CHAPTER IV.

Of course her acceptance of the elderly squire was easily accounted for. Stephen was dependent on his father, who, having married a highly born wife himself, might have similar views for his son, and he had no doubt refused his consent. This view of the case was strengthened by the fact that Stephen had gone abroad almost immediately after the engagement had been announced; and, although the ostensible reason of his absence was business, the gossip of Ashford were wiser in their own conceit, and knew that it was regret which had sent him away from home.

Miss Nell's marriage had been quite a gay affair. Mr. Daunt had behaved with his usual liberality; and, if the bride had been Dolly herself, the preparations could hardly have been more brilliant. Sibyl looked marvelously beautiful, but very pale under her lace veil; the bridegroom seemed uncomfortable and ill at ease; and Dolly, the only bridemaid, was more like a Dresden china figure than ever in her pretty pale blue satin and lace. And, after the wedding, the "happy pair" left for Ventnor, where they were to spend the honeymoon; and then, after a little wondering whether Stephen Daunt would come back now, Ashford ceased to discuss the wedding or the engagement, and the nine days' wonder was over.

"Here is Frank," said Dr. Arnold, glancing up from his visiting-list, as the sound of a horse's step was heard without; and in a minute Frank Greville entered, flushed, smiling, and very handsome in his well-fitting pink and spotless "tops."

"Are you ready, Sidney?" he said,

A Triumph

as, having shaken hands with Dr. Arnold, he put his lips to Sidney's cheek with the familiarity of a recognized lover. "Is it not a splendid hunting morning, with a southerly wind and a cloudy sky? There will be a full moon to-day, no doubt."

He hurried her out to the waiting horses and lifted her into her saddle, settling the skirt of her habit with his usual care, although, as his lips had touched her cheek, she had felt how hot they were.

"Sidney, how lovely you look!" he went on, as they rode away. "I think you grow lovelier every day."

"Do I? It is right you should think so, of course, Frank, whatever other people may."

"They must think so too, dear. They cannot think otherwise."

"Don't flatter me, Frank. You know I am not so beautiful."

"And that is the truth, Sidney."

"It is sometimes best to be silent even as regards the truth," she said, smiling.

"I cannot always keep silent when I think of all you have done for me," he answered, in a moved, earnest tone, putting his hand fondly over hers for a moment as they rode down a quiet lane; and Sidney looked up, smiling a little sadly, and then gently put his hand aside.

"We shall be late," she said lightly, putting her horse into a canter. "Come, Frank."

A large number of people was assembled in the three-acre field, and the meet was, as Dr. Arnold had predicted, a very pretty one, for the field was beautifully situated, and the scarlet of the hunting-coats, the restlessness of the horses, and the graceful figures of the lady-riders, enhanced, as always, the beauty of the scene.

There were two carriages also waiting in the road—Dolly's graceful little carriage with its pretty perfectly matched ponies, in which Miss Daunt had driven Lady Eva to see the hounds throw off, and a handsome barouché, drawn by a pair of superb black horses, in which sat Sibyl Rutledge, looking beautiful enough to turn the heads of the entire hunt, exquisitely dressed in violet velvet, which became her proud fair beauty to perfection.

For a moment Sidney's eyes rested upon her longingly, noting the exquisite coloring, the perfect features, the splendid blue eyes; then she looked away and started a little, for among the gentlemen surrounding Mrs. Rutledge's carriage she had recognized Stephen Daunt. He lifted his hat to her, with a smile as their eyes met; and Sidney inclined her pretty head, and turned away her eyes almost immediately, trying to ignore the sharp pang at her heart which seemed to take away her breath.

"There is Daunt," Frank said, looking over at the old round the barouché, with angry, jealous eyes which tried to look away from Sibyl's beautiful face, but were powerless to do so—singing his wings like a moth near a candle," he added, with a little bitter laugh. "When did he come back?"

"I did not know he had returned," Sidney said, calmly, putting out her hand to Squire Rutledge, who had come up to greet her, and who looked remarkably well, but not very well satisfied at the admiring group around his wife.

"Are you going to ride with us to-day, Miss Arnold?" he asked, with a nod to Frank, who returned it with equal coldness. "You ought not to be a timid rider."

"I am not," Sidney said, smiling. "But my father does not care for me to hunt."

"Old-fashioned prejudice!" Mr. Rutledge rejoined. "I am going to have my wife out as soon as I have a proper mount for her."

"You'll never make a horsewoman of Mrs. Rutledge," said Frank, almost rudely.

"And why not, young sir?" inquired the other, haughtily.

"Because she is constitutionally timid," Frank answered, coolly; "and she has never ridden."

"It does not follow that she never will ride," fumed the squire, testily; "and I have seen no timidity in Mrs. Rutledge."

"Have you not?" said Frank, in the same cool, impertinent manner. "Perhaps you do not know her so well as I did before her marriage. Ah, Daunt; so you have got back again?" he went on, disregarding Mr. Rutledge's anger; while Sidney's heart sunk with a sudden terrible fear, and she could hardly find words to answer Stephen's kindly, friendly greeting as he rode up to them and held out his hand first to her, then to Frank.

Pale with anger Mr. Rutledge rode away, and Frank's blue eyes followed him also, with a rather puzzled expression; he had seen the intense fear in Sidney's face, and, seeing it, had joined them immediately.

"The old fool looks like one of Mollere's fealous husbands!" Frank said with a harsh jeering laugh. "I don't think his wife is to be envied, and—"

"I suppose I ought to go and pay my devours," Frank said suddenly, in a harsh constrained voice. "Will you excuse me, Sidney?"

"Will you not come also?" asked Stephen, bending forward slightly.

"No. Certainly go, if you like, Frank; Stephen will remain with me until you come back," said Sidney, glancing at Daunt entreatingly; and the next minute Mrs. Rutledge was smiling graciously and holding out her hand to Frank, while her husband, with his face pale with rage and mortification, sat by her on his handsome horse.

TIRED OUT ALL THE TIME

Nerves Gave Little Rest

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 28 (Canadian Press).—In a little low-roofed inn at Comeauville on the trunk highway where it follows the "French Shore" in Digby and Yarmouth counties, there is to be found what is probably a hotel register unique in the world. In this hostelry, known for its homely atmosphere, the guest is given a common wooden clothespin of the old-fashioned type, and an inflexible pencil. He writes his name on the pin and it is hung on a wire rack along with the hundreds of others that accumulate there during the year, registrations being more than a matter of curiosity than compliance with the law. The wire is stripped every New Year's day and the pins distributed among the neighbors for keepsakes, except in the case of those upon which great personalities have put their names, in which case they are retained as souvenirs. Last year the proprietress had 800 clothespins for distribution.

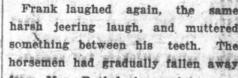

Mrs. Adeline Comeau, an aged lady who still uses the old-fashioned spinning wheel, is the proprietress and she can retail her family history clearly from the expulsion of the French Acadians, and she has documents to prove it. The house is 180 years old.

Woman Afraid to Eat Anything

"I was afraid to eat because I always had stomach trouble afterwards. Since taking Adlerika I can eat and feel fine." (Signed) Mrs. A. Howard. ONE spoonful Adlerika removes GAS and often brings surprising relief to the stomach. Stops that full, bloating feeling. Removes acid waste matter from intestines and makes you feel happy and cheerful. Excellent for obstinate constipation. Sold by all leading Druggists.

LIFE IS SWEET

It's passing strange how many will cleave to life when life is vain, when he is racked, from morn to eve, by every kind of pain. I used to say, when hale and blithe, "If sickness comes to pass, I hope the resper with his scythe will mow me down like grass. I would not wish to linger on, to swallow concrete pills, and bitters from a demijohn, to stave off fatal ills. I'd hate to lie for weeks in bed, with only pills to eat, with poultices upon my head, and more upon my feet. Oh, better far to loop the loops, and weeks of anguish shun, and join the silent sleeping groups whose agonies are done." I thought I meant it while I talked, but lately I was prone, and pains and aches unchartered stalked through every thaw and bone. There was no hour in many weeks when I knew aught of ease, and aches and pains with vulture beaks tore at my neck and knees. I heard the docs and nurses sigh, "Twere mercy if he'd croak; the pains that, through his system fly, have filled the house with smoke." But I endured by grievous ills, and cried, in accents strong, "There surely are some miracle pills that will my life prolong." The kind mortician came around and tried to make me see I'd be much better underground, beneath a willow tree. But I refused to bump the bumps, to quit this mundane game, while yet the pain, in leaps and jumps, cavorted through my frame. And now I smile sardonic grins, when I hear some one cry, "When once a sickness dire begins, I'll curl me up and die."

TELLING FAIRY STORIES.

If I could have my choice of tasks up on this pleasant earth I would not be that of mining gold or selling gums of worth; I would ask to run a bank or a department store. I'd like to be allowed to sit upon our parlor floor. And call the neighbours' children in on every rainy day. And tell them 'fairy stories till the clouds had blown away.

If I could get along without my sordid weekly pay, I'd like to be allowed to sit upon our parlor floor. And call the neighbours' children in on every rainy day. And tell them 'fairy stories till the clouds had blown away.

Meigle Returns From Labrador

S.S. Meigle, Capt. Burgess, arrived from Northern Labrador at 4.30 p.m. yesterday after a round trip passage of 16 days. On the run north heavy N. E. gales were met with, the ship being obliged to run to Tuckahik for shelter, which meant a delay of ten hours. Next morning the passengers awoke and were surprised to find the hills covered with snow. On the way south the weather was more moderate, and all ports of call were made without any trouble. The following passengers arrived by the ship—Rev. Gordon, Mrs. Brown, Miss V. Howland, Mrs. A. McEvoy, Miss E. Parka, Mrs. Fones, Mr. Horeley, Miss Collins, Mrs. Perry, Mrs. H. Morris, R. Boyd, W. Perry, C. Johnson and 4 in steerage.

Shortage Balloons to Conserve Gasoline

"Breathing losses" of 50,000,000 gal- lons of gasoline yearly will be check- ed by the use of balloons to store va- por, it was reported to the American Chemical Society at its recent meeting in Los Angeles. This method was de- scribed in a paper prepared by Messrs. Wilson, Atwell, Brown and Chenick, chemists of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, who asserted that it is the first to prove economically effective in preventing evaporation losses from gasoline stored during winter and spring in anticipation of the tremen- dous summer demand. They are thus quoted in a press bulletin issued by the society (New York):

"Chemists throughout the industry have been alive to the importance of this problem, but its practical solution has proven very difficult. Considerable improvement has been made by substituting steel for wooden roofs and making them tight enough to keep wind from blowing through, and these im- provements have been quite generally made.

"There still remained, however, the 'breathing loss,' amounting to over 3 per cent. a year. This is due to the daily changes in temperature, the heat of the sun during the day expanding the air above the gasoline and vapor- izing enough gasoline to expel, through the vent pipe which must be provided, several thousand cubic feet of rich gasoline-saturated air from a modern storage tank holding around 3,000,000 gallons.

"At night the vapor space cools and fresh air, which in turn becomes sat- urated with gasoline and is breathed out the next day. While spraying or insulating the tanks and various other methods have been used to reduce this loss, no satisfactory and economical way of preventing it has been found until now.

"A special gasoline-proof fabric has been developed, and from it have been constructed large balloons or 'breath- er bags' which are hoisted in salva- tion from buildings and connected to the vapor space of the storage tank.

"When the gasoline-saturated air in the top of the tank expands it merely goes into the breather bag while the temperature is rising, and is sucked back again when the tank cools off at night, thus preventing any loss. The breather bag is weighted by a special system which keeps the pressure in the top of the tank substantially bal- anced at all times, preventing losses through small openings which it is hard to eliminate entirely.

"One 18,000 cubic feet balloon will care for two or more large gasoline storage tanks, and save about 14,000 gallons of gasoline per month under average weather conditions. Auto- matic release and intake valves are provided to care for pumping to and from the tank, or exceptionally large 'breaths' beyond the capacity of the balloon."

W. S. Harkins Arrives in St. John's

Popular Theatrical Man Here to Arrange for Opening Dramatic Season.

A very welcome visitor is W. S. Harkins, the well known theatrical man, who reached St. John's to- day to make final arrangements for the opening of his popular company of dramatic artists in the Casino on Monday, September 14th.

All are delighted to see how well Mr. Harkins looks and he is already kept busy shaking hands with his friends who are legion. St. John's is like a second home to Mr. Harkins as he has been coming here for over thirty years. His many friends will welcome the opportunity of giving him a genuine Newfoundland reception at his opening.

Mr. Harkins is popular because he has always made honest effort to please the public. Many of the big stars now enjoying phenomenal suc- cess on Broadway and on the screen have received tuition under him, and have appeared in St. John's. They are the following: William Courtleigh, Tom Wise, Harry Beresford, Bruce McRae, E. L. Snady, William Farnum, Dustin Farnum, Arthur Floret, John Bunny, Joseph Kilgour, Frank Mc- Glyn, Ian Keith, Arthur Forrest, Ches McCull, now manager for David Bal- asco; Harry Stubbs and Sue Van Duser.

In a day or two announcement will be made regarding the opening play and the attention of readers is called to the advertising columns of this pa- per.—R.A.Y.

enormous volume of water pouring over the wall separating the two pools and the volume of water is what will create the power with the kind of turbine engines he will use.

Mr. Cooper's project is to be the subject of a state-wide referendum in Maine, September 14. The voters are to decide whether tidal power in the Bay of Fundy, if developed, may be sold outside the state. At present power raised from fresh water sources must be used within the state. If the voters grant the privilege of selling the power outside the state the United States and the Canadian governments, between whose territories the Bay of Fundy lies, will be asked to sanction the proposal. It is Cooper's opinion that no official obstacles will be placed in the way of the project.

Britain's "Red" Leader in Bad Odor

OPINIONS SHARPLY DIVIDED OVER THE PROPOSED ALLIANCE.

London, Aug. 26.—A division of opinion has arisen among British trade unionists over the proposal to be submitted to the forthcoming Trade Union Congress providing for the formation of a great industrial alliance of all the Unions, representing 5,000,000 workers.

A. J. Cook, general secretary of the Miners' Federation, is the main sponsor of the proposal, which is represented in the press as an attempt to capture the unions by the Reds. The scheme is already meeting with opposition.

Meanwhile Cook is in bad odor with some of his trade union colleagues. He has especially fallen foul of G. E. Spencer, Labor member of parliament for Boxtove and one of the leaders of the Nottinghamshire miners. The two men have exchanged sharp letters.

Spencer charges Cook with being less concerned with the cause of the miners than with gratification of his own "ambitious egotism."

The best of the trade unionists, Spencer adds, are disgusted with Cook's revolutionary utterances and his statements in the "commoners' opinion," reveal "a mind diseased with inflation of its own exaggerated importance."

A. J. Cook recently sprung into prominence through his success in negotiating a favorable settlement of the miners' dispute with the operators. The government, to avoid a strike, rushed a subsidy through parliament maintaining the present wage scale for another nine months. Encouraged by his success Cook, in a sensational speech at Pontypridd, Wales, declared the government's action had started a revolution. He added:

"A revolution will come. I want a revolution that will have a disciplined army behind it—a revolution that will not only have discipline but organized with an object ahead of it; a revolution understanding its goal; a revolution where the mentality of the people will be free from the terrible curses of criticism and apathy."

Bay of Fundy Project Recommended

Promising Development in the Electrical World in Decade.

New York, Aug. 27.—(By Canadian Press)—Hydraulic engineers of New England are quoted by the Herald-Tribune as saying that the project of harnessing the power of the Bay of Fundy near Eastport, Me., is not only feasible from an engineering point of view, but is "the most promising development in the electrical world in a decade."

The paper points out, however, that Canada will likely have something to say regarding the project, and the sanction of the Canadian and U. S. governments will have to be secured.

According to the Herald-Tribune, Frederick Darlington, engineering expert for the Westinghouse Electric Company, who recently inspected the Passamaquoddy and Cobscook bays in the Bay of Fundy, where for years Mr. Cooper has been making preliminary surveys for his project, said he was convinced the plan could be carried through.

Cooper hopes by damming Passamaquoddy and Cobscook bays to generate two separate pools and generate the power by a constant rush of water from the upper pool and the lower pool in the lower pool is to be done by a system of gates.

"Mr. Cooper has found a solution to every problem connected with the scheme," said Mr. Darlington. In his invitation I visited Eastport and made a careful inspection of the bays and the engineering possibilities of generating power by them. I am convinced that his scheme is thoroughly feasible.

"The question has been raised whether he could generate power by a fall of water only sixteen feet which will be his maximum head, although the tides rise as high as twenty-seven feet. The answer to that question is that a sixteen-foot drop is ample. He will have an

The Legend of Lost Atlantis

"And all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered."

(By WILLIAM BLACK.)

The newspapers of last week contained the announcement that a well-known French scientist had given it as his opinion that there was a possibility that the fabled continent of Atlantis, which was supposed to have lain just beyond the Pillars of Hercules, or the Strait of Gibraltar, and to have sunk beneath the sea "in a day and a fatal night" many thousands of years ago, might rise again and become solid land for the feet of man to walk upon, filling the whole middle of the South Atlantic with an island continent. The reasons for the belief in such a possibility are not given in detail, and probably they do not have anything more convincing back of them than the general idea that the disturbance of the earth's crust that in the first place caused the great island to disappear, if such things actually did take place, might again operate but in an opposite way and thrust the land up again.

But whether we can take this prophecy of possibility seriously enough to be interested in it or not, the fact that a scientist of repute in this modern day still believes in the lost Atlantis is interesting. How many there are among modern scientists who share this belief we cannot say. Apparently French scientists have been peculiarly susceptible to it. Not being a scientist in even the most remote sense we can make no possible pronouncement in its relation to it, but, like many other visionary folk, we have always been interested in the matter, and always strongly inclined to believe that the legend had a basis of fact behind it. Certainly the literature relating to the subject is most interesting.

In the literature that has come down to us the story of the lost Atlantis is first told by Plato, of all people in the world! In his Timaeus he tells the whole story briefly and in his Critias goes into the matter much more in detail, but unfortunately only a portion of Critias remains. Plato says that the story came to him from his relative, Solon, who in turn had it from a certain Egyptian priest, who said that it had been preserved in the sacred books of the temple of Sais. Atlantis is described as a country larger than Asia Minor and Libya united, with an archipelago of smaller islands. It had been a powerful kingdom nine thousand years before the birth of Solon, and its armies had conquered all the peoples on the Mediterranean with the exception of the Athenians. The enshrining of the land is supposed to have come when the nation was at the height of its power.

Plato has much to say about the country and its people and form of Government, holding it up as an ideal commonwealth, in which the people were virtue-loving and high-minded to a degree. He tells us that "they despised everything but virtue, not caring for their present state of life and thinking lightly on the possession of gold and other property which seemed only a burden to them; neither were they intoxicated by luxury; nor did wealth deprive them of their self-control; but they were sober and saw clearly that all these goods are increased by virtuous friendships with one another, and that by excessive zeal for them and honor of them, the good of them is lost and friendship perishes with them." The greatness of the nation as well as its happiness is dwelt upon and vivid pictures are given of the armies and ships of this great people. It is hinted that the people after awhile began to fall somewhat from their high moral estate and it is thought that Plato went on to say that the destruction of the nation came as a punishment of this decline, but the Critias ends abruptly and what he really did say will very probably never be known. Remembering Plato's idealizing in his Republic, which of course is only a fanciful picture, one cannot escape the thought that in his description of the commonwealth of Atlantis he may be indulging in the same habit, and that he may have been to some extent seeking a form in which to set forth his ideals about government and the social life of the people.

There is to be said, however, that Plato's story reads as if he thoroughly believed it himself. He speaks of it as "strange but altogether true," and it is difficult to think of one of his standing and probity fobbing on the public as historical a tale of his own imagination.

Of course the story of the lost continent has made a strong appeal to the imagination of people throughout the centuries and the legend has been dressed up in many and diverse forms in different countries and by different peoples the world over. And there have not been wanting scientists, both in ancient and in modern times, who have held to the theory that Plato's story has an historical basis. Even in the present century learned papers have been read, followed by equally learned discussions, the trend of which was to establish the historicity of the Atlantis legend. Certainly the part of the earth's surface involved is especially subject to earthquake. It is held by some that the Sargasso Sea, that strange, vast field of floating seaweed about which so many weird stories have been told, lies directly over the place where Atlantis sank beneath the waves.

The Atlantis story, and the bit of news in last week's paper in relation to it, reminds us again of that strangely human thing, the gift of handing down through untold centuries legends of deeds and happenings that at one time stood in some vital relation to life and history. That such legends might greatly grow and change with the years is undoubtedly true, but that they are accounted for by some far-off beginning in actual history seems almost inevitable. History may seem often to be "written in water" and yet it does seem strangely difficult for the race to get away from some of the great and tragic things that have occurred in its life. History may be in large part legend but is not legend often of the very soul of history?

Striking figures of the damage caused by fungus pests in Canada and elsewhere in the British Empire are quoted in a report issued by the Imperial Bureau of Mycology, in London, Eng.

"In 1916," says the report, "Canada lost about one hundred million bushels of grain of one kind or another because of fungoid disease. This grain would have been worth between twenty-five and fifty million pounds."

Two hundred and fifty million dollars seems also enough for Canada to pay for the entertainment its fungoid guests, with their appetite for wheat but British Columbia lumbermen also contribute, it appears.

"It has been known for some time," says the report, that rust lives for a part of its life on barberry and part of its life on wheat. When barberry is exterminated, rust cannot live, and rust has been completely eliminated in Denmark by the removal of the last-named plant whereas, in New South Wales, where the barberry occurs extensively, the disease in 1919 caused a loss of 50 per cent. of the crop in many places. Similar alternation of rust occurs in blight rust. This fungus passes part of its life on black currant or other species of bushes, and part of its life on the valuable pine trees of British Columbia." The remedy, it seems, is compulsory eradication of all dangerous species of these currant bushes.

The Imperial Bureau of Mycology was formed to control fungus pests in the Empire, and it is financed by Imperial contributions.

Insulin From Tissues of Fish

CANADIAN PROFESSOR ADDRESSES BRITISH ASSOCIATION ON THE SUBJECT.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Prof. J. Y. R. MacLeod, of the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Toronto, and Dr. C. H. Best, Toronto, who were associated with Dr. Banting in the discovery of insulin, addressed the Physiological section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science to-day. Prof. MacLeod said that insulin was procurable in great quantities from the pancreatic tissue of fishes, being easily obtainable in the large quantities from the pancreas of the dog-fish and skate.

Asked if the utilization of such fish might lead to a great commercial development in the production of insulin, Prof. MacLeod replied in the negative. He said that the gutting of fish was mostly carried on at sea, and such conditions were unfavorable for the production of insulin. There could be an enormous yield of insulin from this source, but there was no longer any shortage as insulin could be obtained in quite sufficient quantities from the pancreas of the ox.

COLUMBIA GAS & ELECTRIC.
Good Earnings in July.
N.Y.—Columbia Gas & Electric System for July will show a continuance of large gain in net in June. It is expected July will show a surplus for dividends about 60% larger than the $413,717 in July of last year.

Expansion in earnings is a combination of largely increased electric business in Columbia's territory, July showing a gain of between 25 and 30% in Cincinnati district, and inclusion of profits of Dayton Power & Light Co. Prospective Gains.

Acquisition of the latter will add about $5,000,000 a year to gross and $2,300,000 to net. It serves a territory about 90 by 110 miles radiating from Dayton, with population of about 325,000. Owned previously by the Brady estate, and sold to Columbia Gas, Dayton Power & Light was built up into one of the strongest public utility properties in the central states. As of June 1 last, it had 67,739 electric meters in service with electric sales in the year ended that date of $23,663,000 kilowatts, largely produced at the 85,000 kilowatt station at Millers Ford, near Dayton. The company also has four smaller generating stations.

Electric sales are apportioned about 28% to commercial users, 25% to residences, 16% commercial lighting, 18% to other utilities and balance scattered. The fairly large amount sold wholesale to other utilities is the result of the Dayton company's rather extensive transmission system, including a line south to a connection with the lines of the Columbia Gas.

In 1901 the Dayton company had gross of $92,349, operating expenses of $45,429 and net after deductions of $47,000. By 1910 gross had grown to $540,960, operating expenses were $315,814 and net $225,146. In 1920 gross was $3,734,487, expenses were $2,776,021 and net $958,466. In 1923 gross was $5,105,314, operating expenses $3,297,199 and net $1,808,115, while last year gross reached a record of $5,756,407, operating expenses were $3,564,090 and net $2,192,317.

New Records Indicated.
With electric business expanding considerably, indications are that both Dayton and Cincinnati properties will reach new high figures of electric earnings. In October the first 40,000 k.w. unit of Columbia's new Miami Fort station will start operating, and a month later the second unit of that size will start generating electricity.

These two new units will add materially to capacity of the Columbia system and mark consummation of present plans for a superpower, or interconnected, system in southwestern Ohio. It will give the Columbia system three main generating plants with aggregate of 305,000 kilowatt capacity, all interconnected by high tension lines. This does not include several smaller stations used mostly as standby units.

The new city ordinance in Cincinnati fixing higher rates of natural gas, attacked by some organizations there, is not to go to a referendum at the November election. Attempts were made to have it put to a vote under Ohio initiative and referendum law. However, a decision by Common Pleas Judge Darby a few days ago held the question should not be put on the ballot, as the company's franchise to sell gas in Cincinnati antedated the state law and the initiative and referendum provision could not be made retroactive in the case.

Reds' Efforts to Hold Up Liner Fails

LAUGH COMMUNISTS TO SCORN—2,000 SEAMEN ON STRIKE AT SYDNEY.

London, Aug. 24.—(British United Press)—An attempt to hold up the Canadian Pacific steamer Empress of Canada with Havelock Wilson aboard bound for Canada which was attempted on Saturday by striking seamen, "failed miserably," says Wilson in a wireless despatch to the London Press this morning.

"The attempt was laughed to scorn by the crew," he added.

Revelations that Communists are going about dressed as able-bodied seamen breaking up anti-Communist meetings and giving the impression that the army and navy are solid for the Communists are the latest developments of the mock revolution which A. J. Cook appears to be doing so much to foster.

In his latest tirade Cook declared that he is going to prepare a food fund for the miners in preparation against the day when the Labor crisis occurs.

Referring to the army and navy he says that "our own boys" will not turn against their own people and this has given those who are anxious that strong measures be taken to stamp out Communism in England, a new cause for their protest against what they regard as the present inaction of the Government.

There have been several anti-Red scares during the last few days but they fail to create any great interest outside a limited circle affected.

Westminster Crumbling Away

Westminster Palace is in a perilous state, writes a member of Parliament to a London paper. The beautiful building which, even seventy years ago, cost $10,000,000, is crumbling away. The weather, the action of the air, and London smoke and fog are slowly powdering the stone of which the newer part of the building is built.

There was previous trouble with Westminster Hall, which is a much older structure than the Houses of Parliament. It was built by William Rufus, and is the second largest hall in the world unsupported by central pillars. The roof and rafters lasted, with certain repairs, until just after the end of the War. Much of the original oak remained, though it was over six hundred years old, and looked like lasting forever. But one day fine sawdust was noticed on the floor.

On examination it was found that the dreaded death-watch beetle had founded a colony in the oak timbers, and had eaten through many of the beams, and badly damaged others. Much of the wood was honeycombed, and it was a miracle that the roof did not fall in. In spite of the expense, the matter had to be tackled, and repairs effected preserving the character of the building.

The original oak had been repaired in parts, just before the Coronation of George IV, with forty loads of well-seasoned wood from old men-of-war at Portsmouth. It was this wood that is supposed to have contained a few of the death-watch beetles, and they flourished and multiplied throughout the whole structure.

S.S. Prospero Arrives From North

AFTER EXCELLENT TRIP OF 12 DAYS.

S.S. Prospero, Capt. Wesley Kean, returned from the northern coastal service at 11 o'clock this morning, after a splendid round trip passage of twelve days. The ship made all ports of call as far as Cook's Hr., both going and returning. One of the ports of call was Sopp's Arm, in White Bay. As far as is known the Prospero is the first ship to enter that place. A quantity of supplies was landed there for the erection of a new mill in connection with the operations carried on by Mr. H. J. Crowe. Capt. Kean states that the fishery can be called good in nearly every section along the coast, particularly the French Shore, where hook and liners have done exceptionally well. In some places it is difficult to secure bait, squid not being so plentiful as other years. At Grique, Quirpon, Ship Cove, Raleigh and Cook's Harbor, boats are averaging from 5 to 6 barrels per day. While the Prospero was going north a flotilla of schooners was returning home from the Labrador heavily laden. A number of these schooners did very poor in the early season, and left for the Labrador where they augmented their catches considerably. Capt. Kean states that Dr. Grenfell is still continuing his mission in his private yacht Strathcona II, and his arrival at St. John's is uncertain. The Prospero had a large number of round trippers on board, all of whom speak highly of the excellence of the service. Whilst the ship is in port the semi-annual inspection of her boilers will take place, and she will not in consequence be ready to proceed north again before Tuesday next.

The Prospero brought a large freight, consisting principally of fish and oil, besides the following saloon passengers: Messrs. Burden, Goodall, Master Riche, Schwab, Hillier, Hubbard, Col. Cosby, Peel, Peddie, Budden (3), Dave, Gilles, Vincent, Granter, Best, Master Cobb, Earle (2), Master Kean (2), Jackson, Master Colbourne, Wylie, Murphy, Master Scammell, Master Perry, Rev. Can the Philippines

SUPPLY OUR RUBBER NEEDS!

Norbert Lyons, who was Manila correspondent of the New York Times for ten years and is now secretary of the U.S. Mission of the American Chamber of Commerce of the Philippine Islands, writes very interestingly on the future possibilities of rubber developments in the archipelago in Forbes Magazine for August, 15, 1925.

"Not only are the Philippines important from a purely military or strategic standpoint," says Mr. Lyons, "but they have great significance commercially and economically, far greater significance than is commonly realized."

"The islands loom up prominently just now as a possible source of this nation's crude rubber supply, monopoly of which by European nations is costing our American tire users millions of dollars annually."

"In the Philippines, the United States possesses one of the best rubber-growing regions in the world. This was conclusively proven by the experts of the federal government who were recently sent to the Philippines by congressional authority to investigate the rubber-growing

SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

IN DEFENSE OF HAPPY ENDINGS.

My friend laid down the book she had been reading on my porch with an air not at all happy. "You don't like your book?" I asked. "I am worried," she said, "I have just remembered something." "Something you've got to do?" "Book. You Can Feel Safe In." "Oh, no, something about the author of this book. You see things have not been going well in this book for some time. It looks to me as if the girl in it were going to marry the wrong man. She doesn't love him and the worst part of it is that he thinks she has money and she hasn't any. It would be a terrible mistake if they married. I know whom she really loves and up to now I have been feeling perfectly safe because I knew that the author must know she loved him too, and would, of course, arrange things to come out right. And then all at once I remembered that I had read other books by this same author and she doesn't always arrange things to come out happily. Why, she might even let them get married after all. And you can't imagine how depressed that made me. What is the use of reading books if things aren't any better arranged in them than in life? I don't think I shall read another book by this author. I'd much rather read books where I can feel safe when I'm reading them."

If pages were written on the subject I do not think one could get a more clear and poignant defense of the much abused practice of happy endings than that.

But More Of Them In Books. The happy endings, says the high brow critic, is not true to life. He means not true to the darker side of life. Happy things do happen in life as well as in books, and what if more of them happen in books is that a condemnation of the books?

What is the greatest of all usages of books? As an escape from the unhappy parts of life. We want the people in them to read and we want the things that happen to them to be real, but happily selected.

Love stories, says one who writes them, are fairy tales for grown-ups.

No Kind Of A Fairy Tale. Imagine a fairy tale ending with the Prince marrying Cinderella's hateful elder sister and only discovering that it was Cinderella he loved when it was too late!

I love my friend's phrase "books that I can feel safe in when I'm reading them." There is no safety in life. To-day's happiness may be to-morrow's unhappiness. How wonderful to escape into a world in which you know that people's mistakes cannot wholly wreck their lives and in which misadventures and dangers thrill you happily because you know they will not be permitted to end fatally. Blessings on the author who can make his people and his situations real and his endings true to the best of life!

On Reading

By LADY NORAH BENTINCK. Nearly everyone admits the importance of proper reading. But what is proper reading?

We hear a great deal about education so-day, but much of it is scant. Give a man a good memory, a thirst for knowledge, and a taste for right reading, and he is an educated man. This is what has made some of the greatest men who have ever lived—Mazzini, for instance, and Disraeli. Now a taste in reading—although a natural gift in some—is a thing which can be fostered and acquired at home, and this surely is a mother's delightful work. Just as children who live in beautiful houses, surrounded by works of art, unconsciously assimilate a love for art, and a knowledge of true beauty in art, so does a child brought up in a cultured home inhale with every breath the meaning and the value of the works and thoughts of those people whom the best opinion has judged worthy of study.

To be a sort of glorified chauffeur is not, as some young people nowadays seem to think, the end of education. The true end is culture. To have a cultured mind is surely to possess one of the secrets of happiness. No one is ever lonely or dull or bored whose mind to them a kingdom is." Queen Elizabeth fully realized this when she called Sir Philip Sidney "the finest jewel of her realm."

Give a boy a taste for literature, then let him browse at will among wisely chosen books, and you give him a foundation which nothing else can give. No mother should fail to make life in her children's minds the thoughts of great men through their books.

To make friends of books is to establish a rich field of happiness that no one can take from us: for books are never faithless and they never cut us.

Fleets and rough woollens are used for top-coats for general wear.

For another season yet, Paris says, the smaller the hat the smarter.

Beating The Trade Cycle

The realization that trade and industrial conditions tend to run in cycles and to be repeated after a point of years has helped to break up these cycles, we are assured by an editorial writer in The Iron Age (New York). In many instances, because everyone was expecting a certain condition and was preparing to meet it, it did not come. In other words, familiarity with a cycle has tended to destroy that cycle. The author believes that quite a number of trade cycles have disappeared because the knowledge in men's minds of what was in danger of occurring caused them to take a course different from what they would have taken without this knowledge. He writes:

It was before the war that this influence of anticipation was first seen. According to the cycle a panic was due in 1913, i.e. 1873, 1893, 1913. Intermediate, there was a crisis in May, 1884, and a deprect condition of trade in 1904. The panic scheduled for 1913 did not come. Late in 1912 there were many predictions of it, and on December 18, President-elect Wilson promised a "glitzy" as high as Haman" for any one who should be caught helping to bring one on.

Immediately after the war there arose a great deal of talk about cycles in business. The course was analyzed from the numerous precedents. The general point in it all was that the policies of business men had swung alternately from one extreme to the other—too much confidence at one time, too little at another. The notion gained much vogue that business swings could be predicted long in advance, just by tracing a curve and carrying it forward. This might have proved correct if the knowledge had been confined to one man or a few men, but the cycle talk had the widest publicity. It became obvious then that if the theory should be generally adopted, it would fail, because everybody would endeavor to beat the game, and there would be no one left to play it according to the old rules.

Enough experience has now piled up to indicate that pretty much this sort of thing has occurred. Whenever there has been even a little talk of possible inflation, men have grown cautious, and the inflation has been nipped in the bud. Whenever it has appeared that men have been just a little more conservative than they needed to be, the course of trade has broadened out again.

True, we have had cycles of late, but they have not been the cycles that were talked of before the war, or even for a time just after the war. They have been much shorter, and therefore fundamentally different, for the great value in a cycle teaching lies in its being correct in point of time. An error of a year would have a man buying with prospect of a six-months advance when he ought instead to have sold six months previously.

Useful in the Kitchen

A spoon which is labour-saving, combining the advantages of a number of cooking utensils, has recently been placed on the market. It can be used in place of a vegetable server or egg beater, potato masher, strainer or egg poacher, and beats any mixture in half the time taken when an ordinary spoon is used.

Especially useful at this time of year when so many salads are made is a new device for slicing eggs: It is composed of aluminum and will quickly cut hard-boiled eggs into neat slices of equal thickness.

A mat, made of rubber, and ordered in the size which will fit your sink, is an excellent preventive against breakages when washing-up.

The War in the Riff

Colonel Virvan, writing in the English Review on the progress of the struggle between the French and Abd-el-Krim, concludes as follows:
That France, through no fault of her own, has been forced into a cruel war, no one will deny. At a time when she desires peace she has been driven into war, and when she is determined above all else, to curtail expenditure, she is obliged to disburse money on a costly campaign.

The international political situation has probably influenced the tactics of the generals as, for the time being, an offensive on a large scale would appear to have been renounced. This, however, he holds, is not the political situation, that deters the French from crossing his frontier. Such progress is seldom entirely without effect.

He will make a great mistake, however, should he presume to say that the French have no intention whatever of surrendering one yard of their soil. They could not do so without endangering the great work of civilisation carried out by their soldiers, engineers, and colonists, and they are well aware that a weak handling of the situation would result in loss of prestige and severe repercussions throughout North Africa and, indeed, throughout Mohammedan world.

"Parties" in Madrid have already resulted in an arrangement whereby the Rifian coast is to be blockaded by French and Spanish ships and mutual action taken by their aeroplanes. This is all to the good, and the French are confident that they can hold their present position, retain the allegiance of the tribes behind their front, beat off all attacks, and, taking heavy toll by immediate counter-offensives, will wear down Abd-el-Krim in time. He is far too astute a man to continue fighting when he knows his "bolt is shot." Let him once be assured of that and peace will come.

Colonel Beckles Wilson gives in the contemporary Review the following forecast of the development of the Riff warfare:
It is a war of attrition in which the issue must be settled by the end of the present fighting season. Otherwise the Riff leader will so have consolidated his military and political position that it will require two hundred thousand men and twenty millions of francs to dislodge him. He will, moreover, have laid the foundations of a Moorish alliance which will not rest until the whole country is as free of the foreigner as the Hedjaz or the Arabian Sultanates. The truth is, as astute minds in France have already perceived, the French are playing a losing game in Morocco. If, thanks to their civilising efforts, the country is not what it was five-and-twenty years ago, neither, in another sense, are the Moroccans the same people. They have not been drawn into the orbit of democracy for nothing. The national impulse given by Abd-el-Krim is not permanently to be resisted.

The Dukes and Earls

The World To-day continues its selections of letters by Mr. Walter H. Page, the U.S. Ambassador in London, when war broke out. Here is one of the gems:

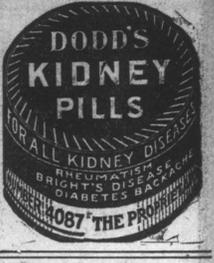

We all come here to see the outside of London. The inside few of us see; and I assure you, the inside is well worth getting some glimpses of. They are a noble race yet, these dukes and earls and knights, and you forget their grand old names. There is now a Lady Phillip Sidney and a Lady Somebody-else who are sprung in direct line from John Hampden. I know them both and the sons of both are as fine young fellows as this adventurous planet holds.

These folk and their like, few of whom ever visit our shores, are very simple and genuine and hospitable; and it is a most interesting experience to know them.

During the last month I have made almost a speech a day—most of them after-dinner speeches before such bodies as the Royal Society, the Economic Section of the University of London, the Authors' Club, the Worshipful Company of Mercers, the Navy League, and the like; and I have tried to present one idea in each little speech that should give the company one clear-cut notion of some part of the work of our great democracy.

They receive my commonplace most heartily. I had the satisfaction of receiving the appreciative thanks of a group of judges of the higher courts, including the Lord Chief Justice, on an explanation of our Mexican policy. They had not before understood it at all. It requires a surgical operation to get so simple a principle into the British head. All this activity, I dare hope, helps a little. But it's very slow, and—it's work as hard as it is pleasant.

But all real life is an adventure and this is adventurous enough you may be sure. I've worn two dress coats to a frazzle, the Lord knows how many pairs of motor tyres, and I've been stopped for speeding. But I'm too old a fox to eat their dinners or to drink their wines. Still, if the King lives as long as I've toasted and sung him in my hopes of long life to him, he'll be immortal. He must have got some inkling of it for he sent me two brace of pheasants the other day.

Don't stop," begged Little Miss Mousie as Danny Fox jumped out from behind a big ash can, as I mentioned in the last story. "What harm can he do with the good Policeman Dog only a block away?" asked brave Uncle Lucky. And then that daring old gentleman rabbit put on the brakes and drawing up to the curb, waited to hear what that old fox wanted.

"I'm in trouble, explained Danny Fox, leaning over the side of the Luckymobile, so near to poor Little Mousie that she drew close to dear Uncle Lucky. "What's the matter? Explain," questioned and answered kind-hearted, kind Uncle Lucky. Dear me, he was so good and obliging that he wanted to help that old robber fox in spite of all his bad deeds.

"Let me ride on the back seat," begged sly old Danny Fox. "I'm having a dreadful time to get food for my family. Don't know which way to turn," and for once the old fox's eyes filled with tears. No matter if he were an old robber, he loved his little cubs.

"Have you your old gunny sack with you?" asked Uncle Lucky. "Yes, here it is," answered Danny Fox, pulling it out from under his coat. "Nothing in it, not even a feather."

Seeing that it was of no use to beg further, the old fox trotted off toward the Three-in-One Cent Store, with a honk of the horn, dear Uncle Lucky rolled away in his wonderful car to the Three-in-One Cent Store.

"Give me the sack," said the old gentleman rabbit. "You wait out here while Little Miss Mousie and I go into the store."

"Very Well," replied Danny Fox, with a side-long glance at the Policeman Dog. And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

An Anonymous Sweepstake

Complete anonymity is the distinguishing mark of a sweepstake. The tickets for which are being offered to the British from Dublin. It is stated that the proceeds are to be devoted to "a very deserving charity," but its name is withheld. There is a specially selected committee to supervise the draw, but no names are given and even the individual to whom remittances are to be forwarded prefers to describe himself only as "The Secretary, Oriol Fete." One would have supposed that by this time the public would really want to know something about the organizers of such schemes before they part with their money. This secretary evidently thinks that they are as gullible as ever, and after all I dare say that he is right.—Truth.

The Australian Capital

The latest news about Canberra is embodied in some official correspondence for a summary of which I am indebted to an Australian reader. It seems that the Federal Capital Commission has recommended that Melbourne to Canberra should be postponed until midsummer 1927. One reason for the delay is that "the unprecedented recent flood" made it essential that certain works to guard against future floods should be carried out. The Government has used that Canberra should be ready for occupation by the Federal Parliament by June, 1926. The Commission has replied to the effect that it will do its best, but that it cannot guarantee this "without a wasteful expenditure of public money."

Mrs. Worthington-Potts was doing some shopping. When not engaged in domestic duties Mrs. W.-P. was chairman of the local "Cleanliness First" campaign. Cleanliness was her all-absorbing passion. Why, she was so mad about it that she even washed water before she drank it. But now she was shopping. A big pile of groceries lay on the counter, and she began to pack them into her basket, handing the shopman a ten-shilling note and a half-crown by way of payment for her purchases. The shopman took the money, and putting the half-crown in his mouth, bit it to see if it was genuine. Mrs. Worthington-Potts was horrified at this unsanitary proceeding. "My goodness!" she exclaimed. "Aren't you afraid of microbes?" "Yes," replied the canny shopkeeper, "I am, mum; but I'm still more afraid of gettin' bad money."

MINARD'S LINTMENT FOR AGES AND PAINS.

What of Our Coalfields

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir—In your issue of August 5th last, I noticed a very interesting letter, in fact an able letter, over the non-de-plume of Laborite, in reference to our coal areas at St. George's Bay. I have seen several letters from time to time on the same subject, all of which seem to point out the enormous possibilities which are bound to accrue from the development of these areas in the way of labor, etc. As I have never seen these coal fields I am not in a position to form any idea of their worth, as a coal bearing prospect. However, as coal like gold, is where you find it, and judging from the reports and letters submitted from time to time, by The St. George's Coal Fields Company, and others who have seen the immense outcrops of coal on their property, I am fully convinced they have the goods.

I have had some experience in mining in United States and Canada, also in the coal fields of Cape Breton, and I have compared notes of the various seams I have worked in, with the seams in the property of the St. George's Coal Fields Limited, and I cannot for a moment see why, or on what grounds, we have failed to have these mines in operation. If the coal is there as these men say it is, why not the Government get busy and help to create an industry which will be a lasting benefit to this country and the British Empire for hundreds of years to come.

It is not altogether the working of these coal mines, which in itself would be a lasting benefit to this country and the Empire in general, but if once established, other industries could be promoted, which would do good in the country, would be futile to encourage.

Year after year we have listened to our politicians, and we have watched with interest, their brow of care on the platform, and read with interest their various addresses through the Press, previous to election times, and if returned to power instead of their opponents, they are going to open our mines, develop our water powers, re-afforest our barren lands, and make this dear old land of ours a lovely place to live in.

Fair minded people will admit the present Government had to face a herculean task when taking office, to put old ship Newfoundland on an even keel, by providing labor, such as the opening of new roads, as an incentive to tourists, and the reconstruction of a Graving Dock second to none in any of the British colonies, also in the subsidizing of a new hotel in this city, and now that we are on the high road to prosperity, with a surplus in hand, I think the Government would be fully justified in assisting to the full limit, the opening of these very promising coal fields.

The writer was personally acquainted with the late James P. Howley, Esq., F.G.S., of happy memory. Mr. Howley's knowledge of Newfoundland as a Field Geologist, stands first in the pages of Geological data in connection with our coal areas, and on more than one occasion has stated his reputation on their future outcome. He predicted, the many advantages, in the way of starting industries on the West coast of Newfoundland, particularly adjacent to the coal fields. And why not? The limestone is there, the gypsum is there, the sand for the construction of all kinds of buildings is there, the virgin forest is there, salt springs are there, petroleum springs abound at Port-au-Port, the soil is fertile in the valleys of its numerous rivers, nature has provided this much neglected section of Newfoundland with many good things including the millions of salmon that abound in its numerous rivers; in fact, everything is there, to make men rich and happy, awaiting capital, and common sense.

The first great step in the building up of this important district is yet to be accomplished, that is, the successful opening of these immense coal fields. Gold, silver, copper, and precious metals, always appeal to the average man as a quick way to get rich, but where would we be without coal. Without its aid in the reduction of metallic ores, especially of iron and copper, these latter would be comparatively useless. Is it any wonder then, the eyes of all right-thinking citizens are anxiously looking forward to the opening of these coal fields.

The official opening of the big paper mills at Corner Brook a few days ago, may be looked on as a great feat and justly so, no one can say otherwise, but these mills, with all their electrical energy (white fuel) must have coal. The mills at Grand Falls must have coal. The Railroad must have coal. The steamers that ply on the coast must have coal, and now that the proofs are submitted, without contradiction, by Eminent Geologists, as well as the men that opened these seams of coal to the eyes of the world, that the coal is there in Millions of Tons, I think every encouragement, financially and otherwise, should be given the promoters of this very promising industry. THE OPENING OF OUR COAL MINES.

Thanking you for space,
Yours truly,
CHAIN ROCK,
St. John's Sept. 2nd, 1925.

An Exceptional Cast, "Lover's Lane"

CLYDE FITCH'S CELEBRATED PLAY SHOWING AT NICKEL.

The screen version of Clyde Fitch's popular play, "Lover's Lane," with an exceptional cast headed by Robert Ellis and Gertrude Olmstead, will be the feature shown at the Nickel Theatre to-night. Other members of the cast are Frances Dale, Craufurd Kent, Bruce Guerin, George Perolat, Maxime Hicks, Charles Sellon, Ethel Wales, Kate Toncray, Alleen Manning and DeW. Vernon.

Phil . . . who has become well known through the remarkable success he has made in his "The Life of Abraham Lincoln" and "Belting Respectable," the Warner Bros. Screen Classic, directed this production for the Warner Bros. Mr. Rosen brought into play all his screen experience and a number of original twists to make it a production of real pictorial beauty.

The story deals with Mary Larkin so wrapped up in a life of social pleasures that she cannot consent to be married to Dr. Tom Singleton, a humble country surgeon. Mary leaves her home town in search of happiness, while Dr. Tom goes on with his work of service. Among his proteges are Lucy Woodbridge and her son, Dickie, whom the town gossips have condemned since the discovery that Lucy is a divorcee. One day Mary returns to be married to another man, but the day of the ceremony Lucy learns that the good thing is her former husband. Of course, matters begin to adjust themselves, and the Woodbridge family is reunited, while Mary and Dr. Tom plan their own wedding day.

Dorothy Farnum, who prepared the script for "Beau Brummel" and "Babbling," both Warner Bros. productions, wrote the scenario for this wonderful production.

Loses Eyesight as Result of Accident

As the result of an accident at the Dry Dock about three weeks ago, T. Baird who was employed with W. I. Bishop, Ltd., had his eye removed at the General Hospital yesterday. The circumstances surrounding this case are indeed sad, as about three years ago, as the result of an accident, Baird lost the sight of his other eye. The unfortunate man who is from the outport will, we feel certain, find many in the city who during his stay in the hospital will readily do everything possible to cheer him and help to make his trial lighter.

Baird's Athletic Association Hold Grand Outing

Favored with glorious weather, "Baird's Athletic Association" held its annual outing at Donovans', yesterday afternoon. On the arrival of their special train, bedecked with the Association's pennants, the entire party moved to the sports field, round about which fluttered the flags of all the Nations and the firm's house flag. But little time was lost in getting the sports programme under way. The opening event, Boys' Race, was keenly contested right to the winning tape, the winner being P. Duffett; second A. Bradbury.

The 100 Yards for Ladies came next, in which the fairest of the fair stepped to the starting line. It was well contested, but Miss Shields set the pace and held it to the finish, closely followed by Miss Malone.

The next event was for the "Old Timers," in which men from the rack and file stepped out. Mr. Whelan was the favorite as he had been seen early and late covering the distance in Buckmaster's Meadow, trained to the highest, he stepped up to the tape and carried all before him. Mr. Cooper made a desperate effort to overhaul him, but Tom was too feet of foot.

The Quarter Mile next took place and was certainly exciting. W. Oliver came first, closely followed by Hayward Pike.

The next event—Blindfold Race, was rather amusing, as the runners turned in every direction. This event was won by Miss Shields and B. Carter.

The Three-Legged Race was fun. Messrs Smith and J. Bugden romped home first.

The Tug-of-War, between the married and single, did not give the married men a "single" chance, of winning, as they were strewn about at will.

The Half Mile was a good race, and was won by Hayward Pike, with C. Thomas a good second.

The Ladies' Relay Race brought out some of our fairest and fleetest to the starting line. This event was won for the Showroom, by Misses White, Malone and Mills.

Football Sixes were interspersed between the foregoing events. Three fast and furious games were played, and some very fine team work was evidenced throughout the series. The goalkeeping of Mr. Sam Condon was truly marvellous, but the winning team, from the warehouse, shot so fast and so frequent that it would take a superman to stop them all. This event concluded the sports programme and at 6.30 all repaired to the banquet hall where an excellent repast was spread for over 100 couples. After doing full justice to the good things provided, our worthy Chairman, Mr. Cyril Carter, a Director of the firm of James Baird, Ltd., opened the Toast List: "The King," being toasted. Impromptu speeches were in order. Mr. Berrigan, the senior employee, after giving the gathering the news of the cricket match, waxed eloquent and reviewed the firm as it is to-day, and as it was years ago; its tremendous growth, its popularity and its progressiveness. Likewise he referred to the good-fellowship always existing between the employers and employees, and made kindly reference to some of the oldest hands on the job. He regretted the absence of Mr. Lumsden, who always contributed so much to the enjoyment of such occasions as this. Mr. Parsons told the gathering it was his "Maiden Effort" at speech-making, and he certainly did it fine, and very graciously thanked our guests of the evening for their presence during the entire proceedings. Mr. Calvert, Mr. Whelan and others contributed their means of praise directed in many channels.

Reference was made to the splendid catering and service of the popular Donovans resort. This concluded dancing was the order of the evening, and fun and frolic prevailed until the wee sma' hours of the morning brought in their special train to convey them towards happy in the recollection of pleasant memories of

INVESTIGATION SOUGHT BY INVESTORS AGAINST DR. GORDON.

BANGOR, Me. Aug. 12.—Dr. Frank Gordon, of Bangor, former defendant in the case which was held during the federal investigation in February last, had sold to investors contracts for "silver foxes" worth of "silver foxes" contracts to investors in New England, is defendant in several actions entered in the Superior Court here by New York persons who seek to get an injunction against him and the Frank H. Gordon.

First Court Action.
Attempts to be made by investors to get their foxes or dividends in many cases have been said to be long overdue, have been numerous for many months. The first action at court action, however, is the one now taken by eight investors in Bangor.

Among the things demanded are that Dr. Gordon be obliged to make full and true answer to the following:—
1.—On what possession are the "silver foxes"?
2.—What is the exact arrangement between defendant as an individual and as a corporation, on the foxes?
3.—On what ranches and in what parts are the foxes and how can they be identified?

Ask for Delivery of Foxes.

The petitioners ask for a delivery of their foxes and an injunction enjoining Dr. Gordon or the corporation from any transfer or assignment of the foxes or from anything which will confuse the identity of the foxes.
Applications in the writs entered are that the plaintiffs were guaranteed 100 per cent. offspring on the foxes. It is alleged that the breeding season is over and that the period for the contract is past but that the plaintiffs have been unable to get their foxes. It is also alleged that frequent demands have been made for information as to the location and identification of the foxes but that all demands have been refused. The plaintiffs allege specific dates upon which demands were made for foxes. Dates are also given upon which it is alleged the plaintiffs were refused information which would enable them to identify their foxes.

Total Amount $51,500.

George F. Eaton, city solicitor here entered on the equity court docket here as attorney for the investors in the actions started to-day. The investors, all people outside the State of Maine, who have commenced action here are:

James M. Kitter of Short Hills, N. J.; Bertival C. Reed of New York City; Harry G. McKillop of New York City; Edward Froelich of New York City; Peter E. Farnum of New York City; Louis F. Barill of New York City; Robert Howard Whitton, 42 Broadway, New York City; Clara B. DeCoppet, 80 Park Avenue, New York City.

Attached to each writ filed in the clerk of courts office here is the contract showing the amount of money invested in the foxes. The total amount in the eight cases is $51,500.

Dr. Gordon, according to an announcement last week, has turned over his interests in the Bangor Commercial, which until two weeks ago carried the caption, "Dr. F. H. Gordon, sole owner," to Erastus Tefft of New York and Colonel Harry F. Ross, formerly of Bangor.

Will Watch Proceedings.

Men and women in all walks of life will watch with interest the proceedings in the Supreme Court. Thousands of people here and to the North East, West and South are fox owners. Transfers recently made of Dr. Gordon's personal property, mortgages placed upon his home on Maple Street and personal attachment from a local bank, and other incidents that would be unlooked in the case of the average business man here are circled like wild-fire by the hundreds anxious to know the fate of the "wonderman" and their foxes.
