed on her heart, though, perhaps, it resembled a dull, wearing pain, to which the sufferer had grown so accustomed as to be ignorant of its presence; nevertheless, it was destined to color and overshadow her whole existence.

When the governess smiled, the dove-

Before Maria had been long there, Cassandra, the incorrigible, had already confidentially informer her of her belief that Miss Langton was secretly in love, an idea Maria inclined to, having once surprised her in tears, and gazing intently at something in her profuse, but rather rebellious meshes of | hand, which the Italian imagined was a miniature, though the governess concealed it so rapidly that she could not be sure.

"If she love, poor girl," thought Maria, with a sigh, "I should fancy it is not merely hopeless, but that death has removed the dear object of affection. Those saint-like eyes look to have wept a dead love-

They are the silent griefs which cut the heartstrings.'

She concluded, quoting John Ford: " 'Let me die smiling.' "

And she bravely did smile, though care and sorrow brooded in her own breast, from which the image of Lord Carisford was never absent. She felt it no shame now to harbor it there. for she knew that he would honorably have won, not insulted her.

POLITICAL

Report That Two More Election Petitions Are To Be Dropped.

Hamilton, Ont., Oct. 1.-G. V. Teetzel, Q.C., said yesterday that the protests against the elections of Mayor Colquonoun, M. P. P. in West Hamilton, and Ald. Carscallen, Q.C., M. P. P. in East Hamilton, would be dropped.

Lawyer Duff, when asked if the protest against the election of John Dickison, M. L. A. in South Wentworth, was to fall to the ground, said he was not prepared to say.

Kingston, Ont., Oct. 1.-The trial of the election petition against the return of Hon. Wm. Harty began yesterday afternoon, with Chancellor Boyd and Justice Ferguson on the bench. Dr. Walkem, Q.C., J. McIntyre, Q.C., and W. D. McPherson appeared for the petitioner: B. M. Britton and J. L. Whiting for respondent.

Dr. Walkem wanted to amend and add charges, but the judges thought 258 were sufficient.

Justice Ferguson-I suppose you were trying to cover the majority of defendant by the same number of charges? Chancellor Boyd asked if the seat had been claimed, and received a negative reply.

Toronto, Oct. 1.—A motion to commit W. J. McKee, M. P. P. for North Essex, for contempt of court in failing to attend an examination when summoned in connection with the election protest, was adjourned until next Wednesday by Mr. Justice Osler at Osgoode Hall yesterday. Mr. McKee's defense is that he did not get notice in time for him to attend the examina-

PROSPECTUS.

This Corporation has been formed for the purpose of dealing as Mar-chants and as General Agents in England for Canadian Agricultural, and the second will be nominated by Horticultural, Fishery and Dairy Produce, to open establishments in suitable locations for the wholesale and retail sale thereof, and to establish depots in Canada where produce can be bought or advances made on direct consignments. For the latter purpose reliable produce experts will represent the Corporation at the leading receiving points in Canada where cold storage facilities exist. These experts will attend the principal produce markets, and be in constant touch by telegraph with the management in Canada and the execu-

The Corporation will make arrangements to construct and operate under skillful management a large number of wholesale and retail establishments in London, and deal exclusively in Canadian food, such as dairy products, eggs, fruit, meat, bacon, fish, canned goods. flour, etc. These establishments will be divided into departments for the different classes of food, and will be thoroughly equipped with mechanical refrigeration and all other modern improvements. Contracts are pending to meet the requirements of co-operative associations, army and navy contractors, hotels and other large consumers throughout Great Britain, and provision will be made for periodical auction sales at the central wholesale warehouses of the Corporation.

Arrangements will be made leading Canadian producers whereby the Corporation will secure at first fresh products of the most reliable brands. DIRECTORS .- In order that all interests may be fairly represented on the regular Board of Directors, provision has been made for two Canadian representatives, resident in the Domin-One has already been appointed. Canadian shareholders when the full amount of stock has been subscribed. The Canadian Advisory Board, as already organized, is composed of practical, responsible men, who have had wide experience in produce, refrigerating and shipping business. In London and its suburbs, with its six millions of inhabitants, a field exists for a wholesale and retail Canadian produce trade of great magnitude and immense possibilities. Sixteen mechanical refrigerating warehouses, distri-buted in suitable localities around London, are already in operation. The Corporation reserve supplies will be carried in these Cold Storage Warehouses, and there will be telephone communication between them and the Corporation establishments. The successful introduction of mechanical refrigeration has opened up a new era in food supplies. Perishable products are now successfully carried in Cold Storage Warehouses, preserved without deterioration, and furnished to consumers in excellent condition all the year round at reasonable prices. This Corporation has selected the newest and most approved system of refrigeration for its storage requirements, and has secured the services of firstclass men, who are thoroughly experienced in the produce and refrigerating

The great interest which the Dominion and Provincial Governments of Canada take in the development of this cost a sufficient and regular supply of produce trade, and in bringing the producer and consumer closer together can be readily understood by the improvements which are being made under their friendly supervision in refrigeration, transportation and other facilities. By Governmental assistance 23 steamships now plying between Canada and Great Britain are equipped with first-class mechanical refrigera-tion, and a regular refrigerator car service has been organized on the leading Canadian railroads, perishable products can thereby be transported and preserved in Cold Storage from the source of production in Canada to the leading seaports in Great Britain. Governmental assistance and guarantees have also been promised for the establishment of cold storage warehouses at leading shipping ports and distributing centers.

This Corporation, with its large available capital, unlimited sources of supply and demand, great facilities and appliances, trading upon equitable terms in special lines of first-class food, should be enabled to pay good dividends upon what no doubt will be a safe and increasing business.

A careful computation of the relative values of such Canadian products as the Corporation is most likely to handle, shows that the general average difference between the first cost (C. F. I. X.) and retail prices in the city of London runs from 121/2 to 40 per cent.

The profits of the Corporation will be derived from its regular wholesale and retail trade, interest upon advances, auction sales, storage, commissions and general agencies.

A stock exchange listment will be applied for in London, Toronto and Montreal. Forms of application for shares may be obtained from the Corporation's Dodd's Kidney Pills Keep the Body Young and Strong-Build New Tissue in Place of Old-Cure and Prevent Disease.

When old age begins to creep upon us the infirmities of life make themselves

It is then that the terrible effects of the follies and excesses committed in our younger days appear.

The vital forces are weak, the stream of life is gradually drying up. The silver cord will soon be loosed, and ere long the golden bowl will be broken. The aged and the ageing have not enough vitality to make up for the daily wear and tear. Thus many days, yes, years of life and strength are lost, are allowed to slip away from us, when they might be retained, to add to the sum of our earthly happiness.

By stimulating the Sidneys, and restoring them to sound health, Dodd's Kidney Pills keep off the breakingdown attacks of old age. By putting the Kidneys in good health, Dodd's Kidney Pills insure a full supply of pure, rich blood, on which the broken down nerves, muscles, bone and tissues feed, and which makes new tissue to replace the old and worn-out matter. Dodd's Kidney Pills thus renew the system, by insuring the provision of abundant material for the creation of new tissues; they also fortify the body against the attacks of disease and old age, by keeping the Kidneys in condition to supply the needs of the system, in the way of nourishment.

Use Dodd's Kidney Pills and be They will make new bone, muscle and sinew, give strength, vigor and staying power. Try Dodd's Kidney Pills; it will cost you only fifty cents.
