

Election Protests.

Monday was the last day for filing protests against the return of members in Ontario, and it has brought with it a crop of them. Amongst the protested elections are all three divisions of Toronto; Hamilton; Addington; and Lincoln. There was an object in putting off the protests until the last day, and we will take the case of Hamilton as an example. The Tories here have protested against the return of Messrs. Irving and Wood, but have not claimed the seats for their own men, Witton and O'Reilly. The result of this is that whilst there will be a scrutiny of the Reform votes, and a strict inquiry into the Reform proceedings, the acts of the Tories at the late election will not come under the purview of the court at all, and any dirty tricks they may have been guilty of will remain under the cover of convenient darkness. And the delay in filing the Tory petition prevents the Reformers from having a counter petition filed, as was the case in London. There the same dodge was tried; Major Walker was petitioned against, but the seat was not claimed for Carling; Mr. R. Glass, however, nullified the little game by filing a petition claiming the seat on behalf of Carling, whose votes will now have to be scrutinized. It is extremely unlikely that the Reformers' majority in Hamilton can be sufficiently reduced to unseat the members; but the trick is none the less contemptible on that account, and none the less characteristic of your full-blooded Tory. Six petitions have also been filed in the Montreal district. Three of these are against Liberals—Two Mountains, Richmond and Wolfe, Montreal West; and three against Conservatives—Joliette, Bagot, Montreal Centre. It is understood that the return of J. J. C. Abbott, M.P., for Argenteuil, and Mr. Harlean, M.P., for L'Assomption, will also be contested, but the time is not up until Monday next.

The New Chief Justice of Manitoba.

The Globe states that the Hon. E. B. Wood has accepted the office of Chief Justice of Manitoba, which has been vacant since Mr. Morris was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of that Province. We congratulate Mr. Wood on his appointment, and consider him not only well qualified for, but well deserving, the high position. Mr. Wood since he entered public life has made his mark as an eloquent speaker, an able debater, and a brilliant financier, and we doubt not that his great legal abilities will be as highly appreciated in his new position and in his new home, as his other attainments were in this Province. He will be missed from the Reform ranks, for he was always ready with word and argument to support the cause. But he has well earned a respite from the labor and turmoil attending politics, and we trust he will long live to be of service to the new Province and an honor to the Bench.

Report of the Provincial Farm Commission.

To the Hon. Provincial Secretary. 37. That over the Live Stock Department an official, third in rank, having the highest ability in his profession, should be placed with the title of the Live Stock Director. He should thoroughly understand the breeding, raising, and fattening of cattle, sheep, and hogs, and the breeding, raising, and breaking of horses. He should have a good knowledge of the different races of horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs—their good and bad points, according to the established standards of the show ground and cattle markets—of their comparative values in the home and foreign markets—and of the recorded pedigree systems of England, Canada, and the United States. He, in like manner with the other chief officers, should be the active director and overseer of the whole practical operations of his department, and give two hours daily to the oral instruction of the pupils in such scientific studies as may be necessary to make them thoroughly versed in the scientific facts and principles which enter into the management of the domestic animals of the farm. 38. That the Principal, the Horticultural Director, and the Live Stock Director should form an Executive Board, meeting at such stated times, daily or weekly as they may determine, to consult together for the promotion of the interests of the Institution, and to determine from time to time such questions of discipline and management as may arise. 39. That the Principal and Director should each be entitled to a vacation of six weeks every year; and that the period designated for each should be so arranged between them that only one should at any time be absent from the Farm. 40. That it is of the highest importance that all the pupils should receive from one thoroughly competent Veterinary Surgeon, or more, such practical instruction for the treatment of the ordinary diseases and injuries to the domestic animals of the farm as may enable them to apply the proper remedies—at least until a Veterinary can be called in; that it might be advantageous were the Veterinary College at Toronto incorporated as a department of the School of Agriculture—or at least that the funds of both institutions might be united to secure a thoroughly efficient staff available for both. 41. That experience has established the great advantage possessed by the Cheese and Butter Factory systems in comparison with the old plan of the isolated Farm-Dairy; that the factories already established in the Province have been of incalculable benefit to the farming interest; and that the extension of the system should be encouraged by every legitimate means. That for many reasons it would be expedient to establish a factory on the farm; but that very great advantage would be derived from the establishment in the neighbourhood, by private parties, of a cheese factory and a butter factory on the most approved principles—in which accurate experiments could be made for public guidance and the best modes of operation taught to the pupils of the Agricultural School in consideration of a specified fee for each pupil, or an annual bonus for the school. 42. That there should be an officer, known as Rector, whose duty should be to take charge of the boarding houses and to institute when they are not engaged in their field or class-room duties. It should be his duty to preside at meals, to keep the books and act as Treasurer of the Institution, and under the instructions of the Principal to make purchases and sales, and conduct the necessary correspondence. He should officiate at morning and evening prayers, and must necessarily be a man of reliable character, business capacity, kindly yet firm disposition, and unmarried. 43. That over the poultry, bird, and bee department there should be placed a foreman, thoroughly skilled in all that concerns the propagation, management, and preparation for the show ground and market of the special objects of his care and their products. It should be his duty to take personal charge of the whole department, and with the aid of the pupils to perform all daily work connected with it. He should be competent to direct the attention of the pupils to the properties, habits, and comparative merits of the different breeds, and to the most approved modes of housing, feeding and breeding them. 44. That over each of the three principal departments of the farm should be placed a thoroughly efficient foreman, capable, under the instruction of his director, of executing the whole of the practical work of his department, and of giving instruction to the pupils in their daily operations. 45. That in the Mechanical department there should be a foreman carpenter and a foreman blacksmith, who, with the assistance of the pupils, should do all the necessary repairs, and as much as possible of the general carpenter work, wagon work, and blacksmith work of the Institution. They should be first-class mechanics, able and willing to give the pupils such instruction as may enable them to handle common tools and do the ordinary repairing work of a farm. Continued.

APOLGISED.—The Mail is reaping some of the fruits of its reckless slandering during the election. The libel suit brought by Mr. Wilkes, arising out of an accusation of fraud made against him by the Mail, has terrified that high-toned journal into submission, and on Tuesday it published an apology for its slander. The apology is complete, but is phrased in a sulky, ungracious tone, just like that of a bad boy who is forced to "beg pardon" of an insulted superior in order to avoid a thrashing. TEMPERANCE.—Rev. J. M. Smith is lecturing in Wellington county for the Grand Lodge of Good Templars, and will speak in the following places at the dates mentioned. Lodges and friends of temperance will please endeavor to secure full and successful meetings. CHAPTER XXI.

A DARK DEED—A WELL-KNOWN VOICE—A LONG JOURNEY—THE WITCH OF BEN-LAIR IN DANGER.

"Nay, you cannot go on an empty stomach," said the old man, restraining him. "Enas and I have had supper, but we set aside as much as will serve you. I will lay it before you, and while you are engaged filling yourself my son will go out and see whether he can learn anything that may be of service to guide you."

"I will gladly do so," responded the young man, cheerily, as he rose and donned his plaid preparatory to going forth.

"I know not how to repay such kindness," said Hector. "I am but a mere stranger to you."

"Personally you may be," said Enas, "but the M'Leods are known far and near as those who would befriend and help in the time of need; and not the least deserving the name was Malcolm M'Leod. I shall return soon and tell you what my success has been, if success it be."

"Ay, haste ye back, my son," said the old man, "though you must not neglect to tarry if tarrying is to effect anything."

The young man stepped out, and Murdoch again invited M'Leod to partake of the food which he had so graciously placed before him. Hector was much in want of it, and he cheerfully conceded to the old man's request to sup before he left. Mutton, venison, and home made bread were spread out in abundance, and a draught of rich goat's milk washed them down.

He ate hurriedly, but thought he lingered long over the repast. However, when he had concluded Enas had not returned. M'Leod now felt refreshed and strong, and was eager and impatient to be again upon the track; and, although anxious to wait and learn whether Enas had anything of importance to communicate when he returned, he would rather have gone for himself and resumed the search, though ignorant as to the proper direction to take. For he could ill brook a moment's idleness from the work which he had set before him. He could not bear the idea of remaining idle while those he loved required help, and while those he hated gloated in their triumph.

Old Murdoch tried to calm the proud, impetuous, chafing spirit, and even pointed out that it was hazardous attempting such a pursuit alone. It was not, he thought, an altogether hopeful task.

But earnest and truthful although these words were, M'Leod could not view them so. Notwithstanding the reverses with which he had again and again met, he was still buoyant and hopeful, and grew more and more impatient as time wore by and still no sign of Enas returning.

But suddenly he started from his chair and his face, while a hot flush overspread his face. Then he sprang forward, and, clutching his claymore, muttered huskily to old Murdoch—

"That is Donald Cameron's voice; I cannot be mistaken."

There was the sound of voices outside; but they had suddenly ceased, and opening the door the young Chief dashed out and gazed about him.

The snow still lay white upon the ground as in the morning, and all around was quiet and clear—the scene being softly lit up by the young moon, which sailed majestically in the blue ether overhead.

Between M'Leod and Ben-Meugach were two figures moving rapidly away, and to the right, just close beside the inn, another figure of a man was to be seen, also receding from the spot where our hero stood.

"It was Donald Cameron's voice I heard," he again muttered. "I may be on the track still, which shall I follow?"

A moment he stood to think. The figure to the right had now disappeared, and those in front were rapidly increasing their distance from him.

"Might not the two before him be Cameron and M'Kenzie?" This was the thought that rose in his mind, and it had no sooner occurred than he resolved to satisfy himself as to the verity of it.

He was now rested and invigorated, and with this fresh hope in his mind he felt that he was able to accomplish what- ever might be required of him. His first impulse was to dash forward, overtake the men in front, satisfy himself whether they were actually those he believed them to be, and if so, attack them at once. But other and more prudent considerations suggested themselves to his mind. If these men were really Cameron and M'Kenzie, the probability was that they were under the cover of night proceeding to some place where the women were concealed, and his appearance would at once cause them to change their route; or if he engaged and killed them he was to be farther from his object than ever, for then the whereabouts of Flora might never be known; or, on the other hand, if he was to fall, from whom was help to the women to come? But again, he if these were not Cameron and M'Kenzie, he would be going forward save himself, perhaps, a long journey and much precious time.

Still, as he reasoned, he was moving forward, keeping pace with those he followed, and neither gaining distance nor losing it; and finally, he resolved to continue doing so, wheresoever they might lead. Something told him he was doing well, and he was impelled to go on. Nor was it necessary that he should at all times keep them in sight. As already stated the snow lay white and deep, and the moon shone overhead with sufficient clearness to permit their track being easily followed. And it might be better that he should keep so far behind, that they could not readily see him; for if they were bent on anything surreptitious, the knowledge that they were dogged and followed might deter them from it. And that their object was secret and clandestine he did not doubt, judging from their appearance and movements as far as he could see them.

They appeared to be both armed, for he had occasionally seen the gleam of a weapon or weapons; they moved stealthily along as if to court concealment, and they spoke in so low tones that scarce a sound reached Hector's ear.
