My boys swarmed to the top of the train leaving the freight boxes and passenger coaches empty. Once in position, each man laid flat on the roof, with pustola and rifles handy. These latter weapons we had procured in the village before starting, though the agent of the R. R. Co. of that place, together with plenty of powder and balls.

Thus strangely did we start out.

Cook, the driver of the engine in front of our train, was corcealed in the tender, under the wood, and Settle, the engineer of the locomotive in our rear, was to pat us through. In selecting the freight car I had been careful to take only such ones as were without ladders, so that no one from below could climb on top of them, unless he did so from

We could at last, faintly see lights far down the road; then all was darkness. Evidently the robbers had put then out, to prevent our taking the slarm, and going back. Still we dashed on, until we thought we were pretty near the dangerous ground, then the lecomotive began to puff more rapidly; we were of Marseilles, who some 340 years before dangerous ground, then the lecomotive began to puff more rapidly; we were sent over the road at a terrific rate, and the engine in our rear could have been leaving us. The first notice which we can light upon respecting this pastime, occurs in "Cambden's Britannia," published in 1607, where the writer says, in speaking of Orkney,—"To the east of the main-land lies Copinsha, a little isle, in which and in several other places of this coun-try, are to be be found in great plenty, excellent stones for the game called curling." This shows that a knowledge of the sport must have been pretty general at that time, and perhaps is is on account of its recognisity that no more of Orkney,—"To the east of the nain-land lies Copinsha, a little isle, in which and in several other places of this coun-try, are to be be found in great plenty, that the beginning of the sixteenth century was the period of its introduction into Scotland. But then again, as it is impossible to find any mention of its existence, in anything like its present form on the continent of Europe, we are led to believe that it is of purely Scottish origin; and the further fact that the etymology of the name discloses nothing, only strengthens us in this belief.

But fow of our readers, we take it, are unacquainted with the appearance of a curling pond, when the game is in full bleet for the sixteenth century was jumping about, swinging his arms, and muttering incoherent things, to the great danger of stepping on the combatants. He reviewed the policy of the Government, as indicated in Mr. Mac Haldimand—Thompson enzie's address, and said he was glad

Mr. Crabb objected to the course of the Government in causing a general York, East-Metcalfe..... election at the present time, and putting the country to the expense and trouble of an election. He thought the Government should have met the House, pro-pounded its policy, and then, if defeat ed, appeal to the people. He maintained that the present appeal to the people was a sign of weakness on the part of the Government. He deplored the necessity which compelled the late Coverno assist their friends in the elections He said they were forced to do so in self-defence, as the Reform party were spending money lavishly. He was trong advocate of protection, and said ment had always advocated free trade and he believed they would have a free trade policy. He dwelt at considerable length on the benefits of protection, and maintained that if our manufacturing industries were properly protected the hundreds of men who leave Canada for the States would be able to find remun erative employment at home. He lauded Sir John Macdonald for his honesty and ability, and concluded by assuring all that if he should be elected as the representative of Centre Huron it would be by the unpurchased suffrages of the people as he did not intend to spend any money except for purposes allowed by law. Excellent speeches were made by the other candidates, but the crowded state of our columns prevents our giving a report of them. All withdrew in favour of Messrs Horton and Crabb who go to the poll.

He had been promised a living by a member of the great Butler family previous to his coming to the title and estates. The promise was not redeemed, and on the first opportunity the curate had of preaching before the powerful nobleman, he selected for his text the conclusion of the fertieth chapter of Genesis. 'Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgot him.' The Irish Joseph speedily obtained the gift of a valuable living.

The landlord of a popular restaurant lls a good story of an emigrant from e Emerald Isle, whom he engaged to clean out a cellar belonging to one of his tenements. After labering about five hours in removing all kinds of accumulations from the place, the proprietor happened to observe indications in the back yard that the labourer was cleaning up the cellar a "leetle" too thorough-ly. IRISH AND SOUTCH LOYALTY.—When George IV. went to Ireland, one of the "pinintry," delighted with his affability to the crowd on landing, said to the toll-keeper, as the king passed through, "Och, new, an' His Majesty, God bless him, never paid the turnpike; how's that?" "O, a king never does; ws let 'em go free," was ithe answer. "Then there's the dirty money for ye," says. Pat; "It shall never be said that the king came here and found nobody to pay the turnpike for him." Tum Moore on his visit to Abbotsford, told this story to Sir Walter Scott, when they were comparing notes as to two Royal visits. "Now, Moore," replied Scott, "there was no want of enthusiasm here; the Scotch folks would have done asything in the world for His Majesty, except, pay the furnpike."

Spreading the claved old granary
Into a flowery dell.

O, how I loved the shadows
That clung to that silent roof,
Day-dreams wove with the quiet,
Many a glittering woof;
I climbed to the highest ratters,
And watching the swallows at play,
Admired the knots in the boarding,
And rolled in the billows of hay.

Palace of king couldn't match it,
And Vatican loses it charm
When placed in my memory's balance,
Beside the old gray barn!
And I'd rather scent the cloyer
Piled in the barn's roomy mows,
Than sit in the breath of the highlands,
Poured from Appenine brows!
